HARBOURS AND PORTS

CORNER BROOK HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am not accustomed to standing in the House and saying nice words about the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Transport. However, today I think it is only reasonable, as I stand here holding the Transport Canada estimates which include some $17 million for the Corner Brook Harbour Development Project for the development of a container terminal, to say to the Minister of Transport on behalf of the people of western Newfoundland that we thank him for including this $17 million in Transport Canada's estimates.

Before I get carried away, I hasten to point out that this project was originally announced in 1983-84 by the previous administration, at a cost of $14 million at that time. It was subsequently put on hold. I am not cynical about the fact that it is back in the Estimates in an election year. We appreciate this project. Corner Brook has seen the start of two new container services. We have had a booming fishing industry. We need this kind of harbour development soon.

In 1984 we spent $370,000 doing the design and engineering work. Therefore, if Treasury Board approves these expenditures, there is no reason why this project cannot get under way soon. Then I shall truly say after the next election, when I am sitting on the other side of the House and perhaps looking at the Minister for St. John's West sitting over here: "Thank you for your help with this Liberal project. It was time that it got under way".

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—PROTECTION URGED FOR UNBORN BABIES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have received hundreds of letters from constituents who are deeply troubled by the implications of the recent Supreme Court ruling on abortion. One woman writes:

> I can't imagine women being so ecstatic about being able to kill their young, as demonstrated at the court's decision with the most dangerous man in Canada—Morgentaler.

Another woman laments:

> I am truly disgusted with our so-called justice system. If I don't speak for those thousands of unborn little babies, who will? Our society has now reached its lowest level possible: eliminating our own kind.

Another woman asks:

> What sort of nation will this become if we allow the courts to pave the way for human destruction? If we are allowed to murder the helpless unborn, what will be next? The crippled? The sick, the—elderly?

I strongly encourage all Hon. Members of this House to review their position on this very vital issue. It is our responsibility to protect the lives of an overwhelming portion of a future generation.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CUT IN BUDGET

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the budget Estimates which were made public yesterday clearly show that the Government of Canada is not concerned, nor committed, to fighting regional disparities. There can be no justification for a $70 million cut in the budget of the Cape Breton Development Corporation when unemployment in Cape Breton is running well above the national level.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) loves to get up and speak about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the money he has put into Atlantic Canada. The reality, however, is that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is a facade. He is cutting back federal moneys for the Cape Breton Development Corporation, taking that savings and putting it into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. He then has the nerve, the audacity, to say that all this ACOA money is new and old programs will not be affected. What a sham!

Cape Bretoners are not buying the wheeling and dealing of this Prime Minister. He is not fooling anyone, just himself, as he will find out in the next federal election.

OBITUARY TRIBUTE TO QUÉBEC FEDERATION OF LABOUR PERMANENT DELEGATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that we have learned of the accidental death of four Quebec Federation of Labour Officials: Guy Perreault, Director general, QFL Construction; Claude Proteau, Assistant director, Fédération provinciale des ouvriers en électricité; Jean-Claude Sureau, of the Association nationale des travailleurs en tuyauterie; Gaétan Boucher, of the Association des mécaniciens industriels.

As these union officers died while performing their duties, we wish to offer our sympathy in this House to QFL President Louis Laberge, as well as to the families and friends of the victims. We also wish to offer our condolences to relatives and friends of the pilot and copilot, Jean Verrière and Gary Gadouas.

YOUTH

POPULARITY OF OPEN HOUSE CANADA PROGRAM

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, since our Government came into office, in 1984, we have given great thought to the welfare of our youth, and this concern is expressed in the importance we attach to the programs conceived for them.

Moreover, Open House Canada, a very popular program, offers our young Canadian men and women exchange, travel and exploration opportunities within Canada, all year long.

From September 1984 to December 1987, the Progressive Conservative Government granted more than $115,000 under Open House Canada Programme in my Québec-Est riding.

Indeed, through that program, the Government shows the importance it ascribes to the cultural and social development of our youth. We do invest vast amounts of money to guarantee our young people a most promising and enriching future.

Young Canadians can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that the Progressive Conservative Government works hard for them. We must not forget that besides our support measures, there is the free trade agreement that will secure all we have already and create hundreds of thousands of jobs for young people.

PESTICIDES

ALTERNATIVES SOUGHT TO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this week the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry will be hearing the first witnesses in an examination of alternatives to chemical pesticides. The committee is responding to the concerns expressed by Canadians over the heavy dependence on chemical pesticides in forestry, agriculture, urban settings, and around the garden. Chemical pesticides pose a threat to the users, those downwind, those who rely on surface and groundwater, birds, animals, fish, and wildlife in general.

Central to this issue is the system that we have to regulate new and existing pesticides in all their applications, which dates back to 1972. Clearly, the system is in need of being overhauled and modernized.

Therefore, we urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to launch a full and public review of the legislation and regulations affecting pesticides to determine the changes that should be made to protect health, the environment, and our water.

HISTORIC EVENTS

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OF ESTONIA, LATVIA, AND LITHUANIA

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, this month marks the seventieth anniversary of the independence of the Baltic Republics of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. For barely a precious two decades these three small nations took their proud place among Woodrow Wilson's democracies—until their very existence was brutally crushed in the cynicism of the Hitler-Stalin pact.

Since 1940 the three Baltic peoples have withstood two invasions, post-war deprivation, deportation and retribution. Now, despite some improvement in creature comforts, they are subjected to constant loss of political liberty and daily attempts at Russification and, on this anniversary, with Soviet troop movements.

The spirit of freedom lives in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, finding expression ranging from peaceful demonstrations through pamphleteering to self-immolation.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, why do members of the Government continue to avoid the truth about the New Democratic Party's support for Atlantic regional development and western diversification? Why do they make scurrilous comments about votes on Estimates in the House when they know that members of this Party have no direct opportunity to reply?

They know that in those Estimates they hid the legal bills for the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in the amount of $650,000, a person who has been cited for 14 separate counts of breach of conflict of interest guidelines of the Government. To pay his legal bills was abhorrent to the people of Canada. The Government did not have the courage to have a separate vote for this matter. It hid it in about $3 billion of Estimates for general programs, including the Atlantic Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Office.

Will they say we are also against old age pensions which were included in these same Estimates? The people of Canada are on to their hypocrisy. They know that the Government has failed in regional development and can only strike out against the Opposition.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—PROTECTION URGED FOR UNBORN BABIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River):

THURSDAY, Jan. 28, 1988 will go down in the history of our country as 'Black Thursday', a day on which the Supreme Court 'sentenced countless unborn babies to death by abortion'.

These words, with which I concur, were issued by the assembled State Deputies of the Canadian Knights of Columbus.

I believe that the unborn child is a human being from the moment of conception. The decision of the Supreme Court, with two judges dissenting, does not change the law of God. We need strong legislation in accordance with biblical teachings to protect the lives of these innocent babies, 60,000 of whom were murdered in the womb in Canada last year.

I urge the Government to make it illegal to use abortion as a birth control measure. That will give thousands of unborn babies a chance to live, and it will bring glory and triumph to our nation.

S. O. 21

UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION RESOLUTIONS AFFECTING INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the forty-fourth session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission is now in progress in Geneva. On the agenda there are several resolutions of immense significance to aboriginal peoples in Canada and throughout the world.

These resolutions call for draft international standards on the treatment of indigenous peoples; the establishment of a study into treaties between nation-states and indigenous peoples; and the designation of the year 1992 as the International Year of Indigenous Rights.

Unanimously passed and recommended for approval by the United Nations Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, these resolutions are supported by aboriginal peoples in Canada and throughout the world.

Despite the enormous achievement passage of these resolutions would represent for indigenous peoples and indigenous rights, the Government of Canada is actively campaigning against them. Instead of grasping the opportunity to play a world leadership role, Canada is being obstructionist. Canada should stop its nit-picking and get behind these resolutions. This message should be communicated without delay to the Canadian officials who are in Geneva today.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UTILIZATION OF MEMBER FOR OSHAWA'S TELEPHONE CODE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the chief organizer of the socialist party in the Province of Québec, Mr. Rémy Trudel, says that his criteria for being in politics are: honesty, honesty, honesty.

Two of his assistants, also political organizers in Abitibi, Mr. Michel Lemyre and Mr. Donald Houle, use and encourage others to use, for their phone calls, the code number given to another honest socialist, whose life is transparent and beyond reproach.

Mr. Speaker, in the provincial political organization of the NDP, in Abitibi, not only the telephone code number of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is being used, but its use is also encouraged.

This is a dishonest use of taxpayer money by the socialist party. Is that the honesty of the socialist chief? How is he going to explain that to the House, today?

TELEFILM CANADA

REQUEST FOR CHAIRMAN'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Communications, I have a question for—

An Hon. Member: Anything else you want to talk about?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There will be a lot of things we want to talk about. I will wait for the Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications.

This government's policy on film and on Telefilm Canada is marked by a lack of direction, incompetence, abuse of expense accounts, mass resignations and political interference. In short, it's a complete disaster.

Mr. Speaker, in the last two days in the House, the Minister made misleading statements, incorrectly quoted the wrong source about Telefilm Canada's debt and tabled only part of the Executive Director's letter of resignation.

Yesterday in the House, the Minister stated that the Canadian Film and Television Association fully supported Mr. Jean Sirois as Chairman of Telefilm Canada.

Will the Minister confirm today that, in fact, the Association's Chairman, Mr. John Ross, has asked for Mr. Jean Sirois' resignation?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I heard from the President of the Canadian Film and Television Association and he had indicated both their ongoing concern about the problems with Telefilm, and their desire to get those problems corrected.

They raised the question of reorganization within Telefilm and asked me to ensure that there would be consultation between Telefilm and the film industry. I have undertaken to do that. Those consultations will be under way tomorrow with a letter that will be sent out from Telefilm inviting their proposals with regard to appointments.

I would mention, Mr. Speaker, that the appointments to date are of a temporary nature, they are for a limited period of time, until the naming of a full-time executive director of Telefilm.

ALLEGATIONS CONTAINED IN FORMER EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR'S LETTER OF RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister was in great close touch with the Canadian Film and Television Association. Yesterday she said that the association approved Mr. Jean Sirois; today she admits that she received a letter and a notice from the President asking for the resignation of Mr. Jean Sirois. I am sure the House will be impressed by her very close contacts with the industry.

The Minister was advised by the Executive Director of Telefilm in his letter of resignation—and I am talking about the full letter of resignation which the Minister did not table—that Jean Sirois, her Conservative patronage appointee as Chairman of Telefilm, and I am using Mr. Pearson's words, "had engaged in expense account abuse, had helped arrange for financing for Hollywood movies instead of Canadian produced films, and had overstepped his mandate by providing financing for a film being made by a prominent Conservative in Quebec City".

The Minister was also provided with a legal opinion from the Department of Justice suggesting in strong terms that Mr. Sirois was overstepping his mandate as Chairman. What actions is she going to take about all these allegations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Leader of the Opposition that if he has specific charges to lay, he should stand on his feet and lay them, and he should not resort to smear and innuendo as is his wont and the wont of his colleagues. He does that time after time. If he has any charge to make regarding impropriety, or anything of that nature, he can be sure it will be followed up, as I followed up with the financial difficulties of Telefilm to see that those financial difficulties had management plans established and had interim management personnel put into place so that once again we could say that Telefilm is a success story.

If he doubts for one minute that I have been in touch with the industry, I will quote once again from the letter that I received. It says—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which one?

Ms. Copps: Which one?

Miss MacDonald: From the President of the Canadian Film and Television Association. It says: "Telefilm Canada is a success story and will remain a crucial part of the success of the Canadian film and television industry, and the membership acknowledges your role and your staff's assistance in the gains we have made", and that is dated February 19.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would be willing to table that letter. We are talking about the complete letter, the full letter, not an edited version of it.

The allegations I was bringing to the attention of the House and the Minister were not my allegations. They were the allegations of the former Executive Director of Telefilm, Mr. Peter Pearson. I would be perfectly willing to table that incomplete letter rather than the abbreviated version that the Minister tabled yesterday.

INTRODUCTION OF FILM DISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, not only has the Minister allowed Telefilm to become almost a total mess, and not only does the Canadian Film and Television Association want Mr. Jean Sirois, a Conservative patronage appointee, to quit as Chairman, but the Government's over-all film policy is now being dictated by Hollywood movie moguls.

Why is it that the Minister allowed tax changes to be made at the request of American film producers? Why is it that she has not yet presented her legislation on Canadian film distribution in the House?

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

An Hon. Member: What did you do when you had the chance, John?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: A free trade sell-out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, for the last 40 years the film industry in this country has been pressing various Governments to introduce legislation that would ensure that the Canadian film market is a separate entity for film rights. For 40 years, Mr. Speaker, it has been attempting to get that inequity corrected.

For most of that 40 years a Liberal Government was in office, and not once did they ever address the problems of the Canadian film industry in this country. Not once. However, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will be bringing in legislation to deal with that inequity.

EXPENSE ACCOUNT ALLEGATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has received Peter Pearson's letter of resignation and since she heard from Michael Spencer through Mr. Musgrove, why has she not investigated the documents which were offered to her about Chairman Jean Sirois and expenses in his expense account as well as his interference in the awarding of tens of thousands of Telefilm dollars to his Quebec City friends for the big show Rendezvous 87?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, once again I say to these Hon. Members that if they have specific charges to lay imputing wrongdoing, why do they not have the courage to get up on their feet and do so? They are not satisfied. They want to smear and they want to create innuendo.

I have taken it upon myself to ensure that auditors were sent in to look at the differences in the financial situation of Telefilm Canada which were reported to us. At one point there was a lapse predicted of $53 million. Subsequently there was an over commitment predicted of $48 million, a difference of $100 million. I wanted to ensure that that situation was dealt with and, as a result, auditors were brought in, a new management team was put into place, and new management systems were introduced for the first time so that now Telefilm can be put on a substantial basis.

I say to the Hon. Member that I am pleased Telefilm has been able to get itself out of the mess that it found itself in last year and I regret that the Hon. Member continues to try to undermine it.

REQUEST THAT CHAIRMAN BE SUSPENDED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the important issue here is how to get help for feature films and for TV programs from the banking and financial institutions. That is what the Minister has failed to settle in this whole matter. The Minister is the one who is incompetent and the Minister is—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put a question.

Mrs. Finestone: Will the Minister suspend Chairman Jean Sirois now, name a new executive director, and launch a full investigation into what has been happening at Telefilm Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that nothing has been done with regard to funding for Telefilm Canada. We added $33 million a year for five years, a total of $165 million to the Telefilm fund so that any number of new Canadian films could be made. I want to assure you, Sir, that I am very proud of what has happened.

Un Zoo La Nuit which has won international fame has been funded by Telefilm Canada. I've Heard the Mermaids Singing has been funded by Telefilm Canada. Anne of Green Gables has been funded by Telefilm Canada. All of these great films, all of these great series, has been funded by Telefilm Canada. I happen to be very proud of what Telefilm Canada has done and I regret that the Hon. Member wants to try to destroy it.

Oral Questions

PETRO-CANADA

SALE OF SHARES TO PUBLIC—PRESS REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A few years ago a Conservative Government announced its intentions to privatize Petro-Canada. That same Government lost a subsequent federal election.

According to news reports today, the present Conservative Government is about to move in that direction once again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Having heard his quaint voices from the past behind him, and considering that in the 1984 election there was no mandate for privatizing Petro-Canada, not a single speech made by the Leader of the Conservative Party in the 1984 election mentioned this, and considering that Petro-Canada is desired to be kept in the public sector by Canadians today, will the Minister comment on this press report and assure us that this abominable course of direction will not be taken by the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I may remind the Hon. Member that the Canadian Socialist Party, better known as the NDP, is probably the one that suggested creating a Crown corporation in the oil sector, and it has never won an election. Its suggestion never brought it to power, Mr. Speaker.

Second, this Government has a mandate to guarantee a market in the energy sector. Since 1984, this Government, in accordance with its mandate, has instructed Petro-Canada to operate on a commercial basis, and Petro-Canada has been doing just that, for the greater benefit of Canadians and Petro-Canada customers, since 1984.

Third, this Government also announced it would introduce a policy to privatize Crown corporations that are not considered to have a major policy role in Canada.

Fourth, since Petro-Canada is already operating on a commercial basis, we can conclude there is no major political role for Petro-Canada.

That is why, although the Cabinet has yet to make a decision at this time, the question of Petro-Canada is still being examined, both in my Department and in other government agencies.

• (1430)

POSITION OF UNITED STATES SENATOR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will keep that up and will say all the things outside the House in the subsequent election campaign that he just said inside the House.

I repeat that the Prime Minister, when leading the Opposition, made not a single reference to privatizing Petro-Canada during the 1984 election campaign.

Since certain U.S. Senators and Governors have recently objected to the Canadian tradition of having public-sector involvement in the economy, and specifically since Senator Baucus in a recent speech called such intervention a form of subsidy, will the Minister now admit that one of the real reasons the Government is about to re-run this old policy that is unacceptable to Canadians is recent pressure from the United States to do so? Will he admit that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Socialist Party is welcome to visit the riding of Frontenac at any time—before, during or after the election campaign—to discuss whatever he wants, including Petro-Canada.

As for the stand taken by certain U.S. senators or private citizens, I am not in the habit of taking orders from other countries.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I did mention that there was no commitment to privatize Petro-Canada in the last election campaign, but I do have, from the Conservative policy campaign book of 1984, a statement which I would ask the Minister to comment on to see if he will maintain this. With reference to a Conservative Government, the handbook said:

> We will adopt market sensitive pricing for exported natural gas, while ensuring that Canadians always pay less than their American neighbours—

That was from the Conservative Party campaign commitment of 1984.

In light of the free trade agreement the Minister has entered into with the United States and recent policy statements, will he explain why the Conservatives have completely abandoned their commitment to Canadians to have lower prices?

Mr. Nystrom: Lyin' Brian, lyin' Brian.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Shields: We know where you got that one Eddie, from Bob White.

Mr. Riis: It's out of your handbook.

Mr. Speaker: I want to observe that often the Chair, in the exercise of common sense, chooses not to hear something. However, just a moment ago there was a remark which was clearly unparliamentary. I, of course, do not know who the Hon. Member was who made it and I am not interested in finding out at the moment. However, I am interested in making it clear that that remark was absolutely and utterly inappropriate and it did nothing to dignify these proceedings.

I would remind Hon. Members that when they do not have the floor and an open mike is available, however strongly they may feel they should not make their comments into the microphone of another Member when they are using language that is clearly inappropriate to this place.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I can inform the Hon. Member that as far as export prices are concerned, the Socialist Party is hardly in a position to criticize, because that same Party wanted to prohibit all energy exports. This Party was elected on a specific platform, but it was also elected to protect the interests of Canada, including the interests of the Western provinces. As far as our energy policy is concerned, I think the leader of the Socialist Party should go to Alberta and talk to the people out there. He would realize that this Government's energy policy promotes the interests of Alberta, and that Albertans are well aware of this, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

FINANCING OF PROJECTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government said that it would privatize Petro-Canada. It did not do it. Then it said it would wait until the market was right and it never was right. Now it is saying it will privatize it when it needs money for energy projects. This really tells Canadians that they have to accept privatization or they do not get those projects.

Why is the Government coercing the Canadian public into accepting something they do not want, something that will be devastating for this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish the Liberal Party would explain what is so bad about privatizing Petro-Canada. Second, I would like to point out that the present Government will make a decision about privatizing Petro-Canada when it believes it is in the interests of Canada and Canadians to do so.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with privatizing Petro-Canada is that if one share of Petro-Canada is sold to the private sector, it can no longer be used as an instrument of public policy. There is no way whatsoever it can be used for public policy.

Why is the Government destroying the National Energy Board? Why is the Government bent on privatizing Petro-Canada, completely abandoning the Government's role and the investment of the people of Canada in the energy sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member's position. I always thought that asking Canadians to own shares in Petro-Canada was hardly against their interests, and in fact, this is exactly what the Quebec Liberal Party is doing with its privatization program. It goes to show that Quebec has two Liberal Parties, the Socialist one in Ottawa and one that favours private enterprise in Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Energy. I would ask the Minister how he can rise in the House of Commons and claim there is no connection between this sellout of Petro-Canada and the trade deal with the United States when, in fact, one can see everything through the connections in pricing and through the connections in elimination of the control of our natural resources in the future. Why is the Minister prepared to sell out Petro-Canada and also tie it to the United States in a trade deal?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Socialist Party has one obsession, both in the House and outside, and that is the United States. This Government does not have that kind of obsession. It feels that Canadian policies for Canadians can serve both the interests of the United States and those of Canadians, because when we are talking about trade and the exchange of products between countries, we are talking about the interests of consumers and producers.

• (1440)

CANADIAN INDEPENDENCE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of the future of Canadian independence in the energy field. Why is the Minister prepared to sacrifice this instrument of Canadian initiative, Canadian potential, Canadian policy, in order to get a trade deal that will not benefit anyone in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is running out of issues to harp on. I can assure you that the policies and decisions of this Government with respect to Petro-Canada are formed and made here in Ottawa, by a Government elected by Canadians. Second, if the Government decides we should ask Canadians to buy shares in Petro-Canada and thus generate capital for mega-projects that will guarantee security of supply for Canadians, this will harm the interests of the NDP, not the interests of Canadians, Mr. Speaker!

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH POTATO MARKETING BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In the course of a study made Across the country, the National Farm Products Marketing Council realized that the table and seed segments of the potato growing industry face rapid and wide price fluctuations as well as uncertainty for the future. Could the Hon. Minister reassure our farm producers and tell them that, along with principal officials and the provinces, you are currently developing a strategy for the creation of a potato marketing agency that ensure stability and profitability of the markets, supervise quotas and bring long term growth to this whole area.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. As he will realize, at the request of the industry I instructed the National Farm Products Marketing Council to carry out a study and a series of hearings and report to me. That process has been completed and the report advises that we proceed in two stages. Stage one is to establish the agency with all of the powers under the Act, Section 23, with the exception of those powers to supply and manage.

I want to assure the industry that we will be working very closely with it and the provinces to work out a plan that would indeed include supply management. I hope that would be possible in the not too distant future.

IMMIGRATION

DEPARTURE AND RETURN OF CONVICTED TERRORIST

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration and concerns the actions of the Government in the never-ending saga of this convicted terrorist which is embarrassing Canadians, pitting one Department against the other, and showing new low levels of incompetence, even for that Government.

Since the Government organized Mr. Mohammad's voluntary departure, can he finally be open with Canadians and explain how the plan was bungled, why Mr. Mohammad was prohibited from continuing his journey beyond London, England, and why the Minister failed to resolve any last minute difficulties by involving the Department of External Affairs rather than keeping it in the dark?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I was quite clear about yesterday's events. I will repeat what I said for my colleague's benefit. First, we were approached . . . The Government had always clearly stated that it would facilitate Mr. Mohammad's departure whether it is voluntary or through a deportation order, as we are doing now. Mr. Mohammad contacted CEIC officials and his lawyer suggested a voluntary departure based on deals and procedures that they themselves arranged. The Government is only facilitating Mr. Mohammad's departure from Canada with security measures and a certificate of identity. My hon. colleague will have to admit one thing unless he is against Mr. Mohammad's departure . . . But this would not be the first time his Party has conflicting positions. However now that Mr. Mohammad is back in Canada, for whatever reason he had, we are going on with the deportation procedure and the Government will not rest before he is out of the country.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the reality remains that this episode has been one giant comedy of government errors, incompetence and bungling. Canadians want to know when it is going to come to an end.

REPORTED LACK OF VISA TO ENTER ANOTHER COUNTRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): My supplementary is directed to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. If the problem in London, England, was the lack of a proper visa or other document, can the Minister inform this House what precise actions he or the Government took to overcome that shortcoming? In fact, is the Minister telling Canadians that he was unable to arrange one single and simple visa? Is this a priority or not, and is the Government capable of completing a plan from start to finish without it ending up a charade from one coast to the other?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr Speaker, what the Government has tried to do is to make sure that Mr. Mohammad could leave the country as soon as possible. This is surprising coming from the Liberal Party when we have been trying for eight months to pass legislation to deal expeditiously with smugglers. Take a look at the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker . . . They never have a definite position. For goodness' sake, let us know what your position is!

ROLE OF CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I appreciate his attemps to solve the conflict between Mr. Mohammad and the Immigration Appeal Board in a way acceptable to both parties, and I hope that in spite of the comments attributed to him in The Globe and Mail today, the Minister will not blame either Mr. Mohammad or his counsel for the failure of that project.

My question to the Minister is this: Would the Minister confirm, in relation with the comments attributed to Mr. Saleh by The Globe and Mail, that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has, in communicating the news to the media, stopped that project?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the travel arrangements were as set out by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. They were made by Mr. Mohammad and his lawyers and friends. They were discussed with my colleague, the Minister. The RCMP provided protective surveillance. CSIS was not involved in any way whatsoever with the travel arrangements or this particular case.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPORT ON FAILURE OF PROJECT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since it has been alleged by Mr. Saleh that CSIS failed to keep its part of an agreement, and in view of conflicting suggestions in the media, will the Minister of Immigration, the one who was attempting to produce a positive result in this difficult situation, undertake to report as soon as possible to this House on why this humane project failed?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I have essentially answered this question earlier when I mentioned that Mr. Mohammad had decided himself of the steps taken by him and his advisers to leave the country. The reasons why he did not succeed have nothing whatsoever to do with the Government action but result of steps taken by Mr. Mohammad himself.

And I believe that in all that has been said yesterday by his counsel and by concerned witnesses, no mention was ever made of any government responsibility.

As for the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that I have never said . . . I have never blamed Mr. Mohammad, his counsels or his advisers.

AIR CANADA

FARES CHARGED FOR FLIGHTS TO LONDON FROM TORONTO AND HALIFAX

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, are you sure the cameras come down to this corner? As I started to say 24 hours ago, before I was interrupted, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning Air Canada's policy on overseas air fares.

I think the Minister is aware that Air Canada announced air fares that provide a fare of $388 for those flying from Toronto to London while, at the same time, the fare from Halifax to London is $488. I do not have to tell the Minister what a concern that is to people from Atlantic Canada. We know that air Canada should be committed to equality in its policy across Canada. Will he investigate this discrepancy and report to the House as soon as possible? In the meantime, will he instruct Air Canada to exercise some fairness in airline policy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of sympathy with the Hon. Member because the situation with respect to fares from Newfoundland to London, England, is definitely unfair as well.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Do something about it, then.

Mr. Crosbie: What are we going to do about it? The thing is, Mr. Speaker, that no one can understand airline fares. Why I should be expected to understand them, is beyond me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Even if questions do not always elicit information, that one certainly received a frank response.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TERMINAL 3 PROJECT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns Terminal 3 at Pearson International Airport. Yesterday in a briefing by the Minister's officials in Toronto, one key element was left unsettled. Officials indicated that the bidders expected to be permitted some financial comfort from the Government. Two of the bidders deny this. Documentation was furnished to the bidders when they were preparing their proposals and officials did not make that documentation public.

If the Minister wants to support the argument that financial comfort was available, why will he not make these documents public so that Canadians can see exactly what the developers were told about the arrangements?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Toronto the committee in charge of this project gave a full explanation which I am told satisfied everyone who was there except the Hon. Member, who was quoted in the paper as saying: "We continue to be suspicious about the whole affair".

It is impossible to quiet the suspicions of the Liberal Party about anything. They have no policy, no program, no principles, and no decency. All they try to do is spread suspicion about everything. This is one project where even their best efforts will not get anybody suspicious about anything.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the officials would not make public the documents which they claim indicate that financial comfort was available. Two of the people who got the documents deny that they contain that assurance about financial comfort. Why will the Minister not settle it by making them public?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman wants to tell us who it was in these two development companies, to whom they spoke, and so on. The officials have stated the fact that all proposals called for persons interested to disclose their financial plan. They were all invited to do that.

As far as the documents are concerned, once the ground lease is signed with the winning developer whose bid was found by the committee and Treasury Board to be significantly superior to all others financially in both net present value and rate of return to Transport Canada, and after all conditions precedent are met, I see no reason why these documents should not be made available to the Standing Committee on Transport or other responsible authority.

TELEFILM CANADA

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER HAS CONFIDENCE IN MR. JEAN SIROIS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister for Communications.

Yesterday she indicated that Mr. Jean Sirois, chairman of the board at Telefilm Canada, had the confidence of the industry. Today we find that Mr. John Ross, a major spokesman for the industry, has asked for Mr. Sirois's resignation.

My question is simple: Does the Hon. Minister still have confidence in Mr. Jean Sirois?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I referred to a letter that I had received from the President of the Canadian Film and Television Association. I quoted from it and will do so again. He wrote to me saying: "We share your distress over recent attempts to make political mileage out of, what for us, was old news". He went on: "We have been working with Jean Sirois in trying to get everything ready for a new Executive Director". I have quoted from this letter and will be very pleased to table it at three o'clock.

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY FORMER EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether the Minister still has confidence in Jean Sirois. Has the Minister read the letter that was referred to by the Leader of the Opposition? It is a letter from Mr. Pearson in which he says there is strident aggressive intervention on the part of Mr. Sirois, and he makes allegations that the expense accounts would not bear public scrutiny. He said that Mr. Sirois criticized some of the staff for being "rouge". These are not our allegations, but the allegations in the letter.

What will the Minister do about this mess? Does she still have confidence in Mr. Jean Sirois? Is she prepared to refer this to a committee of inquiry to get to the bottom of it?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the other day I quoted from the letter from Mr. Pearson. I quote to the effect that he said, among other things: "I must also note for the record, the distinguished contribution of your party in the area of film and television production. From September, 1984, the Progressive Conservative Government has lived up to their commitment to strengthen Canadian production with dedication and with effort".

That is what was in the letter that I tabled the other day in the House and from which I quoted.

If the Hon. Member has charges to make against anyone in the organization whatsoever, bring them forward to me and I will see that they will be investigated. However, allegations, smear, and innuendo do not constitute the basis for investigation. Surely the Member would want to stand in his place and make the specific charges to which he seems to be alluding. I can assure him I will follow them up.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN IMPRISONED IN NEW JERSEY—TRANSFER OF OFFENDERS TREATY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I begin by thanking him and his officials, as well as the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his officials, for their interest and concern in the case of a Nova Scotia person by the name of Bruce Curtis who is incarcerated in a New Jersey jail.

The Minister will know that Canada and the United States signed a Transfer of Offenders Treaty which has subsequently been ratified by the state Government of New Jersey. Will the Minister explain to the House why there is such delay in New Jersey by Governor Kean with regard to releasing Bruce Curtis so he may come to Canada and be incarcerated in a Canadian penal institution?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member and Members of the House that his facts are quite correct. Indeed, the treaty was passed by our two countries and has been implemented by the State of New Jersey. Under the terms of that agreement, both the State of New Jersey and the federal Government would have to agree to the transfer. We have no objections whatsoever and we are prepared to facilitate it, but, first of all, New Jersey must make the decision to agree to it. We are awaiting its approval, which we hope will be forthcoming.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister must be aware that the assurances being sought by the state Government, particularly Governor Kean, are beyond the provisions of the treaty. In essence, what they are attempting to do is amend a consummated legal binding treaty signed by Canada and the United States.

Will the Minister undertake to the House that he will make representations to the United States Government to have it live up to the provisions of the treaty it has signed and agreed to? Will the Minister come back to the House and give us an accounting as to why it has been so long that this young Nova Scotian has been incarcerated in a New Jersey jail?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that, under the terms of the agreement, we are in no position to force the State of New Jersey to agree to this exchange. However, I can advise the Hon. Member that my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on October 29, 1987, and February 8, 1988, wrote to the Governor of New Jersey requesting implementation by the State of the provisions of this agreement. I am hopeful that these letters written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will bring forth a favourable response from the State of New Jersey.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

PRESENTATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twelfth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business in both official languages.

This report deals with the selection of votable items pertaining to the tenth draw which took place on February 9, 1988.

Introduction of Bills

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-284, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (surrogacy arrangements).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Copps: In brief, Mr. Speaker, the intention of this Bill is to make it illegal for anyone to make a profit out of either arranging or participating in surrogacy arrangements. It is a first step and I would hope that we would have a chance to debate this Bill at some point in the near future.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present two petitions this afternoon pursuant to Standing Order 106.

The first petition is from a number of constituents who point out that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. They believe that the proposed trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and thereby undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners ask Parliament to now dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF ELECTRICAL UTILITIES, DAMS AND WATER LICENCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from a number of residents of central British Columbia. They point out that the West Kootenay Power and Light Company, with attendant water licences, was sold outright to Utilicorp United Inc. of Kansas City, Missouri, in the United States. They point out that Canadians are expressedly prohibited from similar outright purchases in the United States by U.S. law, and the 8,673 consumers in the West Kootenay Power and Light Company service area have signed a petition protesting the sale.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament to pass a law requiring majority ownership by Canadians of electrical utilities, dams and water licences so that Canadians citizens will be afforded protection of their sovereignty equal to that enjoyed by citizens of the United States.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST THE HOMELESS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition that has been sponsored by the National Anti-Poverty Organization which states that the Canadian Council on Social Development estimates that more than 100,000 people were homeless at one time or another during 1986 in Canada, that an increasing number of young people, women and entire families have joined the ranks of the homeless despite a healthy Canadian economy, and that the number of affordable dwellings for low-income people is dwindling constantly and soup kitchens and emergency shelters are only temporary measures, not permanent solutions.

Therefore the petitions call upon the Government of Canada to act immediately to establish the necessary measures to ensure that homeless and poorly lodged Canadians, first, live in adequate and healthy housing, and, second, have access to a variety of rehabilitation programs in order to reintegrate into Canadian society.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the City of Winnipeg. They state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, duty and pleasure to present three petitions. One is signed by citizens of the Queen City of Regina. Another is signed by other residents of Regina, Swift Current, and Chaplin, Saskatchewan. The petitioners include citizens of the wonderful Town of Abbey, Saskatchewan, where, Mr. Speaker, you will be happy to know I was station agent years ago.

Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the jobs of hundreds of thousands of Canadians, the petitioners therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege to table a petition signed by residents of Bowmanville, Oshawa, Janetville, Whitby and Chelmsford, Ontario.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate whatsoever from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and, further, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

They state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling petitions signed by residents of Saint-Romuald, Saint-Jean-Chrysostome, Saint-Hyacinthe, Granby, Roberval, Saint-Henri, Taillon, Lévis, Charny, Lauzon, Montreal and the vicinity, Swift Current, and Gerald, Saskatchewan.

These 182 signatures are in addition to those on other petitions I presented earlier, a grand total of 32,368 signatures. The undersigned are aware that since 1974 the federal Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations allow the installation of self-inflating bags for private car drivers, and that this device would reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries.

Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to make it mandatory to install inflatable bags in the front seat of passenger cars and adjustable shoulder seat-belts for passengers on the back seat.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan concerning Bill C-54.

The petitioners indicate that they are concerned that pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause the Government to water down and weaken this legislation.

The petitioners therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Bill C-54 which will make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell or rent pornographic material as defined in the Bill. They call upon Parliament to pass the Bill without dilution in the belief that it gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

I have five additional petitions on the same topic from residents of Shaunavon, Swift Current, Herbert, and Vanguard, Saskatchewan.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

And on the amendment of Mr. Garneau:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"This House regrets that the Budget

1. Failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by Government policies put forward during the last three and one-half years;

2. failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;

3. failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle income Canadians; and

4. failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system."

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in the time I have remaining to me from yesterday I wish to spend a few minutes talking about the contents of the petition I presented to the House today. It dealt with homelessness in Canada and the inability or the unwillingness of the Government to bring forward any type of concrete policy to deal with this very serious social and economic problem. Certainly, in the course of numerous Budgets presented by the Government, including the last one, there has not been one provision that would alleviate the serious problem facing some estimated 100,000 Canadians who are homeless, and the thousands of others who are living in inadequate housing.

To illustrate that point The Toronto Star ran an article on homelessness in Metropolitan Toronto. It adequately describes the crisis that exists in that urban centre. Indeed, it could very well apply to major urban centres across the country.

It is pointed out in the article that in Metro Toronto alone some 20,000 people a year check into the various emergency hostels around Metro, filling each of the 2,500 beds every night of the year. Many more low income people stay in hostels, but they have been living in inadequate quarters. Some 10,000 or more people in Metro spend more than half their incomes on rent, with some spending as much as 70 per cent. According to data at the federal level, about 100,000 low income renters in Metro are desperate for decent housing which they can afford. Some 42,000 of these people are single.

I have addressed this question several times in the past in the House. I have urged the Government to do a number of things. The co-op housing sector is an alternative form of housing which many people could utilize. The co-op housing sector has provided housing for people in the disabled community, or for people on a fixed income. It has been filling a void in the housing market. Yet the Government has done absolutely nothing to encourage more construction of co-op housing. In fact, if anything, the Government has gone out of its way to restrict the limited effectiveness that the co-op housing movement has made. It could probably be argued that the co-op housing movement has probably done too good a job. The resistance to Government providing additional moneys for affordable housing is coming from the private development industry.

I would recommend to anyone in the House to read yesterday's Hansard at page 13071. In the last several months the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has raised questions on homelessness, not only in York East but in Metro generally. The Hon. Member made a very strong and compassionate argument as to why the Government should be involved in developing affordable, decent housing.

In response to a question from the Hon. Member for York East, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) made what I could only consider to be an astounding and incredible statement. He is actually speaking on behalf of the Government, enunciating policy on behalf of the Government on housing matters. The Parliamentary Secretary said the following:

> Is the Hon. Member asking the Government to get into the financing of the housing industry? I suggest to him that there are some financial institutions that would express concern about a Government heating up the market too much with easy money by getting into the housing industry. That would not solve the problem in Toronto. If it becomes too easy to finance, the market could be heated up even further.

The Parliamentary Secretary went on to suggest, if not actually state, that if a person could not find decent housing in Toronto perhaps he or she should consider moving to places like Winnipeg, Montreal, or Moncton.

The Parliamentary Secretary further stated:

> The Government has been involved, through CMHC, in what is called social housing programs where there is a subsidy for those individuals.

That is the financing through transfer payments to the provinces, Mr. Speaker.

The Parliamentary Secretary further stated:

> That also comes under somewhat of a misnomer because it is called affordable housing.

I do not know where the Parliamentary Secretary gets his ideas about how society has been provided affordable housing over the years. Governments at all levels have had a long history of being involved in constructing affordable housing, for very good reasons. It not only fills a social need, it is also a major creator of jobs in this country. For every one job that is created in the housing construction, there are an estimated three to four additional jobs created in industry in providing the materials and the other goods that go into housing. Housing not only involve some type of action on the part of Government to fill a social need, it is very much an important part of our economy. When the Parliamentary Secretary ignores that, and makes those kinds of stupid statements, it is far beyond me why he is in that job—it totally escapes me. He would be better transferred to something that he knows something about, because he certainly does not know anything about housing or its place in the economy of this country.

Yesterday I spoke about how the Government had managed, through successive Budgets, to look after those who have, and to take even more away from those who have not. Rather than improving a situation, the Government has actually made it worse.

Much of the debate on this Budget has centred on regional disparities. The Government has argued that indeed it has been concerned about disparities in the various regions of Canada, particularly in the West and in the Atlantic provinces. But what the Government has not spoken about is what it has been doing to the transfer payments to those provinces, which has put them in a bad situation.

I see that you are signalling that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I will have an opportunity to pursue this matter at some other time.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this has been a day full of activity in the House and, despite the distractions of other matters, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak during this Budget debate. I believe it is the role and the duty of the Opposition, our critic, the very capable Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), and the Leader of the Opposition to address what, after all, is the most important item on any parliamentary calendar, the review of the expenditures and the review of the taxation policies of a Government. The reason that Parliament is a Parliament is to debate the initiatives of the imposition of tax and the expenditures of a Government. No greater purpose do we have.

Without any reflections on any area of the House, I rather regret that in this televised age during a debate of this importance we have so few Members contributing to the deliberations before Your Honour.

The speech delivered in this House on the afternoon of February 10 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), carried live by television across the country, was not a Budget. It was the longest single free time political broadcast in Canadian history. Just as we would expect from the Government, it did not meet minimum Canadian content rules. The Minister was too busy plagiarizing, particularly some of Ronald Reagan's old nautical rhetoric. He announced proudly to the House of Commons and the country that we are "staying the course". That is great if you are rich enough to own a yacht. It is great if you know where you are going and can get there on that yacht, but for the millions of men, women, and children who are living close to the poverty line in this country, staying the course means lining up once again at a food bank, lining up for shelter, hoping for food to get by, or hoping for some money for clothing. There are fewer and fewer opportunities in this great Tory world symbolized by the Minister of Finance.

For the people who cannot afford to stay the course, the Government is using another one of President Reagan's discarded theories; that is the trickle down philosophy. If you throw money at the wealthy by way of enough tax write-offs, by way of enough tax incentives, by lower tax rates, then over a period of time enough money will trickle through the fingers of the rich to fall into the grateful hands of the poor and those less able to pay their way in this country.

Over the break I was reading a little Darwin and a little Malthus. This was a Darwinian Budget. This was the survival of the fittest theory. The Tory theory is that if you leave the disadvantaged alone, you will force them, the handicapped, the aged, the unemployed, and the homeless, to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps, as if there was a moral issue in being unemployed, or something wrong in being handicapped. What the Minister did not tell us in his speech is that even here the Government put a tax on the bootstraps.

The Minister's speech was less a plan for the future than a very selected recapitulation, regurgitation of the Government's record since 1984. It was a free time political broadcast at the expense of Canadians, at the expense of parliamentary time. It was a dry run for the next election campaign. As speeches go, it was very dry indeed. The Minister gave us his own version of the economic Olympics, a series of charts, graphs, studies, and numbers by which he attempted to show that the country is doing better than any other of the industrialized world. As a diversionary tactic it is an impressive step. One must admire the public relations skill. It paints a pretty picture. If the whole story were in the Minister's documents, it would be very appealing, indeed, for Canadians. The fact that it is now being distributed, thanks to the Canadian taxpayer, at public expense across the country, as part of the Government's propaganda machine, is not entirely irrelevant to the Minister's purpose. However, the speech and the documents do not tell the whole story. It is not the complete picture, at all, of what the Government has done since it came into office.

I had the honour of addressing McGill students a few months ago in Montreal, in the Stephen Leacock Building of McGill, named after one of the famous professors of that great institution and a great Canadian, one of our leading authors, probably the most naturally funny man we have ever had with intelligence in the country. He used to say that a half-truth, like half a brick, is always more forcible as an argument than a whole one; it carries further. I heard a corruption of that Leacock story one time, that a half-truth is like a half a brick; it is easier to throw and it hurts just as much when it lands. Anyway, the Minister is following that advice to the letter.

For example, in his speech he boasts that as a result of tax reform, 850,000 Canadians have been taken off the tax rolls, do not pay any more taxes. That is the first half of the brick. As the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has pointed out in his speech and in other interventions in the House and elsewhere, the Minister failed to mention the other half a brick. He failed to mention that in the last three and a half years under this Minister of Finance more than one million Canadians have been put on the tax rolls. Even with this phoney tax reform, we are still 150,000 people worse off in terms of taxpayers than we were when the Government took office.

As a result of the Minister's Budgets, the total tax bill over the life of this Government, including direct and indirect personal taxes, will go up, as my colleague has indicated, by an average of $1,200 per year per person, year after year. The Minister's argument is a couple of bricks short of a full load, but, as they would say down on the farm, it sure was a full load. It is certainly not the total story.

In his haste to claim the credit for the country's economic growth for himself and his Government, the Minister of Finance, probably inadvertently, included a very interesting fact in his speech, namely that Canada's economy started growing again in 1982 under a Liberal Government. It means that all this talk about inheriting a bad situation from a previous Liberal Government was just that, according to the Minister's speech, because he now realizes that our economic rebirth started in 1982 under the Trudeau administration.

Whatever the Minister may say about jobs created by the Conservatives, we have yet to get back to the employment levels we had before the recession. As the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) pointed out, our unemployment rate is still above the level of 7.5 per cent, where it was before the 1981-82 recession. Our economic growth has been uneven. The unemployment rate in our disadvantaged regions is still at unacceptably high levels. In Newfoundland, it is still 17.4 per cent, and in British Columbia the unemployment rate is 10.1 per cent.

[English]

As my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides has pointed out, the average earning for Canadian workers, after allowing for inflation, is now lower than it was in 1984 when the Government took over. Take-home pay in constant dollars is now lower than it was when the Government took office.

Let us take another example. The Government has not only given us more taxes, and I will get into that in a minute, but more debt—the deficit and the national debt. The Minister said in his most stately and stentorian voice, as he looked earnestly up into the camera—his coaches were having him on for this document which no doubt is being sent across the country, videotaped at Canadian expense to every area of Canada—"We have restored fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and cutting the growth of the national debt". That is not even half a brick.

Here is a Government which has collected $22.5 billion more in taxes from Canadians in three and a half years by increasing taxes, yet in the same period it has managed to lower the deficit by only a token amount, an amount which my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides has pointed out was mostly arrived at by juggling the books, playing games with numbers, a little hidden accounting here and there, a few little caches to set aside for the election, rather than real decreases in the deficit or the debt.

Indeed, one of the largest accounting firms in the country, Peat Marwick, in its newsletter analysing the Budget, said that there is an element of sleight of hand to the tune of nearly $4 billion in the Minister's deficit projections.

In the meantime the national debt has grown astronomically under the Government. Here again the Minister goes out of his way to blame past administrations for his problem and for the level of the public debt. Why is it that the total response of the Government, still after virtually four years in government, is that it is always somebody else's fault? Why won't somebody on the other side of the House, beginning with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Minister of Finance, say: "Hey, we goofed; yeah, we made a mistake"? It is because they have no backbone, no integrity, no honest approach with Canadians.

Let us look at the national debt. Has it gone down under this Government?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No. Has it been substantially reduced?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No. It has increased by 66 per cent since the Government took office. Let us go through the numbers.

Mr. Layton: It is a straight carry-over.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sorry that my friend from the West Island of Montreal did not hear my speech yesterday. He might have learned something. We were looking for his presence. He would have added a little comic relief to the afternoon.

In the 117 years of Confederation prior to 1984 when the Government took office, successive Governments incurred a total national debt of $178.6 billion. Then came the Minister of Finance, a knight in shining armour, some latter-day participant of the round table. He was going to smite that debt with his sword like it had never been smitten before, but like the round table of Prince Arthur, that commitment turned out to be a complete myth. After three and a half years the Minister's armour is not nearly so shiny. Instead of reducing the debt, thanks to this Minister and this Government, it has gone up to $293.4 billion, an increase of $116.6 billion or 66 per cent in the last three and a half years.

In other words, in three and half years the Minister has managed to accumulate more debt than all his predecessors were able to accumulate in over a century. Not bad! He is responsible for 40 per cent of the total debt incurred by Canada since Confederation. Forty per cent of the total public debt since Confederation in only three and half years! That is a record! He deserves a gold medal. He should come to Calgary with me this weekend, and I will give him a gold medal. Because of his record, he also deserves a silver and a bronze medal, as the champion of public debt since Confederation.

This Finance Minister has accumulated more debt than most of his predecessors put together. It will probably be an interesting detail to add to his biography, but it is a crushing burden on future generations of Canadians.

[English]

The Minister is also the leading candidate for a medal in the double back flip. I do not know whether you have been watching the free style skiing, Mr. Speaker, but there have been some great performances; Canadians are doing very well. The Minister showed a lot of style. We got a double back flip. We remember when he was at the top of the hill in 1984, standing with the Prime Minister and saying that he was going to get at that deficit and he was not going to raise taxes. He was not going to raise taxes. He was going to lower expenditures. That was a solemn commitment. It was one of those sacred trusts. Off they went and the Government has been back flipping ever since on that particular promise to Canadians. Although that event is closed, I think I can strike another medal just by way of supplementary for the Minister's personal library giving him credit for that bit of downhill acrobatics. I can get into the downhill, of course, Mr. Speaker. The Government has been going downhill for the past three and one half years as well.

Let us go through some of the numbers. The very first thing the Minister did in office was to slap a 3 per cent surtax on income. He had a special 5 to 10 per cent sale tax on the very wealthy. He removed that tax, preferring to hit low and middle income Canadians, and he came up with the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. In the last three and a half years there has a been an orgy of Tory taxes. In three and a half years the Conservatives have raised the excise tax on gasoline by 5 cents a litre or 23 cents a gallon. A sales tax increase on gasoline add another 1 cent per litre in this Budget or 4 cents a gallon, for a total increase of 27 cents a gallon on gas since the Government took office.

I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is not here. I am surprised he has not objected. In that great Budget of his in 1979 when he lost the confidence of the House, and the people of Canada rejected the Conservative Government under leadership of the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), he was only up to 18 cents a gallon. He was a piker. He did not know in the House this afternoon what has happened to airline fares between Newfoundland, London and Toronto. That does not surprise anyone in the House, but that he should allow his successor, the Minister of Finance in the Conservative administration, to beat his great record of 18 cents and get up to 23 cents a gallon, well, that is our Minister of Finance and that is a real record.

There is virtually no aspect of Canadian activity on which the Minister has not either increased tax or added a new one. I am not at all convinced that this Government will stay in power too much longer. Its time is numbered but it would like to tax other things. I do not want to speculate, however.

In addition to very substantial increases in the tax on gas which, because of the regressive nature of these increases, hits low-income citizens hardest, especially those who must use a car to get to work, the Government has increased the federal sales tax three times in three and half years: from 9 per cent to 10 per cent; from 10 per cent to 11 per cent; and from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. And sales tax has been extended to goods on which no sales tax was paid before.

Again, low and middle income Canadians will be paying a disproportionate share of this regressive tax.

[English]

The Minister promised tax reform. Tax reform under this Minister has become a fraud. He promised to change the sales tax. He said in last year's Budget that the "federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient. It is a silent killer of jobs". Those were his words. The only change he has made has been to increase it. He is like a doctor who knows that a certain drug is harmful but, without knowing the reason, keeps giving you an increased dosage hoping for a cure. We must add to that the taxes on alcohol and tobacco, which the Minister has raised four times, and the 12 per cent tax which the Minister has imposed on paint and wallpaper. Under the Government, even fixing up your house has come under his scrutiny and has become more expensive. There are new taxes on air travel. The Government does not confine itself to merely raising taxes on adults, like some schoolyard bully, the Minister has reached into the lunchboxes of schoolchildren right across the country and put a tax on soft drinks, candy and snacks. What a terribly perverted imagination the Minister has.

Just when the widowed grandmother, say in Winnipeg, thought she had saved up an extra bit of money to make a long distance telephone call to her grandchildren in Toronto, the Minister slapped a 10 per cent tax on all long distance telephone calls. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides showed me the numbers in the lock-up. That tax will collect about $870 million this year and it will be a billion dollar tax within 12 months. To the people who have to stay in touch, those who are vulnerable, those who cannot get out and who are kept in their homes by sickness or age, the telephone is the only way they can keep in touch in a mobile country with children and grandchildren across the country. They are trapped and penalized very heavily by this increase in tax.

These taxes are hidden, they are sneaky. You don't really notice them until you get the Bill. They are practically invisible. But the sneakiest tax increase of all was the deindexation of personal income tax.

The Minister keeps quiet about this. He didn't even mention it in his Budget this year. It is a very simple decision that will cost Canadians billions of dollars more annually, but he kept quiet about it. And here again, low and middle income Canadians will carry the heaviest burden, while the wealthy will pocket hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of capital gains.

When I was Minister of Finance, we indexed our tax system to avoid penalizing low and middle income Canadians and to protect them against the impact of inflation on our progressive tax system.

By eliminating this protection against inflation, the Minister, in an underhanded and cowardly fashion, is putting an invisible tax burden of billions and billions of dollars more each year on the people of this country, and Canadians must realize this.

[English]

The gap between rich and poor widens in this country. Just take a look at the tax results under the four Budgets presented by the Minister. Canadians are looking for answers. They are asking themselves, why is this disparity so great? Why is the gap widening? Why is the situation getting worse? I want to tell Canadians that they need look no further than the Government sitting opposite. They need look no further than the Government which has misled the people, deceived low and middle income Canadians with phony election promises.

The Government decided long ago which side of the gap it was on. It was not on the side of the working poor, the single parent, the old age pensioner or the young couple. It was not on the side of the farmer, the fisherman or the unskilled labourer earning about $5 an hour. No, the Tory message of this Minister of Finance in four successive budgets is this. If you are rich, you are okay; if you are not, you will pay.

This Government has increased taxes faster and higher, $22.5 billion more in three and a half years, than any Government in Canadian history and that includes the Governments of Canada which had to preside over two world wars in which this country was involved. This Government did all that after solemnly pledging to Canadians that it would do no such thing, that the Government would not raise taxes through the personal commitment given by the Prime Minister to the Toronto Canadian and Empire Clubs in August 1984 just before the election and a commitment given by his now Minister of Finance in the same month. This country is littered with the broken promises of this Government, promises which have been torn up; they are not torn up by me—there is only one document I am interested in tearing up—but by the very Prime Minister and the Ministers who make them.

Who can forget the attacks the Government made against old age security and family allowances, after having heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) solemnly declare social programs were sacred and untouchable? Who can forget the bankruptcies of Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank which cost billions of dollars to Canadian taxpayers, after having heard him promise us he would manage the affairs of the nation with competence? Who can forget the billion dollars sunk in the Gulf-Reichmann affair and the $200 million spent for the takeover of the Bank of British Columbia by the Hongkong Bank? No wonder the public debt is rising so rapidly under the present administration!

Who can forget the promise the Prime Minister made of giving us an honest government, after having seen Ministers resign one after the other because they were involved in all kinds of scandals? The only thing the Government did more often than promise us better conflict of interest guidelines is break its own present code of ethics.

Where was that famous commitment to put an end to patronage appointments? Instead, the Government has been turned into an employment agency for the Tory faithful.

I suppose it will be quite natural that, despite the importance of the subject before Your Honour this afternoon, the media this evening will focus on the new legislation introduced by the Prime Minister on conflict of interest. We will look at it in a constructive way. It seems to duplicate legislation tabled in the Ontario Legislature. It will involve every Member of Parliament. There are tremendous gaps in it. It has nothing to do with the process of letting government contracts. It has nothing to do with the process of letting government advertising. It has nothing to do with the process of making senior appointments, this patronage game that the Conservative Government under the Prime Minister has turned into a new art form. It has nothing to do with registering lobbyists, the type of lobbyists who succeeded in obtaining the bid for Terminal 3 in Toronto.

We will look at the situation constructively, but nothing in that legislation will in any way impress the Canadian people, except they will feel that it is last minute death bed repentance. They will feel that this conversion to public ethics is too late. They will not be confused by feeling that any Government can codify public conduct, public ethics, a public feeling for what is right and public judgment when the Ministers of this Government cannot comply, no matter what are the conflict of interest guidelines.

To say that this Government has not lived up to the expectations it itself created is the understatement of the decade. By all indications, it intends to approach the next election the same way it did the last. I would only caution the Prime Minister and government Members to remember the old saying when next they go before Canadians, "Once bitten, twice shy". When I went to high school in this town, we had a teacher of English who used to say to us, "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me". The Canadian people will not be fooled twice. They will render the proper judgment to the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians do not like being misled. They do not like being told that someone intends to do one thing and then does the exact opposite. This is true not only of politicians and Governments. If one pays a plumber to fix the sink, one does not expect him to tear down the garage. If one buys an airplane ticket to Vancouver, one does not expect to end up in St. John's, Newfoundland. If one buys a car that advertises 40 miles to the gallon, one feels a little disappointed if it only gets six miles to the gallon.

When a leader of a political Party, before an election, as the Prime Minister did, says that free trade affects our sovereignty and we will have none of it, Canadians expect at the very least an explanation of why the Prime Minister changed his mind. Before the election, in the Prime Minister's mind, it was a totally untouchable subject, something which would so damage our sovereignty that it was not even to be discussed. Yet only a few months later, this same Prime Minister said that it was the only solution to all our economic difficulties. It became the Government's excuse for inaction.

Our young people, looking for adequate training programs, looking for jobs and for a better future, were told to wait for the trade deal. The Atlantic, the Gaspe, northern Ontario, the western provinces, the territories, Vancouver Island, those areas facing economic hardship, were told to wait for the trade deal. Our farmers and fishermen were told to wait for the trade deal. The whole country was put on hold waiting for the trade deal. Then when it was finally unveiled it was a shock.

The centre-piece of this Government's economic plan, in fact its only economic plan, is nothing less than the biggest sell-out of Canadian sovereignty since confederation. We waited for three years for the Government to come up with a national economic strategy and now we find that, as a result of the proposed agreement between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States, all the important and big decisions will be made in Washington.

My Party and I opposed this deal, 40 to zip, here in the House of Commons when that motion was presented in the House of Commons before Christmas. I opposed this deal because in integrating our economy and society more closely with that of the United States we are dramatically limiting our ability to make our own choices for our own future.

The Government calls it a free trade agreement. It is not a free trade agreement. Some industries are in, some industries are out. It is a selective trade agreement. One must examine it as one would any other agreement.

Just like any other contract! What did we get, what did we give up? We did not get secure access to the American market. Do not take my word for it, Mr. Speaker, read the text, read the agreement itself! Article 1904.2 specifically provides that American protectionist legislation still applies, whether we are talking about the past, the present, or the future. And the jurisdiction of the binational tribunal is not to raise objection against American protectionist laws but only to rule whether the law has been fairly applied with respect to Canadian exports.

So we did not gain secure access, secure access to the American market. If it were only a matter of lowering tariffs, good! We support that approach with the United States and with other countries. Over the past 40 years the Liberal administrations have managed to reduce tariffs from 40 down to 4 per cent—ten times more than the Conservative Government has been able to achieve through this agreement with the United States! But there is more to it than a trade deal and lower trade barriers, it is more like giving up control over our economy, over our investments, over our financial markets, over our energy policy, over the mechanisms we have to monitor our agricultural policy, maintain our culture, protect our automotive industry, everything has been abandoned and we have won precious little as a result of this agreement. That is precisely why, after scrutinizing the agreement, we are adamantly opposed to it, and not for philosophical reasons either.

[English]

This is not a trade deal, it is the sale of Canada Act. I urge Hon. Members on all sides of the House to read the agreement. When I listened to the Prime Minister's speech, I wondered whether he had ever seen the document. Clause after clause, article after article, talks in terms of free market forces. We are in favour of the free market. We believe in competition. We believe in enterprise. We believe in rewarding success. However, I want to remind Hon. Members that this country was not built solely on free market forces. This country deliberately, since confederation, resisted the continental forces drawing us north and south by building a country east and west.

We brought British Columbia into confederation by building a railway. We built an airline, we built a broadcasting system, we built a national highway and we built a pipeline because we wanted to resist pure market forces and remain Canadians. Free market forces never gave us public education. Free market forces never gave us public transport. Free market forces never gave us the best public hospital and medical care system in the world.

We have not been an ideological people, we have been a practical people and we believe in a mixed economy. When private capital and private enterprise has not been able or willing to achieve a legitimate public objective, then we have believed that the Crown and the state has a legitimate part to play in the infrastructure of Canada.

I want to say one final thing about market forces. If we were to rely on market forces completely, it would mean that the Atlantic provinces, parts of Quebec, parts of Ontario and western Canada would be turned into one great national park. If we were to rely completely on market forces, the people of Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Canada would be centred in three cities, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. That is the kind of country we would have.

It is only because we have resisted pure market forces that we have built a public infrastructure. This country, under Liberal administrations, has believed in equality of opportunity. It has believed that no matter where one lives, where one is brought up or where one dies, one has the same equal opportunity to a job, to a good education, to training and retraining and to a secure retirement. That is the kind of country we built. We built it not on pure market forces, as symbolized by this agreement, we built it on a spirit of Canadianism which gives us equal opportunity across the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We did not hear from the Minister of Finance in his statement—that is all it was, a dry run for an election—about what role Canada was playing in the world. We did not hear about what position we were going to take on Third World debt or the position we were going to take at the IMF or the World Bank about refinancing that debt. We did not hear about the fact that the U.S. has become the largest debtor nation in the world, no longer in control of its own currency. We did not hear that the largest creditor nation is now Japan. The largest banking nation is now Japan. The three largest banks in the world are now Japanese. The Minister did not tell us how Canada was going to contribute to dealing with that avalanche of Third World debt, trade deficits and public debt.

I have called for a new Bretton Woods Agreement where Canada would exercise some leadership and sit down with the other industrial nations of the world to see how we can achieve real monetary reform, better reconcile our fiscal policies, how we can better reach out to the Third World to share the opportunities for a decent life. We did not have a paragraph or two about that, just the blandest words about what our responsibilities as Canadians ought to be. Nothing about achieving a new world economic order that would give us some assurances in the future that trading barriers will continue to come down. Nothing about world currencies achieving some stability or that Canada had something constructive to offer, as we have always done on the international plane. All the Minister and the Prime Minister are settling for is being a junior partner with the U.S. We have a good international role to exercise and we should be exercising it.

A trade deal is no substitute for an economic strategy. In the four Budgets we have seen from the Government the only strategy has been to raise taxes on low and middle-income Canadians and reduce support for those most in need. All these self-styled architects for a better tomorrow on the government side have done is give Canada a blueprint for a Tory Canada. The Tory vision of the future sees a Canada with an even greater widening of the gap between the rich and the poor, a gap that abandons our disadvantaged regions to the whim of market forces, a Canada that abandons our farmers, fishermen, miners and lumber workers, a Canada that dismantles our youth training and educational programs and, again in yesterday's Estimates, our research and development. It is a Canada where we eliminate our retraining programs for older workers, a Canada that constantly cuts back on research and development funding instead of increasing it, a Canada that sells out its sovereign ability to make its own economic, political and cultural decisions, through a so-called trade deal with another country. It is a vision of this country devoid of hope and bankrupt of ideas. It is not a vision that we share. That is why we reject this latest Budget. That is why we reject the Government's trade deal. That is why Canadians are going to reject the Government as soon as they are given an opportunity.

• (1610)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker . . .

M. Rossi: It is no longer interesting, I am leaving!

Mr. Vincent: Such comments show that the Opposition is afraid to hear the plain truth.

Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the debate on the Budget since it has been tabled and when I hear what Hon. Members opposite have to say, and I have just heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) speak, it strikes me that the Opposition has not made one single positive comment on the Budget, on what the Government has achieved over the last three and a half years. Not a single one. And this same Leader of the Opposition who prides himself on being fair, honest, open to all Canadians, does not even have the decency to recognize what this Government has done over the last three years and a half. Mr. Speaker, that is what is called speaking from both sides of one's mouth. And in Trois-Rivières, Mr. Speaker, people do not like that!

The Leader of the Opposition said earlier, as he had said before, that we had increased personal income tax by 68 percent since we came to power.

Mr. Speaker, as you well know, numbers can be made to say anything. I will simply say that according to his method of calculation he increased taxes by 76 percent during his years as Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, once again according to his own calculations, it is clear that he is juggling with numbers. And it is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that that is what the Liberals did for 20 years. There is a reason why we found ourselves burdened with a $200 billion national debt and a $38 billion deficit in 1984. A deficit we successfully reduced by $10 billion—that is right, $10 billion—in three years.

And how did we manage this? Again, the Leader of the Opposition says we increased taxes by I do not know how much, $22 billion or $24 billion. And his backbenchers who never have anything to say and remained silent when they were in office now act tough and dare say it is true.

Mr. Speaker, they should have made themselves heard when they were in office instead of sitting on their hands.

Mr. Rossi: Ask your organizer what he thinks of you!

Mr. Vincent: Look how mean one can be, Mr. Speaker.

Talking seriously and not about those Liberal backbenchers who never do anything, we have reduced the deficit by $10 billion in three years and part of that reduction comes from the tax increase we have all been subjected to.

But the bigger part of the deficit reduction, that is 80 per cent, Mr. Speaker, comes from two sources: from cuts made in the governmental system and also, something the Leader of the Opposition overlooks entirely, from something called the creation of more than a million jobs. There are a million people who are paying taxes instead of receiving unemployment insurance. That is how we get to have supplementary revenue and how we have succeeded in lowering the deficit. But that is ignored. The Opposition counts that as rubbish.

But that is not rubbish, it is the reality in 1988, when we look at the Budget and especially the tax aspect of what was tabled with the Budget, the rules concerning associate corporations.

Mr. Speaker, what a trick many corporations were using, something like the scientific research tax credit that we terminated.

Although the Liberal Opposition regularly blames us for taxing low income people and not taxing corporations, for three and a half years, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), we have been plugging the majority of loopholes in the Income tax Act. This was one, and we closed it.

We also dealt with corporate control, which made it possible to use lower corporate tax rates.

Concerning personal income tax, concerning child care expenses, the level was $2,000—we raised it to $4,000 without setting a maximum, because there was an $8,000 ceiling. That used to be the rules under the Liberal Government. We changed that! A couple earning less than $16,000 can now get $559 a year per child in refundable tax credit, plus $100 in 1988 and $200 in 1989, if no child care expenses were claimed.

The seizure powers of the Department of National Revenue have been changed in order again that Canadian taxpayers do not have to suffer when a seizure is made without notice.

The sales tax has been changed to make it more consistent with the realities in 1988, while keeping in mind there will be a second stage in which major changes will be made.

I was mentioning earlier, Mr. Speaker, that in 1984-86 the deficit, that is as you know the amount of money the Government spent in excess of its revenues during a given year, was $38 billion. This year, Mr. Speaker, it is down to $29 billion. This means that over three and a half years, we succeeded in reducing by $10 billion the Government's annual expenditures.

The leader of the Official Opposition stated earlier the national debt has increased. That is true, Mr. Speaker, it has increased. The level was $200 billion when we came to power. But who was responsible for raising it to $200 billion. Certainly not us, because that was the level we found when we were elected to power.

It is important to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the level of the national debt had increased 150 per cent from 1980 to 1984. That is really something! Speaking of percentage, that one is hard to beat! Under this Conservative Government, for the first time since 1945, we have been able to reduce the deficit four years in a row! That is an achievement, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition never mention. That is too painful for them, it hurts too much.

My colleague for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon), who was a mayor in his riding before being elected to the House of Commons, knows what it is to manage, and his positive comments on the Budget prove it.

Debt servicing, Mr. Speaker, was $22 billion in 1984-85. In 1988-89 we will have to pay $32 billion worth of interest on their debts, not ours. However, Mr. Speaker, their debts are, unfortunately for Canadians, the debts of all of us. It is because of this—I won't use any unparliamentary language, Mr. Speaker—unfortunate administration of the previous Government that we now have this huge debt, and interest charges amounting to $32 billion on the debts of our predecessors.

You will note that despite this $10 billion increase in interest payments over three and a half years, we have been able to reduce the deficit. It means, Mr. Speaker, a difference of $20 billion in three and a half years. And they dare tell us, on the other side, that we don't know how to manage! Mr. Speaker, our policies are just and effective. We applied to the government the same principles of sound management used by private companies and municipalities.

The federal government owned, as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, lands and buildings that it was saving for some unknown reason. We sold them. Sound management is using the goods we need and getting rid of those we don't need.

The Leader of the Opposition was talking earlier about a "vision of the future". What can be the vision of that party which has at least three opinions on every major issue, Mr. Speaker? Whether it is national defense, free trade, child care or the Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Speaker, 25 per cent of Liberal Members have voted against it. And, believe it or not, among those were a lot of Members from Quebec. So, when I hear about a "vision of the future", I think that the Conservative Party and the Prime Minister have a definite vision of the future. And that vision could be summed up in three words: quality of life. Quality of life, Mr. Speaker, for my constituents of Trois-Rivières, for the people of Quebec and for all Canadians. And of course, Mr. Speaker, for your constituents as well.

And what does quality of life mean, Mr. Speaker? We cannot have quality of life in Canada or in any other country if people are out of work. It's priority number one.

Mr. Speaker, in three and a half years, the Conservative Party, along with the private enterprise—and not against it as was the case under the previous government—has created 1 200 000 new jobs. That is where the quality of life starts, through job creation. Development programs at the social and cultural levels have been increased, as well as regional development programs, at the same time as the deficit was reduced.

As far as social development is concerned, transfer payments to the provinces have increased by 2.7 per cent. Comparison between the years 1984-85 and 1988-89 shows $701 million more for insured complementary health services; $117 million more for post-secondary education; $837 million more for social welfare services, for a grand total of $2.9 billion more in 1988-89 than in 1984-85. Mr. Speaker, Old Age Security shows an increase; the Guaranteed Income Security: close to $1 billion has been added; Spouse Allocation shows an increase of $275 million; $178 million more will be spent under the Canada Student Loans Act; $200 million more are set aside as special measures to increase employment opportunities for welfare beneficiaries; transfer payments to territorial governments will amount to $330 million; grants and contributions to regional and economic development, in order to support the industrial and regional development are $868 million higher than in the 1984-85 Estimates, Mr. Speaker. The National Research Council gets $78 million more. Payments to railway companies reach another $140 million. External Affairs will get $779 million. Yet, Mr. Speaker, someone comes and tells me that the Government has done nothing, that it has no vision for the future!

Mr. Speaker, the figures speak by themselves. In all areas, there have been reasonable increases responding to the needs of Canadians, and I have not mentioned the national strategy concerning child care. There is research and development for which the Prime Minister has made very interesting announcements in January. The Université du Québec at Trois-Rivières has positively and publicly supported the announcement of the Prime Minister. It considers that initiative to be an excellent one and it is prepared to cooperate with the federal Government in that respect. I am not the one who says it. The Opposition will never mention it.

The federal-provincial agreements in a host of sectors are not, like before, strictly pertaining to resolve conflicts between federal and provincial governments.

Earlier today, the Leader of the Opposition talked about economic growth. Mr. Speaker, Canada has the fastest economic growth of all countries since 1984. He was talking about 1982. In 1982, we had interest rates of 22 per cent and he is telling us that it was then that we had economic growth. In 1982, we were paying interest rates. But since 1984, Canada has had the fastest economic growth and is also in the lead, which is as important if not more important, Mr. Speaker, for employment growth.

Once again, independent agencies are making that kind of decisions. The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, just said that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had no international vision. Mr. Speaker, for 15 years, the Liberal Government tried to make Canada a member of a renowned group called the Group of Five which is now the Group of Seven of which the most industrialized countries of the world are part. The Liberal Government attempted to have Canada as part of that select group, Mr. Speaker. That is what we would call going "international". And you know as well as I do that the Liberal Government failed during all those years. The Conservative Government came to office in 1984, Mr. Speaker. And guess what happened. Canada is now a member of this group of the seven most industrialized countries in the world. That is what I call a vision of the future, Mr. Speaker, and that is also what I call "going international". We don't merely have a few words on paper as we used to previously, but actions have been taken, positive and specific actions.

For the last three days, we have been hearing about the one cent a litre increase on gasoline, among other things. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that even despite of some increases in price, gasoline is still cheaper than in 1984 when the Liberals were in power. And that is not all! What is even more astounding and shows how that party can be vicious in its comments and how forgetful they have become, Mr. Speaker ... and I won't even mention the 18 cents a gallon, in 1980, those 18 cents that they doubled when they came back to power. But I just want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that for a little over 10 years the average percentage of federal taxes on a gallon or a litre of gas has ranged from 17 to 20 per cent, and this covers the period when the Liberals were in power. Yet, with our increase of one cent a litre, the tax makes up 20 per cent of the price of a litre of gas. That means, Mr. Speaker, that when the Liberals were in power, we had the same tax percentage than we have now; yet they have the gall to criticize us, with their arms thrown up in the air and monstrous outbursts, when the situation was worse when they were in office, Mr. Speaker.

You are indicating to me that my time is nearly up, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to conclude by saying that in 1984, government expenditures increased by 14 per cent each year, I repeat by as much as 14 per cent a year, Mr. Speaker. Such was the financial management of the Government before the Conservatives took over: Government expenditures were increasing by 14 per cent a year. Today, Mr. Speaker, the rate of growth has been reduced to 3.5 per cent. This is good management, this is how you should govern a country and manage public finances brilliantly and logically while taking into account, as I have already said, the needs of the Canadian people, for instance as concerns child care. What the Canadian public needs before anything else, Mr. Speaker, is a better quality of life, and for this, we need a reasonable economic growth and proper job creation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct two questions to the Hon. Member. In his speech he made it quite clear how proud he is of the Budget of the Conservative Government. I would ask him to comment on the views expressed by the Canadian Council on Social Development which includes among its members, virtually all Governments, federal, provincial and municipal, and all voluntary agencies concerned with all aspects of welfare. In its analysis of the Budget the council states there is no provision for increasing aid to Canadian families living below the poverty line, although the number of such people is now 851,000, up from 745,000 in 1980.

I would also like the Hon. Member's comments on recent reports that 20 per cent of Canadian people are functionally illiterate and that the percentage in Quebec is higher than the national average. That means that these people, for the rest of their lives, unless steps are taken so that they can become literate, can only look forward to either being on welfare or having the most menial and poorly paid jobs. Does the Hon. Member not think that a country as wealthy as Canada should be able to find the funds to start addressing these two problems which are so glaring and so obvious to anyone who wants to look at the realities of life in Canada?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to reply to the Hon. Member opposite. There is always room for improvement, but this Budget is part of an ongoing process. If I told you, Mr. Speaker, that this Budget is perfect and that the public financial picture is perfect, you would not believe me, but I would not say such a thing. This Budget continues what we began three and a half years ago.

The Hon. Member speaks about the poor, but as I mentioned earlier, we have increased our support for all social development programs. Additional amounts have been allocated to these programs. It is perhaps partly, even though not totally, the fault of the Socialist Member if the party now in the Opposition spent foolishly what should have been spent to help Canadians when it was in power.

Before I was elected, on September 2, 1984, the party opposite approved a few million dollars in projects which the local people did not want. The Liberals introduced the scientific research tax credit in their last Budget. That cost all Canadians, whether poor or rich, a few billion dollars. What are a few billion dollars? They knew what would happen. However, these few billion dollars simply disappeared; they were not used for any scientific research, and they are no longer available for scientific research or to increase our support to those who need it, as the Hon. Member was saying. This money is no longer available to pay the interests on the debt. We have to live with that.

If tomorrow morning the Hon. Member lends his credit card to one of his friends and for 20 years the same friend every year goes over the limit and does not make the payments, after 20 years, our good friend and colleague on the other side of this House is going to have a bill exactly similar to the debt of the Federal Government. He is going to say: I have no money left, I have to pay off that debt. When his better half, his wife is going to ask him for money, he will answer: I cannot give you any because the chum I gave my credit card to for 20 years, during all that time he charged on it amounts of money exceeding what I could earn, and I am completely fed up. This is where the problem is, Mr. Speaker, and this is what the Liberal Party did with the country's credit card!

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member to explain his support for his Government and the Budget when the facts are that, through increases in sales taxes, excise taxes and income taxes, the average Canadian family will pay in 1988 $1,000 more in taxes than it paid in the year before his Government took office, while at the same time 258 high-income earners who earned more than $200,000 in the last year for which we have records paid no income tax at all. A number of the largest corporations, the most profitable in the country, either paid no income tax at all or, even worse, received a tax credit despite the fact that they made tens of millions or several hundred millions of dollars in profits. Where is the justice for that type of situation continuing to exist?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed with the question of my colleague on the other side of the House. Such comments are an incentive for Canadians not to carry their fair share of the tax burden.

Mr. Speaker, it is not true to claim that hundreds of thousands of companies do not pay taxes. That is not true.

We did away with practically all tax loopholes. As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I am a tax lawyer. We did plug a few loopholes, because loopholes we had before, that is true.

Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member makes that kind of remarks he fails to tell the whole story.

Some companies do not pay taxes, true enough, but why not? Because they incur losses and under the law—like you, Mr. Speaker, like any other Canadian citizen—they are allowed to file a statement to that effect. The following year any Canadian is entitled to write off losses against income in that year. Mr. Speaker, that is the law, and the law is fair.

If I report a loss in any given tax year it is only normal that I be allowed to write off that loss against my income the next year.

From that standpoint, Mr. Speaker, it is true that some companies do not pay taxes, but that privilege is not extended through their entire corporate life, there has to be a specific reason why they do not pay taxes in any given year.

In my riding there are a few companies which did not pay taxes in 1986, and I am pleased about that because they account for 200 jobs. They posted a loss for the previous year, Mr. Speaker, but they did manage to keep those 200 jobs.

Mr. Speaker, if a company makes a profit the following year, I think it has the right to write off losses and continue to expand, continue to reinvest in the company, and continue to create jobs and maintain sound economic activities. We all hope that today will be better than yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, the same principle applies in the case of individuals who do not pay taxes. Now that a minimum tax system has been set up, no longer are there any people who do not pay taxes, except for those who have incurred losses, supported charitable organizations, or made alimony payments. These are the only three reasons why a high, middle or low income earner will pay no income tax.

Mr. Speaker, it is about time the Opposition stopped misleading Canadians with all sorts of statistical data. We do not even know where they are taken from and they are not always true. They scare the people, they mislead them and also encourage them not to carry their fair share of the tax burden, Mr. Speaker.

We live under a system where all citizens must pay their taxes, Mr. Speaker, and you know as well as I do that between 75 per cent and 85 per cent of the money paid to the Government in any given year is returned directly or indirectly to the Canadian people, through interests payments, transfer payments to the provinces, old age security pensions, unemployment insurance, etc.

Only 20 per cent of the revenues of the State are used to administer the country, the remaining 80 per cent are returned to Canadian men and women. Mr. Speaker, I think that we are paying for that and the cost is high at that level.

[English]

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to have the opportunity to speak on the Budget. It is the third time in the last four years that I have had such an opportunity following the presentation of Budgets by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). When the Budget was presented a short while ago one of the reactions that I received in my community in British Columbia was that it was boring. I tend to agree. In fact, I was quite pleased that it was boring because that is part of our over-all plan.

We have got away from the idea that every Budget should be full of new tax measures and all sorts of changes. We all wait until February, which is not necessarily the best time of the year, to make such changes. What we have done as a Government is to have introduced programs when it was appropriate throughout the year. A budget document comes forward now on a regular annual basis rather like a state of the nation summary in terms of our economic progress and with some adjustments, as we have seen in this year's Budget.

I see the Budget in terms of "steady as she goes". It is consistent with the plan of action that we set out in November of 1984 when the Minister of Finance produced his paper on economic reform.

I will not speak today about the other pillars of our policies which we have enunciated over the last three and a half years. I refer to the pillars of national reconciliation, constructive internationalism and social justice. I will not talk about the accomplishments that we have made in these three areas. I will not refer to the Meech Lake Accord, the Commonwealth Conference, the international summit which is coming up and, in the area of social justice, the many changes we have made to the Criminal Code. I will not refer to affirmative action or the whole gamut of items which have increased the quality of life for Canadians. Today I will talk about economic reform.

When we took office three and a half years ago we set that as an important priority. We all recall the situation that the economy was in at that time. When we look at the changes that have occurred in three and a half years and when we consider the sound fiscal management which the Auditor General has given recognition to we see that it is really quite a remarkable record.

When the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was speaking about 30 minutes ago he made some allusions to the Olympics in Calgary about which we are so proud. We are proud of those Canadians who have won medals for us, Brian Orser, Karen Percy, Linda Moore of North Vancouver who won the gold medal in women's curling, and Sylvie Daigle who won a gold medal yesterday in the women's short-track speed skating. These are outstanding Canadians, as are all the other Canadians who have been participating in the Olympics. They have instilled a sense of pride in us all.

It is important to recognize that Canada deserves a gold medal too since Canada is first in terms of economic growth. Indeed, we have been first each year over the last few years. We have placed well above most other industrialized nations. Real output growth has been estimated at 3.8 per cent in 1987. A statistic such as this may sound dry. What does 3.8 per cent mean? We all know that it translates into jobs. It means that families are enjoying a better quality of life, more security and that our young people are getting jobs. It means that some of our older people are able to stay on in the work force. So it seems to me that in this couple of weeks in which we are giving out gold medals for outstanding achievement in athletics the Minister of Finance should also receive a gold medal in recognition of Canada being number one in economic growth. Since Canada is also number one in terms of job creation he should be made a double medal winner. These achievements seem to me to deserve a gold medal.

We have all heard the statistics. Over 1.1 million jobs have been created since our Government took office. Some 486,000 jobs were created in 1987 alone. The majority of these jobs are full-time jobs in occupations with above average wage levels. As the Minister responsible for the status of women stated in her speech the other day, it is interesting to note the number of women who have filled the new jobs created over the past 3.5 years, and that 55 per cent of those jobs for women have been in the administrative and the professional areas. That means that they are in and going into the higher income areas. A terrific amount of change and advancement of the economy is occurring throughout the country.

As a result of that, we have seen the unemployment rate drop down to 8.1 per cent. That is the lowest it has been since September, 1981. The economic and employment growth last year were also more evenly spread throughout the country. That is something that we all feel strongly that we want to achieve.

In terms of the other indicators, inflation declined to 4.2 per cent by the end of 1987. It averaged only 4.4 per cent for the year as a whole. We all know the story of interest rates which means that mortgages have gone down by 3 per cent. To the person holding a mortgage of $50,000 on a house it means $1,200 less per year in mortgage payments. When you take all of those factors together, it is really an outstanding accomplishment which touches every man, woman, and family throughout the country, that indeed they are better off as a result of the Government's initiatives.

In light of the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition what has happened is interesting. The plan that we presented in 1984 was to create a positive environment in which the free enterprise system could flourish, in which small business could develop, and in which the entrepreneurial spirit would grow in this country. We as a Party believe in the individual. We believe in the free enterprise system.

My hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, in his comments stated that "We don't know about that". What he was saying sounded to me as though the Liberal Party does not seem to believe much more in the free market system and would want to intervene. Probably they want to bring back the NEP which this Government got rid of because of its horrendous impact on the economy of western Canada. That Party would probably want to bring back FIRA, which indeed created fear in the hearts of potential investors and turned them away. This Government got rid of that.

We are now seeing the positive influx of investment dollars, particularly in British Columbia, which is well above the national average and which means so much for the ordinary Canadian. It seems that the Leader of the Opposition not only wants to tear up the free trade agreement, he wants to bring back an era that, in my mind, would lead to despair in the hearts of Canadians across the country.

I wish to turn to the control of the deficit. In my constituency of Capilano I receive a lot of questions on that subject. I met with some groups over the past two weeks to talk about the Budget. I am constantly asked, "What has your Government done to deal with the deficit?" People are very concerned about it. They know that in their own households if they spend $4,000 or $5,000 more each year than they are bringing in, they will soon be in trouble with their friendly banker. When they see the government deficit rising or seeming to be as it was prior to 1984, and out of control, it is a cause of considerable concern.

We know that in 1984 the federal deficit, the national debt, was out of control. That year the deficit was up to $38 billion, up from $14.9 billion three years before. In those last three years of Liberal Government that debt had gone from under $15 billion to $38 billion. In fact, it had gone up at an average rate of 26 per cent per year.

There was not a smidgen of evidence from the Leader of the Opposition of what policies he or his Party would have initiated to control that deficit. If that had continued in the spendthrift way, the public debt today would be more than $100 billion higher than it is. That would have meant the equivalent of $16,000 more for each family of four. We had to turn the ship around. We had to deal with that when we came into office. Of course, we all know that that is not an easy thing to do. Our record of accomplishment has been significant, because it has been part of a plan that we have set out and stuck to.

We have seen the deficit of more than $38 billion when we took office fall to a projected $28.9 billion for the coming fiscal year. It will be the first time since 1945 that there has been a decline in the annual deficit during four consecutive years. The projections of the Minister of Finance as put out in the Budget Papers, are that the decline will continue over the next four to five years.

In dollar terms the deficit has been cut by one-fourth. But relative to the GDP, the Gross Domestic Product of this country, it has been cut in half in nearly a four-year period. By 1992-93, a few years from now, given our present plan of action, the deficit will have been cut to $19.5 billion. It will actually have been cut in half in dollar terms and by two-thirds relative to GDP. We have seen the prospect, as the Minister of Finance has told us, that during the later period of 1990s, if we can hold to this pattern, there is the possibility of not having an annual deficit. That would be something which I and my colleagues on this side of the House would certainly welcome.

We have been able to do this without harming economic growth. As I have already indicated, we have seen economic growth of over 3 per cent in 1987, projected to around 2.7 per cent in 1988-89, and in the year following that at 3 per cent. That is nice and steady, easy as she goes. That will mean increasing jobs, increasing economic activity during each of the next two years. The finance committee, on which I sat, heard some witnesses who were economists, and certainly some of those witnesses have borne out those projections.

Government spending has fallen from 25.7 per cent of GDP when we took office to 22.5 per cent in 1988-89 fiscal year. It will fall further in 1992-93 to 19.4 per cent. That means that as a percentage of our economy, government spending will be cut by more than one-quarter. We all know there is not always a lot of room. We know that we are committed in our transfer payments to provinces and individuals. There is not a lot of room to manoeuvre there. We have had to have very serious reviews of regular government spending programs, to make some changes, to make some reductions which Canadians have asked us to do. As the Minister of Finance announced in the Budget, there will be a further $300 million reduction in government spending in the discretionary programs in the upcoming year.

That is a solid record over the past 3.5 years which shows that we have been able to bring spending under control and bring the deficit under control. We are certainly in good shape to meet the challenges of the 1990s.

I would like an opportunity to talk a little about my home province and some of the implications of this Budget and our economic proposals for British Columbia. Over the past few weeks I have often heard comments from the other side of the House that it is all very well, but this economic growth and prosperity is limited to a circle around southern Ontario or Metropolitan Toronto. If one listened to that, one would think that somehow British Columbia was in terrible shape. I am very pleased to reassure my colleagues. The Investment Dealers' Association in its recent report indicated that the stories of our demise have been grossly exaggerated. In fact, in the report there are some very exciting statistics. The association sees the growth rate in British Columbia being over 3 per cent for the coming year, which would be above the national average. In fact, if one looks at what has happened over the past year, one sees some very exciting changes.

The number of people employed will rise by 2.5 per cent. We already know that unemployment in British Columbia has declined, on the average throughout the province, from 15.1 per cent to 10.1 per cent, a drop of 5 percentage points. In the Greater Vancouver Regional District it has dropped even further, to about 9.3 per cent.

We see that mining exploration in British Columbia has risen. The Investment Dealers' Association estimates that 1987 will show a record level of $125 million.

Capital investment, which I mentioned before, continues to exceed the national average at 21 per cent in the past year or up to $6.2 billion. That compares with a national increase of 8 per cent. People are really seeing the opportunities and advantages available in the British Columbia economy, and they are making investments which the Government encourages and supports.

The association also indicated that the outlook for the rather depressed coal industry in British Columbia would improve, in anticipating an increase in steel production world-wide.

Sometimes people do not think of manufacturing in British Columbia, but manufacturing shipments have increased significantly in the last two years. They have increased three times faster than in the rest of Canada. It is estimated that shipments increased to $22.9 billion in 1987, up from $20.6 billion in 1986.

Perhaps these are facts of which many of my colleagues are not aware. They show the dynamism of the British Columbia economy in which 140,000 jobs have been created in the last three and a half years, five times as many as were created when there was a Liberal Government. We have seen total unemployment fall by 60,000 since 1984, as opposed to an increase in unemployment of 120,000 during the terms of the last Liberal Government.

I think it is always interesting to bring some of the other indicators to the attention of the House. Retail sales or consumer sales—people buying things—have risen by 13 per cent in the past year. It is much more than the general rate of growth. In fact it has risen by 36 per cent since the last election.

Turning to housing starts, when we have housing starts we have a very vibrant demand for lumber products. In 1987 housing starts were up by 40 per cent compared with 1986, up by 64 per cent compared with 1985, and up by 92 per cent compared with 1984. This means that many more people have homes and new accommodations. There has been a lot of activity in the construction industry as well as in the purchasing of furniture and appliances which go along with housing starts.

I could go on and on, but I will deal with a final indicator. When I read the local newspapers, The Vancouver Sun or the Province, I look through the help wanted pages and often the ones associated with the business pages. I remember a few years ago pretty slim pickings. We always wonder what we are going to do when we retire from politics and keep an eye on those ads to see whether there are any good jobs out there. I did not see many over those years, but since September, 1984, help wanted advertising has been up by 90 per cent, compared with a 53 per cent drop during the Liberals' last mandate. There is a real job demand for people out in British Columbia. I just wanted to bring some of those matters to the attention of my colleagues.

Many things have occurred during the last three and a half years. I will not have the opportunity to talk about them all. The Leader of the Opposition talked about the free trade agreement. In my constituents' minds—and we have had a lot of discussion about it—it will be the key to future economic growth with its opportunities to export. The Government is encouraging them to take advantage of Asia-Pacific markets. The new programs, the increase in our offices in that area, and the Asia-Pacific initiative which we have been funding along with the province, all offer some very imaginative approaches.

We see some tremendously exciting things happening such as tax reform, bringing in a fairer and more equitable system, reducing taxes for eight out of ten households, and eliminating taxes for 850,000 low-income Canadians. That too is important.

Surprisingly enough, the opposition Parties opposed the international banking centre for Vancouver. There is a great deal of excitement about it. The Budget, as part of a plan of economic renewal, along with all other activities of the Government, will provide new opportunities for Canadians and new security for Canadians. I am proud to award the gold medal for performance to my colleague, the Minister of Finance

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is quite right to be awarding the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the gold medal, particularly on his control of the deficit and his handling of the public debt. We see from the Budget Papers that the public debt, during his tenure, has increased by close to $100 billion. The public debt is now making up, according to his own papers, 51.8 per cent of the Gross National Product each year, as opposed to 44 per cent when he took over the job. He has in fact set new standards for public debt, standards which have not been exceeded since the years of the Second World War when we were trying to finance a war.

I wonder if that is what the Hon. Member had in mind when she was speaking in praise of the Minister's handling of the public debt, since he has carried public debt to the highest level the country has ever known, having contributed more than 30 per cent to the accumulated public debt in his brief three and a half years.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, certainly I would be pleased to respond to that question and to explain once again that we are dealing with two issues—the annual deficit and the accumulated debt. First we had to get a handle on the annual deficit of $38 billion.

Perhaps my hon. colleague has some suggestions about how to reduce that to zero without having an adverse impact. Perhaps he was going to raise taxes. Perhaps he was going to totally eliminate social programs and transfer payments. Let us be realistic about it.

What the Government has done is to reverse that tide to bring down the annual deficit, to slow the rate of the growth of the debt.

Perhaps my hon. colleague would be interested to know that that net debt doubled from 1981-82 to 1984-85. Then, reflecting the smaller deficit, the growth in the public debt slowed appreciably. In fact, it will decline to 10 per cent in 1988-89, compared with an average of 24 per cent in the years coming up to 1984-85.

I am sure my hon. colleague has read the plans that have been put out. With the deficit as a percentage of GDP, reducing from 8.6 per cent in 1984-85 to 2.6 per cent in 1992-93, we will, over a period of time, also see the net public debt reducing as a percentage of GDP.

It will take some time because we cannot suddenly change the whole thing, but the direction is right and the policies are right and consistent with that.

• (1700)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is enthralled a bit by figures, but I would like to ask her what she is prepared to tolerate. I heard her say that she expects the growth in the economy to be "slow and steady as she goes". I also note that in 1987 the unemployment rate through the year in British Columbia was 12 per cent and that that, in fact, as in seven of the other provinces across the country, was equal or higher than the levels of unemployment that prevailed at the time of the 1981-83 recession. There has been some improvement since the average for 1987. Even if—and this is unlikely—the unemployment rate were to stay at 10 per cent, I find that an unacceptable level of unemployment for British Columbia, which is my native province, or any other province for that matter.

Is the Member saying that it is okay to go slow and steady, to have economic growth and more or less just enough to keep unemployment from rising? It is expected to rise from the December levels during the course of 1988, according to the Finance Minister's statement. I am really surprised that the Hon. Member should become so insensitive to the impact of unemployment on her native province of British Columbia that she would be prepared to say that it is okay to tolerate a continuing level of unemployment at the level of 10 or 12 per cent in the Province of B.C.

Perhaps I have misunderstood. I certainly did not find in her speech any indication that there is a commitment to bring unemployment in British Columbia to full employment levels of perhaps 4.5 per cent, nor did I hear from the Finance Minister that there is any commitment to a real policy of full employment that will not just cover Mississauga and downtown Toronto but will also cover the Atlantic Provinces, Quebec, the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia. Is the Member committed to full employment? If so, why is she prepared to tolerate a Budget that will keep unemployment at around 10 per cent in British Columbia from now until the 1990s?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to my colleague. Perhaps he was not listening when I told him about the report which came out recently from the Investment Dealers' Association which indicates that employment will rise by 2.5 per cent over the next year. It is anticipated to be 1.3 million out of a total labour force of 1.5 million. It has been this Government's policies over the past three and a half years which have seen the reduction in unemployment in B.C. from 15.1 per cent down to 10.1 per cent. That is 5 percentage points based on the kinds of programs we have implemented and the kinds of tax policy we have had.

In addition, and I am sure my colleague is aware, I am sure he has been listening to what has been going on around this House, the Western Diversification Program will have $1.2 billion over the next five years. That is a special program to address the special needs of western Canada, including British Columbia. I have been involved in all sorts of very exciting and interesting proposals from the private sector which sector will look forward to taking opportunities whether through loans or different kinds of assistance and to creating jobs with that kind of program which the Government put in place to redress some of the difficulties in the western provinces and B.C. I think the economy in B.C. has been performing well, but unemployment has not come down as much as it has in other parts of the country.

The Western Diversification Fund is in addition to the over $325 million in economic regional development programs which are for the provinces in forestry areas, small business, science and technology. In addition to the science, research and investment programs which the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) has introduced, there are all sorts of programs, including programs from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

I look at my own riding and the implications of the job strategy program which is for women who have been unemployed and out of the workforce, and through a relatively small expenditure we are giving them the skills and the confidence to get back into the workforce. I met a young woman the other day who had taken advantage of our program, the team program. She is a university graduate who had been out of work and she is now linked up with an employer with tremendous success through some of the initiatives under the job strategy that we have.

Then there is the introduction of the entrepreneurial program, which has been a particular advantage for British Columbia. We have certainly benefited from the new investment and jobs which that program has created. If you took every Minister across the front benches of this Government and the kinds of initiatives which they have introduced you would find that they have all worked to the advantage of ensuring economic performance for British Columbia and to jobs for British Columbians. It is the kind of record about which I am proud and which we will continue in the rest of this mandate.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in preparing my remarks for this Budget debate, I asked myself what the people of St. John's East looked for in a Budget of the Government of Canada. My conclusion was that the people of my riding expect to see two things. First, they expect to see honesty. Second, they expect to see fairness.

When I heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the House brag about the economic performance of the country since 1984, particularly in two areas, the area of interest rates and the area of jobs, I asked myself why he did not admit that both of these categories of economic performance are not to the credit of his Government but, in fact, are factors which resulted from the recession that we were as a country a part of as was all of North America. We came out of that recession coincidentally with the election of the Conservative Government in 1984. But the recovery had started before that. The cyclical nature of the economy is such as we all know, recessions occur, the economy bottoms out and things come back again. Small children in Newfoundland know that the seasons change, that the tide comes in and the tide goes out.

Mr. Crosbie: That is what you always said.

Mr. Harris: I will get to that in a minute. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is interested in what happened when the tide went out on the Liberal Government in Newfoundland. I hope he will listen carefully to the story I am about to tell.

Mr. Crosbie: I will.

Mr. Harris: We all know in Newfoundland that as the tide comes in and the tide goes out, one year is good for fish and the next year is bad. These things change. They are not changed by the Government, they are changed as a result of nature, and in the case of the economy they are the result of economic cycles.

The interest rates, for example, were very high in 1983-84, but they are lower now. We have heard many speakers, including the Minister of Finance, claim credit for that. They were also high in the United States and they are lower now. I suppose if the Minister of Finance and some Conservative back-benchers want to claim credit for that, they can claim credit for the low interest rates in the U.S. as well. Most Canadians know that these interest rates are part of a worldwide economic phenomenon and are not to the credit of this Government.

We hear about jobs, but again these jobs are claimed to have been created by the Government. I think most Canadians know that the Government did not create those jobs. We have seen the economy of central Canada in particular boom while most of the rest of Canada has not participated in the economic revival. When we look at the issue of fairness, Mr. Speaker, we also look at interest rates and jobs. We see the Governor of the Bank of Canada recognizing that interest rates in Canada are at a low rate but that there is now upward pressure. The Governor of the Bank of Canada says he will not decrease the rates because he is concerned about the economy in Ontario overheating. The people of Newfoundland and the people of the Atlantic region are suffering not from over-heating but from the cold wave which this Government has allowed to continue in Newfoundland's economy and in Newfoundland's unemployment rate.

When we look for fairness we also look at taxes and the phoney tax reform which the Government has introduced. When we look for fairness, we have to ask ourselves who benefits and who loses by these reforms. When we examine the details, we see that it is the poorer people, the people with families and the people earning minimum wages whose taxes are increasing and it is the wealthier Canadians who can afford to pay more taxes who are benefiting from this supposed tax reform.

When we look for fairness, we also look at how the Canadian economy spreads the wealth it has, the economic opportunities, employment and the share of the national income. Even the C. D. Howe Institute has recognized the unfairness of economic prosperity in Canada. It has said that unemployment rates in Ontario and Quebec in 1986 were near pre-recession levels in 1980, while elsewhere in the country they ranged from 40 per cent above 1980 levels in the Atlantic provinces to 150 per cent higher in Alberta.

When we look at economic progress, I think we have to leave out the recession. We should compare the current situation with the situation before the recession of 1980. Having gone through a recession and now back into a period of relative prosperity, the situation vis-à-vis central Canada and the Atlantic provinces and particularly Newfoundland is worse now than it was before the recession. That is what we mean when we talk about regional disparity. It is the difference between the situation in Newfoundland and the situation in central Canada. That difference is getting wider, it is not narrowing as we would have hoped and expected.

There is an increase in the disparity between the unemployment rate in Ontario and that of Newfoundland, not a decrease. That is a serious indictment of this Government's programs and policies.

We are not dealing just with statistics, these are real people who are suffering. In 1981, 26.9 per cent of unemployed Canadians were heads of family units. That number increased to 30 per cent in 1986, the last year for which we have figures. The unemployment rates and the disparity between the rest of Canada and Newfoundland are just statistics, but the reality is that the increasing numbers of unemployed are heads of family households.

We also know from Newfoundland statistics, from Statistics Canada and from the National Council of Welfare that the percentage of families living below the poverty line is in fact increasing. In Newfoundland in 1985, it was 20.7 and in 1986, it was 21.2.

The number of unattached individuals, those who are not members of families, whose incomes are below the poverty line, has increased from 45 per cent in 1985 to 49 per cent in 1986. We look at those indicators and ask ourselves if we are making progress or if we are going backward. The unalterable conclusion is that we are going backward. The disparity is increasing, the level of poverty is increasing and the percentage of people who are forced to live in unacceptable circumstances is increasing and not decreasing.

What kind of fairness is there when we look at what has happened in Newfoundland since Confederation in 1949? At the time of Confederation, in 1949, the earned income of Newfoundlanders as a percentage of the Canadian national average was 48.8 per cent. Earned income per capita is a valuable indicator of the comparable wealth and earning capacity of the people in an economy. That gap has narrowed slightly. In November of 1987, the per capita earned income of Newfoundlanders was 55 per cent of the national average. In the 38 years of Confederation, the disparity has been narrowed by 6.7 per cent. However, let me tell Hon. Members when that happened. That did not happen over the whole of the 38 years.

The Minister of Transport might be surprised to learn that that gap was narrowed between 1949 and 1971 when the tide went out on Mr. Smallwood's Government and the tide came in on the Government of which the Minister of Transport was then a part, having also been a part of the tide that went out a couple of years earlier. The narrowing of the gap had all occurred by 1971.

What has happened since then? The figure has not changed. It is now exactly the same, give or take .2 per cent, as it was back in 1971. For 15 or 16 years, Newfoundland's position has not improved. These were years of a Conservative Government in Newfoundland and, for the most part, a Liberal Government in Ottawa. If we are to use that as a measure of our progress, if we have progressed by reducing the disparity by 6.7 per cent in 38 years, how long will it take Newfoundland to reach the national average of earned income per capita? It will take a further 288 years. That is the measure of the progress we have had in the last 38 years. In fact, from 1971 to 1988, we have had no progress, none at all.

It is not surprising, having heard those figures, that the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in its August report called regional disparity in Canada notable for its starkness in 1986. This is the same report that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was bragging about in the House in late August and September. He did not emphasize that point. It came upon the Opposition to remind the Prime Minister that his Government had failed in that area.

Neither is it surprising, having heard these figures about the situation of Newfoundland, that the Economic Council of Canada would call regional disparity and the unevenness of growth in the regions of Canada the most serious economic problem the country faces. What has been the response of the Government?

Considering the magnitude of the total problem and the size of the Government's expenditures, the Government has in a miserly way provided $200 million for four provinces, and I have to put it that way because we cannot really divide it up. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will provide $200 million per year over five years. I worry about what will happen to Newfoundland in those five years.

I think it is possible that the Minister of Transport must have been asleep during the first six months of ACOA's operation. The Province of Newfoundland obtained from the programs that were being looked after by that agency in that six-month period a total of $6 million. Yet New Brunswick received in excess of $20 million, and Nova Scotia in excess of $45 million, and Prince Edward Island received $4.2 million. Not that we in Newfoundland begrudge the people of New Brunswick their industries or enterprises, that amount of money. We are very pleased to see that they will receive that kind of money. We realize they need that kind of development. However, the agency which is supposed to ensure fairness does not follow that principle among the four provinces where it carries out its programs.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is welcomed, indeed supported by this Party, as the Minister of Transport well knows.

Mr. Crosbie: So you are going to vote against it.

Mr. Harris: It was supported by this Party at second reading, although we have some serious concerns about its make-up.

Mr. Crosbie: Why did your Member, Mr. Orlikow, say you are going to vote against it?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Orlikow speaks for himself.

Mr. Crosbie: Exactly. You all speak for yourselves.

Mr. Harris: We supported the legislation at second reading and we support the agency because it provides a new opportunity for regional development. Yet we have serious concerns about the Government's commitment as demonstrated by an amount of only $200 million for a problem of a very serious nature.

Mr. Crosbie: Only? That is a doubling. Where would you get the money? Your colleague was just complaining about the interest cost on the national debt. Where would you get the money?

Mr. Harris: We see the Government giving very scant attention to the most serious economic problem facing this country. The Government has a little nest-egg in its Estimates of $2.5 billion. There is some money that the Minister might ensure goes to regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Mr. Harris: I hope he does. Everyone knows we need it. Where will we get the money? The Minister acknowledges that the money is there. We have to make sure that it goes where it is needed, and that is into regional development for Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland.

In summing up the situation with respect to this Budget, we see first an acknowledgement by social agencies, critics, writers and analysts across the country that this Budget does not provide fairness through tax reform. For example, as the Canadian Council on Social Development said, families with children have lost out as a result of the Government's policies. Starting with the 1985 Budget and continuing through the so-called tax reform proposals, families with children have lost ground compared to other Canadian households. This is the effect of partially deindexing family benefit programs, tax credits, and the tax reform measures.

Persons making the minimum wage will have their taxes increased by 25 per cent in the period 1984 to 1990. That is a 25 per cent increase in taxes for people who live on a minimum wage. That is the kind of policy the Government has pursued. That is not fair to the average Canadian. The only ones who really benefit from tax reform are the wealthiest Canadians, those who earn over $100,000 a year.

It is not fair to Canadian families, it is not fair to the regions of Canada, particularly Newfoundland, to have to endure a disparity which has not got better since 1971. It is during times of prosperity that we look to the Government to introduce these programs. Do not wait until we are back into a recession and say we cannot afford it. It is now, when there is a sense of prosperity across the nation, that we look to the Government to say that now is the time to spend the necessary money to ensure that regional disparity is reduced or eliminated.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have several questions. The hon. gentleman neglected to mention in his remarks this afternoon the efforts the Government is making to help overcome regional disparity. He neglected to mention that on Monday a new federal-provincial agreement was entered into with Newfoundland, signed by myself, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon), the Premier of the province and the provincial Minister of Fisheries. That agreement deals with the inshore fishery and contributes $60 million to the well-being of the roughly 30,000 inshore fishermen of Newfoundland. There has never been a similar agreement signed to assist the inshore fishermen.

Ms. Mitchell: What is the question?

Mr. Crosbie: This is a prologue to my question. That money is all new spending, contrary to the bleatings and blitherings and, might I say, false statements of the NDP in Newfoundland.

The hon. gentleman might tell me why it is that the leader of his Party in Newfoundland, Mr. Peter Fenwick, consistently misinforms the public? He tells what can only be described as falsehoods and makes false statements such as the one quoted in the evening Telegram of February 24 where it said that about two-thirds of the funding in the five-year agreement was old money for the continuation of existing programs. That is a completely false statement. Every cent in the agreement is new money which will be spent in the year starting April 1, 1988. Why would the leader of his Party in that province make such a completely false statement and try to fool the people into thinking that this is a repetition of money already spent on existing programs?

I want the hon. gentleman to answer another point. How can he complain about a lack of attention to regional development in the Atlantic provinces when we have increased spending in the Estimates for ACOA? Why does his Party support the legislation with such faint praise? In fact, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said his Party was going to vote against the legislation. As a matter of fact, the NDP did vote against spending on regional development earlier in this session. Why did the hon. gentleman not acknowledge the fact that ACOA will be spending $306 million, I believe? I do not have the figures right before me. Some $200 million of that is new money for new programs and $106 million is going to be spent on programs which were earlier administered by DREE. Even with respect to those DREE programs, spending in Atlantic Canada this year is going up from $196 million to $228 million when you take into account the ACOA programs which they have taken over and those still left with DREE.

Why did the hon. gentleman not mention and congratulate the Government on the increases in regional development spending in Newfoundland? When we came into power in 1984-85, spending under those programs had gone down or diminished to something in the order of $42 million a year or less. Our spending this year is between $66 million and $70 million, which is an appreciable increase, and totally ignores the money that has been spent under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Why did the Hon. Member fail to mention a number of new expenditures in Newfoundland, including the just completed flume tank? That is not a fume tank like the fume we hear from the Opposition, but a flume tank. As a matter of fact, on Monday the Premier of the province and I jointly started the operation of the flume tank at the marine institute, $8.5 million expenditure to make the marine institute one of the leading educational institutions—

Mr. Orlikow: On a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman is rising to apologize for attacking the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is it permissible under our rules for the 10-minute period for questions and comments to be taken up by one Member? Surely the Minister can enter the debate and make his own speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no doubt that the Minister has a lot to say. I would ask him to conclude so that we can give a chance for the Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) to reply.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I accept that as a fair point. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to get up and withdraw his opposition to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which, as I understand it, he said in debate his Party would vote against. Perhaps he is ready to make a confession that he was wrong.

Let me conclude by asking my colleague to acknowledge that there has been a great increase in the attention paid to Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland and Labrador in the last three years. Give us some credit. I would appreciate his help in getting the Government to do even more.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport has demonstrated why many people in Canada wonder whether they always hear the whole truth from the Government.

The Minister talked about the $60 million deal signed in Newfoundland on Monday. He did not tell us that $42 million comes from Ottawa and $18 million from Newfoundland.

We heard about the $1.05 billion for ACOA, 1.05 billion times. We will probably hear it another 1.05 billion times. What we need is some progress.

We all acknowledge that the previous Government ignored Newfoundland, and that expenditures for regional development in Newfoundland decreased rather than increased over the years. We acknowledge that the Government may have replaced some of that. We know that the Minister likes to make announcements in Newfoundland, and sometimes makes each announcement several times.

I am concerned about making progress with the economic indicators for Newfoundland as compared to the rest of Canada. Again we must question the integrity of the Minister's statements when he says that we voted against moneys for regional development. He did not say that this was a $3 billion expenditure which included $650,000 in legal bills for the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who was cited with 14 counts of conflict of interest. I suppose he would suggest that we voted against Estimates for old age pensions and therefore are opposed to old age pensions. It is comments like that by the Minister and other members of his Government which Canadians have come to expect, disregard and abhor.

The real problem with the Government is that it does not tell Canadians the real truth about what is happening in Canada. The Government announces a million dollars here or $10 million there but does not talk about the lack of progress in reducing regional disparity.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of short and succinct questions. The leader of the Hon. Member's Party in Newfoundland, Peter Fenwick, continually misrepresents the free trade agreement and makes the most silly statements about it. The free trade agreement will be a tremendous benefit to Newfoundland.

Why does his leader in Newfoundland think that he can get away with stating that two thirds of the $60 million funding in the five-year fishery agreement is old money, and not new money that will be spent on new marine service centres, fishery facilities, improvement of fishermen's boats and their gear, aquaculture, and a series of other programs that will be carried out over the next five years?

Why does he allow his leader of the provincial Party in Newfoundland make statements that are not only silly but completely false? The correct figure is $60 million, $42 million federal and $18 million provincial. Will he correct the record with respect to his provincial leader's statement that: "About two-thirds of it seems to be scraping up moneys that have already been in existence and just sticking them in a big pile to try to impress us"? What kind of a rational criticism of this program is that statement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as brief as the Minister of Transport has been with his question.

I may be able to enlighten the Minister slightly with respect to the comment to which he refers. I believe the leader of the New Democratic Party in Newfoundland was trying to inform the people of Newfoundland that the money that was announced on Monday does not represent any increase from the level of spending that was taking place before. For example, in the last several years the level of expenditure which has been made in Newfoundland to upgrade fish marine centres and upgrade boats was not substantially increased. That is the point the leader of the New Democratic Party in Newfoundland was making. The announcement made by the Minister, the Premier of Newfoundland and others who gathered to sign the agreement on Monday was a little bit of smoke and mirrors in suggesting that this was $60 million that had never been spent before. It was implied that this was new money over and above what the province had expected to receive or had spent in the last several years.

Again, we are dealing with the Government making a $60 million announcement. The Minister finally admitted that only $42 million of it comes from his Government. We are making some progress with the Hon. Minister, but we must recognize that the leader of the New Democratic Party in Newfoundland is informing people about the real impact of this $60 million. It is that much of that spending had been taking place for years anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to take part in this debate, as short as it may be due to the vote to take place in five or ten minutes.

• (1740)

I think it is important to point out that we have a formula that is working. As a professional engineer, I know that when one has a formula or design which is beating the opposition and, in this case, leading the free industrial world in economic growth, one does not change the plan. You may fine tune it, but you do not change it radically as the Opposition would like to do.

I commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his objective, which he stated on March 10, 1984, when he was Leader of the Official Opposition. He said at that time: "We are going to create a new economic environment in Canada by making it clear to everybody that it is the private sector, not the state, that is the driving force of the economy". I say to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) that that is exactly our formula. It is to create an entrepreneurial spirit so that people will want to invest money in our country and, by so doing, create jobs.

How did we do that? We did it with the reform of the regulatory system and the tax system, by securing and enhancing access to world markets for Canadian goods and services in the United States and other parts of the world and by controlling the Government's deficit. These four major policies which we have implemented since September, 1984 have worked and have worked very well.

I want to say again to the Hon. Member for St. John's East that governments do not create jobs. Private enterprise creates jobs and it takes the credit. However, the Government does create an atmosphere and a stability so that people will want to invest in our country, and that is exactly what is happening. There have been 1,150,000 new jobs created since we took office in 1984. We lead all other countries in the world in our percentage of economic growth and reduction of unemployment. These are the facts. The formula is working. We are leading the rest of the world.

I would like to comment on what the alternatives might be if this formula were not used. What would the Opposition do? We know what the Liberal Party did when it was in power. It left our country literally bankrupt. There was record unemployment and record highs in interest rates. Why would anyone in his right mind think the Liberals, if they were ever to come back in power, would change? What would the socialist New Democratic Party do? It does not even look at private enterprise for economic growth. It likes to develop state-owned items.

The Opposition attacks us on regional development. I would like to to know what a Liberal-NDP coalition Government would do with the National Energy Program? Would they bring it back and ruin western Canada again? We know where they stand on free trade. They would rip the agreement up. Canadians recognize that three million jobs in Canada are directly or indirectly related to export of goods and services to the United States, yet the Opposition would ignore a free trade agreement which would secure and expand that access, creating new jobs.

What would the Opposition do about defence? We have the Air Command Centre in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James. It is an integral part of the economy of our area. What would happen if the New Democratic Party as a government pulled out of NORAD or NATO? The budget which is controlled by the Air Command Centre in my riding is $507 million. It has control of the operation of 22,000 military personnel, a total of some 30,000 when one counts the civilian personnel. Obviously, not all of these people are located in my riding, but one can readily see the impact that defence has in western Canada and in other regions of our country. The New Democratic Party has the idea that it is cheaper for us to be against NATO and on our own. In other words, we would control the northern warning system on our own. I believe the United States at the present time budgets something like $3 billion a year towards this system and the NDP would have us pick that bill up. What would the Opposition do if there was an attack on our country? Would they not allow the Americans to fly over our country in order to protect us? The NDP policy of withdrawing from NATO and NORAD is nonsense.

These are the types of things that the people of Canada will be looking at at the time of the next election. In my opinion as a member of the committee on finance for the last three and a half years, the policies of the Opposition would be disastrous for the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please! It being 5:45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(7), to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put the question on the amendment before the House.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke-Centre), seconded by Mr. Lewis, moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Garneau, seconded by Miss Nicholson (Trinity), moved the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House regrets that the Budget

1. failed to redress the inequities of the tax system created by Government policies put forward during the last three and one half years;

2. failed to put into place a regional development policy to compensate for the high interest rate policy of the Government;

3. failed to put forward a credible plan to deal with the national debt that does not unduly punish lower and middle income Canadians; and

4. failed to specify a Canadian approach for dealing with the instabilities of the international monetary system."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Garneau), which was negatived on the following division:

PRESENTATION OF FIFTY-FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in both official languages the 51st report of the Striking Committee. With the consent of the House, I intend to move the adoption of the 51st report later today.

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO COMMITTEE REFERENCE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the other Parties I think you will find that there is unanimous consent for the following two motions. The first deals with the reference to committee of Bill C-107, the plant breeders' rights legislation. It is as follows:

> That, the Order for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-107, An Act respecting plant breeders' rights, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Mr. Murphy: It is agreed that the Parliamentary Secretary should move these motions. They meet with our concurrence.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have been consulted about the motion just moved by the Parliamentary Secretary and we are prepared to give consent.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, under the same terms I move:

> That, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources be authorized to travel to Chalk River, Ontario on March 1, 1988 for the purpose of visiting the Chalk River nuclear laboratories as a part of the committee's ongoing study on nuclear power and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STRIKING

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTY-FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees, and seconded by the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) I should like to move the adoption of the 51st report of the Striking Committee which I tabled in the House earlier today.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I have been keeping for some time because it is so important. It deals with the so-called free trade deal.

The petitioners feel that the proposed free trade deal is a threat to Canadian sovereignty and that it will mean that the Canadian Government cannot effectively control foreign ownership, develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians or equalize opportunities between the regions.

They pray that there be a general election held before the free trade deal is implemented so that the Canadian people can either accept it or, in the view of the petitioners, reject it.

The petition is from Vancouver, British Columbia and other parts of the Lower Mainland of British Columbia.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 260 will be answered today.

CEC LOCAL ADVISORY COUNCILS

Question No. 260—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many Canada Employment Centre (CEC) Local Advisory Councils (LACs) are currently active?

2. Has there been any process of evaluation within the Department of Employment and Immigration for LACs and, if so (a) what are the results of this process (b) have LACs been effective in attaining their goals and objectives?

3. Are there any specific examples of suggestions emanating from LACs that have resulted in changes or improvements with regard to national employment policies and CEC programmes or services and, if so, what are the details of such examples?

4. Are changes planned to the mandate, structure or role of the LACs and, if so (a) what specific changes are being considered (b) when will they be implemented?

5. Will the Minister convene a meeting of the chairpersons of LACs and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what place will this meeting be held?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. One hundred and fifty-eight.

2. No.

3. Yes. Examples: Many Local Advisory Councils (LACs) have pointed out that certain Canadian Jobs Strategy (CJS) procedures were too complex. As part of the LAC process, all LAC suggestions are circulated to program managers withing the Commission. These comments on procedures were extremely useful to the task force reviewing administrative practices relating to CJS.

A number of LACs suggested the eligibility criteria of the Job Development program were too restrictive, especially in respect of Severely Employment Disadvantages (SED) persons. In June, 1987, the SED option was moved from Job Development to Job Entry, thus eliminating the requirement that participants must have been unemployed 24 of the last 30 weeks.

LACs expressed the desire to be informed of upcoming CJS yearly budgets earlier. For the 1987-88 fiscal year, steps were taken to ensure that most councils were able to review their tentative allocations well before the start of the fiscal year.

Concerns were expressed about the designation process of occupations under Skill Shortages, and how the program ought to help more women enter non-traditional occupations. In June, 1987, it was agreed that non-traditional occupations would be designated to help meet the demand for qualified women that will result from employment equity plans or special measures undertaken by employers.

A large number of LACs complained about the delay in having skills designated centrally throught National Headquarters. Authority to designate selected occupational skill shortages was subsequently delegated to regional heads.

A B.C. LAC asked that the CEC give higher priority locally to upgrading course and CEC complied.

Another LAC in B.C. suggested CEC send information on CJS to 100 selected employers and it was done.

After discussing the services provided by the CEC, a B.C. LAC recommended that counselling be introduced for a test period of four months. The CEC manager accepted and implemented the proposal.

An Alberta LAC recommended that the processing of applications be simplified. Changes which should result in a shorter time lapse between submission and approval have been made.

4. While the Local Advisory Council process is under review, no specific changes are at present being considered.

5. A meeting of Local Advisory Council Chairpersons is not planned at the present time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to take part in the debate today. As your Honour may be aware, last evening I spent about four minutes talking about the amendment that was before the House. I would like to thank my colleague, the Whip of my Party, for allowing me to participate to the fullest in this debate on the Budget. I say that because of the fact that the Budget presented by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on February 10 shows that the finances of Canada are now under control. This is something which has been long overdue. For many years the finances of Canada were not under control.

I would like to remind Hon. Members what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on March 10, 1984, when he was the Leader of the Opposition. I want to quote his words because they set out the formula that has been used by our Government since 1984 to bring our finances back under control. He said, "We are going to create a new economic environment in Canada by making it clear for everybody that it is the private sector, not the state, that is the driving force of the economy".

That is the formula that has been used by our Government since we took office in 1984. It has been the unleashing of the entrepreneurial spirit that has seen our economy grow at record rates. An unprecedented number of jobs have been created. Some two-thirds of the 1,150,000 jobs that were created since we took office are above average in terms of pay. They are technical jobs. We can see that the quality of job creation is quite positive.

Just how have these jobs been created? Unlike the previous Liberal administration, we have put policies in place to let the private sector flourish. When was the last time you heard the term "make work project", Madam Speaker? I suspect it was probably before the last election.

The Liberals borrowed money to hire some people who were not receiving UI benefits. They would put them into a temporary work situation until they qualified for unemployment insurance benefits, at which time they would collect benefits under that program. It was a cruel and vicious circle inflicted upon the dignity of thousands of Canadians. That was the policy of the former Liberal Government when it came to job creation.

We believe in working with the private sector, not against it. An excellent case in point is the Canadian Jobs Strategy. It is a highly successful program designed to give individuals the necessary tools and skills to play an important part in our economy and our way of life. It gives people hope and a future. It does not just throw money at problems as the Liberals used to do.

How have we aroused the entrepreneurial spirit in Canada again? How have we revived it? It was done through four different policy objectives as laid out by our Government. The first objective was reform of the regulatory system; the second one was reform of the tax system; and the third was securing and enhancing access to markets outside of Canada, both through the GATT and also through the free trade agreement that is presently before us. Finally, we have controlled Government finances to reduce the deficit and the debt.

I wish to highlight some of the reforms of the regulatory system. Basically, it is setting up a fair set of rules in order that businesses have confidence in our country and in our Government and will invest money to create jobs. As we all know, in 1984 business confidence was very low. People did not know when they invested the money in our country whether the laws would change tomorrow or the next day and they would be left with debts or taxes that they could not handle.

As mentioned by the Minister of Finance on February 10, we stabilized the regulatory system by deregulating the energy and transportation sectors. We opened up financial markets to global opportunities and stimulated competition and financial services. We modernized business framework legislation dealing with competition, policy, copyright and patents providing better protection for the public interest. We privatized Crown corporations to reduce Government involvement and interference in the market-place. Furthermore, we created Investment Canada to encourage and welcome capital from abroad. We know how successful that has been today.

The importance of a flexible set of regulations in which the private sector can operate seems to be lost on the Opposition. In fact, the importance of the private sector is completely lost on our socialist NDP friends. They said that the private sector would not respond to the challenge of creating jobs. That is what they said in 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987. They said that the private sector would not respond and create jobs if we made a climate that encouraged investment.

There are 1.150 million new jobs in Canada. Some 80 per cent of them are permanent jobs. The majority of those jobs are now held by the women of our country. Yet the Opposition said that that could not happen. That is how wrong they were. The 1.150 million jobs is a pretty good response.

Why I am amplifying that, Madam Speaker, is that our hon. friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) rose yesterday on debate and stated that Governments do not create jobs. He is correct; Governments do not create jobs, the private sector creates jobs. That is where those jobs have been created. I compliment the private sector for creating those jobs.

The other policy that is part of this whole program is tax reform, and making the system fairer to individuals in order that we can compete in international markets. If someone goes out to work and is asked to work overtime or to work a little harder, he will if they knows that he can keep a lot of that money in his pocket. If that person has to turn around and pay it out in taxes, he will surely say he would rather have the time off.

Now there are three tax brackets. Personal income tax has been reduced by some 8 points. Therefore, people now want to go out and work. That means there will be more productivity and more competitiveness with the rest of the world. Starting this year Canadians will pay less personal income tax; 8 out of 10 households will have personal income taxes reduced; 850,000 low-income individuals will have their taxes reduced to zero; 850,000 people in Canada will no longer pay taxes; 9 out of 10 Canadians who are over 65 will have their income tax reduced or eliminated. In the corporate sector, corporate income tax rates have been lowered.

The third policy that we had to create those jobs and increase the economy was securing and enhancing access to foreign markets. We know how important the export market is to our country. Trade with the United States directly or indirectly creates 3 million jobs in our country. Why would we sit back and not do anything when we saw elements in the United States attempting to restrict the export of Canadian goods? We could not sit on the fence and watch those jobs being taken away. We took the objective and went out and signed the free trade agreement, which will mean more jobs for Canada, more jobs for youth.

The free trade objective for expanded markets will mean lower prices and more products for our consumers. It is not only job creation, there are other benefits. It also sets a precedent for other countries. If two major countries in the world can establish a free trade agreement, why can't other countries? It opens up the GATT area. Another objective of the Government is to export our goods to other parts of the world.

The people of Canada have a choice when it comes to free trade, and the Opposition also has a choice. If we do not want to change, we can look inward and set up tariffs to keep all other goods out. We can try to trade within our own little circle, put the flag around ourselves, and try to live within our own country. That is the objective of the NDP and the Liberals. That is what they want to do. They want to rip up the free trade agreement, wrap themselves in the flag, and say, "We can live within ourselves". Where are they going to get the 3 million jobs related to exports? Who is going to look after that? How are they going to get the income tax from the people who are working to pay for the social programs that they so greatly called for, and with which we agree?

There is the other alternative. We can reach out and build bridges with the rest of the world, compete and grow with the rest of the world. We are already doing that. In fact, we are competing better than other countries. That is the approach that free trade gives us. It will give us more jobs.

The other area of policy that we, as a Government, felt was very important was deficit control. This point cannot be overstated. For the last three years Government spending has increased at an average rate of less than inflation. That compares with the average increase in spending by the Liberals when they had the mandate in the last four years of 14 per cent per year. That is what the deficit grew at. It has been reduced in a systematic manner in order that we do not take away social programs and have an impact on the economy of our country by deciding to cut helter-skelter, putting people out of work, or taking away social programs. The people of Canada do not want that approach.

Yesterday I listened to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) talk about the Minister of Finance and his accumulated deficit. I would like to bring something to your attention, Madam Speaker, that I found very interesting about the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who made this statement:

> After three and a half years the Minister's armour is not nearly so shiny. Instead of reducing the debt, thanks to this Minister and this Government, it has gone up to $293.4 billion, an increase of $116.6 billion or 66 per cent in the last three and a half years.

The Leader of the Opposition failed to say that when we took office, in that first Budget we had to find $22 billion from the taxpayers of Canada to pay for the interest on the debt that the Liberals had accumulated, some $190 billion. Not counting the debts added on by the Government, but if one multiplies that $22 billion by four it amounts to $88 billion worth of debt. That is a deficit that is there because of interest on the debt created by the Opposition.

If we subtract that figure it comes to $28 billion in accumulated deficits incurred while we have been the Government. If one takes away that $22 billion of debt charges for which we accepted responsibility to pay on the outstanding debt, we are talking about $28 billion of accumulated debt that is there, if one wants to accuse this Government of it. That amounts to approximately $7 billion a year.

I wish to quote from an article entitled "The debt we bear" printed in the Globe and Mail today.

> If Ottawa had no accumulated debt, Ottawa would have no budgetary deficit. In fact, the Main Estimates published Tuesday confirm there would be $3.1-billion surplus in 1988-89 if only we faced no bill for past borrowing.

I think that proves my point that $88 billion of the deficit that has been accumulated while we have been office is for the debt created by the former Liberal Government.

I should like to look at what would be the alternatives if we did not take the approach of trying to get the private sector involved, trying to get free trade, trying to expand our markets, and so on. What has the Opposition offered as an alternative? I guess a Liberal Government would tear up the free trade agreement. That is what the Liberals have said, and that if they did not have the numbers they would form a coalition with the NDP. We know what the New Democrats would do with free trade. They would outlaw it as well.

Free trade means a lot to those of us in Winnipeg and elsewhere in western Canada. In fact, the Opposition forgets that the youth of the country will probably benefit most from free trade. As technology advances, they will be prepared to take these high priced jobs. Not only that, but in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James we have a company called Macdon Industries which manufactures swathers. Basically the farm machinery industry is a free trade market. The majority of its products are sold to the United States. Some 80 per cent of its products go to the United States, and it employs some 200 plus people. This is an example of what free trade means to us in western Canada. The youth are looking forward to it. They want the three million plus jobs which will exist because we will still be trading with the United States.

Speaking about youth, I should like to indicate the results of our policies to encourage the private sector to invest in Canada again. This is what it has meant to the youth in terms of employment. The youth unemployment rate has fallen from 18.3 per cent to 12.7 per cent since September, 1984. I think it is worth repeating. It has fallen by 5.6 per cent, from 18.3 per cent to 12.7 per cent. In comparison, the youth unemployment rate rose by 5.4 per cent, from 12.9 per cent to 18.9 per cent, during the term of the last Liberal Government.

Free trade means more jobs to us in western Canada, particularly those of us in Manitoba where we export hydro energy and pork products, for example, to the United States. Some seven out of every ten hogs raised in Manitoba are exported to the United States. It is big business to Manitoba. These are the things that have been protected and even expanded. Our oilseed producers will now have a market in the United States. They are encouraged. If one talks with the agricultural people, one finds out that they are very happy with the free trade agreement. The marketing boards have been protected.

The alternative of the Opposition would be to throw it out and go back to the old system of watching the United States knocking off one, one hundred, or whatever, of the three million jobs that are directly or indirectly related to free trade.

What would the Opposition do about defence? We know what the NDP would do about it. It would get out of NORAD. The Air Command Centre is in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James. It employs almost 700 people directly in Winnipeg. It is part of the NORAD system. What would the New Democrats do? Would they say, "We will ignore the United States?" The United States is part of the Early Warning System. Would they buy all the AWAC bombers to fly over Canada to protect it? What would they do with the Air Command Centre? Would they transfer it to Oshawa because of their regional development policies? Obviously the Leader of the New Democratic Party supports and recognizes regional development as being basically in the centre of Canada right now. I imagine that he is all for it, because he does not mind when they invest billions of dollars in Oshawa and GM Motors and so on? Would they continue development? What would they do with the frigates that we will build in the Maritimes?

Mr. Cassidy: Who is in power?

Mr. Minaker: We know the Hon. Member from Ottawa Centre would move them out of there. These are the alternatives, and I think the people of Canada recognize them. They want to have another chance to keep the economy growing.

Mr. Cassidy: That is why you are third right now.

Mr. Minaker: That is why they are supporting what we are doing financially.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask several questions of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker). First, he talked about a farm machinery company in Winnipeg which will benefit from free trade. Does he not realize that we have had free trade in farm machinery for years and that it has not helped Massey-Ferguson in Brantford?

He also talked about a company which is into computers. I should like him to comment on the representations which were made by Mr. Loewen, the Chairman of Comcheq, a very successful computer company in Winnipeg, which heads the Canadian Association of Independent Companies operating computer companies. He has made several representations. He appeared before the parliamentary committee and explained why the free trade agreement for the computer industry, which is so involved in the service sector of the economy, would be a disaster.

Why does the Hon. Member not give some real consideration to the problems of companies in Manitoba rather than the nonsense he has talked about?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for his question. He talked about the computer industry in Manitoba being a major industry. Perhaps he should check into the facts of life of the economy of Manitoba and where the major exports are coming from.

To give an idea of the trade figures in Manitoba, 7.8 per cent of our trade with the United States is in electricity and 6.3 per cent is in aircraft parts. I might say that the majority of the aerospace industry in Manitoba is in my riding. It would be affected by the NDP policies which would take us out of NATO and NORAD.

I cannot understand why the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) would not be concerned about the effects of the free trade agreement on the softwood lumber industry which is mainly in northern Manitoba. Some 6.1 per cent of our softwood lumber, the majority of which I think is produced in his riding, is exported to the United States, and then there is 4.8 per cent in motor vehicle parts.

I should like to deal now with the agricultural sector, from where the majority of the exports come—$52 million in live animals, $56 million in fresh and frozen meat, and $135 million in other food products. According to Manitoba's Bill Vaags of the Canadian Pork Council, our industry is the largest agricultural exporter to the United States, with a 1987 projection for total live swine and pork sales in the order of $700 million. I could go on.

We recognize that certain industries will have complications, but I am sure that they will be as competitive as anyone else once they realize that they can compete with the United States. We know that we can compete. We beat them at hockey. We may not be able to beat them at football, but that day will come. However, we are not talking about sports. We are talking about business people. We are productive and efficient. We can compete with the United States, and the free trade agreement will be good for us.

Mr. Jardine: Madam Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) on his very excellent speech. The Hon. Member noted that he has a large military establishment in his riding with the headquarters of Air Command, the head of the Air Force. I can understand and appreciate his concerns in respect of the military and New Democratic Party policy.

The NDP certainly advocates a withdrawal from NATO. It would also oppose the establishment of any NATO facility on Canadian soil. This causes me concern and it causes concern among the people of my riding.

Then there is the policy of the NDP about the new frigate program. Saint John, New Brunswick, has one of the highest, if not the highest, rates of unemployment of any major city in the country and the NDP's policy would, of course, have been to split that frigate program, dividing it between one community and another.

The New Democrats say they would save $1 billion a year by bringing the troops back from NATO. That, of course, is a false statement. If the New Democrats fired every serving member they might save half that total figure.

The New Democrats also advocate using the Canadian Forces in new international roles. The military would become a rapid deployment force to strike across the world in response to military instability or national disasters. What are the New Democrats advocating, Madam Speaker? Are they advocating super police force for international affairs? Would the Hon. Member give me his views of what the NDP policy would cost and its lack of effectiveness for the security of Canada?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for bringing that matter to my attention. Both he and I have defence establishments in our ridings. The NDP's policy on defence would be very costly and very dangerous. I just reaffirm what I said earlier, that in my own riding the air command centre employs directly almost 700 people. Not only that, it has a budget of some $507 million and controls a total personnel of 31,000. The major part of its responsibility is NORAD and If the troops were to withdraw from NORAD, the U.S. portion alone of the north warning system today is $3.2 billion, would the New Democrats pick up all that cost? Are the New Democrats going to buy the six AWACs that scan our North American continent putting up that electronic shield of protection or fence, if you like? Will the NDP put up the $3 billion for that?

With regard to the NATO withdrawal, I think in the NDP paper the New Democrats said they would save something like $1 billion a year by bringing the troops back from NATO. That is totally false, Madam Speaker. Even if all the NATO troops were laid off, the saving would be about $400 million. If I understand the statement, the New Democrats say they have no intention of laying troops off. If there are no lay-offs, the $400 million which the NDP would save was primarily the cost of the troops, so where are the savings? Basically the New Democrats achieve no savings by withdrawing troops from NATO and they take on the full responsibility for most of the defence. I think Canadians recognize that. Canadians want us to stay in NORAD and in NATO.

As well, a lot of our youth want to join the forces. There are highly technical jobs in our defence forces. Our youth are looking there with anticipation. A young constituent of mine wants to become a pilot. It is a very technical job, as it always has been. Young people want these kinds of jobs. If the NDP is talking about withdrawing troops yet saying there will be no lay-offs, there is no major saving. There will be complications. If anything there will be increased costs, probably taken from the social services or paid for by raising taxes or increasing the deficit.

The New Democrats do not believe in deficits. They do not think there are any costs. They would rather print money and see our dollar go down to 50 cents and battle those problems like Brazil and Mexico with their high inflations. If you keep increasing deficits, confidence in our country goes downhill. What happens? Interest rates go up because you try to maintain and bring in dollars that you need or you print more money. That is the answer. If you print more money then the rest of the world says the Canadian dollar is not worth 78 cents but only 50 cents. What happened to Mexico and Brazil when they started printing money when they did not have the ability to provide the cost of their services? Inflation skyrocketed. Canada does not want to be that kind of a country. Canadians will re-elect this Government because they know we are the only ones capable of financially running the country properly.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question and comment period has now expired. The Hon. Member for Eglington—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, today we are being asked to debate the resolution that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government. That is something I cannot do. I certainly cannot approve of this Government's Budget. We cannot approve of the Budget because we have grave problems in Canada, many are fundamental and systemic and the Government is doing nothing in the Budget to deal with them. Let me sum them up.

First, poverty in Canada is worse than it was before the recession in 1981. Heavy new taxes have been laid upon Canadians. We have regressive and hidden taxes in the form of ongoing sales taxes and hidden taxes which the Government has imposed on people since the Conservatives came to power in 1984. We have increased public debt through huge annual deficits. Though the Conservatives claim they are so concerned about the deficit, our public debt has skyrocketed. There is a drop in real earnings for average Canadians. After taking into account inflation, one finds that the real earnings of Canadians have gone down since the Government came to power and the Government brought in a budget that has not dealt with any of these issues. It has not mentioned them in the debate.

This is not a commentary of mine as a person or as an individual, or even as critic of the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, which I represent in speaking today. It is rather an opinion expressed by those who are involved in the financial world. It was expressed over television and radio the night of the Budget, that it was a do nothing budget. Not only did the media make this comment, but leaders of the business world commenting on the Budget made the assessment that it is a do nothing Budget. It fits in well with the philosophy of the Tories.

The Tory approach to the economy, in fact to government, is a laissez-faire approach. It is an approach that says "do not rock the boat; we have set into motion a situation that is advantageous to certain special interest groups. Do not intervene. Do not do anything that will cause any effect on the economy. Let market forces bring about their own results. Let the market forces operate. Then as a result of the values that will come to certain segments of our population there will be a trickle down of benefits to those who are less well off and eventually those down the line will get the benefit of our approach". That is Tory philosophy, Madam Speaker, and this Budget is a perfect reflection of it. It is a non-managerial approach. It is an approach that serves special interest groups.

I would like to expand on the points I have made. There is a lack of action concerning the anticipated fall-outs that will come from the so-called Mulroney-Reagan agreement on free trade. First, we have poverty. I mentioned that nothing is being done about poverty. To be poor in Canada is to have unequal access to housing, education and training, day care, legal services, credit and health care. Most poor Canadians include all welfare recipients, almost all minimum wage workers, the majority of unattached elderly persons and single parent families led by women. These constitute a group of people who are living below the poverty line. They are in poverty. They live on incomes that are hundreds and sometimes even thousands of dollars below the established poverty line. This Government, in this Budget, has not addressed itself to that fundamental systemic problem. Poverty is worse now than it was seven years ago.

These figures were taken from materials given to us and studies made by the National Council of Welfare in Ottawa and by the Canadian Council of Social Development. These statistics are alarming. Yet we do not hear any outcry or concern on the part of Tory back-benchers or Ministers of the Crown. These figures are there for anyone to see, yet they are unwilling to bring them forward, study them and report on what should be done.

These figures state that in 1986, some 3.7 million Canadians lived below the poverty line. That is 14.9 per cent of the population, almost 15 per cent of all Canadians. More than 34 per cent of unattached individuals were poor last year. Over one million children under age 16 lived in poverty. Nearly 57 per cent of poor Canadians were female while 51 per cent of the general population is female. More than half of single-parent families headed by women are poor. The risk of poverty is one in seven for all persons, one in eight for families, one in three for unattached individuals and one in two for single-parent families headed by women.

Finally, the number of Canadians living below the poverty line went from 3,475,000 in 1980 up to 4,214,000 in 1984 but has since declined. The 1986 figures, however, are higher than those of 1980. We have not made progress on this tremendously serious issue of systemic poverty. This Budget does not address that problem.

The second point I made was that there has been an increase in sales tax and income tax, putting a heavier burden on the people who can least afford it. The middle-income group is particularly hard hit. In 1987, for example, individuals paid $22 billion more in income tax than in 1984 when the Tories came to power. The major portion of this came from new taxes introduced since September of 1984. In addition, we have seen an increased automatic tax that has been built into the system, a kind of hidden tax that automatically comes into effect year after year. We find increased indirect taxes as well. The income of people has been secretly undermined.

There have been constant increases in taxes. The list of sales tax increases is incredibly tragic. Year after year sales taxes have been built in to constantly increase the amount of money that must be paid. First there was a 9 per cent sales tax, then the next year a 10 per cent sales tax, then the next year an 11 per cent sales tax and the next year a 12 per cent sales tax. There are new taxes on items that had never been taxed before. Of course, there are more taxes on gasoline. Every time we turn around another cent or two per litre in taxes is applied to gasoline. Again, in this measure, we have seen another increase in sales tax to bring in another $300 million to the Treasury and take $300 million away, not from rich people, not from those who can afford it, but from the poor who have to drive to work or the middle-class who have to carry the social burdens of the country.

I mentioned the increase in public debt. We hear a lot of smoke and mirrors about how the deficit is being brought down. One would think from that that the national debt was receding. That, unfortunately, is not at all the case. On closer examination we find that since this Government came into power the national debt has increased $116 billion. When we look at what the national debt was after having been built up for over a hundred years, it was $176 billion when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Tories took over in 1984. In the short three or so years of this Government, $116 billion more has been added to the national debt. That means that there was a 66 per cent increase in our total debt in the short period of this Government's existence. This is under what is supposed to be a strategy which is called bringing down the deficit.

The deficit may be slightly lower this year than it was last year, but that certainly does not portend that the national debt has gone down, as most people think. On the contrary, it has risen higher and faster than at any time in the history of this country. That is the reality and this Budget has not addressed that problem either.

These are some of the matters that are of concern to us. The worst failure of all in this Budget is its total neglect for the fallout which will come from the so-called free trade deal. We know that there will be tremendous negative repercussions from this trade deal. We know that it will hit the more economically depressed regions of Canada the hardest. We know that the most vulnerable people in the workforce are the ones who will be hit, the women and older workers. They will not be the ones who will be the most helped by this trade agreement, they will be the first to be hit the hardest. We also see that this agreement will destroy major sectors of our economy.

I think that those of us who have open minds will remember seeing an illustration of this in a recent episode of the television program, The Journal. The Journal interviewed a worker from the oil fields of Alberta. He resided either in Calgary or nearby. He was able to say that he was looking forward to the impact of the trade deal. He said that he thought that in future the Americans would be buying our gas and oil, and of course they will because it will provide an inexpensive resource for them. We have opened up the gates of our resources to America. The Americans will buy them, all right, at prices not more favourable to Canadians but of equal favour to them, and they will have access to our oil and gas and our water and other resources, something which is of course what they want. It will serve their purposes. This oil worker was able to say that he can look forward to knowing that there will be lots of work for him over many years to come. The Americans will be buying up our oil and gas at good prices, so he is quite sure that all will be well.

At the same time, while his industry was favoured by this agreement, the program interviewed a woman whose face those of us who saw it will never forget. We will never forget the look of anxiety, concern and gentleness. This woman is working at the Ganong chocolate factory in St. Stephen, New Brunswick. As we watched her working, hand-dipping chocolates, we saw that she was a person of middle-age, perhaps later middle-age. She wanted to work. She had worked all her life and she was skilled in this particular kind of work. She looked forward with some anxiety to what would happen when this trade agreement came into effect, what would happen to this little chocolate company in New Brunswick. In fact, she wondered what would happen to her job. When her boss and the owner of the company that is a hundred years old was interviewed, he had to admit that he did not know what would happen, he is anxious and does not know the repercussions.

Indeed, when the Americans can flood Canadian markets with goods produced by the cheap labour they have in the south, often temporary immigrant labour, one can see how they can compete with Canada. When one understands the problems Canadians have with the transport of goods over greater distances, therefore adding to the cost, and when we look at the cost of energy required in our climate, we can understand the misgivings over whether Canada can compete without some kind of protection of its traditional markets.

Is anything going to be done by the Government to see to it that the fall-out from this kind of policy will be looked after? There is no indication from this Budget that any attention has been paid to the problem.

One remembers the poignancy of the image of this woman who is looking toward the future with uncertainty. You can repeat that image and that concern in the faces of people in factories all across this country. Think about the one or two-industry towns. Think about the little companies built over 50 or 100 years; for example, the textile companies in Quebec and Ontario. Think about the people working in the shoe industry or the chocolate industry. Think about all those people in many little plants across the country. They face disaster when our borders are thrown open and the competition arrives from huge American corporations. Those towns will then become ghost towns and the Canada we knew will no longer exist.

Remember the anguish of people like this woman who face prospects like this. Where will she, living in a town in New Brunswick, find a new job? Are we going to stack these people like cordwood, put them on trains and send them to the big cities? Are we going to try to force them to leave their towns and villages of which they have been a part all these years? The Tory idea is that you go to where the jobs are instead of keeping the jobs in various parts of the country. It is a laissez-faire, let it go approach.

The Government has done nothing whatsoever in this Budget to give any reassurance to those people across this country about the future of their work and their jobs, and not just the people in manufacturing. One of the areas that will be the most severely hit is agriculture. Today farmers are complaining about family farms being closed down and going into bankruptcy. Think about grain farmers who are in vulnerable positions today. Then think about their vulnerability when this so-called trade agreement comes into effect.

Let us think, for example, of companies which are producing and processing food. What will happen when these 18-wheel trucks come wheeling into Canada with goods from the southern U.S. where there is scab labour and cheap immigrant labour brought in from Mexico? They have climates such as in Georgia where they can raise chickens without any cost for heating. They have the industries to package and process the food. What will happen to our packing and processing industries in Canada? What will happen to the farmers who supply the food for those packaging and processing industries? We know they will go down. They will be crushed. They will disappear. Again, hundreds of thousands of people in this country, including farmers, will be reduced to penury, driven off the land, and those farms, industries and small towns across Canada now servicing the food industry will be destroyed.

In conclusion, I want to point out that the Macdonald Royal Commission, while recommending free trade, insisted that a program had to be in place to anticipate the fall-out, the suffering, the displacement and social costs which will arise. It had to be part of the package if there was going to be a free trade agreement. It called for a guaranteed annual income. It said you cannot move on these matters until you have first looked after the social needs of the people affected negatively by free trade.

The commission pointed to the fact that the poorest 20 per cent of Canadians receive less than 5 per cent of Canada's total income. We cannot go on in this fashion. There is no planning in this Budget for the tremendous repercussions arising from this trade deal. Tories are not managers. They are interested in special interest groups and allowing rip-off, cream-off, and selling off of our resources, selling off of our future, selling off the back-forty. The Tories do not manage this country, they just let it go.

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member and the fault he found with the Budget this morning. I am absolutely amazed that he did not use this opportunity to tell Canadians what his Party intends to do in the future to make a better Canada.

The Hon. Member criticized the one cent a litre tax on those poor people who have to drive to work. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that there are a lot fewer poor people and a lot more people working since this Government came to power. When his Party was in power we had almost 12 per cent unemployment. Unemployment is down to 8.2 per cent and still dropping. Clearly he cannot argue the fact that this Government has created jobs.

I want to go on to what I think is a very important point of his remarks. He said that since this Government came to power the deficit has increased by $116 billion. He thinks this is terrible.

Mr. McKenzie: It was started by his Leader.

Mr. Holtmann: Does he not remember that at the rate it was growing in 1984 it would not be $116 billion today, it would be $400 billion?

He criticized the Government for not doing more for the poor people and spending more to help them. He suggested that more ought to have been done in many areas. We should have spent more money as his Party did in the past. How does he intend to bring that $116 billion deficit down to zero and spend more to help all those people that he criticized this Government for not looking after? He referred to people without housing, people still unemployed and on welfare. What does he intend to do? Clearly the last Government could not create jobs, it could only create a big deficit. He is going to do the opposite, so I would like him to tell Canadians how he intends to help these people, where he is going to get the additional revenue not only to keep the deficit from going up but to reduce it, and create all these programs? I think he should tell that to the Canadian people right now.

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the questions the Hon. Member has raised because they afford me an opportunity to add to my observations. He raised a host of questions in a very short period of time and I hope he will allow me to do my best to try and deal with some of them. I cannot really deal with all of them.

First, he raised the question about the fact there is so much more employment, not less. I pointed out that there is more poverty, not less than there was in 1981. There is no reason for us to rejoice in that.

With regard to the jobs about which the Member speaks, it is one thing for the Government to talk about the fact that it has increased the number of jobs so greatly since it came into power. The fact it does not want to mention is that it came into power at a time when we were coming out of a recession. The Government came into power at a time when there was economic growth throughout the world.

Despite this opportunity, the Government has still not brought us back to the level of unemployment which existed in 1981. In August, 1981, the Canadian level of unemployment was 6.8 per cent. We have not returned to that figure yet, even though we have had a period of growth in the economy throughout the world. The Government chooses to use figures from a period of world recession and compare its record with that. We have never heard the Government compare its figures with those before the recession.

The Hon. Member asked why we talk about the $116 billion increase in the national debt. We speak about that because it constitutes an incredible new burden on the average Canadian in that the total debt divided by the total population—what we call the per capita public debt—has increased from $7,000 for each Canadian when the Government came into power to $11,250 per person within a few years.

There has, therefore, been an incredible increase in the national debt under the Government. In three and one-half years it has gone up 66 per cent over what it was in the previous 100 years put together. The accumulation of our national debt over 100 years was $116 billion and it is now $176 billion.

It is true that at the rate at which the Liberal Government was spending money when it took over all kinds of problems could have been projected, including a larger debt. However, the reason the Liberal Government was spending money at that particular time was to provide social services to those who would otherwise be in hunger and poverty during that depression or recession. I think most Canadians were pleased that the Government acted responsibly and tried to help those who were weak and poor by underpinning their concerns. In the long run, Canada made a good investment in its future through that kind of support program.

I do not know whether I have dealt with all the points with which the Member wanted me to deal, but as a quick final point, the Member asked what Liberals or I would do. Well, there are some things which this Budget could have done, one being to deal with the present rate of interest. If a lower interest rate is afforded by the present opportunities which we have with regard to our relationship with the Americans and their interest rate, this may possibly fuel an increased number of jobs, a better economy, and a lower deficit.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, in the Hon. Member's speech we have heard the voice, allegedly, of the little Canadians. I think we all want to speak for the average Canadian because they comprise the vast majority of our population. However, instead we have heard a cleverly disguised endorsation from the socialist wing of the Liberal Party of the little Canada concept, the timorous Canada concept.

I listened with rapt attention to the Hon. Member's skilled sketching of the worried woman from New Brunswick. I wonder whether he has thought about the future of her children and her grandchildren if Canada lacks access to markets, if the Ganong chocolate company, for example, is forestalled from gaining access to the richest market in the world and Canada remains the only major industrialized power without unfettered trade access to a market of at least 100 million.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member truly understands the attitudes of Canadian farmers, particularly western farmers, who see the free trade agreement as an opportunity and not a threat. The farmers of western Canada in particular see this trade agreement as a liberation manifesto.

The images which the Hon. Member has put to us are rather distorted, rather dramatic—people stacked like cord wood, 18-wheel trucks invading us across the border. I submit that this is not so much a Budget speech as an anti-American diatribe.

Can the Hon. Member tell the House how many Canadians he believes will be affected by means of job adjustment through the free trade agreement and how many Canadians he believes normally change jobs in the course of a year? I believe that it is estimated that 25,000 Canadians per year will be affected by the free trade agreement and will require retraining, to which the Government is committed, compared to 5 million Canadians who annually change their jobs in the normal course of events. Could the Member comment on that please.

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that question. Obviously Tories simply cannot think in terms of the average Canadian. They cannot wrap their minds around that, as the comments of the Member show. He is still talking about whether there will be winners and losers and how many. He failed to hear what I said when I said that Canadians want their Budget to deal with those who will be the losers. He cannot hear that. He keeps saying that there will be winners and that the grandchildren of the woman from New Brunswick will prosper. That does not help her. That does not give her dignity.

The Member cannot get his mind around that subject. He and the Government do not care about the losers. This Budget is disgusting because it does not anticipate the problems which will be faced by those who will lose. No one denies that. Even the Macdonald Royal Commission said that there will be losers and for that reason we must build in protection through guaranteed income supplements, unemployment insurance, and other mechanisms, a new social system which will protect the losers. No one denies that there will be losers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Madam Speaker, I would also like to take part in this debate on the Budget, because I think it is the first time Canadians have been given a real Budget Speech. This is not a speech to amend the Income Tax Act. It is not a speech to announce taxes. It is not a speech that keeps changing the Government's tax system. It is a speech that clearly describes, as a Budget Speech should, the state of the nation, in other words, the state of Canada's economy as a result of the policies we introduced three years ago. It is a speech that clearly describes the progress this Government has made since 1984, and its conclusions are such that we can look forward to the future with great optimism.

I was very surprised when the previous speaker quoted the Macdonald Report, since the report in question was in favour of free trade. Of course, they can always quote that part of the Report that suits their own particular ends, but the general tenor of the Macdonald Report was that the Government had no choice but to opt for a free trade agreement with the United States.

However, I found it most refreshing to hear my Conservative colleague's question to the previous speaker, when he said: You keep criticizing, but what kind of economic policy do you have to offer? What is the Official Opposition's economic policy? What is the New Democrtic Party's economic policy? They have nothing on paper, saying what their budget would be like and how they would proceed if they were to form the Government. Not a word. We keep hearing negative criticism, never anything constructive. However, they tend to forget the approach taken by the previous Government. At the time, its budgets were more like amendments to the income tax than a proper budget speech. All we heard was more taxes. The deficit rose from $13 billion to $38 billion in three years. And they even neglected to bring down budgets for as long as sixteen months.

At one point, we had a forecast deficit of $10 billion, which turned out to be $20 billion. Today, however, the forecast is for a deficit of $30 billion, Canadians can count on the deficit being $30 billion. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in co-operation with Treasury Board, has provided for an ongoing review of the issues and the Government's economic policies, a truly admirable initiative that does not deserve the negative and destructive criticism we have been hearing today.

This morning, previous speakers often mentioned free trade. I shall, if I may, quote from an editorial in today's La Presse, which is about free trade and the partisan analysis we are being given instead of the rational approach we need to an economic analysis as important as this one, especially when the future of all Canadians is at stake. Our friend Frédéric Wagnière said, and I quote:

> Nobody ever said the Free Trade Agreement with the United States was perfect. The version initialled last October was very vague, and the text signed by the Prime Minister still requires some clarification—
> However, that is no reason for throwing out the baby with the bath water, like some politicians on both sides of the border—

The politicians on this side of the border being, of course, the Opposition and the NDP.

> —are inclined to do. With all its flaws, the Agreement enjoys considerable support.

And a little further in his article which I found very perceptive, he added:

> The greatest threat to the Free Trade Agreement comes not from the United States but from partisan politics in Canada which may soon turn into electioneering. The federal Government intends to table enabling legislation this spring. Considering the obstruction we can expect from the Opposition Parties, consideration and passage of this legislation by the House of Commons and the Senate may take very long indeed;

Here we have an editorial writer who clearly says that the partisan attitude and blinker mentality of the Opposition Parties is extremely harmful to Canada's economic development and that free trade is the only viable short or long term solution for the Government and for creating jobs. In fact, this Government can be proud of its record, since as one of my colleagues said this morning, it has created the most jobs of any government in recent years.

As I said earlier, this Budget Speech differs from the kind we are accustomed to hear, because it tells us exactly what the situation is. It tells Canadians what they will have to do and what they can expect from the Government, and it tells us exactly what course the Government will take to provide for the economic well-being of Canadians. Furthermore, the Budget is a clear demonstration of this Government's successful economic record.

For instance, concerning international policies that are regularly discussed by the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), through CIDA, and the involvement of Canadian business people in those matters, this has ensured that CIDA's upgading is now being perceived throughout French—and English—speaking nations in Africa especially. Economic indicators are a clear proof of that—whether it be interest rates, unemployment, housing starts, or investments which have doubled since this Conservative Government came to power, whether the volume of exports, of course, the renewed confidence of potential investors from Canada or abroad, deficit control as established by this Governement, whether the tax reform that had been discussed for 20 years, and that may be further discussed but will lead to real reforms over the coming months and years, whether this Budget which is an assurance guide to free-trade success . . . In my area for instance, in the constituency of Richelieu, in Sorel, thirteen of the major employers with a total of at least 9,000 to 10,000 employees unanimously supported free trade by announcing that those agreements over the coming years will mean for those entrepreneurs the hiring of from 1,000 to 1,500 and perhaps even 2,000 new employees.

I was surprised earlier to hear the previous speaker suggest unemployment had gone down but poverty had increased. At any rate, if things keep going the way they are, the decrease in unemployment certainly will help stamp out poverty some day or other.

In the Bécancour area, whose industrial park has seen very significant investments, the unanimous reference also is to the free trade agreement as a boost to employment, because more than 1,000 new jobs could result from that historic agreement.

That in my view is clear, specific and concrete evidence of this Government's commitment to implement the free trade agreement in the shortest possible time frame, hopefully with the cooperation of Opposition parties rather than obstruction from the Senate Opposition, often with the complicity of Opposition parties, through all sorts of technical means in order to block that agreement, which would do tremendous harm to the interests of Canadians generally.

In the fine region which I have the privilege to serve, we find the nucleus of the constituency of Richelieu which covers the Sorel area, Tracy, Saint-Joseph, Sainte-Anne and Saint-Pierre as well as the Pierreville, Yamaska, Nicolet and Baie-du Fèbvre area. Then there is the very dynamic area of Bécancour extending 150 kilometres long and 30 kilometres wide along the Richelieu. It has greatly benefitted from the spinoffs of the policies developed by this government and announced in the Budget speech. My constituents applaud the moderation shown by the Government in the delivery of its annual message and in reminding us of its successful results which had very substantial and visible effects in the constituency of Richelieu.

For example, with respect to grants received, whether given to communities, social programs or to non-profit organizations, never has a Government so well favoured some organizations while being so generous to all of them through job-creation programs or direct grants from the Secretary of State. As for the Sorel area, some $5 million have been granted for the restoration of the Sorel harbour and a supplementary request is now before the Treasury Board to allow 76 workers to remain in Sorel rather than having to move in the Quebec or Montréal areas. The matter had been dragging on for seven years.

I could also mention the many investments made for senior citizens or underprivileged individuals, especially the Coopérative Saint-Jean-Baptiste which has been granted a special amount to solve its problems with tumble-down dwellings while a sum of $10 million is to be invested to provide acccommodation for senior citizens. I will also announce in the near future, 15 days at the latest, in the area of Sainte-Monique and in co-operation with the Quebec Government the investment of over a quarter million dollars which will be earmarked for the same purpose.

Let me also mention financing made available through the Laprade Fund, that two million dollars special fund drawn from the main programm that was announced just three months ago. The nine member committee of that riding, responsible for the administration of that fund, has already found ways to support, through grants, loans, investments or participation in the capital stock, at least 16 organizations or companies which had filed applications, and we will be meeting next week or the week after to consider yet another fifteen applications. That is one action among others taken by this Governement in the interests of the riding of Richelieu.

I could mention also those new industries that have been set up in Bécancour, as Norks Hydro, or in the area of Tracy, where the metal beams company or the iron and titanium plant underwent expansion of their operations which have created hundreds and hundreds of jobs. Of all Canadian ridings, the riding of Richelieu may be the one where there has been more permanent jobs created during the past three years. Yet that riding had been almost forgotten by the previous Government.

Atlas Steel, les Aciers Atlas, a very important company in my region, was granted a contract of $10 million by the Royal Canadian Mint this year. It is its first investment accounting already for close to 10 per cent increase of its turnover, an investment that provides some 500 or 600 hundred people with permanent work and, possibly some more jobs in the future.

After hearing the previous speaker talk about the textile industry and about the risks of free trade for Quebec, let me point to the case of Soreltex, a textile company which recently expanded into the United States, which hired about 100 people in the last year and a half and which is about to hire some 60 new employees for a total of over 400 jobs. That is another accomplishment partly due to a $500,000 grant from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

There is also the first soy micronization plant which set up shop in the fine area of Saint-Robert, in Quebec. Again, the federal government gave a major grant according to the policies announced in last year's Budget. This Budget confirms the government's will to go ahead with those projects in order to create not temporary jobs, as was the case under the previous government, but permanent jobs.

Let's talk about the huge expansion of the fire engine company in Pierreville, which employs almost 300 people as opposed to less than 100 when this government came to power.

Let's talk about the expansion of small business in the Baie du Febvre area, in the Yamaska area, in Saint-Jean-Baptiste-de-Nicolet, in Saint-Grégoire, in Sainte-Gertrude, in Gentilly, in Sainte-Victoire and in Nicolet-Sud. All those regions in my constituency greatly benefit from this government's objectives as announced each year by the Minister of Finance since 1984.

Let's talk about the construction of an industrial motel in the Nicolet area. It will also be announced shortly that work will start on the first plant of an industrial park in Tracy. That is something that the people of that region have been asking for at least 10 years. Within a few months, the first major industry to locate in the industrial park will be announced, to be followed by three smaller industries, which will finally mean a small business industry in the region. For the first time, we have seen a manufacturing industry locate in the Sorel-Tracy region, and this is not a processing plant of the plate-shop type, but a plant which produces finished products, namely the Maxtemp plant. Today, after less than a year, it provides nearly 30 jobs and its turnover will exceed $10 million this year, and both of these figures could triple within a few years.

There have also been total investments of over $500 million in the Becancour Park since the Conservative Party came into office with very well-paid permanent jobs, and we should not forget the new employment assistance programs which the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has implemented and which emphasize training, in addition to the employment subsidy. In my riding, 68 per cent of jobs created under these programs have become permanent. These programs have given us permanent jobs instead of creating jobs which simply lead back to unemployment insurance.

Once more, the Government has been very dynamic and its economic policies have had practical results in my region.

I could go on about my own riding. More jobs will be created. Six industries are about to receive a positive answer from the federal Government to locate in the Sorel-Tracy region. There are also other investments, for instance in the Religion Museum in the Nicolet region, for which the federal Government has just allocated $1.2 million, which will create about 30 permanent jobs, and this does not include the indirect fall-out resulting from all the people who visit a nationally renowned museum such as the Nicolet Religion Museum will become.

Moreover, next week, we shall hear some very good news about tourism in the Nicolet region, and the Becancour area is about to submit very important projects under the Laprade Fund, which projects will naturally receive careful consideration both from myself and from the Government of which I am proud to be a member.

In addition, there will be a major expansion project and the development of a new technology for cheese production, which should represent millions of dollars in investments.

Let us not forget either the Saint-Pierre-de-Sorel and Sainte-Anne region, where there will also be very important projects. These are the results of the policies of a Government which recognizes that the only way to develop a constituency, a province or a country is to create permanent jobs and to provide assistance and co-operation to the private sector, without neglecting economic organizations either in the tourist industry or through key businesses and community development programs, which are certainly proving useful in my riding. My whole riding now qualifies for community development programs or key companies, which makes it easy for young entrepreneurs to start in business, without having to go through the whole bureaucratic ladder to get a small subsidy.

I realize, Madam Speaker, that I have only one minute left to praise this Budget speech and particularly its fallout for my riding and for the beautiful area in central Quebec I have the honour to represent. In conclusion, I would like to express the wish that my constituents do take advantage of this economic policy set up by the Government to assist the industry and I would like to assure them in particular that I will do everything in my power to assist them with all the cases they would like to refer to me. For the past three years, I have served them with concern, passion and dedication, and I will continue to do so, because I am very proud to represent my riding of Richelieu, which I consider as one of the most beautiful ridings in the province of Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Vincent: If I may, Madam Speaker, I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) for his excellent speech, and more particularly for the outstanding work he has been doing in his riding over the past three years. In my opinion, he has highlighted the work carried out in his riding, and the significance of the Conservative Government as well as of this and others Budgets. First I would ask him whether he can see a direct link between last week's Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and earlier Budgets in terms of the evolution of businesses in his riding. He also mentioned the Laprade fund. How did people in his riding react to the announcement concerning the Laprade fund, especially in light of the fact that certain cases have already been settled? I happen to know that some companies in his riding got sizeable financial contributions from the Laprade fund. I should like to know how he feels about that and what his constituents have to say in this respect.

Mr. Plamondon: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague from Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) for his kind words, and I want to return the compliment. The dedication and energy displayed, not just in his riding but throughout Central Quebec, show that things have really changed since 1984, compared to what we had come to expect from the silent majority that preceded us here in the House of Commons.

To get back to his question, it was about the Laprade Fund. We announced that the Laprade Fund would be reactivitated with a new set of criteria. Before, it was more or less a Member's discretionary fund which he could use to subsidize in his riding what had to be non-profit organizations. He could subsidize these directly, and often did so without first requesting a feasibility study. Now, however, the new criteria that were announced by the Minister, the Hon. Member for Berthier—Maskinongé—Lanaudière (Mr. de Cotret) in Louiseville, have been a great incentive for businessmen in the riding to submit projects. These are major projects, by the way. For the Laprade Fund, projects must be worth $500,000 or more. The projects must create permanent jobs, and since the announcement a year ago that the Laprade Fund would be reactivated with very specific acceptance criteria, I have had at least ten proposals that are either being analyzed or are about to be announced. At least three or four of these have already been announced, and they would not have materialized without the Laprade Fund. And consider that originally, the Laprade Fund could only be used for non-profit organizations—not for the private sector and not for municipalities!

If we want permanent jobs, doesn't it make sense to look to the private sector and our municipalities, to major projects like establishing museums or other initiatives? That is what the Laprade Fund did for the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières, and there was a positive impact, not just on the Hon. Member's riding and my own, but on all ridings in the region, and it was greatly appreciated by the private sector. Earlier, the Hon. Member wondered whether previous budgets had had an impact, and whether this one was pointing us in the same direction. Yes indeed. When the first budgets were brought down . . . The Government's initial economic proposals were announced a few months after the 1984 election, and the impact was already being felt in the riding of Richelieu at the time. This was reflected in the creation of new jobs, a drop in the unemployment rate, new investment, exports and new construction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I want to make it clear from the start of this speech that the Government has had its successes. I am interested to see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is present. The Government has had its successes in cleaning up a situation in which jobs were provided through the Department of Employment on a short term ad hoc basis which did very little good for the people in terms of placing them in positions where they could have longer term jobs for the future.

There have been successes in some areas of foreign policy. For instance, the Government's policy on Central America, although it might not be quite as outspoken as I would wish it to be, has been very much on the right side in a difficult situation.

There are many who would say that the Meech Lake Accord is very much an area of success.

I also have to say, especially with respect to economic policy, that the Government has had its failures. As I see it, its failures have come especially in industrial policy. There have been three Ministers in the space of 3.5 years, one who has been judged to have been involved in 14 conflicts of interest by Judge Parker, another who has been dismissed from the Cabinet, and a third who is now in front of us. Those three Ministers are perhaps part of the reason that we have not had an industrial policy from the Government as part of its broad economic policy which has been effective.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that it would be appropriate if the Hon. Member is making an accusation that he be specific.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair was listening very carefully to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and wondering at what point he could make some relation to the subject which is being studied today while making accusations or allegations. I am sure that the Hon. Member will want to be very careful when he is discussing the subject at hand. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: I am not here to discuss the activities of the past Minister of industry, the Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens)—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair thinks that, if the Hon. Member is not here to discuss the activities of other Members, then he should not do so.

Mr. Langdon: I appreciate that, Madam Speaker, but one of the points I am making, which is very important with respect to what I see as a profound failure of this Government in its industrial policy in terms of consistency and direction, is that it has had three Ministers in the space of three and a half years. We all know in the House that that is the result of certain events which took place affecting one of those Ministers of Regional Industrial Expansion. As I say, that is not the subject of my speech. The subject of my speech is the failure of industrial policy of the Government.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is seeking to do, as Anthony did, through omittendo what his Party has failed to do through innuendo.

Mr. Langdon: I must say, with due respect to the Member, that this is absolute nonsense. I am simply reporting what has taken place, and what everyone in the House knows has taken place, which has created the situation where we have had three Ministers of Regional Industrial Expansion. My point is that the takeovers which have taken place within the Ministry have been major contributors to its failure to give us a consistent industrial policy.

That failure is demonstrated, for example, in the fact that the previous Minister, testifying before the international trade committee last year, told us that within two months to three months we would have before us a new automotive strategy. We have still to see such a strategy, approximately 10 months after that statement. We have seen absolutely no statements of broad strategy in respect of the critical need in the country to produce much more of the machinery that we use. We have seen no policy to get the most out of foreign investment. As a matter of fact, we have seen important and dangerous retreats in respect of that goal. We have seen no policy whatsoever with regard to the lay-offs that have hit many workers across the country. Many of them are older workers who have been hit by shut-downs, as a consequence, and have not been able to find alternate jobs.

Despite the statements of the previous Minister of Labour, no policies in respect of industrial adjustment have been put forward by the Government. The consequences are to be found in the Black & Decker plant in Barrie, which shut down in 1984, the Trenton Car Works in Nova Scotia, which was shut down for much of the Government's period in office, as well as apparell manufacturing plants in downtown Toronto which have been shut down, to the Gulf refinery in Montreal, which was shut down, and the pressures which exist on smaller steel companies in the West. We have seen no policy which has given any direction whatsoever. We have seen no sense of a broad strategy or of a game plan with regard to the manufacturing sector.

Referring to the Province of Ontario alone, in the past year there have been, in terms of either announced shut-downs or significant lay-offs, over 100 such occurrences affecting over 14,000 workers, according to data which come from the Ministry of Industry in Ontario.

In this set of failures there have been some real horror stories. There has been the case of Lapp Insulators where we in Hamilton appealed to the Minister to permit a workers' co-operative to buy out the company. He refused, and the consequence a few short months later was that an American took it over and shut it down. We have seen horror stories like that one which affected Goodyear workers in Toronto, 1,400 of whom hit the bricks because of a lack of strategy in the automotive sector, and 1,300 people who have now lost their jobs at Firestone in Hamilton for much the same reason.

We have seen the case of White Farm Machinery in Brantford, where a Canadian entrepreneur had taken the plant to a point where it was moving well but needed some assistance from the Government. The Government said "no", and the company was put under as a direct result of the Government's lack of direction and lack of action in the industrial area.

This has been especially evident in the area from which I come. The constituency of Essex—Windsor has seen an accelerating number of such shut-downs, demonstrating this lack of effectiveness and this lack of direction in industrial policy. We have seen the International Tool Limited case that has cost 185 workers their jobs, without a single word of explanation to the community about why that plant which had been profitable up to that stage should have simply shut down at the very start of a strike and at a point at which it had received all sorts of grants and assistance from the Government.

We could talk about the case of Cross Lasalle in the Windsor area, a small plant which was taken over by an American plant and shut down very shortly afterwards. We could talk about the case of Sheller Globe, again a profitable plant taken over by an American company which was shut down and cost 205 workers their jobs. We could talk about Dominion Forge, another plant which at this stage is in the process of shutting down. We could talk about lay-offs which are hitting, for instance, Kelsey Hayes, costing 200 workers their jobs at this point; the General Motors transmission plant in Windsor, costing over 300 workers their positions; and the lay-offs at Central Stamping that I visited this past week which is costing 30 workers their jobs.

Part of the reason for this is in the failure of the Government to define and set out an automotive strategy. I think part of it also comes from the preparation of various companies for the trade deal coming into effect. However, I think a big part of what is taking place is a consequence of the complete absence of policy on the part of the Government. It is almost as if the Government set out to devastate the heart of manufacturing in Canada.

THE ARMENIANS

MEMBER'S SUPPORT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the present situation of ethnic minorities in the Soviet Union is worrisome. The Armenian, Lithuanian, Ukrainian, Jewish,

German, Moslem and other cultural communities continue to feel as though they are on the fringe of the Russian majority, which accounts for only 51 per cent of the Soviet people.

Yesterday's New York Times reported demonstrations and strikes in the independent region of Nagorno-Karabakh: most resident of that region—80 per cent—are of Armenian descent and are making official representations to Moscow with a view to being linked with Armenia.

Mr. Speaker, international press correspondents also report that Armenian representatives are to meet with Secretary General Gorbatchev to explain their situation and grievances, and hope they will be given a hearing.

At the same time, yesterday more than 100,000 people gathered in Erevan, the capital of the Soviet Republic of Armenia, seeking restitution to Armenia of that independent region which was annexed to Azerbaidjan during the 1920s under the Stalin administration.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo the claims of Armenian people in the Soviet Union. I praise them for their courage and tenacity, and I express the wish that a fair and equitable solution be found.

LITHUANIA—INDEPENDENCE CELEBRATION—INTERRUPTION BY SOVIET MILITIA

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, on February 16, 1988, Soviet occupied Lithuania celebrated the seventieth anniversary of the restoration of its independence.

This peaceful religious celebration was attended by over 15,000 Lithuanians during the evening of the sixteenth. Unfortunately, we here in the West were unable to see the results of the celebration because the press had been shuffled out of the territory during the afternoon.

This peaceful, nationalistic celebration was interrupted by a Soviet militia of over 10,000 men, many of them coming from other parts of the Soviet Union. These men brutally beat the celebrants and hospitalized over 160 Lithuanians. Leaders and clergy of the Lithuanians were put under house arrest for three days with no contact with the outside world. There was even one instance in which a Lithuanian celebrant was beaten, had his head shaved, and was held prisoner for three days without food. Certainly this type of dehumanization is not just. Mr. Gorbachev's glasnost was not implemented in this situation. Why was a peaceful demonstration broken up with such brutality in a country that claims glasnost as its new policy?

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to pressure the Soviet Government and Mr. Gorbachev to live up to their policy of glasnost and allow such peaceful demonstrations in the future. We all want peace, but not without freedom.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, once again Newfoundlanders are hearing that the federal and provincial Tory Governments are trying to close down the Newfoundland Railway.

One of the commitments when Newfoundland joined Confederation in 1949 was the maintenance of a rail link across the province. Until recently, Premier Peckford stood behind preserving that link. Today we have both the Premier and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) trying to cut a deal which will do away with this constitutional arrangement.

It is absolutely essential that, before any decision is made, Newfoundlanders must see the studies upon which any decision is to be taken. What will happen to the 650 employees and the communities whose livelihood depends on the railway? Before any decision is taken, a definite special economic development program for any communities adversely affected must be put in place. If one transportation system is to traded for another, there must be a perpetual commitment to the maintenance of that system.

It is time for both the federal and provincial Tories to be open and honest with Newfoundlanders and tell them what plans they have for the railway.

ABORTION

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Advocates for Human Life, an association of lawyers across Canada, is pressing for legislation to provide protection for Canada's unborn children from abortion. They have added their weight to this crusade, as have the Knights of Columbus representing over 600,000 families, the Catholic Women's League of Canada with 128,000 members, Physicians for Life whose numbers are increasing daily, an increasing number of nurses, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops plus all pro life groups, as well as hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens.

Never in the history of Canada have we seen such a large number of Canadians working together to stop the killing of unborn human beings. Thursday, January 28, 1988, will go down in history as Black Thursday, a day on which the Supreme Court sentenced countless unborn babies to death by abortion. This decision must be overturned. One does not solve social problems by creating innocent victims of a problem, our unborn children.

Therefore, I urge the Government to work in greater haste to enact legislation that will safeguard the life, liberty, and sanctity of every human person, including unborn children.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELIVERY STANDARDS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, under its five-year corporate plan, Canada Post has lowered its delivery standards, unable as it was to meet the previous ones. A postal services independant study has shown that one out of five letters is still not delivered on schedule, despite the lower standards. Mr. Speaker, Canadians deserve a better service.

As of today, the Minister and Canada Post Corporation have still not announced the measures they intend to take in order to ensure that the minimum standards they have already lowered will be met.

• (1405)

The climate in the Canada Post workplace is explosive. Why does the Minister encourage the confrontational style Canada Post adopted vis-à-vis its employees? How can the mail be delivered on time if those who move it are not motivated but rather frustrated?

SOUTH KOREA—PLIGHT OF PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I hope I speak for all Members of Parliament in supporting Amnesty International's call on the new President of South Korea, inaugurated yesterday, to demonstrate his declared commitment to human rights by releasing all prisoners of conscience and by commuting all pending death sentences for so-called anti-state activities.

The continued detention of South Koreans for the peaceful exercise of their rights of freedom of expression and association belies the membership which South Korea would obviously like to claim as part of the democratic world. The fact is that South Korea's so-called economic miracle, often lauded by right-wing Canadians, has been bought at the price of much political oppression. A rising GNP accompanied by rising rates of detention and suppression of dissent is not progress.

I call on the new president, Roh Tae-woo, to usher in a new era and declare the amnesty called for by Amnesty International.

OBITUARY TRIBUTE TO QUÉBEC FEDERATION OF LABOUR PERMANENT DELEGATES

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow and sadness that we learned last Tuesday that four high-ranking members of QFL Construction were killed while on duty.

They are: Guy Perreault, Director General, QFL Construction; Jean-Claude Sureau, Director, Association nationale des travailleurs en tuyauterie; Claude Proteau, Assistant Director General, Fédération interprovinciale des ouvriers en électricité; and Gaétan Boucher, union representative, Association nationale des mécaniciens industriels.

On behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), and all the members of the Quebec Caucus, I would like to offer my deepest sympathies to all QFL members, who have lost valuable colleagues, and to the family and friends, so sorely tried.

I had the opportunity to work with some of these men, but I am well aware of the dedication of all of them to the cause of Canadian workers.

I would like also, on behalf of the Government, to offer our condolences to the friends and relatives of the pilot, Jean Verrière, and the copilot, Gary Gadouas.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SYDNEY TAR PONDS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on November 7, 1986, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), along with members of the Nova Scotia Government, announced a clean-up agreement for the Sydney tar ponds. The Minister said:

> The tar ponds are an environmental menace to the health of the Sydney residents.

Yet the Government continues to drag its collective feet on this very important project.

The Minister also said at that time that the workers of the coke ovens who would be losing their jobs would be offered assistance by the federal Government in preparing for and obtaining new employment. Coke oven employees have already lost their jobs but nothing has been put in place.

Background information on that meeting of November 7 indicated that the federal Government said a CEIC industrial adjustment service agreement "may also be negotiated to assist those displaced workers presently employed at the Sysco coke ovens in preparing for and endeavouring to obtain alternate employment". Where is this assistance and where is this agreement? Why can the people of Sydney not rely on the promises of the Government?

ESTONIA—ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago on February 24, 1918, Estonia became a free and independent nation. The Soviet Union brought an end to that freedom in 1940 when Estonia and other Baltic states were forcibly annexed to the U.S.S.R. Estonia remains occupied by Soviet troops to this day.

• (1410)

Canada's position on the illegal occupation of the Baltic nations is clearly stated in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) message to the Estonian community marking this seventieth anniversary of Estonian independence, and I quote:

> Canada has never recognized in law this act by the U.S.S.R., nor have we any intention of doing so now.

The Estonian community in Canada invite all freedom-loving Canadians to join with them in commemorating this spirit of independence and in demonstrating their desire for liberty and justice in their homeland.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to use all available measures to maintain pressure on the Soviet Union until its illegal occupation of Estonia is ended and that country once again takes her rightful place among the free and independent nations of the world.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have again shown little concern for Canada's tourism industry. In its last Budget the Government again increased the price of gasoline by one-cent a litre. Add this to the two-cent a litre hike in the excise tax announced in September, 1985, the one-cent a litre increase in January, 1987, and the one-cent a litre hike announced in February, 1987.

These increases, coupled with a 3 per cent hike in the sales tax since 1984, have made gasoline prices in Canada very uncompetitive with our largest tourism customer, the United States. Today the price of gasoline in Canada is over 50 per cent higher than in the U.S. This difference will certainly have a negative effect on the number of American visitors to Canada.

The ever-widening gap in the price of gasoline has prompted the Canadian Automobile Association to state that transportation related industries in Canada will be unable to compete with their American counterparts as we enter a free trade era.

For many regions in the country, tourism is one of the few industries with real growth potential. Tourism has enormous potential for job creation. Why is the Conservative Government attempting to choke off this industry?

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF ATHLETES FROM MISSION—PORT MOODY APPLAUDED

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on February 13, Mission—Port Moody sent three athletes to the Olympic Games in Calgary. It is with pride that I rise in this House today to congratulate Tracy Wilson and Rob McCall on winning the Bronze Medal for Canada in the pairs ice dance competition. I wish to note that Tracy Wilson is originally from Port Moody, British Columbia, where she spent many years developing the skills and abilities which have served her so well.

In addition, we were able to watch Eden Donatelli capture Canada's second Silver Medal, in the 500-metre short track speed skating competition last night. Eden is from Mission, British Columbia. As well, Kathy Gordon, from Mission, British Columbia, is preparing to compete in the 5,000-metre speed skating event.

Can you imagine, two medal winners and such a great contribution to the Olympics from Mission—Port Moody, British Columbia? Let this House and all Canadians congratulate Mission—Port Moody and these great Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I just want to say to the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) that, probably as well as anyone here, I can join with him in his congratulations.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Public Service employees who are members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada are asking their Members of Parliament why there has been no progress in their contract negotiations. The PSAC has proposed that Treasury Board agree to reduce 31 sets of negotiations to seven to streamline the bargaining talks. Treasury Board has refused, despite savings to the taxpayers which the PSAC estimates at $1.5 million. It is difficult to see why the Government, which claims to be cost conscious, can turn its back on this kind of saving.

Furthermore, the Canada Labour Relations Board recently decided to amalgamate 28 bargaining units at Canada Post into four to gain greater bargaining efficiency. Yet the Government ignores that precedent in its own negotiations.

Why is the Government so deaf to good advice? Because it claims there will be more strikes if bargaining units are consolidated. Yet the Government should know that 95 per cent of negotiations with that union have resulted in negotiated settlements. Why is the Government afraid of efficient public service bargaining? Why does it not get on with the job and deal with the union fairly?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGATIONS MADE AGAINST FORMER MINISTER—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said yesterday that the media and the Opposition had, to use his words, "lynched, drawn and quartered" his former Minister "with no evidence".

Is it not true that on January 18, 1987, even before a single question had been asked by the Opposition the Prime Minister himself said that the former Minister was fired because of, and I use the Prime Minister's words, "certain facts related to property transactions linked to the Oerlikon plant"?

Is it not also true that the allegations against the former Minister were made, not by the Opposition but by the Prime Minister's own senior advisers? Is it not also true that the Prime Minister himself called in the Mounties and then called—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I certainly hesitate to—

Mr. Shields: That's a Sheila Copps question.

Mr. Speaker: I ask Members on the government side please to be quiet. This is not an easy issue and I am going to try to deal with it as I hope all Members would have me do. I very much hesitate to interrupt the right hon. gentleman but I do want to keep something in mind in this place.

The former Minister who is being discussed has just been acquitted of all of the charges by a jury of this country. That fact does not make it improper to ask some questions about the administration of the Government or some other thing.

I know that the right hon. gentleman will bear with me in this because I do not mean this as an admonishment. However, if there are to be questions on this issue I want them to be carefully phrased and I want them to be directed to the administration of the Government, and especially to matters upon which the Government has a responsibility to answer. However, I do not want any suggestion that anybody in this place who has been acquitted by a jury in this country is to be retried here. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, both myself and the Member for Oshawa accepted the verdict of the jury completely. What we are complaining about today before Your Honour is the Prime Minister's attempt to rewrite history.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will confine my questions strictly to the Prime Minister's statements.

Again to the Deputy Prime Minister, is it not true that the Prime Minister then called a press conference—

Mr. McDermid: Is that all you have got going for yourself, Turner?

Mr. Riis: It's not a laughing matter.

Mr. McDermid: He hasn't asked a question on the economy in months.

Mr. Broadbent: When you're back on this side you can ask the questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has clearly indicated that he has accepted the intervention of the Chair in this matter and he has made it clear that he is proceeding subject to the caution that I have expressed. I have given the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition the floor. The Right Hon. Leader is entitled to ask the question and he is entitled to the courtesy of all Hon. Members to give him a chance to ask it. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are not going to be dissuaded from pursuing this particular issue with the Deputy Prime Minister.

Is it not true that in that press conference the Prime Minister announced that the former Minister was under RCMP investigation and is it not true that the Prime Minister fired the Minister for reasons of, what he called at that press conference, public morality? Is it not true that the Prime Minister then told Parliament on the following day, January 19, and I quote from Hansard, that the issue is "an alleged serious matter that involves morals, perhaps public ethics, criminal law and so on"?

Why does the Prime Minister attempt to shoot the messenger? And why does the Prime Minister blame the media and the Opposition for statements he made over that weekend about his former Minister?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think what is important in this issue is the importance of the spirit of the code being upheld, and by the actions of the Prime Minister the spirit of the code was indeed upheld.

ALLEGATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister thinks the former Minister of State (Transport) was the victim of a witch hunt, he should look at his own record. When the Prime Minister fired the former Minister and called in the RCMP a year ago, he did not do so on the basis of allegations by the Opposition or the media but on the basis of what he called the facts. He would now have us believe that last year's facts are today's figment of the imagination of the media and the Opposition. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House about any allegations or criminal behaviour made either by the press or the Opposition, here in the House or outside? Name them. Or will the Deputy Prime Minister tell his Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, to take his own medicine instead of preaching to others?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister pointed out at that time, and I do not have the precise words he used, but I think it was to the effect that information had been drawn to his attention that could provide the basis of a potential conflict of interest, and it was on that basis that the action was taken. I am surprised that the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is taking such offence at the actions that were taken by the Prime Minister. I think his actions are a clear indication that the code was not only applied, but specific action, swift action, was taken by the Prime Minister. He should be applauding that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are not complaining about the action of the Prime Minister in referring this matter to the police, or any of the other citations I have made today. We are complaining that the Prime Minister attempted yesterday to rewrite history and lay the blame for the whole issue on the media and the Opposition in this House of Commons. That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will say to Members opposite that the issue would not have arisen in this House had the Prime Minister not made those statements yesterday. That is the truth of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me—

Mr. McDermid: The rat pack has a new leader.

Mr. Gauthier: You are nervous over there.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

EXEMPTIONS FROM PROPOSED CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me turn to the legislation which deals with this sort of matter, the new conflict of interest legislation tabled yesterday by the Prime Minister. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why any regulations under the new ethics commission must first be approved by Cabinet, the very people who caused this mess in the first place?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Look around you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why Dalton Camp, the Principal Secretary of the Prime Minister, the Chief of Staff of the Prime Minister, and political staff, are not going to be covered by these new rules as they are covered by the old rules? Why are the backroom boys in the Prime Minister's office going to be exempt from the law?

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister further to explain why this law includes nothing about government contracts, the letting of government contracts, nothing about government advertising, nothing about government lobbying, and nothing about the patronage practised by the Conservative Party since it came into power?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I remind the Hon. Member that the lobbying Bill is before Parliament at the present time. Is the Leader of the Opposition suggesting in the preamble to his question that the Opposition has not hurled unfounded allegations and accusations across the floor of the House? If he is suggesting that, then he has not been paying attention, he has not been listening, or he has a very, very short memory. That has been common practice in this session of Parliament, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: That is not true.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Back that up.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I also find it very strange that while the Leader of the Opposition condemns the legislation that was tabled yesterday he suggested that he would only refine and strengthen the conflict of interest guidelines. We have legislated them.

PROVISIONS GOVERNING TRUSTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government has not legislated anything, it has introduced a Bill. It is a Bill like the lobbying Bill which can sit on a shelf forever.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this question. Why does the conflict of interest Bill contain a step backward on the subject of trusts? Pursuant to Clause 10(2) of the Bill a trustee can still be a spouse or riding president, as has happened and which is the case under the present guidelines of the Government, whereas under the Ontario Bill a trust must be at arm's length and trustees must be individuals or corporations at arm's length from a Minister. Why is there a step backward here?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the Hon. Member's question that Members opposite would be prepared to proceed with this Bill in short order. If we can get an agreement from them, I am sure that that could be negotiated. Let them put their money where their mouth is.

With regard to the provision to which the Hon. Member refers, if he will read the Bill carefully he will find that those arrangements can only be made with the express consent and permission of the Commission.

DISCLOSURE OF ASSETS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the regulations approved by Cabinet why should there be a discretion to allow non-arm's length trustees? What possible justification can there be for that?

Why is disclosure of assets not required, as Mr. Justice Parker who investigated the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion recommended, and as Ontario has already set out in its legislation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the terms and reference of any trust arrangement could only be made with the concurrence, the recommendation and approval of the independent Commission.

With regard to disclosure it is clear that everything must be disclosed to the Commission. The Commission makes that decision.

If the Hon. Member who has just asked the question—a great defender of civil liberties—would look at Clause 31 he would find that the Commission would take into account the necessity of ensuring that there is a balance, a balance between the public interest with respect to disclosure and the interest with respect to reasonable privacy for the Member involved. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would take exception to that.

SALE OF SHARES TO FOREIGNERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources failed to give a clear answer, both in and outside the House, to questions about the future of Petro-Canada. Canadians will not stand for privatizing Petro-Canada, nor will they stand for selling shares to foreign nationals. Could the Deputy Prime Minister give Canadians the assurance that the Canadian Government does not intend to sell shares in Petro-Canada to foreign nationals?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has stated on a number of occasions that Petro-Canada would only be privatized if it was considered in the best possible interests of the national public. There has been no decision taken with respect to the privatization of Petro-Canada. If there is such a decision it will be announced in due course.

• (1430)

POSITION OF MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with respect I would like to say to the Deputy Prime Minister that the Government had better get its act together. According to a report that was in the press yesterday, which was not denied by the Minister of Energy, he stated in an interview that future expansion of Petro-Canada was going to be conducted in the form of selling shares. If that is not privatization I do not know what is.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister now, is he saying to the House that the Government has not taken a decision to sell shares of Petro-Canada to the public? If so, what was the Minister of Energy talking about?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. I indicated earlier that there has not been a decision made with respect to this.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I accept what the Deputy Prime Minister is saying as a correction of what the Minister of Energy had publicly stated before.

The Deputy Prime Minister is shaking his head. That is the way that I understood it. If he wishes to clarify that I would appreciate it, and I am sure that Members of the House would.

As I understand it, the Minister did not deny it outside the House. Yesterday he was quoted in the press as stating they were going to sell shares. The Deputy Prime Minister states that that is not the case.

If the Government has not yet taken that decision, will the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister for International Trade confirm that, according to a clause in the proposed trade agreement with the United States, if the Government of Canada does not announce at the outset that any such shares would be restricted to Canadians, it will be impossible to do so later on?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for privatization I can assure the House that this issue was taken into account in the free trade agreement negotiations. Our right to privatize and hold shares in the name of Canadians, or restrict ownership to Canadians, is left intact.

Mr. Broadbent: That's not what your official said this morning.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ACQUIRED RIGHTS OF SASKATCHEWAN FRANCOPHONES—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN TRANSLATING LAWS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today the Supreme Court, in an historic decision, confirmed the vested rights of French-speaking Canadians living in Saskatchewan, rights they have had since 1905. I just want to read one sentence from today's decision:

> The statutes of Saskatchewan must, by virtue of the province's constituent statute, the Saskatchewan Act, be enacted, printed and published in English and French. Since the statutes of Saskatchewan were not enacted in the manner and form required by its constituent statute, it follows that they are invalid.

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Considering the precedents set both in Manitoba and New Brunswick, and considering that the federal Government has always supported the provinces in their continuing efforts to make their legislative and judicial services bilingual, is the federal Government prepared to offer the Province of Saskatchewan today—since there is a matter of urgency in this case—all the human and financial resources it needs to help translate all statutes adopted by Saskatchewan in English only since 1905?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this was not a case in which the Government of Canada intervened because it dealt with provincial matters or questions of provincial jurisdiction only.

Naturally, we are interested in and support the concept of bilingualism across Canada. If Saskatchewan wants us to assist, we certainly would co-operate in any way possible to see that it carries out the judgment. Of course Saskatchewan will have to decide on its own course of action.

TRANSLATION OF SASKATCHEWAN STATUTES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Justice. Given the fact that the Province of Saskatchewan has adopted the Meech Lake resolution, and was one of the first provinces in the country to do so; given that the House has also adopted that resolution; given the spirit of that resolution that states in no uncertain terms that the federal Government and the provinces will protect minority rights, is the Government ready at this time to give its guarantee that it will do all in its power to assist Saskatchewan to comply very generously with this requirement of the Supreme Court of Canada, that is, to translate all the laws of the Province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada does not have to do anything with respect to the Government of a province complying with what the Supreme Court of Canada states is the law.

We can expect that the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan will comply with this decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, just as we would comply with any decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. If they need any assistance from us, the Prime Minister's attitude and policy are well known, and I am sure we will attempt to co-operate.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS AGAINST BLACKS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The South African Government has again demonstrated its pathologically vicious resistance to any democratic participation by blacks in that country.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister indicate to the House what action the Government now plans to take, in addition to rhetoric, in response to this situation which has been precipitated in South Africa and which indicates the impossibility of a peaceful basis for negotiated peace there?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe you are aware that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is ill, but I spoke to him today on this issue.

He has already been in touch with some of the Foreign Secretaries of the Commonwealth to determine an effective response to this move by South Africa. Of course Canada strongly condemns the new restrictions that the South African Government has put in place.

I think that the House can respect and acknowledge the outstanding efforts that have been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in dealing with this issue of apartheid.

REQUEST THAT CANADA IMPOSE TOTAL ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the entire policy of the Government has been premised on the possibility that there might exist, within the heart of the South African Government, the ability to deal with black people there. That is not going to happen now. The Prime Minister has indicated that he was going to impose complete diplomatic and economic sanctions on South Africa.

Will the Government not now call in the South African Ambassador and indicate to him our complete condemnation of the South African Government; recall the Canadian Ambassador to South Africa; and implement absolute economic sanctions against South Africa right now?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already expressed the view that the action taken by South Africa is an invitation to violence. He has worked with the Foreign Secretaries in the Commonwealth to deal with this in an effective manner. I would suggest that his actions in regard to the distaste that Canada feels for apartheid speak for themselves.

In terms of diplomatic representation and recalling our Ambassador, I would point out to the Hon. Member that Canada continues to support the opponents of apartheid. The best way to do that is to maintain our diplomatic relations with South Africa.

SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC LINKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister who is replacing the Secretary of State for External Affairs today. It is quite clear that meaningful dialogue leading to a non-racial representative Government is absolutely not in the cards for South Africa.

The Minister recently stated that he has Cabinet authorization in his pocket to impose further sanctions when necessary. Is it not the feeling of the Government of Canada that this time has arrived, that the suggestion made earlier by the Leader of the Opposition to cut all commercial and diplomatic links with South Africa should be adopted now? Why is it not being done?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already responded to that question. I pointed out that terminating our diplomatic links with South Africa is not, in our view, a very meaningful or effective step to take. We can do better to support our position against apartheid by maintaining those diplomatic links rather than by breaking them. I have already told the House that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has, from his sick-bed, called his colleagues in other Commonwealth countries and is discussing the very kinds of actions the Hon. Member raises.

We have worked in the past in step with our Commonwealth colleagues, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is following that pattern now.

I suggest that the House wait until he returns and is able to report on the results of his discussions.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that it was a statement made recently by the Prime Minister which said that if no progress was made, or if there was no chance of any progress, he would cut diplomatic relations. We on this side of the House have the feeling that this situation has existed for a long time. Maybe the Conservatives are slow to realize that they are going nowhere in their negotiations toward a non-racial representative Government in South Africa.

Therefore, again I ask the Minister: will she convey to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there is no more time for words, that actions are necessary? Unless the Government is ready to take a strong stand on this matter, it will be pure hypocrisy on its part.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have performed a very useful function in conveying to the House the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as a result of conversation with him this morning, the steps he is now taking, and the fact that he will be reporting on his deliberations with the Foreign Secretaries of the Commonwealth when he returns to the House. I think that is more useful than the kind of rhetoric we are hearing from the opposition benches.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

CONVICTED TERRORIST'S ARRANGEMENTS TO LEAVE COUNTRY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Solicitor General assured this House—and I am quoting from Hansard at page 13081—"CSIS was not involved in any way whatsoever with the travel arrangements or this particular case", referring to Mr. Mohammad's failed flight from Canada. Yet the media report that two CSIS agents came to the RCMP office at Pearson Airport within five minutes of Mr. Mohammad's arrival and had to be chased away by the RCMP; also that immediately after Mohammad's departure, all or nearly all the Canadian media were tipped off about his flight, and that British intelligence were likewise tipped off.

In the face of these reports does the Minister still maintain that CSIS was not in any way involved in this case, or does the Minister prefer to inquire further and report back to this House as to just what CSIS was doing in connection with this case?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from the Hon. Member, because I did inquire further as a result of those news reports.

I met this morning with the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP and also the Director of CSIS, and I can confirm to the House that I was advised by them that CSIS was not involved in the travel arrangements; second, that CSIS did nothing to contribute to the failure of those arrangements; and, third, that CSIS did not leak the news or anything to do with the travel arrangements to the media or anyone else.

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH ISRAELI SECRET SERVICE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary I would ask this question. It relates to The Ottawa Citizen report that about an hour after Mohammad's flight Radio Israel phoned to the office of Clayton Ruby, Mohammad's lawyer, to inquire about the departure.

Will the Minister tell this House whether CSIS, pursuant to the provisions of the CSIS Act, has any kind of agreement with Mossad, the Israeli Secret Service, for exchange of information of this kind?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that we do not disclose publicly what our security arrangements are—

Some Hon. Members: You don't have to.

Mr. Kelleher: —or what our agreements are with any country for the exchange of information, but whatever we do I can confirm to the House that the arrangements are in conformity with the mandate given to CSIS under the Act.

ESTONIA—RECOGNITION OF HONORARY CONSUL GENERAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is answering for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday marked the seventieth anniversary of the creation of a free Estonia. Although Estonia is now occupied by the Soviet Union, both the United States and Australia officially recognize the Honorary Consuls not only of Estonia but also of Latvia and Lithuania. Canada, on the other hand, has been thinking about the whole question since 1972.

Would the Minister advise the House why Canada does not recognize these Honorary Consuls General? Why has it taken some 16 years to think about it? Is it that we are slow learners, or is it that we are just lacking in courage?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think all Canadians can join with Estonian Canadians in celebrating the anniversary of independence in 1918, and I commend the Hon. Member for bringing forward this issue at this time.

In respect to the specific question he raises, I cannot add to the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the matter is under review, but I will bring it to his attention.

CONVICTED TERRORIST'S ATTEMPTED DEPARTURE—PRESENCE OF AGENTS AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Solicitor General and concerns the growing speculation that CSIS intentionally sabotaged the voluntary departure of Mr. Mohammad.

I would like to ask the Minister, pursuant to the question of the Hon. Member for Spadina, given that two CSIS agents were dispatched to the Toronto Airport and met with Mr. Mohammad and the two RCMP officers accompanying him before his departure, will the Minister come clean on this whole affair and explain the precise role played by CSIS after it found out about the plan by the Minister of Immigration to remove Mr. Mohammad voluntarily?

What precise follow-up by CSIS was undertaken? Was there a report to the Director, to the Minister? Did CSIS—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has put his question very directly, and I do not think the Hon. Minister would have any difficulty in knowing what he is asking for.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it does not come as any surprise to me that there were CSIS officials at the airport. The fact is that they have an office there in very close proximity to the RCMP office where Mr. Mohammad apparently was sequestered.

An Hon. Member: Did they talk talk to each other?

Mr. Kelleher: The CSIS officers did in fact have a discussion with some RCMP officers there, not at all, I may say, as depicted in the report this morning in The Globe and Mail, which I am advised is false.

I can confirm that as a result of my meeting this morning with the Deputy Commissioner and the Director of CSIS, nothing that CSIS has done in this matter has in any way contributed to the failure of the travel arrangements.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this Minister doesn't know what the hell is happening with his Department and would be better off running a—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member feels very strongly about this matter and with good reason, of course. The Hon. Member will put his question.

ADMITTANCE TO OTHER COUNTRIES OF INDIVIDUAL IN QUESTION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, let me try the Minister of Immigration with a supplementary question.

Since the entire deportation procedure with Mr. Mohammad is proving to be a very costly, colossal, embarrassing exercise, and given that at the end of this process a country willing to accept Mr. Mohammad must be found, could the Minister inform the House if the Canadian Government has taken the precaution and initiative of contacting foreign Governments in order to ascertain which countries may be willing to accept Mr. Mohammad, in the eventuality that a deportation order is upheld? If so, what has the response been to date? If not, does he not believe that he should do it now and avoid a costly nightmare at the end of this very lengthy and embarrassing exercise to all Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the deportation of someone like Mr. Mohammad is not a matter of money, but a matter of process, and I would remind the Hon. Member that we have been involved in this deportation process for one month now.

Mr. Mohammad asked our co-operation to be allowed to leave Canada by his own means, as he was entitled to do. However, he did not succeed. For the moment, all our energies must be focused on the deportation process. If and when there is a deportation order, we shall determine the best way to proceed.

Once again, in this case the Hon. Member is trying to put the cart before the horse.

POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. There seems to be a serious contradiction in what he said today and what the Minister of Energy said yesterday to the press. Yesterday the Minister of Energy said in terms of the question of the privatization of Petro-Canada:

> It's a question of timing. It's not a question of should we.

The Deputy Prime Minister indicated today that no decision has been made. The Minister of Energy said that it is not a question of whether the Government is going to privatize Petro-Canada but when the Government is going to privatize Petro-Canada.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now do the honourable thing and explain clearly whether he is the one we can believe on this issue, or is it the Minister of Energy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, you can believe both of us. If the Hon. Member took the time to review what was said in the House of Commons yesterday, as reported at page 13078 of Hansard he would find the Minister said:

> —the Cabinet has yet to make a decision at this time, the question of Petro-Canada is still being examined, both in my Department and in other government agencies.

Again, as reported at page 13079 the Minister said:

> —I would like to point out that the present Government will make a decision about privatizing Petro-Canada when it believes it is in the interests of Canada and Canadians to do so.

That is the same answer I gave earlier, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that the Minister of Energy the day previous to the quotes he was reading from Hansard indicated in Calgary that it was the Government's intention to privatize Petro-

Canada. He said outside the House yesterday that it was the Government's intention. It was just a matter of timing in terms of the announcement.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister come clean and be up front with the people of Canada and say, yes, the Government is going to privatize Petro-Canada, or it is not? Let the Government be up front about this matter.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the Hon. Member take the wax out of his ears? I said, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, that no decision has been taken. When it is in the public interest, if it is so deemed to be in the public interest to privatize Petro-Canada, then a decision will be made. When a decision is made, it will be announced.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

JOB CREATION IN MONTREAL EAST END—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I shall address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion went to Montreal to announce the East Montreal Recovery Program after nearly three years of studies and two reports. He said nothing to Montrealers about the closing of plants, the Old Port or the development of the Port of Montreal, and he said nothing to the thousands of older workers who have lost their jobs because of plant closings.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: How does the Conservative Government believe that it can solve the unemployment problems in East Montreal with a measly $7 million this year when the Quebec Government was willing to provide $106 million and the City of Montreal $90 million?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member could also add that the Quebec Government would have allocated these $106 million over a three year period and that this was not new money either.

How can we help East Montreal? First, I would like to remind the Liberal Party that, to my knowledge, the problem started in 1981 and that, during the three years between 1981 and 1984, the previous Government did not do very much about it.

If we look at the situation since 1984, we find that a great deal of progress has been made. As for us on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we want to try to develop East Montreal and we are providing the tools to do so, tools such as the tax reform, tools such as a healthier economic climate and a major tool such as the free trade agreement which the Liberal Party should support, as this would be beneficial to East Montreal.

IMPORTANCE OF HELPING METROPOLITAN PERIPHERAL AREAS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister fails to appreciate the problem of Montreal East. Given the thousands of idle workers, it goes without saying that the free trade agreement, which may very well signal further plant closures, is not the answer to their problem.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question pertaining to regional economic development generally. Yesterday the Minister went alone to Montreal, and he did not make any announcement supportive of the efforts being made by provincial and municipal authorities.

Does the Conservative Government intend to follow the same approach with respect to the neighbouring regions and set up programs which are totally divorced from the initiatives taken by the Government of Quebec or by municipal authorities, as was twice suggested by Quebec Ministers Marc-Yvan Côté and Gil Rémillard?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, should I really tell Liberal Party Members that they are hardly in a position to lecture us in connection with federal-provincial relations, particularly with the Government of Quebec?

If one looks at the situation, the Government's position is clear: the economic development strategy as it applies to Quebec will be the subject of forthcoming discussions between the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and his Quebec counterpart. If memory serves, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides recently complained about the relations between Ottawa and Quebec over the past three years; these relations are excellent and we will continue to work in co-operation with the City of Montreal.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member for Skeena asks questions, I would point out that his colleagues and others in the House are still waiting to ask questions. I would ask that from now until the end of Question Period the questions be brief and very much to the point. The Hon. Member.

UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

RESOLUTIONS AFFECTING ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. As he knows, the United Nations Human Rights Commission is today considering three matters of substantial importance to the aboriginal peoples of Canada: the designation of 1992 as the International Year of Indigenous Rights; the drafting of international standards on the treatment of indigenous peoples, and the appointment of a United Nations official to examine and report on treaties.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister rise today in the House and state unequivocally that Canada endorses those three principles?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, Canada is supportive of the important work of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in developing global standards on indigenous rights. Canada considers that the proposed treaty study, as currently drafted, will divert both attention and resources from the universal scope of WGIPs work. The proposed treaty study would focus on only a small number of countries—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Valcourt: Maybe the Liberals are not interested in the fate of our native people but they should at least be courteous enough to listen to the answer.

Canada's position is that we would prefer to have the proposal referred back to the WGIP for further consideration or for it to be broadened.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware, having listened to the Minister who has just responded, that these three principles will be set off for at least four years and that, combined with what we find in this week's Estimates with cuts to comprehensive claims, lands reserves and trust, economic development and self-government for aboriginal people in Canada, it is now abundantly clear that the assimilationist policies of this Conservative Government are the same ones that are found in the Nielsen Task Force report, the Buffalo Jump of the 1980s.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talks about the Estimates, perhaps he may want to explain to the natives and the people of Canada why he and his Party voted against some $29 million for additional expenditures relating to native people for economic and social development and Indian self-government.

Let him explain that to the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

WESTERN REGION—SENIOR MANAGEMENT JOBS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Last June 29 in the House I raised a question that was answered by the Deputy Prime Minister concerning the proposed plan of the CN to remove a number of senior administrative and management jobs from the western region. The reply of the Deputy Prime Minister at the time was to quote from a press release which said:

> "On the contrary, CN will maintain—and in some respects likely enhance—its regional presence, particularly in western Canada—

Today, the regional Vice President, Mr. Campbell, confirmed that 296 jobs in CN will be removed from Winnipeg and Edmonton. Once again we have a case of broken promises by the Government.

• (1500)

In light of the assurances given by his colleague, will the Minister of Transport be prepared to review the decision by CN and reject that decision which runs against both the assurances of the Government and the interests of maintaining a federal presence in western Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad. The hon. gentleman has not asked many questions on transportation and now he is just as wildly inaccurate in this area as he was in the other area. Usually he is fuming about free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: If the rest of you can talk on and on and on, why can't I?

Mr. Speaker: Of course the answer is because I might intervene. The Hon. Minister will please answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The position is that CN expects to reduce its administrative and management ranks by some 1,020 positions system-wide by mid-1988. It is using a special separation and early retirement package and is not filling vacant jobs. This is not a policy that just applies in western Canada, it applies right across the system.

CN is trying to scale back just about 10 per cent of its administrative and management staff. This corresponds with the fact that it has been downsizing generally so that it can get its productivity levels closer to the average of North American railways. It is an ongoing matter. It happened last year as well and it happened when the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power.

There is no plot against the western part of Canada. As a matter of fact most of CN's activity is centered in western Canada because that is where the business is today. That is where it will continue to make a great effort.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF RAILWAY'S PLAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on the Hon. Minister's last comment. If it is the case that 70 per cent of the volume of CN business is in western Canada, why will we be losing 300 jobs in the administrative and management branch? Why is the Minister not prepared to ask for a public review of the CN plan for cut-backs and reductions in order to live up to the kind of commitments made by his colleague back in June? I want an answer to why the Minister is picking on western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member has put his question, and given the hour, I really do not think that argument is called for.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is with great regret that the same economic conditions that apply to North American railways generally apply to CN as well. They apply to CP and they apply to every North American railway. All of them have been downsizing and have had to downsize their workforces. That is true of CN, and the administrative and management ranks are now too large in relation to the general body of employment and there has to be a reduction. It is not taking place just in the West. There is no discrimination. It is a painful matter but the railway has to slim down to survive, to do the job it has to do for the shippers and the people of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret to advise that, given the hour, Question Period has ended.

Mr. Jepson: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill is seeking the floor and I will take that into account tomorrow. The Hon. Member for London East is also seeking the floor. I might suggest to the Party Whips that I will take both of these Hon. Members into account tomorrow, but this concludes Question Period today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the customary question of the Deputy government House Leader about the business the Government intends to present to the House for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we expect to conclude the Budget debate today and tomorrow. On Monday, we will resume debate, and there is a good chance that we will finish, on Bill C-109, the borrowing authority. On Tuesday and Wednesday, we expect to proceed with other government legislation after consultation with the other House Leaders. It is our intention to designate both Thursday and Friday as opposition days.

The House will note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be attending the NATO meetings in Brussels next week and therefore we will not be resuming debate on Bill C-72, the Official Languages Act, next week. However, I would confirm to the House that we will be calling Bill C-72 for resumption of debate at second reading on Monday, March 7, 1988.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISINFORMATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in regard to an answer given in the House a few moments ago by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I asked him a very important question regarding cuts to various programs for aboriginal people and steps being taken by the Government of Canada to block a very important matter that is before the United Nations Human Rights Commission today. The Deputy Prime Minister responded at the end of the question solely by saying that he would like Indian people to understand that the NDP voted against $29 million.

I believe that if you look at the "blues", Mr. Speaker, you will see that the Deputy Prime Minister knew that there was not a following question that I could take. He was putting a misleading—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: First, I am sure it is accepted here that the Hon. Member was asking a serious question about a matter on which he and other Members of the House feel very strongly. I acknowledge that. However, I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his point is a continuation of debate and I am afraid that I cannot receive it.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with Question Period yesterday and the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) as reported on page 13078 of Hansard. I am sure the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville will want to withdraw his remarks accusing another Member of the House of lying.

Mr. Speaker: I have not seen the Hansard report. However, I think the remark referred to is probably that which I heard yesterday and which quite properly occasioned the Chair to rise and—

Mr. Rossi: Who was the Member who was attacked? Was it the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who did he accuse?

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members will recall, including my hon. friend who has been seeking the floor or at least taking the floor without recognition, that yesterday the Chair rose as a consequence of a remark that was heard and said that while I did not know which Member made it, I did not want any more of it. I do not know if there is any particular need to pursue this. However, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has referred specifically to an Hon. Member and I will hear him.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to the remark that appears in Hansard, "Lyin' Brian, lyin' Brian". I was not referring to anyone specifically, but—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: In Question Period, there was some heckling, and the very gentle, docile Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was heckling my Leader. I was trying to shield him a little bit and—

Mr. Speaker: I accept absolutely the explanation of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), but I would ask him to withdraw the offensive word.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I just got carried away and used an expression used in my riding so often, as I had just gotten back from there, but of course—

Mr. Speaker: I would invite the Hon. Member, who has a certain ingenious side to his nature, to rise and say simply, "I withdraw", because that is what is required under the circumstances.

Mr. Nystrom: I certainly do, Mr. Speaker. I meant no offense to anyone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in view of the number of interventions made at the start of my speech on points of order, I wondered if I could get an indication of how much time is left for me to complete my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: My officials at the Table indicate there is at least five minutes and I would be pleased to hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my speech started at quarter to one. At least three or four minutes were taken up with the three interventions, if I recall, by one of the Conservative Members.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could make life easier for the Hon. Member and say that the Chair gives him 10 minutes.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The points I stressed this morning dealt particularly with the failure of the Government to provide a sense of direction and purpose to the country in its industrial policy. I outlined a great many examples across the country, including my own constituency, of shut-downs and lay-offs which had left a great many Canadians in difficult circumstances. I provided some statistics that indicated last year in Ontario alone there were over 100 such shut-downs or significant reductions of staff amounting to well over 14,000 workers.

We are talking about a major pattern of decline throughout the manufacturing sector. It is deindustrialization, a serious weakening of the manufacturing base of our country. As I was saying just before the break, it is almost as if the Government set out to devastate the heart of manufacturing in this country. Unfortunately, there is absolutely nothing in this Budget which provides any sort of beacon of hope for the broad industrial sector in our country.

I say that a counter must be provided which indicates to the industrial manufacturing sector of this country that there is an alternative. I want to quickly lay out a number of points which we feel would give that sector a sense of direction for the future.

First, there has to be a separate ministry of industry. The present experiment of a Ministry of Regional Industrial Expansion, itself detached from the trade functions which have been seconded to external affairs, has been an abysmal failure. There has to be a separate ministry to close this gap and provide us with a sense of direction for the future.

Second, legislation has to be passed to permit communities and workers to review closures in their community. It should not be possible for a plant to simply shut down, pack its bags and head back to the U.S. with no explanation. There should be a careful, considered review with the possibility of buy-out provisions being available to workers in the plant affected in order to maintain a viable operation.

Third, there has to be adjustment legislation, especially for that vast range of workers who are no longer young, or who are not in the special categories of textiles and footwear and clothing which do have provisions for older workers. Such an adjustment procedure was promised by the Minister of Labour as far back as two years, yet nothing has been done through actual legislation.

There has to be as well support for serious research and development efforts in the industrial sector. In addition, our energy sector has to be used to provide a base of support for a viable, dynamic industrial sector. The energy sector cannot simply be seen as a pipeline to the U.S. to help their manufacturing sector increase its dynamism. Instead, we need to use our own base of support in the energy sector to help our own manufacturing enterprises.

We also need an industrial support program, which would be the industrial segment of the IRDP. At this stage it is aimed mostly at regional development, which is important and significant, but we cannot ignore the fact that there is a tremendous need for modernization of our industrial complex in order to give it hope for the future of being competitive internationally.

We also need to take directions which give potential for Governments to work out planning agreements with some of the larger scale enterprises in this country through which those enterprises can make commitments to important new areas of economic activity, important new industries, which can become sources of exports, of dynamic expansion, and jobs in the future.

We also need sector trade plans, not this across-the-board trade deal which is going to so devastate the industrial sector, like the Auto Pact which has proved so successful and which should be replicated in areas like apparels and chemicals.

Finally, we need a made-in-Canada interest rate policy which keeps interest rates at a lower level than they presently are in order to encourage investment in the industrial sector. We need a reborn Canada Development Corporation which would be able to help in the development of some of these new areas of activity that are so crucial to a competitive and dynamic Canada in the future. If we do this we can give direction to the industrial future of the country. That is what the country needs for its future jobs, its future exports, and its future as an independent nation.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to make my contribution to the debate on the Budget Speech, if we can call it a speech, considering the self-congratulatory exercise indulged in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), during which he failed to announce a single program or plan reflecting a vision of Canada's future. At this point I would like to quote the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), our financial critic, who said, and I quote:

> The Minister of Finance is much more like an accountant trying to balance his budget than a manager of the Canadian economy with a vision of the future. Yet, the first responsibility of a government should be to govern the country and to prepare for the future; to ensure that our young people will have the education they need to face future difficulties; to guarantee that our workers have and will receive the training they need to adjust to their fast changing working environment; to ensure that our businesses have and will continue to have access to the financial services, the capital and the technology necessary to develop; and finally, to see to it that the poorest members of our society have and will continue to have enough money to live decently.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague hit the right notes in his response to the Minister's speech, but unfortunately the Minister of Finance did not make a Budget Speech. His speech was about the Government's record.

"Bilan d'un échec" (A Statement of Failure) is the title of an article by Alain Dubuc that appeared in La Presse the day after the Budget, on February 11. Mr. Dubuc said, and I quote:

"Last night, Minister of Finance Michael Wilson brought down his fourth Budget. Let's hope it will be his last. On his fourth time around, he dashed any lingering hopes that his Government would be able to deliver the budgetary goods".

Mr. Speaker, those were not the words of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) nor those of the Liberal Finance critic. This was not a political statement. This was said by a reporter with the newspaper La Presse, well known for his articles on economic affairs. He said he hoped this would be the Government's last Budget and that the Government had failed to deliver the budgetary goods.

Mr. Speaker, whichever way we look at the figures, it is obvious the Government has completely missed the boat.

First of all, as far as the deficit is concerned, Mr. Dubuc explains it all very clearly when he says:

> The drop from 38 to 29 billion is largely due to a change in accounting methods. If the same definitions had been used under Liberals, the deficit would have dropped from 36 to 31 billion over the same period . . .

Mr. Speaker, if we add to that the $22 billion in tax increases the Minister of Finance has imposed on Canadians, today's deficit should be $14 billion. And if we consider the drop in interest rates, which has reduced the cost of servicing the national debt, the deficit would be lower still. However, our deficit is still around $30 billion. Mr. Speaker, after a period of economic growth, we have still failed to deal with our Budget problems. Nevertheless, in his Speech the Minister of Finance would have us believe that all is well and that we are on the right track.

[English]

If having close to $300 billion of national debt after six years of economic recovery is being on the right track, our kids should think seriously about what they must do with the Government, because we are definitely in a real mess and have a real problem. If we cannot reduce our deficit when our economy is good, how are we going to reduce it when we run into economic problems? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not address that problem. In his speech he proposed nothing new, he did not propose what the Canadian vision will be in the coming years.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to and list—because Canadians should be reminded of this—all the tax increases imposed by this Government. And when we speak of $22 billion this is a fact, not rhetoric. Let me take a few minutes to illustrate.

First, indirect taxes—sales tax increases. From 9 to 10 per cent on October 10, 1984, Mr. Speaker, their first move. This cost $1 billion. Another increase in indirect taxes, the sales tax—from 10 to 11 per cent on January 1st, 1986. Another $1 billion, Mr. Speaker. And again, a sales tax increase from 11 to 12 per cent on April 1st, 1986. Another $1 billion, Mr. Speaker. Then the sales tax was extended to candies, soda pops, snacks and chips, on June 1st, 1985, another $400 million, and on July 1st, 1987, another $60 million, Mr. Speaker. A sales tax increase from 8 to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper and toys on January 1st, 1988, another $60 million, Mr. Speaker. Excise tax increased on gas, 2 cents a litre, on September 3, 1985—total $900 million. One cent per litre on January 1st, 1987,—another $450 million. One cent per litre on February 19, 1987,—another $450 million. And of course we had the famous Budget on February 10, again one cent per litre, which will bring another $450 million into Government coffers, Mr. Speaker.

Sales tax equalization on leaded and unleaded fuel, April 1st, 1987—$30 million. Progressive tax increases on air travel, May 1st, 1986—another $55 million. Duties on spirit and tobacco, first increase on May 4, 1985—$340 million; second increase on February 27, 1986—$150 million; third increase on February 19, 1986—$70 million; and fourth increase on January 1st, 1988—$175 million, Mr. Speaker.

There is also the 10 percent tax on long distance calls and cable TV. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, what that means for people in rural communities! They are losing there Post Offices, and in addition they now have to pay tax on long distance calls, when we know very well that in a city environment a long distance call often is essential. But now the Minister of Finance is taxing long distance calls, bringing into his coffers $945 million, Mr. Speaker. The sales tax transfer to wholesalers on July 1st, 1988, in that famous Budget we just had on February 10 will bring another $300 million.

Quietly, the Minister of Finance is proceeding to implement phase two of his tax reform, the value-added tax Canadians said they wanted no part of, and now, for the first time, the Minister of Finance, even though the consultation process is not complete, is transfering the sales tax to wholesalers, which will cost Canadians $300 million. Those tax increases do not include the new sales tax the Government intend to introduce after the next elections.

Mr. Speaker, we should not forget either the Government tried to introduce a tax on food. Thanks to the Opposition who during the summer organized demonstrations and petitions, this Governement backed down, and now it is saying it will be looking at that. It is not done yet, but when he introduced his fiscal reform, the first phase, the Minister of Finance promised in the House that there would not be tax on food.

Mr. Speaker, there are also direct taxes. The deindexing of family allowances, personal exemptions and tax brackets as of January 1st, 1986: $635 million. Cancellation of tax rebate, January 1st, 1986: $650 million. Cancellation of Registered Home-ownership Savings Plan, May 22nd, 1985: $105 million. Temporary surtaxes of 5 and 10 per cent for high income earners, July 1st, 1985 to December 31 st, 1986: $500 millions. General and permanent surtax of 3 per cent for all taxpayers, July 1st, 1986: $1.2 billion. Changes in the way dividends are treated, January 1st, 1986: $300 million. Changes in exemptions for married individuals: $20 millions. We could go on and on.

I just wanted to show how, in three and a half years, this Government has been able to extract $22 billion in taxes while it is bragging about reducing the deficit. After collecting $22 billion in taxes it is still carrying a $30 billion deficit, even though it also benefitted from lower interest rates and, consequently, lower servicing charges for the national debt.

[English]

The Budget of February 10 will mark the day in history that the Conservative Government gave up any pretense of trying to close the increasing gap between the rich and the poor in this country. The Mulroney administration cheers so loudly for the few who have prosperity in our society that it is unable to hear the shouts of the many who have not shared in the nation's economic recovery.

The Government has turned its back on our youth, our aged, our homeless, our poor and on regional economic disparities. How can the Government be proud of a Budget that refuses to place even a minimum tax on the 60,000 profitable corporations in Canada and at the same time imposes new and increasing taxes which will take over $2 billion out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers?

Since the Conservatives were elected in 1984, individual Canadians have been forced to pay an additional $22 billion in new taxes. Corporations, by contrast, have only paid $2.6 billion in new taxes. The Budget of February 10 is an economic blueprint for a two-Canada concept of government. It is a blueprint of a Canada for the privileged few who prosper while the rest of the nation are ignored in the corridors of Conservative power.

The Liberal Party believes that Canada is a generous nation and that Canadians of every income group will reject the cynical blueprint for our country.

Madam Speaker, after the Budget and the deficit, I would like, now, to talk about small businesses.

What has this Government done in the last three and a half years to assist that dynamic sector which is the mainspring of our economy? Only one thing, Madam Speaker. The only thing this Conservative government has done for small businesses is to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act in order to make it less accessible to those who really need it, Canadians starting their own business.

Madam Speaker, we had a Small Businesses Loans Act which allowed Canadians wishing to start a business and unafraid of risks to get from our financial institutions a loan totally guaranteed by the Government and to create much needed jobs in our country and our economy.

So, to make sure that all those young people . . . anybody who didn't have the necessary capital to start a business could still get a government guaranteed loan and avoid problems with collateral and guarantees required by the banks.

Madam Speaker, this government's first gesture was to reduce that guarantee to 85 per cent and now people trying to start a business and needing capital must have 15 per cent collateral above what is given, the 20 per cent cash they need to buy equipment, capital assets and other tools required to operate their business.

Madam Speaker, for years we stressed the possibility of a one-stop service for small businesses, so as to group in a single place all informations and programs pertaining to the various levels, municipal, provincial, federal, national, local, and so on, a place where one could inquire and receive the appropriate informations.

A previous Liberal Government had already put forward a project to that effect. Canadians, however, as they were entitled, chose to elect a new Government in September 1984, and this Conservative Governement launched a consultation process at the beginning of 1985, to find out what the needs of small businesses were in that area. Consultations have now been completed, not without a cost, I am sure, but after three and a half years we are still waiting for specific measures to help the development of small businesses.

There is no program whatsoever regarding such a one-stop service. No financing system that would bring more funds to an area so vital and, yet, so fragile.

Everybody agrees that what small businesses lack the most is precisely good financing sources. Thus, it is important that the federal Government support programs that would help businesses find the necessary start-up funds.

It is useful to recall every now and then that small businesses have created 80 per cent of the jobs in Canada. However, if the small businesses sector were more active, more aggressive, we would have had even more jobs created and, consequently, unemployment would be lower and we would have a far more dynamic economy.

But once again, this government by advocating its philosophy of laissez faire, allows big corporations to grow while small businesses are getting smaller without any aid or relief program.

Madam Speaker, for example, this Governnment after three years and a half has not introduced any consultation program, any program for trading firms to enable small businesses to market their products and services. On the contrary, with respect to tax reform which has now become a law of the land since December last, the Minister of Finance completely ignored the needs of small businesses. We know quite well that 75 per cent of the manufacturing sector in Canada is made up of small businesses.

Madam Speaker, the only sector whose tax rates have been increased under tax reform is precisely that of the small business. Indeed, at present small manufacturing businesses pay 10 per cent of income tax. When the tax reform is implemented, small manufacturing companies will pay 12 per cent, that is 2 per cent more. It is ridiculous and incredible, Madam Speaker, to do that to a dynamic sector which creates 80 per cent of all jobs. And yet the Minister of Finance, who thinks that he has solved all problems in Canada, has never replied to the questions and has never justified why income tax rates in any other sector have not been increased under the tax reform. However, the tax rates of small manufacturing businesses are increased by 2 per cent and the Minister of Finance has been unwilling to justify that increase. There is not a single Canadian, Madam Speaker, who can justify such an increase.

This is not all. It is quite fine, Madam Speaker, for the Government to speak of free trade with the United States. The other day I met a businessman who told me: "Of course, it is quite well for you to say that we will sell our products and services to the United States. At the same time, the Minister of Finance under his tax reform is reducing representation allowances by 20 per cent. How do you want me to be represented?" I told him: "Are you going to sell a car or an airplane over there and 20 per cent of those expenditures will not be deductible?" Are small businesses encouraged? Are they encouraged to sell in the United States? Or is it just mere rethoric? The down-to-earth people, Madam Speaker, must always foot the bill, always work harder and harder to pay for some follies of this Government.

We only have to look at the statistics on small businesses' exportations that indicate that 4 percent . . . Madam Speaker, you are telling me that my time is up. I am just about finished. As a matter of fact, I wanted to point out that important matter. Four percent of Canadian exports are made directly by small businesses. That is a very small percentage. Suppose the government would announce some export financing program or a scheme that could really enable our ambassies abroad to help out our small businesses. And suppose that such a program would encourage specialized trading firms abroad to pool products and services offered by small businesses, we could improve significantly that percentage of exports and thus create more employment and make Canada more prosperous.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, first I would like to thank my colleague for his excellent account of the economic performance of this country. As everybody knows, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou has always been interested in these economic matters since his election. Everybody also knows that he is our main spokesperson for small and medium-sized businesses.

But there is another aspect I would like him to explain to us. He is also responsible for postal matters in Canada. He is our main critic for the whole issue of postal services in Canada. I would like to mention also the statement made in this House by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I would like our hon. colleagues to read them carefully and the people to be fully acquainted with the statements made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and by the Hon. Member who just spoke.

I have listened carefully, since we all specialize in one or the other of these matters and I will not pretend to be an expert in all of them which appear more or less complex to different Members. But the only way to understand fully is to listen carefully. Even after 20 or 25 years one can still learn a lot by listening well. As for me, I have learned many things from my colleagues, and I cannot recommend too strongly to those who are watching us to read the speeches made by the Hon. Member. But more specifically I would ask him if he would be so kind as to make a comment. I realize the situation is desastrous, it is bad in some respects for the economy. Those who spoke before him have shown how bad it is. In the riding I represent, for example, new areas are being developed. I thought this is what the Minister of Finance wanted to do, to promote development and construction. Yet in the riding I have the honour to represent there is a whole area called Bois-de-Boulogne, with fantastic houses, where people were encouraged to go and live. They were encouraged to build housing developments, fantastic ones. I do invite my colleagues, including my honourable friend who is listening to me, the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), to come and pay us a friendly visit as I do in his riding.

One of the major frustrations in this new sector which has been built within an older residential area is the disparity in services between neighbours. Houses in one sector still receive proper service from Canada Post, and after being encouraged to build, residents of the new sector expected the same services as other Canadian citizens. However, a whole sector in my region, which is now completed or near completion, has been denied a basic service to which we are all used in Canada, namely door-to-door mail delivery, and instead, Canada Post has installed ugly green boxes which are totally out of character in these new residential areas and completely unaesthetic. These boxes are totally unsuitable to the architecture of the houses and the residents are furious and frustrated. It is often because of these small daily irritants that taxpayers complain about Government services.

I would like the Hon. Member to take a minute or two to outline briefly what is happening and what should be done.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for his kind comments and for his question which is directly related to the Budget. We should not forget that it was the Minister of Finance himself who caused the problems with the super-boxes which my colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has mentioned. Indeed, the Minister of Finance decided to make cutbacks and said that the postal deficit would be reduced to zero by March 31, 1988 and that Canada Post would have to see to it. On the other hand, the Canada Post Corporation said: Fine, since we have to reduce our costs, we shall reduce our services. What has happened is quite clear. Of course, we have had these green boxes for years, but they were only used temporarily. Residents of uncompleted residential projects were given the possibility of picking up their mail at temporary green boxes instead of going to the Post Office, which allowed them to receive their mail near their home. However, after all the houses and all the streets had been built, door-to-door mail delivery was provided, as for all other Canadians living in rural areas. The postal service was universal.

Now, because of the decision of the Minister of Finance and the five-year plan of the Canada Post Corporation, we have two categories of Canadians, some who have home delivery and others who have to get their mail from a superbox which, as we have seen on television, is easy to open and does not close properly and which, because of our climate, is often blocked by snow during the winter.

Madam Speaker, this is another example of how this Government reduces services and increases taxes. Yet, the deficit still remains the same.

I will give an example. In the United States, it took fourteen years to the postal service before it could balance its books. Here, in Canada, with only one tenth of the population, we want to balance the books in seven years. It is nonsense! And the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself went against the recommendations of the Marchment commission which wanted to give Canada Post another five years to do some planning in order to avoid unnecessary cuts while continuing to give a fair service to all Canadians. This way the Corporation could plan its expenditures and its income, and would be able to balance its books within five years. But he decided to proceed with cuts immediately, against the recommendation of a commission which was established by this very Government. And today we are in a situation of confrontation. Only a few days ago, we received the first report of an independent commission of inquiry according to which 20 per cent of mail deliveries are late ever since Canada Post implemented the cuts, because it could not make both ends meet.

Mr. Tardif: Madam Speaker, first I should like to congratulate my colleague for his remarkable speech, and since he did refer to the postal issue I have a question for him. Day in and day out over the last few months my mail box has been full of letters, particularly from farm producers who keep complaining about delays of five, six, seven and eight days in mail deliveries. On a few occasions I too had to put up with totally unqualifiable delays in the delivery of such important documents as passports. Be that as it may, Canada Post has made drastic-or even cruel and savage— cut-backs, but did such savings in fact lead to improved services? Fully cognizant as my colleague is with the postal service, can he tell us whether the savings made at the expense of Canadian users contributed to bettering the service, which can still be described as being totally lamentable?

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, new battle lines have been drawn as a result of the position taken by the Minister of Finance with respect to the savings made by Canada Post. We must keep in mind the fact that when Post Canada was established it was given three very specific and equally important mandates: cut the deficit, provide better service, and improve labour relations. So when Canada Post management unveiled their five-year plan in which they projected 8,000 fewer jobs, the employees and unions involved got down to work and stated that the plan was unacceptable. That is when confrontation became the order of the day, so much so that any postal worker who now fails to punch in or out at noontime gets himself a three-day suspension without pay. No private sector company cracks down that hard. So that is the kind of situation we have now, and unfortunately the service has completely bogged down and, as we have heard recently, with the result that 20 per cent of mail deliveries are late, Madam Speaker.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): I am delighted today to take part in this debate on the Budget brought down by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on February 10.

If I may, I wish to take a few moments to mention some of the positive achievements that have been accomplished during the time that he has been the Minister of Finance in this Government.

Surely the two most important areas that the Government has succeeded in, where the previous Government failed and failed miserably, have been the lowering of both interest and unemployment rates. In fact, Canada is ranked number one among major industrialized countries in economic growth and job creation. Indeed, more than 1.1 million new jobs have been created in Canada. Of course, 85 per cent of those jobs are full-time. At least half are managerial and professional occupations of a permanent nature.

Interest rates have come way down. In fact, mortgage rates are 3 per cent lower, saving home owners $1,200 a year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years. That is money in the householder's pocket. Housing starts have reached a 10-year high. Consumer and investor spending has increased. All of a sudden Canadians have found a new confidence in the Government.

Our Government has restored their confidence.

[English]

This record of achievement did not happen by itself. Quite the contrary, this economic reformation was carefully planned and executed, as is clearly spelled out in the Government's agenda for economic renewal which we presented in the House immediately after being elected in November, 1984.

In speaking of the successes that we have nurtured over the past four years, I wish to point out the backbone of our approach which has been responsible for the regeneration of the economy. First, our policy orientations are right on. Fiscal responsibility, tax reform, enhanced trading relationships, regional development, increased equality for women, francophone and minority groups, and regulatory reform have all formed the bulwark of our plan for this nation. They are working not only because they are well planned and executed, but because we are consulting and have consulted with Canadians on the programs that they would like to see. We are listening and we are acting, and our programs and policies are clearly successful.

Within the context we are also committed to fiscal responsibility. Gone are the days when the Government could want only throw away taxpayers' dollars, heaping more dollars on projects which were not proper projects in the first place. The controls in place and the process for justifying government programs are very strict. Few Governments around the world have accorded the same integrity to public expenditures as we have.

Next, we are committed to doing things in priority. Obviously, certain areas take precedence over others. We have priorized the issues which are of greatest concern to Canadians and have and are devoting special attention to those areas. For example, regional development, research and development, and trade enhancement are only a few.

Finally, the Government has a vision for the future, one where all Canadians will reap the benefit of their labours and where the standard of living will be high and all citizens will be proud once again to call themselves Canadian.

I wish to expand on some of the areas I have touched upon and which form part of our over-all plan.

It is absolutely essential, if this country is to recover, that we revitalize the private sector and position Canada's economy to meet the challenge of international competition in the 1990s. The key behind this has been the modernization of the regulatory environment for business. We have deregulated energy, the transportation sectors, opened up the financial markets to global opportunities, and stimulated greater competition in financial services. We are updating the outdated legislation for competition policy, copyrights, and patents. We have not stopped there. One of the highest priorities has been to privatize some of our Crown corporations which no longer have any reason to be government controlled. I invite the Opposition to have a look at the success of those privatizations since we have taken that action.

Tax reform is another major initiative of the Government. It will come into effect in stages over the next year. As early as this summer it will mean less taxes being paid by the average Canadian, and a fairer distribution of the tax burden across the country.

Indeed the federal income tax system has been formed to help both businesses and individuals compete in the world. Hand in hand with this new approach to a fairer taxation system is the major effort to control government spending. Nothing is more basic to a strong framework for private sector growth and job creation than responsible management of government finances.

In 1984 the federal deficit and the national debt were almost out of control. In the mid-1970s a former Auditor General said that the Government lost control of the public purse-strings. Indeed spending was out of control. Not so with our Government.

Our first priority was to get government spending under control. Through team effort and under the leadership of the Minister of Finance we have been able to do so to a certain extent. The deficit has been systematically reduced. For the current fiscal year we will meet our previously announced target of $29.3 billion. We must remember that in 1984 the deficit was better than $37 billion and rising. In continuing our attack on the deficit, we have not lost sight of the day when the Budget can be balanced.

Another major area of government effort has been to enhance our trade opportunities abroad, with all countries around the world. However, since we have a natural, historic trading relationship with our largest partner, the United States, we have pursued a special arrangement to open up access to that great market-place to the south. We have succeeded in negotiating a comprehensive free trade agreement with our American neighbours, which I think will lead to a more efficient economy, better able to compete in the international market-place. More jobs will be created as Canadians realize the immense benefits and opportunities which are now available through our trading savvy south of the border. We estimate that there will be a net increase of at least 120,000 new jobs in 1993.

I want to speak for a moment, if I may, of those things in the Budget which relate to the forestry and mines portfolio that comes under my responsibility. The Government has a good relationship with both the forestry and mining industries and communities. After consultations with the mining industries it was decided to widen the definition of a mineral resource to include kaolin under the Income Tax Act. This will allow the mineral to receive the favourable tax treatment which the federal Government provides to the mineral industry.

Since interest in kaolin deposits has been shown in the West, this will be a further boost to regional development in that region, providing they take advantage of the new regulatory regime.

Another positive note for the forestry and mining industries is that with the necessary increase of one cent per litre in the excise tax on gasoline, primary resource producers as well as farmers and fishermen can continue to collect the fuel tax rebate, ensuring that they are not affected by the increase. Additionally there was no increase in tax on diesel fuel. The Minister of Finance has clearly recognized the importance of maintaining cost competitiveness of Canadian minerals and forest products in export markets by not increasing the excise tax on diesel fuel for transportation.

There are two other measures which I will mention. The Budget reaffirmed the need for special assistance for certain users of energy consumption equipment, including primary producers, through the mechanism of the capital cost allowance. This incentive for investment will continue to provide assistance to the forest and mining sectors.

The national labour sponsored venture capital corporations provision is another part of the Budget. First introduced on May 23, 1985, the Budget adds a new measure which allows individuals a federal tax credit of 20 per cent of the cost of shares acquired in 1988 and subsequently. The maximum individual federal tax credit remains at $700 per annum. This should provide a significant source of new equity capital for small and medium-sized businesses in the forest sector by giving workers an opportunity to invest in and benefit from the profitability of their own companies.

One issue in which I have been interested as a Maritimer is regional development. As a Minister and a Member of Parliament from New Brunswick, I want to deal with that particular issue for just a few moments.

I turn now to regional development. This is an important matter to me as a Minister and a Member from New Brunswick.

Our Government has shown and will continue to show it is committed to the Atlantic region.

[English]

The Government has demonstrated and will continue to demonstrate its special attention to programs for the region in which I live in Atlantic Canada. Of course we recognize that the programs and policies of the previous federal Government were not working and that unemployment rates were unbelievably and cruelly high in the Atlantic region. The Government has embarked upon a new course, a clear departure from the laissez-faire attitude of the previous Government.

We have created the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which has unprecedented powers to nurture and assist development in the region. This did not come out of thin air. We on this side of the House listened to and consulted with Atlantic Canadians. They told us that they wanted a new approach, one that would work, would be based in the region, and would have a sensitivity toward Atlantic Canadian problems and aspirations. This did not escape us. We have created ACOA to provide this focus for development in the region and this window for the federal Government to contribute marginally to prosperity in Atlantic Canada.

It is important to note that it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has taken the lead role in providing stronger commitment to and clear vision of the needs of Atlantic Canadians. Lest we forget what has happened to date on that particular issue, I was just given the figures today of expenditures under ACOA in three categories in the region covering the four provinces. To date, under the Atlantic Enterprise Program, IRDP, and ERDA, we have approved 558 applications and authorized ACOA contributions of some $76,497,000.

What has this brought about? It has brought about an estimated total project cost—that means new capital investments in our region—of $229 million in Atlantic Canada. We think that is fairly important and fairly significant.

Created in June of last year and carefully designed, with legislation currently moving through the House, ACOA is moving on all fronts to approve projects which will benefit the region. The actions of the Government have meant jobs in Atlantic Canada.

Earlier this week the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) tried to say, unbelievably, that employment rates in eight provinces are higher today than they were at the height of the recession. The truth of the matter is that eight provinces have lower unemployment rates than in December, 1982 when the Canadian unemployment rate was at its highest. When unemployment began to decline somewhat in 1983 in Ontario and Quebec, the rate in Atlantic Canada and the West continued to rise. For example, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, and Alberta reached its highest point, not in December, 1982, the depths of the recession, but in September, 1984. The highest rate in my province, the Province of New Brunswick, was in January, 1985.

In Atlantic Canada the unemployment rate did not begin to recover until after the 1984 election. It took a Progressive Conservative Government to reverse the negative trend of unemployment in Atlantic Canada, which had been the trademark of the previous Government. All provinces across Canada, except P.E.I., now have lower unemployment rates than in September, 1984.

May I just take a moment to deal with the statements of Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party opposite, while calling upon the Government for more regional development, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has made his priorities clear. He said:

> Top priorities would be to keep the economy running well in central Canada, where the continental mechanism has been very effective.

In fact, the NDP Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) went a step further by asserting, incredibly, that part of the new Navy frigate contract which was recently awarded to the Saint John shipyard in my riding, fair and square to the lowest tenderer, should be split off to Quebec. This is the same Party that argued in the past for procurement contracts to go to the lowest bidder. Now the NDP argues just the opposite, thereby stirring up regional divisions and questions as to the NDPs credibility on these important matters. The people in Saint John and in Atlantic Canada have noted those comments.

In closing, I want to say that this Budget is just part and parcel of the Government's continuing commitment to a prosperous Canada, and a prosperous Atlantic Canada I am proud to say. The next year will be the sixth year of sustained economic expansion in Canada. That, in itself, is unique. It will see the implementation of a number of our priority programs for child care, regional development, science and technology and national defence. We will continue our commitment to the agriculture, energy, fishing, mining and forestry sectors. We will fulfil our commitment to a stronger and more compassionate Canada.

This Budget helps to make this commitment possible. It does it in a careful and responsible way. It proves once again what we have said from the beginning. We have a plan and we have stuck to that plan. That plan is working, it is creating jobs and new opportunities in the area of Canada from which I come. We are cutting the deficit and implementing important policies for all regions of Canada.

I am proud and pleased to speak in support of the Budget brought down by our Minister of Finance on February 10, 1988, because it is one more step in making Canada a better and more prosperous place in which to live, to work and to raise a family.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member who is so proud and satisfied with the Budget presented by this Government. Is he aware that according to the estimate of the Canadian Council for Social Development—an organization which has as members virtually every federal and provincial Department working in the field of welfare and health and most of the major private voluntary organizations—between 1980 and this year, that is, during three and a half years of Conservative Government, more than 100,000 people have joined the one more 1.5 million who are living in poverty?

Is the Minister proud of a tax system which permits thousands of Canadians with incomes of more than $50,000 a year to pay no tax, that more than 250 Canadians with incomes of over $200,000 a year pay no tax while the people he represents, ordinary Canadians, are taxed as heavily as they are? We still have a large number of corporations, some of the biggest and most profitable, which have paid no taxes. Let me list just a few. Alcan Aluminum in 1986, Xerox Canada in 1986, Union Carbide of Canada in 1987 and Bramalea Consolidated. I do not have the figures here, but virtually all the banks in this country paid little or no tax in recent years. Is the Minister happy with that kind of a Budget?

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, I think what is important to note and perhaps what the Hon. Member has missed in this whole debate is the fact that there are 1,150,000 Canadians working who were not working previously and who are earning a living, creating wealth, making public purchases and supporting the Canadian economy. The average wages are significantly up in the part of Canada from which I come. That is very important. We have more Canadians actually working and contributing to a more prosperous Canada.

The Hon. Member mentioned companies and corporations which are not paying taxes. He knows, for example, that our Minister of Finance brought in a very ambitious tax reform package which has been and will be debated in this House undoubtedly over the ensuing weeks and months. The Member mentioned one company, a mining company. Is he against companies which have made no income at all through the recession? I am talking about pulp and paper and mining companies that create wealth and jobs. Does the Member now suggest that those companies should not have the benefit of the exemptions which they earned during those very poor years when they made investments and earned exemptions from paying taxes? That is very important and it is very important to the part of the country from which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) comes. It is extremely important to the hinterland regions of our country where mining, forestry and many other basic resource industries are located.

The Hon. Member should also be reminded that the Minister of Finance has dealt very effectively, I believe, with certain segments of the Canadian economy which previously, we felt, were not carrying their fair share of the tax burden for Canada, not paying their way and will now have to do so, such as our insurance and banking communities.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's intervention in this debate and the solid contribution that he is making to public life in our country. I can assure him that his efforts are not unsung in my part of Canada.

I have a particular question relating to the Minister's remarks having to do with collaboration in mining matters with the provinces. As the Minister knows, there was the proposal that Alberta, which is alone among Canadian provinces not enjoying a minerals development agreement with the Government of Canada, should have taken the initiative to seek such an agreement. It is my understanding that the Government of Alberta has taken that initiative and that negotiations leading in the direction of such an agreement are now in their third round.

In light of the budget proposals and the Minister's responsibility as Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) could he tell us whether the minerals development agreement with Alberta is near completion or whether indeed the proposals of the Alberta Chamber of Resources in that direction have been helpful in the finalization of negotiations?

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, I very much appreciate the Hon. Member's interest. I think earlier in the House today he made an intervention in support of an MDA for the Province of Alberta.

When we decide to enter into economic and regional development subagreements with provinces, sometimes there is a built-in inequity or an appearance of an inequity. These regional development agreements tend to be based somewhat on the ability of provinces to finance those kinds of activities on their own.

In the case of Alberta, I fully realize and appreciate, as the Hon. Member who has been pushing very hard on this issue that Alberta is the sole province which does not have a mineral development agreement. I have met with representatives of the Alberta Chamber of Resources who have pushed very hard on the issue. We have had negotiations and discussions with the province. Alberta is very aggressive on many fronts. For example, in forestry it will have well over $1 billion in new investments this year. The lead which the Province of Alberta has shown in that field is remarkable, but the province will have to indicate to us in a whole plethora of requests for assistance where the mineral development agreement stands. Is it as important as assistance, for example, in the forest products industry? Is it as important as assistance in the energy industry or in agriculture? They have to priorize this.

I personally am fully supportive of entering into negotiations with them and I will do so after the ERDA agreements and discussions that will take place with the Minister responsible for intergovernmental affairs, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) and the Premier, discussions that will take place shortly, I understand.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in rising to address this year's Budget, I want to begin by looking very briefly at the history of Conservative budget-making in these last number of years. We are now into the fourth year of Conservative Government.

The Government's first economic declaration was a real slasher. Conservatives basically said: "Move over, Margaret Thatcher, we want to show you that we have real Conservatives in Canada, we will have a really tough Conservative Budget". There was slashing of expenditures. There was the slashing of the indexing of family allowances and old age pensions. There were big budget cuts in the environment, whole programs just slaughtered, to show the folks out there that they were really serious as Conservatives about being tough on the Budget.

Arts expenditures were cut, again in spite of absolutely clear promises to the contrary, as promises were made on the sacred trust to the social programs. Arts expenditures were very seriously cut, one of the first casualties of the new slashing Conservative approach to budget-making back in the fall of 1984.

What has happened? Canadians did not like what Conservative Members did. Old age pensioners stood up and fought back. Canadian women who were going to lose the family allowance indexing fought back, unfortunately not as successfully as old age pensioners. Old age pensioners were successful in insisting that indexing not be cut for the old age pension.

Arts groups marched on Ottawa and said: "You had better keep to those promises, we are an important part of Canadian society and we do not want to see expenditures in our area cut". Environmentalists spoke up and insisted that programs for the protection of the environment were a high priority for Canadians. They were right.

This first attack on Budgets was back in the fall of 1984 and the Government had to learn that it would not work, that Canadians really did object. Canadians were not ardent followers of Margaret Thatcher nor were they ardent followers of Ronald Reagan. The Conservative Government preferred these two models of increased expenditures on law and order defence and the military, and cuts in social areas, arts and environmental programs. Conservatives learned that this was not acceptable to Canadians, and I am glad to see that they learned a bit of a lesson.

Instead of these massive slashes, subsequent Budgets have provided for more careful trimmings. Indeed, Conservatives have poured on the fertilizer in other areas. In some areas, there has even been growth.

Here we have the curiosity of a Government that talks about slashing and reducing the deficit, while in fact expenditures are going up. They are going up at a greater rate than economic growth, rising faster than inflation. In short, there have been real increases in expenditures in Canada.

For the first year in our history, there are expenditures in the federal Budget of over $100 billion. For statutory programs, the increases are in the order of 4.6 per cent, for non-statutory programs, there are increases of 3.9 per cent, for total program spending, there are increases of 4.3 per cent, and of course, the expenditures to pay the service charges on the public debt amount to 9.7 per cent, a massive increase. The total budget increase for this year is 5.5 per cent. With inflation at around 4 per cent, we can see that that is a real increase.

The irony is that the Government is talking about reducing the deficit. What are government Members talking about? They are talking about comparing the deficit in the worst of the Trudeau years, the time of a recession, a time when we would expect the deficit to rise if there were to be any humanity at all, a time when the deficit would have to go up or there would have been even more massive suffering than there was, with the deficit now when employment has risen a bit. In comparison with the worst of the Trudeau years, they say that we are reducing the deficit.

In fact, every year the public debt is rising, and it is rising by very substantial figures, around $30 billion a year. We are into the fourth year of a deficit in the order of $30 billion. Of course, the debt charges are rising year after year and yet the Government uses rhetoric about reductions.

Looking at the fine print, we find that there is a reduction in the rate of the increase, not a real reduction in the growth of expenditures. We have to moderate the growth of expenditures, not reduce expenditures altogether. They are still rising. Let us be very clear. We have heard some rhetoric, but the reality is rather different.

The Government is promising tax reform, but what in fact has it actually been doing? It has been increasing taxes for middle and lower income Canadians. There have been massive tax increases in each of the years we have had a Conservative Government. Why is this? For one thing, there are still tax giveaways for better off Canadians. There are still massive loopholes. There are still some 60,000 profitable corporations that are not paying taxes. The Government is still resisting all the recommendations made by my Party and by many Canadians to apply at least a minimum corporate income tax in order to ensure that profitable corporations pay their fair share of taxes. That has not happened.

Corporate income taxes do not bring a very substantial part of the money into the federal Treasury. Projections for this year put personal income tax at $45,410 million and corporate income taxes at only around $12 billion. Unemployment insurance contributions are nearly as high at $10.6 billion. Sales and excise taxes are actually very substantial at $28,855 million. Sales and excise taxes paid by Canadians for this fiscal year are much higher than corporate income taxes. This is of course a very convenient way for the Government to be collecting taxes, but it is not a fair way.

Sales and excise taxes are largely hidden taxes and they are regressive taxes. They are not related to ability to pay, which income tax is. Income tax is progressive, but sales and excise taxes are not. Of course, with the trade deal, there will be a reduction in excise taxes, so again taxes elsewhere will have to go up. There will be some kind of sales tax, but the Government is holding off from telling us exactly what it wants to collect in sales taxes. All we know, or at least we hope we know, is that food will not be included. A whole lot of other items will be.

There are massive increases there because the Government will not come to terms with collecting taxes fairly from people who can afford to pay them. Again, we hear rhetoric about tax reform, but let us be very, very clear about what tax reform actually means. The Government wants to reduce the tax rate. The Government wants to follow in the footsteps of Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan.

There were reductions in the income tax rate, particularly for the wealthy in Britain and in the United States. They were following the trickle-down theory which is that with these kinds of reductions, wealthy people would invest more and jobs would be created. In fact, they have not found that the trickle down theory has actually produced those kinds of jobs. It certainly has not produced justice, equity or harmony in those societies. But that is still the model we have from the Conservative Government.

We have this talk about tax reform but it is just a reduction in the rate. The Government says it still has to collect the same amount of money, but instead of doing it in a fair way through the income tax system which is related to ability to pay, it is going to be collected in an unfair way through hidden taxes, sales taxes, regressive taxes which hit middle and low-income people worse than they hit those with a better ability to pay. The Government talks about a revenue-neutral kind of tax reform. We have to collect the same amount of revenue but we are going to do it in a different way. Is it fair? No, it is not. Tax reform sounds good, it promises reform, but these are in fact regressive measures.

We have a certain amount of ideology in the Budget Papers which the Government has come up with. We have The Fiscal Plan and when you read the fine print there is a lot of reference to percentages. There is also a lot of reference to relating expenditures to the size of the economy, as if government expenditures ought to be a certain proportion of the Gross Domestic Product. This reflects the Conservative ideology that there is a kind of right amount of government, but not too much. we had to have enough to pay for certain social programs, yes, but more than that we do not want. There is some kind of mumbo-jumbo or magic figure which is the right amount but not too much. This is the ideology. It is not very practical because it obviously depends upon what the money is being spent for. Is it productive? Is it going to improve the capacity of Canadians to create jobs, to use our wealth wisely? Is it going to promote health, education, research and technological development? Yet those are not the kinds of questions being asked. The question asked is simply whether it is being spent by the public sector or the private sector.

If the private sector puts thalidomide on the market, that is not economic growth. That is disaster. Yet the Government takes this very narrow approach that what the private sector does must be positive for the economy. Yet if the public sector does something to get rid of pollution or promote public health, somehow that is bad because it is being done by the public sector. This kind of ideological blindness on the part of the Government is extremely unfortunate.

I also want to refer to what is not in the Budget. We have a discussion of expenditures projected for the fiscal year and the income the Government expects to get during that fiscal year. To some extent it is related to unemployment or projected employment and economic growth, interest rates, and a few other economic indicators. Yet most of it is just the money coming in and going out of the Government's hands over the year. It is not related to, you might say, the productive capacity of Canadians, the physical plant, the environment, the forests, the soil, the waters, the fisheries or our farmland. We do not have any kind of accounting of that sort. Yet that is the kind of information we should be seeing more often so we can assess where we are going, how productive we are, and whether we are building up our productive capacity or allowing it to deteriorate.

Madam Speaker, some departments are winners and others are losers in this Budget. The Department of the Environment, of which I am the critic for the New Democratic caucus, is a losing department. Even though total Government expenditures will increase, those concerning Environment Canada will be reduced in this fiscal year, in real terms.

The expenditures of that department are reduced against the public's will and despite statements the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) made before the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry.

[English]

We discussed this matter with the Minister and he told us in committee that for environmental protection enforcement purposes: "Suffice it to say that Environment Canada will get 6 to 8 per cent of the $3 million of new money added to the pot for enforcement purposes. For the Department of the Environment the person-years will be in the vicinity of 70 for a total of 125 additional person-years for the same purposes."

When we look at the Estimates, that is not what has happened. In fact, the resources for conservation and protection are down. Total funds have been reduced in real terms. They have not gone up with the cost of living and there is a real difference in absolute terms in the number of person-years.

The Department says there will be 12 new person-years in the Supplementary Estimates, but this means a net reduction of 30 person-years over last year. It has been down by 254 since the Government came into power. A real reduction. This in an absolutely vitally important area, one where the public wants to see more action on preservation of the environment.

With respect to the wildlife toxicology fund, the Government first let its funding lapse. There was only $1 million in the past three years. We do not know if there is going to be any replacement of those funds in any other fashion. The fund had been handling the money when direct departmental expenditures were cut, but we do not know what their funding is going to be.

We have slashes in the environmental budget for non-governmental organizations, which have played a really vitally important role in defending the environment, giving the public input and using expertise from ordinary citizens who know what is happening to the environment in their particular area. The Government cut $75,000 from their funding since last year. It seems that the annual grant to the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain has been discontinued. Acid rain is our major environmental problem, and here the coalition dealing very actively and vigorously with this matter is not getting any funding.

I want to address for a couple of minutes the question of the size of the Public Service. Government has made a big to-do about its reduction in the Public Service as a matter of efficiency and productivity. Of course, the plan was announced some time ago for a reduction of 15,000 persons in the Public Service to take place gradually. Here we have in this year's Budget a little bit of bragging by the Government. Implementation will continue and staff reductions to date have resulted in cumulative savings of $375 million by 1990-91. The cumulative savings from the person-years will exceed $1.5 billion, with recurring savings of about $500 million each year. I suggest that this is absolute bunk. Presumably they have the numbers right and I am not going to quarrel with that. However, if there were real reductions in expenditures as a result of these cuts in the Public Service we would be seeing a decrease in over-all expenditure. That is not what is happening. Budget expenditures are still going up by 5.5 per cent. You have the civil service going down and expenditures going up. What does that mean? It simply means that we have a Government that likes the rhetoric of cutting down the Public Service and slashing permanent jobs.

These are good jobs held by dedicated public servants. The Government has taken some pleasure in saying, à la Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan, that we are being tough in cutting the Public Service. Yet it is replacing these people by contracting out. It does not save any money. We can see that costs are still going up. What it does mean is that a company gets a contract. Maybe it is a company that is going to hive off a little money in gratitude to the Party in power.

This Budget has the biggest expenditures in our history, over $100 billion in expenditures. We have a so-called ethics package. The Government now claims to be interested in honesty in government, yet there are no reforms in that area.

We have the biggest spending we will ever have, yet we have a tendering process which is full of holes. The Canadian public likes to think that there is a process by which the company with the lowest contract bid that is capable of performing the terms of the contract will get it. In fact, that only counts for some contracts. There is still enormous ministerial discretion in the awarding of contracts in every Department of the Government.

The new ethics package does not address that at all, nor does it address the issue of corporate donations to political Parties which are, of course, the very basis for our kickback system. If you get rid of corporate donations to Parties you cannot have a kickback system. There is nothing to kick back.

An Hon. Member: How about trade unions?

Ms. McDonald: I am asked, "How about trade unions?" Well, should there be a trade union that is in the business of selling widgets to the Government in competition with other businesses, it should come under the same rules. However, trade unions are not in the business of selling widgets or any other gadgets to the Government. They are not profitable corporations. They represent workers in contract negotiations for wages and working conditions. They are not in sales, they are not out to make a profit. Should they be doing that, they ought to be treated the same, but why would you treat two organizations with completely different purposes as if they had the same purpose?

In conclusion, the Government does have a program but, unfortunately, it is not the right program. It is going ahead with its cut-backs in the Public Service. Its so-called tax reform is a fraud. It is not dealing with honesty in government. We see lost opportunities. Opportunities to be fair with this Budget and to bring in a minimum corporate income tax are absolutely lost.

The unfairness is continuing. The increase in burden on middle and lower income Canadians is continuing. The day of reckoning will come. These costs will have to be dealt with. You cannot just talk about reducing the deficit and limiting expenditures. Somehow you have to bring them into alignment. That is not happening because the Government will not deal with making those people pay taxes who can afford to do so and thus bring real fairness into the tax system. As long as we do not have that, unfairness will continue and Canadians will be extremely dissatisfied.

I regret that this Budget does not deal with the real problems with which we must deal in our society and with the fairness which Canadians would like to see. I regret that the Government is hiding from these and putting it off to future Governments to come to terms with those real problems.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed the Member's lecture on how to run the Government and debt. She is very critical and her answer to everything seems to be that we have to spend more money. I wonder whether she and her colleagues would consider doing the people of Manitoba a favour by sitting down with the NDP Government there and having a talk with it about debt and increased taxes. Would they let them know that they are against reducing the civil service? They are reducing the civil service in Manitoba. If it is all right for an NDP Government in Manitoba to do that, it is quite proper here.

Manitoba has had the biggest tax grab in the history of the province. Manitobans are paying an additional $369 million in taxes, a 20 per cent increase. I hope the Member will sit down with Premier Pawley and tell him how disturbed she is. A new tax of 2 per cent on net income has hit taxpayers there. Hydro rates are up by 9.7 per cent. Telephone rates are up by 11.5 per cent. Autopac premiums are up by 9 per cent to 30 per cent. All other government fees are up by an average of 20 per cent, including drivers' licences and birth certificates. An additional 1 per cent sales tax has hit all Manitobans. A land transfer tax has hit Manitoba home buyers. There is a new 7 per cent tax on take-out food and energy conservation materials. Payroll tax has increased by 50 per cent to 2.25 per cent. There is a new water tax.

Each person in Manitoba has a debt load of $9,000. Five years ago it was only $4,500. The history of Manitoba debt is that it took 117 years of government spending to arrive at the present debt. The NDP Government in Manitoba has been responsible for almost half of it in only five years.

I hope the Member will go to Manitoba and have a talk with the Government. The people of Manitoba would be most gratified if the Member would go there and tell them how to run the Government as she has told us how to run the country. Manitobans are the victims of the biggest tax grab in the history of the province. Even though they have to pay more, they will get less.

In addition, Manitobans must face cut-backs in hospital beds, cut-backs in hospital services and closures of wards, and long waiting periods for CAT scans and other diagnostic services. People of Manitoba have to go to the United States to get CAT scans. That is disgraceful. In addition, there is mismanagement in the protection of children.

I will give some examples of mismanagement by the NDP. As a result of the mix-up between Manitoba Telephones and Saudi Arabia, $27 million was lost. Manitoba forest industries have lost $31 million. Manitoba Public Insurance Corporation has lost $58 million. Flyer Industries has lost $100 million, and workers' compensation has lost $148 million. Flyer Industries was a Crown corporation which the Manitoba Government sold. NDP Members in the House criticize the Government for getting rid of unproductive Crown corporations, but I do not hear them saying anything about the NDP Government in Manitoba. It is all right for it to dispose of Crown corporations. The NDP Government intends to establish another Crown corporation, another mix-up there.

Would the Hon. Member be kind enough, when criticizing the federal Government, also to include the NDP Government in Manitoba? Would she pass along her comments on how she would straighten out the ungodly mess in Manitoba? A population of a million people cannot carry that debt load in Manitoba or put up with such mismanagement. Would the Member give her commitment that she will speak to the NDP Government and get it to start straightening out the mess in Manitoba before being so critical of the federal Government?

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, there are quite a few items on the list the Hon. Member has asked me to address. I will try to deal with most of them. First, I did not at any time say that we should spend more, more, more, more, more. I was pointing out the contradictions between a government which talks about reducing the deficit but, rather, has increased the public debt in the order of $30 billion every year for four years. Added up, that is roughly $120 billion in increases in the public debt since the Conservatives came to power.

The best example of reductions in the public debt is Saskatchewan. Over a period of 20 years the first CCF Government, under Tommy Douglas, reduced not only the deficit, which is the difference in expenditures and revenues per year, but the accumulated public debt. That was done by the first CCF Government in Canada.

It is true that there have been increases in the deficit in Manitoba. There have been in every province of the country as there have been in the federal Government. They are associated with the time of the recession. The years of 1981-82 were particularly bad. Manitoba is not out of line with other provinces. In Saskatchewan a CCF Government completely disposed of the public debt which was built up by the Conservatives. It was built up again by the Conservatives, reduced again by the NDP, and has now been built up again by the Conservatives.

The lesson is exactly the opposite to what the Hon. Member suggests. There was actually the accomplishment of reduction in the public debt in a CCF-NDP province. There are increases in Manitoba, but they are no worse than in any other province and no worse than what has been happening federally.

There are inconsistencies in the Hon. Member's remarks about increased taxes in Manitoba. He cannot have it both ways. He complains about the debt in Manitoba and he complains when taxes are increased to deal with that debt. That Government is being consistent and is trying to deal with this debt. They were fair tax increases, and that is the big difference with the Pawley Government. It has increased some taxes but it has done it fairly and has related it to ability to pay. That is what the federal Government is not doing. It has not brought in a minimum corporate income tax, and taxes have increased disproportionately for middle and lower income Canadians.

Those two Governments face a problem and one of those Governments, the Government of Manitoba, has approached it fairly. The federal Conservative Government has not approached it fairly.

The Hon. Member referred to health care services and difficulties in the health care field. He ought to look next door to Saskatchewan with its Conservative Government. There has been an appalling deterioration in health care services there. It is the same in British Columbia with, in effect, a conservative Government, a Social Credit Government. Health care services come under established program financing where we had cutbacks federally. It is the same for post-secondary education. Therefore, part of the problems the provinces have in paying for their health care costs stem from the fact that the Conservative Government has cut back financing for those very programs.

I do not think the Member is at all consistent or fair in what he has to say in making comparisons between Manitoba and the federal Government.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would care to comment on ways of raising taxes that are more fair and consistent? I note that in the past, Canada's tax system has tended to impose taxes less heavily on those corporations that have garnered extremely high profit margins. I have some Statistics Canada figures from 1983—and I realize we had a Liberal Government then—which show that the 25 largest business entities in the country, which control one-third of our entire $717 billion corporate pie, although their profit rates were extremely high, generally fell into one of the lowest tax rates, averaging something in the neighbourhood of 9.6 per cent of actual taxes paid on their profits, compared to small corporations which were paying an average of 17.1 per cent at the same time. The results seem to be that the tax system encourages the very large corporations not only to avoid supporting Government but to use the profits and savings from not paying taxes to raid the smaller and medium-sized corporations, putting them out of business. Does the Hon. Member think this is a good way to create economic development?

Ms. McDonald: No, Madam Speaker, it is certainly not a good thing for the economy to have this happen. We know that it is the small and medium-sized businesses that are creating jobs in Canada. They also happen to be the ones which are relatively highly taxed. The Hon. Member is indeed correct in talking about the enormous tax advantages the larger corporations have. This is bad for the economy because they are not contributing their fair share. The burden, then, has to be taken up by other people and small and medium-sized corporations, which we should be favouring more because they are so much more productive of jobs.

I would like to refer to the Government's own analysis of part of this problem. It blames the previous Liberal Government, and it is to a certain extent correct. The problem started under the previous Liberal Government and, indeed, the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance when the major tax loopholes were created, which are still being taken advantage of by these major corporations. In the fiscal plan there is reference to the aggressive tax avoidance measures which are eroding the tax base—and this is the language of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—which were started by the previous Government. That is true. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) is responsible. However, why is it continuing? Why is the Government not at least bringing in a minimum corporate income tax which could deal with the problem? Why is the Government not really plugging those loopholes? The Government is not doing that and because corporations are not—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I apologize to the Hon. Member but I must interrupt. The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Madam Speaker, I am indeed pleased that I have the opportunity to be involved in this debate this afternoon. I will take this opportunity to be perhaps somewhat more positive about the country in which we live than the Member who spoke previously. I would like to talk about our country's future and the capability of its citizens.

I do have a sense of responsibility, being a Member of this place, to share in the positive news about what is happening in Canada without dwelling continuously on the past days of previous administrations and the sort of problems we would have had to face should a Liberal—NDP coalition have continued. Fortunately for Canadians, that did not happen.

The night the Budget was tabled, the pundits labelled it dull, stand-pat and stay-the-course. The inference was not complimentary. However, I would suggest that there could not have been a greater compliment. We are staying the course because it is a strategy that works and has been proven to work. Why would we want to veer from a winning formula? Why would we want to return to the days of budget trickery and gimmickry that dazzled Canadians with seductive but ultimately costly programs, of promises and more promises? Why would we want to return to those days of sky-high unemployment, escalating inflation, crippling interest rates, unprecedented deficit growth, plummeting dollar values, declining economic growth and crumbling investor confidence? Why would we want to do that? It is a stay-the-course Budget which allows individuals, along with the business community, to know that the solid record of progress will continue and will provide for a stronger, more competitive, more prosperous and more innovative Canada.

When this Government came into office, the Minister of Finance outlined the Government's commitment to moving Canada away from a decade of soaring government deficits, rising unemployment and sluggish uncertain growth. The Government was committed to taking the lead in economic renewal. However, the Minister of Finance warned that renewal would not come quickly, nor would it be easy. There are no quick fixes. It would have to be undertaken in a deliberate, well thought out program. The Minister of Finance issued the challenge. We must put our fiscal house in order. We must redefine the role of Government so it provides a better framework for growth and job creation. We must develop policies that will foster higher investment, greater innovation and increased international competition. We must do these things in a manner which is fair, open and consistent with the spirit of Canadianism.

Three-and-a-half years later, Canadians are enjoying the benefits outlined in the economic agenda of November, 1984. That agenda set the course for the economic renewal and revitalization that this nation has witnessed and been a part of since that period.

This Government took office and took hold of an economy that was—my colleague from St. John was rather kind, I think, when he said it was almost out of control. I will not be quite as kind. I will say that it was out of control. All Canadians have enjoyed greater prosperity since that time. In my home Province of New Brunswick, a total of 33,000 jobs have been created since 1984. I am confident that under this Government and the steady hand of the Minister of Finance, the significant job creation in New Brunswick will continue.

This Government has more good news for New Brunswickers. In December, 1987, in the neighbouring constituency of the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) the inflation rate in Saint John was only 3.7 per cent, below the national average of 4.2 per cent for the same period. That is significant. If my colleagues opposite do not think it is, then they should go to Saint John and ask Saint Johners how significant or insignificant they think it to be.

The personal disposable incomes of New Brunswickers increased in 1986 by 4.4 per cent. It is expected that they will increase by 6.4 per cent when the 1987 figures are released.

The number of families living below the poverty line has decreased in New Brunswick from 18.5 per cent to 15.5 per cent, a three point reduction between 1984 and 1985. That is in just one year's time. We know that it is still too high, but the Government has taken initiatives to deal with that intolerable situation with which we were left from previous administrations. The programs are working well.

The list of good news is long. The amount of prosperity and good news is directly proportionate to the depth of the Government's commitment to New Brunswick and to all of Atlantic Canada. It is important to note the Government's commitment to regional economic development in Atlantic Canada. This commitment was reinforced in the Budget.

Throughout the tenure of the present administration it has been a priority.

The most significant initiative to date is the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. This new agency has its headquarters in Atlantic Canada. It is administered by Atlantic Canadians. It makes only good sense that those who deal with the problems which are unique to our region be people who know what the problems are. After all, when one's car breaks down one does not take it to Oshawa or Detroit to have it fixed. One has it serviced nearby where there is a competent level of expertise and ability to deal with the problems. We have a good sense Government, and this is a good sense Budget.

ACOA will handle a total of $1.05 billion over five years to encourage small and medium-size businesses and industry in the Atlantic region. ACOA is not the only initiative that has been taken by the Government in Atlantic Canada. There is in addition to it the Atlantic Enterprise Program, the Atlantic Opportunities Program, Enterprise Cape Breton, the economic and regional development agreements, six of which are in New Brunswick alone, plus initiatives for forestry, agriculture, energy, fisheries, investment, mining and small craft harbours. This is only the tip of the iceberg in terms of regional development in our part of the country.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy is working to create new training and employment opportunities in the Atlantic provinces. Jobs, jobs, jobs are indeed being created.

In 1984 the Government committed itself to social justice. A high priority of the Government was to restructure the tax system. The tax reform initiatives announced in 1987 have gone a long way to accomplishing this commitment. Again, in a part of the country where regional disparity has too long been a way of life this is significant.

There are now some 86,000 low-income earners who will no longer pay any income tax. There will be in excess of 875,000 low and middle-income earners in Atlantic Canada who will pay less income tax because of the tax reform system. We never hear about these measures from the socially conscious and aware people who apparently maintain that these people do not exist. Collectively, New Brunswickers will pay 5.8 per cent less of the tax burden on a national scale. This is good news for New Brunswickers and for Atlantic Canadians.

Income tax cuts will mean more money left in the pockets of Atlantic Canadians. The more money that we have the more we will spend and invest. The more money we spend and invest the more that will remain in Atlantic Canada to create the economic growth and the much needed jobs that the Government is committed to working toward.

Like all things everything cannot be perfect. We cannot have everything that we would like to have. In this respect I would like to leave one thought with the Government. It is with reference to some concerns that my constituents have expressed about the 15 per cent tax on investment income. Canadians believe that all individuals and corporations must pay their fair share of taxes. Obviously, that is a primary consideration of the tax reform proposals. Unfortunately, what is happening now is that many Canadians feel themselves paying the cost of this effort. The modification of the original proposal was an apparent effort to meet both the needs of Canadians and the need for tax fairness. However, many people in my constituency of Fundy—Royal continue to appeal to the Minister to withdraw the investment income tax proposal in order to protect the future value of their insurance policies. I urge the Government to consider seriously some way of ensuring that these people's fears are allayed.

Allow me to stray for a moment, Madam Speaker, to the free trade agreement. This historic agreement is the fulcrum of Canada's prospects for our continued economic prosperity in the future. This trade agreement will provide better and expanded opportunities for economies of scale in Canadian production and marketing. The Canada-U.S. trade agreement will stimulate innovation, greater productivity and lead Canadians to a lower-cost economy. My main concern as a parent with the Canada-U.S. trade agreement is that it will result in secure future growth and better opportunities for our children and their children. What opponent of this agreement is prepared to stand in his or her place to deny their children the right to a better future?

New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces have long been denied access to their traditional and geographic trading partners along the Atlantic seaboard. As a matter of fact it was in the days of the national policy that we were first denied this natural trading route. Since then it has been a downhill slide for Atlantic Canada.

Our geographic natural partners along the Atlantic seaboard have been denied to us for too long. The New England market is vast. With unimpeded access to such a market Atlantic Canadians will be able to enjoy once again the prosperity of times past. We in Atlantic Canada should be clamouring for the heads of those who would deny us access to our traditional and geographic trading partners. We have been suffering for too long the consequences of such measures as countervails on softwood lumber, the proposed countervail on potash and the countervails on fish and potatoes. The list goes on and on. Those who would deny us the opportunity to rid ourselves of those millstones around our necks should indeed go to New Brunswick, to Atlantic Canada, to suggest that we as Atlantic Canadians should not have these opportunities. I would welcome the opportunity of having somebody go into the region to say so.

Exports from New Brunswick to the United States accounted for 15 per cent of employment in New Brunswick and a total of $2.6 billion annually.

Atlantic Canada has been battered in the war of protectionism between Canada and America on many different occasions. The workers and businessmen of the region want an end to this. They want that end to be the culmination of a Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

All Canadians want the 120,000 new jobs that this agreement will bring about by as early as 1993. That is just the tip of the iceberg. There are a great many studies in the works and others which are in place which suggest that eventually we will be looking at something more significant and substantial than just 120,000 jobs.

Canadians want their real family incomes to increase by $1,800 annually as a result of this deal. Canadian consumers want better quality. They want better selection and lower prices. They want the U.S.-Canada trade agreement.

The implementation of this deal will cost Canadians little. It will take courage and a strong commitment to a better future and the desire to see our nation strong. That is all that Canadians will have to pay for this agreement. It is a small price.

I suggest that in 20 years from now we in Canada will be hard pressed to find a single living soul including our socialist friends and their allies in the Liberal Party who will say that they were against the deal. The same was true with respect to the Auto Pact.

What is the reason for the prosperity? What is the cause for all of the good news in Atlantic Canada? The answer is a Government in control of its spending, a Government with its eye on the future, a Government that is in the process of changing the direction of the Canadian economy in order that it will meet the challenges of tomorrow's world. The Budget has shown Canadians that we are meeting our commitments of four years ago and that we are prepared to meet the challenges that the future will bring.

Since 1984 the Government has revitalized the private sector and restored fiscal responsibility to government financing. This has been accomplished by reducing the deficit from $38 billion in 1984 to $29.3 billion where it stands today. This is a tremendous achievement. In 1984 many Members on the opposition benches stated that we could not do it, but it has been done. The Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have done it, and we will continue along this path of slow but steady economic growth.

The deficit was only one problem that we inherited from the Liberals. Between 1980 and 1984 government spending had increased by some 14 per cent, which far exceeded the rate of inflation in the same period. Under the Liberals government spending doubled in a short period of five years.

This Government has managed to turn all of this around. In the first three years of our mandate we cut spending to 3.5 per cent, less than the rate of inflation. If we had not taken immediate action Canadians would have been faced today with an extra $100 billion more on our national debt.

It is because of this Government's steady hand over the past three years that we are able to announce an increase in government program spending of 4.3 per cent for the coming fiscal year. It is true that deficit reduction and economic growth will slow down in the coming year. We will continue to have growth and we will continue to trim the deficit.

The Government has been solidly committed to the strength of the Canadian economy and the future of the nation. As the Hon. Minister of Finance so aptly pointed out in his Budget Speech, Canada has done better than any other of the major industrialized nations. Canada is number one in economic growth. This is reflected in the growth of investment and in the creation of new industry and business across the country. Canada is number one in employment growth. The national average unemployment rate has fallen to 8.1 per cent in January from 11.7 per cent in September, 1984. In New Brunswick the unemployment situation that this Government inherited was considerably worse. In 1984 the unemployment rate in my home province was 16.2 per cent, which was intolerably high. Today I am pleased to report that this figure is down to 12.5 per cent. It is still too high, but there has been a real reduction of 3.7 percentage points. This is significant progress, progress that has led to the creation of 1.150 million jobs nationally since 1984 and 33,000 jobs in New Brunswick. These are good, well paying jobs, unlike those created by the quick fix band-aid program of Liberal make-work projects. Economic and employment growth were spread more evenly among the regions last year, and unemployment dropped in every province.

There is not much good news. Unfortunately, Atlantic Canadians have not been in a position to accept or absorb it all. The Opposition has stated that it is pledging to help the Atlantic region. But when it comes time to cast a vote for Atlantic prosperity in the House of Commons, suddenly the Opposition is whistling a different tune. In case my colleagues opposite have short memories, the NDP voted against the initial payment of $127 million designed for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The NDP voted against $17 million for Atlantic Canada's fisheries.

To add insult to injury, the socialist finance critic, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), was in Quebec not very long ago telling the shipyard workers, as my colleague from Saint John pointed out, that if the NDP were making the decisions, Montreal would have been allocated the second batch of frigates and not Saint John. I for one am glad that the NDP is not making the decisions. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, so are a lot of shipyard workers in Saint John, New Brunswick.

The NDP and that Hon. Member ought to be ashamed. The socialists think that they can pit region against region and then sop up votes from the aftermath. I can say that that will not work. New Brunswickers recognize the NDP for what it is. New Brunswickers will reject the NDP in the next election as they have done in past elections.

I would like to point out that my colleagues on the Liberal benches will be pleased to note that not one single person year of employment for the construction of the second batch of frigates will go to any Toronto shipbuilding yard. That is because they have been complaining bitterly and constantly about all of the jobs being allocated to Ontario. They must be pleased that not one single job of that contract will go to a Toronto shipbuilding yard.

There are many things that I want to say and deal with, but I see that my time is running short. I wish to close by saying that fostering and guiding economic renewal is not an easy, or, as we have seen, a popularity building achievement. Significant growth, job creation, economic stimulation, international competitiveness, and deficit reductions are simply not sexy issues. But they are issues that affect the social and fiscal fabric of every region of Canada.

This Government and the Finance Minister are to be commended for applying a fiscal strategy that is responsible and rewarding. Canadians can see the difference between policies determined by what is popular, and policies determined by what is right.

Mr. McKenzie: I wish to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett), for an excellent address. I always enjoy listening to him because his speeches are well researched and he has excellent technical material which is very important to the debate. I am glad that he touched on the debt. I would like to ask for his opinion on a couple of matters.

After reaching $29.8 billion in 1984-85, financial requirements are projected to drop to less than $10 billion by 1992-93. Relative to GDP, financial requirements will have dropped from 6.7 per cent in 1984-85 to 1.2 per cent in 1992-93. A mess like this cannot be turned around in four years.

We have to keep reminding the Canadian people who was the architect of the debt. When the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), became Finance Minister in 1972 there was a surplus of $700 million in the Treasury. By the time the Leader of the Opposition had finished as the Finance Minister the debt added up to $5 billion. That is what is known in Canada as the "Turner formula". Following Liberal Finance Ministers continued with the "Turner formula", and we ended up with this massive billion dollars of debt. We cannot forget to remind the people of Canada who was responsible for starting this mess in the first place.

The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal pointed out the progress that has been made in eastern Canada and in his Province of New Brunswick. I would like to get his opinion on what he thinks of the National Energy Program and the devastation that it did to western Canada. Here is what the Liberal Party and its NDP cohorts did to western Canada. In a recent edition of the Western Report it stated, "Ex-Liberal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde admits publicly for the first time that the purpose of the NEP was to prevent the West from growing too wealthy".

Can anyone imagine two political Parties working together to plot against the West? It was devastating. Small companies had to lay people off. At the time I read into the record all the firms in Quebec and Ontario that suffered from the National Energy Program. The Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) thinks it is a big joke.

Mr. Rossi: It is a big joke because you are against francophones. You are against Quebec. That's why it is a joke.

Mr. McKenzie: Marc Lalonde also stated, "Our proposal was to increase Ottawa's share appreciably so that the share of the producing provinces would decline significantly and the industry share would decline somewhat". Well, it declined the energy industry in the West. There were lay-offs in the West and it affected all types of firms in Quebec and Ontario. Now the Liberals and the New Democrats are opposing the free trade agreement which, when implemented, will bring untold wealth to western Canada.

I would like to ask a question of my hon. friend. The trade deal was not cooked up overnight in a kitchen. It has been studied to death. In November 1982, the then Liberal Government appointed a royal commission to study economic union and development prospects for Canada. Some three years and $24 million later the Macdonald Commission presented its report which overwhelmingly recommended that Canada pursue free trade with the United States. We cannot ignore a $24 million study.

In March 1974, the Liberal dominated Senate conducted a study in its foreign affairs committee of Canada-U.S. relations. Some eight years and over 100 witnesses later, the committee presented its report which overwhelmingly recommended that Canada pursue free trade with the United States.

How can we ignore these studies? It is incredible. Millions of dollars have been spent doing sound research, and political Parties say that it is no good. They do not know what they are talking about.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association and many business and agricultural groups support the free trade proposal as well. I should like to ask my hon. friend to whom he thinks we should be listening. Should we be listening to the detailed studies of the Senate committee and the Macdonald Commission, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, or the NDP?

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). I know that he has consistently and constantly over the years represented the West and his part of the country in a fair and balanced way.

I am astounded that during the course of his remarks to me a member of the Opposition should attempt to shout him down, imputing racist slurs against him—

Mr. Rossi: Right. He is a racist.

Mr. Corbett: I think that sort of behaviour should be intolerable in this place. Certainly that type of action does not enhance our reputation in the eyes of Canadians, nor should it.

In response to my hon. colleague's questions, I will attempt to deal with them as I recall them. There is no question that one of the most substantial or significant problems with which we as Canadians are faced today and must deal is the fact that over the past number of years, particularly prior to the current administration, we have been treated to a runaway spree of deficit financing primarily by a Liberal administration. As a result, tremendous and huge debts have built up.

I remind my hon. colleague that if one looks at the Budget Papers one will see that in 1984-85 we inherited $22.3 billion worth of public debt charges. If we take that particular amount and add it constantly over the four years we have been in control of the purse-strings, we will see that it totals some $88 billion. Let me point out that the figures of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who maintains that we have had an increase of $116.6 billion or 66 per cent in the last three and a half years, are not accurate. What we must do in fact is deduct the amount of debt we inherited on an annual basis from the Liberal administration, which amounts to some $88 billion. This means that we are faced with an increase of $28.6 billion. That is much more in line, particularly in view of the fact that we were committed to such programs as old age security, workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, and health care.

I well remember as an easterner the devastation of the National Energy Program. I well recall what took place, because we in Atlantic Canada had suffered for years under the intolerances of that particular administration. I recall when all investors were running as fast as they could get to the border, to head south of the border to the United States. I know what devastation the National Energy Program wrought on western Canadians and the fiscal irresponsibility, probably because of the very things which my hon. colleague has mentioned. I would not doubt at all that that was their intention. They have consistently ignored Atlantic Canada in the same way.

I remind my hon. colleagues opposite that back a short time ago they voted against an extra $7 million for Enterprise Cape Breton. The Liberal Members from that region should be downright ashamed of themselves. Indeed, that is what they did.

What else have they done? They have done several other things. Time and time again when they were in government they had opportunity to treat Atlantic Canada fairly. They expressed their lack of commitment to the Atlantic region by voting against the $17 million Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Program. What kind of answers do they have to that? They have nothing but racial slurs against my colleague on this side of the House, for which I give them no credit—

Mr. Rossi: Because it is true. He is a racist.

Mr. Corbett: It is an example of the sort of administration that we would have, should we ever be treated or mistreated to the opportunities of having such a Government back in place.

Mr. Rossi: He is anti-French.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is very difficult for the Chair right now not to hear words that are being exchanged in the House. Some of the allegations or accusations are not in the type of language which should be used in the House.

I would appreciate it very much if all Hon. Members were to refrain from name-calling. Even though some people may feel justified about such name-calling, it does not belong in the House, and the Chair will not turn a deaf ear to it.

The time for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to say a few words this afternoon on the Government's Budget Papers. As we see by looking at the document, it is very thin. It does not contain very much. It is in both official languages, so it is actually half as thin. The document does not say very much.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spoke a couple of weeks ago, he did not say very much. It almost seems like an accounting document, one that he could have easily tabled in the House, because it did not contain very much to help Canadians.

Over the past three and a half years taxes have increased dramatically, to some $22 billion for average citizens, whereas during the same period of time they have increased very little, if any, for corporations. That is fitting; that is what we thought the Tories would do. It is not what they said they would do. In the election campaign three and a half years ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he would have a great, new egalitarian society. However, when we look at this document and look at what has happened over the past three and a half years, we see what the Government is planning to do. What it has been doing in each statement is trying to pull the fabric of our nation apart, making a very rich section and a very poor section. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that it really creates two Canadas, a rich Canada and a poor Canada. That is what the Government has been about in this document which really does have many new changes, although I would like to talk a little bit about the changes later on.

Our real concern is the impact which this Budget and previous Budgets will have on Canadians. If we look at the taxes which have been imposed on Canadians since September, 1984, we find litany of regressive direct sales taxes, excise taxes, all of those taxes which hit low income people more than the high-income people. The whole tax reform is to bring down the income tax scales so that those in the high-income tax brackets will benefit and those in the low income brackets will benefit very little, if at all.

When the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance talk about taking 850,000 people off the tax rolls with a tax reform program, they fail to mention that practically one million Canadians have been put on tax rolls by tax increases imposed since 1984. Although this Budget is a very thin document, in this one year alone, 1988, the Government has imposed $2 billion worth of new taxes, most of them imposed on a regressive basis via sales tax excise taxes on gasoline and a whole host of other things.

If you glanced through the document you would say it is not bad, that only a 1 cent a litre tax on gasoline showed up. But if you look closely at the taxes applied in 1988, you will see different things coming from tax reform and from previous taxes which start January 1, 1988 and amount to $2 billion. I cannot do the calculation rapidly enough to give the exact across-the-board increase, but it is an extremely heavy load in this one year. There was the 1 cent a litre gasoline tax, which draws down $300 million. There was an additional sales tax of $300 million, which came into effect with this Budget. On top of that, on January 1 there is a 10 per cent tax on long distance phone calls amounting to $870 million.

I had a small businessman in the marina business contact me about that and he said it amounted to something like $80 or $90 in additional taxes on his small business which commenced at the start of the year when business is slow. There is a 12 per cent tax on wallpaper, which will amount to about $60 million. From the 1985 Budget there is deindexation of the income tax scales, which add another $750 million. Even though the document is very thin it rides very hard on low-income people and on senior citizens because practically every tax is a regressive excise or sales tax. There is very little lifted from the ordinary low income Canadians in this exercise.

It is interesting that in the calculation which our caucus did, the average family with an income of $32,000 a year will pay about $1,200 per year more this year than it did in 1984. This calculation is based on all of the increases which have taken place during the last three years. The tax load has been especially onerous for the average family. In northern Ontario the increase in gasoline taxes, which amount to 5 cents a litre or 23 cents a gallon since 1984, we consider to be a special tax on northern Ontario. I am sure areas in western Canada and in the north consider it a special tax placed on their regions because of the longer distances people have to travel. That 1 cent a litre tax increase generates some $300 million, and in the Budget Papers it was set exactly beside the loss of revenues and tariffs in the Canada-U.S. trade deal.

The Prime Minister talked about a free trade deal. If you look at it you find that the tariffs which are reduced by some $400 million in the first fiscal year of the free trade deal cost some $460 million. In the first three months of 1989 it will cost some $55 million and the new taxes generated from this 1 cent a litre extra will little more than cover the loss of those tariffs.

The Government's anticipation of increased jobs over the first five years of the free trade deal are estimated at 120,000 jobs or 24,000 a year. That was calculated on the basis that the tariffs would be lifted, and over the five years it would amount to some $2 billion. In fact, if you look closely now that this gas tax has been imposed, you will find that there will be no reduction in taxation for the ordinary Canadian. In fact what Canadians would pay less in tariffs they will pay more in gasoline taxes.

Certainly over the 10 year period Canadians will pay a great deal more, perhaps $700 million or $800 million more. But there is one difference. Tariffs, whether on poultry meat or a seasonal tariff on tinned fruit and vegetables produced in the Niagara area or in the Okanagan Valley, help protect Canadian industry, Canadian agriculture and Canadian jobs, whereas the excise tax placed on gasoline is a straight dead weight.

For the sake of those who might have forgotten how much additional taxes have been imposed since 1984, we should look at all the indirect tax increases. We have had a 25 per cent increase in sales tax from 9 to 12 per cent at a cost of $3 billion extra. We had a tax for candy, soft drinks and fast foods imposed in 1985 and 1987 of $460 million. I have already mentioned the wallpaper and paint tax of $60 million which started January 1. If we look at the gasoline taxes, we see an addition of over $2 billion during the three and a half year period. There have been a rash of taxes relating to alcohol, tobacco and so on. In any event, the whole tax regime has been to grind down those in low-income groups.

One decision made last year in the tax reform package was the decision by the Minister of Finance to remove the special provision with regard to the mine depletion allowance and flow-through shares. This mechanism, which was put in place in 1984, raised some $500 million or $600 million a year for mining exploration and development in areas like northern Ontario. There will be a rally here on March 1. Municipalities from all over northern Ontario, northern Quebec and the northern parts of Canada that depend on mining exploration and development will emphasize to the Government what a tremendous disadvantage the loss of the flow-through shares and the earned depletion allowance will be for the mining industry.

If those mechanisms for carrying out exploration and development are not in place, we will not have new mines or the job opportunities that are created by those new mines. I still hope that the Minister will change his mind and make a decision to reinstate the earned depletion allowance and the flow-through shares.

I see that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is here today. I know that he would want to support me in that. In resource areas like northern Ontario and Western Arctic, we depend on mining operations to provide jobs. We in Canada have not discovered many new mines in the last 10 or 15 years. If we stop providing these incentives for investment in exploration and development, of course we will not discover any more at all.

As well, I want to look at the situation in agriculture. I have long been concerned about the situation of agriculture in Canada. We were heartened to hear the Prime Minister indicate back in December that he would put some $400 million or $500 million in additional funds into the Farm Credit Corporation. As Hon. Members know, agriculture is facing one of the most difficult and trying times in history. Of the 170,000 farmers who have economic-sized farms, farms with sales of over $20,000 a year, some 40,000 farmers are in serious financial difficulty or are totally insolvent.

We have been calling on the Government for over a year now to get serious about this problem and to take some action to put the Farm Credit Corporation on a sound financial basis. We learned last April 30 that the Farm Credit Corporation had a negative equity of $124 million. That had changed from a positive equity position of $125 million in the last two or three years. We are told that by the end of this fiscal year, 1987-88, that negative equity position will be close to $300 million.

We were flabbergasted to learn when the Estimates were tabled this week that absolutely no funds had been provided to the Farm Credit Corporation in the way of appropriations. Surely the Government ought to take seriously its responsibility to the rural parts of Canada. The agriculture industry is one of the top industries for employment. It permeates the entire country. Surely the Government should have taken some action to restore the financial viability of this Crown corporation.

At the meeting of the Agriculture Committee this morning, we spoke to the new Chairman who is charged with the responsibility of establishing a recovery program. He did not know either why there was no funding provided for the Farm Credit Corporation. There is much concern across Canada that the Government may be trying to privatize it or wind it up. We do not know. We do know that the new Chairman is saying that the corporation will be hard on farmers and will force them to pay up when they are delinquent on their accounts. This is happening at a time when many farmers have been going through the worst period in history. The only explanation that seems reasonable is that the Government is refusing to provide this funding to the Farm Credit Corporation so that the corporation will go after the farmers and make them pay up, even though they may have to deprive their families of benefits or even of a decent living.

Those are some of the concerns I have as I go through the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance a couple of weeks ago. I think there is so much concern because people are very uncertain about tax reform. We have heard that the income tax scales will be reduced and that in fact there will be a slight reduction in income taxes sometime in July or August of this year, a reduction of $150 to $200 for the average taxpayer. Comparing that to extra taxation through all kinds of regressive sales taxes in the past three and a half years, it does not seem like very much. There will be a reduction of $150 to $200 with an increase of $1,200. We know that the other shoe must eventually fall.

The Government is planning to bring in a new super-deluxe national sales tax which will apply not only to traditional goods and commodities but will also supposedly apply to all kinds of services. It will apply at various stages along the production of commodities. It seems to me that if tax reform had been done on a fair, equitable and honest basis, it should have been done completely. There should have been a comprehensive program so that people would not have to wonder what will happen with that sales tax increase which will supposedly take place later this fall or in the coming year. That could provide for a double whammy. Again, a sales tax is a regressive tax, one that hits everyone on an equal basis, regardless of income and ability to pay.

The Government missed an opportunity to come completely clean with Canadians in this Budget. We know that there has been massive new taxation. We know that there is new taxation coming that will apply to all kinds of services as well as to commodities. The Minister of Finance really missed an opportunity to help the regions, to provide new funding for northern Ontario, Atlantic Canada, the West and some areas in the North. He missed a chance to reinstate flow-through shares and earned depletion allowances. As well, he missed the opportunity to provide some redress to low-income families who are suffering from a massive increase in regressive sales and excise taxes. That is why we think the Budget was a missed opportunity to help the slow-growth regions of Canada and to help low-income families.

Mr. Scowen: Madam Speaker, the previous speaker brought to the attention of the House the problems with the Farm Credit Corporation. I am a farmer. The policies of the previous Government were what gave me the inspiration to run in the election. I saw what that Government did with its policy of a capital gains tax and building that tax into the cost of the land. The cost of land went up and up and up and the Farm Credit Corporation encouraged people to take the land on at these very high prices. Now, of course, we have the problem of collecting and redistributing the money owed.

I would like to know from the Hon. Member why he supported this kind of capital gains tax which caused the problem in the first place and what his solution is to the bind the FCC finds itself in today? It seems that his way of solving the problem is irresponsibly to pour more money out. It appears that the Hon. Member would like us to follow the same pattern as the previous Government which is what got the farmers into the problem in the first place.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen), one of the most distinguished members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, has raised this matter of capital gains. Really the problem has been of a capital loss over the last three or four years. The net asset value of the Canadian farming industry has dropped from $116 billion to around $90 billion or $95 billion. The Government has been reluctant to put in place any mechanism to deal with this problem.

The Chairman of the FCC ticked off the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) this morning by saying in committee that one of the big problems had been that the Minister brought in this program of no foreclosure on FCC mortgages, implying that he did so without putting in place any mechanism to restructure the debt. That policy was in place for I guess 18 months or so. Now, belatedly, the Prime Minister has announced that he plans to provide some $500 million, in either loans or assistance, to the FCC over the next three years. I think everyone at the meeting of the committee this morning was saying, well, we know the Prime Minister announced that; the Chairman is criticizing the Minister for the moratorium on foreclosures; putting the two together, you would ask if the Government is going to provide this extra assistance, why did it not do it in the fall of 1985 when the Minister put the moratorium into place and provide some kind of proactive mechanism to assist the large number of farmers who are facing the loss of their farms?

We know that we now have 15,000 FCC loans in arrears. We know the debt is spiraling up. If the Government had taken some action two or three years ago similar to what it is proposing now, we might have been able to save some of those thousands of farmers who are facing the loss of their land because of low commodity prices brought on by the American Farm Bill. It is unfortunate that the mechanisms put in place by the Government were so inadequate as not to save some of those farmers.

The Hon. Member has raised a very important question, we just wish the Government had brought in mechanisms to reschedule that debt or set it aside in such a way as to save more of the young farmers. According to all estimates, given the Prime Minister's estimate of a write-off of $100 million a year for the next three years, this money represents several thousand farmers. The unfortunate part is that often they are our youngest and best farmers, our most technically advanced, those who could have made a great contribution in the years ahead. They will probably not have that opportunity any more.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, it was heartening to hear the Hon. Member support the flow-through mechanism for funneling money into mineral exploration in those parts of Canada dependent for their economic well-being on the mineral industry. That concept is certainly supported on this side of the House and any debate there is over the matter concerns the exact terms of what should be in a flow-through scheme. However, the Hon. Member will be familiar with the position taken by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on behalf of the NDP when he said their Party, were they ever to gain office, would get rid of flow-through funding completely. They see it only as assistance to fat cats on Bay Street.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I do not believe Members are entitled to make comments like that when the position of our Party has been made very clear, both by my Leader in Rouyn—Noranda, and by myself in various places. It is the Conservative Party which is taking away flow-through shares and not putting anything in their place. My Leader will be speaking to a conference on flow-through shares next week and the Hon. Member should stop uttering falsehoods in the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order. However, I think all Hon. Members will realize that the Hon. Member may be reacting a little strongly in his language. I think it may be wiser for all of us to call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—USE OF DEPO-PROVERA FOR CONTRACEPTIVE PURPOSES/REQUEST THAT REPORT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO CONCERNED WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, on May 12, 1987, I raised women's concerns regarding approval of the drug Depo-Provera for use in Canada as a contraceptive. Women have had serious questions about both the long and short-term effects of this drug, how it will be marketed and for whom it will be prescribed. When I questioned the Minister he suggested I should not ask questions but should rely upon him and the regulatory process to solve such matters. Advocacy on behalf of concerned women he considered to be political interference.

The information I received today from the Department of Health and Welfare leads me to say thank heaven for political interference. Finally the Minister has been forced to listen to the views of 64 women's groups which have demanded that he exercise caution in approving Depo-Provera for birth control purposes. I am pleased to learn that he has finally delayed approval of the use of this drug. Officials have withdrawn their earlier approval and are now studying the implications of new data from Costa Rican studies. It appears that political interference by concerned women and their advocates in Parliament has been effective.

There is a long history of negative experiences in the use of drugs and birth control devices which have been marketed by brand name manufacturers and have often even passed Health and Welfare regulations. Let me give you a few quick examples.

DES, a synthetic form of estrogen given to many pregnant women to prevent miscarriage, has had a litany of medical and reproductive problems for some daughters and also sons whose mothers took this drug. The thalidomide story will never be forgotten. The Dalkon shield intra-uterine device causes infections often leading to hysterectomies or sterilization. Over 300,000 women have filed claims for injuries. Other UIDs also have disadvantages and risks. The birth control pill used by 28 per cent of Canadian women can result in increased risk of blood clots, strokes, heart disease, and hypertension as well as less serious side effects.

Other methods of contraception such as rhythm, condoms, diaphragms, foams, and jellies are safer but not as reliable as IUDs in preventing unintended pregnancies.

This deplorable history of failure in a society of high technology shows how little priority the Government has given to research and education in the very important field of family planning. It is deplorable that Canadian women, as a result, have been forced to turn to irreversible sterilization as the most common method of birth control. Men are also now considering this method and, while it is safer, it also is not guaranteed irreversible.

Men and women require safe, reliable birth control which is not intrusive. This should be a priority of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Instead of expanding the family planning division, it was closed in 1985 and funds for family planning have been cut by 50 per cent since the late 1970s down to less than $1 million.

The responsibility for controlling fertility must be shared between the sexes. Women must be relieved of the heavy burden of total responsibility and the risk of unsafe and unreliable methods of birth control. Government must priorize research into this area and provide more funds for education. Research into safe, effective methods of contraception is long overdue. This should be a government priority.

The prevention of unwanted pregnancies is the shared responsibility of men and women. It is far better to have positive education programs in schools, family planning programs in communities, and access to safe methods of contraception than for women to have to make the very traumatic decision to have an abortion.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, in response to a question on May 12, 1987, from the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) I wish to provide the House with information regarding the drug Depo-Provera.

Depo-Provera, an injectible hormonal drug, is a product of the Upjohn Company of Canada and has been marketed in Canada since 1961. The drug is only available with a physician's prescription. It is indicated for hormonal therapy and treatment of endometriosis—a painful condition involving the lining of the uterus—in non-pregnant women, as well as for the treatment of advanced breast and uterine cancer.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is evaluating data in a new drug submission for Depo-Provera for which new claims are being made.

The Member mentioned in her comments tonight the political interference which has taken place in order to make the Minister act. That is the furthest thing from the truth, as she should know. In fact, the Department has continued and will continue to study this drug. It is the work and results of the Department on which the Minister is making his decisions.

As indicated earlier, the drug has been available for many years for other purposes both as an oral preparation under the name Provera and as an injectible preparation where its long action characteristic has been found very useful.

The new indications which are currently under review relate to hormonal therapy and conception control. As Members of the House may know, this drug has been used for years in many countries in Europe and Asia for conception control. This is the first time the drug has been proposed by the sponsor for use in Canada as a birth control agent.

Under the requirements of the food and drug regulations, the manufacturer is required to submit evidence of the safety and effectiveness of Depo-Provera for these new indications before a notice of compliance is granted to them.

In order to hear the views of interested groups regarding fertility control, a series of meetings were held in six Canadian cities, Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, in September 1986. During these meetings, a panel appointed by the Health Protection Branch heard presentations regarding fertility control issues in general. Some individuals commented on the use of Depo-Provera for fertility control. These representations are being reviewed as part of the drug evaluation process.

The expert advisory committee on reproductive physiology, an outside committee of medical specialists, and the Department of National Health and Welfare, are evaluating all available safety data on Depo-Provera. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has repeatedly stated that full examination of all the available evidence must take place before there is any approval of this drug for the above-mentioned new indications. At the present time, Depo-Provera is not cleared for the claim of conception control.

NATIVE PEOPLES—GENEVA RESOLUTIONS ON TREATMENT OF INDIGENOUS PEOPLES/REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS BE INSTRUCTED TO SUPPORT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, earlier this week I asked a question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) regarding Canada's position on certain resolutions dealing with indigenous peoples and indigenous rights. These resolutions are on the agenda of the current session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

I asked the question this week because my office had received some very disturbing information from Geneva, from persons who are present there, that Canada has not been encouraging and supporting the passage of these resolutions. I might say that they have already been approved by the Subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities and are scheduled to go to the full commission very shortly. They call for draft international standards on the treatment of indigenous peoples, second, the establishment of a study into treaties between nation states and indigenous peoples, of which we have many in Canada, and, finally, the designation of the year 1992 as the international year of indigenous rights.

These resolutions are enormously significant to the world's aboriginal peoples. They have been working toward them for several years now and the fact that they are on the agenda of the Human Rights Commission is a sign of the importance that other UN bodies place on these resolutions. If these resolutions do not receive approval when the vote is called, which is imminent—it could be later today it could be tomorrow—then years of work by the indigenous peoples of the world will be severely set back. It could be a two year or three year delay before such resolutions could again be considered. In my view, that would be tragic, and doubly tragic if a great nation like Canada were in some way instrumental in having these resolutions defeated.

Canada has the opportunity to play a positive and very constructive world leadership role with respect to these resolutions. Here in Canada we have tried as best we can through the constitutional process to give recognition to aboriginal rights, yet undefined. We have the treaties I referred to, but their implementation and significance have not been fully appreciated by the Government of Canada, nor the people of Canada. If there was an international discussion, I believe that the clarification coming from this international discussion could be of enormous benefit here in our country.

The information I received directly in a phone call from Geneva was that Canadian officials were actively lobbying to have these resolutions defeated. I do not have the time now to specify the tactics that they were using. However, I must report to you, Madam Speaker, that they were distressing, to say the least.

On Tuesday I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) if he would meet with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and send a strongly worded directive to the officials in Geneva to desist from this lobbying practice against these resolutions and, in fact, to get behind them and to support them.

Today I received some heartening information from Geneva. The officials met with the Cree delegates who are there and apparently they have had a change of mind. They have indicated that there has been some sort of misunderstanding and, in fact, they are now prepared to get behind these resolutions and see them approved. In fact, with respect to the one on treaties, they want to see it expanded and improved. That is very good news, and we were most heartened.

However, this afternoon when my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), put a question to the Minister of State for Indian Affairs (Mr. Valcourt), he gave an answer which seemed to suggest that the old policy of delaying and holding up these resolutions is still in effect. Thus we have a difficulty here that I would like the Parliamentary Secretary or the spokesman for the Government to clarify. Either the Cree in Geneva who met with officials this morning have been misled or the Minister of State was given the wrong information, a bad briefing, and what he conveyed to the House is not correct. He is probably not responsible for that. I am not laying blame. However, it is a contradiction and it needs to be clarified.

Let me conclude by saying that the Canadian Council of Churches has strongly supported these resolutions. It has communicated this to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I conclude by quoting what the Canadian Council of Churches has said. It said:

> Canada's support for this United Nation's Human Rights Commission initiative will demonstrate to the international community and to the citizens of Canada that your Government is indeed committed to the protection of aboriginal rights.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Canadian position at the United Nations regarding indigenous rights is clear. The Canadian delegation, headed by Mr. Gordon Fairweather, will speak on this topic tomorrow or Monday.

Canada strongly supports the resolution endorsing the continued efforts of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in developing global standards in the area of indigenous rights. We recognize that the core of the agreed mandate of the Working Group is universal standard-setting.

We are also in favour of broadening and strengthening the draft resolution which calls for an examination of treaties between states and indigenous populations. As in other areas of international human rights, we believe that studies and investigations must be based on objective universal criteria. Unfortunately, the phraseology of the current draft resolution on the proposed treaty study, as presently worded, does not meet this test.

On the basis of an arbitrary criterion—the existence of a treaty—such a study would focus only on the small number of indigenous populations which have treaty relationships with their Governments. A significant portion of the native community in Canada and the vast majority of the world's indigenous populations would be excluded from this study regardless of the conditions in which they live. We are not in favour of excluding native populations, whether in Canada or abroad, just because they do not have a treaty relationship with their states. To do so would not be consistent with our commitment to human rights world-wide. In addition, such a narrow study would divert attention and resources from the main task of the working group, which is universal standard-setting.

We have various types of arrangements with our own native populations. We have aboriginal treaty rights enshrined in our Constitution. We have under way comprehensive land claims negotiations. We believe that some of our arrangements, such as the James Bay Agreement, may be models for other countries. We do not want to exclude any of these arrangements from examination on the basis of a narrow, technical criterion. We want a broad study based on clear standards and objective universal criteria that would study all arrangements—legal, practical and de facto as well as treaties—under which indigenous people live world-wide. This is the direction currently being taken by the Canadian delegation in Geneva.

With respect to other resolutions now on the table at the commission regarding aboriginal issues, Canada has not taken a position. As Members will be aware, Canada is an observer at the commission, and we therefore believe that it is the responsibility of the 43 members of the commission to assess the merits of those texts and to act accordingly.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there are some who have suggested that, given the lack of any really significant initiatives in the Budget introduced recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), it was introduced simply because a promise was made that a Budget would be provided during each February; because it had to be done it was done and therefore it did not contain very much.

There are also those who say that in terms of the usual pattern of election Budgets this one was a missed opportunity for the Government. It was in fact a missed opportunity. It was a missed opportunity to be fair. It was a missed opportunity to provide for the future. It was a missed opportunity to be fair because, as all Canadians know, we have a tax system that still lacks fairness. We have a tax system that still has large elements of regressiveness in it. We have a tax system in which the rich seem bound not to have to pay as much as the very poor. We have a tax system in which many corporations go from year to year without paying any tax.

We find that this year, one more time, that the loss in tariffs as a result of a free trade agreement will amount to some $300 million. We have as a consequence, one might infer, the introduction of a tax on gasoline of an additional 1 cent per litre that will cost the average family around $300 additional per year. Once again, it is the little guy who will pay the biggest share of a new tax for a purpose that the average elector has not had an opportunity to approve.

I would note that down our way Canadians often go to Detroit to buy gasoline. When one takes into account the level of taxation on both sides of the border it is true that the tax rate on Canadian gasoline is much higher than it is in the United States, even though we ought to have an advantage in that area of cost of energy. It is also true that, even if one takes into account the differences in taxation, the price of gasoline is still higher in Canada as compared to the United States.

If one considers the much vaunted tax reform that the Government has introduced, one finds that in spite of all, the average Canadian family of four is still paying $1,000 more than such a family did before the Government came to power. Of course, apart from the element of fairness there is the element of dishonesty. We know that the Government has sales tax changes in mind which will increase the regressive elements in the system. What is more, the lower income and the middle income family will be hurt again.

Of course, you know, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to the element of fairness we have pointed out that there are a number of corporations, some 60,000 indeed, which have managed not to pay any tax at all. The Government has rejected our proposition that there should be a minimum tax on corporations. This is not a radical proposition. It is a proposition which was accepted by the socialist Reagan Government of the United States. It is something that certainly could be emulated here.

When we talk about unfairness, missed opportunity, and the lack of regard for the future, we have to take a look at what the Government has done in the area of regional development. It is true that the Government has articulated a notion that there ought to be a measure of independence and regional control over economic development as in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, in the Western Diversification Fund, and the initiatives in northern Ontario. When we take a close look at those initiatives, the element of local control is lacking.

More important, if one takes a look at what has been done in Atlantic Canada since the Government came to power, and one takes into account the increases provided in this Budget, it is only going to have returned to it 20 per cent of the funds that the federal Government was previously providing to Atlantic Canada in the way of regional transfers.

There are other elements in terms of future economic development that ought to be attended to. Two years ago the Federation of Municipalities of Canada proposed that some additional $12 billion be provided for the reconstruction of municipal infrastructure. This is a fundamental necessity throughout the country if we are to have the type of economic growth in the future that will provide the jobs that will make it possible for Canadians to prosper, and for us to perpetuate the system of social support and essentially civilized behaviour with respect to the treatment of our people that has grown to be a tradition in Canada.

When one looks at what the Government has been saying about its success in providing jobs, I think that most Canadians will realize that that success has left us all with but certain portions of Ontario without there being an equal and fair share in what job creation there has been.

Even when one talks about Ontario, and hears the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and various members of his Cabinet brag about how well things have gone in Ontario, usually they are referring to the golden horseshoe. When we talk about the need for reconstruction of municipal infrastucture and the need for such things as roads, sanitary sewers, and living up to our obligations on our international agreements with the United States with respect to cleaning up the Great Lakes, and one looks at the unemployment rate in Windsor which is at 14 per cent, we can see that even in Ontario there are areas where Government failures are quite evident.

When talking about missed opportunities with respect to the future, I would like to pay closer attention than perhaps others have done to some aspects of what I think are fundamental failures of the Government. I am fortunate to have youth, post-secondary education, and science and technology as my critic areas for the New Democratic Party.

It is interesting to note all the hoop-la propagated by the Government a couple of years ago during International Youth Year. The Government made huge undertakings to ensure that there would be increased opportunities, and increased opportunities for participation of youth. As Members know, we had a little game of musical chairs that occurred with respect to the youth Ministers, until we reached the point where we now have a youth Minister who pays little attention and says relatively little about youth. Meanwhile, those programs that are supposed to be directed toward youth seem to have lost their priority for the Government.

For example, in regard to the support for student employment under the Challenge programs, in actual funds and in real money allocated for the Challenge program, there has been a continuing drop since the Government came into power. In 1986 $210 million was provided for the summer Challenge program. It has now sunk to $180 million. Of course, with inflation there has been dramatically decreased funds for that purpose.

When one also considers the student loan programs for university students, one finds that we are in a situation where the funds available to be borrowed are inadequate. More important, the emphasis on loans has led to a situation where almost every university student finds himself or herself in the serious difficulty of a huge debt load. By the time of graduation, more than 50 per cent have to carry a debt load of some $10,000.

Yet apart from the organization of study committees, we did not see in the Budget any serious indication that the Government is prepared to engage in serious negotiation with the provinces to come up with a new commitment to support post-secondary education accessibility for our young people. We know that one of the most important elements of real economic growth, one of the real elements in future economic development and prosperity for this country is to ensure that there will be opportunity for all youth.

For the purpose of example, I focus on university and college students. But one can look at the whole scope of action by the Government in respect to increasing opportunity for our young people, and this means not only opportunity for young people but having within our population the capacity for highly qualified work and creativity to contribute to prosperity for the country. The Government has consistently seemed to be unable to address this issue with anything like the priority that it requires.

Let us look at the institutions that our young people are entering with the hope that they may become qualified for future jobs. Through the words of the Prime Minister, the Government promised to improve such opportunity. Through the words of the Prime Minister the Government promised to ensure that the universities and colleges would produce the skilled workforce that we require. If one looks at the pattern one finds that the Government has not only failed to bring about progress, there has been a positive deterioration in the state of affairs. In fact, that has been the case not only since the Government took office, but for the last 10 years.

One thing is sure, when one compares Canada to the other nations against which we must compete, there is among them a higher percentage of participation in post-secondary education, in training, and in apprenticeship than is the case in Canada. Yet we know that the Government has taken away some $2 billion from universities and colleges in the form of transfer payments to the provinces. Over the last decade there has been an increase of 24 per cent in enrollment in universities and colleges, but there has been an 18 per cent decrease in the level of funds.

Our universities and colleges are in a state of deterioration. This fact has been documented in a variety of ways, ways that indicate that the situation is one in which accessibility has been decreased, either by increases in tuition fees, by setting new admission standards which are more exclusive, in the form of libraries lacking adequate numbers of books, in laboratories that do not have adequate equipment, in the form of university professors and college teachers with overburdening loads, or in the form of some of our best scientists leaving because they cannot function in a situation where those institutions in which they work are not being adequately provided for. We missed an opportunity to be fair, not only to those who want to have a university or college education, but to contribute to the future economic growth of our country.

With respect to post-secondary education we know that post-secondary institutions have a role in addition to merely teaching. They have a role in research and development. To the credit of the Government, in a variety of ways it has articulated the necessity for real investment in research and development. We can recall that the Prime Minister has pointed out, as so many have pointed out, that unless Canada contributes a good deal more of its Gross National Product to research and development, we must fail in the competition with other industrialized countries of the world. We will fail to mobilize adequately the resources and opportunities which our country presents to us for achieving greatness, as we can.

The Prime Minister promised that we would increase the rate of investment in research and development from 1.3 per cent to 2.5 per cent. Something must have happened somewhere along the line in the attempt to become major league. If one looks at the over-all record of the Government since it has come into power, one sees that the real expenditures on research and development by the Government have actually decreased because of failures in a number of areas.

Just in January the Prime Minister promised that $1.3 billion in new money would be provided for research and development, with the intimation that that would go toward the improvement of basic research in our universities, by providing more money for centres of excellence and for a national scholarship program. The curious thing is that of that $1.3 billion, only about $300 million has been accounted for.

Meanwhile, the Prime Minister's own National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, in the form of the Lortie report, said that basic research was in such a sorry state that we needed to have an immediate investment of a half billion dollars over two years to increase the fundings of granting councils in universities. There was nothing about that in the Budget, not a word.

Here was an advisory council of prestigious membership, with great promise, indicating the focus for the Government, yet a simple recommendation of an assurance of an additional half billion dollars over two years for granting councils, and a subsequent 1.5 per cent rate of increase over GNP growth in those grants, was completely ignored in the Budget.

If one considers Canada's record in research and development, we are tenth among OECD countries and the seventh among the Group of Seven. We need strong initiatives with respect to not only industrial research but to basic research, and both however have been failing.

The Minister responsible for industrial technology has indicated that research initiatives must be subject to market forces. It is true that industrial research should so respond, but I would say parenthetically that even with regard to industrial research the Government has failed. With respect to R and D tax credits we have all kinds of complaints coming from industry about the failure of the Government to provide a means by which those credits could be returned promptly. As a consequence, many small industries, quite willing to go into research and development, are finding their cash flows affected because the Government has taken as long as two years to process them.

The Government has failed with respect to creating opportunities for youth. It has failed with respect to funding of universities. It has failed with respect to an adequate approach to research and development policy apart from high rhetoric.

In other words, if one looks at such initiatives as the space agency, which is embroiled in all kinds of confusion right now because the Government cannot make decisions with respect to its location, and even though it may be true that the Government has increased the amount of funding for the space program, one sees that it has not adequately dealt with the significant impact of the cost overruns already projected for the space program on our over-all space initiative. The Government is gaining in the race in space, but it is falling far behind in its pace on the ground.

Let me just pause for 30 seconds to say the following about the Government's research and development policy. We are hooked into major initiatives on the part of Europe and the U.S.A. There is no doubt that there can be a significant technological pay-off by involving ourselves in the space enterprise, but recently we have been presented with a real opportunity for a major mission in science that would put Canada number one and would enable us to gain technological pay-offs like nothing else imaginable.

Why does the Government not lead the nation in the direction of our own national mission which would be unique around the world, and consider our capabilities and potential for building leadership in science and technology through the exploitation of hydrogen technology?

I am sorry that I cannot continue to speak about this matter, but I would ask the Government to examine more seriously a new mission, a unique mission, a mission different from that of any other country in the world which would provide for Canadian prosperity and development in the future.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have never heard so much bull in all my life.

Ms. Mitchell: Is that parliamentary language?

Mr. Redway: I think his comments could be characterized, I might say, as full of bull. I could spend 20 minutes dealing with each and every point the Hon. Member has raised, but unfortunately Your Honour will not give me that amount of time, so I would just like to comment on a number of them.

The first thing I can recall is that the Hon. Member referred to a great number of corporations that were not paying any taxes. In fact, as the Hon. Member knows, of the 60,000 corporations which he and his Party talk about as not paying any taxes, about 3,500 of them are large corporations. Of those 3,500, most if not all of them are not paying taxes because of losses in previous years and, under the tax laws, they have the right to recoup those losses before they start paying taxes. Many of those corporations are in the Hon. Member's riding. The balance of those corporations are small and medium sized ones.

Is the Hon. Member really saying that he wants small and medium sized corporations to be wiped out, to go into bankruptcy, to lay off all their workers, just so the Hon. Member can say that everybody is paying taxes whether or not they have the money to do it?

Second, he talked about the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. He said that a couple of years ago it presented a plan for the federal Government to pay a lot of money to help the Federation in paying for infrastructure in those cities. I have corresponded and have had discussions with the Federation in that regard, and it had to admit that the economic study it did at that time did not stand up to analysis. The Federation promised that it was doing another economic study with which it would come back to me to justify its claims. That was two or so years ago, and I have not heard from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities since. It has not produced that report or economic analysis to justify the claims it was making.

I see that you are giving me the "hup to", Mr. Speaker. I could go on and on forever. The Hon. Member said that the Government should be fair. I just say to him: "Be fair yourself in the comments you are making".

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to find my colleague becoming so agitated as to use language coming very close to unparliamentary. What he just said would grow a considerable crop itself.

With respect to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and the precision of its estimates of the needs of municipalities, that may, indeed, be open to question. I will not challenge the Hon. Member's proposition that there was some inaccuracy in its projection. But there can be no denying the needs of the cities of this country. I did not hear the Hon. Member deny that the municipalities of Canada are faced with considerable tax difficulties in getting the resources to do the jobs they are expected to do. I did not hear him deny that the burden has been made more difficult by the policies of the Government in ensuring that municipalities have the funds available to them and on the basis of federal initiatives that would allow them to do the jobs they are expected to do.

More seriously, I did not hear the Hon. Member suggest that some poor devil who was unemployed, who might have been unemployed for four or five years, should have been forgiven his taxes for the next five years. I did not hear the Member address the most significant elements of what I had to say in this Chamber. The Government has not come to grips with the future. The Government has failed to have a research and development policy that will have the impact it ought to have on science and technology, with the creation of jobs all over the nation.

Nor did I hear the Hon. Member object to my assertion that the Government has failed to provide adequate funds to the regions so the regions could have the opportunity to undertake initiatives to create jobs so they would have as fair a part of the economy of Canada as Ontario has had.

The Hon. Member had all kinds of objections to what I said, but he did not object to the very fundamental of what I had to say, namely, that the Government has failed in this Budget to meets its responsibilities for taking initiatives to gain more prosperity for the nation.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will remember that approximately two years ago the Government cut the Katimavik program for Canadians, a program aimed at providing a national service for youth in Canada, also providing an opportunity for those young people who had a hard time adjusting to the labour market who needed some new type of supervised experience to adjust to the labour market. The Government has not replaced Katimavik with anything, although the Government said it would have some new kind of program of that nature.

The Hon. Member is the youth critic for his Party. Could he tell us if he has observed whether there is still a need in this country for some kind of national service program for youth and/or a program to help youth with difficulties adjusting to the labour market? From my observation such a program is still necessary. The Hon. Member comes from a different part of the country and dealing with a different group of people. I would like to know about his experience and the need for such a program which was cut by the Government two years ago.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that in the course of my speech I came to realize that there were so many things which the Government has failed to do I found myself having to talk extremely fast to get in all its failures in 20 minutes. I did not have an opportunity, it is true, to mention Katimavik, but Katimavik is only part of the problem.

As I alluded to, a couple of years ago during the International Youth Year the Government promised that it would develop a policy for youth. The New Democratic Party proposed a coherent policy for youth. The Senate made suggestions about an over-all policy for youth and the Government promised that it would develop a policy for youth. Indeed, the Prime Minister stood in the House and said in March 1986 that we would have a program for youth. It was postponed to May. It was postponed to September. It was postponed to October. The Government appointed a new Minister of State for Youth, and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) got lost somewhere along the line. He told me only recently that we will have a program for youth but it will not be until the election and it will be in the form of another promise.

We have proposed a coherent program that would provide youths all across this country with opportunities of the sort that Katimavik provided, that would provide opportunities for apprenticeship for training, for opportunities to go to colleges or universities as a person chooses and be supported in the form of an allowance to do so. I have heard rumours that the Minister of State for Youth thought that would be an attractive proposition. Somewhere along the line, I guess being diverted in a premature election campaign tour, he forgot about that. As a consequence, with the abolition of Katimavik and in spite of the promises of the Government, there has been no youth policy proposed or advocated by the Government since the International Youth Year. That is a great tragedy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member elaborate on some of the comments he made about science and technology and, in particular, the space program? He and I were both founding members of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology. I have considerable respect for his genuine commitment to improving things in this area.

I want to ask the Hon. Member about the space agency which, as he knows, is a matter of interest to me as a Member from the National Capital Region. Would he agree that Montreal is not alone in having an important aspect of the space industry in Canada and that the space industry is truly a national one with facilities here in Ottawa, Toronto, other places in southern Ontario, Vancouver, Saskatoon and right across the country? It would be regrettable to locate the headquarters of the space agency in any one of the regions; the neutral territory here in the National Capital would be the obvious place to locate it. I say that not just for those reasons—no favouritism to any particular regions—but because we have here, and have had since the 1950s, the administrative and technical apparatus in the National Research Council in the Department of Communications and in other federal Departments and agencies.

In commenting on that, would the Hon. Member comment on the position of the Leader of his Party which, as I understand it, at least as announced in the Montreal area, is that the head office of the space agency should be in Montreal.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I think Ottawa has managed to take care of itself reasonably well. One of the difficulties is that the debate on the issue of the location of the space agency has diverted us from the real essential of the problem, and that is to get the operation in train. If something is contemplated, the Hon. Member is in a good position to do it. He is, after all, on the Government side and ought to be able effectively to make representations to the Cabinet to make whatever decision it is going to make immediately. As the Government fiddles, the scientists involved in the space program are burning with frustration.

I have worked with my colleague on the science research and development committee. He is a Member of Parliament I respect and whom I know is very much concerned about science policy. Has he not given any thought to the relative merit of the space program in its entirety as an appropriate initiative with the emphasis the Government is giving it as compared to the alternatives?

The space research program inevitably ties Canada into initiatives established in the United States or Europe as kind of appendages. Would it not be better if Canada pursued the possibility of being able to establish its own unique mission, one for which it has comparative advantage in terms of its resources and opportunities? Why not advocate that the mission for Canada be perhaps in some other area such as the hydrogen technology area?

Ms. Mitchell: What about Yellowknife?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

• (1040)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this morning. As you may recall, I had an opportunity to speak on the subamendment a few days ago, and I am sure Members across the way will remember it well. But now that we are speaking about the Budget I thought I would just refresh the memories of some Conservative Members about the failures of the Government. I know the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) tried to point out a number of those failures. I congratulate him on his valiant effort. However, he had only 20 minutes and it was indeed an enormous task to accomplish in such a short period of time.

During the 1984 election the Tories made promises to many people, as I think I have pointed out in this House once or twice before. One of the promises they made is in the document known as the "PC Pocket Politics". It was that a PC Government is committed to doubling our R and D efforts to 2.5 per cent of GNP in the first four years in office. Since they have been in power they have cut everywhere in the field of research and development. Scientists in the national capital area living in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) sitting across the way, know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) failed on that promise. They know how badly the Prime Minister failed to deliver. The people of Ottawa—Carleton will no doubt agree with me that the Prime Minister has failed to live up to the promises he made to Canadians.

I want to talk to you a bit about tax increases. You will remember that those Tories across the way made promises in that area as well. You will have a particular appreciation for that because of the fact that you are a non-partisan person and you can appreciate those kind of things in a far more objective way than the Tories sitting across the way, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Finance, when he was in opposition, said in a City TV interview on August 28, 1984—very important date because it is my wedding anniversary—that they had no intention of raising income taxes for Canadians. He said that what we have do is to get down government spending and so on. He said he did not want to increase taxes, that we have a good deal of scope on the expenditure side to deal with the deficit problem. A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and he did not want to see us do that.

It was the Minister of Finance who said that. What has he done? Let me tell you the sad reality of the tax increases by the Government. A single earner family of four making $32,000 a year has had a total tax increase since those Tories have been in power of some $1,200 a year. Would you believe it? This from a Minister who promised he would not increase taxes.

If it were an even distribution of increased taxes it would still be a breach of a solemn commitment, a sacred trust, as the Prime Minister referred to it in the past, but at least there would be some equity because everyone would be paying their fair share. Not so. Since 1984 taxes for average Canadians have increased some 68 per cent, while corporate taxes increased by 28 per cent. The friends of the Conservatives, the big business people, have not had major tax increases, but average Canadians like your constituents and mine have.

Those are not the only promises broken by the Conservative Government. Let me enumerate another and you will no doubt remember it. You probably recall that the Conservatives had a meeting in Halifax, Nova Scotia—you may have read about it in the paper—on August 2, 1984. They called it the Atlantic caucus meeting. Of course, most of the people at the meeting were not caucus Members at all, but that did not matter. At the meeting the Prime Minister proclaimed that he would examine gasoline, alcohol, food and lodging taxes which are reducing the competitiveness of Canada's tourism industry. In other words, clearly indicating to Canadians that what he wanted was lower gasoline prices.

[Translation]

What happened to make the Prime Minister change his mind? Since the Conservatives came to power, the excise tax on gas has increased by 23 cents a gallon. Twenty-three cents! Isn't that outrageous? Mr. Speaker, it's almost enough to make the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) want to resign. I am sure she must have trouble justifying this kind of behaviour on the part of the Government, considering the solemn commitments made by the Leader of the Conservative Party. Mr. Speaker, this is one more promise, one more solemn commitment that was broken by the Prime Minister. And there are more.

[English]

I invite the Member across the way to pay attention. We will ask him questions later.

The Government said with respect to agriculture that it would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers would have access to reasonably priced funds. That was the promise. You would think that at least that promise would have been kept. No, once again the spending estimates of the Government came out on February 23, only a few days ago, and do you know how much money the federal Government has placed in the Estimates for the FCC this year? Zero, a grand total of nothing. Nothing for the farmers from the Government. This is not the first time that the farming community is disappointed with the Tories. It is almost a tradition, a tradition that is soon to end, of course, after the next election.

The economic and regional development envelope of the Government in its budgetary estimates has gone down from $14.8 billion to $13.3. What does that do for agricultural development?

[Translation]

And I want to ask the Hon. Member opposite what the cutbacks in the regional economic development envelope are supposed to do for agricultural development?

[English]

However, it is nice to know that the Government had money for other causes. Yes, we know that the office of Dalton Camp, which cost zero two years ago, cost $230,000 last year and is budgeted at $261,000 in this year's Estimates. The job of Mr. Camp is to keep the Government out of trouble. He was hired specifically to do that. You can tell what a great job he has done. He has certainly kept the Government in trouble. Just imagine what it would have been like had he not been there? It would have been a disaster. Of course, it is already a disaster.

I could go on with highlighting some of the horror stories of contradictions between the Government's promises and the record. For instance, let me remind you of a promise that the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made on September 26, 1984. That was only a few days after he was sworn into office—still a little green. He told the UN that his Government would fulfil a previous Liberal target of directing .7 per cent of Canada's GNP by 1990 to official development assistance. Obviously that is not going to be met. Again, the Government breached a promise. As a matter of fact, the Conservative Government has now pushed that target back by five years according to the November 8, 1984, economic statement.

It has not gotten any better since then. In May of 1985 the Conservative Government cut back further on development assistance. It says it remains committed to the target of .6 per cent of GNP by 1990. Remember that the previous Government had committed .7 per cent. Official development assistance was reduced by $50 million in the following year.

The Budget speech of February 26, 1986, said:

> —growth in Canada's aid program will be reduced by $1.5 billion over the next five years. For the balance of this decade foreign aid will remain at 0.5 per cent of GNP.

You can see that the Government is not only weaseling out of previously made commitments but is reducing and changing a solemn promise made to the people of Canada.

The people of my constituency are beginning to be quite upset with the Tories. It is small wonder that the Tories cannot find a candidate to run there.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa Carleton): They want me.

Mr. Boudria: I just heard good news, Mr. Speaker. They want the Member for Ottawa Carleton to run in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for the Conservatives. That would be great. The last Conservative candidate in my constituency had the honour of being defeated by the Liberal with the largest majority in Canada. I invite the Member to try to match the record of his predecessor in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott-Russell.

Let me remind you of more broken promises, Mr. Speaker, just to further convince the Government that it is going in the wrong direction, which should be obvious already if it listens to what Canadians are saying. Shipbuilding is a very interesting area and I invite the NDP to pay attention to this as well because we know that their policy is a little confused on that issue. A communiqué issued at the August 2, 1984, Atlantic caucus said:

> A top priority of a PC government will be to create a more viable and prosperous shipbuilding industry. In achieving this goal, we will consult with provincial governments, maritime industries and labour. We will submit the following proposals to these groups during the consultative process.

A second component of their program was "extension of support for Atlantic ship repair facilities and dockyards". We have now seen that the second stage of our frigate program has been delayed. Part of the program has been abandoned. The Government has done everything but deliver on its promises. On February 16, 1986, the Minister of Finance said in this House in his Budget speech:

> We are eliminating programs such as... the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program.

That was said by the same guy who said he wanted to assist shipbuilding. Under that program which was instituted by the previous Liberal Government and terminated by the Tories shipyards could get a 9 per cent subsidy. Many shipbuilding facilities and organizations including the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association asked for an extension of that program. However, notwithstanding the solemn promises that the Conservatives made to the shipbuilding industry and the people of Canada, they completely ignored those very important suggestions from the shipbuilding industry and again breached a solemn promise they had made.

Mr. Speaker, I said recently in the House that the Economic Development Committee of the United Counties of Prescott—Russell, and I am referring to the Committee on Industry, Tourism, Agriculture and Commerce, issued a press release. In fact, the Committee chairman, Mr. Denis Pommainville, an elected official in my riding and the Reeve of Cambridge Township, issued a communiqué condemning the Budget brought down on February 10 by the Conservative Government.

I am glad to hear the Hon. Member opposite say this man must be a Liberal! Shame, accusing an elected official in such a partisan manner. But I am glad to hear it, and I want this to be read into the official record of Hansard. I will let Mr. Pommainville know about it, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) can subtract one more vote from the few he might have had if he had run in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. His colleague just lost him another vote.

The press release starts with the Committee chairman regretting that the initial economic impact of the Trade Agreement, the so-called Free Trade Agreement with the United States, was mainly negative on rural regions like the one he represents.

In fact the one cent per litre increase in the tax on gas is a tremendous setback for sparsely populated regions, especially those without public transit. Once again, the 12.5 per cent who are unemployed in the area—more than twice the average rate for Ontario—will be handicapped in seeking retraining and opportunities to go back to work, now that owning a car is becoming increasingly expensive.

Mr. Speaker, as you see, this is one elected representative in my riding at the municipal and regional level who is thoroughly disappointed in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) here in the House a few days ago.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the few minutes I have left, and unfortunately they are very few, to talk about the tax on long distance calls. This tax is an affront to people who live in rural areas. Canadians living in these areas often have to call long distance to call the doctor, stores, and even people who live only a few streets or concessions away. This measure is unfair to these communities because although the basic charge is not expensive, long distance calls are. I think putting a 10 per cent tax on freedom of speech is unfair to all Canadians, but it is particularly unfair to Canadians in rural communities and to people who own businesses.

[English]

All in all, Mr. Speaker, this is a bad Budget. There was not much to the Budget, it was not a very big document, however, it is not good for the constituency which I represent. I invite the government Members to think about whether or not this Budget is good for their riding. They should conclude, as have I, that it is bad, and they should assist us in defeating the Budget and, while we are at it, in defeating the Government too.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

CRITICISM OF MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians find the recent actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) threatening to boycott the activities of three Canadian Sikh organizations highly questionable. By conducting a letter-writing campaign against these organizations, some of which were sent to certain Premiers and not others, and some to some federal politicians and not others, it seems that the Minister is reticent in disclosing all he knows to all elected representatives. He should justify the reasons for his recommendations and clarify the allegations against the Canadian citizens within these three organizations by tabling all pertinent correspondence in the House.

It is truly unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has tarnished the reputation of Canadians of Sikh origin. The Minister has painted the community with one brush and has opted for collective guilt, instead of pursuing matters of individual responsibility in a sensitive and judicious manner.

Canadian history is littered with examples of communities and collectivities suffering for individual causes. One would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that we would have learned from past injustices.

DOWNSIZING OF WINNIPEG REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Conservative Government has broken its promises to Winnipeg with respect to maintaining Winnipeg as a transportation centre in western Canada. As was revealed yesterday, it is allowing CNR to downsize the prairie region in Winnipeg to an extent where it will soon become a farce to talk about CN maintaining its prairie region in Winnipeg.

Rather than railroaders, a bunch of maniacal downsizing accountants are running the railway. We will soon pay through the nose for the cost in morale, safety, and other problems that will accumulate as a result of the very bad management decisions that are being made. Tory Members of Parliament from Manitoba have once again failed to protect the interests of Winnipeg. They turned a blind eye, and are sleeping at the switch while allowing the CNR to gut its prairie region headquarters in Winnipeg.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT LIVES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the recent Supreme Court ruling overturning Section 251 of the Criminal Code has left millions of Canadians saddened and confused.

The Supreme Court was not elected to govern Canada. Its role is simply to interpret the legislation enacted by this Parliament.

I, as have all Members of the House, have been contacted by thousands of constituents regarding the Supreme Court decision. These constituents are telling me one thing. They are asking—in fact pleading—that our Government take speedy action to enact new legislation.

Much time has been wasted in the House dealing with the Opposition's wild goose chases trying to slander other Members of the House. This waste of time is shameful when Canadians know that the issue of abortion is critical and crucial to the future of our nation.

On behalf of my constituents, I urge the Government to enact legislation quickly that will protect the lives of all Canadians, both those born and those yet to be born.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RETENTION OF PREMATURELY BORN BABIES IN HOSPITALS—LOSS OF MATERNITY BENEFITS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, a recent CBC TV story outlined the plight of a Vancouver couple whose child was born prematurely and remained in hospital for several months, but because of the limitations of the unemployment insurance regulations the mother was not allowed to postpone taking her maternity leave until the infant was released from hospital and went home, a time when the mother really needed the leave to care for her child.

This is not an isolated case. I have had similar cases brought to my attention and have urged the Minister to make the necessary changes in the unemployment insurance regulations.

Advances in technology and health care mean that many premature infants, who years ago would not have survived, are now able to do so with dedicated assistance from hospital personnel during their first critical weeks. Even after they go home to their parents' care, there are often special medical needs which make it more critical to have a parent with the infant on a continuous basis.

I ask the Minister, knowing his compassionate and caring nature, to move on this matter so that families facing these traumatic situations will have the security of knowing that maternity benefits are available at the time they are most urgently needed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LE DROIT NEWSPAPER—REQUEST THAT PARTIES RETURN TO NEGOTIATING TABLE

M. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, since February 20, Francophones in the National Capital Region have been deprived of an essential information tool in their own language.

I am referring to the strike which is dragging on at the newspaper Le Droit, involving some 200 shop workers and newspapermen and affecting over 45 000 readers.

Le Droit has always been a privileged advocate of Franco-Ontarians and this role must continue. A French language daily is a privileged source of information we cannot afford to lose.

This is why I am requesting all Hon. Members in this House to join me in asking both parties to go back to the bargaining table and to find a satisfactory solution to this unfortunate dispute which has already lasted too long.

I ask both Parties, not only in my name, but in the name of my colleagues, to go back to the bargaining table and to come up with a good solution.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATE AGREEMENT WITH LANGUAGE TEACHERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa—Centre): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government regarding its language teachers is totally out of line with its support in principle for bilingualism, as expressed in Bill C-72, now undergoing second reading in the House of Commons. Last December, some 800 language teachers strongly rejected the proposed collective agreement which would have increased their teaching workload from 20 hours per week to a maximum of 37 and a half hours, without any preparation time.

If we want that public service employees, some of which are performing very complex and specialized tasks, be bilingual, we have to provide them with apt and professional language training. I therefore urge the Government to put an end to these lockouts and to its refusal to negotiate, and to go back to the negotiating table with a view to achieve a just and acceptable collective agreement, which would allow the language teachers to work as professionals rather than slaves.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that the reception by the opposition Parties of the conflict of interest Bill has been lukewarm.

This is not surprising. If the truth were to be known, they are probably shaking in their boots.

Just how ordinary are the ordinary Canadians in the New Democratic Party? Is it only the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who travels around in a chauffeur-driven limousine?

Who pays for the Liberal Leader's (Mr. Turner) $3,000 a month Toronto apartment? What is the connection between Liberal Members and the generic drug firms? Was their opposition to Bill C-22 purely altruistic?

Yes, Mr. Speaker, conflict of interest applies to both sides of the House. No wonder they are lukewarm, or maybe even chilled to the spine.

ISRAEL—BEATINGS OF PALESTINIANS BY SOLDIERS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago a team of United States doctors stated in a story in the Ottawa Citizen that Israeli soldiers were systematically beating Palestinians in an epidemic of violence.

Dr. Geiger of the Boston based Physicians for Human Rights stated that they collected medical evidence of violence by the Israeli army on a scale and severity that, if this were a war, much of what they had seen would be regarded as atrocities.

Dr. Jennifer Leaning of Harvard said the doctors observed a systematic pattern of breaking limbs by beatings that is designed to fall short of killing victims.

Sadly, we too witnessed that kind of torture, of beatings, of gross violation of human rights this morning on Canada AM, captured on film, soldiers with rocks breaking the limbs of bound Palestinian refugees.

Again, I ask, I plead, for the Government to show the same leadership against human rights violations in Palestine as it has shown and demonstrated in South Africa.

SPACE AGENCY

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGENCY IN MONTREAL—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I was recently telling this House that the best speech is a short speech. Therefore, I am asking again: When will this government be courageous enough to declare that Montreal is "spatial"? We have been waiting for months for the government to make that very important statement. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent to make the government aware of how important it is to declare that Montreal is "spatial" and we are still awaiting that decision. What must be done, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, for the government to make up its mind at last to declare that Montreal is "spatial"?

NATIVE PEOPLES

NORTHEAST MANITOBA—POWER LINE NEEDED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the people of northeast Manitoba are in need of an electrical line power. The federal Government can help them to obtain this power.

While the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has agreed in principle to study this matter, it is essential that a further commitment be made. It is important that the Government undertake to sign a memorandum of understanding committing itself to the development of this hydro line, and to do so in a manner that would involve meaningful native participation.

A hydro line is essential to the livelihoods of over 8,000 native people in my riding. The people of Oxford House, God's Narrows, God's River, Wasagamack, St. Theresa Point, Garden Hill and Red Sucker Lake have all done without a service that most Canadians take for granted. Their struggle to get adequate electrical services has gone on for decades.

Without this electrical line the quality of life in these communities is seriously damaged, and significant industrial development of any kind is next to impossible. We have the opportunity to make a truly significant contribution to the livelihoods of the people of this region. It is up to the federal Government to meet that opportunity.

UTILIZATION OF POSTAL FRANK

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on February 24, I mentioned in this House that political organizers of the socialist party used and encouraged others to use, in a manner that is illegal and detrimental to Canadian taxpayers, the telephone code number given to the leader of the socialist party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Speaker, that use of taxpayers' money to the socialist party's benefit seems to be institutionalized. Last February 22, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) used his mailing privileges to send to people in his riding, following very precise mailing lists, a document entitled The New Democrats, Report from Ottawa. It contains the picture of the Hon. Member for Oshawa, another one of that party's general secretary, Bill Knight, and a family picture of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg. It contains as well partisan messages that are positive for the socialists but negative for the Conservatives.

Is that a legal use of the Members' mailing privileges? Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this party and, above all, its leader are not transparent at all.

STEEL EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a steel-producing centre I would like to comment on the recent ruling in favour of the Canadian steel industry by the International Trade Commission in Washington. I hope that this ruling will help ease the concerns of the American steel caucus with respect to the bilateral free trade agreement. Our steel companies have stayed within the quotas imposed by the Americans, except when the U.S. has experienced a shortage and has turned to Canada for help.

This latest anti-dumping ruling in favour of Canada proves that our steel industry trades fairly. The Canadian Steel Producers Association has been very supportive of the free trade agreement.

With favourable rulings such as this, along with the efforts of the Canadian steel caucus, I have no doubt we will strengthen our current trade relationship under the Government's bilateral free trade agreement.

CULTURE

DANGER OF DISAPPEARANCE OF LE DROIT NEWSPAPER—CONSEQUENCES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in June 1912, the Department of Education in Ontario introduced the infamous Regulation 17 prohibiting for all practical purposes French education in Ontario. Faced with such francophobia, French-speaking Ontarians took a number of steps to claim their right to French education. They founded the newspaper Le Droit which championed the cause of francophones. Over the years, the newspaper has grown to become one of the great dailies of this country. Unfortunately, the very existence of the newspaper is now threatened.

I call upon Mr. Gilbert Lacasse, the employees' union and especially Mr. Conrad Black, to find a reasonable and fair settlement to the labour conflict threatening our daily in the national capital. French-speaking Ontarians want to keep a true francophone newspaper in Ottawa and not an extension of a newspaper coming from elsewhere. The motto of Le Droit, that is "The future belongs to those who fight" is still valid.

We must fight together to preserve the only French daily in Ontario and as soon as the conflict is resolved, I will encourage francophones not only in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, but on both sides of the Ottawa river, to subscribe to Le Droit and to ensure not only the survival of that newspaper but also its development.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMMITTEE'S IMPENDING VISIT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, next Tuesday the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, which I have the honour to chair, will begin three days of public hearings and prison visits in British Columbia. These hearings are part of a major review of sentencing, conditional release, and related aspects of the correctional system which the committee has been engaged in since the fall.

In addition to our twice weekly meetings here in Ottawa the Justice Committee will be visiting all regions of Canada between now and the summer recess. After British Columbia we will spend a week in Toronto during the week of March 20.

I urge all Canadians who are interested in improving the justice system to take an interest in the vital work of our committee.

CHINESE HEAT TAX—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, prior to the last election, on August 16, 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada sent a letter to the Chinese Canadian National Council which reads as follows:

> The Progressive Conservative Party supports the introduction of an all-party Parliamentary resolution which would recognize the injustice and discrimination of the Head Tax and the Chinese Immigration (Exclusion) Act. Such a resolution would also recognize the suffering of the Chinese community in Canada that resulted from these actions.
> The Progressive Conservative government would look forward to having discussions with representatives of the Chinese Canadian Community regarding appropriate remedial action and the specific matter of financial compensation.

The Chinese Canadian National Council is also looking forward to these discussions and to the all-Party parliamentary resolution.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION OF PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Deputy, acting, stand-in, substitute, Minister for Trade, whomever that may be this morning. The question I wish to pose to whomever wishes to answer it is an important one.

This morning we have heard reports that the Premier of Manitoba and the Premier of Ontario are now threatening to take the federal Government to court to defend the right of their provinces to implement laws in their own jurisdictions on matters regarding trade. At the same time we know that the U.S. administration and Congress are demanding compensation unless there is full compliance by the provinces. The Government of Canada has caught itself in the proverbial spot between a rock and a hard place.

I wish to ask this question of the Government. Is it not absolutely incumbent upon the Government of Canada to sit down and meet with the provincial Governments to discuss the constitutional federal-provincial problems that have been created by the proposed Canada-U.S. trade deal, and to resolve those problems before any implementing legislation is brought into the House?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade will be in the House later. I would like to inform the Hon. Member in the meantime that no Government has discussed any one issue with the provinces more than this Government has discussed with the heads of provincial Governments the means to implement a free trade agreement with the United States.

As the House will know, the Prime Minister has attended meeting after meeting, hour after hour, to discuss the terms of the negotiation. We have an understanding, an opinion, that there is within the constitutional status of the federal Government the power to enact the legislation that we will be bringing before the House.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the discussions that the Prime Minister has initiated with the provinces in this field will be ongoing.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Minister for International Trade is now entering the House. I will address my supplementary question to her.

It may be true that there have been prior discussions but the problem has not been resolved. We now have provincial Governments going to court and the Parliament of Canada being expected to deal with legislation that, clearly, could be ultra vires the Constitution of Canada, which could be a major disruption in federal-provincial relations. I ask this question now of the Minister for International Trade.

Would it not be prudent and proper for the Government of Canada to sit down with its provincial counterparts to resolve this major disruption, this major confrontation that is brewing, because of the trade agreement, to determine if there is a way of resolving it? If there is not, they should then go back and reject the trade agreement because it runs counter to the Constitution of Canada.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Acting Prime Minister has said, the Prime Minister has told the House repeatedly that Canada, the federal Government, has the constitutional right to sign and to negotiate international treaties. As the Acting Prime Minister has said, we have consulted throughout with the provinces on the free trade agreement. There have been something in the order of 18 meetings of the committee of officials. There have been about a a dozen First Ministers' meetings on this issue. They have been fully consulted, and their views have been taken into account.

The Prime Minister has made it very clear that the legal and constitutional authority of Parliament is clear. Should anyone wish to invoke a challenge, then they are entirely free to do so. That is the way our system works.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT POSTPONE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO RATIFY AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. The Minister for International Trade is undoubtedly aware that there was a Privy Council ruling in the 1930s, the International Labour Organization case, which clearly stated while the federal Government may sign a treaty the provinces may not implement that treaty if it falls within their jurisdiction. There is clearly a point of dispute.

The Parliament of Canada is going to be asked to pass legislation that runs counter to the Constitution of Canada. I would suggest that it would be important for the Government either to resolve that dispute or to take a reference to the Supreme Court before it brings in any implementing legislation.

Will the Government delay bringing in any form of implementing legislation on trade until this major problem with the provinces is resolved, or is the Government once again giving in to the American threat of demanding compensation or concessions? Is that the real motivation for pushing ahead, even though significant provinces in this country are opposed to that particular move because it will take away their rightful powers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in all that rhetoric it is a little difficult to understand what is the actual question. I believe it to be the same question that has been asked twice before. Therefore, there is the same answer.

The Government of Canada has the constitutional right to negotiate and sign international treaties. The law officers of the Crown have assured the Government that it is proceeding in a perfectly proper way. As reported in Hansard on February 10, 1988, the Prime Minister stated, "that we are acting not only within the purview of our legislative authority but very much in the national interest". The Prime Minister also indicated that anyone who wishes to challenge that is perfectly free to do so in the courts.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS OF CONTAMINATED MEAT IN KITCHENER-WATERLOO AREA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if the Minister can confirm reports in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record in the last couple of days which indicate that his Department has received some 220 reports of contaminated meat from some 13 plants in the Kitchener, Waterloo, Guelph area between the period January, 1986, to October 31, 1987. Those reports indicated that meat was contaminated with manure, rust, dust, feathers, hair, and even paint. Many of the meat carcasses were described as slimy, having odours, and discolouration.

Can the Minister confirm that his Department has received reports like that for that period of time, and that even though they were inter-plant shipments the meat could have been shipped across the country, delivered directly to stores, or even sold internationally?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to read the article. I was informed of the article and, immediately upon being informed of its contents, I requested the appropriate officials in my Department to investigate the situation.

I am sure that all Members of the House, and particularly the Hon. Member who posed the question, would recognize and probably substantiate the fact—and I would be very surprised if he did not—that Canada's meat and food inspection is among the finest in the world. It is supported by the Ontario Veterinary Association, it is supported by the Canadian Veterinary Association, and it is supported by the World Health Organization.

The Hon. Member should be very careful of the manner in which he puts that question, and the manner in which he puts that information. What one has to recognize here is the fact that it is as a result of the best food inspection system in the world that we pick out some of those problem areas and problem products in order that they do not get into the final link of the food chain.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this information is in the public record. Canadians want to know what action the Minister is taking to ensure the safety and health of Canadian food. Surely the Minister does not have to wait until a report appears in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. Those documents are available to him. We are talking about a miniscule portion of the production and inspection of our whole meat inspection system. If we are looking at 220 reports over a 20 month period then the system looks very lax. The Minister should be taking the responsibility, and not waiting until there is a press report like this, to ensure the safety and health of Canadians and their meat supply.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should understand that this good work by the meat and food inspectors goes on day in and day out. We do not need a report from the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, nor do we need an article from any other newspaper in the country, nor do we need a question from the Hon. Member in the House. The Hon. Member knows that this goes on on a day-to-day basis, and that is why we have been able to maintain the best food inspection system in the world.

The other aspect that the Hon. Member should be aware of is the fact that we were requested for information of this kind. I am not sure if it was from the writer of the article to which the Hon. Member refers, but I recall that quite some number of months ago, perhaps even some years ago, or perhaps even before we were in office, a request was made. I do not know whether my predecessor granted approval for the release of that information, but I know that I did. The fact of the matter is that we were prevented from doing so because of a court injunction sought by a sector within the industry.

Therefore, it is unfair of the Hon. Member to ask me to make that information public. I am quite prepared to make that information public. However, I cannot ignore, and the Hon. Member cannot ignore, a ruling of a court of Canada. As far as I am concerned, that information should be made available to the public, but we cannot do so.

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

OPPORTUNITY TO PROPOSE AMENDMENTS TO BILL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I shall address my question to the Minister and not to the Prime Minister.

The Government makes a few good suggestions in its Bill on conflicts of interest. Unfortunately, with regard to the people's right to a detailed account of the assets of a Minister or Member of Parliament, the Bill states that the Commission can decide to keep such information secret. As this is unacceptable and as there are provincial Governments in Canada and Governments in Great Britain and the United States with systems which are automatically open to the public, will the Government accept amendments to establish a similar system at the federal level in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government has just tabled the legislation with regard to conflict of interest. The Hon. Member will also know that this is the first time that a Government of Canada has decided to move by way of legislation in this very difficult and sensitive field.

In the legislation we have indicated that there will be an independent commission established to which cabinet Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries, Members of Parliament, and Senators will disclose their liabilities and assets. That independent commission will have the right to decide what information will be made public.

We believe that an independent commission is in fact the best way to proceed. That does not indicate that as this legislation is debated, and as it comes before committee, changes cannot be made. That happens with legislation at all times.

I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member that this legislation is a big step forward. We think that an independent commission is the proper way to go. There will be no question as to whether or not it will have the right and the jurisdiction to decide what should be made public.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Government on accepting the idea of a commission. I also compliment the Government on the idea that those rules should be applicable to Members on both sides of the House. It is desirable that there should not be an option whether such information is kept secret. All of that information should automatically be open to the public.

OPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE BILL ON FINANCING OF POLITICAL PARTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question about another aspect of the reform.

When the Government discussed this reform, mention was made of the possibility of introducing a Bill on the financing of political Parties, but we have not received such a Bill.

Does the Government intend to introduce such a Bill, yes or no?

• (1130)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, this Bill deals with the role of parliamentarians solely. That is what the Bill is directed toward; that is what it focuses on.

On the other hand, the Prime Minister has indicated that there will be a total ethics package dealing with other issues as well. I cannot tell the Leader of the New Democratic Party at the present time when those other measures will be dealt with, but I can tell him that Cabinet is considering a variety of other measures.

REQUEST THAT NEW LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED PRIOR TO GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I find that encouraging. Could the Minister perhaps be a little more specific at this time on two other aspects of a reform package which have been discussed before, one including the financing of political Parties and the other making changes in the system of patronage?

Could the Minister assure the House that both these aspects are being discussed by Cabinet? Can she assure us, if not with a precise date in mind, that there will be legislation in these areas before the next election?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to patronage appointments. I should like to remind him that already major changes have been made in the way in which Governor in Council appointments are being reviewed. As he knows, they come before parliamentary committees, and I think one of the questions that we may have as a Cabinet is why so few of the Governor in Council appointments are being reviewed by committee. I would think that there should be far more done in this regard.

I should also like to say to the Hon. Member that the questions he raises with regard to other parts of the ethics package are indeed being reviewed. I cannot give him exact dates at the present time. I think he will understand that it is not really possible to say that on April 20 or May 15 such-and-such will be done.

However, I want to indicate to him that the Government takes the issue very, very seriously.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

RIGHTS OF ALBERTAN FRANCOPHONES—OPPORTUNITY FOR REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday that Saskatchewan will have to translate and pass in their French version all statutes adopted since its creation in 1905, or, as an alternative, to adopt a bilingual statute which would proclaim Saskatchewan an English-speaking unilingual province.

This ruling could apply equally to Alberta since this province was also carved out of the Northwest Territories and created by an act which contains the same provisions as the one for Saskatchewan.

My question to the Minister of Justice or to the Acting Minister is this: Is the Government willing to request by referral to the Supreme Court that it confirms that Franco-Albertans have the same linguistic rights as francophones in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport said yesterday, the federal Government is willing to provide assistance to the Saskatchewan Government to comply with the ruling of the Supreme Court.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the policy of the federal Government is to promote the equality of both official languages. The Government and myself are willing to consider every option.

[English]

On the question with regard to Alberta, I would say at the moment that that question is premature to the federal Government. However, we will be working very closely with the provinces to see how, in the first place, the Supreme Court decision with regard to the Province of Saskatchewan can be implemented.

Mr. Gauthier: I remind the Minister that the Supreme Court said what I just put to her, that indeed it could possibly apply to the Province of Alberta, that it was cut away from the same territories and ruled by the same law.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Given the Manitoba experience—and she will remember it clearly because she participated in that debate—and given the give and take in the question put to us by the Supreme Court on matters identical to the question put yesterday, but dealing with the Province of Manitoba, is the Government disposed, ready, or well intentioned enough to offer to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan the same advantages which were offered to the Province of Manitoba, that is, as an exchange for less translation of all the statutes, possibly an extension of some of the services to the Francophone minorities in these provinces?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the record of the Government in what it has done already in this deal is an indication of the good intention of the Government of Canada to do everything possible to advance the equality of our two official languages.

I could tell the Hon. Member that very shortly the Government will be in touch with the Government of Saskatchewan to explore the ways in which we might be helpful in this regard and, as other matters arise, I would see us doing the same.

ISRAEL—SOLDIERS' VIOLENT TREATMENT OF PALESTINIAN REFUGEES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the most recent revelations of the violent treatment by Israeli soldiers of Palestinian refugees.

I begin by hoping that the Acting Prime Minister would share the abhorrence, which I hope all Hon. Members feel, at the continuing violent response on the part of Israeli troops in the West Bank and the Gaza and our hope that the madness that is going on there must stop.

It is in that spirit that I ask the Acting Prime Minister—and I hope it will be the Acting Prime Minister—what the Canadian Government plans to do now in order to help bring about a solution in the Middle East.

Up until now the Government has been able to talk in vague, well-intentioned generalities about the need for a peace conference, but there has not been a Canadian position elucidated with respect to many of the difficult questions which must be asked about that conference and about the various intransigences that are held by the Israeli Government, by the Palestinians, and by various other parties.

When will the Canadian Government say something definitive about what Canada thinks needs to happen?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made the Canadian position very well known on a number of occasions in the House. He has made it clear that Canada shares the abhorrence which the Hon. Member has indicated.

If he has specific points to make, I would urge him to give them to me and I will make sure that they are passed on to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

LAND FOR PEACE PROPOSAL—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, of course the problem is that the Canadian position with respect to very difficult questions has not been clear, and I will give the Minister an example—the whole question of land for peace.

We know that the Israeli Government itself is divided between Mr. Shamir and Mr. Peres on this, so I ask the Government what is the Canadian position with respect to that proposal? Is the Government prepared to say to the Israeli Government that it needs to be more flexible with respect to these issues if there is ever to be peace in the Middle East? What is the Canadian Government's position on that?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is the same question, therefore it is the same answer.

Mr. Broadbent: It was a specific suggestion. You asked for a suggestion and he gave you one.

Miss Carney: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has made the Canadian position fully clear many times in the House, and I will convey the intent of the specific question to him.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RETENTION OF PREMATURELY BORN BABIES IN HOSPITALS—LOSS OF MATERNITY BENEFITS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As I have brought this matter to the Minister's attention over the past year, he knows the difficulties faced by parents when infants are born prematurely or with severe health problems and must remain in hospital for a considerable period of time.

On the happy day when the infant comes home, the mother needs to be able to take her maternity leave to care for the child, but present regulations under the Unemployment Insurance Act preclude that, requiring her to take maternity leave from the date of confinement.

Can the Minister assure this House that he will make the necessary adjustment in unemployment insurance laws, changes that will not result in any increased costs to the fund so that in such special situations mothers will have the flexibility to postpone maternity leave until the new-born child is released from hospital?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I know she has a keen interest in these issues. Although we are sympathetic to the case, the Hon. Member should know that if we wanted to go in the direction she has proposed we would have to change the legislation. We have already proposed making a change in one case, what we call the McInnis case.

Of course, before making any change in another direction I would first like to have the opportunity to make an indepth assessment of the case, and I am sure that the Hon. Member will help us to find a solution to the problem to which she was referring.

PRIVATIZATION

PETRO-CANADA—RADIOCHEMICAL COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Canadians are very concerned and confused by the Government's position on the privatization of Petro-Canada. The Minister of Energy says the Government will go ahead with privatization, and the Deputy Prime Minister says that it will not.

Canadians are also concerned about the Government's intention to sell the Radiochemical Company, a division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a company which deals with the very sensitive subject of irradiation. Why does the Government want to sell to the private sector a company that deals with sensitive products, with irradiation, which accounts for 80 per cent of the net income of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note that yesterday when the Deputy Prime Minister was responding to similar questions, he set out the position of the Government and he at the same time quoted the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in both cases. Both Ministers said the Cabinet has yet to make a decision on this issue. I refer to the question of Petro-Canada, Sir.

There has been no decision with regard to privatization. The matter has not been decided. I think the Hon. Member should not try to distort and confuse the issue.

With regard to the question of the component in the AECL that he raised, I can only say that various aspects of companies are being looked at. I do not have the information that he seeks at the present time, but I will be sure to take his question to the Minister of State for Privatization.

REPORTED BID FOR RADIOCHEMICAL BY LAVALIN INCORPORATED

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Nucleonics Week says that the most likely buyer for the Radio Chemical Company is Lavalin Incorporated. I understand that Lavalin submitted a bid in November for the Radiochemical company. Will the Government state whether, in fact, Lavalin Incorporated has submitted a bid for Radiochemical Company and will the Minister state what the Government's position is with respect to Lavalin's bid?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that there have been expressions of interest in this component from companies and organizations all across the country. It happens to be a very good operating unit, and obviously there is interest in it. I do not know the specific of any particular interest that has been expressed, but I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that I will bring his comments to the attention of the Minister.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade.

I would like to ask the Minister about the commitment which the Government of this country made in Halifax in 1985 to the provincial Governments that all matters under provincial jurisdiction in trade would "have a situation that all provincial Governments support and are ready to implement" so far as the free trade agreement is concerned. Now reports say that federal officials are prepared to stomp on the provinces. They also report that there is a likelihood of suits from the provinces themselves.

I want to ask the Minister point blank whether she will confirm or deny that there is a plan afoot in the Government to bring legislation forward which will force provincial Governments to do in trade areas what is not what they wish to do.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member correctly points out that it was at the Halifax meeting that our Government made the decision to involve the provinces in the free trade agreement. It was the kind of consultative step which had never been carried out by any previous Governments in terms of any matters pertaining to trade.

Unfortunately that is the only correct statement the Hon. Member made in his question. Everything else he brought forward is totally hypothetical. There is no legislation before the House, and all these allegations about stomping on the provinces are being made totally on the basis of hypothetical suggestions and have no basis in fact.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the point is that the commitment was not just the involvement of the provinces, the commitment was that all provincial Governments would support and be ready to implement any legislation in trade areas affecting them which were to be put into this agreement.

Will the Minister make a commitment to that effect yet again, or is she prepared to break this promise? Does she not realize that a constitutional crisis of a major sort could emerge if she proceeds in the path the Government seems to be taking?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I covered this ground earlier today when I pointed out that the Prime Minister has made it clear on a number of occasions that Canada's constitutional right to deal with international treaties is just not at issue here.

I can again quote him from his comment on February 10 when he said that "the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada has concluded an international treaty. We believe it is very much in the national interest. We will submit it to Parliament at an appropriate time and we will ensure that the treaty is respected".

TRAVEL ARRANGEMENTS OF CONVICTED TERRORIST

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It relates to the role played by CSIS and the Government's bungled attempt to remove Mr. Mohammad from Canada.

On Wednesday, the Minister categorically denied in the House,that CSIS was involved. Yesterday he stated that CSIS did have a connection, and today we learn that Mr. Ron Atkey, chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, has initiated an investigation into the entire involvement of CSIS in the Mohammad affair. I think it is time that the Minister came clean with this House and with Canadians, and I urge him to do so now.

Therefore, I would like to ask the Minister after CSIS learned of the plan to remove Mr. Mohammad, and after two CSIS officials met Mr. Mohammad and the RCMP at the Toronto Airport before his departure, what follow-up action was taken by CSIS?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to deny categorically that this Government or any of its officials in any way bungled the travel arrangements of Mr. Mohammad. I also strongly deny the allegation that two CSIS officials had a meeting with Mr. Mohammad at the airport. There was no meeting. I have admitted that there were some CSIS officials at the airport, which was perfectly normal. They certainly had no meeting whatsoever with Mr. Mohammad.

As I also stated yesterday, after a morning meeting with the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP and the Director of CSIS, I have been advised that CSIS did absolutely nothing that contributed to the failure of the travel arrangements for Mr. Mohammad.

• (1150)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, this is becoming a three-ring circus. Because the Minister is obviously refusing to answer the question, I suppose we will have to wait for Mr. Atkey's investigation to find out the truth. The Minister should not take it lightly that CIRC is investigating CSIS on this whole matter.

IMMIGRATION

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS GRANTED TO MONTREAL RESIDENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed instead to the Minister of Immigration. While public confidence has been haemorrhaging over the Government's bungling and incompetence in the Mohammad case, we learned this week that another individual, Mr. Abraham Finkel, who lied to immigration officials consistently for eight years, was convicted of serious and violent crimes and was repeatedly refused entry by successive Ministers. However, he was granted landed immigrant status by the federal Cabinet. Can the Minister explain the glaring contradictions?

On what specific grounds was Mr. Finkel accepted? Does the Minister not believe that this dangerously blurs the one set of standards by which all applicants must be judged as opposed to the ad hoc approach that is bleeding public confidence and public integrity?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very amazed that the Hon. Member could mix up two cases which are totally different.

There is no relationship between Mr. Finkel's case and Mr. Mohammad's case.

I think Mr. Finkel's case is very clear. Mr. Finkel is a 63-year-old man who has been living in Canada for eight years. He admitted that he had been convicted. I have all the documents necessary to prove that he was convicted and he admitted to the conviction. When he came here to Canada, he gave us fingerprints and we made a check. When he lived in Montreal, all the people living around him admitted that he was a good citizen. Today he respects the conditions under which we admitted the man to Canada. It is an old story, one year old. I maintain that Mr. Finkel is now a good Canadian.

There is no question about changing the decision. I want my hon. friend to understand that, as Minister, I have to make decisions. One decision was made for Mr. Mohammad, another decision was made for Mr. Finkel. I challenge my friend to tell me that Mr. Finkel is not today a good Canadian.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

DISTRIBUTION OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT APPLICATION FORMS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and deals with the Special Grains Program. The Minister will be aware that because of technical problems several hundred farmers were missed when the deficiency payment application forms were mailed out. Some of these farmers are from Saskatchewan and some are from Quebec. Six communities affected happen to be in my constituency.

Without these application forms, farmers are ineligible for deficiency payments. Will the Minister ensure that the farmers involved will be sent application forms directly in the mail?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member drawing this matter to my attention because I must admit, and I do not mind admitting, that I was not aware of it.

I certainly would give the Hon. Member the assurance that we will not miss any producer, particularly not any producer in his constituency. In fact, if the Hon. Member is going to his constituency over the weekend, he can phone my office and I will see whether or not we have some application forms that he might take with him.

DEADLINE FOR SUBMITTING APPLICATIONS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, because Treasury Board regulations set the application deadline at March 16, it is inevitable under the circumstances that some of the farmers will not get their application forms in time. Will the Minister make arrangements for extending that deadline at least in the case of farmers who were unable to get their application forms in time?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very logical request and it is one with which we will want to comply. Of course, the Hon. Member can have my assurance that I will do everything possible, and I will seek and I am sure I will receive the necessary support from my cabinet colleagues to ensure that no eligible producer is left out of the Special Canadian Grains Programs. Again, I appreciate the Hon. Member bringing this matter to my attention.

TAX REFORM

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES PROGRAM—EARNED DEPLETION ALLOWANCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister certainly knows that community leaders of numerous mining areas have recently formed a special committee to save the flow-through shares program that the Minister of Finance virtually eliminated in the tax reform proposal by phasing out the earned depletion allowance.

Considering the fact that millions of dollars were raised since the early 1980s with the flow-through share mechanism to finance resource exploration in remote areas, and considering that the elimination of the earned depletion, together with last October's stock market crash, killed the financing prospects for mining exploration, will the Government reverse this ill-considered proposal and announce that the earned depletion allowances on flow-through shares will be maintained?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member omits two crucial facts about this very important mechanism. I agree with him that the flow-through share mechanism has been an important contributor to exploration. In the period between the tax reform announcement in June and the Ways and Means Motion in December, we made a number of technical improvements to the suggestions made in the June document. We are also monitoring very, very carefully mining exploration activity to make sure that the changes we have made will not adversely affect the mining sector. I am told that exploration levels are strong now and are expected to be strong in the spring, but we will monitor it very carefully.

FUTURE OF REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Special Committee is aware of everything the Minister just said. After 1988, however, the tap runs dry, and these people are coming to Ottawa—not just mining operators but mayors of municipalities and chambers of commerce—because they feel that as far as regional development is concerned, this Government has failed to deliver, and, on top of that, it is eliminating the flow-through shares program.

My question to the Minister is this: Since the Special Committee will be bringing people from every corner of this country to attend its meeting on March 1, what kind of answer does the Government intend to give these people who see the future of the mining industry in our regions, and especially the economic survival of these regions, in terms of jobs? What kind of answer is the Government going to give these people when they come to Ottawa on March 1?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that initial public offerings in the equity market are down across all sectors. That means that the Government has to be especially alert to sectors such as the mining industry that may suffer as a result of the general decline in the stock market. That means that flow-through shares together with everything else are being examined while we monitor that exploration.

The Hon. Member knows that at present exploration levels are strong. We expect them to be strong in the spring. If it does not continue that way, the Government will act.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and is on the same issue. The Minister knows how important this is for communities right across Canada. Virtually every sector and every mining community are now concerned about the Government's decision to gut the flow-through share program. The Minister will know that when the tax programs for the oil and gas sector were phased out, the Government promised to implement new programs to offset the losses from the tax changes.

Will the Minister of State for Finance indicate clearly to the House that, since the Government has now decided to gut the flow-through shares program, there are plans to bring in a program that will ensure that mining exploration will take place right across Canada, and particularly to ensure that the benefits flow to the small and medium-sized exploration and mining companies as opposed to the large multinationals?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my friend has raised a question which, quite frankly, is a piggyback on the previous question. I am reminded of last June when we brought forward tax reform and we left in place the flow-through share mechanism with some changes. At that time we were attacked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for leaving this preference in place. We were told that it indulged rich businessmen, dentists and doctors who had money to invest in flow-through shares.

We have saved flow-through shares and made some technical improvements to them. We will continue to make technical improvements and to monitor exploration levels very carefully.

REPORTS OF CONTAMINATED MEAT IN KITCHENER-WATERLOO AREA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of revelations in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record concerning reports of dirty meat from 1986 to October of 1987, is it the Minister's intention to make a report to the House by way of Ministerial Statement to explain the workings of the meat inspection branch and what improvements have been made since that time, particularly when meat is transferred from one plant to another and is reinspected? That is where most of these problems were found. Similar inspections do not occur when meats leave the original plant and go directly to the consumer. Consumers are very concerned about this, particularly about the allegations that the official inspectors have been told to ease off because every time they find a problem it means downtime.

Will he be giving us a full report in the House in the next few days?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure whether this is the appropriate forum to give a report on this incident. I have no objection to it but I would suggest that in my opinion an appropriate starting point would be to have the issue referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Appropriate officials from my Department could be brought before the committee and Hon. Members from all sides of the House could pose those questions in seeking that information. I am sure they will find my officials on this issue, as on all issues, will be very fair, frank, accurate and forthcoming.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one question from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

EMPLOYMENT

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A recent Statistics Canada report indicates that unemployment among older workers, those over 54, is increasing at a disturbing rate. In fact, many in this group are giving up after a long search and leaving the labour market.

Two years ago the Government cut the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program which helped those older workers, clearly promising to replace it with a $32 million Program for Older Worker Adjustment. That was promised in the 1986 Budget but after two years nothing has been done.

In light of these recent statistics when will the Government finally move on this proposal which is critically needed by older workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East is aware of the fact that the Minister of Labour is responsible for this matter. In fact, he is very busy negotiating with the provinces. The Hon. Member will agree it would be hard not to involve the provinces in a matter like this. The negotiating process is a difficult one. However, my colleague the Minister of Labour told me recently that in the case of several provinces, we could expect to complete the process very shortly.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8) I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-3886 to 332-3899, inclusive.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR CHANGE TO REGULATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by people concerned about the treatment given to workers at Canada Packers in Winnipeg as a result of the plant shut-down. The petition is the following:

Whereas the Government of Canada requires employees to pay unemployment insurance premiums, premiums are paid by employees who are salaried employees and employees who are members of a union; whereas all citizens of Canada regardless of their job status have the right to expect and receive fair and equal treatment; whereas the Government of Canada has with discrimination chosen to make a distinction between the earned benefits of salaried and union employees with respect to severance or termination benefits according to Regulation 57(3)(L)(ii); whereas this deliberate act creates a hardship and disadvantage for union employees who remain loyal citizens of Canada; whereas the Government recognizes that its Regulation 57(3)(L)(ii) is discriminatory by limiting such discrimination to a period ending March 26, 1988, the undersigned petitioners, many hundreds of them, call upon Parliament and the Government to amend the said regulation retroactively so as to provide all citizens of Canada with equal favour of benefit and to remove the discrimination which is now making a difficult situation for union employees at Canada Packers even more difficult.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan. They are concerned that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the people of Canada with which to conclude a free trade agreement. They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, since they are concerned that this trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to provide a society distinct from that of the U.S., they are asking Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada an opportunity to either accept or reject the proposed trade deal with the U.S. through a national general election.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present eight petitions from residents of the Kitchener—Waterloo region. They call upon the Government to act quickly to bring in and pass Bill C-54. They call upon Parliament to effectively deal with the social evil of pornography and its attacks upon children, women and the family, and thereby the health of Canadian society.

These eight petitions and the 502 signatures they contain bring to a total of 2,133 the number of signatures from the Kitchener—Waterloo region. I urge the Government to act with all dispatch to bring this Bill in and bring this issue of pornography to a conclusion.

DESIGNATION REGARDING NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition containing some 230 names, most of them residents of the community of Fort Frances in my riding.

The petition protests the inequitable and unfair application of the northern tax allowance. The petitioners complain of the fact that some communities are designated to receive this allowance whereas others, in many cases directly adjacent, have been excluded.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to designate all communities in tier three ridings, remote and isolated as they are, as eligible for the allowance.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is signed by many residents of the community of Fort Frances in my riding.

They protest the Government's negotiation of a treaty with the U.S. on free trade. They protest that the Government never had a mandate to enter into such a treaty and therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve so the people of Canada may judge this question by means of a national general election.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, today we are answering questions numbered 248 and 253.

AIDS EDUCATION PROGRAMS FOR TREATY INDIANS

Question No. 248—Mr. Nickerson:

Does the government distribute free condoms to Treaty Indians and, if so, on what date did this practice commence and how many have been distributed?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Condoms have been available to Treaty Indians on request at most nursing stations and health centre serving Indian communities for over ten years. As AIDS education programs are developed by communities, it may be that a more active distribution policy will be adopted by band councils. In that case, the Medical Services Branch, of the Department of National Health and Welfare, will provide the supplies and distribution network recommended. The only figures available are the following:

No. of condoms supplied:	1986/87	67,670
	1987/88 to date	101,460

GRANTS TO CORPORATIONS WITHIN METROPOLITAN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 253—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Ministry of State for Science and Technology make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): In so far as the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is concerned, since September 4, 1984, grants have been made only to the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research (CIAR). These totalled $1,498,260 in fiscal year 1987-88, the first year in which CIAR became eligible for the grants.

In June, 1986, Cabinet approved payment of up to $7 million to the Institute over four years (1987-88 to 1990-91) to match contributions of the same amount from the private sector. Matching grants to CIAR have a ceiling of $1.5 million in the first two years and $2 million annually thereafter and are conditional upon a satisfactory evaluation, to be submitted to Cabinet in March, 1988.

President: Dr. J. Fraser Mustard Executive Director: Dr. P. B. Munsche Headquarters: Toronto

1. In June, 1986, Cabinet approved payment of up to $7 million to the Institute over four years to match contributions of the same amount from the private sector. The Treasury Board submission was approved in December, 1986.

The grants commenced in the 1987-88 fiscal year and end in 1990-91. Payments for the last three years are conditional upon an evaluation of the work of the Institute by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, to be submitted to Cabinet in March, 1988.

The grants are administered by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology.

2. The matching grants are designed to support the work of CIAR, which aims to build research strength in areas of economic and social importance in Canada; to strengthen the training of highly qualified scientific personnel; to encourage greater private sector investment in basic and applied R&D; and the formation of closer links between university and industry research activities.

3. (a) Government funds will be provided to the Institute in amounts equal to the eligible private sector contributions received by the Institute, up to the maximum annual levels.

(b) For 1987-88, eligible contributions will be those received by the Institute between June 12, 1986 and March 31, 1988. For 1988-89 and future years, eligible contributions will be those received in the current or preceding fiscal year. Contributions in excess of the maximum may be carried forward to the following fiscal year for matching purposes. The grant to CIAR will be authorized on receipt of satisfactory evidence regarding the eligibility of contributions. Payments may be made up to four times per year.

(c) The Institute identifies high-priority areas for long-term research of major economic and social importance, recruits world-class scientists to work in those areas, and creates networks of researchers using modern communication technology and regular working sessions. The Institute, by building on existing facilities in universities and industry, offers a low-cost means of strengthening R&D. Its programs focus on research for the core technologies of the future, on the advancement of fundamental knowledge in the natural sciences; and on aspects of social and economic change.

(d) The clientele served are researchers based in universities, primarily in Canada but also in the United States and United Kingdom. CIAR's revenues come from corporations (over 50 per cent), foundations (25 per cent) and individuals. Strong support from industry ensures the continued relevance of CIAR's work to the long-term competitive position of Canadian industry.

4. Expenditures under CIAR are entirely matching grants (grants and contributions) as follows (maximum grants, $ millions):

There are no person-years or O&M expenditures allocated to the program.

5. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology as been directed to evaluate the work of the Institute and report to Cabinet in March, 1988. Grants for the 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 fiscal years are conditional on this evaluation. The evaluation will examine the relevance of CIAR's research areas to broad government and industry priorities and the effectiveness of the Institute in achieving its objectives.

Mr. Lewis: I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre):

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to rise and add my comments to those of my colleagues on the matter of the Budget that never was brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Conservative Government, in its four Budgets so far, has steadily undermined the tradition of budgeting and the tradition of budget speeches being presented before Parliament. We have seen an Olympian Budget—very appropriate because the Olympics are currently underway in Calgary and in his speech the Minister of Finance made reference to them. However, this Budget is not Olympian in its majesty, it is simply Olympian in its detachment from the everyday reality facing Canadians.

The Finance Minister had a real opportunity to move toward greater regional fairness, to redress some of the inequities in the country, to halt rising interest rates which have been rising in real terms, and to make the system fairer. Instead, the Finance Minister basically stood up before Canadians and said "We are saving our announcements for the politically opportune time". He stated that the Government had a commitment to an orderly Budget process but undermined it by introducing only minor changes in this Budget and by failing to address the major problems which are facing Canada today.

On a quick conspectus of this do-nothing Budget we find that in general terms it takes more from consumers, leaves more with corporations, does little for those who are less well off, and does something for those who are well off. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) warned last year that "We are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is under-developed and under-employed". That warning seems to have been lost on the Minister of Finance. I think we should repeat that warning to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister, because if two such Canadas are being built they indeed are the prime architects, willing or unwilling, of the inequities which are increasingly developing in Canada today.

That is something which could easily have been seen by reference to experience of other industrial countries, something which could easily have been provided for in the Government's budgeting process. As I am sure the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are well aware, if that is allowed to continue it will threaten the very identity of the Canada we have today.

Canada, after all, was founded on notions of regional equity. They are enshrined in the legislative process and the budgetary process. We have such things as regional equalization, regional allowances for higher rates of unemployment. We have not seen that with which a New Democratic Party government would provide the country, a proactive approach to regional development, based not only on the understanding that it is good for areas that are under-developed to be economically developed but also on comprehension of the fact that in the long run the areas in which the economy is overheating are not going to see benefit to their average residents at all, but mainly benefit to those who control the levers of power and wealth in those major cities such as Toronto, in particular, which are benefiting from the economic upturn.

This Budget adds $575 million to the $22 billion total increase in sales taxes since the Government was elected. The cumulative increase in sales taxes is taking $700 to $750 a year out of the pockets of the average family. That makes any cut in income taxes simply an exercise in robbing Peter to pay Paul, taking out of one taxpayer's pocket and putting back into another. Of course, we know that when the Tories do that which is put back is always significantly less than what has been taken out.

The lip service that has been paid to child tax benefits is another defect in the Government's Budget. Instead of concentrating on the sin taxes, the Government seems to have judged that gasoline is a commodity which should be priced increasingly higher, beyond the reach of ordinary Canadians. We have seen the tax on car gasoline. We know it is going to cost more. We know that when the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) was the Minister of Tourism he spoke out against higher taxes on gasoline.

Let us not ignore the effect on the aviation industry of the one cent a litre increase in tax. This will drive up costs, particularly for those small operators for whom fuel is a large component of their cost structure. This will marginalize some airlines which have been making it and will jeopardize some airlines which are presently marginal in their operations, particularly the smaller ones.

In my riding of Kenora—Rainy River there are some airlines which operate only one or two planes, strictly for local needs, in air taxi or charter operations, or serving the tourism industry by flying hunters and fishermen in and out of the lake areas. These operations are marginalized by that sort of tax.

The $750 which is taken out of the pockets of average families is reflected by the 21.6 per cent which sales tax revenues are projected to increase this year That is a pretty massive increase in revenues that the Government is predicting. Indeed, it is clearly an indication that the Government's commitment to tax reform is running out of steam. The Government's commitment to revenue generation proceeds full speed ahead, and the Government is losing its commitment to switch from the regressive, inequitable sales tax, which falls more heavily on those with lower incomes than those on higher incomes, to giving the revenue side of the ledger priority.

Average Canadian families want the Government to be called back to its commitment to a more equitable tax system. What they are afraid of, and what the New Democratic Party warns against, is that the Government may be saving such an announcement for sales tax reform until shortly before the next election. The saving of announcements for when they are politically appropriate and politically advantageous calls into question the proud statements of the Minister of Finance that the Government would stay the course with its Budgets and would budget in a business-like fashion. It is clear that the Budget is being presented in as political a fashion as even a Liberal Budget ever was.

During the period of the Government's mandate personal incomes have barely kept pace with inflation, but personal taxes will rise more than 16 per cent in 1988. Despite all the lip service that has been given to tax reform, and despite the statement of the Prime Minister that the rich must be made to pay and to pay handsomely, the Government is allowing 60,000 profitable corporations to continue to pay no corporate income tax. That situation flies in the face of equity and also in the face of logic. The Government has stated its need for revenue sources. The Government has given its commitment to deficit reduction. It has not, however, followed the logical next step and gone to the pools of finance which are available to assist in those objectives.

Let me make a simple comparison between the federal Government and the Province of Ontario. In the Province of Ontario every corporation pays what is called a capital tax. This is a minimum tax on corporations. It is hardly onerous. For a small corporation it represents a minimum of $50 a year. That charge goes, obviously, to replenish the coffers of the Province of Ontario. The larger corporations are taxed on an ad valorem basis, a percentage. I believe it is one-fifth of one per cent of their available capital. Every corporation that has an establishment or is registered in the Province of Ontario is paying at least a nominal amount by way of a minimum corporate tax.

Another example is the United States where the Government is at least as conservative as this Progressive Conservative Government—a delightful juxtaposition—as it describes itself. The American Government has seen the real need for a corporate minimum tax and has introduced as part of its tax reform package a 20 per cent minimum tax on corporations.

We are not necessarily talking about onerous taxes on corporations which, for one reason or another, have not reported a profit. We are not even talking of going to the corporations and trying to collect at least some percentage of the money they owe as deferred income taxes which shows up on their balance sheets. We are talking about imposing some nominal degree of taxation at least on corporations which have been very profitable and yet have paid no taxes.

I am sure others have put on the record the cases of individual corporations, including one with profits totalling $117 million and no taxes, another with profits of $220 million and a tax credit of $32 million, and another with profits totalling $39 million and no taxes paid. I am sure other Members have read the names of some of these corporations, so I will not repeat them here.

However, this shows the contrast between those 60,000 profitable corporations that continue to be off the tax rolls, untouched by the Government's revenue garnering measures, and the approximately one million working poor who have been added to the tax rolls as a result of the federal tax reduction and only partial indexation of the tax system.

I am sure other Government Members will rise with pride to say that the Government having more people to the tax rolls is good because it indicates that more people are working and therefore paying taxes. However, they will be either ignoring or wilfully concealing the reality that while many taxpayers have come on to the tax rolls as a result of an increase in their income, many are earning no more than they were earning four years ago in terms of real dollars but are paying taxes now when once they were not.

The Government pays lip service commitment to child care in Canada through this Budget. Child benefits have been cut because of deindexation in past budgets and there is no substantial improvement to that in this Budget. From 1989 onwards the child tax credit will be limited to an indexation factor of the amount over 3 per cent, which guarantees a 3 per cent decline in real terms of the dollar value.

The cumulative effect of deindexation of child benefits is that by 1991 the child benefit system will be reduced by about $1.5 billion, approximately one-third. Obviously, that is significantly larger, in fact a multiple of the amount that the Government envisages putting into a child care program. Again, this is evidence of the Tory syndrome of saving three times as much on the swings as it is prepared to spend on the roundabouts, even after it has advertised such a strong commitment to child care in Canada, after it had trumpeted its initiatives as providing solutions. Of course, those measures merely paper over the cracks of the existing problem.

One of the most significant measures the Government could have taken in the Budget to increase prosperity, promote economic growth within Canada, and to try to work toward a better life for Canadians, was to reduce the interest rates that Canadians pay. Many economists believe that the so-called trade agreement between Canada and the United States, even in its most favourable manifestations, does not have even one-half the economic potential that a drop in interest rates would have in promoting Canadian business.

Presently, Canadian interest rates are kept artificially higher than those in the United States in order to shore up the value of the Canadian dollar, but also to assist the Bank of Canada in its futile attempt to bring inflation down to a zero percent level. Reducing inflation to zero per cent is a prime example of erecting a macro economic measure into an instrument of policy. Of course, the inflation rate is nothing more than a macro economic measure.

Fortunately, Canadians have economic choices which they continually use in making decisions about the mix of goods and services that go to support and essentially make up the lifestyle that we enjoy. Each and every one of us, in our qualities as spenders, are continually involved in controlling inflation by deciding on what and what not to buy. Canadians may choose not to buy strawberries when the price is too high, or switch vegetable and meat choices as the price fluctuates. Inflation is a macro economic measure that is very useful but, as a target, zero per cent inflation, which has overtaken the minds of the Bank of Canada and been erected into a priority, is essentially a proxy goal of very limited utility.

None of us want to go back to the days of the Liberal Government when inflation was allowed to run riot and interest rates soared to levels of 21 per cent to 23 per cent for ordinary mortgages. Everyone wants to control inflation, but we as parliamentarians must demand of the Government that it pursue a reasonable policy that trades off inflation control for economic development, instead of completely neglecting that economic development for the goal of controlling inflation.

Economists have estimated that an 84-cent dollar is the point at which we become non-competitive with the United States, so that attempting to keep the dollar value below the 79-cent or 80-cent level provides a very substantial margin in which Canadian business and Canadian industry is still competitive.

The Premier of Quebec is the fondest friend of the Prime Minister on many issues. While the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) may deplore that fact, he is powerless to change that by any jot or tittle. However, the Premier of the Province of Quebec said on February 8 that there should be lower interest rates and that any further increase will jeopardize our exports.

The fact is that if interest rates in Canada could be reduced by approximately 1 per cent there would be increases in output and employment that would, even in as short a period as five years, exceed even the notational gains that the Government's most favourable studies postulate as a result of the trade deal.

A cut in rates would help the average consumer. Consumer spending accounts for approximately 60 per cent of Gross National Product and if growth is to continue consumer spending will have to remain high. A cut in interest rates would substantially reduce the cost of servicing the Government debt, and that would leave more money for important social programs and job creation.

The Budget itself estimates that a 1 per cent decrease in interest rates will cut the deficit by $1.4 billion in one year and by $9.5 billion over four years. Certainly that would be a measure that this Party could endorse as being very substantially effective, not only in deficit control but ultimately in increasing the revenue side of the ledger, as more people would be working.

The Budget fundamentally ignores the fact that unemployment in eight of the 10 provinces remains at recession levels. There is no commitment to increase the very nominal funding that was granted to northern Ontario by means of the FED-NOR program. There is no commitment to the promotion of industrial development in other parts of the country.

The Government had led Canadians to expect that the Budget process would be done on a businesslike basis. It has led Canadians to believe that Progressive Conservative budgets would always be substantial, would be responsible, would be full of measures that would be significant even though people may not like them. On all three scores, the Government has retreated from that commitment.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Socialist Member's comments on the Budget Speech, I would appreciate it if he would explain his position on the Government of Canada's allocation of tax revenue, because if one is prepared to comment, one must also be clear. I want to ask him how he can justify the fact that the New Democratic Party is abusing tax measures that make it easier to contribute to political parties by using such contributions to provide political support in municipal elections.

Furthermore, and this still concerns the use of funds, how can he justify the fact that his Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), made his telephone code available in Abitibi to the Dean of the University of Quebec in Rouyn, Mr. Trudel, and to a former senior officer of the Quebec Provincial Police who is now his principal organizer? These people, who are supposed to be paragons of openness and honesty, now have the telephone code of the Hon. Member for Oshawa. They use the code in Abitibi for their political organizers, Mr. Speaker. I wish he would explain that.

Finally, to get back to the Budget in general, I wish those people in the Socialist Party would tell us how they think wealth, products or services are created. We must have services, Mr. Speaker, because the Socialists are parasites who congregate in countries where a lot of goods and services are created. They flock to economies that are profitable and take advantage of what they have to offer, and then they can afford to make a lot of grand speeches. I wish they would start by shedding some light on their own conduct and the fraudulent use of taxpayers money, through their Leader, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the Hon. Member for Lévis would think that I could reply to such far-fetched allegations. He knows quite well that, if he wants to lay charges, there are other ways to do so, and he also knows that this has nothing to do with the recent Budget, which is the subject now being debated.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made these accusations during statements under Standing Order 21. He repeats them at every opportunity, but he knows quite well that I cannot discuss such matters during the Budget debate. He paints a rather horrifying picture of the nature of socialism, but I cannot believe that he is not aware of the success of certain socialist economies, for instance in certain countries in Western Europe and Africa.

The Minister responsible for Small Businesses does not differentiate between East and West. He is perhaps misled by the translation, but there is obviously a difference! For instance, most successful economies in Black Africa apply socialist measures and policies. Moreover, the socialist Governments of Sweden, West Germany and France have brought prosperity and economic recovery to their own countries.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that one of the key planks of the Conservative Party when it ran for election was its move to eliminate national debt and to reduce the deficit. In the three years that it has been in power it has managed to increase the national debt by 50 per cent to about $100 billion. It has decreased only marginally the deficit. Will the Hon. Member comment on this inadequacy in the operations of the Government?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we all stand to be judged somewhat harshly for our election commitments. Of course the Government must expect, being in the position it is in, that it will receive the harshest judgment. The fact is that during the election campaign the Conservative Party protested loud and long about the situation of the deficit that previous Liberal Governments had run up by, to use some common phrases, uncontrolled spending, spending like drunken sailors, or having let the economy get out of control. The fact is that for all its vaunted skills and commitment the Government has really made very little impression on the deficit.

Why has it made little impression on the deficit? I suggest it is partly because the commercial interests that brought the Government to power and which back it so powerfully did not feel that it was ultimately in their best interest to see the deficit reduced because, of course, they would have been the ones called upon to contribute to such a reduction. The fact is that the income tax situation which I outlined previously in my speech is obviously to the advantage of the corporate sector. While we hear great preaching from the corporate sector about the need for deficit reduction, as is characteristic in such cases, and individual taxpayers are not any different in this regard, there is very little volunteering done to reduce that sort of deficit.

Other matters I could mention deal with the unwise commitments that the Government has made to military spending, something that will not benefit Canada's defence and which, as we all know, will have a very limited impact on Canada's economy.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what the position of the New Democratic Party is concerning flow-through shares. He will recall that a year or so ago the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the finance critic for the NDP, said that he was against flow-through shares. Later, the Leader of his Party went to Rouyn-Noranda and said something in support of flow-through shares. Today, another member of the NDP asked a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in which it was suggested that he supported grants for mining development.

Representatives from different communities, mayors, chambers of commerce and prospectors will be in Ottawa next Tuesday wanting to know what the position of the NDP is concerning this matter.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) for his very friendly question. As my Party's spokesman on mines I have indeed repeated the commitment of our Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to the continuation of incentives for mineral exploration. Flow-through shares have been a very successful measure in terms of promoting exploration.

I would not expect the Hon. Member to know this but in my riding there is the most active exploration area in the whole of Canada, particularly in terms of gold prospects.

The commitment of this Party is obviously to the continuation of progressive measures, particularly those that can be shown to benefit small and medium-sized Canadian-owned operations in mining exploration, whether that be by means of flow-through shares or another incentive combined with flow-through shares. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides can rest assured that that will be continued under a New Democratic Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, there was a time in the House when speeches on the Budget were an opportunity to examine a blueprint of economic and social priorities for the country. It was an opportunity for Governments to give an honest rendering of the financial accounts of the nation. At such a time they had to be forthcoming about prospects for growth and development. Most important, it was a time when they attempted to set out some series of goals and objectives that the Budget, the most important economic document of the country, would seek to implement.

One of the difficulties of engaging in this debate is that that is not what the Budget brought about. It was a masquerade, a camouflage, a subterfuge. It was cosmetic. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is known as the "Mary Kay" of the political world. All he does is to put a lot of rouge and lipstick on the same old face. He does not provide Canadians with an opportunity to examine clearly the fiscal and economic direction of the country and what the Government will do about it. There was an attempt to present a picture of rosy, glossy, Pollyanna scenarios without providing the facts. When one examines that document it is disturbing to realize how much was hidden. There was a deliberate attempt to hide within the Budget Papers the real story of economics in this country. Let me provide one example.

For the past two years we have been given the impression that the proposed trade initiative with the Americans was going to be the great cornucopia of economic growth and development. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance promise you everything. You have a bald head, hair will grow; you have warts on your fingers, they will come off; all you have to do is to sign this agreement with the Americans. The Prime Minister goes to Calgary and says, "You see all those people driving BMWs in Toronto? Sign free trade with the Americans, and everybody in the West will have one too". This was going to be the magic wand that would open up all manner of incredible opportunities.

However, one need only look at the Government's own documents, which are not something that the Liberal Research Bureau has concocted. Let us look at the Department of Finance's own document, its own economic forecast as to the prospects under the trade agreement.

I think it is a fair assumption that the Department of Finance is on the same side as the Prime Minister. Perhaps in their hearts they are not, but as public servants they will be required to give the best case scenario. What was stated in the Department of Finance document, the Government's own estimate of what trade with the Americans will provide? Well, Mr. Speaker, hold on to your hat on this one. It stated that maybe, possibly, under the best case scenario, we may get one-half of one per cent growth per year. That is not even within the margin of error of the computer that does the forecasting. It is so small as to be meaningless in terms of an economic forecast.

The Minister of Finance rises in the House to the cheers of all his back-benchers and states that the Government will create 120,000 jobs. He did not say that those jobs would be spread over five years. That is 24,000 jobs a year. Last year, in the month of January, the Canadian economy created 60,000 jobs. We have been doing that for 10 years. In other words, the economic growth prospects provided by the Department itself are marginal. Not only that, but the Department of Finance forecast did not include two very important items, which we found out when we had to go through the Budget Papers. What they did not account for is that the Government of Canada will lose revenue as a result. In four or five years' time when the agreement is finally in place, it will mean $2 billion a year of lost revenue. Even in this year there was a very interesting little table in the fiscal plan which stated that lost revenue due to trade initiative amounted to $450 million, and increased taxation on gas was $475 million.

In other words, every time a Canadian taxpayer fills up his or her car with 30 or 40 litres of gas, he or she will be paying a lot of money for "Brian's folly". The Department of Finance did not include the fact that there was going to be increased taxation on Canadian consumers to pay for the trade initiative. It is $.5 billion this year, $1 billion the next year, and finally

Furthermore, the Government includes absolutely no forecast in its analysis as to the cost of adjustment. It pretends that that will not be a problem. Industry after industry has come forward and stated that there will be major job loss. Someone will have to pay additional UI premiums. Someone will have to pay for additional training. Someone will have to pay for new industries in the community that will be devastated by the loss of its textile plant, food processing plant, or its printing industry. Who will pay for that? The federal Government has stated that it will not pay for it. The provinces or the private sector will pay for it. The Macdonald Royal Commission has stated that that could be a $5 billion tab.

Try these mathematics, Mr. Speaker. The Government states that there will be one-half of one per cent of growth. If one subtracts $2 billion in additional taxes and $5 billion in adjustment costs, not only is the additional growth wiped out but there is a negative account.

Last Monday in Fredericton Mr. Archer McLean appeared before the federal Liberal task force. He is a vice-president of McCain Foods, the largest food processor in Canada. There are 1.7 million Canadians who work in the agro-food business. Mr. McLean appeared before the task force and stated that his company has a choice under the free trade agreement; it either shuts down or goes south. That is his choice. I have it here, and I will gladly table the document. Mr. McLean stated that the agro-food business, the people who put the cornflakes in the box, the tomato catsup, the frozen foods, or the chicken pot-pie, which is a big industry in Canada, cannot survive under this free trade agreement.

If the Government is being honest, they will be required to pay higher input costs for the tomatoes, the potatoes, the chickens, the asparagus, the broccoli, and all the foodstuffs used. As Mr. McLean properly pointed out, the trade agreement forgets a couple of important ingredients. One, Canada has a winter that sometimes lasts six to eight months. Therefore, if a company has to compete on the so-called level playing field with chickens that are grown in Georgia, where a little hut is built and some corn is thrown on the ground, and that is all that has to be provided, compared to chickens that are grown in New Brunswick, Manitoba, or British Columbia where the buildings have to be heated and many other input costs have to be provided, they say that they cannot compete. They say that they have a choice of getting rid of supply management, put import quotas on, which is not free trade, or they will move south.

There is an interesting example in my own province provided by Mr. McLean. There is a large plant in Portage La Prairie where 300 or 400 people work. They make French-fried potatoes from good Manitoba potatoes. They pay $120 per tonne for potatoes in Manitoba. That same tonne of potatoes is available down south for $90 a tonne because of the difference in climate and geography. It has nothing to do with the creative ability of the Canadian farmer, his sense of confidence or entrepreneurship. All it says is that he has to grow potatoes in a cold climate. Therefore, there are higher input costs.

The Government of Canada has taken none of that into account. It is putting at risk the largest industry in Canada. Where is that contained in the Minister of Finance's forecast? Where is his analysis of how we will compensate that industry or the workers who will lose their jobs? It is nowhere to be found. The economic forecast provided by the Minister of Finance in his statement is phoney. It is a con job, it is a snow job, it is has no basis in reality or in fact.

I did not mention the printing industry which will lose 10,000 jobs, or the textile or garment industry which has been promised that it will not be injured by this trade arrangement.

[Translation]

The largest industrial sector in Quebec is the textile and clothing industry. This sector would certainly be substantially weakened by the Free Trade Agreement.

[English]

Yet the Government makes no provision. It states that it will not do anything about it. Yet it knows that someone will have to pay the tab.

Let us look at the analysis on the economic side. The Government is hiding the facts. It is concealing the truth. It is relying on its propaganda machine rather than on its ability to present an effective argument. That is not right. Canadians should expect more from the Government. They should expect honesty and truth from their Governments, otherwise how can they prepare themselves and know what they are getting into?

Let me provide another example of the way in which the Budget is cosmetic. The Minister of Finance promised new initiatives in the regions to help them regain their economic balance, one of the primary responsibilities of any Government. He promised the great Western Diversification Fund. However, when we look at the Estimates we find that the money being spent on western diversification is under old programs, that certain provinces do not receive any money at all, and that in my own Province of Manitoba they are hauling out jobs. Some 300 jobs in the CNR will disappear, but the Minister of Transport says "Oh, I am sorry, that is downsizing". So we have this interesting contradiction—we have a Western Diversification Fund with no allocation. They have not got around to it yet because they have not completed the organizational principles. They are taking money under existing regional development programs, transferring it out of my province to go elsewhere, and reducing jobs in federal Crown corporations. That is the Tory formula for regional development. They take away money, take away jobs, and leave us with a lot of propaganda and promises; hardly a basis upon which to build confidence.

Let me give another most fascinating example by returning to the trade agreement for a moment. The Government of Canada says: "We want to be world traders", but we know from an analysis that it is really preoccupied with Canada-U.S. trade. I would be most happy if a Member on the government benches would answer the following question: If the Government is anxious to encourage trade around the world, why is it that it has reduced the budget expenditure on trade development by $11 million in the last year? Why is it cutting back? It has cut back on export financing every year. Is it any wonder that our trade with the Pacific Rim is down by 30 per cent? Is it any wonder that our trade with Europe is down by 20 per cent? Is it any wonder that our trade with the Middle East is down by 30 per cent? It is because this is a Government which does not want to trade with the world. It wants to trade only in Akron, Ohio, or some other such place. It is deliberately neglecting its responsibility to the Canadian business sector to provide the export financing, the development work, and the embassies and consulates necessary to open new trade opportunities. That is the real agenda. It is not interested in trading around the world. It has no interest in supporting such trade diversification for Canadian industry.

Can we believe a Government which is going to spend $11 billion on nuclear submarines but is cutting back millions of dollars on trade development? What kind of a perverted sense of priority is that? What kind of rank stupidity is it when the Government is going to build submarines to satisfy the adolescent aspirations of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) who was frustrated because he did not have enough submarines in his bath tub as a young boy and as a result cut back expenditures on broadening our trade position around the world?

Mr. Thacker: Shame on you, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: I have no shame about that. The only people who should have shame are those who are engaging in a gross militaristic expenditure at the sacrifice of our trade development in the Pacific Rim, in Latin America, and in Europe, and who are sacrificing small businesses that need export financing support to open up new markets, for the sake of an adolescent fantasy of cold war brinksmanship that the Minister of National Defence tries to peddle around the country.

Let us deal with another question on which the Government has been totally silent. The other day when I was in my riding in Winnipeg, I met with a group of social workers and street workers to talk about the problem of the homeless in downtown Winnipeg. We have 5,000 homeless kids in downtown Winnipeg. Many of them are engaged in street prostitution. Many of them are running from home to home. Many of them do not have the kind of support they need. There are 5,000 homeless kids, to say nothing about families.

However, if I turn to the Estimates I find that the Government is cutting back job-creation programs dealing with low income people. It is cutting back its expenditures. Also, CMHC is no longer providing financing to housing for special needs. Grants are being cut back to the social agencies, and organizations working with native groups. In other words, at a time when we are facing one of the most debilitating and heart-wrenching social problems of a generation, the Government says "no", is indifferent to the problem, and is paying no attention. It cannot be heard.

Mr. Garneau: What about International Year of the Homeless?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes. We had International Year of the Homeless, as my colleague reminded me. Where are the programs which came out of it? There were conferences, studies, reports, and research, but no direct delivery. Those 5,000 homeless kids—and the numbers are growing—did not see any of that money. In fact, I will give an example. The Government announced a few years back that it would spend $5 million to try to do something about battered and abused women and children as a result of the Badgeley report.

I went through the figures. All the money that has been spent to date went on conferences, seminars, and training programs, with the exception of one project in Vancouver that actually provided direct delivery to the children themselves; one of the whole group.

I only use that example to say that the Government does not have its priorities straight. It has no social programs. It has no sense of what is happening out there on the streets. It is abandoning those people. It is cutting back on its support in critical areas.

There are Members of the House who have stood and defended the so-called Canadian Jobs Strategy program as being a great accomplishment. What that program has done is taken money away from those very groups. They say that they are going to train for the labour market, which means that they are not training those children who left school in grade seven or grade eight and do not have the proper literacy to enter a training program. They do not give money to social organizations such as children's homes or Rossbrook House in downtown Winnipeg which used to use those programs to take native kids off the street and give them some initial experience in the job market. Oh, it was not fancy training on computers, but it sure made a difference. It gave them a step up and a sense of hope. All that has disappeared, and now we are left with a problem which is growing by leaps and bounds, and we have a Budget which says absolutely nothing about it.

What we say is that this is not a Budget. It is an attempt to fool and con the Canadian people. It is a blueprint for discrimination. It is a blueprint of bias. It is a blueprint that has no feeling or compassion.

This is why Canadians, when they begin to learn what is in the Budget and see the reality behind it, will make their judgment, as they are already making it, that this is a Government which no longer has the right to govern.

• (1300)

Mr. Riis: I have a question for my hon. colleague, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to a speech on priorities in which the Hon. Member said that priorities seem to be skewed with this Government and the Member laid out a whole number of reasons why he felt that.

I want to ask him about another priority, namely, we appreciate as Members of this House that the mining industry is one of the major industries of Canada. It is a multibillion dollar industry employing tens of thousands of people in every region and every province. One of the initiatives that Governments have taken in the past has been a mechanism called flow-through shares. This mechanism allowed mining companies to raise funds for exploration. If you like, the first stage of any mine development has to be to find the mineral deposit and explore it. We know now that the Government has decided to phase out for all intents and purposes that flow-through program which, in a sense, leaves the mining sector high and dry, particularly the small and medium-sized junior companies which are exclusively Canadian owned.

Could the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) say whether this too would be part of his litany where the Government has missed the point in its priorities by abandoning support for exploration at the front end of the upstream of mining development in Canada? Will that have serious implications on the ability of Canada to develop this critical sector in the future?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his question. When I was in British Columbia seven or eight months ago meeting with the mining associations it was very clear that the flow-through share program was one of the most important regional development programs in the country. It was a program that not only had a specific set approach but also had a number of corollary benefits for the communities and the regions. The Member himself knows from the constituency he represents that many small communities are totally dependent upon the mines. If the exploration and development is cut back, reduced or eliminated, then the communities themselves suffer.

We had commitments from the Government that it would do something for the mining industry. The flow-through share program was removed and the Government said it would replace that with something, but, as we know, the Government takes off one shoe and never lets the other one drop. So we have the abandonment of the flow-through share formula but nothing to replace it. I have had several representations from the mining industry in my own province that this situation is creating a climate of uncertainty which means there will be a cut-back on investment and expenditure. It will also have harmful effects on many of the small one-industry mining towns which are very important in western Canada. Once again we have a Government that has blinded itself to reality as to what works well and what it should be doing to keep a regional balance in Canada.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a genuine question to my friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I have had some concern and, frankly, some surprise in my mind since reading the comments after the policy conference in Vancouver on the question of the trade deal with the United States. I know that in his speech the Member made a very strong condemnation of the potential effects of this trade deal, one that I share completely. I would like a reaffirmation from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) as to the Liberal commitment on this trade deal.

If a new Government is elected, a non-Conservative Government, a Government which includes or is made up of Liberals, will that Government take a decision to see to it that the trade deal as it stands, as an agreement, is not put into effect but is instead replaced by a series of individual initiatives to improve our trade with the United States, as opposed to this blanket, across-the-board deal and what I think we both feel has been so devastatingly dangerous, a deal for Canada which has led to so many surrenders for this country?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to answer the question. Perhaps the Hon. Member who referred to the policy conference in Vancouver would be interested in a speech given by the Leader of our Party. May I just take a moment to quote from it. He said:

> I oppose the Mulroney trade deal because in integrating our economy and society more closely with that of the United States we are dramatically reducing our ability to make our own choices for our own future.

I think it states very clearly the position of the Leader of our Party and it is a position supported by the caucus of our Party. We are determined that this is a deal, an arrangement, that is not in the interests of Canada and would have to be abrogated.

I point out to the House, and I do respond to the sincerity of the question with an equally sincere answer, that when we were in Washington a week ago as part of a fact finding mission to determine American attitudes about the deal, it was clear to me that it would be far more difficult to abrogate a treaty after it is ratified at the end of the year than if we were to do it now. The Americans would not find it particularly difficult or problematic if Canada, through its democratic process, decided that it did not want to go ahead with the deal. It would be more complicated if after ratification and the treaty or the agreement was signed and the abrogation had to be used, it could cause a reaction. That is why I think it is absolutely morally responsible for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to call an election before that ratification so as to give Canadians the right to decide on this issue, among others, before we put ourselves into the situation where Americans might have more justification for reaction.

I am not saying that we would pull back from that reaction. I am just saying it would be more difficult. If the Conservatives really believe and have the strength of their convictions, which I sometimes wonder if they do, then let them put it to the test and not put a future Government in a position of having to abrogate a treaty. Have an election before the agreement is ratified. If the Conservative Party wins, then fine, the Conservatives will have a clear mandate and they can go ahead and ratify in all good conscience. If they lose, they will not be putting a future Government into a difficult position. That, I think, should be a clear recognition on the part of the Prime Minister. If he had any sense of responsibility or obligation through the democratic process, that is what he would do.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in the early part of his speech referred to the document prepared by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) concerning job creation if the trade agreement was put into effect. My colleague referred to the tax increases to replace the duty removal that will be the result of this deal.

Could the Member tell me if in this report of the Department of Finance the Department took into consideration the changes in the value of the dollar? Was the assumption that the dollar would remain at 74 or 73 cents? As of this morning it was at 79 cents, and this increased value of the Canadian dollar could wipe out completely the benefit of the duty removal. I would like the Member's comment about this aspect of the Department of Finance's report on job creation.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will provide a very quick and concise answer. First, it is very clear, almost axiomatic, that if this agreement goes ahead, there will be an increasingly upward valuation on the Canadian dollar. That is the expectation of the Americans and it has been the case historically when such agreements have been signed. There will be new institutional pressures to bring that about. We can make the assumption that the dollar will be much higher than 79 cents after ratification.

There has been no consideration whatsoever in the Department of Finance report that the value of the dollar is a factor that should be taken into account. If the value of the dollar were to change by another three or four cents, it would totally wipe out any proposed benefits under the forecast provided.

I will just say as a footnote, Mr. Speaker, because I know that you are deeply interested in these matters, that I met yesterday with people in the softwood lumber industry who pointed out that they have already been severely affected by the change in the value of the dollar from 75 cents to 79 cents. They are already losing markets and are already on the margins of production for small and medium-sized sawmills on the West Coast, in Quebec and in Ontario. Already the promises we have had from the Government that somehow the dollar was a fixed item have been proven wrong in a very vital sector of the industry. My colleague is absolutely correct. The Department of Finance took no consideration of that.

The Department did not consider the cost of adjustment nor did it consider the cost of increased taxes or the cost of the dollar. If all that had been taken into consideration in an honest forecast, we would probably have a negative report, not a positive one.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the Budget. When the Minister of Finance made his Budget Speech, he used a format which to some extent has been followed by other Hon. Members who have spoken. When he spoke, he reported on his term of office. On some occasions, it was a somewhat biased report, but it was a report on that period of time. Over the days of the budget debate, government Members who have risen have followed that format. They have repeated ad nauseam the same liturgy, attempting to convince the people of Canada by repetition that the Government has done something worthwhile in the last three or four years.

Since the Minister has established that format, I am sure he will not object to our use of it. I will use at least part of my 20 minutes, therefore, to report on the record of the Government and on the effect of the Minister's Budget on the people of Canada.

This particular Budget contained very little. I suppose that this is part of the reason for the Minister having used the format he did. He really did not feel that he could spend the half hour or so he thought was necessary talking about the new deal he was presenting to Canada. Therefore, he made a rather lengthy attempt to put the past in the best light possible.

The Budget will have very little impact on Canadians across the board. What becomes important in the Budget is what the Government is attempting to make the central issue in this debate. The Budget does nothing to improve Canada for Canadians. The Budget contained a few things that will impact negatively, particularly taxes, and it even contains some retreats from positions the Government had taken previously. However, there is nothing to make the life of Canadians better than it was before 1984 when this Government was elected.

The record of the Minister of Finance in agriculture has not been impressive over the years. He started out early in his career by presenting to Parliament and the people of Canada a paper entitled Finances in Agriculture. I believe it was presented late in 1984 or early in 1985. The main point of that paper was that the farming sector was obviously the richest sector in the economy and that farmers were getting much more out of the economy than they should. That was two years ago, and that was when the recession in agriculture began.

At that time, even the Minister's colleagues in the Conservative Party were embarrassed by the lack of knowledge and understanding expressed by that paper. The Minister withdrew from the ideas in that paper rather hurriedly and buried his head for a while. Rather than getting good advice on agriculture, his next incursion into the agricultural industry was to remove the investment tax credit on new machinery. He, along with his colleague in revenue, began to investigate how producers had benefited from the investment tax credit.

We recognize that the agricultural industry is not doing particularly well at this time. The Minister's initiative kind of put the boot to the industry when it was down. At a time when a great many farmers were suffering, they suddenly found themselves being investigated for doing their part in helping the machinery industry.

The investment tax credit for new machinery was put in place to increase the movement of machinery from the manufacturer to the farm by giving some assistance to the farmer. This was of great assistance to the farm-machinery manufacturing industry. The provision was not put in place originally to help the farmer, although farmers did receive some benefit from it. It was intended to increase the sale of farm machinery, and it did just that.

The Government proceeded to remove that measure and to assess farmers who had made use of it. It was a kind of harassment which caused a great deal of concern and heartache among farmers who were already in a bad situation. Again, the Government retreated in somewhat of a fluster. I must say that, for a while at least, the harassment stopped. The Government decided that its approach to this withdrawal was doing it some political harm and it withdrew. Now, however, many farmers are telling me that they are again being assessed and are required to produce rebates on matters into which they themselves had very little input. It is the kind of discrimination that gives all Governments a bad name. After the Government committed itself not to proceed with investigation and harassment of farmers who had taken advantage of the investment tax credit, it is now proceeding to do so. It flip-flopped twice on that issue.

Another incursion into the agricultural industry was the Minister's White Paper on taxation presented last June. In that paper the Minister attempted to impose accrual accounting on all farmers. With a certain amount of relief, farmers are seeing one further retreat by the Minister in this Budget, but he did not solve the problem. He left farmers in limbo. He says he is going to take his accounting and tax procedures to hearings across the country and then come down with something somewhere between cash and accrual accounting. Right now farmers do not really know what to expect. They can carry on what they have been doing for at least another year, but they have not been told whether they will be faced with accrual accounting in the future.

The Minister's inadequacy or absolute lack of knowledge of agriculture almost makes you want to take him out West and say to him: Now, Mr. Minister, this is a cow. This is a quarter section of land, 160 acres. It is part of a section which is a mile each way, one square mile or 640 acres. Those kinds of things are basic to agriculture and the Minister should know them, but he apparently does not because he does not take the kind of action which will allow farmers to continue to operate. It appears that he does not know the effect of the decisions he and his Department have made in the past concerning the farm industry.

When you look at the rest of the Budget, you realize the Minister lives in some kind of a fantasyland which must be based on Bay Street. He does not deal with reality. His is a financial world which has very little connection to the actual world of day-to-day labour and production.

For example, the Minister tells us loud and long in his speech about the reduction in income taxes for ordinary Canadians. He says they will receive an average reduction of $400. Yet he neglects or overlooks or fails to tell the people of Canada that since 1984 the Government has added $1,400 to their taxes. The average family is paying $1,400 more in taxes now than it was three years ago. Yet the Minister stresses the fact that you might get $400 back, even though you are out of pocket by $1,000. This is not something for rejoicing, nor is it a particularly realistic or honest approach.

I can give another example. The Minister suggests the Government has created one million jobs. Using the Government's method of counting he says they can prove it. Yet he ignores the fact that about half those jobs are part-time and that in eight of the 10 provinces the unemployment level has not changed significantly.

Another example. Even as the Minister proclaims fairness in taxation for all people, he adds another five cents a gallon to the price of gasoline as of April 1. That makes for a total increase in the cost of gasoline of approximately $350 more than it was in 1983. Since many workers, even those in fairly low-paying jobs, cannot avoid using their cars, this is a regressive tax. The people who can least afford to pay it and who are required to use their cars must pay it. It comes off the top of their earnings before they spend money to live, pay rent and buy food.

A further example. After great huffing and puffing by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the increase in research and the need to double spending in that area, we have a recognition of specific funds in the Budget for research. Research happens only if you plan and train for it. The Government has systematically reduced the funds available for higher education. Places like the University of Saskatchewan, in my province, which is one of the most active and highly respected agricultural research centres in Canada, are not being adequately funded to train scientists let alone carry out the research necessary in that area.

I am sure that if you took any particular sector of the economy you would find exactly the same thing. By reducing the number of scientists or the amount of money going to training and research facilities, the Government is effectively reducing the amount of research being done in Canada. We are tenth among the OECD countries in the amount of money we spend on research. We are short of scientists and we are not giving universities enough money to produce scientists. We are not taking advantage of the opportunities available in technological development. Again, the Minister is living in a fantasy-land or in Bay Street finance land rather than in the world of development.

The Minister spends much time spouting about fairness, but his projected taxation structure is anything but fair. To most of us, fairness in taxation means that those most able to pay should pay a higher percentage than those in the lower income tax brackets. Since 1984 corporation taxes have risen by 28 per cent, yet personal income taxes have risen by 55 per cent. Sales taxes which everyone in Canada pays when buying anything have risen by 96 per cent. There are still 60,000 profitable corporations which pay no taxes at all. The Minister did not even suggest a minimum tax so that all corporations would contribute to running this country.

The Minister has not moved on reduction of the deficit. In the three and a half years during which the Government has been in power it has added $100 billion to the national debt and has only marginally reduced the speed at which the debt increases each year. I can go on. There are 200,000 child care spaces required and no effective money to solve the problem. There is only marginal money available to proceed on regional development.

We are studying the effect of this Budget on Canada. Free trade is not the answer. That is the road to Americanization and America is not the model toward which most of us want to move. Joining the United States is not a new deal for Canadians. During the rest of the Government's term I hope it will bring to the people of Canada a new deal which recognizes that we need improvement and the development of Canada.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Hon. Member who just spoke. I served with him on the Public Accounts Committee and I regard him highly. However, I must say that I found his remarks today to be basically bumf.

He referred to the issue of personal income tax and the amount of income tax paid by individuals as opposed to corporations. The Hon. Member did not point out that while the amount raised by personal income tax has increased very substantially in the last three and a half years, 80 per cent of that increase is as a result of the fact that people have been put back to work. People who were not working are now working and earning money again and are, therefore, paying taxes. The Hon. Member did not point that out in his comments.

The Member also spoke about the deficit and deficit reduction. The Member indicated that there had been only marginal deficit reduction over the last three and a half years. You and I are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the annual deficit has been reduced over that three and one-half short years by $10 billion. The other day an Hon. Member suggested that "billion" should be spelled with a capital B, and that is right. There has been $10 billion annually spent on deficit reduction.

If the Member believes that deficit reduction should take place at a much more substantial rate, would he increase personal income taxes or other taxes, a move which he and his Party have opposed consistently over the last three and a half years and forever before that, or would he cut government expenditures, a move which he and his Party have opposed over the last three and a half years and long before? They have indeed consistently requested that government spending be increased over that period of time. How would the Hon. Member reduce the deficit—by cutting expenditures or by raising taxes?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the question. He is using exactly the same logic in commenting on my speech as the Government is using across the board. The Member suggests that the deficit has been reduced by $10 billion. That may be so, but in the process of doing so the Government has increased the debt of Canada by $100 billion.

The Government shows the same kind of logic in dealing with employment. One million jobs have been created, but each of the provinces has the same percentage of unemployment as they had before and the number of part-time jobs has increased. Half of the one million jobs were part-time jobs.

The Member asks how we would reduce the deficit. We certainly would not do it by signing a trade agreement with the United States because the effective result of that will be the reduction of jobs. We need to put in place a policy of full employment which will require domestic investment. Every $1 billion of profit in a Canadian corporation produces close to 5,000 jobs. For every $1 billion of foreign profit 16 jobs are created and most of the profit goes to the foreign country.

If we really want to get rid of the deficit we must put everyone to work, whereupon taxation will increase to the extent that the deficit will become less and less of a factor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Hon. Member and I am sorry that it may not be as complimentary to the Conservatives as my questions usually are. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) is a very wise Member. Does he know that since the Conservatives came into power in 1984 a family of four with one earner earning $32,000 a year pays $1,200 per year more in income taxes than it did the day prior to the Government coming into office? I would like the Member to tell us what he thinks of that particular government initiative.

I would also like to ask the Member about tax on long distance phone rates, the tax on free speech as I call it. That 10 per cent tax on telephone rates unfairly discriminates against rural Canadians. I know the Member has a number of rural constituents because I had the honour and pleasure of visiting the Hon. Member's riding last year. He was kind enough to greet me when I went there. He and I both represent rural ridings.

Would the Member not agree with me that that tax which will generate $870 million this year is totally reprehensible and discriminatory against rural Canadians and small businessmen, the same small businessmen whom the Tories pretend to represent?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question regarding the income and taxation of the average family is a matter of record. Taxation has increased by $1,300 or $1,400 and the reduction will only be about $400 if it goes through in the way the Minister suggests.

With regard to the 10 per cent tax on telephone calls, there are communities in my constituency where every call made is a long distance call. If people want to call their doctor, their children's school, or call for any equipment or supplies, they have to make a long distance call. Small businesses in such communities are bearing the burden of the major increases in the tax on telephone calls. There is no doubt in my mind or in the mind of anyone in rural areas that the 10 per cent tax on telephone calls is very discriminatory.

It affects people in rural areas much more than it affects any city dweller.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Lewis, moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8) I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 149 petitions, Nos. 332-3538 to 332-3661 inclusive, 332-3678 to 332-3685 inclusive, 332-3689, 332-3700, and 332-3709 to 332-3713 inclusive.

I would like to take the opportunity to point out that we have had parliamentary reform. It is the Government's responsibility to respond to petitions, hopefully within 45 days. In this group of petitions there are some that were presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on January 18, 1988, which is certainly within the 45 days, but they were certified on April 24 and May 8, 1986.

In the spirit of representation of constituents, I think it would be helpful if Members were to have petitions certified upon receipt and present them to the House in order that the Government has an adequate opportunity to respond.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, in both official languages, dealing as it does with a reference from this House on the subject of family life education, a matter that was originally brought to the attention of the House by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I was seeking the floor on a point of order. It has to do with Bill C-204, coming out of the legislative committee.

The legislative committee completed its deliberations on February 11 and, after the necessary work was completed, it was prepared to report on Wednesday, February 24.

I would simply like to raise the issue. I hope that the chairman of that committee will be here at the appropriate time to present that committee report—as soon as possible. If it was to occur later in the day, I am sure that we would be able to receive unanimous consent to have it introduced at that time.

It is an important piece of legislation, it has gone through all the appropriate stages, and on a daily basis we are waiting for it to be presented.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that I have been in touch with the office of the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James). He has been delayed in Toronto airport. He had intended to introduce the report today.

As a courtesy to my hon. friend, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, upon the arrival of the Hon. Member or directly after Question Period, we are prepared to revert to presenting reports from committees in order to allow this report to be tabled in the House.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could assist the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) by thanking the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) and by indicating to the House that it was conveyed to the Chair that the report would be brought forward this morning at this time. I am sure that something has come between that intention and the fact.

As long as there was consent, of course the Chair would be very much prepared to revert to receive the report later this afternoon.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition from constituents of mine resident in the area of Red Rock, Nipigon, and Dorion, who have signed a petition protesting that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised but that the trade deal negotiated by the Government actually threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities among the regions.

Whereas the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, the petitioners pray that the House of Commons might be dissolved so that the people of Canada would have an opportunity to accept or to reject this agreement with the American Government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure, indeed an honour, to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from British Columbia, pursuant to Standing Order 106.

They are concerned that the Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude the trade deal with the United States. They believe that in essence the trade deal threatens the very fabric of our political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Government to control foreign ownership in Canada effectively. Of course, it also limits our effectiveness to develop our energy resources in the best interest of Canadian citizens and causes real problems in terms of our ability to deal with regional economic difficulties.

They are asking Parliament to dissolve to enable the people of Canada to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition, which was certified earlier this month by the Clerk of Petitions as being correct and in the proper form.

The people who have signed the petition express their concern with the Government's trade arrangement with the United States. They believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did not receive a mandate from the people of Canada on this issue in the 1984 election, and they believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities among the regions.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade arrangement through a national general election.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I fulfil my responsibility as a Member of the House to present a petition signed by a number of electors, which has been properly certified as being correct.

It, too, points out the danger to the Canadian future or Canadian destiny involved in the prospect of the bilateral free trade agreement signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 250 will be answered today.

[Text]

GRANTS TO ORGANIZATIONS WITHIN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 250—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of National Revenue make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue does not provide for nor support the making of grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, or any other entity.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

The House resumed from Friday, February 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I should like to continue the debate on Bill C-109, an Act to provide the Government with a $25,300 million borrowing authority.

When I was addressing the Bill the last time the matter was before the House, I pointed out that the Government had failed to give arts and culture the kind of boost they need in terms of tax policy and, I would add at this point, in terms of the free trade negotiations.

Canadian arts and cultural industries deserve protection, not only for what they do in respect of our sovereign concerns but as well as for their importance to the Canadian economy and to employment. Statistics Canada has said that in 1987 the arts and cultural industries contributed $11 billion to the gross national product and that over one million Canadians drew income directly or indirectly from these industries, following a remarkable 90 per cent increase in the number of jobs in those sectors since 1971. It is mainly because of the social and cultural roles they play that these industries should have been better protected in the free trade talks.

To continue from the point where I was discussing what could have been the Government's economic thrust, I talked about the need for block averaging for artists, not just for farmers. In another area I was talking about arts organizations. They are designed to promote the arts and welfare of artists and should be accorded special status under the Income Tax Act, which would allow them to issue receipts giving tax deductions for gifts in the same way as registered Canadian amateur athletic associations do now. It is interesting that the Province of Quebec adopted a system akin to that recommended by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in January, 1987, but this system only applies with regard to Quebec organizations and Quebec taxation. Unfortunately no reference to this has been made by the Government in its White Paper. This issue still remains a high priority for the arts community.

In respect of money for national museums, two national museums are expected to open their facilities in Ottawa during 1988-89—the National Gallery and the Museum of Civilization. I had hoped that each of these museums would be adequately funded to meet the demands of the newer and bigger facilities and that consequently their acquisition budgets, particularly in the case of the National Gallery, would not be severely restricted. I had hoped that the Government would provide money for these important needs. Little did I expect that it would undertake to play a shell game and just move moneys within that pot. There have been no increases, just unfair manoeuvres which will negatively impact on other museums across the land. At the same time, the lack of concern and the lack of attention to the decision of the Cultural Properties Review Board respecting a piece of work by Gustav Klimt that the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts wished to purchase obviously indicates that the federal Government or the Minister missed the boat as they did not act on time.

In respect of Canadian programming on radio and television, it is essential to the enjoyment and development of our cultural identity as well as our sovereignty. Radio and television are the largest and most immediate distribution mechanisms for cultural products. I had hoped the Government would have provided increased funding for the CBC, the National Film Board, and Telefilm Canada for this purpose. These agencies are key to the development and strengthening of Canadian radio and television film production. The strengthening of these industries will become increasingly important as we forge closer commercial ties with the United States. Their success will depend on Telefilm Canada's reputation and stable funding.

Another aspect I had hoped to see addressed is with respect to a home for the National Archives of Canada, which is now in poor temporary quarters. It is short of space. Its archival holdings and its government records are at risk. These environmental conditions are not acceptable. We need to have a way in which to preserve our national heritage.

The standing committee has recommended that priority be given to the construction of a new facility which would meet the accommodation needs of the National Archives until the year 2010. It was the Minister's intention to move in that direction. I was disappointed to see that this was not found in the Budget or in the Minister's remarks.

In closing, I would like to quote Canadian publisher John MacFarlane who pointed out that it is important as a country to "make the distinction between importing merchandise and importing culture. Wearing foreign shoes and driving foreign cars won't make us any less Canadian, but without our own culture we're nothing more than a colony".

We cannot, it seems to me, preserve Canada's political sovereignty and cultural identity without protecting and developing our own cultural industries. They provide Canadian artists, creators and communicators with real and numerous opportunities for expressing and sharing their vision of Canada.

The closing ceremonies of the Olympics took place last evening. We all viewed its Canadian dimensions. Our Hockey Night in Canada and the Olympics are part of what make up the Canadian cultural milieu. I hope that we will give serious consideration to these matters as we look at the borrowing authority.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Member on the borrowing authority Bill which puts the country further in debt I was wondering if it is still the policy of the Liberal Party, and her policy as one who represents the riding of the former Prime Minister, to continue to borrow, borrow, borrow without end just because she has further demands and wants of the Government. It is as if we have a money tree out in the backyard from which we can pick further currency.

As the Hon. Member may, know there are further appropriations for culture in the budgetary figures handed down by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski). I wonder why the Member demands insistently for more borrowing. Does she want the Bill raised to $27 billion or $28 billion? Is $30 billion too little for her? When will we see the end of Liberal demands to put the country into bankruptcy?

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member also had certain negative attitudes toward the capital cost allowance which was a way in which one could infuse risk dollars into the film industry. He did not care to support this measure to the degree I or the industry would have liked.

May I remind him that 60 per cent or more of the debt of the country has been accumulated under the management of his Government. If it would stop spending these incredible sums on nuclear submarines and put them where we need to place emphasis in Canada then we would be far better off. It is a matter of priorities. I find that the Government's priorities are not well directed.

If we accumulated a deficit in 1980, 1981 and 1982 I remind the Hon. Member that the whole world was in a state of chaos and heading toward a depression. Canada did not have to put bread lines in place. But we now have bread lines, thanks to the management of his Government.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments. With regard to the Hon. Member's remarks, she takes a certain perverse delight in going about the country knocking Canadian arts and undermining Canadian culture. It is really a sad state of affairs when a Member of Parliament will not stand up in defence of Canadian arts, our artists and our creators.

This year in the Estimates $113 million has been added to the base budget of the Department of Communications and the portfolio. Some $53 million in additional resources will now be available to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There is a 5 per cent over-all increase in the envelope of the Department of Communications and the portfolio. This means additional increases for museums, broadcasting, the National Archives and a number of other fields.

What is important to note is that since that time we have added an additional $8 million to the Canada Council so that it can meet with requests from across the country that are coming to it. We have also allocated $8 million for the expansion of the Art Gallery of Ontario. This is a tremendous project which serves Toronto, Ontario and, indeed, the whole of Canada.

Two years ago on a five-year basis we added an annual increase of $33 million to the production of feature films and dubbing and to a series for television. This amounts to a total of $165 million over this period of time.

We have added substantially to the budget of the sound recording industry. This has allowed a great increase in the number of Canadian songs performed by Canadian artists and recorded by Canadian recording companies.

These measures are taking place. At the end of the last calendar year newspaper after newspaper made comments such as, "This is the best year we have ever had in Canadian publishing". "This is the best year we have ever had in film production". "This is the best year we have ever had in Canadian sound recordings". Artists are reiterating that all across the country.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I suggest that the fine record that the Minister just read to Hon. Members has a great deal of substance to it. It is too bad that it was the previous Minister who brought in these measures and that this Minister has the worst record for interference and meddling in the cultural industries of any Minister in the history of the country.

I suggest that the Minister talk to representatives of the sound recording industry. She sent the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) to defend her stand. It was interesting to note that his observations on her behalf were not well received by the sound recording industry. It is extremely unhappy with the lack of consultation and with the very poor performance of the Minister defending its place in the constellation of cultural industries in this land.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have been looking forward for some time now to participating in today's debate, for a number of reasons not least of which is the fact that the Government is now asking permission of Parliament to borrow $25,300 million. I suspect that for most people it is difficult to get their minds around what $25,300 million is. It can best be described as a substantial sum of money. I do not think anyone can begin to even comprehend the thousands and thousands of millions of dollars that we are borrowing for a variety of purposes. I would say that one of the reasons is that the Government does not have its financial house in order.

I want to explain why I think the borrowing authority simply betrays the inability of the Government to come to grips with some of the real problems facing our country. In my estimation at the top of the list is the deficit. I do not think the Government has dealt with the deficit adequately. I do not think the Government has taken the necessary steps to reduce the deficit. This will create an incredible amount of indebtedness for future generations of Canadians. The best thing that one could say is that the increasing, spiralling nature of the deficit of Canada has at least been capped. During the Liberal administration, we saw the deficit escalate almost to the stratosphere. It just got totally out of hand. It rose out of sight and beyond all comprehension.

• (1130)

Quite frankly, I think that Canadians in general and even people who do not follow the fiscal, financial and monetary policies of Government closely know that we are too heavily in debt. They know that the liability we are leaving future generations is quite frankly catastrophic. I do not think we have dealt satisfactorily with the deficit and I simply want to point out what I think were some missed opportunities. That is why we are now having to discuss giving the Government the support to borrow $25,300 million more.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Tories are always big spenders.

Mr. Riis: As my friend has indicated, the Tories are big spenders. They like to buy votes in a sense. I know that that flies in the face of what many of my Conservative colleagues in the House of Commons have said over the years, but the facts speak for themselves.

Just recently, the Government tabled its expenditure plans for the forthcoming year. Right at the top of the list was a $2.5-billion slush fund. There were no programs earmarked for that $2.5 billion. To be fair, the Tories called it by a fancier name. They did not call it a pre-election slush fund. That would be a little too obvious, I suppose.

The Estimates clearly earmark $2.5 billion to be used to buy votes in various parts of Canada. The Government can expand an airport here, build a new port there, relocate a prison in some constituency there in the hopes of trying to buy the support of Canadians, sort of the hooker approach to politics. I do not think that that will work. I do not think Canadians will be bought off by the Government. Nevertheless, $2.5 billion has been earmarked for the next year for various projects that at this point have not been identified.

What does that tell us about the Government? Surely to goodness, if the Government has some vision of the future of this country, if it has been working closely with provincial, regional and local Governments, it should be able to predict now what these major projects worth $2.5 billion ought to be. If it cannot, then that is scandalous. Any Government that says it has no idea how it will spend $2.5 billion now but will have to determine that in the next few weeks and months is not the kind of Government Canada needs. We need a Government that has some vision of the future of Canada a Government that works with the other political jurisdictions at the regional and local levels to determine the appropriate initiatives the Government should be taking to ensure that economic prosperity returns to all parts of Canada, not simply pockets in southern Ontario. A Government that says it is concerned about the deficit but has a $2.5-billion slush fund is being very unrealistic in its expectation of support for this initiative.

I am concerned about another missed opportunity. If the Government were serious about deficit reduction, it ought to have dealt with the matter of interest-rate policy. We all recognize now that interest rates in the United States are lower than they are in Canada, particularly short-term interest rates. The argument that if we lower interest rates in Canada, there will be an exodus of money to the United States where the returns are better is absolute folly. Interest rates in the United States are much lower than they are in Canada.

I say why not reduce interest rates by 1 per cent, 2 per cent or almost 3 per cent to get them down to the United States rates. Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, what it would mean to the deficit of Canada, to say nothing of the assistance it would give to small and medium-sized businesses and consumers, particularly in the regions? The cost of serving the unbelievable debt the Government has now given us, a debt of nearly $300 billion, would be significantly reduced if interest charges on the debt were reduced by 2 per cent. That is why I say that it was a missed opportunity. Not to have reduced interest rates to approximate those in the United States was a serious oversight by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government of Canada. The deficit could have been reduced by another few billion dollars.

Another missed opportunity to reduce the deficit was tax reform or, as others have referred to it, tax deform. Tax deform is probably a more appropriate name for what the Minister of Finance has done to the tax system. The system remains unjust, unfair, discriminatory and biased in favour of the wealthy and the largest corporations rather than in favour of ordinary Canadians and medium and small-sized businesses.

You are probably filling out your tax return now, Madam Speaker. You have probably noticed that the tax return is no simpler than it was before. This notion of simplifying the tax system is absolute nonsense.

Over the weekend, I sat down for the first time to look at the tax return and the pages and pages of schedules. I do not know what on earth I will do. I think we ought to do what was done in the State of California. We ought to introduce legislation that requires Members of Parliament to fill out their own tax returns with no help from anyone. Then we would see some quick action.

I see that the Chairman of the Finance Committee knows full well that that is what should have been done. He is nodding. He knows full well that there was an opportunity to introduce a one-page or half-page tax return that would suffice for 75 per cent of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Fraser Institute thinks it's a good idea.

Mr. Riis: The Fraser Institute thinks it is a good idea. I think it is a good idea. I suspect most Canadians would revel at the thought of a one-page tax return for 75 per cent of the people. Why did we not do it? I think it is because we are trying to mystify the system. Still the Minister of Finance says that we have simplified the tax system. I cannot imagine a more nonsensical statement being made. I suppose if he says it loud enough and long enough, enough people will begin to believe that there must have been some improvement at least, though I cannot see any. Again, this was another missed opportunity.

Why on earth, when we had gone through months and months of discussion, did we not make the tax system fairer? Why on earth was the Minister of Finance required to rise in his place recently to announce that, in spite of all the Government's best efforts, there will still be 60,000 profitable corporations that will not pay a single penny in income tax next year? Of course, that is to say nothing of the tens of thousands of corporations that will pay $100 or $50.

I know that my friend, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, knows that the real tax rates of the big finance companies, the big trust companies, the big banks and most of the institutions in the financial community would probably average less than 3 per cent. How many Canadians enjoy a tax rate of about 3 per cent? Virtually none. I think it is disgraceful that the tax system allows so many profitable corporations, corporations with profits in excess of $200 million or $300 million per year, not to pay any income tax whatsoever, to say nothing of those that pay only a few dollars.

As I say, we are not talking about the mom and pop shop or the hair salon down the street. In 1986, for example, Alcan Aluminum made profits totalling $220 million. Not only did it not pay any income tax at all, it got a tax credit for next year of $32 million. Then there is the little company Brascan with profits totalling $187 million and a tax credit of $2.3 million.

I will not take time to go through this long list of 60,000 profitable corporations that paid no income tax whatsoever, but I would point out that if the Government was serious about deficit reduction this was an opportunity to find new revenue amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. It did not do that. It said instead that it would allow these thousands of companies that make good profits every year to continue without paying any income tax whatsoever.

It is tragic when you think of it. Here was an opportunity, through changes to our interest rate policy and our tax system, to make the system more fair, equitable and just, but we did not do it. Instead, the Government created this big slush fund of money not earmarked for any particular project, to say nothing about a lot of peculiar spending by the Government.

In the coffee shops of Kamloops I still hear that people are outraged that they had to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for Sinclair Stevens' legal bills. People are still outraged and ask why the Government had to give $5 million to help build the West Edmonton Mall for the Ghermezian brothers. They did not need that money, but thousands of struggling small businesses did. That $5 million would have gone a long way for a lot of the small businesses in Alberta who are struggling to find some venture capital to establish a new product and get involved in a new creative business. They cannot get money from traditional lending institutions and could have used some of that $5 million.

There is a long list of ways that the Government decided to spend the taxpayers' money which I think people find very disappointing. I could also talk more about fiscal policy but I will move to some other areas because it has become clear that the Government is not serious in its efforts at deficit reduction. If it was, it would certainly have done things differently in the last number of months. Therefore, I want to spend the next few moments talking about the trade deal which the Government signed on January 2 with the United States of America.

A lot of people are asking what this deal will do to Canada. Is it a complete sell-out of our country to the U.S? Have we given away our economy to the U.S. multinational giants? What will it mean for jobs?

In spite of the statistics often presented to us by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about how wonderfully Canada is doing, he forgets that while we are doing wonderfully in pockets of southern Ontario, such is not the case in most of the rest of Canada. In my Province of British Columbia, where unemployment in many communities is still in the 20 per cent to 30 per cent range, we have not noticed a tremendous improvement in the last four years of the Government's administration. In eastern Canada, where unemployment levels are as high as 40 per cent in some communities, they have not recognized any improvement, to say nothing about other parts of western Canada, northern Canada, or Quebec. It is not prosperity city in most of Canada today. Yes, indeed, in pockets of southern Ontario such is the case and we are pleased about that. However, we were looking in this most recent Budget and the Estimates for some real commitment to overcoming regional disparities.

Many of us are concerned that this trade deal will act against attempts by the federal Government to assist the regions. The American companies are going to be looking at these various programs to help our western farmers, East Coast fishermen and the forest industry throughout the regions and calling them subsidies producing unfair competition. The fact that they have the same kind of subsidies back home is irrelevant to them. All they have to do is prove there is some unfair subsidy here.

We saw this just the other day with the flow-through shares issue. The U.S. said if the federal Government, through the tax system, provides encouragement for the mining sector to explore for minerals, that is unfair. What did the Government do? It gutted the program and made it very difficult for exploration companies to raise capital to carry on their activities. This is critical, as you well know, because without that upstream investment, nothing will happen.

As you know, this exploration is usually done by small and medium-sized Canadian companies. Much of the mining operations might be done by larger companies, in some cases multinationals, but in this case we are talking almost exclusively, 100 per cent, about Canadian-owned companies out there in the trenches, in the hinterlands, exploring for new mineralization. Flow-through shares was a way in which the federal Government could encourage and support those junior Canadian companies. Now it has decided to gut the program but what is it going to replace it with?

To be fair, particularly to my friend, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, this is not the only way to assist mining exploration and show that we support their initiative. There are other more direct ways of support, if you like. However, the Government is apparently not going to do anything, just hang these small companies out to dry at a very critical time.

To go back for a moment to the trade initiative, what does it mean with respect to jobs? We have to look to the evidence to arrive at an answer. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), an honest man, one with integrity, a man who likes to tell it like it is, when he was asked how many jobs this trade deal might cost Canadians, had the courage to say it could be as high as 500,000. His predecessor and other cabinet Members have used figures as high as 800,000. There is no question there are going to be major adjustments. The royal commission which took a number of years to look into the whole matter of what they call free trade, which of course this deal is not, said it would cost the federal Government up to $5 billion in adjustment costs because of the tremendous dislocation that will occur in our economy. That means a lot of people are going to lose their jobs.

On the one hand we hear the Minister saying it could be as many as 500,000 jobs. Then we look at the work that the Department of Finance has done and we see that the best case scenario is that over five years it could create 125,000 jobs. That is 25,000 jobs a year. Yet in a good month, when our productivity is doing well, we can create that many jobs alone.

You have indicated my time is up. I just got started on this dissertation but unfortunately the rules prohibit me from continuing. Therefore, in closing, with respect to a serious situation facing this country, that being the deficit, unfortunately the most recent initiatives taken by the Government have eliminated those initiatives which could have helped reduce the deficit.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the House Leader of the New Democratic Party some questions. I was quite interested in his desire to become associated with the Fraser Institute in terms of simplified tax returns.

Has he had an opportunity to discuss with his colleague, the finance critic for his Party, the recent trip of the Finance Committee to New Zealand where, as he will know, a socialist labour government is in power? Has he discussed with his colleagues how that socialist labour government was in the process of selling out their national oil company to a British multinational?

Does he think we should do as they did and cancel all farm subsidies, lower farm interest rates, and all assistance to farmers completely as they did? Does he think that in order to squeeze inflation out of the system we ought to raise interest rates to 19 per cent as they have?

Does he think that in order to get the tax system down to a flat tax system we ought to disallow any contributions to pension plans or registered retirement savings plans as a deduction against taxable income?

Finally, on a sales tax issue, would he be supportive of taxes on food and even taxes on municipal taxes in order to keep the system simple?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's intervention because I did forget one very important item in my presentation and this will allow me to refer to it briefly, that is, the decision of the federal Government to impose a national sales tax on all Canadians. It will make interesting election campaigning when Conservative candidates are promising changes to the tax system which will result in new taxes on everyone for virtually every business transaction with the exception of the purchase of food, as the Minister of Finance has indicated.

I appreciate that the Minister listened to the consumers of Canada who said that a tax on food and prescription drugs would be unethical and, quite frankly, unacceptable to the people of Canada, which point was raised by our finance critic on so many occasions that it became boring.

I am not familiar with what efforts are being undertaken in every country of the world to come to grips with the challenges facing them. However, I am aware of what is going on in our country. I am aware of the Government's decision to cut back on support for the mining industry. This fits into an over-all program. As I see it, the Government has a program in place to depopulate rural Canada. It has not been very explicit or articulate about the program but it is a program to pull support from small communities and rural Canada.

The Post Office is the most obvious vehicle of this initiative. The Government's plan is to cut back postal services in rural Canada. In my own constituency in the last month the Government has attempted to close two post offices. We are trying to fight that. However, it is very clear that the Government has made a decision to use this method to encourage people to move into the big cities. I do not think that is right or appropriate.

My colleague mentioned my support for the initiative of the Fraser Institute to simplify our tax returns. You bet, Madam Speaker, I see no reason why we must have the complicated, convoluted tax system which we do have in terms of the returns which people must fill out. There is no reason for it. The Member, who is the Chairman of the Finance Committee, will know that work had been done on a one-page tax return which would have been sufficient for the vast majority of Canadian citizens. People are subjected to trauma in their efforts to determine how much tax they owe or how much tax they have already paid the Government in hopes of a small refund. This ought not take place in the case of most Canadians. This is one page out of the many volumes of the Fraser Institute which I would have to support. I do not support many of their pages, but this would certainly be one which I do support.

With regard to the Member's points on initiatives taken by the Government in New Zealand, I am afraid that I am not equipped at this time to comment intelligently on those.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the Member opposite brings to our attention that his riding is being depopulated. I presume the people are going to the cities for jobs. If the people of his riding were to get a little wiser and elect a Conservative Member who believes in job creation in the private sector and economic opportunity, perhaps people would stay in the riding. I simply offer that as a suggestion. We would be happy to see a conversion and have him come across the floor.

The Member's speech, in a somewhat uncharacteristic way, contained a lot of sophistry. I want the people who are watching to recall and perhaps read in Hansard what the Member said about the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) with regard to 500,000 or 800,000 jobs. The Member attempted to leave the impression that that would produce 500,000 or 800,000 unemployed Canadians. Those numbers are used in reference to the capacity of the free trade deal to bring about adjustments in the Canadian economy so that people will have better jobs in the future than they have today. They will have higher paid and more highly skilled jobs.

The Member started with the figure of $10 billion and then said that it would cost the taxpayers $5 billion for adjustment. He left the impression that these would be unemployed people. The purpose of adjustment funds, be it $5 billion, $10 billion, or $20 billion, is for ordinary Canadians to attain increased skills and increased job opportunities with better working conditions and higher salaries.

The absolute minimum economic analysis is that the first five years of the trade deal will produce 125,000 additional jobs. That is the critical part which the Member very cleverly slides over. We are not talking about creating 25,000 jobs a year in Canada. The Government's economic policy is producing more than 30,000 jobs a month and has been doing so for three and a half years. How do we get 1.25 million more Canadians employed than were employed three and a half years ago unless we are producing jobs at that rate? The free trade deal will produce an additional 125,000 jobs. People now on the unemployment rolls will have jobs. It will produce better quality jobs for Canadians and the adjustment fund will ensure that that happens.

I suspect that the Member was in a conflict of interest with the reality that labour union leaders provide so much of the funding for the New Democratic Party and have a desire to protect the jobs which they already have in their unions. They have no commitment to the total Canadian mosaic and the twelve and a half million people employed in Canada but are trying to do that which they were elected to do, protect the selfish interests of the members of that particular union.

That is what unions are about. They do that very well and are useful in Canadian society, but it is a tragedy that a political party in the Chamber is so clearly a captive of that single mentality on behalf of this very privileged group which controls the supply of labour and fights very hard on behalf of its members. However, the total Canadian society will be well served by the free trade deal.

We are on the borrowing Bill and perhaps the Hon. Member would like to tell us what justification he has for the use of tax credits? He brought up the issue of tax credits. Everyone who donates to a political Party receives a tax credit so taxpayers pay part of the contribution to the Party. What justification does the Hon. Member have for giving free trips to socialist countries. That is one of the things the New Democratic Party is doing. What justification does he have for the tendency to take campaign expenses and move them over to the column called "election expenses", receiving a larger rebate from the taxpayers of Canada, to fund the Party on the longer term?

If the Hon. Member is concerned about tax credits that are devoted to the creation of jobs for ordinary Canadians, how much concern does he have about the use of the tax credit system by his own political Party to service its political ends?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I have a long list of inaccuracies presented by the Hon. Member. I do not know where to begin. First, the suggestion that the Government has created an additional one million jobs is a very inaccurate statement. There are not, as the Hon. Member knows, an extra million jobs in Canada today.

Mr. Hawkes: There are.

Mr. Riis: There are not. We can look at any list. Let me just say the Hon. Member has given us an untrue statement. He has also given us an untrue statement when he talked about all these jobs that are going to be created. Let us recognize what kind of jobs these are. I want to relate to my hon. friend that in the constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap over the years we have seen jobs in the mining and forest industry paying decent wages. A person could actually earn a decent living. But people have now lost those jobs and are in the service sector earning one-third of what they were earning before. They are eking out a mere existence. That is the Tory agenda in terms of creating new jobs. A person who was in a position to raise a family decently and in dignity had to go to a job at the poverty level in terms of income. That is the Tory idea of new jobs coming out of this trade deal.

In closing, I simply want to say that there is much yet to do. I found it of some interest that the Government, looking for new ideas, new suggestions and new ways of doing things with respect to a change in our tax system, went to the socialist country of New Zealand to seek out better ways and means of changing our tax system and government economic development policy.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of this Chamber, of being able to provide a proper exchange of views, I would like to begin by looking at the assertions made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes) who is a well known expert in the art of sophistry. He was commenting on the views of my colleague. It is certainly well known within the boundaries of this House that if there was ever a practitioner of that particular art, the Parliamentary Secretary deserves the full accolades of this House.

The Parliamentary Secretary talks about the so-called economic benefits of the proposed trade arrangement. Let us examine what those are on the basis of the Government's documents, not some of the other analyses or studies. Let us look at what the Government says. The Department of Finance produced its own document trying to put the best face possible on the trade arrangement. One would have assumed that the promises and expectations held out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that there will be this incredible gravy train of growth and jobs sort of sloshing over the country, would have been confirmed in the figures. However, instead we received a projection of an incremental growth rate of one-half of 1 per cent per year. That is so marginal, so meaningless, that in terms of computer forecasting, no analyst worth his salt would not even take that into account and provide it as a legitimate proposition. It simply does not add up. When our own growth rate varies, depending on the time of year, between 3 per cent, 3.5 per cent and 4 per cent in a good year, to say that we expect, on the best possible scenario, a growth rate of one-half of 1 per cent is hardly going to provide comfort and solace to all those who will be losing their jobs.

Of course, what the study also predicted was that the jobs will come only through increased consumer spending, primarily in the service sector. It is also well known that that is the lowest paying sector of the economy. It is a sector where there are far higher incidents of temporary and part-time work. The question of what the service sector will do under free trade has never been studied, itself. So we are really flying blind. We are being asked to accept a set of economic forecasts in which the analysis has not been done, and the large macro studies have a marginal Mickey Mouse interpretation to them.

That study, that was highly cited by the Parliamentary Secretary, did not include the increased tax costs the Canadian people will have to bear. They will have to pay $450 million in the next year, an extra cent on every litre of gas they buy, adding up to a $2 billion additional tax grab in the fifth year of the agreement. That was not put into the computation, nor was the question of additional adjustment costs that someone will have to pay. We know the stingy federal Government is not going to pay them, so that means it will fall upon the private sector or the provincial Governments to pay.

It is even more ironic when the Government talks about the new jobs and new skills training when in fact its own job strategy is in absolute shambles. It is in total disarray. The community colleges across Canada are having to close down their courses because they are not receiving sufficient funding. The money that is supposed to be going for training in the private sector is not being monitored, so that the money can be used to train someone to push a broom, instead of to train them on the computer. No one knows because they are not being monitored properly.

There is no money to deal with the problem of illiteracy, to bring Canadians who have low job skills and lack of basic English and mathematics to the point where they can get into a training position, because the Canadian Jobs Strategy has cancelled all these programs. The Canadian Jobs Strategy has abandoned hundreds of thousands of Canadians, forcing cancellation of community college programs, supporting unmonitored, unevaluated programs in the private sector where the quality of training is questionable. Yet the Parliamentary Secretary has the nerve to say, "We are going to be training skilled workers for the future". The National Training Act, which was one of the best training programs in the world, has been turned into one of the worst, all in a matter of three and one-half years. That is a great accomplishment.

I challenge any Conservative Member of Parliament to stand up and argue the case for the Canadian Job Strategy, to put facts and figures on the table as to what it is doing. They can challenge what I have just said if they think it is wrong, but I have the evidence right here as to how it is working. I have taken some time to study it, something I am sure Tory Members have not because they refuse to face that kind of calamity.

In the Province of Manitoba, in the next year alone, the amount of money going into job training and Jobs employment will go from $75 million to $48 million, an almost 30 per cent cut in one year.

Mr. Hardey: Look at the results, though.

Mr. Axworthy: Some unknown voice opposite tells me to look at the results. I can tell him the results in terms of some of the private business sectors where they are training people to push a broom. I met last weekend with people at Rossbrook House, which used to have training programs for young native kids so they could get into the job force, and those programs have been cancelled. Those are the results. I tell the Hon. Member that it is a national tragedy what the Government is perpetrating upon Canadians. If it had any guts or courage it would start admitting it and change the program or throw the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) out of his job. He is not only fumbling on the immigration side but he is fumbling badly on the job creation and employment side.

It is terrible what is going on. The Government says, "Oh, we are going to prepare for the bright new future. We will have highly skilled Canadians", but we have a job training program which is in shambles, where the whole foundation is dissolving around us. Yet the Government tries to defend that kind of program.

Another area where sophistry has become the order of the day as opposed to results is in the area of regional development. I could think of no more important priority for a federal government than to ensure equity in the country. Because of our geography and the nature of the population being spread across 8,000 kilometres and a large northern span of territory, a primary responsibility of any federal government is to ensure that people are treated the same, that there is a sense of equality and fairness. The expectation should be that the federal Government will have standards in which all receive a fair meting out of resources.

In the early 1980s we brought in a new economic regional development program. It was designed to work in co-operation with the provinces. We would sit down and work out priorities with each of the provinces and then use federal funds to invest in those regions. It was not based solely on indexes of poverty, but also on what would be the primary focal points of growth and development, region by region.

In my own region we sat down with the provincial Government and the City of Winnipeg, invested in downtown development where we felt that the improvement and enhancement of the urban environment would be a major incentive to private capital investment. For an investment of $30 million in the north of Portage, the result has been that we generated $450 million of additional private capital. That is good leverage by any judgment; the major renewal of the downtown area.

We sat down with the province and felt that transportation would be a major focal point of growth. It is the largest supplier of jobs in my home province. We began to invest in the infrastructure, development of the Port of Churchill, new research facilities at the university, proposed new maintenance base for VIA Rail, a computer centre for CNR, the development of new hopper cars to deal with the prairie grain trade in the Transcona Shops, and improvement of the airports to provide for international trade.

We also concentrated on the cultural communications area, in an attempt to build up in the City of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba an increased capacity for growth in the cultural areas. We then added supplementary programs in agriculture and minerals. All of those were designed in full co-operation with the Province of Manitoba and with the municipalities and the groups involved.

Those agreements were signed and they amounted to half a billion dollars' worth. I am not saying that they were perfect, but it was the beginning of a co-operative approach to economic development, and an attempt to bring all the parties together to ensure that the federal Government was a major player on plans that were developed and blueprints organized in the local region.

After the 1984 election what happened? The new Government cancelled many of the transportation projects. It cancelled the development of the major robotic research centre which would have given the country, not only western Canada, a major, first-class, world-class research centre for robotic technology. In this area we lag far behind. The Japanese outgun us 10 to 1 in the development of robotic technology, but we cancelled a research centre which would have provided the private sector with an inducement or incentive to develop in that area.

In the Port of Churchill there was a slow-down. The projects are still waiting to be funded. There was cancellation of a major renewable energy resource corporation. We also had the famous incident of the CF-18, and withdrawal of that major opportunity for western Canada to get into the new frontiers of the aerospace business. Those actions were undertaken unilaterally, without consultation, and in contradiction to the economic development plans that had already been developed.

That runs against the spirit of federalism. It also shows that there is no economic development priority based upon equity or fairness. We are now told that there will be a new Western Diversification Fund. In looking at the estimates of that and the projects, what do we find? Of the projects already announced, not one includes any major project in the Province of Manitoba.

Is that because the Province of Manitoba does not support the Government on its trade proposals? Is it because it has an NDP Government? Whatever the reason, how does one explain a pattern where there was very clear, very significant co-operation between federal-provincial governments in 1984, and since 1984 nothing but warfare, confrontation, withdrawal and subtraction of federal assistance?

Is that what one would call a fair system? Is that what one would call a system in which the federal government is seen to be an equal provider of its own investment? Is that seen as a way of ensuring that one million people who live in a significant province in this country in terms of opportunities that it can provide are being totally ignored by the Government? Does it suggest a weakness around the Cabinet table of the Manitoba representatives? Does it simply say that one of the provinces of Canada is being frozen out, is deliberately and politically being isolated? That is what I suggest is the reason.

When we are asked to talk about a borrowing authority, one goes on the basis that there will be some level of fairness applied to it. If the Manitoba taxpayers are asked to support further expenditures by their own Government in Canada, one would assume and expect that perhaps they would want some return and that they would feel they were part of the system and going to be calculated in in the same way.

In the last two or three weeks, what do we find? In total contradiction to a signed agreement, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is breaking that agreement by withdrawal of 300 senior employees in the CN headquarters in western Canada, particularly in Winnipeg. The agreement itself clearly states that the Crown corporations of Canada involved in the field of transportation will make every effort to enhance and augment their employment and their research and development. This Government is acknowledging its withdrawal.

Let us look at a very crucial area of rail line improvement. One of the most important areas that we have known in western Canada to maintain our smaller communities is the maintenance of the rail line network. In 1984 when I was Minister of Transport we signed a major agreement with the railroads which required that each year they would follow a clear program of rehabilitation. This is the last year of the program, and the Minister of Transport is committing $25 million, leaving $125 million still in the bag.

Do you know how many communities that will affect, Madam Speaker, how many smaller places in western Canada will find that they will no longer have a rail line in two or three years?

I find it difficult to believe that a Government that states that it wants national reconciliation, which in 1984 based its election mandate on there being an end to confrontation, is engaging in the very same and more extreme forms of anti-federal initiatives. It is clearly discriminating against certain provinces of this country. It is withdrawing federal presence, federal investment, and federal activity. That has connotations and repercussions far beyond the immediate area of economic growth or jobs. It will weaken the linkages of this country. It will undermine the connecting links across Canada in a very fundamental manner.

Let us look at what disturbs those of us from western Canada who are Members of Parliament. When we look at political surveys from that part of the country—and they may not be printed in the central Canadian or eastern press—we see western Canadians being asked whether they would support a legitimate western Party and some 30 per cent to 40 per cent saying that they would. The reason is that in the last three or four years, rather than foster a greater sense of participation in Canada, the Government has succeeded in pushing western Canadians further away with the kinds of actions that I have outlined so far.

This brings me back to the topic with which I opened, that is, the proposed trade agreement. There is an implicit assumption that somehow—and I think the Prime Minister spoke about it in Calgary before Christmas—this will be a bonanza for western Canada, when in fact the hard figures show no such thing. In fact, a number of very essential western Canadian industries will be put in jeopardy. The food processing industry, one of the largest industries in my own province, will be forced to shut down, or the supply management system will be forced to shut down. This is the dilemma faced by the Campbell Soups, the McCains, and the other major food processors in my province. That could be repeated for many of the smaller industries. The trade agreement will not mean alternate growth; in many cases it will pull away the growth. However, the Parliamentary Secretary says that we do not need adjustment or any help for the workers and communities affected, that it will take care of itself in the market-place.

We in western Canada know better. We know that the way to develop is through a partnership of the public and private sectors. It is a partnership which has made western Canada grow, and the Government is withdrawing from that partnership. For that reason this request for a borrowing authority is really the height of sophistry.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite said that I said that we would not need adjustment. I have never said that in my life, nor would I ever say it. The labour force constantly needs adjustment, and when we have a major positive initiative, such as free trade, we will need more adjustment than at other times. I very much resent people trying to put words in my mouth that I have never uttered. I want to make crystal clear that the pattern of the Hon. Member opposite in doing that kind of thing is well known in the House, but perhaps not well known to Canadians, so I simply wanted to point it out to them.

He began with an attack on the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which took a great deal of courage from that particular Hon. Member. Canadians may have forgotten the Liberal approach to unemployment problems in Canada. I stood in the House, when he was Minister and I was critic on the other side, and asked repeatedly in Question Period for an explanation of why a Liberal cabinet Minister would be receiving government employment creation grants which averaged out at $586 for every unemployed person in his or her riding, while unemployed people in my riding of Calgary West received employment creation funds at the rate of $12 per unemployed person.

It was a policy approach, his policy approach, that consistently created first-class unemployed Canadians and second-class unemployed Canadians. Year after year there was no fairness to the system. This unfairness was clearest in western Canada, and he was the Minister for western Canada. He talked about adjustment. Well, the National Energy Program was a program that required adjustment in my region. We moved from a 4 per cent unemployment rate to 13 per cent and 14 per cent unemployment rates. That was the adjustment. They took 4 per cent unemployment and made it into 13 per cent or 14 per cent unemployment through one simple policy initiative which he supported and promoted. It threw people out of work. We must couple that with the use of employment creation grants of $12 per year per unemployed person. They create the problem, and then they take the money and put it in another part of the country, not where the unemployment was created. That is the Liberal idea of adjustment.

Let us refer to what our Government did. I see the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is here. She replaced that Hon. Member as Minister of Employment and Immigration and very quickly looked at the 50 some odd programs which he had created to parcel money to Liberal partisans and constituency organizations. One had to be a Liberal to get help under that Government. It was not enough to be a Canadian; one had to be a Liberal Canadian. Our Minister reduced them down to six programs. She restored some sense of local choice in terms of local unemployed people and local labour markets. She devoted all the money, not to partisans of a political Party but to the recipients to help them gain more skills, and started working on the adjustment concern right from the start of the life of this Government. With all that money that was parcelled out for cleaning river banks, or doing things which sometimes did not even exist—la table de pique-nique dans la province de Québec—we must never forget the Liberal approach to this problem. It has been replaced by an educational approach. Taxpayers' dollars go to individuals to help them gain more skills for their future, and if their future as Canadians improves, the country's economy improves. It is working.

The unemployment rate for young people, the most difficult group, in three short years has dropped from nearly 19 per cent to 12 per cent. We have solved one-third of the problem in three years, and if we get four more years we will halve the problem. That is what will happen, because we have a philosophy of investing in Canadians, taking the skills and drives which already exist, and helping them to improve their skills and to retain the drive to succeed. When individual Canadians work together to look at economic opportunities and to be productive, the economy improves and improves. It is a combination of policies which has provided those one million, one hundred and some odd thousand Canadians with jobs today who did not have jobs three years ago.

The Hon. Member talked about hard figures. The hard evidence is the capacity of Canadians to produce, to sell, and to prosper if government stays out of their road and provides assistance in the background where needed.

I simply say to the Hon. Member opposite that Canadians do not want the Liberal approach to employment creation where one must be a Liberal to get money. They want a fair program for all Canadians dedicated to the adjustment skills issue.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about what Canadians want. I just cite the recent poll in the Province of Manitoba where we are 14 points ahead of the Tory Party federally. It seems to me that they know what they want an awful lot more than what the Hon. Member seems to know. I would only remind him that they know what happens when they have a Liberal Government. They know how federal investment can be used to generate growth.

Let me give the Hon. Member an example. I am glad that he is practising to be the employment and immigration critic again, because he will have to employ those skills in a very short time. Let me tell him about something that happened last Friday. I visited a place called Rossbrook House, a drop-in centre for young people. It primarily services native youth and is located in the downtown area of Winnipeg. It is run by a group of Catholic nuns. They were recipients of community employment programs when I was Minister. They used those programs to hire young native kids who did not have any job skills and who had left school in grade seven or eight. They brought them into the job market and gave them some employment as counsellors. This enabled them to develop some rudimentary skills. This was used as a way to develop a transition between that and going on to future training.

Under the vaunted Canadian Jobs Strategy, about which the Hon. Member talks, there are not those programs any longer. They have been cut off. The group of young Canadians about which he talked are being told that they do not rate anymore. That is an example of what is being duplicated right across the country. If one is in a low income bracket, out of the market or suffers from illiteracy then the Government does not care. Its jobs strategy is not designed for this person.

I would now like to deal with the fact that we are short of several thousand job training places in the western Canadian provinces because under the vaunted Canadian Jobs Strategy the Government has not put money into this area. It has not created a single new training space in the country. Under the Canadian Skills Growth Program we were investing in the community colleges, including those in the province of the Hon. Member, to provide new spaces, new equipment and new opportunities. The Canadian Jobs Strategy does not provide any investment of that type whatsoever.

Let us talk about the question of the special needs groups in our society. There is no doubt that one of the important reasons for our job creation programs was to support the social service system of the country since it was being clobbered by provincial Governments and municipal Governments. They could not afford the extra programs to provide the extra services to battered women, displaced kids or homeless families. Our job creation programs went to those groups directly so that they could hire people and provide services. Those programs have been cut off. They have been withdrawn.

Is the Hon. Member saying that, yes, the strategy is designed to support the friends of the Government in the business community who are receiving all types of grants which are not being monitored or evaluated and which are certainly not being used for training? They are being used as a way of subsidy back into some of those businesses. The quality of the training is so pathetic that it makes one weep.

That is the Tory way of doing it. That is fine. I am glad that that is the approach that they take. I think that Canadians know that there is an alternative. There is the skilful use of the public sector.

It is interesting to note that in the provinces of western Canada, about which the Hon. Member talked, in 1987-88 in Manitoba in particular job funds dropped from $75 million to $48 million. In Saskatchewan the funds went from $58 million down to $39 million. Even in the Province of Alberta the figure went from $141 million down to $103 million. Who is talking about increases when those provinces are experiencing cuts of 30 per cent? I think that the Hon. Member had better start to look at the Estimates of the Department of Employment to find out who is trying to serve the people of western Canada. He might start to look at the figures rather than to continue on in the fantasy in which he lives perpetually.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that none of the government Members wish to defend their application to the House for some $25,300 million. Perhaps the proposition is so hard to defend that they find it easier to sit in their seats.

These funds apparently are to be used, as the Bill states, as may be required for public works and general purposes and shall expire March 31, 1989, to the extent that the unused authority exceeds $3 billion. In other words, once again we will carry into the next fiscal year some $3 billion. This means that something in the order of $28,300 million or thereabouts is being carried by the Government as a borrowing authority. We presume that this will be used basically to cover the deficit that is being projected at slightly higher than that amount of money.

This is the type of measure that a great many small businesses and farmers undertake at the beginning of every year. They go into the bank to obtain a lending authority from the bank. They establish a line of credit. Essentially, that is what the Government is attempting to do with this particular Bill. It is attempting to get that authority from the House of Commons, the body which is supposed to monitor Government expenditures and without whose consent Government could not spend the money. The Government comes to us and asks for the right to borrow money to the extent that I have just noted when tax revenues fall short of meeting the current expenditures.

Habitually, we find that there is usually a big lending authority requested early in the year, as is this one, and then there will be a series of smaller ones made later on. We will not know until later on just how large the next series of expenditures will be. However, I do note that in reviewing the Estimates for 1988-89 that expenditures will continue to climb. In the fiscal year that we are about to finish I note that budgetary expenditures went up 7.7 per cent at a time when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was telling us how carefully he had reduced expenditures and how he had control of the Budget and how he had the deficit in hand.

In going through the Budget papers that were presented a couple of weeks ago, I wanted to find out just how much in hand this budgetary deficit was. I found that it is not quite as well in hand as the Minister leads us to believe.

When he became Minister of Finance in mid-1984-85 we had a gross accumulated deficit of about $200 billion, according to the papers that he presented with his Budget. It is listed as $199,092 million. Today, in the 1986-87 year, we have a net public debt of $264 billion. This means that in the period of time that the Minister of Finance has been in charge of the finances of the country the deficit has increased more than 30 percentage points. In fact, more than 30 per cent of the accumulated debt of the country since 1867 has been accumulated in the three and one-half years that the Minister has been the Minister of Finance. He says that we have the deficit in hand. He says that he is staying the course. He leaves the impression that the course is to get us out of debt and to get the public finances in some order.

I mentioned the extra billions of dollars, some $165 billion, that he has left future generations to carry. Some people say that it does not really matter. They say that what is really important is how large the deficit is in relation to the Gross National Product. So let us look at how he has managed under that set of rules.

When he became the Minister of Finance we had just shifted from 39.6 per cent of our national debt to Gross National Product. In other words our national debt was accumulated debt and equalled 39.6 per cent of that year's Gross National Product. At the end of 1986-87, which is included in the Budget papers, we find that our net public debt accumulated over all the years is now 51.8 per cent of our Gross National Product instead of the 39.6 per cent. I am afraid that staying the course will not solve the problem the Minister has defined as being one of the main problems the country faces.

We note that the Government has reduced the Public Service by a considerable amount. There are many fewer employees now than there were before, yet expenditures have not dropped as a result of this tactic. The first Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had budgetary expenditures in the neighbourhood of $111 billion. This year's expenditures are expected to be $132.25 billion, some 20 per cent higher than they were when this Minister became the Minister of Finance.

Staying the course has not really changed the direction taken by previous administrations. Expenditure are still up and they are rising more rapidly than inflation. In fact, last year the forecasted percentage increase in expenditures was 7.7 per cent while inflation was at about 4.7 per cent or 4.8 per cent. This Minister who was so critical of previous expenditure programs is continuing to follow the same route as the much-maligned Liberals who preceded him.

I would like to comment on some of the Government's expenditure policies which affect western Canadians and farmers across Canada. Other speakers have noted the job-creation plans of the Government. I wonder if there were plans. How can there be plans for job creation by a Government that claims to be opting out of all economic activity and leaving it to the private sector? I do not understand that, but perhaps the argument that is being made is that the private sector, thanks to being unleashed through less onerous taxes, has created jobs. I suppose that is the rationale the Minister is proposing to use for the job creation of which he boasts.

I note that most of the jobs that have been created have in fact been created in the Province of Ontario and most of those in the vicinity of Toronto, a very hot market at the moment. Those in the regions where most of the farmers for whom I speak live have not noticed that things have improved greatly.

Those who incurred debts during the time when interest rates were very high have not seen interest rates drop markedly under this Government. In fact, over the last six or eight months they have risen. This past year they were 1 per cent to 1.25 per cent higher than they were before. The farmers and small business people who make up most of the population of my riding are finding things actually worse than they were a year ago at Budget time.

A great many of the producers in my riding are in the export business. They export grain, beef, pork and light farm machinery. They find that the amount of money they receive for their product is down as well. At the same time as the Government has allegedly been fighting high interest rates by allowing them to rise another 1.25 per cent, it has also permitted the dollar to float higher.

Last year at Budget time the dollar was worth 72 or 73 cents. It is now floating at around 78 or 79 cents. This is bad news for the export industries in my riding. It means that they receive about 10 to 12 per cent less from their exports, in American dollars which are now bringing in fewer Canadian dollars. The Government's policies on interest rates and the dollar have not been good for the farmers and small businessmen of my riding.

Those people who have had problems carrying old debts have been attempting to refinance through the Farm Credit Corporation. They have found that it is even more difficult to get an FCC loan than ever before. The amount of business FCC has generated over the past year is down considerably. The Government has instructed the corporation to limit loans to the amount of repayments. In other words, it is not proposing to give the FCC any new money. The only money it has to loan out is money from recycled loans that were paid off.

The interest rates that the Government has insisted the FCC use have been so high that very few people have used the services of the corporation. It has actually built up a small surplus of repayments over new loans. FCC interest rates rose a few months ago from 11.75 per cent on long-term loans to 12.25 per cent at this time. This was in the face of a policy goal presented to the corporation at a federal-provincial conference some time ago of having long-term credit rates to farmers at 9 per cent. After setting that goal, interest rates went from 11.75 per cent up to 12.25, not exactly a move toward the goal.

I note that the rail line rehabilitation program is away behind schedule. The program is due to end at the end of this year. Hon. Members know that some $125 million should have been expended in previous years on that program but that money is still left uncommitted. In fact, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) apparently has no intention of committing those funds to comply with the agreement that was supposed to exist between the people in my part of the country and the Government of Canada to bring branch lines up to permanent standards so farmers could move their products to market.

There seems to be a real distaste on the part of the Government to complete its commitment. There are a number of lines in my own riding which very clearly meet the criteria. Lines are ranked on the basis of cost-to-benefit, and the ones that would provide the most benefit to the whole economy, not just locally, at the least cost are the ones that meet the criteria. However, some of those lines which meet the criteria are having difficulty getting funds. Civil servants have clearly stated that those are priority lines and have ranked them accordingly, but the final decision which is made at the ministerial level has been delayed, and why there should be disputes from the Ministers, I do not know.

We find these decisions delayed because the Ministers involved apparently have some plans for the funds to go to other lines which happen to be in ridings held by very prominent members of the Government side. However, the return ratio of these lines is less than half of that of the lines that have been designated priority by the civil servants, some of which are in my riding.

I find it very strange that the Government would not move to improve the high-priority lines. If the lines were improved, costs to the producers in the area would be reduced. It would reduce costs by freeing up more than 500 hopper cars annually. That is the extra number of cars that will be available to the whole system if these lines are upgraded. Yet the Government has been dragging its feet on the matter. Instead of putting in the funds it talks about freedom to move and all the benefits that can accrue to a local community and economy if there is freedom of choice, to use the Government's words.

The Government seems to think this will somehow be a job-creating kind of scheme. I suppose it would be if it did not upgrade the line which of itself would be a job-creating scheme. Some Conservatives seem to think if they do not upgrade these lines what we will have instead is a lot of local employment with truckers moving grain 30 and 40 miles to the new railway points. This will employ more people driving trucks and maintaining and building roads. Unfortunately, it will also create a much higher cost system for local farmers and local communities. They will have to pay higher local taxes to maintain the road system. Local farmers will have to pay more for getting the grain trucked to the railway. It is a very shoddy type of economics and the worst kind of attempted political patronage I think I have witnessed in my eight years in politics. Yet this seems to be the direction the Conservatives wish to take this country.

Perhaps it also explains the manipulation of expenditures, with an attempt to create jobs, and may also explain why we have forecasted increases in expenditures in the last two years of the mandate of some 7.7 per cent and 5.5 per cent, while at the beginning of the mandate the actual increase in expenditures was 1.9 per cent. The Minister attempted to establish his credibility as a cost cutter in the first years. While he still believes in laying off the Public Service he continues to spend more money. I think that is in part caused by replacing civil servants with contracts to private corporations or individuals who in fact provide the same service at higher cost.

That seems to be the case with respect to public research, particularly in the Department of Agriculture. Since the Government took over there has been a cut-back of some 500 person-years in the research capacity of that department. Many of those positions are for professionals, some are technicians and other back-up services.

This I suppose represents the philosophical approach the current Government seems to have that research should be conducted by private rather than public entities. I think that is a grave mistake. I know of a number of instances where public research has resulted in great savings for individual farmers and consumers. This kind of research would never be conducted by private firms because there would be no reason to engage in research that would find ways of avoiding buying their products, for example. I think public research has to continue. It has a very good role to play and I hope the expenditures in future Budgets take that into account.

I see you are signalling that my time is up. I will close by remarking that I find it very difficult to understand how we can continue to have these very high debt loads going into our fiscal year, $25.3 billion being borrowed up front, knowing we will have to come back to the House for more, at a time when the Minister says he is reducing the deficit. Yet, as I pointed out, it has gone up phenomenally during the course of this Minister's tenure in office.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the Hon. Member opposite. I have two very critical questions to ask him.

He was not in the House, nor was I, during the last minority Government of 1972, 1973, and 1974. However, we know that the current Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was then the Minister of Finance. As such he raised expenditures in two successive budget years by 30 per cent and more. His Government put in place policies that reduced the growth of income. The debt problems we are talking about today are a direct consequence of the NDP support for that minority Liberal Government which tried to bribe the voters through increased expenditures without any sense of fiscal responsibility concerning raising offsetting revenue.

My first question is this. If faced with a similar situation in the future, will he and his Party behave in the same way? His Party argued consistently for spending and we hear very little about revenue raising. He did not mention in his speech that the recent Budget would require no borrowing, we would not be standing in this House today asking to borrow $25.3 billion if we did not have to pay interest on money borrowed because of policies supported by the NDP in partnership, as usual, with the Liberal Party. We would have a surplus of well over $3 billion this year which we could use to reduce the debt Canadian taxpayers owe. We are just borrowing money to pay interest on the debt that was created, starting back in 1972, 1973, and 1974. That is my first question. Will they in future act in the same fiscally irresponsible fashion?

My second question is this. In 1979 the NDP moved a motion of non-confidence in the Conservative Government. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was the Minister of Finance. Every reputable economic group in the country said that his 1979 Budget was the fairest Budget to the poor people of Canada in the entire decade. When the NDP had clout in a minority Government they did not produce Budgets that were fair to poor people. This Party produced one in 1979 and they threw us out of office. We have a right to know, as do Canadian taxpayers, whether they will act in that fashion in the future to punish the poor of the country? Will they act in a fashion designed to increase the debt load for future generations instead of being fiscally responsible?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair realizes that the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) would very much like to reply to the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary. To make sure that he does get equal time, I think the best way to do it would be after Question Period.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I have a plane to catch at three o'clock. If I am going to be able to answer it, it will have to be now, and I can be very brief.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock I need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Riis: They do not want to hear the answer.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

POSITION OF ENGLISH MINORITY IN PROVINCE OF QUÉBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I find it totally and completely objectionable when Premier Bourassa of Québec suggests that Québec Anglophones prefer what he calls social peace to language justice. In effect, what Mr. Bourassa is saying is that if a minority demands justice and the majority resists, then the minority should hold back to pacify the insensitive and inflexible majority.

By that logic South African blacks should peacefully accept apartheid because their demand for justice upsets the white racist Government, or perhaps we in Parliament should back down on Bill C-72 because it upsets some Neanderthal Tories.

The Quebec Superior Court and the Quebec Court of Appeal have unanimously rejected those provisions of Bill 101 which ban English on signs, and Mr. Bourassa himself promised to remove that prohibition. Let Mr. Bourassa act to provide linguistic justice and then he will have social peace in Quebec.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT LIFE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, "Thou shalt not kill" is a universal law adhered to by all societies since the dawn of civilization. In the aftermath of the Supreme Court decision Canada has been left without a law on abortion. However, we now have the opportunity to enact a law which will define life as beginning at conception.

For a long time our religious and moral teachings have been questioned by the scientific community. However, science is now confirming the religious teachings on when life begins. Fred Byfield writes:

> When is a life defined? The answer of all genetic science is now unchallenged: It is decided at the instant of conception. The fertilized egg is like a computer chip. The genetic "program" to produce the person is already there.

Our decision on abortion will have an impact on Canada's future. Respect for life is the only choice.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF MEASURES MENTIONED IN REPORT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the task force for their report to the effect that public scrutiny is neither a judiciary nor a political process, but a forum which is vital to the future of our environment. Well done!

The task force endorsed the approach advocated by Canadian ecological interest groups, namely public hearings held in informal and flexible proceedings fully consistent with the principles of fairness.

A recommendation that ecological groups be eligible for public financing was approved in the body of the report, but strangely enough it was omitted from the conclusions at the end of the report. It so happens that implementing this recommendation is essential if volunteer groups are to participate fully. If the Government wants active participation and an adequate process it has to provide the funds required.

I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to begin without delay to implement the measures proposed in this important report.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN—OFFER OF FREE VACATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, "free beer for all the workers" is passé. Today's NDP is much more sophisticated. The latest gimmick is to offer Party supporters the chance for an all-expenses paid vacation to—you guessed it—that socialist paradise, Hawaii, U.S.A. Thence the lucky winners will travel to Australia and New Zealand where they will be able to study the prosperity brought about by the free trade agreement between those two countries.

New Zealand's burgeoning economic health due to deficit cutting, tax reform, privatization, grant and subsidy elimination, and public service reduction—exactly the opposite of NDP policy—will round out the education.

The NDP should be careful. Any socialist taking this trip is likely to come back a committed free enterprise Conservative.

AGRICULTURE

POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM—CHANGE IN PAYMENTS FORMULA URGED

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring an important issue to the attention of the House. The federal Government's potato stabilization formula for calculating payments to Prince Edward Island farmers is unacceptable to small and medium-sized potato producers.

I speak on behalf of the many potato producers in Prince Edward Island who have contacted me regarding their opposition to the federal Government's decision to deduct the 1985 diversion payments from the recently announced stabilization payments.

When world over-production resulted in rock-bottom prices these farmers participated in the diversion program to take their potatoes off the market to enhance the return for potato producers in all of eastern Canada. They had no idea at that time that they would later be subject to penalties under a future stabilization program.

Because of the formula in place the small producers will be hit the hardest because they diverted all or most of their potatoes off the market. Some will not receive any stabilization payments at all.

I now urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to listen to the voice of Island farmers and change the stabilization formula to ensure that the most disadvantaged farmers get their fair share.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS ACROSS COUNTRY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the first cheques for the 1987 Special Canadian Grains Program are now on their way to western grain producers. This marks the second year the Government has put this program in place to assist hard-pressed producers.

The program for 1987 has been improved substantially by recognizing summer fallow and the additional costs of production for farmers who irrigate. Specialty crop production, processed alfalfa, and honey producers are also recognized as suffering as a result of the depressed prices in the international market-place.

What a change from the previous Liberal Government whose Leader pitted one region of Canada against the other. The Government has provided assistance through the Special Canadian Grains Program regardless of whether the grain is produced on the Prairies, in the Okanagan Valley, the Maritimes, or any other region of Canada. That's performance, Mr. Speaker; that's performance.

CRITICISM OF MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been surprised in recent days to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) advising the provincial Premiers not to meet with three Sikh organizations. They have been told that the activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India. The Indian High Commission, however, denies having complained about officials meeting with these organizations.

Canadians have reason to be concerned about the Minister's action. Are there precedents for such a request to discriminate among organizations? Has the Canadian Government responded before to the concerns of foreign Governments and asked provincial Premiers to boycott certain Canadian organizations? Have other organizations, regarded by foreign Governments as being hostile but never found guilty of any seditious activities, been subjected to such actions by any Canadian Government?

It is one thing for governmental agencies to ensure that the laws are not broken, that violence is not encouraged, and that Canadian resources are not used to foster terrorism anywhere. It is quite another for Premiers and provincial Ministers to be discouraged from meeting with organizations of Canadians linked to and supporting a minority in another country.

If the Department of External Affairs were as sensitive to the Canadian policy of multiculturalism as it is to the representations of foreign Governments, this would be a stronger and more united country. I would urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reconsider his discriminatory and divisive action and withdraw his letter to the Premiers.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

TRIBUTE TO ELIZABETH MANLEY, GLOUCESTER'S PRIDE AND JOY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday night, February 27, 1988, at the Saddledome in Calgary, during the magnificent Fifteenth Winter Games, a small part of Canada and a major part of Gloucester took a giant step forward on a silver podium.

Katarina Witt of East Germany and Debi Thomas of the U.S.A. shared opposite interpretations of Carmen, but the bubbly little bouncer from Gloucester, our Elizabeth Manley, stole the show. From the first flick of her blades to her last triple jump she was bold, brave, and beautiful. She whittled down from fourth, to third, to second for Canada's second silver medal of the games.

I am certain that not only this House of Parliament but millions of homes in Canada share my pride and pleasure in saying "Liz, you were sterling". Congratulations!

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

STATUS OF JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUÉBEC AGREEMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada's efforts to block approval by the United Nations Human Rights Commission of certain resolutions regarding indigenous rights and indigenous peoples have taken a rather astonishing turn. In a statement delivered by the Canadian observer delegation last Friday, Canada asserts that the James Bay and Northern Québec Agreement is not a treaty.

Incredibly the Government of Canada appears to have forgotten the provisions of its own Constitution. The Constitution says:

> The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

The Constitution goes on to say:

> For greater certainty—treaty rights includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

The James Bay and Northern Québec agreement is a land claims agreement constitutionally recognized and confirmed. It is a modern treaty. Canada's attempts to deny the treaty status of this agreement are unacceptable and misleading.

WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

THANKS, CALGARY!

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian, I am filled with pride in the dazzling success of the Fifteenth Winter Olympic Games in Calgary.

During 16 days of sports feats and festivities, the whole world met in Canada. The City of Calgary, the Province of Alberta and Canada gave the world an exceptionally warm welcome. The athletes have performed superbly. The incredible facilities built in Alberta will be used by our future Olympic champions and are at the disposal of all Canadians.

Everyone will share in the grandiose success of the Olympics. We can only expect positive fall-outs.

Millions of Canadian men and women were moved as I was myself yesterday evening while watching on television the extinguishing of the Olympic Flame in Calgary.

What wonderful moments we have lived during these 16 days! Thousands of cheers to the athletes and to all those who have, directly or indirectly, contributed to that fantastic celebration.

In Canada, we have achieved national reconciliation. Now, it is to all peoples of the world to search for international reconciliation.

Thanks, Calgary!

CONGRATULATIONS TO COMPETITORS, VOLUNTEERS, AND PEOPLE OF CALGARY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians can be proud of the Olympic Games which have just ended in Calgary. We say farewell to 16 days of exquisite athletic competition and achievement at the Fifteenth Winter Olympic Games. I believe Canadians can be particularly proud of the performances of Karen Percy, Brian Orser, Tracy Wilson, Robert McCall and the many other competitors who, whether their participation results were big or small, conducted themselves with grace and style and so often achieved their personal best.

As a native of Ottawa I am especially proud of the achievement of Ottawa's own figure skater, Elizabeth Manley, who captured all our hearts when she won the silver medal in a dazzling effort this past Saturday evening.

On behalf of the federal New Democrats, I would like to say congratulations and thanks to all the Canadian Olympic competitors, to the people of Calgary, and to the many staff and volunteers without whom the 1988 games would not have been possible.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

METHOD OF FINANCING

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, allow me to make a short commercial. It is aimed at those . . .

Some Hon. Members: Timing!

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Time, time!

Mr. Speaker: There are some instances, one, I suppose, would be in the interests of the Olympic movement and expressing thanks to Calgary, in which the Speaker can overlook the clock. If there is some call that I exercise the strict rules, I will, of course, do so. However, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) had only just got started.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you will allow me to make a short commercial. It is aimed at those who would like to go on a trip to sunny climes at the expense of the socialist party. This party has set up a contest combining the pleasant with the useful. Your financial contribution to the socialist party could allow you to win a trip and even to meet socialist authorities in a few countries.

Thus, the socialists will perhaps be in position to pay their long distance phone calls, because since Wednesday last, the telephone code number of the Hon. Member for Oshawa, Mr. Broadbent that is No. 22843864, is cancelled. They perhaps need money to pay their long distance calls to Quebec?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON SOUND RECORDING INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, sound recordings reflect the cultural life of Canada. We rank among the world's largest consumers. Listening to recorded music ranks third as the most popular leisure time activity following watching television and reading newspapers. In the international market, recorded music is Canada's most widely rated cultural product.

Last Thursday I was privileged to participate with the "who's who" of Canadian music in the first forum on free trade and its effect on the recording industry. CITY-T.V. is to be congratulated on this outstanding initiative. This industry was unanimous in its concerns. It is upset that it was never consulted about the devastating effects the removal of the 13.5 per cent tariff will have on imported records and tapes and the positively nefarious "notwithstanding" clause impact on the $700 million recording industry.

These measures will place our recording artists on the fringes of their own domestic market, with Canadians singing Born in the U.S.A. rather than Alberta Bound. Liberals know Canadian songs have something to say and want to promote Canadian music to reflect Canadian values and experiences.

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE CORRECTIVE ACTION BY POLLUTERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, for years the drinking water of 5 million Canadians has been threatened by chemicals leaking from dump sites along the American side of the Niagara River. Last week a United States court ordered the Occidental Chemical Corporation to pay the costs of cleaning up one of those dump sites, the notorious Love Canal. This decision was made under the provisions of the U.S. Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, legislation that compels American polluters to correct their past mistakes.

To the great credit of our Government, Parliament is presently studying the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act aimed at preventing future pollution. What we need now is our own version of the U.S. Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation and Liability Act to compel Canadian polluters to correct their past mistakes as well.

Oral Questions

TRANSFER OF CANADIAN FROM NEW JERSEY JAIL TO CANADIAN PENITENTIARY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the nightmare for Bruce Curtis, the young Nova Scotian, and his family, is beginning to come to an end. I rise today to congratulate all Members of this House who supported the efforts of Jim and Alice Curtis to have their son Bruce transferred from a prison in New Jersey to a Canadian penitentiary. Last Friday, Governor Kean of New Jersey announced that Bruce Curtis would be transferred to a Canadian penal institution as a humanitarian gesture.

I would also like to acknowledge the excellent work of Serge Boudreau, from the Department of the Solicitor General, and Murio Lapointe, from the Department of External Affairs. Both of these government employees were very helpful in expediting this particular matter.

Unusual as it may seem, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as well as the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher). Their efforts, and the pressure they were able to put upon the Government of the United States, particularly the U.S. administration as well as the State Government in New Jersey, have made this possible. To them and to all Members who assisted in this particular plight, I say thank you most sincerely.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

BEAUFORT SEA DRILLING ACTIVITY—UNITED STATES SALE OF LEASES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Late last week the U.S. Department of the Interior issued a final notice of sale for leases in the Beaufort Sea. Bids will be received up until March 15 of this year. Included in this notice of sale are 22 blocks within the Canadian jurisdiction. In other words, a United States agency is now putting up for bid, drilling on Canadian territory, in a unilateral fashion. Does the Government of Canada not consider this to be a serious encroachment on Canada's sovereignty?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the question, I will certainly take this matter under advisement and raise it with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has not been drawn to my attention, but I will certainly refer it to the Minister and get back to the Member as soon as I can.

Mr. Axworthy: May I just say in response, Mr. Speaker, that I am a little surprised that neither the Prime Minister nor the Deputy Prime Minister would be advised about a fairly serious action on behalf of the U.S. Government on Canadian territory.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTEST TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to either of the two gentlemen. Several months ago when I raised a similar question with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he said there would be no action taken by the U.S. Government until the dispute over that territory was resolved. We now have a U.S. order stating that the bids will be open until March 15 and that the United States will determine when it is in its own best interests to do so, to accept those bids.

Will the Government ask the United States administration for a clear statement on what its policy intends to be? And will it not issue immediately a notice of protest that this is a very clear infringement on our sovereignty in a place where we thought we had some agreement that the United States would not continue this kind of action?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it was for that very purpose I took the question as notice, because this matter has come up before and there was a clear understanding that there would be no such action, as outlined by the Member, taking place in the disputed area. That has been the situation. That was outlined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and confirmed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The reason I said I would undertake to look into this matter is simply the fact that very rarely has the Member his facts straight, so I would not want to accept the premise upon which the question is based.

• (1420)

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Minister to accept my facts. I have here the statement of a bid of order from the U.S. Department of the Interior. The Minister may want to have his officials examine that document.

The question I raise is the following. In December, 1986 I raised a question with the Secretary of State and was given some assurances. Last September, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, raised a similar question. The Secretary of State also gave assurances that time. After each assurance the United States proceeds to go ahead and unilaterally act as if that territory is its own.

When do we stop getting assurances, and when do we start getting some action on behalf of the Government to defend a very valuable part of Canadian territory? When can we expect Government to start standing up for the country?

The fact of the matter is that it is a disputed area. My understanding is that the position of the United States has been that there would be no such drilling activity, as is suggested by the Hon. Member, until the issue is resolved. That position remains the same.

REQUEST THAT DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA BE SEVERED

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he agree that the most flagrant attacks on human rights take place in South Africa? On the weekend, Archbishop Desmond Tutu and other church leaders were temporarily detained by government authorities. Some time ago, the Prime Minister stated that if necessary, he would not hesitate to break off diplomatic relations with this country. Considering recent events, does he not think the time has come to take that action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course we earnestly deplore the deterioration of an already unacceptable situation in South Africa. The action taken against church leaders over the weekend was particularly reprehensible. The Canadian Government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has already made known its feelings of profound indignation regarding this development. The South African Ambassador has been called to the Department of External Affairs for a meeting that will take place within the next few hours, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs will probably have some new statements to make upon his return to the House. I must say I fully share the views expressed by the Hon. Member and speaking for all Members, I must say I deplore a situation that becoming increasingly unacceptable and intolerable for all those who believe in democracy for South Africa.

[English]

SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT'S BAN ON ACTIVITIES OF OPPOSITION GROUPS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister realize that the South African Government, by banning the political activities of 18 opposition groups, has literally made a declaration of war on peace, justice, and human rights? How far does the situation have to deteriorate before the Canadian Government takes the appropriate action?

In answer to my first question, the Prime Minister stated that he is calling in the South African Ambassador and that he will wait for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make a statement. Does the Prime Minister not have this responsibility, and should he not make the statement right away in the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that few people would accuse the Government of Canada of not having provided leadership in regard to the reprehensible situation which exists in South Africa. In fact, if there is an element of tragedy that enters into this, it is the general regret of all Canadians that the actions taken by the Government in this House were not taken some years ago so as to provide more pronounced and dramatic leadership.

I indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was instrumental in providing this leadership, is unfortunately out of the House for the day. He has instructed that the South African Ambassador be called in, in order that the Government of Canada may convey to him directly the profound regret, dissatisfaction, and dismay of all Canadians at this progressive deterioration in an already explosive situation.

We are following it. We are monitoring it hour by hour. We have excluded no options. We have excluded no alternatives. We will act in the interests of those of our allies, and the people of South Africa, at the most appropriate moment.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SEVER ALL ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am sure the Prime Minister would have to agree that the events that have been occurring over the last few days in South Africa constitute a reiteration of the events before the rise of Nazism in Germany.

There are neo-Nazis demonstrating in the street with the sympathy of the Government, clerics are being arrested, all political activity by every significant black organization is banned, and we hear words like "remorse", "regret", and "dissatisfaction" being used.

Is it not time that the Prime Minister lived up to his commitment given at the United Nations that, if there was not progress made toward the dismantling of apartheid, the Government would sever all economic relations with South Africa?

The Secretary of State has stated that he has in his vest pocket additional sanctions to be imposed. Will the Government not impose them now? Will the Government not bring home the Canadian Ambassador to South Africa to discuss with him the status that should continue with respect to the Canadian Embassy in that country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely my hon. friend will recall the events that led up to the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver, and the leadership that the Government of Canada and the people of Canada provided, notwithstanding some ferocious attacks from other quarters. We stood firm in the view that I enunciated on behalf of the Government many years ago, that apartheid was an evil and would be resisted and fought by the Government of Canada at every opportunity and in every circumstance.

This was followed up by a tangible accomplishment. It was not a perfect one, but a tangible one, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs went to southern Africa and met with the leaders of the Front Line States. He is now the Chairman of the Front Line States Foreign Ministers Conference in regard to dealing with apartheid and the tangible measures that can emerge in order that we may be helpful to those suffering under apartheid.

We have retained clearly as an option the severance of all relationships with the Government of South Africa. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, I, and my colleagues continue to believe that, at the moment, we can be of more and greater help to those being oppressed in South Africa, namely, the black majority, by retaining the types of initiatives that we are implementing. Once we sever relations, we cease to be a player.

For example, I point out to my hon. friend that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was capable of indicating Canada's unique and helpful role by, within 24 hours, meeting in southern Africa with the leaders of the Front Line States and in Pretoria with the Foreign Minister of the Government of South Africa.

While dialogue remains possible, we believe it can be helpful to the black majority. We will continue to fight for black majority rights in South Africa.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF TOTAL SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister describes reactions that were appropriate to a different time and a different set of circumstances, a set of actions premised on the notion that it was possible to bring the South African Government to the table to talk to the representatives of the black population.

Does the Prime Minister not recognize that those days are ended, that the South African Government has pronounced to the entire world that it will not speak to the legitimate representatives of the black population there, and that no further progress can be made unless a clear message is given by this Government that this type of refusal to deal with the appropriate representatives of the majority will not be tolerated by the imposition of those economic sanctions that the Prime Minister stood before the UN and said that he would impose if there was no progress? It is about time.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says: "It is about time". He may be right. He is making a value judgment on a very complicated, explosive situation.

If he cares to go back even further than the Vancouver conference in regard to Canada's role, Canada was instrumental at the Nassau First Ministers' Conference in constituting the Eminent Persons Group and causing that group to initiate dialogue, very hopeful dialogue in the view of most world leaders, in southern Africa.

I agree that the actions taken at that time, arbitrary and pernicious actions by the Government of South Africa, undermined this, I think quite noble, attempt at dialogue to bring about peaceful change in South Africa.

We have encountered, it is true, more obstacles than I would care to count, and we have had more disappointments than most people should be asked to bear, particularly the majority in South Africa. However, I think the signal which is coming from many of them to Canada is to continue this initiative to see if we cannot engage in that dialogue. If we cannot be helpful in a definitive way, then of course we will not hesitate to take what we believe to be the solution at that time, namely, the severance of relations.

We are receiving counsel and advice from people friendly to this proposition in South Africa to attempt to maintain dialogue at this time. We always reserve the right for the Parliament and the Government of Canada to sever relationships if required.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FRENCH IN THE WEST—OPPORTUNITY FOR A REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In fact, he was expecting it. I waited for him Thursday and Friday, so today's the day. My question is about the Supreme Court decision concerning the Province of Saskatchewan which, as we all know, will have to translate all the province's statutes passed since 1905. The Minister is also aware that I asked a question Friday about an alternative, namely, the province could proclaim itself bilingual by adopting a statute that would make it unilingual.

My question to the Minister is this: To avoid any misunderstanding or situations that might be very difficult indeed, and considering the Supreme Court's decision affecting Saskatchewan, is the Minister prepared to make a reference, asking the court to make a similar decision with respect to Alberta, which, as we know, was carved out of the same Northwest Territories and is the subject of an identical or almost identical Act?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the House last week, but the responses given by my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Communications, essentially set out the parameters of the position of the federal Government.

As the Hon. Member will understand, these are essentially provincial matters of jurisdiction. I understand as well that the Province of Saskatchewan in particular is reviewing its options, and we are very much interested in the decisions that will be made by the Province of Saskatchewan. We are in ongoing communications with the provincial Governments on such matters and will continue to observe what is happening there. The offer of assistance has been made and is in fact there, should the province decide to solicit our assistance.

With regard to the Province of Alberta, the Hon. Member will know that there are other matters of litigation in respect of similar questions dealing with Alberta. My officials are looking at those pieces of legislation as well to see what is involved in that matter, and we are considering the implications of the judgment in the Mercure case in the Supreme Court of Canada.

APPLICATION OF SUPREME COURT DECISION TO ALBERTA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will concede that these legal procedures are costly and that in terms of human resources they can be exhausting for minority groups.

Given that the federal Government can answer a question which begs to be answered, that is, does the judgment on Saskatchewan apply to Alberta, and therefore avoid a long delay through the court system by asking the Supreme Court to state clearly that Alberta is subject to the same judgment given on February 25, would it not be in the interest of all Canadians for the Government to take that initiative now and ask the Supreme Court to make a decision by reference?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the legal niceties of the matter, with respect to matters which are essentially in provincial jurisdiction—and I think that is an important consideration the Hon. Member will appreciate in respect of references—our position respecting the official languages of Canada is quite clear in our federal domain. I think the Prime Minister and the Government have shown outstanding leadership in respect of this position across the country.

I reiterate the fact that we remain ready, willing, and able to render any assistance whatsoever in the furtherance of the equality of languages across the country which may in fact be solicited by the provinces. In terms of the Province of Alberta, the same offer goes to that province as goes to the Province of Saskatchewan.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER NOT CHANGE SYSTEM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows perfectly well that the Government's proposed changes in the flow-through shares program may, directly or indirectly, threaten the existence of from 30,000 to 40,000 jobs. Will the Minister now respond positively to requests by municipal councils, business people and workers whose jobs are threatened, and say that the Government wil not reduce the benefits created under this program?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if this is not the clearest example of the Leader of the NDP talking out of both sides of his mouth, I do not know what is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On the one hand the NDP says: "Get rid of all these tax gimmicks"—

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should read his own Party literature which says: "Get rid of all these tax gimmicks". His colleague sitting right next to him is the one who is leading the battle, and the one who is just between the two of them, and behind, is the third man. All three of them are saying: "Get rid of these tax gimmicks because they are things that help the rich and we have got to avoid all these tax gimmicks"—

Mr. Boudria: That's before they became rich.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is right. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell—

Mr. Broadbent: Agreeing with the Liberals.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —is saying that before the NDP got ahead of the Liberals in the polls they were not in favour of all these things.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to send a speech going back to 1984 to the Minister and a letter that he received from our finance critic last year, which made it clear that the NDP is opposed to tax exemptions that do not have a net benefit to the community and that we favour those that do. If he does not understand that, we do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Just because it requires a little subtlety in thinking, maybe the Tories could try it just for once—

Mr. Speaker: We seem to be getting into a bit of an argument here. I wonder if the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party could put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: Your Honour knows that there is no place for arguments in the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if, instead of dealing with rhetoric, he would deal with the question. Since these benefits are among those which have had a net community benefit—and this has been recognized by business people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —municipalities, and workers—I want to ask the Minister if, instead of taking steps that will cut them in half and ultimately reduce them, he will now give assurance to those communities that those benefits which have produced jobs will be kept in place.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, give the NDP a little sniff of power and their principles go right out the window.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You are still in third place, Michael.

• (1440)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party should understand that Canadians are not stupid about these things. Canadians understand consistency. Canadians understand when the NDP is going totally against gimmicks in the tax system.

I have something here in my hand which states: "Tax system is a poor means of assisting economic development in regions of high unemployment".

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Who said that?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Who said that? That is from the NDP Tax Probe dated September, 1986.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me, if I may, Mr. Speaker, address the issue, now that we know where the NDP stands on all of these different matters.

We have seen a major drop in equity financing of all sorts. Prior to October 19 of last year we had $7 billion of equity financing. Since that time that amount has dropped to about $450 million. So there has been a major change in stock markets which affect flow-through shares and all other forms of equity financing.

In December of 1987 we made some changes to the proposal that we put forward in June of 1987 on tax reform which improved the provisions for flow-through shares and put flow-through shares in the position in which they are the best one of the few tax motivated investments of the federal Government.

Mr. Broadbent: That has worked.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that it has worked. I am just saying that we made some changes, if he will listen to the answer.

We made some changes in December of 1987 which improved the quality and the tax motivated status of flow-through shares. I think that is an important change.

In addition, I have said that I will meet with representatives of the industry—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

TERMS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will read the rest of the tax document produced by the NDP from which he quoted. He will find that it is quite consistent with what I have had to say.

I would like to ask the Minister if he will now deal with the question. He evaded it in replying to two of the questions that I asked. I would now like to ask him this.

Is the reason that he has not replied, and is the reason that this beneficial proposal will be phased out in the first year of the proposed trade agreement between Canada and the United States entirely related to the absence of such a program in the United States? Once again, is the American tax system as it relates to its regional development programs being given priority by the Conservative Government over real Canadian needs? Is that the issue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute garbage—absolute garbage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We made the decision. We announced the decision on flow-through shares in June of 1987, before the trade agreement was entered into. After the trade agreement was entered into we improved the provisions for flow-through shares. We improved the provisions for flow-through shares in December of 1987, after the trade agreement was entered into, compared to June of 1987. How the Hon. Member in his warped thinking could come to that conclusion I do not know.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST ACT

COMPLIANCE WITH CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I have given him notice of it.

Has the Minister sought an opinion from the law officers of the Crown to ascertain if those clauses of Bill C-114, the conflict of interest Bill, relating to spouses are in violation of the Charter of Rights? If not, is he prepared to refer the matter to the Supreme Court for a ruling?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the notice that the Hon. Member gave me with respect to his question.

The fact is that the Hon. Member will know that as Minister of Justice I am mandated to review all legislation that comes before the House with respect to compliance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We certainly understand that this particular provision is one of sensitivity. However, I think that we have addressed it in a way which protects the right of privacy of spouses. In cases where there is some relationship to the duties performed by a Member of Parliament, the performance of their duties which may be implicated by the interests of a spouse, then they have become legitimately matters of concern to the commission.

We have tried to deal with this matter in a sensitive way, understanding that spouses have the right to carry on independent lives and professions. I think that the approach we have taken in the legislation is an appropriate one which will meet the standards and tests of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns a resolution adopted by the City of Toronto on January 11 condemning him and two other Toronto Ministers for their failure to ensure that the international banking centre legislation was national in scope instead of being restricted to two locations.

Today, seven weeks after the City of Toronto reminded the Minister of his duty, will he tell the House what he proposes to do?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I follow the Hon. Member's question. The legislation was passed at the end of last year and it is law.

What I will point out, and I am sure she is very much aware of this, is that there have been a number of initiatives taken by the Government relating to financial institutions.

The international banking centres are one. The financial institution reform is another. Toronto has been a great beneficiary of that. Warburg's has come to Toronto. Deutsche Bank has bought an interest in a Toronto-based firm. Goldman Sachs is coming to Toronto. Three of the largest investment banking firms in Japan are joining the Toronto Stock Exchange. Security Pacific, a major bank in California, has invested in a major way into Burns Fry of Toronto. So Toronto has been a major beneficiary of the policies of the Government relating to financial institutions.

TORONTO CITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Toronto Council is less enchanted than is the Minister. On February 17 the Council voted to launch a constitutional challenge to the Minister's legislation, an absolutely unheard of situation.

Further, the Minister is locked in battle with both the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec about financial institutions which is why the legislation has been delayed. I ask the Minister again if he intends to do anything to stop this process whereby he has been pitting region against region?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that out of the mouths of the Liberal Party is quite outstanding. The Liberal Party was the Party that divided the country in a way that has never been seen before since Confederation.

The Hon. Member has to stand up to say where she stands and where her Party stands. Is she in favour of cancelling this? Is she going out to Vancouver and telling the people of Vancouver? Is she going to Montreal and telling the people of Montreal? Or is she wearing a downtown Toronto hat?

Miss Nicholson: National in scope is what I said.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I know that she is very much in the pockets of the people of Bay Street—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Oral Questions

PRIVATIZATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will know from his recent trip to the West just how popular Petro-Canada is in Canada these days, especially in western Canada. Last week the Minister of Energy, when he was asked about the privatization of Petro-Canada, said that it is not a question of should we, it is really a question of timing. Yet the Deputy Prime Minister indicated in the House last week that in fact that is not the case.

Will the Prime Minister take the time to explain and clarify just what the Government's position is in terms of the privatization of Petro-Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is quite right. When I was in western Canada again recently I was able to see both the popularity of Petro-Canada and the popularity of the federal Government.

• (1450)

Mr. Broadbent: Half of that is believable.

Mr. Mulroney: Everywhere I went, people said: "There is the shareholder of Petro-Canada".

I think this indeed provides me with an opportunity, on behalf of all Members of the House, to congratulate the Canadian athletes and all associated with the Olympics in Calgary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Why are the NDP not applauding?

With regard to Petro-Canada, it has been made clear that no decisions have been taken in respect of this matter. When a decision is made, it will be announced in an appropriate manner. I suspect that my hon. friend will be one of the first to know.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT GIVE NON-PRIVATIZATION ASSURANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there is obviously some confusion surrounding this issue with the contradiction presented by the two senior Ministers. The Prime Minister knows how Canadians feel about this issue since an election campaign not many years ago in which Canadians made a very clear statement as to their feelings.

Would the Prime Minister be prepared to rise in his place to say that the Government of Canada is not prepared to privatize Petro-Canada? In other words, would he say that the Government is not prepared "to sell the flame"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on that last point, but I should in fairness ask my hon. friend to look at Hansard of February 24, 1988, where the Minister of Energy said:

> That is why, although the Cabinet has yet to make a decision at this time, the question of Petro-Canada is still being examined, both in my Department and in other government agencies.

He went on to say:

> —I would like to point out that the present Government will make a decision about privatizing Petro-Canada when it believes it is in the interests of Canada and Canadians to do so.

Surely my hon. friend will not quarrel with the logic of that premise.

INCOME TAX ACT

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN—OFFER OF FREE VACATION—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The NDP is offering its contributors an opportunity to win a free trip to Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. Broadbent: Want to buy a ticket?

Mr. Redway: I would ask the Minister to launch an immediate investigation to ensure that the NDP is not ripping off Canadians by using tax deductible political contributions to fund this NDP vacation lottery.

Mr. Broadbent: Get CSIS to do it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Better have a commission of inquiry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. This initiative sounded so attractive to me that I briefly considered sending some money myself. However, I thought it might be misinterpreted under the circumstances.

Seriously, the Income Tax Act does not require any restrictions on how political Parties deal with their funds in terms of contributions. The Chief Electoral Officer has some jurisdiction when it comes to how funds are disbursed, but where a political Party would run into difficulty would be if it simply received and redirected funds for the benefit of a specific person. I take the question seriously—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Perhaps I should say to my friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, for the benefit of a named individual. It is a serious question and I will take it as representation.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

MINISTER'S LETTER TO PREMIERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question is for the Prime Minister and it concerns the letter of the Secretary of State to some Premiers advocating the boycotting of three Canadian Sikh organizations.

Given that the Government is arguing that Canadian citizens belonging to these three Canadian groups be ignored by our political institutions and given that this action has seriously tarnished the community's reputation, I ask the Prime Minister how the Government can blanket the entire Sikh community with collective guilt? Will the Prime Minister now justify under what authority and for what reasons the Government is promoting the denial to certain Canadians of the enjoyment of the full right of citizenship in this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the letter sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs made it very clear that most Sikhs, by far, are good Canadian citizens and do not engage in this kind of activity, but he felt it necessary, in his role as Secretary of State for External Affairs, to bring to the Premiers' attention activities by three groups which he felt were not in the national interest. That was his role and that is how he executed it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER'S LETTER BE TABLED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister surely knows the burden of stigma that this community will have to carry and must overcome as a result of this questionable government action. She now has the opportunity and indeed the obligation to clarify and set the record straight.

If it is not the Prime Minister who will answer, I ask the Minister again, will she explain on behalf of her colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the precise rationale for the Government's position which was communicated only to some Premiers? Will she table the letter and all relevant information so that this House, which has been kept in the dark to date, may come to understand fully both the domestic and the foreign reasons underlying the Government's action?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Government does not agree with the promotion of violence within this country. The Secretary of State made that clear in the letter he sent the Premiers. I would be glad to table the letters to the Premiers at the first opportunity.

SPORTS

BEST EVER PROGRAM—FUNDING OF OLYMPIC SPORTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the absence of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. As Canadians celebrate in the afterglow of the Calgary Olympics, they are asking themselves how we are preparing for 1992 and beyond. Will the Government continue to fund the existing Winter Olympic sports at the same or greater levels as the Best Ever Program so that our Canadian team can build on the momentum of our growth at the 1988 Calgary Olympics?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in the House would want to commend not only the City of Calgary and the many volunteers who contributed to the XV Winter Olympic Games, but I think people would especially like to congratulate the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport for the role he has played.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am sure the—does the Hon. Member disagree with that?

Mr. Marchi: A gold medal for the number of press conferences.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He should have received a gold medal, and I am sure the House would like to present him with one at the appropriate time.

The Hon. Member will know that the Minister has indicated that he will be making a statement in respect to the Best Ever Program for the 1992 Winter Games. I cannot add any more to that. The Minister will make the statement at the appropriate time.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL MONEY FOR ATHLETES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, given that 40 per cent of the members of the current Canadian team list their occupations as full-time athletes, will the Minister speak to his colleague to ensure that Canadian athletes receive much more than the $650 per month athletes like Karen Percy, Elizabeth Manley and Gaetan Boucher currently receive for their cost of living? I think it is a shame that Canadians are only paid that much to compete for our country.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be reminded of the words the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport has used. The Government has contributed and will continue to contribute, but it is not a system whereby the Government fully pays the athletes. Their families have made sacrifices as well, and I think that will continue. For the Hon. Member, one day after the closing of the Olympics, to try to put a value on that kind of contribution does not serve him or his Party well. The Minister will make a statement at the right time.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Outremont, for one question, please.

CRIMINAL CODE

FAMILY VIOLENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Recently, we had several instances of family violence that could have been prevented. Three women were killed by their husbands during the past six months. In Montreal, on the weekend, a woman was stabbed and beaten by her husband.

These women had asked the authorities several times for protection against their husbands or ex-husbands but failed to obtain that protection.

Could the Minister inform the House whether he is prepared to make changes or amend the present legislation to make threats by husbands or ex-husbands a criminal offence of the same magnitude as threats by others? It seems that under our present legislation, everyone is protected except women who are killed by their husbands.

What does the Minister intend to do in the way of immediate action? Is he prepared to call a conference of provincial Justice Ministers or set up a program like Ontario's Spouses' Assault Program?

What is the Minister going to do in the way of immediate action?

• (1500)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question by the Hon. Member because it is a serious question about a serious social issue. This Government, through my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and my Department, is working actively on the whole question of family violence as it relates to federal responsibility and jurisdiction. As the Hon. Member pointed out, there is a very significant provincial jurisdiction in this matter and we are attempting to co-ordinate our actions with provincial jurisdictions.

This is a complex issue which is not capable of simplistic resolution. I take the suggestion concerning Criminal Code amendments as a representation and we will give serious consideration to the Hon. Member's proposals.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the time for Question Period has expired. Did the Hon. Minister of Finance want to rise?

POINT OF ORDER

CLARIFICATION OF REMARK

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, during the course of Question Period I responded in a somewhat offhand way to my colleague from Trinity. If she took exception to any allusions which might have been expressed in that offhand comment I would point out I simply wished to poke a little fun her way. I am sure she will understand that I did not mean anything in any way derogatory.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that under the circumstances I might ask the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) if she feels that was sufficient.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I of course accept the Minister's withdrawal.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this morning during Routine Proceedings the suggestion was made that we would ask for unanimous consent to revert to tabling of committee reports to allow the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), who was unfortunately delayed, to present a legislative committee report. I ask for such unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House in agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-204

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, I have the honour to present Bill C-204 to the House with amendments.

I want to take a brief moment to thank all of those who assisted in the study of this Bill. The Bill establishes a precedent in our long history of parliamentary traditions. Under House reform, Private Members' Bills, as indicated by this Bill, now have a very healthy chance at passage. This is a welcome situation and I applaud the Government for its interest and efforts to assist Private Members.

Portions of the committee's hearings were a little contentious and emotional but I thank all Members for their co-operation and diligence in the study of this Bill. Over 100 witnesses were heard and over 100 written briefs presented. I want to thank the Library of Parliament research staff for their able assistance throughout our deliberations. Additionally, the assistance of the office of the Law Clerk and the Public Bills office was greatly appreciated.

All committee members and support staff have put in exhaustive and demanding hours on the study of this Bill. I am proud to present it to you and the House today as the fruits of our labour.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21—TIME LIMITATION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the period set aside in our daily agenda for statements and, in particular, to what happened this afternoon.

Members will recall that under Standing Order 21 they may be recognized under the provisions of Standing Order 19(4) to make a statement for not more than one minute. We have set aside 15 minutes in our daily proceedings for that exercise. There is a growing trend, which is perhaps exemplified by behaviour in today's statement period, of exceeding that time. I bring to your attention the fact that eight opposition Members made statements to the House and seven of them exceeded the one minute length. In fact, two of them exceeded one minute and 20 seconds, which is really quite long. On the government side, however, only one Member exceeded the time limit and some were down to as low as 41 seconds.

I think that the pattern of recognizing government Members and opposition Members alternately is probably a good one given our traditions. However, I suggest that either we have to initiate some self-discipline to keep it under one minute or, if opposition Members are going to consistently exceed the time limit, then fewer of their Members should be recognized. If government Members stay disciplined we should not be penalized by being denied the opportunity to make our statements simply because opposition Members exceed the time limits and eat into the time ordinarily available for government Members.

Alternatively, we might want to begin to recognize Members according to the number of Members in the House of Commons from each Party. That would result in three-quarters of the time going to the government side and one-quarter to the Opposition.

I hope you will take this under due consideration. Perhaps Members opposite would like to reflect upon it. However, I think the situation is such that Members on this side would have to fight to maintain the rule of 60 seconds. It is an important issue with respect to government Members having access to that statement period.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Parliamentary Secretary for nit-picking. We do not have one minute timers built into our bodies. When we make our statements we share with the Chair the expectation that someone at the Clerks' Table will tell us when our time is up. That has been the practice over the last three and a half years. What the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has said is to me a vote of non-confidence in the ability of the Chair or the Table to maintain the time constraints.

I can understand why the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary had his time-clock today. I saw him keeping time and doing the work of one of our clerks.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He has to keep busy somehow.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, but I really do not see why he would be nit-picking to the extreme of complaining about this to the Speaker of the House who has responsibility for everything concerning those statements. I think it is wrong for him to raise it at this time. If he has nothing else to do, I recommend that he get up and make a statement some time as to what he feels is important in his constituency. Maybe we can listen to him and if he has a good point we will give him an extra five seconds.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to rise for a moment to react to this rather trivial point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Winegard: It is not trivial.

• (1510)

Mr. Riis: We do have a procedure to deal with these, if you like, nit-picking issues. House Leaders meet regularly and the board meets regularly. There are ongoing discussions. I do not consider this a normal point of order but, rather, a challenge to the Chair.

The Parliamentary Secretary is saying that the Speaker has been unable to determine the appropriate length of statements and that the Speaker ought not to have the right, on occasion, not to see the clock. It has been a long-standing practice of this House that on occasion, whether in a speech or some other intervention by an Hon. Member, the Speaker decides whether or not a Member is permitted to take somewhat longer than the traditional time. However, to be arguing here whether a statement should be 53 seconds or 65 seconds is insanity. If that is the kind of priority which the Parliamentary Secretary brings to his office, perhaps he should reconsider his position.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if you are going to give consideration to the point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary with regard to the length of time taken for statements under the relevant Standing Order, I would also respectfully invite you to consider the length of time taken by Ministers in answering questions during Question Period. I recognize that there is no specific length of time provided for in the rules with regard to answers, nor is there, I admit, with regard to questions. However, it seems to many of us that Ministers answering questions are taking more and more time than has been the case in the past and are, therefore, leaving less and less time for questions

Another matter which I would like you to take into account is the length of time being taken by government Members in applauding the answers given by Ministers. I will leave it to the judgment of others whether the answers really deserve the lengthy applause they often get, but the time taken for this applause also takes away from the time for asking questions.

There is a limitation in the rules on the length of time of Question Period. I realize that you try to look upon what the rules say in that regard in a constructive way, Mr. Speaker, and we all appreciate that. If you feel it is necessary to deal with the point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary, then I respectfully say that the points I raised are much more important.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed this exchange. As usual, there was wisdom from the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) in his capacity as House Leader. I think that through this brief exchange we have identified that there are concerns about the use of that 60-minute period. The Government has historically raised questions with regard to the length of preambles, as another example. The purpose of the 60 minutes is to allow a maximum amount of input including questions, answers, and statements made on behalf of constituents.

I believe I detected a consensus of willingness of all three Parties of the House to support you, Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to bring a little brevity into all aspects of the 60 minutes in order that more Members may make statements, ask questions, and receive answers. Certainly the Government would be pleased to join such a consensus.

Mr. Speaker: I, of course, want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. The rule does, of course, call for 60 seconds. If one looks back over an extended period of time one will see that while there have certainly been occasions when the Chair has allowed an Hon. Member to extend that time, especially if, at least in the opinion of the Chair, the issue was of some considerably importance, at other times, of course, the Chair has been more exacting.

However, with regard to the intervention of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I would hope that all Hon. Members on both sides would do as much as they can to constrain themselves to a minute or less in the interests of their colleagues who, of course, will be prevented from making their statements if a number of Hon. Members exceed the time allotted to them.

However, I take some comfort from the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Their position that there has to be some flexibility shown from time to time by the Speaker with regard to the absolute strict application of the rules is, I am sure, shared by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

With regard to the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West on the length of time that some Ministers take to answer and the fact that time is used up sometimes by applause and sometimes by something less admirable on the government side which does take time and which sometimes involves the intervention of the Speaker, that all uses up time. I know that any Members to which I refer are very much the exception on the opposition side, but sometimes preambles go on rather longer than is perhaps absolutely necessary to make the point.

I welcome the comments which have been made from both sides of the House. I am sure we will all strive mightily to ensure that we conduct ourselves in here in such a way that we are being as fair as is reasonable to all other Hon. Members. I thank Hon. Members for their interventions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-109, an Act to provide for borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. there were five minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). The Hon. Member is not here. Resuming debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to speak on Bill C-109, a Bill through which the Government is seeking to borrow $25.3 billion. In light of the Government's history of managing the economy of the country, it is quite nerve-racking to think of this amount of borrowing authority in the hands of the Government.

First, the Government brought this Bill forward before the Estimates were tabled which, as far as I was concerned, was a deliberate affront to the Members of this House. I do not think that that is any indication that the Government has any idea of what it wants to do.

Let us look at some of the things which the Government is trying to do. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in 1984 that he did not believe that taxes should be raised any more, that taxes were high enough in Canada. That was his position at that time. Since the federal election in September 1984 the Government has increased excise taxes on gasoline by five cents a litre. Transposed into gallonage, that increase is 23 cents a gallon.

In December 1979 the then Progressive Conservative Government, in presenting its Budget, stated that it was going to increase the excise tax on gasoline by 18 cents a gallon. The Government has already exceeded the figure by which that former Conservative Government was going to increase the excise tax on gasoline and that Government was defeated largely on the basis of that proposed taxation.

If you add to that 23 cents a gallon the increase which the Government has put on sales tax, which also includes a tax on gasoline, we see that since September 4, 1984, the tax on gasoline has been increased by 27 cents a gallon. That is a tax that is going to hit average Canadians the hardest because they are the ones who depend very heavily on their automobiles. It seems that when the Government decides to increase taxes, it looks to the ordinary Canadian.

Another example of this is the recent statement by the Government that it is going to put a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls. Who are the ones making the long distance calls? Of course, corporations call long distance quite a bit, but who uses long distance calls the most? I think one could say with a certain amount of justification that the persons who telephone long distance the most are persons living in smaller communities.

In large centres such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver a certain amount of growth is taking place in the economy and young sons and daughters are able to stay in the area in which they were brought up. There is not the separation of families and there is a closer proximity of friends and relatives. However, in areas such as my area of Cape Breton Island, where the economy has been bad and young people have had to move away to other parts of the country, and where the actual size of the population is small compared to other regions of this country, the need for long distance telephone calls is greater. By adding a 10 per cent tax, we are going to make it much more difficult for these people to keep in touch with friends and relatives. We see that the tax the Government is imposing once again goes to hurt the middle-income earners of Canada.

Let us look at what the Government has brought down in its Budget. Other than an increase in sales tax and excise tax and a few other things, it really was not a Budget. It was a self-congratulatory document which the Minister of Finance used to pat himself on the back and to congratulate the Government for absolutely no reason whatsoever. It was to show how the Government was doing so well for the economy.

Let us compare what the Government has done in relation to what it said it was going to do. Not only has it hurt the average Canadian with its tax increases but, generally speaking, it has raised taxes since it has been in power by $22 billion. It boasts that it was able to reduce the deficit. But the deficit reduction was very small when one takes into consideration the added taxation the Government has imposed upon the Canadian public.

What the Government has done, more than anything else, is widen the disparity between regions that are economically self-sufficient, with growing economies, and those which are already suffering from regional disparity. These regions are concerned about their economic future and the division is growing. This is unfortunate because I think we can say that generally the last few years have been good for the Canadian economy as a whole. But when we see this disparity growing in times of increased economic performance, we have to ask ourselves what is going to happen when the situation reverses? Certainly, if the situation reverses, the more economically prosperous areas are going to go backwards. But one also has to assume that the regions which are having some economic difficulty will also go backwards. In many cases, however, there is no room to go backwards. They are doing poorly now and if they go back any farther it would create a very chaotic and desperate situation.

At a time when the economy is doing well over-all, the Government has to look at the areas of this country which are suffering from very severe economic difficulties. What is the Government doing? It is doing very little. It is actually reducing its spending on regional development. It is presenting a smoke and mirrors package, saying "Look. We have created the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We created a similar agency in western Canada and one on northern Ontario, and these agencies will be the answer". What the Government is really saying is that these areas will be the recipients of certain amounts of money, money which has been taken from other programs such as the IRDP, which expires at the end of June. The money will simply be funnelled into these particular regional programs.

The Government says that these programs will be used for those particular areas, but they are not really going to do the job. It is a political move to hopefully appease these regions of the country. The Government is going to set up a new department, a department of industry, science and technology. This is where the real money is going. It will go to the areas which are already experiencing good economic conditions. We are going to foster the growing economies of these particular regions but we are going to stay away from the areas where the Government feels it is just going to be too difficult to develop their economies. That is a way of thinking that is completely contrary to regional development. It is completely contrary to the experience in this country over the last few years, and the belief that all areas are entitled to economic prosperity. It is certainly contrary to what the Government told us it was going to do during the last federal election campaign.

Not only is the Government not putting money into regional development funds, per se, it is whittling away at the funds of other Departments, funds which would be helpful to regions which have these economic difficulties. small craft harbours, to use one example, which would help the wharfes and infrastructure that fishermen need, the funds are practically non-existent.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) recently stated he was going to give out four new off-shore lobster licences. One company was going to get two licences and two other major companies were going to get a licence each. These licences were absolutely unnecessary and contrary to most of the advice the Minister received from people in the fishing industry. It was completely opposed by fishermen from all over Nova Scotia. In fact, the Maritime Fishermen's Union is not only asking for the resignation of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but demanding his resignation, and demanding it over and over again, despite the fact that the Minister has gone to Nova Scotia to try to explain his position. The Government has been trying to soothe the fishermen but they know different. They know it is a blatant political giveaway.

Giving out these licences will eventually harm the inshore lobster fishermen. This is tragic because they are undergoing a time of reasonably good economic conditions. Because of the Government's action in trying to make political cake of the fishing industry, the returns for lobster fishermen will decline, and it is not only happening to the inshore lobster fishermen, it is happening to the inshore fishery as a whole. Quotas are not growing because the stocks are declining. The stocks are declining because of the large vessels offshore.

The people who are being hurt are the inshore fishermen, the numerous inshore fishermen who depend on fisheries for their livelihood. More of the fish are being caught by fewer people and the major companies will continue to harvest the large percentage of fish in Atlantic Canada. What has been in recent years a fairly successful fishing industry is being smothered because of the policies of the Government. Its future is in fact in doubt. I hope the Government will take this into consideration and do something about it.

In my region in industrial Cape Breton the Government has been very unsuccessful. We had a good tax credit program, which meant that some industries decided to locate in industrial Cape Breton. Unfortunately, we have lost more jobs than we have been able to attract. Two heavy water plants have closed. There has been a reduction in jobs at the Sydney Steel Corporation and at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Many industries have had to lay off workers or close completely. Most of the jobs that we have received have mostly been in the fast food companies and in major retail outlets. They are not permanent jobs, but merely part-time jobs without benefits.

When the Government took office it stated that unemployment would drop in Atlantic Canada, but it has not. The latest figures from Statistics Canada show that the unemployment rate nationally is 8.1 per cent, provincially in Nova Scotia it is 12.1, and in industrial Cape Breton it is 21.1. That rate was provided by Statistics Canada. With the new procedure of Employment and Immigration, the unemployed no longer go to a counsellor to get advice. They have to go to the job board to see if a job has been posted. If it has, they go to the prospective employer. The counsellors at CEIC no longer meet the unemployed. The only way to know who the unemployed are is through those who receive unemployment insurance cheques or by polling. Certainly, those who are receiving unemployment insurance cheques are not the only ones who are unemployed.

In the areas that have regional economic difficulties, more and more persons have their unemployment insurance expire because they have been unemployed for so long. They are no longer on the records. Many of those people are not bothering to go into the unemployment insurance office because there are no jobs available. What are we doing? We are creating a hopelessness with those people. At a time when we keep saying that we are trying to do so much for Canadians, the Government is actually reducing the hope of so many Canadians.

Not only do they not have jobs, but they are being hurt in other areas. We are cutting back their prospects of getting employment. At the same time programs like RHOP, the Registered Home Ownership Program, have been cut back. Subsidized housing has been reduced. The RRAP program has been cut back. That was a program that was particularly important to older areas in this country where there is high unemployment and economic difficulties. With the assistance given to someone who is unemployed or perhaps an older Canadian who did not have the income available to put into his or her home, they were able to fix up their home and thereby stay in it, which is really what they wanted to do. Without that funding the homes will not be maintained. What will the Government do then? These people will either be without accommodation, or the Government will have to provide government funded housing. That is not happening either. In the future there will be another problem with housing in this country.

The Government has cut back on transportation. The CN Railways are closing rail lines in areas of this country. Quite likely those areas are the areas that are having economic difficulties. There again, the loss of transportation, the loss of rail lines, will make it less likely that those areas will be able to attract industry.

The Government is not giving the assistance that it would like us to think it is giving. For example, in the Estimates the Government has reduced spending on the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The capital spending has been reduced in the Estimates by $70 million. That results in the reduction of capital expenditures in the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Government is saying to people in Cape Breton that it is not going to spend on new capital projects. It is going to maintain, and that is as far as it is going.

As I mentioned, last week when the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) was present, it was unfortunate that the coke ovens at the Sydney Steel plant closed in the first days of the strike, which is still continuing and is of great concern to the people of the area. The workers at the coke ovens were then without work, which was months before they had anticipated that the coke ovens would close. They were also without proper pension benefits. Initially those workers worked with the S and L Railway and had worked with the international piers at Devco. When Devco took over the coke ovens, they came to work at the coke ovens. When the coke ovens went back to Sydney Steel Corporation they were not given pension credits for the period of time that they worked with Devco. Therefore, men who have actually worked at the coke ovens for 30 or 40 years are now only receiving pension credit for 15 years.

When those things are added together, not only do they create a devastating lack of concern for the people of an area, but indicate that the Government is not thinking of regional development, as it would like to have us think it is.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague. He is obviously concerned about the problems in the regions of Canada and the lack of what appears to be serious initiative by the Government to offset some of the problems experienced by some of the regional economies. There is a way in which that can be done. When one thinks of the regions of Canada and of the mining industry, it is apparent that the mining industry is present in the East Coast through to the West Coast. It is present throughout the entire north of Ontario and in the northern part of Quebec. Literally everywhere outside urban areas mining exploration is taking place and mines are being developed.

Critical to that industry is the whole matter of flow-through shares. This program was introduced some years ago. It enabled equity capital to be obtained to allow companies to explore the upstream exploration that is required to develop a new mine.

My hon. colleague will also know that, almost without exception, the companies that do the exploration are Canadian-owned companies. They are small and medium-sized, aggressive, entrepreneurial, and 100 per cent Canadian-owned. They are the type of companies that we want to encourage and to which we want to show that we appreciate what they do in terms of regional economic expansion.

I wonder if my hon. friend shares some of those views and what he thinks about the most recent initiative of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that has essentially gutted that flow-through share program. Does the Hon. Member believe, if the Government is going to reduce the effectiveness of that program, whether it should or should not introduce other programs to encourage and nurture the exploration industry?

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for raising that point. It is a very good point indeed. I would like to add to what he has said. The mining industry is probably one of our greatest sources of combating regional disparity. In this country we have many one-industry towns. If our mining industry was to falter, the source of employment for a whole town could disappear. The flow-through shares have been a great source of funding and financial support for those companies.

The Government has stated that the mining companies are making money. The mining companies are doing well. The mining companies are surviving, that is what they are doing. They are not making tremendous amounts of money. They are keeping communities active and they are providing a tremendous number of jobs.

Contrary to many sectors of Canadian business, they are putting a great deal of money into research and development. That is the reason that Canadian mining companies are able to compete. With the salaries that Canadians miners are paid compared to the salaries that are paid in some other countries, the Canadian mining companies are at a very serious disadvantage.

The flow-through shares are not only a luxury, but I agree with my hon. friend from Kamloops-Shuswap, they are an absolute necessity for the health of the mining industry in this country.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, it is interesting to see the turn that conversations take toward regional disparity. It is also interesting to note how seldom either opposition Party, and certainly this speaker, stands in the House to say to Canadians that in nine out of ten Canadian provinces the unemployment is lower today than it was in September, 1984 when the new Government took over with a new sense of direction.

It seems to me that the two Parties combined, going back to 1972, decided to plunge the country into debt. Their answer to regional disparity was to give everyone in the country a huge debt load.

I am standing here today saying that it might be possible to spend wisely $2 billion or $3 billion on some good purpose. However, we are here discussing a borrowing Bill. We are borrowing money. We are putting debt on the backs of the people in this building and elsewhere in the country. That is what we are doing here today.

Why are we doing it? It is because historically, going back to 1972, 1973, and 1974, we moved from surplus to deficit by raising expenditures and not raising revenue.

The Budget before us gives the detailed knowledge of our borrowing requirements. We would have a surplus; we are bringing in more money on the revenue side than we are spending in programs, but we have to pay the interest on the public debt. A lot more money goes into interest on the public debt than is available for regional sharing or regional development.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member opposite who just spoke would acknowledge that the employment situation is better in his region than it was on the day his Party lost office and the new Party came into power. If that is true, then what is it that we have been doing that is working right? Perhaps he could just mention that.

Let me come specifically to his responsibility as energy critic. He was part of a Government—and I watched him—which devastated my region, causing suicides, murders, crimes, child beatings—the whole bit—because of the National Energy Program. It threw people out of work. We moved from 4 per cent unemployment to over 12 per cent. He supported that policy. At the same time employment creation funds or regional disparity funds were not given to Alberta, not to the unemployed people in Alberta. They were taken down to his province, to Allan MacEachen's riding, some $586 per unemployed person, whereas it was some $12 per unemployed person in my riding. That view of regional disparity is real and tangible. If one happened to be an unemployed person in Calgary or elsewhere in Alberta, one did not feel very good about it, especially when the Government did that which caused massive unemployment.

I wonder, talking about regional disparity, what would be his solution to the reality that a Crown corporation called Petro-Canada has a large land position. It is possible to develop a resource faster than it is being developed. What would he do? Would he borrow more money to give to the Crown corporation, or does he advocate allowing Canadians as individuals to participate in the provision of money to develop the resource, the jobs, and the economy? Which side of the picket fence does he come down on? Does he want us to borrow more? Does he want us not to do the activity, or is he prepared to acknowledge that it might be a good idea to go with the private sector and allow individual Canadians to participate in the development of their own resource?

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has an awful nerve to raise the relationship of my constituency now as opposed to what it was when the Government took over. When the Government took over, the unemployment rate in Cape Breton—The Sydneys was 16 per cent. Today it is 21.1 per cent.

The Government has stated that it wants to help economically deprived areas. Let me tell the House what the Government did after the September 24, 1984 federal election. There was a decentralized office for income security already being built and planned for Sydney. People were being trained. The Government stopped the project and cancelled training. Some of the people had already left other jobs. Of course many of them did not have jobs with that kind of unemployment rate. It cancelled the training.

That income security office was one of four decentralization projects. The other three were in Chatham, Peterborough, and Timmins. The other three went ahead because they elected Tory MPs. The one in Cape Breton—The Sydneys did not.

Do you know, Madam Speaker, what those people who did not have jobs had to do? The only alternative was for some of them to go to Timmins, Peterborough or Chatham to work in the income security offices which went ahead. That was one project.

There was a second project where a new federal building was being built. The architect had already drawn the plans. The land had been bought. The tenders had been called and were all in, ready to be opened. The Government cancelled the whole project. They lost $2.1 million on wasted moneys in the income security office and over $3 million in the cancelled federal building.

The third project was fixing up the main street and harbour development in Sydney. The cost of it was supposed to be shared between the federal and provincial Governments. This Government bailed out at the last minute. There was also a plan for a new wash-house at the Prince mine which the Government cancelled. The Government told the people of Cape Breton that if it closed the heavy water plants, it would ensure that alternative employment was in place. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said that, and within a few months the heavy water plants were closed without any regard for alternative employment, and the Government has the unmitigated nerve to talk about sympathy and concern for regions with economic difficulties. It does not know what is concern or sympathy.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-109 to extend borrowing authority to the Government.

Last week I had the opportunity to speak in the budget debate, and I should like to build on the observations I made on Tuesday last in exploring the authority which the Government seeks today and in considering what would be better principles of financing the Government of Canada and providing for the prosperity of Canadians in the Budget.

I put it in that context because I looked at the comments offered by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) on February 12 when he brought in the Bill for second reading. He said something about the borrowing authority passed last year for the current year as part of his explanation of the authority the Government is seeking this year. As I looked at the figures, I found myself really quite struck by evidence of how the Government failed and how the plans of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for deficit reduction, for sound budgeting as he sees it, have really stalled.

A year ago the Government proposed in the way of borrowing authority some $25.8 billion, which happened to be half a billion dollars more than in the current year. However, when one goes into the particulars, one discovers that the basic authority allows for some authority just in case it is necessary to increase our reserves for foreign exchange purposes, if there is a run on the Canadian dollar, I suppose, and it is necessary to defend against that. Laying aside a couple of unusual items last year and this particular one this year, what we find is that the basic authority the Government sought last year was for $21.3 billion. The basic authority being sought this year is for $22.3 billion, $1 billion more than last year. In a world in which a certain amount of inflation prevails and numbers each year tend to be bigger than the previous year, $1 billion is not all that exceptional. It may be roughly in line with the rate of inflation, as a matter of fact.

Let us consider the determination that the Government has had to reduce the deficit in successive years. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did a great amount of bragging about his success in reducing non-statutory expenditures. He hopes to do still more in 1989-90. When one looks at the end results of all this activity, what do we find? We find that the deficit remains very close to $30 billion year by year. As a result the Government is looking at having increased the national deficit over three and a half years by $100 billion or more. That is an odd kind of success for the Minister of Finance and his colleagues to face up to. It will be difficult to defend this on their own assumptions.

What I am talking about here is the situation as it looks for them on the assumptions that they have that the national debt is the most dreadful thing in the world and that the most significant figure in the Budget is the amount that it is in deficit. The Government seems to say that no matter what the cost, it must continue on this trend, barring of course doing dreadful things in the last months before an election and encouraging voters to turf the Conservatives out, adding to the cup of iniquity that the Government has already filled up. Aside from that I suppose even Ministers of Finance stop short of those things, as the Budget Speech in its own way reflected at certain points. The fact remains that the Government has failed on its own assumptions.

I am saying this this afternoon in order to open up the possibility of considering a very different approach. If we want to get the Budget into balance and if we want to stop the national debt from growing the way it has been growing, then we will clearly not succeed by means of restraint in expenditure and massive increases in taxation. We have already had massive increases to the tune of $1,000 and more per average family in additional taxes over the last three years.

Yet what is the result of the Budget? It is another $30 billion deficit. What we have is not any great demonstration of virtue on the part of the Government in contrast with previous Liberal Governments but instead a basic determination to lower taxes on individuals and to let wealthy corporations get off scot-free. Of course that adds to the deficit. The Government brazens that out even while it is following a principle here that is against its own determination.

Far more significant than that are practices which go back to the early 1970s. The Liberals began them and this Government has continued them with little significant change. Certainly, there has been trimming in certain areas in which there were abuses, such as with respect to the scientific research tax credit. It became obvious that that measure was being used as a massive boondoggle by some. The Minister of Finance put an end to it. But aside from a certain amount of trimming of that sort it is clear in the figures of taxation and that imbalance between corporations and individuals that the Government has only made worse the kinds of unfairness that characterized taxation under its Liberal predecessors.

The significant point I want to pursue is not so much that of tax unfairness but the fact that back to the middle 1970s under successive Trudeau Governments there was a limited recognition of national need. There was a failure to recognize the role of the Canadian Government in ensuring that various Canadian needs were met. When elections drew near it was possible to practise what I am saying now, something which should always be kept in mind for the Government of Canada. When the 1984 election drew near there were special recovery capital projects carried out. Contracts were let for vessels for the Coast Guard. For example, a variety of such contracts were let which anticipated the Government's naval building program that is now getting some of the shipyards to work. Certainly the Government began to do that. But we have had a good decade or more of failure through the 1970s to keep the navy up through thick and thin, through good times and bad times, in the way that it should be done in order to ensure that the coastal defences of the country and our Maritime Command are of the quality, that is expected of them. I mention that as one specific example.

There are so many other areas to which one could look, areas with respect to which the Government of Canada should be sensitive. The Government should be quite prepared to borrow for those as an investment in the country. I say that not to add to the deficit of the country but to make an investment in the country.

This suggestion should be followed as an alternative to what we have had, not that it has not been done as an expedient, and I have already suggested that. Instead, it should be a deliberate principle characterizing Government throughout. When there is a wise investment to be made in the country then let us make that investment. Let us be prepared to borrow in order to ensure that that investment is made. Let us recognize that doing that is the way in which we will achieve prosperity. That is what happened in the late 1940s through the 1950s.

When there was building to be done in the country such as large projects in various regions, we got ourselves closer to national prosperity than we have ever had since, certainly since the 1960s. There was a recognition by Governments in those days that they had a responsibility. It was not that private enterprise was wrong or bad or anything of the sort. It was quite to the contrary, especially as expressed by the St. Laurent Government of those days. There was a recognition of the importance of resource companies and their role in the Canadian economy. That is obvious from the history of the period. There was a recognition out of the experience of the Great Depression and the war years that although corporations could do a great deal, and the market pointed to certain kinds of investments, there were measures that the Government of Canada needed to take and that it ought to get on with taking them. There was certainly a recognition in the 1940s that to do that would provide full employment for Canada. It was recognized that it would bring the country prosperity in a way that it had not known since the 1920s, or as it had known during the war years when the Government led in ensuring that production was built up in order to meet war needs.

A few moments ago the Parliamentary Secretary was talking about regional unemployment rates in the various provinces. It is worth recognizing the importance of a program of this sort. Of course unemployment rates are lower in many provinces than they were in 1984. By God, what else could we expect? In 1984 we were just coming out of the interest rate depression of the early 1980s. One would expect that, with reasonable interest rates and with construction picking up, of course the unemployment rates would be lower than they were in 1984. The fact of the matter is that in eight of the ten provinces there is nothing to brag about even now. It is great effrontery for Members of the Government to mention this, something which was well-skewered a few moments ago when our colleague from Cape Breton pointed out the experience of people in his own constituency as far as unemployment is concerned.

With respect to unemployment and the lack of prosperity, there has to be the recognition that the Government could do a great deal to ensure that prosperity returns to these regions and we could get closer to a full employment level. When we get closer to full employment we want to be assured that the tax system is such that the Budget is balanced. When the Budget is balanced we might even have the resources at some point to reduce the national debt rather than being obsessed as this Government has been with deficit reduction first and foremost.

What are examples of projects that should be carried out to meet national needs? I expect that other Members may have caught some parts of Cross Country Check-Up yesterday afternoon with the President of VIA Rail in the studio. Canadians from across the country phoned in to express in most cases their love of rail travel and their desire to have rail transportation improved. There was discussion about fast rail lines far beyond the capability of VIA Rail now with its outmoded rolling stock and with the poor rail lines, relatively speaking, for these purposes. It is a quality of rolling stock that my friend from Regina West focused on very nicely in his own observations when he called in to the show.

I was struck by the suggestion of what could be done with trains that run at 180 or more kilometres per hour. These are speeds which have been attained in France and will be attained soon in other parts of Europe, speeds which have been exceeded by trains in Japan. It is obvious that it would be attractive to many to achieve that kind of rail travel in Canada. Many people would prefer rail travel to road travel or even to air travel.

It is obvious that to achieve that kind of rail transportation system would be a pretty expensive proposition. Here, of course, is an area in which the Government of Canada might choose to invest. The suggestion that really caught my ear was the suggestion of a rail line between Quebec City, Montreal, Toronto and Windsor. Such a line would be a good idea not only in terms of travel needs but also in terms of profitability.

The President of VIA Rail has suggested that such a line would pay for itself. There might be a need for a grant at the beginning, I suppose, to get it going, but if such a line were to be a viable commercial enterprise, I find myself asking how fast we could get the studies done to confirm that and how fast we could turn sod to build this line. If it could be a paying commercial operation, let us get on with the job already, recognizing that such a line built from Windsor all the way to Quebec City would provide employment all along the line, through areas in which such jobs are very badly needed.

A rapid rail line in the central Canadian corridor is an example of something the Government could undertake. It is a good idea which could conceivably be financed quite separately from the borrowings of the federal Government. It would play the role of using the borrowing authority of the Canadian Government and/or VIA Rail together to achieve good things for the Canadian people.

I have another area of concern, also in transportation, as it happens. It might well take up to $3 billion, or at least that is the estimate the Ontario Government has put forward, but there is a need for improvement of the Trans-Canada Highway through northern Ontario. This is another project of regional significance and of national significance. In my constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon, there is a section of highway exceeding 100 kilometres in length which is the road link between East and West in Canada. There is a bridge at the east end of that road across the Nipigon River which, if it were ever to go out, would cut off all transportations across Canada. People would have to travel around the south side of the Great Lakes. Of course, there are sections of the road which have been closed for short periods of time, cutting off transportation, even in the brief time I have been a Member of Parliament.

The improvement of the Trans-Canada Highway through northern Ontario is the most important demand the people of northern Ontario are making. It has been a long-standing desire to have a really first-rate highway there. In the past year, with information that I have made available indicating the support the Government has given to highway construction in Atlantic Canada, in Quebec and more recently on the Yellowhead Highway across the four western provinces, the people of northern Ontario have learned that the Government is supporting highway construction in every province but Ontario.

This seems fine to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who is from Newfoundland and shares his constituents' sense of Toronto the golden, a place of prosperity, and thinks that Ontario can take care of itself. Southern Ontario does so in a way that arouses our envy just as much as the envy of citizens of Newfoundland.

We in northern Ontario have one-quarter of the national length of the Trans-Canada Highway. We have in some sections the sole road link between East and West. The Trans-Canada Highway and Highway 11, the northern route from Nipigon eastward, is the vital route for Canadian road transport.

It is our expectation that highway transport will become more and more important in the era of deregulation. We realize that this road is of enormous importance. Trucking traffic will increase on a highway that is 25 years old, a highway which the provincial Department of Transport recognizes as being obsolete in design and width. The highway is barely adequate for highway transport needs and is completely lacking in the tourism needs of northern Ontario, needs which become the tourism possibilities of Canada.

As long as the highway remains the way it is, Canadians as well as Americans will cut across the line and travel the route, which in part is Highway 2 in the northern United States. I suggest that the talk about tourism in northern Ontario will be only rhetoric as long as the highway remains the way it is.

I am pleased to see that the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), is here in the House this afternoon listening and taking in some of these observations. He knows how important this route is and I trust that he will carry the message to his colleagues in Cabinet by saying: "Even if it is in the context of an election year, when we have to do things that do not make sense by our old standard of deficit reduction, let us get on with this, let us give promises to the Ontario Government, let us get an agreement signed and get building".

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, what a pleasure it was to hear those parting comments. Finally there has been a public admission of a commonly held attitude: go into an election and bribe the voters with borrowed dollars.

The Hon. Member stood there as if there were no thought that existed in the world other than in an election year, borrow money, bribe the voters. That is not the view of this Party. It was not the view of this Party during the last election campaign and it will not be the view prior to the next election campaign. It is an antiquated set of ideas that is the source of the problems in this country today, the source of 1.5 million unemployed Canadians.

Remember the minority Parliament of 1973 to 1974? Federal government expenses were up 30 per cent a year under the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). Expenses were up, there was no income, so the Government borrowed money.

Today we are debating a borrowing authority Bill. We have a Budget that has $3 billion of surplus revenue over program expenditures except for the interest on the public debt, the interest that came about as a consequence of the marriage between two political Parties in 1972. The attitude was to borrow money, borrow money, pay for it tomorrow, pay for it tomorrow. The money is not here to pay for it. It is not here to pay for programs. We have to borrow more to pay for programs.

The Hon. Member talked about regional disparity. He said that we are doing nothing for Atlantic Canada. Since September of 1984, jobs in Atlantic Canada have grown by an average of 2,000 per month, every month. Month after month, there are more people with permanent jobs. Under the previous Government, the unemployment rate went up by 50 per cent. It has been coming down ever since the voters had the wisdom to change Governments.

The Hon. Member talks about tax credits and whether or not they are important. I have a question for him. We have to borrow money. We could borrow a little less if the NDP would not use taxpayers' dollars through the tax credit system to run election campaigns for their candidates in the Toronto aldermanic race. If they stopped doing that there would be more money in the federal till and less would have to be borrowed.

Recently the NDP put out a letter offering a free trip to Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand. With what? Taxpayers' subsidized dollars. Can the Hon. Member stand in the House and say that the NDP is prepared to make a contribution to reducing the deficit and stop using taxpayers' subsidized dollars to fund aldermanic candidates in Toronto and to provide free trips for lottery winners among those who receive NDP fund-raising letters?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his comments and questions. However, I really feel sad, on behalf of the people of Canada, that he missed the whole first half of the speech.

He talked about trying to bribe voters. The Conservatives are going to find that is about the only thing left to them. They have tried everything else. I was not talking about bribing voters. He comes up with that from his own assumptions in that way.

When I talk about government Members who will see only good sense when the ballot box sits before them and they realize they are on their way to retirement, I was appealing to their sense of self-preservation. We have had three and a half years of letting ideology rule their lives and determine what they are going to do. It has been such a confining ideology that the Parliamentary Secretary is unable to recognize what I was talking about.

The Government has been pursuing deficit reduction and cutting back on borrowing. The Parliamentary Secretary again wept tears about the fact that it is the payment of interest on the national debt that creates the deficit. It is worth remembering that a good part of the borrowing is investment by Canadian wage earners. I notice the Government used about $15 billion of its borrowing authority up to the end of January. Of that money, almost two-thirds, if I remember the figures correctly, came from people who bought Canada savings bonds and who were happy to invest in the securities of the Canadian Government.

What I am talking about is not bribing the voters. That is the way those jokers see it. The voters will treat them with the kind of contempt that deserves. I am talking instead about needs existing in every region of Canada, construction needs of various sorts, needs that the Government should be doing something about so that we do not live in the kind of depression this country has experienced in attitudes. Liberals before them and now Conservatives have a depression mentality: hold back on spending, stint everywhere, with terrible end results.

Look at what has happened in education financing. The federal Government failed to be true to the principles that characterized university financing up to the middle 1970s. Provincial Governments, under more and more pressure, have been following through on that, so that when you contemplate what is happening now to people supporting public school education, you see that at one time 60 per cent of the cost of education was provided by the provincial Government. It has slipped down towards 40 per cent. The local ratepayers are burdened with these taxes. We have had that kind of mentality in area after area.

What I am talking about is recognizing that we are not in the interest rate depression of the early 1980s. The Conservatives should be honest enough to recognize that that is what produced the terrible results of the early 1980s, the last Trudeau Government, and provide the background against which there has been further improvement, not particularly to the Government's credit. What the Government has done in loading taxes on Canadians and reducing spending should have kept that depression going as we expected. The feature we did not work in was reasonable interest rates.

The Parliamentary Secretary made suggestions about election spending. My good friend from Windsor—Walkerville pointed out what the developers are doing in supporting aldermen in a completely shameless buying of votes in Toronto City Council. Incredible. Those are the allies of this Government. Those people on the city council have been passing one development after another, destroying the life of downtown Toronto, overburdening the transportation system and so on. If he really wanted to reduce the borrowing needs of this country a little bit he would persuade the Minister of Finance to reduce interest rates. If that were done by just one percentage point he could save $1.4 billion of those hard-earned tax dollars or additional borrowing that he is so concerned about. That of course is his great concern so why does he not do something about it?

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I heard just a portion of the very eloquent speech by my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon. I heard him compare the situation in northern Ontario with that of southern Ontario. I wonder if he would care to reflect upon the tendency not only to, in a manner of speaking, completely ignore the circumstances of northern Ontario, but to include within the context of southern Ontario places such as Windsor where the unemployment rate now has reached 14 per cent. My home city is now tied with Trois-Rivières as the place with the highest unemployment rate in the country. Nevertheless, the Government persists in describing southern Ontario as so prosperous as to be virtual parasites on the rest of the country.

What action should the Government take in recognition of that state of affairs, particularly when anyone who has looked at the record of the economy of this country over the last two decades would understand that if a high unemployment rate occurs in Windsor it reflects the trend to be anticipated in the automobile industry?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate my colleague giving me the opportunity to draw some of those distinctions. It is very easy for us to think that everything between the Ontario border near Montreal and Windsor is in great shape. The sad reality is that it is not. We are looking at a small area around the Golden Horseshoe, Metropolitan Toronto, where there has been an incredible boom lately. As we move out from there to Windsor and Trois-Rivières, not an insignificant linking of communities and towns in the corridor from Quebec City to Windsor, when those communities are experiencing these unemployment rates, it is clear that the market orientation of the Government and all of its talk about prosperity falls very flat. It clangs upon the ears of people who are sitting around looking for jobs.

I was talking about investment in Canada, investment in this transportation corridor for VIA Rail and other projects designed to get us to full employment. When we get there, let us be sure that we tax fairly and adequately in order to get the Budget in balance in a way the Government knows nothing about. That is why we need a change of Government as soon as possible in order to get these things done.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Madam Speaker, this afternoon I would like to comment on Bill C-109, and since the Bill is a prime example of the poor management the Conservative Government has inflicted on Canadians during the past four years, I would also like to say how appalled I am at the Government's failure to act in many respects. If passed, this Bill will authorize the Government to increase the national debt by $25.3 billion during the coming fiscal year, starting April 1.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) in his speech, this loan of $25.3 billion would carry interest charges totalling $2.5 billion for fiscal 1989-90. And that is not counting a very likely increase in interest rates, a possibility already mentioned by several economic experts. Twenty-five billion dollars may not seem like much—just a routine loan to add to a national debt that is already far too high. By the end of this fiscal year, our national debt will be nearly $300 billion. Three hundred billion dollars, which means a little more than $12,000 per Canadian. Every year, every man, woman and child in this country pays an average of over $1,000 in taxes, just to pay off the interest on the national debt. That is an enormous amount when we realize that many people, for various reasons, do not pay any income tax at all.

And the worst part is that although the economy is in very good shape, the Conservative Government keeps increasing the debt. Madam Speaker, I hate to think what would happen if this Government were in power during a recession or even during a period of economic stability!

About 10 years ago, around 1978-79, the deficit or debt was about $60 billion. In 1984—after a recession that had affected Canada's economy during 1981, 1982 and early 1983—the deficit was $199 billion when the Government changed hands. After four years under a Conservative Government, we now have a total national debt of $322 billion, and if I may quote the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, the Government and government Members like to say the deficit is largely the fault of the previous Government. On the other hand, if the previous Liberal Government had failed to take the necessary action when the recession hit Canada's economy and the international economy, I wonder where we would be today, because the measures taken by the Liberal Government helped to maintain welfare and unemployment insurance programs. It is not surprising that the deficit rose at the time, because the unemployment rate was high, but on the other hand, because of the unemployment insurance benefits and subsidies Canadians were receiving, companies could continue to buy and sell and maintain Canada's economy at a certain level during this difficult period.

And today our criticism of this government is that although we are clearly in a period of economic growth throughout the world, including Canada, it has done absolutely nothing to reduce the deficit.

All it does is change its accounting practices—I will get back to this later on—and I think that is the most serious criticism one can level at the Conservative Government. At a time when it could take advantage of a period of tremendous economic growth to reduce spending and substantially reduce the deficit, it has maintained the deficit or reduced it so little that our national debt continues to rise. If this Government were faced with an economic recession or even with a period of economic stability, I would hate to be here in the House to hear how much the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would have to increase the annual deficit to meet the Government's spending requirements.

Madam Speaker, after six years of economic growth the situation is now worse than it was during the economic recession in 1981, 1982 and early 1983. Again, as a citizen of this country I am very concerned that this Government failed to take advantage of the excellent state of the economy: $25.3 billion is far too much for a Government that has forfeited the trust of Canadian men and women by failing to keep its promises; $25.3 is incredible for a Minister of Finance who in his last Budget has shown he is totally inept as far as managing taxpayers' money is concerned; $25.3 billion is ridiculous, when we realize that with all its loans and tax revenues, and despite the excellent economic situation, the Conservative Government still has nothing to offer the poor, the needy and youth.

Although we in the Liberal Party do not wish to delay unduly the passage of this Bill, we must be aware of the circumstances surrounding this loan. In 1984, this Government promised Canadians it would not increase taxes, saying they were already too high. And today? My colleague from Laval-des-Rapides has described the situation in a number of speeches. This Government has repeatedly broken its promises by imposing a series of new taxes and increasing existing ones. I will not enumerate them all, but if we add them all up, we end up with something like an increase of $22 billion—22 billion dollars more, six years of economic growth and the Minister wants to borrow another $25.3 billion from Canadians for the coming fiscal year. Madam Speaker, there is something here that does not add up.

In 1984, the same Government also promised Canadians that it would substantially reduce the deficit. In his Budget Speech, the Minister of Finance said the deficit had been reduced to $29.3 billion. This was not a particularly outstanding achievement, considering the excellent state of the world economy and the promises made by the Minister. Increasingly, people are realizing that this figure is the result of one of the Conservative Government's accounting tricks.

In fact, besides other excellent initiatives, the Minister of Finance also changed the accounting methods used by the Liberal Government at the time. We could assume these would be insignificant changes, insignificant meaning in this case, however, that we get a variation of more than $2 billion, compared with what the deficit would have been using the former accounting system. And this is a very conservative estimate, because the Bank of Montreal, no less, stated in a recent report that if we got rid of all this creative accounting, we would realize the national debt was nearly $4 billion more than the $29.3 billion quoted by the Minister of Finance. His performance clearly falls short of the objectives set by the Conservatives themselves. In the Budget brought down two years ago, the Minister of Finance expected the deficit to drop to $25.9 billion for the fiscal year that is about to end. Surely this would have been reason enough to make the Minister less complacent in his last Budget Speech, when the Minister had nothing to say but a lot to hide.

Alain Dubuc in La Presse gave a very apt summary of the situation on February 11, and I quote:

> —the Minister's accounting practices are equalled only by the ethics of some of his colleagues.

A little further, we read:

> To keep the deficit at about the same level, the Minister had to increase taxes again and resort to some financial tricks. There is the tax on gas that brings in $225 million, and there is also the fact that the tax reform will produce a revenue this year.

Even worse, in addition to failing to significantly reduce the deficit and in addition to putting a maximum tax burden on all Canadians, this Government has completely ignored young people, senior citizens, the homeless and the poor. It has also ignored regional disparity. It is so busy helping Canadians who are benefiting from the excellent state of our economy that it cannot be bothered to listen to the grievances of Canadians whom the economy is passing by.

As a Liberal concerned about the well-being of all citizens, I cannot agree with proposals designed to benefit the privileged and prosperous, while the poorest and neediest in this country must suffer.

The Government continues to brag about its job creation statistics. Although the situation is improving, which is not surprising after six years of economic growth, Canada still has more than one million unemployed, and the Government does not seem to notice. Job creation programs are being cut back regularly. They tell us the economy is in such good shape that people should be able to find jobs without government assistance. That may be true in some regions, but it certainly is not true in all parts of Canada, and it certainly is not true for young people, whose unemployment rate continues to be twice the national average.

In spite of a situation that is particularly painful for our youth, the last Budget of the Minister of Finance, where the only spectacular measure was a one cent increase in the tax on gas, had nothing more to offer young Canadians than an ordinary economic statement.

Last night, during the closing ceremonies at the Olympic Games in Calgary, the President of the International Olympic Committee said at the end of his speech that the future depended on our youth. I could not agree more with these words, which were heard by millions of Canadians. I can only hope that the Conservative Government and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) were also listening. I take this opportunity to congratulate the many athletes who took part in these games, particularly the Canadian athletes who are all youths on which Canada can depend to maintain our traditions. When it comes to finance, these young people were away ahead of the Minister of Finance of the Conservative Government.

Although I have precious little hope that these words may have impressed the Minister responsible for youth, notwithstanding his many lofty promises, I dare say he must have felt somewhat uncomfortable for failing to give more than lip service to our young Canadians.

Not so very long ago in a press conference he went as far as talking about a global youth strategy. I would not know whether the Minister fully appreciates the latest Budget, but as far as I can see it did not have much to say about this question, however important it may be. I would suggest that the Government simply does not grasp the full significance of the problems young people have to cope with.

I agree with the Minister when he says there is no magic solution to youth problems, but that just cannot be a valid excuse to do nothing. Unfortunately very few problems in this country can be solved with a magic wand. But when we set our minds to it we realize that simple, constructive and intelligent measures can help improve considerably most existing problem situations, especially with respect to young people.

The Minister cannot even manage to maintain existing programs at a decent level, and I am referring specifically to Challenge '88. No wonder young Canadians have had it up to here. This announcement falls far short of what they can righfully expect and does not give us a single clue as to what the Conservative Government is doing to help them. There has been no improvement over the previous edition of the program, except perhaps in the case of school drop-outs, and to top it off the appropriations are even lower than they were four years ago.

In 1984, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government earmarked $200 million for its Youth Employment Program. In 1988, all this Tory Government has to offer is a meager $180 million and I will never agree with the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) when he says that this budgetary freeze is normal and acceptable in view of a lower level of unemployment among young people. Too many young people are without jobs for the Government to rest on its laurels. Drop-outs are not just young people who are fed up with school. Several among them just cannot afford to attend a college or university.

In several regions of this country, the unemployment rate has reached unacceptable levels. This is true even in Quebec where youth unemployment rate reaches 13.7 per cent. Nothing could justify the Government's inaction.

The failure of the Tory Government over the past few years to take advantage of the economic stability makes one really concerned about what could happen in case of a recession or even economic stagnation in this country. Unfortunately, young people are always the first victims in similar circumstances.

Madam Speaker, I worry about what the future has in store for young Canadians under this free trade agreement with our American partners. As a strong believer in the entrepreneurship of our young people, I hope that the Government will set up the necessary mechanism for them to rank among the giants and the strong. I also wonder about their working conditions in such a competitive economy because Canadian corporations will have to make cuts somewhere if they want to hold their own. Clearly young Canadians are likely to be the first victims of these cuts.

The Government should consider now taking special measures to prepare young people for this new environment, failing which they would be quickly overwhelmed under a wave of Americanism.

Unfortunately, the Canadian Government is not moving in this direction, and no one, not even the Minister of State for Youth, is truly concerned about young people. The optimism shown by this Government often blinds it to the obvious.

In his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance patted himself on the back because of the unexpected performance of the economy. But a reference to his 1984 speech shows that he talked about reducing the expenditures without increasing taxes.

And here is what Alain Dubuc has to say about the recent Budget by the Minister of Finance: "His Budget has only thirteen and a half pages and twelve of them are in praise of the Conservative Government, which makes it look like a political leaflet meant for door to door delivery."

And among other considerations by Alain Dubuc, here is a quote on "opportunities foregone" by the Conservative Government: "It is all the more worrisome that the Conservative Government has come to power at an ideal time to put public finances in order. Canada has had five consecutive years of economic growth so there could hardly be a better time to reduce the deficit.

Why has it not been done? Surely not because the Minister of Finance is incompetent, but rather because he is part of a Government afraid of its own shadow."

The improvement in our economic situation is due in great part to the fact that for the last six years now, the entire world has been recovering from a very deep recession. The Conservative Government has benefited from the strong bases put in place by its predecessor, which had successfully handled a very difficult recession. Furthermore, both the Government and the economy are benefiting from an increase in consumption. In the past, Canadians saved more while now they consume more.

Nevertheless, the last Budget is off the mark in many respects. The deficit is handled in a dishonest way. No aid is provided to the neediest, Canadians are expected to bear a greater tax burden and, finally, forecasts concerning the Canadian economy are not realistic.

In fact, the forecasts made by the Finance Department are so optimistic that they must be taken with a grain of salt. There is enormous exaggeration.

The great majority of economists are much more cautious. Unfortunately, those who foot the bill in times of economic downturn are the neediest among Canadians. Our young people are also constantly vulnerable.

They are the first ones to suffer when the number of jobs decreases and when cuts are made in programs.

Madam Speaker, the Conservatives have shown clearly their government is not trustworthy. They made commitments they did not fulfil. Those commitments were important for Canada. We were promised taxes would not be raised, the deficit would be reduced. Three years and a half later, we realize Canadians are taxed to a very high degree and the deficit has not changed significantly. Still claims are made at every opportunity that everything is just fine. The documents about 18 inches thick that are distributed say nothing but give a boastful and inaccurate description of the Government's achievements. This budget is an electioneering document printed at taxpayers' expense that is certainly not very honest.

In spite of this situation, Madam Speaker, and I am concluding, we are asked to give the Government a borrowing power of $25.3 billion. If that money could be used to help the needy and young Canadians, I would go along with the request thinking the Government is willing to make up for what has been lost. But that is not the case. I do not want to delay too much the passing of the Bill, but I am against it, since it does not bring anything better for Canadian men and women and for young people and it is tangible proof of this Government's very bad management.

Madam Speaker, the people have every reason to worry and fear the terrible situation in which Conservatives have put Canada, in spite of all the economic advantages which could accrue to Canadians. Personally I am deeply disappointed, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, I would like, first of all, to congratulate my colleague for his very precise speech which, in my view, is very important as it brings to this House an element which unfortunately, up to now, had not been mentioned often enough, and that is the fact that our friends opposite are bragging about low inflation rates and low interest rates, and telling us that everything is going well. However, we forget to do some comparisons—

Mr. Fontaine: It is true, everything is going well.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): —with what we had before 1984, when, as my friend said so well, we were faced with an historic recession which forced all industrialized countries, out of human decency, to accept an increase in their deficit.

Today, the situation is quite different and the economy is thriving. We are going through a period which would allow, in my opinion, more generosity in fundamental and much needed programs, for our youth in particular. I know that my colleague deals brilliantly with youth affairs. I would like to ask him the following question: Since 1984, did this Government take any concrete program initiative, any new measure to help students and new graduates, in particular within a very important resource envelope, the Laprade Fund? It was announced a few months ago, after many years of delay, that the Laprade Fund was being authorized. We were told that some $80 million would be made available. Within this important resource envelope, are there different parts, does it allow for the participation of young people who would like to be associated with job creation?

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for asking a question on a matter or a problem as important as the Laprade Fund, concerning the possibility for young people to have a portion of that Fund eventually be put to use. Unfortunately, to this day, there has not been that many projects that were approved that will enable young people to use the opportunities the Laprade Fund should normally be providing. Unfortunately, this is more or less the result of the over all measures that were taken both by this Conservative Government and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) who since 1984, as pointed out by my colleague, was wondering whether there were measures or programs that could be used by young graduates or even by school drop-outs who had difficulty finding a job.

Unfortunately, since 1984, and especially since I was elected here, on a number of occasions I asked the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), among other things, when there would be a real youth policy, a genuine policy dealing with opportunities and all the problems faced by young people in Canada. And we always had rather general answers, in which we were told: Well, there is no problem, the present economic situation is good, we are creating a lot of jobs, and the young people are being well served by the Conservative Government. I also have a clear recollection of the Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney himself stating in this House on a few occasions that the Katimavik Program for instance would be replaced. When the Katimavik Program was abolished, its value was recognized and the Prime Minister stated that indeed there would be a replacement program. I have been here for 16 months, and after a number of questions on that matter, we still have no program to replace the Katimavik Program, at least in that sense, and when certain programs were created, those programs were so limited to certain areas or major cities in Canada that there seemed to be a total lack of awareness that there are many young people in various areas in Canada that would need support in order to be in a position to set up an efficient structure or organization or initiative.

Personally, I am very much disappointed by that stand or lack of policies the Minister of State for Youth has yet to put forward, and that lack of programs to replace not only the Katimavik Program but also the other programs that were put forward for certain regions of Canada only, which explains that regional disparities as was mentioned on a number of occasions are still there, and some young Canadians are penalized in comparison to other Canadians who live in major centres.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): The Hon. Member had a lot to say about the Challenge 88 Program. I know from my personal experience with Challenge 85, Challenge 86 and Challenge 87 that non-profit organizations have been shamefully neglected under this program. By putting the emphasis on the private sector, which might not be in itself a bad thing, the program is unfortunately being unfair to smaller communities where the private sector has no presence, which means that students in these small communities have no chance to work in their own community.

My question to my colleague is this: Does he know whether or not this aspect of the Challenge 88 Program will be improved to provide full access to non-profit organizations?

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, my colleague is quite right to raise this issue, especially as the Minister of State for Youth said at a briefing on Challenge 88 that last year's criteria would apply which means that there will obviously be the same type of discrimination against non-profit organizations. However, as Hon. Members will recall, Challenge 87 allowed non-profit organizations under the jurisdiction of the social affairs department to take part at the last minute and benefit from the program. When people heard the Minister of State for Youth say at the briefing that the same criteria would apply as for Challenge 87, they thought that organizations in the social affairs network, such as drop-in centres, would be eligible under Challenge 88. We have learned that negotiations are under way, but there are only three days left to apply under Challenge 88 and we still do not know whether drop-in centres and social affairs organizations will be eligible.

In my opinion, this is blatant discrimination. It creates a very serious problem and I do not think that a remedy can be found as long as the Minister has not made a decision, even though he could have begun negotiations with the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs a long time ago. Since he has not done so, it is now impossible for such organizations to take part in the Challenge 88 Program.

Mr. Oostrom: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. Does he agree with me that Hon. Members in general should do a good amount of research before they actually rise in the House so that they are sure of their facts?

A couple of weeks ago when we were dealing with Bill C-84, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) raised a couple of items. They referred to the return of the St. Louis and indicated that many people were not allowed to come into Canada. Obviously their research was not very good. It was stated that 907 people were turned away from Canada. That boat never even came to Canada. Some 224 of those people went to France, 240 went to Belgium, 181 to Holland, and 288 to Britain. In the end, of those 907 people, 520 people survived. Those two Members had not really done their research on that particular subject, and it is very important that they do. As a matter of fact, it was the country of Cuba that actually reneged on the original statement—

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Obviously the Hon. Member does not know what is under debate at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), but the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) sought the floor first.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment on what the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) was saying. I trust that his constituents, many of whom have a real stake in good refugee legislation, are listening to the kind of balderdash that he often serves on this issue.

The point is not Bill C-84 or anything dealing with refugees this afternoon. It is the borrowing authority. In addition, it is hardly sporting and quite against the conventions of the House to be attacking colleagues who are not in the House.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will be here shortly to speak during Private Members' Hour. However, he is not here now, and surely it is not fair nor in the traditions of the House to comment on something he supposedly said when he is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thought the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) was straying from the subject at hand, but I was under the impression that he was coming to the point. At the moment I will ask him, if he has a question, to conclude very quickly as the time for questions and comments has actually expired.

Mr. Oostrom: Madam Speaker, I was coming to the question. Does the Hon. Member agree that proper research should be done, particularly on the borrowing Bill and the deficit? The Hon. Member stated that the deficit was increasing, and actually the deficit has been decreasing by $10 billion annually since we came to power.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What, by $10 billion a year? If that were so, we would have no deficit left.

Mr. Oostrom: It is very important that proper research be done, and I ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees with that.

[Translation]

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, I cannot agree with what the Hon. Member is saying because there seems to be a definite attempt on his part to read into the figures whatever meaning he wants, although we can readily see from data which have been studied by journalists who are economists or by institutions as renowned as the Bank of Montreal, that contrary to what the Hon. Member suggests, the deficit is increasing, the national debt is increasing as well as the servicing of the debt. So it is a matter of interpretation of figures, and I cannot agree with my colleague.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in the brief five minutes I have available to me I will confine my remarks in respect of the borrowing Bill to one specific item which, unfortunately, is not included in government planned expenditures for this year, that is, money specifically targeted to unemployed older workers.

The reason I want to zero in on that specific point and wonder why the Government has not targeted that group with specific retraining programs is that I represent a constituency which, at this time and indeed for the past several years, notwithstanding the over-all economic development of southwestern Ontario has experienced widespread and long-term unemployment among workers in their forties, fifties, and early sixties.

For example, reference is often made to the fact that the so-called Golden Horseshoe has an average unemployment rate of 3 per cent to 4 per cent. That is just simply not true. My constituency of Brant, which is only a few miles off the road from the so-called Golden Horseshoe, has a present unemployment rate in excess of 12 per cent. In fact, many local employment specialists or unemployment specialists in Brant would tell us that it is probably closer to 15 per cent. That is totally unacceptable at a time when that part of the country is supposedly going through a veritable economic renaissance. No doubt there are some communities in central Canada and in southern Ontario where their economies at the present time are burgeoning, although there are indicators, day after day, that generally speaking the economy is beginning to flatten out.

Why do we have so many unemployed middle-aged and older workers in Brant? One very obvious reason is that we have suffered from the closure of White Farm equipment, and I think possibly of the imminent closure of Massey Combines. As I stand here at this moment, nobody seems to know just what will happen today or tomorrow or this week with Massey Combines Limited. The company has indicated that it is about to go into receivership unless it can be relieved of its debt burden or at least the debt burden can be postponed. That will mean another 500 to 700 workers laid off permanently in a city of some 75,000 people.

In addition, we had the Wabco plant closure in Paris, Ontario. We had another plant closure at Etatech in Brantford. Another company in Brantford, Trailmobile, is also undergoing some very serious adjustment programs at this time as it attempts to expand into the American market.

If we look closely at the industries I have mentioned, two prominent ones, Massey Combines and White Farm, were industries which had been trying to compete in a free trade environment for the past 40 years. Over the last 20 years we have lost some 5,000 jobs in the agricultural implement industry, owing mainly to free trade. I hope the significance of that sinks in across the way—free trade.

On the other hand, the auto parts industries are tied in with the auto assembly industries. They are not subject to the vagaries of free trade but to managed trade. We have created 4,000 jobs in industries related to the Auto Pact. Consequently, I think there is a very serious lesson to be learned in that regard.

I should like to know why the Government has been totally remiss in bringing forward what it promised to do two years ago, which was an older workers' adjustment program under the labour adjustment program that the Government terminated about a year ago.

I see that my time is up in that it is now five o'clock. I hope that I will be able to continue when this debate resumes at a later date. It being five o'clock, I understand that the period for debate is closed.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the eighth straight debate on Budget and economic items. The Government side would be quite prepared not to see the clock for a few moments to allow the Hon. Member to conclude, if indeed we could have unanimous consent to move to a vote on the borrowing Bill, and tomorrow we could get on with a very important regional concern, the Western Diversification Fund.

If there is some predisposition on the other side, I simply say from the government side that, with unanimous consent, we would be quite prepared not to see the clock so that the Hon. Member could finish his speech, to have Private Members' Hour, and to have a vote at the conclusion thereof. That would be the suggestion.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I think that the Parliamentary Secretary should at least be factual. This is not the eighth day of debate on the Budget. This is the second day of debate on Bill C-109, which is a borrowing authority Bill. There have been perhaps five or six hours of debate thus far. There are still three hours to go before we even reach the eight hours of debate, at which time speeches will go from 20 minutes in length to 10 minutes in length, as is set out in the Standing Orders.

I do not think that the Parliamentary Secretary is too clear with respect to what he is trying to do. The Government is borrowing several billions of dollars. It would be an advantage to Canadians to know what the Government is planning to do with this money. I know that members of the Government are not interested in speaking about or explaining their points of view. But today members of the Opposition are at least trying to understand and put a clear message across to Canadians with respect to what the Government is intending to do with this money.

I invite the Hon. Member to participate in the debate and to tell us exactly what the Government wants to do with this money instead of trying to cut off debate.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate being recognized. I think that what the Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting is that we complete the debate on the borrowing authority Bill today. Considering that we have only had two days of debate on this matter and that the Government is asking Parliament's permission to borrow some $25 billion, I think the taxpayers of Canada would like us to spend a little bit of time in attempting to determine how the Government plans to spend this money, particularly when it has not accounted for all of it in the Estimates. There are still some $2.5 billion to account for.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Parliamentary Secretary should realize that the Chair does not have unanimous consent.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ADVISABILITY OF INFORMING DEPOSITORS WHEN DEPOSITS ARE UNINSURED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

He said: Madam Speaker, this particular motion was motivated by recent events which occurred over the last few years. We all remember that between the years 1923, which was when the Home Bank failed, and the early 1980s, we Canadians have felt generally secure about the stability of our financial institutions, particularly our banking institutions. However, the recession of 1982 to 1984 created havoc in the financial industry. Canadians are now too familiar with the spectre of failed banks and other failed financial institutions.

Over the years our banks have become cathedrals of capitalism, symbols of stability in our society. Anyone who has entered the large head office of a bank knows that rather intimidating feeling one gets when one walks into those hallowed halls. Unfortunately, that has changed somewhat in the last number of years.

We recall the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank followed by the collapse of the Northland Bank. Then, Pioneer Trust of Western Canada collapsed. The British Columbia Teachers' Investment & Housing Co-op collapsed. The Bank of British Columbia got into financial difficulties and was required to be bailed out. The Morguard Bank narrowly avoided collapse and was purchased by Security Pacific Bank. Mercantile Bank collapsed and was quickly merged into the National Bank. Continental Bank was carried off by Lloyds Bank. Recently, the very terrible situation surrounding the Principal Group and its related companies and their collapse motivated me to submit Motion No. 143 in an effort to protect depositors.

It particularly hit home in western Canada where the brunt of the Principal Group collapse was felt most heavily. I suspect that I can speak for many Members of Parliament in this respect. I have before me a long list of individuals from my constituency who lost considerable amounts of money. In many cases they lost their entire life savings, or a major portion of their life savings. For example, a retired custodian lost $57,000. A retired executive lost $113,000, while a millwright lost $50,000. A retired miner lost $41,000; a retired logger, $49,000; a retired pipefitter, $38,000; a realtor, $40,000; a retired farmer, $32,000; a miner, $34,000; a carpenter, $40,000; a rancher, $42,000; a mechanic, $21,000; a bus driver, $56,000; a retired member of the Armed Forces, $24,000; and a logger, $90,000. I could go on I suppose for an hour or two reading the names of those from my constituency who lost a portion if not all of their life savings. They had been saving this money to provide for their retirement years.

Obviously, something needed to be done. One of the problems that we must face as parliamentarians is the challenge of ensuring that the integrity of our financial system remains in place. In recent years we have all recognized and have seen a shift to deregulation in an effort to encourage competition in the financial industries. With this has come a blurring of the traditional separation of functions of various types of financial institutions.

For example, investment dealers now offer chequing services. Banks now sell securities, and so on and so forth. This new deregulation has unfortunately permitted either naive and/or unscrupulous financial advisers to mislead Canadians about the degree of protection that their deposits and investments may have. During the deliberations of the Principal Group collapse and the inquiry into it we saw a whole host of examples in which individuals were misled, and perhaps not always intentionally. Even the people selling or arranging the deposits had received incorrect information, were poorly informed or uninformed about certain developments within the companies they were representing. Setting aside the reasons, thousands and thousands of people lost considerable sums of money as a result of these problems.

These people assumed that their deposits were protected. In some cases they were told that their deposits were protected under CDIC and, of course, they were not. As a result innocent depositors have been severely hurt.

Perhaps I should remind Hon. Members that our deposit-taking institutions in Canada include banks, trusts and loan companies as well as credit unions. Deposit insurance is available to all of these. However, we must recognize that all the deposits with these different financial institutions are covered. There are other financial institutions that take in investments but are not covered by any insurance whatsoever.

I am very happy to be able to say that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is in fact the principal provider of deposit insurance in Canada. It insures deposits in banks, federally-chartered trust and loan companies and provincially-chartered trust and loan companies other than those in the Province of Quebec. In these institutions the deposits are insured up to $60,000. But that is it. In the United States, under a very similar situation, depositors are guaranteed up to $100,000. Nevertheless, a single deposit by a man or woman in one of these institutions is insured by CDIC up to $60,000.

What this means is that all banks and certainly most trust and loan companies are CDIC insured. In Quebec the insurer is the Régie de l'assurance-dépots du Québec. However, I think it needs to be said that most deposits are insured in these institutions, but not all. There are a number of deposits that are not insured even in the ones covered by CDIC. For example, foreign currency accounts, the contents of safety deposit boxes, investment products with terms of more than five years, stocks, bonds, mutual funds and deposits in excess of $60,000 are not insured. I think it is important to recognize that because in some cases, there is the impression that anything deposited in a bank, as long as it does not amount to over $60,000, is in fact insured. As I say, such is not the case.

The credit unions are becoming major financial players in the financial world. Vancouver City Savings is now the second largest credit union in the entire world. Credit unions are a $62-billion industry with nearly nine million depositors.

Credit unions are provincially regulated and the extent of depositor protection varies from province to province. In Quebec, the organization insures deposits up to $60,000 and in other provinces, insurance is sometimes as high as 100 per cent of deposits.

Each province has a stabilization fund which assists credit unions that experience temporary difficulty. The B.C. Central Credit Union has a liquidity fund of $1 billion to assist credit unions that might get into difficulties. As well, the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society acts as the central bank for the credit unions and also has a stabilization fund of nearly $1.8 billion. It is fair to say that no credit union has ever declared insolvency except for a 1981 Quebec collapse which was provincially insured. In that case, the depositors were well protected.

Statistics Canada estimates that investment dealers hold about $3.5 billion in deposits, none of which is covered by CDIC. There is something called the National Contingency Fund, commonly referred to as the NCF, which exists to assist clients affected by broker insolvency. This was set up in 1969.

The NCF has about $16 million on hand and another $20 million line of credit. However, it must be recognized that one major bankruptcy such as Osler Inc. can leave the fund empty. The Canadian Co-operative Credit Society claims that it is owed $30 million from Osler. Thus, the entire capital base of the NCF would be in jeopardy. We see that some improvement is certainly needed when it comes to ensuring the safety and protection of those people making deposits with investment dealers.

Life insurance companies sell RRSPs, RRIFs and other similar investments that are not insured. At the moment, the industry is developing a consumer protection plan. However, not all the products offered by the life insurance companies would be covered, nor would they have government backing.

There are hundreds of companies across Canada that offer financial services and fund operations by issuing debt instruments that are totally uninsured. This is what happened in the Principal Group situation.

In this time of financial deregulation, in a world that is becoming more and more competitive and at a time when sales people are becoming more aggressive because of increased competition through deregulation, problems associated with naive or unscrupulous investment counsellors become increasingly important. It seems to me that this places a greater burden and a larger challenge on parliamentarians to find ways and means of protecting innocent and naive investors.

Since 1967, CDIC has required that member institutions not issue uninsured financial instruments unless they carry a notice to that effect. Unfortunately, often this is not brought to the customer's attention and, in some instances, customers have said that they were misled and lied to by sales people about the nature of the insurance on the deposit or the investment.

There seem to be two problems. One is that some people are not aware that the institution in which they deposit their money is not insured. The other is that some individuals are unaware that the type of deposit or investment that they make determines whether or not it is insured. Those are the two critical questions we are attempting to address with this motion.

The motion would require those institutions to present the customer with a waiver form to sign indicating that the customer was made aware of the insurance situation with respect to his or her deposit or investment. This seems to me to be a sensible way of ensuring that customers are not misled by sales people who are anxious to earn more commissions and are perhaps prepared to be a little free with the truth when it comes to describing how risky a deposit or investment is.

The idea of having such a form that a depositor would be required to sign indicating that he or she is aware of the insurance aspect of the deposit or investment has the backing of the Consumers' Association of Canada. Last year, the Consumers' Association sent the Minister a letter detailing a similar proposal as a way of protecting innocent depositors.

I believe that we as parliamentarians would agree that it is time that fiascos like the one which occurred with the Principal Group not happen again. The situation that is unfolding daily as the inquiry takes place in Alberta is something we never want to see repeated again. The individuals involved, many of whom were pensioners, in some cases lost their entire life savings. The same thing happened with the British Columbia Teachers' Housing Co-op as well.

Whether or not some years hence, depositors will receive some of their money back, perhaps 50 cents on the dollar, tens of thousands of people who put their faith in a regulatory system and in the integrity of this institution were misled. We must take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the credibility and stability of the financial community remain intact in the future. As well, we ought to take steps to ensure that innocent depositors who have faith in these institutions are not victims of some unscrupulous people in the business.

Obviously there is a need to ensure that consumers are aware if their hard-earned money is insured or not when placed in financial institutions. This motion seeks to address that problem in what I believe is a straightforward and easy to understand manner.

I might add in closing that this is simply one initiative. The intent of this initiative is not to suggest that this is the only way of dealing with the problem. There may be other ways of dealing with it. There may even be other better ways of dealing with it. However, the motion provides a vehicle to generate discussion, not only here in the House of Commons but later in the finance committee. We should let the people on the finance committee who have expertise and a sincere interest in these matters explore various alternatives, this being only one of them.

It is unfortunate that this motion has been made necessary by recent developments in the financial community. As responsible parliamentarians, we must take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the collapse of a financial institution does not occur in the future and, in a time and era of increased competition as a result of financial deregulation, that innocent and naive investors are protected as much as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Madam Speaker, thank you for allowing me to take the floor on this important issue.

[English]

I was a member of the finance committee along with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) when we heard some sad horror stories about companies that did not advertise on their letterheads that they were not insured and also about some ambiguous letterheads which might have advertised the companies involved as being insured.

Questions about the financial system have been raised in the House many times in the last few years. We are well aware of some of the dimensions of the problem in general and of this problem in particular. This motion raises a number of questions.

I respect the concerns raised by the Hon. Member. The motion flows from a specific request from people who pay premiums to be protected and are competing for rates of returns with people who present themselves as being insured but are not paying premiums. However, this motion does give me some difficulties.

[Translation]

Allow me to examine it for a moment, Madam Speaker. First it focuses on the question of consumer protection, and in that respect we in the Progressive Conservative Party do not have any lesson to take from any of the Opposition Parties. We have absolutely no problem with that, consumer protection must be given priority. The real question is not to know what we want to do but indeed how we should proceed.

I intend to show that the federal Government has done a lot in that field in recent years, particularly since the reform of financial institutions. However the problem with this motion is that it fails to take into full account the measures our Government has already taken.

Secondly, it raises the delicate matter of federal-provincial relations. Here again the principle does not bother us because since the advent of national reconciliation it has been amply demonstrated that it is always possible to be at one with the provinces. Federal-provincial co-operation and consultation have always been among the main concerns of our Government since 1984, a fitting substitute for the atmosphere of generalized confrontation which prevailed in the darker years before we took office.

Still we cannot dismiss the possibility that problems may crop up if we encourage federal institutions to tread where provinces do have legitimate and overriding jurisdiction, even after these consultations.

Madam Speaker, as I have already said, it is important to realize the specific measures taken by our Government with a view to solving certain problems arising from our complex financial system. I think we have developed a good approach athough I am not against some improvements if they are deemed necessary, particularly in a very specific case such as this one where there have been some abuses because the field was wide open.

Let me review the provisions in our present system so that there be no misunderstanding as to the measures already passed, which are now in fact implemented.

• (1720)

[English]

You will recall that last June two separate pieces of legislation were passed and proclaimed. Bill C-42 and Bill C-46 were stages of the implementation of the financial reform package announced in December, 1986, by the Minister of State for Finance, which was itself the result of long consultation and a great deal of work. I should just remind you as well that the Minister of State for Finance released a further piece of draft legislation last December, which took us a long way further towards completion of reform of this vital sector of the economy.

[Translation]

Even before those reforms, Madam Speaker, only the members of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation could be considered as being insured by our Corporation. For some time now it has been required that uninsured instruments bear a mention to this effect, which is perfectly consistent with the proposal put forward.

Bill C-42 reinforced those provisions in three important areas, and I quote:

> The first of those areas deals with the fact that the member institutions cannot state that they or the deposits they have are insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It is now well established that this ban applies both to institutions and to all the persons they represent.
> The second important part of the provisions in Bill C-42 deals with a provision which was already in the regulations and which was added to the Act itself, namely the requirement that the institutions which accept deposits not insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation indicate it clearly and distinctly in writing in the deposit contract.
> The third element is a new requirement which makes it an obligation for financial institutions seeking investment funds on behalf of their own security subsidiaries, or other institutions which are not members of the CDIC to expressly notify their depositors that these corporations or subsidiaries are not members of the CIDC and that the funds thus invested are not insured by the CDIC. This is quite clear and in every way consistent with the motion which is now before us.

I have already mentioned that the Government will review as soon as possible the other legislation for the purpose of completing the reform of the financial sector. For instance, these proposals will increase the internal powers of the federal financial institutions and will make it possible for them to extend and diversify their financial services to their customers who, in this case, are consumers of financial goods who must be protected as a priority, as I mentioned earlier.

More specifically, these financial institutions will be authorized to make agreements with other networks therefore we believe that the Canadian public will have a greater access to financial services under more favourable conditions and with increased availability. On the other hand, the diversification of the services offered by financial institutions should make it possible for them to meet more easily the challenge resulting from increased competition abroad as well as from foreign institutions now operating in Canada.

Clearly, this new situation raises a number of questions concerning the paramount need to protect our Canadian consumers. For instance, deposit services might be only one of several products offered by a group of interrelated financial institutions which are not all members of the CIDC, some of them coming under the jurisdiction of provincial regulatory institutions. Hence the ambiguity of who is who and who covers what.

The Bill dealing with trust and loan companies takes these matters into account and authorizes the Governor in Council to establish regulations determining the conditions under which these financial institutions can operate in the areas now available to them. Similar provisions have been added to banking and insurance companies legislation.

While the situation will be more complex than before, we have already taken action to provide consumers with the protection which we find so important and essential in preparing any piece of legislation which deals with our increasingly complex financial services.

Bill C-56, the second Bill mentioned in the intervention of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), also dealt with certain aspects of this general problem. Some of its provisions will simplify the creation of annuity and compensation plans for contributors. The details have not yet been finalized, but these plans will fill the gaps which now exist as concerns quasi-deposit insurance. They will cover the annuities offered by insurance companies, in somewhat the same manner as the corporation now insures deposits.

Madam Speaker, you are indicating that my allotted time is coming to an end. I am certain that the provinces also recognize the need to co-ordinate and harmonize these operations. This is often one of the items on the agenda for meetings of Ministers responsible for financial institutions, and we should see it as our duty to promote this process further.

Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, we should not accept this motion as introduced. It does not take into account the many initiatives which have already been taken. However, I hope that we can develop the federal-provincial co-operation to which the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap aspires and that our country can continue to enjoy a financial system which protects all parties concerned, and first of all the consumers.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I think this is a very interesting motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and is deserving of further consideration. His motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

It is a very interesting and positive consumer protection measure. At the present time instruments which are covered by deposit insurance are supposed to be stamped on their back. The theory is that the well-informed consumer looks for the stamp and if it is not there does not invest. In fact, we have found recently that many people, particularly older people when they have sold their house which is perhaps their main asset, tend to believe what salesmen tell them. If salesmen tell them that something is insured, they accept that and do not look for the written proof.

The measure before us would put the onus on the financial institution to have the buyer sign a waiver saying that he or she understands that this investment is not insured, if that is the case. I think it is a very positive approach which takes into account that not all investors are knowledgeable and sophisticated. It does not seem to me that it is an enormous amount of paper work or a heavy burden to place on financial institutions.

The history of the number of institutions which have failed in recent years is, of course, very alarming. I believe we are past that for a whole variety of reasons. One reason is that we are now in the sixth year of recovery from recession. Another reason is that the powers of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions have been increased. As well, people are now much more aware of the risks involved in investment as a result of the unhappy experiences of others and the attendant publication.

Even so, as a result of the recent failure of the Principal Group, which is provincially registered, I received a lot of letters, as I am sure other Members of Parliament did, from people who had invested, believing what the salesman told them, and learning too late that their deposits were not insured. These were small investors who, in many cases, lost their life savings.

For that reason I think the Hon. Member's motion should be very seriously considered. Some of the measures that we have taken in the past few years have taken a lot of taxpayers' money, that of financial institutions, and a lot more time, effort, and money than would this simple measure which the Hon. Member is proposing.

On March 25, 1985, the Conservative Government announced its bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank of $225 million. That Bill received Royal Assent on March 29 because the House co-operated as we were facing what was then an almost unheard of situation, the risk of the failure of a Canadian bank. That $225 million was made up of contributions from banks, from two provinces, and from the Government of Canada. At the end of August, 1985, the Bank of Canada advanced over $500 million to the Northland Bank.

Bank of Canada advances to the Canadian Commercial Bank totalled $1.3 billion by this time. However, this assistance was all for nothing because on September 1, 1985, the Minister of State for financial institutions announced that the Canadian Commercial Bank would go into liquidation, and it was later followed by the Northland Bank.

At that time the Government introduced legislation to reimburse fully those depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank whose holdings exceeded the insurable limit of $60,000. However, there were some people who held instruments which were not insured at all. We have seen massive investment of public money in order to assist people who found themselves with uninsured deposits or only partially insured deposits when a financial institution failed.

The proposal of the Hon. Member would make it very clear to consumers if they are buying into something which is not insured. That, of course, would affect consumers choices. For this reason, I think this motion should be considered very carefully. The Hon. Member has suggested that this be done in association with the provinces. Clearly that is very important because some of the failures which have caused such anguish to people have in fact been of provincially registered institutions.

I will not delay this any more as I know other Members wish to speak. In spite of what the government Member who just spoke said, I think this proposal has merit and I would like to see it referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) gives me a welcome opportunity to address a number of my own concerns which I know are shared by other Members as well as by the Government. I think it is particularly appropriate to be looking at the question of consumer protection—whether by the CDIC or by other means—at a time when the process of reform of the financial sector is well under way.

We all know of the situations which have come to light over the last few years which made it clear that changes had to be made to protect the interests of consumers, depositors and others. Even though the Principal Group affair is entirely within provincial jurisdiction, it reminds us that we must always be vigilant, always concerned for the legitimate interests of the people who use our financial system.

As the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) has pointed out, and as other Members know, the Government has already undertaken a number of improvements to the CDIC regime. Bill C-42, which was proclaimed in July last year, made three specific improvements to the provisions about which the Hon. Member is most concerned. I believe it has already been pointed out that prior to the passage of this Bill the law prohibited anyone other than a member of the CDIC from representing himself as a member of the CDIC.

We have now entrenched in the legislation existing regulations which ensure that when institutions take deposits which are not insured they must indicate that requirement in writing on the contract. It seems to me that for companies within federal jurisdiction this measure goes almost as far as the Hon. Member's motion if we assume that people signing contracts read them, which surely is not an unreasonable assumption.

Bill C-42 also extended the ban on unauthorized representations of the insured status of institutions or deposits to persons acting as agents for institutions. It also requires that member institutions that solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or other non-members of the CDIC must give notice to potential investors that these funds are not insured by the CDIC.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation covers all federally regulated deposit-taking institutions and the major provincially regulated deposit-taking institutions as well. I think the state of the legislation and regulations which govern these institutions is in an acceptable state.

The motion before us draws attention to other institutions and to other types of involvement than classic deposits. These other institutions and instruments are already around. As the Government's reform of the financial sector continues to be implemented, and as the sector grows accustomed to the new opportunities it has, it will be increasingly important to pay attention to consumer protection.

It does not take a lot, for example, to see that the new networking proposals, which will undoubtedly give new opportunities to institutions and new options to their customers, will also mean that customers will need more knowledge of institutions. We have already seen new links growing between banks, which are members of the CDIC, and securities dealers, which are not. Our reforms will permit even further linkages, but they also provide for protection for customers.

I sincerely hope the legislation on trust and loan companies will be before us very soon. In the meantime, we have been assured that the remaining legislation to implement reform will follow the outlines of the draft released in December, 1987. On that basis, the Government is clearly moving effectively to deal with potential problems.

The legislation will give the Government the power to make regulations imposing terms and conditions with respect to the potentially confusing activities of member institutions which are linked to non-members, and which offer a variety of services, some of which are insured deposits and some are investments. I think it is good news, and very appropriate, that the Government is also working with the insurance industry to arrive at an acceptable way of dealing with some deposit-like instruments. In effect, we want to find a way of ensuring CDIC-like coverage for policy holders in both sectors of the industry.

I have been assured that the two plans, one for the life and health companies and one for the property and casualty companies, should be in operation by the end of 1988 or the beginning of 1989. That leads me back to a key element in any further progress, the co-operation of both the federal and the provincial Governments. The need for co-ordination is one of the most pressing issues facing the sector, I believe, once the reform package is in place. Confusion is the only result when authorities with shared jurisdictions cannot get together, and these days that is often the case.

Happily we know that under the present administration consultation and co-operation with the provinces is a very high priority. In this field, particularly, Ministers responsible for financial institutions have already spent a lot of time over a number of years looking at some of the problems faced by the sector. Over time, I believe we will reach appropriate solutions.

In closing, I want to congratulate the Government on its concern for customer protection in the financial sector. Its actions and proposals will go a long way to ensure that everyone has the proper information and can make decisions without confusion. No doubt there can be improvements. I do not know of a perfect system anywhere. However, I do not think there is the kind of urgency for further change that lies behind Motion No. 143. I believe customers are already well protected and that the Government is taking appropriate action to extend that protection even further.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I wish as well to join in the debate on Motion No. 143. As opposed to the previous speaker on the government side, I do not feel the Government has done enough to protect investors, particularly, depositors. When it comes to co-operation with the provinces, I wish as well to show that the federal Government and its agency, the CDIC, has not co-operated at all with an attempt by an inquiry in Alberta to determine exactly why Principal Trust went under.

I became quite concerned about the collapse of the groups under Principal Trust when a fair number of my constituents wrote to me expressing their concerns. Many of them were not sophisticated investors but had put their life savings, the money they had saved all of their lives, as much as $30,000 and $40,000, into these companies. They were assured over and over again that their deposits were insured. I attended a mass meeting in Regina and later on talked to people who considered themselves to be sophisticated investors. They too were fooled. They too had been given the assurance that their deposits would indeed be protected. I would like to read from a letter I received from George Mertler of Regina. It reads:

> I am 65 years of age. I have been putting my RRSPs in with them for the last 20 some years.

He is referring to the Principal Trust in Regina.

> Up to date I have about $40,000 the last few years. The sales people at Principal have talked me into investing into Associate Investors and First Investors Alberta companies. They assured me that these companies were safe as they were covered by the Alberta investment contract and assets equal to their liability placed in a Canadian chartered bank.

I could read several other letters, Madam Speaker. I have been on my feet in this House on numerous occasions. When the Government called us back in the middle of the summer I took the opportunity during Question Period to ask the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) if there would be any federal investigation. At that time I was told, no, it was not necessary because the Alberta Government had already instigated an investigation. On August 12, 1987, the Minister stated: "The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I will be meeting on this matter this week. Our response will be made known to the House very shortly". I am still waiting for their response.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs assured me on August 26, when asked when the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would complete its investigation in terms of misrepresentation, that it had indicated two or three weeks previously that it was expecting it to be done by the end of August, and that it will or will not make recommendations to the Attorney General based on that investigation. Well, we are still waiting for that Department to decide whether or not it would recommend laying criminal charges.

Last month, again, I had some indication that the Government is not co-operating, that it was not attempting to find out what really happened with the Principal Group. Despite the assurances I have received, especially from the Minister of State for Finance, that the Alberta inquiry would be a full and open public inquiry, we have found out that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is really under the control of the Government, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, had refused to co-operate with the investigation in Alberta. It had refused to turn over essential documents relating to how CDIC had ordered the trust company, for which it was providing insurance, to place some of its dubious portfolios with First Investors and Associate Investors. The Code lawyers took CDIC to court and the court in fact has determined that CDIC should turn over those records. Now, apparently, CDIC at a meeting of its directors in two weeks time will decide whether or not to appeal that decision to the Supreme Court. Talk about co-operation; talk about an open inquiry; talk about the federal Government wanting to co-operate with the provinces! Here it had an opportunity of co-operating with the provinces. In fact, it forced the inquiry that was established by the Province of Alberta to go to court. CDIC is even considering appealing the lower court's decision to the Supreme Court.

The real issue is, why has the Government not voluntarily co-operated with the Code inquiry rather that choosing to enter into this costly, lengthy, and wholly unnecessary legal battle?

I also wish to know where the Tory Alberta caucus has been on this issue. This issue has affected thousands of their constituents. They have been silent on this issue. Certainly, we have heard them roar when it comes to issues like the CBC. But in terms of pressuring their own Government to co-operate with this inquiry they have been very silent indeed. Thousands of angry Principal Group investors are asking where the federal Government is, and what is its responsibility. They want to know why the federal Government is not co-operating with the Code inquiry.

The motion that has been presented to us by my colleague, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, is a good motion. It will require, when certain financial instruments or the institution itself are not covered under the CDIC insurance, that that becomes known to the investor.

As we move into the deregulation of financial institutions, there will be more and more different types of financial instruments. Some will be covered under deposit insurance, and some will not be covered under deposit insurance. It is very important that we have the necessary legislation and regulations that will force these various financial institutions to be up front and honest with the depositors in terms of the types of insurance that those depositors will receive.

It is also very important that we in western Canada are able to develop our own financial institutions. Unfortunately, in the last year or so we have had a very bad track record. A major reason has been the type of bandits who have flourished in western Canada during a boom period. We saw it through the various major financial institutions that have gone belly up. There have been unethical practices and questionable legal practices. In fact, I suspect that the courts will eventually have to decide whether to lay criminal charges against some of the owners of Principal Trust. A certain amount of regulation is needed.

It is important to protect investors in western Canada, many of whom want to invest and deposit their money in local institutions because they want to see viable financial institutions in western Canada. In order to protect those depositors it is important that those financial institutions be forced to tell the depositors whether their deposits will be covered under insurance.

As more information comes out through the Code inquiry and we see what happened to the Principal Group, it will be sad to see the lack of co-operation that the federal Government had given to that inquiry. CDIC has not been forthcoming with the essential documents requested by this inquiry. It had to become a court fight. Even now CDIC is considering appealing that decision. The company is dead, yet CDIC is insisting on protecting the confidentiality of this defunct company. The lawyers of the inquiry have assured CDIC that they will do everything possible to retain confidentiality.

We see a Government with a sad record when it comes to financial institutions, particularly the latest one involving Principal Group. I would urge the House to accept the motion presented by my colleague this afternoon.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I wish to assure my colleague that the Government does not believe that western Canada is populated by bandits. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government has done a great deal to attempt to make western institutions viable.

Although there have been some serious problems, I am pleased to see the amalgamation of the Western and Pacific Bank with the Bank of Alberta. I am pleased to see the efforts of the Government with Alberta trust companies and the recent advance by CDIC of $290 million. I am pleased to see the efforts that were made, perhaps they were not as successful as they might have been in preserving the Bank of British Columbia, but we all rejoice in the fact that the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank group, after a great deal of persuasion and at the expense of $200 million from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, was willing to ensure that the Bank of British Columbia, its branches, the people and the service that was provided to western Canada from that organization are still in place.

To suggest that the Government has been tromping on western Canada, as the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has suggested, is just not so. He ought to know better. He ought to apologize to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Hon. Member mentioned the fact that Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was concerned about certain matters in connection with Principal Trust Company, and that it did not want to make certain disclosures. I can understand that. The nature of the work that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation does with trust companies, banks, and others right across the country, is of such a nature as to demand confidentiality. To allow the number of representations, the advances, and the type of work that is done on a day-to-day basis to be made public would indicate something that might cause runs on other financial institutions. It is important to ensure that our financial institutions have the benefit and the support that they have had from the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

May I point out to the House that through this period of bank collapses I have yet to have a person come to me as a Member of Parliament involved in the finance committee and say to me, "I thought I was guaranteed by Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Why have I not been paid?" People have been hurt who have invested in places like the teachers' co-op, who have invested in high-flying activities run by mutual salesmen licensed by the Province of Alberta in the Principal matter who should have been properly supervised. They did take people's money.

It is nonsense to suggest that by signing some type of waiver all of the problems of the world brought about by high fliers and by people who do not have a sense of trust and responsibility will be covered. That is the intent of this resolution, and it does not stand up.

I notice that you are signalling, Madam Speaker, that my time is up. I would like to continue my remarks later.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a privilege and an honour to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, a petition from a number of western Canadians who are very concerned that the federal Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States, which they believe, of course, would challenge Canadian sovereignty.

They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively. As well, it effectively removes Canada's ability to develop its energy resources in the best interest of Canadians.

Therefore, they ask the Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada an opportunity either to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present petitions on behalf of residents of the Ottawa area—the City of Ottawa, Kanata, and other parts of the capital area. They protest, with regard to the trade deal negotiated with the United States, that the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

This is in a context in which the agreement fails to achieve the secure access that the Government said was the key objective and ends up threatening the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

These petitioners from the Ottawa area call upon the House of Commons to dissolve to give the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject, as they expect, this agreement with the United States in a general election.

• (1110)

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE GOVERNMENT ACTION ON SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition on behalf of the residents from Kingston, Ontario, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Irishtown, Newfoundland and Vancouver, B.C.

These petitioners announced that more than 100,000 Canadians were homeless last year, that an increasing number of young people, women and entire families are without roofs over their heads that the number of affordable housing is constantly dwindling and that the Government has not yet introduced any new measures to help the homeless.

For these reasons and for many others the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act immediately and establish the necessary measure to ensure that all Canadians live in adequate and healthy housing and also have access to some rehabilitation process in order to re-integrate into Canadian society in dignity.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 249 will be answered today.

[Text]

CIDA—MR. JEAN-PAUL RAYMOND

Question No. 249—Mr. Boudria:

Has the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) ever paid for a trip or trips to any other country for Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond or any other member or members of the Comité d'information et d'animation communautaire and, if so, for each trip, what was the (a) destination (b) purpose (c) cost per person?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has not paid for any trips outside of Canada for Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond nor for any member of the Comité d'information et d'animation communautaire.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 226 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the Question No. 226 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

The House resumed from Monday, February 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government is coming before us with Bill C-109 asking for Parliament to give the Government the authority to borrow $25 billion. We have debated this issue at this point in time for a total of four hours and forty-five minutes. That is a little less than $5 billion per hour. Frankly, when I look at the over-all thrust of government programs to date, or lack thereof, as a Canadian citizen who has been charged with the responsibility of representing my constituents, I do not think the Government has earned the right to be accorded this $25 billion.

There are many areas where the Government has not acted. Certainly one of the areas in recent times where we have seen a total lack of leadership has been in the Government's response to the Supreme Court judgment on the issue of abortion.

The federal Government instead of showing leadership on a very difficult issue has passed the problem to the provinces so that both the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have allowed a chaotic situation to reign across the country because they do not have the political courage to bring to the House of Commons some legislation to deal with this extremely sensitive issue for Canadians. That is one area where the Government is getting an F in its report card but there are many other areas.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) just pointed out the situation of the homeless. We have come out of the year of the homeless and what response have we had from the federal Government to deal with the killing issue for Canadians? Absolutely none. If anything, we have seen the Government divest itself of responsibility in the same way that it did with the Supreme Court judgment, namely, it passed it off to the provinces. We now have a situation where social housing in Canada is no longer under the leadership of the federal Government, but is passed off to the provinces. In fact, the only area where the federal Government has maintained sole jurisdiction has been in the area of co-operative and native housing where no kudos need to be given. This is another area where we have a total lack of leadership.

We heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) most recently lauding the fact that Canada is deemed to be the country among the OECD nations which has the largest growing economy for fiscal year 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Ms. Copps: Government Members are applauding. But what they fail to recognize is that at the same time we have these wonderful statistics coming from the mouth of the Minister of Finance, one in five Canadian children is living in poverty. In fact, we have a situation where thousands upon thousands of children are going to school hungry, and do not have homes. What kind of response have we had from this Government?

Under tax reform, the Government put one million poor people on the tax rolls for the first time in Canadian history—on the tax rolls, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Finance through the tax measures he has introduced since 1984 has brought onto the tax rolls one million people who were never paying taxes before. Now the Minister comes out with tax reform. He actually has the nerve to stand up in the House and beat his breast, saying he has taken 850,000 off the tax rolls. What he does not tell Canadians is that he and his Government were in a position to put one million new people on the tax rolls.

An Hon. Member: What about all the new jobs that people have?

Ms. Copps: Now there are 850,000 people taken off the tax rolls. That is Tory tax reform. Take from the poor and hand out to the rich.

In our Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, we tried to have the issue of child poverty addressed as a priority. In fact, the child poverty action group implored us to do so. The Canadian Council on Social Development and the National Council on Welfare asked us to bring forward this issue as a priority issue. Instead, the committee on health and welfare has chosen to study mechanisms for financing health care, including trips to the United Kingdom, Sweden, the Netherlands and I think Germany. We are taking a world tour to study health care when we should be looking at the question of Canadian children who are going to school hungry and are without roofs over their heads. In 1988 in an economy as vibrant as the Canadian economy the situation is a national disgrace and a national tragedy. How does the Government expect us to pass a blank cheque for $25 billion when it does not have the heart to care about the children in our country who are going hungry?

When the Minister of Finance is asked questions in the House about what he is doing with social policy, he just parrots OECD statistics, which do not mean a lot when you do not have bread on the table or a roof over your head.

I would like to spend a moment dealing with a much more personal issue to me. Over the years we hear many difficult and sad stories, we hear many stories that would break your heart. I had the occasion about two months ago to hear directly from a woman who did not live in my riding. She lived in a neighbouring community but had not gotten a response from her local M.P. so came to see me. She came because her son who was 17 years of age, a model student, a model volunteer, the kind of son any parent would love to have, had died. He had died after eating an apple turnover at an Arby's restaurant. The reason he died is that apple turnovers, unbeknownst to the young man, contained ground up hazel nuts, nuts so small they cannot be seen by the human eye. This young man had eaten apple turnovers at other restaurants. He had eaten them at McDonald's and at Harvey's. He assumed that an apple turnover is what it says, an apple turnover. He did not think an apple turnover was an apple and a nut turnover. He knew he had an allergy. As soon as he ate this apple turnover he started to have a reaction. He had been told by his physician that if he ever underwent an attack, which in the medical jargon is called a reaction of anaphylactic shock, that he would have time to get to the hospital. His mother told me this story. He jumped on his bicycle and pedalled home. He got in the front door and was barely speaking at that point. He was choking and losing consciousness. He asked his father for help. His mother told me that she did not even have time to say goodbye to her son because he was dead before she even had a chance to wake up. She told me that she could sue the company involved, but she does not want to do that because to sue the company will not bring her son Christian back. She said that she would like the Government to do something to prevent this kind of tragedy from happening to another young person.

This occurred in December. In my naivety, I believed that there are many issues that one comes across in political life, some of which are partisan and some of which are not. I felt that this was not a partisan issue. I felt that this was an issue with which any parent could identify. Unfortunately, when the food and drug regulations were brought in this issue was omitted. It is not a sin of commission but of omission.

In the 1960s when food and drug regulations were brought in, the Government felt that when people went to grocery stores, they should be able to know what they were eating. They should be able to pick up a can of soup and read the ingredients on the label. We know that now, in 1988, the Canadian appetite for food is changing rapidly. We know that many Canadians eat out more often than they eat in their own homes. Why have the food and drug regulations not kept pace with the times? Why have the food and drug regulations not reflected the fact that most people do not always cook their meals at home? Many people are often forced to eat on the run, and it is not practical in 1988 to tell a person with an allergy that the only way to deal with that allergy is to eat at home.

I thought that I would speak to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) privately and tell him that there is obviously a loophole in the law. As I did more investigation, and I had some tremendous help, support and information from the Canadian Allergy Information Association and the president of that association, Mrs. Susan Daglish, I became aware of the fact that approximately one person in Canada dies every month as a result of an allergic reaction. We do not know how many more end up in hospital or how many more have unreported seizures, because that type of data is not collected.

I do know that I told the Minister that there seems to be a loophole in the law. I said that if we could get an agreement, perhaps changes could be brought in. I did not want to make this a political issue. I would rather have the Minister bring forward amendments to the Food and Drugs Act which would include labelling of fast foods, as a start. I recognized that this would not be an easy solution or a quick-fix. It would not save every life, because in some cases there are other impinging factors. However, it seemed to me to be a reasonable request.

In this day and age when companies are spending thousands and in some cases probably millions of dollars on fancy packaging and gimmicks to catch the eye of the consumer, at the very least Canadian consumers should have the right to know what it is they are eating. When Canadians go out to get an apple turnover or a hamburger, whether it is called a Whopper, a Big Mac or whatever, it would be nice for them to know what they are eating. Since that right was accorded to us for groceries back in the 1960s, and we know that today fast food is much more prevalent, why can we not have the same right when we go out to eat in restaurants?

I was a little naive. When I raised the matter with the Minister, he said he would look into it. I did not hear anything further for a month or so, so I decided, in order to stimulate the discussion, that I would bring forward a resolution. In fact, I raised the issue with the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. I must say that the response of the Chairman, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), who has a medical background himself, was most encouraging.

Conservative members of the committee agreed with me that something should be done about food labelling and, in fact, they summoned the Minister to come before the committee to explain why there is no requirement for labelling of fast food at the moment. What we heard was a litany of excuses longer than the menus at most fast-food restaurants. The Minister said he could not do it because some restaurants sell hamburgers and hot dogs in the same packages and, God forbid, some restaurants may use peanut oil when cooking. It was a response from a Minister who had made up his mind that he would not go ahead with this and who then needed to summon all his arguments as to why he could not. It was not the response of a Minister who should be showing leadership and telling his Department that he wants this done and showing the vehicle to carry it out.

No one is suggesting that if we legislated labelling all of the problems would be solved tomorrow and all the labelling would be proper as of tomorrow. Obviously that is why we have regulations. That is why we permit the Government, in its wisdom, to come forward with Governor in Council decisions relating to issues like labelling. There may be exceptional cases or anomalies that cannot be encompassed in the legislation. That is why we tell the Minister that he has the discretion to come forward with a package which will meet the basic need of Canadians to know what they eat and still take into consideration the fact that at some point there may be matters that are not covered by the legislation.

What I saw was a Minister who was simply prepared to come before the committee to give us a bunch of excuses and to even go so far as to blame the families of the victims, to blame people who died because there is no labelling on fast foods or restaurant foods; the victim did not know that in the case of an Arby's turnover, for example, there are hazelnuts ground up so fine that the eye cannot see them.

The Minister even had the audacity to suggest that people who have severe allergic reactions should consider not eating out. In this day and age the Minister should not be giving reasons and excuses, he should be coming forward with legislation to deal with the problem.

Certainly the members of the Health and Welfare Committee did agree that we should move with legislation on this. I am very sorry that instead of accepting the view of all the members of that committee, including the chairman who has a medical background, the Minister was merely there to provide excuses. Now he along with the rest of his Government is asking for $25 billion to carry out the programs of Government. He is asking for the authority to borrow money to permit the Government to carry on with its other functions. I say that in order for the Government to be accorded borrowing authority, it has to display some sense of responsibility.

In the case of the fast-food labelling issue, the Minister has not displayed responsibility, caring and concern for Canadians, but merely a shallow, knee-jerk response, a litany of excuses. Frankly, it was something that I did not expect, even from that Minister.

The proof is in the pudding. I received some information in a phone call this morning. I have not corroborated it totally, so I am passing it along only for information and edification. I heard that at least two major retail outlets in the fast-food business have now decided themselves that they intend to label their foods. As I understand it, they are moving not to label foods item by item but to label foods which have an allergic potential, and certainly that could be expanded.

How can we accept the excuses of the Minister of Health who as late as last week said that this could not be done, when the fast-food chains themselves are now moving in that direction? The Minister of National Health and Welfare is not supposed to be a spokesman for what cannot be done for the health of Canadians, but a spokesman for what can and should be done.

Surely it is not unreasonable in 1988 to suggest that when you go into a restaurant you should have the right to know what you are eating just as you do when you cook a meal in your own home. It is shameful that these major hamburger chains have found the wherewithal to act when, last week, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said it could not be done. It could not be done because he did not want it to be done.

In his litany of excuses he kept referring to the fact that, oh, there were two deaths? Why should we worry about that? It is not just one or two deaths. He said some people are seeking a quick fix. No doubt he was referring to me because I raised it by way of resolution and asked the committee to deal with it. He said it is too bad a couple of people have died but let us look at consumer responsibility. Yet the more you delve into this issue, the more you realize people are dying in a way which is completely preventable.

I read into the record the case of a man who died at a New Year's Eve party, I believe, in New Brunswick; the case of a Chatham couple whose daughter died as a result of an allergic reaction; there are cases in Quebec and across the country. Yet the Minister was more interested in a knee-jerk reaction, in protecting his own political backside than he was in actually dealing with the issue, putting the health of Canadians first and foremost, and giving them a chance to determine that what they eat is not going to kill them.

Is it such an unreasonable request to have the Minister take up his responsibility and inform Canadians that what they are eating is not going to kill them? That seems to me to be a primary responsibility of the Minister. If he is not there to prevent people from dying, what is he there for? He is there for excuses. He is there to find reasons why not.

I believe the issue of food labelling has the support not only of Members on this side of the House but the support, spoken and unspoken, of many members on the government side. I suggest to the Government, and the Minister in particular, that if they want the Opposition to approve the spending of $25 billion of taxpayers' money on various programs, then they should start dealing with programs not currently available.

One program that I would insist the Government do its most to introduce in this session deals with the whole question of food labelling. It is not enough for the Minister to ask why. It is time for him to say why not, and when and where and how, and to get on with it and start taking his responsibilities seriously. We intend to continue to press the issue both in committee and in the House. I believe it has all-Party support and I will certainly be continuing to press the Government, in the context of Bill C-109 as well as any other government Bill, to deal with the health of Canadians which it is not at the moment.

Mr. Brightwell: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to comment on the speech we just heard from the Hon. Member. I will not ask her a question but I would not be surprised if she wishes to comment afterwards.

I noted her comments about food labelling and I am sure everyone wishes that we could clearly state what is in the food people eat in a restaurant. However, I do not think she has outlined the difficulties. As a government Member I would like to see something done if it is practical to do it. I was also pleased that the Hon. Member did not use this issue to try and destroy an industry, for partisan political purposes, like she did in the mussels affair in the fall of last year.

The primary reason I stood up to comment concerns the record of this Government. Some 1.1 million more people are working under this Government than under the previous Government. Some 85 per cent of those are working full-time compared to 85 per cent part-time under previous Governments. Some 500,000 fewer people are living below the poverty line. A lot of those people are children. That is a tremendous record. Some 800,000 people have been taken off the tax rolls. The child tax credit has been increased and is being paid at a time most advantageous to the parents, just before Christmas. Because interest rates have gone down, so have housing costs.

Surely the Hon. Member considers this a fantastic record compared to that of the Government formed by the Liberal Party to which she belongs?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I could point out that over the 20-year history of Liberal Governments in Canada the average unemployment rate was 5.2 per cent, still far too high but a far cry from what we have at the moment. I do not think the Hon. Member should be bragging about current unemployment levels.

However, I would like to most strenuously object to the statement concerning my role as opposition health critic in relation to the poisoned mussels. It was the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, in a completely inept but opportune way, issued an over-all health warning for all shellfish without even knowing the difference between a bottom feeder and a crustacean. He completely misread and misunderstood his own portfolio. This led to a tremendous decrease in the sale of seafoods of all kinds. Frankly, if I had been sitting in his chair I never would have issued such a warning. It was completely without any basis and displayed his ignorance of the seafood problem.

The point I would most like to stress is that the Hon. Member has said he would like to see fast-food labelling. When you are the Minister undoubtedly you have to look at the difficulties you are going to encounter in labelling fast-food packaging. The whole point of my 20-minute speech was to say that it is not enough to say these are all the reasons why we cannot do it. When you are a Minister you say, department, I would like to have labelling of fast-foods and I want a report on my desk within the next two weeks to tell me how that can be accomplished. That is why we have regulations and Governor-in-Council decisions.

There may be some areas where it is not workable. We are all reasonable people. We are going to sit down and look at those areas. However, you start not from the premise of what cannot be done but what can be done and go from there to bring forward labelling regulations. We are looking at it right now with respect to drug labelling.

I must give credit to a Private Member on the government side, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin), who introduced legislation governing the labelling of drugs. Now the Government is going to move in that direction. The Government has tabled its intentions and is now seeking responses from consumers and the industry. The whole process may take a year. No one is suggesting it is going to be done overnight. However, the Government is saying it is going to find out how it can be done.

On food labelling, the Minister comes before the committee and says we cannot do it and here are the reasons why. He does not say we can do it. What I am suggesting, and hopefully my friend who sat on that committee on an interim basis, and I am not sure if he is going to remain as a permanent member, and his colleagues will prevail upon the Minister to bring in some substantive legislation and indicate his intention to move in that direction. He should say they are prepared to look at working out all the details.

Perhaps all the packaging cannot be labelled in as complete a way as I would like, but let us start by establishing our bottom line, seeing how we are going to get to it as opposed to throwing up our hands and saying it is not possible because someone from the Opposition raised it and I am not going to have a knee-jerk reaction just because a couple of people died. That is what I object to and that is why I am not going to support this Bill.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the thing which strikes me about this issue of allergies, fast-foods, and the tragic deaths which have resulted therefrom is that it should be possible to stand up in this Parliament and raise a very important health issue without being attacked for trying to undermine an industry. Obviously every Party in this House is concerned about employment. Some of us believe that we have more effective policies for achieving those objectives, but surely the principle is that people have a right to know what they are eating, particularly when dealing with large fast-food corporations such as McDonald's, Harvey's, and other corporations which make a profit from food which many nutritionists will tell us has very little nutritional value.

Since these corporations are making a profit surely they could live within some community standards. The purpose of this place is to identify priorities. When there are deaths in the community it is the responsibility of this place to respond and take some action. We will figure out the details and determine what is possible and what is not possible, but we start with that principle. I think it is a mistake for back bench Conservatives to get up and simply defend the record of the Government.

My colleague has said that he is in favour of action in this area. Let him follow the example of some of his colleagues who have recently objected to government policy in a public way. Let him show some leadership. This is a crucial issue which involves people's lives and those corporations can make adjustments.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am glad the Member raised the issue of corporations because, as I said, I received word this morning that at least two major chains are moving in that direction. It is ironic that even the major corporations are prepared to move when the Government said it cannot be done. Obviously it can be done and it is up to the Minister to show some leadership. That is my intention in bringing the issue to the fore. I hope that other government Members who do support the legislation will put pressure on the Minister so that he will finally at least follow the lead that has already been established by some major fast-food chains.

Mrs. Killens: Madam Speaker, I used to have a lot of respect for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I am very disappointed and I am going to read the record of the debate they had last week in committee.

I would like to add my own personal experience. I have a 25-year old son who is allergic to nuts. He is married. I am in Ottawa most of the time but my children have the key to the house. He came to the house alone—my husband was not there—and he went for the cookies. He ate about six or eight cookies. It was his mistake, it has nothing to do with going to a public place to eat. It was in my house. He should have been careful but the reaction set in. His face gets all swollen, his vocal cords tighten up and he can hardly speak.

He dialed the phone number of my daughter who is married and has a baby son. She was alone at home but understood that he was in trouble and that she had to do something quickly. She told him to crawl to the door and open it, that she would phone the neighbour to go and take him to the hospital. She did not want to dress her child in order to take him to the hospital. He was taken to the hospital and, luckily, survived.

I was so touched by the story of my colleague, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), and I was so disappointed by the Minister's stand in committee last week. A strong Minister gives orders to his functionaries. In this case the Minister is being very weak. What does the Member for Hamilton East intend to do from now on in order to help people like my son?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, we are planning to continue the investigation in committee. We have made arrangements to hear from the Canadian Food Services Association and also from the Canadian Allergy Information Association. We are planning to pursue it and hopefully we can finally get the Minister on side.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, the borrowing authority which the Government is seeking today for $25.3 billion raises the fundamental question of what the Government has done, what its performance has been. This question is raised by the simple fact that it is the prerogative of Parliament to approve monetary authority, spending authority, for the Government. The basis of parliamentary democracy is that the executive, the Crown, has to come before the people's representatives, the Commons, to ask for authority to spend money. The question raised by this borrowing authority is what is the record of the Government, what has it done, what have its policies been, and has it faced the issues of the day.

While it is often a mistake to respond to the remarks of a previous speaker and digress from your own prepared notes or the thoughts you had planned to bring to debate, today is an exception. The issue raised by my colleague with regard to the labelling of fast-foods in order that people who have allergies know what they are eating is an issue of the day which cuts to the core of the issue of borrowing authority, that is, the accountability of the Government to the people's representatives.

Over the last few weeks it has come to public attention that a person can go to a fast-food restaurant, eat food, and die as a result without having had any warning of this possible consequence. This has been broadcast by the media, people have approached their Members of Parliament, and the Commons has begun to speak. It is calling the executives to account, asking what it has done.

This priority requires action now. That it has emerged in the public spotlight only in the last few weeks is no excuse for inaction. Just because we call upon the Government to act speedily does not mean the action we are calling for is an ignorant, knee-jerk response to an onslaught of media attention. In fact, this is democracy at its best. The media has made an issue known and the Commons is bringing the issue forward and demanding that the executive take action rather than find excuses and be stuck in a morass of inaction.

I wanted to take the opportunity at the beginning of my remarks on this borrowing authority to echo the comments of my colleagues who said that it is time for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to ensure the labelling of food in fast-food restaurants as a priority and for him to tell his civil servants to bring forth a plan of action. He must put aside his behaviour which until now has been stalling, excuses, and responding to an industry lobby rather than to the needs of individual Canadians, the needs of young people who, because of the allergies from which they suffer, are playing Russian roulette with their lives every time they enter a fast-food restaurant. We require the food industry to label products in stores; surely we can also require that the fast-food industry label the foods which it makes available in restaurants.

That issue goes to the core of the whole question of borrowing authority. The Government, the executive, the front-benchers, the power wielders, are coming before this humble Chamber to ask for authority to spend money. This is our opportunity to make the Government listen to the voice of the people and respond to their wishes. We must ask what it has done about the fundamental issues facing ordinary Canadians, when it asks for borrowing authority of $25 billion. For example, it has not yet acted with regard to labelling fast-foods for allergies. Hopefully, during this debate, some Members on the Government side will convince the Cabinet to take action in this area.

When we debate this Borrowing Authority Bill, we must begin by examining the Government's over-all budgetary policy. It recently introduced a rather slim Budget compared to previous budgets it introduced during its mandate. The most recent Budget outlined what the Government has done and what it would do in the future. Two of the initiatives the Government has taken in its Budget are tax increases. One of those tax increases is directly related to the Mulroney trade deal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Many Members have been told on a number of occasions, and the Hon. Member knows very well, that they should refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) either by his title or by the name of his riding.

Mr. Keeper: Of course, I will follow the direction of the Chair. I was not referring to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), however. I welcome your guidance, but I was referring to the trade deal which has become known in this country as the Mulroney trade deal. I was not really referring to the Prime Minister in his office as—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Canada and the United Stated have entered into a trade deal. It should be referred to as such. This is something that I, as the occupant of the Chair, have brought to the attention of Members on many occasions. I would appreciate Hon. Members not referring to the Prime Minister by his name but to use his title or the name of his riding, as with any other Member of the House. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I will not argue with the Chair. We still know that this trade deal is part of the Budget. The revenue to the federal Government will decrease as a result of the trade agreement because tariffs will drop. At the same time, the Government is attempting to replace that decrease in revenue by raising taxes by some $500 million in the Budget. The Prime Minister, who is even less popular than a former unmentionable prime minister, brags about the so-called great future that he believes this deal will bring to Canada. Yet we are already beginning to see the cost of the deal in the form of increased taxes that are directly linked to this trade deal orchestrated by one of this country's most unpopular prime ministers who, of course, earned that unpopularity.

While the Government seeks this borrowing authority, we must ask what it has done with the money it has taken from Canadians. When one considers the budgets brought down by the Government since it was elected, we see that it has hit the middle class families hardest in terms of tax increases. The ordinary Canadian family has suffered under the Government's increased tax, while at the same time the Government promised tax relief. It states that everyone will receive a tax break on their income tax, but it has raised taxes to such an extent while it has been in office that any relief in taxes now will still leave a net tax increase, mostly for middle class families.

The Budget promised further cuts in the deficit and further cuts in spending. If the Government plans to fulfill those promises, if it is successful after the next election, it will have to cut family allowances and old age pensions in order to meet those budgetary targets. If it is re-elected, the Government will have to take away services that Canadians have come to value. Therefore, on the basis of its budgetary policies, this Parliament cannot approve the borrowing authority request of the Government.

We cannot approve of what the Government has done. The generation before us in the 1930's fought for changes in social policy and met the challenge of identifying and addressing the key issues of the day. The CCF, and the NDP which followed it, which included people like Stanley Knowles, Tommy Douglas and the others who worked with them, helped to bring about medicare, old age pensions and other programs. The generation before us met the critical challenge of identifying these issues and succeeded in bringing about program changes that might make this a better place to live.

What has the Government done to face the key challenges of our generation? What has it done about poverty? What has it done about the environment? What has the Government done about human survival in the nuclear arms race? What has it done about employment and justice for all? Those are the key issues which must be addressed. Those are the substantive issues. It is not simply a question of what is reported on the front page of The Globe and Mail or who is being interviewed on The Journal. It is not a question of where the media focus is today or next week. Those are some fundamental and societal issues that have to be addressed in our generation if we are to achieve what our previous generation achieved, that is making Canada a better place to live.

I put that challenge to the Government. What thinking is it doing in these areas in order to bring about real change? We all know that something like one-fifth of the Canadian population suffers from functional illiteracy. They cannot read or write well enough to hold down jobs or function in our society. I have met such individuals in my riding and in the process of signing up membership in my own Party. Through the simple process of meeting people in one's constituency, asking for their support and getting them to sign up as members of one's Party, when it comes to the last step of the process, I find they cannot write their names or that all they can write are their names, or they have to put an X which has to be witnessed. There are people in our community behind the statistics which indicate there are real needs that must be met. Functional illiteracy is part of this whole picture of poverty.

I know of a specific case of a woman in my riding who has spent many years struggling with some disabilities and with the need for training. She has yet to receive this training. I brought this matter to the attention of the Canada Employment and Immigration Department. I am hoping for some progress in this area.

Another critical area that illustrates the whole question of poverty in our country is that of our homeless. There are people living in Canada who do not have a roofs over their heads. It is really quite unimaginable that we live in a country where some people do not even have a place to sleep. I saw statistics in a recent book of the numbers who are homeless in the City of New York and the City of Toronto.

The Government has come before us to ask for the authority to borrow over $25 billion. This is the House of Commons. This is the place where we hold the executive accountable. This is the place in which the king must answer for his spending. Therefore, we ask what the Government has done. The answer is in its budgetary policy. It has hit the middle-class families. What has it done about the key issues of our generation, about poverty, the environment, nuclear arms and unemployment? There is silence when that question is put. The Government should get on with meeting the essential priorities of this nation. It should act on some of the immediate priorities, including the question of allergies, fast-food outlets and the need for labelling. When the Government comes before this House it should be capable of saying it has taken action rather than responding to the question with silence.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I was interested in listening to my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), as he commented on the programs of the Government and dealt critically with its request for authority to borrow as much as $25.3 billion in the next fiscal year, 1988-89. I take it from his observations that he is very critical of the priorities of the Government. I would like to ask him if he would expand on that somewhat.

On the one hand, the Government, even with its determination to reduce the deficit, to try to limit the growth of the national debt, has to admit failure. The national debt has grown very largely. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has to accept credit for the addition of $1 billion and more to the national debt. The deficit reduction program is clearly stalled somewhere in the $30 billion range. One recognizes, of course, what the Department of Finance and the Canadian financial communities seem to have imposed on the federal Government a couple of years ago that the deficit dare not exceed $30 billion. Therefore, by hook or by crook, by every possible means, it will be kept under that. It is surely a confession of failure to have the deficit reach that amount.

On the other hand, the Government has failed in so many areas. The Hon. Member was dealing carefully with those various shortcomings, and the actions that the people need to be taken, which have not been taken. I wonder if the Hon. Member would take up this topic of failure of the Government, on its own assumptions, and the creative possibilities of meeting the needs of Canadians, using the borrowing power of the Government in that sense and perhaps finding $25 million quite acceptable, but doing it in a context in which we could get the country back to full employment, being able at full employment to balance the budget and reduce the deficit about which the Government is so worried. To achieve the prosperity and well-being of the Canadian people has always been our concern as New Democrats, even in the earlier days of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, and to fulfil the vision that moved our founders who came to public life with the determination of the social gospel.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the interesting thing about the whole question of deficits and borrowing, more particularly about deficits, is that while parties of the Conservative persuasion, whether in Canada, the United States or in other countries, tend to talk about spending less, parties of the Social Democratic persuasion such as mine tend to talk about the worth-while expenditures which need to be made. But the thing that strikes me most of all is that even when a Government of the Conservative persuasion takes power, spending does not seem to go down. It spends for different things. Different people get tax breaks and different people get the benefit of the public treasury.

I think right now of the Government's policy of tax reform in its last budget in which it continued its pattern of increasing taxes on the ordinary Canadian family. At the same time it continues the policy of failing to tax large corporations which are making hundreds of millions of dollars in profits. In other words, corporations which make a profit pay no taxes as a direct government policy. At the same time the Government raises the taxes on middle-class Canadian families. When push comes to shove, we know that when a Government comes into office and tells us it will not waste money, it will not spend unwisely, that it will be frugal, what it in fact does is simply shift around the spending.

We can look at the American example. President Ronald Reagan cut deeply into social programs and expanded the military budget. He ballooned the military budget. I must say it is sad that the Canadian Government is starting to reflect that same set of priorities in which it, with its most recent Budget and expenditure announcements, is expanding the military budget at the same time as it continues to hold social programs under threat. When it comes to spending and deficits, it is not a question of spending or not spending, it is a question of where the spending is and what are the priorities.

Therefore I ask the question, what has the Government done to address the critical and key issues that face our generation, the questions of poverty, homelessness, and functional illiteracy? What is happening with regard to employment for all? There are one million people in this country looking for work who can find no work. There is still a differential between what men are paid and what women are paid. Native people in this country suffer from extremely high levels of unemployment. On Indian reserves there is something like 80 per cent unemployment. If that existed for white, European ancestry Canadians we would have a revolution in this country. Why do we tolerate those types of injustice? Why has the Government taken no significant action in those areas?

What about visible minorities in terms of employment? There are ethnic people who come here with talents, abilities, skills and qualifications who are not recognized and who must be recognized. There are people from other countries who are trained as doctors, nurses, architects, and engineers whose qualifications are recognized in the United States but are not recognized here. What about a little justice. What about a little action. If it takes a little expenditure, why do we not do it in this area instead of forgiving the taxes of those 60,000 Canadian corporations that have profits of hundreds of millions of dollars and pay no tax. When it comes to deficits, when it comes to borrowing, it is a question of where is the Government spending the money and what are its priorities.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the request by the federal Government for authority from the House of Commons to borrow $25 billion. It gives me an opportunity to address and focus on the Government's fiscal arrangements and plans following on the heels of the most recent Budget.

Many things have been said about the Budget by many commentators. I have the honour of representing the riding of York West in this Chamber. In my opinion, the recent Budget is mostly about taxes and missed opportunities; taxes, which come after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) very clearly stated during and immediately after the last federal election that they would not impose tax increases on Canadian citizens; missed opportunities, because yet again it was another window of opportunity to redress some of the unfair measures experienced by Canadians. A Budget should be an attempt to redress, balance, and ensure that there is equity and fairness in the system for all Canadians regardless of who they are, what they make, or where they live.

It would be incorrect to focus on one Budget at the exclusion of the other Budgets that have been presented by the Government. Those Budgets should be taken together and addressed as a collective package that signals a direction in which the Government wants to take the country. However, this is primarily a Budget about increased taxes which runs contrary to the commitments that the Government and its leader so clearly posed to the Canadian electorate.

In spite of what the Minister of Finance states, there are more tax increases in 1988 than indicated in the Budget. First, previous Budgets have considerably increased taxes. Second, the Government has built in tax increases. The tax system through tax brackets, family allowance, and child tax credits has been partially de-indexed, so those are hidden increases. Third, tax reform has also introduced new tax increases for 1988. There has been a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls for a value of close to $900 million. There has been a 12 per cent tax on wallpaper, paint, and related products for a value of close to $60 million. There has also been the excise tax on gasoline.

Since the Conservative Party took office in September, 1984 the excise tax on gasoline has been increased by 5 cents a litre or 23 cents a gallon. Think of that, 23 cents a gallon, Madam Speaker. Some time back Canadians made a very clear determination about a previous Tory administration that wanted to increase that tax by 18 cents. That 23 cents a gallon is made up of the following increases. In September, 1985 there was an increase of 2 cents a litre; a further 1 cent increase in January, 1987; another 1 cent increase in February, 1987; and with the latest Budget there will be another 1 cent per litre increase in April of this year.

Another statistic of which we must be cognizant is that since the Conservative Party came to power in 1984 the tax paid by individuals has increased by 68 per cent. If one translates that into a dollar value it is $29.3 billion. In comparison, taxes paid by corporations only increased by 28 per cent or $2.6 billion. On top of that, if that is not enough of an imbalance, there are 60,000 profitable corporations in our communities that do not pay taxes, even after the much heralded tax reform package of the Government.

The impact of the inequities of this tax distribution will be painfully experienced by average families across the nation. For a family of four, comprising two adults and two children, whose income is $32,000, the tax increases brought about by the cumulative effect of previous Budgets aggravated by this Budget will amount to $1,200 per family, even after the tax reform announcements by the Minister of Finance.

What does that mean in real terms for the average family? I did an analysis up to the 1987 Budget which was aggravated by the numbers presented by the Minister a few short weeks ago. After the 1987 Budget the cumulative effect on a family earning $15,000 was to increase the share of their taxes by close to 70 per cent compared to 1984. In an income bracket of $30,000 there was an increase of 17 per cent. For a $50,000 wage earner there was an increase of 9.5 per cent. A person who earned over $100,000 had an increase of 3.8 per cent. On the one hand there is a staggering 70 per cent increase on a family least able to afford any increases, and on the other side of the equation there is not even a 4 per cent increase for a $100,000 wage earner.

When one looks at the tax system, the tax increases, and the disproportionate amounts that Canadians have to pay on their salaries, those increases have to be described as inequitable and unfair. As our Leader pointed out in his address on the Budget, one could discuss the entire Budget and the Government by talking about two different types of Canada and two different types of Canadians. We have fiscal measures which impose disproportionate increases on those individuals earning from $15,000 to $20,000 per year. When we see families earning hundreds of thousands of dollars a year paying very little increase and corporations not paying a cent, we must begin to ask ourselves what type of country we are trying to build.

People are coming to me in my constituency with the everyday problem of trying to make ends meet at the end of the month. Working husbands and wives with families who are trying to carry their mortgages, educate, feed, and clothe their children are all too often faced with a desperate situation at the end of the month. They are beginning to say that those people who consider themselves to be part of the middle class segment of Canadian society are finding it more difficult to stay within that middle class.

It seems that the growing disparity, which is aggravated by Budgets, is beginning to erode the middle class segment of society. We have individuals who once considered themselves to be in the middle class of society falling either on the side of the "haves" or unfortunately and regrettably on the side of the "have-nots". That is the gulf of disparity between the two Canadas upon which the Government and Parliament should focus. That is the gulf of disparity which is the result of statistics that can be quoted to prove any point. We must try to bridge that growing disparity rather than fuel or increase it.

If we look at a number of socio-economic problems in society, we can draw a link to the impact of fiscal measures and Budgets on Canadians. Here we are in 1988 in a very prosperous, fortunate, and progressive country like Canada. However, have we ever asked ourselves, when we visit Vancouver, Toronto, or Montreal, which are among the more prosperous centres in our country, why the line-ups at the food banks and soup kitchens are getting longer? Why is it that churches in some of those cities are collecting and distributing food on Saturdays and Sundays for those who cannot provide for themselves? Line-ups such as these were not even seen at the height of the depression many years ago or even when we were in the crisis of war. However, these line-ups not only exist in 1988 but they are getting longer.

Food banks in Metropolitan Toronto are getting busier. For example, the North York Harvest Food Bank in my riding is continuing to mobilize its citizens to collect food for those who cannot provide for themselves. Many people in my working class-middle class riding of York West cannot believe that the problem exists. Perhaps it is more of a hidden problem and this is why the food bank has trouble trying to mobilize Canadians to help their fellow man.

We have tried to help the North York Harvest Food Bank by having Christmas food drives, not only to increase the intake of food but to educate and mobilize the Canadian community to rally for its fellow citizens.

In terms of more collective or global imagery, what does it say for this country when we have growing line-ups? It says that something, somewhere in the system, must be incorrect. If those men, women, and children who line up for soup, sandwiches, and other groceries had an option, they would not do so. There might be some abuse here or there in terms of people who come to expect it or come to rely on these line-ups. However, the vast majority of individuals would not be there if they were able to fend and provide for themselves. I cannot think of anything more humbling or more shameful to the individual sense of pride than telling society, by the fact that they are in a line-up, that somehow they have failed to put food on the table for their families. That is a profound statement. It attacks the very sense of identity or sense of purpose of Canadian citizens.

Thank God for the churches and the non-profit organizations which have picked up the slack in trying to meet that real need. These line-ups should be a signal to the elected leadership of the country in this Parliament that something is wrong and that it must be addressed. Through fiscal management, through our Budgets, and through planning how money is spent, we can alter the status of the undignified identity of lining up in the mornings and evenings. We cannot allow it to go unnoticed.

Why is it that there are more homeless people in society today? Why is it that major centres with the greatest prosperity have the largest number of people who are homeless or do not have shelter? Once again, thank God for non-profit organizations, churches, and the various other elements in our community which have mobilized to try to come to grips with that situation. Is it not a by-product of something which is wrong in this system? Why is it that poverty is on the increase? Why is it that an increased number of single, female-led families now find themselves below the poverty line? The mother or both parents are to fend for themselves, but we do not have adequate day care facilities and their children are unattended. Does that not then become a societal problem rather than an individual, family-related difficulty which they must overcome?

What about the number of job increases which the Government likes to read out in the House of Commons every second Friday afternoon when it gets the statistics? What about the fact that the majority of those job increases are part-time jobs, low-paying jobs, or jobs which do not offer security from one Friday to the next, despite the bravado imagery of the Government saying that it has somehow succeeded in creating the types of jobs Canadians want?

What about the different regions of our country, not the Torontos, the Montreals, or the Vancouvers? What happens to the Monctons, to the Sault Ste. Maries, and to the Sudburys of the country? What happens to single industry towns that do not enjoy the same benefits as fellow citizens in other centres? Can we not begin to redress those imbalances as well?

Of course we can, if there is the political will, the political courage, and the political dignity to say that it is not a question of how much we spend or where we spend it, but a question of how we spend it, how we create Budgets, and for whom the fiscal measures are intended. Are they to widen the gap? Are they to increase the line-ups? Are they to keep the Monctons of the country Monctons rather than to have them become centres of prosperity? Are they intended to increase the number of single, female-led families now below the poverty line?

If we have the collective courage to try to redress the experiences faced by such Canadians, why do we not do it? Why is it that a family which earns $15,000 a year has an increase in its taxes by closes to 70 per cent while a family earning $100,000 has to face an increase of only 2 per cent?

All Canadians are realistic about taxes. They know that taxes are here to stay. They do not mind using the tax system to provide the goods and values that we have as a social contract in Canada. We do not mind paying our way to provide a health system, a school system, a system of civilization that many other countries do not have. I think of those countries we visit during our vacation times which have beautiful resort areas, that provide us with satisfaction for a week or two, countries where, if we go beyond the periphery of the resort area, we see how other people in this world live. When we return to Canada we give a degree of thanks for the system that we enjoy. We also realize that we have to pay for our system. I believe that the average Canadian in my riding, and in yours, Madam Speaker, is realistic about the system and the costs of maintaining our lifestyle.

Canadians are becoming frustrated and angry when they perceive, and know, that different Canadians are being asked to pay a different amount for the system. That is where disparity starts and cynicism is bred. That is where Canadians become less enchanted about Canada and the lot in which they find themselves. If people felt that the burden was shared, being carried by those who are rich, wealthy and who have worked hard to reach that position, then the inequity would be removed.

For the first time, according to our polling studies, people are beginning to classify themselves in class structures. I close by saying that is, indeed, a very dangerous signal to our elected leadership. Lord knows, we have had our differences and fights between east and west. We have had them between the anglophones, the francophones and the multicultural communities. We have tried to bridge those differences. Never have we in Canada had the struggle which other countries have had, like Great Britain, over class stratification. Yet for the first time in Canadian history, according to our polls, the reaction of Canadians is beginning to indicate that there is a greater class stratification taking place, a stratification between those who are in the have and have-not categories. This is the stratification of two types of Canada. I hope that the Government comes to realize that that gulf of disparity between those two Canadas is widening, and that it is time for the bridge to be built once again.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the speech by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). I have the pleasure of serving with him on the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism working together in that vital aspect of national life.

I was interested in the earlier part of his speech in which he spoke about the lack of fairness in the Canadian tax system. He stated some of the most important statistics, such as the reality of 60,000 profitable corporations which are not being taxed at all, along with the failure of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to tap profits which might be used very easily to reduce the deficit and the borrowing which is such a burden on Canadians.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Member from York West, who is a Liberal Member, talk about these things. He spoke about the growing disparity and the development of wealth for some few and the experience of poverty for others, but that predates 1984. The situation has certainly been getting worse and worse to such an extent that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized last year that we were developing two Canadas. He expressed alarm, although when you see what his Government has been doing you would think it was fostering a prosperous Canada, letting an undeveloped poor Canada develop and that that is the way it will be. But that predates 1984.

The tax system we are talking about, which admittedly has been made so much worse, is one that developed from the 1970s, from the time the first Trudeau Government buckled under enormous corporate pressure and abandoned the principles of the Carter Royal Commission on taxation. We had the Benson budgets in those days and changes to taxation which the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) as Finance Minister a dozen years ago and more was perpetrating at the time. These are the people who built the system.

I find it a bit contradictory that my good friend should be making this fine speech, when his leader is as responsible as anyone for the early development of this system which had really unfortunate social consequences by the late 1980s. I invite the Hon. Member's reaction to the observations on political contradictions which the Liberal Party is having to experience.

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, I took great pleasure in the fact that the Hon. Member and I used to be good friends.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Killens: Well said.

Mr. Marchi: I thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) for his observations. There is a vertical mosaic in this country, quoting Julian Porter's book, but to a certain degree I think the Hon. Member from Thunder Bay is misrepresenting what I have tried to convey to this Chamber. I am not here to make a defence, to apologize for any previous administration. I challenge the Member to go back to the days when Canada was led by a Liberal Government. We had a poll the other day which compared the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with the Government of Mr. Trudeau. The numbers painted a very interesting picture of how Canadians judged a Liberal administration compared to a Tory administration. If there are people, particularly among the New Democratic Party, who suggest that there is no difference between a Tory and a Liberal, let the numbers speak for themselves and let this philosophy of their vision of Canada as defined through budgets lay to rest those questions fueled by individuals who want to blur the picture.

Canadians came to realize, particularly after the expectations generated by this Government, the very simple and clear difference between an administration led by a Liberal Party and an administration led by a Conservative Party. Under those Liberal administrations, I challenge the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon to show me one instance when the regions were cut adrift as they are today. Show me an era when the food bank lineups were longer than they are today. Show me an era when the disparity of income tax distribution was such that a person earning $200,000 had an increase of 2 per cent while an individual earning $15,000 had to submit to a 60 to 70 per cent increase. I challenge the Hon. Member to provide me with those details.

I am not suggesting that all the ills were cured by previous administrations. We have continued Government in order to try to better the lives of individuals and to try to make society a little more progressive than it was when we found it. In those previous administrations though, there was an attempt to bridge the gulf that existed then and that is being aggravated today.

I ended my earlier remarks by dealing with the question of polling. That too is a very interesting phenomenon. When Canadians were polled about their views under previous Liberal administrations, never did it surface that there was a perception of class stratification, the perception that Canadians were being compartmentalized according to what they earned and the lifestyles they were able to enjoy. For the first time in a long time, Canadians are beginning to perceive themselves and society in terms of class stratification. We should avoid that and take the lesson of the difficulties in Great Britain.

Great Britain too is a world power and certainly a strength to be reckoned with. In Great Britain, there are very monumental problems with the perception of class stratification. We in Canada have always avoided those struggles that pit one Canadian against another, based on class.

I suggest to the Hon. Member, whose Party has not had any experience leading the country on a national level, and probably will not have that experience for a long time to come, that he also deal with the facts and ask Canadians to measure the administrations they have experienced. The Hon. Member will find the same result that this recent poll illustrated, which is that previous Liberal administrations were respected for their leadership, their integrity and their vision of things to come. They were not perceived as Governments that were bankrupt based on commitments, and bankrupt in a clear direction with which to take a progressive Canada, taking only one type of Canada forward and leaving the other behind.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I would have hesitated to rise, knowing that others might want to join the debate, but my friend—although it may be a trying friendship—has challenged me to say something about specific matters. Let me point to one general and one specific matter regarding the failings of the previous Liberal Government.

I remember very well the disappointment felt by local Governments when the Trudeau Government decided to cancel the Winter Works projects which had begun first under the Diefenbaker Government back in the 1960s. Those programs allowed local Governments to obtain federal government assistance to carry out construction projects in the wintertime. The cancellation of those programs was one of the ways regions were slighted in their development possibilities.

More specifically, I think of Thunder Bay, which is not exactly a one-industry town, though still all too dependent on transportation and resource industries in northern Ontario. That community was put by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in the same category as Metro Toronto when it came to obtaining assistance for local industrial development. It was regarded as being in the prosperous half of the country. We certainly felt cast adrift by the Liberal Government, even though we had strong representation, it would seem, from previous Members like Mr. Robert Andras who held cabinet positions in the 1970s.

I realize that I will not have the time to do my harangue on the shortcomings of successive Liberal Governments and the way in which Trudeau Governments disappointed the Canadian people. For example, the first Liberal Government of 1968 held the just society vision which so failed the Canadian public that the Liberals almost lost the 1972 election. Over the next two years it was more responsive to the Canadian people and won the 1974 election. I could go on with this record of political infamy, but I realize that I am transgressing the limits of time. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to say that much.

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is taking a great risk. He mentioned former Liberal Governments and used the example of Pierre Elliott Trudeau. I challenge the Hon. Member to compare the record of his Leader and past NDP Leaders with that of Mr. Trudeau and let Canadians judge. If he were to take me up on that exercise, I think he would see the confidence that Canadians perceived under those administrations.

It is one thing to ask Canadians to comment on a Government during the life of one administration because there are always the gives and takes, the passions of the immediate debates, that cloud the imagery. It would be very interesting to look into Canadians' perceptions of those Governments after they have come and gone.

When we go into the next election, that perception will be weighed very heavily and very carefully. Canadians will begin to compare what they have had for the last four years with the programs, policies, leadership and honesty they enjoyed before. I am very comfortable with and confident of the outcome. I hope you are too, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you will find that upon completion of the debate on Bill C-109, if a recorded division is requested, it would be deferred to 3 p.m. this day. When the question is put at 3 p.m., the division bells will be rung for 15 minutes. The Government would undertake not to call any further business and in fact, after the vote is deferred, we would call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to order made earlier this day, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred until 3 p.m.

Further to that order, with unanimous consent, we will call it one o'clock. It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 12.47 p.m., the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—CRITICISM OF CANADA'S NEGOTIATING STANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Minister of the Environment, Jim Bradley, is quoted as saying that the Prime Minister's Government has enlisted in the Ronald Reagan pollution camp by backing an American bid that will increase acid rain. Canada did not join a group of European countries at the meeting in Geneva last week which called for a 30 per cent reduction in pollution through car and truck emissions. A leading anti-pollution lobbyist yesterday repeated the attack, charging that Canada's negotiating stance is outrageous. "Canada has abandoned the moral high ground where we are one of the leading countries in support of actual emission reductions," said Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain. "The Reagan administration people will view this as overt support for their position that more research is necessary," he said.

I urge the Government to reconsider its backward position on this very important matter.

SERVICING OF NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in thirty years, the Government's revenues will exceed expenditures by nearly $3 billion, if we exclude interest charges. Our Conservative administration is able to pay its operating costs. However, since the Liberals, with the help of the Socialists, put this country into debt, we still have to borrow to pay the interest on the nearly $300 billion debt run up by the Socialists and the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, for six days Opposition speakers have been arguing against a Bill that would authorize the government to borrow the amount it needs to pay the interest on their debt. Why is a former banker like the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) against paying interest charges, Mr. Speaker? If this Bill is not passed, who will pay the Government's interest charges?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

MONOPOLY CONTROL OF AZT DRUG

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, AZT, the only drug proven to relieve suffering for AIDS victims, has come under the exclusive control of a multinational company, Burroughs Wellcome. Without owning a patent or even having any unique knowledge, Burroughs has legally ensured that no one else will be able to make or sell AZT.

After agreeing to 18 months of clinical studies in Canada, Burroughs reneged on the deal and issued the Government an ultimatum: Gouge patients almost $1,000 per month and license AZT for prescription sale or the supply will be choked off. Instead of invoking the Drug Price Review Board, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) gave in to the company by issuing a limited notice of compliance.

This company is ensuring its continued monopoly of AZT by limiting and delaying further research into its AIDS treatment. Canadians reject the notion that private profit can be equated with public responsibility when it comes to health care. The experience with Burroughs reminds us to be ever vigilant of the Government's oft stated—

U.S.S.R.—SOVIET ARMENIA—REUNIFICATION OF TERRITORY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Armenians around the world I call upon Mikhail Gorbachev to return the territory of Karabagh to Soviet Armenia. The decision to separate this territory in 1923 was an injustice. Over one million people, one-third of the population of Soviet Armenia, conducted peaceful demonstrations of solidarity over the past two weeks to demand reunification of Karabagh with Soviet Armenia, based upon the Constitution of the Soviet Union.

I call upon my Government to condemn the violence occurring in Azerbaijian against Armenian nationalists. So far over 70 Armenians have been killed in this violence. Through his policy of glasnost, Mr. Gorbachev promised an open society where human rights would be recognized. We trust glasnost will result in a just and peaceful solution for the Karabagh region.

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND ATHLETES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, like tens of thousands of other visitors to Calgary, Geills, our daughter Elizabeth, and myself were thrilled at the first rate Winter Olympics put on by a world-class city. Frank King and that tremendous throng of good natured volunteers proved that Mayor Ralph Klein was right when he said that Calgarians are dignified, polite, sophisticated, yet down-to-earth.

To watch Elizabeth Manley's joy on the greatest night of her life, to see Brian Orser's outstanding performance, to marvel at Karen Percy, Tracy Wilson and Robert McCall moved all of us.

[Translation]

Laurie Graham and Gaëtan Boucher gave new meaning to the expression "the glory of sport".

We marvelled at the performance of Finnish skier Matti Nykänen, Italian skier Alberto Tomba "La Bomba" and Dutch speed skater Yvonne van Gennip. We were delighted with the efforts of cross-country skier Pierre Harvey, luger Marie-Claude Doyon and skier Jon Servold in the Nordic Combined.

• (1405)

[English]

Hundreds of millions of television viewers were delighted by the demonstration sports as well. I cannot let pass, Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to note that your own daughter, Anna Fraser, competed so brilliantly in free-style skiing. If I may be so bold, her performance was even more spectacular and thrilling than your own in the Chair!

The warm bond which developed between the people of Okotoks, Alberta, and champion Soviet skaters epitomized what the games are all about.

From the hockey games to the closing ceremony—a magnificent spectacle—from the speedskating oval to the chinooks, from heart-tugging performances to the raising of flags, the world was treated to 16 days of great athletics and great hospitality.

To our Canadian competitors, to Mayor Ralph Klein and the people of Calgary, we say congratulations and thank you on behalf of a grateful country.

POEM BY THE BARD OF DROMORE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, a recent story by Dave Haynes of the Calgary Herald inspired the Bard of Dromore just one more time.

With a Hidy and a Howdy Calgary greeted the world,
And the great media stories were quickly unfurled,
Skyscrapers, derricks, rodeos and operas,
Horses, Mercedes, stetsons, fedoras,
Pow wows and pipe organs, cowboys and Guccis,
Mountains and torches, prayers, hootchi-kootchis,
Warm chinook winds barely melted CBC's cold,
While CTV gushed just like Calgary's black gold,
Higher, faster, stronger, richer, Lloyd Robertson stated,
The latter superlative made Ralph Klein elated,
All this and more the journalists ogled,
Olympic fever left the media boggled,
And the warm western spirit left some overwrought,
So that certain small details were off just a tot,
One case in point: Washington Post do you not know?
The proud host Calgary is not in Ontario.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

SIZE OF FUNDS ALLOTTED TO MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to protest the admission in Winnipeg the other day by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) that Manitoba is being penalized with respect to funds available for projects under the Western Diversification Fund because the Manitoba Government has seen fit not to agree and co-operate with the federal Government.

I ask Members opposite, was Manitoba supposed to be happy in the early stages of this Government about the cancellation of the VIA Rail shop and its subsequent downsizing? Were we supposed to be happy about the cancellation of the manufacturing and research technology centre? Were we supposed to be happy about the repeated attempts, now succeeding, to erode Winnipeg's role as a transportation sector in western Canada? Were we supposed to be happy about that abominable decision to award the CF-18 contract to Montreal?

Were we supposed to just lie down and be quiet about all these things? Is the Manitoba Government to give up its principles with respect to free trade and other issues on which it disagrees with the federal Government? Is this a counsel on the part of the Member for St. Boniface and the Government to a lack of integrity in the political process? Are we all supposed to suck up to the federal Government in order for our regions to be treated well? It is totally unacceptable.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—OFFER OF FREE VACATION

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, like the haunting and lonely cry of the loon over a lake in northern Saskatchewan, the NDP chants "No privatization, no deregulation, no free trade". Now we have been told that the NDP is sending its Party financial contributors to Australia and New Zealand for a fun-filled tourist adventure suffused with Labour Party politics.

I spent the past week at an international grains meeting with the Ministers of Trade of Australia and New Zealand and their officials who actively promoted their tax reform package, their success at privatizing, their success at deregulating and, of course, the many benefits of the new Australia-New Zealand Free Trade Agreement.

Imagine my surprise at hearing this. We can see it now—Canadian NDP Members going to Australia and New Zealand, timid Canadian socialists wringing their hands and then being told by reform-minded Aussies and New Zealanders just how wrong the NDP really is. That is going to be some holiday!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, since April 1987, when the Unemployment Insurance Act deprived early retirees of their vested right to draw unemployment insurance benefits, protest groups started to form.

Mr. Speaker, early retirees are upset about a measure they consider to be unfair. After contributing to the Unemployment Insurance Fund for many years, during which most of them never drew any benefits at all, they now stand to lose $15,000 in benefits because their pension fund is now considered to be a salary for the purposes of unemployment insurance.

Now that they have been deprived of their benefits, a number of early retirees are wondering about the billion-and-a-half-dollar surplus in the Unemployment Insurance Fund. They are critical of the explanation that the surplus was due to a drop in the unemployment rate. According to them, the surplus was probably due to the cuts in unemployment insurance entitlements for early retirees. They now want justice to be done.

The situation that arose as a result of the measure passed in April 1987 has made some people reluctant to take early retirement, although in many cases, it would mean giving young people a chance at their jobs.

In a system like ours, where the economy always comes down hard on young people, the Government should let early retirees keep their rights.

QUÉBEC NORTHWEST CONCLUSIONS OF REPORT

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as part of the federal Government's new approach to regional development, a consultation paper outlining a development plan for Northwest Quebec was released yesterday in Amos by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

Speaking on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister urged local leaders and their communities to read the consultation paper containing the preliminary conclusions of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion with respect to economic opportunities in Northwest Quebec.

This consultation exercise allows to a large extent for regional aspirations and is an appeal for a concerted effort by the population to strengthen the economy of Northwest Quebec during the next five years. Mr. Speaker, as was said not long ago by the Minister of State (Minister of Transport) (Mrs. Vézina), the true architect of regional development is the community itself: its miners, fishermen, farmers, business people and forestry workers who are being assisted by both levels of government through various programs within their respective jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, the button on my jacket today says: Je supporte les accréditives à 133 p. 100! (I support flow-through shares 133 per cent!).

MULTICULTURALISM

ETHNIC CULTURAL ACTIVITIES—PROVISION OF FINANCIAL RESOURCES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the failure of the federal cultural agencies to support ethnic cultural activity is a longstanding grievance in Canada's ethnocultural communities. This failure is the failure of the Canada Council, for example, to act on the multicultural policy statement of 1971.

In spite of the Prime Minister's declaration in 1971 that Canada had no official culture and that the Government of Canada would foster the various cultures, the Department of Communications remained preoccupied with the cultures of English-speaking and French-speaking Canada. Cultural activities in the other ethnocultural communities were left to the Multiculturalism Directorate of the Department of Secretary of State.

This practice of leaving the ethnocultural communities in ghettos of neglect must end. A Canadian Government committed to multiculturalism must ensure that the Canada Council and other agencies respect the policies of multiculturalism. These agencies need to be provided with the financial resources to foster a diversity of cultures.

Only by such action will we overcome the divisions of the past and realize the richness that ethnocultural diversity brings to Canada.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN—OFFER OF FREE VACATION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, a socialist supporter can go to Hawaii, New Zealand and Australia for free and spend $1,000 on trinkets and kangaroo chops while petting a koala bear if, that is, the selected entrant first correctly answers, unaided, a time limited arithmetical skill-testing question.

Note: Ordinary Canadians with ordinary intelligence need not apply. I just happen to know the question and want to warn those poor individuals who may apply. The question is: If the NDP were to govern, how long would it take to totally bankrupt Canada: (A) Ten years; (B) Five years; (C) Two years?

The answer is none of the above. It would only take the NDP less than one year to bankrupt ordinary Canadians.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO POLICE COMMISSION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday the Chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, Claire Wescott, spoke for a great many Canadians when he said:

> Life is becoming more and more bizarre. A burglar breaks into your house and gets a slap on the wrist but if a policeman enters your house without a warrant he gets into serious trouble.
> Canadians live in a society that locks up juries and lets the accused out on bail.
> We can stop prayer in schools but we cannot stop the use of pot.

The quest for individual rights is a noble cause as long as it results in improving our society and providing an opportunity for a healthier, happier and more meaningful life for all of us.

I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to take note.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

AID GIVEN TO EAST END MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after a twenty-seven-month long struggle by representatives of Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel, Vickers, by all the people of Montreal's east end, and by municipal, federal and provincial elected representatives, at the federal level only the Liberal team managed to obtain $90 million from the City of Montreal to revitalize the economy in Montreal's east end. Three cheers for that contribution and three cheers for the $500 million contributed by the Quebec Government! The money will be used mainly to modernize industries and help workers retrain for new jobs. Unfortunately, the federal Government contributed only a meager $37 million, a clear demonstration of the Conservative Government's complete lack of understanding for early retirement needs in Montreal's east end.

Mr. Speaker, just the same we won the battle, thanks to the co-operation of the people of Montreal's east end, and now, thanks to the tenacity of the Leader of the Liberal Party, the east end can start to breath easier.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

APARTHEID

REQUEST THAT CANADA SEVER TIES WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to point out how frequently the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have said that Canada would break diplomatic relations with South Africa and would impose total economic sanctions against South Africa unless there was meaningful progress in the dismantling of apartheid.

The Prime Minister and his Minister committed Canada to a full severing of relations with South Africa on September 13, 1985; October 23, 1985; June 6, 1986; September 9, 1987, and yesterday, February 29, 1988. Indeed, for two and one-half years Canadians have been told by the Government that there would be a total severing of relationships with South Africa and for two and one-half years the situation, instead of getting better, has gotten worse.

When is the Government going to carry out its commitments made by the Prime Minister of this country, both in the United Nations and in Parliament, to sever ties with South Africa now that no progress has been made in the dismantling of apartheid?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, I think, put the position very clearly yesterday when he said how much Canada deplored the deterioration of the already unacceptable situation in South Africa. I think all Canadians share the profound concern over the recent events in South Africa and we certainly take them very seriously. The situation is clearly going from bad to worse in this regard.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs hopes to return to the House as early as tomorrow and he will be reporting on his review of Canada's policy on South Africa on his early return to the House.

APPLICATION OF SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for two and a half years the Government has said it is not the right time to apply sanctions against South Africa. Once more, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how far the situation in South Africa will have to deteriorate for it to be the right time. How many more examples of this kind of action by the Government of South Africa do we need for the Government to react and impose full economic or diplomatic sanctions on South Africa?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister very clearly said yesterday, and I quote from Hansard at page 13216:

> We have retained clearly as an option the severance of all relationships with the Government of South Africa.

He also explained that once we sever relations we cease to be a player, and the view of the Government of Canada has been that we can work more effectively, maintaining diplomatic relations, to help people fight apartheid.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that the recent actions we have seen will cause all western Governments to review our policies and to examine again what would be the most effective way by which we can fight apartheid. As I have already said, and as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will report to the House on Canada's review of its policies when he returns, which could be as early as tomorrow.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister and to the Deputy Prime Minister that that is not the commitment the Prime Minister of Canada made in his speech to the United Nations where he said that Canada would break diplomatic relations, would impose total economic sanctions, if the situation did not improve in South Africa. The situation has not improved, and that was two and one-half years ago.

• (1420)

The simple fact is that all the good intentions in the world are not working. The simple fact is that we have yet to hear why Canada should not impose full sanctions against South Africa.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. If now is not the time to act, when will that time arrive?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is a very specific answer. As I have said, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns, he will report to the House.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DOWNSIZING TIMETABLE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the President and Vice-President of CN who, by the way, met with the Minister of Transport in Ottawa yesterday, have sent a letter to their headquarters in Moncton, in the Atlantic region, which states that "—we should advance every downsizing project to its earliest possible date—" because of "—the strong possibility of a late spring-early summer federal election . . . and in areas of doubt as to timing, we should proceed with the approval process—" for lay offs "—and then delay implementation if necessary".

I ask the Minister of Transport, why is the Government pushing with such heartless haste to fire and retire CN employees? Does he really believe that the people of Canada will forget about all of this before the next election is called? Why wait for spring, fire them now!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we can tell by the news that the Hon. Member is back in circulation again.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what document the Hon. Member was speaking from. It certainly was not from the President of CN. There was a message dated January 11, 1988, that was sent by a senior vice-president of operations, Mr. Fletcher. Perhaps that is what he is referring to. The hon. gentleman is a month and three-quarters behind, as he usually is. This was already leaked to the press one month and three weeks ago, so it is old news that he is bringing up and rehashing.

The hon. gentleman might be pleased to know that Mr. Fletcher is retiring in July. I do not know whether that is part of the downsizing operation. By a look at this memo, it looks to me like something that copied a precedent from the old Liberal Party files of 1980-84.

NEWFOUNDLAND—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): The discussions that the Minister had yesterday with the President of Canadian National—who, by the way, is one of the people who qualifies for the so-called performance bonus of tens of thousands of dollars that is paid by the Government up until March 31, if there are enough lay offs—did not only concern lay offs, but in the case of Newfoundland a total wipe out.

I ask the Minister of Transport, why is the Government intent on making Newfoundland the only province of Canada without a railway? Does he really believe that the people of Newfoundland will forget about the hundreds of jobs that will be lost when the railway is closed by the Government, and that they believe his crazy statements about locating nuclear powered submarines in St. John's harbour and creating hundreds of jobs? We are Newfs, not nukes.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see that the hon. gentleman appears to be against increased defence expenditures in Newfoundland. The Government is spending $93 million to expand the base at Goose Bay. We are doing all we can to establish a NATO tactical low-level flying base at Goose Bay. We are spending tens of millions of dollars on the North Warning System.

If I can do it, we will certainly be stationing nuclear propelled submarines in St. John's. That will mean the creation of at least 1,200 jobs.

It is interesting to see that the hon. gentleman's NDP tendencies—No Defence Programs—is what he advocates.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

DECISION MAKING—REPORTED POSITION OF PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who answers for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in the House.

The Minister will recall that in a last desperate act, last summer the Prime Minister in the context of a by-election taking place in St. John's East, which the Government lost, promised to set up a development agency in Atlantic Canada that would be administered by people in Atlantic Canada, with decisions made on the spot, with ample funding. So far not a cent has been spent.

• (1425)

Considering that the four Premiers from Atlantic Canada have now criticized the organization of this agency and have suggested that, instead of decisions being made in the region where they are supposed to be made, they are being made in Ottawa by one Dalton Camp, would the Minister of Transport comment on this in the House and explain the Government's abject failure to act in the interest of Atlantic Canadians?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as is so often the case, the hon. gentleman is full of spurious indignation.

What did the Premiers actually say, not the four Atlantic Premiers but the three Maritime Premiers? They said that they wanted to talk with the Prime Minister about how Ottawa is going to operate the new ACOA.

It so happens that Senator Murray, the Leader of the Government in the other House, and I, for example when he met with Premier Peckford, and other Ministers when he met with the other three Atlantic Ministers, have gone over in detail with these hon. Premiers how it is going to operate.

They have said that they want to harmonize its operations with their own to avoid duplication. They only want to avoid having ACOA programs overlap provincial programs, so that there will only be one delivery system.

They have not been critical of this agency. There will be no duplication. They already know that there is going to be no duplication. Wherever two programs might be duplicated, we will ensure that there is not any duplication.

There may be an argument about who delivers the programs. We want to deliver some of the programs, because we want the Government of Canada to get full credit for some of the programs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That might be at the nub of the problem, because certain Atlantic Premiers want the credit so that they—

An Hon. Member: Same old gang.

Mr. Crosbie: You see what is at issue here.

Mr. Broadbent: While the Government is making up its mind about getting credit, unemployment in Atlantic Canada remains at an unacceptably high level. That is a reality.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just said that the Atlantic Premiers have not complained. I correct him by saying that it is the Premier of Nova Scotia who has raised Mr. Dalton Camp's name and has suggested that he is calling the shots for political priority reasons instead of development reasons.

Since the Prime Minister made what was supposed to be a solemn promise in the context of a by-election in Newfoundland almost a year ago, and since not a cent has yet been spent to create the jobs that he promised, when, at last, will the Government act to deliver on what it promised?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is notoriously careless with the truth and he continues in that tradition.

In the Estimates which are before the House today, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is requesting $316 million of which $200 million is absolutely new spending to carry on new programs. The rules in connection with the programs were announced just last week.

In addition, whereas $1,070 million was spent on DRIE, WDO and ACOA type programs in 1984-85, $1,966 million is being spent in the year 1988-89, a $896 million increase.

The hon. gentleman should not keep repeating the calumnies and nonsense which his provincial leader in Newfoundland keeps repeating. Repetition will not alter the truth.

Mr. Broadbent: Notwithstanding what the Minister just said, I am sure if he will calm down he will acknowledge that not a cent has been spent out of the agency which was set up to be administered by local people in Atlantic Canada. That is the force of criticism of the Atlantic Premiers, and that is what we on this side of the House are agreeing with, whether or not the Minister likes it.

PREMIERS' REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would he now tell us when they plan to spend money from this agency which has been set up? Will he now meet the request of the four Atlantic Premiers, including Premier Peckford, who want to meet with the Prime Minister?

Will he commit the Prime Minister, in his absence, to having a meeting with these Premiers so that something, at long last, can be done about unemployment in the Minister's part of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has already done something about unemployment in that region of Canada and in every region of Canada.

For example, in my own province, where the unemployment rate was 23.8 per cent under the Liberals when they were vaingloriously kicked out of office in 1984, it was down in January to 17.4 per cent. There is improvement in the unemployment rate in every nook and cranny of Canada. The hon. gentleman should remember that. And, Mr. Speaker, he should also remember this. The report says:

• (1430)

> The Premiers were careful not to express dissatisfaction with the new federal agency, but said they only want to avoid having ACOA programs overlap provincial programs so there will be only one delivery system.

It is only the NDP that is niggling and jealous about this program which will do so much for Atlantic Canada.

RAILWAYS

CANADIAN NATIONAL—SWITCHING YARD CONTROL CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

I have here a document from the Office of the Vice-President of Operations of Canadian National, which recommends transferring the switching yard control centre from Montreal to Toronto, which would result in the loss of hundreds of jobs at the Montreal office.

When the Minister met with the President of CN, did the President mention this recommendation? If so, did the Minister of Transport say no to this recommendation, to keep the jobs in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been consulted by CN with reference to any move or proposal that will cause the loss of hundreds of jobs in Montreal.

As a matter of fact, I have taken steps with VIA Rail to ensure that it would have funding for the continuation of hundreds of jobs at the Point St. Charles workshop in Montreal. I do not know what the hon. gentleman is referring to. He would certainly have to be more specific.

By the way, 20 per cent of the whole CN workforce is located in Montreal, that is, 9,639 persons are in one city, the city of Montreal. Is the Hon. Member going to complain about that?

REQUEST FOR MINISTER TO INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Minister that we are talking about the control centre, not the CN workshops. The recommendations that were made and the decisions that are being or have already been made will have the effect of transferring all operations to the Toronto office.

This will mean the loss of 105 jobs in Montreal, but the Minister should also realize that the language of work in Quebec is French, and that a transfer to Toronto will mean a complete change of policy. This is reminiscent of the gens de l'air affair, but in this case, we are talking about les gens à terre.

I therefore want to ask the Minister whether he intends to intervene to ensure that the transfer does not take place, that Montreal will keep its control centre, and that operations in Quebec will be directed from Montreal.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one has to wonder where the hon. gentleman was and did he intervene between 1980 and 1984 when in the neighbourhood of 7,000 odd jobs disappeared in the CN organization. No, we did not hear one syllabub from the hon. gentleman opposite during those four years.

With respect to the point which the Hon. Member brings forward, I have not been consulted or asked to consent to any such move. If any such proposal comes forward, the hon. gentleman can be sure that I will see it is scrutinized very carefully and I will keep in mind his representation.

We have a board of directors and management to run Canadian National. They have to deal with the fact that life is changed and that CN's share of the market, the rail share of the market, has slipped from 60 per cent to 27 per cent since 1950.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responding for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If I understood the Minister correctly, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement in the House tomorrow regarding Canadian Government policy toward South Africa. If that is true, could the Minister confirm it.

Second, given the slap in the face to the Minister and to his colleagues in Lusaka recently, that the South African Government has administered with its recent policies, will the Minister be saying what Canada is prepared to do alone now that these recent events have happened? Will the Minister be taking the step of imposing mandatory and comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa? The time has come for that, at least.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I need some advice from you. I am not sure whether or not the Hon. Member has asked me whether the statements I have made in the House today are true. If that is the case, I would ask you to redirect him on his question.

Mr. Speaker: There is some question as to whether or not the question was appropriate. The Hon. Minister, as any other Member, can raise it immediately after Question Period. In the meantime I would ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill to place his supplementary.

POSSIBLE STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will resist commenting on the Minister's lack of comprehension of what I asked her. I will ask her a subsequent question.

When he speaks to the House tomorrow the Minister will be suggesting a Canadian proposal at the United Nations that an emergency meeting of the Security Council be called to address the question of South Africa. Is that something the Government is considering? I hope that question is not too complicated for the Minister.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that no question asked by the NDP on any aspect of foreign policy is too difficult for this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: As I said earlier in this House in response to other questions, and as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday in this House, Canada is reviewing its policy on South Africa. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will report to the House on his return to it, which could be as early as tomorrow. I suggest the Hon. Member could wait until that time to put his questions.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

NEGOTIATION OF ENERGY ACCORD WITH NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question addresses itself to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Government has promised to negotiate an energy accord with the Northwest Territories similar to the Atlantic and Western Accords. What progress has been made on this? When can we expect this accord to be finalized?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Northwest Territories. The idea of an accord is consistent with government policy. The discussions will continue, and I am sure the interest which the Hon. Member has expressed is interest that is duplicated in the North.

The Government of the Northwest Territories has consulted with the Dene, with the Inuvialiut, the TFN. They are at present awaiting further discussions. I cannot inform the Hon. Member as to a time, but I believe it is an appropriate vehicle to transfer responsibility to those Governments north of sixty.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. On October 2, 1985, his predecessor stated in the House:

> Mr. Speaker, there is a long and honoured tradition in Canada that political activity and the military do not mix, and they ought not to.

The Minister will know that the Prime Minister in a petty partisan speech yesterday flagrantly breached that time honoured tradition of the House. What does the Minister intend to do about this breach?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of criticizing the speech, and it is a free speech in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Killens: It was not in this country.

An Hon. Member: Germany is in Europe.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has the floor.

[Translation]

QUEEN'S ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is not a dictator in a banana republic, and Canadians do not want him to use politics, in violation of the Queen's Regulations.

[English]

It is a clear violation of Section 19, subsection 44 of the Queen's Regulations and Orders. A conviction under this section is subject to a fine of up to $1,000 and a prison term of up to one year.

• (1440)

I would like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence if he expects the Prime Minister to maintain any shred of integrity by in fact repudiating this direct political partisan activity on a Canadian Armed Forces Base, something which puts the Canadian Armed Forces in the untenable position of mixing politics with the defence of Canada.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member for Hamilton East does not know the difference between a person who happens to be employed as a politician in Canada and a person who happens to be employed as a member of the military personnel. The military has a long tradition in Canada of not being involved in political responses, but politicians like the Prime Minister certainly have every right, as I think the Hon. Member would want to have the right if she were acting as a political person.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION PROGRAM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. When the Government got into the trade deal with the Americans, one of the items included was the payment under the Western Grain Transportation Act for the movement of certain grains to the West Coast. This of course has now led American producers to believe that this assistance and the Crow benefit itself are a commodity subsidy.

Does the Minister not now agree that the inclusion of this program in the trade deal was a serious mistake? Now that the door has been opened a crack, how will the Government prevent U.S. producers and Congressional representatives from being able to open it all the way, or are we going to give in once again?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to figure which side of the question the Hon. Member is on. Surely he is not objecting to those parts of the free trade agreement dealing with the movement of wheat. It is very much in western Canadian interests.

I am surprised to think that the Hon. Member places as much credibility as he seems to on the arguments of the Americans who are criticizing the free trade agreement. Surely if the Americans are criticizing the free trade agreement it is because they feel there is a perceived benefit to Canada. I would think we would agree with that.

MANAGEMENT OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng and trade representative Clayton Yeutter last week confirmed their pledges to tackle the elimination of the transportation assistance for grain movement through Thunder Bay in future negotiations on the trade deal? Will the Minister state categorically now that Canada will in no way give up its right to manage its own grain transportation system in a way that benefits Canadian industry, ports, and farmers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly reassure the Hon. Member on that point. The only person who is suggesting that Canada would give up such authority is the Hon. Member opposite. It certainly never originated on this side of the House.

I can also point out that Mr. Yeutter was the American cabinet Minister who signed the free trade agreement. The Agriculture Minister, Mr. Lyng, was present during parts of the negotiation of the agreement and—

Mr. Broadbent: Her knowledge is so extensive.

Miss Carney: My knowledge of the free trade agreement is considerably larger than your knowledge of the free trade agreement, and the suggestion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: It is hard to maintain my Irish temper, Mr. Speaker, under these kinds of conditions. May I simply say that I can give the Hon. Member the assurances that he seeks. I question the credibility of his information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ADMINISTRATIVE PERSONNEL IN WESTERN CANADA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Last week the Minister confirmed that CN would substantially reduce administrative and management personnel in western Canada, contrary to the promise made by the Deputy Prime Minister that employment would in fact be enhanced. We now have a memo sent from the senior Vice President of Operations to Mr. Campbell, the Vice President of the Prairie Region, recommending further downsizing and further lay-offs in order to meet an arbitrary political timetable.

Has this order of Mr. Fletcher been rescinded or is CN in fact going ahead with further lay-offs in the Pacific, western and prairie regions of the CNR, contrary to the Government's promises? If it is, it will have devastating effects upon western Canadian communities. The Government should at least make those plans public so we have an opportunity to discuss them, examine them and see what the impact on these communities will be. Can the Minister tell us if this was rescinded or not, or if he will make those downsizing plans public?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see what three or four people can attempt to make of one silly memorandum sent out by one—

Some Hon. Members: Silly?

Mr. Crosbie: —by one person in the management of Canadian National. The memorandum was sent out on January 11 and it was leaked on January 10 or as soon as it went out. This, as I calculate it, is now March 1. It has taken the hon. gentleman a month and three weeks to realize the immense possibilities it gives to those with little imagination to rise in the House and try to make something of it. There is nothing that can be made of it. It is just one person's errant imagination concerned with downsizing.

The position is that there is no plan to lay off any members of the workforce in the West, the East or the centre, except in the course of normal attrition. As I said to the House last week, CN expects to reduce its administrative and management ranks by some 1,020 positions system-wide by mid-1988 by using a special separation early retirement package and by not filling vacant jobs. That is what happened.

The same process happened last year, because the administrative and management ranks cannot be allowed to stay out of line with the ranks of the ordinary working members of CN. Unfortunately, they have to be slimmed down as well and they have to do this to keep up with the competition and to be productive and effective and able to compete. I am against it and I fight against it at every opportunity and I stop everything I can stop, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could save some of his answer for the supplementary.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE RAILWAY'S PLANS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that if there is any silliness in the middle management of CN, it is simply reflecting the kind of leadership they get from the political bosses at the top.

I want to ask the Minister a very specific question. Is he prepared, without further silliness, to table CN plans dealing with the downsizing, the attrition and the reduction in the CN workforce and what impact that will have upon western Canadian communities? It is a simple request. Will the Minister table those reports and ensure that they will be examined before the committee because of the major repercussions they will have on western Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question comes from a former Minister of Transport who must know that in its annual plan filed every year CN outlines what its plans are for the coming year and for the next five. If the Hon. Member wants to see about the problem of downsizing, he can look at any of those plans.

The West originates 59 per cent of CN traffic by weight and 62 per cent of CN revenues. The West will continue to have a major share of the workforce. For example, 9,773 CN people work in Edmonton and Winnipeg alone. There is no plan to downsize in any special way the workforce in the West. The hon. gentleman—

Mr. Rodriguez: Downsize the answer.

Mr. Crosbie: To quote an old Buddhist saying that I came across, "It is easier to chain an elephant with lotus leaves than to teach a crazy person".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is amazing what is in the briefing notes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEALTH

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE—ADMINISTRATION OF RESEARCH FUNDS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, an estimated 300,000 Canadians are victims of Alzheimer's Disease, a 20th century disease. This disease which strikes as early as age 40 has no cure. The Minister of State for Seniors, the first in Canada, knows this well through his consultations with over 1,500 seniors and seniors' groups. I must congratulate the Government for providing $4 million for research into this disease.

• (1450)

Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare inform Canadians how the research fund will be administered? Specifically, what will be the eligibility criteria and when will it get under way?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has taken an interest in this area along with my colleague, the Minister of State for Seniors.

Ms. Copps: They are laughing.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I take it the Hon. Member for Hamilton East does not like to hear about success.

Miss MacDonald: Or anything else.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has the floor and is answering a question which I know all Hon. Members will appreciate is a serious one.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Minister of State for Seniors has had very extensive consultations, the result of which was the announcement in Saskatoon of additional funds for research into Alzheimer's and osteoporosis beyond what is being done by the Medical Research Council. The money is available April 1, 1988, and the program will be conducted through the NHRDP of the department of Health and Welfare. People can apply through the department with the kind of peer review that we have had before in the NHRDP in order to get the best research.

As my colleague, the Minister, pointed out, this program was requested by the Alzheimer Society. It has been received very well and we look forward not only to additional research but the fact that Canada will be involved in some of the leading research in this area. That is why I am pleased that the Member asked me about the program which the Hon. Minister of State for Seniors brought forward in this way.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I am sure my colleagues' applause reflects relief rather than adulation.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS—LAWSUIT LAUNCHED BY CERTAIN COMPANIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister for International Trade. She is responsible for the Government's mishandling of the softwood lumber export dispute and introduction of the softwood lumber export tax.

Now that yet another chicken has come home to roost, this time in the form of a lawsuit against the Government by some companies which were taxed and which cite the case of other companies that were not, will she explain why the Government permitted that fundamentally inequitable situation to arise?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Member that the export tax has been removed in five provinces, as anticipated and planned, enabling those provinces to carry out management of their own forestry resources. Negotiations with other provinces are continuing.

May I also point out that the IWA, the union involved, said last year was a record year in the forest industry. There was not one job lost, not one iota, or one tittle, to quote my colleague from St. John's West, of negative impact on the industry because of the tax.

As the Hon. Member well knows, the case he brings before the House is before the courts and it is not appropriate for me to comment.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister's answer will be noted as an evasion by all those affected by this tax.

TAXATION OF COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since some companies paid this tax and other companies in identical situations did not, what compensation will she offer to the companies that were unfairly taxed?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised the fact that this matter is before the courts. Therefore, if he has any basic knowledge of how procedures work in this House, he will know it is not appropriate for me to comment on it.

His Party is the same Party that maintained all sorts of evil things would flow from the export tax. Again I take delight in having the opportunity to quote from the IWA report which says the massive job losses which many Canadian observers believed would result from imposition of the export tax simply have not occurred. The report goes on to point out that 600 sawmill jobs were added in British Columbia alone during that period. This was a very realistic and helpful way to deal with a distressing situation and brought benefit, not harm, to the industry.

FINANCE

MINING DEPLETION ALLOWANCE—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He knows that hundreds of representatives of mining communities across the country are meeting here in Ottawa today to protest the Government's plan to remove the mining depletion allowance. Will the Minister, even at this late date, reconsider his decision in view of the thousands of jobs that will be lost in exploration and development, and reinstate this program which provided thousands of jobs and kept hundreds of communities operating over many years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member did not want to leave the impression that flow-through shares have been removed from the tax Bill. He said reinstate the program.

Mr. Foster: I said mining depletion allowance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I understand he does not want to leave that impression and that flow-through shares are still in place. There have been some changes in the provisions. The changes we announced last June were improved upon in the changes announced in December, 1987.

I am sure the Hon. Member is also very much aware of the fact that equity financing in Canada prior to October 19, the stock market crash, amounted to some $7 billion. Since that time there has been less than $500 million worth of equity financing and that had an impact on some companies. Whether they are flow-through share financing or other forms, they have all been affected, and that is one of the major causes.

However, I have indicated that I am prepared to meet with the companies, and officials have been meeting with them over the past few days, and will do so into the future.

EFFECTING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm a report in Mining Week quoting Mr. Karl Glackmeyer, Director of the Prospectors and Developers Association, who indicates that the Government's position is that incentives have to be eliminated in accordance with the recent Canada-U.S. free trade agreement?

Could the Minister comment on that press report and will he take into account in reinstating this program that if it is wiped out now, under the terms of the free trade agreement it could not be reinstated?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I responded to that question in a probably more colourful way than I will with this Hon. Member. I responded to some totally unfounded comments made by the Leader of the NDP, who made such an enormous flip-flop on this issue. In the past the NDP were against flow-through shares and now, for straight political partisan reasons, they are doing a flip-flop.

Mr. Speaker: We are getting into a highly partisan statement. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS—POSITION OF TREASURY BOARD

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board concerning the lack of progress in the collective bargaining between Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

The Alliance proposed streamlining the procedure, reducing the number of bargaining units from 31 to 7, which it says would save a great deal of money. Why is Treasury Board refusing to deal with this?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows there was a two-tier bargaining system set up by my predecessor. The unions have now chosen to withdraw from that and want to reduce the number of bargaining units from 31 to 7. We have refrained from doing that. We said we would go to 16.

The fact of the matter is that there is negotiation and binding conciliation in two stages and the unions have requested some change in that. We had hoped we could continue to work along the very effective approach established by my predecessor. Unfortunately the unions have chosen not to follow that. We hope they will come around to agreeing with the position they originally agreed to so that we can get on with the collective bargaining process in the manner in which it was carried on so effectively by my predecessor.

NUMBER OF BARGAINING UNITS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Post Office, the Canada Labour Relations Board reduced the number of bargaining units from 28 to 4. In this situation the unions voluntarily offered to reduce the number and the Government is opposed to it because the unions do not want to be bound by a no-strike rule. The Minister knows that the unions have hardly ever used the right to strike. Why does the Minister not accept this proposition which the union says will save the Government $1.5 million?

FISHERIES

SCALLOP FISHERY IN BAY OF FUNDY—ISSUANCE OF LICENCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whoever is responding today for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In October, 1986, the inshore and offshore sectors of the scallop fishery in the Bay of Fundy area came up with a management plan for this very important resource. For instance, all sides agreed that the fishing zone for New Brunswick fishermen would be extended to the middle of the Bay of Fundy.

Now we learn that the Minister has issued licenses which allow some of these same fishermen to fish over the entire Bay. Why has the Minister taken this decision which violates the 1986 scallop agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as all Members know, life is never as simple as we would like it to be. The situation is that there were three individuals who said they had certain historical rights with regard to fishing for scallop stocks in the Bay of Fundy area. They appealed to the Atlantic Fisheries License Appeal Board. The Atlantic Fisheries License Appeal Board heard their cases, two in 1986, and one last year, and recommended that they should receive a full Bay of Fundy scallop license.

The Minister gave this careful consideration. After all, this is a ruling of the appeal board and these individual fishermen could suffer if they did not get the licenses. The Minister decided that individual justice should be done and that they should get the licenses.

In one case there was a long-standing involvement in the scallop fishery and in the other cases there was historical connection with the scallop fishery. That is the explanation. These three cases were heard and that was the recommendation of the appeal board.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

Hon. William McKnight (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join with other colleagues from both sides of the House in speaking on the Bill that has been put forward. Bill C-113 is designed to promote the development and the diversification of the economy of western Canada, and to establish a full department of western economic diversification.

The Government came to office committed to making regional economic development work. This Bill demonstrates the commitment to the regional development in the West, and it demonstrates the Government's approach that is unique for designing developmental policies and for developing programs which are tailored to the needs of each region.

In designing this legislation, I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to my Cabinet colleagues, particularly those from western Canada, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), and individuals from the western region of Canada, who put forward their views and concerns and who assisted in designing this program.

The Government sees Canada as a land of mutually supporting regions in which the prosperity flows from the broad economic base throughout the country.

Mr. Benjamin: From downtown Toronto.

Mr. McKnight: I am sure that the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. Benjamin) will take part in this debate, and I know that he will support the legislation designed to bring benefit to his constituents as well as mine.

There have been several organizational experiments over the past 60 years to promote regional and economic development in Canada. I would suggest that there has been little measurable progress.

One thing that has been clear from those experiments is that Ottawa-based centralized approaches fail to capture the regional differences that we all recognize in Canada. They failed to provide federal policies which are tailored to the individual needs of the men and women in each region of Canada. The West's development problems are not the same as those of Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, or Quebec.

When this Government came to office we came with ideas of how to make regional development work. We made a commitment to ensure that the regions of Canada would have a strong voice in influencing economic development.

The first half of this mandate was designed to create the right environment, the economic growth, and the investment that was needed. It was also designed to correct some sectorial inadequacies that were apparent, such as those in energy, agriculture, taxation, trade, and in other sectors. The groundwork has been done and the base has been established. Regional development can only take place when the climate for national economic development is right.

Once the climate was created, new tools for regional economic development were put in place. In June the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency; in July the Northern Ontario Development Fund was announced; and on August 4, 1987 the Prime Minister announced the new western diversification initiative. These are regional initiatives, and they are major undertakings to correct regional imbalances and inadequacies.

In the past under DREE, DRIE, and all the others, of which there have been several, regional economic development policy and regional economic program delivery were never successfully married.

The legislation before the House at this time brings the policy development and the program delivery together. The policy role, which would be combined with the instruments of the Western Economic Development Fund, will allow us to have the tools to do the job.

A major component of the initiative is the department with headquarters in Edmonton and offices in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, and Vancouver. It is to promote diversification from regional ideas. It is not an Ottawa-imposed approach to the economic development of the West. It is close to the people whom it is designed to serve. It is not located in Ottawa, but in the West. It will also bring a western voice to the formation of national policy. All Ministers, regardless of their ministry responsibilities, always speak on behalf of their regions and will continue to do that. What we are doing now is putting in statute and legislating a department which will speak and attempt to influence national policies in order that those national policies can better serve people in western Canada.

When we look at the areas that are important, to mention some, agriculture, forestry, transport, science and technology, it is important to draw those agencies and departments together and to examine the programs and the policies in relation to the economic development potential in western Canada.

I believe there is an opportunity to influence Government without expenditures. As an example, in the August Budget we were able to work as a pathfinder where kaolin was classified as a mineral. That is the first change in the schedule since potash was recognized as a mineral some 20 years ago. It seems strange to me, since it was not a vegetable and it was mined out of the ground, that it was not classified as a mineral. It had to be classified as a mineral in order that the tax regime available to mining could be put in place. That was recognized by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and announced in the Budget of February 10.

I do not think it is misstating a fact, and my colleague from Saskatchewan will recognize it, but it is almost twice as far from Ottawa to Regina than it is from Regina to Ottawa. That is a fact of life that we have recognized for a long period of time.

The department will work as a pathfinder for those men and women in western Canada who have ideas and proposals, who want to do business with the Government of Canada, and who want to assist us in strengthening the economy in the West. It will serve as a voice in western Canada to promote co-operative ventures with the provinces, business, labour, and other public and private organizations. The department will also have the following responsibilities. It will formulate plans and integrate federal strategies to support the economic diversification of the western economy. It will oversee or implement such plans and strategies, if they are not implemented by other Ministries. It will promote the growth of small and medium-sized businesses. It will attempt to improve the business environment in western Canada. It will support economic and policy research. Finally, it will engage in and conclude co-operative arrangements with the provinces.

Fundamentally this legislation outlines how the federal Government can better serve western Canadians. It is a different approach from that of any other Government. It integrates in legislation a regional voice in government processes, policy-making, and program delivery.

Another key element of the legislation is the financial assistance which can be made available through the department for the development and diversification of the western economy. This means that the federal Government can become actively involved in the implementation of key diversification projects and programs.

The department will offer assistance to enterprises which have prospects of furthering the diversification or strengthening and expanding the economy of the West.

This assistance will be incremental. It will be "top up" or "last in" support for key business and economic projects in the West. The "topping up" or "last in" support is not to take away from assistance provided by other government Departments. We must also consider the client's own contribution to a project. Equity is important, whether it comes in the form of individual funding or from financial institutions. These projects will not be all government support; some initiative and some equity must be put forward. If we can take advantage of strategic development opportunities in the West, proposals that have the greatest potential for broadening and expanding the economic base of the West, we will do so.

This is not an entitlement program. If we take a look at previous experiences, entitlement was part of it. This program is not entitlement; it is managed with flexibility and creativity. We will see what projects must be and should be supported.

To enhance the flexibility we have a number of principles, not guidelines or automatic kick-outs. We believe that as time goes on we will gain experience and more knowledge about the way to handle the co-ordinating and funding functions of the department.

Basically one principle is aimed at business and economic projects which can expand or diversify the economy in western Canada, projects which lead to new products, new markets, new technologies, import substitution, and new long-term jobs. As I mentioned, it will be used to top up the last dollar in. Therefore, there must be a comprehensive search of other government programs and other government Departments which could and should assist in a major way to strengthen the economy in the West.

There will be a range of types and levels of assistance. For example, there will be loan guarantees, credit and loan insurance, contributions, repayable contributions, and grants. All economic sectors will be eligible, including the service sector which is the fastest growing sector in the Canadian economy, particularly in western Canada. It will also include the natural resource sector, which is very important in western Canada, wherein clearly there is an opportunity to develop new products and new lines. Projects such as research and development and marketing will be encouraged, projects which help build a business support structure. These projects will enhance the competitive capacity, so that a large number of western Canadians can take advantage of the business support structure which will be put in place. There will also be support for individual business proposals, after they have been accepted, assessed, and viewed in terms of their ability to expand the economy in western Canada.

There has been criticism of tardiness and over-long reviews in projects. Because we are working on a principle rather than a guideline, and because we do not have a slide-rule or an automatic percentage, it takes a little longer to review or assess each proposal. Because of the flexibility that has been built into it, there had to be some reorganization of Government. I think that was necessary and desirable in the establishment of the new department. The federal economic development co-ordinators and their offices in the western provinces were transferred from the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion to form the core of the new department.

The approach for which we are looking is to develop strategic partnerships to avoid duplication. We hope to be able to optimize the process of expansion of the economy in western Canada. If something needs an extra push or more drive, if it is something we want to force- feed, there will be dollars available to top up that initiative.

We have recognized—and it was recognized by the Prime Minister western Canada needed an advocate in central Government. This legislation establishes a department of western diversification. It is already having an impact. The challenges and policies which are designed as national policies will have to take into account the country's regional dimension.

I will be interested in some of the comments of members of the federal Liberal Opposition with respect to the attention they paid to the West during all their years in office.

Mr. Axworthy: Stick around and you will hear about them.

Mr. McKnight: I will stick around. I remember a $4 billion fund which vanished, totally disappeared.

The department takes over a number of existing programs in other areas and will serve as a pathfinder for business. It will assist business in doing government work and in having access to Government. What we need is the strategic capability to seize the opportunities put forward by western Canadians. We will be able to give action and life to the visions of Canadian men and women. Basically, the new department will have the interests of small business and medium sized business as its main responsibility.

We cannot achieve this objective alone, but I believe that we have the tools to achieve it. We will have the ability to fund it, and we will have the assistance of the other Ministries. Certainly there are people in western Canada with the desire and the tenacity to make it work.

Regionally based approaches are different. This is something that is not understood by people in other Parties. It establishes relationships within line Departments. It also establishes relationships with the central agencies in the federal Government. It will have the co-ordinating role of a central agency and, in the management of the fund, it will have the operational role of a line Department. If we are to influence the national policies of the Government, we must ensure that it is properly linked with other federal Departments.

There will be an informal group of Ministers to deal with western economic concerns and a more formal Deputy Ministers' meeting, chaired by the Deputy Minister of Western Economic Diversification.

There has been a great deal of interest in the program in western Canada. Western Canadians are eager to participate. By mid-February we had received over 40,000 inquiries, had held some 3,000 meetings with individuals, and received in some form 2,355 proposals. We have processed some 262 proposals.

Some of the systems that have been made available to business in general, which will benefit not just individuals but have a systemic approach, is our participation in a $25.5 million program by contributing $5 million to the potash institute of Canada to diversify market opportunities in Asia and to strengthen leading-edge research and education facilities of the Saskatoon-based institutions. As a form of partnership, the provincial Government in this project has provided $6.8 million and the industry $13.8 million, for a total of over $25.5 million.

Toward the establishment of an $18 million world class cold climate engineering research facility in Edmonton, the centre for frontier engineering research, $7.5 million was contributed. That, again, was a partnership between the provincial Government of Alberta, with its contribution of $6.8 million and the balance being contributed by industry.

In British Columbia, $9.45 million of a $21 million project went toward the establishment of a marketing program for the B.C. shake and shingle industry. The industry is contributing $11.5 million in that joint initiative.

There have been other projects, some smaller and some larger. An example of a small initiative in Moose Jaw is the Huff and Puff Stitchery. It is receiving a grant to expand the capacity of its business. The western diversification office is assisting a company to design and manufacture motor control panels for the use in electrical installations. Another company will be using western diversification money to manufacture donkey heads or pump jacks used in the oil fields of the West.

There will be more, Madam Speaker. Again, I want to emphasize that in reviewing each proposal and treating each proposal as in individual initiative it does require a little more effort and time, but I believe it is very beneficial to those interested in expanding the economy of western Canada. We will not have tier systems. The West will be treated as one region. The tier system was not beneficial to western Canada in the past and it will not be beneficial at this time.

In the past seven months we have been working and designing a new department and a new approach to regional development. We have designed and determined how to administer $1.2 billion. We have responded to the overwhelming public interest in this initiative. We have made substantial and effective investments in western Canada. As always, in creating a new department, one has a challenge. I must say that although the agenda is full, I am confident that with the energy, the enthusiasm and the real knowledge of individual western Canadian men and women the new department, over the coming years, will have made an appreciable and permanent impact upon the economic diversification and strength of western Canada.

It is a program designed by western Canadians. It is a program that is headquartered in western Canada, and it is a program that will bring benefit to all of Canada by strengthening one region of Canada.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, in opening this debate on the proposed legislation for western diversification, I think it is important for us to draw to the attention of the House a story that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of yesterday which quotes the Chairman of the Manitoba Conservative caucus saying that "it will very helpful if the provincial Government did not criticize. It may end up getting more assistance in the western diversification". The story goes on that it is a basically "go along or get nothing" program. That is the import of the story.

Mr. Duguay: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy: A little sensitive, aren't you?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay).

Mr. Duguay: Madam Speaker, I do not have an objection to the Hon. Member quoting from a story, but I would rather that he quote it in context and all of it, then he will not be abusing my rights as an individual.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) is a little sensitive—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I know we will be touching some raw nerves in this debate. But if you read the story and the direct quotes from the Hon. Member for St. Boniface, who is Chairman of the Manitoba caucus, he said that it is not helpful to engage in fed bashing, and there are other quotes of a similar nature.

Mr. Duguay: Quote the rest of it. Do not leave the good parts out.

Mr. Axworthy: Under the present program, the Province of Manitoba has clearly been discriminated against. It has been discriminated against because it opposes the Government in certain major policy issues, according to the Member from St. Boniface.

What you have to translate is that the western diversification fund will really be a form of political blackmail. It will be used basically to extort compliance by the provinces to the particular and perverse policies of this Government—

Mr. Scowen: That is nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: —or it will not get any grants, if they do not have to fit the particular political equation or standards.

There has been, I think, over the years, a basic standard of regional development, namely, that all regions and provinces get treated fairly and equitably, and one does not simply use things as political clubs to try to enforce compliance of specific measures if it is the considered opinion of a provincial Government that something is in the best interests or not in the best interests of its citizens. But this is not the way the so-called western diversification fund is being used. It is clearly politicizing in a highly sort of partisan way the use of federal funds in economic development, but not economic development that has any plan, rhyme, reason or blueprint to it; it is simply used as a basis of slushing those who you are in agreement with either in a partisan way—

Mr. Scowen: That is the way the Liberals did things.

Mr. Axworthy: —or where you are trying to enforce a kind of provincial government agreement to go along or give up.

The Minister in introducing his program said it was innovative, different and expansive and that it would do all these new things. I do not know where the Minister has been. This program for western diversification has far less money than was committed under previous Liberal Governments. It has a far less organizational base to it and it will be far less effective. Let me recite a few facts to the Minister while he sits there and giggles like a little boy who is caught with his finger in the plug.

Mr. McKnight: Here comes the invisible fund now.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, let us talk about the invisible fund, the $4 billion committed under the Western Development Fund under the previous Government. Of the fund, $3.5 billion went into railway modernization. That was based upon extensive consultation with all the farms groups, all provincial Governments, and it was based on what is the single most important investment that could be made in western Canada, namely, to modernize the transportation system substantially. The Minister from Saskatchewan should know that if you do not have an effective, efficient transportation system, you do not move potash, grain or logs.

In the late 1970s the railways were refusing to invest capital in the transportation system of the West. It was absolutely necessary for the federal Government to take the initiative to ensure a major investment in the infrastructure of western Canada. That was the $3.5 billion fund. That was not invisible money. That was cash and it is still being paid out.

The other part of the money, a $250 million fund, went for native economic development, which the Minister responsible should know something about. This Minister has deliberately frustrated that fund and has not given it the kind of encouragement or incentive to develop enterprises, businesses and activities for native people in western Canada. The economic plight of the native people was also identified as the single most important social and economic problem facing western Canada. We set up a bank to provide funding so they could start their own businesses and projects to help the aboriginal peoples throughout the West and in the Territories. This Government, not happy to see that kind of self initiative undertaken by native people, basically closed down that fund and basically, again, turned it into a slush fund. The Minister giggles and laughs, but I have told you, Madam Speaker, where the money went on that program.

• (1600)

In 1983-84, $1.2 billion was committed to western Canada in a two-year period under the ERDA agreements. In fact, that generated a total of $2.1 billion because we got matching funds from the provinces. The Minister says that nothing has ever been done before, but the fact is that the commitment of a specific regional fund for western Canada was twice what this Government is committing in terms of economic development funds.

It is true that in 1984 when this Government came to power, it cut back on many of those programs. It cancelled many of those programs. It stood in the way of many of those programs. The fact is that those commitments were made.

Once again, these agreements were signed in full co-operation and consultation with the provinces and each province was able to establish its priorities. They were able to work out with the municipalities clear objectives for each of the provinces. The agreements were signed, sealed legal documents, part of the regional fund. What happened, of course, is that Tories do not like successes, particularly those of other Governments, and so if they did not like the nature of the previous Government, they stood in the way.

At the same time, we had also committed substantial additional funds for employment and training. The Economic Council report had said that one of the most important areas for investment in the West was to upgrade substantially its workforce. Last year, Employment and Immigration spent $479 million in western Canada. For the next forecast year, according to the Estimates, $339 million will be spent, a net reduction of $140 million. Is this the kind of influence the Minister is saying the western diversification agency will have? Is the kind of clout it will have the kind that will mean we will lose $140 million worth of employment and training funds for western Canada in one year alone? That in fact is down several hundreds of millions of dollars from where it was in 1984.

This is the great example of how the new agency will show western Canadians what kind of muscle it has around the cabinet table. The West will lose $140 million unemployment and training funds for western Canada. I would say that the Minister should be embarrassed and ashamed to claim that kind of influence when in fact all that happens is that projects are lost.

We talked about the need to expand scientific research and development. Under the previous mandate, we put the hydrology lab in Saskatoon, we established a cold water lab in Edmonton, we established—

Mr. McKnight: What was that, Lloyd?

Mr. Axworthy: The cold water lab at Edmonton had been established as part of the ERDA program.

Mr. McKnight: Where was the money?

Mr. Axworthy: We had the Canertech program for energy renewal resources in Winnipeg, and we had the NRC. A laboratory was going to give Canada a world-class centre for robotics.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And no money.

Mr. Axworthy: All those things were cancelled by the Government. All these ideas, projects and initiatives were cancelled by the Conservatives.

Mr. McKnight: Ideas, yes.

Mr. Axworthy: We know that we are touching raw nerves. We know the Tories do not like to hear about what they cancelled. They are now talking about something in the future. I would ask why they did not keep in place the things that were already there. Why did they cancel them? Why did they withdraw them? Why did they take them away? Why did they set back western Canada's economic development several years simply out of political pique and political revenge? They cancelled projects that were on the books, ready to be implemented, because they did not like the colour of the projects. They did not like who had implemented them. That is a condemnation of the Tories.

Who can believe the Tories about the future? Who really believes their commitments when they took away what we had already?

Mr. McKnight: Too bad, taking all those projects out of Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Let us deal with the projects in other provinces. We had other special kinds of projects. What are Canadians celebrating today and have celebrated in the past in western Canada? We have had two wonderful world expositions, the Olympics and Expo 86. Who provided initial federal funding for both those projects? It was the Liberal Government which initiated those projects and provided federal funding.

The Minister responsible for western diversification is now going into a laughing fit. The fact is that that is a way of covering up his embarrassment. If he thinks it is so funny, I would challenge him to rise and say who provided the initial funding for those projects.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, just on a point of order, the Hon. Member is putting forward things that are not accurate. He just drew to the attention of the House that the Liberal Government funded the Olympics, which were funded by 200 million in federal non-tax revenue dollars supplied under the direction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek).

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, that is an example of how the Minister does not know what he is talking about. The federal Government also provided additional funding for all support services and for police services.

The Minister from Manitoba, the great success story of Manitoba, is here. The Minister responsible for the CF-18 is telling us how he would develop western Canada. That Minister was successful and really showed his muscle. He really showed his effectiveness when a bona fide, genuine high-technology project put forward by a western manufacturer was lost because of the political pressures of his colleagues. This Minister, who is here in the House, simply lost out because he did not know how to produce and still does not know how to produce.

Mr. McKnight: What is the Liberal position on that contract, Lloyd?

Mr. Axworthy: Let us turn now to the organizational case.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Oh, yeah?

Mr. Axworthy: Well, if they want to hear more, I have a long list of projects. If they want to talk about the projects, I could go on all day. I have a list of cancelled projects here, but government Members will hear about them during the election campaign. I do not have to repeat them now because the people of Manitoba and the people of western Canada already know what they are. That is why we are leading in the polls in that particular province.

Let us talk about the organizational question, which is very important. The Minister spoke about the need to show organized and co-ordinated activities at the federal level. What happened to the western cabinet committee that provided a coordination unit at the highest level? It was not comprised of civil servants or Deputy Ministers. The western cabinet committee ensured—

Mr. McKnight: How many Members from western Canada were on it, elected Members, Lloyd? Elected?

Mr. Axworthy: The proof of the effectiveness of that committee was in what was delivered. The Tories disbanded that cabinet committee. They got rid of its political influence. They neglected that opportunity to continue having a special committee of Cabinet for western Canada that would ensure at the highest levels of decision-making, reporting directly to the Planning and Priorities Committee, co-ordination and influence and the assurance that other activities of the Government would be properly construed.

The difference is that when we were in power, the CN was not laying off people in Winnipeg and Edmonton. The railways were not closing down. Canada Packers plants were not closing down. Projects were not being cancelled because we were able to make our case at the cabinet table. In fact, this Government is relying upon a group of civil servants to cover for it. That is what it is trying to pretend is great co-ordination.

Further to that, we had established in each of the provinces a federal economic development co-ordinator responsible for organizing and co-ordinating all the activities of all the federal agencies at that level and developing and instituting plans that would be made at the local and regional levels in full consultation with the provinces, the municipalities and the local business sector. That program was very effective and useful in ensuring that there were bottom-up developmental plans. An example of this would be the core area initiative in the City of Winnipeg and the North Portage development program. With an investment of $90 million in federal, provincial and municipal money, organized primarily by federal initiative, we were able to generate over $400 million in private capital.

This Government talks about the need to generate new activity in the private sector. However, it tends to forget that there must be a serious, clear blueprint developed in each of the regions, not simply a political slush fund. By the way, and I bring this to the attention of the House, it is unfortunate that specifically excluded in western diversification is the opportunity for urban redevelopment or community development programs. Specifically excluded is any investment in social programs that would provide incentives for people at the lower level to participate in western growth.

We have the example of the core area initiative started in 1980-81. It was a combination of physical redevelopment downtown, encouragement of small business, and the use of federal facilities such as the Air Canada buildings and the NRC centres. There was funding of special community-based social programs to help native people get training to move into the workforce, help senior citizens develop their own housing projects, and help residents of that area to develop some sense of initiative for self-development. We did not exclude certain groups from assistance. It was a recognition that parts of the core areas of cities in western Canada such as Winnipeg, Regina and Calgary, as well as the small communities, were suffering a terrible erosion.

One of the most important tools for economic development is the upgrading and refurbishing of the basic infrastructure of communities. You are not going to attract new business if you have a deteriorating core area. You are not going to get a new factory placed in a small community in Manitoba or Saskatchewan if you no longer have decent sewer lines, proper transportation, or if your school system is failing. You are not going to be able to attract new R and D centres if the universities in those areas are beginning to erode. Yet those areas are excluded under this plan. That flies in the face of some of the best and most useful practical examples, some of which we pioneered in the West.

The initiative we took in the core areas, while not perfect, was a demonstration of how you can combine social investment and economic development investment in a package to provide not only the refurbishing of a city but also to give people a chance.

About 40 per cent of new workers in western Canada will be native people. Unfortunately they come in without proper education or training. If they do not receive the kind of support necessary to become fully participating members of the workforce, then the economic development of western Canada will not occur. You cannot have 40 per cent of your workforce idle. You cannot have that kind of terrible tragedy taking place in front of you. Yet where is there in the plan any kind of program that addresses that fundamental issue in western Canada? Or that comes to grips with one of the most serious social and economic problems in Canada, certainly in western Canada? There is nothing here to provide the slightest bit of assistance or support to meet that very serious issue. Yet if we do not meet it, it will cost western Canada through a waste of human talent and increasing costs to our social service system.

The only proven way to provide an antidote is through development incentives. As I pointed out in my speech yesterday, why is it that even the simple provision of job training grants is being denied these kinds of organizations? Young natives in the core area of Winnipeg are no longer being given the opportunity even to get in an employment program because "it does not fit the high-tech training philosophy of the Canadian Jobs Strategy". You are not going to develop western Canada unless you deal with that problem. It seems to me that any Government sitting down and trying to analyse a blueprint of what is necessary in the West would have put that foremost. Yet we have a statement here from the western diversification office that it is premature to indicate resource allocation by organizational structure.

I am particularly surprised at the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). He of anyone in that Cabinet should be most cognizant of and sensitive to that issue. When the opportunity came to put this issue forward as a clear priority, he ignored it totally. He has completely forgotten it. I simply say that this is not the way we will diversify the western economy.

Let me also point out another major economic exclusion which deals with the question of the need to develop major regional infrastructure programs. If you spend time talking to mayors and reeves of the smaller towns and bigger cities of western Canada, to provincial Ministers and many people in business, they realize that much of the infrastructure of western Canada has eroded. Look at the transportation and highway systems. We all know how fundamental transportation is to western Canada. It is our life-blood. It has enormous consequences. If we do not move the goods, we cannot sell them. Yet those systems are eroding. Provincial Governments have been cutting back. With the exception of the $3.5 billion that went into railway modernization, there has been very little going on.

Our highway system is in serious difficulty. We will have to substantially upgrade the transportation system. I am thinking in particular of the Port of Churchill. When I was in government we attempted to give that port new life. We attempted to upgrade its facilities to the point where they would be capable of offering new transportation opportunities in northern Canada. Four years later many of the projects under that agreement have still not been completed. The dust control system remains undone. That means the port is still languishing and uncertain about its future. Yet it is an alternative sea water port for the entire West. Here we are in this House talking about Arctic security, yet we are neglecting one of the most important ingredients, the transportation system. We are simply not talking about it.

The Minister talked about $42 million for a soil erosion program in Saskatchewan. I agree with it, but soil erosion is not going to be handled with $42 million. Look at the report done by Senator Sparrow and the Senate committee and you will see we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars to arrest the erosion of western Canada's most valuable resource, its soil. We need a major water bank development project from British Columbia right through to Manitoba.

What an opportunity under this program to tackle that kind of program! We can say we will not look at specific little projects here and there but we will look at the need to establish a regional plan, something that will give focus to the entire region. If you look at the Saskatchewan River basin, the Columbia River basin, and the Fraser River basin, moving over the Rockies, you will recognize that all of the West is linked by its water system. It does not recognize provincial boundaries or federal constituencies. If we do not do something about that in the very near future, as the Senate report properly indicates, then the life-blood of western Canada is going to ooze away, as it is doing now. We are losing hundreds of thousands of hectares per year under present conditions. It is not a future problem, it is an immediate problem. It has to be done now.

That should be a priority. Development of native people should be a priority. Employment training must be a priority. The infrastructure of western Canada must be a priority. Those are the kinds of initiatives I would have expected the Government to be committed to doing something about.

I am particularly surprised because the Government said it does not want to tinker or provide a bunch of meaningless little grants and subsidies. It said that the way to encourage the private sector, agriculture, minerals and others, is to put a framework in place in which private dynamics can work. Yet somehow the Government seems to have reversed its stand and gone the other way. There is nothing whatsoever in this program, as I read it, that provides the slightest opportunity for westerners to come together as a region, or bring together the provinces, the federal Government, and major business, to ask what are the priorities for the region and then use federal investment in those areas.

Another example is in the study done by the Economic Council on western transition. It points out that in the future there should be entitlements for western Canada. The Minister denied that there will be any entitlements. The Economic Council basically said that there should be entitlements in certain key areas, one of which, of course, is education and research and development. We are moving into the information age and if we are to apply all kinds of new techniques and innovations to our agricultural and resource industries we must have a clear commitment to ensure that the work is done in western Canada.

They talk about centres of excellence in various places. I have no argument with that. As I pointed out, the Liberal Government had centres of excellence in hydrology, robotics, and other areas. However, why have a centre of excellence when the engineering faculties no longer have money even to do typing? The research grants of the federal Government are now driven by corporate donations. We do not have big corporations in western Canada to help in those areas and, as a result, we tend to be at the low end of the scale. If we are going to fund research programs by private sector contributions, if we are not going to provide the universities with the capacity to do basic research in those areas and give proper funding to the schools and colleges in western Canada, we will not have the people or facilities to keep abreast of the modern world of information and technology. That is the new entitlement which western Canada needs.

In the 1920s when our ancestors were fighting for entitlements they fought for the Crow rate. They said that the entitlement in Confederation was to ensure that we have a transportation system based upon a cost which we can afford. The new western entitlement must be in education and research and development. We must ensure that when the Government gives out big procurement contracts there is a fair sharing. There must be a requirement that when the Government provides support to the funding councils the regional requirement must be administered and met.

If I may digress for a moment, when we passed the Western Grain Transportation Act we wrote into the Bill a specific clause that said that the railroads must source in the region in which they are undertaking their major level of activity. We also put a $50 million Western Industrial Transportation Fund in place to enable western suppliers and producers to make bids on those projects.

Not once since 1984 when the Government began to administer the Act has it made any effort to hold the railways accountable for that responsibility, to ask the CNR and CPR to what extent they are sourcing in western Canada and to what degree they are buying their goods and services in western Canada, or to use the sanction in the Bill which is that if they do not do that the Crow benefit can be withheld.

That is the kind of tough action on behalf of western Canada that one would expect from a Government which says it believes in western Canada. The Government has never done that. If you look at the records you will see that neither the previous Minister nor the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) ever set that as a priority. Instead the Government was piecing out the Western Industrial Transportation Fund in small projects across the West. The fund was retained, so the Conservatives must have thought it was a good idea, but they did not use it for its purpose which was to ensure that we would have a synergy between railway investment and sourcing which would have given western businesses an opportunity to move into a new area of activity. That is once again an opportunity lost. If the Minister says that that will now be a responsibility of the new agency, that is fine, but that has not happened over the past three years.

That is what I mean by an entitlement, the requirement to ensure that the federal Government, which has very large resources to invest in education, research, and procurement, ensures that there is a fair sharing. That must be done because at the present time there is not fair sharing. The record of federal procurement still is that 80 per cent of it takes place within the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto triangle. It takes almost an affirmative action for western Canada and Atlantic Canada to change that around. That is the kind of political muscle and political priority which we would expect from this agency. However, I did not hear the Minister talking about that. I did not hear him say that that is what this new agency will do.

I would even suggest that moving the agency out of the capital of Canada, away from the action, will make it less effective in getting the influence and making the case that has to be made on a day-by-day basis. In running a government it is the small details that count, the paper that comes across your desk every day and the access you have to other Departments. You have to be there to make yourself heard, to make your influence felt.

It may be that by detaching this agency it will lose its ability to make an impact, to make a strong political statement day by day, hour by hour, in this capital, which needs to be done in order not to lose the decisions on contracts, research, and grants which take place in Ottawa on a daily basis. In fact, the organizational base that has been constructed may be weakening the ability of western Canada to get the entitlement that it needs. That may in fact be the problem that we are facing in terms of this kind of organization.

There is less money than was put in before, there is a questionable level of co-ordination, and there is certainly less influence at Cabinet level. A number of things have already been cancelled and taken away which are not being replaced. Most important, there is no blueprint, no vision. There is no compelling set of priorities for western Canada which can be responded to. It does not have to be unilateral or arbitrary, but it should set out what must be done.

Only the federal Government has the capacity to do that at the regional level. It is very hard to get the Premier of Alberta to speak up for the Province of Manitoba. Certainly we have never seen that, as evidenced in the CF-18 case. However, because the federal Government represents a larger jurisdiction it should represent a larger vision. It should use its capacity as a national Government to set forward those kinds of priorities and ensure that they are implemented and organized on a regional level.

There is no such aspiration or sense of objective, which is so essential if western Canada is going to keep pace. I return to the basic point that we have seen in this country in the last three or four years a highly unequal, unfair level of growth. If you look at the growth rates in Canada you will see that the concentration of economic activity, jobs, investment, and placement has taken place in the central regions of Canada.

I am not arguing with those regions, but I am saying that it has increased the disparity. It is making the gap grow wider. To arrest that will take a very singular and strong-minded federal government setting out a whole new set of objectives and priorities for the regions.

That is not what we have had, that is not what we are receiving. The IRDP has been cancelled. It runs out in June. One of the important tools of the direct grants industry will cease to operate in June, and there is no sign that the federal Government intends to replace it. There have been major cutbacks in programs that the regions need; support in the fishing industry, in agriculture, and in research. There have been cutbacks in education and in major areas in which the regions have been able to develop specialized programs. If we allow that to continue the gap will grow wider and wider.

The only organization that has the ability to stop that and rewrite the balance is the federal Government, in effect the Parliament of Canada. The philosophy behind this measure is not the way it will happen. It is effectively separating the regions in trying to deal with the problem in isolation.

I would be much more supportive of a strong, effective department of regional industrial development which had a firm mandate, with real resources and a Minister that had real clout, rather than the fumbling Ministers we have seen in the last three or four years. We need a Department and a Minister that could exercise that kind of influence in Ottawa to ensure that the priorities set for the regions at the national level would be carried out with effectiveness and efficiency.

Much like a centrifugal force, if Canada is left to its market forces, and, in some cases, to its natural forces, it will tend to separate into fragments because the central agencies cannot hold it together. Generations of federal Governments have had the responsibility to try to control that centrifugal force through coherent leadership and direction from the central part of the country in terms of the national Government.

I submit that this program will not accomplish that goal or provide those opportunities. Western diversification is one of the most important issues in Canada in light of the problems I have already enunciated. If we allow the condition of native people in western Canada to deteriorate any further, we will face one of the most serious condemnations in our history. Canadians must come to grips with this issue.

We cannot allow the regions to become further alienated so that westerners increasingly feel they can no longer trust their national Government or federal institutions. This is already happening according to a survey last summer which showed that 30 per cent or 40 per cent of westerners would be prepared to vote for a western separatist Party. One hardly wants to see such a condition enhanced.

I believe this issue requires much more thought and creative ability than we see in this western diversification program. This is far more motivated by the political concerns of the Government rather than the national concerns. That is why I believe it is very important that we must and will have a new kind of western development program when a new government takes office in a very short period of time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—Official Languages—The Promotion of Bilingualism and Linguistic Minorities—Role of Government/Commitment of Conservative Candidates Concerning Bilingualism—Prime Minister's Position; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Regional Industrial Expansion—Government Funding and Policy/Cape Breton Development Corporation; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Environmental Affairs—Acid Rain—Plan to Reduce Emissions.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, are there not questions and comments at this point?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the Bill is first brought forward for second reading, the first three Members to speak are allowed 40 minutes. There are no questions or comments following those speeches.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I believe the principles of the department we are discussing are certainly supported by all Members of the House and people in western Canada. The principles are that we have an office that will attempt to diversify the economy of western Canada. This is something we have needed for many years.

As well, coming from my populist CCF roots, I am a strong believer in the need for more decentralization in this country to allow local people more input into decisions that affect their lives and their communities. I certainly support those two principles which are very important in the establishment of this office.

The first requirement in order to make those principles work is money. While I suppose every Minister will agree that they do not have enough money, my concern as a western Member of Parliament is that there may not be enough money in the program to make it effective.

Many other government programs have been cancelled, to be rolled into this particular department. The Minister tells us that there is $1.2 billion over five years, which is roughly $60 million per province per year. I recognize that he is treating the West as one region rather than four provinces, but it still works out to $60 million per year per province.

Furthermore, there is a debate about how much of that is new money and how much is old money. I am sure different economists will give different opinions, that the Government will say it is mostly new money, and many others will say it is primarily recycled money from existing programs.

The former Finance Minister in the Government of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who just spoke, announced the Western Development Fund in the amount of some $4 billion at that time. When one compares the $4 billion in 1980, which was spent over some four years, with $1.2 billion, it is not very much, even if it is new money.

I have said privately and publicly that the Minister is one of the more competent and sincere Ministers in the Cabinet. I am sure he will do a good job with what he has. I sincerely hope that this particular office is more than just the western Conservative political office in anticipation of the approaching election, and that it will really mean something and develop into a meaningful institution.

My friend from Winnipeg mentioned in closing the problem of western separatism and alienation. He referred to a poll in which a large number of western Canadians would consider voting for a western independence or separatist Party in certain circumstances.

This debate is crucial because it is important that western Canadians be not misled and that the office being established will diversify the economy in western Canada. It is important that it be an office that is funded with a meaningful amount of new money. If not, it will only add to the western alienation that already exists.

We know about westerners turning to new political forces. That is how my Party began, with the CCF and Tommy Douglas many years ago. That is where a certain brand of the Conservative Party began, with John Diefenbaker in the 1940s and 1950s in Saskatchewan and across the Prairies. There is the Social Credit Party, which arose with western populism, and the western Canada concept. We now see Preston Manning's Reform Party in western Canada.

There is a significant feeling in western Canada that we have not received our fair share from Confederation. The worst that could happen is to have a new and promising department with a promising Minister which does not deliver in the way western Canadians believe it should.

• (1640)

The program before us today had several false starts over the last year or so. It was formally announced last August by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he spoke in the City of Edmonton, Alberta. It was unveiled about three weeks before the Government had tabled in this House two studies detailing the reasons for a $79 million overrun at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am sure you recall that overrun, Madam Speaker, in the Department of the former Minister, the then Hon. Member for Longueuil who is no longer in Cabinet.

We have also seen since this Government took office a tremendous cut-back in regional and economic development spending. In 1984 the Government spent some $14.8 billion on economic and regional development. The Estimates for 1987 were cutback to $11.8 billion. There is a cut-back of around $3 billion which is a very big drop. In its place, we have the western diversification office, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and FEDNOR which is the equivalent in northern Ontario.

I really wonder whether or not, when all the calculations are in, these new agencies will actually have as much money to spend as the old regional development program itself. As I have said, there is a certain amount of déjà vu. I mentioned the Liberal Western Development Fund in 1980 of some $4 billion. I have also mentioned the fact that that was more money at that time than in our Budget today. In many cases, even that $4 billion is a bit of a phantom fund in terms of where all that extra money went. There are some more similarities. The bureaucratic head of the Liberal Western Development Fund was a gentleman named Bruce Rawson. After spending some time at the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, he has now taken up Deputy Minister duties at the Edmonton headquarters of the western diversification office.

I have already mentioned the fact that there is some $1.2 billion allocated to this particular department. There is a debate as to what is new and what is old. That is a very interesting debate because what we should be emphasizing here is that there are three program instruments, once the responsibility of DRIE that have ended or are about to end in the very near future. The first program is the Industrial Research and Development Program, IRDP, which will terminate in June of 1988. The lesser known program is the Western Transportation and Industrial Development Program, WTIDP. That is now finished but there are several ongoing projects which are funded fifty-fifty. The third program is the Economic and Regional Development Agreements, ERDA. These agreements expire in 1989 and 1990.

The Western Transportation and Industrial Development Program was re-jigged, in a sense, to become the western diversification office's main funding instrument, known as the Western Economic Diversification Program. Some of the ERDA agreements are the responsibility of Departments such as the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Science and Technology, Transport Canada, and so on. In other cases, the responsibility formerly with DRIE is transferred to the western diversification office. You can see, Madam Speaker, that the other programs that were there at one time will now no longer be in place.

The Minister stated in the House today a number of the purposes for the western diversification office and for the Bill before the House today. The Prime Minister himself, when he made the announcement, stated the mandate of the western diversification office. First it was important we have an office to co-ordinate and communicate all federal programs and activities that contribute to the economic development and diversification of the West. Second, the program will support business infrastructure to further the economic development and diversification of the western economy. Third, the office will undertake activities that will facilitate the creation of new enterprises and business consistent with our evolving international treaty policy. Fourth, it will represent the interests of western Canada in the development of national policies and the design of national programs to ensure that western Canada is effectively linked to decision-making in Ottawa. Those are the four things the Prime Minister spoke about, and the Minister also mentioned them earlier on this afternoon.

While the western diversification office views itself as a funder of last resort, its most interesting role is that of co-ordinator of federal programming in western Canada. Considering the important presence of larger and more powerful Departments such as the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Transport and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in the West, the co-ordinator function will take considerable determination by the Minister and his Deputy. It is easier to imagine these Departments locked in a tense policy struggle with the western diversification office, and with the western diversification losing in the end despite the good intentions of the Minister or the Deputy Minister.

This will be a small department without the clout of the Department of Finance, for example. There is a dispute taking place right now with respect to interest rates where the Bank of Canada is saying that interest rates should not come down because the economy is overheated in southern Ontario. I argue that interest rates in western Canada should come down because when interest rates are high they tend to drive up the Canadian dollar and make it more difficult for us to export to the United States. What kind of clout will this Minister have in his new department when it comes to arguing with the Department of Finance, with the Minister in charge of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Agriculture or, indeed, with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans? The Minister suggests that his regional department will be guiding the expenditures of departmental A bases. That will be quite an accomplishment given the eminence of the Departments I have already mentioned. Therefore, I am not sure what influence, in the final analysis, this department will have, particularly when the headquarters of the new department will be in Edmonton rather than in the City of Ottawa where there would be contact with other key policy makers in the normal course of duties.

Another role of the western diversification office is to act as a "pathfinder" which ties in with the role of being a "funder of last resort", and the Minister referred to that earlier. When a prospective applicant for funding arrives at one of the four western diversification offices, the first thing the officers will do is to determine whether or not the project can be dealt with by another funding agency or department. In other words, the first thing they will look for is a way to refer the applicant to another department or to another agency. It appears that only after an applicant has exhausted all other avenues, will the western diversification office step in and consider being a funder of last resort.

Judging from the projects announced thus far, and many offers have been made, as the Minister has announced in the House and elsewhere, the small and medium-sized businesses can take little comfort in the trend. Perhaps it is only a trend. I am not sure whether this will be the record after two or three years. So far, there does not seem to be much of a bias towards smaller and medium-sized businesses by this particular department. By way of example, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business expressed considerable exasperation with the western diversification office.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business is not exactly a radical socialist organization. It is a fairly conservative institution, as the Minister himself would agree. There have been many big ticket projects announced, including some which ought to have been funded through normal departmental spending, for example, millions of dollars for a salmon enhancement program that ought to have been funded through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in a regular departmental budget. Perhaps the Minister at some time will explain why this particular program, costing millions of dollars, was funded through the western diversification office.

The title of this Bill is the Western Economic Diversification Act. Some of the programs funded so far do not have anything to do with diversification. They are for development. We have nothing against development, but it seems to me that the main purpose here is to diversify the western economy. Perhaps the salmon program should have been an ongoing development program, funded through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

There are two notable large private sector projects that leave some people in western Canada wondering. The American-owned B.F. Goodrich company picked up some $418,000 for a project that would create no new jobs at the plant. This is money that it states will maintain existing jobs. The press release itself stated that there would be the creation of no new jobs in this particular case.

• (1650)

In addition, the second largest pulp and paper company in Japan will benefit from a $9.5 million contribution from the western diversification office. This is the second largest plant in Japan in the pulp and paper business. One might have expected that these huge companies could have generated their own funds internally or could have borrowed money from the banks or financial institutions, but that was not the case. On the one hand, it is B.F. Goodrich, and on the other hand it is Daishowa, the second largest pulp and paper company in Japan.

Perhaps it is only circumstance that in these first announcements some money has gone to large foreign-based companies. But it is a bit of a trend-setter that has many westerners in small and medium-sized business concerned about the priorities of the Government across the way.

It might also be suggested that $9.5 million that was offered to the shakes and shingles industry was to make up for past transgressions of the Minister of International Trade (Ms. Carney). There was the dispute in the shakes and shingles industry where the Minister of International Trade was on the hot seat in terms of how she had handled that portfolio vis-à-vis the forest industry in British Columbia. The Fraser Valley Independent Shakes and Shingles Producers Association is receiving the $9.5 million to attempt to put up U.S. demand for its products. All this is after that controversial tariff that was in place.

Since the outset of the program there have been complaints from many observers, and some people say most observers, that $1.2 billion over five years is a very small amount of money. I know that there have been complaints about this, and earlier I referred to the fact that it works out to approximately $60 million per province per year divided between the four western provinces.

The Premier of Manitoba has stated that Manitoba should be receiving some more money. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been quoted in the newspapers in Manitoba as stating that he supports the Premier of Manitoba and that Manitoba should receive around $300 million as its share.

If one looks at the projects approved from August 4, 1987 up to February 22, 1988, in a survey of the four offices, there have been projects worth $275.8 million allocated for expenditure. Using the information that we have, we find out that Manitoba appears to be losing the race. British Columbia has received commitments for $152 million; my province of Saskatchewan is not doing too badly with commitments of $95 million; Alberta has received commitments of $22 million; and Manitoba has received commitments of $6.8 million.

I suppose that is why the Minister of National Health and Welfare is a little concerned, and why Premier Pawley is rightfully concerned, about the moneys allocated. I am sure that the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) will rise in the House in the next couple of days and say that he too is concerned about the fact that Manitoba is thus far on the lower end of the scale.

I know that the Minister across the way is treating the West as one region, but even although he treats it as one region he must be very careful that there is equity between the provinces and equity between the regions within the region of western Canada. There are varying unemployment levels and varying needs from one province to the other, and indeed within the provinces. A concern that a number of people have is where the funding and the money is going.

Is the western diversification office going to be a vehicle for patronage? In 1984 the Prime Minister stated that it was only the Liberal Party that exercised this terrible thing called patronage, and that he would end that particular practice. Since the Prime Minister took office there has been an awful lot of patronage handed out to the friends of the Prime Minister and other people in the Cabinet of the Conservative Party that sits across the way.

In this particular case there is no board of directors dominated by Tory appointees, as is the case with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. However, a noted friend of the Tory Government, a gentleman named Michael Walker of the Vancouver-based Fraser Institute, stated, "Unfortunately the way they're going to spend it will be determined by political interests, not economic interests . . . the reason they're doing this is not to improve the western economy, but to improve their political fortunes".

That was stated by a friend of the Conservative Party in the Fraser Institute. I wish to point out that there is always a danger here that there could be considerable political patronage.

I wish to return to the $1.2 billion. I said it was very important that, if we do have a diversification office, it diversifies the economy of western Canada and it also has enough money to make it meaningful and significant for western Canadians.

Recently, when discussing the $1.2 billion, the current Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) stated, "It sounds like a lot of money, but in the over-all scheme of things it is not that great". I suppose you often hear, Madam Speaker, Members of Parliament saying that they need more money or more funding.

I remember the time when many years before I was elected to this place C.D. Howe lost the election to Doug Fisher in Thunder Bay when he rose in the House and said, "What is a million?" But $1.2 billion in western Canada over five years is not that much money, particularly because a lot of it is not new money. The Minister in charge of Grains and Oilseeds and in charge of the Wheat Board has stated, "It sounds like a lot of money, but in the over-all scheme of things it is not that great".

A Financial Post editorial stated, " . . . There is no doubt whatever that the potential contribution of Ottawa's western diversification initiative is truly piddling. Fifty million dollars per province per year won't diversify very much".

One of the more prominent members of the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), when speaking to the Downtown Rotary Club of Edmonton stated, "The recently announced western diversification strategy, though inadequate in its funding, is certainly a modest step in the right direction". The Hon. Member talks about it being "modest", going in the "right direction", but certainly "inadequate in its funding".

Frank Came, a senior officer with the western diversification Ottawa office, stated, "The fund is not all that big when you look at the amount of capital".

I wish to return to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. When he left the Conservative caucus approximately one year ago, one reason for doing so was his impatience with the Government's launching of the western diversification office. The following was written by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona in 1981 in response to the Liberal Western Development Fund. "The sending of Bruce Rawson to Edmonton as the federal Government's senior adviser on Western Canadian affairs will be seen by many westerners as another in a long series of gimmicks from a regime which sees our region primarily as a convenient whipping boy in an attempt to shore up political support elsewhere".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. When the House resumes debate on this Bill there will be 16 minutes left, if the Hon. Member wishes to continue.

It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[Translation]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

IMPORTANCE OF SAVING GULF OIL REFINERY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of intervening in the matter of the Gulf refinery of Montreal East in order to save the hundreds of jobs which are threatened and to protect Quebec consumers, thus respecting the unanimous resolution of the National Assembly of Quebec.

He said: Madam Speaker, first of all, I realize it seems a bit odd to be talking about the Gulf refinery today. However, we must not forget I put this motion on the Order Paper on October 1, 1986, and that despite the delay, and in the present circumstances, the problems of the petrochemical industry in Montreal East and what remains of the Gulf refinery are still very much with us.

I would like to start by providing some background to explain the reasons for this motion. First of all, all the facilities belonging to Gulf Canada had been purchased by Petro-Canada, and this included all refinery and service operations, all facilities located in Ontario, Western Canada and Quebec.

The House may recall that the Reichmann brothers and the Atlantic provinces had decided to sell the refinery and service station operations because, according to our information, the Conservative Government did not want Petro-Canada to invest more in upgrading these operations. Now, following the purchase proposals, another company, Ultramar, announced it would buy all installations in Quebec and the Maritimes, with the admitted intention—this is a British company—of closing down the Gulf refinery operations in Montreal's east end, while maintaining service operations. Gaz Métropolitain was bidding on the same installations, but unlike Ultramar, it intended to continue to operate the Gulf refinery as well as the service stations.

Under the rules of Investment Canada, the Conservative version of FIRA, Ultramar, as a foreign company, required the Government's authorization to purchase the Gulf refinery. We know that the Minister at the time, and Cabinet, in full possession of the facts, agreed. However, this was not what the National Assembly and most groups wanted, and at the time, several Conservative Members resigned to make the federal Government say no to Ultramar, because it had the power to do so, and I think it had a duty to say no to Ultramar, which was a foreign company. If two Canadian companies had been involved, the Conservative Government could hardly have been blamed for acting the way it did, because it did not have the power to prevent normal competition and thus would not have been responsible for the consequences.

But in view of the fact that a foreign company had to have Cabinet approval, and this is unfortunate, at that point there has even been Conservative Ministers who supposedly resigned over that. But that is not the important point to recall, in my view. It is rather the fact that at the time, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) on the Conservative side, who was Minister of Transport, stated that people in Cabinet, people in caucus and the Ministers when they gave that approval lacked important information. That statement did not come from a Liberal, or an NDP, or a labour leader—it was made by someone in Cabinet, who had access to information and who blamed her colleagues for blindly approving, and we know very well that it has been proven there was a lack of refining capability in Quebec and there were surpluses across Canada.

But it must be stated today that while there were 450 employees at that time, that company has now been converted to Kemtec and there are now 250 employees, and if that industry was not completely shut down it is thanks to the representatives of the Gulf refinery employees, that is the former refinery, Messrs. Chouinard, Baril and Tremblay who never stopped fighting. At the time they got involved, they formed a coalition and so on. It will be remembered that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) came to make a show, by signing the petition . . . he would not sign it in front of the cameras for fear of his Leader—he wanted to have a cake and eat it too.

But we succeeded in saving the industry, thanks to the actions of the Quebec Energy Minister, Mr. Caccia, and the Bourassa Government, with Lavalin corporation, to ensure that the company would be saved, and today there are 250 jobs, there is no more refining work done and consumers are not protected. The Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr.

Toupin) who was sitting on the Conservative side at the time, who was sitting in caucus, himself recognized the situation we are now in, namely that consumers are footing the bill for this Conservative Government's action! But at least some jobs were saved.

But that is part of a whole and we must consider that in the case of the eastern part of Montreal, as I was saying this afternoon, people have been pushing for 27 months . . . and today I feel that the people of East Montreal should be proud of the fact that they stuck together, that they took certain steps, that they were patient and of what they were able to obtain for the eastern part of Montreal, even if they had to go against what some people wished at the municipal, provincial and federal levels . . . and I know that it is not easy for part of a large center such as Montreal, even though the western part of Montreal is doing well, even though in some regions industry has been successful and has forced governments at all three levels to come up with what people have been asking for—

Mr. Speaker, I can remember when I first set up the Committee for the survival of East Montreal on October 15, 1985. At that time we had Vickers, Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheels, Laforge, Parisette, SKD. As a result, it is certain that we can be proud of the City of Montreal, given that $90 million have been announced to help develop East Montreal. The provincial Government will provide $105 million in financial assistance.

But what is important is not that the $50 million which the Quebec Government has committed were for upgrading and restructuring businesses but also, and here is where I touch upon the petrochemical sector, were earmarked for manpower retraining since it will be remembered that 150 of the 250 Gulf employees still have to be repositionned. A percentage of the workers have been able to take early retirement, but others need new placement. There is no doubt it costs money to re-train a refinery worker for a job with Bombardier in the building of engines, and the companies do not have that money.

So what is interesting in the provincial Government's announcement of $105 million is that, besides modernizing and re-structuring industries, the Government will allocate funds to industries who will settle in Montreal East so they will be able to change the situation—the Soligaz project that will contribute to the development of the petro-chemical sector comes to my mind—hire those people, finance their training and later recover the costs.

I think the provincial Government should be congratulated for its handling of that matter. Even though the federal Government did not deliver all the goods, as was to be expected, I am happy because there was nonetheless an amount of $37 million. If we had not applied those pressures, I do not think our needs would have been recognized. So the Government had no choice. It had no intention of helping the people of Montreal East, but it could not do otherwise from a political point of view. Municipal and provincial governments took the initiative, as were groups and various parties who forced the hand of the federal Government. Still, I believe that without that concerted effort, that money would not have been allocated to Montreal East, and today we can be proud.

There is, however, another timely and important project which the Quebec Minister of Energy, Mr. Ciacia, will have to address. He is currently pressing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to respond and to promote the Soligaz project in Montreal East not only to ensure survival of the petrochemical industry but also to create employment and so on.

Madam Speaker, I think that although the resolution is no longer timely as far as helping the Gulf refinery, it is still important to consider what renamed Kemtec is now doing, the important Soligaz project in Montreal East as well as the economic restructuration of that area . . . From articles that appeared in newspapers when the governments made the announcements, I suggest there was general agreement when the City of Montreal announced its action plan to restructure and help Montreal East. All the people present—management and union representatives as well as politicians—were unanimously satisfied.

If we look at newspaper articles reporting people's reactions, we see that when Minister Johnson announced before all the concerned parties the Quebec government action plan, everybody was openly invited without discrimination: management, union, municipal, provincial and federal representatives of all political stripes, and everybody was unanimous, everybody was proud.

When the federal Government made its announcement, once again as for many important issues dealing with Montreal, there were disappointments and disputes. Unfortunately, the workers at the Vickers plants and those at the Gulf refinery were unable to get relocated, but everybody expected that the federal Government would announce that an important part of the program would be an early retirement plan for older workers which would allow those workers to get a decent income and at the same time would have created jobs for younger workers as well as training programs which had been announced by the Quebec Government.

This clearly indicates the response of Canadians who are unbiased. When the Liberal Government in Quebec made its announcement, people at the meeting, representatives of the CNTU, the QFL and the Steel Workers as well as representatives of other groups who were not Liberal partisans were proud and pleased with that announcement, especially the human approach to the proposals made in the Pichette report which recommended that substantial funds should be earmarked for the modernization and restructuration of businesses and that he also allotted funds to support employability. All those who were there gave the same response to the City of Montreal even if they had not voted for the union but they were happy about it.

However when we read the comments from various sources, we even learn about the tantrums of the Hon. Member for Montréal-Mercier (Mrs.Jacques) at that meeting, which caused great disappointment. However, after two years or 27 months of struggle, I have to thank the federal government for its response even if it was strained.

However, there still remains the important issue of Soligaz and I know that the Tory members will rise as usual. They will say that the federal Government has done this and that. However each time you ask people involved in the industry, they realize full well that as far as railways are concerned, the decision of the Tory Government in 1984 has been disastrous and this is why they made a racket at the press conference, because they felt that the answer was inadequate.

You will be told just about the same thing by Mr. Beaubien of Vickers. As for Serge Baril, who is president of the union of Gulf refinery workers, and other workers at the former Gulf refinery and Kemtec, they will all tell you that it is a disappointment.

I therefore trust that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and some of his colleagues will have good news for us about the Soligas project. Or, as in the case of the development of the Old Port in Montreal, the space agency and the Port of Montreal, will it be necessary to form another survival or action committee for the Soligas project, which is related to the petrochemical industry and which will have a direct impact? At this very moment, Kemtec exists and is in operation. It is part of the former Gulf refinery. However, without the Soligas project, this industry will develop much more slowly and its future will be much more uncertain in coming weeks.

As I had 20 minutes, or until 5:20 p.m., Madam Speaker, I still have four or five minutes left. I would like the Conservative Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and the Conservative Members from East Montreal to take part in the debate. It is unfortunate that no Conservative Member representing East Montreal is doing anything in this matter. I would have liked to hear their views and I am sure that the residents of East Montreal would like to hear what those Members believe their Government should do. Unfortunately, they seem to have other concerns. As I was saying, I would like them to take part in this debate to tell us when the Soligas project will come on stream. When will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) have enough backbone to speak to the Energy Board and convince certain oil multinationals that this project is feasible? He should tell them that the project should be approved and the funds allocated.

When the Western banks were in trouble, the Government did not wait very long before taking action. There was no need to create survival committees, to go through all kinds of red tape and to organize protests. Someone at the Prime Minister's Office immediately said that the Government should help the banks.

When the farmers in Western Montreal were in trouble, and I have nothing against the fact that they received some assistance, they did not have to do anything, perhaps because the Conservative Members of Parliaments and Ministers of that region did their job. The problem in Quebec is caused by the Conservative Ministers and Members of Parliament who are not doing their job. We saw this in the case of the shipyards. We were led down the garden path in the matter of the frigate contract. Even the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) rose and said: It is not true; the figures are not right. His own Minister then said that the figures were true and accurate.

I believe that we were had in the case of the shipyards. Then, there is the question of the railway workers. Jobs have been lost and the CN is talking about transferring more jobs from Montreal to Toronto. In the matters involving the Gulf refinery, the footware industry, Domtar, as well as Canadair for the F-18's, there had to be public consultation, because there was a lack of truly efficient representation within the caucus and Cabinet.

I will conclude, Madam Speaker. Do you realize that there is no one with enough clout to sit in the Cabinet, no representative of the City of Montreal, with enough strenght, importance and competence to act as Parliamentary Secretary to protect the interests of Montreal.

There are four or five Tory Members, but they cannot do anything for the City of Montreal for lack of clout. When you realize that Mr. Péladeau, from Le Journal de Montréal, and Mr. Landry, from La Presse, had to pay for advertising spots to say: "Montréal, c'est spatial", when you realize that a Liberal MPP and a PQ MPP had to say that they feel Montreal is "spatial", the situation is very serious.

In Toronto, they do not have to do anything like this, for they have people to represent them. In Greater Montreal, give me the names of the Ministers or the Members of this House . . . Well, you can forget about the Ministers, for there is not a single one representing that area, and there is not even a Parliamentary Secretary to protect Montreal's interests.

Madam Speaker, I still have a few moments left. I dare hope that Tory Members, including the Hon. Member for Duvernay who advocated doing away with Petro-Canada and tax reduction on gas, will tell us that the Government will announce tomorrow that the Soligaz project will go ahead and that the Government will inject $50 million in it.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, as a Member for the Conservative Party, I welcome this opportunity to speak in response to my hon. colleague, who is not exactly covering new ground. He presented this motion in 1986, and today, it looks a lot worse for wear than the refinery in question. It is really too bad the Hon. Member is getting all fired up about things he should be thoroughly ashamed of, Madam Speaker. Today, I would like to put the closing of the Gulf refinery into its real perspective, and I will then try to get the Hon. Member's head out of the clouds, because as far as I can see, he still does not have his two feet on the ground, and it is really too bad we have only ten minutes to respond to this kind of 20-minute speech.

First of all, Madam Speaker, I don't know whether you realize that Gulf was the thirteenth refinery to close in Montreal East. At the time, in February 1983, the Texaco refinery closed. And believe it or not, I was all alone on Sherbrooke street with my small team of union people, and one of the youngest, one of the best is still with us, Mrs. Madeleine Parent. The union had invited my colleague, the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). The Hon. Member answered he could not take part in our demonstration because of party solidarity, and of course I always respect Members who stick with their Party. And what happened, madam Speaker? Texaco, with 420 employees, closed down. We never heard a word about this from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. In Montreal, in case my colleague does not remember, the four that closed were Texaco, BP, Esso and Gulf.

I may also remind the House there were four in 1982-83, with a fifth in 1985. However, as you know, Madam Speaker, in this kind of business, you don't lose 40 per cent of your production in twelve months. It was the destructive energy policy. And that is why I entered politics, because I did not like the system we had under the Liberals. Subsequently, in 1983-84-85, ten refineries closed, including four in Quebec. We never heard a word about this from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. He never came to see us in Montreal East. Never! In fourteen months, Madam Speaker, between February 1983 and May 1984, and I looked at my old notes, the former Liberal Government saw nine Canadian refineries close down, including three in Montreal. These closings meant that 1,870 employees were laid off, of which 1,080 in Montreal. During the last ten years, the demand for oil has dropped considerably, a total of 40 per cent in Quebec.

Why did it drop? Madam Speaker, you will remember the Liberal Party's subsidy program. I happen to be an expert in the field, and I got sucked in to this program. I said to myself: Okay, we will stop our dependence on Arab oil and plug into James Bay. And so we did. So what is happening today? Gulf refinery employees are out of a job. Texaco employees are unemployed. Madam Speaker, nobody wants to heat with oil, after all the publicity for electric appliances in Quebec, for James Bay and electric power. The campaign was so successful that today, now that 40 per cent of Quebecers have switched to electric power, the price of heating oil, which was 40 cents a litre under the previous Government's energy policy, has now dropped to 20 cents a litre. What about electric power? Every year, every month ... there is an increase. When it used to cost $700 to heat a house, it now costs $400. A house which used to cost $700 in heating oil thanks to the National Energy Program now costs $350.

My Hon. friend said earlier that it was bad for consumers. I should like him to explain to me why it was bad for the consumer who used to pay 60 cents a litre of gas, to pay 51 cents now in Laval. I have just received an hour ago confirmation that the price of a litre of gas in Laval is down to 51 cents a litre. It was 60 cents under the National Energy Program. Does this penalize the consumer! I know a number of consumers back home who feel that it is not enough and wish they were penalized more.

Mr. Malépart: Ask Wilson, he is the one who raised the price.

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, Wilson raised the price, because he needs these taxes to pay your debts, gentlemen. Let me tell you something: Even in spite of Wilson's tax on gas, you have not yet admitted that the price is still lower then before.

Madam Speaker, my Hon. friend said earlier that the Federal Government had to take $50 million instead of giving them. It gave us some money, but not much. How strange it is, for they killed Pétromont in Varennes. They have never been forced to put $50 million. They killed it. They said: Let's kill it. The Conservative Party has revived it. Go to Varennes or ask the Hon. Member representing this city and he will tell you that the people there are not going to forget what you did then.

Madam Speaker, the Liberals have never yielded to Pétromont. Maybe we have yielded in Montreal East. Under these circumstances, it is a pleasure to yield. Maybe we are more humane than others ...

Madam Speaker, it is possible that my Hon. friend did not do so on purpose, but he spoke against Ultramar. Just the same, Ultramar is a Canadian company. It is a company which is doing a good job in the Quebec area. At a Quebec caucus, Ultramar had promised ...

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, it is not enough for him to be employed by a British company to make the mistake of saying that Ultramar is indeed a British, and not a Canadian company, and that's why it had to apply to the Agency ...

Mr. Della Noce: Madam Speaker, Ultramar put it this way: If we buy the service stations we would even be prepared to to move our head office from Toronto to Montreal. I can tell you today that at least they did live up to that promise, not to mention the fact that Ultramar is quite an innovating company. They are not forever asking for grants. These people can indeed hold their own in the industry. There are 960 stations and 960 gas dealers, all of them quite happy, a far cry from what I witnessed in the past. It used to be that some oil companies did not exactly bring happiness to their . . . There is another one which my colleague opposite has forgotten. Let us stop blaming the Conservatives for everything. There must have been another government which created problems because they were there when we took over.

Madam Speaker, a great politician whom I have always admired even though he was a Liberal made a guest appearance on Radio-Canada's Le Point. I am referring to Mr. Jean Chrétien who openly admitted that this shutdown had been expected for some years. My colleague was not aware of that, but I will take the word of an outstanding politician like Jean Chrétien.

This also came about as a result of a 40 per cent drop in demand for petroleum products. My colleague forgot to mention that. There was a sharp decline because the Liberals gave us grants to switch from heating oil to electricity, so we are all responsible for the Gulf refinery demise because all those who made the switch did not stop to think that some day someone would be out of a job. The same thing can be said of a Member or any other Canadian who stops at a self-service station: that is like taking a job away from somebody. How many have done that? How many here can stand and say: I never did stop at a self-service station. Those who do are responsible for job losses. In gasoline distribution alone there has been a loss of 18,000 jobs, yet nobody said anything about that.

Another thing I should like to put on the record because it is important, Madam Speaker, is that to this day nobody knows who is telling the truth in the sale of Gulf, and journalists have yet to clear the issue. The offer from Gaz Métropolitain, is it from Conservative Members, from my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie, or from Mr. Pierre Martin of Gaz Métropolitain?

Well, Pierre Martin did mislead us. He was supposed to make an offer of about $120 million. He failed to come through before midnight Sunday, but he made another offer after the deadline. This man misled us because earlier in the week he had promised he would make an offer.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, Mr. Martin said that had he offered $120 million he would now be the owner of the Gulf refinery. Mr. Martin did acknowlege he was wrong.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker—I know I have little time left and that I cannot respond to all questions because my colleague had 20 minutes while I have only ten—better a bad medicine than a mere band-aid! Madam Speaker, we all know that often the best medicine is the worst tasting.

Then there was a great poet who once suggested that the less the cart carries the noisier it is.

• (1730)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Otawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I find it surprising that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has decided to use the debate on his motion to talk about the future of Montreal East, the future of its industry and its jobs.

Madam Speaker, first of all I think a few comments are in order, and I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie experienced a political resurrection after the election in 1984, when he became a Member of the Opposition. Before he was silent. In fact, he had hardly ever taken the floor in the House of Commons. Since 1984, however, he has become a man of the people. I appreciate his contribution because he does a very good job. However, why didn't he start sooner, before he became a Member of the Opposition?

Madam Speaker, I think it is pretty obvious that the deterioration of the industrial complex in Montreal East started before 1984. In fact, it started when the Liberals were in power, under the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs.

Madam Speaker, at the time the Liberals had 74 out of 75 seats in Quebec. They had all the seats on Montreal Island, but not a single Member from Montreal ever mentioned this question in the House of Commons.

How come unemployment, the deterioration of the industrial complex and plant closings started under the Liberals, when Prime Minister Trudeau, Pierre Deniger and Mrs. Hervieux-Payette all came from ridings near Sainte-Marie?

Mr. Don Johnson from Westmount, Marc Lalonde, Serge Joyal, Francis Fox, Monique Bégin—they all had a strong voice in the Liberal Cabinet. Nevertheless, the deterioration we are talking about today started under the Government represented by those Members and Ministers. As the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) pointed out earlier, even when the refinery in Montreal was closed down, there were no objections from backbenchers like the Hon. Member for Sainte-Marie.

Madam Speaker, the problem is not just one that was created by the Liberals. It is a problem that has continued to exist under a Conservative Government that has been in power since 1984.

Madam Speaker, the House will recall that the Prime Minister promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". Today, however, 20,000 people in Montreal East are unemployed and 10,000 are on welfare.

And despite the openness and progressive policies promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during his campaign in 1984, what did he do? He did his very best to ignore what was happening to the people of Montreal East.

Madam Speaker, the Conservative Goverment set up all kinds of task forces to assess the disastrous economic situation in Montreal East and make recommendations.

Need I repeat that unemployment has risen to disastrous proportions in areas like Maisonneuve, Rosemont, Rivière-des-Prairies, Pointe-aux-Trembles, and so forth?

So, Madam Speaker, even in 1987 we saw that unemployment in those districts was much higher than the average for the whole Montreal area.

Madam Speaker, under such a difficult situation, we would have thought the Conservative Government would take strong action, especially since there was a series of recommendations from various reports urging the Prime Minister and his colleague the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to act in order to stop the loss.

Last week, the Minister in charge of the Montreal area finally came up with his response after many months of delay. His answer was that over the next five years, $35 million of new money would go to industrial renewal in East Montreal.

So this Mulroney Government could not live up to the expectations of the Quebec people, and especially the people in Montreal.

With a financial package that is much smaller than the monies previously announced by the City of Montreal, $90 million over five years, and the Quebec Government, $106 million over three years, Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government abdicated its responsibilities. It has proved incapable of exercising the leadership that should be expected from a national government.

No wonder the two other levels of government preferred not to join with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister in charge of Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) at the time of announcing the respective programs. The Mulroney Government's contribution was so insignificant they would have appeared ridiculous.

Madam Speaker, it is a matter of deep concern that the views of the various parties that made recommendations, for instance in the report submitted by the committee for economic and job renewal in East Montreal, the CREEM, were totally ignored.

Madam Speaker, as a member for that area, you know that the CREEM recommended the establishment of a bureau to help companies in that area restructure and modernize, but those recommendations were ignored by the government. The CREEM recommended a policy of preferred procurement under which the Government would be bound to favour companies in East Montreal. Now, such a policy of concentrated procurement is difficult to support even for this party. However, buying Canadian is something that could be done, but governments ignore that. The CREEM recommended the establishment of a special training fund to help workers in restructuring companies.

Madam Speaker, this Government's only response was: We gave training courses to 500 workers. At that rate, it could take some 40 years before the 20,000 unemployed in the area are retrained.

Another recommendation suggested that East Montreal be identified as a target area in order that older workers may benefit from manpower adjustment programs, which was ignored by the Government, Madam Speaker, and also to put forward specific measures to promote the hiring of East Montreal workers. Once again, Madam Speaker, we could have followed that program, but those recommendations were made to no avail and once again were ignored by the Government.

So what should we say? We have to say that neither the Liberals who were in power previously nor the Tories who have been in power since 1984 have endeavoured to restore a real insdutrial basis in that important district of one of our largest cities, the Montreal metropolitan area. As New Democrats, we believe that in our quest for economic and social justice for our fellow citizens, we have to include the greater Montreal area. We must, Madam Speaker, accept almost all recommendations of CREEM, since there are people in the field who have made suggestions and drawn up a plan which would establish a partnership among the three levels of government which could co-operate.

It is clear that our Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has been brushed aside by the other two levels of government which were dissatisfied with the issues discussed by the three governments.

Madam Speaker, we believe that it should be possible for the three levels of government to work with the private sector; on one hand, to ensure the retraining of human resources in the area and on the other hand, to provide some industrial revitalization and ensure a true industrial future for that region, a real renaissance in Montreal East since it is one of the key sectors of the industry in Quebec and in the country.

[English]

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Madam Speaker, it is indeed regrettable that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) insists on taking up valuable House time to respond to an old problem that no longer exists. The closure of the Montreal Gulf refinery in 1986 did not and will not lead to problems with refining capacity in Quebec. Closure of the refinery did not lead to high prices for gasoline or home heating oil. As my hon. colleague has pointed out to the House, the rationalization of the industry in the middle of this decade did not create problems. On the contrary, conditions have improved.

• (1740)

After the Gulf closure, refining capacity, in fact, was close to being on balance with internal oil product requirements, and the province even developed a small surplus capacity as Quebec oil consumption continued to fall. This, of course, was directly due—and I must give credit where it is due—to the former Government's off-oil and conservation programs which we have continued. The fortunate fact remains, however, that Quebec has continued to enjoy a state of surplus capacity since the refinery closure.

My hon. colleague, the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), noted earlier that the closure had no effect whatsoever on the price of gasoline and home heating oil in Quebec. Gasoline prices, after deducting provincial taxes, are within five cents of the Canadian average. Home heating oil prices, with or without Quebec's provincial tax, are significantly below those in Toronto and Maritime cities.

The situation with independent retailers has improved immensely. The number of outlets operated by independents climbed from 256 in December, 1984, to 331 in 1988. The independents' market share also increased. In Montreal their share of retail motor gasoline sales rose from 13.4 per cent at the end of 1984 to 16.7 per cent in early 1988. This shows that consumers in Quebec have been well served and should continue to enjoy the benefits of free market prices and the competition which dictates oil product price levels.

The industry itself has also acted in a responsible manner in utilizing the components of the former Gulf refinery. Lavalin bought and recommissioned the Gulf facilities to produce petrochemicals. Bitumen bought the asphalt plant and resumed asphalt operations. Together with Shell's new catalytic cracker in Montreal and Petro-Canada's total residual oil "cat-cracking" unit, it is evident that the industry in Quebec, like the Government of Canada, is committed to efficiency and flexibility. They are well positioned to adapt to changing market conditions from which both consumers and industry can benefit.

You have the facts, Madam Speaker, on the healthy situation in Quebec, but there is another related area which is sometimes misunderstood when talking about Quebec's energy situation, that is, the question of security of supply. What would happen if Quebec's supplies were disrupted? Although this event is unlikely, it would not be prudent to dismiss completely the possibility of a short-term disruption. Ample surplus refining capacity exists in Ontario and the Atlantic provinces to meet any temporary interruption in Quebec supplies. Aside from Quebec's surplus capacity of 42,000 barrels a day in 1986, the Atlantic provinces enjoyed a surplus of 85,000 barrels and Ontario a surplus of 124,000 barrels.

Other contingency plans could also be implemented immediately, such as accelerated use of existing stocks. These inventories at the refinery and wholesale levels could be replenished within a few days using rail or truck deliveries from adjacent provinces. In addition, stocks could be imported from the United States and Europe in a week or two. The impact of a short-term supply disruption of inventories at the retail level would probably be marginal, if any. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that the industry, if ever faced with higher than average depletion rates from its storage facilities, would take the necessary corrective action to avert any supply tightness at the retail level.

Although a temporary supply rupture would result in a mild price hike, little likelihood exists of consumers going without oil. Suppliers will incur almost any cost to ensure that customers are not lost because of a temporary slow-down of product delivery.

In addition, the reduction in refinery capacity due to equipment failure or operating problems can also be off set by the ability of refineries to operate in excess of their rated capacities for sustained periods. In western Canada, for example, refineries have often run at 103 to 120 per cent of rated capacity for several months during periods of refinery expansions and additions.

It is clear to me that, in view of the available alternatives to meet supply contingencies, maintenance of surplus refinery capacity in Quebec is an unnecessary and expensive insurance premium.

The Government's contingency plans are not limited to domestic disruption. Canada's membership in the International Energy Agency, an autonomous organization within the organization of economic co-operation and development, further enhances the collective energy and economic security of Canada and its major trading partners. The 21 member participating countries have agreed to an emergency oil sharing system and to reduce dependence on oil imports through conservation, energy research and development, and the development of alternative energy sources.

The International Energy Agency is committed to determining requirements for an embargo on one or more IEA member countries and minimizing the adverse economic impacts arising from an international oil supply disruption.

Member countries are asked to maintain emergency reserves equal to 90 days of net imports—from which Canada is exempt, being a net exporter—to have ready emergency programs which would reduce consumption by at least 7 per cent, and to participate in the equitable sharing of available supplies.

In addition, Madam Speaker, Canada actively participates in an allocation supply test conducted by all IEA member countries every three years. The sixth such international test, called AST6, will be conducted from October 1 to November 30 of this year. The exercise tests the supply sharing and allocation mechanisms of each member country to ensure that each member can react quickly, efficiently, and judiciously in an international emergency.

The test scenario asks each country to establish, first, its domestic needs, and then to determine what it can give up for those countries that have less supply. Each country cuts back equally and shares equitably the available surplus. The worst case international scenario, for example, a total cut-off from Middle East sources, would precipitate no more than a 10 per cent depletion in supply. I submit, therefore, to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that Quebec enjoys an enviable position in terms of its energy security. Quebec's excess refining capacity, its lower dependence on oil and oil products compared with neighbouring provinces, its abundant hydro electrical and alternative energy sources, and its proximity to neighbouring supplies rule out any major inconvenience to consumers in times of a short or even long-term supply disruption, either domestic or international.

The partnership that Canada enjoys with the International Energy Agency offers protection on the international level that cannot be matched by any other group of oil consuming countries. These are just a few of the reasons why the motion by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie to intervene in the matter of the Montreal Gulf Refinery is in fact a non-issue and should, without question, be defeated.

The Liberals adopted policies that demanded correction by the new Government in 1984 and 1985. The adjustments in the Western and Atlantic accords and the rationalization which continues in the industry will be a benefit to all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Madam Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Saint-Léonard—Anjou in East Montreal, I wish to take part in this debate in view of its great importance for my region. First, I would like to congratulate my Hon. colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who has been fighting quite hard for a number of years and who was able to get results on quite a few occasions. At the same time, Madam Speaker, as my colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie mentioned, it is regrettable, not so much that Ministers from East Montreal and Parliamentary Secretaries are absent today, but that the only Government Member to take part in such an important debate would be a Member from West Montreal, and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) for taking part in this debate on behalf of the Government, even though he represents Western Montreal. Sadly enough, Madam Speaker, the Members from East Montreal are not here for this debate to defend their constituents.

Of course, we heard from the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who is quite familiar with gasoline. Before entering politics, he represented service station operators—

Mr. Della Noce: On a gratuitous basis.

Mr. Gagliano: I am not interested in knowing whether it was on a gratuitous basis or with pay, but he represented service station operators, and I remember seeing him on television taking part in big debates on this issue—

An Hon. Member: No tax.

Mr. Gagliano: —asking that gasoline not be taxed, and so on. The Hon. Member told us this afternoon that gasoline prices have gone down since the election of the Conservative Government, but he forgets that this is an international phenomenon. Gasoline prices have gone down, but he forgot that the Conservative Government has increased the tax on gasoline by 23 per cent. Without this increase of 23 per cent, since the price has gone down, it could be lower still. I hope that my colleague will correct this—

Mr. Della Noce: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

• (1750)

Mr. Della Noce: My colleague is perhaps not aware of the energy policy under the Liberal Government. If prices have gone down, it is because we at least had the courage to change this policy and to align Canadian prices on world prices. I just wanted to put things in their proper perspective, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that this is a debate and not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: I simply wish to point out that this is not a point of order, and that the Hon. Member is taking up the time allotted to my colleague for nothing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I can assure the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) that I was about to intervene, but that I thought it wiser to wait and see what the Hon. Member had to say before interrupting him. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Gagliano: Indeed, Madam Speaker, four Members from Montreal East are here to defend their region and they are all Liberals.

I should like to follow-up on what the NDP Member said a while ago when he referred to the Quebec issue. He may have forgotten about the frigate matter but it occured in Quebec City and, in order to win votes, in a demonstration of NDP opportunism, he announced that he was prepared to cancel the New Brunswick contracts, and his Leader had to come to Montreal to contredict him. So we have witnessed here again tonight another demonstration of NPD election opportunism.

Madam Speaker, the problems which Montreal East is facing are quite serious. It is a fairly industrialized area which, notwithstanding the current crisis, is faced again with serious problems, and it is sad to see when we realize the enormous difference between the amounts announced by the Tory Government not so long ago and those announced by the Provincial Government and the City of Montreal. Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, that the Quebec Government indicated its intention to invest $105 million in the Montreal East area, the City of Montreal $90 million, and the Federal Government a measly $37 million! After all the studies commissioned by the Federal Government with great fanfare it announced the meagre sum of $37 million and no pre-retirement policy. What will happen to this area? In this heavy industry, a great many employees are 45, 50 and even 55 years of age. What will happen to these employees who have lost their jobs because of the Tory policies and who will have no possibility of getting pre-retirement benefits.

I should like to emphasize here that it did not announce any pre-retirement program for Montreal East, but not so long ago, in August 1986, it did cancel the pre-retirement program in the footwear and textile industies. If memory serves this program was abolished in August 1986. Today, we are still waiting for replacement programs. In the announcement made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, there was no pre-retirement programs to help all these employees who have lost their jobs as a result of the recession of this Tory Government bad policies, and under different circumstances, to all those who cannot take an early retirement . . . Today, they have run out of unemployment insurance benefits and now they are only entitled to welfare benefits. It's unbelievable how a Government can fail to recognize its responsibilities to its own people.

Of course, there are definitely other matters which are important to Eastern Montreal! Earlier, my colleague the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) referred to the closing of refineries. He referred to the fact that under a Liberal Government, several refineries were closed. What did he forget to say, Madam Speaker? He forgot to say that when Texaco and other companies decided to close their refineries, it was their own decision. In the case of Ultramar, the Government had an option, it could have decided to intervene to help the sale between Ultramar and Gaz Métropolitain. On the contrary, the Governement did its utmost to prevent that sale.

Well, Madam Speaker, there is now an issue under consideration in Montreal East and it could be quite important, that is Soligaz. I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the Minister of Energy in Quebec, Mr. Ciacca, who has shown leadership in the matter and also to the member for Lafontaine in Montreal East who has become involved in the matter. Such is the role which a member of Parliament in co-operation with ministers, can play to bring the matter to a successful outcome and give some hope to workers so that their region may enjoy some economic development and create jobs. I hope that as far as Soligaz is concerned, the federal Government will play an active part and that citizens in Montreal East can hope to see that industrial and economic sector given a new impetus. I realize that I have only a minute and a half left and I would like to end my comments, Madam Speaker, to allow members of the Government and all other members to pass the motion of my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) whom I congratulate for his outstanding contribution since he has succeeded on several occasions in making the Government budget.

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, the Quebec market for petroleum products is in constant evolution, just like the world market for similar products. I do not think this is something new, especially now that we have just concluded a very healthy free trade agreement with the Americans. Markets are bound to become ever more diversified.

Madam Speaker, you know that Quebec is a leader when it comes to innovating, when it comes to new technology or know-how. It has demonstrated that in the past and will continue to do so.

The oil market has been declining ever since it peaked so high in the early 1980s, a time when we were victims of unstable markets over which we had no control. But since then Canadians—and Quebecers in particular—turned to their own source of energy, namely electricity. This is the kind of energy which we can control right here and whose economic fallout stays within our own borders. Quebecers were aware of these facts and the federal Government encouraged them to change their approach to energy consumption through grants to help them switch to electricity and even natural gas, so it was only logical that the oil market would shrink. Quebec . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—THE PROMOTION OF BILINGUALISM AND LINGUISTIC MINORITIES—ROLE OF GOVERNMENT/COMMITMENT OF CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATES CONCERNING BILINGUALISM—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, on February 23, I asked the Prime Minister a question about the division in his party on Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada.

First, I should point out that this Bill is now before Parliament and that, up to date, it has been the subject of a very short debate. The only leader of a political party to speak in this debate has been the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), who spoke on February 9, and I wish to congratulate him on his intervention, especially as he was Minister of Justice when the original Act was passed in 1969, and, in this capacity, be piloted the initial version of the Official Languages Act.

He is the only party leader to have spoken in the current debate in support of this very important piece of legislation.

I would like to remind the House of what he said at the time:

—I believe that now the time is right to proceed to consolidate and enhance the Official Languages Act. Now is the time to weave in the many advances made since 1969 to keep the Act abreast of a changing mood and a positive tolerance in Canada. Therefore, the time is right.

The Leader of the Opposition also said, and I quote:

We cannot proclaim equality and then simply let it happen by accident. We must adjust our laws to accepted constitutional principles. The laws of this country must accord with the Constitution. That is a primary impetus behind bringing this law up to date.

One of the reasons why we Liberals support this Bill is that it is part of a very long tradition of our party. We introduced the 1969 legislation and we naturally observed what happened between 1969 and 1984. We were the instigators of the statement by the House of Commons in 1973 and of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of 1982, and under the able chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), we supported the work of the Joint Committee on Official Languages between 1980 and 1984.

The Liberal Party has always considered bilingualism to be the corner stone of our electoral and political programs.

I must say that the position of the Conservative Party has changed over the years. I recognize that more and more Members of the Conservative Party accept and recognize the importance of bilinguism in Canada. There are quite a few Members representing various areas in this country, whether Quebec, the Maritimes, Ontario and even Western Canada, who can now speak both official languages, and I am quite pleased to say that the Conservative Cabinet is now made up of Anglophone Ministers who can speak French very well.

Unfortunately, there still remains a significant pocket of resistance, the BBC within the Conservative Party. And even if the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister try to minimize this resistance, there is no doubt, as reported in Maclean's, that there are bones of contention. And I quote:

• (1800)

[English]

With respect to the language revolt, as Maclean's cited, there is a profound difference of opinion between the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy), who have very strong views, on the one hand, while the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) and the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) have expressed a different point of view.

• (1805)

Probably more eloquently than any other group, the Winnipeg Free Press expressed this division when it stated:

The revisions to Bill C-72 which the anti-bilingual (Tory) caucus asked for this week would make English the language of federal civil service offices in all parts of Canada except New Brunswick and part of Quebec.

The article in the Winnipeg Free Press further stated:

This proposal is insulting to French-speaking people who rightly regard their language as being every bit as good as Mr. McKenzie's and worthy of equal treatment in the federal administration . . .

Language policy for Canada can be discussed in rational terms. Emotion is always present in the debate about clan symbols but the duty of responsible political leaders is to appeal as little as possible to hatred and as much as possible to reason. Proposing to stamp out the use of French in wide sections of the federal public service is such an appeal to communal hostility. The Mulroney Government should make clear in all parts of Canada that it will not for a moment entertain such insulting proposals and will not join in playing the game of clan hatreds.

[Translation]

It is clear, in my opinion, that the Prime Minister should imitate his predecessor and indicate to the Members of his Party that bilingualism is a fundamental policy of his Party and that, as Mr. Stanfield had refused Mayor Jones as a Conservative candidate, the Prime Minister, faced with the Opposition of a number of his own Members, should clearly indicate to them that they will not be able to be candidates under the Conservative ticket during the next election if they do not support the Government's policy on bilingualism.

I suggest that to act otherwise would not be in the interest of Canadians and would be, on the part of the Leader of the Government, speaking from both sides of his mouth, something I hope he would never do.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Members understands, I am sure, that our Government has reiterated on several occasions its commitment to make the Official Languages Act consistent with the Constitution and to promote both official languages in Canada.

Bill C-72 meets the commitment which our Government made in the 1984 Speech from the Throne and reiterated in the 1986 Speech from the Throne. It is consistent also with our commitment to national reconciliation which ranks first among our priorities.

[English]

The Member may also recall that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of our Party, as a brand new Member of Parliament in his maiden address in this House on October 6, 1983 stated:

There is no obligation more compelling and no duty more irresistible in Canada than to ensure that our minorities, linguistic and otherwise, live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that there has been no deviation from that initial speech and those initial remarks. Both the Member opposite and myself have lived through a Government which he served, and preceding Governments. I have been here close to nine years.

One of the real disfavours that can be done in this Chamber is to attempt to use linguistic policy to divide. I simply say to the Member opposite that, by choosing quotes from a particular Member in a particular newspaper or periodical, he is treading dangerously close to the line where he is seeking to use language policy to divide Canada.

That is not the perspective of this Government. We think that language policy can be used to unite us, to help us, and to express to all Canadians, be they of French-speaking or English-speaking origin, that they can live in this country, prosper, and experience equality.

It is not particularly helpful to concentrate remarks of that nature on something that might indeed inflame passions and emotions and lead to division. It is much more helpful if all Hon. Members of Parliament work together on the things which unite us and give us hope for the future.

• (1810)

That is the Government's perspective, and that is what we will follow.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—GOVERNMENT FUNDING AND POLICY/CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on February 23 I raised in the House of Commons my concerns about the funding and policy of the Government of Canada with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This issue is not something new that I have brought to the attention of the Government. I have been bringing the matter to its attention for quite some time.

I was somewhat concerned and disappointed with the Estimates tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Equally so I was concerned and once again expressed the view that the commitment of the Government of Canada to the coalfields in eastern Nova Scotia left a lot to be desired.

It has been clear from the outset that there is a bias against the facilitation of and indeed assistance to the coal industry in my province. Some years ago a former Premier of my province initiated a policy which indicated that Nova Scotians, as their energy policy, would utilize coal from eastern Nova Scotia to produce electricity for their homes and businesses. It has been a difficult task for many workers involved in the coal industry to sustain a reasonable and viable living in order to provide for their families.

Early on in the administration of the Government, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) took it upon himself to initiate a committee to look at the possibility of utilizing Canadian coal in Ontario Hydro. I have asked the Minister repeatedly to include representations from Atlantic Canada, in particular eastern Nova Scotia. To date that request has fallen on deaf ears, and there has been no action from the Government of Canada.

Coal miners in Cape Breton would dearly love to have the opportunity to provide their particular product to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation at a fair and reasonable price. They would also like to have similar opportunities to the ones which seem to be given to coalfields in western Canada in order to supply coal to Ontario Hydro. I would have hoped that the Minister, and in particular the Deputy Prime Minister, would have been able to see the importance of having that particular matter addressed in a positive way. Instead, that has not been the case.

With regard to the Estimates provided by the Government, no new moneys are being provided to the coal industry. What we see is a Government which is following through on a promise and commitment made by my Government in 1984. At that time, because of a tragic fire in the coalfields, a coal mine went out of existence, namely, No. 26 Colliery. My Government committed in excess of $200 million for what is known as the "Lingan Phalen".

We do not see any new commitments. We do not see any new moneys whatsoever in the Estimates for this year or for last year for the expansion of the coal industry on the Island of Cape Breton. It is a cornerstone industry, not only of Cape Breton Island, but of the Province of Nova Scotia. It is Nova Scotia's largest employer. It provides an economic spin-off second to none in the Atlantic region.

We have a Government which does not want to commit itself to the expansion of the coal industry. The idea that miners are supposed to go a mile or two underneath the ground, seven miles out underneath the ocean floor and merely reap the product from underground, take it out, ship it domestically or abroad, must come to an end. A new thinking, a new approach must be put in place. They have to get that product and they have to redefine the product in Nova Scotia in order to find more jobs so that it will be environmentally acceptable domestically as well as internationally.

In the Estimates there is no new money, none whatsoever to address that fundamental concern that all of us have in Cape Breton about our cornerstone industry. Union representatives, time after time after time, have impressed upon local provincial and national authorities that a clear unequivocal commitment was needed for our coal industry. The Estimates do not provide that, Madam Speaker.

Probably weeks prior to a federal election we will have the Minister responsible roll into the island of Cape Breton with a piece of paper saying "Now we are committed to the coal industry", and announce expenditures that may take place years and years ahead. But those expenditures are not in the Estimates, Madam Speaker, nor were they in last year's Estimates as to what the Government believes and where it wants to take the coal industry. It leaves many in my constituency, and certainly within the coal industry, suspicious, apprehensive and concerned about the future of that industry. I say that with great sincerity for we have witnessed in recent years the gutting of in excess of 600 jobs in the Cape Breton Development Corporation. That is a very serious matter.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary today will give us more information with regard to new dollars for the expansion of the coal industry in a variety of ways, many of which he already knows because he has heard me announce them. I hope he addresses the issue of why we in eastern Nova Scotia cannot be part and parcel of the committee which was struck by the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Member's comments, of course, are completely unfounded but, I might add, typically predictable.

The simple fact is that under this Government, DEVCO has just completed what was described in the Cape Breton Post as "the most ambitious capital development program in DEVCO's history". The Member has said that if this Government is committed to Cape Breton's coal industry, it should put its money where its mouth is. Well, how about the $218.4 million level of that concern? That is what we have invested in the development of the Phalen Colliery and the expansion of the Victoria Junction wash station. This, I might add, was done on time and within budget. For that, Cape Breton workers can take due congratulations.

If the Hon. Member were to look at normal ongoing capital expenditures in isolation of these major projects, he would see—and he knows—that DEVCO's capital spending is forecast to increase by more than 17 per cent this year, to $43.1 million. At the same time, DEVCO expects the coming year to be the best in its history with coal production approaching a record four million tonnes. Several daily production records have already been set in the first two months of 1988.

The Hon. Member was also critical of the level of funding directed toward research and development of new coal technology. Again, the Member finds it expedient to criticize success. Our commitment to Carbogel and related technologies is firm, and DEVCO, already acknowledged as a world leader, will continue to refine and develop this technology at a rate of about $2.6 million a year in each of the next two years at least.

The Government is behind the people of Cape Breton, their coal industry and their general economy like no government before it. The Member says we should put our money where our mouth is. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, there is $218 million for a major development at DEVCO; $110 million for Sysco modernization; $5 million to date on Carbogel and millions under the Cape Breton initiative. To date, projects under Enterprise Cape Breton have created over 2,000 jobs and there are more on the way. Cape Breton's labour force has increased by nearly 4,000. Industrial and commercial construction is up substantially for three years in a row. What about Clearwater lobsters, Highland Breweries, Multiflex Inventions, Magna, Cape Breton Mold, Nova Smolt, Highland Fisheries and many others? The Government has more than put its money where its mouth is in Cape Breton. The Hon. Member had better watch it because we are liable to keep right on doing it.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—PLAN TO REDUCE EMISSIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I do not know what it is like at your home. As you know, I have not been over to visit. However, if you came to visit my house, you would find that I have two really magnificent maple trees on the front lawn of my house.

I do not want you to get the impression that those are the only trees that I have around my home because I have a lot of them. I have some beautiful spruce trees, a sumac tree and cedar trees. We used to have an ash tree and an elm tree before they died and had to be taken down. We have a lot of trees around our home, but the two that I am really proud of, the trees I have a real feeling for, are these two magnificent maple trees.

My house is on a corner, the corner of McRae Drive and Hanna Road. One of these maple trees is on the front lawn on the McRae Drive side of the house right in front of our big living-room bay window. This is a wonderful tree. The house was built in about 1937 and the tree has probably been there for about that long. It has a lot of character. It has a bit of a lean, of course. There are squirrels living in that tree and it is just a wonderful tree.

On the Hanna Road side of our house, up in front of one of the bedrooms, there is another tree. That tree has not been there for quite as long, but it is a big, mature tree as well. I really have a lot of feeling for those trees, but both trees have a problem.

Every year in the spring, the leaves burst out and they mature, but around the beginning of July recently, those leaves have started to shrivel up and die. After they shrivel up and die, they fall off. They look terrible, the trees look terrible and it is a real tragedy.

I wonder to myself what is the cause of what is happening to those trees. Some people say it is acid rain. That may very well be the case, I am not sure. I have a neighbour down the street, Jim Hannah, who is a tree lover. He tells me that my trees and perhaps hundreds and maybe even thousands of others in our neighbourhood will die. He cannot say for sure that the reason is acid rain, but that is a good probability.

Even if it is not acid rain that is causing the leaves on my trees to shrivel up and apparently die, we know that acid rain has to be stopped. It is our job and the Government's job to stop acid rain because that is what the people of this country expect us to do.

I know as well that for the first time in the history of Canada, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has put acid rain on the agenda as a top priority in discussions with the United States and has made an enormous effort to make progress in having the Americans reduce their acid rain emissions. This is the first time that this effort has been put forward by a Canadian Prime Minister.

We know as well that we simply cannot force the Americans to cut acid rain emissions. The United States is a free and independent country. We are not going to go to war with the Americans and start shooting at them. Some people think we would not be able to beat them anyway. Regardless, we know that if the Americans will not agree to cut their acid rain emissions, we will not be able to do it for them and we will not be able to force them to do it.

At the same time, we have been trying to cut domestic acid rain emissions. We have agreements with all the eastern provinces to cut acid rain emissions by some 50 per cent by 1994. As the Parliamentary Secretary said, we are putting our money where our mouth is. There is a commitment of some $335 million on the part of the Government to help reduce acid rain emissions domestically here in Canada.

Now the U.S. comes along and says that is not a real commitment to cut acid rain emissions in Canada by 50 per cent. It is only 35 per cent. On top of that The Toronto Star has agreed with them editorially and says the Government is trying to mislead us. I think that is a bunch of baloney. You know and I know that the U.S. is always trying one way or another to weasel out of its commitment to cut acid rain. As far as The Toronto Star is concerned, this Government could raise the old age pension 1,000 per cent or 1 million per cent and we would still be criticized. I just hope its readers take those criticisms with a grain of salt.

It does not matter to me or to you, and I know it does not matter to the Parliamentary Secretary, what the Americans think or, for that matter, whether The Toronto Star agrees with them or not on this issue. However, it does matter to us what is going to happen to my maple trees. I want to hear tonight from the Parliamentary Secretary what she and her Minister and the Government is going to do to save my maple trees.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, let me say first that I thought the Hon. Member was advertising the sale of his house, but I know he wants to remain in the great riding of York East. It was a great introduction to his question which we wish to respond to in a more comprehensive way.

Canada set a clear, straightforward objective of solving this problem of damage caused by acid rain. To protect the Canadian environment, acid fall-out in all vulnerable areas must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year. We have found that damage occurs when the acid fall-out is above this number. We also have evidence that when acid fall-out drops below this threshold, recovery of the environment starts to take place. I visited the University of Toronto yesterday and its Environmental Studies Institute, and indeed they are finding some evidence in the Sudbury area of recovery starting to take place.

We have gone through the calculations to tell us how many tonnes of sulphur dioxide can be released into the atmosphere and from what areas in order to achieve the 20 kilogram per hectare objective. We have concluded two things. First, total annual sulphur dioxide emissions from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border eastward must be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes, or about 50 per cent of the emissions allowed in 1980. Second, the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the U.S. into eastern Canada must be reduced by about two million tonnes per year. Again, about 50 per cent of the 1980 level.

Canada is well on the way to delivering what it has to. More than 90 per cent of the emission reductions required to get down to the 2.3 million tonne level are in regulatory or program form and have been formally ratified in federal-provincial agreements. All seven eastern provinces have now signed agreements. That is a great credit to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), indeed to our Government. Under the program, the necessary emission reductions will be achieved by 1994 at the latest. Currently, eastern Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions are down to about 2.8 million tonnes.

We know that Canadian actions alone cannot solve the acid rain problem. For this reason we have been pressing the U.S. administration to negotiate a bilateral accord with specific emission control targets and schedules to reduce the transboundary flow of acid rain pollutants to acceptable levels. Canada's objective is based on sound scientific information and existing principles and obligations under international law. Canada recognizes that how the United States goes about reducing its transboundary pollution flow to 2 million tonnes is its business. Canada's legitimate interest is in the extent to which transboundary pollution flows are and will be reduced. Canada will judge all U.S. initiatives against this yardstick.

I welcome the opportunity to put on the record once again the Government's outstanding achievement in having federal-provincial agreements now in place in order to accomplish our goals in the reduction of sulphur emissions.

TAXATION

DESIGNATION OF AREAS—NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, recently, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has received close to 1,000 letters from the residents of Geraldton, Ontario protesting their exclusion from northern tax benefits. As well, I wrote to the Minister in December with a proposal to make the current regulations fairer. To date, there has been no response from the Minister.

On Monday of this week, each resident of Geraldton, Ontario received by mail directly from Revenue Canada a copy of the tax guide along with the form required to claim the northern benefits tax deduction. This mailing was taken to mean by taxpayers in the community that the Minister had changed his mind. Several residents have now mailed in their returns claiming this northern benefit. Revenue Canada, however, continues to state that Geraldton does not qualify.

I call on the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to take the necessary action to eliminate the confusion and to name Geraldton, Ontario as a prescribed area immediately, giving the residents the tax deduction they deserve, which they are now denied merely by being a few kilometers short of the required distance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PAGES AND MEMBERS HOCKEY GAME

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last night the all Party MP hockey team playing against the House of Commons Pages won the gold. With a million dollar goalie, defence and forward lines, the MPs scored seven goals to five with Dave Dingwall being the top scorer.

Stephen Cassivi, the able captain and coach of the Pages, starred by beating the indomitable MP goalie, Moe Mantha, three times while Suh Won Kim and Dominic Peltier-Rivest each put the rubber in once. It was a hard fought battle throughout with both teams performing with skill and excellence. The silver winners, cheered on by their fellow Pages, one with a bugle, kept the MPs on their toes and the gold winners were not known until the final whistle.

Every MP came out of the game with an increased admiration for all of the Pages. Their skill, dedication and sportsmanship made each of them worthy of an Olympic medal. With young people like these Pages we can be sure that Canada will be in good hands in the future.

Viva the Pages!

TELEFILM CANADA

REQUEST NOT TO REVIEW IMMEDIATELY JEAN SIROIS' MANDATE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Communications not to renew the mandate of Telefilm Canada President Jean Sirois before the next meeting of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

At my request yesterday the committee agreed to ask Mr. Sirois, Mr. Peter Pearson and other individuals to give evidence.

[English]

I think it would be appropriate for the Minister to hold off on the reappointment of Mr. Sirois until the committee looks appropriately at the allegations that have been made, including allegations of aggressive, strident interventions at every level of the decision-making process, allegations about the expense accounts of the chairman and allegations about the finances of Telefilm Canada. It would be appropriate to wait before reappointment, if any at all.

REFUGEES

ALLEGED DISTORTION OF VOYAGE OF S.S. ST. LOUIS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament must rely on their researchers to provide accurate information on issues they raise in the House. On February 1 and 2, two members of the NDP, speaking on Bill C-84, distorted the historical record of the tragic voyage of the S.S. St. Louis, a ship full of Jewish refugees fleeing Europe.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) stated, as recorded on page 15512 of Hansard, that the Canadian Government forced it to return to Europe. Further, he said that sources tell us that virtually all these people eventually met death. This is not what the historical record states.

The Canadian and American Governments communicated to the ship that it would not be allowed to disembark any of its passengers if it came to one of their ports. The ship spent its entire voyage in a Cuban port or steaming off the Florida coast. At no time did the ship even approach Canadian territorial waters.

Of the 907 people aboard the S.S. St. Louis, France took 224, Belgium took 214, Holland took 181 and Britain took 288. Of the 907, 528 escaped the Nazi Holocaust.

The St. Louis incident was a dark day for civilized society and is an example of the brutality of which mankind is capable. However, the use of history must always be exact—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

TAXATION

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of Members of the House yet another unfair tax policy of the Tory Government. Sixty-five communities in Nova Scotia are on the qualifying list for the northern allowance, a standard tax deduction for residents of isolated areas effective for the 1987 taxation year. This deduction could mean $800 to $1,200 extra in taxpayers' pockets. Not one community in either Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick is on this qualifying list.

To make matters worse, many of the communities on the prescribed area list do not even meet the set criteria, yet they are eligible for the deductions anyway. It appears that many other maritime communities deserve this tax assistance as much as those 65 Nova Scotia communities already on the list. Why this B.C. preferential treatment? The whole matter reeks of unfairness.

The people in the western end of Prince Edward Island and elsewhere in the Maritimes deserve an explanation. I now urge the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to give these taxpayers the explanation they deserve.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, recently, I had the privilege, as a member of the External Affairs Committee, to travel to three Middle Eastern countries at the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Our purpose was to gather information and to learn more about the conflict from leaders and elected officials as well as from the people who live in the villages of the West Bank and Gaza.

As a Canadian parliamentarian, I was disappointed and frustrated in witnessing a conflict involving loss of life and human rights violations which are unacceptable, regardless of political differences.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to denounce the human rights violations which have been occurring during the past several months and to strongly support an international conference which will begin building trust and confidence between Israel and the Palestinian people.

We as Canadians pride ourselves on tolerance for each other's religious and cultural differences. While we are not perfect, I urge countries in the Middle East to follow our example.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER TO LAHR—SPEECH TO ARMED FORCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Tory agenda for turning Canada into a banana republic came closer to completion the other day with the spectre of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) giving a political speech to the army in Lahr, conjuring up images, not of a secure Prime Minister of a mature, democratic nation, but of some tin-pot dictator who is so insecure that he has to abuse well established democratic traditions in the way the Prime Minister did in Lahr.

The Prime Minister brought shame on himself and he brought shame on Canada. It is something that all Members of Parliament, if they have a shred of respect for parliamentary tradition and for the traditions of Canada, would find unacceptable.

LIVESTOCK FEED ASSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the livestock feed assurance program in Manitoba is failing to meet the needs of Manitoba farmers. This program is intended to insure hay production in Manitoba and is operated under the auspices of the Manitoba crop insurance program. It is funded 50 per cent by the federal Government and 50 per cent by the farmers. The province provides the administration. It is that administration which is failing the farmers.

A large number of farmers in my constituency are steaming hot mad at the NDP Minister of Agriculture and have informed me that the entire structure of the program is not serving their needs. If the program is not serving the needs of Manitoba farmers, it is not serving the needs of the federal Government.

Farmers, who last year had their first hay production failure in 20 years, failed to get a pay-out under the program. The program is poorly structured, poorly administered, and poorly designed. I ask the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to investigate the problems in that program to ensure that money belonging to the farmers and the federal Government is being properly utilized. I ask the Minister to help make sure that the interests of Manitoba farmers are well taken care of.

PAGES AND MEMBERS HOCKEY GAME

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last night a great tradition was upheld at the annual hockey game between Members of Parliament and the Pages. The game, superbly organized by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was full of action and excitement. After three periods of play the MPs and Pages were tied at five goals each. The decision was made to push the game to a fourth period. The fans were ecstatic. There were many confrontations but with the strategic coaching and strong leadership of the Hon. Member for Bow River, the MPs put on the pressure. The Pages kept the MPs in check but to no avail. Two quick goals scored late in the fourth period allowed the MPs to take home the trophy with a seven to five victory.

I join with my friend from Bow River in thanking and congratulating the Pages for exhibiting enthusiasm and sportsmanship. As well, on behalf of all Members of Parliament and all the Pages, I would like to salute and thank the Hon. Member for Bow River for organizing this annual tradition of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINES AND MINING

FLOW-THROUGH SHARE PROGRAM

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the Holiday Inn 200 leaders from across Canada involved in mining, prospecting, and investment, along with municipal representatives, witnessed the White Knight of the NDP come in on his horse to say to them that he now believes flow-through share funding is vital to the mining community across the country. Does he really believe that Canadians have short memories and do not remember statements made by him in Kirkland Lake in February, 1987, to the effect that only wealthy investors benefit from flow-through shares? Does he think they do not remember his Party's critic who voted against amendments in this House to extend flow-through shares because he said it is only Bay Street that will benefit?

It sickens me to see that with a little smell of power the socialist party will throw its principles out the door. Since 1982 Timiskaming knows where its Member of Parliament stands. He believes that the socialist party still does not know what flow-through shares are all about.

RAILWAYS

BRANCH LINE REHABILITATION PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF BENGOUGH SUBDIVISION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the west is betrayed again. The Government has failed to honour a commitment to spend all of the money allocated to the rehabilitation of railway branch lines in western Canada. After four years of Tory Government, $36 million of the money allocated has not been spent. In the coming year only half of what is allocated is to be spent. The Government is deliberately trying to jeopardize the existence of many hundreds of miles of branch lines in order to abandon them and force grain farmers to truck their grain to places many miles further away.

The Bengough subdivision from Weyburn to Willow Bunch is one in which I and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) have more than a passing interest. Some $10 million was spent on that line over two years ago. Some $13 million more must be spent to complete the job. I call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to immediately announce the inclusion of the Bengough subdivision in this year's program, and all of the remaining lines in 1989.

Oral Questions

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT—REPORT OF SENATE TASK FORCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Senate task force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, published its report. The report makes sensible recommendations with respect to appointment mechanisms for Senators and Supreme Court judges. It addresses the outstanding questions of territorial representation at First Ministers Conferences, changes to territorial boundaries, and the eventual creation of new provinces.

• (1415)

The task force listened to northern Canadians who so often before have been disregarded. Their recommendations are sound and ought to be incorporated into the Canadian Constitution.

The Senators, Sir, are to be complimented on a job well done.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LE DROIT—REQUEST THAT PARTIES RETURN TO NEGOTIATING TABLE

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians residing in the National Capital Region, particularly francophones, are wondering about the future of the newspaper Le Droit whose survival is threatened should the strike last too long.

Le Droit has been the carrier of the francophone torch and the standard bearer of its cultural dissemination since 1913. We should not let this symbolic flame go out, especially here in the National Capital Region, the mirror and reflection of bilingualism in Canada, the main centre of Canadian biculturalism.

It would be a deplorable and even disastrous blow to information and democracy if francophone residents of the region were to lose their privileged spokesman.

This is why I strongly urge both parties in this dispute to resume negotiations in an effort to find an honourable and dignified solution, even though they may have to backtrack from their respective positions. By so doing they would preserve an essential asset of Canada's heritage.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DECISION TO PHASE OUT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Finance. In June of last year the Minister of Finance announced, to the applause of the New Democratic Party, that he was eliminating the 33 per cent earned depletion allowance for flow-through shares to investors in mining companies.

That may sound technical to a lot of Canadians, but it means thousands of jobs to miners in Canada. Flow-through shares have helped sustain thousands of jobs in small mining companies and small mining communities across Canada.

The Liberal Party was opposed to the Minister's decision then and is opposed to that decision now. This program was working. It was bringing hundreds of millions of dollars of investment into the mining industry. Why is the Minister phasing it out?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member wanted to leave the impression that this is only being phased out on flow-through shares for small mining companies. It is being phased out for large mining companies, large oil and gas companies, as well as other players in the industry. It is being phased out in total.

The Hon. Member has asked precisely why we are making this change. It is part of the over-all balance in tax reform, part of the way in which we are reducing tax expenditures, tax breaks, and tax write-offs, as a means of broadening the tax base so that we can reduce the personal tax paid by 85 per cent of individual Canadians across Canada.

That is the substance of the reason. It is part of a broad reduction in tax expenditures, tax breaks which, as my colleague knows, have been criticized by the New Democratic Party as providing a tax write-off to wealthy investors.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party seems to have changed its mind on the issue of earned depletion.

POTENTIAL LOSS OF MINING COMMUNITIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the measure which the Minister has in his so-called tax reform will eliminate hundreds of smaller mining communities in the country if it is persisted in. The miners in Canada are rightfully insulted by the twisting, turning, and phoney rhetoric of both the Government and the New Democratic spokesman on this particular issue.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated yesterday that the Government is prepared to consider other measures "if the tax reform changes put forward affect the viability of mining operations".

In other words, the Government is prepared to let the smaller mining communities in the country close down before it considers whether to take any action. Why did the Minister not analyze the potential effect on the mining communities of Canada before he took this decision and introduced it as part of his so-called tax reform?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me caution Canadians about the overblown rhetoric that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has used. This change will not eliminate the mining communities in Canada. This will not eliminate the centres. It will not—

Mr. Fulton: It will create 200 Scheffervilles.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It will not eliminate the flow-through shares—

Mr. Fulton: Two hundred Scheffervilles.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member in the back row would listen, he might learn something. It will not eliminate the flow-through share mechanism.

In fact, the Leader of the Opposition is very well aware that from the time of the initial proposal in June last year to the proposal that I announced in December, and which is on the table now, we made some significant changes. We increased the time when earned depletion will be available. Second, we made two significant changes that will maintain the attractiveness of the $500,000 capital gains exemption which the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has said on many occasions he would pull out altogether. He is talking out of both sides of his mouth, the same as the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

AID FOR THE UNDERPRIVILEGED REGIONS—REQUEST FOR RESISTANCE TO AMERICAN PRESSURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why won't the Minister admit his Government made a serious mistake, a mistake that according to the Quebec Minister of Mines is due to a lack of information?

Since he failed to give any economic reasons for making this decision, will the Minister admit that the decision was made because of pressure from the Americans who don't like programs that support our country's disadvantaged areas?

Mr. Speaker, why won't the Minister stand up to the Americans for a change? Why won't he defend this country's disadvantaged and remote areas and reverse his decision? Why not?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should be aware that one of his colleagues asked that question just yesterday and I say—

Ms. Copps: We did not get an answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will give the answer a little bit more strongly than I did yesterday. That is a red herring. It is absolute garbage. We brought in the flow-through share changes in June, 1987. If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would reflect on that, he would see it is four months before the free trade agreement was signed.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Right during negotiations.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): After the free trade agreement was signed we made changes to improve the flow-through share mechanism. I say to him and to Canadians that the flow-through share mechanism stays in place. We have improved the flow-through share mechanism as a result of the changes in December.

We also said that we are monitoring the situation. As my colleague said yesterday, we are prepared to make changes should circumstances necessitate it.

I also say to him that there has been a significant drop in equity investment financing from the first nine and one-half months of last year, of $7 billion to approximately $450 million. That has affected flow-through share financing and has affected equity financing for all types of issuers in Canada.

MINING DEPLETION ALLOWANCE—POSSIBLE EXPANSION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if what the Minister of Finance just said is true, why does he not decide to keep the earned depletion on flow-through shares?

We know that the trade agreement with the United States has eliminated the possibility for the Canadian Government to have a made in Canada policy on investment, energy and culture.

There is a new twist. The Minister said that our point of view was garbage. I do not know whether he would agree with the statement made by Clarkson Gordon, a very well known and respected accounting firm. That firm said in its publication of January 15, 1988: "Although the existing tax incentives will be grandfathered according to the trade agreement, it is important for Canadian business people to recognize that expanding the list of such incentives could induce a responsive trade action by the U.S".

• (1425)

Does the Minister agree with that interpretation by Clarkson Gordon of the deal he signed himself and which, in a general spirit, says that the Government has put aside the possibility of helping the regions of this country with tax incentives?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Clarkson Gordon may be very good accountants but they are not very good trade specialists.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is no basis for them to make that particular comment. Flow-through shares and tax considerations related to flow-through shares are generally available in the tax law to any Canadian company. Any changes in that are not governed by the terms of the free trade agreement.

[Translation]

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, as I see it, the Minister has a mental block and refuses to understand the problem. We are not saying the mechanism was abolished, we are saying that now that earned depletion has been abolished, the mechanism is no longer operational. That is what 250 people from all our regions came to tell us.

I would therefore ask the Minister, after the representations made to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to all Members of this House who attended yesterday's symposium, whether he does not agree that he made a mistake—isn't he admitting as much now?—by not bringing back the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance before the Trade Agreement is implemented, as they would like him to? If he does not change his mind more regions will lose jobs, investment will disappear and although the Minister won't admit it now, he will not be able to reintroduce earned depletion if the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement is approved.

[English]

Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that he knows as much about it as does Clarkson Gordon. The Hon. Member said I do not understand the significance of flow-through shares. I am the Minister, I should remind him, who made improvements to the flow-through share mechanism in 1986. I am the same Minister who made improvements to the flow-through share mechanism in December of 1987. So I can indicate by my own actions that I am quite aware—

Mr. Garneau: Why are all those people coming here to complain, then?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks why the people have come to complain. I think those people are concerned about the state of play in the equity markets in Canada which have affected—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, no!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —flow-through shares, and I admit that. I understand that. But it has also affected equity financing on a broad range of companies. As I indicated, and I repeat the numbers, $7 billion worth of equity financing was done in Canada up until the stock market crash on October 19. Since then, I think it is $450 million of equity financing which has taken place. That has affected all parts of equity financing.

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, we are monitoring the situation closely. We are holding discussions with the industry and will continue to hold those discussions in order to understand better its point of view.

LABOUR

IMPLEMENTATION OF OLDER WORKER ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Later today the Economic Council is releasing an important statement on labour adjustment policies for trade sensitive industries. Such policies are absolutely crucial, especially for older workers. Statistics Canada, for instance, found that 41 per cent of such workers dropped out of the labour market when they lost their jobs through a plant closing.

Given these facts, why has the Government still not put into place its program of older worker adjustment assistance which it announced in the 1986 Budget? Can it not see that this lack of action is a human tragedy?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to that particular question. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, has had numerous discussions with the provinces. This is a joint program with the provinces. Something in the order of four provinces have agreed to participate in it. He is endeavouring to encourage other provinces to participate in what we believe is a very important program. We want to move it along. As soon as we have the agreement of the provinces we will have further announcements to make.

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION—EFFECT ON OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact it has been over two years since this discussion took place with the provinces. Surely at this stage the Government should see that it has to move, and that it has to move itself, otherwise we will have situations in which thousands of older workers will be thrown on the scrap heap in what is a human tragedy that the Government should be doing something about.

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure whether there is a question there or not. The Minister may want to respond.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was a question. I think it was a reiteration of the points that the Hon. Member made in the preamble to his first question.

We believe that it is important to involve the provinces in a program such as this because of their involvement in the labour market, because of their involvement with labour policy and because of their involvement with adjustment policy in the broader sense, as are we in the federal Government. We will continue to work with the provinces.

I hope that the Hon. Member, in his attempts to focus solely on the federal Government, will not ignore the importance of the provincial Governments in this matter and direct some of his attention to encouraging them to come on board in regard to what we believe is a very good program.

ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Government is just trying to pass the buck. I wish to ask this of the Minister of Finance. What will the Government do to help people such as Robert Pereault, who is 49 and was laid off for a year from a closed plant, and who now must pay his UI back because he has finally received severance pay?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raises an example, and there may be many more. However, I do not think that the preamble is the place to list them all.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is much difference from the first two questions in what the Hon. Member has said in his third. We both agree on the importance of the program. We also believe that the provinces should be in there. We are continuing to work with them. I hope that he will support us in that.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

ALLEGED EXCEPTION IN RESPECT OF OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, why pass the buck to the provinces in the case of the older workers when, in the past, we had totally federal programs for older workers and when we still have federal employment programs for women, native people, the disabled and minorities? Why make an exception for older workers? They are just as important as the other groups.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware of the components in the Canadian Jobs Strategy that are there to help train older workers who have lost jobs and who want to move on to a new ones. The Canadian Jobs Strategy is a very important part of the program that we brought in as a Government.

What the program for older worker adjustment does is add another dimension to that which we think is important. We also think it is important to have the involvement of the provinces, as I have said in answer to previous questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPORTATION BY SOUTH AFRICA OF CANADIAN STRATEGIC MATERIAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I have here a copy of an order by South Africa for germanium crystals that can be used for infrared weaponry. The Department of External Affairs did not reject this order.

My question to the Secretary of State is this: Doesn't this point to a weakness in Canadian sanctions, when certain types of equipment that can be used to develop weaponry can still be exported and shipped to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the paper to which the Hon. Member just referred. I will have to look at this document and make inquiries, and once I have all the details, I will be in a position to answer the Hon. Member's question.

[English]

TOTAL EMBARGO ON EXPORTS TO SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is as follows. Given recent events is it not time as a part of the imposition of universal, comprehensive and mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa that all exports to South Africa be embargoed immediately?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member would agree that if Canada were to take a decision of that kind we should not take it because one order had gotten through the regulations that are now in place. I will look at the questions raised by the Hon. Member and at the documentation with respect to this particular case.

He knows, and I will be referring later to it this afternoon, of the Government's policy with regard to economic sanctions. He knows the concern and the outrage that all of us in the House feel with respect to the recent developments in South Africa. I believe he shares my view that what is important is not for Canada to make dramatic gestures that might end up empty, but rather for Canada to try to continue to find ways in which we might have a positive influence upon events in South Africa and not leave abandoned people who are now the opponents of apartheid in that region and in that country.

FINANCE

IMPORTANCE OF MAINTAINING FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns flow-through shares because these are important to Quebec.

On October 1 last year, I asked the Minister not to tinker with flow-through shares and told him these tax measures were essential to the economies of Northern regions like Abitibi-Temiskaming.

My question is this: Is the Minister again going to ignore the fact that flow-through shares helped Abitibi-Temiskaming bring its unemployment rate down from 23 per cent to 6 per cent and attract investments worth several hundred million dollars annually, investments that totalled half a billion dollars last year?

Why is the Minister turning his back on regional economic development? There is more to Canada than just Toronto, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again, this is an example of overblown rhetoric. The Hon. Member accuses us of denying all regional development in that part of the country. That is simply unfounded. It is not true.

What we have done is make some adjustments in the flow-through share mechanism consistent with the objectives of one of the former Parties of the Hon. Member, in which there was some suggestion that there were practices leading to abuse of the system. We have toned down some of the elements of the flow-through share mechanism in order to avoid that type of abuse. But the flow-through share mechanism remains in place. We improved the elements of the flow-through share mechanism in the December 16 paper on tax reform.

As I have indicated, we are continuing to consult with the industry to monitor the situation and to get its understanding of the effects of these changes.

[Translation]

IMPACT ON REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

What amounts to the abolition of flow-through shares will have a direct impact on economic development. What does the Minister intend to do to help Abitibi-Temiskaming and our small mining companies? Is he again setting himself up as the defender of the big multinationals, or is he prepared, for a change, to defend the interests of small mining companies in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the program was not abolished but revamped by the Minister of Finance.

Second, I can assure Hon. Members that all sectors in my Department, including the mining sector, are keeping a very close watch on developments, and as in other cases, the Government will make a contribution if the need arises.

Third, I fail to see why the Hon. Member is attacking big corporations in the mining industry.

Major investments in our industries have always been well received, and have always been welcomed by all Members of this House. In the mining industry, investments are always welcome, whether they come from big corporations or junior mining companies.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

DECISIONS RESPECTING ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, as stated in its brochure, is to provide "financial and other resources for Atlantic entrepreneurs" and "working with provincial governments—to improve the entrepreneurial climate".

Why did the Minister state yesterday, "Some of the Premiers may want us to just turn over money to them and let them spend the money, but that is not something that is going to find favour with us".

Is that why there are more employees of this agency in Ottawa than there are in Newfoundland? The Prime Minister stated that the decisions would be made in Atlantic Canada.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman sounds like he has a tear in his tights.

We are working in co-operation with the Atlantic Premiers. Senator Murray, the Leader of the Government in the other unmentionable place, visited all four Atlantic Premiers within the last two weeks. We are working in co-operation with them.

We do not think that Members of this House expect us to turn over the $316 million that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is going to spend in the year coming up, to the Atlantic Premiers to spend. We are going to spend it in accordance with the policies and directions of the Government to overcome regional disparity in Atlantic Canada.

In addition, any lapsing funds from this year—here's good news for the hon. chap—will carry over into next year for pay-off.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDING—ACCOUNTABILITY TO ATLANTIC PREMIERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister also stated, when asked whether there was any new money spent by ACOA, "I cannot tell you that right off the bat". What an informed Minister. It is like asking him did he wake up this morning. "I can't tell you that right off the bat, I have to ask Jane".

I ask the Minister, who speaks on behalf of the real Minister in the—

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member is about to ask the Minister something. I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. Baker: —who speaks on behalf of the other Minister in the unmentionable place, does he not agree that the people of Atlantic Canada and the Premiers of Atlantic Canada deserve more accountability than that from this Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I said to Jane this morning when I got up, there are no quick fixes—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —for whatever ailed her.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the Hon. Minister is not going to tell us what she said.

SHIPYARDS

REQUEST FOR BID ON REPAIR CONTRACT FROM CANADIAN NATIONAL

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we know from the Minister of Transport's comments in the House yesterday that the Government is mainly interested in making announcements and taking credit rather than real progress and real results when it comes to Atlantic Canada development.

I must ask the Minister whether he is willing to discharge his responsibility to the people of St. John's, and to Canadian National Dockyard workers, and insist that the dockyard management bid on the repair contract for HMCS Nipigon that will bring 200 jobs to St. John's, in his own riding, instead of letting management make phoney excuses for not trying to get work for the shipyard?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has gone over his depth in this particular issue. What has happened is that the Newfoundland dockyard has been asked to bid on the refit of the HMCS Nipigon. It would be a job costing somewhere between $12 million and $15 million and it would keep 250 men working there for one year.

Three of the seven railway unions are refusing to enter into a no-strike, no-lock-out agreement during the term of this repair. Therefore, the yard cannot undertake the work nor put in a bid, because it would be wasting money to put in a bid.

I suggest that the hon. gentleman speak to his friend who he was defending in St. John's yesterday, Mr. Rosner, and get him and the three unions to co-operate in order that 250 men can have a job for one year in a Newfoundland dockyard.

UNION OFFER TO OPERATE UNDER EXISTING AGREEMENT—POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister was paying attention he would know that yesterday these unions offered, as they had before, to carry on their existing agreement which contains a no-strike clause until the end of their contract.

Why does the Minister not admit that this is part of some plan, which he supports, to either bankrupt or shut down the CN Dockyard so that it can be handed over to private interests?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I am not going to chastise the hon. gentleman. He is a new Member here. It just so happens that two years ago the Government agreed to put $14 million into the Newfoundland dockyard. We are meeting its operating losses to the tune of $2.4 million a year. We are meeting capital expenditures of $4 million.

Since 1976 I have done everything humanly possible to assist that yard. But I cannot assist it if some of the labour movement and the hon. gentleman are going to sabotage our efforts to get work for that yard.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DATE OF RECEIPT OF MATERIAL—POSITION OF REVENUE CANADA

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. The delivery standards of Canada Post are now so low that even Revenue Canada will no longer recognize the Canada Post date of reception as proof of payment, thereby penalizing several thousands of small businesses. My question to the Minister is this: Does he agree with Revenue Canada's position and how could he reconcile this with this Crown Corporation spending millions of dollars in advertising to enhance its image, at a time when even the Government repudiates the Corporation?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I did not get the entire thrust of my colleague's question.

From what I heard, I can only point out that the deadlines and the requirements for filing income tax and source deductions are well known. We run a self-assessment system in this country.

I take the opportunity to point out that we have extended the deadline for filing income tax from April 30 to May 2, so there will be some extra latitude.

I apologize, because I did not quite get the thrust of my colleague's question.

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO HONOUR CANADA POST POSTMARKS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office, because it is a postal issue. At the beginning of January, National Revenue informed all employers that once they had postmarked envelopes sending their monthly remittances by cheques they would be accepted as remittances made on time. Since this notice every small business in the country is penalized because National Revenue is not honouring the postmarked envelopes.

How can the Minister say that this service is good? How can the Minister encourage people to use the Post Office service when, by the actions of National Revenue, the Government is not honouring the Post Office service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is an old joke about the three most common lies, one of which is, "The cheque is in the mail".

An Hon. Member: What are the other two?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that we do not need to hear the other two. Perhaps the Hon. Minister will answer the question.

• (1450)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, National Revenue in requiring taxpayers to pay their taxes on time are presumably reflecting the fact that too many people use that excuse. Indeed, the Post Office has been encountering some difficulty with companies having their own postal machines. In sending out invoices through the use of the postal machine they backdate the mailing date and the mailing date sometimes has the eighteenth of the month when, in fact, these items are put in the mail on the twenty-second or twenty-third. The Post Office has the same problems as National Revenue.

The Government is calling on taxpayers not to use the Post Office as an excuse for not paying taxes.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LEVELS OF POLLUTION—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ENSURE SAFETY OF SEAFOOD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In spite of growing anxiety about dangerous dioxin levels in waters near the Crofton pulp mill on Vancouver Island, neither the federal nor the provincial Governments have done anything to stop this pollution of our environment. Tests have shown unacceptable levels of 2378TCDD, one of the most dangerous dioxins known in samples of crab and oyster.

In light of this, what steps is the Government taking to ensure that this poisoning of our environment by pulp mills will stop, and what steps is the Government taking to guarantee to Canadians that the seafood they eat is safe?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that Environment Canada has done nothing in the area to protect human health and the natural environment in the face of the problem he has identified. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Department of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and my own department have been working together intimately in this area. We are conducting extensive analyses and have been monitoring the situation carefully. Our respective officials have been instructed to keep the two of us well informed and the issue is being dealt with as a matter of real priority and urgency.

ALLEGED DUPLICITY IN TEST RESULTS—RELEASE OF ALL TEST RESULTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the analysis and the monitoring is way behind time. The poisoning continues.

On January 18, the Minister of Fisheries announced test results for the Harmac area which showed that dioxin levels were within acceptable range. Why did the Minister not announce earlier test results which showed unacceptable levels of dioxin near Crofton? Why is there this duplicity?

Will the Government make a commitment now to release all test results so that Canadians will know what is in their waters?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Member talks about duplicity. There is no such duplicity. Analyses are being conducted. We have employed the top experts in the country. We have consulted experts beyond our shores on this subject to make sure that the Government of Canada has the very best advice in the world on the matter. Nothing has been kept secret. These analyses take a lot of time. Some of them take weeks in order to get the level of scientific certitude we think we need to make the relevant decisions.

I will be more than pleased to share with my hon. friend, and through him with any other interested Member of the House, the information that flows from the analyses.

PROPOSED POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Some time ago it was announced that money would be forthcoming for potato stabilization.

I know there have been discussions regarding how this money should be paid to the producers and there have been numerous suggestions as to how it could be paid. There are great expectations and uncertainty in the industry.

On what basis will this money be paid and when can the producers expect the cheques to be in the mail?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question because it provides me with an opportunity to again announce on behalf of the Government more good news for Canadian potato farmers. We indicated some time ago that we would honour the 1985 commitment. Indeed, we are doing that today.

The Hon. Member should recognize that some time ago we entered into an agreement with the Province of Prince Edward Island and the Province of New Brunswick under which we contributed to a diversion program on a 50-50 basis. At the same time, in that same crop year, we also paid $1 million in lieu of a surcharge in the Province of British Columbia. Therefore, in all fairness, we had to net out the amount of potatoes that qualified for the diversion program in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Indeed, we had to net out the amount of potatoes in relation to the $1 million payment in lieu of surtax. We did that to ensure fairness and equity in the calculation.

The cheques will be in the mail within the next two weeks, but we do not work in isolation or unilaterally. I am aware of the debate that continues in the Province of Prince Edward Island with respect to the method of payment and we will withhold the cheques to that province until such time as I am satisfied that the people in the industry have decided what manner we should follow in making the payment.

EMPLOYMENT

WOMEN—PART TIME WORK—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday, we were informed by Statistics Canada that 61 per cent of the labour force is made up of women, that as much as 62 per cent of mothers with children under six years of age are working full-time and that, as far as women are concerned, part-time employment is progressing more quickly than full-time employment.

I should like the Minister to tell us why the Tory Government has done absolutely nothing on the issue of part-time employment, in view of the fact that in 1984 the Prime Minister had promised to take very quick action. It was one of his election campaign. When is the Government going to take action on this issue and give something to part-time female employees?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, my Honourable friend should recognize first of all that this Government has probably the best record over the past several years in the area of job creation. According to the same statistics, 90 per cent of all jobs are held by women. As far as improving the situation is concerned, I feel again that my Honourable friend should fully recognize that the real employment situation for all Canadians, and especially for women, has improved.

Again, in the area of part-time employment, a large percentage of women in the labour force are involved in it voluntarily. I will admit with my colleague, however, that there is room for improvement, and suggest that if we had not been saddled with the situation which prevailed before 1984, it would be lot easier to go ahead now.

PARENTAL LEAVE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Minister and myself have different ways of reading the statistics. I would like to tell the Minister that the majority of women who work part-time do not do so voluntarily. The statistics clearly show that there have been a greater number of part-time jobs, and I would simply like to remind the Government that one of its promises was to provide social benefits for part-time workers, which it has certainly not done to this time.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the other Conservatives promised in 1984 to extend parental leave to provide easier access to the labour market for women. I would like to know why the Conservative Government has not followed up the two reports tabled in this House which dealt with parental leave, namely the Forget report and the report on child care. In its response to the report on child care, the Conservative Government did not even refer to parental leave. Is it the new policy—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I think that the Hon. Member has asked her question.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to contradict my colleague, but we have indeed provided social benefits for part-time workers, by allowing them to contribute to the pension plan, for instance. The Hon. Member must admit that we have extended eligibility to the pension plan. I must also contradict the Hon. Member on another point and tell her that 85 per cent of all jobs created have been full-time jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I have another correction to make as concerns maternity leave. As I have already told the Hon. Member, the Conservative Government has done more than any other Government before, for instance in the matter of employment equity, and I would remind my colleague about the Employment Equity Program and the Federal Businesses Program. Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member has to ask her questions, but she is well aware that, if her party had done as much as we have done, we would be 20 years further ahead as concerns jobs for women.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION IN MIRAMICHI—CLEANUP

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns pollution by dioxins on the other coast, in the Miramichi.

Will the Minister confirm that he inadvertently, I am sure, misinformed the House when he replied to a similar question the last time, and that in fact there is no cleanup going on there and the citizens in the area have not even been given the results of tests which have been conducted?

Will the Minister assure the House that he will exercise the powers he has to ensure that there is a thorough cleanup and that we will not have an increase and spreading of the pollution which has been there for some decades?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to an answer I gave in the House to a question she posed on February 4. I must confess to the Hon. Member, and to you, Sir, that I probably over-stated the case when I did respond. I said that a cleanup was under way and that an excavation had begun. The truth is that preparatory work had been started but it was entirely preliminary. The actual cleanup had not actually been started.

The Government of Canada, through my Department, is riding herd on the company. The provincial Department of the Environment is the main instrument for government action in this area because of the jurisdictional question, but we are co-operating hand in glove. The Hon. Member can have from me the assurance she has sought.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to say to the Hon. Member that given the hour, she is limited to one question. I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a single question.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR EARLY SECOND READING DEBATE ON BILL C-114

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On February 24, the Prime Minister tabled in the House his new Bill concerning conflict of interest.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Bill does not cover all applications or senior civil servants, it still enjoys the support of at least a majority of members of all Parties of the House. Given that the Bill enjoys that kind of support with all Parties, can the Deputy Prime Minister commit himself here and now to bring forward the Bill for second reading no later than this week or, at the latest, Monday of next week?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we intend to move with this legislation very soon.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex on a single question and that will end Question Period.

ALLEGED PROBLEMS REGARDING MEAT INSPECTION

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed through you to the Minister of Agriculture. A cloud is hanging over the federal meat inspection system due to media reports in the Kitchener-Waterloo area and some poorly phrased questions in the House. Not only is the system under attack but also those people who supply the services, the inspectors.

Will the Minister today inform the House if there exists a particular problem with meat inspection in southern Ontario and, if so, what has been done to correct the situation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. The direct answer to the Hon. Member's question is no. I think we have to appreciate that there are some 1,500 competent, well qualified, dedicated meat and food inspectors working on a day-to-day basis in over 800 plants across the country. They approve wholesome food for the Canadian public and, indeed, for people in our export markets, well in excess of three million metric tons a year.

We have to recognize that on a day-to-day basis, these inspectors search for improvements in the system, they find improvements and they implement improvements. Our staff continues to strive for perfection. I can assure the House that, indeed, at no time was the quality of Canadian food for Canadian consumers ever jeopardized.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT POSITION—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been away from the House and I wanted to take the first opportunity available to me to report to Parliament upon recent events in South Africa and to discuss what Canada should do.

Canada's position in the international fight against apartheid is both important and well known. Part of our strength is that we have taken our decisions deliberately and generally kept the issue beyond the normal divisions of domestic Canadian partisanship. I report today in that spirit.

One week ago, the Government of South Africa banned political activity by 17 organizations including trade unions and the major coalition committed to non-violence. Three days ago, it arrested peaceful marchers. Yesterday, it introduced legislation to prevent foreign funding of anti-apartheid activity and to restrict peaceful dissent still further.

Pretoria seems intent on closing the door to peaceful change. Its actions invite violence because they leave nothing else. Those actions are perverse and they are brutal. One might hope that they are designed merely for temporary electoral advantage, but we fear that they reflect a policy of deepening repression. A situation already bad has been made much worse.

In these circumstances, countries like Canada which oppose apartheid must review the nature and the effect of all our relations with South Africa. We hope that will happen in all countries that prize democracy.

[Translation]

Sir, the Government of Canada, guided by the Prime Minister, has played a leading role in the fight against apartheid. Our previous governments followed the line taken by Western countries. This Government is trying to orient that line. Because of our considerable interest in the African continent, our role within the Commonwealth and la Francophonie, and our commitment to human rights, we feel this is a question on which we can speak with authority and where we can wield some influence. We have tried to use our political and economic influence to greater effect in the fight against apartheid. We are of course disappointed in the response of the South African Government. We have also had to re-examine the need for maintaining economic and diplomatic relations with a government that seems determined to put itself above the law.

Canada's policy has been, and still is, to do everything in our power to avoid a disaster, to put an end to apartheid and to bring in a representative government that would not be based on racial divisions. The Prime Minister and I have clearly stated on many occasions that if these attempts failed, we will break off diplomatic and economic relations with South Africa. Our policy has taken various forms: economic and other sanctions, diplomatic pressure, and assistance to victims and opponents of apartheid. I would like to deal with each of these elements separately.

• (1510)

[English]

With respect to diplomatic relations, Sir, the choice is basic. Do we walk away in disgust or do we try to use and build our influence despite our profound disappointment? The powerful temptation is to walk away, to conclude that the South African regime is so profoundly anti-democratic that only violence will change it. Certainly the latest actions by the Pretoria Government carry South Africa away from any pretense of democracy as western nations know democracy. South Africa's apologists claim their society is part of the West. If that is so, their actions now betray their heritage.

Some Members of the House call for the end now of diplomatic relations. I wonder, with respect, whether they have considered what that would mean. For example, the South African Government has embarked upon an intensified campaign of censorship and propaganda deliberately designed to mask the reality of apartheid. Maintaining an embassy in that country is effectively the only way in which we can continue to know what is really going on. There is a value to that, and a high cost if we close.

Again, a large part of our aid program, now valued at about $5 million a year, is delivered through the embassy. Without representation on the ground it would be much more difficult to identify, supervise and monitor projects which bring real help and visible support to the victims of apartheid. Literally hundreds of small people-to-people projects, the kinds of projects we mount through our mission administered funds, literally hundreds of those projects which help the victims of apartheid in South Africa would be ended if our embassy were to close. The growing use of travel restrictions imposed upon South African opponents of apartheid means we can maintain contact with them only through our embassy. They cannot come to us, we have to go to them. We cannot do that if we are not there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Again, in the world as it is, if we were absent from Pretoria we would have more difficulty mounting an aid program in Namibia, more difficulty advancing Canadian and Commonwealth—and I underline "and Commonwealth"—interest in South Africa, and no ability to demonstrate within South Africa itself our solidarity with anti-apartheid leaders.

The House may not know this, but whenever there is a trial on apartheid charges in South Africa accessible to our embassy, Canadian representatives are there. Whenever there is a need for solidarity with opponents of apartheid to be demonstrated physically, as when Bishop Tutu was marching three or four days ago in Pretoria, Canadian embassy representatives, the spouse of the ambassador among them, were there. Those are the kinds of things, those are the kinds of symbols that we put at risk if we close our embassy, and I ask Members who recommend that measure to consider carefully what it means.

There are countless other examples that must be considered in any serious discussion of the future of our embassy. Of course, it is valid to ask, as the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) asked yesterday in this House, when would it be appropriate for Canada to withdraw? Sir, I do not know the answer to that question. Probably no one knows the answer to that question today. However, in all the circumstances it is the Government's considered view that this is the wrong time for Canada to walk away or cut ourselves off.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The issue of our economic relations is not as clear-cut. The South African Government is very anxious to maintain its economic links with the rest of the world, and is also keenly aware of its increasing isolation from the international community. Economic sanctions undoubtedly have an economic and psychological impact. The impact is even greater when sanctions are more broadly based. As I pointed out to the House on February 5 this year, the Commonwealth Committee of Ministers of Foreign Affairs is now gathering data and hearing recommendations that my lead to expanding, reinforcing and intensifying the application of sanction. This is becoming an increasingly urgent task, and I have already contacted my colleagues on the Committee to see how we could accelerate this program.

[English]

In addition, Sir, there are independent economic and political actions which Canada might take, including the relatively small measures for which I already have cabinet authority. Our experience is that since Canada's trade with South Africa is less than 1 per cent of South Africa's total trade, our action is more effective when it is in concert with or as catalyst to actions by nations whose economic impact is greater.

We are actively reviewing two aspects of that policy. First, to see if there are new economic measures which Canada might take effectively alone. Second, to encourage broader action, particularly by countries who prize democracy, in specific response to South Africa's multiple assaults upon freedom during the last week.

With that in mind, on the political side, we have contacted several other western Governments. Those discussions must remain confidential for the moment, but I would certainly be prepared to discuss privately with the two opposition spokesmen, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), the kind of thing we are considering in discussions with other countries.

A third focus of our activity has been upon the opponents and victims of apartheid. Their need is suddenly more urgent. The peaceful opponents of apartheid are under renewed attack. They need our assistance and we intend to provide it. We have already increased our aid for education, to the labour movement, and for humanitarian and legal aid. The challenge now is to move more money, more quickly, to the opponents and victims of apartheid.

An obvious priority is the labour movement. We provide funds to various unions in South Africa and we will provide more. Most of these funds will be channelled through the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Teachers Federation, and the Confédération des syndicats nationaux. I have instructed my officials to act urgently on precise programs submitted by those organizations.

We will also provide new forms of assistance. For example, undoubtedly there will be challenges in court to the regulations and laws just introduced. We will take up with anti-apartheid organizations in South Africa the ways in which we would be able to help fund those court challenges.

Canada has objectives which we must pursue in support of peaceful change and dialogue. They are legitimate objectives and they are reasonable objectives. We intend to pursue them. Up until now we have been able, through our embassy, to carry out our programs in South Africa. That is why the embassy is there. If implementation of the various measures announced this past week by Pretoria prevents us from accomplishing our goals, then we will have to consider again whether our presence is justified.

The struggle in South Africa, Sir, has entered a new stage, more dangerous, more frightening. The Eminent Persons Group warned of massive bloodshed, and last week the South Africa Government pushed the region closer to that nightmare. As new rules repress opponents of apartheid within South Africa, those of us outside must become more effective and more imaginative in our initiatives. The response of Canada is particularly important because of the practical leadership we have exercised since the Nassau Conference. This is not a time for Canada to withdraw.

• (1520)

Quite the contrary. Our position is known and respected. What we need, indeed what I need from this House and other Canadians, are practical suggestions and initiatives that we can take, little steps and large steps, to make progress against apartheid. An interesting suggestion was made yesterday by my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), regarding the Security Council of the United Nations, and we are examining that proposal.

We are increasing our help to the victims of apartheid, considering how we respond specifically to the Draconian new measures of last week, and we are discussing with our allies of the Commonwealth, the summit and elsewhere what new actions nations might take together.

Our Ambassador to South Africa has been back in Canada for a meeting of African Heads of Post and will be staying here a little longer for consultation. As there are new developments, I will report them to the House.

This Parliament has shown an active and nonpartisan interest in the fight against apartheid. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and I accept and exercise the Government's responsibility to lead on this issue, but naturally we would continue to be interested in practical suggestions from other Members and other Parties in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, first, I wish to thank the Minister for his kindness in sending me a copy of his statement earlier today. I also wish to welcome him back to this House after being kept at home by the flu for a short time, and I hope that he is now better.

Unfortunately, there is nothing new in the statement we have just heard. I must say from the start that it certainly does not surprise me. In fact, the Minister has restated what he told this House on February 5 following the meeting of the Committee of Commonwealth Foreign Ministers in Lusaka, Zambia. Indeed, his statement that time was not that much different from what he said on November 18, 1987, when he announced the first meeting of the Committee. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is working quite hard.

We do not question his good will. On the contrary, we congratulate him for his faith in the future and his determination to find a solution to apartheid through normal diplomatic channels.

[English]

We Liberals have to say that we have been frustrated over many years while in Government by this slow process which, we must say, is going absolutely nowhere. We absolutely no longer believe in it. We are of the opinion that the Botha Government cannot and will not be influenced by kid-glove diplomacy. I must add with regret that the recent actions of the Pretoria Government sustained our convictions on this side of the House.

Last week South Africa banned 18 predominantly black organizations from political activity, including the largest anti-apartheid coalition and the largest labour federation. Yesterday the Government introduced legislation, the latest of a series of moves clamping down on opponents of the apartheid regime.

What we know so far of this legislation, called the Promotion of Orderly Politics Bill, is that it will prohibit all organizations from receiving money from abroad for political purposes and will empower the South African Justice Minister to seize foreign sums received by certain groups. His powers will be indefinitely retroactive. Clearly, the move could cripple anti-apartheid groups and churches thus far spared from the new crack-down on opposition. Even worse, we are told that no court challenge of the restrictions would be allowed.

The Minister told us today that he urgently wants to send more money. Will the money arrive on time? Will this money have any impact under the current circumstances? Is it not too late? The clear intention of this Bill is to stop Canadian funding in South Africa. It will inevitably kill what has become one of the most visible policies in Canada's battery of attacks on the apartheid regime. Clearly, the actions of the South African Government are not aimed exclusively at Canada but certainly undermine whatever action the Canadian Government wants to take in South Africa.

We know, as the Minister certainly knows, that the trade and economic sanctions are almost fully imposed and are having little if any effect at all. The Canadian Government has rested all of its presence in South Africa on one thing—not the sanctions, because they are not working, but on the aid that Canada could send through South Africa, reaching into South Africa to support the victims of apartheid.

We Liberals believe that as honourable as these efforts are, they are no longer, and I am afraid to say have probably never been, a solution. It is clear now that the Government of South Africa will never accept the introduction of non-racial representative governments. Unless bold action is taken, the diplomatic soft glove approach will never succeed.

I submit that the Pretoria Government has made a declaration of war on peace, justice, and human rights. We are now, more than ever, in a position to cut our relations there. The time has come to do it in the face of what has been taking place in South Africa.

The Minister may have genuine aspirations, but I submit that his declaration is a repetition of a number of things which have been said in the past and it will not work. When the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) spoke at the United Nations he got applause and praise, not because of his effort there but because he said that he was ready soon to cut diplomatic relations with South Africa. That is when he got the applause.

I regret very much the Minister's portrayal of our suggestions of breaking diplomatic relations as walking away, as cutting ourselves off from this problem. This is not true. This is not what we have been saying and it is certainly not the view of the Liberal Party of Canada which has been constantly, for many years, against apartheid and continues to be against apartheid. We continue to be against apartheid. But we want to venture into new avenues to find a breakthrough in this area.

• (1530)

We have never said and are not saying that the Government should stop its actions within the Commonwealth. We have never said and will never say that the Government should stop supporting the South African Development Co-ordinating Conference.

Canada could show leadership by breaking relations with South Africa, bringing about the realization once and for all that there is no future in trying to convince the Botha Government through the diplomatic route.

[Translation]

Canada will host the next Economic Summit in Toronto, next June. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should use this opportunity to convince his allies to apply real economic pressures in an effort to weaken the will of the Pretoria Government.

I believe that the Minister can and should continue his work with the Commonwealth Foreign Ministers but to do so, he does not have to maintain diplomatic relations with South Africa.

[English]

He said in his remarks that the question of economic relations is less clear-cut. The South African Government is extremely sensitive to both its economic link with the world and its growing isolation in the international community. Economic sanctions undoubtedly have an impact economically and psychologically. That impact is greater when those sanctions are more broadly supported.

[Translation]

This is what we are saying. The Government must initiate talks with the United States and the member countries of the Group of Seven, which could impose strong enough economic sanctions to make the South African Government change its position.

I was suprised that the Minister did not refer to the comments of the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, who proposed yesterday a five-point plan which should receive our enthusiastic support. The Secretary of the Commonwealth said the following:

[English]

"A widening, tightening and intensification of economic and other sanctions should be imposed by the United Nations". We support that. Second: "Increased pressure by Third World countries on those western countries that have not imposed tough economic sanctions". This is a route to follow.

Third: "A ban by black-ruled African countries on the use of their air space by airlines flying to South Africa". That is another proposal that should be very carefully considered and implemented.

Finally: "A concerted international demand on the Botha Government to enter into power-sharing negotiations with South Africa's black majority". Clearly, this demand will not be answered by the Botha Government unless countries like Canada are prepared to take bold initiatives. One of those initiatives is for us to show the lead and cut our ties.

I note that our ambassador is now in Ottawa and that the Minister said he wants to retain him for further consultations. I suggest that he should retain him as long as possible. In other words, until the Botha Government has not begun talking with the black leaders of South Africa to share authority in government in South Africa.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the Minister for reporting to the House. We are glad to have him back on his feet after his having been confined to bed for the last week or so. I must say that we have missed him due to the many questions we would have liked to ask him. We will try to make up for that in the coming weeks.

The Minister began his statement by saying that he reports in the spirit of nonpartisanship which has attended this issue. While that is certainly the case with respect to the mutual and commonly felt abhorrence of all Canadians and Members of Parliament toward the apartheid regime in South Africa, I hope the Minister will also respect the fact that within the boundaries of that nonpartisanship there is room for honest and profound disagreement about the appropriate Canadian response to that issue. It is in that spirit that I, on behalf of my Party, offer our criticisms of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

I honestly believe that the measured tone and lack of new initiative today does not do justice to the fundamental objections Canadians have expressed to the actions taken by the South African Government in recent days. When one considers the obvious slap in the face given to the Minister and his colleagues in Lusaka recently by the South African Government, basically ignoring the Commonwealth group, it seems that the Minister spoke more calmly than might have been in order. The South African Government has made it clear that it does not really care about what the Minister and other Commonwealth leaders think. It has basically told them to get lost.

I suggest the time has come not only for action but for more passion in the response of the Canadian Government to what has happened in South Africa.

Nothing could be more offensive to me and, I am sure, to many others than knowing that South Africa permits neo-Nazis to march down the street without government harassment while, only days later, Bishop Tutu, Reverend Boesak and other leaders in the Christian community are arrested for a peaceful demonstration against apartheid. As a Christian myself, I am sure all Canadians, Christian and non Christian, feel the same repugnance at this obvious affront to democratic principles, freedom of speech, and the very possibility of non-violent action against apartheid in South Africa.

The approach taken by the Minister in his statement suggests a certain innocence. I am not sure whether it is a studied innocence, or a naive innocence, but it is there. For instance, he acknowledged that only yesterday it was announced there would be legislation to prevent foreign funding of anti-apartheid activity, yet later in his statement he talked at great length about how the Canadian Government intends to step up its support of anti-apartheid activity in South Africa through the Canadian Labour Congress and various other avenues open to the Canadian Government. Does the Minister not see that this declaration of war on peace and justice that the Liberal spokesman referred to is also a declaration of war on Canada's anti-apartheid activity? Some of the Minister's own officials have implied that this legislation may indeed be targeted at Canada. Perhaps it would have been appropriate for the Minister to respond to that and indicate how the Canadian Government intends to overcome the obvious intention of the South African Government to frustrate the very policies on which the Minister states the Government will now put even more emphasis.

Not only are the Front Line States that are opposed to apartheid in South Africa to be harassed, those in Canada and other parts of the world who choose to actively support anti-apartheid groups in South Africa are to be harassed as well.

• (1540)

The Minister says that as a result of recent events, South Africa policy is under review. I would have thought that the Department of External Affairs would have had at least anticipated that something like this might happen some day. It might have had a contingency response available so that when the South African Government did act in the way it has, Canadian action could have been swift. It could be shown that we do not have to dither over our response to this kind of action. Unfortunately, that is not the case.

It seems to me and my colleagues that the Minister, at the very least, could have proceeded—and we realize this is a significant action, but significant events are taking place which call for a significant response—to announce a Canadian policy of mandatory and comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa. That would have been a clear response on behalf of Canada. That would have been in concert, I believe, with the level of concern all Canadians feel about apartheid in South Africa.

We might constitute 1 per cent of trade with South Africa, but we are not talking about a statistical reality, we are talking about a political reality, a symbolic reality and a moral reality. Whether it is 1 per cent, 10 per cent or 40 per cent, in the final analysis it does not matter that much.

With respect to the question of diplomatic relations, the position of the New Democratic Party is different from that of the Liberal Party. We accept some of the arguments made by the Minister for maintaining some kind of diplomatic presence in South Africa. However, we certainly take the view that the time has come for a downgrading of our diplomatic recognition of South Africa. The opportunity presents itself because the ambassador is here in Canada. It is certainly an opportunity for the Minister to discuss with the ambassador how that might be done. I believe we have to take action both on the economic and the diplomatic front. I would recommend that to the Minister. Other avenues which are available on the diplomatic front are things we suggested yesterday, having to do with the United Nations and the Security Council. We hope some of those avenues might be constructively pursued.

With respect to the question of breaking off diplomatic relations, I say to the Minister that I believe what he has found frustrating about the current debate is due in part to the repeated assertions by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that this is something that Canada is prepared to do, and not in some far away mythological time, but a very real possibility under certain circumstances. The call from some quarters for a break-off in diplomatic relations is attributable in part to the Prime Minister repeatedly mentioning this as a possible Canadian response when the time comes. As to that time, I agree with the Minister that it is never possible to know when that time is.

With respect to economic sanctions, I think sometimes there is a tendency to talk about them without anyone actually elucidating exactly what that would involve. What do we export to South Africa? I am told, having checked with the Interchurch Task Force on Corporate Responsibility, that one of our major exports to South Africa is sulphur. In 1986, the last year for which statistics are available, sulphur made up some 39 per cent of our exports to South Africa. This is one step the Government could take if it were to impose mandatory sanctions. The sulphur that goes to South Africa is used to make fertilizer which is, in turn, sold to the Front Line States. It has been suggested, I am told, that instead of being exported to South Africa, this sulphur could be exported to the Front Line States as part of an aid project and they could begin to make their own fertilizer with the sulphur, which would have the double effect of instituting both sanctions and less dependency by the Front Line States on South Africa. This proposal, I understand, is only in the embryonic stage, but I suggest to the Minister that it is a course of action which should be looked into.

We export small amounts of many other things to South Africa, potash from Saskatchewan, wheat, wood pulp, mining machinery and man-made fibres from Ontario, tungsten from British Columbia, folding cardboard boxes from Quebec. All these things, of course, are not going to break the back of the South African Government, but that is not the point. We want the Government to show leadership, to act, not just on behalf of Canadians but on behalf of all the people of the world who are concerned about apartheid, by taking these kinds of actions. We think that would have the effect of making it more possible, not less possible, for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to get the kind of widespread co-operatively decided upon sanctions to which he so often refers.

I ask the Minister what he means when he talks in his statement about sanctions being more broadly supported. Is he hopeful we can bring the United States, and Britain in particular, on side in more decisive action? Perhaps that is the kind of thing he intends to let us in on if we take him up on his offer to have meetings. I can say now that we are open to having those kind of consultations and we appreciate the offer.

Finally, I feel, and I think my colleagues also feel, that there is something far too gentle about this response on the part of the Canadian Government. Today was a day in which history could have been made in terms of a Canadian response to apartheid in South Africa. Instead, the Minister has persisted in his policy. I think it is a policy he sincerely holds, but nevertheless it is a policy that is starting to undermine, in my judgment, the well-deserved reputation of the Prime Minister and the Minister with respect to apartheid. I believe the leadership they have shown has arisen out of a genuine sincerity with respect to this issue. It has not been a political tactic. However, I think the time has come for some form of action to be taken by Canada by itself. It could have happened today and it did not. We regret that. However, we offer to continue working with the Minister towards the day when that kind of Canadian action will be taken.

BILL C-109—CHANGE IN REFERENCE OF BILL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find there would be unanimous consent to change the committee reference of Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, so that the Bill will stand referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs rather than to a legislative committee, and I would so move.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents, as well as residents of Vancouver, Langley and Clearbrook. They state the fact that they are opposed to abortion on demand. They call upon Parliament to define human life as being created at the moment of conception and that that be reflected in a newly created law.

• (1550)

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege as a Member of the House to present this petition from residents of my riding which is known as Kent. It has been properly certified.

The undersigned residents are concerned about the void that has been created since Canada's law dealing with abortion was struck down by the Supreme Court. They feel that the provinces are off in different directions with this issue. They humbly pray that the Government provide the necessary leadership. They call upon Parliament to draft with as little delay as possible a new law which would be consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms while providing effective protection for Canada's unborn children.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of residents of northern Canada who point out that the United States and Japan have proposed to fly plutonium over the Canadian North. They believe this represents devastating consequences potentially to both the Canadian environment and its people in the event of an accident or an act of terrorism. They are asking Parliament to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also have the pleasure to present another petition from a number of constituents regarding the trade deal with the United States. They believe that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude this type of a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that this trade deal threatens the very fabric of our Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership.

They believe that it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and thereby undermine our ability to build a distinct society from that of the United States of America.

They are asking Parliament now to dissolve to enable the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege as the Member of Parliament for Moncton to present a number of petitions to the House in accordance with Standing Order 106. They are from constituents living within the federal riding of Moncton.

The petitioners express their belief in the total sanctity of human life and, specifically, that life begins at conception. Their concern emanates from the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to immediately pass legislation protecting innocent unborn children.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition that I wish to present on behalf of a number of citizens. It is on the trade issue.

A number of people have signed petitions stating that the federal Government has no mandate to negotiate a trade deal with the United States. They list a number of concerns about it. Finally, they ask that we dissolve Parliament so that we can have a national election on the issue.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the petition I present is duly certified and concerns the trade agreement that the Government has negotiated with the United States.

The petitioners point out that the Government had no mandate to negotiate such an agreement and that in the course of the negotiations Canadian sovereignty was compromised, something which it was specifically promised would not happen. The trade agreement threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty. It removes our ability to control foreign ownership and to develop or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. One is from a number of residents in Burnaby, North Vancouver, Maple Ridge and Salish Court. These people are concerned about the trade deal signed between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States without any mandate from the Canadian people and in spite of a promise by the Prime Minister not to compromise Canadian sovereignty.

They point out that it completely fails to win secure access to the United States markets, which was the stated goal, and that it risks losing hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs and that it would deny to Canada the freedom to choose policies that would direct our own future. In fact, it undermines our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, they pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the residents of Spadina in which they remind Parliament that in February of 1985 the Government directed the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights in Canada.

The committee duly reported to the House and, among other things, recommended that the Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas under federal jurisdiction, including the RCMP, the Canadian Armed Forces and the age of consent legislation with regard to sexual orientation and practice.

They point out that the Government subsequently promised to take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination but that the Government has not yet taken any significant action in this direction. Therefore they request Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament act to implement the recommendations contained in the report as specified above with all due haste and speed, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the duty and honour to table a petition in the House signed by residents of the Province of Ontario. They indicate in the petition that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between regions.

They go on to point out that the proposed agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in these negotiations but that it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Finally, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 254 will be answered today.

[Text]

STANDARDS FOR OUTDOOR FLAGS

Question No. 254—Mr. McKinnon:

Has the expectation stated by the Minister of Supply and Services on December 8, 1986, that a final standard for outdoor long-term flags would be available by the end of 1987 and that standards for other uses (e.g. indoors) would be available sooner, been met and, if so, on what date will flags conforming to these standards be available for public purchase?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Considerable progress has been made toward a new standard for the National Flag for outdoor use (long-term).

The Canadian General Standards Board, lacking any regulatory authority, is not in a position to bring into effect all the provisions of the cited Act. At the present time it can only proceed with the development of a new National Standard of Canada to reflect current manufacturing techniques and materials.

Since the passage of the National Flag of Canada Manufacturing Standards Act, the representative CGSB Standards Committee has been reactivated to develop a new edition of the existing National Standard on the National Flag using the consensus process.

The Standards Committee identified the problem with the red portions of the flag and subsequent testing was necessary to eveluate various dyes and fabrics. It was agreed to expose various test flags on a continuous basis to conditions of actual use in the Toronto area. This testing was done by a private testing organization and was completed in December, 1987, and a report is expected by the end of February, 1988. The report will then be circulated to all members of the Committee and a meeting scheduled to prepare the revised standard. It is expected that the final standard for outdoor long-term flags will be available for the end of 1988.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from March 1 consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today is Bill C-113. It is a Bill which is very important in principle to establish a western diversification department and diversification offices across western Canada to try to diversify the economy.

The idea itself is very sound in principle in terms of diversification. It is very sound in terms of more decentralization in western Canada in bringing decision-making closer to the people. The question is, why should we diversify in the West? It is very important that we do so, because the economy of western Canada is extremely dependent upon resources, on one hand, and agriculture on the other hand. In both those cases, we are dependent upon the cyclical pricing nature of those commodities. The economy of western Canada depends a lot on what is happening in the New York stock market, the metal market, the commodity market in Chicago, or the international grain price. When things are going badly internationally, the price that the producer receives in western Canada goes down. That affects the entire economy. It has negative spin-offs, and a negative effect on jobs. Therefore, it is very important that there be some way of diversifying the economy of western Canada.

One of the concerns that I have, as do members of the general population in the West, is that the Government is not putting up very much money in terms of western diversification. Here we have $1.2 billion to be spent in four provinces over five years, which is some $60 million per year, per province, in western Canada.

In 1980 the former Liberal Government was criticized by the Conservatives across the way when it established the Western Development Fund of $4 billion over four years. That was a little more money, and much of that money did not seem to appear either. It seemed to be a phantom fund. If the Government does not want to turn people off in western Canada, it is very important that there be some real money and funding of western Canadian diversification.

There are other areas where the Government could be doing more in terms of helping western Canadians. One area is procurement. I remember year after year Conservatives criticizing former Liberal Governments for not buying enough in western Canada and purchasing too many goods and services in Ontario and in Quebec, particularly in the Ottawa region of Ontario.

I have statistics here that are very interesting in terms of procurement of goods and services in western Canada. In 1981-82 in the four western provinces the federal Government purchased some 15.5 per cent of its supplies. The Department of Supply and Services contracts on a dollar basis in terms of western Canada indicate that 15.5 per cent of supplies were purchased in western Canada in 1981-82. By the time the Conservative Government took office in 1984, only 13.9 per cent of supplies were purchased in western Canada. The following year that went down to 12.8 per cent. Last year, in 1986-87, it went down to 11.5 per cent.

The Conservative Government claims to be very sensitive about the West. It has a lot of western representation and powerful Ministers from western Canada, for example, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Yet only 11.5 per cent of its purchasing is in western Canada. When the Government took office it was 13.9 per cent.

I suggest that this is one area where a lot more jobs could be created in western Canada if there were some regional equity in terms of the purchasing policy of the Government of Canada. Western Canada has approximately 27 or 28 per cent of the population, and the Government only purchases 11.5 per cent of its goods and services there.

Some people say it is because the West is so far away from Ottawa; it is too far away from the federal Government. I do not buy that. There are many government agencies in western Canada. There is much federal Government activity in western Canada. Western Canada has many service industries, and much of the purchasing could occur right in the West. The major point I make is that, not only is it 11.5 per cent of the share, but that share has gone down from 15.5 per cent in 1981-82, so there has been a sharp drop-off.

I notice there is a very influential Minister present who is in charge of the Treasury Board. Perhaps he could have some influence on those particular purchasing policies. The Minister is shaking his head in the negative.

Mr. de Cotret: I have not been President of the Treasury Board for six months. Wake up!

Mr. Nystrom: He is no longer President of the Treasury Board. Well, we did not notice the impact over here, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps he could have some influence on the purchasing policies of the Government, because he is a very influential Minister.

I understand that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is now in charge of the Treasury Board. We find that this has not helped. Here we have a western Minister and there is still this procurement policy of the Government where it is discriminating against western Canada. Members of the Government sit back and laugh about this discrimination against western Canada. It is no wonder that the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) left that caucus and denounced the Government on its procurement policy in terms of lack of purchases in western Canada.

The second point I wish to make is in terms of the spending of the federal Government. Since this bunch of clowns took office three years ago, spending on regional development went down by some $3 billion. This Government stated that it would do a lot more in terms of spending in western Canada, spending in the North, and helping people in depressed regions. Yet less and less money is being spent in western Canada in terms of regional economic development than was spent before. The latest public opinion polls indicate that the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is even less popular in western Canada than was Pierre Trudeau. No wonder. There has been a tremendous betrayal of the people of western Canada.

In a Government study it indicates that, in the last 25 years, federal government expenditures in regional development have been approximately 3 per cent of the Government of Canada's economic expenditures. That is a very small amount. The Macdonald Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada stated that a lot more must be done in terms of spending in regional development in Canada. They stated, "The Commission believes that regional development must remain an essential component of Canadian policy". The report further stated, "We recommend a new federal-provincial system of sharing regional development expenditures and responsibilities". The report also stated that they must have the insurance that there be a high level of infrastructural support.

The report goes on, and I wish to quote one further statement: "The Commissioners believe that the total federal financial commitment to regional development, combining of regional economic development grants and other funds spent through ERDAs should be increased significantly over the next two years".

This commission headed by Mr. Macdonald spent millions of dollars doing economic research in this country. They made recommendations that there be an increase in the spending on regional development in this country over the next few years. Yet the Conservative Party has been cutting back, cutting back, and cutting back on the amount of money it is spending on regional development. I suggest once again that that is not fair, in the same manner as it is very unfair to be spending less and less on government procurement throughout the West.

Another point I would like to make in terms of western diversification is that we are going to have to diversify more from depending only on resources, fisheries, agriculture, and things of that type and diversify into high technology, advanced technology, and things of that nature. It is interesting to note that the OECD was asked by the four western provinces to conduct a study of innovation policy in western Canada. The OECD study team was in the West in the fall of 1985. Their report was released in early 1987. In that report they stated that the expenditure in terms of research and development in Canada as a whole is very low. The expenditure in western Canada is even lower. More funding should go to universities, industries, and fields such as biotechnology, electronics, telecommunications, and computer software. This study was commissioned by the four western provinces.

There are a number of other things that could be said about the importance of diversifying the economy in western Canada. Last spring our Party decided to spend some time in attempting to come up with a number of suggestions for the Government. We released a text of a western economic diversification statement in July. At that time we talked about the importance of diversifying the economy in the West. We started off by saying it was important to build on what we had. We have a very strong resource economy. We have all kinds of natural resources, gas, oil, potash, iron ore, things of that sort on which we should be building. Second, we should build on the very strong agricultural economy in western Canada as well as the very strong fishing and lumber economy located in the Province of British Columbia. We believe as a Party that a focus on diversification should involve as much regional and local control as possible where farmers and fishermen in the western towns, villages and cities have as much input as possible over decisions that affect their development and lives.

In the past we have had too many top heavy programs planned from Ottawa which have had little local input from local folks. Third, we suggested that more emphasis be put on small and medium-sized enterprises. All too often Governments rely on megaprojects and on spending money to subsidize large corporations, many of which are foreign and, again, all the requisite statistics will show that the smaller and medium-sized companies tend to be the ones which produce jobs, have more impact and give a lot more bang for the buck.

A lot of value could be added to our western resources. There are all kinds of jobs we are not getting because we tend to export many raw materials from western Canada without any processing, upgrading or some value added before exporting resources to other countries, primarily the United States.

We could create jobs in western Canada by servicing the needs of our resource industries. We have a great forest industry and yet the majority of the equipment for the forest industry is imported rather than produced in Canada. We have a mining industry in the West, but most of the mining machinery is imported rather than produced in western Canada. There is a tremendous amount of agriculture and farming in western Canada and, again, farm machinery is imported in the main rather than being produced in the West. A major reason is that we have free trade in farm machinery implements in western Canada and because of that we have lost our basic industry, most therefore is produced elsewhere, and we lose jobs and economic spin-offs.

We believe there is the possibility of developing some manufacturing industry in western Canada. In our paper we gave some examples of what can be done in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia. Finally, there is the creation of new jobs in new industries, specifically advanced and high technology, where we should be diversifying. In places like Saskatoon we have some high technology industries that are doing very well, but we believe we could be doing a lot more work in that area right across the West.

What about the whole area of services? There are all kinds of service industries today creating many jobs. Then we have tourism. Tourism in the West could be promoted more than it is today, although we have been helped recently by the Calgary Olympics and by Expo 86 in the City of Vancouver.

Finally there is trade diversification. Since this Government has taken power a tremendous amount of time has been spent on a trade deal with the United State. A lot more emphasis could be put on trying to diversify our trade with other countries around the world. I noticed the positive statement in the press by the Minister for International Trade about being more aggressive in trading with Hong Kong as Hong Kong becomes part of China. We need to be doing more in China, which has a population of one billion people. The Pacific Rim is very important.

The United States is not quite as relevant to trade within western Canada as it is with Canada as a whole. The United States is still our number one trading partner and always will be. But in western Canada, in Saskatchewan in particular, other countries are important to us. The Chinese are important to Saskatchewan for grain sales and potash, but other Pacific countries are important also to the Province of Saskatchewan.

There are a number of other points that could be made, but I want to conclude by saying that we certainly support the principles of the Bill to establish a new department of diversification in western Canada. The important thing is for this department to have a sufficient supply of money to do a really meaningful and effective job. Some of the money the Government is now spending of the $1.2 billion is not new money. It is old money from other Departments recycled into a new department, a department of western diversification. One reason is to give it a higher profile to enhance the Conservative Party's election opportunities. I say that because if it turns out to be the case, there will be more cynicism and more alienation in the West and more and more people will be looking for more and more radical options, something we cannot afford to play around with. At the moment we do not have very much support for western separatist Parties. That being said, there is still a great feeling of alienation in western Canada. The Western Canada Concept still exists, the Confederation of Regions Party still exists. It would not take much more to start fanning the flames of western independence and western separatism again. I urge the Government to put more money into this department, try to diversify the economy of the West and do something meaningful and creative to make those of us in western Canada feel that we are fully 100 per cent part of the great Canadian Confederation.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to stand in the House today to contribute to this debate. I will attempt to keep my remarks relatively brief in the hope that opposition Party Members might also keep their remarks brief so we can move this legislation forward to committee, through the process, and have it in place as quickly as possible because it has been a long time in coming.

I was elected to this Chamber in May, 1979. I have felt for a very long time that the regions of Canada were sufficiently diverse. Instead of a centralized type of program which characterized the Liberal-NDP years control of this country I felt that we needed initiatives specifically related to the regions which might serve the needs of the people.

It is particularly interesting to hear the Member opposite as the first speaker for the New Democratic Party on this issue. He is a westerner. Our roots are not dissimilar, but I would like to make it very clear to the Chamber that the kinds of ideas we have about what is right and wrong in Canada and what needs to be changed arise from perhaps very different philosophical roots. I hear the Member opposite and I hear Members of his Party rather consistently saying, "We will stand up for the west".

Mr. Nystrom: Which we do.

Mr. Hawkes: That is the sort of thing that comes from the right-hand side of their mouths. But what about the left hand side of their mouths, Mr. Speaker? In 1979 we had a Government elected in Canada with a very strong western representation with a Prime Minister from the West. At the first available opportunity the NDP passed a motion in the House supported by the Liberals and threw the Government out of office. After so many years of lack of western representation, the New Democrats threw us out of office. We were left with four and a half close to five years of government with only two western Members sitting on the government benches and only one in Cabinet.

What happened to the West? In my city, the unemployment rate went from 3.5 per cent to 12.7 per cent because of federal government policies oriented toward central Canada by a Government that perhaps knew no better, a Government supported in the assumption of office, in the first instance and continuously, by the New Democratic Party.

What has happened since then? We finally have a Government with the strongest cabinet representation from western Canada in the history of the country. We have a Government that is committed to addressing in turn each and every major grievance that has existed since the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan joined Confederation.

As we bring forward statutes and programs that are absolutely vital and necessary to the diversification and strength of the western economy, time after time we get filibusters and fighting in the House. At the centre of that tactic is the slowing down of public policy initiatives required by the West. At the centre of the strategy designed to thwart and subvert those positive actions, we find the members of the New Democratic Party. They say out of the right sides of their mouths that they care about western Canada and out of the left sides of their mouths and the actions they take in this Chamber that they are dedicated time after time to stopping the progress of the West dead in its tracks.

Every day I sit through petitions and listen to petition after petition after petition coming from NDP riding associations in western Canada. These petitions say that we should get rid of the trade agreement. I would expect that point of view to come from the mouths of the most powerful union leaders in the country who live in central Canada. They like to control the supply while the benefits to their members rise higher. Members from western Canada have become captives of those labour leaders of the powerful unions. To use this House to advance the interests of those people at the expense of western Canadians is unconscionable.

There is not one reputable economist in Canada who does not believe that the trade deal will be good for Canada and for the young people of Canada. The economists go one step further. They tell us consistently that it will be especially good for western Canada.

The Hon. Member has the gall to say that we need value added to the resources of western Canada. To that extent, he is right. We do need value added to the things we produce, but we have to sell them somewhere. To have the jobs, the factories, the plants and the processing, we have to have a market. That market is indeed the entire world, but if we are to serve the entire world on a competitive basis, we need the economies of scale and we need the investments. Someone has to come up with the money to build the processing plants and the factories. Someone has to come up with the money to market the products. To be competitive in the market-place, we need to have access to the markets.

If the Hon. Member had one bit of interest in history, he could study a number of occasions since World War II on which small nations entered into trading arrangements with larger nations and increased their market potential. In each and every single instance, the smaller nation benefited by increased jobs, more satisfying jobs, better paying jobs and increased standards of living for the entire nation. That is what history since World War II has told us and that is what the economists are telling us will happen to Canada and in particular western Canada. Day after day, members of the New Democratic Party fight that vital initiative for western Canada.

Did members of the NDP support FIRA, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which we changed? They supported FIRA. The Hon. Member smiles with pride and—

Mr. Nystrom: It wasn't strong enough.

Mr. Hawkes: He says that it was not strong enough. As a consequence of FIRA, Canadian investment left the country and foreign investment stopped coming in. There were well over 1.5 million unemployed Canadians within a very brief period of time.

This Government said that the philosophy of FIRA was wrong and needed to be changed. We wanted an agency called Investment Canada which would encourage Canadians and others to invest in this country. Members of the NDP said that we were wrong and that the Minister of Finance's Budgets were wrong. They said that we would increase the unemployment rolls.

I would like Canadians to recall those early days in the fall of 1984 and the spring of 1985. Members of the NDP said that if we changed FIRA and put in a Budget that encouraged investment, we would produce more unemployed Canadians. That is the logical chain in the belief system of members of the Opposition and particularly members of the New Democratic Party. What happened, though? Canadians are better off today. Over 1,100,000 more jobs have been created, 85 per cent of which are full-time jobs, as a consequence of economic attitudes on the part of Conservative Members that have produced and built upon the individual initiative of individual Canadians.

We believe in a system that challenges individual Canadians to be energetic, to take risks and to succeed. If we do that and if we do it well, it works.

What would NDP Members replace that with? They would replace it with a system of more civil servants, more decision-makers employed by Government, higher costs to individual taxpayers and less freedom for individuals. Their policies take us consistently in that direction. Surely Canadians have had enough experience with that to know that it leads inevitably to higher unemployment, more tragedy, more wife beating, more suicide and more of all of the social consequences which they profess to wish to avoid.

Members of the NDP should look back in time just a bit. The two NDP Members opposite were here when the Government increasingly intervened in the lives of people with things like the National Energy Program. They saw the consequences for Canadians and yet they did not seem to learn. It is as if there were a genetic reason right from the beginning that they have to hold on to a belief system, no matter how antiquated or how inefficient it is, simply because they have always believed it. There seems to be an inability to learn from experience.

What are we doing? Canada's patent legislation was out of step. They supported that initiative long before these Members came along. Members on our side said that when you do that, your commitment to research and development will decline, jobs in that field will decline, your standard of living will decline, and your employment rate will decline. They would not listen, they would not learn, and it all came about. Our research and development declined. Young Canadians with skills, talent and energy had to leave the country to find jobs in R and D.

After watching it for 15 years, and watching these things come to pass, this Government brought in initiatives to change that, and all we got was a filibuster. We were delayed in passing that legislation for well over a year. It is a job-creating initiative that will help western Canada, central Canada, and Atlantic Canada but the Opposition fought it.

What have they done on immigration? Each day the social welfare case-load in Canada grows through illegal, unplanned immigration. Each day that happens, money is paid out. Taxpayers have paid out hundreds of millions of dollars. The law we inherited did not allow determinations to be made in any kind of efficient manner. It invited illegal migrant flows, people who by no stretch of the imagination could be classified by anyone as refugees, coming as they did in large numbers from western democratic countries. Yet the Opposition refuses to allow sensible legislation to pass the Chamber.

In 1988 alone the Opposition has spent six days of the House of Commons time filibustering some simple amendments from the Senate. We could have been talking about regional diversity and the western diversification program, topics essential to the well-being of this nation. Instead the Opposition chooses to filibuster refugee legislation for six days.

Then we come to a budget and the need to borrow money. In the six days of budget debate we got very few kudos for reducing the Government's borrowing requirements and saving future generations some of the load. Then we find out that in those six days of debate the Opposition did not learn enough about the need for borrowing, so we got two and a half more days of debate on a borrowing Bill. Close to nine full days were spent on the economy with no useful suggestions. There was just a lot of political posturing while legislation piles up.

Did we get any help on tackling the long-term western Canadian grievance on transportation? The Opposition stalled two pieces of legislation day after day after day. They would have provided a better sense of equity to western Canadians in the transportation field. Absolutely fundamental changes were required to enable the western economy to grow, develop and diversify, yet what do we get from the NDP? Filibuster. Filibuster. Stall. Filibuster. Filibuster. Why? Do they value the myth of power so highly that any behaviour is justified in the pursuit of that power?

Is there a single piece of evidence in the three and a half years of this Parliament of consistently helpful behaviour by the Opposition? We just get rhetoric. We get rhetoric by the carload. It would be nice if we could weigh the rhetoric to give you some sense of how large it is getting. It would completely dwarf any sense—

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hate to interrupt a veteran Member, although you would never know he was, but there is a rule of relevance. He should be speaking to what is in the Bill before the House instead of everything else he has been throwing up before us.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the shoe must be pinching just a little because so much truth is being laid on the table.

The Hon. Member referred to tourism. Western diversification relates to tourism. Is there any credit for the very early decision taken by this Government to spend several million dollars in a new advertising campaign consisting of television and radio commercials?

Mr. Riis: Pittance.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Member says it is a pittance.

Mr. Riis: You bet it is.

Mr. Hawkes: If tourism is up in western Canada by 35 per cent or 40 per cent, how many jobs for real people who need a real income does that represent? Yet the Member shouts "pittance". Governments he supported for so many years did not spend that pittance. They did not create those jobs. This Government did.

What did they do on energy? They invented a grand scheme involving PIP grants to the oil industry. Now we see the court cases involving abuses of those grants. We rang the bells for 17 days in this Chamber and then we had a committee process.

Mr. Riis: Are you proud of that?

Mr. Hawkes: I was there every hour of every day telling government Members the consequences of that program, how many lives would be ruined as a consequence. I told them what would happen to the economy. This would increase suicides, spouse and child battering. Yet I did not see the NDP, sitting alongside me in those committee meetings, fighting for the people of western Canada. I do not see them in this Chamber today fighting for the people of western Canada. I expect what we will see through the balance of this day, into tomorrow and the next day this is debated, is NDP Members from western Canada filibustering the western diversification fund. How in God's name they can translate that kind of tactic into something useful for western Canadians is beyond my wildest imagination.

Statutory legislative authority to produce a mechanism and fund unbounded by central Canadian dictates but open to the flavour of the West, the creativity of the West, is what we are creating in this legislation. Our part of Canada is as unique as Quebec. It is as unique as Newfoundland. That is part of the charm of Canada. This Government believes that unique programs and practices are required in the different regions. As western Canadians, some born in western Canada, they should know that reality and be supportive of our efforts to achieve that result.

Let us watch what the NDP does. Do they facilitate or block an initiative designed to help western Canadians?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend. My recollection is that we have been debating this Bill for about three or four hours and he is already calling it a filibuster. I realize that this is one of the Members who stormed the Chair of the House of Commons. He broke all parliamentary tradition by shutting down the House of Commons, standing before the Speaker, shaking his fist and screaming. They held this House to ransom day after day after day. Some of us were sickened at that behaviour. Presumably the Hon. Member is proud of the fact that he was prepared to strangle the voice of this House, throttle debate, and essentially close this House and Parliament down.

I was not pleased with that. I was not proud of that. I was embarrassed by the fact that the Hon. Member and his colleagues decided that was an appropriate tactic. That is dictatorial. It is something we would find in a fascist system and certainly has no place in a parliamentary democracy.

Having said that, my hon. colleague from Yorkton—Melville indicated that sourcing of supplies and services is one way the federal Government can assist the local manufacturing economy, particularly that in western Canada. Yet the statistics are very clear that government sourcing in western Canada has decreased over the last four years. There is less government sourcing in western Canada on a percentage basis than ever before. Eighty per cent of federal government sourcing continues to be from isolated portions of central Canada.

How does the Member explain the Government's interest in western Canada if it is sourcing less of its goods and services from the West, on a percentage basis, than ever before? Second, does he really believe that after three or four hours of debate on a very important issue with regard to the diversification of the western Canadian economy we have debated for too long, that the debate should stop, and that anything further would be considered a filibuster?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, every time opposition Members open their mouths they give us lots of things to say. One of the tragedies of this Chamber is the lack of thorough research in the Opposition. I particularly resent a person of the Member's stature within his Party saying that I stormed the Chair. I never did. I never have. I care deeply about the Constitution of Canada and I participated actively in the committee hearings from morning until midnight. I cared about it in the Chamber and I stood in my place and participated in the filibuster, which was the longest in parliamentary history, because it was a fundamental issue to the people of this country, but I did not storm the Chair. I did not break the rules. I think the Member's research should be better founded in this case and in many others.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did imply that the Hon. Member was one of the group which stormed the Speaker's chair. I simply assumed that due to his enthusiastic support of that initiative he would have been a member of that group. However, if he was not part of the group that stormed the Chair and closed down Parliament for a number of days, I will retract that and apologize to my hon. friend. I would not like to link him with the group which carried out that particular act.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that comment. I participated in two filibusters in this Chamber. One was the ringing of the bells and the consequences of that which was related to the energy Bills.

In terms of the Constitution, I believed that my part of the country would be forced to leave Canada if the original version of that had passed. It would have shoved me out of my own country. I worked with Members of the Opposition, including the one who spoke before me, to ensure that the original version did not pass and we succeeded. We can stay in Canada with pride.

Second, I participated in the filibuster on the energy Bills because they were going to devastate western Canada, my city in particular, and to some extent the entire country. They were wrong-headed and wrongly drafted. We did not succeed, and that is a tragedy. I look at the anguish in my community day after day and wish I had somehow been able to avoid it.

Those are two fundamental issues and it is the responsibility of people in this Chamber to filibuster, to fight, and to use all the tools available on fundamental issues. However, it is a travesty that the reality of this place is that pieces of legislation are filibustered which deserve to be passed through the House into committee for detailed study and to be reported back. To plug up the legislative agenda on things like copyright, immigration, and western diversification is not the proper use of this Chamber or of taxpayers' funds. This place was not invented for that purpose.

In Britain, the mother of Parliaments, most legislation is debated in the House for less than a day. It is very rare that it takes more than a day. Yet in this Chamber we are exposed to blocking tactics. If the Opposition wants to block positive initiatives such as western diversification, let us take it to the voters. Let us lay out the record of blockage on initiatives that are helpful to western Canadians.

Mr. Riis: Call an election tomorrow.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us go to an election and explain to western Canadians what we have done with regard to reorienting the system of government to give all regions of the country a say in decision making. Let us take to the voters a piece of legislation such as this which so clearly says that western culture will be attended to and decisions will be made in western Canada. The program is flexible to encompass the aspirations of people who live in that region. Let us go to the voters and tell them that the NDP will say one thing but will do another.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Member from Calgary is living in dreamland. He is talking about filibusters and so on. I have been here for many years and have seen his Party in opposition. If there was a Party that was expert at filibustering and delaying, it was the Conservative Party in opposition. One need only think of people like Erik Nielsen to think of filibusters, delaying tactics, and stalling tactics.

I find it very surprising that someone who is supposed to be an honourable Member questions the motives of Members across the way. He said that I do not speak up for western Canada, that I do not represent western Canada but rather union leaders in central Canada. That is nothing more or less than regional racism. It is regional racism of the worst kind. It is the kind of game which divides Canadians and is very divisive of the future unity of the country.

I do not question his western credentials. Of course he speaks up for western Canada. He has a different point of view than have I, but that does not make him less a westerner than am I. Why should I be less of a westerner or less of a Canadian than he is? That is the kind of nasty regional racism which divides the country. I am very surprised to hear someone from across the way with his experience say that kind of thing.

I voted against the Government in December, 1979, on a non-confidence motion because I thought the Budget was bad. I did not defeat Joe Clark, the people of Canada defeated Joe Clark. A majority government was elected. The New Democratic Party caucus grew in size. The Conservatives lost western seats. In Saskatchewan, for example, the NDP went from five Members to seven and the Conservatives went from nine to seven. The people spoke.

That kind of arrogance and playing on divisiveness and racism turns people off of politicians. I just hope the Member across the way would not do that kind of thing. He says that because someone from western Canada speaks out against the trade deal, they are not a westerner. All he need do is look at the polls in western Canada. There are a lot of Manitobans, Albertans, people from Saskatchewan, and British Columbians who oppose this trade deal. In fact, until recently his Party opposed this kind of a free trade deal with the United States. Year in and year out the Conservative Party led the crusade against such a trade deal with the United States.

Polls indicate that in Saskatchewan opinion is divided fifty-fifty, as the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) knows. There was a rally in Regina recently, attended by a couple of thousand people who are opposed to this trade deal. There are all kinds of farmers in my riding who oppose this trade deal. They are concerned about the future of agriculture. That does not mean that they are not westerners or do not speak up for western Canada.

I just wish that we could have debates in this House in which we did not have to resort to this kind of divisiveness and name-calling but could talk about the issue on a substantive basis. That is what great leaders of the Conservative Party used to do. I think of the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), a former Prime Minister, Mr. Stanfield, and others. Most people in that Party still debate issues on their substantive merits, but when we start using regional name-calling it degrades this place and creates an atmosphere in the country which is very disunifying.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, maybe we are moving toward debates which centre on the issues. However, I sat here before I made my remarks and I did not hear much debate about the western diversification fund. I would like to leave the Member with a couple of pieces of information.

Deputy Minister-level meetings are occurring this very day between western diversification and Supply and Services to try to articulate the programs. Meetings at lower bureaucratic levels go on on a daily basis. They are trying to help western Canadian citizens access government programs and services in better ways than they used to. The Deputy Minister of Supply and Services and the Deputy Minister of Western Development met with all their provincial counterparts as recently as two weeks ago. This is the western way. Western Canada is composed of communities with pioneer roots. We have a volunteer tradition which all Canadians saw during the Olympics. We are used to working together.

I hope that the New Democratic Party would at least support this and we could use the extra 39 minutes to get this legislation into committee where it can be well vetted, returned for report stage and third reading, to become the law of the land in the near future.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am thrilled to rise to speak to Bill C-113, an Act to establish the western diversification office and subsequent offices in western Canada, and to lay out the framework to disburse funds in western Canada. This Bill represents an effort in terms of decentralization of decision-making and toward the diversification of the western economy. For those two reasons, I certainly support the principle of this initiative.

I want to emphasize that the principles of this legislation are appropriate and honourable, ones that I and others have advocated for many years. There has been a need to diversify the economy of western Canada and move its dependency away from the resource industries, as valuable and important as they will always be, and to recognize the reality that the jobs of the future will move more toward these service sector industries, small scale manufacturing and a knowledge based economy.

While we ought to continue to develop the resources of western Canada as we have for many years, we should make greater efforts to finish more of those resources in western Canada and attempt to process these raw materials in western Canada. That is the challenge we face when it comes to developing our resources in western Canada so that we can move away from the extraction, development and growth of resources for overseas export which links us too closely to the vagaries of the international market. Our dependence on the resource sector gives us the traditional boom and bust economy of the West and ties us into the cyclical pricing of commodities on international markets. While that brings very good times, as we have seen recently, it also causes very tough times for westerners.

We certainly agree with the principles behind this Bill, but we have some real concerns about it as well. There is a feeling in western Canada that the federal Government has turned against westerners to a certain extent. While I am not sure people feel betrayed, they are certainly surprised that more has not happened in western Canada considering the overwhelming number of westerners in the Cabinet, from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to a number of other senior cabinet Ministers. It seems that there has not been the resurgence and support of the western economy that people had expected.

I need go no further than my constituency and surrounding constituencies in western Canada, including the Caribou constituencies, northern B.C. constituencies, the Kootenays and Okanagan Valley constituencies.

I do not believe that many people in those constituencies would agree that their lives have been better or more secure than they were in 1984 when this Government was elected. In fact, those to whom I have spoken have indicated that they do not have the same feeling of confidence for the future, particularly for their children and grandchildren.

For example, one can consider the re-emergence of the Western Canada Concept and the Confederation of Regions Party. These parties are gaining strength in western Canada, primarily from the right of the political spectrum, which normally include disillusioned Conservatives who believe that the West has not benefited as much as it should have, considering the overwhelming number of western Conservatives in the Government.

What is the reason for this disillusionment? Let us consider Bill C-113. It provides $1.2 billion over five years for all of western Canada, comprising four provinces. Goodness knows that the Liberals certainly abandoned any support for the West when they were in power, but they introduced the Western Development Fund of $4 billion over four years. The Conservatives are introducing a significantly smaller amount of money through this program we are debating, which seems to suggest that compared to the Liberals, matters seems to be worse in terms of western Canada.

We can study this further by examining federal Government sourcing through agencies, which has a tremendous impact on the regional economy. If federal Government Crown corporations like Petro-Canada, Air Canada, CNR and others were to purchase much of their goods and services from western Canadian suppliers, it would give a real boost to the economy in western Canada. However, let me quote from Supply and Services statistics. In 1981 western Canada received about 15 per cent of all the money invested in supply and services by the federal Government. In 1984, that decreased to 14 per cent, and by 1987 had decreased to 11 per cent. In other words, the amount of sourcing from western Canada relative to the rest of Canada is less than it had been when the federal Government took office. One can only assume that the Supply and Services figures are accurate.

Let us consider the Industrial Regional Development Program and the value of contracts given across Canada, noting the population in western Canada. Once again, we received less than our fair share based on the population of western Canada relative to central Canada.

If one wanted to make a case for an affirmative economic program for western Canada, perhaps one could even argue that western Canada should get even more than it deserves considering the high levels of unemployment in western Canada compared to central Canada. Presumably this is another indication of why people are disenchanted with what is happening in terms of economic development in western Canada.

Let us consider regional development programs which are primarily meant to assist regions like those in western Canada. In 1984, the federal Government was spending $14.8 billion on regional development programs. As our Estimates would indicate, in 1987 regional development programs amounted to only $11.8 billion. In other words, $3 billion over a three-year period was plucked out of regional development programs which, by and large, go into helping areas like western Canada. I am wearing a button today which says: "Go with the flow". This button represents our concern regarding the Government's decision to cut back on flow-through shares to assist the mining industry. We all know that the flow-through share program provided a tremendous incentive, encouragement and nurturing of the exploration programs that eventually led to mining property development and, hopefully, mines.

• (1700)

Everywhere in Canada from the western Arctic, to British Columbia, up to the Yukon, right across northern Canada to Labrador, a tremendous amount of mineral exploration is taking place because of this particular initiative, the flow-through share program. The Government's response to this is to essentially gut the flow-through share program. This is the kind of thing that makes us wonder how committed the Government is to western economic development programs.

I do not have to remind Members of the maintenance contract for the CF-18. Virtually every single adviser suggested that the maintenance program should go to the West. However, the Government decided it should not go to the West. If we are going to make decisions based on politics, let us be up front about it. We were going to make the decision based on economics or the professional advice we received, but when 75 advisers out of 75 said the contract should go to the West, the Government ignored that advice. As a westerner, I can only assume that the Government's priorities appear not to be the development and support of the economy of western Canada.

I can also talk about the CN cuts. I notice the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is in the House of Commons. He will know that over the last number of years, unfortunately, we have seen a number of positions cut in CN. Because the lion's share of rail activity takes place in the transportation infrastructure of western Canada, once again it is western Canada that is essentially the hardest hit in terms of those cut-backs initiated throughout the rail system.

There is also Challenge '88. That is the program where the Government helps to fund college, vocational, technical and university students for the summer. We all recognize that inflation year after year requires that these programs be increased marginally to keep up with the rate of inflation. However, during the past two years the allotments of the federal Government for the summer work program for students have not increased at all, which means, when one factors in inflation, that there have actually been serious cuts to the amount of money the federal Government provides for summer jobs. Of course, the problem is most acute in western and eastern Canada. In pockets of central Canada we have a tremendous amount of economic prosperity and the chances for a summer job are much greater than in areas of western Canada where unemployment rates are now in the 20 per cent to 30 per cent range, which makes it very difficult, if not impossible, for young people to find employment.

I do not think anyone would question the fact that if we are going to have economic prosperity in western Canada, we have to invest more in the most important natural resource of western Canada. When I refer to the most important natural resource, I do not mean wheat, timber, coal, gas, oil or minerals. I mean people. When we invest in developing the most important natural resource in western Canada, the people, it means we have to spend more money on education and training programs. However, when we look at the amount of money allocated for training over the last number of years, we find the Government has not increased but has cut funding for those programs.

Last year, the Estimates indicate that $479 million existed for employment programs. This year it will be $339 million. That is a $140 million cut in the amount of money going for training and education. All of us who have universities and colleges in our areas realize that Employment Canada has been forced to cut the number of seats it normally would fund to assist people to train and upgrade and improve their skills. In that critical area, the development of human resources, there seems to be cut-backs.

I suppose what has most obviously affected western Canada has been the decision of the Government to cut back in funding for the Post Office. It requires that the Post Office make money. It is one government service the Government decided should make profits. We do not expect the military to make profits. We do not expect the RCMP, ambulance services, universities and colleges or hospitals to make profits. We do not expect the Department of Immigration to make a profit. However, we do expect the Post Office to make a profit, that one government service that touches the lives of every single Canadian in every Canadian community for their entire life. In a country as vast as Canada, where we are trying to service rural areas and small communities, we have to cut back on the amount of service we provide.

Where do we cut back if we are trying to make an efficient profit-making organization of the Post Office? We do not cut back in Montreal or Toronto. We cut back in the rural areas, the post offices in the small communities. Where do they exist? They exist in western Canada. That is the part of Canada where rural areas and small communities are being depopulated at an ever accelerating rate. There seems to be a lack of commitment by the Government in terms of maintaining a dignified rural life in western Canada because we are seeing the erosion of government services, the most obvious being postal services.

What we see in this legislation is a bit of an illusion. It gives the impression that the Government is interested in the economy of western Canada and the diversification of the economy of western Canada, but I think if it really was it would not have excluded, for example, the ability of communities to redevelop their urban structures and to expand their community development.

For some mysterious reason the Government has decided that the western diversification fund will not be used for urban or community development. In other words, it will not be used to improve sewage treatment or water systems, to build roads or to provide community facilities. If we are going to diversify the economy of western Canada, it is imperative that those communities be vibrant communities. If we are going to encourage the development of service industries, high-tech industries and modern manufacturing, we must have good universities, colleges, technical schools and vocational schools. If the basic urban infrastructure is not there, it is going to be more difficult than ever to expand those particular facilities.

I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that every provincial Government across Canada, barring none, has said they are prepared to participate in a municipal infrastructure sharing program. They say they will pay one-third, the local taxpayers in the area will pay one-third and the federal Government kicks in one-third. In other words, there will be a one-third cost sharing program to develop urban infrastructure. The provinces, cities and municipalities across Canada unanimously agreed. Only one person did not. That was the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He said he was not interested in participating in the development of rural infrastructures using this method.

I could go on and talk about the need to expand Government procurement and the need for programs to encourage the development of our tourist industry, small business and manufacturing in western Canada, and programs to assist in the development of value added for our resource industries, but I think what is needed more than ever is a development strategy. The western diversification fund is really a grab bag. For example, British Columbia, $79 million over five years will be used for South Moresby Park. That money should have more rightfully come from the social policy reserve fund or the Parks Canada fund, not from the western diversification fund. The $53 million in British Columbia to be spent over five years for salmon enhancement should come from the Department of Fisheries, not from the western diversification fund.

There was the $10 million bail out for the Fraser Valley Shakes and Shingles Association after the devastating decision by the Government regarding shakes and shingles exports. We are already seeing a major part of the fund eaten up with programs that should be rightfully funded from other government departments. We do not have a comprehensive strategy in terms of developing proper facilities for our urban communities.

We have not developed proper over-all strategies in terms of western transportation and communication, the development of our river systems and soil preservation policies in the West. What is the strategy, what is the business or economic blueprint we are trying to introduce into western Canada? As I see it at the moment, it seems to be simply a grab bag. Whatever one can convince the decision makers of will be funded or there will be a grant or loan guarantee or whatever.

In closing, I say that we agree in principle that this type of approach is necessary. However, in terms of a real commitment that is honest and real to diversify the economy of western Canada, it does not seem to be here in this particular legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. I listened with interest to the discourse of my hon. colleague from British Columbia. I must admit that I was somewhat confused when he asked the rhetorical question that he said he asked his constituents. The question was, "Are you better off now in 1988 than you were in 1984?" He told us that his constituents responded in the negative. When I ask that question in my riding, the response is positive.

My constituents acknowledge that the federal Government has spent more in reforestation money than any other federal Government. They state that housing starts are at a new high in Canada. They state that it is now cheaper to borrow money than it ever was before. They remind me that the unemployment rate on central Vancouver Island was 17 per cent when I was elected and that it is now some 10 per cent. This means that 90 per cent of my constituents are working.

It seems to me that the people of Nanaimo—Alberni see the glass as being half full while NDP riding associations and NDP Members see it as being half empty. This probably comes from having a pro-active Member of Parliament, a positive Member of Parliament, as opposed to having a reactive and negative Member of Parliament.

The Hon. Member attacked the Government's position on flow-through shares. He stated that he is wearing a button which states, "Go with the flow". I cannot understand how the NDP can justify attacking big business and big corporations for not paying enough tax and yet support just such a tax measure which would employ people. They cannot have it both ways. Can my colleague respond to that?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to respond to my hon. friend. With respect to the flow-through share issue it benefits primarily companies that are not in a profit situation. That is the idea of a flow through. The flow through goes to an investor beyond the actual exploration company involved.

I am pleased to say that the flow-through share program benefits not quite exclusively but largely Canadian junior companies, Canadian owned companies. It is a good program. It has generated a tremendous amount of mining activity across Canada. That is why I think it should be preserved. That is why perhaps even tomorrow, which is an opposition day, we might take some initiative to ensure that the debate on the flow-through share issue is continued.

With respect to my friend's original comment, perhaps it would be useful for him to discuss the situation with his Kootenay colleagues. Two of his friends, Conservative Members of Parliament, represent Kootenay ridings where the unemployment rate is now about 20 per cent. My recollection is that back in 1984 it was also about 20 per cent. For that part of British Columbia things have not changed significantly.

I suggest that he also spend some time with his Conservative colleague from the Cariboo region of British Columbia. In that region the unemployment rates have not changed substantially since 1984.

To say that every initiative that the Government has taken is bad would be inappropriate. There is more funding going into reforestation in British Columbia than there was under the Liberals by some margin. However, I like to think that if we were serious about regional economic development, and I suspect that my hon. friend will agree, that while there have been more advances and more efforts made in terms of husbanding our forest resource much more could be done.

I want to share with the Hon. Member what took place at a meeting I had recently with a number of professional foresters in my constituency. They were asked how many men and women could actually be employed to develop the forest resource as it ought to be developed in central British Columbia, particularly in the Kamloops reforestation district. They said in terms of thinning, spacing, fertilizing, disease control, pest control, road building and a whole variety of other programs that as many as 10,000 men and women could be employed over a vast number of years. That is what we should be doing if we are going to develop our resource, as is done in places such as Finland, for example. I suspect that the Hon. Member would agree that that would be an appropriate initiative to take.

Rather than providing funds for unemployment insurance or indirectly through welfare, why not develop programs with our forest companies, in co-operation with our provincial Governments, to develop and to husband that critical forest resource, not only in western Canada but right across Canada? This would put literally tens of thousands of Canadians to work at something that must be done. It would not be a make work program. It is something that must be done in order to develop a critical Canadian resource.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, in sitting here this afternoon listening to the debate I am having a little difficulty with it because I am a new Member of the House. I have only been here since 1984. I can only reflect on how things were then and how things are now in my own riding.

My background is in small business. I am a farmer. People who have sat here for the length of time that some of the Members in the New Democratic Party have sat here have been out of touch with reality for a little too long. They review how things were then and how they are now.

The fact is that interest rates have made a fantastic difference to agriculture and to small business. Just look at the unemployment rate and the way it is now. I lived through those years. I was in business and in agriculture. It was very difficult to survive in those years, thanks to the way things were. Interest rates were at an all-time high. I do not have to tell anyone who is in small business or in agriculture about this. They have only to look back at their records for 1981 and 1982 to see that they were paying interest rates of 22.5 per cent and 22.75 per cent and higher. I have but to remind them who was in government then. It was the Liberals who were in power as a result of the New Democratic Party defeating the Conservative Government.

We have brought in legislation. It was first announced on August 4, 1987, by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This legislation is to promote diversification of the economy in western Canada.

I would like to share with the Hon. Member something that I read in the Moose Jaw paper. It is from the January 30, 1988, edition. The article states that a Moose Jaw company has gone high tech thanks to assistance from the western diversification fund. Is this fund not working? What would the Hon. Member call that then? Other firms in Moose Jaw are also receiving assistance from the western diversification initiative.

Why do we not pass this legislation? What is the big debate about? Do Members of the New Democratic Party intend to stand here speaker after speaker and lament their past and all the sins they have committed in the past with the Liberals? Let us bring this matter to a vote.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I hope that no one here would say that the $1.2 billion as spread out over five years will not do any good for anybody. No one is saying that. I think that is what the Hon. Member is implying.

In response to the Hon. Member's point that some people are out of touch with reality, I would point out to him that there was an NDP nomination meeting in his constituency on February 20. In 1984 there were 200 people at the NDP nomination meeting.

Mr. Gottselig: In 1984 there were 1,500 people at the PC nomination meeting.

Mr. Riis: On February 20 there were 700 people at the nomination meeting. The number went from 200 to 700. I think there is a new wind blowing down there in Moose Jaw. If the Hon. Member wants to do the right thing, he should probably spend a lot more time back home rather than standing here in the House of Commons making nonsensical comments.

• (1720)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-113. It has been interesting to listen to Hon. Members across the way participate in the debate. They are telling us how great it is today with the Tories in power and with all the initiatives that are being taken under the Western Economic Diversification Program. Clearly, it would be desirable to see how much the program will do for western Canada.

It is easy to see how the Government is able to gussy up the $220 million per year to run the program if we simply look at the tremendous cut-backs that have been made over the last three and a half years by the federal Government. If one looks at that, combined with the massive increase in personal taxation, it is not difficult to see where the Government will come up with the extra money to fund this program which, let's face it, is a very modest program. It is interesting to note that all of those programs are calculated over a five-year period.

During 1983-84 the previous Liberal Government committed some $1.2 billion to western Canada in a two-year period under the ERDA program. That amount was increased to $2.1 billion because it provided for matching funds from the provinces. The amount of money that we are looking at is not very great when one considers the type of cut-backs that have taken place.

A few days ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced approximately $25 million worth of branch line rehabilitation projects. Of course, they came out with a nice blue label giving the Minister's name on each sheet and stating that they were jointly announced by people like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), wherein he announced that he was going to carry out the rehabilitation of a line in his constituency amounting to several hundred thousand dollars. In fact, there was one for $165,000.

What the Minister of Transport did not announce in this program is that, by the end of the period, 1990, when the more than $1 billion program will be complete, $125 million will be left in the program unspent. A program that is desperately needed for rehabilitation and upgrading of the rail lines throughout western Canada in order to move grain and wheat to market will have money left unspent and will lapse. I assume that it will never be used.

For instance, the Wood Mountain subdivision was supposed to be rehabilitated. In these announcements, I do not see any indication that that subdivision will be rehabilitated. I understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, the person who wears the flak jacket and harangues the troops and tells them about how bad the NDP defence policy is, has had many representations. He has attended meetings. Still, the money will not come.

It is clear that the Minister of Transport is siphoning off approximately $125 million from the rail line rehabilitation program in western Canada that was supposed to be spent on rehabilitating those rail lines in order that crops could be moved to market more rapidly. I suppose it is being shifted over into the department of western economic diversification. In fact, it is a type of shell game. There is $1 billion here, but we are not going to spend $125 million of that, so we will create another department over here. In fact, approximately one-third of the funding for the first year will likely come out of that fund.

An Hon. Member asked how things were three or four years ago, and how they are now. Three or four years ago the price of grain in western Canada was $170 a tonne for No. 1 wheat. A few years prior to that time, it was close to $200. This year it is $110. Barley and oats are much lower than that.

How far does a $220 million per year program go in covering that type of reduction in income for grain farmers? In fact, it is totally irrelevant. The devastation which has been wreaked on western communities, entire community life, and the stress on individuals, has not been seen since R. B. Bennett was in power during those terrible years from 1930 to 1935.

How have the Tories responded to this situation? If we look at the debt situation, the signals were clear and unmistakable in the fall of 1984 when the Farm Credit Corporation signalled that we were facing one of the worst farm debt crises since the 1930s. Very little, if anything, with regard to the farm debt crisis happened for the first year or so.

In the spring of 1985 the Minister finally got around to bringing in the farm debt review boards. Those boards do not have any power to reschedule debt or refinance farmers' loans. They are very modest programs. Some people suggest that all they do is silence everybody in sight, from the people on the board to the farmer, to the advisers, to the local pool operators, to everybody involved.

When the Government finally moved on some debt restructuring programs, it brought in the commodity based mortgage which was designed to help a couple of thousand farmers per year for the last two or three years.

We are faced with the situation in Saskatchewan and other parts of the Prairies where there are some 50,000 farmers in serious financial difficulty, some 12,000 of whom are totally insolvent. The Farm Credit Corporation started appealing a year ago last fall for funds to revitalize a recovery program for the Farm Credit Corporation. No action has yet been taken.

The Minister surreptitiously filed the Farm Credit Corporation's report on the last day the House sat last June. It showed that the Farm Credit Corporation was insolvent to the tune of $124 million. It is expected that that will be more than $300 million for the current fiscal year. How can this corporation help farmers in serious financial difficulty to reschedule debt, set aside debt, or overcome these difficulties when it is insolvent?

The magnitude and the gravity of the situation in western Canada has gone down every year since, and no effective action has been taken with regard to the farm debt crisis. I guess the double whammy of the whole situation is the Western Accord which the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources negotiated with the prairie Tory Premiers. It was hailed as a great step forward. Everybody believed that until the spring of 1986 when the world price of oil collapsed. The price dropped from $28 a barrel to $10, recovering to $18 a barrel last summer. Oil is now around $16 a barrel. If it was so good, why did this great negotiation not take into account the precipitous drops in the price of oil that we have seen, as well as the recession and depression that fell on Alberta and Saskatchewan during that period?

It is common for the Tories to talk about how tough things were in the recession years of 1981-82. But they were not nearly as bad as in the summer of 1986 and early 1987 and which is continuing, when oil prices were at the $15 or $16 a barrel level. The situation has been made worse with the appreciation of the Canadian dollar, creating the double whammy. The cut-backs and the pounding down of western community life continues. Its very vitality is being removed, and I do not see how a couple of hundred million dollars, or $220 million a year, can really diversify the entire western economy.

In northern Ontario, Atlantic Canada and other resource areas the Government has hit us with several double whammies in support for community colleges. There has been a cut-back in funding by 40 per cent. The number of seats in community colleges has been reduced by 40 per cent right across the country. The oil industry in Alberta and the grain industry right across the Prairies has been suffering hardship. When people want to retrain, the seats are not available because of the 40 per cent cut-back.

Likewise, the Government is hell-bent on a program in rural Canada to remove and privatize post offices, replacing home delivery with superboxes. Many communities already feeling the pinch and suffering from a reduction in population are having their post office removed, resulting in one less job. Across the country 9,200 jobs will be lost, 80 per cent of which are held by women. Over 5,000 post offices will be affected.

Interestingly enough, the resource areas have benefited tremendously from the earned depletion allowance for the mineral industry. Signals went out last spring that it was to be cut. Yesterday at the Renaissance Hotel in Ottawa there was a conference to encourage the protesting of the Government's decision to cut out the earned depletion allowance. This has been providing some $400 million to $500 million for mining exploration and development, especially in western Canada, northern Ontario, northern Quebec and other resource areas.

The program should be reinstated. It has been providing $400 million to $500 million. That money is important because it creates activity in diamond drilling, exploration and development. Diversifying the economy in a mineral area is extremely difficult. The flow-through share mechanism with an earned depletion allowance of 33 per cent is extremely difficult to replace with any other mechanism. Not only are exploration and development dollars spent by diamond drilling teams and so on, but mines are established.

A number of mines in northern Ontario are being brought into production because of the earned depletion allowance provided by the Government. Clearly, every Member in the government caucus, including Members from Timmins, Abitibi, Quebec and Timiskaming in Ontario who have spoken out, will have a chance on Monday evening—the motion will be put on Friday—to vote for or against the replacement of the earned depletion allowance which affects not only northern Canada but western Canada as well.

Another action taken by the Government relates to the decision on the softwood lumber deal with the United States. The full effect of this deal, which is costing the resource producing areas of Canada, including British Columbia, some $500 million a year will not be felt until the downturn occurs both in the Canadian market and in the United States.

I read a report a couple of weeks ago by a lumber company in Prince George, British Columbia. Under the previous arrangement, the company was paying $600 million a year in stumpage charges. But under the deal negotiated with the B.C. Government, the federal Government and the United States, this company will now be paying $19 million a year in stumpage charges. The company said that when the market turns down it will be out of business.

There is a concerted attack on rural resource areas and in all areas of activity in the West. Whether we see a dramatic downturn in grain prices, the farm debt crisis or the deal negotiated on oil, clearly all these attacks on the western economy will not be overcome by a program which provides a couple of hundred million dollars a year in a diversification fund.

There is a diversification program in northern Ontario. Although it was signalled in the fall of 1986 and announced last summer, there are no application forms or criteria yet available. I understand much the same situation exists in western Canada. A program is announced, money is announced but the actual criteria for projects are not available. The actual application forms are not available. The implementation is simply not there. Rural infrastructure which is desperately needed by many rural communities is excluded from the program. We have to ask ourselves, in the face of the tremendous onslaught that has taken place, is it really too little too late to help western Canada with all the problems it faces in economic development and diversification?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment on the some of the statements that were made about western Canada. The debate that has been going on boils down to assessing what has and has not been done by various Governments. Certainly the Hon. Member who just spoke, who himself was a part of the National Energy Program committee, knows what that devastating legislation put in by the Liberal Government did to western Canada.

Let us look at the record of our Government over the past three years. The farmers of western Canada and particularly those of the area I represent have never been treated better in difficult times. We went through a drought and difficult prices in the international market-place. Just yesterday, the farmers of western Canada received the first payment on the grains payment.

Comparing what the Liberal administration did in western Canada during good times and what our Government has done in a short term, I can tell Hon. Members that the farmers in general are very supportive of this Government. There will be people from the other two Parties who will vote for our Government in the next election based on the performance of this Government.

The Hon. Member mentioned the rail lines. I would like to make a statement about the rail lines in my riding. I am very pleased that the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is in the House to hear this. A great deal of the credit goes to him for what has been accomplished.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) attended the meeting in Minton a week ago Saturday when we went to bat for the problem that exists there, and I thank him for his help. I especially want to thank the Minister for the quick action he took on including money to be spent on rail line improvements for the completion of the Bromhead-Minton line and the Fife Lake line.

I do not know where the Hon. Member is getting his information from. I am the first to admit that there is still more work to be done. We do want to see the completion of the Bengough line, and I am sure we will. The Hon. Member is trying to leave the impression that action has not been taken in western Canada on the rail lines and on the welfare of farmers. That absolutely misrepresents the situation and I just wanted to clarify that.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to listen to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister and to note the apple polishing he is doing for the benefit of the Minister of Transport. I assume he is doing that because he is having difficulty getting the Minister to do improvements on the Wood Mountain subdivision of the railway. Clearly it does not appear that any decision has been made on that by the Minister. I suppose that would explain why the Hon. Member is doing so much apple polishing.

I think it is up to the Parliamentary Secretary, who obviously has tremendous clout in the Tory caucus, to put the hammer down on the Minister of Transport so that he does not leave $125 million in the rail line rehabilitation program pot. That is exactly what is going on. I do not know how the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will be able to say to the people of these various communities: "Well, we tried, but the Minister had already nixed the balance of the program".

In the way the program has been delivered, there does not seem to be any money for the Wood Mountain subdivision. The Parliamentary Secretary attended the meeting and promised that there would be action. He went to the Minister but got no action. The only alternative he has is to go directly to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I know the Parliamentary Secretary has the ear of the Prime Minister. He is briefed with the Prime Minister every morning on all the national issues of the day. I would hope that he would put pressure on the Prime Minister to get the Minister of Transport to ensure that the other rail lines get completed.

I wonder how the Parliamentary Secretary could be so happy about telling us that he has done all these wonderful things for agriculture while there is still a very large number of farmers facing total insolvency and serious financial difficulties. The Government brought in a very minor program, the commodity-based mortgage program, which provides for about 2,000 mortgages at around 8 per cent across the entire country over two years.

The magnitude of the problem we face today is unprecedented since the 1930s. There are 50,000 farmers in serious financial difficulty. The Government brought in a program a couple of years ago that provides benefits for a couple of thousand farmers. These benefits are only available to people who have mortgages under the Farm Credit Corporation. If a farmer has a mortgage with the Royal Bank or the Bank of Commerce and is hard pressed, the program does not apply.

Surely, if the Parliamentary Secretary were really doing his job with the Prime Minister and with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), he would get that program expanded so that it would cover a good percentage of farmers. There are 16,000 farmers with FCC loans, not to mention all the other mortgages that are outstanding, who are two years in arrears with their mortgages.

The Parliamentary Secretary has been telling us what great things have been done, but he has not explained everything. Perhaps we just assume that the way it will be is that oil prices will be $16 a barrel instead of $28 a barrel when the Tories are in power. Tory times are hard times so we have to be ready for them. Instead of being $200 a tonne, grain prices are $110 a tonne. It is a given that times will be tough and that the Tories will then have to do something about it.

I do not think that a modest program like this one, which provides a couple of hundred million dollars per year for economic diversification in western Canada, will be adequate to cover all of the tremendous economic downturns with which western Canada is faced, let alone the irresponsible cut-backs that have taken place to community college funding, the earned depletion allowance, the post office and every aspect of community life. I am depending on the Parliamentary Secretary to beef up this program and to make it a little more responsible and effective so that it will really help western Canada in its hour of need.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) say that we should beef up the program. I certainly support that as well.

The Government is spending only $1.2 billion over five years, $60 million per province per year. That is not very much money. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) would agree that we must be very disappointed that the Government is only spending $1.2 billion.

Five or six years ago, the Liberals had a western development fund with some $4 billion. The Tories across the way were criticizing it as being too small. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was saying how stingy the Liberal Government was to provide funds for western Canada of only $4 billion. That was not even spent.

• (1750)

I just wanted to comment that I think the Hon. Member for Algoma was right when he said $1.2 billion is appreciated, but it is not very much. It is only $60 million for Saskatchewan every year. By the way, most of that money was already there anyway in different government programs, and it is now being funnelled into this program. It is a nice little program for Tory re-election prospects even though there has never been a Government in Canada as unpopular as that Government. Recent polls tell us that the Government is even more unpopular than the Trudeau Government, which is absolutely incredible.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated that explanation. I saw the same poll which indicated 52 per cent thought it did a better job than the present Government, which got only 23 per cent support. I want to leave lots of time for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister to defend his boss. He can explain how the Government of former Prime Minister Trudeau is seen by people as doing a better job than his own Government.

I think I saw the height of apology for the Government last year when the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) took total responsibility for the Government not putting up a loan guarantee for the Syncrude project. I know the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister and a number of others of us went to an excellent briefing on why the federal Government should come up with its share of the loan guarantee. The guarantee would only come into effect if the price of oil went below some $15 a barrel. I do not think it has ever gone below that price since the fall of 1986.

The Prime Minister promised action but he did not take action. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said he had not explained well enough to the Minister why the loan guarantee was needed. Everyone in the Alberta caucus, including the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), realized how important it was to increase the capacity of the Syncrude plant. The program went ahead under a loan guarantee from Alberta, but you kind of wonder why the Parliamentary Secretary has to take the rap for not explaining how important the project was.

I just do not see how $60 million a year in loan guarantees and grants and contributions for each province is going to be adequate to overcome the support which should have been forthcoming directly from the Government and not cobbled up into this program we are debating today.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Hon. Member from the NDP. Anyone watching that debate will clearly understand the coalition between the NDP and the Liberal Party.

I must respond first to the remarks by the Hon. Member for Algoma concerning the Syncrude capacity addition project presented to the Government of Canada in which the Syncrude consortium asked for a loan guarantee. I would like to enlighten the Hon. Member that it was not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who refused the loan guarantee. It was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his Department. The reason they gave was that the project would go ahead without it. They do not need a loan guarantee. All it is, is show. We could very well do it but if we did, it would add to the federal deficit and take money away from another area necessary to meeting our deficit goal.

At the time I was disappointed that we did not go ahead with the political show of a loan guarantee to that project, but in retrospect the Minister of Finance was correct in every detail. The project did go ahead without the loan guarantee. It was a wise decision on his part.

I cannot imagine being a member of the Liberal Party standing up and speaking against the western diversification program. I cannot fathom how this could happen from Members of Parliament who sat in this House and voted in favour of a National Energy Program which totally and absolutely devastated western Canada. That Member stood in his place and spoke in favour of the NEP which totally devastated the communities where I and everyone else in western Canada live.

I want to tell him what was happening there, admitted to by the former Liberal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Marc Lalonde. He now stands up in Montreal and says the reason they brought in the NEP was because they wanted to divert money from the western provinces into the coffers of the central Government. That is what the Hon. Member stood for and that is what the NDP stood for. They were on their feet supporting the NEP. Their energy critic stood in this House and said the program does not go far enough. What we should be doing is nationalizing one of the big ones. Nationalize Imperial Oil is what they were saying. It amounted to total devastation of western Canada. This Government is now trying to repair some of the damage that those two Parties sitting in coalition did to western Canada.

Then they have the gall to stand up in this House and say we are not going far enough to support western diversification.

Mr. Foster: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain why PetroCan bought out Gulf Oil, spending about $1 billion of taxpayers' money? When the Tories came to power they bought out Gulf Oil—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would not exactly say that is a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer that question after my remarks. The Hon. Member is getting a little hot in his seat. He understands where I am coming from and that what I am saying is true. It really bothers the hon. gentleman when the facts are laid down in front of him.

The NEP put thousands of companies in Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan out of business. It put thousands of people out of work. It totally dried up the industry. Do you remember the Alsands project which was ready to go north of Fort McMurray? It was going to create something like 4,000 jobs and add another 10 per cent to the oil supply. I remember that one. I saw what the NEP did to the community of Fort McMurray. I saw what it did to Edmonton and Calgary. I saw what it did to all those drilling and exploration companies. I saw what it did, and for a Member who was part of the Liberal Government at that time and members of the NDP to stand up and speak against a program we are putting in place to help diversify the economy of western Canada is totally and absolutely immoral. They know full well that they were supporting the devastation of western Canada because they had a pie-in-the-sky idea. They said that they were going to have a made-in-Canada price for oil. They attempted to rob from western Canada and put it in the central Canada coffers.

How much will the $220 million a year that is going into western Canada do for western Canada? It is obvious that we have the problems which we do with regard to the deficit because all the former Government did was throw money. It did not use money in a sensible way as an incentive to bring on industry, development, and diversification. It threw money down the tube.

People remember what the Scientific Research Tax Credit did. There was such a big hole in that legislation that you could drive a Mack truck loaded with manure through it. That truck was driven through it and it cost and is still costing the Treasury of the federal Government billions of dollars. That is the kind of fiscal responsibility we saw from the Liberal Government which was supported, in many instances, by the NDP which now talks about coalition.

We heard that today in the debate. I could not tell who was speaking only by listening. I heard the same garbage from the Liberals as I heard from the NDP and I heard the same garbage from the NDP as I heard from the Liberals. They have already decided that they will form a coalition. They have looked at the polls and have decided that the Conservative Party would form a minority government if an election was held today, and they would therefore form a coalition. They have admitted that and talked about it.

Let us look at the NDP record. Let us look at what the NDP has done since we came to office. The NDP voted against the Patent Act and against removal of the National Energy Policy. Members of the NDP voted against the Western Accord which we drew up with western Canada and against the Atlantic Accord. They want nothing but central control on industry and development. You never hear the NDP talking about diversifying the automotive industry out of Oshawa because they have Bob White and Shirley Carr to contend with. I do not know if it really matters to the New Democratic Party Leader. I do not know where he takes his orders. I think they pull a lever in Shirley Carr's office and the toilet flushes in the office of the Leader of the NDP.

The transportation Bill removed for all time discrimination in western Canada in rail transportation and the NDP voted against it. NDP Members spent six days debating the Senate amendments to the Immigration Act while we have a very real problem with immigration with which we are struggling daily. However, we had better not put that law in place because they would not be able to stand up in the House of Commons and go after the Minister of Immigration because some guy lied his way into Canada and we cannot deport him without going through a number of processes.

We spent nine days debating the Budget. Do you remember when we were trying to put the postal workers back to work, Mr. Speaker? Where did the members of the NDP stand on that? They stood up and voted not to put them back to work. We must have postal service in western Canada. We are not prepared to use courier services as they can in Toronto, Oshawa, and Montreal. We must have mail service in every community in the country, particularly in western Canada where we rely upon it so much.

We introduced legislation to put the grain handlers back to work. If you do not move the grain in western Canada, the farmers are out in the cold. The NDP voted against that as well.

It was very interesting to hear the debate today and see how much the two Parties meld together with a total lack of understanding of the problems in western Canada. The western diversification program is an historic move in this country. For once we have a western diversification program and a Minister responsible for western diversification who is from the West. We have an office and a Deputy Minister located in Edmonton where they can deal with the problems facing the West. That move alone diversifies some of the government bureaucracy with which we are faced.

Let us talk about the farmers. I heard the Member for Algoma stand up and plead the plight of the farmer. I heard the NDP stand up and plead the plight of the farmer. The present Government is the first Government that has reacted and done what has to be done for the farmers in western Canada. The Liberal Government brought in a 25-cent tax on gasoline which the farmers had to pay. We removed that in order that input costs would go down.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker. Do you remember the Canadian ownership charge at the pumps? An oil company created under the National Energy Program had its hand in every pocket in this country.

We do not for a moment say that the farming industry does not have problems. Certainly it does. However, even with a grain war waging between the United States and the European Common Market, we moved more grain this year than in any other year. We have given more help to the farmers across the country than has any other government in living memory. We have given $5 billion in assistance since we came to office. We will continue to assist the farming community in that way because we came to office with a commitment to the farm community and we have lived up to that commitment.

What is the western diversification program about? It was introduced by the western diversification office and is part of a mandate to manage the western diversification fund which was set up to stimulate diversification in the country, particularly in western Canada. It is designed in such a way as to give maximum flexibility in dealing with proposals which may come forward for western diversification fund assistance.

We always had programs designed in Ottawa in the ivory towers which we then had to make work. We were given the guidelines, the rules, and the regulations. That did not work. I can remember the old tier system and the process which had to be gone through to change it. It was based on census and employment figures. We had great disparity in the country.

• (1810)

There were tier 1 areas, some tier 2 areas and others that were tier 3. All of Alberta was not even considered. Alberta had gone through a period of relative prosperity until the Liberals and NDP decided to devastate Canada with their national energy policy. That threw a monkey-wrench into the whole system.

Even when there were 40,000 unemployed in Edmonton alone we did not have a chance with the tier system because it took too long to deal with our situation. In Calgary, houses and apartments were empty, businesses were going down the tube and people were being thrown out of work day after day. Yet the formula did not allow us to benefit from the economic development system.

We now have a program that has the required flexibility because the criteria has been designed in an office in Edmonton, in consultation with the people whom it will affect. The program is geared to support projects that promote or enhance economic development or diversify in some way western Canada. It includes the initiation, the promotion or expansion of enterprises, the establishment of new business, research and development activities. However, these activities will be controlled. We will not bring in a scientific research tax credit system whereby scams can take billions of dollars out of the Treasury without anything being done.

It has been suggested that this program is a smoke and mirrors exercise to make us look good. This is a flexible program that responds to the needs of western Canada. It will not have a tier structure. The West will be treated as a single region.

Mr. Benjamin: We will all be in tears.

Mr. Shields: The Member says that they will all be in tears. I wonder where his tears will be when people begin to realize how lock-step the NDP and Liberals really are in the House of Commons. I would ask anyone reading today's Hansard to block out the names of those speaking on this Bill and identify whether they are NDP or Liberals. They would certainly be able to identify the Conservative Members, but the Liberals and New Democrats are lock-step with one another. They have already formed the coalition about which they have been talking.

The eligible costs have been broadened to include working capital because we found that the need for working capital sometimes created a problem. Previous programs had always been geared more to the wealthy who had the working capital and good solid backing. Now we have broadened the eligible costs through the western diversification program to include working capital. Many small businesses would like to expand but need the financing for capital expansion as well as working capital, which anyone in business will suggest is the hardest financing to obtain.

If I sitting in the Liberal or NDP benches, particularly considering the history I saw here between 1980 and 1984, I would be ashamed to stand up against the western diversification office and the western diversification program.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) claims that his Party does very well in representing western Canada. The statistics I have from Statistics Canada show that of the goods and services purchased by the Department of Supply and Services in 1981-82, 15.5 per cent was purchased in the West. In 1984-85, the first year that his Party took power, goods and services purchased in the West went down to 13.9 per cent and dropped to some 11.5 per cent in 1986-87.

Why is the federal Government purchasing less in western Canada? A decrease from 13.9 per cent to 11.5 per cent in two years is a fairly sharp drop. If the Government were to purchase a greater share in western Canada, that would stimulate the economy and create more jobs.

Mr. Shields: I am pleased my hon. friend raised this. Of course, he is playing with statistics and does not present the true picture. He knows that some very major purchases have been made since we took office, particularly in defence. This includes the frigates, the CF-18, and a number of other defence procurements.

These statistics would skew the total figures. Some of those major contracts which went to the Maritimes, including the Aurora contract and the frigate contracts, will skew the numbers elsewhere.

Let me tell the Hon. Member that I know of companies that never had the opportunity to purchase from the federal Government until we took office. I never saw a Minister of Supply and Services in Cold Lake, Grand Centre or Bonnyville. I never saw him in Vegreville, St. Paul or Fort McMurray until this Government took office. When we took office, the Minister of Supply and Services visited the major centres in western Canada to explain how the system worked. People in the West who had the supplies and wanted to do government business did not know how the system worked because they did not have the information.

They never believed they could gain a contract, but let me cite some of the contracts that have been obtained in Alberta that would never have been given without this Government and its purchasing policy.

There is a contract in Vegreville for the supply of an approach system for airports across Canada. Northwest Industries in Edmonton has just been awarded the Hercules aircraft contract. They have been awarded the contract for the repair and maintenance of all Hercules aircraft in Canada. Indeed, that is now spilling over into the United States. You have to look at them in balance. We have more Government purchases going on in western Canada than ever before, and they also have more information out there than ever before.

• (1820)

Mr. Foster: I was very interested in the Hon. Member's speech when he said working capital is one of the great difficulties for small business. I certainly agree with him. Would he point out to us where in Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the department of western economic diversification and to make consequential amendments to other acts, it provides for working capital for small businesses, especially those in western Canada?

Second, the Hon. Member was outlining the terrible folly of the New Democratic Party in promoting the nationalization of the major oil company. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain why, in the fall of 1984, shortly after this Government took power, Petro-Canada bought out Gulf Oil, in effect nationalizing it, because it was certainly one of our major oil companies. Why did the Parliamentary Secretary allow that to happen? I have talked to western Canadians who said that at that moment they tore up their Tory card. They could not understand why the Tory Government was nationalizing or taking over Gulf Oil and providing the little easy bump for the production side to go to Reichmanns with a write-off, I understand of about $1 billion. Why would the Government spend $1 billion taking over Gulf Oil when that was clearly different from what the Party had been promising and committing itself to, and what the Hon. Member has spoken against tonight?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, there is an obvious answer and I think the Hon. Member knows it. It is because there was fear it would fall into foreign ownership. It was that simple, I think, at the time.

Let me remind the Hon. Member of the fact that since we took office there has only been one Liberal Member of Parliament representing western Canada. That is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the Transport Minister in the previous Government. He is, obviously, a representative of his Party, but he voted against the repeal of the disastrous National Energy Program. He also voted against the repeal of the incremental oil revenue tax from the phase-out of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, as agreed by the Western Accord. We are talking about the western representative of the Liberal Party. He has to represent the West as a Liberal. He is the only Liberal from western Canada.

He voted against the increased competition in air and rail transportation, Bill C-18. That was one program western Canada needed. It was one program that got rid of for all times freight rate discrimination. He voted against a $500,000 capital gains exemption for Canadian farmers, Bill C-84. He voted against the expenditure of $92 million for drought relief for western farmers. He voted against providing the Canadian Wheat Board with $200 million to offset its deficit. Perhaps he wanted farmers to make up the difference. At the same time he also voted against funding the development of a new grain transportation method.

He voted against increased foreign investment, the creation of Investment Canada. He voted against increased research, investment in jobs in Canada's pharmaceutical industry. He voted against the settlement of the softwood lumber dispute that had been negotiated at the request of the producing provinces, western provinces. He voted against legislation which compensated the uninsured depositors of two western banks. He did this in spite of the fact that the depositors of those banks included many municipalities, educational institutions, credit unions and school boards. He voted against $17 million of Atlantic fisheries restructuring, he voted against providing the Cape Breton Development Corporation with an extra $7 million for the modernization of the railway operation. He voted against increasing the total amount of money that may be loaned under the Small Businesses Loans Act. Where is the Liberal Party coming from? The Hon. Member for Algoma has the gall to stand in this House and ask questions when tied around his neck is a millstone in the form of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, who is supposed to represent western Canada. I cannot believe it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, considering the hour, I wonder if I could ask for the pleasure of the House that we adjourn the debate now and resume the next day this Bill is called, rather than using the few minutes that remain?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of positive comments about the need for such initiatives. In response to my hon. friend, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would find unanimous consent not to see the clock. The Member could then complete his speech and we could get the Bill to committee before we adjourn for the evening. Do I see agreement over there?

It looks like the New Democratic Party does not agree. We are anxious to complete the debate and I would suggest that the Hon. Member begin his speech and perhaps in a few minutes those Members might feel differently and allow it to continue and perhaps get the Bill to committee.

Mr. Benjamin: We would be most agreeable to not seeing the clock but that does not finish the debate.

Mr. Hawkes: If there is unanimous consent, we will just agree not to see the clock and will continue debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would be interested in doing is not to see the clock until he finishes his speech. However, out of fairness to other Members who wish to speak on this Bill, we will have to come back to this debate on another day.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I think we are prepared not to see the clock. If we do not see the clock, there should be no time limit on not seeing the clock. Let the Member finish his speech and let those who wish to speak come back to the House and do so. We want to get this Bill to committee and we want to get it there as fast as we can because westerners are waiting for this Bill. It has a real impact on western Canada. Let us get it through. Why the filibuster?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair, of course, will do whatever the House wants, but the Chair is not clear as to what the House wants now.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, obviously there is no agreement so I suggest that the debate continue until 6.39, which is the time of adjournment, and if we have not then completed the Bill before the House, we can continue debate at the next sitting of the House or whenever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate will continue until 6.39 with the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I get nine minutes now and eleven minutes the next time the Bill is called. I just suggested we shut her down for the rest of this day and I could speak for the whole 20 minutes all at once. I hope my friend, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), sticks around.

Mr. Shields: No, I will not.

Mr. Benjamin: That figures. He is a good hit and run artist.

I have been through this diversification thing for the umpteenth time, ever since I was a kid in the dirty thirties. I heard about it with respect to western Canada and Atlantic Canada. I heard about it with respect to the North and northern Ontario, the divisions of the North, the Roads to Resources.

We have had nothing but Grits and Tories in Government for 125 years. R. B. Bennett was going to blast us into the world markets. He was going to diversify the economy.

• (1830)

Mr. Nystrom: He did blast us!

Mr. Benjamin: We got blasted all right, on to $5 per month relief. Then we got the Liberals. The war saved us for a while. After the war the Liberals said that they would diversify and that they would get us into the world markets. "We have to diversify", they told us. The only thing that saved R. B. Bennett was that he told us to diversify out west, which we did, and then it did not rain. So we got dried out.

The Liberals came along then and said: "We have to diversify". Again, the people out west believed them and they diversified. We were up to our eyeballs in grain. We had a glut that some would not believe. Our people out west diversified into livestock of all types, poultry and even bee keeping. A whole bunch of little businesses started up, plants and whatnot, to build feed bins and to help construct feedlots, et cetera. We then diversified all over the place. Grain prices were cheap. One could buy three bushels of barley for $1. At that price one could afford to feed cattle.

So we went into cattle and hogs. We raised so many cattle and hogs that two things happened. First, the Americans slapped an embargo on us because we were sending too many down there. Second, the price dropped to less than it cost for a bushel of barley. We have been through that one, too. This was in the 1950s and the 1960s.

Then we got to the 1960s and the 1970s. We had mostly Liberal Governments. We had Tories right up until 1979, including 1979, who talked about diversification.

We decided that in order to diversify we would grow all this rapeseed which is now called Canola and make vegetable oil out of it. We built about eight plants in western Canada as part of diversification. We quit growing so darn much wheat and so darn much cattle, hogs and chickens.

We just got into the diversification plan for the fourteenth time in the last hundred years and what happened? The Government decided to give tens of millions of dollars to oilseed processing plants. Where? In southern Ontario. What did they process? Soybeans from the United States. Of the eight plants that we used to have in western Canada there are now two left. So much for that episode of diversification.

Mr. Speaker, please forgive me for feeling a bit of cynicism. I do not like being a cynic. It is the last resort of the guy who gave up. One can hardly blame me for saying: "Again?" Unless and until a national Government, whether it be made up of Conservatives, Liberals or NDPers, decides to get together with the business community, the trade union movement and the agricultural community to have a planned economy and direct the location of industry and provide it with an equality of opportunity to compete in the markets in central Canada and outside Canada, then diversification plans for Atlantic Canada or western Canada will go down the drain just like all the other ones have before. We have been through this innumerable times.

It means that we have to say to central Canada, and I am sure that there are people in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa who will agree, that those places do not need to get any bigger. They cannot even keep up with their housing requirements and the municipal facilities that their people and industry need. They are way behind. They cannot even get rid of all their garbage.

The next time an industry wants to start up it should be provided with the capacity to go into business in Atlantic Canada or western Canada and be able to present its production in the markets of central Canada or anywhere else in the world in equal competition with those which make the same products. Let me give Hon. Members an illustration of that point.

We used to ship 10 to 12 train loads of western coal a day from Saskatchewan, Alberta and eastern British Columbia to central Canada for heating and for the production of electricity. What has happened since then? We keep raising Cain in the House time and time again about acid rain which is caused by high-sulphur coal, brought in from where? The United States. If this western diversification plan worked to do anything, it would provide an equity of transportation costs. We would move western coal to the tune of 10, 12 or 15 train loads a day, even if it was only as far as Thunder Bay. We could then ship it by water through the Seaway to all the power plants, particularly those of Ontario Hydro. Yet here we sit. We are up to here in coal in the three most western provinces. It is low-sulphur coal which would do more to reduce the production of acid rain inside Canada than anything else. The problem is that under the free trade agreement, the Americans would not like that because a statutory coal rate would be needed, just like a statutory grain rate.

We can talk all we like about whether it is $200 million per year or $1 billion per year for the next five years. Unless we reorder the location, the production, the manufacturing and the processing of our products and resources, they will fail. We have been through this several times before.

I am several times bitten; I am more times shy. At the moment we have an excellent poultry producer in Wynyard, Saskatchewan. He diversified. He has hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in that plant. He received some grants from the federal and provincial Governments. He produces marvellous roasting chickens. One can go to the Safeway or the Co-op in Regina to buy them. They are beautiful. The problem is that he diversified. The same stores are selling chickens produced in Georgia—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member's remarks are interesting. In light of some of the earlier conversation, will the Opposition agree not to see the clock and allow the Hon. Member to complete his speech and perhaps have another? This would leave us with a much shorter length of time for the next day of the debate. That might enable us to get the matter to committee somewhat quicker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the request. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Benjamin: Why does the Hon. Member not make up his mind? That is what I proposed in the first place and he said no. If Hon. Members would like to let me finish my 20-minute speech we could then adjourn the debate and resume it the next day that it is called.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Regina West to complete his speech and then to adjourn the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted, we have been through this diversification bit before. The thrust of a national Government's policy, of any of the three political Parties in this place, has to be the reordering of our economy and the reordering of the location of the production of that economy. Without that, eastern, western or northern diversification programs are doomed to fail. We have tried them many times before. If we are going to do what the Government states that it wants to do, then it has to face up to the fact that the free trade deal goes down the drain. Everything that the federal Government in co-operation with the provinces tries to do will be deemed by the Americans to be a subsidy.

• (1840)

Mr. McDermid: Baloney!

Mr. Benjamin: Well, they have already done it, they are doing it now, and they will continue to do it.

Members of the U.S. administration, the U.S. Congress, state governors and legislatures are already accusing us of subsidies on programs that national governments, be they Liberal or Conservative, designed to assist in regional development. That is the reality that this Government or any other Party that forms the Government of Canada will have to face up to.

In order to make a regional development program succeed, the Government of this country, of any political stripe, has to make a decision not to discriminate against any other region, not to discriminate against any other country, but to discriminate in favour of an underdeveloped region. Discrimination for rather than discrimination against is 100 per cent different.

For a regional development fund to be effective, whether it is in western Canada or Atlantic Canada, we have to take into account our geography, our climate, and the distances we have to face to get our production into the market-places in central Canada, or anywhere else in the world. To attempt to do anything other than that is doomed to failure.

The problem with the Conservatives and Liberals is that they have never learned from their own history, and they are attempting to repeat it. If they wish to do things about western development, my good friend, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) and I will have to persuade the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski), the Cabinet, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to complete the rehabilitation of railway lines. If any self-respecting investor wants to build a plant, he is not going to do it in Assiniboia, Weyburn, Moose Jaw, or in any other place where there is no railway line. The Government has reneged on the rehabilitation of railway lines to the tune of something in the order of $138 million. That is how far behind we are, and there is this year and next year left.

The Hon. Member for Assiniboia and I have tried our best. We have had some modest success, last minute changes of heart by the bureaucrats in the Department of Transport, and maybe with the Minister of Transport.

Surely that is the type of investment that pays off for western Canada. I find it appalling when Conservatives talk to me about having a government run by sound business practices, when two or three years ago it sunk $10 million into a branch line 77 miles long and refuses to finish the job, which will take another $13 million. That is in the Bengough subdivision in my hon. friend's riding. The Hon. Member and I have both been fighting to get that done. The way it sits now is that this Government, with all its western diversification plans, will let that $10 million that has already been spent go down the drain, just throw it out. The other $13 million has to be spent to finish the rehabilitation of that railway line, or $10 million will be totally wasted. That job has to be done. It requires $138 million between now and the end of November, 1989. The rail line rehabilitation alone is half of what the Government proposes to spend in each year for five years.

If they want to do some things for western Canada, why don't they finish what has been started? The Liberals started this particular project, but why does the Government not finish what it states is a good idea before starting into other things? It does not have the slightest idea in what direction to go.

One cannot diversify. There cannot be a champagne production and a champagne economy in a beer market. The beer market is the small market of western Canada. I consider western Canada anywhere from Sudbury west. I consider eastern Canada from Quebec City east, and all of northern Quebec. Unless we reorder, we say to industry and the market in central Canada that we will lay down production, manufacturing, and service materials from western Canada and Atlantic Canada. We will lay it down in the market in central Canada, in the United States, or anywhere else in the world, at a price that you will have to compete with in terms of quality, quantity, delivery, warrantys, and everything else, but the cost of getting it there will be equal.

Surely that is fair. Surely that takes into account our geography. If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) had $500 million that he did not know what to do with, he would be stupid to invest it in some kind of a manufacturing or processing plant with western Canada or Atlantic Canada in the type of conditions and economy that we presently have. It would be dumb. If he went for a banker to a loan, he would be laughed out of the place.

A planned economy requires a reordering of the location of our productive capacity, whether it is in manufactured goods or in agricultural processing. There is more to Canada than Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto. They do not need any more. They cannot handle all they have now. That is what we have to do, no matter what Party is in government.

I wish to assure the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), when this Bill is called for debate, that I will be here to participate in the 10-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.49 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

PARLIAMENT HILL

TABLING OF REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY PRECINCT AREA

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a report commissioned by the National Capital Commission and my Department. This report is a planning document for 21st century development of the parliamentary precinct area.

EXTERNAL AID

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE STRATEGY

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am honored to table in the House today the strategy entitled Sharing Our Future, the action plan that will guide Canada's Official Development Assistance (ODA) policies into the next century.

As parliamentarians are aware, the past three years have been important both for Canadian foreign policy and for the process of policy-making.

I had an opportunity to discuss that new strategy with the critics of both opposition Parties last night.

Commencing with the publication of Competitiveness and Security in 1985, a period of extensive consultation, review and reflection on the various elements and components of Canada's foreign policy in general, and aid policy in particular, has been undertaken.

Canadians and our many development partners—non-governmental organizations and institutions, trade unions and co-operatives, the private sector, and multilateral agencies, as well as people in the developing countries—have participated in the process.

Parliamentarians, through our committees, have played an important part in giving shape to the diverse views and objectives articulated by Canadians and their organizations.

The new stragegy I am presenting is the culmination of this extensive review. And the various new policy thrusts and initiatives announced in it reflect the development vision of Canadians themselves. The strategy thus demonstrates the confidence our Government has in the wisdom, talents and commitment of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, our Government believes that a country's foreign policy must be an expression of the vision of its citizens—a reflection of their values, goals and objectives.

Our foreign policy conveys to the international community our character as a nation.

[English]

We embarked upon a thorough policy review with a firm belief in mind, a conviction, that the shaping of foreign policy and aid policy is the responsibility of all Canadians and not the exclusive domain of politicians or bureaucrats in Ottawa. The message embodied in this new Canadian strategy for a development corporation is one of which we can all be proud. Canadians care. It says much about us as a nation that Canadians accept our responsibility to be partners in building a better world, not only for our children but for all the world's children.

[Translation]

The strategy that will guide Canada's development assistance policies is built on three commitments I made at the beginning of my mandate: improving the delivery of our aid, fostering partnership, and reaching out to involve Canadians more fully in our development program.

My first commitment, "improving aid delivery", reflects the belief of many Canadians that we need stronger aid policies which are relevant and appropriate, both to those we seek to help and to Canadians as well. Better program delivery will mean that the right Canadian resources reach those most in need, when they need our help the most.

The second, "fostering partnership", captures the spirit of commitment that Canadians showed in their strong response to the crisis in Africa three years ago. It reflects our desire to build on the consensus achieved at that time. Canadians want to create new partnerships—both domestically and internationally—so that together we can build a better world.

And my pledge on reaching out to the public responds to the desire I sense among Canadians to learn more about development, to be better informed—so they can take part more fully.

• (1110)

[English]

Before I highlight some of the new policy directions we are announcing today, let me quickly sketch for you the principles that will guide our initiatives in international development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade (SCEAIT) last September, the Government endorsed the committee's proposal for an ODA charter.

The charter has four pillars: The primary purpose of our development effort is to help the world's poorest countries and people.

[English]

Canada's aid policies must strengthen the human and institutional capacity of developing countries to solve their own problems in harmony with their natural environment.

[Translation]

In setting objectives for development assistance, developmental priorities must prevail.

[English]

We must strengthen the links between Canadian citizens and institutions, and those in the Third World. In short, partnership.

[Translation]

With these principles as the foundation of our policy, our priorities to help focus our projects and programs are: alleviate poverty; design structural adjustment policies that take into account their human impact on the people they are designed to assist; strengthen our emphasis on the role of women in development;

[English]

—foster environmentally sound and ecologically sustainable programming; strive for food security; and emphasize energy availability.

[Translation]

The four pillars, complemented by the priorities I have mentioned, constitute the charter for Canada's development assistance program.

Beyond this, we are announcing a significant number of new programs and initiatives in our strategy. Here are some of the highlights:

We have created a "new eligibility framework" for our ODA—one that provides flexibility so we can achieve the goals to which we are committed, including: eradicating global poverty, concentrating on the poorest countries and people, and ensuring that our aid policies are more focused and more relevant.

[English]

The new framework makes it easier to take into account the human rights performance of various countries when deciding upon the nature and scope of our assistance efforts.

[Translation]

We have also decided to divide the aid program into two distinct parts—each having half of the ODA budget.

The first part, called the "Partnership Program", will be for initiatives and programs shaped by our Canadian and international partners in development.

[English]

The second will support Canada's national initiatives program of bilateral assistance and other contributions to development carried out mainly on a government-to-government basis.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to improve "program delivery", significant numbers of aid personnel will be decentralized both to existing overseas posts and to four new regional field offices.

[English]

These field offices, one for the countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, the second for the Sahel, a third in the Caribbean and another for the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, will help to ensure that future CIDA initiatives are better tailored to local needs and circumstances. Higher levels of approval authority will be delegated to field personnel.

[Translation]

To ensure that our programs encourage self-reliance rather than dependence, "human resource development" will become the lens through which all our efforts will be viewed. Creating indigenous capacity to enable each country to solve its own development problems will be our steady focus.

To achieve this, many initiatives are put forward—including one to double the number of CIDA-sponsored students and trainees, both in Canada and the Third World.

[English]

New guidelines to govern our food aid policies and to consider the ecological and environmental impact of our aid efforts are also important elements of the strategy.

[Translation]

These measures, and others we are announcing, are designed to improve the effectiveness, relevance and quality of what we do in the Third World.

To strengthen our commitment to partnership—one of the four pillars of our aid strategy—new initiatives are being launched to enhance the participation of our development partners from the private sector, non-governmental organizations and training institutions.

[English]

For the private sector, the budget of CIDA's Industrial Co-operation Program will be doubled and its parameters enhanced. General lines of credit will be established in up to 20 countries and guidelines governing their use will be made more flexible.

[Translation]

Measures to encourage co-operation between Canadian universities and training institutes and those in the Third World are being announced today. Universities will be invited to prepare proposals for centres of excellence in development studies.

Canada's non-governmental organizations and institutions are among the world's leaders in international development. To enhance their contribution, numerous initiatives are proposed in the strategy—along with an increase in the amount of ODA allocated to supporting their efforts.

[English]

The various agencies and institutions that make up the multilateral system provide some of the most precious and effective tools for promoting international development and co-operation.

[Translation]

The World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the World Food Program, the United Nations Environment Program, the Commonwealth and la Francophonie are but a few examples of the diversity of agencies and programs the multilateral system offers for the effort to achieve global progress.

Mr. Speaker, Canada remains committed to a strong and vital multilateral system, and we will continue to strive for renewal and revitalization.

[English]

To facilitate access to the aid program by Canadians and raise levels of public awareness of development issues, I am announcing today an extensive multi-faceted public education and outreach strategy.

[Translation]

This strategy is designed both to enhance CIDA'S presence in Canada's regions and to increase public awareness of the challenges and opportunities of international development.

Mr. Speaker, these are a few highlights of our new strategy for ODA—a strategy formulated by Canadians for building a better world.

International development is vitally important to the future of our interdependent world.

Repression, epidemics, famine, desertification and ecological degradation are both the symptoms and the causes of poverty and underdevelopment.

[English]

Too often in the past, aid-giving has been considered exclusively a moral or humanitarian issue, haves helping have-nots. We must change that perception. Aid must be regarded not just as charity but as an investment in our shared future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, only through the eradication of global poverty can we create an environment that nurtures the tremendous creative potential of the human race, and frees it to build the better world we all want to see.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, very often it is the task of a critic to try to find fault with what has been presented in a Minister's statement, and certainly I will try to be loyal to that responsibility. There are some matters of great concern to the Liberal Party and as the critic for the Liberal Party on human rights and international development I would like to bring these to the attention of the Government and the Canadian people.

• (1120)

It is also the responsibility of a critic to commend the Government when it does take positive action. The Government has taken a number of very important, solid steps forward. I want to commend the Minister for the thoroughness of her statement in reply to the report made by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade entitled For Whose Benefit. That report was made after a year of study, consultation, and travel. The Minister has taken to heart many of the important issues which were brought up.

For example, she has reported today that the Government now intends to, first, emphasize aid to the poorest nations. She has also pointed out that human resource development will now take a front line role, an important priority. She pointed out that decentralization in the field, which the committee recommended, will take place. This means that the people most affected will have a direct input into what is happening in their country and will be partners in what takes place. She has pointed out that there will be a reduction in the amount of tied aid, especially for weaker and poorer countries. That, too, is a positive development. She has pointed out that there will be a much expanded student scholarship program and aid in education.

There are a number of other items on which she reported. We should all take heart from this and be pleased. I want to indicate the satisfaction of my Party and myself with these promised programs of action by the Government to follow the recommendations which we made in the all-Party standing committee which made a unanimous report entitled For Whose Benefit on what we thought should be done. I wanted to make those positive points at the outset.

While I realize that the Government has accepted a number of our recommendations, I do have a concern that there is an unwillingness by the Government to establish concrete and sound criteria for the examination of human rights violations in countries which receive our official development assistance and to determine what amounts of money we should be giving.

In the committee's report, which we hoped would be taken to heart by the Government, we recommended that as part of over-all Canadian foreign policy we apply a universal, consistent, and transparent manner in the way in which we assess human rights violations and make our grants.

Further, we recommended the development of a classification grid for recipient countries which would provide incentives for good behaviour as well as penalties for poor human rights performance. We made that recommendation because we were dissatisfied with the way in which the Government has been handling the granting of official development assistance to countries where there are human rights offences and violations and where Governments have been despotic.

We further recommended an annual ODA human rights review to be tabled in Parliament and referred to the Standing Committee on Human Rights. That was a serious effort to try to deal with a most serious area of concern, and the Government has not addressed itself to this other than with a promise that human rights will be reviewed by Cabinet. We are now told that Cabinet will judge the human rights record of receiving countries and determine the "appropriate channels for Canadian ODA and bilateral allocations for each country". Mr. Speaker, can you imagine Cabinet undertaking that responsibility? I myself cannot see Cabinet sitting in session assessing each nation.

We must seriously ask what the Government really means when it says that the Cabinet will be looking into this. Who is the Cabinet? Will it really be some faceless bureaucrats who will make recommendations? Will it be the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), or will it be some claque of Neanderthal, red-neck Tory back-benchers holding up aid or development assistance because they do not like the political stripe of some recipient Government? Or will we perhaps have no guidelines at all, as has been the case until now, and continue to muddle around with no clear line of procedure as to how we will link our concern about human rights to the way in which we grant aid to other nations?

This is an area of real concern to us and I hope that the Government will realize that the Canadian people will not accept this program as a reply to what Canadians across the country were telling our committee was an outstanding concern of Canadian people, that being how we assess the human rights performance of other countries and how we link our policies in some fair, objective way that will allow us to give grants to countries which are, to some degree at least, respectful of human rights, and to withhold aid from countries that are grossly violating human rights and our bilateral assistance. It must also raise the question of how we will deal with our multilateral grants.

The greatest concern that we on this side of the House have about this reply by the Minister is that it misses the most fundamental concern of all. The most fundamental issue before us today is the amount of aid this country is going to give. We were promised that at some point in the future the figure would be .7 per cent of GNP. In fact, during the last election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canada's ODA funding would reach .7 per cent of the Gross National Product by 1990. We have to ask what has happened to that promise.

At present our ODA is only at .5 per cent, not .7 per cent. It is going to be maintained at .5 per cent until 1991 and will gradually be increased to .6 per cent by 1995 and .7 per cent of GNP by the year 2000. That means that the promise which was made is completely broken. We are going to stay where we are. We are not going to reach .7 per cent by 1990. The Government is now talking about .7 per cent of gross national product by the year 2000. That is the bottom line.

The question is, what is the priority of the Government? Is it to buy nuclear submarines to patrol the Arctic Ocean to see where other nuclear submarines are and make note of it? Is that how we are going to spend our funds when we know perfectly well that much of the world's peace is at stake because of the unstable and tragic economic problems in other nations? Or are we going to carry out our traditional policy as Canadians of trying to carry a strong Overseas Development Assistance Program which will bring peace and stability to nations throughout the world?

The inability of the Government to deal with the most fundamental issue, that is, to provide the funds that are necessary for overseas official development assistance, is the critical issue which we wish to criticize. It is broken promises. By 1990 another $1 billion was supposed to be injected into this effort. Instead of increasing the amount of aid in order to keep that promise, the Government is saying that we will stay as we are, that we will not increase anything, and that there will be no effort for some time to come.

Therefore, while the program has some assets which I have noted in terms of the priorities of where our funds are going and the way in which they will be spent, there is no serious effort to live up to our promises and obligations and to reach the goals which this country has set for itself. The Government is once again failing to put its money and itself where its mouth is.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the Minister's statement on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I would like to thank the Minister for her courtesy in making a copy of her statement available to me and my Liberal colleague last evening. It helps to facilitate the business of the House and a friendly spirit on the floor of the House when that sort of courtesy is extended.

• (1130)

When we consider development assistance, perhaps we should begin with the recognition that Canadians are fundamentally a generous people. I presume that this is true of other peoples in the world as well.

When we hear of other people who are in trouble, whether through earthquakes, drought, floods or war, we want to be able to help where we can. CIDA is the Government tool for generosity. It provides emergency assistance in all of these and other emergencies.

We need to go beyond spontaneous generosity which fades with yesterday's television news. We need a national policy commitment to assist in the development of other nations.

For the past number of years we have had that national policy commitment through CIDA, recognizing that development assistance is not just a matter of generosity but a recognition that we live in one world and that our peace and security and our children's peace and security really depend upon the development of a decent standard of living for all men and women, boys and girls in this world. This was underlined by the title of the Brundtland report presented to the United Nations a year ago, Our Common Future. The report tabled in the House today builds on that theme and is entitled Sharing our Future.

We share a future with all the peoples of the world. We cannot have a fortress Canada or fortress North America that ignores the needs and the rightful aspirations of other people for a decent standard of living and human rights.

I want to commend the Government for the review that has taken place of foreign policy and development assistance policy over the last two years. It was a privilege for me to be able to work on both the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations and to work on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade when it did its review on development assistance.

One of the highlights of both those committees was the degree of public interest in external affairs and in development assistance. This kind of public support is absolutely essential and we must build on it.

One of the recommendations of our report was that there should be a development charter. We said that this development charter should be clearly enshrined in legislation that would be clear and binding. Today the Minister tabled her report and talked about a development charter, but the charter will not be enshrined in legislation. To that extent it is a weak charter because there is nothing binding in it. It is simply words that have been tabled in the House of Commons and that have no more binding force than any other words spoken in this Chamber.

The committee recommended very extensive decentralization. I am pleased that an important first step toward decentralization is being taken in this report. It is important to recognize that the contract awarding authority remains in the Ottawa-Hull region. I think that should be decentralized as well, which would have the effect of encouraging large and small companies that are interested in development to maintain a consistent presence in the developing countries where they wanted to work. When the final contracts are awarded in the Ottawa-Hull area, it leaves it open to people who are able to have an effective lobby in Ottawa. I am not sure this that is the direction we want to take.

I am pleased that the Government is accepting the emphasis on human resource development. Over the last number of years there has been an increasing recognition of the importance of women in development and the need for their participation to be built in at all levels. This is something that needs to be monitored. We give recognition to that in our reports and it is something that is recognized in policy. It must also be consistently monitored to ensure that it is being followed through. The same is true for the growing recognition of the need to have environmental concerns built into our development assistance.

I am pleased with the Minister's announcement about a doubling of scholarships. I believe education is key in the whole development process. One concern I have relates to the public participation program. A couple of years ago there were many concerns that the public participation program budget might be slashed. My concern, as I look at what the report says, is that the entire program could be turned into a public relations program for CIDA. Throughout the country we have a number of learner centres that have had an arm's length relationship with CIDA which occasionally have been very critical of what Canada has been able to do in terms of development assistance. Indeed, representatives of a number of these learner centres appeared before our committees, and I believe they made some fairly trenchant critiques of what CIDA was doing.

It states in the report that there will be a consultation with these learner centres to assess their potential for taking on responsibilities relating to distributing films, publications and so on. I am not opposed to that, and perhaps that is a useful function, but I am concerned that that consultation should not be used as a way of bringing these learner centres into a form of control by CIDA so that they really become extensions of the public relations department.

I am pleased to see the reduction of tied aid from 80 per cent to 50 per cent for the sub-Sahelan area, and to 66-2/3 per cent for other areas. I believe this is a good first step.

Like my Liberal colleague, I am concerned about the Government's failure to take adequate action on the whole area of human rights. This was one of the fundamental areas of concern of Canadians as they appeared before our committee. They wanted to be sure that the aid moneys that are being disbursed by Canada are being used in a proper way and not going to repressive regimes.

My Liberal colleague outlined what the committee recommended, a very open process that would involve a public review by the House of Commons standing committee. Instead, there is a cabinet decision. The open process is necessary because there are situations such as the one now where the Government has renewed assistance to Guatemala. I want to read briefly what the 1987 annual report of the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America, says about Guatemala. It states:

> Summary executions and disappearances are still a daily occurrence. Neither the government's claim that this violence is the result of common delinquency nor its attempts to reduce it through heavy investments in new police equipment adequately responds to the challenge. It is scandalous to treat these hundreds of violations of the right to life as of relatively minor concern simply because numbers are no longer in the thousands as they were a few years ago.
> Along with its inability to put an end to current human rights violations, the present Guatemalan government has shown itself unwilling or incapable of initiating even a preliminary investigation into the fate of past victims of such abuses.

● (1140)

And it continues. The problem is that while that kind of knowledge about Guatemala has been available, the Government, last November, just prior to the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to Central America, used that visit as the occasion for announcing resumption of aid to Guatemala. People across Canada who are concerned about development assistance wonder how development can take place in a climate of repression such as we have in Guatemala.

The same is true of El Salvador. The Inter-Church Committee stated:

> Human rights problems of a gross, systematic and continuous nature continued in El Salvador during 1987.

It talks about arrest and detention with little meaningful legal protection. It continues:

> Such practices represent a general government policy aimed at stifling popular dissent.
> Death squad activity continued and indeed appeared to be increasing as the year drew to a close. The brutal October assassination of a prominent human rights activist thrust the survival of such practices back into the consciousness of the international community.
> Undoubtedly the impunity with which past human rights offences have been treated in El Salvador and the Government's attempt to reduce the struggle for human rights to a propaganda battle have done little to contribute to the creation of a better human rights climate.

The Council on Hemispheric Affairs in the United States, in its eleventh annual report, singled out El Salvador and Chile as being among the worst violators of human rights in Latin America last year. Yet when I wrote to the Minister last fall, sending a copy of a report which had been produced by a teacher from my constituency who had visited El Salvador, which documented human rights violations in El Salvador, the Minister replied:

> Setting aside for the moment differing views of the human rights situation in El Salvador, there is a broad agreement in this country that Canadian aid should be used to benefit those in greatest need. This is certainly true in the case of our program in El Salvador.

It is not just a matter of differing views of the human rights situation in El Salvador. It is a fact that the Government refuses to recognize that the human rights situation in El Salvador is abominable and disgraceful. We cannot make excuses and say that we hope it will be all right.

The same is true for the scandal of human rights in East Timor,and we have a massive aid program for Indonesia. I commend the Government for some of the steps it has taken. I regret that the aid levels are still below the target that was promised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he appeared before the United Nations just after he was appointed to his office. I remind the Liberals that they also cut back on the level of development assistance when they were in government.

I look forward to the implementation of this program. I understand that the standing committee is going to have the Minister come before it. We will review the way in which this program will be administered. I urge the Minister and CIDA to get on with this. I also asked them to try to bring forward a clearer public policy to link human rights and development assistance. Development assistance simply cannot take place in a climate of repression.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present two petitions on different issues. They are both certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106. The first petition is from a number of citizens of the Northwest Territories. The petition indicates a concern that the United States and Japan have proposed to fly plutonium over the Canadian North, representing devastating consequences to both the Canadian environment and its people in the event of an accident or act of terrorism.

The petitioners say that Canada has not been consulted by either the United States or Japan, which effectively challenges Canadian sovereignty in our North. They feel that allowing such flights over Canada would be contributing to nuclear proliferation, something to which Canada should be completely opposed. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to recognize the dangers of such flights and to say a very strong no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition signed by citizens of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, as well as other centres, who indicate that they believe the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. They also believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the trade discussions that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and feel that Canada's sovereignty has been compromised.

The petition goes on to state a number of other issues which I will not raise because I will be filing this petition. However, fundamentally the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve now and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to either accept or reject the proposed trade deal with the United States during a national general election.

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a number of petitions on behalf of residents of southwestern Saskatchewan concerning Bill C-54. The petitioners indicate their concern that pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause Parliament to water down and weaken this legislation. The petitioners therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support the Bill which will make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell or rent pornographic material as defined in the Bill.

They call upon Parliament to pass the legislation without dilution in the belief that it gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

I have in fact 23 petitions from residents of Swift Current, Burstall, Leader, Frontier, Eastend, Fox Valley, Simmie, Herbert, Cabri, Ponteix, Maple Creek, Sceptre, Mendham, Prelate, Admiral, and Hazlet, Saskatchewan, containing over 1,600 signatures, all relating to the same issue.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition, which is signed by a substantial number of constituents of my riding and residents from different areas of Ottawa who note that in October of 1985 the subcommittee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General of this House, submitted a report to the House recommending that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas of federal jurisdiction.

They further note that in March, 1986, just two years ago today, the Government accepted this report and its recommendations and said it would take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government acts to implement that recommendation and that commitment. I have the privilege of submitting their petition and I hope that it moves the Government to act.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility to table a petition signed by residents of Toronto, Capreol, Barrie, Hornepayne in the Province of Ontario, as well as Chatham, Merlin, London and Kingsville, also in Ontario. These petitioners point out that in fact the Government had no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They also point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had promised in the course of the negotiations with the United States that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They also point out that this proposed free trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but in fact it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to allow the people of this country to decide on this very important issue by a dissolution of Parliament and the calling of a general election by this Government.

• (1150)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present which have been certified correct as to form and content pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106. The petitions are signed by residents of Toronto, Quebec City, Ottawa and a number of other centres across the country.

The petitioners state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. They state that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in these negotiations, but that it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the obligation and the honour to table a petition that has been certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions.

The petition is signed by residents of Ontario, primarily from the City of Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe. The petitioners indicate that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. They state that this agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market that was supposedly the key objective in these negotiations but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition to present which conforms with Standing Order 106. It deals with the subject of the trade deal with the United States and is signed by residents of the City of Toronto.

In the petition the residents of the city indicate their view that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, yet the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens to remove the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between regions.

Therefore they conclude that there must be an election called to endorse or to reject this trade deal before it is accepted.

OPPOSITION TO SALES TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions signed by petitioners from Richard's Landing and Hilton Beach. On the petition are several dozen names of constituents of mine who are calling on the Government not to impose a sales tax on food.

They point out the large number of regressive taxes which have been imposed already on dental supplies, snack food, candies and soft drinks, all of which are close to food. They know that the documents of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that were tabled in the House stated that food should not be taxed, but they did not say that food would not be taxed. That is the real concern of these constituents.

I hope the House will take this matter into consideration, especially the Minister of Finance, who I know wants to do something good for the country. I am sure that he will be well impressed by this petition.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 258 will be answered today.

[Text]

PASPÉBIAC WHARF RECONSTRUCTION

Question No. 258—Mrs. Killens:

Is the amount of $6 million for the rebuilding of the Paspébiac commercial pier taken from the budget of the Economic Development Plan for Gaspé—Lower St-Lawrence or, if not, which plan or department is assuming these costs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): The costs of the Paspébiac Wharf Reconstruction project are being funded from the regular capital budget of Transport Canada as part of the ongoing restoration and replacement of public port facilities for which the Department is responsible.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 39 minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—FLOW-THROUGH SHARE TAX PROVISION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That this House notes that the flow-through share tax provision has been instrumental in revitalizing mining communities and regions across Canada, and consequently urges that the initial benefit level of this provision not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this debate concerns the question of the Government's decision to terminate the flow-through share provisions which have encouraged an extraordinary amount of development in northern Quebec, northern Ontario, western communities, Nova Scotia, and even in Schefferville, the ghost town left by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada which has seen some $19 million worth of investment in exploration because of the flow-through share provisions that have been in force since 1983.

This specific motion will be voted upon when we will be able to see how some Conservative Members of Parliament, who I know are very unhappy about the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) decision, will vote on this particular measure. It urges that the initial benefit level of the flow-through share provision not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

Last year the Prime Minister declared that we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed. He was right.

What we are really talking about is a very important measure which has had enormous consequences in terms of providing growth and development on a self-sustaining basis in mining areas and in frontier areas across Canada. This is the Auto Pact of the mining sector of Canada. Perhaps the Government is trying to gut the Auto Pact under the trade arrangement with the United States as well. We reject that. We reject this measure which denies continuation of activity to regions which have benefited enormously. We believe that if this measure is maintained, it can be focused in such a way that it can be confined to junior mining companies which carry out the bulk of mining exploration and development. This can be done in ways which would permit a broader range of the population to participate rather than being confined to higher-income Canadians as the major providers of mining investment.

The White Paper on Tax Reform last July proposed cutting the earned depletion allowance, which is an essential part of the flow-through share mechanism, from 33 per cent, which is where it stood before Christmas, to 16.33 per cent in July of 1988, and to zero per cent in July of 1989. The finance committee suggested that the 33 per cent rate be maintained for a year and then be cut to 16 per cent to the end of 1989. We did not concur with that recommendation. But even that recommendation was not accepted by the Government. The Finance Minister's sole concession has been to extend the 16 per cent rate so that it will last for 18 months from July of this year until the end of 1989.

During the course of the discussion on the question of flow-through shares, New Democrats have been criticized. It has been suggested that we have adopted contradictory positions. That is not true. During the 1984 election campaign my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), was critical about the fact that we have various substantial amounts of tax expenditures and of tax benefits for corporations in Canada. The total of tax expenditures in Canada amounts to something in the order of $25 billion of $30 billion a year, according to the Auditor General. Little or nothing of that amount has in fact been attacked or really taken head-on by the Government.

What we made clear in the 1984 election campaign was not that these tax concessions should be wiped out automatically but that they should be evaluated. Those that were demonstrably of benefit should be maintained, just as those that were demonstrably not of benefit and merely cost the taxpayer should in fact be reduced or eliminated.

Earlier this week we met with representatives from across the country in the save flow-through share committee. They brought their campaign to save the flow-through share regime to Ottawa on Monday and Tuesday of this week. From the side of the New Democratic Party, which is consistent, we indicated that we thought the program should be focused on the mining regions and on the junior mining companies. The people from the industry accept and agree with that position. They are not saying that the regime, which was put in by the Liberals in 1983 and which was overly generous to the large mining companies, should be maintained per se. They are not saying that a system which largely benefits taxpayers earning over $200,000 a year should be maintained per se. They are saying that the perceived benefits in their regions should be maintained for the junior mining companies. That is what we are asking Members on all sides to support in this votable motion here today. What is unusual is not the New Democratic Party's position, but that the Conservatives are withdrawing the flow-through program and not putting anything in its place.

Since this issue first emerged in the House of Commons in a high profile manner in December of 1986, I took the trouble to look at our discussions on this issue as a consequence of the 1986 Budget. At that time the Government proposed a modest enrichment of the flow-through share program that existed at that time. On behalf of my Party, I was critical of a further enrichment. I say now, and I said then, that it should be targeted.

At that time I made it clear that rather than voting against that particular motion, measure, or clause in the tax Bill, "We could have tried to change, amend and improve the various measures being put forward by the Government". I went on to say:

> I decided, and my colleagues accepted, that where you have a measure which should fundamentally be re-thought, which is far too broad for the declared purpose, which is to get some needed exploration expense and activity going in the northern parts of my province, that is, Quebec, the oil and gas, areas and so on, rather than simply saying there is a bit of good here and there is a lot of bad, we should simply tell the Government to stop it, take the measure away, start all over again, and strike out the loopholes. Then, if the Government has to have targeted measures in the form of tax credits, grants or other means to encourage certain types of desirable activity, for goodness' sake let it do it that way, but let it not do it in the broad brush kind of way—

That was being proposed at that time. That makes sense. That is consistent. I said, "let us evaluate it". We had not done an evaluation at that time. Let us focus it in order to ensure that we were not making unnecessary commitments of tax resources and that we were getting what we wanted for the desirable activity which is to get needed exploration expense and activity going in the northern parts of my province, in Quebec, and in the rest of the country.

It is interesting that at that time the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) responded with a paean of praise for flow-through shares. He stated:

> I think the Hon. Member knows that flow-through shares and the tax arrangements for them are not designed for the riding of Ottawa Centre. They are designed... for northern Ontario, northern Quebec, the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, and northern Manitoba, Alberta and so on.
> As a matter of fact, it is the northern parts of our provinces that are the most neglected parts of our society economically and in every other sense. We must do something for those parts. That is what is behind the flow-through shares.

The Minister of State for Finance went on to say:

> —quite frankly, flow-through shares have been very effective in creating very meaningful economic activity in a neglected area of Canada... This policy—is aimed at helping the people in northern Canada and making sure that risk decisions are not taken by Government but by the private sector.

I am in the uncomfortable position of agreeing with the Minister of State for Finance. What is curious is that only six months after that fulsome praise for flow-through shares, the Government turned around and scrapped its support for flow-through shares. The Government is the one that did the flip-flop. The Government is the Party that changed its mind, not the New Democratic Party.

In responding to concerns which we and many other people have raised about the flow-through shares, in December, in its response to the finance committee, the Government acknowledged that there was widespread concern about the impact of flow-through share financing. Then the Government said that all it would offer would be temporary assistance, in the event that there were depressed prices or economic downturns affecting exploration activity in Canada. In other words, after the mining communities go back to 25 per cent unemployment, then the Government might do something.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this week, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) stated before the save flow-through shares committee, and I quote:

> I cannot approve of measures aimed at shielding the mining exploration sector from market forces, nor do I support tax measures that reward activity without considering results.

So market forces must prevail. And the Minister also said, and I quote:

> These changes—in the flow-through shares program

> —are part of the overall tax reform—and the Minister is not prepared to make any changes at all.

[English]

He has cut loose the mining communities despite the evidence of the impact of this particular tax measure, which I maintain meets the New Democratic Party's criterion, that is, it is clear that the benefits have been very substantial, and it is possible to have those benefits at a cost which is reasonable and justifiable in terms of what this does for regional development.

Of course, the Government does not understand very much about regional development. It has consistently cut spending on regional development since coming to office in 1984. This particular measure that the Government inherited from the Liberals has encouraged $2 billion worth of mining exploration activity in Canada. The indications we have from studies financed by the prospectors in Quebec and by the Government of Quebec indicate that the mines already opened under this program have generated an estimated $1.5 billion of production per annum, some 66,000 jobs, $2.8 billion worth of added value, and additional taxes for the federal Government in Quebec of some $300 million per annum after deducting the cost of the tax incentives.

The Quebec Prospectors' Association told the finance committee, "To abandon this program would signify the elimination pure and simple of junior companies which produced almost all the mining discoveries between 1980 and 1985".

[Translation]

The results have been fantastic, Mr. Speaker. In Abitibi, about $500 million was spent on exploration during the past three years, and 15,000 jobs were created. This has promoted small business. In three years, unemployment dropped from 28 per cent to 5 or 6 per cent in the Abitibi area, saving a lot of money in unemployment insurance benefits and welfare payments.

In Schefferville, $19 million was spent in a community that had been closed down by the former president of Iron Ore Canada, the present Prime Minister of this country.

In Murdochville, in the Gaspé, another region with one of the highest unemployment rates in this country, $6 million was spent.

In Thetford Mines, where 350 new lay-offs were announced in the asbestos industry, two Quebec companies are opening up two chromium deposits, and $20 million will have been spent in 1987 in this region.

We see the same thing happening at La Fosse in Labrador and Ungava. Some 800,000 square kilometres have been staked for exploration purposes by a number of companies, mostly junior companies headed by Quebecers, and these are young entrepreneurs and companies based in the area, not in Montreal or Toronto.

[English]

With this program we are seeing the development of an authentic, new mining industry based in these regions. It is genuine regional development, rather than the boom-bust pattern of mining development in which large mining companies situated in Toronto, Montreal, or abroad turned the exploration up when they felt like it and then turned it down flat.

• (1210)

We have seen a rate of mine openings and findings such as we have never seen in the country before. There has been an increase from three or four mines being opened per year over the last 30 years to about 15 mines being opened per year. Last year alone some 34 mines were opened across Canada, mainly in the gold mining sector and largely because of this particular program. These mines are generating jobs, every one of them. They are generating tax revenue. They are helping our balance of payments. They are creating regional development for regions which had just about given up hope of anything else happening for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Association des prospecteurs du Québec, which wants the flow-through shares program to be maintained, is supported in that province by the unions, the Montreal Stock Exchange, the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, our own Party and the Parti Québécois, by over a dozen municipalities who are affected by this measure, by the James Bay Development Corporation, and I could go on, but my speaking time is limited.

[English]

Support for this program is not confined to Quebec. In Nova Scotia, not renowned as a mining province, it is estimated that $100 million was invested in mine exploration and development in 1987, mainly on the eastern shore of Nova Scotia where we know that unemployment has been particularly high. Just in the small community of Sheet Harbour, with 2,500 people, in the riding of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Eastern Shore Development Commission estimates expenditures of $100,000 per week. That is real regional development.

In Kirkland Lake, Ontario, which has suffered economic decline for a half century, from the boom of the 1920s, there has been $70 million in mining exploration and development over the last three years. However, we now have the first casualty. Northfield and Queenston Gold Mines cancelled a $50 million mining development program in that area as soon as the Minister of Finance confirmed that flow-through provisions were coming to an end. In fact, after July of this year we are told that no further equity financing will be raised under this particular program because all the juice has gone out of it as a result of the Minister's statement.

If we look at Red Lake, in the riding of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), we see that unemployment has dropped from 20 per cent to 6 per cent. There are 45 drills working there, whereas there were three or four drills working just four years ago.

Uranium City was dying, yet it has now been revived because of exploration based upon flow-through shares.

I want to make clear that I have been consistent in terms of pressing the Minister. I offered him suggestions in a letter of last December, which specifically called for flow-through shares to be targeted to small companies that do not have other forms of income against which they can write off their exploration expenses. We have also suggested the possibility of there being tax credits allowing smaller income earners to take advantage of the particular program rather than confining the benefits to people who are at or near the top rate of income tax. The Minister of Finance has simply said: "No".

In conclusion, I know how my colleagues from the ridings of Churchill, Kamloops—Shuswap, the Yukon, Skeena, Nickel Belt, Kenora—Rainy River, Thunder Bay—Atikokan, and Thunder Bay—Nipigon will vote on the particular measure. We in the New Democratic Party will vote for these benefits to continue because of the value they have brought to mining communities and for them to be focused on smaller junior mining companies that can take the greatest advantage of them.

I want to know where the Minister of National Revenue stands on this particular question. How will the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) vote? Will he vote with the Government or for his constituents? How will the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) vote? How will the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), who we know is uncomfortable with this particular provision, vote, or the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish)? How about the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) who was so strong in criticizing me in 1986 and then spoke so strongly for flow-through shares? Will he be consistent, or will he flip-flop with the Minister of Finance on the particular issue, when unemployment has dropped from 25 per cent to 6 per cent in his area because of the particular program?

[Translation]

Is the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien) going to vote against the interests of his constituents and in favour of the Minister of Finance, or will he vote for his constituents and for regional development in the Abitibi area?

[English]

How about the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins)? We know his private views. Does he have the courage to stand and say publicly that the New Democratic Party is right in putting forward this motion and that the Minister of Finance is wrong in withdrawing exploration and development from mining communities across Canada?

I believe that these questions must be answered by government Members. May they live with their conscience if they vote with the Minister of Finance or if they just abstain today, because taking a walk means that they are supporting the Minister of Finance.

Finally, because my time is up, I want to say that this question will not die in the House of Commons today. This question is very lively in mining communities across Canada. The people in those communities are looking to where the various Parties stand right now. They understand the position of the New Democratic Party. They do not understand what the Government is doing in pulling the rug from under mining communities so that it can cut the taxes on people earning over $100,000 per year. This is what the Government wants to do, it seems to me, or perhaps it is so that it can cosy up to the Americans over the trade deal and say that it is not supposedly subsidizing that particular sector.

The Conservatives will be on the line in the election campaign—did they stand up for mining communities or did they ignore the plight of mining communities which will be adversely affected by the withdrawal of this particular measure?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the benefits of flow-through share financing, particularly depletion, go to those Canadians who are upper income investors, people who earn $60,000, $70,000, $80,000, and more. I find it difficult to understand why the Hon. Member is saying that he wants to extend depletion, because then he is encouraging this type of investor to pay little or no tax, something against which he and his colleagues have been railing, and on which we have taken some action.

Could the Hon. Member explain why—and I share his concern about the position of mining communities right now, and I will address it in my remarks—why the New Democratic Party is proposing the extension of depletion or the continuation of depletion, which is a subsidy that benefits upper income Canadians and helps them to pay little or no tax? Could he explain that to the House?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister seems to ignore constructive suggestions that were made to him, particularly in the letter that I wrote on December 16, 1987, in which I made a number of suggestions.

I said that the measure should be focused on small, non-taxable companies, that is, junior mining companies. Also I said:

> —the Government should offer a tax credit or its equivalent to small investors who wish to participate in financing Canadian mineral exploration and development. This would give individuals a tax saving for relatively small investment—and make the incentive proportional to the mining expenditure rather than the taxpayer's income. As a consequence, new investment may come from those communities in which mining takes place and not just from high-income taxpayers who currently purchase close to one-half of the dollar value of flow-through share issues.

In arguing that the benefit should be maintained for junior mining companies, it is quite clear that we proposed that there should be substantial changes in the program.

What appalls and really bothers me is that the Government could, in six months, go from having the Minister of State—and I assume he speaks with the same authority as the Minister of Finance—say that flow-through shares have been effective in creating very meaningful economic activity in a neglected area of Canada, to taking the opposite position and deciding that they will totally neglect mining areas by withdrawing flow-through shares over a short period of time.

• (1220)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member misses the point here. There will be a continuation of the level of activity of about half of what was done in 1987 without any change in what we have proceeded with right now in income tax reform. The Hon. Member is saying we should extend the earned depletion, something which would clearly help those Canadians who are in the high-income brackets and large, multinational companies. Again, the Hon. Member is talking out of both sides of his mouth. Members of the New Democratic Party are saying that they would stop that dead in its tracks.

How is it that the Hon. Member can say that we should improve the attractiveness of flow-through share financing if he does not want it to spill over into allowing high-income Canadians not to pay taxes? He does not understand the nature of the flow-through share provision and the impact of the depletion on the flow-through share financing. We cannot limit it to investors who are working in Val d'Or or Témiscamingue. Anyone can buy these. What we have done in tax reform is to reduce the attractiveness of them. We admit that that is true, but that was a clear objective of tax reform in order to avoid what the Hon. Member has been saying for many, many years, which is that we have tax provisions which help high-income Canadians pay no taxes. The Hon. Member is talking out of both sides of his mouth and he does not understand which side he is talking out of when he opens it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if anyone is being hypocritical and if any Government is talking out of both sides of its mouth, it is the Conservative Government which is in power in Canada right now. I quote the Minister of State for Finance who said on December 16, 1986, as recorded in Hansard at page 2171:

> As a matter of fact, it is the northern parts of our provinces that are the most neglected parts of our society economically and in every other sense. We must do something for those parts. That is what is behind the flow-through shares.

That is what the Minister's colleague, the junior Minister of Finance, had to say just 15 months ago. Now the Minister of Finance is saying: "Gee, we cannot do this". If that is not hypocritical, I do not know what is.

Since he has not looked at the letter, I would remind the Minister of my letter to him of December 16 in which I said:

> However, I believe we can alter the nature of the flow-through share mechanism to prevent abuses while retaining the real economic benefits that emerge from it as an incentive to mining activity.
> Firstly, flow-through shares could be directed to small, non-taxable companies of a specific size as they are in the oil and gas sector. At present, too many large, profitable corporations take advantage of flow-through shares at great cost to the federal treasury.
> Since it is junior companies that engage in high-risk, grass roots exploration, it is those companies that should chiefly benefit from this measure.

The Minister says that it is impossible to target the benefits in that particular way. We talked with representatives of the affected communities and of the junior mining companies who were in Ottawa earlier this week. They do not see any problem with targeting the measure in that way. There is not a problem with targeting it in the oil and gas sector and there is no reason why that cannot be done in the mining sector as well.

The real issue that the Minister ignores is the fact that this program has brought enormous economic benefits to communities from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Those communities are having the rug pulled out from underneath them and this Government does not give a damn.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not indicated by his decision a bit of a cosy relationship with large multinational mining companies as opposed to small, junior companies. A bonanza sale will soon occur and has already begun. The small exploration and mining companies have, as a result of flow-through share issues, been exploring and developing in the country. As they have made their claims and explored and developed their properties, they have identified good ore prospects. Now they will be unable to hold those prospects and develop them further because of a lack of equity financing.

I feel that the Minister of Finance knows this. That means that these properties will now go onto the market because the companies will be desperate for funds. They will need to sell off these properties, and who will buy them if not the large, multinational mining companies?

I would ask my hon. friend whether or not he feels that it is the case that the Minister of Finance has cosied up to the large mining companies and will now exploit the situation of junior companies being forced to sell their properties at fire-sale prices.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a very real risk in precisely that area. I return to the basic facts which are astonishing. Last year, 34 new mines opened across Canada. The rate of mine finding in Canada has risen from 3 or 4 per year to 15 or 16 per year in the course of the last 3 or 4 years. That is an extraordinary accomplishment. This is not the kind of possibly inflationary growth that occurs within 50 miles of the Finance Minister's riding in Toronto. This is growth in regions of the country where there are resources waiting to be summoned into action.

Before the junior mining companies were able to secure financing through flow-through shares, large robber baron corporations did much of the exploration and development for as long as short-term profits could be made. When returns were diminishing or there was an economic downturn, these corporations closed down operations completely and left the regions devastated.

The cyclical boom and bust of the resource sector has always plagued mining communities, and the flow-through share program has helped these mining communities break their reliance on non-resident businesses by encouraging junior mining companies resident in the areas that contribute directly to other economic spin-offs to projects. If, as my hon. friend for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has indicated, the consequence now is that they are forced to sell out to the multinationals, we will basically be going back in history. That is a sorry and unfortunate tale of boom and bust which I think the mining communities want to and should be allowed to avoid.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), I am very pleased to be involved in this debate. It gives me a chance to state where the Government stands on the important Canadian mining industry.

This industry is very important to the Canadian economy and particularly to the northern regions of Canada. We have seen over the early 1980s, through a period of good management, cost reductions and a good amount of reinvestment. The Canadian mining industry has become one of the most efficient in the world. Today, the industry is stronger and more resilient than it has been in its existence, and that is due to the hard work done by the Canadian mining companies, the miners and the communities themselves. It is paying off.

In 1987, the mineral industry was remarkably vigorous. According to recent government estimates, Canadian mineral production jumped by 17.5 per cent last year to $16 billion, with gold production up more than 32 per cent alone. This level of exploration activity reached record levels in 1987 and it is an achievement that is not likely to repeat itself this year, regardless of any changes in the tax provisions relating to flow-through shares.

We as a Government are committed to keeping this industry strong, growing and able to respond to the opportunities in the world market-place. Because of this commitment, the Government retained its tax reform initiatives, a system that is highly advantageous to the mining industry. Under tax reform proposals, we have ensured that companies pay no income tax at all until all capital costs of a new mine or major expansions have been fully recovered. With tax reform, companies' pre-production development expenses can be claimed as incurred. With reform, we have provided a very generous resource allowance so that companies will be able to invest, prosper and create permanent, long-term jobs for Canadians.

The mining industry, therefore, continues to benefit greatly from highly advantageous tax treatment compared to most other sectors of the Canadian economy and compared to our competitors abroad. In fact, the mining industry has the lowest marginal tax rate of all industrial sectors. This favourable tax treatment ensures that new mines can be brought rapidly into production, creating thousands of new jobs in regions which historically have been hardpressed. These are permanent jobs that will continue for the life of the mine, not just simply during the drilling season.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we strongly support regional development. This is why on December 22 my colleague Robert de Cotret announced a series of consultations which will pave the way for new programs designed to meet the needs of Quebec's peripheral regions. These consultations with regional spokesmen are now under way with a view to focusing on their priorities. What we want is a diversified economy.

• (1230)

[English]

As well, we have given the people of northern Ontario new tools to develop and diversify their economy through the FEDNOR program. Again, my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie is involving the local communities in better targeting this assistance.

Our commitment to the mining industry is also evident in the fact that we retained a tax system that fully recognizes the special risks involved in the exploration for and development of new mines. Under tax reform we have provided companies with a 100 per cent write-off for all their exploration costs. Contrary to misconceptions generated by Members opposite, particularly the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, we have not terminated flow-through shares. We have retained the flow-through share mechanism which allows companies to pass their unused tax benefits on to investors. This mechanism is available only to the mining and oil and gas industries.

These special provisions, when combined with the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption and the special favourable treatment of exploration expenses under the investment loss rules, provide investors with strong incentives to put equity investment into mining companies.

We improved the provision in December following consultations with the industry so that it recognizes some of the problems that developed last year as a result of the problems in Canadian stock markets. These provisions are of particular benefit to junior mining companies which are critical to a vigorous, competitive mining sector.

The exploration incentives contained in our tax system are the strongest incentives offered to any industrial sector in Canada. No other sector can lay claim to a better system.

[Translation]

Under the tax reform companies will be allowed to write off 100 per cent of their exploration expenditures. Contrary to the erroneous allegations made by Members opposite, we have retained the flow-through share mechanism so that companies will be able to pass their unused tax benefits on to their investors. This mechanism is available only to oil, gas and mining companies. These special provisions, coupled with the $100,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption and the special preferred treatment of exploration expenses under the regulations governing investment losses, are a strong incentive for investors interested in the mining sector.

These provisions are particularly beneficial to junior mining companies which are the very foundation of a vigourously and competitively expanding mining industry. Our tax system features exploration incentives the likes of which are unavailable in any other industrial sector in Canada. No other sector can claim to be better treated.

[English]

It is a true economic incentive to encourage productive investment. I stress the words "economic incentive" because one of the primary objectives of tax reform is to ensure that business and investment decisions are made on the basis of strong economic merit rather than on tax shelter merit.

A corner-stone of the tax reform measures we have proposed is a system of lower personal and corporate tax rates. Instead of a host of loopholes available to a select group of companies and individuals, we propose to provide the best economic incentive of all, and that is lower tax rates. We have got rid of loopholes in the system introduced by previous Governments and so roundly condemned by the NDP. These loopholes permitted high-income taxpayers to pay little or no tax at the expense of ordinary Canadians. We have also got rid of the tax shelters which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has so often criticized in this House. However, we have retained the very important flow-through share provision as a true incentive, even though the Hon. Member argued as recently as last December that we should have got rid of it.

To reduce our personal and corporate tax rates we must broaden the tax base. This includes our planned phase-out of earned depletion which currently allows an investor to write off $133 for every $100 invested in mining exploration. In other words, we are eliminating a direct subsidy in the tax system. This is so because earned depletion provides a deduction in excess of the actual amount spent by companies on exploration and development. This is consistent with the thrust of the greater fairness and equity that we are implementing in tax reform.

Investors in mining exploration who take advantage of flow-through shares will also continue to enjoy advantages in capital gains since only 50 per cent of exploration expenses will be included in their investment loss account, thus improving their access to the lifetime capital gains exemption.

In the past several months the financial markets have changed quite markedly. As a result of the severe stock market downturn last October, the mining industry, indeed all industries, face an uncertain investment climate. There have been numerous signs of difficulty ahead for the mining industry. Virtually no equity issues have been completed since October 19. The two major issues attempted by the market have encountered significant difficulties. Share prices across the board are down. Mining shares have dropped even further. The prices of gold and silver recently softened, while investors have fled from equity issues. In fact, the riskier the equity, the faster the flight.

The point I am underlining here is that it is far more the problems in the capital markets than it is in the tax system which have affected the market for flow-through shares. It is clear that investors, big and small, have adopted a wait-and-see attitude towards putting their money into any equity. It is also evident that investors are looking for less risky investments such as the bond markets and have decided to postpone their investments in mineral exploration and other forms of risk investment at least for the time being.

Thus, despite one of the most favourable tax regimes in the world for mining, there continues to exist a great concern in the mining regions of Canada that tax reform is killing flow-through share financing, and with it the exploration activity it finances. As I said, this is simply not true.

First, flow-through shares are not the only source of funds for exploration. The vigorous financial rebound which the mining industry enjoyed means that it is now better able to finance its own exploration activity internally. Cash flow has increased from $320 million in the first quarter of this year alone to more than $1 billion. I am confident that a good portion of this increased cash flow will find its way into funding exploration and development of new mines.

Earlier I said that exploration this year was not forecast to repeat the record rate of 1987. Let us look at the reasons why. In 1986, a very healthy year for the industry, exploration spending was $650 million. In 1987 it almost doubled to $1.2 billion. Clearly that level is not sustainable. If Members opposite talked to the industry as we have done they would know that the industry itself believes exploration was overheated and that 1988 could not, indeed should not, be a repeat of the year before.

In 1987 there was a confluence of events which artificially boosted spending. First, there was the strong bull market in stock markets until October. Second, mineral prices rebounded from recent lows. Finally, the tax incentives themselves prompted high-income investors to buy a record number of flow-through shares. These investors were not miners. They were not local entrepreneurs. They were high-income individuals who were taking advantage of an overly generous tax incentive to mine the federal Treasury. The tax structure was inappropriate. The industry knew this. We knew it. We acted to change it. We acted to change it as was recommended by the NDP Member for Ottawa Centre talking out of one side of his mouth. As the system overheats, the potential for abuse increases dramatically. The scarcity of special equipment and skilled workers results in greatly inflated drilling charges. Inefficient exploration is undertaken late in the tax year.

As Minister of Finance this entire situation gives me and the Government a great deal of concern, as it should Members opposite. In the aftermath of the crash of October 19, we do not want to see the mining industry transformed from an overheated situation to a frozen one. We want to see a healthy mining exploration industry in Canada, but we also want an industry that is driven more by market forces than by tax incentives. No industry, indeed no region, can isolate itself from changing patterns in the international market-place.

That is why I said in June and reiterated in December that temporary measures during periods of economic downturns or depressed equity prices may be necessary to ensure the survival of exploration activities in Canada. This is why I have instructed my officials to meet with the various segments of the industry and assess this market situation in light of the current stock market softness and weakening prices for precious metals. If further measures are needed, they will be measures aimed at encouraging investors, particularly in smaller mining companies, and not tax shelters as my friend from the New Democratic Party seems to want.

As I have said, the Government remains committed to the mining industry. Our tax reform proposals with our lower tax rates will provide the ultimate incentive for investors, the ability to keep more of what they have earned. We promised to monitor the situation closely and we will. We will be looking carefully at the levels of exploration activity taking place to determine what, if any, action is warranted.

I will close by making some remarks on what I see as blatant political opportunism by both the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties. Let us not be fooled by the rhetoric of the Liberal Party. They have said that they would restore flow-through shares. We have not taken away flow-through shares. The two key changes which reduce the attractiveness of flow-through share financing as an investment are some tightening in the capital gains rules and in depletion. We have left some exemption for capital gains, but the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) said he would scrap all of the capital gains exemption. That in itself would be a far bigger hit on flow-through share financing than anything we have proposed in tax reform.

As I said, depletion is a subsidy, mainly to big companies to pay for the lower personal income tax rates for the average Canadian. Is the Leader of the Liberal Party going to put that back? What would then happen to the lower personal income tax rates which are going to be brought about for the average Canadian through tax reform?

The New Democratic Party said that it was going to stick to its principles. Gerald Caplan is quoted as saying:

> I think that the Party would be making a mistake if it publicly repudiated decades-long policy at this stage—

That is exactly what they are doing. In February, 1987, in Timiskaming the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said that flow-through share financing allows "affluent investors" to avoid paying taxes. He said that the NDP has "a great deal of difficulty" with the issue of flow-through share financing.

That is what the Leader of the New Democratic Party said only a short year ago. The Member for Ottawa Centre and the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) voted against some changes that we were proposing in flow-through share financing in 1986 which would assure that earned depletion would be extended to the junior mining companies which they purport to be in favour of today. On December 16 the Member said that he would eliminate flow-through shares. On February 14 and 16 of 1987 the Leader of the NDP and the Member for Regina East said that they would eliminate this as it is simply a mechanism for helping rich taxpayers avoid paying taxes.

Then, late in 1987, something happened. The polls started going up for the New Democratic Party. The members of the NDP got a little sniff of power. The Member for Ottawa Centre started to count ridings. He said that if the NDP flip-flopped on its policies they may be able to win 24 or 25 seats in the northern part of the country. They flip-flopped totally. They repudiated decade-long policies. In December, 1987, Caplan said that they might look unprincipled. Well, that is what Canadians are saying today.

Yes, the New Democratic Party is starting to look unprincipled. This is the Party which kept saying that it had principles and would stand by them, that it would hold firm to the policies which it has held for decades since the Regina Manifesto. But no, they flip-flopped as soon as they got a little sniff of power.

If they are prepared to flip-flop on principles which are designed to stop high-income Canadians from paying little or no tax, what will they do on policies which affect the broad interests of Canadians as a whole? So much for credibility. So much for trustworthiness. So much for honesty. So much for principles. This is the New Democratic Party which Canadians are now starting to see. This is the Party that people are starting to understand. They do not have principles any more. They had principles when they were number three, when they were at 18 per cent in the polls. However, when they are at 35 or 40 per cent the principles go right out the window. When the pressure of power is on them, when they get a little sense that they may get into office, they cave in and the principles go right out of the window.

In conclusion, we recognize the concern of the northern communities. Conservative Members of Parliament represent many communities in the northern part of the country including Temiskaming, Val d'Or, and Timmins. We recognize the concern that is there. We are meeting with representatives of those communities and representatives of the industry.

Mr. Cassidy: You're ignoring it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): However, as I have said, the cause of the problem is much more the poor equity markets that are affecting all forms of equity financing today as well as the falling gold prices. It is not simply the change in the tax provisions of the flow-through shares.

People must not be fooled by the duplicity of the Liberal or New Democratic Parties. The Government has demonstrated its commitment to the mining industry. It has demonstrated its understanding of the flow-through share provision by the changes which we announced in the flow-through provisions in June last year following consultations with the industry and an understanding of the impact of the stock market changes. We made those changes on December 16. We will continue to monitor the situation. We will continue to discuss this with the industry. If it is necessary to make provisions for change, we will make those changes.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, of course the changes made by the Government are paltry. I want to take the Minister's statement on. I expected that he would refer to the debate we had in December, 1986. I think I dealt with that quite fully.

I am concerned about the fact that we are talking about real people here. We are talking about people in mining communities such as Val d'Or, Kirkland Lake, Uranium City, Schefferville, Murdockville, Thetford Mines, and many other communities across the country where the unemployment rates have gone down dramatically because of the exploration and development which was encouraged by this particular provision.

The Minister now says that he agrees with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and he is saying, let the market prevail, let us go back to boom and bust. The Minister is saying, therefore, that he is content to see unemployment in those areas go back up to 15 or 20 per cent and stay at those levels year after year, that the people in those communities should not have the right to share in the prosperity found in certain areas such as the Minister's riding of Etobicoke in Metropolitan Toronto. I find that very difficult to accept.

The Minister claims that the tax rate is among the lowest in the mining sector. Why is it then that the Canadian Committee to Save Flow-through Shares has indicated that investment through the flow-through mechanism is drying up, that it will be down to nothing after June or July of this year? As well, why was the Minister prepared, in his statement of last June 18, to promise to the oil and gas industry that the Government would consider what adjustments in non-tax assistance would be appropriate to encourage oil and gas projects which provided important regional and national benefits and which are fundamentally economic? Why this disparity of treatment? Why is the Government still prepared to offer consideration to the oil and gas industry but not to make any comparable engagement with respect to the junior mines?

I fail to understand that and I condemn the Minister for the distortion in his failure to listen to the fact that our Party is talking about a focused kind of benefit which will encourage continuation of activity by the junior mining sector. I do not know how many times I have to say it to the Minister, but perhaps if I say it once more he will understand.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, talking about distortion, the Hon. Member just totally distorted anything I have said or anything the Government has done. We are very concerned and understand the implications of policies on the northern regions of the country. We have introduced a wide range of policies that respond to the needs.

We have been very much a part of the drop in the unemployment rate in Abitibi, Témiscamingue and Val d'Or. That Hon. Member voted against the policies that we brought in that improved the flow-through share provisions that resulted in the unemployment rate coming down to less than 7 per cent. The Hon. Member has the gall and the hypocrisy to sit in his place in the House and say, "We supported them". It is on the record in Hansard that he voted—

Mr. Cassidy: How can you send your Minister of State for Finance to say one thing and you do another six months later? That is hypocrisy.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On clause 11, five Members of the Conservative Party and the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) voted yea. The nays were Michael Cassidy and Simon de Jong. That is hypocrisy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask both Members and all Members to continue the debate without using the word "hypocrisy", if possible.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that we do not have the best provisions. I was referring to the tax provisions in the mining sector as a whole. If he wants to compare that to any other industry in the country and tell me that my statement is wrong and those are not the best tax provisions, let him come and talk to me. I will listen carefully. However, until he talks specifics instead of rhetoric, then I do not have much time to listen to the rhetoric.

We have stated that we will look at the situation in the industry and will follow this very closely. However, no one will be fooled by the position of the New Democratic Party. He thinks that Canadians are dumb. He thinks that he will have a focused depletion related provision that only helps low and middle-income earners and not upper-income Canadians. He believes one can have such a provision. First, he does not understand that the flow-through share provisions are not very attractive for low and middle-income investors because there is not much tax attraction to them. It is only attractive to people who would have to pay high taxes and can see a flow-through share as a way of reducing that amount of tax.

When the Hon. Member says that he is going to focus it on lower and middle-income Canadians, he demonstrates a total ignorance of the impact of flow-through share financing. That would result in a complete wipe-out of flow-through share financing rather than the middle ground we are trying to achieve to avoid the excesses about which he was railing in the House. He said to change it because it is far too attractive, and go back to the drawing board.

We made some changes and recognize that they are not quite as attractive as they were. However, as I said, we are talking to the industry, monitoring the situation and will continue to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. He would recall that I and a number of other Members have made many representations concerning flow-through shares in the mining sector. I should think that Canadians generally and Members in particular appreciate the direction the tax reform is taking, that altering any aspect of the reform would be like throwing the doors wide open for all other sectors to rush in and file their own claims. I am sure most Members share this view. Now on to my question. Although I do not expect anything like it this year, what would the response be if there were a recession in the coming years, or if the mining industry were to be a lot less productive and go through a crisis? Is the Minister prepared to consider alternative solutions?

Before concluding, I have a second question. Does the Minister agree that the mining sector becomes really profitable only over the long haul, only when it reaches the development stage rather than the exploration stage?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the last part of the Hon. Member's question. Perhaps he could repeat it.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I will sum up for the benefit of the Minister. Flow-through shares are indeed quite an incentive in what is known as the mining exploration stage. But sooner or later, if we want the operation to become productive in the long run we have to go on to the development stage, and that is where new and permanent jobs come into the picture. I wanted to have the Minister's views on this: it is at the development stage that a mine in a community gets to be profitable in the long term, the exploration activity may be important but the development stage is the name of the game.

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) who has demonstrated a very great interest in this particular matter and has been very helpful in the advice he has been providing to me. I hope to continue to consult with him as we proceed with this consultation stage.

The Hon. Member asked me two questions: First, whether we are prepared to consider alternative solutions. We are definitely prepared to consider alternative solutions, but solutions that would not involve broad-based tax measures which result in a major benefit through investment for high-income Canadians. We believe that is not the way to go, unlike the NDP Members which, by the nature of the proposal they have made, will result in a major benefit to help high income Canadians to pay little or no tax.

We are looking at the options and consulting with the industry to see whether there is sufficient reason for these types of alternative solutions. We will continue to consult with the industry.

The second question relates to the development stage. There is no question that a mine which operates in a community on an ongoing basis and provides permanent jobs year in and year out is better than the type of employment in exploration activity which will be quite focused because of tax measures and will be focused at certain times of the year for weather reasons. We want to encourage a greater degree of stability in the industry. The changes we have brought in through tax reform will contribute to that stability.

• (1300)

In this instance, there are very attractive features in the tax system to encourage the development mines. As I said in my remarks, a company can have the full amount of its investment written off—that includes the development costs—before paying taxes. This, we believe, is one of the contributing factors, as I indicated earlier, as to why the mining sector enjoys the lowest over-all effective tax rate of any industrial sector in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion before the House today, dealing with flow-through shares.

Before starting my speech, perhaps I may provide some background for the debate and explain exactly what a flow-through share is. Sometimes I think that Members who do not represent mining areas, or Canadians who are following the debate at home, must wonder whether we are talking about some strange creature from another planet which for some reason is of particular interest to people who live in mining regions and remote areas. A flow-through share is a tool for financing mining exploration, developed a number of years ago to promote exploration in remote areas of this country and thus assist regional development.

Earlier, I heard the Minister say it was a very generous tax measure. I do not quite agree with his interpretation. Suppose we compare a furniture manufacturer with a mining company. A company that manufactures furniture and spends $25,000 or $30,000 or $40,000 or $50,000 to find new markets in New York, Chicago, Vancouver or wherever, can deduct those expenses from its profits, because the money is invested in the company's future. The same applies to the mining sector. A mining company spends money on exploration to guarantee the future of the company, like the furniture manufacturer who was looking for new markets. Both the cost of exploring markets and the cost of exploring new resources in order to continue mining operations may be deducted from profits. Flow-through shares make it possible for a company that is not expected to make a profit within the next few years to pass the profits on directly to the shareholder. Instead of doing so five or ten years later when the profits come in, it is done right away, and the company pays taxes later on. That is where I disagree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who says that the program in its amended form is very worthwhile. It does not do any more for operations as risky as mining exploration than it does for any company that spends money on exploring markets.

Mr. Speaker, that being said, I must say I am rather astonished at the attitude taken by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

The day before yesterday, I went to see the "Save Flow-through Share" committee, and there were about 300 people present from all over Canada. I told these people on Tuesday that tomorrow, on the Opposition day for the Liberals, I would table in the House a motion on flow-through shares, asking the Government specifically to maintain the earned depletion allowance of 33 1/3 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, how surprised I was yesterday when I realized that for the past year and a half, the Socialist Members of the NDP had fought not only against flow-through shares, but even against the very principle of tax incentives. Not only are they retreating, making an about turn of 180 degrees, of 360 degrees, not only are they changing their position, but they have the gall to move in the House a motion urging the Government to maintain the 33 1/3 per cent of the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares.

I am sure that the mining industry as a whole and those associated with it will not be fooled by this trick of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and will realize just how opportunistic the NDP can get in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I have emphasized for over 18 months the need for flow-through shares and the principle of tax incentive as tools for regional development in Canada. I believe I was the only one at first, and I felt I was preaching in the desert. The mining industry would never have believed that a Tory Government would abolish the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares and completely killed the program. The general public and also the regions which are not aware of the benefits resulting from earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares paid only minimal attention to this debate.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party's position on this issue is well known. I explained it in the House in 1986, after the NDP Member for Ottawa Centre had moved an amendment to a tax legislation aimed at completely eliminating flow-through shares.

At the time, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said this, . . .

[English]

It was on December 16, 1986, that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre tabled a motion to amend the Income Tax Act. Had it been adopted, the amendment would have resulted in the elimination of the flow-through share mechanism. The main reason the New Democratic Party wanted to eliminate the flow-through share mechanism was that it was used mainly by wealthy Canadians. That is pure NDP policy. If you are wealthy, you are a bad Canadian.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre talked about flow-through shares as a tax loophole, a tax avoidance mechanism. To my surprise last night and this morning I read that the same Member was tabling a motion to reintroduce the earned depletion after having said what he said in December, 1986. That is political expediency, for sure.

The position of the Liberal Party is well known. I explained our policy in my speech answering the amendment proposed by the NDP to abolish flow-through shares. This is what I said:

[Translation]

Speaking in French in the House on December 16, 1986, Mr. Speaker, I made the following comment, as reported on page 2171 of the House of Commons Debates:

> Mr. Speaker, I have trouble understanding the reasoning behind the motions presented by the Members of the New Democratic Party. When the Liberal Government introduced these measures, as a stimulus to economic development in the mining areas of Quebec and Northern Ontario, the results were extremely positive.

Mr. Speaker, I added a little further on that investments were made as a result of the flow-through share tax incentive and that by so doing, the Liberal Party of Canada had come up in favour of regional development. We said also that the tax system could and should be used as a tool of regional development and that, in this sense, tax incentive should be maintained. What we felt was wrong was not the tax incentive itself, but the abuses it could lead to in some regions of this country.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I shall repeat later on what I said in reply to the Minister of Finance's Budget speech in 1986 and what I said on other occasions in this House and in the minority report in support of the concept of regional development and of the need for the Canadian Government to have a truly national regional development policy and to have the ability to use the tax system as a privileged instrument.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, when Phase I of the tax reform was being considered in committee, the Liberal Party objected to the proposal of the Minister of Finance. Our opposition was reflected in the minority report tabled in the House in November, 1987, in which we clearly recommended that the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares be maintained. This recommendation can be found on pages 18 and 19 of our minority report and was our recommendation No. 11 for the tax reform. We recommend that flow-through shares be maintained.

Why, Mr. Speaker? For many reasons related to regional development, job creation and the competitiveness of the Canadian mining industry throughout the world.

• (1310)

[English]

The main reason the Liberal Party recommended that the flow-through share mechanism be maintained is not only because it helped to create thousands of jobs in the regions or because it helped to raise more than $2 billion but because it represents an innovative way of establishing harmonious collaboration between the Government and the private sector. Let me elaborate a little bit on that subject.

First, it created jobs. Employment in our regions has increased substantially because of the earned depletion on flow-through shares. The Minister is dead wrong when he suggests that we in the Liberal Party are trying to give a false indication. I have repeated time and time again that what we are talking about here is the 33 per cent earned depletion allowance because it is a risky business and because exploration went down the drain in 1982 and 1983. This is why we introduced the measure. It was to help the remote areas of the country that can live only through their natural resources. We created that program to help the regions to develop and to help the mining industry which has no profit, no expectation of profit, to find a way to go ahead with exploration. It creates jobs.

In Val d'Or and Rouyn, for example, where the rate of unemployment was 28 per cent, it is now down to 6 per cent. The Minister of Finance may claim that he had something to do with that. The only reason that this thing happened is because of the 33 per cent earned depletion on flow-through shares. It is a risky business. This is why we think that the earned depletion allowance should remain. It is a risky business because when one spends thousands and thousands of dollars to dig a hole in the soil thinking that one may find some copper, gold or silver one never knows until the money has been spent. It is a very risky business. This is why I say that without the 33 per cent earned depletion allowance the mechanism of flow-through shares cannot work and will not work.

The Minister talked about the stock market crash. He said that following the crash not only has the mining industry not been able to raise equity but all other sectors have not been able to raise money. This is an additional reason why the Minister should keep the earned depletion allowance of 33 1/3 per cent in place. It is because of the difficulties that the whole industry will have in raising money. It is not the time to cut the program to a level at which the program will not be workable. It is not the time to cut the benefits of the program when other factors are playing against the mining industry, particularly exploration.

We think that earned depletion and flow-through shares should remain because they are good mechanisms to have the public sector, the Government and the private sector work very closely together. It is of direct help to junior exploration companies. Without direct involvement of the Government only the big multinational companies will have the profit and the cash flow to carry out exploration.

Another reason that the earned depletion allowance should be kept, and I have been saying this for 18 months, is because of its regional development implications. The flow-through share mechanism is part of a future Liberal Government's strategy for regional development. It has been in the past and it should remain in the future.

It must be remembered that the total economic and regional development envelope has been reduced by the Tory Government by close to $2 billion since it took power. Not only has it cut direct grants for regional development but it is now killing the flow-through share mechanism by eliminating the earned depletion allowance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we want to know about the regional impact, we can look at a study carried out by the accounting firm of Maheu-Noiseux in co-operation with engineers for the Association des prospecteurs du Québec. This study was funded in part by the Quebec Government. I would like to refer to some of the recommendations contained in this study of approximately 150 pages, which deals with all aspects of the mining industry, especially in Quebec and northern Quebec.

This study indicates that, in Quebec alone, there has been a net creation of 50,000 jobs a year. This figure is in person-years. There is an added value of $2.1 billion. Tax revenue generated in 1985 amounted to $400 million and the cost in taxes to $239 million. In other words, tax incentives cost the Government $239 million and tax revenue as a result of the economic activity generated by the industry amounted to $400 million. This is why I do not understand the attitude of the Minister of Finance. He says that he wants to protect Government revenues. However, the study shows that, in Quebec alone, this program has produced additional tax revenues of $160 million because of the economic activity generated by the industry and the fact that the welfare benefits and unemployment insurance which used to be paid to people in these regions were replaced by positive action and new jobs.

[English]

I said that the flow-through shares with the earned depletion mechanism of 33 per cent is a way to have good collaboration between the private sector and the Government. It is my profound belief that the private sector is and must remain the driving force of economic growth in the country. But it is also my belief that the Government has a role to play in the development of the economy.

This role is to create an environment, and in the case of flow-through shares, a fiscal environment, favourable to the emergence of private initiatives. The kind of co-operation that is taking place between the Government and the private sector in the case of flow-through shares is to some extent the practical way of co-operation. It is simple. It is done without any direct involvement of the Government in the production process itself. It is done without any heavy Government bureaucratic overhead. It is done by helping private corporations gain better access to capital. It is done by reducing the risks incurred by investors in the mining exploration corporations. Quite obviously, it is done in favour of the economic development of the remote areas of the country where there are so many vulnerable one-company towns.

[Translation]

The Liberal Party believes that the kind of co-operation that now exists between the private sector and the public sector, in the case of flow-through shares for resources and especially in the mining industry, is vastly superior to any system of direct government subsidies. Direct subsidies often involve a lot of red tape, become discriminatory and stifle the companies one wants to help. Flow-through shares, with the earned depletion allowance of 33 1/3 per cent, not only preclude this red tape, they are an essential tool of the Government's regional development policy.

Now that the Conservative Government is cutting back on funding for regional development, it wants the regions to develop themselves, using their own resources. And now the Government is removing the main program that was helping the mining industry in these regions.

[English]

I wanted to raise another issue which, in my view, has been overlooked in this debate. It is the impact of the trade agreement with the United States and the future use of tax incentives.

According to many people, including the respected firm of Clarkson Gordon, Woods Gordon, it is not sure at all that the Government will be able to introduce new tax incentives in the future without inducing some kind of retaliation by the United States. The following is a direct quote from the newsletter of Clarkson Gordon, Woods Gordon:

• (1320)

> Although the existing tax incentives will be grandfathered according to the Agreement, it is important for all Canadian business people to recognize that expanding the list of such incentives could induce a responsive trade action by the U.S.

Yesterday the Minister stated that this was not a serious study. If we cannot believe the words of Clarkson Gordon in the areas of accounting, business activity, and economic development, I wonder on whom we should rely for good expertise.

You have indicated to me, Mr. Speaker, that I have only a few minutes left.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I understand my time is running out. I would have liked to repeat what I said in my speech on the 1986 Budget and explain the Liberal Party's suggestions for eliminating loopholes in the system while maintaining the benefits of flow-through shares in their present form. Unfortunately, I will not have enough time, but I hope to have another opportunity to explain what we think should be done to prevent abuse of the system.

Mr. Speaker, before I finish, I would like to move an amendment to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I think his motion is too vague, and if the Hon. Member was sincere about what he said, I imagine he will accept this amendment. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster):

> That the motion be amended by adding after the second "that" the words:
> "because of the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance".
> and adding after the second "provision" the words:
> "and, specifically, the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance".

With this amendment, Mr. Speaker, the motion will reflect the purpose of this debate, namely that the Government must realize that without the earned depletion allowance of 33 1/3 per cent on flow-through shares, the program as it exists today or as it will be after July 1989, will no longer be operational, which is exactly what we were told by prospectors and representatives of the mining industry from all over Canada, from Northwest Quebec, Northern Ontario, the Northwest Territories, British Columbia and Manitoba. In fact, they gave us the same message when we toured the country in connection with Phase I of the tax reform, and today we see what the consequences may be for our country's remote areas.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move this amendment, and I hope it is well received by the Chair and by the Members of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the proposed amendment under advisement and, after the Question Period, rule on its acceptability.

[English]

On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: I listened with interest to my hon. colleague. Inadvertently, I believe, he gave the impression that, at some time or another, as a result of one of the many motions sponsored by the New Democratic Party, we supported this government initiative.

I distinctly remember the debate and the motion. The motion was one of the many attempts made by the New Democratic Party to clean up the tax system, to build into the system more justice and fairness, and remove some of the discrimination and the obvious biases in the tax system. At that time, the point of our motion was to look at the flow-through share concept in terms of an important tax expenditure, and certainly it did not suggest that it be eliminated but that it be fine-tuned. The effort was to restrict the advantages or the incentives incurred in this particular initiative to small and medium-sized Canadian-owned companies, in other words, where the benefits would be targeted to benefit the regions of the country, and particularly to the companies that required that assistance.

Having made that comment, my question to the Hon. Member is the following. Would my hon. friend not support such an initiative to improve the tax system and target those tax provisions to assist those who can put that tax initiative to work on behalf of the Canadian mining community? Is that not something that we ought to be striving to accomplish in Canada?

Mr. Garneau: I do not wish to be rude to my hon. colleague, particularly because he was not a member of the finance committee. What is being done this morning by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and his colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, is an effort to rationalize a flip-flop.

I have been a member of the finance committee together with NDP and Tory Members where we sat for weeks, if not months, and heard more than 235 witnesses. The finance committee travelled across the country and met with representatives of the mining resource industry, prospectors, and many other people. We particularly discussed the whole aspect of tax incentives as a tool for regional development and development of some particular type of industry where needed.

Up to that point, the position of the NDP had been that we should get rid of all tax incentives and use direct grants. That position is within the philosophy of the NDP Party. We may agree or disagree, but I think that they are correct to take that position. They have taken the position at the finance committee that they would prefer and favour direct grants. Sometimes direct grants are needed because fiscal incentives cannot work in terms of regional development. But as a principle to say that fiscal incentives are loopholes and a tax evasion used by the rich is not appropriate in a country like Canada where we need all the tools that we can find to ensure that the development and the growth of the country will be experienced in every region.

This is the reason I say to the Member that I understand his rationalization today. I am very happy that finally——as we say in French, they have found the road to Damascus. They have seen the light.

[English]

I am very happy about that, but do not try to make a fool out of yourself and say that you have always been for that. It is simply not true. I sat for too many hours on the finance committee, and argued too long with some of the Members. It is their point of view, and I accept that, but please do not ask me today to agree that you have always been for the flow-through shares, and convince people today of that fact. It is not true. I can accept and I am happy that the Hon. Member has changed his mind and is now supporting the idea, but do not ask me for praise.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For a question or comment, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). When he talks about flow-through shares he has some credibility, but I would not say the same thing about the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), for he does not seem to understand anything at all about flow-through shares, and there is no logic in the position he is trying to defend.

I know that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has visited the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region on a number of occasions, particularly Val-d'Or and Rouyn, and that he is familiar with the problem of our mining industry, but he also knows that we are now doing quite well, what with our 6.6 per cent unemployment rate. A moment ago the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides stated in the course of his remarks that the tax rate concerning earned depletion had gone down from 33 1/3 to 16 2/3, and he said this was killing the economy and the mining industry. Perhaps he might explain how such a minor change can possibly kill the industry. The other thing I would like to know, because I did not hear the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides say so, is how long he would like to see the present system maintained.

I have my own views on this but I would like to know whether he thinks it should be maintained for ever and a day, or whether there is a reasonable time limit he would find acceptable.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party's policy on tax incentives has been discussed on at least two occasions here in the House. I said at the time that to prevent abuse, we should have what I called a tax incentive box that would work along the same lines as a registered retirement savings plan. You could put in a certain amount of money annually or a certain percentage of your income, and the incentive would help achieve regional development objectives or perhaps develop our cultural industries, such as the film industry. However, Canadians would not be able to use these tax shelters to avoid paying income tax. Everyone would pay income tax, and I also said that the tax incentive box could be used instead of the minimum tax. In fact, it would be much easier to get rid of the minimum tax introduced by the Conservatives, a tax that does not achieve what it is suppose to achieve because first of all, it is complex, and if you pay minimum tax one year, you still have seven years to get it back. Anyone who is not completely devoid of intelligence and imagination should be able to manage his affairs in such a way that he can recover the minimum tax he paid within seven years' time. That was our proposal for stopping abuse of the system.

As for the time frame, I said in the House and I said to the representatives of various mining organizations that we believe each tax incentive should have an automatic five-year expiry date that will oblige Parliament to review the measure, not necessarily in order to abolish it but to see whether the intended objective was met. If it was not, the incentive could either be repealed or amended and improved.

As for changes in the earned depletion allowance of 33 1/3 per cent that is being reduced to 16 1/3 per cent and eventually to zero, there should be no problem in 1988, because it is still in fact, and as far as the companies are concerned, especially big corporations like CNP and NIM, the decision on share issues for 1988 was made in 1987. So there should be a certain amount of activity.

However, in addition to the earned depletion allowance that will disappear by 1989, there are also the Minister's proposed changes in taxing capital gains.

We know that until quite recently, only 50 per cent of capital gains were taxable. According to the Minister's proposals, however, 75 per cent of capital gains will now be taxed at the marginal tax rate. Since flow-through shares are deemed to cost zero cents because their purchase cost was deducted from the investor's income for the previous year, when the shares are sold, the full selling price is considered a capital gain, which is then taxed at 75 per cent instead of 50 per cent.

So when you add the reduction to zero of the earned depletion allowance—33 1/3 per cent to 16 2/3 per cent to zero in 1989—to the capital gains tax which takes a greater share, you realize that the risk is too great. You would be better advised to invest your $100 in some other type of less risky activities.

People are wrong when they say it's a tax evasion, for it is a sort of reverse RRSP. When we invest money in an RRSP, what do we do? Instead of paying the income tax in the current year, we postpone paying it until our retirement and we start paying income tax at the then marginal rate when we retire.

In the case of flow-through shares, it is the opposite. We offer the tax advantages immediately at the time of the investment, and that is the reason why we refer to it as earned depletion. Which is called "épuisement gagné" in French. We offer the tax advantages immediately at the moment of investment, instead of offering it at the time the company which is making profits may start deducting its expenses from its profits. This does not cost a cent to the Government, except that instead of paying in three, four or five years, we pay now, which makes it possible for people to carry out mining exploration when they want.

This also makes it possible for junior companies not only to get involved in exploration, but to keep and develop these mines, something which was practically impossible before because of the required cash flow. But now it is possible.

That is why I say that the Tory Government's action today will turn off the tap for mining exploration and prevent junior companies from maintaining their involvement both in mining exploration and development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has now expired. The Chair plans to recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on debate. However, since we have three minutes remaining before the luncheon break, would there be unanimous consent to break for lunch now and allow the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap to start his speech after Question Period?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, it being 1.35 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.35 p.m. the House took recess.

TRANSPORTATION

CLOSURE OF TERMINALS—EXTENSION OF SPECIAL SEVERANCE PAYMENT PROVISIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the closure of Route Canada terminals on November 20, 1987, in places such as Sydney, Nova Scotia, CN proposed that separation and severance payment provisions contained in an expired special collective agreement be extended to employees affected by terminal closures. However, Route Canada was not prepared to enter into such an agreement with the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers, nor would it authorize Canadian National Railways to do so on its behalf.

CN says that it cannot unilaterally enter into an agreement with the trade union representing the employees of another employer without the written authorization of that company. Why would a company like Route Canada, which picked up assets of CN worth about $80 million for approximately $23 million, object to CN or the Government helping the employees it has treated so miserably? Is it just a trumped up story between CN and Route Canada whereby one of the costs to Route Canada of getting these assets for such a ridiculously low price was that Route Canada take the fall?

TAXATION

NORTHERN DEDUCTIONS—ELIGIBILITY OF BORDER COMMUNITIES

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge that the commission of inquiry looking into the eligibility of border communities seeking the northern deductions begin its work.

As all Hon. Members know, the definition of isolated communities was adopted in 1980 for the purpose of determining benefits under remission orders. The remission orders conferred benefits only on those who received financial assistance from employers for housing and travel costs. The northern deduction now extends similar benefits to everyone in isolated communities. As a result, these benefits are widely known in the isolated communities and the adjacent communities that are on the outside.

I have spoken with constituents in Victoria County, Guysborough County, Inverness County and Richmond County. They want an opportunity to present their cases to justify getting northern deductions. The northern deduction is more equitable than the remission orders it replaced but inequities remain. The commission of inquiry is an important avenue for addressing these inequities. I urge that it get under way with its work.

LETTERS FROM CIVIL SERVANTS IN SUPPORT OF MINISTERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on February 29, the assistant deputy minister of telecommunications and technology, Richard Stursberg, wrote a letter to the editor of The Financial Post to defend his Minister, the Hon. Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). It seems to me that this is extraordinary. Is the Minister so weak that she cannot defend herself on this matter?

Right below that letter on the letters to the editor page was a letter from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). There have been letters to the editor written by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), very witty letters.

Why is a civil servant writing to defend the Minister of Communications? The letter is about a very controversial matter involving the Call-Net decision, the overruling of the CRTC decision, the issue of jobs in the telecommunications sector and the issue of costs to consumers for long-distance and local calls. It seems to me to be against Canadian tradition for a civil servant to write letters to the editor on behalf of his Minister. I think it should stop. What will we see next, someone from the Department of Justice, an assistant deputy minister perhaps, writing to defend Mr. Jean Sirois?

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO DEVELOPMENT OF EASTERN MONTREAL

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to emphasize this Government's interest in Eastern Montreal.

Last week, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) announced a federal contribution to Eastern Montreal's economic renewal. This is an over-all investment of $275 million distributed through a number of departments, under which moneys have been especially allotted for eastern Montreal's economic development.

This includes the Federal Business Development Bank which is setting aside an estimated $125 million for loans to industries in the East End. The Department of Employment and Immigration will put aside $115 million under its Canadian Jobs Strategy programs. Moreover, we have injected an extra $35 million to strengthen the local industrial structure and encourage diversification of eastern Montreal's industrial base.

Mr. Speaker, these are concrete actions taken by this Government, as opposed to the Liberals who neglected eastern Montreal during more than 20 years.

EASTERN MONTREAL—EXTENT OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION—IMPACT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) just endeavoured—but as usual she is beside the track, and I understand her former colleague for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin).

Mr. Speaker, she has been inactive and this is the reason why last week workers went to protest and boo the Minister and the Hon. Member because they did nothing for eastern Montreal. It is inaccurate to boast of the figures she just mentioned. This has been—

Mrs. Jacques: Oh! oh!

Mr. Malépart: —denounced. Only $37 million of new money was announced. Everyone knows the Federal Business Development Bank only puts up money when no trust company or bank will lend you and you are cornered.

Mr. Speaker, the City of Montreal injected $90 million. The Quebec Government came up with money. Only the Canadian Government did not respond to the request from the early retirement program and this is the reason why the Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier will not be re-elected at the next election, just like the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) and the Hon. Member for Gamelin (Mr. Gravel) for the simple reason they did not look after the people from eastern Montreal.

RIGHT TO LIFE

OPPOSITION TO ABORTION—STATEMENT OF POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Pope John Paul II recently received in audience participants in a study conference on the right to life. I would like to put on record some of his remarks. He said:

> Unconditional respect for the right to life of the conceived but unborn human person is one of the pillars sustaining every civil society. When a state places its institutions at the disposal of those who may act to suppress the life of the unborn child, it renounces one of its primary duties and its own dignity as a state.
> A state has as its primary duty the defense of the fundamental rights of the human person especially of those who are weakest. And who is weaker than an unborn child?

The Pope went on to say:

> The legalization of abortion has been inserted as a foreign body bearing within itself the seeds of corruption.
> How is it still possible to speak of the dignity of every human person when the killing of the weakest and most innocent is permitted?
> The state must always reflect as that of being a place where a person, every person is affirmed in his comparable dignity.

TRANSPORTATION

AIR SAFETY—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming increasingly apparent that the Government does not really care about air safety. We have seen innumerable examples of lapses in airport security that appear to go unheeded. Now we see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is rejecting an opportunity to meet with those people most directly involved with the problem.

In a recent letter to Shirley Carr, President of the Canadian Labour Congress, the Minister stated that he could not meet with the Council of Aviation Unions. He claimed that his schedule is far too busy. He cannot meet with them this week, he cannot meet with them next week and he cannot meet with them next month. He will be so busy in the foreseeable future that he cannot possibly set a date aside.

Does the Minister mean to say that he is far too busy to listen to the concerns of these employees who are directly involved in the industry he administers? Are we to assume that the Minister is simply too busy to find a solution acceptable to everyone?

It is entirely unacceptable for the Minister to claim that he is simply too busy to ensure fairness or true effectiveness in any regulations that he might come up with. I demand that the Minister make the time in his schedule to meet with this group and allow it to present its case. The Minister is putting aside the safety of Canadian travellers because he does not want to meet with a group of unions directly involved, and that is uncalled for.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UTILIZATION OF CHIEF'S TELEPHONE CODE—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on February 24 last, I accused the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) of having allowed extensive use of his telephone code number for the organization of his party's political campaign in Quebec. The office of the Member for Oshawa stated that it was a mistake. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the telephone code numbers are distributed on our desks here in the House of Commons. The code of the member for Oshawa had become a public utility in Abitibi among the Trudels, the Houles and Lemires, all so-called honest workers of the socialist party.

Following my statement, they tried to stifle the matter by cancelling the code of the member for Oshawa. Mr. Speaker, the member for Oshawa, the leader of the socialist party does not have to give explanations to the medias for the illegal use of his telephone code but to the House of Commons. This is the forum where he has to prove his honesty, if any!

TRADE

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday leaders of the women's movement from across Canada kicked off a campaign to oppose the free trade agreement. Canadian women are gathering momentum each day to protest a deal that has been hidden from the Canadian public in page after page of Conservative rhetoric.

The debate over free trade is not about economies of scale or trade revenue. It is really a debate about how we live in Canada and what makes life good here. It is about moral and social standards and about how much we are willing to sacrifice in the name of economic principles.

Everyone seems to agree that women, who make up 65 per cent of the textile industry and 80 per cent of the service industry labour force, will be big losers under free trade. Women are facing massive job losses as well as threats to the existence of essential social programs like maternity leave, child care, pension plans and employment equity.

Faced with these very real threats under free trade, the Government continues to hide behind rhetoric and continues to cut spending on job training that would help women adjust to the disaster they are facing. I support the women's campaign against the free trade deal and I urge the Government to listen to their message. I urge the Government to reconsider this—

THE CONSTITUTION

PROTECTION OF MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, a fundamental purpose of the Constitution of Canada is to protect the basic rights of all Canadians including aboriginal peoples, English-speaking and French-speaking minorities and religious, ethnic and other minority groups.

• (1410)

The 1987 accord states that the existence of English-speaking Canadians present in Quebec constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada. I believe it is in the national interest that the language rights of the English and French-speaking minorities in Canada be respected and protected in a spirit of tolerance, civility, amity and generosity. Bill C-72, the Officials Languages Act, is a step in the right direction.

It is increasingly apparent that current legislation in Quebec restricts the English-speaking minority commercially, socially, educationally and in the workplace. I invite the Government and the Quebec National Assembly to take action as expeditiously as possible, each within its own jurisdiction, to effectively protect the rights of the English-speaking minority in that province.

TAXATION

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN PROVINCIAL SALES TAXES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks Canadians from coast to coast have been struggling late into the night with the annual ritual of filling out their income tax returns. They have been shocked at just how much income tax they have been forced to pay. Most Canadians pay thousands upon thousands of dollars. Yet there are reports that Ontario Minister of Finance Robert Nixon was recently heard to exclaim: "It is still not enough. We want more. We have to make them pay more taxes!"

It was reported that Mr. Nixon paced back and forth grumbling to himself that he wanted to raise taxes again, just like the Tories in Ottawa. "Anything they can do I can do better", he said as he yelled at his bureaucrats to take action.

After hours of wringing his hands and wrestling with the problem, he was heard to cry: "Eureka, we will raise sales taxes just like the Tories!". After it was pointed out to him that sales taxes fell hardest on the poor, he scoffed: "I am not interested in fairness. I am a Liberal. It is money that I want."

The moral of the story is that when it comes to taxes, Robert Nixon is like Michael Wilson. There is no difference. Given the chance, they will both soak middle and low-income earners to provide tax loopholes for their wealthy friends on Bay Street.

JUSTICE

VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIME—LACK OF CONFIDENCE IN PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard of an organization called Victims of Violence? Some may disagree with their point of view but they always make a lot of sense to me and, I suspect, to the 63 per cent of Canadians who have lost confidence in our criminal justice system. The Victims of Violence wrote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on February 23, 1988, and I quote:

> Hardly a day goes by without a news report of violent crime being committed somewhere in Canada by a repeat offender out on some form of early release. In the last eight months alone we are aware of at least seven murders committed by murderers who had been released by the National Parole Board.
> Ole Instrup keeps letting them out on parole . . . There have been more repeat murders by murderers out on parole since he took office than in all the years Bill Outerbridge served as Chairman.

Canadians who have lost confidence in our criminal justice system, the Victims of Violence, and myself, all look forward to the Prime Minister's reply.

FINANCE

REINSTATEMENT OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARES AND DEPLETION ALLOWANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) continues to deny to those resource producing areas of our country reinstatement of flow-through shares and earned depletion allowance. Many communities gathered here in Ottawa earlier this week to protest the cutting off of this program, communities like Elliot Lake, which passed a resolution calling for the reinstatement of this program, and communities like Wawa in northern Ontario. Other communities like the Town of Haileybury are calling on the Government to reinstate this program.

The Government could show its concern and interest in regional development, in assisting the resource producing parts of our country, by fully reinstating this program and the 133 per cent earned depletion allowance with flow-through shares.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUPPORT FOR INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, I was pleased to be part of a recent fact finding mission to Jordan, Egypt and Israel. It was an intense and emotionally charged experience. We met political leaders and soldiers on all sides. We spoke with working people, refugees and children. We visited hospitals and churches. We came away with a feeling that the conflict, although as serious and tragic as any, can be resolved if only the parties could sit down and negotiate their differences in good faith.

Upon returning to my constituency I had the opportunity to report my findings to the Jewish Federation of Edmonton, the Canadian-Arab Friendship Association and the Palestinian Action Committee. Each community leader joins me in urging the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to support an international conference which will begin to build trust, confidence and peace between the Israelis and the Palestinians.

HUMAN RIGHTS

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL—HUMAN RIGHTS NOW

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, today, Amnesty International groups and supporters in over 150 countries and territories around the world are launching the biggest and most ambitious campaign for the promotion of human rights ever undertaken by their movement. It is a difficult but essential task for, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) recently said, human rights know no frontiers.

I am particularly impressed by the title Amnesty International has chosen: "Human Rights Now". The word "now" recognizes that action deferred means justice delayed. It injects a measure of urgency into a situation which cannot be allowed to continue, as we know that torture has been reported recently in more than 60 nations, and prisoners of conscience are held in nearly half the countries of the world.

Today, with the launching of this human rights campaign, Amnesty International is taking an important step toward the goal of universal respect for human rights.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

LEVEL OF FOREIGN AID TO THIRD WORLD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the Government's approach to human rights both here in Canada and abroad.

Today the Minister for External Relations, in a very extravagant booklet, announced that Canada will freeze the level of foreign aid in spite of its commitment that it would increase that aid. Will the Minister explain why the Government has abandoned its commitment on aid to the Third World?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to tell my hon. colleague and all Hon. Members about the document tabled today which constitutes a comprehensive review of our assistance program. This is the first such review in 13 years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Government of Canada, in consultation with Canadians and with the assistance of the standing committees of this House, has been able to develop an assistance policy which truly meets the needs of the Third World. I believe that this is the purpose of our new strategy and I am very proud of it.

GRANTING OF SUBSIDY TO SENEGAL—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in spite of her commitments to this country and this Government contained in the statement made today by the Hon. Minister, she has announced a freeze on foreign aid.

In her report to the House, the Minister for External Relations also stated today that, in the future, Canada would take into account the human rights record of Third World countries before granting them assistance.

This morning, the Ottawa Citizen announced a subsidy for Senegal. Yet, the leader of the opposition in that country is still in prison. Will the Government respect the commitments made this morning by the Minister and take the necessary action as concerns this subsidy to Senegal?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be able to tell the House that we have undertaken to maintain the level of expenditure for our assistance projects at 0.5 per cent of the Gross National Product until the beginning of the next decade.

The Right Hon. Member recently made a speech in which he promised on behalf of his Party to increase Canadian assistance budgets by 50 per cent, or up to 0.7 per cent of the GNP. This is another miscalculation by the Leader of the Opposition as we have now reached the level of 0.5 per cent and as a 50 per cent increase would be less than what our Government has planned to do until the next program. The Right Hon. Member should know that we have made a serious commitment and that we are keeping it. As concerns our assistance program to Senegal, I should point out that, as in the case of all Third World countries, our assistance programs meet the needs of the population. Indeed the main purpose of our new policy is to meet the basic assistance needs of the people in Third World countries.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the subsidy to Senegal violates the commitment made by the Minister in her document this morning. As for her mathematics, I suggest she should go back to school—

Some Hon. Members: —to grade school.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —to grade school!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LETTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I again address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning human rights right here at home. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled a letter that he had written to all provincial Premiers counselling them not to meet with members of certain Sikh organizations in Canada because "Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities". I believe those were the Minister's words.

Will the Minister explain to the House why he has chosen to condemn and boycott all members of these organizations for the alleged actions of a few? If he has any evidence backing up his letter, would he be prepared to table that evidence in the House of Commons so that we could judge the appropriateness of that letter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question. The letter which, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition noted, was tabled yesterday was very specific. This House knows that the vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin are first-class Canadian citizens trying to raise their families in peace and trying to raise their families in freedom.

I specifically named three organizations, organizations which exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state. Some of the members of those organizations seek legitimacy in Canada by identifying themselves with prominent Canadians and some of them have engaged in or promote violence in Canada and elsewhere. Those are activities which should not appear to be condoned by Canadian authorities.

As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition well knows, some members of the Canadian Sikh community do not feel free to speak on these matters. The Government has a duty to help Canadians live their lives in peace and in freedom. We are going to do that.

I would urge Members of this House and organizations outside of this House not to be drawn inadvertently into support of activities which threaten the peace and the freedom of Canadians, including particularly the peace and the freedom of that vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin who seek to live in those circumstances.

ALLEGED RACIAL INTOLERANCE AND TENSIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it, too, is with regard to the letter that he sent to only some Premiers urging the boycott of these three organizations.

In his letter to Premier Peterson, for instance, he also justifies the boycott by writing:

> I would appreciate your cooperation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.

Can the Minister justify why the Government's position on a foreign issue, which is sovereign to the citizens of India, is negatively impacting domestic policy at home whereby the rights of Canadian citizens to participate in the community and political life of Canada are being denied?

If the Minister cannot legitimately justify his actions, why does he not do the honourable thing and withdraw and apologize for his offensive declarations which have aggravated racial intolerance and racial tensions in this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was an implicit question as to why the letter went to only some Premiers. It went to Premiers who we thought, either personally or in their government capacity, might be invited to attend and lend their authority inadvertently to organizations of this kind.

Certainly I would extend my counsel, not only to all Premiers but to all Members of this House. I repeat, as I have just said to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, that there are activities engaged in by some members of some of these organizations which should not carry with them the authority of public office holders in this country.

I am not issuing any edicts to anyone. I am not telling Premiers or Members of Parliament that they cannot attend certain organizations. However, I have a duty to Canadians, as has the Government, to promote public order in the country. We intend to carry out that responsibility.

I sincerely hope that Members of the House of Commons who understand the sensitivity of this issue, and who understand also the commitment to Canadian values of the vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin, would help us in encouraging peace and freedom in this country.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, we all condemn violence and terrorism, but that does not give you open season and licence to smear the reputation of a collectivity, which is what you did.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question and put it properly.

POSITION OF INDIAN GOVERNMENT—ALLEGED DISCREPANCY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Minister who also wrote in his letter to Premier Peterson the following:

> The government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.

Given that the Indian High Commissioner in Ottawa has contradicted the Minister and denied that they ever requested such a boycott, can the Minister explain this serious discrepancy? Even if the boycott was asked for by the Indian Government, since when should the interests of a foreign government be allowed to undermine the rights of our own citizens here in our own land?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they should not be and they are not. The Hon. Member is distorting, I am sure inadvertently, what was said by the High Commissioner. Certainly the High Commissioner did not ask me to write the letter.

Mr. Marchi: Who did?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I took that decision for Canadian reasons as a Canadian Minister with regard to Canadian values of peace and security in this country. I do not want to make this a partisan matter and I am sure that no Member of good will would want to make this a partisan matter.

I was very impressed by the response of the Liberal Premier of Ontario to my request. He understood what I was seeking to do and understood my responsibility to do it. I hope that there will be a similar understanding of the sensitivity of this issue and of the importance of our respecting the situation of the vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SEIZURE OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO ANTI-APARTHEID GROUPS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last May the Prime Minister of South Africa announced his government's intention to take action aimed at stopping outsiders, from whatever source, from aiding even non-violent anti-apartheid groups within South Africa.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs will know, two days ago that Government in South Africa introduced repressive legislation aimed at carrying out this intent which that Government announced last May. The Government of South Africa will now have the authority to seize any such funds coming in to, I repeat, even peaceful groups within South Africa.

Is this not the most blatant illustration of the present South African Government's total unwillingness to co-operate with the most open, democratic and, one would have thought, harmless actions by peaceful governments such as Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take the matter seriously, as I know the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party and his Party do. I spoke on the matter yesterday in a statement, to which there was a very measured response by the spokesman of his Party.

I remind the Member and the House that that which is before the Parliament of South Africa is a Bill—it is not yet a law. We are studying the detail of that Bill to see what effect it will have upon Canada. We are naturally encouraging the Government of South Africa, with whatever authority we have, that that Bill not go forward.

I indicated yesterday that we are also vigorously seeking any means open to us which can help us to help the victims of apartheid in that country to oppose that legislation or other means. I am not sure what those openings are, but we are looking for them and if the Bill is passed or other measures are taken we intend to aid the victims of apartheid in fighting them.

IMPOSITION OF COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I read the serious statement which the Minister made in the House yesterday in which he gave reasons for maintaining the current level of diplomatic relations with South Africa. He also commented on his current view about comprehensive economic sanctions. In both cases he talked about the need for Canada to be able to maintain an openness to provide such financial assistance to peaceful groups within South Africa.

If, as the Minister said in his answer this afternoon, the Government of Canada, in its contacts with South Africa now, does ascertain that the Government of South Africa indeed plans to go ahead with this legislation and will, in effect, cut off the peaceful channelling of money into that country which we have accomplished, will the Government of Canada then be prepared to impose, by ourselves, comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the only answer I can give the Hon. Member is that we would certainly have to consider that and certainly will. I do not want to anticipate events that have not occurred. It is for good reason that we have a practice against answering hypothetical questions in the House.

However, I want there to be no question about our seriousness. One of the reasons that I and the Prime Minister repeat and underline the commitment the Prime Minister made on behalf of this country in the United Nations is that it is very important that South Africa and others know the bottom line of Canada, and if we have no options other than to suspend our diplomatic and economic relations with South Africa, then we will exercise that option.

[Translation]

REQUEST AS TO WHEN COMPREHENSIVE SANCTIONS WILL BE IMPOSED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the South African Government is becoming increasingly anti-democratic, not the opposite. And if now is not the time to impose comprehensive economic sanctions, when, I am asking the Minister, will that time come?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a good question, but one which cannot be answered today. As I said yesterday in the House, there are positive actions which Canada can now take in South Africa to help the victims and opponents of apartheid. We want to keep on doing what we can. If and when we are no longer able to exert a positive influence, we will have to use other available options and, in those circumstances, end our economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa.

However, I think that it would now be preferable to try and influence the situation by having diplomats there.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT TRAINING PROGRAMS—ECONOMIC COUNCIL RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Economic Council said that in recent years the number of trade sensitive industries in Canada has been increasing with the result that adjustment due to job turnover has also been increasing. It went on to say that these adjustment problems have been more acute with older workers, workers with low education and workers from remote small communities.

In these circumstances, why has the Government cut employment and training programs by over 30 per cent since 1984, with the recent Estimates proposing further cuts of 11 per cent for next year? Yesterday the Economic Council recommended the strengthening of adjustment and training programs. Why is the Minister and the Government ignoring that advice?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to compare our figures on jobs with those of the Hon. member and his government years ago. I believe that Canadians want jobs. We have created many jobs. I do not have to give any numbers because I am sure my friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grace is well aware of them. We will continue to deal with that issue.

At the same time I believe that the Canadian Jobs Strategy provides many ways to deal with the problems he raises.

We are conscious of the change in the labour force and the change in employment. However, again, I believe we have provided the answers that Canadians want.

INCREASED TRAINING AND ADJUSTMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question. If he wants to compare the records and jobs, let him do it with the pre-recession period of 1970 to 1975—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Allmand: A Gallup Poll published last week found that Canadians still consider unemployment as their greatest concern. Yesterday that was confirmed by the Economic Council when it said that older workers, low educated workers and workers from remote small regions were the hardest hit and had the greatest difficulty in adjusting to unemployment. The Council clearly recommended that we should strengthen training and adjustment programs. What is the Minister's answer to those recommendations?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is exactly what I said before. If you look at the percentage of the unemployment rate in remote communities in all the provinces of this country, it is down compared to what it was three or four years ago. The Liberal Party would like us to raise a lot of issues and answer them with a lot of programs. The problem is that three or four years ago they had job creation programs but had unemployment rates too.

BANK OF CANADA

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DIRECT THE BANK TO REDUCE THE PRIME RATE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns interest rates in Canada. During the past two months, the value of the Canadian dollar increased by 2.5 cents against the U.S. dollar, essentially because of the anti-inflationary monetary policies of the Bank of Canada and the resulting high interest rates. In view of the economic slowdown predicted for 1988 and of the adverse effects on our competitiveness and our exports of a stronger Canadian dollar, is the Minister now ready to instruct the Bank of Canada to take whatever measures are needed to reduce interest rates in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, our economy is indeed very strong now. I think our economic performance in the fourth trimester of 1987 was very good and even better than what most observers predicted before the results were known. I believe the policies of the Governor of the Bank of Canada reflect his understanding of the performance of the Canadian economy. I personally agree with these policies.

CANADA-U.S. INTEREST RATES—PROPOSED DECREASE IN DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am interested to know that the Minister of Finance supports the policy of the Bank of Canada, which is to bring inflation to zero whatever the consequences on unemployment, particularly in the regions of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Minister saying that an 8 per cent unemployment rate, which his forecasts say will rise during 1988, is acceptable, or is the Minister prepared to step in in order to bring down the differential in interest rates of 1.5 per cent between Canada and the United States to ensure that we can continue to have economic growth in all regions of Canada, not just southern Ontario?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I will have to remind the Hon. Member again that unemployment came down in every province of this country during 1987.

The Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grace says "Big deal".

Mr. Allmand: 7.5 per cent.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): During his term of office when he was minister of employment, the rate of unemployment increased in every province of the country. There is the big deal for the Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grace.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE BAND LAND CLAIM

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the longstanding Lubicon land dispute. Will the Minister confirm the article in today's Edmonton Journal which states that the province has agreed to transfer 25.4 square miles to the Lubicon Band? If he can confirm that, will he tell us what implications that has on the ongoing negotiations with the band?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest on behalf of his constituents. I can confirm that yesterday Alberta and the Government of Canada reached an agreement in principle on the transfer of 25.4 square miles to settle an outstanding claim.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

Mr. McKnight: The Province of Alberta has also offered to have the boundaries drawn so it would include the point of land on which the Lubicon Band wish to establish its community. Chief Ominayak is meeting with Premier Getty tomorrow. I hope the discussions that take place will assist in fulfilling outstanding commitments so there can be a just settlement.

We intend to enter into negotiations as soon as the Lubicon wish, on non-land issues such as housing, infrastructure, a hospital, those infrastructures which are necessary to establish the community. I hope in the weeks and months to come we can have ongoing negotiations and reach a just and negotiated settlement.

COMMUNICATIONS

TRANSFER OF BUDGET FUNDS FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE TO EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. We learned yesterday, with the tabling of the Supplementary Estimates, that the Government has over-spent its propaganda budget for the trade deal with the United States by close to $4 million. At the same time the Economic Council is saying we need to substantially enrich programs to help Canadian workers, but the Government does not seem to be able to find the money to do that.

As a gesture in the right direction, would the Minister cancel the bloated budget the Government has to try to sell its trade deal, to put out its own version of the National Enquirer in the Safeway stores across Canada, and give the money to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who does not have the ability to get the money himself for the needed programs to help workers in this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's question is quite timely. As we have said before in the House, the extra funds were needed because we had to issue extra publications before and after October. We had to print additional publications in December when the final text was agreed upon.

I think the Hon. Member himself in the past has urged this kind of information. I can quote from Hansard on September 24 of last year when the Hon. Member, when calling for an emergency debate on free trade said, "It is very important that information be shared with Canadians". We agree entirely and that is what we have done.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think I would just like to remind the Minister that there is a difference between information and propaganda. We are fully in favour of the first, but the Government does not know the difference between that and the latter.

CANCELLATION AND RECONSTITUTION OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to either of these two inept Ministers. The Economic Council clearly recommended that there be major enrichment of the adjustment programs, yet the Government has cancelled programs like the Labour Adjustment Program that was providing that service. Instead, the Government has introduced a temporary short-term advisory council that does not even have representation from the major labour groups of Canada to help plan adjustment.

Should that advisory council not be cancelled and reconstituted as an independent agency with proper powers to do the necessary studies and to undertake the necessary programs to help Canadian workers, doing so in full consultation with the labour groups of this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians can bestow their confidence in the council that has been established. It represents some of the best brains in this field to advise the Government. We look forward to its reports. I again point out that most of the adjustment will be upward. It will be people moving from jobs in traditional industries into the new growing industries because new jobs are at the heart of the free trade agreement.

I do want to comment on the Member's use of the word "propaganda" because at two o'clock today we did release the impact study on agriculture. It contains such information as the current U.S. and Canadian tariffs on grains and oilseeds, which is all good information, and it discusses the potential markets—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

INTEREST RATES—DOLLAR VALUE—EFFECT ON EXPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who ought to know that over the past year, farmers in my part of the country who export grains, beef and pork, because of the changes to the Canadian dollar, have watched the value of their products decrease by 11 per cent, and have watched the costs of borrowing money go up about 1.25 per cent over the past year. During the course of the Minister's administration they have also watched the value of their lands drop by about 50 per cent. Since these are all very much deflationary values and deflationary results, when will the Minister be satisfied that he has deflated agriculture enough?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): In spite of the figures which have just been quoted, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that our Government has responded to the difficulties experienced by our Canadian farmers over the past few years by increasing by 400 per cent the investments which have ended up in the Canadian farmers' pockets, especially in his region. We were aware of the problems and we came to the conclusion that in spite of the significant reduction in interest rates—they were between 4 and 5 per cent lower than those charged during the darkest hours of the previous Liberal Government—we had to inject enormous amounts, thus making it possible for Canadian farmers to finally recognize that this is indeed a Government which meets the needs of Canadian farmers.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely!

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I guess I let the word "agriculture" slip out. I had intended the question for the Minister of Finance.

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES FOR FCC LOANS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Since the Minister in charge of agriculture has answered my first question, I wonder if he could explain how 12.25 per cent interest at the Farm Credit Corporation, which is not being taken up by farmers—the allocation is not being used—is helping the farmers when they can go to the banks and get credit for much less even though the bank rate has been going up in the last year? How is that helping farmers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Farm Producer Assistance Program which we announced in December 1987 and which provide for over $3 billion in assistance, including several additional hundreds of millions of dollars for the Farm Credit Corporation, is to help farmers. The interest rates you are talking about are greatly lower than those we experienced during these darkest years which no Canadian wants to live through again.

ALLEGED PATRONAGE—LEGAL FEES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Jean Sirois who received $400,000 in legal work in addition to his juicy political patronage appointment. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House why the former Minister of Supply and Services gave Mr. Jean Sirois, according to media reports, a $195,000 contract to assist in an eight-year old legal case which was ready for trial? Given that Government lawyers refused to state how much work he actually did on the job, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us now when the Government will put an end to this kind of sordid political patronage?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite fully understand what the Hon. Member is driving at. The fact is that legal agents are hired by the Government on a number of files; outside counsel. There is in fact a standard procedure under which all of this is done. When the bills are submitted, they are submitted on the basis of work done on an hourly basis. They are taxed or, to put it in layman's terms, they are scrutinized by the Department and then paid by the client Department. It is important to understand that legal agents perform work and services on behalf of the Government of Canada and that they are paid for services rendered.

• (1450)

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that is not a very good answer. Obviously, the Government had its legal counsel already for that case, and that was added in at the last minute.

JEAN SIROIS AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question this time for the Deputy Prime Minister: When asked about the need to hire Jean Sirois and to pay him $195 000, Civil Servant Fred Sparling stated: It was the Minister's decision. Is this not a case of shameful patronage? Is the Government now prepared to table in the House the list of all the contracts awarded and all the amounts paid to Jean Sirois, so that we can put an end to all this sordid affair once and for all?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sparling is responsible for the Canada Business Corporations Act. The Javelin file has been around for literally decades. When the new Government came into power we were interested in and informed about it, trying to bring the matter to a conclusion. Mr. Sirois was added as co-counsel acting in this very complex case. I understand it has been going on for years and years.

The amount of legal fees that have been collected over the years on this matter are shocking to me as a non-lawyer. I think I am in the wrong profession.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I understand that, basically, the legal work has been completed. It will be going before the court soon. Hopefully, the Javelin case can be put to bed after the last two decades or so.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Two years ago this week the then Minister of Justice promised to take "whatever measures are necessary" to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination in relation to all matters within federal jurisdiction. In view of the fact that we do not choose to be gay or lesbian and are not seeking special rights, merely the right to live openly and in dignity without fear of losing our jobs, our homes or being subjected to violence, I want to ask the Minister this. Does he stand by the promise that was made by his predecessor as Minister of Justice? If so, when will he finally move to make equality a reality for Canadian gays and lesbians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member who has had a long interest in the matter of human rights and has in fact been vocal in that regard.

Of course I stand by the declaration made on behalf of the Government with respect to the response to the parliamentary committee. I have, with my colleagues, been giving the matter very serious consideration on the wide range of issues that were raised. We continue to consult with respect to this matter.

It is my hope that at an appropriate time we will be able to bring forward a statement with respect to this matter that will address all of the issues contained in the report.

APPEAL FOR ENTRENCHMENT IN THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS PROHIBITION OF DICRIMINATION AGAINST HOMOSEXUALS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Twelve years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government amended the Quebec Charter of Rights to prohibit all discrimination based on sexual orientation. Today, the Tory Government refuses to keep its promise to amend the Federal legislation in the same direction. Why does the Minister of Justice accept to maintain such an intolerable situation which deprives both gays and lesbians in Canada, and especially in Quebec, of equality and justice? Why?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, since the supplementary question was very similar to the first question, I want to reiterate the fact that in the course of its consideration of the matter of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms the parliamentary committee covered a wide range of matters and a wide range of recommendations, all of which were responded to in principle. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms does have meaning. Certainly at the federal level we are examining the various options that are available to us to implement those items that were indicated in the response of my predecessor.

We believe that the Charter of Rights does serve an important function and role. We intend to take such steps as are appropriate with respect to the implementation in a legislative way of those matters within our jurisdiction.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

IMPACT OF DECENTRALIZATION OF CIDA ON THIRD WORLD

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations. As a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade that reviewed Canada's official development assistance last year, I welcome the Minister's positive response in the form of a strategy which projects into the next century. Will the Minister tell the House how the decentralization of CIDA as outlined this morning will impact on the controversial issue of more effective aid delivery in Third World countries?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): I wish to thank my colleague for his question which gives me the opportunity to elaborate on one aspect of this new strategy. I am aware of the important role played by my colleague in this regard in his capacity as member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

Decentralization means more people in the field to plan our aid projects better. It will also allow for a simplification of decision-making on aid projects.

The other important factor, Mr. Speaker, is that decentralization will allow us to involve the very people we want to help in the development of our programs and in that sense involve them in their own development.

There are other measures which come to mind, but simply stated, this is what decentralization will bring about.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH ON IMPACT OF ACID RAIN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. This year's budget for Environment Canada goes up by 3.5 per cent compared to a 30 per cent increase for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; a 24 per cent increase for Agriculture; and an 11 per cent increase for Communications. Considering the pitiful performance on the part of the Minister in securing adequate funds for his own Department I would like to ask him this. Does he have any funds left for scientists and economists in his Department to examine the impact of acid rain pollution on the Canadian environment so as to prepare a total cost to be submitted at the next summit when the Prime Minister meets with President Reagan in Washington?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport has lately been making a career of misrepresentation with respect to the budget of Environment Canada. He goes across the country and repeats these nonsensical statements, in committee and on the floor of the House of Commons, that the Government of which I am a part has slashed my Budget in environmental expenditures across the board. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The budget of Environment Canada this year and last year is higher than it has ever been since the Department was formed in 1971, including when the Hon. Member was Minister. That is a fact.

What is more, we are spending more money outside Environment Canada but within the federal Government under environmental matters than has ever before been the case.

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Minister may be good in rhetoric but he is weak in arithmetic.

RESEARCH INTO THE EFFECT OF ACID RAIN ON HEALTH

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last fall the Minister indicated in Question Period that there was not adequate information available to launch a study on acid rain and health. In light of the study that was published a few days ago linking acid rain and cancer of the colon in the northeast of the United States and eastern Canada, is he now prepared to launch a study since his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, is broke anyway?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the Minister of the Environment is broke. The Minister of the Environment is richer than any of his predecessors have been, including the Hon. Member.

In fact, quite apart from the budget of my own Department, which again is higher than it has ever been since 1971, the Government of Canada is spending on environmental matters within the total system outside my Department, for example, $106 million to establish a national park in South Moresby, 50 per cent of which is coming from the budget of other Ministers, among them western diversification and DRIE; we have undertaken a $37 million clean up of the Sydney tar ponds in Cape Breton, the biggest single industrial dump site cleanup in the history of Canada, the second biggest in the history of North America, from the budget of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

IMMIGRATION

DEFECTION OF ATHLETES IN CALGARY—ALLEGED DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister has acknowledged publicly, two athletes at the Calgary Olympics have defected from their teams, and they have both asked for Canada's protection against being returned to their countries, one to communist Romania, the other to fascist Chile.

Will the Minister explain to this House why he decided that the Romanian will likely be accepted next week, but the Chilean must wait, perhaps for months, without permission to earn a living, and without the Minister's assurance of a favourable decision. Is this not a continuation of the bias of 40 years ago that excluded suspected communists, but brought well known Nazis into Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the first case mentioned by the Hon. Member, there has been a policy set up in this country since 1968 which refers to what we call East European countries. This policy makes it possible to deal very swiftly with those cases.

Mr. Broadbent: That's the point.

Mr. Bouchard: There is a richness in this country from those people who have come from those countries and who are Canadians today. I think my friend would agree with me.

I would like to tell the Member for Oshawa that last year we had 1,600 refugee claimants. Chile was one of the countries from which we accepted the most refugees in Canada, and we will continue.

I wish to say that Canada has one of the best performances of all countries in the world in receiving Chileans.

Mr. Broadbent: What's that got to do with the question?

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question.

EXPEDITED TREATMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the decision to take a person out of the refugee stream and give him special quick treatment, as in the case of the Romanian, was a decision of the Minister, will the Minister explain why he will not do the same for a Chilean who is in Canada under the same circumstances and has the same reason to fear return to Chile?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I have been very clear on that. There has been for 20 years a policy allowing people coming from East European countries to submit their case. That policy which I believe has been followed normally by the previous government and that we follow today allows those people to have their case processed rapidly. But again the cases of Chileans that have been submitted and considered as refugee cases have also been processed normally. Therefore, I do not see why my hon. friend suggests there is a double standard in this case.

STATE OF EMERGENCY IN SENEGAL—REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEND NOTE OF PROTEST TO SENEGALESE AUTHORITIES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who is no doubt aware that President Diouf of Senegal has declared a state of emergency and arrested his political opponents.

Is the Minister prepared to send a note of protest to Senegalese authorities or at the very least to ask for the release of the chief opponent of President Diouf, Mr. Abdoulaye Wade, as well as of the two leaders of the Senegalese democratic party who have been jailed for denouncing the elections as a fraud and a sham?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I always take seriously the Hon. Member's representations. I am not certain of all the circumstances involved but I will enquire. If it is appropriate for Canada to take such action, I will do it. Otherwise I will inform the Hon. Member of my decision.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us the usual statement of government business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, today is an allotted day. Tomorrow will also be an allotted day. On Monday, we will resume second reading debate on Bill C-72, and continue that through Tuesday, if the debate does not wrap up on Monday. The back-up Bill for Bill C-72 will be Bill C-113, the Western Economic Diversification Act. Wednesday and Thursday will be allotted days. As far as legislation for Friday is concerned, we are looking at the possibility of either Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, and/or Bill C-107, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

That this House notes that the flow-through share tax provision has been instrumental in revitalizing mining communities and regions across Canada, and consequently urges that the initial benefit level of this provision not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

And the amendment of Mr. Garneau:

That the motion be amended by adding after the second "that" the words:

"because of the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance" and adding after the second "provision" the words:

"and, specifically, the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the oral question period the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) had moved an amendment to the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Chair has decided that the amendment is in order.

[English]

The debate will therefore continue on the amendment, with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to participate in today's debate sponsored by the New Democratic Party. It is appropriate to remind Members what we are debating today. The motion is as follows:

That this House notes that the flow-through share tax provision has been instrumental in revitalizing mining communities and regions across Canada, and consequently urges that the initial benefit level of this provision not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

Without going into the details of the flow-through tax mechanism suffice it to say that this mechanism is recognized by miners, those living in mining communities, and those serving the mining industry in all parts of Canada, as being one of the very few tax expenditure programs that makes sense.

I know I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps it would be worth-while reminding some others, that some time ago the New Democratic Party conducted what it called Tax Probe '86. One of the recommendations offered by Tax Probe is that the Government ensure that corporate tax expenditures aimed at investment and job creation be overhauled to make sure that the tax benefits conferred are gained only on the basis of demonstrated performance. Flow-through shares are an example of a tax incentive that has, in the main, worked. This motion recognizes that that particular tax program has resulted in considerable benefits accruing to Canadians, particularly in the regions of Canada. This motion is an effort to improve the nature of those flow-through shares by targeting them more closely to the small and medium-sized companies that are almost by definition 100 per cent Canadian-owned.

Mr. Fulton: What was that report?

Mr. Riis: My friend, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), asks, "What was that report?" Tax Probe '86 is a report on the tax system prepared by the New Democratic Party. It identified this particular provision as one of the tax provisions that makes a great deal of sense, particularly when one considers the development and exploration activity that has occurred in places like northern British Columbia, which is one of the highest mineralized zones in all of Canada, throughout the Yukon, across the territories, the entire northern parts of the Prairies, northern Ontario, Quebec, and including the Atlantic provinces.

There is not a region in this country that is not affected by the mining industry. From downtown Toronto to the smallest and most isolated northern community the effect of the mining industry is felt either directly or indirectly. When one considers the tens of thousands of people employed by the mining industry, the billions of dollars of business activity generated on an annual basis from this industry, the tremendous amount of tax revenues that accrue to various levels of Government from the industry, as well as the tremendous trade benefits that accrue, for Canada this is a major industry, and of particular interest in the regions of Canada.

We all recognize that the economic prosperity that has occurred in pockets of southern Ontario has not necessarily occurred in other parts of Canada. I remember back in 1986 when the Government pointed out that 95 per cent of all jobs created that year were created within 100 miles of the CN Tower in downtown Toronto. This meant that for most of Canada no jobs were created in 1986 in terms of net gain. Whether it is the Yukon, the Prince Rupert area, across the Kootenay regions of British Columbia, the northern part of Manitoba, or the northern part of Ontario, we are talking about single industry towns and communities which depend either exclusively or largely on the mining industry.

We recognize that the mining industry is a cyclical industry which is vulnerable to the international market-place and, consequently, vulnerable to cyclical trends in the market. We know about the boom and bust situation which exists in the industry. The flow-through mechanism was a method whereby this benefit could be spread over the years so that a net financial gain was always accruing to areas which happened to be nearby or within mineralized zones of the country.

Earlier today I had an opportunity to speak with a number of brokers in Kamloops, representatives of the B.C. Mining Association, representatives of the local chamber of commerce, presidents of some exploration companies, as well as some prospectors themselves. These individuals brought home very clearly that the particular flow-through share mechanism was absolutely necessary if we hoped to maintain present levels of exploration in these areas, and particularly if we hoped to see any increase in these levels.

In my own constituency literally hundreds of people have been employed in the last few months. They were previously unemployed, but they are now out in the field staking claims, trenching, drilling, and carrying out all other activities associated with mining exploration, in the hopes of identifying an appropriate ore body and establishing a full mine one day.

When we talk about the benefits of the flow-through mechanism we have a number of supporters. It is not only the New Democratic Party which feels that this initiative must be maintained. I refer, for example, to the White Paper on tax reform, sponsored by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. After analysing the particular program, the committee wrote a report, and I would like to refer to the section dealing with the flow-through share mechanism. I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the committee heard from mining associations, prospectors, developers, brokers, and corporations in the mining industry—a whole host of witnesses.

The committee indicated that a study done by the Association of Prospectors of Quebec found that the flow-through mechanism and related incentives for the mining sector contributed to the realization of 71 public share issues in 1985, of which 38 were from junior companies and 33 were from flow-through shares, and resulted in 25 discoveries that in future may generate profits, 66,000 jobs, $2.8 billion of value added, and $300 million of net income for federal and provincial Governments. This was simply one witness indicating what had happened in one part of Canada as a result of the flow-through mechanism.

Mr. Fulton: Who is opposing these flow-through shares?

Mr. Riis: I do not know if you heard the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), Mr. Speaker, but he asks: "Who is opposing these flow-through shares?" Obviously the finance committee found that its witnesses thought that it was an excellent idea, and I will indicate in a moment others who thought that it was an excellent idea. As I look around the Chamber I can only assume, since we will be having a vote later, that it must be the Conservatives who oppose it. I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made clear in his presentation that he was against it, but I also know that there are members in the Conservative caucus—and I would like to think that it is the overwhelming majority—who actually believe in this principle. Whether they have the courage of their conviction will be seen later this afternoon when we get to the vote.

Another group representing federal and provincial organizations formed a subcommittee on mineral taxation and gave a report to the Government in which it indicated that the junior mining sector in particular would be hurt by tax reform changes affecting flow-through shares. It feared that a reduction in exploration could lead to a serious decline in economic activity in remote regions. That joint federal-provincial group of organizations made clear in its recommendations that to tamper with the flow-through share mechanism would cause serious problems in the country.

We could also look to what the Mining Association of Canada had to say. For example, it indicated that large amounts of funds had been raised for exploration in Canada through the medium of flow-through equity share financing, and that the device had been particularly significant in giving access to capital to junior mining companies as distinct from senior or producing mining companies, although a number of senior companies not in a taxable position had also found the device useful. The individuals representing the Mining Association of Canada indicated clearly that the mechanism played a very, important role in their development.

The February 15 edition of the Northern Miner contained a very interesting article. It reminded us of the recently formed save flow-through committee representing tens of thousands of people involved in the mining industry across Canada, from Labrador to Vancouver Island and up to the northern tips of the Yukon and the territories. Thousands and thousands of Canadians representing the mining industry have come together in a desperate move to try to bring the Government to its senses, to try to make it understand that if it continues with its plans to gut the flow-through share mechanism it will have a severely negative impact on these communities in Canada. They pointed out that in 1987 alone more than $900 million in flow-through money was raised to assist the mining communities and mining areas of Canada through exploration activity.

I do not have the time to refer to every area and to indicate why this particular tax provision was so important for the future of the areas they represent, virtually every major mining area of the country. I wish I had the time to do so because they pointed out the tens of thousands of new claims as a result of activities over the last few years and the hundreds of millions of dollars in new mines and new mining properties that have been developed. It is really tremendous.

I have looked at the briefs presented to Members of Parliament which point out that not only do the mining industry and the miners involved benefit directly. However, if we look at the Northern Miner magazine, we see pages and pages of related industries attached directly to the program.

Mr. Fulton: It sounds like a ripple effect.

Mr. Riis: It has a real ripple effect. I suppose we could see the flow-through share mechanism as being the pebble we would drop into the water and, as the ripple effect reverberates throughout the economy, it would incorporate people who make tents, people who manufacture mining exploration equipment, motel and hotel owners, grocery wholesalers and retailers—

Mr. Fulton: Small airlines.

Mr. Riis: Small airlines, yes, to people who make boots, shoes, and snowshoes. I could take up important time of the House by referring to hundreds of companies related to this industry which will be severely hit. Certainly their activities will be curtailed dramatically if the flow-through share mechanism is ripped apart as the Government now plans to do.

I noticed the other night that Mining Life in its most recent publication contained pages and pages on the effects of this action on airlines, shopping plazas, pump manufacturers, drilling equipment manufacturers, and so on.

Mr. Fulton: What are the headlines?

Mr. Riis: The headlines go for pages and pages, indicating the various communities which support flow-through share funding and that, for example, a chamber of commerce questions the wisdom of the Minister of Finance in cutting this mechanism. On the front page, it says: "Broadbent will speak at the flow-through symposium, Mulroney and Turner not available". I suppose it was only the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who had an opportunity to represent the views of parliamentarians at that important convention that was held recently.

There is no question that in spite of the prosperity that exists in certain communities in southern Ontario, the same does not exist in the regions of Canada. In some areas, things may have improved marginally. I think of the kind of changes that have occurred in the Yukon. The territorial Government has taken a whole set of measures over the last number of months that have decreased employment substantially and encouraged a great deal of economic activity, particularly in the mining industry. The Government of the Yukon feels so seriously about this particular measure that—

Mr. Fulton: Tony Penikett.

Mr. Riis: As soon as Mr. Penikett in the Yukon heard that the Government had decided to destroy the effectiveness of the flow-through share tax provisions, he was in touch with the Minister of Finance pointing out what this would do to that particular part of the territories.

I wondered if the other representatives of the territories have bothered to mention this to the Minister of Finance. I have not heard them in debate today. As a matter of fact, I cannot recall ever hearing them raise this matter in the House of Commons. The day is not over yet. Perhaps we will hear them speak in favour of this motion later.

In the regions, Canadians are doing their best in spite of the Government's actions to generate activity in their regions, to take initiative in local communities, and to take advantage of those few provisions in the tax system that give them some encouragement and support in their activities. In areas like the Kootenay region of British Columbia, this has been important. The people of those areas are mystified about why the Government seems to be cutting back.

I can say without any hesitation, on behalf of my colleagues from constituencies like Thunder Bay—Atikokan, Thunder Bay—Nipigon, Skeena, St. John's East, Prince Albert, Yukon, New Westminster—Coquitlam, Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, Nickel Belt, Kenora—Rainy River and Churchill as well as many others, just to name a few, that we will be standing in our places, shoulder to shoulder, unanimously supporting the reintroduction of these flow-through shares. I will be watching carefully the representatives of the Territories to see how they will be voting, knowing that their constituents will be more than interested in whether or not they rise.

People from the Kootenays, the Lac-Saint-Jean region, the Okanagan Valley, Timiskaming, Timmins, Prince George, other parts of northern British Columbia, northern Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and of course Quebec will be watching. I suspect that tonight most Canadians will be riveted to their television sets when that vote takes place to see whether or not those who represent them rise.

I do not like embarrassing anyone, and I will not do so today, but I could have read into the record a whole number of letters to the editor sent by Conservative Members about their support for the flow-through share mechanism. Many of them feel that the decision to gut this program was not a good one and they would like to see it changed. In the spirit of co-operativeness and positiveness and in an attempt to make this a businesslike place, we would provide an opportunity for those Members to indicate how serious they are this afternoon, or are they simply writing about their interest as opposed to standing up, as a Member of Parliament ought to for his or her constituents?

This motion provides an opportunity for all Members of the House to speak. This is a non-partisan issue. This is one of those issues in which politics ought not play any role at all, quite frankly. When I look across the aisle at my Conservative friends, knowing how they feel about this issue—

Mr. Fulton: They will want to support us.

Mr. Riis: As my friend from Skeena has said, they will want to support this particular measure, as any knowledgeable person would. I heard the finance critic for the Liberal Party speak in favour of this initiative.

When reading through the various mining magazines and newspapers, I find that there are not very many people who have not indicated in writing their support for the return to the provisions that existed back in the mid-1980s when the benefits of the flow-through share mechanism were being felt by people in virtually every part of Canada. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians benefited. It is unfortunate that I do not have a chance to name the Canadians who have benefited personally from this mechanism, as will their children and their children's children.

We are delighted to provide this opportunity for Hon. Members, be they Liberals, New Democrats or Conservatives, to send a clear message to the Minister of Finance. I think the Minister has lost touch on this issue. He is an honourable man, and I think he is probably doing the best job he can as he sees it. However, he sees it from Bay Street. From downtown Toronto, it is difficult to appreciate just how tough life is in the territories and in the single-industry communities that now feel threatened by this particular action of the Government.

In a spirit of goodwill, enthusiasm and a positive attitude, I will resume my seat now to allow some Conservative Members to indicate their support for this initiative.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot let that very able speech go by. My friend from Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has put the case for a special deduction for a particular industry very well. I think he would agree that it is a very generous deduction, a deduction of 133 per cent. What he also knows but did not put very well was that all sorts of other sectors want these deductions as well. There is no doubt that if one can invest $1 and deduct $1.33 from one's tax, one is doing very well.

During the three election campaigns in which I have campaigned against the NDP, NDP Members have identified each time the tens of thousands of Canadians who have not had to pay income tax because of these special deductions, whether they be for the film industry or the oil industry. Is the Hon. Member now saying that members of the NDP will forever stop going after these 60,000 people who do not pay income tax because they take advantage of the special deductions? Is the Hon. Member prepared to back off on his attack on those people and say that he recognizes that they are making investments and that they therefore should not have to pay income tax?

The logical flow-through of that is that ordinary Canadians have to pay more if we let the top people take these special deductions and not pay their fair share. Is that what members of the NDP are saying?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that is not quite what we are saying. I too recall the last federal election campaign. At that time, the issue was a minimum personal tax. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as a matter of fact all three Leaders, said during that very famous debate that they felt that a minimum personal tax was appropriate.

Since we now have in place the mechanism for a minimum personal tax, and though there are still a few exceptions who somehow slip through the cracks, we feel that by and large everyone now pays at least a minimum tax. In terms of the personal tax system, there is some equity now in the system.

Those people who will provide the flow-through money by providing equity financing for resource companies will still be required to pay a minimum tax, even if they use significant tax reductions to bring their incomes down. We all agree with that minimum tax, I suppose, if we believe the Leaders of the various political Parties and their commitments to that and the legislation that was subsequently passed in the House.

I think the Hon. Member is referring to the 60,000 corporations that do not pay any income tax in spite of profits. He knows very well that the flow-through program accrues by and large to companies that are not in taxable positions. That is why the flow-through mechanism makes it through the company and into the hands of certain investors who will in fact pay a minimum tax.

We are talking about 60,000 profitable corporations. I use the word "profitable" because too often people are under the impression that we want to tax unprofitable companies. That does not make any sense. However, companies like Brascan, Cadillac-Fairview, the Royal Bank of Canada and Alcan have profits of perhaps $200 million or $300 million. We say that companies with profits like that should pay some income tax. The Mom and Pop shops next door, the small welding shop, all pay taxes if they are profitable. We are simply saying that should also apply to the large corporations and multinational branch plants. I think we agree on this, if I understand my friend's question correctly.

• (1530)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, earlier in the week the president of the Single Industry Towns Committee for Canada appeared on the panel at the symposium on flow-through shares. He indicated that they did a calculation of the effect of the Minister's removal of the provisions for flow-through shares. They estimate a job loss by the end of June of 75 per cent of those involved, particularly those with junior exploration companies. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) appeared before this symposium, the only thing he had to offer on behalf of Progressive Conservatives was to consider action once the effect of unplugging flow-through takes place. Having heard representatives of the juniors and the single industry communities, it is pretty obvious that the effect of unplugging flow-through will be disastrous for the juniors.

It was interesting to note, as pointed out by those who were there, that no representatives of the senior mining companies turned up. They did not have any representatives in attendance and did not participate in the symposium. They may well end up being able to buy up a lot of properties across the country at bargain basement prices because there simply will not be enough capital around for the juniors to operate. For example, in my constituency, out of Smithers alone, it amounted to $40 million last year. The community has done estimates that $30 million of that will not be available this year as a result of this manoeuvre. Given what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had to offer with respect to bringing some sort of program in six months or a year from now once the juniors have wound down, is that the kind of approach a federal Government should take to one of the sectors which provides a large amount of employment and a substantial amount of balance-of-trade benefits to Canada?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that is a thoughtful interjection. He has flagged a very critical issue. We are obviously about to have a major fire sale.

Mr. McDermid: You have been wrong in every one of your predictions, Nelson!

Mr. Riis: Every one of the junior mining companies will have difficulty raising equity financing and will have to dump their properties. The large corporations, now that the work has been done and the properties identified, will be picking up those properties at fire sale prices. My feeling is that the Minister of Finance has cosied up a little too closely to the large mining companies and perhaps some of the large multinationals. He has set the stage for a sale of properties that the juniors will not have a chance to develop on their own.

We of course have not yet mentioned how the free trade deal might be rearing its head in this decision by the Minister. The Americans made it clear that these various programs, either direct or through the tax system, which encourage and support, if you like, a particular industry will not be allowed under the trade deal. The Minister said that we are going to have to back off all these programs which help the regional economies because the Americans will not allow us to do it any longer. That is one of the major reasons why we in the NDP have opposed the free trade deal.

In a country like Canada, the second largest geographically, where a lot of our communities are separated by great distances, we sometimes require assistance from local, provincial or federal Governments to get our local manufacturing, service or, in this case, resource sectors really revved up to speed. Unfortunately, we did not have an opportunity to develop that aspect of the debate, that this is probably the result of Americans making overtures because of the free trade deal.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. I know he has had a long interest in tax matters. Yet what we are witnessing today is something very remarkable. We are witnessing the greatest transformation in a political Party and the greatest flip-flop on policy we have ever seen. The NDP has decided to endorse tax benefits for the rich!

I am very familiar with flow-through shares. For three years prior to being elected I was with a mining company in Edmonton. It was listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange and it survived on flow-through shares. My salary came from flow-through shares. It did not come from income from gold or silver mining, which we were ostensibly doing. It came from flow-through shares and from doctors, lawyers and dentists in Toronto. I know where the money came from. Yet the same people who pay the money and take the tax breaks are the ones that the NDP complain about.

Tax Probe, led by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), went around talking about fairness and how there are all these tax breaks for wealthy Canadians. The official critic in this area for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), was talking about tax breaks recently. He said that when we are talking about tax savings, we are talking about someone else paying that amount. If that amount is not paid by the taxpayer, we are all going to be paying it, as we have been reminded by the Government many times. He said he did not think there were many people in his constituency in a position to sink $10,000 into oil, gas or mining exploration. He went on to say that he felt these benefits, flow-through shares and others, were strictly for the rich.

The Hon. Member will also know that his official critic, myself and some others were in New Zealand a week or two ago. That country has a Labour Government. For a Labour Government, it has been doing some strange things. It put in place a flat tax. There is no capital gains tax. It has been privatizing government departments. It also introduced a tax on food.

Mr. McDermid: A socialist Government?

Mr. Dorin: Obviously what has happened is that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre saw the light on that trip. He has been reformed. He has seen what the Labour Party is doing in New Zealand and his whole Party is captivated. They have even started a contest with a prize of a $7,000 vacation for two in Hawaii, New Zealand and Australia. They promise to give you an insider's tour of two capital cities. You might even meet Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand.

Now that we have this flip-flop on flow-through shares, are we going to have a change in position on capital gains taxes, as the New Zealand Government has done? Is he going to call for a food tax? Can he answer those questions?

Mr. Riis: There were a lot of questions there.

Mr. McDermid: Let us see if you can come up with any answers.

Mr. Riis: Let me preface my remarks by reading from Tax Probe '86. My hon. friend will remember that. I know he read it because he has commented on it in the past. I wonder if he will recall this particular part which says that the Government ought to ensure that corporate tax expenditures aimed at investment and job creation are overhauled to make sure that the tax benefits conferred are gained only on the basis of demonstrated performance.

In other words, out of all the tax exemptions we have, and we have many, I think there is unanimity in this place for the belief that some of those are boondoggles, just plain loopholes that do not result in a net gain for this country. If they cost us $500 million in lost revenue, normally we do not get $500 million worth of new investment, R and D or employment programs.

The odd one is obviously good, particularly if there were to be some minor changes made to it. What this says is that if, on the basis of performance, tax expenditures are seen to be appropriate, so be it. As a matter of fact, it goes on to say that flow-through shares are an example of a tax incentive that has worked. I do not know how more explicit or specific I can make it.

• (1540)

The Member talks about flip-flops. I remember that a little while ago the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) stood in the House and said that the flow-through share mechanism was an important one for Canada, that it helped the regions, helped single-industry towns, helped most communities in the regions of Canada, and was one of the best tax programs which the Government has. Then the Government cut it. The Minister of State for Finance said it was a wonderful program and then the Minister of Finance cut it. Therefore, in terms of changing minds, it has been demonstrated clearly that it is the Progressive Conservative Party and no other that has changed its mind on this issue.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to be able to enter into this debate today on the motion moved by the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I take a great deal of pleasure in participating on the very important issue of flow-through shares which the NDP finance critic has presented. As the House well knows, quite often the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and myself conflict on this issue.

Allow me to refresh the memory of the House and that of my colleague on information which he presented to the House in December, 1986. He talked about the terrible tax loopholes. He said that only wealthy Canadians benefit from flow-through shares and that Bay Street investors were laughing at the food banks in Ottawa and across the country. He concluded that flow-through shares were a major tax rip-off which had to be removed.

Then in February, 1987, echoing his finance critic's comments, the Leader of the NDP, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), visited my riding of Timiskaming. Right in Kirkland Lake the leader of that socialist party stated that the NDP's position on flow-through shares was that the NDP could not support this tax loophole. Right in Kirkland Lake. Everyone in Timiskaming, in all the communities of northern Canada, and everyone in the mining sector knew then and knows today where the NDP stands. The NDP is not fooling anyone with this motion today. The NDP is still against flow-through shares. This is nothing but politics being played here today.

On December 16, 1986, the Member for Ottawa Centre participated in a debate here on Bill C-23. As reported in Hansard at page 2171, he said:

> —we should simply tell the Government to stop it, take the measure away, start all over again, and strike out the loopholes.

A September 26, 1987, editorial in one of the papers in my riding said:

> The NDP are likely the spearhead of the effort that helped decimate the flow-through plan in the last Budget.
> A year ago they took on the funding plan with a vengeance, seeing it as another tax break for big business. As such, the NDP hated it, and constantly complained about it, putting an incredible amount of pressure on Finance Minister Michael Wilson.

The editorial continues:

> And it was all because the NDP shot off its mouth, hoping to strike out at big corporations, and instead threatened thousands of jobs and hundreds of communities across the country and in northern Ontario.
> All of a sudden, it seems, the NDP have opened their eyes and noticed the obvious job-creating benefits of the plan. They have suddenly noticed the unmistakable. But the damage has already been done.

I have here a picture of the Leader of the NDP in Kirkland Lake. The NDP saw flow-through shares not as a valuable tax investment incentive for activities and growth in communities like Kirkland Lake, but rather saw it as a tax loophole that had to be closed. So much for what they have said. The past speaks for itself.

I believe it is very important to review what, in fact, the record shows with regard to flow-through shares in mining across the country. I and the Conservative Party did not start talking and fighting for flow-through shares only today, or yesterday when it was brought up by the Leader of the NDP, or this week when a symposium on flow-through shares was held here, or in the past year when a number of interest groups began lobbying Members of this House. We have been in full support of flow-through shares since they were introduced.

As for myself, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Timiskaming, right from my maiden speech in this House on November 1, 1982, the record shows that I have spoken out for the mining sector. I have supported, and this Party has always supported, this vital investment vehicle which mean so much to so many, not only to the mining industries but, more important, to the many northern resource based communities across this country.

I would like to take a moment to review some of the statements that I have made in this House in the last five and one-half years. In my maiden speech I stated: "Just last week, 390 iron ore miners were laid off . . . in Kirkland Lake". That day I did not hear the NDP speaking out about mining, lay-offs, and their concern for the steel workers at this mine. I never heard a word.

In my speech on the Budget on March 5, 1984, I said:

> Not once in this Budget has there been anything done to help the mining industry in northern Ontario or across this country, Mr. Speaker.

On November 19, 1985, I asked a question in the House. I said:

> Each year at this time mining and exploration companies have run into difficulties with flow-through shares and exploration work.

It used to be that the end of the calendar year was the last time that you could make use of flow-through shares. It was this Government, this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Minister of State for Mines that changed the system so that flow-through shares would go through until the end of February. Where was the Hon. Member from Ottawa Centre in those days? He was speaking against it. He had no concern whatsoever because there were no political points for him to make. He had no concern for the mining community, be it the drillers, the companies, the small communities or the unemployed because there were no political points in it for him. In that December the Government followed through on this and announced extensions for flow-through shares to the end of February.

On October 29, 1986, as reported at page 858 of Hansard, I asked a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) with regard to whether there would be a continuation of flow-through shares. The Member for Timiskaming was again ensuring that flow-through shares would continue, as they did for 1987.

On December 16, 1986, that great critic, the new mining and exploration giant, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, again decided that flow-through shares were not a great deal and need not be continued. In debate in the House on that date I said:

> Mr. Speaker, I find it shocking—I guess that is the only expression to use—that the NDP would try to eliminate something that has done so much for so many Canadians. Why eliminate something that has developed so many jobs over the last number of years and has brought so much to the economy of the northern part of Canada?

At that time they wanted to eliminate flow-through shares.

In a statement in the House on January 26, I mentioned that in the last part of 1984 there was an increase of 49 per cent in development, an increase of 80 per cent in latter 1985 and in the first quarter of 1986 an increase of 100 per cent in mining exploration across this country. This is attributed to flow-through shares, but the Hon. Member from Ottawa was still against flow-through shares.

February 16, 1987, is a date that will go down in history because the Leader of the NDP told about 100 supporters in Kirkland Lake—

Mr. Nickerson: That many?

Mr. MacDougall: They had 100, but I doubt whether they have them any more after this statement. The NDP said again that flow-through shares were nothing but a loophole that had to be changed. They said there was no need for flow-through shares.

The record of this Member and this Government shows that we have done much to ensure the viability of the mining community. The mining community is in its present state because the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) and my colleagues have ensured that flow-through shares benefited Canadians.

On Tuesday I had the opportunity to be at the Holiday Inn when the white knight of the NDP rolled in to address whom the NDP would call the mining magnates, the corporate bums of the world who have so many loopholes and do not have to pay tax. He got up in front of them and said: "We were wrong. We were wrong. We think that flow-through shares are the greatest thing since sliced bread". Why would he do that? The only time he mentioned anything about mining was yesterday and today in the House. It is pure politics. The NDP has no concern whatsoever about the mining community and no concern about small communities across this country. All that we are seeing today is—

Mr. Manly: That is not true.

Mr. MacDougall: You will have your chance later.

Mr. Manly: What you are saying is not true.

Mr. MacDougall: The truth hurts.

Mr. Manly: It is false. We have concern for small communities across the country and you know it. We will not take that nonsense from you.

Mr. MacDougall: It is Tuesday before we hear anything from them about flow-through shares.

What has the Government and the Minister of Finance done? A proposal for the alteration of the flow-through shares investment mechanism was suggested by the Government with its introduction of tax reform. As a result of the proposals in this comprehensive package, finance officials and Government Members consulted with the mining industry to find out the future effect of the proposed changes.

In December, the Minister of Finance announced the changes to his proposals. The mining industry continues to have concerns, so the Government has undertaken to consult further with representatives of the mining industry and with interested groups and individuals across the country on the impact of the changes. Meetings have taken place this week and will continue with individuals across the country.

In the past few months much progress has been made. The button I am wearing today is from the flow-through committee of Kirkland Lake, including Evelyn Kasner, René Adams, Mayor Joe Mavrinac, and other individuals from our community, who along with prospectors and developers from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and chambers of commerce across the country have been meeting. I and members of my caucus from coast to coast have been meeting with them and with individuals from the investment community. We will be working with them to see what can be done.

It should be pointed out that flow-through shares are not gone, as some Members would like to suggest. On December 16, the Minister announced as part of the Notice of Ways and Means Motion adjustments to the June 18 proposals that pertain to flow-through shares. These include a slower phase-out of earned depletion. Therefore, the depletion rates will be as follows: 33-1/3 per cent until June 30, 1988; 16-2/3 per cent from July 1, 1988, to February 28, 1990, which is extended from June 30, 1989, as had been proposed in the June 18 White Paper.

Earned depletion will be excluded from the CNIL pool and only 50 per cent of Canadian exploration expense will be included in the pool. The additional eight-month extension of depletion will facilitate the adjustment process of the exploration sector to the new rules. The adjustment to the CNIL rules will improve the attractiveness of flow-through shares to many investors who would otherwise have been discouraged from investing in them under the June 18 proposals.

The Minister of Finance also announced that the federal Government will continue to monitor mineral exploration levels in the future, and will introduce appropriate measures, if and when they are needed for exploration and regional development.

Over-all, the change to the CNIL rules and to depletion have the purpose of providing an incentive level high enough to ensure adequate levels of investment in flow-through shares. However, let us also remember that on October 19, the stock market crashed. No one could control the stock market, and the investment funds that would be flowing into flow-through shares completely dried up. Anyone involved in the investment community will say that the financing that was available in June and September, 1987, is not there today because it was lost on the market.

When one considers this additional problem, returning flow-through shares to 133 per cent may not be the answer. The Minister of Finance wants to consult with those involved in the mining and investment communities to ensure that if adjustments will be considered the proper adjustments are made. It is a simple matter to put the flow-through shares back to 133 per cent, but what happens in six weeks or six months if the investment climate has not changed? Will they admit they were wrong and ask the Minister to make another adjustment?

The Hon. Member who moved this motion has made a magnificent flip-flop, as he and his Party have done on many other issues. Recently the Member for Ottawa Centre was in Quebec City playing partisan politics by stating that Saint John should not have been awarded the federal Government frigate contract. The next day in the House the Leader of his Party apologized and said that he was not speaking for his Party. Members of the same Party are doing the same thing on such issues as NATO, tax issues, and nationalization of the banks. Now there is flow-through shares.

Unfortunately, today's debate is not dealing with this issue in a proper manner. I was not sent here to play partisan politics. I was sent here to work for my constituents, for the betterment of the mining community and the betterment of all Canadians. I am not here to spend a day in the House to respond to a Party that suddenly recognizes that there is a mining community, with a Member who until today and yesterday did not realize there was a future in mining. They knew nothing about mining. I can put on the record today that the mining community is not new to me. I will be speaking for the mining community in northern Ontario and across this country for many years to come. I regret to see what has gone on here today. Let me say that I will vote with my Government because we have the answers for the future. We are working on the problems of flow-through shares and we will ensure the future of our communities and the mining sector for many years to come.

• (1600)

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall).

Mr. McDermid: It was a good speech.

Mr. Garneau: Yes, it was a good speech, indeed, but I was wondering how the Member is going to vote on this motion. He did not say. If he supports the idea of flow-through shares and the symposium to keep the flow-through shares alive, will he vote for the motion? That is my first question.

Second, the Member talked about the market crash. I understand it caused difficulty for everyone. Does the Hon. Member believe that cutting the 33 per cent earned depletion and flow-through shares and increasing the taxation of capital gains to 75 per cent, together with the market crash, are reasons why it will be very difficult to raise money? Due to the fact that the mining sector will have to suffer from the crash and from the change in capital gains, does the Hon. Member believe in the idea of keeping the 33 per cent earned depletion, as requested by the representatives of the mining industry, who came to Ottawa last Tuesday wearing the button "Go With the Flow", which the Hon. Member is wearing on the lapel of his coat? Will the Hon. Member try to convince his Minister to keep this 33 per cent and give the mining industry a chance to raise funds in 1989?

Mr. MacDougall: First, the buttons were made in Timiskaming and Kirkland Lake, so there is revenue coming into my area.

I would like to answer both the Hon. Member's questions. First, with respect to whether I will vote for this motion, if I thought the motion was a sincere motion, I would vote for it, but the motion is not sincere. It is a political motion. It is not an issue that I as a Member, or this Government, would ever want to support. We have been working on this issue away prior to the group coming here to Ottawa. My colleagues have met with the mining committee. We have had discussions with the Minister of Finance. We have been in touch with the mining sectors across the country. They are having meetings with the Ministers' officials in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and in the Department of Finance. They are meeting again today. I believe that is the manner in which we should approach the problem.

The Hon. Member thinks that one 133 per cent may be the answer but let us really make certain that is really what we are looking at. Let us make certain that one 133 per cent adjustment is all we need. There may be other parts we have to adjust, but let us make certain. Dollars that would have been invested are no longer there because of the market crash. There are a lot of individuals across this country hurting from that market crash. They do not have the dollars they normally would have to invest in flow-through or junior mining. Let us make certain that we are able to come up with a program, working with the industry, that will be viable for years to come.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) took a fair amount of time looking at the New Democratic Party's position and far less time looking at his own position. I happened to meet with the Mayor of Kirkland Lake when he was here with the delegation from the Save Flow-Through Share Committee earlier this week. He made it clear that he in fact appreciated the position of the New Democratic Party with respect to sharpening up and focusing the flow-through share provisions but at the same time retaining the benefits that are there as is proposed in the motion.

The Hon. Member has come up with a new principle; never look at what a Bill, motion or resolution of the House of Commons actually says but try to discern how it fits on your sincerity meter before you decide whether or not to support it. What this resolution urges is that the initial benefit level of the flow-through share provision not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

I know from the people who were present, Mr. and Mrs. Kasner and Mr. Mavrinac, that people who are prominent and important and know the mining industry in the Hon. Member's constituency want this motion supported by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming. I am very sorry he does not see it that way.

I would point out to the Hon. Member as well that the New Democrats have raised this issue on a number of occasions. I have raised it with the Government. The Government has had lots of time to know the concerns of the mining industry and mining communities. The Government turned turtle between December and June of last year. Now would be an appropriate time for the Government to indicate that it was in fact prepared to listen to those concerns, instead of which we have stonewalling from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and stonewalling from the Hon. Member who says: "Trust me. We are dealing with it behind the scenes". It is almost as limp an excuse as when the Liberals were back-benchers and said the same kinds of things in response to a Conservative and NDP Opposition.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for this day. I wonder if the Hon. Member asked the question of the Mayor of Kirkland Lake when the Hon. Member was in the provincial House and his Party closed down the United Asbestos Mine in Matachewan, which totally destroyed that community. Three hundred and fifty jobs were lost and the Hon. Member never once said there was any problem there, none whatsoever. And now he wants to talk about credibility.

Let me make it very clear, I believe in honesty, sincerity and truthfulness. That is number one. To support a motion such as this, there is no possible way.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the comment and question period following the intervention in this debate by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). I recall two or three years ago I was the Member's guest at a very special initiative which he undertook. It was always his goal to achieve improvements to the flow-through share program to which the Government was prepared to respond. In particular, there was a need for access to the resources. As I recall, there were mining installations and refineries in the area of Kirkland Lake which no longer had that efficient access to the resources. The Member was particularly effective in bringing that problem to the attention of not only our Government, but to the attention of the Ontario Government. It was in Kirkland Lake one morning, as I recall, that the entente, with the Mayor and all present, was signed which allowed for the development of those access roads.

Would the Hon. Member comment on whether they have achieved some of the goals he set out for them?

Mr. MacDougall: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in fact it was a very proud day back in 1985. With the federal-provincial agreement, ERDA, we were able to fund an access road into the Harker-Holloway area of my riding which hooks into Kirkland Lake. That started to develop the American Barrick Resources mine, which will be open this July with 250 full-time employees. There are mining exploration possibilities with the Canamex ramp going down now. There can be a lot of exploration in that way in conjunction with flow-through shares, federal-provincial agreements. Yes, it was a proud day for Timiskaming, and it is going to be a prouder day in July when we open up that function.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I am glad to have a chance to speak to the amendment, moved by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), to the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The amendment spells out in clear detail that we are not just talking about flow-through shares here but about the earned depletion allowance. Every time that I or other Members have put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) asking him to reinstate the earned depletion allowance, he slides off on the limp excuse that we have flow-through shares. We know that we have flow-through shares. That is not the problem.

The problem is that the Government is phasing out the earned depletion allowance. The motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre does not spell out the 33 per cent earned depletion allowance which is the crux of the problem facing hundreds of communities across the country with the collapse of the stock market last October and the loss of equity investments. Added to that general problem in the market, especially in junior mines, is the loss of the earned depletion allowance that has been in place since 1982. It has been very successful in creating employment in communities throughout northern Ontario, northern Quebec and many other parts of the country.

The magnitude of the economic activity in those communities could not have been generated in any other way. Every mining community eventually faces the problem of diversification or renewal with new mines. It often happens that new ore bodies are found. Some 10 years ago Timmins was in a very bad way. It is now a booming and prospering community with many new mining activities. Similarly, the Kirkland Lake area was suffering from the lack of new ore bodies.

The Minister and his officials in the Department of Finance argue that this may not be as efficient a way to create economic activity in those mining communities as some other method. What that overlooks is the tremendous social investment that we have in these communities. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in housing, streets, schools, churches, commercial enterprises and so on. There are not many instruments that the federal Government has. The provincial Governments have many more which perhaps deliver the type of payload in terms of economic activity.

In this respect I need only look at the area around Wawa and the mining operations that are opening up there. We faced the problem with the iron steel industry of Algoma Steel cutting back its economic activity by several hundred jobs at the Wawa mines. We now see tremendous mineral exploration and development activity moving down from the Hemlo field into the Wawa area to Batchawana, where there is a great deal of activity.

A couple of years ago we faced the prospect of the possible shutdown of Wawa. The ability to diversify that economy and bring in some other means of economic activity were very limited. I attended meetings with respect to what activities could take place there, even though it is not in my constituency. Tourism or a specialized pulp and paper operation and so on were considered. Fortunately, the generation of hundreds of millions of dollars that we have seen through the earned depletion allowance in flow-through shares has made possible important discoveries there. Thus the social costs which have been paid in that community will be used. People will be living there. They will have new jobs in new mining activities.

The earned depletion allowance is used for the most risky part of mining exploration and development. Flow-through shares will do the job once one gets to the development of the mine itself. But at the exploration stage money is needed, with a tremendous incentive. That is why we have a 33 per cent incentive on top of the 100 per cent write-off for those people who want to invest. In Quebec there is a 166 per cent incentive because the province, up to the limits of its income tax system, provides an additional incentive.

We are not only looking at exploration and development activity since in a way it is only the catalyst. Even though we are talking about $400 million or $500 million per year being generated for exploration development, those are small amounts of money compared to what is seen once the ore body is delineated and development starts and contracts are let for sales overseas. I take the example of Elliot Lake and the development of the mines at Denison and Rio Algom which were developed back in the early 1960s. They involved some $300 million in the one case and $400 million in the other just to develop two or three existing mines to put them into modern operations.

If we want to have mines actually being developed three, four, or five years down the road, since these things do not happen over night, then we have to make the commitment of funds now for exploration and development. This is why there has been such a tremendous outpouring and rallying this week at the symposium being held here on flow-through shares and earned depletion allowance at the Renaissance Hotel. Literally hundreds of people across the country who are concerned with economic development in the slow growth regions were here to protest the Government cutting off this program during the next 18 or 24 months. They are here to demand that the Government follow through.

One of the officials there, Mr. Massicotte, who is a councillor in the Elliot Lake town council, is also the president of the Mining Municipalities of Ontario. There were a great many representatives from the Rouyn-Noranda area as well. They pointed out that between 1982 and 1986 the unemployment rate in that area due to intensive mining exploration development activity has fallen from some 26 per cent to 6 per cent. That is nothing short of a miracle. Every mining activity in the country is going through a contraction of employment compared to production of mineral because it has to be more efficient, more automated and more safety related. To see the unemployment rate drop in an area which has been mined for several generations now due to the flow-through share and the earned depletion allowance is nothing short of a miracle.

However, there is another aspect to this. Although most of the resource areas are relatively active, prosperous, and unemployment is down, much of that prosperity has taken place in the last 12 months. The employment was there, but the value of minerals, for example, copper and nickel have skyrocketed in the last 12 months. During the first several years after the recession from 1982 until the latter part of 1986 or early 1987, things were not that great, but with the mineral value going up, the economies are blossoming in places such as Sudbury, Hemlo, Wawa, and the Kirkland Lake area. The Minister and the Government should be warned that this prosperity is incredibly fragile.

I talked to a mining exploration development engineer who was doing a lot of work in my constituency in Batchawana, an area along the Lake Superior shore about 50 miles north of Sault Ste. Marie. He stated that they did not know, but they thought that there were five mineral deposits there that may turn out to be of production quality, but whether funds can be generated to carry out the detailed analysis and development is all dependent on this whole system.

I cannot understand why the Minister of Finance when asked if he would reinstate earned depletion allowance and retain the flow-through shares stated: "The problem is that the equity markets all collapsed with the stock market crash last October 19". We agree that that is one of the problems. But with the equity markets down, the interest down, now is the time to maintain this mechanism for generating hundreds of millions of dollars, some $300 million in Ontario last year, and I understand from an earlier figure back in the early 1980s of only $100 million.

It is very important that the House pronounce itself on this resolution, not only the flow-through shares as stated in the original NDP motion, but also in the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides which is crucial. That is the part that is important. It spells out the earned depletion allowance which is so important.

It would be easy to list every municipality that is concerned about this matter. I would like to read a letter from Mayor Thomas Despres, who lives in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). In the letter Mayor Despres spells out how important this is. How the Hon. Member for Timiskaming can vote against the motion, I am not clear. I wish to read part of that letter from Mr. Despres, the Mayor of Haileybury:

> Since the economy of Haileybury and Northern Ontario have grown dependent upon the activities of mining and exploration, it is my feeling that "flow-through" investments have been, and hopefully will continue to be, a major stimulant to both the community of Northern Ontario and Canada as a whole. However, I believe the announced tax reform will retard our economic progress and leave ourselves vulnerable to economic instability. This can and will result in loss of jobs in areas that have been traditionally economically disadvantaged.
> Therefore, will you please—urge Mr. Wilson and the Finance Committee to re-evaluate the effects of tax reform on "flow-through" investments. The livelihood of many northerners is at stake.

That letter was signed by the Mayor of Haileybury. I have similar letters from the Town of Elliot Lake, the Township of Michipicoten, which is the community of Wawa, which call on the Government to reinstate this program because it is essential.

The last point I wish to make is terribly important. A report was given in the last issue of the international mining magazine, The Journal of Mining, which tends to indicate that the reason the earned depletion allowance is being phased out is due to the free trade deal between Canada and the United States. That is very disturbing.

The Americans have different ways of doing regional development. They build military bases, and there are hundreds of them across the states. They have procurement programs, and so on. We have a distinctive way of providing regional development, and I think that we do a better job.

Last week I was in Fredericton with the Liberal caucus task force on free trade. A representative of McCain Foods described the impact that free trade would have on the operations of that company and on the Province of New Brunswick. Someone put forward the argument that the New England states, for example Maine, have a similar land base to New Brunswick and they have had free trade with the rest of the states for years. There is not a poultry operation, egg laying operation, very little dairy or food processing, yet they have the same land mass as provinces like New Brunswick which has a very well developed food processing industry with companies like McCain, and a reasonably prosperous dairy industry. Our system of regional development is our own. But with this deal that is proposed we will not have the freedom.

In an editorial in the Mining Journal of February 5, 1988, published in London, Mr. Karl Glackmeyer, Director of the Prospectors and Developers Association told the mining magazine that the proposed reduction in the earned depletion allowance will effectively eliminate flow-through funding and could put 10,000 jobs in northern Quebec at risk, and will threaten new mining projects. Ottawa's position is that the incentives have to be eliminated in accordance with the recently agreed Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. Mr. Glackmeyer suggests that the reduction be gradually phased out over a decade rather than being cut off over 12 months.

I do not think it is should be phased out at all. Our finance critic has suggested that we commit ourselves for a five-year period, and at that time it is reviewed to see if it is still necessary and useful. The article further points out that $900 million was spent in mining exploration in Canada during the last year.

That is one side of the coin of the free trade deal as it affects the earned depletion allowance. The second part of the equation, which was pointed out in an article by a financial accounting house in Toronto, is that once it is phased out it will not be possible to reinstitute it in Canada as an incentive for regional development for mining exploration and development without Canada being subject to countervail or other attacks of remedial action by the United States.

That is very serious business. This responsible mining journal states that this tax mechanism that has generated $400 million or $500 million is being phased out because of the trade deal. Another responsible house in Toronto that deals with taxation matters and the free trade arrangement states that because of the free trade deal it will not be able to be reinstituted after it is phased out without retaliatory methods being taken by the United States.

We are puzzled about why the Government is doing it and what will be the long-term implications. Surely they will not be good ones. Also, we are surprised that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre came on side and supported flow-through shares. A couple of years ago the Hon. Member clearly indicated that he was not in favour of earned depletion allowance. However, those of us from mining areas throughout Canada are glad for all the support and assistance we can get. We appreciate the tremendous efforts of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides who has been fighting for the issue ever since it was proposed a little over a year ago.

The issue is important in my part of the country in terms of employment and in terms of providing funds for an industry involved in an extremely risky business. There is no guarantee that when an exploration program is started it will pay off in the development of a mine, regardless of when. In my opinion, action is imperative now because of a downturn in equity investment since last October. I think that is the best reason beyond all others.

I hope the Government reconsiders its policy, backs down, and reinstates the earned depletion allowance which is so important to hundreds of communities across the resource rich regions of the country.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) respecting the nature of the resolution before us today. I direct it to him, because with the harsh words going back and forth between the Conservatives and New Democrats, I thought it might be useful to have a neutral view from the Hon. Member.

If the motion were accepted, as amended or as originally put, it would not be, if I am correct, an expression of lack of confidence in the Government. I would simply like to have confirmation from the Hon. Member that that is how he sees it.

Also I wonder whether he knows of any better way to put pressure on the Government, and specifically on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), than by putting the motion through the House today in order to bring about change within the flow-through share regulations proposed by the Minister.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for his question. I think he put the case very well. The motion, as amended, reads:

> That this House notes that, because of the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance, the flow-through share tax provision has been instrumental in revitalizing mining communities and regions across Canada, and consequently urges that the initial benefit level of this provision, and, specifically, the 33 1/3 per cent earned depletion allowance, not be reduced but be retained to encourage mineral exploration and development by small and medium-sized companies.

It does not condemn the Government, although many Hon. Members have done that. It does not criticize the fact that the Government has cut back on the program or is planning to cut back in July of this year and on December 31 next year. It simply calls for an expression of the will of the House.

I would want to support it and simply call upon Hon. Members from all parts of the House to support it, not just those of us from mining and resource areas, who are obviously a minority. We do not represent highly populated, urban centres. All we are doing here is trying to express the will of the House with regard to an important regional development matter. I would certainly want to see it supported all the way around the House because it would be a useful expression.

It does not cause the Government to fall. It does not even criticize the Government. It talks about the urgency and need for reinstating fully a provision of the Income Tax Act which is not due for change until July 1.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He participated in the symposium which was organized by the mining industry last Tuesday at the Renaissance Hotel in Ottawa.

I am asking the question because I heard the speeches of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). If we listened to what they said, we would believe that there was no reason to organize the symposium to try to save the flow-through share mechanism. I have heard all sorts of nice things about flow-through shares, but in fact the Tory Government will destroy the system by cutting earned depletion by 33.3 per cent in 1989.

Could the Hon. Member tell us why that group had to spend a lot of money to organize that symposium in Ottawa? If the speeches of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming and the Minister of Finance were true, why did they bother to organize it? Could he explain what he heard at the symposium, for the benefit of the House?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the various municipalities are not involved in the mining business itself. They were simply here as representatives of their communities which had started to pick up because of exploration and development activity and are now starting to go down. They spent a great deal of money to come here with delegations of three or four people. Although my own community of Elliot Lake may not benefit, it has a representative on the mining municipalities committee who happens to be the president.

All these municipalities are very concerned. Everyone knows that even when a mining municipality is booming, as many of them are, they are dealing with a depleting resource. Even though the actual development of the mine may take eight or ten years, if exploration and development activities are going on, they will ultimately benefit from it if in fact there are any new mineral deposits to be developed.

The 200 or 300 people who attended the symposium were prepared to come to Ottawa and to spend two or three days meeting with the various party caucuses and impressing upon them the fragile nature of prosperity in mining communities. Due to international forces, to commodity prices, and to mineral prices going up and down, their prosperity is very fragile. They were willing to come here on their own time and at their own expense to ensure that this earned depletion allowance be replaced. I thought it was a very well handled seminar. Representatives of all three Parties made presentations. The people were devastated and very disappointed when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was not prepared to make any commitment but was only prepared to talk in long-term generalities.

The people were pleased that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides made a firm commitment to bring this matter before the House as he has done today in the sub-amendment which spells out the 33 1/3 per cent mining earnede depletion allowance. That is the crux of the matter. The flow-through shares exist, there is no question about that. They are not being removed. It is the earnede depletion allowance that is crucial.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was able to make a firm commitment that he would put that issue before the House to give Hon. Members an opportunity to discuss this, particularly Members on the government side. There is no opposition on the opposition side now to it, even though there may have been a year or so ago. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides made the commitment that he would give Hon. Members of all Parties a chance to put the pressure on the Government, because after all, the Government has 210 or 211 Members and is in a position to reinstate this provision at the will of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance.

I have not seen the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) in the House today. I had hoped that he would be here because I know he is very concerned about this issue. Other Members like the Hon. Member for Timiskaming and the Hon. Member for Timmins—Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) were heavily lobbied by their municipal councils and by the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien), who made a statement the other day.

This is a matter that goes beyond politics. It is a matter of crucial economic importance to those resource communities which want to live, survive and continue to grow just like the rest of the country.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to speak on my Party's motion concerning flow-through shares. It is necessary for Canada's prosperity and economy to continue the arrangements which have produced such impressive results in the mining exploration industry and which have had dramatic, positive repercussions not only across northern Canada but also in some of the major economic centres.

I am glad to say that we have before us a motion which is quite specific and is not phrased in partisan terms or indeed in terms that anyone in the House could find offensive either to conscience or political position. Instead, it is a motion that is substantive, meaningful and addresses an issue of great importance and significance, particularly to the remote areas of Canada, the resource communities, many of which are like the ones I have the privilege of representing in this House.

The motion reads:

> That this House notes that the flow-through share tax provision has been instrumental in revitalizing mining communities and regions across Canada, and consequently urges that the initial benefit level of this provision not be reduced but be retained—

No one would argue with the proposition, particularly in so far as precious metal deposits are concerned, that the flow-through share tax provision has indeed been instrumental in revitalizing communities. The total value of investment by means of the flow-through share mechanism, since it was brought in in 1983, has been in the order of $2 billion. That investment has gone largely to communities which, prior to 1983, were depressed, some to very considerable degrees, not having the exploration and mining development business on which they had grown and prospered in the past.

The interest-rate crisis under the Liberal Government of 1981-82 had largely eliminated the pool of capital which had been flowing previously into mining developments, most of it of a speculative or risky nature. The high interest rate policy pursued by the Liberal Government had soaked up capital, drawing it into short-term instruments and mere financial instruments such as bonds, guaranteed income certificates and term deposits. It had taken away the pool of funds which had previously gone into investments that led to the development of Canadian communities, particularly in resource areas.

Unlike many other corporate tax measures, the flow-through share provisions have extended benefits almost uniformly across northern Canada and, by the interchange of expenditures and the sourcing of materials, services and personnel, right through into major economic headquarters such as Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal. These are the places where many of the most profitable parts of the exercise such as financing are in fact carried out. This measure was not one of those corporate tax measures which simply gave funds to those large companies which were already prosperous and left with them funds that could have been recaptured for financing social services, economic development expenditures and regional equalization. By contrast with those sorts of measures, the flow-through tax share provisions spread benefits throughout the economy from community to community across northern Canada.

Because of the well-known multiplier effect which of course is much more significant outside small communities, indeed this measure spread those benefits right through the Canadian economy. Most tax expenditures go to the major centres of corporate activity. They go particularly to Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe. By contrast, this specific tax measure spread benefits right through the economy.

Prior to 1983, the rate of development of new mines in Canada was at a level of about 4 per cent, comparing new mine development with the productivity of existing mines. In the five years or so since this flow-through provision has been in effect, that rate has quadrupled so that we now have, primarily in the precious metals sector, a level of new mine development in the order of 16 per cent.

Over those five years, approximately 60 new exploration and development properties have been started by flow-through share investment, some in locations such as Nova Scotia where there had always been the potential but no development. In 1987 alone, about 35 new mines were opened, most of them small, it is true, most of them not Mom and Pop operations but on the level of 50 or 100 employees. These 35 mines have provided employment in communities across Canada which prior to the coming on stream of these mines had indeed been economically depressed.

The operation of flow-through shares produced regional development without favouritism, without patronage and without political partiality. In truth, it produced economic development in an equitable and democratic fashion. That is indeed the sort of economic development that I and my Party want to see, the kind we will be encouraging and promoting when we form the Government of this country.

That regional development was truly benefiting all the regions of Canada which had previously been economically depressed. There were some exceptions where there was not adequate mineralization to permit profitable exploration.

For those Members of the House who do not represent mining communities and are not familiar with the dynamics of exploration and development, it bears pointing out that most of the actual work in exploration and development is done by junior resource companies and sometimes still by individual prospectors. In many cases, small consortia of individual investors group into what are known as junior mining companies. In many cases, the people involved live in the communities which are close to where the exploration is being done. Of course, some of the more highly trained geological and geomorphological consultants operate out of major communities with excellent transportation networks. Yet we see a high degree of turnover of these funds within the mining community.

I noticed that in the past the Mayor of Kirkland Lake referred to large exploration companies as robber barons. Without being too harsh on that judgment, I would say that if there were improvements that could be made in the flow-through share structure, we in the NDP would seek improvements to increase the percentage of funds generated by the shares to the small and medium-sized exploration companies, the individual junior listings, rather than the major companies and major consortia. The economic development brought by smaller companies is more equitable and more widespread. It represents a better spreading through the economy of that multiplier effect. The profits, when they are made, are generally spent or invested in these or neighbouring communities rather than being repatriated to a major corporate headquarters.

We know that the tax value of flow-through shares has been cut in half, according to the White Paper tax changes. The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs asked that the depletion allowance be continued to keep the value of shares at the present level, and it bears pointing out that that is an all-Party committee of this House.

In addition to investment in exploration and development, flow-through shares indirectly encourage, over time, more processing in the communities where the mining takes place. Prior to the introduction of flow-through shares, mining communities were experiencing cyclical busts and booms, like any other resource economy, with some communities becoming ghost towns within months. We do not expect that the continuation of flow-through shares is going to lead to elimination of that cycle in resource economies, mining in particular. We know there will always be ups and downs.

As northerners we realize that every boom in mining exploration is going to produce a drop-off period in which there is consolidation, analysis, a period in which financing must be arranged and in which strategic decisions must be made vis-à-vis the development of one property or another. However, we do know we have experienced very popular results in economic terms in the vast majority of those communities where flow-through shares have had an impact on resource development.

I would like to address a point which I think is worthy of note by all Members of this House. Mining communities very often have extremely expensive social capital and infrastructure. Obviously they are built in areas of significant mineralization and the very minerals being sought are geologically bound and integrated with the Canadian Shield. I note, for example, that in the community of Red Lake in my riding it costs twice as much to service a single house with sewers and water as it does in the community of Dryden, some 160 kilometres to the south in an agricultural clay belt area where soils are far easier to penetrate. What that means when we have these high levels of investment in social capital is that there has to be a productive economy creating wealth, paying salaries higher than the Canadian average, if people are to enjoy a standard of living on a level with the average across this country. Mining communities, traditionally and almost without exception, face these higher costs and require that steady stream of new development work to produce the wealth capable of providing those services.

Let us also not forget the degree to which mining profits and mining income benefit the exchequers of this country, both provincially and federally. Let us not forget that people are out there even now as I speak drilling in the bush. It is 10, 15 or 20 degrees below zero and they are running drills. They are running drills in the Yukon, around Red Lake, Kirkland Lake and Val d'Or. They are well paid, as they should be, and because of that they are producing very significant returns to government exchequers.

The history of mineral development in this country has of course been cyclical, as indeed it is in almost all other countries. There have been some unattractive phases to it. We had the gold rush with a terrible toll in lives and health. We had the period when financing was virtually unregulated and fortunes were made and lost, largely lost, by means of the operation of unethical financing instruments and unethical financiers. Yet the mineral resource development industry is part and parcel, indeed a keystone, of the varied economic development of Canada.

There is, I believe, a fundamental interest for all Canadians, even in the larger centres, that there be healthy economies in remote communities. With those healthy economies we ensure that remote communities do not become ghost towns and people do not have to move everything and lose all the equity they built up in the community; not only the equity in their homes but all they have contributed to the development of a community. That is the sort of economic development that my Party is seeking and wishes to further in consideration of the extension of these flow-through provisions.

It has been said, and I have not heard the observation refuted yet, that one of the reasons for eliminating flow-through shares is because it will be found to be a subsidy under the trade agreement the Government signed with the United States. I believe that is not a good reason for eliminating a successful financing provision. It should be a good reason for negotiating again with the U.S. concerning its acceptability, and ensuring that there is some acceptance. As the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) observed earlier, the U.S. does its regional development, bearing in mind its task is much less than in Canada because of the size of the economy and the smallness of their geography, in very different ways which sometimes have more of a private sector flavour, a more capitalist bent. These include financing military research and distribution of military facilities, which are very powerful regional development instruments nonetheless.

We should look very carefully, and the Government should study this if it has not already done so, at the effectiveness of flow-through shares as a tax creator. As I said, through the multiplier effect I believe it is possible to demonstrate that, unlike the scientific investment research tax credit introduced by the last Government and which ended up costing an enormous amount, some of which was used to finance research in Brazil, we could prove that the flow-through share mechanism has produced an over-all positive cash flow to the federal and provincial Treasuries.

As my Party's spokesman on mines, I had the opportunity on several occasions to bring attention to this mechanism in this House. I note that in my statement of Wednesday, December 9, I quoted the Leader of my Party who was addressing l'association canadienne des prospecteurs et entrepreneurs of Rouyn-Noranda when he said this fiscal measure corresponds well to the objectives of our Party with respect to the creation of jobs and development of resource-based regions. I am very pleased to be able to put that on the record again today.

Let us look at financing for a moment. As the Prospectors and Developers Association of Canada says, many junior companies which rely exclusively on equity financing will be forced out of the market. It is of course easy for people to make judgments on the proliferation of junior mining companies. Yet what it does show is that the participation in the mining industry of this country is being democratized. My Party would like to see it further democratized by making it possible for smaller initial investments to purchase flow-through shares than has been the case up until now.

Within my riding I have seen some very profound benefits from flow-through shares. There are three areas in particular; the Red Lake gold area which has historically been the second largest producing area in Canada, the Pickle Lake area, and the area around Cameron Lake south of Kenora. I had the opportunity to meet with the mining recorder in Red Lake some three weeks ago and I was amazed by what I saw and heard.

His office was jammed to the rafters with charts, maps and geological analyses. He told me of the ripple effect right through the economy in that community. The reeve has estimated that it has affected approximately 25 per cent of the total economic activity in the community. It has affected the hospitality industry, the supply industry, the maintenance of mining equipment, and the furbishing of provisions right down to a shelter workshop which is doing a booming business making core trays for storing the mining cores. The effects are going right through the community to the point where there are now approximately 26 drills currently operating in Red Lake whereas five years ago there were three.

Similarly, the community of Pickle Lake, which had been gravely depressed by the pull-out of the Umex mine, is now again enjoying a very healthy economy because of the number of drills that are running in locations around Pickle Lake. Also, partly as a result of flow-through shares, there are three properties in the Kenora area which are very close to coming on stream.

Let us look at this motion realistically. This motion is not partisan. It is simply supportive of something which has proven successful in economic development. I believe that every Member of this House could and indeed should support this motion.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment. I am not going to get into the issue of who did flip-flops on what. That has already been raised enough times today. My purpose, rather, is to speak on something which involves my own constituency, the constituencies of other Members in the House, and perhaps that of the Member who has just spoken as well.

Many people today in the debate referred to the mining sector. Indeed, that is quite an appropriate and worth-while topic. However, I want to bring to the attention of Members of the House that the mining sector is not the only one negatively affected by the change in earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares.

Indeed, one company in my constituency was in the process of preparing a proposal to install a hydro generating station in the constituency of the Member of Parliament for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). They were also preparing for a similar project in Crysler, Ontario, in the riding of Stormont—Dundas. They informed me earlier this week that unless changes are made to restore the earned depletion allowance to its former status, the entire industry of small hydro-powered generating stations will come to a complete stop.

As well, I understand that consulting firms from Toronto have written to the Member of Parliament for the Willowdale area. Others have made representations to their MPs as well. I have a lot of correspondence on it but because I am making only a brief statement and asking for comment, I cannot recite it all into the record.

However, does my colleague have proposals for small hydro-generating projects in his riding? Has he heard that that industry will be negatively impacted upon as well by the decision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to reduce the earned depletion allowance on flow-through shares? If he has, would he comment on that? Would he agree with me that the provisions should be restored for those people who are working in the alternate energy sector including the small hydro generating sector?

It is my opinion that there is a lot more opportunity for job creation, particularly in northern Ontario and remote communities, when one works toward developing mini hydro projects than there is in mega projects for nuclear generating stations with high tension power lines that bring in the power from 500 miles away and provide no local employment. At least these small hydro generating stations have a large job-creating factor in ongoing maintenance and so on which contributes to the local community. I invite my colleague to comment.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for his comment. I was beginning to wonder, when he started, what his remarks had to do with the substance or import of my speech. I thought the Hon. Member was simply exercising his quick wit to get something on the record by way of replacement for not getting the opportunity to make a speech on this motion.

However, the Hon. Member raises the matter of mini hydro, small-scale hydro. That, of course, is a completely separate topic but, nonetheless, a fascinating one. Having been given the opportunity, I would be happy to expound on it.

If memory serves me correctly, the proposal in the riding of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) would be Jack Fish Falls. I believe that the Crysler project was the reopening of what had once been a private hydro generating station, which falls under the general heading of low-head hydro development, and that it involved the installation of a new generator within an existing penstock reservoir and feed channel to the generator.

I am not sure whether that involves the earned depletion allowance or a change in capital cost allowance. However, I think the general principle is the same. I am certainly in agreement with the Hon. Member on this general principle. I think that the tax law of this country should be so structured as to favour the provision of localized employment rather than the provision of centralized employment. If there is anything in our tax regime which would favour the construction of a large, centralized generating station, be it nuclear, coal, oil-burning or whatever, over the construction of small localized generating facilities, then those provisions should be eliminated.

After all, it is not simply the fact of large generating stations but the concentrations of capital which are required, the way in which this distorts capital markets by allocating excessive funds to a single project, and also, as the Hon. Member points out, the need for transmission lines which not only deteriorate the landscape but have their own inherent problems.

Therefore, if it is a matter, as the Member suggests, of retaining the earned depletion allowance, of retaining a previous structure within capital cost allowances, or introducing new rates to favour the provision of local hydro projects, then that is certainly something which I would support.

In my own riding we do not presently have any projects for the construction of low-head mini hydro development. However, we do have a couple of sites which are under study and we do have, interestingly enough, a couple of sites which were previously operated by a private paper company and are now in the process of being sold for redevelopment by what will become private generating utilities.

• (1710)

I think it is worth pointing out the progressive step the Government of Ontario has taken in this instance by mandating the buy-back of hydro by Ontario Hydro from private or small corporate generators so that that can be used to feed into the grid system. This accomplishes a very worth-while effect in terms of load levelling, load utilization and the availability of feed-in buy-back load by co-generators in order to reduce the necessity for constructing these large centralized facilities to cope with big demands.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I made a mistake earlier when I referred to earned depletion allowance. It was accelerated capital cost allowance.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, the Member will be aware that the only people who can purchase flow-through shares and take advantage of the tax benefits they provide are people in the higher income tax brackets, earning at least $60,000 a year or more.

Since the NDP constantly complain about that, does he believe this is appropriate, or does he agree with his Leader who said a few days ago that there should be other methods available in giving away thousands of dollars to wealthy individuals?

Does he agree with the Member who moved the motion, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), that rather than indicate what is good or bad about the measure the Government should simply scrap it and start over again? The same Member voted against flow-through shares altogether. Later, he saw that there were 25 or 30 ridings where this issue was important and that his Party would have to rethink its position. I presume that the Hon. Member's riding is one of those 25 or 30. Therefore, has the NDP changed its position and, if so, why?

Mr. Parry: First, I must thank the Hon Member for acknowledging, as my Party does, that my riding is an important riding. I think ridings in Edmonton are important as well.

It is one of the traditional tactics of adversarial politics in this country to decry the dogma of an opponent rather than acknowledge the pragmatism. I think we should acknowledge that in the matter of supporting the flow-through shares, my Party is able to recognize there are some things which may be questionable on principle but which are successful in practice.

It is quite true that neither I nor my Leader want to see any individual investor completely wipe out their tax liability by way of investment in flow-through shares. That is one reason why we have supported the Government's alternative minimum tax proposal and indeed have very happily given that tax proposal to the Government.

We must recognize that it was one of the planks of my Party's platform in the last election campaign, rather than something which the Progressive Conservative Party was advocating. I see no conflict here, although I am sure the Hon. Member would be glad to set one up.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance on debate.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this important debate on the tax principles of this Government and this country. But it is also very important to show the hyprocrisy of our colleagues opposite, the Members of the New Democratic Party.

The proposal made in the White Paper on tax reform which was amended in December and then tabled does not in any way eliminate tax incentives for the mining industry; indeed the tax provisions specifically designed for the mining sector remain unchanged. Percentages vary at some levels, and this is important: from 133 they drop down to 100 and this reflects the over-all approach of the tax reform. Thanks to tax reform, nine Canadians out of ten will pay less income tax, and nine elderly Canadians out of ten will either pay less income tax or none at all. We should keep that in mind when we look at the tax reform proposals. We can't pick what suits us and throw out the rest.

I think the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government have shown that they know how to manage and administer this country. We reduced the deficit, and we managed to introduce proposals for a fairer and more equitable tax system. Once again, Mr. Speaker, tax reform provides for changes in various sectors. The mining industry, like all other small businesses, will see a reduction in its income tax rate. I did not hear anyone mention this particular point today, but it is an important one. The tax rate for mining companies will go down, and that applies to both junior companies and companies with annual profits of over $200,000.

Flow-through shares will be maintained, and they will help mining companies pass on unused tax incentives to their investors. I think we ought to be realistic and be aware of what the situation actually is like.

Mr. Speaker, we have talked about regional development practically all day. That is exactly why we have tax reform. The main purpose is to have an Income Tax Act that collects revenue, although I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you do not really like the idea and in fact not many people do. The purpose of the Income Tax Act, however, is not to provide for regional, cultural or social development. The purpose of the Income Tax Act is to collect revenue and hand it over to the departments concerned: Employment and Immigration, Energy, Mines and Resources, DRIE, and so forth. The Departments, which have people who are qualified and who know their business, can then distribute this money in the proper fashion.

Mr. Speaker, I hope Opposition Members don't want to go back to the scientific research tax credit scheme which cost Canadians billions but never did those who needed it any good. Our scientists never got anything out of it. They never got a cent.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and my colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) pointed out to me that the then Minister of Finance in that red period—worse than a black period, it was a red period—knew about it but did nothing, and those billions of dollars slipped into the hands of most everybody except those who should have got them. This must be stopped. This is what tax reform is all about.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) emphasized this, the Minister of Finance emphasized it, and I think that on this side of the House we all agreed with that if in the future this Government were to develop for the mining sector or for any other sector, a plan for Western development, a plan for Eastern Canada, Northern Ontario, Quebec. If the mining industry needs special help in line with the policies of the relevant Department, at that point there is nothing to prevent supporting the development of resources, Mr. Speaker. There is absolutely nothing to prevent that. There is not a single act that prevents that.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, flow-through shares as we know have done a lot for mining areas. They also to a degree created a supermarket. The investment rate was too high. Everyone who is familiar with that industry agrees that we cannot sustain the rate we had in 1986 and 1987 particularly. That rate cannot be sustained.

Therefore, the fact that the rate has gone from 133 per cent to 100 per cent does not mean the mining industry can no longer grow.

It does not mean either, Mr. Speaker, that this reduction that is in line with the spirit and the framework of the tax reform under which corporate and individual tax rates are going down, that does not mean that this Conservative Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) do not support regional development.

An Hon. Member: Quite the opposite!

Mr. Vincent: This Government, Mr. Speaker, invested more into regional development than the previous Government over a comparable period of time. We have been doing profitable investment, Mr. Speaker.

When we refer to regional development, what does that imply? It implies helping businesses outside major centres.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Trois-Rivières is not what could be termed a major centre in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the constituency of Trois-Rivières investments have created nearly 3,000 new jobs since 1984. That is regional development! And the same thing has been done across the land, in every industry and every region.

Mr. Speaker, let them not suggest that flow-through shares equal regional development. There is a Department of Regional Development, there is a Department to look after mines, there is another to look after tax laws; let each one do its job! But let people not think that the Income Tax Act is there to do everything because all that would be left to do would be to discard the 39 other Departments while keeping the Department of Finance, with 39 Ministers of State for Mines, Regional Development, this or that. I think we must be realistic.

Mr. Speaker, allow me also, and I think it is essential to point it out, to refer to the New Democratic Party and its position on flow-through shares.

On February 26, 1986, the Conservative Government introduced measures to improve flow-through shares. In September, 1986, the inquiry on the tax system carried out by the NDP indicated that the tax system is an ineffective tool to promote regional development.

Mr. Speaker, for once in 1986, the NDP agreed with a position taken by this Party and pursued by this Government since its election.

On December 12, the NDP voted against the measures in committee. On December 16, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) which we had the pleasure to hear today asked for the elimination of flow-through shares in this House. That was on December 16, 1986, less than two years ago, in fact some fourteen months ago. Some 14 months ago, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who introduced a motion today asked in this House that flow-through shares be eliminated. And this is not all, Mr. Speaker.

On February 14, 1987, about a year ago, the NDP leader criticized flow-through shares saying that they were a mechanism through which the rich avoided to pay taxes. That was on February 14, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, you know that on behalf of the NDP leader, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre gives frigates to Quebec when he is in Quebec and gives them to New Brunswick when he is over there. Mr. Speaker, we would not have enough frigates with the NDP! They would need some in every province because they distribute them all over the place. The NDP thought that the media did not listen to what was going on in the other provinces. Unfortunately, they missed the boat that day. This is the position of the NDP, Mr. Speaker.

On February 16, 1987, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) stated that flow-through shares should be replaced by another program outside the tax system. In 1987, they agreed with us. However, the Hon. Member went further than we did. He did not say that flow-through shares should remain at 100 per cent and that, if the mines needed some other assistance, the Government would provide it. He said that we should scrap flow-through shares and do something else! That is not what we are saying, Mr. Speaker. We are keeping the flow-through share mechanism because it is a useful tool for mining companies and investors and provides a reasonable rate of return. Thus, the people to whom the New Democrats refer when they say that the rich do not pay any taxes, in other words, people who earn $50,000, $60,000 or $80,000 a year and who use flow-through shares as a tax shelter . . . First, the NDP said: Tax them, they are not paying their share of taxes! But now they have just told us: No, leave them their tax shelter!

There is a phrase in English about people who speak from both sides of their mouth, but I think that it would also apply in French. The NDP took a position one year ago in support of taxes for people with high incomes and against tax shelters, but one year later, nearly to the day, they are saying the exact opposite, beginning with their Leader! Yet, on July 21, 1987, the Leader of the NDP promised not to change the policies of his Party simply because he was gaining in the polls.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP has not changed since 1987 or since 1984; it is still Ed Broadbent. He was the one who said a year ago: Tax . . .

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Oshawa!

Mr. Vincent: My colleague is right. The Hon. Member for Oshawa. Thank you for calling me back to order. For once, the Hon. Member is right, Mr. Speaker. I shall even name him: the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). As he is right for once, Mr. Speaker, I have to give him his due.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, this same Member for Oshawa . . . I can see that the Liberal Party nearly shares my views! This same Hon. Member for Oshawa, as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell pointed out, was saying in 1987 that his Party would not change its policies because of the polls. That was six months ago, Mr. Speaker. They have succeeded in completely reversing their stand since then. First, they want to tax high incomes and eliminate flow-through shares, and six months later, they want to give plenty of tax shelters to high income taxpayers and maintain flow-through shares. This is the policy of the New Democratic Party and this is how they want to gain the favours of Quebec and Canadian voters in any way they can.

Mr. Speaker, when a party is elected to govern the country, it has to make decisions. I believe that the Conservative Government, led by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), has made decisions for the general welfare of the Canadian population and to give all Canadians a better quality of life. A better quality of life means creating new jobs; it means ensuring that money is invested across the land, in every region; it means ensuring that people have a lower tax bill. That, Mr. Speaker, is what quality of life is all about. This is what the Conservative Party and the Conservative Government under the Prime Minister have been doing for three years.

Mr. Speaker, allow me a last quote.

On September 17, 1987, again, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, recognizing the political nature of the matter of flow-through shares, began his turnaround.

While in July, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) had said: We change nothing, in September the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said: Well, flow-through shares are not that bad. Then—it must have been in October or November—he went to Quebec and said: The frigates are coming to Quebec. While his Leader was in New Brunswick saying: This makes a lot of sense for New Brunswick—

An Hon. Member: And now he will go to Val-d'Or and suggest—

Mr. Vincent: —and now, I hope others will not be travelling across the country, Mr. Speaker, because we will have a problem with those frigates.

Mr. Speaker, in November 1987, the NDP minority report on tax reform recommended that the tax system be used to promote regional development.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP report that came out in November 1987 flies in the face of the national hearings they held in 1986. Because they held national hearings, they asked all Canadians for their views on the Canadian tax system. And as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, they made an awful noise with the tremendous work they had been doing to get the views of Canadians on the tax system. They had the views of Canadians that, lo and behold!, paralleled those of the Conservative Government, and now, one year later, they tell Canadians something else. That is the approach we took, the most profitable option.

Mr. Rossi: And then some more!

Mr. Vincent: I cannot answer that question, dear colleague.

It would seem that our small gang is more intelligent, there must be political gains to be made in some ridings of Quebec and elsewhere in Canada if we support flow-through shares, and since more people work with flow-through shares than there are rich people we will find a way to handle this. And that, Mr. Speaker, is the position of the NDP.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that I will vote against this motion and against the amendment of the Liberal Party because—

Mr. Rossi: Careful now!

Mr. Vincent: —I said so at the beginning of my remarks and I will repeat for the benefit of my colleague opposite: regional development comes under the ministry responsible for regional development, not under the Department of Finance. And we do not want to experience with the flow-through shares what the Liberal Party had to experience as a result of the scientific research tax credit which ended costing taxpayers a bundle but did not serve Canadians as had been expected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it is my conviction that when this particular tax incentive was first introduced during the last Liberal administration, I doubt very much whether the then Minister of Finance really had a full realization of just how successful this measure would become as a tool of regional economic development. I think most Members in the House will know that if one did a comprehensive history of regional development policies in the country, one would discover that none of them have been particularly successful. It is not an area in which any Government has a particularly enviable or strong record.

There have been all sorts of experiments. There have been all sorts of endeavours. On occasion, large sums of money have been directed toward regional development policies and programs. But we know that none of them have worked particularly well. When Mr. Lalonde brought in this tax incentive, I do not think for a moment that he realized that here was a major tool of regional economic development and that we were going to go a long way in solving the problems in the remote resource-rich regions of the country.

That is what has happened. It has become a major tool of regional economic development. It began modestly. But, today, in remote resource-rich regions of Canada such as northern Ontario, northern Quebec, Newfoundland, north of 60 and in the northern parts of the other provinces, it really is the only thing standing between economic depression or something close to it and a relative degree of economic activity and some prosperity.

For example, when we look at the statistics for Ontario, we see that unemployment is down and growth is up. I was at Mr. Peterson's dinner on Tuesday evening. He is taking full credit for all the activity that is going on in Ontario. I do not remember him mentioning at all that the federal Government had much to do with it.

Mr. Garneau: Because it is the truth.

Mr. Penner: It is the truth that the federal Government has contributed next to nothing to the prosperity of Ontario. But certainly the federal Government has done not much at all in the North where the rates of unemployment are considerably higher than they are throughout Ontario generally.

The point I am making is that northern Ontario is not participating in the over-all prosperity of the province. Our rates of unemployment are well above the national average. We are having serious difficulty in maintaining our population and enjoying the prosperity that the other citizens of the province enjoy.

The one thing that we do have going for us is a great deal of activity in the mineral exploration business. It is evidenced if one goes to the City of Timmins. It can be seen in smaller communities such as Longlac and Geraldton. Throughout the North one can name any number of communities in this regard. There is some economic activity being generated. The question is: Why is the mineral exploration business so active? Why is it contributing in such an unbalanced and significant way to the economy of the resource-rich regions? The answer is simple and straightforward. The answer is that the flow-through shares joined with the mining earned depletion allowance is what is having that effect.

A Sudbury chartered accountant calls this tax incentive, this flow through, the great unknown economic program. Austin Davey, the gentleman in question, is quoted in a journal called Northern Ontario Business as having said:

> The tip of the iceberg is the tax incentive, the rest of the iceberg is jobs and economic diversification in northern Canada.

In 1987 $1.1 billion was raised as a result of this tax incentive through the flow-through shares. Because mining exploration is labour intensive and because the mines are found in the North, the mechanism of flow-through shares is employing thousands of people in regions such as northern Ontario and the other ones I mentioned earlier.

I am participating in this debate simply to urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the strongest terms that I can find: "Please, do not destroy a tax incentive which is contributing so much to regional development".

The money available for exploration through the flow-through shares goes specifically to small and junior resource companies. That money is going to disappear entirely when this tax advantage becomes no more advantageous to the company in question or to the purchaser of the share than does buying an RRSP.

The Minister of Finance knows that it is not the big mining companies which are applying the pressure to preserve this investment scheme. Without flow-throughs the senior companies will be able to dominate the scene. They will be able to decide when exploration will take place. That will depend entirely on what is the world price of the mineral. If the world price goes up then there is exploration activity from the seniors. If the price goes down then the seniors become inactive and tend to put their money into other areas.

Once again, if we do not have the flow through and the mining earned depletion allowance, we are going to be back again into the boom and the bust cycle. That is something that we have been trying to avoid over the years with a variety of experiments in regional development.

This morning the Minister of Finance argued that it was not his tax reform policy that was the reason for the decline in investment for mining exploration. It is on the decline. He said, "Well, do not blame me. It is the state of mind of investors that has been caused by the stock market crash of last year". The Minister stated, "Investors are shy about buying equity, especially in areas like mining where the risk is high". I wish to tell the Minister of Finance that he has it all wrong. It is precisely because of the current attitude to the stock market that we need the full advantage of the flow-throughs. Flow-throughs become much less attractive if we do not have the 33 per cent mining earned depletion allowance. If we do not have that then junior stocks, which are among the highest risk investment in the stock exchanges, become totally unappealing to the investor. The advantage is needed to a greater extent today rather than when the market is buoyant. It is today we need it, and the Minister's explanation is very misleading.

• (1740)

To support this argument, I wish to refer to Mr. John Larche, President of the Prospectors and Developers Association, who makes the following statement in support of the view that I have just presented. He states:

> At present, flow-through is the only viable means of raising—capital for exploration. Neither of the normal alternative financing sources will provide the funds we need.
> Equity financing is crippled under present market conditions. And, in their current profit and cash positions, major companies will not have enough funds to keep up the momentum on exploration.

He further states:

> Close to $33 million were raised after the October crash for expenditure before the MEDA phase-down in July. This confirms the fact that flow-throughs can perform, despite the market conditions, and that they are being crippled by the impending tax reform measures.

To emphasize and underline the point, I understand why the Minister of Finance would say, "Don't blame me. Look somewhere else", but he is wrong. It is not the state of mind toward the stock market at present which is causing a decline in investment in mining exploration, it is because of the tax reform proposal which will do away with the 33 per cent MEDA.

For resource regions of this country the full tax advantage of flow-throughs is just as important as is the Auto Pact to the industrial regions of the country. It is just as important as the Auto Pact is to southern Ontario and to the automobile plants in the Province of Quebec.

I wish the House to know that, because of the flow-through shares, because of the mining earned depletion allowance, exploration activity in Canada has increased dramatically. There has been a 222 per cent increase in footage of diamond drilling in the last five years. Exploration efforts, largely due to the flow-through share financing, have brought about 34 new mines which are now committed to come on stream in 1987 and 1988. That is five times the typical average number of new projects, if that is taken over a period of time of the last 35 years. In addition, another 58 projects for future production are due to come forward as a result of the flow-through shares.

My hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) referred to another area, quite apart from mining, and this is a hydro project in my constituency at Yellow Falls on the Matagami River. The site location was approved by the Ministry of National Resources, a pre-feasibility study funded by the Ontario Ministry of Energy was completed, and the project was considered feasible. It is estimated that this small project in my constituency where jobs are desperately needed will create 50 man-years of employment to complete the project. The barrier which recently appeared was the new federal Budget which eliminated rapid depreciation or flow through and it could render the Yellow Falls project unfeasible.

I have many more arguments to advance, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude by saying to the Minister of Finance: "You are a reasonable man. You know the reality of the resource regions. Please reconsider, and do not spoil a tool for regional development which is as important as it has become".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply in accordance with Standing Order 82(9).

The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Garneau), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The question is on the main motion.

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suspect you will find there is unanimous consent to apply the last vote to this motion as well.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think that might be acceptable to the House with the exception of my colleague from Témiscamingue who I believe would like to vote with the Government on this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, on the main motion I want to vote with the Government and against the motion of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Prud'homme: Where is Mr. St. Julien?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cassidy), which was negatived on the following division.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLOTTED DAY VOTABLE OPPOSITION MOTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that this is an Opposition Day and what is called an allotted day. The Opposition has seen fit to make its motion a votable motion under Standing Order 82(9). In fact, the motion very clearly reflects the Government's position on NATO. Our Government has always been in full support of the role NATO plays in our individual security and defence. We have consistently reaffirmed our commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for NATO. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is returning today from NATO meetings in Brussels where he in turn reaffirmed this Government's and this country's support for this important organization.

We regret that the Opposition, whether purposely or inadvertently, has trivialized our country's position on this important organization by placing it on the Order Paper as a votable motion. The fact remains that this is a matter of confidence in accordance with our rules and traditions. Therefore, the Government has no choice but to vote against the motion.

I would also point out to the House that there have been nine Opposition Days since September 30, 1986, which have been designated votable. In each case the Government voted against the motion. The only exception was the matter of South Moresby where it was not a votable motion at the start and we came to an accommodation.

There are two aspects to this matter, and I will not take too much longer. There is the debate which the motion frames, and that is the subject of NATO and our country's support for it. Then there is the vote, which is a matter of confidence. The motion, as I suggested, is a clear reflection of the Government's policy but, I repeat, under the rules and traditions of this House the Government will be voting against the motion because it is a matter of confidence under Standing Order 82(9).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I could begin by in effect raising a point of order about the Hon. Member's point of order because he has made what amounts to a speech on the substance of the motion. I will not pursue that point but I will say that I do take grave exception to the comments of the Deputy Government House Leader in which he said that the Official Opposition is trivializing—that was his word—the important matter of Canada's role in and relations with NATO. How can a debate in the high court of Parliament, this House of Commons, on a subject be taken as trivialization of an issue? How can asking the House of Commons to pronounce itself by a vote be taken to be trivialization of an issue?

The fact of the matter is that it is because we consider the subject matter of the motion to be a profoundly important one for this House and this country that we have presented it for debate. It is because we consider it not only important but most relevant because of the NATO ministerial conference, which has just concluded, that we presented this motion.

I suggest that the Government has its perceptions and priorities completely upside down in raising a point of order in an attempt to challenge the importance of our motion in the way it did through the words of the Deputy Government House Leader.

I suppose the other point of the Deputy Government House Leader's point of order is that he wants to lay the groundwork for voting against the motion. He says, and I think these were his words, that the rules and traditions of this House make it necessary for the Government to vote against the motion because it is a matter of confidence. First, let me deal with the matter of the traditions of this House.

I say there are ample precedents dating as far back as 1951 for a Government to accept a motion like this by voting in favour of it. There are other precedents in 1952 and 1963 which support the view of the Official Opposition that if the Government agrees with the motion, as the Deputy Government House Leader claims it does, then it can vote for the motion without the matter of confidence being in play in any shape or form.

I want to tell this House that the speakers for the Official Opposition on this motion had intended to make clear, as I do now, that we will not consider this motion to be a matter of confidence such that the continuance in office of the Government will be placed in jeopardy through voting for it. That is the position we intended to make very clear and which I make clear now.

• (1010)

It is strange that the Deputy Government House Leader raises this point when the unanimous report of the McGrath Committee, for which the Government always takes credit, said that the Government should, more and more frequently, declare its willingness to accept motions like this on the basis that they do not amount to matters of confidence.

All the Government would have had to do would have been to have stood up on a point of order or in its principal response and say that it does not consider this a matter of confidence, and that would have been the end of the matter. The Deputy Government House Leader may suggest that there is something in the rules which makes this a matter of confidence. I say that that is not the case at all. I challenge the Deputy Government House Leader to show me, this House, and the country where the rules say that this is specifically a matter of confidence.

I regret, and I think the people of the country will regret, the position taken by the Deputy Government House Leader in his point of order, first, for trying to say that raising an issue in the high court of Parliament is a way of trivializing the issue. Those are strange words from a Party which claims that it is enhancing and wants to enhance the role of Parliament.

Second, we must regret that the Deputy Government House Leader is not making use of the clear traditions of this Parliament and the recommendations of the McGrath Committee to say that this is not a motion which puts the confidence in the Government in play, but rather that it is willing to support it because it is a sound idea for the country, an idea which the Deputy Government House Leader himself says reflects the policy of the Government.

I do not want to say more than that this is not a valid point of order. Above all, it should be a matter of regret that the Government is taking this position when it does not have to and could stand firm in support of a stronger role for Parliament and also for the policy it claims to support.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I tend to agree with the point made by the Deputy House Leader in that if the Liberal Party were serious in its initiative this morning there is no reason why it could not have included, as part of the motion, wording indicating that this motion was not a non-confidence motion.

Mr. Gauthier: We didn't, that's the point.

Mr. Riis: Just to make it very clear, if the Liberal Party had been serious in its efforts today, wording indicating that there was no question of confidence or non-confidence could have been included in the text of the motion itself. Therefore, I tend to agree that there seems to be some element of playing loose and free with the rules of the House on this issue this morning.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to reinforce the points made by my House Leader, which I thought were very convincing and, indeed, to the point. I hear laughter from over there. Evidently those people do not know or do not remember what was adopted by this House and what the purpose of the reform of the rules of the House was.

If you do not mind, Mr. Speaker, I will read from page 106 of the report itself where it says that it is not for the Speaker to decide what is confidence. Section 41 reads:

> Your Committee notes that the Standing Orders, as presently worded, declare to be "no-confidence" those votable motions which are moved by the Opposition on allotted days. We repeat that a question of confidence should be expressed in precise terms in the motion, and not be prescribed as such by the Standing Orders.
> Previous speakers have indicated that the determination of what is, or is not, a question of confidence is not a matter for interpretation by the Chair. We agree that this expression ought not to be used in the Standing Orders to predetermine the nature of a motion.

Section 42 is very relevant. It reads:

> Your Committee therefore recommends that all references to confidence be removed from the Standing Orders——and they have, in fact, been removed—

> —recognizing, however, the right of any Member presenting a motion to frame the motion itself in confidence terms.

That answers my friend, the socialist, over here. We did not frame our motion in confidence terms. We framed it because we believe it is important for the country to know where the Government, the Opposition, and the socialists stand on the issue. It is a political debate. That is what this House is all about and we think that the point of order on this question is absolutely irrelevant to the discussion at hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the interventions and will, of course, as always, consider them because it is appropriate to do so. However, under the circumstances, I think that the point of order, as the Minister of State has put it, is not one, under the circumstances and looking at the terms of the motion for today, upon which the Chair ought to comment at all. In fact, I doubt very much whether the Chair has any authority under the rules to make any comment. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—NATO—COMMITMENT TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION AND SUPPORT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke) moves:

> That this House recognizes the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to echo the comments made by my House Leader and the Whip. It is rather interesting that with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his way home from NATO meetings in Brussels, having used a great deal of rhetoric there to reinforce the Government's image, a Minister of the Crown is standing up here in the House saying that the motion which you have just read is a trivial matter of discussion in the House of Commons. That surely does not state very clearly that the Government is in total sympathy with NATO. We know that the Government says it is, but if it is against having a day's debate in this House on NATO, what in the world is this Parliament all about?

Such a debate as this is not held in Parliament only for the sake of a debate on NATO. Thousands and thousands of Canadians and people from other countries have been slaughtered in battles because there were no serious attempts to prevent. NATO is an alliance for peace. Some people call it a warmongering organization, but that is absolutely false.

NATO is an intergovernmental organization wherein Governments have a chance to talk among themselves and to have discussions with major opponents in the world. It is essentially, above all, a defensive alliance. In peacetime, national forces receive orders only from their own authorities. The military task of NATO in peacetime is to draw up joint defence plans to provide for the best possible use of NATO forces without delay in the event of war. This military preparedness is aimed, above all, at preventing war.

I want to emphasize that those people who have died for Canada over the years would be proud to know that a debate like this is taking place today because it would have been very good for them indeed if the war in which they participated had been prevented by constructive measures. That is why this Parliament must discuss these important matters as time goes on. The Liberal Party not only continues to support NATO but in fact played a major role in the founding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

We know that the Soviet Union did not disarm willingly following World War II, making the cold war too cold to tolerate. Therefore, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was formed.

The growth of the Russian Navy following the Cuban crisis brought a dimension other than ground and air forces into perspective internationally. Without NATO's firm resolve in the late 1970s and early 1980s to upgrade its aging weaponry in Europe, chances are that a treaty to reduce intermediate nuclear weapons may not have been signed in Washington last December. If common sense prevails, this treaty will be approved and others will follow for the benefit of all mankind.

The New Democratic Party has been opposed to Canada's membership in NATO, but since we have been a NATO member since its beginning, under the Louis St. Laurent Government, in which the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson was Secretary of State for External Affairs and with whose assistance that alliance for peace was originated, Canada can claim to be a member of a NATO team that is truly working toward peace in the world and, at the same time, a member of a defence team of NATO countries working toward peace and security for Canadians and all mankind.

I remind Canadians that it was the Government of Louis St. Laurent under the leadership of Lester Pearson, Secretary of State for External Affairs, that Canada gave its consent and indeed promoted the formation of the NATO alliance.

The aims of NATO today are the reduction of nuclear and conventional arms. The continued cohesiveness of the NATO alliance is extremely important. Deterrence is necessary. The Soviet nuclear and conventional power is strong, and European free countries cannot deal with it alone. As the nuclear threat is reduced, so must the conventional arms threat be reduced. Certain elements of the Armed Forces in the Warsaw Pact outnumber NATO forces by three to one. Therefore, we cannot remove the nuclear protection while leaving the European continent at the mercy of an overdose of conventional power.

Europeans have vivid memories and know that the balance of power is the key to world peace in any generation. It was true yesterday, it is valid today, and will be valid tomorrow. That is why this debate is taking place in the House today and why my House Leader emphasized that it is a sad day for Parliament when a Minister of the Crown stands up to say that this is a trivial debate.

After the Government released its White Paper on defence, the Prime Minister and Ministers of the Crown have travelled throughout Canada and the world praising the Government for its efforts on behalf of NATO and defence in Canada. Yet the Conservative White Paper on defence released on June 5, 1987, is one of the biggest political ploys ever perpetrated on Canadians. It gives the impression that the Tory Government will do more for defence than has ever been done before when, in fact, it promises less growth than the Canadian forces have seen in years.

The defence White Paper is to be sold to Canadians like a new product line, with fancy wrapping accompanied by familiar Tory rhetoric. "Honour the commitment" was a great slogan of the Tories during the last election campaign and is still used to make sure that the Tory rhetoric on Canadian defence is driven home. Indeed, it seems that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) is honing his skills as a super-salesman. I will give him credit for being a super-salesman, who can make a 50-cent piece look like a dollar. He has planned his salesmanship job of the White Paper so well that even the experts tend to believe him.

The Minister of National Defence has used two major ploys to make his White Paper look like big news. He has highlighted his intention to purchase 10 or 12 nuclear-powered submarines and has lumped 15 years of defence budgets together, totalling $183 billion, which is a 2 per cent real increase in spending per year.

This has been done to create a positive impression about the Tory commitment to defence. Some people are already confused because they believe the Government is spending $183 billion on submarines.

Let us carefully examine some of these statements and compare them with what the Conservative Government has promised and actually done for defence since taking office. First, during the last election campaign, the Conservatives promised a 6 per cent annual real growth in defence spending. They have been trying to evade that promise ever since, and during their first three years in office only once exceeded over one per cent in real growth. As a matter of fact, in the 1985-86 fiscal year the Government did not even meet the rate of inflation, which resulted in a 0.7 per cent loss in the real growth of purchasing power of the Department of National Defence.

When campaigning in New Brunswick in August, 1984, the Prime Minister stated that a Conservative Government would increase the regular personnel in the Canadian Armed Forces to 90,000 within three years. His three years were up last September and the numbers in the Armed Forces according to the Defence Department's own White Paper stood at 84,600. No promise has been kept or even seriously addressed.

When the Prime Minister was overseas he stated to the troops at Lahr, West Germany:

> Since our Government took office in 1984 we have increased the Armed Forces strength to 86,000, with a target of 90,000 by the next century.

However, during the last election campaign he said in New Brunswick that there will be 90,000 in the Armed Forces by September, 1987. It is that kind of rhetoric and inaccuracy to which I am referring.

He went on to say in West Germany on March 1:

> We have also made a commitment to increase defence spending significantly each year for the next 15 years, while most other government programs are being contained or reduced in real terms.
> In the coming fiscal year alone, we will spend $11.2 billion on defence, an increase of more than 6 per cent over this year.

The Prime Minister forgot to deduct the 4 per cent inflation rate from that. We know from the Estimates that were tabled in the House last week that the real increase in defence this year is 2.1 per cent. Why did he not tell those 2,000 troops the facts instead of putting them in such unrealistic terms?

Let us seriously look at some of the statements the Government has been making. Let us talk, first, about equipment. When the Conservatives came to office they tried to claim all previous Liberal initiatives for purchases of equipment as if those purchases were their own. Erik Nielsen even froze many ongoing activities while he was completing his so-called government program review. Later the Conservative Government re-announced these initiatives as if they were Tory initiatives, but they had been announced by the previous Liberal Government.

Since coming to office the Conservatives have more or less left unaltered the basic plan regarding equipment modernization and new acquisitions put in place by the Liberal Government after 1975, and vigorously pursued in the early 1980s. This plan included projects all initiated by the Liberal Government. With respect to the navy, there was the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program, three batches of six totalling 18 new ships. The decision to move ahead with this program was made by the Liberal Government in 1983.

The Minister of National Defence in his White Paper cut back from 18 ships to 12 ships to help pay for the nuclear-powered submarines. The Tribal Class update modernization project involves upgrading and maintenance work on our four newest ships. That decision was made in 1983 under a Liberal Government.

With respect to the destroyer life extension project, a background information document on the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program, published by the Liberal Government in June of 1983, states:

> The Destroyer Life Extension Program has already begun and encompasses 54 separate projects designed to ensure that 16 steam driven destroyers maintain an acceptable level of operability and combat capability until the arrival of new frigate replacements.

The Sea King helicopter replacement program and submarine replacement program were under discussion as early as the 1980s. With respect to the air force, the C-18 fighter aircraft, a contract to purchase 138 planes was signed in 1980. Delivery started at two planes per month in 1982 under a Liberal Government. The last delivery will take place in late 1988. I would like to read an excerpt from the Toronto Star which talks about the Prime Minister:

> His 20 minute speech was preceded by two hours of colourful photo opportunities for television cameras, during which Mulroney watched infantry troops perform military manoeuvres with blank ammunition.
> He later posed with a CF-18 fighter plane and a Leopard tank.

Can you not see, Mr. Speaker, in the next election campaign the Prime Minister of Canada, with the television cameras rolling, standing beside a CF-18 aircraft, the contract for which was signed and delivery begun under a Liberal Government? Again the Tory Government is trying to take credit for the whole operation.

The 18 long-range patrol aircraft, the CF-140 Aurora, were acquired in the late 1970s and are at the leading edge of surveillance technology. They have been instrumental in sovereignty missions in the North and along our coasts. They are considered to be the best anti-submarine warfare aircraft in the world. They were purchased by a Liberal Government.

A space based satellite surveillance project was authorized in the early 1980s. The North Warning System modernization program, about which the Government is making so much fuss, was to replace the DEW Line. Negotiations with the United States were authorized by the previous Liberal Government in 1983 and were 90 per cent completed before the Conservatives even took office.

Again I refer to the Prime Minister not only posing with a C-18 aircraft, but he is also posing with a Leopard tank. The Leopard tanks were purchased by a Liberal Government in 1976.

In 1980-81 there was 4 per cent real growth in defence under a Liberal Government. There was 7.5 per cent real growth in defence in 1981-82 under a Liberal Government. There was 6 per cent real growth in defence in 1982-83, 9.2 per cent real growth in 1983-84, and 8.9 per cent real growth in 1984-85. Under the Conservative Government, by comparison, in 1985-86, its first Budget, there was a 0.7 per cent loss in defence purchasing power which did not even cover inflation, a 2.75 per cent increase in 1986-87, and its projected growth in 1987-88 is around 1 per cent or a little better.

The Government is making all kinds of promises with respect to the reserves. The fact is that it has neglected the reserves. I would like to quote from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press on January 23, 1988 which quotes the Minister of Defence as stating:

> We intend to see these citizens—soldiers, sailors and aviators—receive the recognition they deserve and we will give them a priority they have not had for several decades.

The article continues:

> Evidence of this new priority was received by reserve units in Winnipeg this week. They have been told that in the coming year they will have to get by with 12.5 per cent less training time than they had this year.

Other units have had their training time cut in half. This is the real emphasis the Tory Government is putting on the reserves. The increase in the reserve budget this year was about 3.5 per cent. The inflation rate is running at 4 per cent. The inflation cost is not even being met. That is why there is not enough money and the training time for the reserves must be reduced, and this is after giving them all these promises.

The present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) rose in the House one day when he was the Associate Minister of National Defence and stated that the Budgets of the Hon. Marc Lalonde back in 1983-84 projected a decline in defence spending. I have the Estimates before me and they say, about the commitment of the Liberal Government in the Budget of the Hon. Marc Lalonde in 1984, that if that Government had remained in office it would have been spending as much in defence last year as the Conservatives are this year, and last year it was $800 million below the projections in the Hon. Marc Lalonde's Budget.

Let us get rid of this rhetoric that the Liberals have done nothing for defence and that the Tories are doing everything. The Tories since taking office have been trying to take credit for all our programs as they come on stream. The Prime Minister goes to a military base and has his picture taken with the troops beside the equipment which was purchased under a Liberal Government, and Canadians will see this in the next election campaign. They will see that tape rolling.

I simply want to say in conclusion that the Liberal Party supports NATO. We support security and support all efforts for peace and disarmament which NATO is all about. Instead of using the rhetoric that it is doing things which it is not in fact doing, the Government should get on with it and do what the Liberals did in the late 1970s and early 1980s and increase its budget for defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking later on today in this debate, but I thought I should comment because after listening to my friend who just sat down I am totally confused. I do not think he has read his own motion, to begin with. In the first place, a motion of this kind really should be put forward by an external affairs critic, because it is major external policy, not a former defence critic. However, that is not the important thing. The important thing is that the Member has in his motion a pivotal clause dealing with arms control and disarmament and all he has talked about throughout his entire 20 minute speech is the inadequacy of the Government in not promoting arms, in not buying more tanks, more ships, more planes, and not pursuing a more aggressive policy in acquiring greater assets for defence.

• (1040)

I find this totally inconsistent with the motion as well as with the mood and the tone of the international regimen at this time, even between the two superpowers in efforts to bring some sanity back into militarism or arms control and to try to get across some limitations and reductions in both nuclear and conventional weapons in order to bring down the intensity that has existed in the world for so many years. Here we have a former defence critic of the Liberal Party saying that Canada is not doing enough to acquire more arms, more guns, more tanks, more planes and so on.

I fail to see any logic at all in the Hon. Member's speech. I say that with due respect. It is patently obvious that the Hon. Member did not study his own motion.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) is upset. We all know where his Party stands with regard to NATO. He totally overlooked the fact that I very clearly said, and I will repeat it again for his benefit, that the balance of power in the world is the key to world peace. That is what NATO is all about.

I also stated, something which the Hon. Member obviously did not hear, that there are areas in conventional arms in which the Soviet Union or the Warsaw Pact bloc outnumbers the NATO forces by three to one. How can the Hon. Member stand here today and say that it is not important for NATO countries such as Canada to continue to modernize our forces the way we have been doing over a number of years or that we continue to train first-class people in the Armed Forces today? That is part of the balance of power in the world. That is part of the balance of power that will maintain world peace.

I also stated, something which the Hon. Member obviously did not catch, that if it had not been for the determination and cohesiveness of the NATO alliance in the late 1970s and the early 1980s when it wanted to upgrade its missiles in Europe we would not have had the recent signing of the agreement in Washington to downgrade the number of nuclear missiles in the world today. That is the key.

The Hon. Member for Brant can get up and make all the excuses he likes for the New Democratic Party. He may have to make a few more yet, for all we know. But the fact remains that Remembrance Day is not something that we think about on November 11 alone. It is the duty of every Member of Parliament and of every Canadian to think of every day of the year as a remembrance day. It is our duty to try to prevent another war, not to sit back looking weak. Wars begin when one bully gets strong and decides he can take on everyone else. That is why it is important that we have this motion today. The Hon. Member may interpret it as he likes. That is the guts of world peace. That is the purpose of this important discussion in the House of Commons.

I say bravo to anyone who is willing to work toward maintaining a balance of power in the world. By doing that we are in fact supporting world peace and the prevention of another world war, something which none of us want to see. It cannot be done by sitting back looking pansy-eyed and not looking after one's own backyard.

Let me say that my speech was totally related to the subject at large. It cannot be carried out if we do not have the budget commitment. We will not do it if we do not upgrade our Armed Forces. If we are to say today, "Well, it looks as if everyone is getting nice and friendly", we want to promote that. There is no doubt about it. That would be what the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson would have wanted us to do. He was one of the greatest diplomats the country has seen in a long time. He was one of those who worked on the founding of NATO. Surely, he would be in favour of this debate in the House today. He would also be in favour of a Liberal standing up in the House today talking about a balance of power in the world while at the same time being vigilant. That is the message that must get across.

When the Prime Minister gets up to say that he will do more and do great things for the forces, then he should do them. But on the basis of the figures that I put on the record today he should not go around saying that the previous Government did not do anything. If we had not increased the budget dramatically in the early 1980s, this Government would have had peanuts to work with today in the form of a budget. It has not even kept its own commitment. It has not put the 6 per cent in. Indeed, in its first year in power it put in less than the rate of inflation. It put in very little last year, and there was $800 million less than the projected figure in Marc Lalonde's Liberal Budget of 1984.

To my New Democratic friend I say, with the greatest respect, let us relate to the facts of life. Let us say that these things do relate to NATO and to international affairs. They do relate to the future safety of the world.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have just one supplementary question to ask of the Hon. Member. Following along with the Hon. Member's logic, the only question I have to ask is this. If his Government had done so much in the area of defence, then why is it that it allowed the Canadian navy virtually to rust out so that successive Governments, including the present one, and after that the next Government, if we are to retain a navy, will have to spend literally hundreds of millions of dollars to bring the navy into the 1980s, let alone the 1990s or the year 2000? That was one of the major points, although I do not agree that we should be spending billions of dollars on nuclear-propelled ships, and neither does my Party. I think it would logically follow from the Liberals position that they actually should be supporting the nuclear submarine program if they are so gung-ho to bring the navy up to NATO standards. There is an inconsistency there. On the one hand the Liberals allowed the old navy to rust out, while on the other they refused to accept the fact that in military terms, to go along with the major NATO powers, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, one would think that the Hon. Member would be advocating that his Party should support nuclear submarines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke has one minute in which to answer the question.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is saying at the same time that he does not support the spending of money on defence—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I did not say that at all.

Mr. Hopkins: —and at the same time he is asking why the Liberals did not spend more money. I have outlined our budgets here in very clear terms and in clear-cut percentages. The increases are there to see. I outlined the programs that were introduced for the upgrading of the navy and for the Government of the day to bring on program 18 frigates. The present Government has cut that back to 12 to help pay for its nuclear-powered submarines. I simply say to the Hon. Member that I think he is paranoid in the position of his own Party on NATO. I can understand that.

I just want to say again that the Liberals are the ones who put the budget in place today that is really propping up the Government. It did not put the commitment into that budget as it said it would during the last election campaign.

I read this morning the speech the Prime Minister made overseas to the troops. It was rather interesting. He too has been naming programs and giving the Government credit for actual equipment and programs that were introduced by a Liberal Government.

In conclusion I say to the Hon. Member for Brant that the Liberal Party is the Party that brought the defence budget to the point it is at today. We will continue to support NATO very strongly. We will continue a program of upgrading our conventional arms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) on debate.

• (1050)

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the first speaker, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). I also listened intently to the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I find that I have to agree with some of his first comments.

I read the motion we are looking at today and it talks about the House recognizing "the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy".

In the House of Commons sometimes we engage in fractious partisan debate which becomes quite unseemly. On other occasions it seems to me that the House of Commons rises above that and talks about some very important principles in this world; it talks about peace, disarmament, and what we should do in a philosophical way for defence and maintaining our sovereignty and security.

After reading this motion I was utterly astounded to realize that the Member who proposed it did not want to talk about the motion at all. He only wanted to do a lambasting of the Government and promoting of what he thought the Liberal Party was supposed to have done many years before, rah-rah, hoorah-hoorah! He has denigrated the significance of this important motion that we have before us today.

Quite frankly, I did not readily come prepared to talk on defence of the Government's spending Estimates and Budget versus what the Liberals thought they were doing over the last number of years. But I am quite prepared to enter a debate like that at almost any time, because I think it is so obvious to all the people in the Armed Forces and to Canadians that finally we have a game plan to do something with defence in this country. I came prepared to discuss and debate what the motion said, which is arms control and disarmament, and NATO playing a pivotal role in our security and playing a role in peace in this country. I am very depressed and upset at the rather partisan, ridiculous, and hypocritical approach taken by the Liberals in talking about the topic that they introduced.

When I first came in here there was a question on a point of order on whether or not we should support the motion. Sometimes there are differences even within a Party. We had a procedural problem facing a practical problem. I would like to support the motion, and in fact I would support the motion if somebody talked to the motion.

But I am very happy to vote against the motion after having heard the speech of the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke because he never spoke about the motion at all. I have no intention of supporting what he has put up as a cloud, a camouflage, or a smoke-screen for attacking the Government. If the Hon. Member sincerely meant what he stated in his motion, his speech would have been entirely different. The House is somewhat of a lesser place because he has not been able to do so.

I wish to quote the first and opening paragraph of the treaty of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as adopted on April 4, 1949 in Washington. It states:

> The Parties to this Treaty reaffirm their faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and their desire to live in peace with all peoples and all Governments.
> They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage and civilization of their peoples, founded on the principles of democracy, individual liberty and the rule of law.
> They seek to promote stability and well-being in the North Atlantic area.
> They are resolved to unite their efforts for collective defence for the preservation of peace and security.
> They therefore agree to this North Atlantic Treaty:

There are a number of articles listed thereunder.

At the time this alliance was founded, the then Prime Minister, Louis St. Laurent, stated, "This treaty is to be far more than an old-fashioned military alliance. It is based on the common belief of the North Atlantic nations and the values and virtues of our civilization". That, Mr. Speaker, is still the view that Canadians hold and which successive Governments have held, some more strongly than others, since 1949.

The voices that cry out for the withdrawal from NATO on the grounds that Europe is now rich enough to look after itself, and that memberships in alliances inhibit our freedom of action in searching for peace, carry the wrong message about Canada to our allies, friends, and those countries which have a common heritage and a common free democratic society philosophy such as we are ourselves. NATO is much more a political than it is a military alliance. Many people do not realize this, but it was created under the authority of Article 51 of the United Nations whereby NATO was set up, and that opening paragraph which I quoted makes reference to contributing to the maintenance of peace by making clear its determination to exercise the right of individual or collective self-defence. That is a quote from Article 51 of the UN Charter. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is embodied and we are given permission by the UN body to set up the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

I know this will sound a little like cold war rhetoric, and I do not wish it to sound that way, but why did we go into NATO? One historian has stated that you have to understand and believe your history, otherwise you are about to repeat it. For the sake of going through it, let me record that there were a group of forces in the world of countries which did not concur in our free democratic philosophy and the way that we would like to run our society and our country. Of course, that group has been headed by a country referred to as Russia or the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Let us look at the record that it has. We could start back in 1939-40. It invaded Finland, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia. It moved into the Balkans and into its sphere of influence. It moved into Czechoslovakia and took it over, and it moved into Germany. After that there was a pause, and perhaps everybody in the cold war was standing off and saying that that was the way it was going to be.

But Hungary tried to break away, so Russia ruthlessly came in and crushed it. Then Czechoslovakia had a breath of fresh air, and the Russians and their colleagues came in and ruthlessly crushed them. In more recent years, just to show that perhaps they have not always changed over the 50 years in which they have been using their muscle, they invaded Afghanistan, and now are involved heavily in Ethiopia, Angola, and Cuba. Over 50 years, Russia does not have a great record in which we can have a lot of faith or a reason for laying down our arms and believing that it wants peace.

Let us be honest. In the last two years there has been a breath of fresh air coming from the Russians. Their leader, Mr. Gorbachev, in his discussions about glasnost has given us pause and the thought that perhaps the leopard has changed its spots. Let us take a look at this new opportunity. That does not mean that we should immediately lay down our arms while we look and analyse. For example, Russia throws out certain things which may fool some people. For example, it wishes to have a peace zone in the Arctic. We have to look at the peace zone that it is proposing in the Arctic. It wants a peace zone in the Arctic which will cover the Canadian North, cover the Scandinavian countries, and will take away the nuclear deterrent submarines that the Americans have and make an area of peace in the North Atlantic up through Iceland and between Iceland and England. But let us take a look at Russia's side of the Arctic. If it truly wanted to have a zone of peace in the Arctic and denuclearize the Arctic, then it would have to move out all of its nuclear submarines which are stationed in its Arctic territory, if they are not down in Vladivostok or in the Pacific.

• (1100)

The Russians have a massive nuclear fleet in the Arctic Ocean, and they have not proposed to take it away. The most highly intensive, built-up nuclear and military area in the world is the Kola Peninsula, just up from Murmansk. They have not suggested that they will take away everything in that area.

May I call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and continue at twelve o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister.

It being eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

AEROSPACE

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH SPACE AGENCY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, March 6, the federal Conservative caucus will meet in Ottawa.

I would like to ask my colleagues and friends in the Quebec caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party in Ottawa to convince the Government that it should make a decision now about the space agency and in accordance with the hopes of the entire population of Greater Montreal, declare Montreal "spatial"; and that it should make this decision, which is a very important one, not just for the sake of the economy of the City of Montreal but for that of the entire province.

HUMAN RIGHTS

LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION FOR UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Morgentaler case has led to much debate on the abortion issue in Canada. However, far from vesting an unrestricted right to abortion, the decision provides the possibility for changes in the law more favourable to the preservation of foetal life. We, as parliamentarians, must now make grave decisions that will have a life or death impact on our unborn.

Science has confirmed that life begins at conception. A human being's genetic individuality remains unchanged from conception to death. The foetus is but the weakest stage of life. It is also the only time in our lives during which we now have no rights.

All who claim to be civilized and interested in human rights or civil liberties must be concerned with the arguments that allow the taking of life by abortion. What is the morally relevant distinction between the foetus before birth and a child after birth, such that we say one has the right to life and the other does not?

We must therefore ensure that new legislation provides the most basic of rights, the right to life, for our unborn children.

TRANSPORT

RAIL LINE REHABILITATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of branch-line abandonment, formally known as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), has announced the 1988 Prairie Rail Line Rehabilitation Program, the farmers of Kelvington, Saskatchewan would like to know whether their rail line is eligible for the $20 million which was allocated but which the Minister has again withheld from this year's program.

Furthermore, I question why the Minister has proceeded with such a meagre program for 1988, when the viability of many farming communities is at stake. The Minister is rewriting the commitment to farm communities by refusing to fund the rehabilitation of lines which have already received formal, committed approval from the Government of Canada.

Instead, he has now put out a once in a lifetime trucking proposal, which is not a formal commitment on the part of the Government. It is simply a red herring to get people off the idea of having their lines rehabilitated. Indeed I think the Government has reached the end of the line with this kind of action.

FINANCE

LOWERING OF LOAN INTEREST RATES

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is high time that interest rates in Canada began to decline and decline on two fronts.

First, with inflation in Canada now stable and with our foreign exchange reserves ballooning, as indicated in today's paper, as speculators take advantage of the relatively high interest rates of the Bank of Canada, the Governor of the bank should be taking the opportunity to curb speculation and to assist business capital spending by lowering the central bank rate.

At the same time, after a record profit year in 1987 on their Canadian operations, Canadian chartered banks today again demonstrated strong profits, with the Bank of Commerce showing an increase of 35 per cent over last year. Consumers, too, should be benefiting from these increasing spreads by having banks lower their loan interest rates.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE PROFESSORS—REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, 700 language teachers in the Public Service have been without a contract at least since August 1986, and they now must resort to strikes to make the employer respect their rights acquired through collective bargaining.

These language teachers are now working the same number of hours as their counterparts in secondary schools. Like other teachers, they need time to prepare their classes and correct work. However, Treasury Board now wants the teachers to teach their classes without any preparation, for up to 37 hours a week.

Mr. Speaker, the Government should show its good faith and at least respect the teachers' existing rights.

I urge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) to go back to the bargaining table with a more reasonable offer, so as to end a labour conflict that has caused so much inconvenience, which is in fact his fault. If he refuses, Canadians will have to believe the Conservatives have yet to make a genuine commitment to federal bilingualism in Canada.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION DEPARTMENT—DELAY IN CREATION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the four western diversification offices have fielded over 40,000 calls and 2,000 business proposals and have met with 3,000 clients while funding 262 projects so far.

Last month in Edmonton the Minister announced a $9.5 million commitment to Daishowa Canada to help build a $500 million pulp mill which will utilize aspen trees, a never before used resource that abounds in northern Alberta. This mill alone will create 630 direct jobs and 1,200 indirect jobs when completed. In December the Minister committed $7.75 million to develop and construct an $18 million engineering facility in Edmonton.

I believe the soon to be created department of western economic diversification marks the first time a federal government Department has been established with headquarters outside Ottawa.

I urge the opposition to stop delaying the legislation any further and to let this important government initiative go forward quickly.

S.O. 21

CROWN CORPORATIONS—TABLING OF REPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government claims to be able to manage the economy efficiently. Well, here is a good test.

The Deputy Prime Minister and President of Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) has just tabled an overview of how well his Government met its reporting responsibilities for Crown corporations.

Last year there were 237 reports and documents which the Government was to table by set dates. In only 55 per cent of cases was the statutory deadline met. In 106 cases the Government blew it. In 20 cases, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, by its own admission the Government failed to make its reports even by the end of 1987. In one case that included a report still overdue from 1986.

So much for the Government's competence.

WOMEN

SUCCESS OF TWELFTH REGIONAL ATOM HOCKEY TOURNAMENT

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, who says women cannot do as much as men? In my riding of La Prairie, and more specifically, in the City of Brossard, a regional Atom Hockey Tournament was held from February 20 to 28. Sixty-four teams from the area took part. As you know, Mr. Speaker, sport is a training ground for young people to learn friendship, discipline, how to participate and also how to compete.

It was a wonderful sight to see these 10-to-12-year-olds give everything they had to win the gold medal, like the Olympic gold medal in Calgary, and always in a spirit of friendship. Who knows, some of them may be future Olympic athletes!

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the women, a women's committee worked more than five months to make Brossard's twelfth tournament a success. Mr. Speaker, it was a success. Everything went off perfectly, even better than expected.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add except: Three cheers for the women!

FISHERIES

INDUSTRY STOPPAGE IN B.C.—GATT RULING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, work in the B.C. fishing industry has been stopped today to protest the incompetence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). These two Ministers fail to protect the B.C. fishing industry before the GATT panel, which has made a preliminary ruling which could cost B.C. 7,500 fishing industry jobs.

The Progressive Conservatives combined with B.C.'s Social Credit are the lethal combination of gutlessness and sheer incompetence. Following the feeble and failing attempts before the GATT panel, the Tories bumbled again by signing in to the Mulroney-Reagan deal a guarantee to abide by GATT rulings, and then bumbled again by protecting all provincial fisheries regulations except for B.C., and then bumbled again by failing to negotiate forcefully with the U.S. to head off a ruling by GATT later this month.

It is clear now that the B.C. fishing industry deserves the support of working people across the country to counter the incompetence of the Minister of Fisheries who has placed a $750 million B.C. fishing industry at risk. It is time for some political will, an attribute sadly lacking in the Mulroney-Vander Zalm administrations. They have been caught trying to give away Canadian jobs. It is time for all Canadians to say no.

BANKS AND BANKING

IMPOSITION OF SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a constituent has brought to my attention another example of the petty fogging, self-serving, money grubbing personal service charges being imposed by our chartered banks. A year and a half ago he obtained a car loan from the Bank of Nova Scotia and agreed to make a monthly payment at any branch in the amount of $200.30.

A few weeks ago, at a branch of the Scotiabank at O'Connor Drive and St. Clair Avenue, Toronto, he was told that he could not make his payment in cash unless he also paid a $2 service charge to cover the cost of the receipt. My constituent points out that over the five year period of the loan he will have paid $3,164.72 in interest and reasonably believes that that should cover the cost of receipting.

Is it any wonder that the banks are losing credibility with the public? This service charge is contrary to the written agreement that the bank issued this customer when the loan was arranged. It has been arbitrarily imposed, without notice, and for no clear and sufficient reason. It is no wonder that many Canadians believe that the banks are imposing these charges, not to pay for services rendered but to make up revenue losses incurred by the banks' own management mistakes. Overcharging the public is the basic reason for the profits they are claiming.

TRADE

CMHC LOWERING OF STANDARDS—PLYWOOD TARIFFS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I want to alert Canadians on yet another possible free trade cave-in by this Conservative Government.

A section of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement calls for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to decide by March 15, 1988—which is next week—whether it will accept U.S. CD grade plywood for use in housing financed by CMHC. The agreement also calls for the complete phase-out of the plywood tariffs over the next 10 years. But the problem, Mr. Speaker, is that U.S. Congressmen demand that in order to phase out the tariff on plywood over the next 10 years, Canada must lower its standards to that of the United States.

At the present time, CMHC requires that plywood used in housing financed by CMHC to be grade CC, a higher grade than used by the U.S., which is CD grade. I can assure you that not one Canadian would want to see us lower our standard in order to please the U.S.

I urge the Minister responsible for housing to resist caving in under this obvious and unfair threat.

FREE TRADE

SUPPORT BY ONTARIO MINING ASSOCIATION

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Mining Association in a letter to me dated January 18, 1988 wishes to reiterate its support for the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. The OMA represents some 40 producing mines located across Ontario. Canada-wide, the non-fuel minerals industry employed directly some 108,000 people in 1986 and exported about $10.6 billion worth of minerals to the U.S. markets. The letter concludes:

> We believe that a move to freer trade is to the benefit of our industry in Ontario and Canada.

In northern Ontario the mining industry has been built upon the ideals of free trade. The increased security of market access provided by the agreement in combination with increased profitability due to tariff elimination will generate new investment. New investment means more jobs and more secure jobs for the people of northern Ontario who already form 73 per cent of the province's mining industry jobs.

The Canada-U.S. trade agreement is a good one for northern Ontario, for Canadians and for the mining industry.

ENERGY

CHURCHILL FALLS HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RESOLUTION OF DISPUTE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, on December 7, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from Manicouagan offered to take a hand in settling the long-standing dispute between Newfoundland and Quebec over Churchill Falls. Again, on April 19, 1985, the Prime Minister said in the House of Commons:

> —I am working on draft terms of reference whereby the federal Government might properly involve itself in co-operation with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Government of Quebec—

In June, 1986, the Prime Minister said:

> The federal Government will consider how it might properly involve itself—

On August 28, 1986, Premier Peckford said he, the Prime Minister, said to me:

> —I'll be talking to Mr. Bourassa soon.

From 1984 to 1988 the Prime Minister has promised to do something about an important project in a province which will be running out of hydroelectricity by 1990. I call on him now to stop the rhetoric and actually do something to bring about this important hydroelectric project, which is not only important for my province, but for the whole country.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

COST OF LEGAL SERVICES—JEAN SIROIS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the legal fees of the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Jean Sirois, who was paid $400,000 for two cases that he worked on which have shocked the wits out of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Yesterday in the House, the Minister of Justice said, concerning the Javelin case in particular, that Mr. Sirois had been paid for "services rendered", an answer quite different from that of the Government officials who could not even justify why Mr. Sirois was hired or even what work he did.

Given that in the Javelin case Mr. Sirois was appointed immediately prior to the case going to trial; given that the trial lasted 66 days and he was paid $195,000, a grand total of $3,000 a day, can the Deputy Prime Minister stand up in this House today and justify that kind of billing? Isn't this a bit much, even for a friend of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Javelin file, as I indicated, is a file which the Government has had ongoing for about two decades.

A trial took place but that decision is being appealed, and Mr. Sirois was one of the co-counsel. Mr. Sirois is with a 22 person law firm with offices in Quebec City and Montreal. He performed legal services for the Government in respect to that file. I understand most of the work has now been completed in terms of the appeal, but as long as that case remains outstanding the Government will require legal counsel to represent its interests.

Mr. Boudria: That answer, of course, has nothing to do with the question I asked, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

DEMAND FOR IMMEDIATE RESIGNATION OF JEAN SIROIS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Communications and is further to yesterday's report on Radio-Canada that the Minister would recommend against renewing Mr. Jean Sirois's mandate next April as President of Telefilm. Could the Minister explain to the House why, if Mr. Sirois is considered to be incompetent as of April 15, he is still competent today? In other words, why not ask for Mr. Sirois' resignation today? Why wait until spring? Let him resign now!

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sirois was appointed chairman of Telefilm Canada in the spring of 1986 to complete the term of Mr. Ed Prevost who was the chairman until that time. The time expires in April this year.

Our first priority will be to see that there is a new executive director, a new chief executive officer in place. I expect that announcement will be made shortly.

• (1120)

I would also say, given the difficulties Telefilm has experienced in recent months and the fact that new management procedures and cash flow procedures have been put in place, it would be advisable to ensure that there is a new management team as well. In that light, all appointments to Telefilm will be reviewed.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister will agree that we need answers and we need them now. We need to know why the Prime Minister's friend, Progressive Conservative organizer, organizer for the Minister of Communications when she ran for the leadership, and general Tory bagman received that kind of money. We need to know why $195,000 was necessary—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member has a question and I am sure he wants to put it.

Mr. Boudria: Will the Deputy Prime Minister table in this House today a detailed list of all fees paid to Mr. Jean Sirois, not only as a Director of Telefilm, not only his expense account, but the legal fees and any other gifts and assorted moneys the Conservatives gave to this friend of the Prime Minister? Will he do that today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I understand that information is already in the Public Accounts of Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you know what those are, Boudria?

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a red and white book and the Hon. Member may want to interest himself in that.

We have a specialist here in running high accounts. The Hon. Member, when he was in the provincial legislature, was a top traveller, top spender, spending $89,000. He is a spender.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—TRANSFER OF LAND

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The offer made yesterday to the Lubicon Indian Band is based on the band's population as of 1940. Of course, that population is much larger today. In fact, the land offered is only one-third of that claimed by the band. Yesterday's offer was described by the Minister as an interim offer, and Chief Ominayak said that no interim reserve is acceptable unless a process is clearly established to reach a final settlement.

What assurances did Canada seek and obtain from the Province of Alberta that when negotiations have been successfully completed and additional land is to be given to the Lubicon Indian Band, that the province will in fact transfer that land? Will they do that or will it still be necessary for Canada to take the province to court in order to acquire that additional land?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, what has to be realized is that this is an important step in the resolution of this important issue concerning the Lubicon Indian Band land claim. The setting up of this reserve and transfer of land by the province is an indication of the willingness of both Canada and Alberta to deal with the issue. What is important is that this transfer of land will be made without prejudice to the position of the parties involved. It does not affect the right of the band to seek additional reserve lands through negotiations or court action.

All we can say is that we are hopeful, this important step having been taken, we will be able to resolve the whole issue through negotiations.

Mr. Penner: I listened carefully to the answer and it lacked clarity. I gather somewhere in there is a yes, Alberta is prepared to give up additional land when a final negotiation process has been completed.

USE OF HON. E. DAVIE FULTON AS MEDIATOR

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): My supplementary question deals with the negotiation process. Is the Government of Canada now prepared to use the Hon. E. Davie Fulton as a mediator, as requested by the band and as the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development recommended to the House?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the willingness of the Province of Alberta to transfer this amount of land for the reserve is an indication of the position of the province which also wants this resolved. The question of what number of further acres or square miles could result will come out of the negotiating process.

With respect to the latter part of his question concerning the mediator, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has on many occasions indicated the position of Canada in that regard. We have indicated to the band and all parties involved many times that we were ready to use the conclusions of Mr. Fulton's report as a basis for negotiations. Because Mr. Fulton already made certain findings and has indicated his position, we do not feel that he can act as a mediator. It would be tantamount to having one of the parties choose not only the jury but the judge and the parties at the same table. We will not go in that direction.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPOSITION OF BAN ON MEDIA IN THE WEST BANK

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Government called in the Israeli Ambassador to indicate Canada's deep concern about the imposition of a ban on the press in the occupied territory. Was the Ambassador also told that shooting the messenger will only kill the momentum that the international press has provided, and that the only real prospect of a solution resides in effective negotiations as could, for example, occur in an international peace conference on the Middle East?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as has been reported in the media, on my instructions a senior official of the Department of External Affairs yesterday had discussions with the Israeli Ambassador to Canada. We reviewed Canada's concerns about events in the West Bank. We certainly did make the point that what is needed now is not to stop the media but to stop the beatings.

U.S. PROPOSAL—CANADA'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we would like to get a little clearer indication of what precisely is the Canadian position with respect to negotiations in the Middle East.

Is it Canada's position that it supports the American proposal as advocated by Secretary of State Shultz, or do we have our own unique position, or do we have any objection or any concerns about the proposal that we would like to set on the record now?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are very encouraged by the initiative taken by U.S. Secretary of State Shultz, both because it holds the prospect of some movement and because he is, as the House knows, very well and widely regarded, both individually and officially, in that region.

Secretary Shultz took the opportunity during a meeting of NATO foreign Ministers two days ago to brief his allies as to what was developing in that region and what he hoped to accomplish. As the House will know, I was unable to make that trip and Canada was represented at that meeting by my colleague, the Minister of National Defence. Mr. Shultz is returning to the region with the support and encouragement of Canada, and if there are steps we can take that will make his activities more effective, certainly we will take them.

We are not planning at this stage some independent venture because we think it is important that there be encouragement to take seriously the very serious and important initiative undertaken by the American Secretary of State.

• (1130)

PALESTINIAN REPRESENTATION AT NEGOTIATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, you would be aware of certain actions taken by the United States vis-à-vis the United Nations which have caused considerable concern. You will be aware also that Mr. Shultz has been unable to meet with Palestinian representatives. This raises a question to which an answer from the Government is extremely important.

Does the Government not agree that there cannot be any possible prospect for successful negotiations unless we agree that the Palestinians must be represented by those whom the Palestinians in the occupied territory consider to be their legitimate representatives?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course the Palestinians must be represented. There can be no question about that. Of course there must be a willingness on the part of the two sides directly involved in this conflict. Those two sides are, on the one hand, the Government of Israel and, on the other hand, the Palestinians.

What is being sought now is a practical means by which those groups can be brought together and some practical steps which they can take together to end the situation which is deeply rooted and is now expressing itself in violence and activities, which I think are condemned and regretted by the vast majority of opinion in Canada and throughout most of the free world.

If the Hon. Member is asking me to make a commitment now, either to some kind of independent freelance activity by Canada or to the particular form of an international conference which might preclude other things occurring, I will not make that commitment at this stage. There is a very important process underway which holds a slightly better prospect of success than recent activities have yielded. We want to encourage that process to move toward success.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND ACT—GOVERNMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Recently here in the House, everyone applauded the Minister's announcement that he would change the rules to give a widower, whose wife died leaving him with a very young baby, a chance to receive unemployment insurance benefits. This case has been dragging on for several weeks, and now the Minister claims there are problems with the Charter and that there may be a problem about introducing amendments. Why did the Minister make this promise in the House, on television, before all Canadians, if he is not ready to table a Bill today?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my decision was the only one that could be made. However, when drafting a Bill, I think there are a number of points that must be considered, and if the Hon. Member would like further details, I suggest she consult with her Party's critic. I discussed the matter with him yesterday.

[English]

EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE MATERNITY BENEFITS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed it with my colleague and I have discussed it with the Minister. Last week he told me that it was going to be brought into the House this week. This is Friday and we are still waiting.

Why will the Minister not accept the recommendation of my colleague and the all-Party committee which said that we should look at changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act so that other cases such as those of at least two women who are unable to collect benefits because their babies were born prematurely and they did not get out of the hospital until after the 17-week period had expired?

Why did the Minister not take our advice and reopen the unemployment insurance regulations so that we could consider all of these important issues instead of making a promise on which he is now not prepared to deliver?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about the UI Act which is another question. I said that we would move on Mr. McInnis' case. Yesterday the Member distorted the truth on the radio. I told her yesterday morning that we were in the process of dealing with that case.

Ms. Copps: Well, do it.

Mr. Bouchard: She said that my colleague told her that the file was dead. That is absolutely untrue.

The Member is trying to deal with all issues in the House. If she would deal with her own issues it would be much better for everyone.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED ABORIGINAL TREATY—LEGAL STATUS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Minister knows, Canada has many treaties with the aboriginal first nations of this country. The Minister knows that the plight of many aboriginal peoples in Canada is tragic, as is that of the Lubicon Band. He also knows that many indigenous peoples around the world are under extreme pressures.

For these reasons I would like to know whether the Minister will support the proposed evaluation by a subcommittee of the United Nations Human Rights Commission of the legal status of treaties between aboriginal groups in Canada and aboriginal groups and other governments around the world.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the controversy in Geneva, more precisely, the controversy in this Chamber about the discussions in Geneva, has inadvertently been a little misunderstood. Canada is trying in Geneva to ensure that the legitimate questions relating to agreements affecting indigenous people apply to all the indigenous people of the world, not only those indigenous people who happen to have a treaty relation with the government of their country.

In other words, Canada is seeking a broader mandate for the UN Commission, not a narrow one. The mandate which is being proposed, which was raised by my good friend, the Member for Cochrane—Superior, when I was unfortunately absent earlier in the week, is a mandate which would not only confine that study to countries like Canada where there are treaty arrangements, but would also have the effect of confining it to only some of the relations between aboriginal and other Canadians in this country. We are looking for, working for, and arguing for a broader mandate for the United Nations.

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES RIGHTS—CANADIAN REVIEW

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would dearly love to believe the sincerity with which the Minister has delivered his response, but the facts are quite different. That which he and his officials are arguing in Geneva is quite different. I have the documents here. The Minister knows that his own officials are arguing that there are not any treaties of Canada between Canada and the first nations of this country.

Very specifically, why will the Minister and his Government not stand up at the international level and defend what is in Canada's Constitution under Section 35 which states that the treaty rights of aboriginal people of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed?

Why does the Government not argue in Geneva to the ILO on Convention 107; why does the government not argue in relation to the UN subcommittee that there are treaties in Canada and that they do need to be reviewed because aboriginal people in Canada are being treated damn badly by the Minister and his Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Two quick things, Mr. Speaker. I suppose that when you do not have a case you argue it more strongly, as the Hon. Member has just done.

Mr. Fulton: I have one. You put it before Geneva, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Second, the Member said that he would dearly love to accept my sincerity. He knows the rules of the House. He is obliged to accept my sincerity as I am obliged to accept his, and I do that.

In the United Nations and elsewhere we are seeking to ensure that the activities which are undertaken by that commission apply to the range of relations between aboriginal people and their Governments—not limited in Canada, not limited to Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS IN CANADA—MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns his insensitive and irresponsible letter regarding three Sikh organizations in Canada.

I would like to remind the Minister of a statement he made in December, 1985. He stated, "I have no quarrel with those in Canada who hold different views than those of the Government of India".

If that is the case, and if the Minister was sincere when he made that statement two years ago, why has he blackballed three Sikh organizations in Canada? Why has he tarnished every member of those organizations, and why has he tarnished the entire Sikh community in Canada? Will he now take the opportunity and apologize to those people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my position is very clear. I stated it again yesterday in the House. I tabled the correspondence. My position is understood and supported by reasonable people, including the Liberal Premier of Ontario.

My remarks were very specific as to three organizations which have aims, with which I think the Hon. Member would not want to be associated, and to the fact that some of the Members of those organizations are involved in or counsel activities of violence, with which the Hon. Member would not want to be associated and to which he would not want to lend the authority that comes to him, not necessarily in his personal capacity, but in his capacity as a Member of Parliament. We have some duties in this House and the Hon. Member should understand that.

• (1140)

ALLEGED INVOLVEMENT OF SIKHS IN CRIMINAL ACTIVITY IN CANADA

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the implications of the Minister's comments and the Minister's letter are very serious. He is accusing members of those organizations of involving themselves in violent, criminal activity in Canada.

If he has evidence to that effect, that the people which belong to these organizations are involved in criminal activity in Canada, why does he not do the responsible thing and charge these people, prosecute them, rather than tarnishing the entire Sikh community in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, an elemental rule of the House is that if Members want to put serious questions they should not misquote the people to whom they are referring. The Hon. Member has just misquoted me. He said that I made some kind of blanket representation regarding all the members of those organizations. I trust that he can read. Let him read the letter.

The letter says that some of the members of those organizations have been involved in or have counselled violence. That is the case.

I think it would be most unfortunate if a Member of Parliament of this House, for momentary celebrity or for partisan reasons, associated himself or herself with activities which encouraged or appeared to condone acts of violence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAXATION

TAX REFORM—SIMPLIFICATION OF RETURNS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that he and his Government promised the people of Canada that he would simplify the tax system and simplify the tax returns that people are expected to fill out. I am holding a 1962 tax return which is a single sheet of 8-1/2 by 11 paper. This year's tax return which I am holding is pages, pages and pages long.

When does the Minister plan to keep his promise to Canadians to actually simplify the tax return?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should check the tax rates on that single sheet of paper. He will see that the tax rates will be quite a bit lower this year than they were then as well.

There is no question that the world in which we live has become more complex and that is one of the reasons why previous governments have increased the size of the tax return. We have not increased the size of the tax return.

I would also make the point that a very large percentage of Canadians do not fill out the tax return to which the Hon. Member has just referred. They have a form that is four pages long. Half of the first page is taken up by personal information related to name, address and so on. The third page may not refer to the people using the tax return; so we can be moved to excess in the way we describe the complexity of the tax system. If he checks the short form, I think he will find that it is a simple form of tax return to fill out.

TAX GUIDE—SIMPLIFICATION OF 1988 RETURN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this year's total personal tax package contains a 42-page tax guide with schedules, a 22-page information leaflet, 32 pages of additional forms, 10 pages of information circulars, as well as 34 interpretation bulletins. I also have a draft tax return for 1988 which Canadians will presumably fill out a year from now. When one adds the pages, it is actually greater than this year's form.

The Minister made a promise to the people of Canada that he would simplify the tax system and simplify the tax forms that Canadians would fill out. The tax return for next year will be more lengthy than this year's, which is eight pages compared to a single sheet in 1962. When will he keep the promise that he and his Government made to the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this question might be more appropriately put to my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, because it is under his good work that the tax guide has been much more understandable. Tax tips and tax suggestions are made so that when people are filling out their tax returns and referring to the tax guide they can have direct guidance as to how they can work their way through the tax system itself.

We have made a number of changes, since we came to office, which have reduced the complexity of the tax system and have helped small businesses. The change related to—I do not think the Hon. Member wants to listen to the answer.

Mr. McCurdy: It is longer than the guide.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He has asked a question that is of concern to Canadians.

Mr. Riis: We now know who wrote the guide, Michael.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member does not want to listen to the answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FREEDOM OF MPS TO MEET WITH SIKH CONSTITUENTS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It also concerns the letter he sent regarding meetings with Canadian Sikhs. Will the Minister confirm that it was never his intention to suggest that MPs restrict their meetings with individual Sikh constituents who wish to express their views to their MP's, even if those constituents are supporters of or members of any of the organizations named in his letter, such as the World Sikh Organization?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I tried to indicate yesterday that I was not issuing edicts to Members of Parliament. I have neither the authority nor the inclination to do that.

Naturally, Members of Parliament in this country are free to meet any Canadians and have a particular obligation—

An Hon. Member: What about premiers?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and premiers are free to meet anyone. Obviously, members of provincial or federal legislatures have a particular obligation to meet with their constituents.

I am seeking to avoid situations in which the authority of elected Parties or offices seems to condone acts of violence or seems to contribute to the purposes that I named of the organizations that I named yesterday.

UNFAIR ASSOCIATION OF SIKH GROUPS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will perhaps know that members of the World Sikh Organization and the Sikh Federation of Edmonton are offended that he lumped them with the Babbar Khalsa and Youth Federation. Is the Minister prepared to agree that it was perhaps unfair to lump the World Sikh Organization with the other two groups?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the letter was carefully written and was written after very careful consideration. It was written after the incidents had increased of members of provincial governments, members of the legislature or, indeed, members of municipal governments being drawn inadvertently into associations, into activities which might carry implications that I believe no member of a municipal, provincial or federal body would want to have drawn.

ENERGY

EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY—POLICY REVIEW

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last week, when P.E.I. electrical consumers received their bills in the mail, they also received a notice from Mr. John Reynolds, President and Chief Executive Officer of Maritime Electric, informing them that the federal Government is presently considering changes to the regulatory process under which Canadian utilities export electricity to the United States.

Is it indeed the case that the National Energy Policy is being reviewed to the detriment of some user provinces?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give the assurance that the National Energy Policy is not being reviewed to the detriment of any province. I will take up the particulars of the case he raises with the Minister.

PRICE OF EXPORTED ELECTRICAL ENERGY

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the second price test provision in the National Energy Policy. It does not allow electrical utilities from other provinces to export into the United States at a cost lower than that to some provinces who need the electricity.

Will the Minister give an unequivocal guarantee that as a result of whatever changes are made, Quebec Hydro, for example, will not be able to export electricity to the United States at a cost lower than that charged the Province of P.E.I. for that utility?

• (1150)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I understand there has been a recent court ruling on that issue and I refer the Member to it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MATERNITY BENEFITS—TIME RESTRICTIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A Nova Scotia mother has written to us saying:

> Having a premature baby is an emotional draining experience and now I am told I could lose my maternity leave (because my baby requires a long period of hospitalization).

What will the Minister do to change the unfair time restriction for unemployment insurance maternity benefits which is penalizing such mothers of premature infants from coast to coast?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a good question but it was already raised. I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver East knows that her colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano, raised exactly the same question last week about a mother in Vancouver who faces exactly—

Ms. Copps: Then why don't you do something?

Mr. Bouchard: Please, can you listen, the real lady on the other side? I just want to repeat what I said. I said it was raised last week. I answered the question. We are working on that issue at the present time. The Hon. Member will understand that this is a very complex issue, when we review the Unemployment Insurance Act, because there are many different approaches we could take. We have to consider the Charter of Rights in many areas. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am looking at the case very closely; I am not closing the door to a change in terms of the premature babies. But, once again, it is a complex problem and it cannot be solved in one week.

EXTENSION OF MATERNITY BENEFITS—USE OF MINISTERIAL DISCRETION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, there are many women affected in many communities across this country and we are going to continue raising this question. What we want is an answer. As this mother says, maternity leave is a cherished and necessary time and these mothers must have provisions for unemployment insurance into which they have paid. Will the Minister in this case, and cases like it, use his ministerial discretion—

Ms. Copps: No false promises either.

Ms. Mitchell: —to extend the benefit period in such cases? This was recommended by the Special Committee on Child Care, by the Conservative Members. Will he extend this through his ministerial discretion until such time as he can change the Act? Let us not be wishy-washy about this.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said before.

Ms. Mitchell: I don't want to hear what you said before.

Mr. Bouchard: The Hon. Member's colleague, the Conservative Member for Capilano, asked exactly the same question last week.

Ms. Mitchell: I know. Let's have an answer.

Mr. Bouchard: But the Conservative Party would like to take the time, and we need a little bit more than one week—

Ms. Mitchell: These mothers cannot wait.

Mr. Bouchard: I know that the New Democrats can give the answer five minutes after the question, but we know what kind of answer they give and what kind of results they have, too.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE PROFESSORS—DEMAND FOR IMMEDIATE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. We both know that a labour dispute between language teachers in the ED Group and Treasury Board has been going on for several months. The Government wants to increase the teachers' workload, while the teachers maintain that, in addition to the actual time spent in class, they have course preparation to do, and they want the time to do that. There are 762 unionized teachers working for the Government, of whom 63 per cent are women. It is also a fact that the Government is letting people get the impression that this service might be privatized.

Could the Minister inform the House today that he or his Department is prepared to go back to the bargaining table, to hammer out an agreement that would be acceptable to both parties and put an end to a situation that has been going on for three or four years?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on January 21 the majority conciliation board report was brought down, which the Government accepted and was prepared to sign an agreement on that basis, and we still are. If members of the union want to return to the bargaining table to consider that proposal, of course, we would be prepared to accept that.

Mr. Gauthier: I take it that is an invitation by the President of the Treasury Board to return himself to the table. They cannot go by themselves.

POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION OF LANGUAGE TEACHING POSITIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Has the Government decided to privatize those services? We were given indications in 1985 by the previous Minister, which I will read from the committee transcript:

> MR. DE COTRET: Would it be more effective in certain cases—and I am stating this very clearly—to turn training over to specialized private firms, universities, or groups other than the Public Service?
> We are looking at it.

Has the Government finished looking at it and can it give us its undertaking that indeed the privatization of those language teaching positions is not in the intentions of the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice and report back to the Hon. Member. I know this reference was made by my predecessor. I am not sure whether it in fact constitutes any part of the negotiating process, but I will be happy to report back to the Member early next week.

TRANSPORT

UPGRADING AIRPORT SECURITY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and I have given him notice of it. This morning, without making a deliberate attempt to do so, I was allowed access to the sterile department lounges of two major Canadian airports without receiving proper security clearance. Departing from a Schedule 4 airport, my carry-on baggage was neither X-rayed nor searched, even though Government regulations require this.

Is the Minister of Transport finally prepared to take action to bring the security clearance procedures at Canadian airports up to the standards about which he likes to brag?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no security system, of course, is perfect, and it may be that those who were on duty this morning thought that the Hon. Member looked particularly innocent.

Some Hon. Members: They were wrong?

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, I do believe that he is harmless.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I noticed in the regulations, a copy of which the hon. gentleman was kind enough to send me, that you have to be identified by the air carrier as being a potential threat to the security of civil aviation; presumably, the Hon. Member was not so identified. But he has sent me a report on what happened this morning and I will have it looked into because any possible breach of the screening regulations is serious. I thank him for bringing this to my attention.

COMMITTEE REPORT CALLING FOR CHANGES TO AIRPORT SECURITY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions in this House, and directly to the Minister, I have raised specific matters with regard to airport security. The House of Commons Committee on Transport has tabled an all-Party unanimous report calling for major changes to airport security procedures in this country. When will the Minister be prepared to take action not just on the specifics I have raised but on the general system that is available in Canada to protect air passengers from security breaches?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are constantly attempting to improve our security procedures. We have spent many additional millions of dollars in doing this. We brought in a new system with respect to employees who work at airports, which has encountered tremendous opposition, particularly from certain of the Public Service unions. I would hope the hon. gentleman might use his persuasive powers with those unions to get them to co-operate with the screening procedures we are trying to put into effect in connection with sterile areas. In the meantime, we have the report of the standing committee and I am having the whole matter reviewed. We will have to make a response to the recommendations, and we will in due course.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair. I recognize the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador for a single question.

RAILWAYS

ALLEGED CLOSURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—HIGHWAY PACKAGE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Rumours are rife now that the Newfoundland railway will be closed down and a major highway package is being negotiated in the amount of $800 million. Can the Minister confirm that that is the case? And will he give an undertaking that in that package he will include the completion of the trans-Labrador highway from the Prime Minister's riding in Baie Comeau, through Goose Bay and on down to the Straits of Belle Isle? Can he give that undertaking?

• (1200)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and his Party are very familiar with the closing down of railways since in 1968 they closed down railway passenger service in Newfoundland. So I can understand his particular interest in the railway situation.

There is no agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland with respect to any closing of the Newfoundland railway service. It continues to be operated by Canadian National; it costs Canadian National some $35 million or $40 million per year to do that.

With respect to the trans-Labrador highway, I believe there has been something in the order of $13.7 million spent on the highway by the Government of Canada to date. To finish the highway from Labrador City to Churchill Falls requires $24 million and from Goose to Red Bay, which is 340 kilometres, some $200 million. This money is not easily come by. However, I will continue to do my best to see that moneys are spent to try to move on with that highway.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River a single question.

TAXATION

NORTHERN DEDUCTIONS—ELIGIBILITY OF COMMUNITIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance who wrote me this morning concerning the northern residents tax deduction, admitting that there are problems with the criteria as some non-qualifying communities are directly adjacent to communities that do qualify. He stated that his officials have no satisfactory solution to this problem of communities that are adjacent to other communities that qualify. I have suggested that all Tier 3 riding communities should qualify.

My question to the Minister is simply this. If the bureaucrats have failed to come up with a solution, when will the Government live up to its responsibilities by coming up with a political solution to this problem which divides community against community and which essentially gives an enormous premium to people who are willing to move out to a rural area?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us not forget the bottom line of all this. We have made some significant advances in putting on a more permanent basis a type of tax benefit which helps people who live in northern and isolated communities. That is the fundamental approach that we have been following.

We recognize that there is difficulty once one gets down below a finite barrier, such as the 60th parallel. It becomes more difficult to draw the lines between which communities are in the northern benefits system and which communities are not in it. We have reached a resolution that satisfies most residents who are affected, but there are difficulties in drawing borders. It is for that reason that we have called for the establishment of a commission to review instances that the Hon. Member has raised in the House. That commission will be set up soon to hear those—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East will ask the last question in Question Period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL PEACE INITIATIVE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It goes without saying that all three Parties in the House will agree that using violence against violence in the West Bank and Gaza is totally unacceptable.

Given Canada's respect around the world for human rights and as a peace-keeping nation, why could the Government not take the initiative with like-minded nations, particularly those in northern and central Europe, to begin a process of confidence building with Israel and informal Palestinian leaders aimed specifically at alleviating the human suffering?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, the Hon. Member was a member of an all-Party committee that has just come back from the Middle East and whose visits there were very helpful to us in the formulation of Canadian policy. I want to express the Government's appreciation for the work that was done in an all-Party fashion by that all-Party committee.

Naturally, we will do whatever we can to contribute to those kinds of developments. The Hon. Member will know that one of the things that we have been doing for some time, and we have doubled the program, is to operate mission-administered funds in the West Bank which allows Canadians to deliver aid directly to Palestinian and other communities in that region.

I answered earlier with regard to the mission being undertaken by Secretary Shultz. We think at least at this stage that the most effective thing we can do is in the context of that mission. I look forward to having the opportunity personally to meet with members of the committee to get the benefit of their advice as to what other things we might do.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is rising on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LEAK OF CONFIDENTIAL REPORT TO PRESS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from an article which appeared in this morning's The Ottawa Citizen the headline of which reads, "MPs' report clears Masse, raps Gorman".

There is a time-honoured tradition in the House and, indeed, it was reiterated by all members of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, that reports that have not been tabled in the House or that have not been published should not be divulged for public information. Quite clearly someone on the committee chose to report selectively on the situation. Frankly, they have not even chosen to report the facts. In fact, they have reported a false statement, a false story and a false conclusion as elucidated in the headline of this particular article.

You realize, Mr. Speaker, that this puts us in a very difficult position. After having read the article in the paper the first thing that I received when I came to the office this morning was a telephone call from the media asking me what was my reaction to the report which had been made public about which we had made an agreement that we were not to speak until the report is actually tabled in the House.

An Hon. Member: Why are you speaking?

Ms. Copps: Someone asks why I am speaking. Mr. Speaker, I have taken the position, as has my Party—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is raising a matter which, quite frankly, the Chair thinks is extremely serious. Unfortunately, the principle involved here had to be faced by the Chair many months ago. The Hon. Member involved in that case did not only do the honourable thing but the appropriate thing and expressed his regret. This is a very serious matter. I would ask Hon. Members to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, you realize that the publication of this report puts all other members of the committee in an untenable position in that on the one hand we are asked to comment on the report which has not been tabled while on the other hand our silence could be interpreted as agreeing with the alleged contents of the report which in fact are false.

I seek some direction from the Chair. In the breach of this particular convention the decision that was made and the commitment that was made by all members to keep their own counsel on the report until it was tabled has in fact now been thrown to the wind as a result of this report. I seek some guidance as to what that does to all of the other members who bound themselves by that same convention.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as the Chairman of this committee I too was very surprised and annoyed to see reports in the paper this morning. I wish to indicate to my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that there was an all-Party agreement. I am also very annoyed to see such reports prior to the tabling of the report on Tuesday.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, being a member of the committee and having participated in it, all of us, at least those to whom I have talked who are members of the committee, were shocked to see the article. It is important to point out a couple of matters.

The first is that the article identifies sources; it does not identify an MP. Nor does it identify that source as being an MP. I suggest that what we might now be facing in this case is a source outside the actual committee membership since the article does have some inaccuracies in it. I think that puts quite a different light on the situation with which we are faced here.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I too have raised this type of issue as a chairman of a committee. All Members of the House should be disturbed when the results of in camera meetings are leaked, when there is no prior agreement.

At one point in its proceedings a week and a half ago the committee did have an in camera meeting and agreement was reached that we would talk to the press. That was handled very well and satisfactorily by all members of the committee. In this case the understanding was that the meeting was in camera and that we would wait until the report was delivered to the House.

In her presentation, the Hon. Member raises the dilemma that we cannot talk about the report at this time. But to label the article as false is in effect to talk about the report from a perspective that the Hon. Member obviously has.

I would caution the House that the Chairman has advised that the report will be delivered on Tuesday. The House's view of the report, its implications, and its contents should await our judgment until we see the report. Certainly, it would be unfortunate to leave that single thought out here without confirmation or denial. It is probably a statement that is broader than, upon reflection, the Hon. Member may wish to have it go.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, without getting into the substantive part of the question, may I comment that there are precedents established by the House in similar circumstances. I do take the remarks of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) as a very serious matter. Indeed, we have to find out if there was a leak outside the regular circle of Members of Parliament and the clerks. If there is a leak it must be plugged as soon as possible. It is untenable for Members of Parliament to be asked to comment on something that has not as yet been made public.

If you judge that there is a prima facie case of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I take it that the appropriate motion required would be moved by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for raising this matter, and I thank other Hon. Members for their interventions. I think it is obvious to all Members in the Chamber, and I hope to members of the public who are watching, that the matter raised by the Member for Hamilton East simply comes down to the following.

The allegation is that, in one way or another what was thought to be by Hon. Members a confidential meeting, what went on in that meeting, and what was thought to be a written report which has not yet been presented to the House but will be in a couple of days, at least some part of that has in some way been given by somebody to the press.

This place ultimately operates on trust. I can say to members of the public who are watching and listening that most of the time there is that type of trust among all Hon. Members here that makes this place function. It is very important to stress that fact.

The Hon. Member has raised what may well be a breach of that trust, or it may be a breach of some other trust. In any event, I am going to adjourn any adjudication on this matter for a day or two until the report is tabled. I will then be able to measure the report in the press against the report as it is in fact brought before the House. I will then come back to the House and address this matter.

As I have stated, and as is clearly expressed here by all Hon. Members, this place must operate on trust. Without it, it cannot function. I say to the public that most of the time, in fact the vast majority of the time, it does operate on trust. This is indeed a serious matter, and I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East for raising it.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DISCREPANCY IN MINISTER'S ANSWER TO MEMBERS' QUESTIONS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. During Question Period today I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) questions regarding a letter he wrote to a number of Premiers in Canada regarding three Sikh organizations. He specified those organizations in the letter he wrote, a copy of which I have dated December 7, 1987 to Premier Peterson of Ontario.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) also asked questions with regard to this particular matter. When the Opposition has asked questions with regard to the letter, the Minister has accused the Opposition of partisanship. Yet when two members of his caucus, one from Edmonton and the other from Toronto, asked questions he did not level the same insensitive accusation at those Members.

In effect, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has black-balled three organizations that operate legitimately—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked serious questions, and questions which all Hon. Members would consider seriously. The Hon. Member now raises a point of privilege on the basis of an allegation that the Right Hon. Secretary of State somehow dealt in a different manner with questions asked, which are also very serious and direct questions, by the government side as opposed to the opposition side.

I have to say to the Hon. Member that he may or may not be completely correct, but it is not a question of privilege. I will of course hear the Hon. Member if he wishes to make another remark.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the implications of the letter, as I indicated during Question Period, are rather serious. They not only affect the privileges of Members of Parliament, but also the very legitimate organizations in Canada. In effect, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying to all Premiers, all members of provincial government, and all Members of Parliament that they are not to associate with organizations that happen to have different views—

Mr. Speaker: I understand, and I think Hon. Members and the Right Hon. Secretary of State understand the point made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). That is a matter of political argument and debate. I have to say to the Hon. Member that it is not appropriate to pursue it by rising on a question of privilege. I also have to indicate to the Hon. Member that it is not a question of privilege. I do not think there is any need to pursue the matter further.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8) I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to 39 petitions bearing the following numbers: 332-3747 to 332-3753 inclusive, 332-3762 to 332-3779 inclusive, 332-3782, 332-3787 to 332-3794 inclusive, 332-3799 and 332-3801 to 332-3804 inclusive.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present two petitions pursuant to Standing Order 106. They are on the same topic, so I will not elaborate on both of them other than to say that they are from petitioners in various parts of British Columbia.

• (1220)

They contend that the present Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty, since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership in Canada and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians. It also makes it difficult to equalize opportunities among the regions of the country.

Therefore they call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada an opportunity either to accept or to reject the trade deal during a national general election.

CALL FOR REVIEW OF ARMS EXPORT POLICY

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House. It has been signed by constituents from my riding of Hamilton West as well as from the neighbouring riding of Hamilton—Wentworth.

The petitioners, who are all members of the congregation of Westdale United Church in the City of Hamilton, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to set up a committee to re-examine our export policy in connection with the weapons industry and to halt further expansion in this area until such a review has taken place.

PROHIBITION REGARDING KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have quite a number of petitions from various parts of British Columbia—the Lower Mainland, Surrey, New Westminster, Richmond, Vancouver, Burnaby, et cetera. They are very concerned that there is a very high incident of crimes including murder, robbery, and sexual assaults committed with knives. This is on the increase in all major cities across Canada.

They call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places, the only exemptions to be knives used for legitimate work or carried for religious reasons.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition to present which is on a different subject. It is from a number of people resident in Ontario who oppose the U.S.-Canada trade deal because it denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was its major objective. It also threatens the loss of hundreds of jobs and affects our future sovereignty.

They call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY FEATURES FOR AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling five petitions signed by residents of Presqu'Île, Dorion, Valleyfield, Pierrefonds, Montreal, Saint-Lambert, Saint-Romuald, Alma and Dolbeau.

The 165 signatures are in addition to others I tabled previously, which add up to a total of 32,533.

The undersigned realize that since 1974, the Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations allow self-inflating bags to be installed to protect drivers of private cars, and that this device would reduce the number of fatal and serious injuries.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to make compulsory the installation of self-inflating bags on the front seat and of adjustable shoulder seat-belts for passengers on the back seat.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which has been signed by residents of Gull Lake, Saskatchewan and has been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106, as attested by the Clerk of Petitions. It deals with the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

It makes a number of the points made in earlier presentations of petitions. It also stresses that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

For that reason they call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve and to have this question put to a general election.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present a petition signed by almost 100 Canadian citizens who are concerned about the free trade agreement which has been negotiated between the present Government and the United States.

The petitioners claim that the Government does not have the mandate to pursue the deal and that the negotiated agreement will hurt our sovereignty. As well, they are concerned about our autonomy in the energy sector. They believe that it would deny Canada the ability to devise our own economic future. They are also concerned that the agreement would have a negative effect on job growth in Canada.

They ask that Parliament be dissolved so that the Government could go to the people on this agreement.

I so move or I so introduce.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I second the motion of my hon. colleague.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Slightly out of order.

Mr. Manly: I have a duly certified petition from a number of Canadian citizens regarding the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

They point out that it threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities among the regions.

It points out that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to devise its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve so as to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I noticed your smile, which I am sure is an expression of unsuppressed pleasure on your part at my presence in the House and at the contents of the petition I am about to table. It comes from a number of Canadian citizens and has been duly certified as fulfilling the requirements.

The petitioners express concern about the future impact on the Canadian destiny of the Mulroney-Reagan deal, particularly as it concerns our ability to control our economic future.

They ask Parliament for an election to be held so that the Government will have a mandate to pursue this agreement and Canadians will have an opportunity to express themselves on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe those are all the petitions.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we will see on Monday night whether they vote for the dissolution of Parliament.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hopkins:

That this House recognizes the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continue Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence has 10 minutes remaining in his speech and 10 minutes for questions and comments.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to summarize the comments I was making before we started Question Period. I was somewhat surprised and dismayed at the approach taken by the lead-off speaker of the Liberal Party. He did not speak to the motion at all in his diatribe against what he believed was the record of the Government. He was mistaken in his facts and figures. However, the fact that he did not even speak to the motion, the way he merely used it as a smoke-screen and did not take it seriously, gives me every confidence in voting against it. The Liberals certainly did not put the motion before us with any sincerity.

I also mentioned how NATO was set up under Section 51 of the United Nations Charter. I went into the history of how NATO was established in response to some aggressive moves by the U.S.S.R. back in the forties and how that was continued afterwards.

• (1230)

All Governments in Canada have supported NATO to one degree or another. I want to refer to the two principal functions of the North Atlantic alliance. The first is to maintain an adequate defence and the political solidarity necessary to deter aggression or intimidation and to defend the territories of member countries. The second function is the pursuit of greater stability in East-West relations in order to create a climate in which the underlying political issues might be solved. These are not mutually exclusive functions, they are closely interrelated: the political will to deter, and if deterrence fails to defend, is as important as the capability of the forces to play their part. The White Paper defines Canadian security policy in defence efforts, arms control efforts and efforts to secure the peaceful resolution of disputes. These are, again, complementary elements that are most usefully considered in the context of security policy.

In the White Paper there are four messages of importance and as the main theme. One is that Canadian security policy is founded upon three pillars. First and foremost, of course, is the active pursuit of arms control and arms reduction. This is possible and our participation as Canadians is possible, because we have a seat at the NATO table. It is the leader of the NATO group who squares off with the leader of the Warsaw Pact group. If we did not have that seat at the NATO table, then we would have no more voice than many other countries in this world who do not even participate in discussions about disarmament and arms control.

The second very important factor in our Canadian security policy is that we believe in the peaceful settlement of disputes. Canada is the only country in the world that has participated in every single peacekeeping organization ever put forward by the United Nations. Our first pillar is the active pursuit of arms control, and that is done through NATO. Our second pillar is the peaceful settlement of disputes and our use of peacekeeping forces, and that is done through the United Nations. If these fail, then we have to depend on ourselves, and we should be prepared and have an adequate defence in case those first two important pillars do not meet their objectives.

The second message in the White Paper was that Canada must continue to seek its security in collective defence arrangements within the framework of the North Atlantic Treaty and the bilateral, continental defence arrangements with the United States. Canada can never be neutral in the struggle between the ideologies and value systems of the East and West. We are not neutral and we are proud to be identified with those free democratic countries of western Europe and North America.

The third message in the White Paper was that while we are committed to the principle of selective security, we will not ask others to carry our defence burden for us. We in Canada, I believe, are committed to carrying our fair share and would not want to shirk that responsibility. We will look at the growing importance of the Pacific and Arctic regions of Canada and make provisions to participate fully in the defence of Canadian interests, territory, air space, seaward approaches and our sovereignty in those areas. We will play a full and significant role in our collective defence arrangements.

The fourth message was that the Government by necessity now has to move so that we will narrow and eventually close the gap between our defence commitments and our ability to discharge them effectively and efficiently.

I do not want to dwell at any great length on some of the problems that we have had in the past and why we have such a great gap in our commitments. I do not intend to dwell on the neglect the Armed Forces suffered under previous Liberal Governments. The facts speak for themselves. You have only to consider that today we have 75 per cent of the airplanes we had in 1971, Mr. Speaker. We have only to consider that today's army is at 60 per cent of the strength it was in 1970. While its workload has increased that workload must be maintained on obsolete equipment. We have only to consider that in 1963 we had 55 naval vessels, while today we have only 26. Our most modern ship was built at the time of the last White Paper 16 years ago. Our oldest ships are more than 30 years old. We do not have a single minesweeper. Recent events in the Persian Gulf have demonstrated how dangerous that can be. It is a fact that our Armed Forces suffered from a total lack of political leadership and direction for more than two decades. The end results were unrealistic goals and commitments, financial starvation and dwindling credibility in the eyes of our allies and fellow citizens. We as a government, and I hope as a people, will never, never again neglect our Armed Forces.

It is important that we address ourselves to the attitude of neutrality. It has been said, and I think it is very important to note, that every country has an armed force, their own or somebody else's. We cannot deny ourselves the right to protect our borders. Let us examine the hypocrisy of a neutral Canada. As neutrals, we would continue to rely for our security on the deterrent and defence forces of our friends and neighbours, our former allies in NATO. I do not think this is tenable.

Canadians believe that we should share the responsibility and pay for our fair share. You have only to look at neutrality in this world and talk to people from Sweden, Switzerland and Finland and find out the costs which they pay for neutrality. It is referred in most historic documents as armed neutrality. They pay significantly higher rates per capita in their tax dollars toward maintaining their armies in their countries. All the neutral countries that I know of have conscription. That is something that we do not have here.

Besides paying more than we have to and having conscription, take a look at the records. The Swedes and the Swiss are some of the biggest arms merchants in the world. They sell to everybody else. We do not have that record or that reputation. Some of the neutral countries have reputations as some of the biggest arms traders in the world. If Canadians want to pay almost twice as much as they are today to maintain their Armed Forces, then perhaps they might consider whether or not we will be a neutral country.

There are two very valuable lessons to be learned from negotiations which have led up to the intermediate nuclear force treaty signed in early December by Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan. I think we can expect that the prospects of success in other areas of arms control will be enhanced if we apply those two valuable lessons. The first is that we must develop a good strategy and then stick to it. The second is that the best strategy is to deal from strength, to be patient and to stick together. This means that we should continue to modernize our forces while negotiating for fair and verifiable arms control agreements that enhance mutual security. Also we should avoid regional arms control agreements that do not serve that basic purpose. Again, should there be a successful conclusion to the "START" negotiations in the near future, and as Canadians I know we all hope there will be, the proposed reduction of 50 per cent in strategic systems will likely put more emphasis on remaining air and submarine launched nuclear-armed Cruise missiles in maintaining the strategic balance until those themselves are negotiated away.

The White Paper anticipated these arms control developments and its thrust to modernize and improve the conventional capabilities of the Canadian Forces is in no way challenged by the signing of the INF Agreement. The INF Agreement does not eliminate the need for us to be able to defend ourselves, however, nor does it eliminate our responsibility to maintain our sovereignty. Protecting Canada's security and sovereignty is certainly not at odds with superpower arms reduction.

Where does all that leave us, Mr. Speaker? Very comfortably, I think, within our new defence policy. The Government is strongly committed to implementing the White Paper and, as recent budgets have demonstrated, is prepared to give it a high priority among government initiatives. Nevertheless, it would be foolish to suppose that this situation is immutable. We all know that however good a defence policy we have in a democratic country, it is only as strong as the popular support it commands. We in this country will continue to work toward the goal of mutual security among nations and significantly lower levels of armaments. This will create a climate in which international stability and co-operation can flourish, where we can build the sort of Canada, a safe, sovereign, secure and caring society, that we all wish for our children.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the observations of my colleague, the Minister. Reykjavik taught us, in a phrase now being used, that we can no longer rely on the Soviets to say no when we raise certain issues in certain forums. When the motion was put this morning I thought the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) would have said something about arms negotiations and reductions, but he did not. The Minister did in his comments, and so my question is on this particular topic.

The Soviets indicated to Canada that they would like to engage us in a conversation about demilitarization of the Arctic. We have this doughty band of rangers with muskets in the Arctic. I had not appreciated that this was a security concern to them. In any event, they raised this issue with us and I would like the Minister to give his view on whether the Soviets have indicated any real willingness to talk about the forces they have in the Bering Sea and the Kola Peninsula? Do we intend to take up this matter with them in a serious way or do we have no evidence that they are serious about their suggestion?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. In the last two years we have had glasnost and a seeming willingness by the Soviet Union to change. We welcome it and hope it is sincere, continuing and long-lasting. We all want to work towards achieving peace in the world.

They have also made other comments here and there which look good on the surface. One of them of course concerns the zone of peace in the Arctic. They made much comment about northern Scandinavia, the North Atlantic and other areas, but did not make reference to their own areas. Of course they have a great mass of military might in their Arctic. It seems they wanted to have us lay down our arms but keep their Arctic areas fully armed. They would have perhaps won more credibility and believability if they had discussed, in at least a minor way, how they would demilitarize their Arctic.

Their Kola Peninsula is the most intensively militarized piece of real estate in the entire world. The shipyards where they construct all their nuclear submarines lie along the Arctic coast. Just south of the Bering Sea they have the single largest nuclear fleet in the entire world. If they had been willing to show a willingness to give something up, we would have been able to give it more credibility. This is not to say that we are not willing to sit down and discuss it with them. I think we would be willing to do that. However, we would also want them to show some good faith at a very early stage and a willingness to give up some of their cards.

It is a good point but I do not think we can turn around and say, fine, we will demilitarize the Arctic completely, without trying to see what the Russians intend to do.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment on what the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) said. He said I did not talk about disarmament this morning in my remarks. If he reads my speech he will find that I stated clearly that without NATO's firm resolve in the late 1970s and early 1980s to upgrade NATO's aging weaponry in Europe there may not have been a treaty on intermediate nuclear forces signed in Washington last December. I said that if common sense prevails, hopefully this will continue. Those were my words and he will find them on the record.

With regard to the Minister's statement, I am sure everyone who heard it would find it passing strange that he would accuse me of attacking the Government on a motion dealing with NATO. Is it not strange that the Government should be attacked? That is the insinuation. After all, this is the Parliament of Canada where the facts and the truth come out.

At the same time I would say that the Conservative Party has been attacking the record of previous Governments. I put the percentage increases in the defence budget of those past Governments on the record this morning. He knows full well that without that tremendous increase in the budget, the present Government would not be able to do what it is doing today. In fact, the motion talks about active support and commitment to NATO. There can be no active support and no commitment unless you are upgrading your own forces.

The Minister accused me of talking about a continuing program to upgrade the Armed Forces. Surely that is what we are all trying to do. I see nothing wrong with that at all. The Prime Minister, with all the rhetoric he can muster, stands up and attacks the Opposition for things it did when it was in government. I am sure that even he would not agree with the Minister that it is rather nasty of the Opposition to be criticizing the Government of the day. I thought that was the role of the Opposition in Parliament.

He commented on upgrading the Armed Forces and said that I should be talking about disarmament. I just indicated that I did. At the same time, the Minister ended up talking about upgrading the weapons of the Canadian Armed Forces.

That has been going on for many years. You cannot talk out of both sides of your mouth on these issues.

We talk about mutual security and defence in the motion before us, and the necessity of meaning what you say. That is precisely the message I gave today. The Government made many promises to the Canadian Armed Forces in the last election which it has not kept. It did not honour the 3 per cent commitment to NATO, even in its first Budget. There is nothing wrong with keeping a nation's armed forces in a healthy state and at the same time going ahead negotiating for peace and disarmament. That is a proven fact. It took place in the agreement recently signed in Washington on intermediate nuclear weapons. Hopefully there will be more.

Then there is collective security. Canada cannot do all this alone. We are working through the collective security of NATO. Surely we can do that best by continuing to upgrade our forces. I do not think we should get upset because someone is talking about upgrading the Armed Forces and keeping them in a good state.

The Hon. Member stated that my remarks about the motion were somewhat hypocritical. I know where that comes from and I am not going to comment on it further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say to the Hon. Member that if he expects the Minister to answer or rebut a portion of his remarks, he must let him have the floor now. I will allow a minute or so for the Hon. Member to reply.

• (1250)

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, when I saw the motion I really thought that it was not a partisan motion, that we were going to talk on a higher level about NATO. Of course, as I have already mentioned, the Hon. Member's speech was entirely an attack on the Government. I do not mind, but the motion did not mention that they were going to attack the Government. I thought we were going to be above partisanship today.

I do not think we should forget our friends in the Liberal Party. Although today's resolution proposed by the Official Opposition is welcome, Canadians should remember the former Government. Consider the following: Which Government was it which unilaterally withdrew half of our commitment to the alliance? Which Government implemented a three-year budgetary freeze on defence spending at a time when inflation was at 12 per cent, a policy which caused the criminal neglect of our Armed Forces, their manpower levels, their equipment, and their ability to carry out their roles and commitments? Let us not forget that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance at the time that the freeze was implemented on the Armed Forces. This freeze got us labelled by our allies in NATO as the country which had to be regarded as unreliable and as a free rider within the alliance.

Of course the answer to all those questions is that it was the Liberal Party. That is the very same Party which today has somehow magically recognized the critical importance of NATO and our alliance—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I regret that the Hon. Minister's time has expired. Questions and comments have now been completed.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity today to participate in this very important debate. I agree with the Government that we should not wallow in partisan rhetoric. In dealing with safety, security, and matters of peace and disarmament in the world we should try to rise above partisanship. I did find it rather strange that the mover of this motion devoted virtually his entire speech to condemning the Government for not spending enough on military equipment, platforms, and arms. I would have hoped that the major thrust, considering the mood of the world today, would have been toward disarmament and arms control. That, however, was not forthcoming from my Liberal colleague, certainly not in emphasis at least.

Before I get into the body of my remarks I would like to make a brief comment on the spectacle to which Canadians were subjected on television a night or two ago of our own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Europe. I do not know whether he has just been appointed an honorary colonel of some tank regiment or an honorary general for that matter. However, personally speaking, I think it was quite disgusting to see the Prime Minister masquerading in a military battle fatigue uniform. It was not to hype up the military who were present but to get his mug shot taken for the Tory Party TV cameras, which were whirring away in order that he could use those pictures when he decides to assume a hawkish role during the next election campaign.

He will say, "Look at me, I'm in uniform, I'm all for tanks and guns, I'm all for strengthening the military ties that we have with Europe". He wants to give that impression to back up the hawkish tone which runs throughout his Government's White Paper on defence. The conclusion to which I came is that the Prime Minister did not go to Europe to talk arms control and disarmament but to have a few pictures taken to promote himself in battle fatigues as a pal of the ordinary soldiers in Europe's central flank.

It is interesting to note that there is only one political leader in this House who can legitimately wear a uniform, and that is the leader of my Party who was an officer in the Royal Canadian Air Force a number of years ago. However, he does not go around masquerading in his old Air Force-blue uniform to drum up political support.

In the brief time allotted to me today I want to stress the fundamental fact that in our view neither the Liberals nor the Tories have ever really seriously used the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to promote arms control and disarmament. I charge both the Liberals and the Conservatives with lacking moral fortitude and intellectual courage in that respect.

We keep on hearing about how important it is to be at the NATO council and the NATO table. However, we never really know whether or not we are having any impact. In fact, we know that we usually have a rather negative impact. We never really hear what the arguments are. We are not told that Canada pursued a particular line in terms of arms control and disarmament. Rather, and it is rather strange in many respects, we always seem to end up supporting what one of the superpowers has proclaimed to be major NATO policy as though it would be almost sinful to disagree with the United States on any one major, or indeed minor, defence issue.

If there is one thing for which the Canadian people are asking today it is not neutrality or isolationism, and my Party supports neither one of those approaches. The Canadian people are asking today for a more sovereign, a more objective approach to the major arms issues, the major defence issues in the world today. They are saying that neither the Soviet Union nor the United States has an exclusive right to take the world down the tube by ever increasing their weaponry, their arms, and their nuclear capabilities. Yet, as my friend, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), would say, here we are acquiescing supinely time after time to American strategic policy.

I have never heard a Liberal or a Tory Prime Minister stand up and say publicly that he and his Government were opposed to any major U.S. strategic policy even though privately they may have disagreements. Canadian voters want this now more than ever before.

I said a few moments ago that we do not support isolationism or neutrality. We are not intellectually or ideologically neutral. We are democrats. We support the main principles of western Liberal democracy and we are prepared to defend them. My Party came forward with a defence posture last summer in response to the Government's White Paper.

That is more than the Liberals did. They can stand here today piously criticizing the Government's White Paper, but I do not see any Liberal policy paper on defence, and it has been almost four years since the last election. We came forward with a response to the Government's White Paper, and in our paper we made it abundantly clear that an NDP government was prepared, not only to increase our defence posture in certain strategic areas, but to spend money, because you cannot have the one without the other.

We brought forward our version of a maritime policy; to pursue the frigate program, to purchase conventionally powered submarines, to increase the number of long-range patrol aircraft, and to put in place a passive peacetime surveillance network in the Canadian Arctic, although not to militarize it as the Conservative Government wants to do.

Not only does the Government want to militarize the Canadian Arctic, it wants to do so with nuclear-propelled submarines, which in itself is self-defeating. If ever we want to try to come to an agreement with the Soviets, the British, or the French with regard to keeping nuclear-powered submarines out of the Canadian Arctic, how will we ever get to first base if we also advocate putting nuclear-powered submarines into the Canadian Arctic? As was suggested in the NDP paper, we should demilitarize the Canadian Arctic.

• (1300)

That does not preclude putting in place the North Warning System. We would like the North Warning System moved farther north so that it could help survey Canadian territory, not just American territory. We believe that we should and must share the intelligence gathered from that system because we would be assuming full and total control of the conventional defence of the northern half of North America which is Canadian territorial land, water and air space.

That is not being isolationist or neutralist. It is very much a part of the western world community in terms of defence. However, we are very disappointed in NATO. Originally, our predecessor, the CCF, and the NDP were strong supporters of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the late 1940s and throughout the 1950s. Europe had been ravaged by war and the economies were in terrible shape. They needed assistance and we were prepared at that time to provide the military wherewithal to bolster their independence and the right to develop in freedom and democracy. But that was 30 years ago.

We are saying that the world has changed. The strategic configuration has changed and our token force in central Europe, which the Government is increasing in a token way, is a very costly token presence that militarily makes no sense. I have talked to German counterparts in the German parliament. They too say that it makes no sense to have 6,000 soldiers and some pilots in the central flank. It might make sense, for example, to have a bilateral agreement with Norway. Yet what did the Government and the Prime Minister do but pull the rug out from under Norway by cancelling the CAST commitment.

Our more vociferous opponents opposite say that it is unfair and unwise to withdraw from NATO, yet they can turn around and unilaterally withdraw from the CAST commitment, leaving one of our friends and allies in the lurch. There were very few consultations and, as far as I know, there has been no replacement found for the CAST. Our troops were eminently well trained for Nordic fighting, if it should occur. They were the best, but they were removed, and the Government cancelled the CAST in favour of putting more troops in a part of Europe where they were not even needed. It makes absolutely no sense militarily and is extremely costly.

We are also very concerned that NATO has not been used to bring about an arms reduction and arms control in that part of the world in consultation with Warsaw Pact Treaty organizations as well. Rather, it has been used for aggressive strategies and has pursued aggressive conventional military strategies as well as nuclear military strategies such as the deep strike and FOFA, Follow On Force Attack. It has refused to give up the right of first use of nuclear weapons. It has supported the U.S. strategy of forward maritime defence, which takes U.S. attack killer submarines into the Bering Sea. Canada is supporting that aggressive and offensive policy.

Therefore, we say that if it is so important to be at the council tables at Brussels year in and year out, where is our influence in trying to deflect the super powers from this nuclear madness? I do not see any results. We have only seen a constant, continuous build-up of both conventional and nuclear weapons in Europe. That has been the total result of NATO and our participation in it. It is sad to think that there are infinitely more arms in Europe today than there were before we joined in the establishment of NATO.

Let me turn to the positive steps that can be taken in place of that kind of arms build-up. We believe we should make every effort in the councils of Europe, East and West, to promote the concept and application of common security. We cannot simply concentrate on our own security if, for example, the Poles, the Soviet Union or Czechoslovakians feel insecure. If our security is at the cost of someone else's security, then the world is not secure. If we continue to build our armaments, if the other side continues to build its armaments, we will not have security and we will continue along the road of madness.

Second, we support the no first use of nuclear weapons. That would send the signal that we too are sincere about not using nuclear weapons as a means of settling a political dispute. Such a policy is total madness and would lead to total destruction and the end of humanity as we know it. Why in God's name are we supporting that kind of policy in a country like Canada?

We would like to see greater emphasis placed on non aggressive defences in Europe, something which NATO has consistently refused to consider. This would include such things as a demilitarized zone, denuclearized regions, with serious talks at Vienna and Geneva in terms of conventional arms build-up.

Last December, I met with French and British politicians in London and Paris, at Quai d'orsay, White Hall and the Institute for Foreign Affairs in Paris. The mood in Europe is not one of disarmament and that the INF is opening the doors to arms reduction and further disarmament, but one that a great vacuum has been created which must be filled. That is not only the mood of politicians, but the public as well. There is not a desire to continue to reduce conventional nuclear weapons but to rush to fill the vacuum with more weapons with greater destructive proportions. The modernization of conventional weapons is a very slick way of saying that there is no intention to disarm. What they are saying in Europe is that their primary purpose is to build up their conventional weapons categories.

The primary concern of the British and French is to modernize and increase their nuclear weapons.

Therefore, through NATO we are not heading toward a world that will have little or no nuclear weapons. Unfortunately, through NATO we are backing a policy, tacitly or otherwise, of actually increasing weapons in Europe. One need only read a grade 10 textbook on the history of Europe to see that conventional weaponry is no guarantee that there will be no wars in Europe. They have never been able to keep the peace with conventional weapons, yet they are continually building up greater arsenals.

Let me conclude by stating that, unfortunately, NATO has failed to date to come to grips with the issue of arms control and disarmament. It has pursued consistently aggressive, deep strike policies. That is not what the world wants. The world does not want the superpowers to be backed up by their two treaty organizations egging them on, pushing them on to greater sophistication in the means of destruction they have at their command.

What we need, and what we can do for ourselves, is to pursue the defence of North America in conventional terms, as I said a moment ago, to demilitarize and denuclearize the Arctic. We could at least enter into negotiations with the Soviets, step by step. We cannot expect one superpower to divest itself entirely of its strategic ballistic missile force when the other one, the United States, geograhically just happens not to have its major deep strike strategic nuclear force in the Arctic. But there are grounds to at least sit down and begin to talk.

Mr. Gorbachev has indicated that he is prepared both in terms of asymmetrical reduction in conventional weapons and deep cuts in strategic arms. There is a point of departure right now where this Government can pick up the ball and go with it. It can show NATO, Western Europe and Eastern Europe that we are serious about demilitarizing the Arctic, but, no, it is sitting back. The Prime Minister is wearing a military jumpsuit and saying: "Are we ever strong. We have to be tough", the old hawkish approach, the old cold war approach.

I wish to conclude on one point. Every Member in this House without exception is trying to find his or her path to peace in this world, peace and security, but we must all feel secure, not just Canada, not just the United States, but all countries. It is not easy. It will take time. Let us try our best whether it is through military alliances, if that is what one supports, or outside of military alliances, whether it is in the political field or military field, let us all continue to work for peace, for security, because if we do not, we have the weapons of mass destruction today that will destroy us all.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). That gentleman is on the Standing Committee on National Defence and I value him as a friend. However, I listened to his remarks today with great sadness. It was, indeed, an outright attack on the United States and on NATO itself. I guess we have some consolation in the fact that the New Democratic Party has finally made up its mind on what its military policy really is.

Mr. Friesen: Only for today.

Mr. Crofton: Well, that is for someone else to judge. The Hon. Member made a number of statements in his remarks, any one of which is the subject matter for a lengthy discussion and speech. He made some personal reference to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) personally wearing a coverall in visiting Canadian Forces. To me, that is common prudence. If he were flying in an airplane, presumably he would wear a flight suit. I fail to see what is so remarkable about that. He made some observations when he was in Europe about Canada continuing to support NATO and that a certain political Party in this country had a different point of view. I think that is a perfectly legitimate comment by the Prime Minister in any forum.

The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) made some comments about Canada assuming responsibility for conventional defence of the northern half of North American and that the New Democratic Party is opposed to some of the proposed equipment acquisitions. It seems we are to carry out this conventional defence with wooden swords and toy guns.

He also suggested that we should not deal with the nuclear defence of the northern half of North America, that we should consult our allies. The New Democratic Party is on record as being opposed to the Canada-U.S. trade proposals because of the threat to sovereignty, yet it appears that with anything other than a conventional threat to Canada we will just invite the Americans to deal with it. If that is not contracting out our defence, I am not sure what is. And as to a threat to sovereignty, I suggest that that is the fastest way to undermine our sovereignty in this country.

The Hon. Member also made reference to the fact that belonging to NATO has caused unease among some of the Warsaw Pact countries. I really thought for a moment he was going to propose that we leave NATO and join the Warsaw Pact. Happily, he stopped short of that. However, he did say that NATO is an aggressive organization with aggressive strategies. I ask him to reflect on who put up the Berlin wall, who shoots people who try to cross the Berlin wall, who attacked peaceful demonstrations, attempts at self-expression, in Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary? It certainly was not NATO. In fact NATO was formed in the first instance to defend democracy against aggression. That remains one of its key roles.

Its other key role is the political attempt of peace-loving countries to deal with serious military problems in the world. We are at Geneva and at Helsinki. The Hon. Member suggested that NATO was making no progress at arms reduction. That is the precise purpose of these conferences, and why Canada is participating in them. The Hon. Member suggested that NATO had no achievements. I suggest it was because of NATO, our resolution to sustain NATO, that the INF agreement was achieved this past year. It was not in spite of NATO, it was because of NATO.

Finally, I would ask the gentleman if he would like to comment on his remark that Canadians are calling for this Government to oppose the United States on major strategic policy. Does he have some particular policy in mind or does he just want us to be opposed to the Americans? Is he suggesting that our disapproval of the Americans proposing to break the ABM Treaty is not a difference of opinion on a serious strategic policy? The fact that we have encouraged the end of nuclear testing, is that not a difference of opinion with the United States on a serious strategic matter? I suggest it is. I would like to hear his answers.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton), who is a colleague and friend, was actually in the House when I spoke based on the questions he just asked.

Mr. Crofton: I heard every word.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): If he heard every word, he has a strange way of listening. In the first place, talking about arms control and bringing about an end to testing, am I wrong, did the Conservative Government put an end to Cruise testing in Canada, or are we still testing the Cruise? Do we still have an agreement? I think we are still testing the Cruise missile even though it has nothing to do with NATO. It was not even a NATO agreement. It was a bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States. Here we are supposedly pushing the United States to make certain that the Cruise missile is on the table at the START talks and at the same time promoting the testing of the Cruise missile here in Canada. Well, if that is not hypocrisy, I do not know what is, and stupidity as well.

Second, the Hon. Member questioned my statement that Canadians wanted us to oppose American strategic policy. It is well known that a very large proportion of the Canadian public are extremely fearful of SDI which this Conservative Government supports. Those who understand what ADI, the Air Defence Initiative, is all about, know that it is a stepping stone, the opening of a door, a going up the back stairs into the Strategic Defence Initiative. There are Canadian experts from one end of this country to the other who are totally opposed to the forward maritime strategy of the United States and are very fearful that the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines by Canada will get us inextricably involved and tied in with that policy. That is extremely dangerous and it is extremely destabilizing.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich said that I attacked the United States. I did not attack the United States. I attacked certain specific policies that have emanated from a very hawkish Pentagon, ratified by a President who I do not think has a total and full grasp on a great many of the policies that are handed to him in the oval office for his signature. I am saying that with respect for that office and respect for the tremendous burdens of that office. Nonetheless, I was referring to specific policies and I was not attacking the United States per se as our neighbour and our friend to the south.

The Hon. Member referred to some silly thing about my Party advocating that we defend the North with wooden guns or wooden bullets or something along that line. I do not know how many more times I have to say this to my hon. friend from the West Coast but, in our response to the White Paper, we supported the north warning system. We supported conventional submarines. We supported keeping the sea lanes of communications open in time of emergency or war, heaven forbid. We supported the frigate program. We supported increasing long-range patrol aircraft. We supported sonar and sub-sonar listening devices and sharing that intelligence with our friend and neighbour.

What we did not support was an active militarization of our Canadian Arctic by putting stealth platforms in there capable of very aggressive actions such as nuclear-powered submarines, to say nothing of the horrendous cost. We also advocated in our paper the forward locating of our CF-18s, all our CF-18s since they would not be in Europe under our policy. They would be here in North America, where we think they belong, for interception.

I do not know where the Hon. Member was during my speech. I think that I have addressed all the concerns but one. I do not retract one word I said about that disgraceful show of our Prime Minister wearing a jumpsuit in Europe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): The way I see it, Mr. Speaker, it would seem the Conservatives and the New Democrats enjoy getting at each other when it comes to this famous issue. It will be fascinating to see how they vote Monday night, whether they will form a common front or whether they will vote according to their conscience and their respective positions.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to take part in this debate and of course support the motion moved on behalf of the Liberal Party, reflecting as it does not only past traditions but also contemporary progress and especially hope for peace in the future.

I also want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) for the way he drafted the motion, because it is clearly focused on the role of NATO in Canada's defence policy. This has been particularly true in recent months, for the entire world enthusiastically praises the efforts of American President Reagan and Soviet Secretary General Gorbachev who have successfully emerged from their negotiations on intermediate nuclear forces. The world can therefore hope that this favourable atmosphere will make it possible to continue negotiations and achieve still more significant progress towards disarmament.

Such is the context for my remarks in the House today. In the few minutes at my disposal I want to stress the importance of NATO, as follows: first, in the context of a Canadian comprehensive defence policy based on certain basic principles; second, in the context of last summer's White Paper tabled in the House by the Conservative Government; third, in the context of a clearer strategy more attuned to the foreign policy which we in the Liberal Party would like the Government to follow.

For openers, I would suggest that we ought to ask ourselves some very relevant questions. On what basic principles should a Canadian defence policy rest? Does Canada's NATO membership still meet the key objectives of our external policy? We in the Liberal Party believe that a defence policy must rest on certain principles.

First, a defence policy must be part of a wider policy which includes not only defence issues but also external and even domestic issues. Given the recent commitments of this Government and the speeches the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) have been making lately, it seems to us that this policy, as advocated as well in the Government's White Paper, is no longer compatible with our traditional foreign policy. The Conservatives have made a sharp turn to the right.

Second, a security policy for Canada must be based on the assumption that the pursuit of national security is guaranteed through world security. As I recall, this assumption was unanimously accepted by the Joint Committee on External Relations. Since there cannot be world security without international co-operation, Canadian contributions to world security must be geared to multilateral approaches, not only through such long-established institutions and organizations as NATO but also through initiatives taken outside the institutional context.

Third, right now the major threats against world security include the deterioration of East-West relations, the proliferation of regional conflicts, economic disparities, and very important influences on the world's environment. It follows therefore that all problems require an international and multilateral solution. In our estimation the challenge of arms control and disarmament calls for the same multilateral approach and, in this respect, the Liberal Party considers that NATO is still in a good position to play that role.

[English]

Fourth, as part of this wider security policy approach defence should focus on political-military dimensions, specifically East-West and regional conflict issues. As such defence policies should perform three primary functions.

First, there should be a military contribution to the collective defence postures of western alliance. This contribution should only serve the purpose of enhancing stable deterrence at the lowest possible level of military forces. Therefore, it should be buttressed by political efforts in western alliance councils to ensure that the West continues to diligently pursue an overriding policy of stabilizing and reducing tensions between East and West, through arms control, confidence-building measures, and "non-threatening" military deployments.

Two, the physical protection of Canada's sovereignty through effective control of Canadian territory, to the extent where this is consistent with the wider goals of global security. That is, the objective of effective control should be pursued as much through international negotiation designed to eliminate or minimize threats to sovereignty security as through military options more narrowly designed to deter those threats.

Three, a military contribution through peace-keeping to a wider Canadian diplomatic effort to control and resolve regional conflicts. In addition, a made-in-Canada approach should be emphasized at all times involving independent Canadian threat assessments, security needs, and resultant policy operations.

[Translation]

The Liberal Party considers of paramount importance collective co-operation alliances within a non- military context. Ever since it was established in 1949, Canada has consistently seen NATO in a non military role. I must remind the House that it was Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent who first thought of the idea of setting up a collective military alliance and that it was Canada which insisted to have Section 2 included in the NATO Charter, the so-called Canadian section, so that the organization might play both a non military and strategic role. A defence policy must be formulated to reflect as closely as possible the foreign policy of Canada and its security objectives.

For instance, a defence policy for the Arctic dealing expressly with the sovereignty and security problem should emphasize the need to improve global security in the Arctic while insisting on the Canadian objective namely a sovereign control on Canadian territories.

In that perspective, it is difficult to understand why logically this Tory Government would want a nuclear submarine program. It seems to me that the presence of nuclear submarines in the Arctic would not improve in any way the over-all security in this area. I feel it would be inconsistent for Canada to get involved in arms proliferation there at a time when people are increasingly talking about the need for a coherent approach to disarmament.

I feel it is of utmost importance to emphasize the goals of this Tory Government within NATO, and if the Government was really serious about disarmament, it would not pursue this militarization policy. The acquisition of nuclear submarines certainly creates a dangerous precedent. After years of seeking NATO's co-operation for disarmament, the Canadian Government seems to contradict itself. While testifying before the Standing Committee on National Defence on June 18, 1987, the Minister of National Defence stated clearly the real reason why the Government wanted to purchase submarines, and I quote:

[English]

"The point that should not be missed is that all this machinery, these nuclear submarines, must be bought not simply for their utility in peace but more importantly for their utility in war".

[Translation]

These are the comments of the Minister of National Defence.

In contrast, I would like to quote the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who clearly outlined the position of the Liberal Party as concerns arms proliferation in the statement he made in Vancouver on February 6:

> While the superpowers are talking about arms reductions, our Government has decided that Canada will build some 10 or 12 offensive nuclear submarines at a possible cost of $16 billion. The building and deployment of offensive submarines constitute a radical departure from the deterrent role traditionally played by our armed forces. I believe that the Government is wrong in wanting to equip Canada with offensive nuclear submarines in the Arctic. The Government states that these submarines will be used partly for surveillance and partly for defence purposes in our northern waters. If such is the case, there are less costly, surer and more effective means to do the job.

It is obvious that the Leader of the Opposition has suggested a much more serious and praiseworthy method himself, namely the development of a new international regime for the Arctic under a treaty which would have the support of all powers in the region. With such a treaty, we could stop the militarization of the Arctic, pave the way for technological, economic and environmental co-operation, and most important, guarantee the future of northern residents.

In my opinion, the difference between the views of the Conservative Government and those of the Liberal Party is very important. We believe that our defence policy must be based on the following principles: first, an external and domestic policy; secondly, a collective approach to defence; thirdly, multilateralism; fourth, a clear notion of our military role, and fifth, a coherent approach to peace and disarmament.

With this understanding of a Canadian defence policy and the principles on which it rests, I should like to deal now with the Tory Government approach.

A cursory look at the Government's defence policy, as described in the White Paper on National Defence, clearly shows that the Tory Government is likely to distinguish between our defence and foreign policies. Considering that peace and security are two basic elements of our foreign policy, our defence policy should support and reflect the objectives instead of rejecting them.

I fully agree with the notion that the Canadian Armed Forces need new resources. Former Liberal Governments have never shirked their responsibilities and always provided quite generously the Canadian Armed Forces with adequate requirements.

But we feel the new Tory policy is somewhat extreme. First of all, NATO, according to the White Paper on National Defence, is not an excuse for Canada to purchase arms. Also, the purchase of these nuclear submarines at an excessive cost puts Canada in a very bad light.

It should therefore be emphasized that two different concepts of NATO are involved here: the militaristic approach of the Tory Government, and the peaceful and responsible approach of the Liberal Party. The Government has insisted on demonstrating the need for a strong Canada that is capable of defending itself. We agree, but the Liberal Party recognizes that in the world today, a defence policy based on defence, not on offence, is a legitimate part of a comprehensive approach.

We feel that as a member of NATO, Canada should continue to do its fair share but also continue to express its views on peace within a multilateral context.

The Liberal Party believes that NATO has a role to play beyond the purely military. We realize that NATO provides the advantages and imposes the responsibilities inherent in an alliance, but it also provides the opportunity for playing a leadership role within the Alliance in addressing matters relating to peace and security.

We believe there is a possibility of reducing conventional armament in Europe, and we hope that a ban on chemical weapons will be agreed on shortly.

The approach taken by the Conservative Government in its White Paper fails to recognize the importance of that aspect of our participation in NATO. This Government is taking Canada blindly down the militaristic road, where we risk losing all credibility as a spokesman and leader in defending the cause of peace and disarmament in this world. Canada has always played this role in the past, and it is a role we must continue to play, not only through our efforts via the Department of External Affairs and agencies like the Canadian International Development Agency, but also through our Canadian Armed Forces, which should not play an aggressive, but a peacekeeping role, and do so wherever they can in the world as an agent for peace and as a member of UN peacekeeping missions, and thus promote peace and greater understanding among nations throughout the world.

[English]

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). There seems to be a difficulty which both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have in examining the White Paper. They seem to expect to find in it a complete statement of Canadian foreign policy and seem to forget that the White Paper is a statement about defence.

The White Paper acknowledges in a very serious and meaningful way Canada's whole-hearted support for arms negotiation, arms control, and arms reduction. Many journals and volumes of paper have been written about what has been taking place in Geneva, Helsinki, and Brussels. However, when it comes to Canadian military forces, its roles, missions, and capacities, very little has been put down on paper. Certainly the Liberal Party did not bother to do so for the last 12 years or 14 years of its term in office. It was such that when we came to office, the only existing document was on Canadian Armed Forces defence in the seventies, and here we were nearly half way through the decade of the eighties.

The White Paper addresses the very serious shortfall that we have with our military force. It in no way denigrates the most important arms negotiation efforts which have been made, continue to be made, and indeed are being made today with Canadian representation at Helsinki, Geneva, Brussels, the United Nations, and all other forums in the world where such matters are discussed. Canada is advancing energetically and forcefully its view, most particularly on the matters of arms control, supervision, and monitoring.

The Hon. Member for Papineau criticized, as I heard him, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) for suggesting that we should be acquiring weaponry for its utility in war. Why else would we acquire military hardware? If it has no utility in war, it will certainly not have any utility in peace and will make no contribution to keeping the peace. I have heard some fatuous statements in my time, but that one seems to be the worst.

I have heard in the defence committee members of the opposition Parties talk about defensive submarines. I even heard them talk about a defensive grenade. I suggest the people who think along those lines have a rather strange understanding of what is military hardware. The whole purpose of spending money on it is that when it goes bang it does mischief to the person at whom it is aimed, or at least it creates the impression that it might. This is wherein the deterrence lies, so that the other fellow does not perpetrate an action which is offensive to all.

I am disappointed that the Hon. Member for Papineau suggested that the Canadian Government is taking a great leap to the right. I suggest that this country largely disarmed over the last 20 years but did not have the courage to say so or to admit to it, to the point that we had almost reduced our military to total ineffectiveness. The mere fact that we are trying to spend some money to create some credibility in our Armed Forces is scarcely a great charge off to becoming a militaristic nation; it is merely a matter of trying to keep up with the commitments we have made to our allies.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond briefly to what I consider to be comments, not questions, of the Hon. Member by re-emphasizing what I said earlier. We cannot and should not have a defence policy isolated from other major government policies. Certainly the defence policy should form part of the wider security policy and compensate a number of related goals in the areas of defence and foreign and domestic affairs. We believe that the Government—and it is very symptomatic of the Government in this area and in many other areas—is taking one step forward and three steps backwards, or one step forward and two steps sideways.

If we look at the White Paper on defence, published on behalf of the Government by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), we see that the document is contrary to many things the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is saying. Certainly it shows that there is no co-ordination or general thrust in where the Conservative Government wants to take us.

Defence can be looked at in a general approach to world security and cannot be dissociated from efforts made by our Department of External Affairs representatives abroad.

I appreciate that the Conservatives are a little uneasy about our motion. When it was introduced this morning, the Minister went to great length to try to indicate that it was a vote of non-confidence in the Government and that they would not be able to vote in favour of it. The motion is a very simple one. It reads:

> That this House recognizes the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy.

It is very straightforward. It might create some difficulties for the New Democrats who do not believe in NATO, and I suspect that they will vote against it. However, if the Government believes in NATO, wants to continue to support it, and wants to continue to participate in NATO, there is no reason for it to vote against the motion. It is trying to find all kinds of excuses, even procedural ones, not to accept our legitimate motion.

I am one who participated in the parliamentary reform committee chaired by one of our distinguished colleagues who is now Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland. It was quite clear when we dealt with opposition motions introduced on opposition days that unless it was specifically clear in a motion that a vote of non-confidence was implied, motions were then general motions that did not carry penalty of the defeat of the Government. Therefore, the Minister could let his colleagues who want to vote with the Opposition in favour of this motion vote that way. Although some of us might be tempted to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to go to the Governor General to call an election, if we win the vote on Monday night, the Prime Minister does not have the obligation to do so because according to the new rules, opposition days are for us to deal with legitimate motions, to allow Members on both sides of the House to express their views and to vote on them without necessarily putting the confidence of the Government in jeopardy.

• (1350)

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) a question. The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) when speaking was trying to use my approach to this motion as his justification for not voting for the motion to support Canada's continuing role in NATO.

Does the Hon. Member feel that that is in keeping with the new rules of the House of Commons and at the time when the Minister accused me of attacking the Government, he was indeed attacking the Opposition.

Does the Hon. Member for Papineau recall the Conservative Party during the last election promising a 6 per cent real increase in defence spending, which means after deducting inflation? Does he feel the Conservatives have kept that promise?

The Minister talked a great deal about world security and co-operation within NATO and this motion simply reconfirms that. Does the Hon. Member not feel that the motion is very much in keeping with maintaining our firm stance as a nation and as a member of NATO, to support NATO itself, thereby trying to have an organization such as NATO that is reasonably equal to the Warsaw Pact so that two can discuss things wisely at the bargaining table? Is that not the proper format to have in order to arrive at agreements and at further reductions in armaments on both sides which in turn will add greater peace and stability to the world?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) for his comments. He is a much greater authority than I am on defence matters. I share the view he expresses.

In relation to the motion, I want to assure the Hon. Member that this motion, which he drafted very well, having sat on the McGrath Commission, is in keeping with the letter and the spirit of parliamentary reform undertaken by this House during this Parliament. I believe it is also consistent with the traditions and the precedents of this House. It is quite clear that the adoption of this motion will not and does not constitute and ought not to be interpreted as a vote of non-confidence in the Government. Any member of the Government who wants to vote with us should feel free to do so. They are not jeopardizing the existence of their government.

In relation to the latter part of my colleague's question, he was a strong supporter of the commitment which the previous Government made. I remember the Member speaking very forcefully in our caucus to make sure that the Liberal Government was giving the appropriate resources.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate formally in the debate today. As chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Defence, I have lamented over time the lack of opportunity which the House accords to those of us who have a particular interest in this subject.

I must say in response to the proposal put forward by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) that I welcome the Liberal Party's newly enunciated support for NATO. In recent weeks and months I was beginning to wonder whether the Liberals supported Canada's continuance in NATO by some of the things they have said. Attention was drawn to the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent who was the Prime Minister of the country at the time Canada joined NATO. I daresay in the succeeding years had he still been with us, he would have lamented Canada's backing away from whole-hearted support in that organization.

The Member in putting his motion today drew attention to Liberal policy in 1983-84, the reacquired interest in NATO. I suggest, in part, that it was a realization, with an election staring the Government in the face, of what was likely to happen to it that it rediscovered some old values and tried to figure out how to throw some money at it in a hurry. Indeed, the Liberal Party largely drew up a wish list—

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have known the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) for some time and have the greatest respect for him. I know that he would not want to put anything on record that is inaccurate in any way. If he checks my speech he will find that that "new" interest on defence was ongoing. He will also find if he checks the Estimates that renewed interest was very rampant from the late 1970s right through to 1984.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Order.

Mr. Dick: There are so many inaccuracies, Len, it is impossible to figure out which is fact and which is fiction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to ask questions and make comments later. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich has the floor.

Mr. Crofton: I look forward to the Hon. Member's question at the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker. I think Canadians are best able to judge for themselves the true facts of the matter.

If we took a stock taking today or on Monday and added up the value of the bricks, mortar, guns, tanks and the infrastructure we have in the Armed Forces, we would arrive at a total of approximately $90 billion. That is what we have invested at the moment. The life expectancy of the bricks, mortar, tanks and guns is about 25 years. If you divided 25 into $90 billion you get roughly $3.5 billion. Over the years we should have been investing about $3.5 billion a year in capital outlays to sustain the equipment, the personnel, the bricks and mortar that we have. However, the reality is that we have been investing about $2.5 billion a year over the better part of the last 20 years. We have been short-changing the Canadian Armed Forces about $1 billion a year. That is why we have rust-out in the fleet, obsolete tanks in Europe, and helicopters about which there is some question of whether they can fly on a given day. That is why we have ships that can barely make it out of harbour, and why we have to acquire vacuum tubes from Warsaw Pact countries to make our equipment work. That is the legacy of the Liberal Party.

• (1400)

We did not end up in this perilous state overnight. It was a plan, or indeed a lack of planning over many years, that reduced the Canadian Armed Forces to its serious condition today. That is why this Government found it necessary to invest considerable sums of money to try and restore some real level of competence and reliability to the Canadian Armed Forces. This is necessary because of the two important organizations to which we belong, NORAD and NATO, although the subject of today's debate is NATO.

We are the second largest country in the world with far and away the longest coastline and a small population. Consequently, we can scarcely hope to defend ourselves by ourselves against any serious threat. Thus it is only natural that we look to like-minded nations who share our love of freedom, our democratic principles, our belief in individual liberty, and our respect for the rule of law, with whom to unite our efforts in collective defence. It is for that reason we have sought our security since 1949 in the general framework of NATO and the bilateral arrangements we have with the U.S.

The motion before the House today refers to the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security, in defence, and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament. They are the basic elements of the Canadian security policy as enunciated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Mr. St. Laurent, at the time NATO was founded, said that this treaty has to be far more than an old-fashioned military alliance. It is based on the common belief of the North Atlantic nations in the values and virtues of our civilization. That is still the view of this Government and I am confident it remains the Canadian view. It has also supposedly been the view of every Canadian Government since 1949.

The voices that cry out for withdrawal from NATO on the grounds that Europe is now rich enough to look after itself, and that membership in alliances inhibits our freedom of action in searching for peace, carry the wrong message about Canada and the alliance. NATO is as much a political as it is a military alliance. It was created under Article 51 of the UN Charter, a fact mentioned earlier today but which bears repeating. The Charter referred to contributing to the maintenance of peace by making clear our determination to exercise the right of individual collective self-defence.

Let us examine for a moment the hypocrisy of a neutral Canada. The NDP attempted to make the argument they are not advocating a neutral Canada but I differ because their words convey a completely different message. As neutrals we would continue to rely for our security on the deterrent and defensive forces of our allies, having opted out of any contribution to or shared responsibility for this collective security.

Neutrality would deny our history. It would deny the efforts of Canada in two world wars and since to establish an international order in which we as a country could grow in peace with our neighbours.

We cannot isolate ourselves from the world. Given that our economic well-being is related to that of our allies and our social and political values are those of our allies, there is no other logical, ethical place for it to be except in NATO. Neutrality would be a denial of our geography, of the fact that we lie between two superpowers, and that whatever policy we might follow, our involvement in any East-West conflict would be inevitable.

It has been suggested that neutrality would enhance our security for not much more than the current cost of collective defence. This is a very naive calculation, as the Swiss and Swedes have long recognized. They pay far more for defence per capita than do we. They devote a greater percentage of their gross domestic product than we do now to meet defence requirements. Even more significantly, they require compulsory military service. Additionally, both those countries are heavily involved in armaments production and sales abroad, which is the only way they can sustain the ability to produce the military hardware they need themselves. The bottom line is that we would have less defence for a much higher cost if we chose to abandon our allies and seek our destiny as a neutral.

I mentioned earlier that we share a set of common values and freedoms with our NATO allies. It is these values that are in conflict with those of the Warsaw Pact. The differences which divide us are deep and cannot be wished away. When these economic, social and spiritual divisions are considered against the background of the massive nuclear, chemical and conventional capacity of the Warsaw Pact, which in most professional judgments exceeds the requirement for defence alone, the requirement to manage East-West relations with great care and ensure that we ourselves are adequately defended is glaringly obvious.

Our value system is under the greatest threat in Europe where the risk to freedom is most obvious and most direct. This is as good a reason as any for our participation in the collective defence of Europe. The preservation of a free and secure western Europe is essential if we are to develop into the sort of country that most Canadians want us to be. Since 1949 successive Governments have recognized this truth, although for some periods of time it has been given little more than lip-service.

As you are aware, it is the policy of the Government to correct the neglect of our Armed Forces so that we once again can take our place in the alliance with pride and in the knowledge we are pulling our weight and paying our way. I referred earlier to the two principal functions of the North Atlantic alliance. The first being to maintain an adequate defence, and the political solidarity necessary to deter aggression or intimidation and defend the territories of member countries. The second function is the pursuit of greater stability in East-West relations in order to create a climate in which the underlying political issues can be solved. These are not mutually exclusive functions. They are very closely interrelated.

The political will to deter is as important as the capability of the forces to play their part. The White Paper defines Canadian security policy in terms of defence efforts, arms control efforts, and efforts to secure the peaceful resolution of disputes. These are again complementary elements which are most usefully considered in the context of security policy.

Earlier this week the Prime Minister, Mr. Reagan and other leaders of the North Atlantic alliance met in Brussels in the wake of the signing of the treaty to eliminate all Soviet and U.S. intermediate range nuclear forces. They also gave consideration to what the next step should be for NATO in light of this agreement. We owe our seat at this table to our membership in NATO, as we owe our seat in other councils in which security issues in Europe, the area of greatest East-West confrontation, are discussed.

The success of the INF treaty is a NATO success. It was a NATO proposal. NATO adopted a dual-track strategy to deploy INF while negotiating for its elimination. The NATO nations, despite considerable political pressure on some of the European members, maintained the political solidarity necessary in such a negotiation.

This is not to say that the new spirit of openness, glasnost, ushered in by Mr. Gorbachev, did not play a significant role in creating the climate in which an agreement was possible. However, it was essentially a NATO victory. The lessons that we can take from it are that we should deal from a position of strength, select a political strategy and, above all, be patient.

On the horizon are prospects for further arms control negotiations which might lead to a 50 per cent reduction in strategic missiles, the elimination of chemical weapons, and significant reductions in the levels of conventional forces facing each other in Europe. We welcome these initiatives. We endorse these goals.

If we were not members of NATO we would have limited influence in some of these issues and none in others. As it is, we can contribute our ideas, our diplomatic and technical skills, and our political support. This is no time, however, to let our guard down. We must remember the lessons of the INF Treaty and ensure that we enter the negotiations with an adequate, effective, and modern set of defence capabilities.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government is proceeding, with the implementation of the White Paper, to repair the neglect of many years of our Armed Forces. There is no inconsistency between the pursuit of verifiable and equitable arms control measures and the maintenance of an effective defence. They complement each other. Canada has long sought security at the lowest possible level of arms and will continue to do so, but unilateral arms control is destabilizing and dangerous to our security and the security of others. We must be patient and we must be strong.

I mentioned earlier that we owed our seat in the councils of the western world to our membership in NATO. It is because we share the burden of collective defence in NATO that we have been able to participate with the European nations in the Helsinki process of building security and co-operation in Europe. We have also enjoyed a place in the Stockholm Conference on Security and Confidence-building Measures in Europe.

Our contributions to NATO's integrated military command in Europe will ensure our participation in the conference on Security and Co-operation and in the talks that will be aimed at encouraging stability in Europe at lower levels of forces. Finally, it is our membership in the alliance that enables us to participate as a partner in the consultations on nuclear arms control between the United States and the Soviet Union, even though we as a nation do not have nuclear arms.

I began by describing NATO as more than a purely military alliance. I do not know how many of our friends across the floor have read the treaty. It is very simple and very short. I think the language of the preamble describes its purpose far more eloquently than can I. It reads:

> The parties to this treaty reaffirm their faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and their desire to live in peace with all peoples and all governments.
> They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage and civilization of their peoples founded on the principles of democracy, individual liberty and the rule of law.
> They seek to promote stability and well-being in the North Atlantic Area.
> They are resolved to unite their efforts for collective defence and for the preservation of peace and security.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, when we read such language and reflect on its meaning that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and Canadian membership in it has been a cornerstone of Canadian foreign and defence policy since the treaty was drawn up in 1949? It has served Canada and all its members well. It has been an instrument for peace and has enabled Europeans to enjoy the longest period in modern history in which there has been no war in Europe.

The majority of Canadians support our continued membership in NATO and, as the White Paper asserts, it is essential to the defence of Canada and Canadians for the foreseeable future. As the preamble suggests, it is more than a treaty for defence. It is a treaty for the preservation of our values and freedoms. It is the very basis of Canadian security.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken has delineated a course of action for Canada which seems to me and to all of us in this Party to be one which rests almost entirely upon the strategic doctrines and values of the present United States administration.

When one criticizes, as we do from time to time, those strategic doctrines and values, whether star wars, the forward maritime strategy, or the air defence initiative which we also see as an aggressive strategy being developed in the United States, we are told we are being anti-American. We are told that we are somehow or other a neutralist Party simply because we engage in what we hope is constructive criticism with a view to securing international peace and security for all.

When the Hon. Member talks about neutrality and suggests that we are pursuing a policy of neutrality, he is raising a straw man. He knows perfectly well that this Party has always shared and continues to share the democratic values of the West and is critical when we believe that other societies in the West are not pursuing those democratic values. In no way do we dissociate ourselves from those values.

Our goal is global security. Our goal is the security of all which, since 1982 as a result of the Palme Commission report, is often referred to as the common security because it is no longer possible for one nation alone to be secure. It is only when all nations feel a sense of security, and I include Third World nations as much as those in the so-called advanced world, that we have genuine, real, meaningful security.

Therefore, security is not something to be defined as the Conservatives and apparently, judging by this motion, the Liberals define it, in purely military terms. There is probably no such thing, and certainly not in the nuclear age, as military security, as nations being able, through military means, to provide for their security and well-being.

I fail to understand why the Government, in its White Paper on defence, continues to define Canadian security, and indeed that of every nation, in purely military means. That thinking has been obsolete from the dawn of the nuclear age.

I was, therefore, disappointed to read the motion put forward today by the Liberal Party which resides so much in the past. It embraces none of the contemporary thinking which has been developing particularly strongly in the last five years, dating back to the Palme Commission and other reports from UN disarmament gatherings and elsewhere which have been forging, for all of us, a way of looking at the world in world terms rather than in narrow nationally militaristic terms.

• (1420)

The Liberal motion states:

> That this House recognizes the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy.

Let us analyse this motion to see how buried in the past it is and why the New Democratic Party and, I understand, even the Conservative Party, is not prepared to support it. The motion asks that this House recognize the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament.

The essence of what is generally believed to be mutual security is the building of bridges rather than barricades. It is getting rid of the East-West conflict orientation of the past and developing confidence building measures on both sides to bring them together. History has shown that it has not been NATO that has developed this mutual security, unless the Liberal Party has a definition of mutual security other than the one I have given.

In recent years there have been very important developments in mutual security, also known as common security or security of all, particularly in the Conference on Security and Confidence-building Measures in Europe and the talks that have been taking place under the CSCE in Stockholm.

Enormous strides have taken place in the last two or three years by the United States and the Soviet Union, quite independent of NATO and the Warsaw Pact. It quite stretches the imagination to suggest that these steps have been a product of NATO. I wish that were true, but it is not.

NATO did nothing to promote mutual security, arms control and disarmament throughout President Reagan's first term because President Reagan did nothing. Indeed, it was during this time that former Prime Minister Trudeau complained about the uselessness of NATO in developing policies and strategies for arms control and disarmament.

During President Reagan's first term, and into his second term, the United States was not disposed toward a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing, as was the Soviet Union, for example. The United States was not disposed toward fully supporting the implementation of the ABM Treaty because the United States was disposed toward stretching the arms race into space with its star wars program.

Since the United States has not supported a comprehensive test ban throughout this time, no action on these matters came from NATO. I do not believe that Canada played a significant role in promoting some of these steps.

NATO has continued to have a central doctrine of flexible response, namely the first use of nuclear weapons. In December, 1984, NATO approved of what is called deep strike strategy, quite legitimately raising fears of aggressive intentions.

In Brussels the other day, NATO, with the distinguished exception of Chancellor Kohl of the Federal Republic of Germany, considered enhancing or modernizing tactical nuclear weapons in Europe at a time when the Soviet Union and the United States agreed not only to the diminution but elimination of a class of nuclear weapons. This gave hope to everyone that further strides would be made. Yet at the same time NATO determined at its meeting in Brussels that there should be more sophisticated nuclear weaponry to replace that which will be eliminated. One can only hope that the very important exception of Chancellor Kohl to this decision will convince other parties within NATO to see reason.

We hope that there will be drastic reductions in strategic nuclear weaponry. One wonders whether the Liberal Party, any more than the Government, has given thought to what Canada's position should be and what suggestions we should present to the superpowers about what particularly important areas of weaponry should be reduced or eliminated in strategic arsenals.

The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) said today that he did not believe that the reductions would include air and sea launched cruise missiles, probably including submarine launched ballistic missiles and therefore, presumably, we could go on testing the cruise missile until the two superpowers included it in their negotiations.

Since this motion contains nothing about the Liberal Party's stand on this matter, one presumes they would agree with that position. But, Mr. Speaker, if Canada really cares about promoting those measures in arms control and disarmament that will enhance the security of all, and if Canada is really interested in the area of strategic weaponry, above all the air launch cruise missile, why do we not have proposals now in writing? Rather than wearing a uniform and talking about building up our military and so on, why are we not before the television cameras saying: "Yes, there must be some limits within the strategic reductions relating to the air launch cruise missile", and have a specific proposal to present directly to the superpowers? NATO will not be doing that either. It is through our efforts, if we would only make those efforts, that we will see a strong Canadian contribution to arms control and disarmament.

We could be pressing strongly once again, as we did briefly under the previous Government, for a comprehensive test ban, including, of course, cruise missile testing. We could be pressing very strongly for the adherence by Canada, and all nations, to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, both in the letter and the spirit. Rather than doing that, totally contrary, certainly to the spirit of the non-proliferation treaty, we are apparently blindly going ahead with the acquisition of nuclear-powered attack submarines whose fuel is weapon's grade uranium.

I see nothing in the motion we are discussing today that suggests that Canada should be taking a strong position on matters that would enhance the security of all. It says only that we should reaffirm Canadian participation in NATO as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy. It says nothing at all, and therefore I can only assume does not care, about the frontier of the nuclear battlefield in the 1990s, the Arctic.

The motion does not even mention the steps that Canada can and should take in conjunction with the six other Arctic and Nordic nations to secure the denuclearization and ultimately the demilitarization of the Arctic. I can only take it as I read this motion that NATO and Western Europe are still the primary instrument of our defence policy. I find that is simply and totally living in the past. It is as if we had not yet become aware of our three oceans, and above all our Arctic.

We in this Party could not support such a reactionary, outmoded, unthinking proposal. We would be happy to support a proposal which puts Canada in the forefront internationally of the movement toward arms control, toward disarmament, toward peace and toward security for all. Again, I mean security in the very broadest terms. We would want to support that kind of motion.

Mr. Kilgour: Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member, I have not had a chance to wish her well since she announced she would not be standing for Parliament again. I do that now most sincerely. She always speaks with sincerity in this House and even though we very often disagree, I know she believes fully in what she is saying about every issue.

May I ask the Hon. Member why it is her Party wishes to withdraw from NATO and NORAD? Has its position changed? Is it changing? Will it change, does she think, in the future without her influence in the Party?

Ms. Jewett: I thank the Hon. Member for his compliment, Mr. Speaker. Flattery, as he knows, gets one nowhere. As the Hon. Member well knows, we have a policy established for many years now and reaffirmed only in 1985 at convention. We do not have a convention again until 1989. As the Hon. Member knows, it is at convention that there will be any changes.

I may say that if the Hon. Member were listening, and I am sure he was, to what I was attempting to say, he will know that the New Democrats may be, just as they often are, if I may say so, ahead of their time. The likelihood of the dissolution of both the superpower blocks within the next 10 or 15 years, provided the Soviets get out of Afghanistan, is really quite strong. I feel that quite strongly. I feel that is the direction in which we as Canadians should move in supporting that development.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief observation and, hopefully, an equally brief question. The observation is that those who forget history are doomed to relive it. During the 1930s, after the war to end all wars, we turned swords into ploughshares and let down our defences, and the bullies came back on the scene with another terrible price to pay. I suggest that history has this bad habit of repeating itself, so we have to sustain some sort of strength

The second brief observation I would like to make is that NATO is firmly committed never to be the first to use force. We may indeed be driven to using nuclear force in a very adverse set of circumstances but we are committed never to be the first to use force. Mr. Trudeau flitted about the world, he had a nice trip, but achieved nothing in his last gasp peace mission. Does the New Democratic Party generally believe that by withdrawing from NATO we would have any credibility or any influence whatsoever in the discussions in Europe between the super powers to demilitarize Europe?

Ms. Jewett: With respect to the first comment about history repeating itself, if I may say so again in a friendly fashion to my hon. friend, that is the kind of dreadful mistake so many people make. They do not seem to realize that the advent of the nuclear age has rendered obsolete all references to military history prior to that time. We must get through our heads that there is no such thing as a winnable nuclear war. We must realize that one does not "send one's boy to a nuclear war". Therefore, unless the Hon. Member is a star wars advocate, and I did not think he was, and unless he thinks that there is some great shield up in the sky that can defend against nuclear war, there is no defence in the conventional sense. Just building up more and more nuclear weapons, which is what he is advocating—

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: He obviously is. He is saying that the reason everything went wrong in Europe prior to World War II was because people were not prepared and that they did not have enough military clout and strength. If he is saying, "Okay, build up all the nuclear weapons in the world", I think that that thinking is pre-World War II and is totally obsolete.

He is drawing a very thin line when he differentiates between the first use of force and the first use of nuclear weapons. The fact is that the NATO doctrine of flexible response does involve the first use of nuclear weapons. If one does not think that that is force, then they are defining it as something outside force. Whether or not it is called force, that is the doctrine. That is still the fundamental doctrine even though people have told us, military people included, that there would be a period of from six minutes to six days at the most in a conventional war before nuclear weapons were resorted to. It would be a very rapid escalation into nuclear war. I am sorry, I should not even use the word "war" because I just argued that it is not war. There would be a very rapid escalation into a nuclear exchange, very rapid indeed. That is why we have felt very strongly that NATO should have long since renounced the first use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make. I listened with great interest to the debate on this motion that was put forward today by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), who is a very distinguished colleague. I would have liked to have had some time to speak on the motion today. I know that as well my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who served as Chairman of the National Defence Committee as well as the External Affairs Committee for some nine years would also have liked to have had some input into the debate here today, but time does not permit.

We clearly know and understand the New Democratic Party's stand as it relates to NATO. I was a little disappointed to hear some Members stating that Government Members would not be supporting this motion when it comes to a vote.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is unusual.

Mr. Henderson: It is very unusual, as my distinguished colleague from Saint-Denis has just said. We in the Liberal Party are very strong supporters of NATO. We thought that government Members were also strong supporters of NATO. Since there is but a very short time we might be able to make it a little easier if I were to introduce an amendment. I wish to introduce an amendment to the motion at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am afraid that on a question or comment the Hon. Member does not have that privilege.

It being 2.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply proceedings in accordance with Standing Order 82(9).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m., Monday, March 7, 1988.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF CANADA—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), and pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, the second report of Canada concerning the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-3701, 332-3780, and 332-3957 to 332-3965 inclusive.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

CONTRIBUTION OF WOMEN

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is International Women's Day, an occasion which is set aside to honour women everywhere. For Canadians International Women's Day is an affirmation of the vital role which women play in all areas of our society.

We possess in our country a proud tradition of women's activism. At the turn of the century Canada's suffragists overcame seemingly insurmountable odds to obtain the most basic democratic right, something we now take for granted, the right to vote. They drew collective strength from their organizations, many of which continue to this day. Women's groups were also concerned about special issues, taking on child labour, intemperance, and unsafe labour practices as issues of their own. The healthier and better social environment which we all enjoy today has been largely the result of women's efforts to translate their own vital social concerns into effective reforms.

By seeking remedies to a number of social ills, Canadian women came to the realization that they had to play a more significant role and exert a greater influence in the decision making process and the development of policies.

Some 18 years ago, the famous Royal Commission of Inquiry on the Status of Women made Governments aware of women's determination to play an active and significant role in our society. Today, Mr. Speaker, women in greater number take their rightful place in every scope of activities, because they have proven themselves in the areas of responsibilities they have assumed so far.

[English]

I grew up, as did some others in this Chamber today, in what sociologists disparagingly refer to as the flat fifties. But they were already significant signs of change. It was the age of John Diefenbaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: —who, among other things, appointed Canada's first woman cabinet Minister, the Hon. Ellen Fairclough—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: —who, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, still has a considerable number of fans on this side of the House.

It was also the time of another female politician, a very lively lady named Charlotte Whitton who was the Mayor of Ottawa. She was fascinating but, as I recall, she wore tweeds a lot and she wore shoes with laces. For those of us teenagers who were devout believers in Seventeen magazine, she was not exactly what I wanted to be when I grew up. However, I was absolutely fascinated with her. She was unpredictable, she was uncompromising, she was intimidated, she was unbeatable, and she was never, ever uninteresting, not ever.

As I was growing up these women were on their own to a large extent. However, today women are not alone in pursuing their economic objectives or their social and legal equality. Women now have many allies in that quest for equality. The Government is a staunch ally of Canadian women. We have proven that and will continue to prove it.

• (1110)

As our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said last year at the Canadian Advisory Council symposium on the family:

> If old prejudices and attitudes die hard, it must be said that Canada is a changing society largely because women are changing it. I look forward to the day when affirmative action programs will no longer be necessary, when equality is taken for granted . . . That is why our Government continues, in its commitment to women, to address the need for full equality. The goal of women, the role of Government is to hasten that day.

[Translation]

We have already taken several major steps to make it possible for women to participate fully in the economy. Honourable Members are aware of course of the employment equity programs as well as the federal contract programs; of our efforts to ensure that women can participate equitably in the job training and development programs through the Employment Planning Strategy; of our reform of the pension legislation; of our concrete efforts to enforce the principle of equal pay for equal work; and of our legislation aimed at the enforcement of alimony ordinances.

[English]

That is only a partial list of our initiatives on behalf of women. But none of this would have been possible had our Government not taken swift action to renew the economy. There is a very fundamental truth about equality, that is, that genuine equality does not thrive without a sound economic base.

Perhaps nowhere is this seen more clearly than in the Third World where women's daily struggle to feed themselves and feed their families overshadows and overwhelms any concerns with rights and with equality.

In Canada we are fortunate. We know that to make significant progress on the social issues and on issues having to do with women, those that are so important to the achievement of true equality for all Canadians, we must have sound economic policies. A growing and buoyant economy enables every Canadian to contribute her or his full potential to our society. That is what equality is all about.

Sound economic policies permit our Government to address a number of barriers that still limit the choices available to women in pursuing opportunities. One barrier clearly is the lack of affordable quality child care. Women's equality is a paper promise unless women are offered opportunities to actively participate in all of society's endeavours, confident that their children are well cared for.

Our national child care strategy commits our Government to spend $5.4 billion over the next seven years and another $1 billion annually after that to enhance and expand child care services in this country.

[Translation]

The national child care strategy is made up of three major components. A new child care legislation will finance, together with the provinces, the creation of 200,000 new quality day care units in Canada. Two tax measures will offer increased assistance to families with young children. And an assistance fund for special projects in the area of day care will give priority to proposals aimed at improving services and to innovations in this area.

In short, our national day care strategy offers Canadian parents real alternatives to choose what is best for their children.

[English]

At the other end of the spectrum we are addressing the situation of elderly women. I was pleased to announce last month with my colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of State for Seniors (Mr. Hees), our new seniors initiative. With its commitment of an additional $30 million in funding annually, this initiative will encourage innovative approaches to meet the wide range of needs felt by Canada's seniors, both women and men.

Since this is International Women's Week, I cannot ignore Canada's continued interest in the status of women worldwide. Last August, in Zimbabwe, I represented Canada at a meeting of commonwealth ministers for women's affairs. That was the second such meeting, the first was an adjunct to the Nairobi conference.

Largely through the efforts of Canadian representatives, ministers at that conference adopted a plan of action that directs commonwealth countries to integrate women in all aspects of their work, including training, development and education. At their meeting in Vancouver in October, commonwealth heads of government endorsed the plan of action, setting the stage for co-operative action to enhance the status of women throughout the commonwealth.

Our activities within this particular forum will continue. I am pleased to announce today that Canada will host the third meeting of commonwealth ministers responsible for women's affairs in 1990. This is a significant honour which reflects the reputation we enjoy for our efforts to integrate women's concerns in our national policies and programs.

[Translation]

A major part of our Government's economic and social strategy is to encourage women to deliver their full potential. We feel that women's equality is good for the economy. Our Government wants women to get their fair share. It strives to offer women the possibility of contributing to the economy. For the economy, that means more resources and improved productivity. For society, it is a simple question of social justice. Tomorrow being International Women's Day, we want to recognize the skills and abilities of half of our population.

[English]

These are not just slogans reserved for occasions like International Women's Day. They are statements of principle that have guided the efforts of our Government since the start of our mandate.

It goes without saying that women have the intelligence, are now getting the education, and certainly have the talent to participate fully in all aspects of our society. Women know the contributions they have made to our country. Our Government also recognizes women's contribution and their potential for more. We will continue to be full partners with women as we move toward our goal of real equality for all our citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and address the House on behalf of Canadian women on International Women's Day. This is a day for all women from all over the world to celebrate the gains we have made and to help plan our goals for the future.

We come together today to celebrate our achievements, to share our knowledge and experience, and to rally our forces so that we can continue to press ahead toward even greater challenges.

When I look back over the last 20 years I am amazed and overjoyed at the leaps and bounds by which we have made progress. Things are dramatically different for women now than they were then.

Women have an endless amount of choice today. We can go into areas we never would have dreamed possible before. Attitudes and options have changed, and I am deeply grateful to every Canadian who has helped bring us to where we stand today.

This is a day when Canadian women should take stock of what has been accomplished and where they want to go. It is a day to let our Government know what we want and expect from it. Things have changed for the better but we still have a long way to go before we are completely equal competitors in the workforce. We need help from the Government to achieve this.

• (1120)

The Government has made many promises to women and has claimed to be on the side of women in Canada. I would like to take this opportunity to remind the Government of the commitment it made to 52 per cent of the country's population. However, first I would like to look at what women are doing today and how they are living.

The notion of the Canadian family has completely changed. Sixty per cent of all mothers with young children work full-time. In 60 per cent of all families, both parents must work to afford an adequate life-style for their children. The majority of women today find themselves balancing heavy domestic responsibility and work. The cost of raising children is becoming increasingly onerous. The cost of education alone for a child from zero to 18 years is $106,000 today. A couple with children must earn $6,000 more each year to have the same saving ability as couples without children. The cost of full-time receipted child care is a minimum $5,000 a year per child.

[Translation]

And what about single parent families? How can they afford these services? We must remember that 72 per cent of single parent families are headed by women, and that half of these women earn less than $10,000 a year.

It is not surprising they have such low incomes, when we consider that the majority, that is, 72 per cent of part-time workers are women, and we see that part-time workers receive no pension benefits or annual leave or sick leave. When we see that the majority of the unemployed are women and that women still tend to be in job ghettos, in other words, earn 63 per cent of what men are earning, I think it is high time an employment equity policy was introduced to do something about this very basic problem.

What do these statistics tell us, Madam Speaker? They tell us that the role of women and the role of the family has changed, and that although women have more choices then they had before, there is still a lot to be done. Many women are still relegated to occupational ghettos, are poorly paid and receive no social benefits. Many women have to support a family on an income that is below the poverty line. Is it so surprising we have a birth rate of only 1.7 per cent? Is it so surprising that parents decide to have fewer children because they cannot afford more and because our society does not provide them with the support services they need to raise happy, healthy children?

As a society in this country, we claim to believe in equality. We support the principle that women must have the same opportunities as men. How can we expect to achieve equality if we do not help women who carry the heavy domestic burden that is traditionally theirs? What will happen to Canadian families if we continue to expect every woman who works both in the home and outside the home to be a superwoman, able to carry on her career and raise her children without any trouble? Pious promises are not enough, Madam Speaker. We must act now.

[English]

Prime Minister Mulroney once said that for many women child care is the key to future equality. I agree with him. Women will never be able to participate fully in the job market if they cannot find high quality affordable child care for their children. The Conservative Government came out with its national strategy on child care in December 1987. Unfortunately, it seems to have overlooked two key issues in child care, the need for immediate spaces and the need for quality.

The Government allocated $3 billion to federal-provincial cost sharing programs with the aim of creating 200,000 new child care spaces. Right now only 10 per cent of eligible children under 13 years of age can find places in child care. There is an immediate need for over one million places. The Government is not meeting one quarter of this demand.

These 200,000 spaces will only be created once the federal and provincial Governments have completed negotiations. When will this be, next year? In two years? Canadian women cannot wait that long. Canadian children cannot wait any longer, either. There is no guarantee of quality in child care because the Government set no national standards. There are no standards set for training child care workers or licensing proper facilities. The Government is going to give away money to the provinces without any system of monitoring how that money is spent.

Instead of creating affordable child care spaces, the Government has put $2.3 billion into new tax deductions. That means that if one can afford to pay $5,000 a year for child care, one can now get $4,000 back in deductions. If one cannot afford to pay $5,000, one cannot get anything back for child care. How is a single mother going to get off welfare if she cannot afford child care and, therefore, cannot go out and work?

Canadian women need immediate funds from the Government to create new child care spaces now. Every province should be complying with nationally set standards of quality and affordability. We need money put into programs for latchkey children, for longer parental leave at birth, for day care at night, for quality day care training and not for regressive tax deductions. This is an issue of extreme importance for Canadian women and the present Government has bypassed it.

[Translation]

The Government has also promised to promote employment equity and make it easier for women to enter non-traditional job sectors. We all know that women are often segregated in occupational ghettos and are thus unable to move up through the ranks. Measures must be taken to broaden their horizons, increase their skills and change attitudes in the work place.

The Conservative Government has just announced it will spend $8.8 million to achieve this objective. Fine, but $8.8 million to help 51 per cent of our population is peanuts! Does the Government really believe it will make any kind of progress this way?

Federally regulated employers and those who do business with the federal Government must now implement employment equity programs. This means they must try to remove unfair employment barriers and make a special effort to give target group members, including women, access to employment.

Madam Speaker, it is not enough to urge employers to make "a special effort". We need compulsory programs with standards and set quotas for hiring women. Equal pay for equal work should apply to all employees under federal jurisdiction. The Government must agree to grant major incentives to businesses for setting up programs that will help women move up to senior levels.

[English]

However, simply setting up these programs will not meet women's needs. We need adequate training programs for women so they can move out of job ghettos. The Conservative Government has cut spending on job training by 23 per cent since 1985. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy funds were shifted from the public to the private sector for on the job training. It has been found that employers have favoured men over women as trainees. There are no controls in place to monitor employers or to evaluate the work skills acquired by trainees.

• (1130)

There is almost no funding in language training to help female immigrants. The Government seems to assume that female immigrants will be provided for by their spouses or will take jobs that do not require language skills. As a result many find themselves doing menial labour with no benefits and no way out.

Some programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy are targeted at women. To be eligible for most of these programs women must be unemployed anywhere from eight months to three years. Any woman who cannot afford to stay out of work that long cannot profit from these training programs.

Training allowances are still less than minimum wage. How can a woman who supports a family afford to get job training if the Government gives her no financial aid? Unless the training programs change and unless the Government allocates more funds soon many women will have little hope of bettering their economic prospects.

It has been documented that under a free trade agreement many women will lose jobs in the manufacturing and service sectors. Even faced with this threat the Government is still cutting spending on job training.

[Translation]

There is another problem I would like to discuss and which I would like to bring to the attention of the Government, namely new reproductive techniques. We have all heard about surrogate motherhood, sex selection and cloning.

[English]

We need to set up a Royal Commission to study the many legal, social and moral questions involved. This is a very serious issue that affects many people in Canada. I hope that the Government will start acting on these issues very soon.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is a great honour to rise to speak to the issues of Canadian women. I must also say that it is a very humbling experience.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, first I should like to congratulate my colleague the Minister responsible for the status of women for her initiative in the House today. Too seldom are women given priority in traditional political institutions and we have very few opportunities to speak directly to Canadian women. Today is the appropriate occasion to do just that, for International Women's Day highlights their achievements and their contributions to our society.

For centuries now Canadian women have been struggling to deliver their full potential as human beings. Our country's heroines can be found in the history of the Amerindian and Inuit people, among the first European women who came to live in North America, and among all immigrant women who had the courage to settle in a new country and who are still doing so. We must also commend others who fought so that all women would enjoy basic rights: suffragettes, pioneers in various professions, first women elected to Parliament. One of these, of course, was Agnes MacPhail.

[English]

New Democrats share Agnes MacPhail's vision of full equality for women, along with her other goals of justice and peace. This is why our approach to the objective of equal participation of women in society is very different from that of the present Government.

The Minister responsible for the status of women has stressed the need for economic equality if women are to have equal opportunities in our society. She stressed the events of the flat 1950s when the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker was the Prime Minister of Canada.

It is also interesting to recognize, as we look at what the accomplishments have been, that our first cabinet Minister, the Hon. Ellen Fairclough, was excluded from discussions of the Cabinet concerning the Steven Truscott case because the Cabinet of the day and the Prime Minister thought that it was not proper for her to be present when such discussions as rape and assault against women were being discussed. I think we can reminisce a bit and celebrate the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of today would not exclude his female cabinet Ministers from any discussions of Cabinet. At least I hope that that will not be part of the history of the Government.

As we talk about the accomplishments of women in the House of Commons and in the country it is important that we do not exclude the Hon. Judy LaMarsh who made great strides in decision making and taking responsibilities in major departments, in particular with respect to health care development.

I do not think that women will become equal until they reach economic equality. Yet the Government is attempting to implement a trade policy that will endanger the jobs of so many Canadian people and, in particular, women. Many of these women who are the most vulnerable are immigrant women and those who are employed in industries that will suffer from the trade deal. These are industries that we have already heard will need major adjustment programs. Yet we have not seen any potential recommendations for such adjustment programs.

Immigrant women are attempting to become full and equal partners in our community. The history of women in the country has been that immigrant women have certainly made a major contribution. Today they are handicapped by federal government policies in employment and language training which ignore their needs.

It has been recognized that women face barriers in employment that impede their abilities to secure well-paying jobs and achieve deserved advancement. This is why several provincial Governments, such as the Province of Manitoba, have introduced pay equity legislation and have not been afraid to identify a budget allocation to implement that legislation. The federal response to these employment inequities has been weak and ineffective. We have yet to see a strong commitment to affirmative action and pay equity by the present Conservative Government.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy mentioned by the Minister has proven to fall short of women's needs. It has excluded many women by requiring them to have been out of work for an extended period of time, by failing to provide adequate child care and, finally, by ghettoizing women in low-skilled occupations. This is certainly not a cause for celebration.

[Translation]

The Minister also praised the national day care strategy, but Canadian women know that it does not give them much choice. Affordable and quality day care services will still be limited and fall somewhat short of the needs of Canadian families. In addition, the Government has done nothing to make it possible for income-earning parents to remain at home for a reasonable period of time after the birth of a child.

[English]

Canadian families have asked for a child care policy that will offer them quality, affordable and accessible child care. Instead, the federal Government has opted for tax measures that help the rich and do very little for middle and low-income Canadians. New Democrats know that this strategy does not benefit average Canadians. We will continue to advocate adequate services for our children.

If we do not have standards in a national child care policy then what we are really advocating is low paid jobs for people who look after caring, instead of helping to develop our greatest national resource, that is, our children. In this country we have still not established standards for people who are delivering care to our children, and certainly they are among the poorest paid of any jobs in Canada today.

We all know that women and children constitute the majority of the poor in our country. Older women are expected to survive on meagre incomes, and they are without adequate pensions. All the programs in the world can be announced, but until pensions for women are above the poverty level, those people who have worked hard in our community and in our country to develop it and to look after the children, to build the families and the homes, are being relegated to a life of poverty in their later years. That is not adequate for Canadian women. Instead of announcing new programs, I would hope that the Government would ensure that pensions for older women are certainly above the poverty line.

As one looks at the employment program of the Government, it can be seen that it has identified targets. Yet those targets are only numbers. In reality, the targets are met by allocating women low-paid jobs; traditionally, women are asked to take retraining in secretarial work, hairdressing, and they are not encouraged to go into non-traditional jobs. There is not the child care available to allow those women to take on adequate retraining.

When we talk about economic equality, we must look at every single policy that is brought forward by the Government and make sure that those policies do address the inequities that are happening to women in our society. Women are still earning only 66 cents for every dollar that a man is earning. That is not a case for celebration. Therefore, we must work harder to ensure that those inequities are addressed.

What we do recognize today that is a source of celebration is that the Minister responsible for the status of women is a female cabinet Minister. The Opposition and New Democratic Party do have women who are Members in the House. However, we would be remiss if we did not recognize the fact that women are still very poorly represented in the House of Commons percentagewise compared to the population of women in Canada. I hope that we will continue to work together and cross Party lines to ensure that women do have broader representation.

I hope that the Minister takes into account some of the comments that have been made today. I believe that we are addressing inequities for women that have not been addressed by the present Government. If we are going to have equality for women in Canada we must have economic equality, access to the job market, pensions above the poverty level, and we must ensure that our children are nurtured and cared for in a way that allows women to feel that the great responsibility they have taken over the years is also a responsibility of the Government. As partners we will build strong Canadian families, and the future of Canada will be protected if the Government could put into effect an adequate national child care policy. The one the Government presently has is a sham. Canadian women and children deserve better.

Today we have much to celebrate, but there is much work to do. I would hope that together, as Members in this House of Commons, we will celebrate what women have accomplished and recognize that there is still a long way to go; that as partners, and public legislators, we will focus on that and not try to be defensive of inadequate policies.

ANIMAL PEDIGREE ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, as Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, I have the honour to present the Bill to the House, with amendments, in both official languages.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour to present a petition from a number of constituents who feel that the present Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade deal with the United States. The petitioners feel that the trade deal negotiated threatens the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, and it effectively removes the ability of the Government to direct Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadian citizens. The petitioners believe that it will work against the ability of the Government to reduce regional disparities.

Therefore, the petitioners are asking Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the trade deal during a national general election.

NATIVE LAND CLAIMS—FISHING BY-LAWS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present petitions from 611 British Columbians who are protesting the present process of native land claim negotiations in our province.

In particular, the petitioners request that the Government of Canada pass an Order in Council pursuant to Section 73 of the Indian Act placing all Indian Band fishing by-laws under the authority of the Fisheries Act of Canada, and instruct the federal Nishga claim negotiator, and all other Indian claims negotiators, that Indian land claims are not to be settled by granting fish from the public Fisheries of Canada to the exclusive use of the claimants.

[Translation]

THE PROBLEM OF THE HOMELESS AND SOCIAL HOUSING—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, the four petitions I present today bear the signatures of Ontarians in Moose Creek, Maxville, St. Paschal Baylon and Winchester, and Quebecers in Deux-Montagnes and Pointe-Claire. Your petitioners deplore the fact that over 100,000 people were homeless in Canada last year, that an ever growing number of young people, women and entire families do not have a roof over their heads, that the number of affordable housing units is constantly dwindling, and that the Government has yet to do something to solve this problem.

Wherefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take immediate action to ensure that all Canadians live in adequate and healthy accommodation and that a re-integration program be established to make it easier for these destitute Canadians to regain their place in society.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I too wish to present a petition. The petitioners are urging the Government not to proceed with the free trade agreement negotiated, and they urge the Government to call an election on this issue before proceeding.

The petitioners point out what they feel are shortcomings of the trade agreement. They urge that an election be held on this topic.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by a large number of constituents who are concerned about the trade agreement. They are concerned that it undermines the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between regions. The petitioners believe that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy or freedom to determine its own economic future.

They call upon the Government of Canada to dissolve Parliament and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1150)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a petition presented by citizens of Canada who point out that the proposed agreement between Canada and the United States removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, removes our power to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and removes the power to equalize opportunities between regions.

The petition also points out that the agreement failed to secure access to the Canadian market for Canadians which was supposed to be the key objective in the negotiations and it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve and permit the people of Canada to speak on this issue.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and privilege to present a certified correct petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from citizens of the Province of Ontario who believe that the trade agreement between Canada and the United States will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence and that the agreement implies a loss of jobs in many sectors and regions.

The undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have the responsibility and honour under Standing Order 106 to register this petition that has been duly certified from citizens of Ontario.

These citizens say that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and it would undermine our abilities to build a society distinct from that of the United States. The proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, these citizens ask that Parliament be dissolved to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly certified petition from a number of Canadians.

Considering that the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement will have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence and that it implies the loss of jobs, the undersigned request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition duly certified on behalf of residents of the Province of Ontario who note that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised whereas, in fact, the resulting agreement will constrain the Government of Canada to act. Secure access has not been obtained and hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened by the agreement.

For those reasons, the residents of the Province of Ontario call upon this Parliament to dissolve and to give them an opportunity to reject the trade agreement in a national general election.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair inadvertently omitted to call two of the subject matters that are part of our daily routine of business. With the permission of the House, I would like to revert to those subject matters at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to advise the House that the Government has no further schedule of speakers. This is a matter which has had exposure to the public and the House since June of last year. There has been a healthy debate in public and in the House and all three Parties have indicated their support for this important Bill. We feel the matter can now proceed to the second reading conclusion so that the Bill can go into committee and be fully examined by Members.

I urge my colleagues to allow the House to put the question as soon as possible.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I hear a Member laughing over there. It is no laughing matter. As a matter of fact, it is the usual practice in this House to share information and to tell us what business will be called today. If the House had been told that the back-up Bill today to Bill C-72 was something else, which we were not, then maybe the Member would have a point.

The question before us right now is a very important one. Seven government Members have spoken in this debate, four Liberal Party Members and three New Democrats. That is hardly a very extensive debate. We have had six hours and some minutes of debate and that is all. The principle of a Bill of such importance to this country, which was tabled last June 25, 1987 and called for debate on February 8, a month ago, then shelved by the Government for a month while some people objected to it publicly, I think requires at this time some clarification from the Government, an indication of what it intends to do.

We have heard all kinds of propositions from the Tory backbench. We have heard about all kinds of amendments that will be proposed from the Tory back-benchers. We are looking forward to hearing them in committee but the basic principle of the Bill is what second reading is all about.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, today we maintain that the Prime Minister of the country must say where he stands on this issue. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did so last February 9, and we expect the Party leaders to state their position on this important matter, today if need be.
