I hold no particular grief for candy or snack foods, though I am probably a heavy consumer of them. I would, however, point out the situation of those who must, for their health and full functioning in society, purchase pet foods including, of course, those who have seeing-eye dogs. Monkeys are being trained to assist people who are mobility handicapped and have difficulty with the most fundamental and basic manipulations of their limbs. As well, dogs and cats are trained to alert people who are deaf to events within their homes that might be threatening to them. It seems to me that these people should at least be able to claim the cost of pet food as a medical expenses deduction. It is essential, of course, to the continued health and effective functioning of these highly trained companions who are trained at considerable expense that they be well fed. I believe it would be appropriate for the Government to make that humane adjustment of that particular tax.

There are other measures in the Bill, including the refund provisions for public institutions, the amendment of the fair price provisions and revision of the compliance provisions on on-site inspection because of the reduction in on-site surveillance, introduced wisely or otherwise by the Government. These are of a minor technical nature and I will not comment on them further.

There are some relieving measures in the Bill, including the exemption on the price of original prints as pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). There is an increase in the tax threshold, a necessary corrective counterbalance to the increased bureaucratic provisions this imposes. Of course, for the benefit of primary producers, there is a continuation of previous exemptions that I think were very wisely granted.

One thing that is not in this legislation but should be is some form of incentive through the excise tax system for producers, marketers and distributors of fuel alcohol. I believe the Government is letting slip a great opportunity to obtain answers concerning blending of fuel alcohol produced from surplus biomass and unsaleable or surplus agricultural commodities. It could make a great contribution to the economy, particularly in areas such as the Prairies where the economy is depressed because of the lack of demand in the primary markets for those commodities. I think the Government is being pressured by the international petrochemical companies in this respect. Certainly it is an opportunity that an NDP Government would be swift to take advantage of.

Turning to some of the effects of the Act, it is worth remarking that the estimate that 42 per cent of federal tax revenues were collected on intermediate and capital goods means that manufacturers end up paying a hidden sales tax on those goods used in their operation, and therefore we have a tax on tax. I believe most Governments, under modern tax theory, have tried to avoid that. Certainly our Government should be trying to avoid it.

Then we have discrimination against exports. These hidden taxes are passed through to the export price, reducing the competitiveness of Canadian goods. Conversely, they confer an advantage on imports because they are not included in the cost base for the calculation of federal sales tax on imports.

One thing that I was of course concerned about was that the Government would attempt to tell the people of Canada that the federal sales tax credit, as it is known in the income tax form, is sufficient to offset the many increases passed through by way of the federal excise and sales taxes. Clearly, that would be a hypothesis which the Government could not justify by reference to the facts and figures.

While the Government has raised $1 billion or $2 billion per year in every year of its mandate through increases and a broadening of the base for the federal sales and excise taxes, it has seen fit to bring in only a very nominal, minimal sales tax credit which would cover the additional sales tax costs of the average consumer if they were purchasing only a limited range of items. I say to the Government it should come clean with Canadians. It should be frank and open as to what its objectives are in rolling into one single Bill all these changes and increases in the federal sales and excise taxes. The objective is not fairness for Canadians. It is to raise revenue, which is the way the Government believes in making its major thrust to tackle the problem, as it sees it, of the deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member would confirm that the NDP would be interested in the multi-stage sales tax presently being negotiated between the federal and provincial Governments? It would get rid of this horrendously anti-Canadian sales tax we presently have and possibly combine provincial sales taxes with the federal tax. In that respect, would the NDP be in favour of a multi-stage tax with the broadest base possible, including even necessities so that the rate could be as low as possible?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to be the first speaker to comment on a question from another Member of the House today.

The Hon. Member is of course the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. He, as an expert in all matters of taxation, including federal excise and sales taxes, knows that a multi-stage federal and provincial tax is not completely without problems either in its conceptualization or application.

What I would say is that any measure, be it by legislation or negotiation, which enables the people of Canada to more fully perceive the impact of taxes, to more clearly see the tax content of any merchandise they are purchasing, to be more certain of the areas to which their tax contributions are going, would be a good one. If we could come up with a transparent tax, shall we say, or one that was readily understandable by the vast majority of Canadian consumers, a tax where they could identify not only the amount they are paying on a particular item but also the sort of thing it is going to finance, then we would have taken a step forward. Perhaps the Hon. Member is picking up on the point I made about the monopolies in the times of King James I of England and the degree to which costs were hidden. That is of course paralleled by the situation we have in Canada today.

In the same vein I think it is a good idea that, for example, gasoline companies publicize on their pump an analysis or breakdown of the price of gasoline. That information is valuable and Canadians think it is worth while.

The idea of broadening the base of the multi-stage tax being negotiated between the federal and provincial Governments to cover necessities is not an idea that has attracted great popularity in Canada. It is not an idea that my Party is supportive of. Although one would acknowledge that many societies in this world have far less equal distributions of income than does Canada, we do have a society in which there are significant differences in the distribution of income. Therefore, we should try and identify those necessities that are most essential, shall we say, to the basic standard of living that we would like to see for everyone and those items should not be taxed.

The definition of necessity is of course one that will continue to provoke discussion and argument, as well it should. Obviously if we are to say some necessities will not be taxed, we want to define them broadly enough so that those which are essential to everyday living are included but narrowly enough so that we do not overly erode the tax base and force the loading of the tax on to a limited number of items as is the case at present.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly and perhaps direct a question to my hon. friend. As everybody knows, indirect taxes are regressive because low-income taxpayers spend a greater part of their income on consumer's goods. I need not explain to my hon. friend that a sales tax is a regressive tax. To suggest today that the Government should get together with the provinces and agree on a federal-provincial sales tax . . .

• (1600)

[English]

A multi-stage type of sales tax sounds to me like an idea which the Government should have proposed when it brought in fiscal reform. In addition to proposing it, it should have implemented it at the same time. That is the point I am trying to make.

Does the Member not think that the Government should have had the courage of its convictions? If it was going to change the tax laws and reform the issue of fiscal operations, should it not have at the same time given Canadians the same type of change in terms of the sales tax?

Does the Hon. Member not believe that the actual floor or ceiling, depending on how you look at it, of $16,000, at which Canadians may have a tax credit of $70 per adult and $35 per child, must be revamped and rethought in an effort to eliminate this regressive approach to sales taxes? Does the Member agree with the Member who just suggested that we should go to the multi-stage tax system?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has sometimes been accused of having addiction to democratic centralism. It would appear that the first part of that phrase is somewhat less regarded in the Liberal Party.

It seems to me that a multi-stage tax cannot be introduced except by consultation with the provinces. For the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to suggest that it is simply a matter of the Government grasping its courage in its hands is indeed to confuse the floor of consultation with the ceiling of autocracy.

On the point of regressivity the Hon. Member and myself are, of course, completely in agreement. On the point of the very nominal sales tax credit, I am sure that the Member is equally as concerned with the low income earners of his riding as I am with those in mine in saying that this measure is little more than window dressing and certainly should be revised, enriched, and made more gradual and should extend farther up the scale of income.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in this debate on Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. First of all, the purpose of this Bill is to implement many sales tax and excise tax increases which the Government had annonced through its February 18, 1987 Budget, its June 18, 1987 tax reform, measures to come into force on December 16, 1987, as well as its February 10, 1988 Budget. Most of these tax increases are already in force or will be very shortly.

The purpose of this Bill is also to make technical changes to the sales tax. For instance, the Government is amending the provisions dealing with fair prices to apply tax on fair market values when non-arm's length sales are made and shifts the sales tax from the manufacturer to the wholesale level for snack foods and other products. I should like to list, however, the different taxes which will be affected by this Bill, the dates of their coming into force as well as their dollar impact which will definitely affect the budget of all canadians families.

First, the Budget of February, 1987, announced a 12 per cent tax on snacks, candy and ice-cream, which came into effect on July 1, 1987, which will allow the Government to relieve taxpayers of $60 million in 1987-88 and $80 million in 1988-89.

Then, there was a 4 per cent tax increase for cigarettes and tobacco which came into effect on February 19, 1987, and which will pour into the Government coffers $70 million in 1987-88 and another $70 million in 1988-89.

There was also a $4 ticket increase of the tax on air transport to be implemented in two stages, the first on May 1, 1987, and the second on August 1, 1987, which will result in Canadian taxpayers paying $45 million more in 1987-88 and $50 million more in 1988-89.

Mr. Speaker, in the same Budget of February, 1987, we find an increase in the sales tax on leaded gasoline to bring it up to the level of unleaded gasoline, which increase came into effect on April 1, 1987, and brought revenue of $30 million in 1987-88 and of another $30 million in 1988-89.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced his tax reform project on June 18. After consultation, on December 7, 1987, he implemented some of the measures announced on June 18, but some of them came into effect the very same day they were announced, on June 18.

For instance, as of January 1, 1988, there has been a new 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls. I mention this as an example as people might not think about it, but at one end of Montreal Island, around Rivière-des-Prairies, in the Mercier riding, residents of Montreal have to pay long distance charges if they make a telephone call to a neighbouring city such as Laval. This new tax is unacceptable for these people. I wanted to give a very specific example because rural residents are not the only ones involved—and this is vital because everybody makes long distance phone calls—but so are people who live downtown, for this so-called talk tax will apply to all long distance calls dialed by Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the measure also contains a tax increase on cable TV. These two measures, effective January 1, will prove to be just another way to replenish Government coffers: $870 million in fiscal year 1988-89, $945 million in fiscal year 1989-90, and $1 billion in fiscal year 1990-91.

Again as a result of this tax reform, Mr. Speaker, there has been a 4 per cent tax increase on paint and wallpaper, up from 8 to 12 per cent effective January 8, and this will cost Canadians some $60 million a year.

Mr. Speaker, of course we said over and over again in the House that the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government were juggling with figures when they kept talking about deficit reduction. They resorted to a creative accounting process. And now, Mr. Speaker, the tax reform includes accelerating the remittance of sales and excise taxes as of April 1, 1988, the day when Canadian companies will have to begin speeding up tax remittances. This stroke of the pen, this creative accounting, Mr. Speaker, will raise $1.6 billion for the Treasury.

Add to that the accelerated remittance of source deductions, introduced the year before, which will raise approximately $2.6 billion. In terms of reducing the deficit, one could say both measures made it possible for the Minister of Finance to tell Canadians he had reduced the deficit. However, he did not really do so because this was a one-time revenue raising measure so that next year comparisons will be skewed.

There is another very important item. Ninety-six per cent of Canadian businesses have a turnover of less than $2 million. We have 86 per cent of Canadian businesses that are small businesses. Every day, Members on both sides of the House keep repeating that 86 per cent of these businesses create most of our jobs. And 96 per cent of those businesses will be subject to the kind of creative accounting the Minister of Finance has just expanded.

When they say they want to provide incentives for small businesses to develop, and that these businesses are important to the economy of this country, that is perfectly true, Mr. Speaker. These businesses have created 75 per cent of our jobs. But when it comes down to concrete action no measures are forthcoming, and in fact everyone agrees small businesses have problems with capitalization. And now with this measure, instead of helping these businesses increase their operating capital, the Government is forcing them to reduce that capital.

In the same Budget or tax reform of December 1987, the Minister announced another increase in the tax on alcohol and tobacco, a 3 per cent increase from 15 per cent to 18 per cent, effective as of January 1, 1988, which will raise another $175 million annually at the expense of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, there was of course the February Budget, referred to by many Canadians as the one cent tax budget. In a few days, Mr. Speaker, on April Fool's Day, but this is no joke, Canadians will have to pay one cent per litre more for gasoline because of an increase in the excise tax.

That, Mr. Speaker, was briefly what the impact will be of Bill C-117.

The Government is asking the House to adopt tax increases, most of which are already in effect. Some have been in effect for over a year. I think it would be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to recall that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister both promised they would not raise taxes.

For instance, in a debate in this House on March 6, 1984, when the Minister of Finance was the Conservative finance critic, he said, and I quote: "We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high". However, in three and a half years that same Minister, the same Member who is now Minister of Finance, has increased taxes by about $22 billion since September 1984. What was on his mind? What was he thinking on March 6, 1984, when he said he just wanted to reduce expenditure, that he would be careful not to raise taxes? But after he was appointed Minister of Finance, he did exactly the opposite of what he had been preaching when he was in opposition.

Also, Mr. Speaker, on November 29, 1984, a couple of months after the Prime Minister came into office, he told the newspaper Le Devoir, and I quote:

"Canadians pay an awful lot of money for government services."

We pay more than enough. If the Prime Minister believed Canadians were paying too much for services, Mr. Speaker, how come he let his Minister of Finance put up taxes by about $22 billion since November 29, 1984?

Of course, revenues from indirect sales and excise taxes have also expanded much more rapidly than those from direct taxes since the Conservative Government was elected. The revenues from sales and excise taxes jumped 77 per cent between 1984-85 and 1988-89, while personal income taxes grew by 55 per cent and corporate taxes by 28 per cent.

Personal tax increase should be noted. All income, sales and excise tax hikes considered, corporations have been subjected to the greatest rises, Mr. Speaker.

But let me get back briefly to the tax reform. In that tax reform, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance reduced the general corporate tax rate while maintaining the special low tax rate for large manufacturing companies. But in reducing the general tax rate for small businesses, he did not maintain the low rate for small manufacturers.

In 1987, these small manufacturing companies paid 10 per cent federal taxes. Now, with tax reform, they have to pay 12 per cent. That is the social justice, the tax justice that this Government promised Canadians in 1984. Today, the small business sector which creates most of our jobs, that dynamic and constantly advancing sector is disappointed not only because the tax reform did not bring to our system the simplicity we had hoped for, but also because this vital job-creating sector is facing a 2 per cent tax increase. That is how the Conservative Government supports Canadians who want to start a business, Mr. Speaker!

I should mention here, Mr. Speaker, that when we speak about a 77 per cent increase in excise tax, we are referring to the fact that in 1984-85, the Government collected $13.7 billion in sales and excise taxes and in 1988-89, it will collect $24.3 billion, which represents $10.6 billion or 77 per cent more in revenues.

However, we know, Mr. Speaker, that indirect taxation is regressive because the middle-income taxpayers spend the largest part of their income on consumer goods. Of course, the Government became aware of that fact and in 1986, after a major increase in tax, it felt a little guilt, and decided to create a refundable sales tax credit.

However, those funds are still clearly inadequate, Mr. Speaker. They are now amounting to $70 per adult and $35 per child, and the revenue threshold triggering a decrease in them, that is $16,000, is far from the poverty level. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, after all those incredible and unacceptable increases, how can we tell Canadians: "We will offer you some relief". And we offer them a scanty amount of $70 per adult and $35 per child, provided though that the family income is less than $16,000. That is unacceptable!

Finally, let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the indirect taxes are hidden since they are included in the price of goods and the consumer is not aware of them when he buys goods. Politically speaking, thoses taxes are easier to increase. I have outlined those increases when I pointed out that the Government made ample use of those hidden taxes, as with what they call creative accounting, since it brought forward two new measures providing for the accelerated remittal of the sales tax and the speedy recovery, in one single move, of more than three billion dollars of personal and corporate income taxes, Mr. Speaker . . .

So, technical changes to the sales tax became necessary because the Government did not want to engage in a one-stage tax reform. It could have avoided those technical and complex changes had it had the courage to proceed with the sales tax changes and with the personal and corporate income tax reform at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to attend a few meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. All the groups appearing before it stated one after the other that the Government should have brought out an overall reform rather than proceeding through stages. This has considerably reduced the impact of the exercise. With the first stage of its reform, the Government agreed to give some goodies, but we are well aware that if it wins the next election, it will implement its second stage.

An Hon. Member: And we are going to win.

Mr. Gagliano: The Tory Member has just said that the Government is going to win. Of course, this remains to be seen. But if Canadians should decide to rely again on the Government, I am sure they will regret it after the election, because we know what this second stage of its famous tax reform has in store for us.

Mr. Speaker, you are signaling that my time is over. I should like to add that the Government, over the past three and a half years, has introduced no policy of direct assistance to small and medium size businesses. Where are the financing programs? Where are the export assistance programs for small businesses? Where are the tax assistance programs, Mr. Speaker? They have increased. The only area with a tax increase in the tax reform is that of the small business which must pay 10 per cent in 1987 and 12 per cent in 1988. This is unacceptable, and Canadians are going to pass judgment on this Government as soon as the Prime Minister has the courage to call an election.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have one short question which I want to direct to the Hon. Member. I wonder if he can give us some indication of what he thinks the effect of this Act will be on individuals, say, the middle class individual who pays a considerable amount of this tax? Can he give us any indication or an estimate of the amount it would cost either an individual or a small business? How much would their taxes be increased?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question. Unfortunately, I do not have the figures for an individual or for a small business. However, I can give the Hon. Member a list of billions of dollars in taxes which are the total tax increases since September 1984 when the Conservative Government came into power. For example, in the fall of 1984, there was an increase of 1 per cent in sales tax. There was a second increase of 1 per cent in sales tax in 1986, and there was a third increase of 1 per cent in sales tax in 1986.

There was a first increase of two cents a litre on gas in 1985, a second increase of 1 cent a litre on gas in 1987 and a third increase of 1 cent a litre on gas again in 1987. There was the equalization of sales tax on unleaded gasoline in 1987 which cost the taxpayers $30 million. There was the extension of sales tax on candies, soft drinks and pet food in 1985 which cost the taxpayers $400 million. There was the extension of sales tax on snack foods in 1987 which cost $60 million.

There was the first increase in cigarette and tobacco taxes in 1985 which costs the taxpayers $320 million. There was a second increase in tobacco and alcohol taxes in 1986 which cost the taxpayer $150 million. There was a third increase of 4 per cent in tobacco taxes in 1987 which cost the taxpayers $70 million.

There was the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Program in 1985 worth $105 million. There was the deindexation of the tax system in 1986 which was worth $635 million. There was the elimination of the federal tax reduction in 1986 which was worth $650 million. There were the changes to marital exemptions in 1986 which was worth $20 million. There was a general 3 per cent surtax in 1986 which was worth $1.2 billion.

There was the temporary 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes in 1986 which were worth $500 million. There was the increase on air transport tax in 1987 which was worth $45 million. There is the 10 per cent tax on long-distance calls and cable service in 1988 which is worth $945 million. I can go on, Mr. Speaker. This list totals over $22 billion in just three and a half years.

In March 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said we have to reduce government spending, that Canadians cannot afford any further tax increases. I wonder what the Minister was thinking about then. There has been $22 billion in tax increases. I wonder what would have happened if he had said in 1984 that a small increase in taxes was needed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-117, a Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. This Bill is a catch-up Bill. It is an attempt by the Government to catch up on a number of measures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced to the House over the three years he has been Minister of Finance. It includes part of his Budget of February 18, 1987, his White Paper on February 10, 1988, his White Paper on Tax Reform on June 18, 1987 and his White Paper on Tax Reform of December 16, 1987. All together, these make up the requirements of this particular Bill. It is an attempt to bring together all the suggestions he made at those times, suggestions that most Canadians have been paying for since early in 1987.

In light of the fact the Minister of Finance has given many indications of how he intends to bring in major tax reform, it appears he has missed the major opportunity for tax reform. The tax reform proposal was supposed to be in two parts. The first part was a change in the income tax structure and the second part, which will probably have to wait until after the election to be put in place, is the tax structure on value added tax or a general sales tax.

What we have here is an attempt on the part of the Government to increase taxes to some extent so that when it brings in the value added tax or the across the board sales tax, it will not be felt quite as much as it has been or it would have been had things been left as they were. It makes one wonder what would have happened. Are the increases in taxation since 1987 an indication of the type of tax reform we can expect after the next election? One wonders what we are in for.

The previous speaker gave us an indication of the total amount that had been collected from a variety of taxes that are in place today, ones which have been in place for the last three years. He gave a fairly detailed recitation of those increases in taxation. If those were the increases in taxation, then what are we looking forward to after this large tax comes in after the next election?

What the Government is doing here is putting in place some taxes which are an attempt to eliminate the deficit as much as possible. However, the measure is still aimed at getting as much money as possible out of that central group of people who are the main taxpayers in Canada.

By delaying the second stage of tax reform the Government is keeping in place a tax structure which is severely flawed, unfair and inequitable. That is how I would describe the federal sales tax and excise tax at the present moment.

Since 1984 the Conservative sales and excise taxes have escalated greatly. The previous speaker mentioned that $22 billion had been collected in three years. The Government seems to be relying more on this type of regressive tax, which is a tax on an individual who is spending his money in many cases for necessities which he must have. The Government is depending upon these regressive taxes, these sales and excise taxes, to cover federal expenditures. The more the Government does this now and in the future, the more difficult it will be to revise the situation after the next election when the Government says that it will have this value added across the board sales tax.

As we have indicated in the House on many occasions before, the taxes which the Government has placed on the people of Canada in the past have amounted to approximately $1,400 per individual. In the Budget which the Minister of Finance brought down recently, he took a great deal of pleasure in telling us that the Government was returning $400 in income tax to the people of Canada on an individual basis. He neglected to tell the people of Canada that he had already collected $1,400 more, thus making the net result somewhere around $1,000 of increased taxes per individual since 1983.

I wish to go through a few of the main revenue raising items in this Bill. The first and probably the most discriminatory is the 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services such as telephone and telex services. This particular tax discriminates against the northern and the rural resident.

Mr. Speaker, as a resident of the City of Edmonton, you will know that surrounding the City of Edmonton there are hundreds of small telephone exchanges. In my home town, if I wish to call to the town 17 miles away, I have to make a long distance call. There are people in my community who send their children to school in a town which can only be reached by a long distance call. They live 40 miles from the city, but in order to reach that city they have to make a long distance call. If these people wish to conduct business, call their church, their doctor or their dentist, they have to make long distance calls. These are every day expenditures for people living in rural areas. They have lived with this situation for a considerable length of time. The Government has now chosen to place a 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services.

Every time a rural resident calls his doctor, his dentist or the school which his children attend, or even when he calls the grocery store to order groceries, he must pay a 10 per cent tax on that charge. You, Mr. Speaker, live in a fairly large city. When you call your dentist you do not have to call long distance. The same is true with respect to your children's school. Therefore this tax is a tax which discriminates against people living in rural areas.

However, people living in rural areas are not the most badly off when it comes to this type of tax. Those living in remote northern areas in particular are much more affected by the tax since a larger amount of money is involved. Since it is a percentage of the total, it asks that much more be paid into the coffers of the Government. It is not so surprising that the Minister of Finance has a tendency not to accept the recommendations sent to him by the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee recognized that there was a certain amount of discrimination in this particular suggestion. It recommended to the Minister that he at least put a cap on the tax. The cap suggested by the committee was a $3 cap. That would mean that the rural subscriber would pay only $3 each time he paid his phone bill instead of such higher amounts as might be collected now. This tax is probably causing the most concern among people across rural Canada.

A second increase in taxation is an increase with respect to the telecommunication programming services tax which has been raised from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. This measure was in the June, 1987 White Paper. This is a tax which is also paid across the board and which is regressive. If one only has a few hundred dollars coming in, such as an old age pensioner has, then one is paying a considerably larger portion of one's income to be able to watch TV or to have the cable come into one's house as compared to one who is earning money in some other way. Consequently, it is a regressive tax. People who are forced to pay it often do not have much extra cash to put out.

Again, in June, 1987, there was an increase on paint and wallpaper products from 8 to 12 per cent. This may have been an attempt to increase the amount of money received from construction across the country, but in small communities such as mine, it had the effect of increasing the price of repairs, maintenance, and construction of buildings.

We assume that every person in Canada has the right to hope at some time during his or her lifetime to own a home. In the West, particularly in the Prairie regions, that is the accepted aim of every family. Every time a tax is put on to parts of the construction for building a home it decreases the possibility of a family ever owning a home, and it also decreases the amount of times that they will be able to take maintenance action to keep the home up.

There has also been an increase in federal sales tax on beer, spirits, wine, and tobacco products from 15 per cent to 18 per cent, an increase of 3 per cent. Those products seem to get it every time. There has been an increase of 4 per cent in the specific excise tax and duty rates on tobacco products.

There has been an increase in air transportation tax levied of $4 per ticket. As I understand, that tax is aimed at trying to recover the greater proportion of the air transport program costs, the cost of running airports by the federal Government. It does run a few airports and it is attempting to get them off its hands as quickly as possible. Again, this has turned out to be a regressive tax to a certain extent. Because of seat sales, many people have been able to take advantage of air travel a little more than perhaps they have in the past. Each time they make one of those trips they are required to pay that extra $4. Sometimes that is enough to make them wonder whether it is worthwhile to do so.

Last, but not least in this particular list, is an increase in the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline of one cent per litre. If this had been the only increase in tax on gasoline, perhaps it would not have been too difficult to accept. But this is approximately the fifth increase of tax on gasoline.

This is very regressive tax. Because of its size and the type of lifestyle we live, many people in this country are forced to drive to work. Because of those increases, they are required to pay that much more to get to work. One cent a litre does not seem like very much. But where it cost eight cents a mile to travel before, it has now increased a little. If one is travelling several miles a day to get to and from work, it is a major increase in the amount of money one has to spend to go to work. That is not the type of tax that is fair. It is a regressive tax. It has no relationship to the amount of money that is made. If a person is receiving the minimum wage of $4 an hour, or whatever it happens to be in a particular area, and that person has to drive 20 miles, he or she is paying the same for gasoline as the fellow who receives $50 an hour and drives the same distance. That type of taxation is unfair to those people who are the least able to pay.

That particular type of tax is the symbol of this particular Government. I remember back in 1979 the then Minister of Finance brought in a Budget which suggested an 18 cent increase per gallon on gasoline. The people of the country rejected it at that time. I guess that the Party learned something from that procedure, because this time instead of putting it all on at once, it put it on on five different occasions. If one adds all those increases up, that 18 cents is back on, and more besides.

This type of regressive taxation has become the symbol of how this particular Party, which is presently the Government of Canada, has a method to reduce the deficit and to carry out the administration of the Government. Rather than progressive taxes, which are levied on those people who can most afford to pay, to the greatest extent possible the Government uses regressive taxes. Those taxes are universal, are quite often on those items which are necessities, and consequently one cannot manage without buying. For example, if someone is driving to work, he or she cannot get along without buying gasoline.

The theory of federal sales tax is quite straightforward. The idea is that those sales taxes are supposed to be applied only once during the progress of a product from the manufacturer, or if it is a primary product, from the farm or forest through to the consumer. That is the theory. However, because of the structure that has developed over the years in the tax system in Canada, quite often we find ourselves paying taxes not only on the value of the product, but also on other taxes.

Although it is the intended aim of the tax suggested for after the election, sales tax or value added tax, it does not work in that manner at all times. For instance, at the present time if one buys a washing machine which might have been worth $200 at the manufacturing level, by the time it is taken out of the appliance store, it is $400 or even $500. Although some of that cost is due to mark-up, a good portion of that increase is customs, excise, and sales tax. In most provinces the consumer also pays an extra sales tax.

The whole taxation approach is regressive. If the Minister had wanted to reform the taxation system, he would have done it on a global basis rather than on a piecemeal basis.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, it is not with a light heart that I take part in this debate, but simply because I think it is important for Canadian taxpayers to know to what extent this Government has decided to increase radically several indirect taxes which sometimes can hurt more than direct taxes. It is also important for them to know that the Government has introduced this Bill somewhat belatedly. Most of the tax measures in Bill C-117 are already in force or will be in force within the next few days, while some others have been in force for over a year. We need only have a look at the measures which were announced in the February 1987 Budget which provided for a 12 per cent tax on candies, snack foods and ice cream, effective July 1, 1987, which have already generated $60 million in revenues during 1987-88.

There was also a 4 per cent tax increase on cigarettes and tobacco products which has been in force since February 19, 1987, and has generated for 1987-88 some $70 million in revenues. There was also an increase in air transportation tax of $4 per ticket which came into force on May 1, 1987, and August 1, 1987, which has generated, again for 1987-88, some $45 million in additional revenues. Finally, there is the usual sales tax on leaded gasoline compared with no lead gasoline which came into force on April 1, 1987 and has generated for 1987-88 $30 million in revenues.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at these new taxes, at how much Canadian taxpayers are being asked to pay in direct or indirect taxes, we have to wonder whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were serious when they said certain things in this House. For instance, on March 6, 1984, the Minister of Finance said that, if the Conservative Party was elected, it would reduce expenditures and not increase taxes as they were already too high. After the Conservative Government was elected, on November 29, 1984, the Prime Minister stated that Canadians were already pouring a lot of money into Government services and felt that they were paying enough as it was. Yet, since the election of the Conservative Government, between 1984-85 and 1988-89, revenue from sales and excise taxes have increased by 77 per cent, personal income tax by 55 per cent and corporate taxes by 28 per cent. It is important to note that it is the taxes paid by individuals, that is personal income tax, as well as sales and excise taxes, which have increased the most, not corporate taxes.

As new tax measures were to be implemented, I would personally have preferred that, if the Government had decided not to reduce the national debt, it would at least implement programs which might have helped to solve a few problems, such as those facing young Canadians.

One needs only to consider what illiteracy is costing the country to realize that if these new tax increases had been applied to programs geared to eradicate or diminish illiteracy, we might have looked at them more favourably. But, unfortunately, while illiteracy is costing us nearly $10 billion a year, the Government contributed practically nothing to counter that problem, and nothing indicates that the increases announced in Bill C-117 would go towards programs that could be established to fight illiteracy problems facing young people as well as any other Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we see the same problem again with the homeless; the Year of shelter for the homeless has just ended and, unfortunately, there were not very many actions taken by this governement to solve the problems of the homeless in Canada.

We hear a lot about employment, about numbers, about the job situation in Canada, and much bragging is going on concerning the creation of a great many new jobs. However, even though these jobs generate additional revenues and reduce the need for unemployment insurance benefits, there is a lack of programs to counter the problems young people experience, for instance in the employment area. It is abnormal that young Canadians should continue to have unemployment rates of 13 per cent and more, when we could very well put up some programs with the additional revenues produced by the new jobs created due to an excellent economic growth which has benefited the Government. I am baffled by the fact that Canada's debt is not decreasing despite our very strong job-creating economic growth. I am deeply concerned over what would happen if Canada had to face a recession or even a period of economic stability.

I would have liked to see the Government maintain services offered by job placement officers on Canadian university and college campuses so that graduates could receive job offers from employers without leaving their schools . . . The Government must maintain services it used to offer. Last year, however, there was a decrease of some 30 to 40 per cent in ongoing services provided on university and college campuses, and a so-called revitalization of services was announced this year while the active involvement of job placement officers on university and college campuses is still being reduced.

Of course, I listened to my hon. colleague from Chambly (Mr. Grisé) and I would like him to explain, when he will have the floor, the Government's position on that issue. Unfortunately, I see that the time allocated to me has expired and I hope to have the opportunity to pursue the matter further with my colleague.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has 11 minutes remaining, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT FOR SENATE REFORM

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution as it relates to the composition of the Senate and to provide for the reform of the Senate through the gradual introduction of the following measures:

1. Sitting Senators would retain their seats until their retirement, resignation or death, provided that any appointment to fill a vacancy would not continue beyond the date set for the ensuing general election in the Province or Territory for which the appointment is made;

2. Senators appointed on an interim basis would step down at the time a general election is called in the Province or Territory which they represent, the vacancy to be filled by direct election held concurrently with the provincial or territorial general election. Any Senator retiring in this manner would be eligible as a candidate for the vacancy thus created; and

3. Senators elected under this procedure would hold office for not longer than the duration of two legislatures of the Province or Territory which they represent, provided that they would be eligible as candidates for the Senate at ensuing elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple, straightforward proposition which will right a past wrong. When Canada was created in 1867, the federal Government was bicameral: the upper House, the Senate and the lower House, the Commons. The Senate was to be appointed and the Commons elected. In 1867, that was legitimate. Time and social development have changed the situation. Appointment to political office is no longer legitimate. I would like to discuss a very venerable and integral institution of the Canadian Government, the Senate.

Motion M-81 proposes a solution which will effectively resolve any questions as to the Senate's legitimacy. In political terms, legitimacy has a synonym and that is election. Legitimacy is achieved through election.

In a representative democracy, the Members of any legislature must be held responsible to the electorate by means of periodic elections. Without this periodic endorsement by the people, any claim to reflective representation lacks both credibility and legitimacy.

How can the upper House, the Senate, legitimately perform its duties as a chamber of sober second thought when it might be necessary to take action that runs contrary to the will of the people as expressed by the House of Commons? The answer is that the Senate cannot legitimately perform its required duties.

In a representative democracy, legitimacy stems from responsibility and responsibility can only be achieved through direct popular elections. Jim Grey, a well-known entrepreneur, said:

> That the Senate must be Elected is obvious. The present appointment of Senators destroys the body's legitimacy. It is a farce. Only democratically elected members are directly responsible to the people and, in the people's name, can demand regional equity.

The value of the Senate is not in question. Canada's upper House is charged with the task of representing all of Canada from a regional perspective. That is an extremely onerous task. Canada is a country of regions and should therefore have some effective means of reflecting this politically. The Senate is the appropriate forum for this.

I advocate a gradual phase-in of elected Senators in order to allow for a smooth transition. Timing Senate elections to coincide with provincial elections provides the electorate with an opportunity to express its will as consistent with prevalent provincial sentiment. A senatorial term of two legislatures provides a check upon radical or whimsical electoral actions.

Because a Senator represents constituents on a provincial basis, it makes sense to tie the Senate term to the legislative term. A term of two legislatures ensures consistency in Government and prevents Senate effectiveness from being undermined by the possibility of frequent elections. This approach is in keeping with the parliamentary tradition of flexible terms. To set a rigid term of a predetermined number of years would be a radical departure from the principle of parliamentary supremacy.

What are the costs? The cost of electing Senators would be negligible. All I am asking is that a second ballot for each voter be printed. The cost of enumeration would already be covered. The cost would certainly be minimal and is no obstacle to this approach.

I might point out that even the Liberals would like to see an elected Senate. A resolution presented and passed at their 1986 convention resolved that the Canadian Constitution be amended to replace the current appointed Senate with an elected upper Chamber.

This motion provides the opportunity to give the Senate the legitimacy it requires to fulfil its mandate. The regionally representative role of the Senate has been given consideration. So too has parliamentary tradition and consistency. This is a valid and appropriate solution to the unresolved problem of an appointed Senate.

I am asking that as a vacancy appears in the Senate, the normal procedure be followed. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would appoint a Senator until the province or territory concerned has its next provincial or territorial election. At that time, the appointed Senator would step down and an election would be held in conjunction with the provincial or territorial election at which time the Senator would be elected for two terms of the legislature of the province or territory. It is a very straightforward, inexpensive, economical way to give legitimacy to an institution of Canada which sorely needs it. I look for Hon. Members to carry on and support this motion and this important endeavour.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, in discussing the motion sponsored by the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon), I believe it would be useful to consider the role of other second Chambers. I am thinking particularly of Australia which has had an elected Senate since 1901.

As all Hon. Members know, Australia, a sister nation in the British Commonwealth, also combines a parliamentary system of Government with federalism. The fathers of the Australian Constitution provided for an upper House significantly different from our own. The Australian upper House was intended to ensure that state interests would be taken into account within the national Government.

Historically, the Australian Senate was key demand of the original six Crown colonies for agreement to the creation of the Commonwealth Government in 1901. I suppose in that sense, it was not too dissimilar to the meetings that took place prior to confederation in Canada. Sir John A. Macdonald said that agreement on the composition and powers of the Canadian Senate was absolutely essential to the agreement that produced the British North America Act. To that extent, the Australian and Canadian experiences with upper Houses are somewhat similar.

During the National Australian Convention of 1897-98, the less populated colonies wanted a Senate which would protect the rights of the new states and prevent any unfair distribution of revenue. Delegates of small colonies like Tasmania feared that the new federation would be dominated by the representatives of more heavily populated areas such as New South Wales and Victoria. To combat this possibility, they successfully secured equal representation in the Senate for each state, regardless of population.

The Australian Senate originally consisted of 36 Members, six from each state, but by the Representation Act of 1948, the membership was raised to 60. As a result of further amendments made in 1983, each of the six states returns 12 Senators and there is also provision that the territories of Australia return four Senators for a total of 76.

The Senate is a continuous body, each Senator sitting for six years, but the mandates of the Senators are staggered so that elections for half the seats are held on June 30 every third year. For election of the Senators, each state forms a single constituency. The term of territory Senators is tied to the life of the House of Representatives, which is normally three years. There is no rotation of the territory Senators as in the case of state Senators. Since 1949, Senators have been elected on the basis of the single transferable vote system through lists drawn up by Party executives. In contrast, the House of Representatives operates under the alternate vote method, known in Australia as preferential voting, in single Member constituencies. Each adult citizen is a voter and any person eligible to sit in the House of Representatives can seek election to the Senate.

If the place of a Senator becomes vacant before the expiry of his term, the Houses of Parliament of the state concerned may in joint session elect a person to fill the vacancy for the remainder of the term. If the state Parliament is not in session, the State Governor may, with the consent of the state executive, appoint a person who can retain the place until the expiration of 14 days after the beginning of the next session of the Parliament of the state, or until the election of a successor, whichever first happens.

After the adoption of proportional representation in 1949, it became conventional practice that Senate vacancies be filled by Members of the same Party as their predecessor. A significant exception to this tradition occurred in 1975 when the New South Wales and Queensland anti-Labour Governments elected non-Labour representatives to fill Labour vacancies. Not such a bad idea. In any case, this turn of events contributed to the crisis of November 21, 1975. However, as the result of the 1977 amendment, the Constitution now requires the observance of the former practice.

Has the Australian Senate fulfilled initial expectations? As with any question such as this it depends on who you ask. There is considerable controversy there on the value of the Senate. The object was to allow the states to be represented for the purpose of protecting their constitutional rights against attempted federal invasions, and to give them every facility for the advocacy of their particular special interests. However, the democratic method of election of Senators has prevented state particularism from becoming all important at the time of election. Elections to the Senate have been fought on a Party basis and the national Parties have not adopted narrow state programs.

The national character of each Party has been evident in its election manifesto and actual working. The fact, however, that Senators are elected from state-wide electorates by the same voters as for the House, and that Senate candidates are selected from Party lists, give the respective Party machines significant control over the fortunes of individual Senate candidates. Members elected on Party tickets and Party discipline dominates the Chamber. Even though elected, therefore, the Australian Senate also suffers from the charge that it fails to be responsive to the public at large. Individual state Governments, rather than the Senate, now act as the principal advocates for their regions. To that extent, it is very similar to our experience. Our Senate was originally designed to protect the interests of individual provinces but in our system of federal-provincial co-operation we see that role being taken over by the provincial Premiers.

There are good reasons why we would not want to move toward the elected experience. I think it is the experience of many of us who have sat in Parliament that things already move too slow. This Parliament does not move quickly enough to solve some of the problems Canadians face. I can only suggest that an elected Senate would compound the problems we are facing. One has only to look at the situation in the U.S. and its different levels of Government. It takes years, and sometimes it is impossible, to move legislation through the three different levels of Government. Why? Because each part believes, being democratically elected, they have the right to have input on every piece of legislation. Regardless of the merits of the American system, it moves very slowly so I would have great difficulty with an elected Chamber.

The situation this Government faces is very clear. Whatever mandate the Senate has, it is very slim. There are many people in my constituency who believe if there is any reform, it should be very simple: Abolish the Senate. This is the democratically-elected Chamber here, this is where the decisions affecting all Canadians should be made, not down the hall in the Senate. When I go home to my constituents and they ask why we do not have a refugee law in place I tell them the truth. I say that the problem is down there with a bunch of individuals who are not elected and not responsible to anyone but themselves. They are the ones who are holding up a proper common sense approach to refugee determination.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): That is where the blame lies. I can only worry when we say we should give more power, more legitimacy to that Chamber. I can only reflect on the experience of the last three years and say this is something which I believe, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, should be rejected by this House.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, while I wanted to get up and say that I would like to be able to agree with my friend from Calgary North, I cannot agree with him and also with my friend from Niagara Falls at the same time. My inclination is to agree with literally every word he said. It almost makes it unnecessary for me to speak at all.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

Ms. Jewett: All right. I wanted to elaborate on a few points he made.

The experience in Australia is perhaps the most relevant. It is certainly true that the Australian Upper Chamber has not been primarily a place for regional interests to be heard. In fact, the Chamber is based on Party lines, as it should be in a democracy. It is within the political Parties themselves that we should find regional interests being expressed and dealt with. Indeed, in a two or more Party system it should primarily be through the Party system that we realize all our concerns, and certainly our regional concerns. If a Party fails to deal with the most significant and substantive regional concerns, then it will itself fail. It will not be very long in the position of earning a majority in this country.

The panacea of an elected Senate is just that. It does not deal adequately with the problems it is supposed to deal with, namely those of regional concerns. One is therefore led to ask, as did my hon. friend from Niagara Falls: Why a Senate at all?

A very important development has taken place in the last two or three years so far as the House of Commons is concerned. That development is the committee system. A lot of the talk about having an elected second Chamber came about because it was found that the House of Commons did not sufficiently address the regional and other concerns of this country, and the committees of this House were simply pale reflections of the House itself. They did not have very much clout or very great concern for the issues being debated in the House. Therefore, it was thought that an elected second Chamber would do some of the work which the House of Commons is not doing. I think it was that more than the so-called sober second thought which gave some impetus, until the last two or three years, to the idea of having an elected Senate or having a second Chamber at all.

However, because we have seen significant improvement in the role of the committees of this Chamber in addressing major issues; in quite drastically, in some cases, changing government measures, often by all-Party agreement; in taking initiative in legislative and policy-making fields which committees had not taken until the reforms were implemented; in giving expression to regional concerns; and in getting more clout, we have, in fact, developed our chamber of sober second thought within the committee system of the House of Commons. It seems to me that that gives added argument to those of us who believe that a second chamber is obsolete and unnecessary, whether elected or appointed.

As I mentioned, it should be primarily the various political parties which address regional and other issues. It should be incumbent upon parties to recognize the diversity within Canada and to shape policies which will meet the gravest concerns in the regions of the country as far as federal jurisdiction is concerned. Next to the parties, it should be the role of Cabinet to bring regional problems to the attention of others in Cabinet. It is also the role of federal-provincial conferences to do so and also the role of the House and, in particular, committees of the House.

We do have, therefore, the vehicle—the Party system, the parliamentary system with a strong House of Commons, the growing strength of the committees of the House of Commons, the Cabinet, and federal-provincial conferences. We have a number of instruments nowadays to attempt to understand and meet the concerns of all the regions of the country. We do not need a second chamber to do that for us.

In British Columbia I find that there is not all that much excitement about having a second chamber. Indeed, there is very little. There is not a great interest in having an elected second chamber nor in having an appointed second chamber, although in some ways that is found to be preferable if we must have a second chamber at all. I have always found that British Columbia wants a strong voice in Cabinet, a strong voice in committees, a strong voice at federal-provincial conferences, and a strong voice in the bureaucracy and the boards and commissions of the country.

We often find that a board or commission such as the CRTC or the Canadian Transport Commission will go for years at a time without any voice from British Columbia. A lot of important decisions are made there. This goes back to W.A.C. Bennett's arguments of many years ago in which I think there is a lot of merit. B.C. has been overlooked often simply because it does not have a voice in the various boards and commissions which have become so important in our central government.

Neither does British Columbia have an adequate voice in the bureaucracy. People come from British Columbia and serve in the public service, but Ottawa has a terrible tendency to socialize people into an Ottawa perspective. We must have changes made in the bureaucracy itself and have more flow from the centre to the regions and back. That would be an answer to some of our regional discontent.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, there are ways which exist now in Cabinet, in Parties, and in the committee system of the House to address regional interests. There can be new ways to address regional consent. We can strengthen their representation on boards and commissions, make the bureaucracy itself more sensitive to the regions, and inform the decision-makers and those just below them of what is happening in the country. If I may speak for a lot of British Columbians, those answers are far more desirable than the motion before us today or any other motion suggesting that an elected Senate is somehow going to meet the real problems of the regions of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to rise on such an important subject.

As my colleague mentioned her regional concerns, it is my pleasure today to express our regional concerns in Quebec by informing you of a resolution that was passed unanimously yesterday at an important meeting of the Progressive Conservative Party of Quebec where it was proposed that the abolition of the Senate—

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Lanthier: Shouts of "shame" are now coming from the Liberal side, where "red" protectors are watching... The destiny of the Liberal Party is being looked after way ahead of time.

Mr. Speaker, we voted in Montreal in favour of putting the abolition of the Senate on the agenda of the next Meech Lake round of talks with the provinces. You may be assured, Mr. Speaker, that not only the issue of an elective or non elective Senate, but the very existence of that institution, is the subject of discussions in the province of Quebec.

The Senate reform has thus become more and more a matter of concern with Canadians in general and Quebecers in particular, and also with an increased number of Parliamentarians considering the number of resolutions tabled under our Standing Order 36. And there is nothing wrong with that, Mr. Speaker. Since in the name of democracy, we, in the House of Commons, an elected body, should neither be directed, nor impeded, or even delayed by, as our Prime Minister put it, a group of non elected Senators who feel nostalgia for power.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, there is every indication that Canadians will increasingly hear about the reform of our upper Chamber and that they will have to make decisions about that in the years to come.

Our colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary-North (Mr. Gagnon), is proposing today that we decide on the advisability of amending our Constitution as it relates to the selection process of members of the Senate so that it becomes an elected Chamber. We can say right away, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a clear improvement. According to him, the senatorial elections would take place together with the provincial elections, and the Senators would sit during no longer than two legislatures in their respective provinces and not until they reach the maximum age of 75 years old as some who have sat for 40 years, completely cut off from the realities of life and knowing nothing outside the Parliament and the Senate here, in Ottawa.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I have myself had the opportunity to invite a Senator, the Senator of my region, to attend a symposium in my riding. And the Senator for the region whom I contacted admitted very candidly that he did not remember being Senator for my region. Nevertheless, he had been Senator for that region for five years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, you can be sure that all Senators should be in closer touch with their constituency; they should at least have the decency to keep in touch with their constituents, even if they are appointed rather than elected.

In joining those who favour an elected Senate, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) is siding with an increasing number of Canadians, and probably with the majority of Albertans. He is therefore not the first, as you may well imagine, to define a specific proposal aimed at implementing the principle of an elected Senate.

Let us now look at some of the proposals which have been made over the years.

In 1981, the Canada West Foundation recommended that senatorial elections take place at the same time as every election of the House of Commons and that elected Senators be allowed to hold office during two legislatures. To support this recommendation, here is what the Canada West Foundation stated, and I quote:

• (1730)

[English]

> The reasons for considering direct election flow, not from any alleged tidal wave of democratization to which we must automatically yield, but from the practical and immediate implications of election. An individual who holds his position because he has been elected to that position has a clear and unambiguous mandate to represent those people who elected him . . . Election for a limited term implies a clear and direct accountability to those voters at the end of that term. The result of the combination of these two factors is legitimacy.
> An elected Senator would possess a clear mandate for speaking out on behalf of his region, and a leverage for achieving concessions that would not rest on personality, fortuitous circumstances, or political convenience.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this 1981 proposal also recommended that provinces get equal representation in the Senate. This, I believe, is the oldest proposal which people talk a lot about today. In another background study released in March 1987, the Canada West Foundation reiterated its proposal for a triple E Senate.

In 1983, the P.E.I. Government, then lead by a good Progressive Conservative Government, also proposed to elect the same number of senators from each province through a process similar to that used for members in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, many people want an elected Senate and as many want the Senate simply abolished but everybody agrees that this old institution hinders the smooth running of the Government. I think this motion should be rejected.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, thank you for putting an end to this speech.

I would also like to participate this afternoon in this debate on motion M-81 introduced by the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon).

[English]

I carefully read the proposal of the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) in his motion. I must say that there are a number of measures which I can wholeheartedly support.

As a matter of fact, I would draw your attention to a speech that I made in the House on May 17, 1985. At that time we were talking about constitutional reform. Let me quote what I said at that time, as it appears at page 4890 of Hansard:

> In order to reflect the principle that our Senate must represent provincial interests, I believe that Senators should be elected at provincial elections. While that may be a somewhat unusual way of proceeding, what better occasion is there to assess the provincial mood of an area than during the provincial election campaign? Why not elect one-half of the Senators at every provincial election, assuming that we had the same number of seats in the Senate that we have now in each province? I recognize that there has to be reform there. However, for the purpose of debate, let's assume that we have the same number of seats that we have in each province. The greatest number of Senators that could be changed at any one time would be 12.

I went on to say:

With only one half elected in every provincial election, a maximum of 12 would change at any one time, if all Senators were defeated within that province, which is somewhat unlikely. There would be insured continuity.

That is what I said on May 17, 1985. To that extent, I agree with my hon. friend from Calgary North. As a private Member, who is not stating a Party position, I agree with some of the proposals made by the Hon. Member for Calgary North.

I do not know where he got his idea and if I happened to contribute to it, I am pleased to have done so. If we have similar ideas, that is even better. Perhaps we can start a movement.

The only difficulty I have with the proposal in the Hon. Member's motion is that for a short period of time there would be three and possibly four different kinds of Senators. There would be elected Senators, those appointed to finish the term until the next provincial election, the existing Senators and the so-called lifers, of which there are some six left.

However, like everything else, if we are going to reform the institution and want it to progress, perhaps that phasing in process would help to achieve Senate reform.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it was with amazement, to say the least, that I listened to the speech made by the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) in the House, that is the speech he has read, for it was prepared by God knows who. Yet, Mr. Speaker, that speech, delivered by the Member for LaSalle, but prepared by God knows who, was lacking something. First, the Hon. Member for LaSalle seems to have forgotten about his own party. We should remember that in 1979, the Conservative Party was elected in this country. Unfortunately, that government suffered from a specific deficiency; one could say that it suffered from several deficiencies because it has not survived for very long, but it suffered from a specific deficiency at that time, and that is the lack of representation from Quebec in the House of Commons.

Because of this particular problem, the Prime Minister found it difficult to fill Ministers positions in his Cabinet, due to the fact that there were only two Quebec Conservative Members. One of the two founding nations of this country was represented in the Cabinet by only two people or a maximum of two assuming that both would be appointed to the Cabinet. I think there was a serious deficiency there. To solve this problem, the Prime Minister decided to find in the Senate some high calibre Quebecers, who could represent Quebec well in the Cabinet, and he went and picked for example, the Hon. Member for Berthier—Maskinongé—Lanaudière (Mr. de Cotret) who was then a Senator. He picked a few others including Senator Asselin, and in that way the Prime Minister managed to give Quebec some representation, I would not say a fair representation because they were not in sufficient number, but at least he managed to a certain extent to make up for this deficiency.

A little later, in 1980, the Liberal Government too had similar problems elsewhere in this country in the sense that Western Canada did not elect Liberal Members. So the then Prime Minister appointed Senators from the West to sit in the Cabinet.

This, I think, Mr. Speaker, clearly demonstrates the need for a Senate in Canada. But obvioulsy, we must reform the present procedure for choosing Senators. There is definitely a need for improvement. Personnally, I am sure that if Canadians had to decide right now how Senators should be chosen the Senate would be completely different from the one we have, in the sense that Senators would not be appointed for life. And I say this whether they are Liberal, Conservative or independent. The fact is that we need a higher Chamber in our Parliament.

[English]

Every single country in the western world that I know of has a bicameral national legislature. There is this chamber of sober second thought, be it in the United States of America, France, Great Britain or most other jurisdictions. There is a necessity for having that for two reasons; first, to ensure a continuity in one of the two legislative Chambers, and second, to give that sober second thought. I think, in spite of the disagreement of some of our New Democratic colleagues, that has a value. It does not mean that there has to be life permanence in order to have sober second thought. One could achieve that with less frequent elections, phased elections, and so on, in the way I have described and in the way the Hon. Member for Calgary North has suggested to us.

However, we cannot pretend we do not need it at all and have the kind of ridiculous proposition we saw over the weekend where the Quebec wing of the Conservative Party, for instance, decided we would abolish the Senate and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) had to intervene in the debate and say: "Boys and girls, we cannot do this at the present time because that would contravene the Meech Lake Accord". So everyone said: "We cannot do that, but let us pretend we are going to do it at the next round of constitutional amendments". Their position was then revised. They would do it next time, not this time, and suddenly that made the project, in the view of certain Quebec Conservatives, a little more palatable.

Whether one wants to breach the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord or not in order to achieve this is, as far as I am concerned, not the right way to go about it. I think the idea proposed to us by the Hon. Member for Calgary North is a good one. Undoubtedly, it needs some work. Most ideas do, for that matter. But I think he has a far better idea than what was proposed to us by the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier).

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, this motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Calgary-North (Mr. Gagnon) has obviously some merit but it should lead to a quick solution. The Senate reform issue has been under discussion for a long time and our First Ministers agreed to discuss it thoroughly at the next meeting on the Constitution.

Looking at the issue of the Senate in 1988, one has to ask a number of questions. In the distant past, we were commoners, just lowly people elected to the Commons and there was another Chamber, the very select Senate, whose members were a little more educated and in a position to correct mistakes made by humble commoners. Things have changed quite a bit since then. In the old days, regional concerns were the main factor defined in Canada. Senators had to protect the interests of the provinces, of minorities and they were supposed to voice regional concerns. The big question that should be asked of Canadians, the only truly significant one, a question that would be really difficult for anybody to answer is this one: Can most Canadians tell me the name of their Senator, Mr. Speaker? Not too many people would be able to tell us the designation of a senator who has just been summoned.

Mrs. Bourgault: I couldn't.

Mr. Hamelin: And I would be very much surprised to find someone who knows the name of his or her Senator. Some of the senators do not even know the name of their "diocese", and that is a fact.

Then of course the Parliament of Canada now has a greater number of Members. We have all kinds of information media, we have lobbies, we have new laws which make it possible for women's groups and minorities to have their say, so these days you simply cannot hoodwink Canadians right and left! First thing you know they tell their Members in the House what they should do.

So my colleague was saying: What a wonderful idea, a Senate! A potential reservoir of Ministers, a place to find election candidates, indeed a place where there would not be any real national Party with Members elected in all provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the situation would be corrected if we had an electoral system based on proportional representation where we would be sure to have elected representatives from all regions. I would suggest that it is a very weak argument to claim that the Senate ought to be a retirement home in recognition of services rendered, because that is exactly what the Senate has become, a retirement home for people who have served faithfully.

Not so long ago every legislative assembly—including Quebec's—had its very own small Senate, its very own small upper chamber.

Mr. Speaker, nobody shed tears of blood or cried in desperation when we got rid of this perfectly useless Upper Chamber which was supposed to represent the aspirations of Quebec's various regions. Nobody cried when we did away with this non-elected Senate.

But let us admit that we preserve this institution and go along with the arguments of the Western and Eastern provinces which are in favour of the so-called "Triple E" Senate. I foresee already that the Premiers will have problems at the next Constitutional Conference. An elected Senate means a Senate with powers. But, for Heaven sake, which one? What will be the real problems of this elected Senate? Do you not feel already the confrontation which will oppose the two Houses? Will we have to deal with suspensive vetos, effective vetos in such and such areas, and this and that?

Let us talk now of a Senate with equal representation, say ten Senators representing Prince Edward Island and ten Senators representing Ontario. This creates problems.

Let us talk now about an efficient Senate. This stretches the imagination, Mr. Speaker! An efficient Senate! If the past foretells the future, we are faced with disaster. The notion of an efficient Senate truly boggles the mind!

I suggest, therefore, that this proposal which comes within the framework of the system has merit. But I suggest also that we should have a substantial debate, the only one we should have now to prepare the forthcoming Constitutional Conference and, as the Quebec wing said during the weekend, we should ponder at least once the need to maintain this "pensioners' House for services rendered".

[English]

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) for bringing in this motion. A Triple E Senate is strongly supported by the people in my riding. My motion on a Triple E Senate was shredded of the equality from each province and the election from each province and then sent to the First Ministers for consideration. This motion reopens the matter.

I support this motion for a number of reasons; first, the House of Commons does not answer the regional requirements. The House of Commons is based on population. As long as we can foresee there will be a greater number of Members from Ontario and Quebec than from the rest of the provinces, there is no equal consideration of regional matters. If we are going to have a Senate at all, there should be an equal number of Members from each province and territory so they can consider matters on a regional basis equally.

Second, there is no accountability in the present Senate. The Senators hold up Bills that we returned to Parliament to pass. These are Bills that the people want with respect to immigration. The Senators are accountable to no one. They simply do what they like. They ignore the public. This is a democracy. We are supposed to be doing what the people want. The Senate is not doing that.

If Senators were elected and had to report back to the people who elected them then they would have to be accountable. I strongly support the accountability of people in the Senate. They must be elected. They should be elected. In this way they would have to go back to the people periodically to find out what they want and then be accountable to them.

If we do not have an elected Senate with equal representation from each province and if Senators are not accountable, then we are simply wasting public money. Today the Senate is wasting public money by ignoring the wishes of the people by refusing to pass legislation that has been passed by the House of Commons.

I support the motion.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to take part in this very timely debate this afternoon. It is appropriate that we should be discussing Senate reform given the historical constitutional events that have taken place during the past years.

As all Hon. Members of the House know, at Meech Lake last April 30 First Ministers took an important step in strengthening the federation by reaching unanimous agreement on bringing Quebec into the Constitution. On June 3 that agreement was formalized as a constitutional Accord.

As part of the Accord First Ministers also approved an entrenched second round of negotiations aimed at fostering further constitutional development. In particular, Section 50(1) requires that a constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and of First Ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year commencing in 1988. Thus we already have action taken by the Government and by the provinces to bring about Senate reform.

Among the items on the agenda to be considered at these conferences will be, as I have already stated, Senate reform, including the role and function of the Senate, the power of the Senate, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate. As other Members have said I believe, too, that it is important that there be representation from all across the country that will represent the different regions according to their populations. I am sure that should be one of the functions of the Senate.

Under the Constitution Act, 1867, which is to be amended under the terms of the Accord, Section 25 of that Act would provide that where a vacancy occurs in the Senate the Government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate. We all realize that those nominees must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

For the first time this will give to the provinces some genuine say in appointments to the Senate. I do not think that there can be any doubt as to where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stands on the seriousness of Senate reform. Last August 26 he said in the House that he would bring forward on behalf of the Government of Canada a comprehensive proposal to reform the Senate at the first constitutional conference. We can expect that to take place in 1988.

We must consider very carefully what should be the role and function of the second Chamber of Parliament. Before addressing specific matters such as the method of selecting Senators, the powers of Senators or the distribution of seats we must begin with a more basic question. What should be the principal functions of a reformed Senate in light of Canada's particular circumstances? I heard other Members say that we have sober talk and so on in the Senate.

In conclusion, since I know my time is running out, I feel confident that the Parliament of Canada will indeed play a major role as we begin to consider the proposals for Senate reform. In the meantime I suggest that we not get too far ahead of the process provided for in the Meech Lake Accord. I am sure that there will be broad debate and discussion on Senate reform as we approach the 1988 conference. I do not think that we should be premature. For the House to endorse today a particular proposal, whatever its merits, might be a wrong statement.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining, I am pleased to take part in this debate. May I first congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) for introducing this motion.

I know that the issue of Senate reform is one which is of significant importance to western Canadians. It is of great interest in particular to the Hon. Member's constituents and to the people of Alberta generally.

As a former member of the Special Joint Committee of the House and Senate on the Constitution Act, 1987 I took great pleasure in hearing a great deal of testimony, particularly from western Canadians, on how important the issue of Senate reform is to them. They view it as a method of rebalancing what some westerners consider to be the imbalance of power that exists in central Canada.

It is important when one considers the distribution of Senate seats at the moment that one sees that there is in fact a regime designed to provide for the type of regional representation for which western Canadians and many Canadians are looking. Of course, one of the main purposes of the Senate when it was established by our Fathers of Confederation was to ensure that there would be provincial representation here in Ottawa. We have a breakdown of Senators on the basis of 24 from each of the four regions of the country, plus now we have representation from the northern territories.

As a Member of Parliament from Ontario I have some concern with the notion of equal representation by province. Representation by population is a fundamental tenet of democracy and one which I would be hesitant to see withdrawn in the case of the Upper House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—PRESENCE OF DIOXINS IN MIRAMICHI RIVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION/REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ADEQUATE MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am raising today an issue of very serious concern of environmental pollution in the Miramichi River area at the Domtar plant near Newcastle in New Brunswick, a situation I have raised in the House a couple of times without receiving any kind of a satisfactory answer.

We now know that the provincial Minister of the Environment for New Brunswick, the Hon. Vaughn Blaney, has decided not to allow the reopening of the plant in question, Domtar, which had requested permission to reopen in order to fulfil a contract given by the federal Government through the Canadian International Development Agency. This is a plant that had been known to be polluting in the area for a very long time.

There is a whole history that would take hours to read into the record. There were concerns of residents in the area regarding water, animals, and the long term cover-up on the part of environmental officials who were aware of the dangers created by toxins in the area, particularly pentachlorophenol, a substance used in the coating of wooden telephone poles. There is a very long history of this substance which is presently under review. It should not be used in any form in Canada. It is a substance which has been banned in other countries, notably in Sweden.

When I first raised the question, I received the answer from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) that we were working with the company and that clean-up was going ahead. He then retracted that statement somewhat and said that the Government of Canada is riding herd on the company. We know that the Government has not been riding herd on the company. We know that previous Governments had not been riding herd on the company. Instead the files have accumulated showing disastrous results for residents and for workers in an area where workers in the same plant have died mysteriously early of diseases related to chemicals.

In 1969 the fisheries department wrote Domtar to say that the water was exceedingly toxic. In 1974 there was an internal memo at Environment Canada documenting the fact that the situation had been under review for five years, that the water was still toxic, and that the company was doing nothing.

In 1981 Environment Canada published a report that looked at dioxins around the plant and recommended that dioxin levels be determined in the water and sediments of the Miramichi River in the vicinity. This was never done. Terrestrial and aquatic plants growing in contaminated areas should be analysed to evaluate the dioxins. This was never done. A further recommendation that ground water be sampled to determine migration of dioxins was only done in 1987, and the results were only released last year. The testing was done by the company, a company obviously with an interest at stake. Environment Canada has done nothing here.

In 1984 Environment Canada performed more tests and found levels of two orders of magnitude higher of octa-dioxins, and background concentrations of dioxins were also found.

In 1988 Environment Canada held meetings with Domtar. Domtar informed Environment Canada of its studies into migrations of contaminants and plans for clean-up. However, requirements for the clean-up specifically have never been approved. Then we have the Government of Canada giving a contract to Domtar in order to go back into operation in an area in which they have not cleaned up the pollution in the first place.

Previous Governments—in the case of the federal Government, previous Liberal Governments; in the case of the provincial Government of New Brunswick, previous Conservative Governments—did not act at the time. We wonder if perhaps there had been action in time that jobs would not have been lost, residents would have been safe, the ground water question would have been looked at. We do not know if there were dioxins in the drinking water that people were drinking. The tests date back only to 1987. We do not know the quality of the water that people were drinking for all those years in the 1970s and early 1980s. If something had been done in time, it is possible that we would still have jobs there. The question, should we be sacrificing jobs for the environment and the environment for jobs, would not have come up.

Certainly, the right decision has now been made by the Minister of the Environment for New Brunswick. I congratulate him on making a tough decision. We cannot sacrifice the environment for immediate jobs. We know that the long term result of making that type of decision is loss of jobs, because it means even more serious problems. It means dioxins in fish, an impact on agriculture, and all of that means loss of jobs.

My point here, Mr. Speaker, is that we have Creosote Road and Chemical Creek, and an extremely cavalier attitude taken by Governments at both levels over a long period of time.

Environment Canada and the Government of Canada has had between 1969 and 1988 to act. It found dioxins in water. It ignored recommendations to test the levels around the brook leading from the plant. It waited seven years for the company to test ground water itself, and did not do its own tests. It did not use the powers of the Fisheries Act to clean up the plant site. Ten years of pollution could have been avoided. The power is there. We have Environment Canada. Fisheries is federal jurisdiction. The opportunity to have acted earlier was there.

I hope that this will be a lesson to the federal Government that we need early, prompt action for adequate protection of the health of people in the area and the environment.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Domtar wood preservation plant, located near the Miramichi River at Newcastle, New Brunswick, has been in operation for over 60 years. The company began using pentachlorophenol in 1957 at this plant. Certain dioxins are known to be associated with pentachlorophenol, but the highly toxic 2,3,7,8-TCDD has not generally been believed to be one of them.

In 1981 Environment Canada undertook a study of the Domtar site to assess possible contamination. Dioxins were found in a ditch draining the site. A second study was conducted in 1984 which confirmed the presence of dioxins. Very low levels of 2,3,7,8-TCDD were identified. As expected, the predominant dioxin was octochlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxin.

The 1981 study report made several recommendations. Most of these have been carried out, including definition of the type of dioxin present in 1984 and installation of waste water treatment facilities in 1983-85. As a follow-up to this work, the New Brunswick Department of Municipal Affairs and Environment and Domtar undertook further site investigation in 1985 and in 1987. Additional sampling has confirmed that there is contamination of soil and ground water in the plant area.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans determined the presence of dioxins in lobsters several kilometres downstream from the Domtar site. No trace of the more dangerous 2,3,7,8-TCDD dioxin was found in the lobsters. The results of this study were made available to Environment Canada in late 1987 and has underlined the necessity for a full evaluation of contamination from this site, as well as other possible sources of dioxin near the Miramichi River.

While we had recently been under the impression that a clean-up was imminent or under way, we have since been informed that only preparatory work with some excavation had been initiated at the site through last fall. The Domtar company is now in the process of re-examining all relevant information in order to develop a more acceptable proposal for the clean-up of the site. This proposal must be satisfactory to the Province of New Brunswick and to Environment Canada. Meetings to address this remedial work are under way. The environment department expects to see a company proposal for clean-up this month.

The presence of dioxin in the Miramichi River is a complicated issue. A pulp and paper mill just up river from the Domtar site uses a bleached-kraft process. This process has just recently been recognized as suspect in the generation of dioxins. In view of this complication, Environment Canada is undertaking a study of sources of dioxin in the Miramichi River. This study will be part of a national study set in motion by Environment Canada to define the seriousness of the problem, with a view to seeking clean-up action on the part of any identified polluter.

Recent reports now indicate that Domtar is not going to reopen the plant. Nevertheless, the clean-up will continue. Fortunately, due to the foresight of Environment Canada and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Miramichi problem will probably be defined earlier than most.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES— PROVISION OF ALTERNATE SERVICES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having the opportunity to discuss further a question which I brought to the attention of the Minister responsible for Canada Post some number of weeks ago. It is with reference to the closure of post offices in rural Canada.

There is no question that all reasonable and responsible Canadians would support any measure which would make Canada Post more cost effective and cost efficient. Certainly I have stated in the House and in my constituency on numerous occasions that I will support any reasonable plan that will bring postal spending under control and will reduce the burden on the taxpayer.

In 1981, Bill C-42 came into effect, turning Canada Post into a Crown corporation. This took place for a number of reasons, not the least of which was the fact that in the Post Office, there were a number of people at the time and continue to be to this day who were concerned about labour. Labour unrest was profound and labour disputes were indeed many. It was also a fact that the Post Office had accumulated a tremendous debt load and it was a haven for political patronage.

These problems were well recognized prior to 1981. In the 1970s, the Hon. Eric Kierans was Postmaster General under former Prime Minister Trudeau's administration. He determined that indeed the fat should be trimmed from the Post Office. During that period of time, Mr. Kierans undertook to close down some 1,000 post offices in rural Canada without any consultation whatsoever with the communities involved and with no explanation.

As a result of the postal plan, a substantial number of people from rural Canada are living in perpetual fear that their post offices will be the next to get the axe. Unfortunately, some of my constituents have felt this axe. Indeed, the little Village of Bloomfield is such a community. Bloomfield's service was taken away and has been replaced to date with supermail-boxes. Up until this time at least, the residents have had to travel some 30 kilometres round-trip to receive even the most basic of postal services.

I do not think any reasonable person could object to Canada Post's plan when a postal facility should be closed for economical reasons or other circumstances like a post office being taken away from Canada Post by the landlord. There should be no disagreement with this or major concerns on the part of the community when Canada Post agrees to provide alternate services such as counter services. Unfortunately, this has not always taken place.

Although Canada Post has often promised to provide better service, the fact is that many people in rural communities where post offices have been taken away feel as though they have been victimized by Canada Post. Better service has been promised but in fact this has not taken place. We feel that there is an obligation on the part of Canada Post to ensure that before the promised new services are implemented, the opportunities and agencies for implementing the services should indeed exist.

We find that Canada Post often refers to meaningful consultation, and this has taken on two meanings. Canada Post apparently believes that meaningful consultation is something that takes place when Canada Post officials explain to the residents of a community what services will be taken away from them. The residents believe that meaningful consultation means that they will have an opportunity to say no to the removal of those services. Clearly, meaningful consultation has not been defined, and that is something that Canada Post should undertake to do.

We feel that better service should be the criteria when postal facilities are taken away. When I say we, I mean Members from rural Canada. Many of us believe that the availability of retail services should be ensured when Canada Post takes existing services away. If alternate services cannot be assured, then indeed plans should be shelved and postponed until alternate services are indeed in place.

• (1815)

In summation, I would suggest that the Crown corporation and all rural Members of this House should ensure that rural Canada is treated fairly in all aspects and not left behind in our changing society. I would encourage Canada Post to undertake that very seriously.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to take this opportunity to underline the many representations the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) has made to the Canada Post Corporation.

My colleague referred to the service alternatives. Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation has assured all Canadians, and the Minister responsible for Canada Post can guarantee that this will continue to be the case, that the postal service is a guaranteed service and that every Canadian must be able to receive and post his mail.

I should remind the Hon. Member that we have made a commitment and that there can be no change in service before there has been consultation with the community, the citizens involved and the Members of Parliament.

Naturally, we are all somewhat reluctant to accept changes. However, the Canadian society is changing, and when we analyse what is going on in the Canada Post Corporation, we find that the way of life of many people has changed and the postal service no longer meets their needs.

When a post office must close, it is because the person who provides the service has informed Canada Post that he or she is resigning, retiring or wants to get out of the business.

This is what happened in Bloomfield Station, Mr. Speaker. There was an announcement that Canada Post was planning to look at alternative methods to serve the 50 families who had been deprived of the postal service for some time. Attempts have unfortunately been unsuccessful because, I think, quite a tight campaign led by the union prevented that type of service from being offered. Superboxes were installed. Naturally, they provide ideal service, twenty four hours a day. You can go and pick up or send your mail any time it pleases you.

Of course, not long ago, as my colleague is no doubt aware, the Corporation concluded an agreement with Bloomfield Varieties store to install a retail sales counter. I point out that there is a significant improvement of the service in Bloomfield Station.

I want my colleague to know that according to what I have been told there are only 9.1 kilometres between Blomfield Station and Norton and 12 kilometres between Bloomfield and Hampton. I was surprised to hear him say the distance was about 30 kilometres. I would like him to tell me if it is so.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure all Hon. Members that the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation is doing everything he can to have acceptable and profitable postal services maintained for all Canadians.

NATIONAL REVENUE—PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—PAYMENT OF TAXES BY INVESTORS/REQUEST THAT DEMANDS FOR PAYMENT OF TAXES BE STOPPED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to elaborate further on a question I posed to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) last Tuesday. It concerned the actions of Revenue Canada in taxing those investors in the Principal Group, financial institutions which went into receivership last June.

The Government is attempting to collect taxes on interest which those investors and depositors would have earned but, in many cases, never actually saw. There were a variety of investments and types of deposits involved. Some were on an accrual basis and some had received their interest but it was left in deposits or rolled over into new investments.

It seems to me that there is unfairness here. Many of these depositors are older, retired people who had deposited all of their life savings in these institutions. Many of these people are without means. For the Government to ask them to pay taxes on money that they never saw is, I think, unfair.

I suppose that within the strict confines of the Income Tax Act bureaucrats would say, as the Deputy Minister of National Revenue is reported to have said, that the fact of the bankruptcy of an investment company is no excuse. That seems a little hard-hearted. I think it is basically wrong that the Government is attempting to collect taxes on money which people never received.

I recognize that there are some problems with this case and the Government will have some problems changing some of the rules and regulations, but it needs to be done in terms of fairness.

In the last few years we have seen various financial institutions go bankrupt. People have lost their money, especially those who are not fully covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I think there should be some special provisions in the Income Tax Act that taxes to be paid on interest earned before the institution went bankrupt be deferred until the company is properly wound down and the investors know how much they will recoup. If they recoup their interest as well as their original investment, the Government should tax at that time.

There are many instances of deferral of taxes in this country. The common estimate now is of some $20 billion in deferred taxes. It would certainly be fair if the Government did not proceed to attempt to collect taxes on interest earned which the investors never received.

For the Government to say that eventually the investors will get back the money they pay in taxes is beside the point. It will take at least two or three, and perhaps four or five years before the company is properly wound down and the investors know how much they owe or how much the Government will be able to pay them back. As I mentioned before, many of the investors and depositors are older, retired people on fixed incomes who cannot afford, in essence, to lend the Government money now which they will get back in three, four, or five years.

The responses which I have received from government Members and which my Leader received on Wednesday encourage us to hope that perhaps this week the Government will announce that it has found a way to ensure that these people will not have to pay these taxes. I hope that when the Government's spokesperson responds to my presentation this evening she will have some good news for us all.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments regarding the fiscal implications of the Principal Group failure. It has been said, among other things, that taxpayers would have to pay tax on income from interest they never received.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to say that those individuals who elected to use the cash accounting method and did not receive interest payments, paid in cash or credited to their account before it was blocked, will not have to pay tax on accrued interests. However, those who did receive interest payments, paid in cash or credited to their account, will have to include that amount on their income tax return. They are required to do so by the existing Income Tax Act and the Minister of National Revenue, for his part, must enforce the Act.

On the other hand, people who have calculated their revenue according to the accrual method of accounting and whose investment contract with the Principal Group had not expired when it was frozen will be allowed, once the whole matter is settled, to deduct an amount not exceeding the interest already declared.

Present legislation provides a certain relief for taxpayers in that situation, depending on the circumstances.

We are nevertheless deeply concerned about the difficulties facing some investors. Some of them could indeed lose a big part of their capital and they realize that they have a tax obligation regarding the interest reinvested in the Principal Group.

So you will certainly understand that it is a very complex situation resulting from the collapse of a group of companies with a complex structure and widespread ramifications. Although the questions put in this House are straightforward, the problem is not. The officials of National Revenue-Taxation and of the Finance Departement are compiling facts and evaluating the implications of certain means of providing relief. Meanwhile, both departments are working together on that subject, examining which means might be appropriate in the circumstances. And I can assure the Hon. Member that a response is indeed forthcoming in that case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION (SHARE ISSUANCE AND SALE AUTHORIZATION) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-125, an Act to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares, to authorize the sale of those shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories, to repeal the Northern Canada Power Commission Act and to provide for related matters.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CREE-NASKAPI ACT—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition, duly certified, which deals with the implementation of the Cree-Naskapi Act. The Cree-Naskapi Act was a piece of legislation which flowed from the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Part XII of the Act created a commission and this commission is required to report to the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) every two years on the implementation of the Act.

The first such report was tabled before Parliament March 12, 1986. The report contained a number of serious condemnations of the administration by the Department of Indian Affairs of the Cree community operations and maintenance subsidies.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to have the said report referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts so that the committee may inquire into the situation and recommend ways to resolve it.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners are very concerned that the trade deal agreed to between Canada and the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence.

• (1110)

They believe the agreement means a loss of jobs in many sectors of the economy and many regions of Canada. Therefore, they ask that Parliament dissolve in order to have a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada, and that the debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, March 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this Bill today because I think it contains the Government's hidden agenda. We have heard a lot about tax reform from the Government in the last couple of years. This Bill contains a number of what are generally known as regressive tax measures. These tax increases apply to commodities which are important to the growth and development of this country. The Bill contains taxes on items which Canadian families use to redecorate their homes, things such as paint and wallpaper products; there is a 50 per cent increase in the tax from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. These materials are used by Canadians all across the country in various ways.

We also have a tax on telecommunication services, which makes it difficult for Canadians to communicate with one another. It is a particularly regressive tax in a country like Canada with its vast distances and isolation of communities. Canadians, we are told, are among the heaviest users of long-distance telephone services in the world.

In my riding, which I suppose is the smallest of federal ridings in Newfoundland and Labrador, there are communities such as Bell Island which cannot communicate with St. John's, 15 miles away, without paying long-distance charges. The community is isolated because it is an island and because it is served by an inefficient ferry service. The necessity of doing business in St. John's is difficult for the people of that island because they have to pay long-distance charges. Now the Government goes further and taxes that service by 10 per cent.

The Government has also increased the excise tax on gasoline and aviation fuels by one cent a litre. This is only one in a series of increases since 1984. We have seen a 23 cent per gallon increase in the cost of gasoline since the Government came into office, a massive increase by any measure. The increase is in the taxes that ordinary Canadians are paying regardless of income. The Government has seen fit to collect almost 20 per cent of its federal sales tax revenue through this tax on automotive fuels. It is a regressive tax which does not consider the ability of the individual to pay. This most recent increase alone means that the average Canadian family will pay an extra $50 in taxes a year.

To go back to the 10 per cent tax on telecommunications, that tax is contrary to a recent ruling by the CRTC which told Bell Canada that Canadians were paying too much for telephone service. It was ordered to reduce its rates. The Government does not have the same sympathy for users of telephones and has added a 10 per cent tax to the cost of service.

The Government, since 1984, has attempted to reduce services and deindex pensions. We have seen a partial deindexation of the marginal tax brackets and partial deindexation of family allowances. There has been controversy over the capital gains tax exemption for wealthy Canadians. We have had a series of measures, including a reduction in over-all tax rates for high-income earners, which I see as being a part of the Government's agenda directed towards emphasizing hidden and regressive commodity taxes as a part of its method of reducing the deficit. However, the effect is to further shift the share of the tax burden from those who could afford to pay to those who need to keep a larger part of their income for their own use and the use of their families.

This is one of the hallmarks of the Government's activity. It does not act on behalf of the average Canadians who pay by far the largest share of income taxes. It shifts the burden of taxes increasingly to them from the high profit corporate sector, the banking industry, and other industries which are well protected by the Government.

This regime has increased the tax burden on the ordinary Canadian family since 1984 by over $1,000 a year. We started off with tax increases and, although there have been some decreases in the over-all taxation rate for the average family through tax reform, the end result is a tax burden on the average Canadian family in excess of $1,000 more than they were paying in 1984.

This Bill is a part of the Government's over-all plan to increase the tax burden on ordinary families who need to buy these goods and services and need to use telephone services in order to communicate with their families, relatives, and friends for the purposes of business or, in many cases in my riding, to find out about employment opportunities.

There is a great groundswell against the taxation policy which the Government has followed. People in my riding are very concerned that the taxation level, including that on long distance charges, unfairly affects those who have to rely on long distance telephone communications in order to maintain effective communication with communities around them. It is an unfair tax. The only thing it does not affect is the residential monthly rate. This is a hidden tax which we do not support.

As a result of the changes in the manufacturers' sales tax we now have a very complex system of taxes, creating a very burdensome administrative responsibility for business people. We have special exemptions, notional values, rulings which must be made from time to time, and licensing requirements and documentation which businesses find extremely complex. This is not an appropriate way to raise revenue.

We have in short a series of measures which, although they will increase revenues, will result in a further shift of the burden of taxation to ordinary Canadians on consumer goods and services—who use their disposable income for these expenses and are already carrying an unfair share of the tax burden. As a result of pursuing this approach the Government is leaving behind those Canadians who are unfairly burdened with tax and an increasing number of Canadians who are already living below the poverty line as set by Statistics Canada and the Canadian Council on Social Development. These people are affected just as much by these taxes as is everyone else in the country. It is an unfair burden. These measures are inappropriate and we do not support them.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, with a great deal of regret. I regret that we are here again in the House of Commons talking about tax increases, particularly hidden tax increases. That is a term with which Canadians have become all too familiar since the Conservative Government came to power three and one-half years ago. The Conservatives have imposed the longest continuous string of tax increases to be imposed on Canadians in recent memory. I do not know how many times we have talked about this Conservative tax record, or hidden tax record, which increases the burden on middle-income Canadians, families, and individuals.

There has been much anxiety experienced by seniors who are trying to ensure that they will be able to continue the quality of life for which they had planned. However, with the increases in the cost of living and the Government's plan for investment tax their anxiety is growing.

Those who are involved in the cultural industry and small business people are very concerned about being hit through reductions on office expenses in their homes and the use of their cars which is so important in the earning of their livelihood.

Today I am going to talk about hidden taxes and will then refer to the more overt taxes in the Income Tax Act. This Bill contains the necessary legislative amendments to implement the federal sales and excise tax and excise duty changes announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budgets of February 18, 1987 and February 10, 1988; his June 18, 1987 White Paper on tax reform; and his December 16, 1987 tax reform paper.

The Bill before us looks very big and ominous. In reading it one must use a dictionary, various other books and Bills to try to figure out who the Government is taxing, why it is taxing, and where it is taxing. It takes a fair amount of study to find out how the Government has hidden the excise tax. Let us attempt to determine what this enabling legislation covers as it gouges revenues and addresses technical issues in the law.

The measures to address some of the inequities in the sales tax and to prevent erosion of the sales tax base as announced in the February, 1988 Budget are contained in separate legislation. Generally, this Bill deals with a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services such as telephone and telex services, but not including charges for local residential telephone lines. That is a result of the June, 1987, White Paper.

It also proposes an increase in the telecommunications programming service tax on cable and pay television services from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. That was also in the June, 1987 White Paper. Later I will discuss the amounts that these taxes will raise as the Government spreads out its huge tax net.

The Bill also deals with an increase in the sales tax rate on paint and wallpaper products from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. There is an acceleration in the federal excise tax remittance, which was also referred to in the June, 1987 White Paper.

There is an increase in the federal sales tax rate on beer, spirits, wine and tobacco products from 15 per cent to 18 per cent. That proposal appeared in the December, 1987, tax reform.

There is an increase in the specific excise tax and excise duty rates for tobacco products by 4 per cent.

There is an increase in the air transportation tax levy by $4 a ticket to recover a greater proportion of air transport program costs. That is a very interesting increase at a time when we are using more aircraft and travelling more often.

There is an increase in the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline of one cent per litre, a most disgusting tax. The Bill also introduces several technical—

Mr. McDermid: You should have been here for the National Energy Program.

Mrs. Finestone: That was a different time in history. You do not care to remember history. I suggest that you read the world history and you will see where you fit into the world history picture.

The Bill also introduces several technical amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. These include a shift in the taxes on motive fuels to the manufacturing level to address administration and compliance problems. That appeared in the February, 1987 Budget.

There is a shift of the sales tax to the wholesale level—how mean can one get—for snack foods, pet food, pet litter, candy and confectionery goods and certain electronic equipment. That appeared in the February, 1987 Budget.

An Hon. Member: We are just trying to pay off your debts.

Mrs. Finestone: Which we acquired for a good cause. You overspent for no cause.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: The tax on most of these products will be shifted back to the manufacturing level when the marketing and distribution cost measure, announced in the February, 1988 Budget, comes into effect on November 1, 1988.

There is a clarification of the refund provisions applicable to certified public institutions. That appeared in the June, 1987 Ways and Means motion.

There is an amendment to the fair price provisions to apply tax on fair market value when other than arm's length sales are made, or where it is difficult to determine the sale price. That appeared in the December, 1987 tax reform.

There is a revision to certain compliance provisions in the Excise Act to reflect reduced on site surveillance by Excise officers in relation to the production of alcohol and tobacco products. That was in the February, 1987 Budget.

There are three relieving measures in this Bill. Incredibly, there will not be as much work for lawyers and accountants in three areas. In these relieving measures of the Bill there is an increased in the existing fuel tax rebate available to primary producers for the excise tax on gasoline by one per cent per litre to compensate for the increase announced in the February, 1988 Budget. The Government is giving on the one hand and taking back with the other, for which we are expected to be thankful.

There is an increase in the tax threshold for periodic and seasonal filers in order to reduce the paper burden for small business.

Finally, there is an exemption for original prints from the application of federal sales tax. This appears in the February, 1988 Budget. This gives me a rare chance to congratulate the Minister of Minister. Finally the Government listened to one of our standing committee's recommendations in the report on taxation and the arts. It was the only area to which the Government cared to pay any attention.

Let me turn specifically to the telecommunications tax. It is one of the most pervasive tax increases in this legislation. It will mean a 10 per cent charge on long distance calls for every telephone subscriber in Canada. This means that elderly people on fixed incomes, who rely on long distance to communicate with their families, will suffer yet another tax bite by the Conservative tax watchdogs.

The voice of many Canadians is obviously not being heard as the Government continues its search for ways to introduce subtle, hard to see, hidden taxes that affect an incredibly wide number of Canadians.

What is worse is that the new tax cancels out the real savings millions of Canadians would have and should have realized as result of the lower long distance telephone charges in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia that were ordered by the CRTC just a few weeks ago. The CRTC studied the matter and decided that the arm's length Bell Canada and B.C. Telephone are earning enough money and the consumer should have some saving in long distance calls. In the meantime, the Minister of Finance swoops up all those savings in an attempt to recover that 10 per cent reduction. I do not think that is very fair, or proper fiscal management.

For many rural Canadians there is no real difference between a local and a long distance call. It is true that the Government has chosen to tax calls by Canadians living in rural areas which, because of the arbitrary lines of division through area codes, include long distance calls to their doctors, dentists and their children. Such an unconscionable measure by the Government is unacceptable.

We know all too well at this point in the life of the Conservative Government how regressive so many of its new taxes have been. The tax on long distance calls is no different. It hits low and middle income Canadians with the exact same rate of 10 per cent as the $200,000 earner or the company president. There is no fairness in this tax.

The lesson that many Canadians have come to learn is that the Government will tax anything. At one time we thought there would be a tax on food, but at least it seems the perishables will not be taxed. However, now we are talking about a tax on talking.

Canada is an enormous and wonderful country. Most of us live along the southern border, but tens of thousands of Canadians live throughout its geographic expanse and, in some instances, live in isolation. We are among the world's most frequent users of telephones and, just as millions of Canadians are making more use of long distance calls because of the lower rates, the Government is using this as a new opportunity to grab more tax revenue so that it can supposedly lower the deficit.

If one looks at the over-all deficit, the Government has increased the deficit by 60 per cent in three and one-half years, from $7,000 to $12,000 per capita. Not only does the Government tax talking and walking, I suspect it will even tax the air we breath.

While Canadians were getting used to the idea of "reaching out and touching someone", little did they know that the Government was working on its own variation of that jingle:

"Reach out and tax someone". This new tax on talking will reap the Government close to another $1 billion a year. It is time for us to think about how we can support another $1 billion being taken out of the pockets of Canadians.

I am sure the Government will try to apply this money to the deficit. It will then say it has done an incredible job of good government management. Yet what it has really done is taken the easy way out. It has taxed Canadians in order to pursue the deficit battle.

Where is the creativity in the way the Government went about this? I would suggest it has not been creative, nor has it been a good manager. Perhaps it should have started in its own house and cut out some of those incredible salaries in Ministers' offices and in the PMO. That way the Government might well have given Canadians a better lesson.

What about the increase in the tax on cable and pay TV services? There are tax increases of 8 per cent and 10 per cent. That will bring in an additional $93 million in general government revenue. But these funds will not be put into a program fund to produce good Canadian quality films, which was the concept behind the original tax on cable. That was the argument we used when we told the cable people to pay part of the cost of Canadian services which we have the right to expect to receive on our television sets in our homes. The concept was good. We need that Canadian content in our films. There was the intent to have this as a dedicated tax and I would suggest the Government could have directed the funds in this way.

It is nice to find something about which I can congratulate the Government. That is the granting of an exemption on original prints from federal sales tax. I daresay artists are quite delighted with that. I would also suggest that we need a better definition of artistic works so we could broaden the base of those who should be exempted from this tax.

I looked at those areas of particular interest to me as the critic, but I would suggest that the general draining of money from the people will become the Conservative epitaph. The facts speak for themselves. Today individual Canadians pay a greater share of the total tax bill in this country than they did when the Conservatives came into office, while corporations pay an even smaller share of the bill. It is just that simple. One can certainly see where the sympathies of this Government lie. I would suggest that the Government should perhaps review and revise its thinking and direction.

I wish to address some of the issues of concern which exist in the real world, the challenges facing many Canadians. The Minister of Finance saw no need to address these challenges in his supposedly "stand pat—stay still" budget. I would suggest the Minister missed the boat and I am really sad to say that. I think he treated with cavalier indifference the real needs of the country.

Poverty is at the heart of most of our social problems in Canada such as ill health, crime, poor housing conditions and family violence, which affects the women and children of this land for the most part. I would say that the Government cannot continue to tell us the poverty gap will be closed as economic conditions improve. It was fortunate enough to be elected at a time when throughout the world the economy improved. Jobs were created around this world, not just by this Government. If it wants to measure its job creation record, let it go back and look at the time when the rest of the world was at the same point in economic development and growth.

I would suggest that the trickle-down theory of economic growth simply does not work in the country in which we live. We are geographically so widely spread and regionally so diverse that we must have economic growth on two levels. This Government has forgotten what Canadians expect from its Government as leaders and directors of our society. When there is the kind of differential between the rich and the poor that we have in this country, I suggest that the Government has an obligation to address the issues. When we speak of the poor, we are referring to the tens of thousands of children and of the tens of thousands of single parents, mostly women.

I think we also have to take into consideration the working poor because they form a part of that category. It remains a fact that well over half of Canada's poorer families do earn an income. Therefore, these taxes will hit them. That will make it even more difficult for them to move out into a more stable economic environment. One well knows that in an economic enriched environment, one can afford to buy those things that will enrich the home from which the children of the future are going to come. That means music, books, records and recreational time that is constructive. None of that happens in families of the working poor. Not much of that happens because there is exhaustion and the constant grind of trying to make ends meet.

In participating here today in this tax debate, I cannot help but wonder what Canadians are thinking about this Government, a Government that was swept into office in 1984 promising not to raise taxes. Yet it has overseen one of the largest tax grabs Canadians have ever known. I hope Canadians will remember what the present Minister of Finance said on behalf of his Party while sitting on this side of the House: "We will cut spending. We will not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high". The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) repeated this promise soon after the 1984 election.

In closing, I am sure Canadians are wondering where all this goodwill has gone. What has happened to these promises? Those promises are going to come back to haunt the Conservatives. Canadians will not soon forget that this is a Government that has failed to meet its commitment. It has not kept its word. I would suggest that there is unease and frustration about the Conservative Government's record, a record that will establish this Conservative Government in history for its failure to show strong credible leadership in the many challenges facing us as a nation.

This failure was never clearer to me than when the Minister of Finance stood in his place on February 10 and said in his budget speech that his Government's policies were working just fine, and that all he and his colleague had to do was stay the course. It is appalling that a modern Canadian Government, after three and one half years in office, after taxing Canadians more than they have ever been taxed before, fighting the deficit on the back of middle-income Canadians, can still come forward with this kind of non-action as it sees the growing gap between the rich and the poor. I would hope that during this vibrant and prosperous economy in which we live, it is not too late for the Government to start to review, revise and address the ongoing problems of the poor, the working poor and ordinary Canadians in our society.

Mr. Hockin: I have one brief question to direct to the Member. She is intelligent and I am sure she knows that 850,000 Canadians have been taken off the income tax rolls. I am sure she also knows that $200 billion of debt was inherited by this present Government and that very shortly this Government will be balancing the budget except for covering the debt, which we inherited. I know she is well aware of that.

Something that she may not be aware of, and it did not come through in her rather one-sided speech, is that federal sales taxes are very high, as high as 12 per cent. Is she aware that this tax was brought in by a previous Liberal Government and that the increasingly generous tax credit brought in by this Government was a Conservative measure in order to ensure that that tax does not bear as aggressively on low-income workers as it did under the previous Liberal Government?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I respect the comments made by my colleague. I am pleased to see that he is paying some attention to the rates of the banks and to the concerns that Canadians are expressing with respect to them. I am pleased that my colleague the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has raised the issue often enough to force the Minister to answer those questions.

With respect to the tax to which the Hon. Member was referring, I suggest to him that if he considered that the tax which we had levied was too high then he had a mandate, a massive mandate when his Government was elected, and he had a choice. He was supposed to govern—to the best of his ability and in keeping with his Government's commitments.

He said that he was not going to increase taxes. Did the Minister listen to what he said? No, he blocked his ears. He was like the monkeys—hear, see, and speak not. He should not come back to say that we imposed because you imposed. The fact is that the Government has been in place for three and a half years now. It has had every opportunity to meet its commitments. If the Minister wanted to block his ears and to increase the taxes which he says we put on in the first place then that is his problem, not mine.

With respect to the number of taxpayers who have been taken off the tax rolls, may I suggest that many of them got put on by the Government's spread-out net. It trapped many more people at the lower-income level. The Minister must realize that his Government has taxed us out of our minds, to the tune of $22 billion, and the Government is giving us back $5 billion. Fewer people are now being taxed. Am I supposed to say thank you for being outrageously wrong in the first place? I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, no thank you to that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). It seems to me that she was very concerned about a whole set of tax increases that the Government has now foisted on the backs of Canadians as a result of the last Budget. This is getting to be a repeat performance. It seems to be that every three or four months we have another debate on the whole set of new taxes levied on the innocent taxpayers. I think we have almost reached a breaking limit. I do not think Canadians will sit much longer and accept continual tax increases, not only by the federal Government but also by provincial Governments and local Governments.

My question for the Hon. Member is this. In her explanation of the concerns that she had for each and every of these tax increases that are now coming on stream, does she not feel that the Government should decide to impose a minimum tax on the 60,000 profitable corporations which are not paying any taxes at all? Those corporations include some of the major trust companies and banks, as well as Argus Corporation and Cadillac Fairview. They make hundreds of millions of dollars in profits, and they do not pay a single penny in income tax.

Does the Hon. Member not feel that perhaps a more appropriate approach, a fair approach, would be for the Government to expect these profitable corporations, which now number in excess of 60,000, to pay their fair share? If they pay their fair share would not all these other nickel and dime tax increases be unnecessary? In other words, this would build not only more fairness into the system but it would stop the tax on telephone costs and watching television, and the continued increases in the taxes on beer, cigarettes and so on. Would she not agree that that might be a more appropriate approach?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I certainly think that fairness is not this Government's long suit especially when looking at taxation on all sides. I suggest to the Hon. Member that it is very important that business have a fair tax. Business is a good part of the motor of the economy of the country. It is important that businesses enable the country to grow and develop. However, I am sure that businesses as well as everyone else want to carry their fair share. If the Government does not see it in that light, who will stand up to volunteer to take money out of their pockets unless it is part of government philosophy?

I was intrigued by the fact that on the flow-through mining shares the Minister decided to change his mind and do a bit of a restudy and a readaptation. I would be very pleased if the Minister would do the same thing with respect to cultural industries. Is he also backing off because of his fear of American reprisals?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Don't laugh. Believe me, Jack Valenti got into his ear very nicely.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that there are many areas in which there is not fair taxation. I think it would be in the interests of the Government to look at where it is taxing corporations and how it is taxing them.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech.

Mrs. Finestone: You did not, you commented throughout.

Mr. McDermid: At one point she said that it was about time the Government rethought its taxation policies. I believe that is what tax reform is all about. We are talking about corporations and their taxation. A great many of the write-offs which have allowed them to avoid taxes are now disappearing with tax reform. A large number of profitable corporations which before did not pay taxes will now pay taxes.

The Hon. Member talked about sales taxes. Sales taxes under the new tax system will be greatly reduced. The manufacturing end has been paying a very unfair burden of tax. This has made our exports in many instances not competitive. That is what tax reform is all about.

After listening to the Hon. Member's speech this morning I am now convinced that she has not taken the time to sit down to look at the proposals in tax reform. Nor has she made any constructive comments on them.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that the Hon. Member is too busy talking when I am speaking that he cannot hear what I have to say. I suggest that he read Hansard to find out what was my answer. If that is not clear enough for him then he should read the minutes of the finance committee where I have participated a number of times. He will see quite clearly where my Party and I stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a brief question of my colleague. I wish to congratulate her, not only for her excellent speech, the kind of excellent speech she always provides for the benefit of the Members of this House, but particularly for her most appropriate remarks to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). They were certainly very appropriate.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who is an expert in the area of communications, as we all know, and in culture, what she thinks of this proposition of the Government to tax long distance telephone calls. What effect does she think this will have on rural Canadians who must pay long distance phone bills to do such basic things as telephone the doctor, the hospital and the local store to get necessary goods and so on? Would she not agree with me that this tax is unfair for any Canadian, but that it is particularly unfair for all the people of rural Canada who are now paying this increase in taxes in order to subsidize the free trade deal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I said at the very outset that I thought this was an iniquitous Bill imposing regressive tax. I have not changed my mind. Certainly, the qualities of Scrooge, which the Minister of Finance would like to have attributed to him, which would indicate that he is managing well, have not shown themselves. What has shown itself is mean-spiritedness on the part of the Government which was prepared to tax anybody, anywhere. In particular a tax on talking for isolated Canadians is totally unacceptable. I thank the Hon. Member for raising the issue.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to participate in today's debate. It is important that the truth be put on the record. In listening to some of the government speakers as to what is going on in the country it seems to me that at least some of them—and I do not want to cast them all in the same mold—have lost their grip on what is going on in our country.

I recall many occasions when Members of Parliament, particularly from British Columbia, have asked what the Government plans to do in terms of taking some special initiatives to assist the economic situation in British Columbia, only to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) laugh and jeer and state that it has never been better in this country, things are wonderful, unemployment is down, the economy of western Canada is booming, and what are we complaining about. I do not that think we can say it too often. I hope that Members from British Columbia, from all political Parties, will stand in their places during the rest of this debate and attempt to explain to the Government how serious is the situation.

I speak for parts of the central interior of British Columbia where, sometime back, Statistics Canada, through Labour Canada interviews, indicated that it felt the unemployment rate was as high as 28 per cent. This resulted in quite a reaction from a number of leaders in various communities who stated that that was obviously not the case, there had been an error in terms of the statistical analysis, that that could not be the case. Yet some of us thought that finally there is some consistency in describing how serious is the situation, and indeed 28 per cent unemployment is a reality.

Those of us who spend a lot of time on the streets of the communities realize that it is not uncommon for the person in every fourth house who usually brings in the money to keep the family is unemployed, or more often they are underemployed.

Someone might be working for 20 hours a week at one of the local shops earning the minimum wage and bringing in an income that could only be described as totally inadequate, inappropriate, and unacceptable.

When the unemployment figures came out at 28 per cent there was some shock in the communities. Some informal, some casual, and some very sophisticated surveys were conducted which confirmed the results, that indeed the unemployment levels in regions of the Province of British Columbia are in fact 27 per cent unemployed, and that says nothing about all those people who are underemployed.

Under the Statistics Canada review if a person receives a phone call to work for one day in a previous month, that person is considered in that month to be fully employed. Even when one says that the unemployment level is 27 per cent, that says nothing of the underemployed people who ought to be working full time, but who are working for a few hours a week at a very low wage. The situation is indeed extremely serious.

As we see it in western Canada, one of the problems is that we do not get our fair share of support from the federal Government. In spite of a number of government Members, both in Cabinet and in the Government, when one looks at regional development programs, and I have the results in front of me for 1986 and 1987, looking at all of the support from the federal Government through business initiatives, British Columbia received less than 9 per cent of the total. It has much more than that in terms of population. If there is a case to be made for a special economic affirmative action program, it could probably be made without hesitation for a province like British Columbia. It probably ought to get more than its traditional fair share. When it comes to the over-all support for enterprises in British Columbia, we fall short. It receives less than 9 per cent of the total for all of Canada.

In looking at government procurement programs where the federal Government purchases goods and supplies from companies across Canada, the amount that comes from British Columbia is abysmally low. It represents a few percentage points of the total. The federal Government should be taking much more aggressive action in buying more goods and more of its services from suppliers, not only in western Canada but specifically from British Columbia.

When one looks at CIDA contracts for services or goods, again British Columbia is almost at the bottom of the pile in terms of getting its fair share. When one looks at supplies and service contracts that the agency takes out, untendered and tendered, British Columbia is abysmally low. It is almost not even in the picture when it comes to supply and services.

I have a long list here. Challenge '88, the program that supports young people attempting to raise money for their education, has not had an increase in funding for two years. Taking into account a factor for inflation, that means there has been approximately a 10 per cent decrease in funding for summer student programs.

This is felt most heartily and harshly in places like British Columbia where the private sector cannot be expected to provide summer jobs, such as can be expected in cities like Toronto where the economy is much more prosperous, where the economy is relatively booming and as a result the opportunity for young people to find summer employment is that much greater.

We are pleased about that situation in Ontario, or parts of Ontario, but with the sluggish economy in British Columbia, it is extremely difficult to find a summer job. If a student does find a summer job, it is inevitably at a modest wage which makes it very difficult for young people in British Columbia to access post-secondary education—because of this difficulty in raising funds through summer employment.

Does the Government provide additional assistance to help young people provide for their post-secondary education financing? No. The Government makes it more difficult. Last year it made it more difficult than the year before, and this year it will make it more difficult than ever.

Another major area where we have seen significant and very tragic cuts is in job training at colleges in British Columbia. The number of seats traditionally purchased by the federal Government to assist young people in upgrading their skills and in becoming prepared for the knowledge based economy of the future, are not being added to, they are not being maintained, they are being cut time and time again.

One has to wonder at the logic of this approach. In what other western industrialized nation would one find the federal Government cutting support to encourage young people? Not only young people, Mr. Speaker, but people generally need to be upgraded and retrained in terms of preparing themselves for the realities of a very competitive market. Although I have a long list, I will not go through the entire list. I wish to make the point that British Columbia is not getting its fair share.

As you will know, Mr. Speaker, Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia has over the last number of years, come out with all sorts of pronouncements, some peculiar, some perhaps not so peculiar. I have only agreed with one, and that is his statement the other day that B.C. is not getting its fair share of federal government programming. British Columbia is one province that is getting the short end of the stick. I have to agree with him. The evidence certainly supports that.

One would have to look long and hard to find a single government program, and I have not found one yet, that indicates that British Columbia is even getting its fair share. We are not asking for more, although I think we could even make the case for more than our fair share, we are simply asking for our fair share along with the other provinces.

We are concerned when looking at various federal Government programs that almost inevitably the overwhelming lion's share goes to central Canada. That is fine in terms of supporting central Canada. But when more than a fair allotment goes to that same area, time and time again, those of us from the regions, the East, the West, and the North, become extremely frustrated. There has been support given to the oil companies, and support to the grain farmers. That is fine. But those of us from the far west, the Pacific west, often are simply lumped into western Canada. That area in B.C. on the other side of Rocky Mountain Range is another part of the country that tends to be forgotten. That is one of the points I wish to make today.

This is a plea to my friends on the government benches, and a plea to the Minister in the Cabinet who is here, to give us consideration. Again, we are not asking for more than what is justly ours, but only that we get a fair break when it comes to support from the federal Government. I know that Members will say that we have the Western Development Fund. That is not broken out on a provincial basis—it is simply "The West" again. I wish to make the point that there are two wests: there is the traditional plains west, and then there is the other that is called the Pacific west. We could probably link up British Columbia and the Yukon in that particular band, and I simply wish to make a case for consideration in those areas.

Today we are debating a Bill by which the Government plans to impose a whole regime of new taxes on Canadians. Canadians have had the biscuit when it comes to increased taxes. For the last four years, as one of the many spokespersons for the New Democratic Party I have stood in my place on regular occasions and have outlined why we oppose these continuous increases in taxes.

Personal taxes keep going up and new hidden taxes are continuously imposed upon new products. We see that products such as dog food, cat food, kitty litter, snack foods, and so on are to be taxed. I suppose that one cannot make a case for not taxing kitty litter if products such as bird seed and so on are to be taxed. However, is it necessary for the Government to tax canary seed, cat food, dog food, kitty litter, snack food, pop, and so on?

Some Hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Riis: I hear some Hon. Members yelling, "Why not?" I will tell them why not. It is because I think we are nickel and diming people to death. We are now saying to the kids who eat snack foods and have pets that we will tax their special food and their pet food when there is no need to do so.

The reason I say that there is no need is that the Government has conveniently overlooked a whole range of revenue opportunities. Once again I ask the question, and beg for someone on the government benches to stand up and explain, why the Government feels that it is a necessary and a good thing to allow 60,000 profitable corporations not to pay even a penny in income tax. Some 60,000 profitable corporations do not even pay a penny in income tax. They are not the Mom and Pop shops, the hair salons, or the welding shops. They are Cadillac Fairview, the Bank in Montreal in some years, Shell Canada, and General Motors, the giants with hundreds of millions of dollars in profit that do not pay even a single penny in income tax. This does not say anything about the number of companies which pay $20 or $200 in income tax. There are tens of thousands of companies in that category, and other profitable companies which pay $50 per year.

It is tragic that the Government of Canada in some years says that a young man or women who is a teller in the Royal Bank of Canada will pay more income tax than the entire Royal Bank of Canada. Is that fair? It is also tragic when it says that a young man who pumps gas for Shell Canada will pay more income tax in some years than the entire Shell Canada. Is that fair? People are asking whether it is fair.

Why does the Government allow it to happen? Even Ronald Reagan in the United States said that it was unfair. He said that it was not right to have large, powerful multinational corporations paying no income tax when they make all kinds of profits. He said that they should pay a fair, basic tax and brought in a minimum corporate tax. He said to the corporations that if they used up all the loopholes and ended up paying no tax at all it was unfair and that they had to pay at least 20 per cent.

If we had the same system in Canada—and it is not an uncommon event; most countries have a minimum corporate tax—we would be collecting billions of dollars of taxes that we do not even begin to collect now. I remind the House of the situation back in the 1950s.

When we looked at the revenue obtained by the federal Government from the people of Canada in personal taxes and special taxes like those on gasoline and so on—the hidden sales taxes—and when we looked at the taxes collected from corporations, we found that it was about 50-50. About 50 per cent of the taxes came from corporations and 50 per cent came from the people. Over the years of successive Conservative and Liberal Governments, the breakdown has been shifted so that 82 per cent of the taxes collected by the federal Government comes from people and only 18 per cent comes from corporations.

What is bad about it is that so much of it is hidden. People do not even know they are paying the taxes. I refer to something as simple as filling up a car with gasoline. Now that some companies show the tax breakdown, we realize how much of the cost is simply a reflection of the hidden taxes put on by federal and provincial Governments.

Let us look at the revenues collected by Canada from hidden sales taxes. They account for about 35 per cent of all revenues. Most western industrialized nations average out to about 29 per cent. In other words, Canada is at the top of the list in terms of gouging citizens through hidden national sales taxes.

What is the Government's plan? Is it to cut back on taxes and to introduce a fairer and more just corporate tax system? No. It will levy a national sales tax on every Canadian, presumably after the next election campaign. For the first time in Canada it would impose a national sales tax on goods and services. When we go to the movies we will pay sales tax. When we pick up our laundry we will pay more sales tax. When we go bowling we will pay sales tax. When we buy some foods we will pay tax. Although the Government says that some foods may be exempt, of course many foods will not be exempt. It is not clear. We will be paying a national sales tax for writing up a will.

Where will it end? It is not unfair that taxes go up. I think most people accept that as a reality. What is unfair is that other areas are not being taxed whatsoever.

Let us look at the list of taxes today. There will be a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services such as telephone and telex. The Government is to put a 10 per cent tax on these services. This means that all parents who are telephoning their kids across Canada will be charged an extra 10 per cent on that particular service.

It is discriminatory in certain regions of the country. Those of us from western Canada are particularly sensitive to these kinds of charges because of the nature of our expansive territory and the fact that people live some distances from one another and most often have to telephone long distance. When I phone from some parts of my constituency to my office it requires long distance charges. Now those of us in western Canada will have to pay an extra 10 per cent, in addition to the long distance charges, whereas in central Canada with its denser population a lesser charge will be imposed on individuals. It is probably an unintentional tax against those of us living in the regions of the country.

There will also be an increase in the telecommunications programming services tax on cable television from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. Virtually every Canadian household now has cable television, with a few exceptions, and there will be an increased tax on that viewing.

There will also be an increase in the sales tax on such things as paint and wallpaper, from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. People who want to work hard, to upgrade their homes or to make them nicer places in which to live will have to pay increased taxes. That will be more costly as a result of nickel and dime taxation.

Also there will be an increase in the federal sales tax on beer, spirits, wine, tobacco, and so on. This seems to be a fair target area for provincial and federal Governments; they just keep adding taxes to these products.

There will also be an increase in air transportation tax of 4 per cent per ticket. I think it is inadvertent, but again it is discrimination against those of us living in the regions who, by definition, spend much more time flying from one small community to another. To get around parts of my constituency I must take an aircraft, whereas Members of Parliament from Toronto and Montreal can probably drive around their constituencies quite easily. Those of us who must fly will pay an additional tax of $4 per ticket on our travel charges.

I do not think it is a plot against western Canada. I do not see a bogyman around every corner. However, inadvertently, those of us living in the regions will be paying more than ever.

Oh, shucks, I do not want to go on, Mr. Speaker; it is too depressing. I have page after page of increased taxes here. However, I think it must be said that there are many places in the country—and Kamloops is no exception—which are typical communities outside central Canada where the situation is difficult economically and unemployment rates are high. I am sure you are aware of such communities, Mr. Speaker. We are struggling to do the best we can, but one of our handicaps is that not enough business or economic activity is being generated in our communities. That is the case for a whole set of reasons, one being that the federal Government keeps grabbing money out of our pockets and taking it to Ottawa. We are getting really fed up with that.

Adding up all the tax increases the federal Government has imposed since this Government took office back in September of 1984, a typical family in a place like Kamloops is paying nearly $1,400 more per year. Today we will impose another few dollars of tax on these people. The one tax increase that I did not mention earlier, the increase in gasoline taxes, will cost the average family an extra $50 per year. The provincial Government has now imposed another set of taxes on gasoline and on a whole number of other things.

Let us just round the figure off and say that as a result of this federal Government, the average family in Kamloops pays an extra $1,500 per year in federal taxes of one kind or another. That is $1,500 per family that is not circulating in a city like Kamloops between the various businesses, providing employment and activities, enabling people to buy goods and services.

When every family has to reach into its pocket, pull out $1,500 and send it down to Ottawa, that is $1,500 that will not be used to buy a particular service or purchase particular goods in a city like Kamloops. That handicaps the business community. It makes it difficult to do business. It is difficult for the manufacturers, the wholesalers, the retailers and the shopkeepers. Therefore, it is one of the reasons unemployment levels are so high.

One of the things the federal Government could do to assist British Columbia would be to give us a fair deal in program expenditures. Whether these expenditures provide help to business, large or small, or help to local manufacturers, let us give them their fair share.

Second, why not stop raising taxes for once and start imposing a fair tax system on the large, profitable corporations which pay nothing year after year? This is not a condemnation of the corporations. I want to make that clear. I am not saying that General Motors, the banks, the trust companies or the insurance companies are doing something wrong. It is just that successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have provided all of these tax loopholes that the companies naturally take advantage of legally. For example, the insurance companies, banks and trust companies together pay an average tax rate of less than 2 per cent. An average working Canadian pays much more than that.

In closing, I want to say that the best thing we could do would be to ask government Members to vote against this Bill and give the consumers of Canada a break from the nickel and dime tax increases that have occurred year after year.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my friend a question. I will not ask him about the 850,000 Canadians who have been removed from the tax rolls as a result of tax reform because he is aware of that. He is also aware that those who earn $30,000 per year or less will pay a smaller portion of federal Government revenues than those who make more than $30,000 per year as compared with before tax reform. He is also aware that tax reform will lower the federal sales tax, broaden the base and then give back a generous credit, all of which he did not mention. All of these actions make the system fairer.

I did want to ask the Hon. Member if he was aware that the NDP Government of Manitoba increased sales taxes from 5 per cent to 7 per cent. Is he aware that the NDP Government of Manitoba brought in a payroll tax which is applied across the board? What concerns me particularly as a Minister involved in the finances of Canada is whether or not the Hon. Member is aware that if the NDP Government of Manitoba had just kept its spending to the annual growth of inflation, it would have today a $250-million surplus instead of the huge haemorrhaging of a deficit it has.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has asked a number of questions and I will try to respond to all of them. First, I am aware that a number of the people who were drawn into the tax net two years ago, people who were then paying taxes for the first time in their lives, one of them being my father who is in his eighties and now has to pay taxes on his income and was not very happy about that, will now go off the rolls. In other words, many of those people who will be brought in through excessive taxes will be taken off the rolls because of tax reform. I do appreciate that fact, but those people who will be taken off were only there because they were drawn in previously.

Second, I think I did say at the outset, with all generosity, that part of the problem with hidden taxes as well as taxes generally is that provincial and federal Governments are equally to blame. I do not make the distinction that certain Governments are better than others or more concerned. Generally when it comes to taxing beer or wine or increasing gasoline taxes, a great deal of the blame has to be placed at both the provincial and federal levels.

I accept the point the Hon. Minister is making in this respect. That does not justify it or even explain anything. One of the differences, of course, with the Province of Manitoba is that there is a much fairer system there. Many of the profitable corporations that had not been paying taxes in the past are now paying taxes as a result of tax changes made back in 1984. There has been some attempt at imposing fairness in the system, but the point the Minister makes is valid.

I would like to use this occasion to tell the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) about two concerns that have been raised, both concerns which affect my constituents in British Columbia. First, tens of thousands of people affected by the Principal Group collapse have been asked to pay taxes on imputed income from their investments in the Principal Group. The Minister knows that these people do not have any investments now. Their investments are gone or frozen and no one knows what will happen. Yet the Government has imposed taxes on what it perceives to be money coming in.

Mr. Hockin: This is going to be looked after.

Mr. Riis: The Minister has said that this will be looked after, and I assume it will be. It is obviously so grossly unjust and unfair. We will be awaiting that announcement, and I am pleased that it has been Members of my Party who have raised this matter with the Minister in the House of Commons on a number of occasions.

The major corporations in Canada have over half a billion dollars in outstanding taxes, not deferred taxes. The matter of deferred taxes is a whole different question. There is $30 billion in deferred corporate taxes, and that is open for discussion. However, I am talking about the 121 profitable corporations that owe the federal Government over $500 million. These are taxes that the corporations agree they should pay, we agree that they should pay but they just do not pay.

A farmer, a rancher or a small business man who does not pay his taxes will have the tax man on his back. The tax man will squeeze that money out of him one way or the other. Let us take the same approach to all businesses, small and large, so that these 121 major corporations with $500 million in unpaid federal taxes will pay up what they agree they ought to pay. This then would enable us to move away from the nickel-and-dime approach, this continuous imposition of taxes on an innocent public that has really had it right up to here with the taxes they are required to pay.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I live on a farm in central Saskatchewan and I want to ask the Hon. Member a question about the effect of these taxes, and I will only mention a few, on people who live in rural areas.

In my community, if a parent wants to call his child at school, he has to call long distance. If he wants to call the hospital, he has to call long distance. If he wants to get welding rods for repair work, he has to call long distance. If he wants to order fuel, he has to call long distance. This appears to be very discriminatory. Then when he does go to pick up the welding rods or his child, he has to drive an extra 20 or 30 miles. I must add, however, that the tax on gasoline is refunded when he drives to town to deliver grain. If he goes to town he uses gasoline and that gas has increased in price by approximately seven cents or eight cents a litre since 1984. All of these things discriminate against people who live in rural areas and I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to comment on that point raised by my colleague. I do not want to cast aspersions on my friends in other political Parties because I do not think it is an outright plot against the regions. I think it occurs because of a lack of sensitivity, both in the bureaucracy and among some cabinet Ministers from large metropolitan areas. However, a lot of these policies do discriminate against Canadians living in the regions.

I notice my friend from Western Arctic is here. He would be particularly sensitive to these kinds of taxes. We have the tax on gasoline, and everyone has to travel over large distances in the regions. There is a tax on aviation fuel and airline tickets. Then we have the tax on long-distance charges. My hon. colleague mentioned about the parent calling his children at school from home, it being a long-distance call. He has to pay an extra 10 per cent if he wants to be in touch with his children or their teachers. We say these things are not fair and a lot more thought has to be given to the tax system to ensure that certain Canadians, particularly those who live in the regions, are not discriminated against.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, what we have seen is a classic NDP speech arguing both sides of the issue. On the one hand they call for more to be done in virtually every single area of government programs, including things to be done by Government where it is not now involved. On the other hand, they decry the taxes collected to pay for these programs. They pretend that the money will come magically from somewhere other than the taxpayers of Canada. That is, of course, nonsense. First, what specific programs or spending would he eliminate to reduce the burden on taxpayers? Second, what specific loopholes or shelters would he eliminate in the tax system?

Perhaps he could start by talking about flow-through shares because a few days ago his Party moved a motion in this House condemning the Government for action it had taken in that area. As we all know, the Minister took that action to reduce the benefits to investors in tax shelters involving Canadian films, oil and gas exploration and mining. Those kinds of investments allow wealthy lawyers and doctors in Toronto to avoid paying taxes.

Does he agree with reducing the tax deduction available to $1 for each dollar spent, or does he think we should continue to allow more than $1 to be deducted for each dollar spent and allow these wealthy, $200,000 or $300,000 a year Canadians to eliminate their tax liability?

Could he answer those specific questions? What programs would he cut and what tax shelters does he agree with which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has changed, and which would he suggest we eliminate?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is useful to occasionally remind ourselves that our job as parliamentarians is very straightforward. It is to collect taxes and invest that money in an appropriate way. I think we fail on both counts. We do not collect them properly or fairly. I hope I have demonstrated that clearly.

One thing I did not mention was the issue of capital gains. I do not want to take many pages out of the U.S. book to demonstrate what we should do in Canada, but not only does Ronald Reagan's Government tax profitable corporations with a minimum tax, which we do not do, it also taxes capital gains. In other words, they say a buck is a buck. If you make a dollar you should pay a fair tax. We say if you make a buck from certain sources you do not have to pay taxes at all. Is that fair? If you make a dollar speculating on the Hong Kong Stock Exchange why should you not pay some tax on that dollar as opposed to a person working in a mine, mill, factory or office in a typical Canadian town? Why not? We are simply saying, let us do what any sensible country would do and tax a buck as a buck and leave it at that.

I am also concerned about how the Government invests its money. My hon. friend is from Edmonton. He will know that the Ghermezian brothers of Edmonton's infamous Fantasyland went to the Government and said, "Look, we know we are one of the richest families in Canada and we have one of the major industrial and economic empires in Canada but we would sure like a $5 million hand-out so we can put some more fancy rides in Fantasyland". The Government fell over itself to give them $5 million just like that.

The Alberta Government did the same thing with Peter Pocklington a few days ago. He needed a nice big loan guarantee—no problem because he has good political connections. I cannot imagine what $5 million that the Ghermezian brothers got to assist in the development of Fantasyland would have done for small businesses all across western Canada. They do not want $5 million, they want $10,000 or $20,000 or $30,000.

That is why I say this Government lacks sense in determining how it invests the money. I would much rather invest $5 million to help hundreds of small businesses expand than help the Ghermezian brothers add a few rides to their entertainment park. It is absolutely silly and that is part of the problem.

To go to flow-through shares, let us make it very clear that not every tax incentive is wrong. There are a number of very good incentives where we get a good return. One of those programs was flow-through shares. It did not do much good for downtown Toronto or urban Canada, but it did a great deal of good in rural Québec, northern Ontario, in the West and in parts of eastern Canada. Yet the Government cut it out. It said it was going to cut back on the program because we cannot afford it. A lot of our regions depend on that program and they are very angry about this change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): The time for questions and comments is terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-117. However, I would have preferred to see a legislation that had something to offer Quebecers and Canadians, because the purpose of Bill C-117, which contains seventy-six pages and sixty-four sections, is simply to tax, tax and tax again. If we want to put a label on this Bill, you could say this is Brian the taxman's Bill. Since the election in 1984, this Conservative Government has brought down three Budgets, given us two economic messages, and managed to introduce twenty-seven new taxes and raise existing ones. Most Members in this House know that today, Canadians already have more than enough taxes on their plate, with all the tax increases I will now enumerate. First of all, on October 1, immediately after the election, we had a 1 per cent increase in sales tax, from 9 to 10 per cent, which raised the Government's revenue by $1 billion. Subsequently, on January 1, 1986, we had another increase of 1 per cent, this time from 10 to 11 per cent, which put an extra billion per year into the kitty.

When we talk about $1 billion in revenue for the Government, it means $1 billion less in taxpayers' pockets.

In 1986, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided to raise sales tax again, from 11 to 12 per cent, which meant another billion dollars less in purchasing power for the Canadian taxpayer. We must not forget that these are hidden taxes. When the consumer buys a product, the Conservative Government's tax increases are already included in the price of that product.

If we look at another area, another commodity that is essential to every Canadian, and I am referring to gasoline, this Government raised the excise tax four times, which has meant a 23-cent increase in the price per gallon. On September 3, 1985, two cents a litre and $900 billion taken out of taxpayers pockets. On January 1, 1987, another cent per litre: $450 million. On February 19, 1987, the second time in the same year, another increase of one cent per litre, which means another $450 million lost by taxpayers.

In April 1988, the price went up another cent per litre, which means that since 1984, we have had an increase of five cents per litre or 23 cents per gallon in taxes for Canadian consumers. When we consider the increase in the tax on gas, we must not forget this has an impact on all consumer goods, on food and clothing and furniture, all of which are being increasingly shipped by truck, and trucks run on gasoline. We have a situation where the poor cannot escape paying these increases because increased transportation costs are passed on directly to the consumer, which means that whether you are rich or poor, the extra 23 cents a gallon is passed on as an increase in the price of a pound of butter, a loaf of bread, and automatically, whatever a person's income happens to be, we cannot escape the impact of the tax increase which in the final instance reduces the purchasing power of the consumer.

The Government has also launched a ferocious attack on alcohol and tobacco, so that consumers will have to pay another $995 million. However, the Conservative Government went even further. After undermining the purchasing power and stealing the money of Canadian workers, it dug even deeper into their pockets, and I am referring to the fact that formerly, a number of products were considered essential and were therefore not taxed. This Government has decided to tax just about everything we have here in Canada. It started with candy and snacks. Then it was soft drinks, pet food and health care products. All health care products including aspirin, cough medicine, ointment, everything on the shelves used to be tax exempt, but now when you pay at the cash at your local drugstore, you are paying a "Mulroney" tax charged by the Government which you were not paying before, but the tax is hidden, so you don't notice it.

In addition we have all surgical and dental instruments. This means that when you go to the dentist with your child and you get a higher bill, you are once more hit by a Mulroney tax. Once this Government has hit something else, can you imagine that, such an important service as health for the young and the less young, it decided to tax all the instruments used. So, when you get a higher bill, you members of the public who are listening now, do not blame your dentist—remember it is a PC tax, a Conservative tax.

Something else again, insulation materials. Again they were tax exempt because they were necessary. But they also are hit by a PC tax. Wood stoves used to be tax exempt, now they are being subjected to another PC tax. Also hit are building materials that are used and made on the site. Now, when you pay for those materials a PC tax is added. People are not aware of a hidden tax, but that is a Conservative Party tax, a "Brian" tax.

And then you have videocassettes. The Government changed the taxing formula to get increased revenues. Here again, videocassettes users, you will be paying more but do not blame manufacturers. It is because of a PC tax.

Something else, the Government decided to tax wallpaper and paint products, to get more—once more, a PC tax. A tax you are not aware of—when you go and buy a gallon of paint or wallpaper at the hardware store to improve your home, suddenly you discover you have to pay much more than last year—this is quite simply because a PC tax was slapped on products that used to be tax exempt before this Conservative Government came to power.

Long distance calls were also exempt. Now the Government is imposing a 10 per cent tax on all long distance calls. All those living in rural areas, outside major centres, when you have to make a long distance call to get the doctor—even urgent calls—now there is a PC tax on long distance calls. Also on cable service—you have the cable, you have to pay the 10 per cent PC tax on the cable.

All this adds up, Mr. Speaker, to 27 new taxes or tax increases since 1984. The Conservative Government decreased taxpayers' purchasing power by taking some of the money not from their pay cheques but through hidden indirect taxes and decided to increase taxation of all the consumer goods that you buy, thereby decreasing your purchasing power over and above what they deduct from your pay cheque. The Government would have us believe that they have reduced taxes. It is not true! What happened is they tried to de-index old age security pensions but they had to back down when senior citizens and the Liberal team put the pressure on. And today senior citizens throughout Canada who receive every three months fully indexed old age security payments can thank not the Conservative Party Members but themselves and the Liberal team that worked with them to make the Conservative Government back down. But it is important to remember that it was their intention and that if they came back to power they would do the same thing because their avowed intention at the beginning was to de-index old age security pensions.

In addition, contrary to commitments made by the Prime Minister in the Speech from the Throne, there was the de-indexation of family allowances. This means that the poor get poorer. As the price of goods increases, the inflation rate does the same. By eliminating automatically indexation for the first 3 per cent of inflation, the Government reduced the purchasing power of Canadians. There was also the de-indexation of the personal income tax table and of the spousal exemption, with the result that the purchasing power of Canadian taxpayers has been considerably reduced compared with what it was in 1984. If the Government had maintained full indexation, Canadians would have been able to keep up with the increase in the price of consumer goods and services, and also increase their purchasing power as there would have been an increase in incomes and wages. This means that each time that a worker has been able to obtain a wage increase to improve his purchasing power, either by negotiating a collective agreement through his union or by negotiating alone with his employer, the Conservative Government has reduced this purchasing power by imposing hidden indirect taxes on all goods and services and by de-indexing the income tax tables.

The Government also eliminated another important program which was useful to young couples. If there is one thing that young couples in Canada want, it is to get their own home. This was the purpose of the Registered Home Ownership Plan. Once more, the Government eliminated this program which was of great assistance to young couples who wanted to become homeowners.

The Government imposed a permanent 3 per cent surtax on all taxpayers as well as other taxes, while eliminating exemption programs.

At the same time as it was reducing substantially the purchasing power of taxpayers by imposing indirect taxes and by eliminating tax exemptions and programs which helped low and middle income Canadians, it also implemented measures to help the very wealthy. I would like to quote a few figures about this Government. The $500,000 capital gains tax exemption cost Canadian taxpayers $800 million in 1987.

Then, there was the $1.6 billion paid in financial assistance after the failure of the Western banks. Wealthy Canadians who had deposits of at least $60,000, as all those who have deposits of less than $60,000 in a bank are protected by federal legislation, were given additional assistance. These people were not senior citizens with old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplements. They were not fathers with five children to support on $5 an hour minimum salaries. These people who had over $60 000 in bank accounts were not single mothers who were paid the $4.50 minimum wage and who had to pay daycare centres enormous fees to look after their children. They were good friends of the Progressive Conservative Party.

There is also the $200 million transaction to help the Hong Kong Bank. Then the $41 million in wasted expenditures when the Government decided to transfer the prison to Port-Cartier. Everybody remembers the scandal the Prime Minister was involved in since he had decided to build a prison in Drummondville, Phase II.

The whole thing was a complex which included Phases I and II. Because he wanted to show his constituents that he was able to deliver the goods, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) simply stole the project which existed in another Tory riding to transfer it to his own. So Canadian taxpayers had to pay $41 million in additional costs. That is quite a lot of money, $41 million. With that much money, we could increase the guaranteed income supplement for senior citizens or do a great many other things. We could built in the province of Quebec a lot of social housing to meet the needs of some 15 000 people, including some 400 or 500 who are waiting for affordable housing in my own riding of Montréal—Sainte-Marie. With these $41 million, we could have built a lot of social housing in various Quebec ridings.

The investigation of the former Regional Industrial Expansion Minister cost $2.3 million. The Gulf Olympia transaction with the Reichmann brothers which resulted in the Tory Government's decision to close the Gulf refinery in Montreal East cost $1 billion. Changing the colour of the uniforms cost $2.7 million, and the whole thing had to be scrapped because the material was unacceptable. It had a sort of "PC" odor; in other words, it stank. Again, it costs $2.7 million.

Another example of huge waste is the Fantasyland Project in Edmonton West. The Department Officials were saying no. It was out of the question to give money to this project.

Conservative though it is, the Alberta Government said no. So that was another $5 million decision by the Tory administration. Of course Western Canada is home to very powerful and very strong Ministers, for we in Quebec cannot even get $5. Our Ministers cannot even get the space agency to locate in Montreal, which would be a significant plus for the city. While Western Canada Ministers get the money they ask for, ours keep hearing no: no from the Department, no from the provincial Government, yet in Quebec it is the other way around, all Parties unanimously say that the space agency ought to be in Montreal. But the Quebec Ministers are unable to land that one. Most people say they want $130 million in new money to develop Montreal's Vieux-Port. All the other provinces got money. But no such luck in Quebec, our Tory Ministers and Members cannot get anything.

Mr. Speaker, same thing when it comes to the development of the Vieux-Port in Montreal. Montreal East shipyard workers needed an early retirement program, but there again the Conservative Ministers from the Atlantic provinces were way ahead of their Quebec Cabinet colleagues who did not even manage to secure a contract. Just before the Christmas holiday and New Year's the Prime Minister made a solemn promise—he held his hand over his heart—and said that the shipyards were going full speed. The Vickers shipyards in Montreal had to shut down and lay off 250 workers because the Conservative Ministers from Quebec are yes-men, softies. They do not stand up in Cabinet for the legitimate interests of Quebecers.

We pay our share of all the taxes I enumerated but we get nothing in return. We cannot even get crumbs. Not only the West but Ontario and also the Atlantic provinces are beating us to the punch.

Mr. Speaker, my time is almost up. I do hope that the Quebec Ministers will do more than just running "shows" in conventions at Montreal, and that the Prime Minister, instead of his somersaults, his masquerades in Montreal, will announce that Montreal will get the Space Agency and to quote the mayor of the city not as an empty shell, but with contracts, as well as $130 million for the development of the Old Port and for the pre-retirement of people of Montreal East.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): Order, please! It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT—SITUATION OF ANGLOPHONES IN PROVINCE OF QUÉBEC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Official Languages Commissioner has ruffled some feathers by describing difficulties faced by Quebec Anglophones. If it is Mr. Fortier's job to defend the rights of Canada's linguistic minorities, then why is he being criticized for doing just that? Perhaps his words were too strong. It was one sentence. I say, let us not quibble over words, let us understand the message.

We must respond to the real sense of frustration felt by many English Quebecers. Is it really so far fetched to point out that all is not perfect for Quebec Anglophones when bilingual signs are not permitted, or when access to first-run films in English may be restricted? Mr. Fortier's statement offers constructive criticism. That is no reason for him to resign.

I think his message was that a viable French language in Quebec depends on promoting it in a vigorous way, which is what English-speaking Canadians support, rather than humbling the English minority. Is that not what Canada is all about, encouraging all our minorities to remain true to themselves and in so doing contribute to Canada's rich diversity?

Let us not shoot the messenger. Instead, let us heed the message to encourage and support healthy minority and majority language rights across Canada. Let all of us examine this issue with an open mind.

PROTECTION OF ANGLOPHONES AND FRANCOPHONES

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, today I rise to call upon the Anglophone and Francophone communities in Quebec to cross some bridges over their solitudes. We in the Conservative Party of Canada do not take calculated risks with respect to the lives of any community, whether French or English, or abandon any of our constituents for the sake of political gain.

We on the government side are only too well aware of what is needed to protect Anglophones and Francophones in this country. That is why our Government has introduced Bill C-72. We are proud of our record, and have nothing to hide like some big-time Liberal from Plessisville who is so proud from time immemorial to have never talked or done business, for that matter, with Anglophones.

We only want fair treatment for all, and our Language Commissioner should do what the law says, mind the shop in Ottawa. It is a big job in itself. To the Anglophones of Quebec, I say: "Don't ever again do the mistake of electing your worst enemies, Garneau, Ouellet, Bujold, who are cajoling you and promoting your destruction to better trap you later into oblivion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: Come on!

Mr. Penner: Order!

Mr. Kaplan: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that no matter how vigorous their statements, they ought not to be a personal attack on any other Hon. Member.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SALMON ARM, B.C.—POSTAL CODE CHANGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker,

Salmon Arm, British Columbia, was originally selected as one of the first three Canadian communities to receive supermailboxes. Now, after a frustrating experimental period, the residents of Salmon Arm are fed up and have written to the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation indicating they are unwilling to co-operate with postal authorities any longer.

The final straw was the decision to change the existing postal code for 2,700 residents without any explanation or official notification. Some people who have lived in the same residence have had their postal code changed five times in the past four years. The changing of postal codes has been inconvenient and the cost excessive, particularly to the small business community. Some local mail is sent to Vancouver for sorting and then returned to Salmon Arm for delivery. Postal box rates have been increased 400 per cent and 500 per cent during 1987. These concerns go on and on.

The situation with respect to the postal system and supermailboxes in Salmon Arm, British Columbia, has become intolerable for its residents. The chair of the newly formed postal committee has called upon the Minister to end this marked decline in postal service and give Canadians, including the residents of Salmon Arm, the postal service they deserve and the service for which they currently pay, and pay excessively.

THE HANDICAPPED

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' PARTICIPATION PROGRAM

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, to assist handicapped people, the Secretary of State administers the Disabled Persons Participation Program which provides technical and financial assistance to concerned groups with a view to making possible for them through their activities to foster the mainstreaming of handicapped into Canadian society.

Between September 1984 and December 1987, the Progressive Conservative Government has invested, through this Program, more than $50,000 in several organizations for disabled persons in my riding of Quebec East. These grants from the federal Government allow those organizations to operate their activities with great success.

I commend them wholeheartedly for a work so well done and I encourage them to continue promoting even more the mainstreaming of handicapped people. I can assure them of the continuing cooperation of this government given the priority we attach to that matter.

That is, Mr. Speaker, a concrete commitment on the part of the Government in favour of the handicapped, a commitment which we will continue to keep for the coming years. Our party wanted, Mr. Speaker, to create a political climate in which all Canadian men and women would feel a greater sense of security. This is important for us all, is it not, Mr. Speaker!

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES' WORDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Official Languages' statements are producing a big stir, are causing much ink to flow and are bringing back in Quebec the so-called linguistic debate.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am considered to be a Quebec nationalist. I would urge French-speaking Quebecers of all political stripes and our English-speaking colleagues of Quebec and of other provinces to stay calm, to be cautious and to get off the sentimentalist wagon.

Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. D'Iberville Fortier has recognized he was wrong and has said that in the future he would go in Quebec and check both sides of the question before insulting anyone. But sometimes things must be said. We, French-speaking people, were very happy when any Commissioner of Official Languages was very harsh with English-speaking people of other provinces. And if bilingualism is to progress, we have to be able to strike sometimes and to take the beating some other times.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this debate is over and that all tendencies, all political groups that must insure bilingualism across Canada—that they will mind their own business and make sure that French-speaking and English-speaking people across Canada have access to federal services in their own language. When it is perfect at the federal level, we can teach provincial governments what to do.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE OF AFFORDABLE ACCOMMODATION IN TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the affordable housing crisis in Toronto has become a serious concern for many middle and low-income Torontonians. Home ownership is fast becoming impossible for families without two incomes. Finding reasonable rental accommodation has become an endless and frustrating experience.

Single-income families, low-income earners, senior citizens, and others on fixed incomes, have been hard hit by the shortage of affordable housing. The higher rents demanded are often paid at the expense of other necessities such as food and clothing.

The situation in Toronto is fast becoming intolerable for those who cannot afford to pay the price demanded for basic accommodation.

I urge the Government of Canada to use every means at its disposal to impress upon the Government of Ontario and the Ontario Ministry of Housing the need to take immediate action to provide affordable housing in Toronto.

SPORTS

BEST EVER WINTER SPORTS PROGRAM—HIGH PERFORMANCE FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) announced the Government's replacement for the Best Ever Winter Sports Program. I am relieved that the Minister has decided to continue the program. I am also happy that he is beginning to adopt the New Democrat approach of focusing on grass roots development. This has always been the mainstay of our sports policy.

However, at $32 million over five years the program has not seen a real increase in funds over the previous program. The difference simply accounts for inflation. If the Minister wants to change the focus and direct more funds toward increasing participation in winter sports, it means that there will have to be a corresponding decline in high performance funding.

Our recent experience with the Calgary Olympics has demonstrated not only that high performance funding is effective and necessary, but that we still have a long way to go before we are consistently competitive with the world's best. It also demonstrated the value that Canadians place on sports, and the pride they feel in the success of our athletes.

Because of the increasing emphasis on sport development, especially in the wake of the Calgary Olympics, I will be asking the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare to undertake a complete review of all national sport and fitness funding programs. I would like to see the committee travel to the various regions of the country in order to allow those who are involved in the delivery of sport programs at a local level to participate in the review.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ABANDONMENT OF FREIGHT LINE SERVICE TO WESTERN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my constituents were shocked to learn this weekend that Canadian Pacific Railway had announced its intention to abandon freight line service to western Nova Scotia.

Rather than promoting service to customers, CPR has allowed the service to deteriorate in order to justify abandoning communities which it has served since 1868. This was the oldest section of railway in the CPR system.

Transportation is the economic lifeline of Atlantic Canada. We need transportation links to keep our businesses competitive and in order to attract new businesses to establish in our communities.

I strongly oppose this abandonment. This is why I will fight to retain our services.

CRIMINAL CODE

PORNOGRAPHY—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-54

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-54 is an amendment to the Criminal Code which would have the effect of making virtually any depiction of sexuality illegal under the Criminal Code. I urge the Government to withdraw the Bill. Many other Members have done so.

Recently the Government indicated that the Bill had a low priority. I would like the Government to make it clear that the Bill will not be reintroduced and will not be proceeded with.

In this request I am joined by the Metropolitan Toronto Library Association, the North York Library Association, the Canadian Museums Association, the Canadian Library Association, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, ACTRA, the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the Art Gallery of Ontario, the Canadian Arts Federation, the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the Association of Canadian Publishers, the League of Canadian Poets, the Toronto Arts Council, the Playwrights Union of Canada, the Canada Council—a federal agency which urges that the Bill be withdrawn—the Canadian Film and Television Association, the Canadian Book Development Association, the National Film Board of Canada—another federal agency—and the National Gallery.

With all those representations let the Government make it clear that this Bill has had it.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa based Conference Board of Canada, which is a non-partisan group, is the latest organization to endorse the Prime Minister's free trade agreement. The board found that the agreement will provide a major stimulus to the Canadian economy. It found that the real gross domestic product will increase by $9.3 billion, or 1.7 per cent by 1997; inflation will be .2 per cent lower, and employment will increase by 1 per cent.

Now that organizations and individuals have had time to study the agreement, the majority are voicing strong support for this initiative. It is ironic that the once shrill voices of the opposition Parties, and that of the Premier of Ontario, are no longer to be heard. Perhaps soon we will get their endorsement.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT—CONTROVERSY OVER WORDING

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, controversy over a phrase in the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages demonstrates again how sensitive questions relating to language are in Canada.

The first Commissioner of Official Languages, now a newspaper editor, has reminded us of the controversy that resulted 15 years ago from his repeating the phrase "Westmount Rhodesians". He reminds us of the lesson, "that, when handling linguistic dynamite, one should not simultaneously juggle colourful phrases".

[Translation]

The Commissioner initiated a hue and cry because he deplored the tendency to promote French not by "positively asserting its own cultural vigour, but by humbling the competition". However, he did deplore also that his report gave rise to that misunderstanding, most particularly the summary which does not reflect adequately his position, in terms of the controversial sentence about the attitude of the Quebec Government towards its minority.

Mr. Speaker, it is not always easy to defend minority rights without offending the majority. It is a most tedious task.

[English]

Canadians hope that the Commissioner will continue to work vigorously for official language minorities while being doubly mindful of the hazards of his task.

PENSIONS

MASSEY CORPORATION BANKRUPTCY—PENSIONERS' LOSS OF HEALTH AND WELFARE BENEFITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, pensioners of the now defunct Massey Combines Corporation are being shafted, and they are as mad as hell.

The company went bankrupt and was put into receivership earlier this month. The receiver, Peat Marwick, has notified the 3,000 pensioners that their health and welfare benefits have been terminated, cut off, as of March 4, 1988. Those benefits included life insurance, dental, drug, and OHIP coverage. This is patently unfair. It is creating considerable hardship for the more than 3,000 pensioners who dedicated their lives to the company only to be put out in the cold in the middle of their retirement.

During the 1986 restructuring of Massey Ferguson Ltd. the federal Government allowed Massey Ferguson to transfer $207 million in long term debt to the combines operation. Guarantees should have been obtained in order that the pensioners' health and welfare benefits would be protected. The Government failed to do this. The overwhelming majority of the retirees never worked for Massey Combines. They were employees of Massey Ferguson. Their pensions and health care coverage should never have been transferred to Massey Combines, a corporation that was destined to fail. The Government should not have allowed the restructuring without first protecting the workers.

I call on the federal Government and the Government of Ontario to assume responsibility for this fiasco, and to ensure that the pensioners continue to receive health care benefits that they worked for and are entitled to receive.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN NEW YORK

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians rejoice after hearing the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) comments on acid rain yesterday in New York City. We can be proud that we have a Prime Minister who is willing to take a strong stance on such a vital issue.

Previous governments were unable to achieve any progress in this fight. Now there is a renewed hope that the two nations will unify to control acid rain.

The fight on acid rain is taking place on many fronts. The Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have taken this country's message to the United States on many occasions. Up until now, although acid precipitation from the United States contributed significantly to the problem, that country's administration has been unwilling to participate in an acid rain control program.

As a Member for a region that is greatly affected by acid precipitation, I look forward to the Prime Minister taking a strong message on acid rain directly to the President when they meet in Washington on April 27.

I would also like to congratulate the Prime Minister on the award he received last night from the Americas Society.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT'S ATTEMPTS TO SILENCE ANTI-APARTHEID PROTESTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, since its independence Botswana has shown that blacks and whites can live together and prosper in harmony. It has also emerged as one of the more successful democracies in the Third World.

Instead of learning from the example of Botswana, the South African Government has grown increasingly repressive in its attempts to silence the opponents of apartheid.

The South African Government, in keeping with its tradition of crushing any form of anti-apartheid protest, has used the South African Defence Force to initiate a number of border raids into neighbouring countries and has attempted to justify these raids by claiming them to be strikes against ANC insurgents.

Yesterday we witnessed the latest of these attacks on the city of Gaborone, the capital of Botswana, in which four people were killed, at least two of whom were citizens of Botswana.

I urge the Canadian Government to condemn this incursion into Botswana and to increase its pressure on the South African Government to end its menacing raids on neighbouring southern African countries which, unlike South Africa, are trying to develop along non-racist lines.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN NEW YORK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last night the Prime Minister spoke in New York. In March, 1985, the Prime Minister said, after his first summit with the President, that he had an agreement with President Reagan on research for acid rain.

In March, 1986, our Prime Minister again announced with much fanfare that he had obtained an agreement with President Reagan on research for acid raid.

In March, 1987, at the conclusion of another one of their annual summits, the Prime Minister said for the third time that he had an agreement with the President for research projects on acid rain.

Last night in New York the Prime Minister said that people who claim that the issue of acid rain needs more research are attempting, to use his own words, "to avoid action". Terrific! Finally the Prime Minister has recognized what most Canadians have already known—we do not need more research; we need some action on acid rain.

In the absence of the Prime Minister, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Does the Prime Minister really believe what he said last night and, if so, why has he wasted the last three and a half years?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, frankly I find that an incredible question coming from the Leader of a Party which had the opportunity for years to take initiatives on acid rain and did not.

The Prime Minister of Canada and all his Government take enormously seriously the threat to our environment, the threat to our way of life, the threat to our resources of acid rain.

Mr. Riis: What have you done?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are asked what we have done. What we have done is patiently, persistently, and vigorously pursued with the United States the possibility of achieving a practical step forward.

The Prime Minister took the occasion of his speech after receipt of a prominent award in New York yesterday to restate before a major public American audience the determination of the Government to have action on acid rain.

REQUEST FOR SIGNING OF TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not very good at arguing his case.

The Prime Minister's handling of the acid rain issue was a complete disaster. He wasted his time helping the United States get away with a few vague promises about research.

Now he is approaching the end of his term, as is President Reagan, the Prime Minister says he will be satisfied with no less than a definite reduction in the sources of acid rain in the United States.

If the Prime Minister is serious, and this applies to the Minister as well, will he insist that before their next meeting in Washington next month, the Canadian Government draft the text of a treaty designed to put an end to acid rain, to be signed by the Prime Minister and President Reagan at their meeting next month?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition has been asleep for the last two or three years, but certainly for the last several months I have made very clear here on the floor of the House of Commons, and elsewhere before Canadian audiences and American audiences alike, the fact that the Canadian Government has put on paper the makings of a treaty which our officials at the most senior level have been negotiating with American officials, both in Washington and in Ottawa.

The very thing that the Leader of the Opposition calls for with such forced grandiloquence is that which we have already done, a far cry from what the Liberal Party of Canada did when it was in office. The predecessor of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not raise the acid rain issue in Ottawa or anywhere else in Canada, let alone in Washington.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, after three and a half years that kind of answer does not wash any longer, particularly from a sleep-walking Minister of the Environment.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not only been out-negotiated on acid rain but he has been out-negotiated on trade. As the Prime Minister was praising his own trade deal last night in New York City, he failed to mention that a unanimous report of the House of Commons Committee on Trade, including every Conservative member of that committee, insisted that unless there were to be a specific exemption in the omnibus Trade Bill currently before the Congress of the United States in favour of Canada, the Prime Minister should scrap the deal.

At the very time the Prime Minister was speaking in New York last night, Sam Gibbons, the head of the House of Representatives' Trade Committee, said that Canada would not be given an exemption from the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill. My question then is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Government have information contrary to that demonstrated by Congressman Gibbons last night?

If Canada receives no exemption in the omnibus Trade Bill, is the Government prepared to withdraw from the trade arrangement with the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Right Hon. Member would not knowingly mislead the House on this issue, but he knows that that is not what Sam Gibbons, the head of the House of Representatives' committee, said. He said that there was no need for an exemption because there was no threat to Canada in the Trade Bill.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No further questions!

CANADIAN AMBASSADOR'S LETTER TO U.S. CONGRESSMAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister who just responded. If the Minister is in fact now endorsing the comment made by Congressman Gibbons that there is no threat, I would ask if she is prepared to table a response which I presume was received to a letter Ambassador Gotlieb sent to Congressman Gibbons and others outlining 33 specific measures in the omnibus Trade Bill which Canada felt was objectionable. The Minister's answer clearly indicated that they have now been satisfied on all 33 of those measures. I would like the Minister to table that and to give us the assurance that all 33 major problems raised by the Canadian Ambassador with the Congressman have now been satisfied and will not be included in the omnibus Trade Bill.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that the Trade Bill has not yet been presented in the United States and therefore we do not know what it contains. It is perfectly true that our Ambassador has been making representations to the Americans to ensure that there are not elements in the Trade Bill that would cause problems for us. I am happy to report to the House that we know that, so far during the process, many elements have been dropped from the Trade Bill.

We will continue to make representations on those items that we feel could impact on Canada but we could not possibly address the Hon. Member's request because we do not have a Bill before us. I urge him to wait and see what is in it before he attacks it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that we do not have a final version of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill. Therefore, why was the Minister, in answer to the first question, prepared to back down completely from the recommendation made by the committee that if the U.S. Trade Bill contains those measures we should reject the Canada-U.S. trade deal? Why is the Minister, ipso facto, refraining from living up to that commitment and endorsing the notion that any omnibus Trade Bill which does not succeed in eliminating the measures contained in the Ambassador's letter will be rejected by Canada, and therefore we will reject the trade deal? Why is the Minister backing down?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not backing down. I am pointing out in a very realistic fashion that we do not have the Bill so we do not know what is in it. We are sure it will be compatible with the free trade agreement negotiated between the two countries. I urge the Hon. Member to hold his temper and wait until the Bill is before us and we can see whether or not his concerns are justified.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL C-79—DISTINCTION BETWEEN CAMPAIGN AND ELECTION EXPENSES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked a question about the loophole in the Election Expenses Act, discovered during the Masse inquiry, which permits campaign expenses to be exempted from election spending ceilings. At that time the Minister suggested this could be dealt with in committee when it dealt with Bill C-79. I said I thought the Minister's facts were wrong. I checked subsequently and my information is that he is indeed wrong.

On March 16 the Deputy Government House Leader, when it was proposed this matter be dealt with in committee, said in this House: "It is not within the scope of the Act." The Deputy Government House Leader has already ruled out consideration by the committee of what the Deputy Prime Minister said yesterday should be considered.

I want the Minister to clarify this very serious matter. If the Government is serious about closing this loophole will it now agree to immediately referring a new Bill to that committee for consideration which would close the loophole?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the discussions that were going on between the respective House Leaders was that, if there was a way in which unanimous agreement could be secured, perhaps this could be incorporated in the Bill. This is not the first time this has happened. We had Bill C-33, in which we hoped we could incorporate another measure which was beyond the scope of the Bill. However, with the consent of the other Parties my understanding is that that could have been done.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I am asking the Minister to agree to now.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is what I said yesterday.

Mr. Broadbent: Is he now agreeing to have a special Bill referred to the committee that will deal with the problem? He is nodding. We take it there is agreement and the Government will proceed on matters agreed to by both opposition Parties.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have another question about political party financing. On the weekend his Party's Quebec wing passed a resolution about party financing. However, although the Quebec wing adopted this policy yesterday, the Minister has refused to commit himself here in the House. I repeat my question today. Is the Government for or against action of this kind being taken before the next election?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, that is exactly what I tried to tell the Leader of the New Democratic Party yesterday. Perhaps I was not clear enough. However, my understanding is that we were disposed to consider that important matter, namely, the differentiation or segregation of election expenses from campaign expenses. We thought that we could use the forum of the committee established to study Bill C-79 to explore this very important issue.

With regard to the other matter, I am not aware of any discussions which have taken place between House Leaders with respect to the issue of limitations on corporate donations and fund raising activities. If that is a representation which the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is presenting to the House, it is something which we might consider.

POLITICAL DONATIONS—LIMITATION QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that he might consider it. Considering that the Quebec wing of his Party has unanimously adopted a resolution in that regard, and since he has had the co-operation of this Party for over a year to proceed immediately with that, will the Government cut out the propaganda on the subject and act on it?

The New Democratic Party had more individual contributors in the last year for which there is a record than the Liberals and the Conservatives together and I want to assure the Minister that we are prepared to act now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Put up or shut up. Go ahead, let's hear it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Apologize.

Mr. Broadbent: We'll hear the answer.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with regard to co-operation and respecting the honour of the hon. gentleman's word, we thought that we could expect that kind of co-operation when we undertook to deal with Bill C-79. Of course, there were some differences of opinion on that, but I can understand that perhaps the Leader of the New Democratic Party was not taking a specific interest in this issue at that particular time.

The Hon. Member talks about limitations on donations to political Parties. I have the list of contributions to the New Democratic Party which indicates some rather hefty contributions as well. It indicates $26,000 by the CAW, Canadian Council, and $26,000 from the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour.

Mr. Broadbent: And $7 million from corporations for you.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, he may want to constrain the amount of money that those organizations give as well.

Mr. Broadbent: Give us the bank list now.

Mr. Riis: And the trust companies.

Mr. Broadbent: Bring in the Bill for your hypocrites from Québec. We'll campaign in Québec on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: Settle down or Shirley won't like you.

Mr. McKnight: Shirley will cut off your funding.

Mr. de Jong: You sure have a fixation on Shirley, don't you, Jack?

Mr. Riis: A Shirley fetish.

Mr. de Jong: Develop a new line, Jack. It's getting boring.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN NEW YORK

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the Minister explain why the Prime Minister, in his speech in New York yesterday, was very long in rhetoric but very short in concrete proposals for the economic development of Central America?

If the Prime Minister was serious yesterday, can the Minister tell us today what additional amount of aid the Canadian Government is ready to commit to these countries and, in particular, to Nicaragua?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House will know, yesterday the Prime Minister was the first Prime Minister in Canadian history to receive an award from a prestigious American organization.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This was precisely because of the very active role which Canada has been taking in trying to bring a peaceful settlement and economic development to Central America, including Nicaragua.

The Hon. Member will also know that yesterday I had the opportunity, for the first time in history anywhere, to convene a meeting as one of the participants in the Economic Summit, which meeting was attended by five of the Foreign Ministers of the group of eight Latin American countries which have come together to encourage common approaches, not only in their region, but generally, to meeting the problems of peace and development in that region, including Central America.

The discussions yesterday were highly productive. The commitment of the Prime Minister and the Government is clear. We intend to do whatever we can in terms of economic development, in terms of peacekeeping, and in terms of encouraging the very important steps toward peace which have just been achieved in Nicaragua.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, a lot of people wondered whether the Prime Minister was there as the Prime Minister of Canada or as the Governor of an additional State of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the answer was not very specific.

PRESSURES EXERTED ON HAITIAN AUTHORITIES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): I would like to ask the Minister whether he could be more specific about another statement the Prime Minister made yesterday, which was that his Government was putting pressure on the Haitian authorities to put in place truly democratic institutions. Could the Minister inform the House to what kind of secret pressure he was referring? It seems to me this statement is pretty far-fetched. I am sure it was not a reference to his Parliamentary Secretary's visit to Haiti, since he showed the Manigat Government every conceivable respect.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects here. First of all, about Haiti. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well, since he was part of the group, that a group of parliamentarians, in fact a Committee of the House, as suggested if I am not mistaken by the New Democratic Party, has just held a series of meetings in Haiti. I am waiting for the report, because I believe it will help us develop specific policies we could pursue with respect to that country. The Prime Minister confirmed yesterday Canada's profound interest in what is happening in Haiti and also the issue of democratic government in the area.

As far as Central America in concerned, Canada is prepared to join groups of other countries for the purpose of supporting some kind of marshall plan. Once peace has been obtained, we hope this will encourage governments in the area to continue in their search for peace, and economic development could be the next step.

AIR SAFETY

AIRLINE EMPLOYEES' ALLEGATIONS OF SAFETY PROCEDURE VIOLATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister of Transport. First, I would like to thank the Minister for his quick response to my letter of March 24. I would also like to express my appreciation for his commitment to investigate the allegations which are made in seven affidavits which I forwarded to him today to protect the identity of employees who have made allegations about certain airlines.

In the affidavits which I forwarded to the Minister, employees of Wardair and Air Canada made allegations about violations of security procedures. As I said before, the Minister has promised to protect their identity.

An Hon. Member: Get on with it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Go for it, Les.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Will the Minister give the assurance that the investigation he said he will carry out will be conducted under the widest possible terms of reference, and that the RCMP or any other police force necessary will be involved so that the investigation will be seen by the public to be completely pure and above board?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. gentleman the assurance that the investigation based on these seven affidavits which the Hon. Member sent me at 12 o'clock today will certainly be proper and above board. I will not give any assurance that the RCMP will be involved. That will depend on whether our investigation shows that the facts are correct.

With respect to keeping the names of the persons who signed the affidavits confidential, let me point out to the House that when I replied to the Hon. Member I pointed out to him that we would certainly keep the names of those who supplied the affidavits confidential during the course of our investigation. However, if we find that we must prosecute and charge any airline companies with a violation of the security regulations, we should certainly have to use their names then because they will be required to give evidence. I can assure the House that if we find that any of the airline companies have violated our security regulations they will be prosecuted.

CHECKING OF BAGS—AIR CANADA INSTRUCTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's answer since employees and the public are worried about the cosy relationship that exists between the current Ministry and the airlines.

My supplementary question for the Minister concerns a letter that was sent to him on February 4 from the airline employees representatives. In the case of an Air Canada charter flight from Toronto to Winnipeg to Honolulu, employees of Air Canada in Winnipeg were instructed from Toronto that passengers with Fairway Tours would have boarding passes in their possession—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes that the issue is a serious one and is being treated seriously by both the Hon. Member and the Minister. However, I think the Chair must insist upon the Member putting his question. We must move on.

Mr. Benjamin: In light of the fact that the instructions said: "Just check bags, do not worry about security numbers", will the Minister explain why he has not answered the letter of February 4? Does he think that is an appropriate instruction from an airline office in Toronto to an airline office in Winnipeg? Will this result in an inquiry into this incident?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the relationship between myself and the airlines is no cosier than the relationship between myself and the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have a decent regard for the fact that he is doing a sincere and honest job for his Party, and I have a decent regard for the fact that the President of Air Canada, and the Presidents of Canadian Airlines or Wardair are doing an honest and decent job for their airlines. Our relationship is no cosier than that. The same is true with the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Easy. You were doing just fine.

Mr. Crosbie: The relationship is no cosier than it ever was. In fact, in St. John's on Sunday they had given away my seat. That is how cosy the relationship is. Fifteen minutes before the flight left I got to the counter and they said that my seat had been given away. That is how cosy we are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: A forerunner of things to come.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You needed a whole row.

Mr. Crosbie: My row was given away.

The question raised by the Hon. Member has been investigated. There was no security breach. This was a charter flight. I do not have the time to go into this now. My reply will go to the hon. gentleman as soon as I can get it to him, which will probably take another month.

LABOUR

REQUEST FOR NEW PROGRAM TO HELP OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Since November 1986, the Minister has been negotiating with the provincial governments with a view to introducing a new assistance program for older workers, but so far nothing has been done. However, since 1987, hundreds of workers who would have been eligible under the old program have been penalized because the Minister decided to terminate the old program before renewing the new program. Could the Minister inform the House what the situation is with respect to the provincial governments, and when older workers in Quebec, Ontario, the Maritimes and Western Canada will be eligible for the assistance program for older workers?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to repeat for the benefit of the Hon. Member and other Members that the old program was not terminated or cancelled by this Government. The former program set up by the previous Government was to be terminated under the previous Government, but we extended the program for a year and it was supposed to expire in 1985.

As for current negotiations, these have been going on for some time. In fact, I have just finished a new round of discussions with all my provincial counterparts on the new POWA program, and I am pleased to be able ot inform the Hon. Member that I shall be seeing my Quebec counterpart on Thursday.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT OF FUNDS FOR OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is unable to give a satisfactory answer to older workers and considering the slogan: Losing your job is tough but at fifty-five it is real tough . . . I agree that losing one's job is tough and that it is really tough at fifty-five. Since the Minister said he extended the early retirement program for a year, doesn't he think it would be more sensible to announce immediately that he will extend the former program for older workers and that as soon as we have a new program, he will terminate the old one? In any case, it is a situation which penalizes the workers. Instead of spending money on announcing a program that doesn't exist, spend it on helping older workers!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am greatful to my hon. friend for mentioning this advertising paid for by my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration and not the Department of Labour. In fact, if my hon. friend had had the honesty to quote the whole message, he would have recognized that workers who are 55 years of age can get assistance through our employment strategy programs to find new jobs, for this is one of the things we have been trying to do, creating new jobs for older workers. As a matter of fact, we have created over one million jobs since 1984 and we intend to continue to create new jobs for workers, especially older ones.

ENERGY

GEORGES BANK—PROVINCIAL OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED DRILLING FOR OIL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that Bill C-75, the Bill with respect to an agreement on the offshore between Canada and the Nova Scotia, is now being held up in a legislative committee while the Government decides whether it will play its part in banning the drilling for gas and oil on Georges Bank.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of New Brunswick have both taken a position opposed to drilling on Georges Bank, that the office of the Governor of Massachusetts, Michael Dukakis, has taken the same position, and that the Nova Scotia Legislature has unanimously passed a resolution calling for the banning of drilling on Georges Bank?

In light of that, is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared on behalf of the federal Government to amend Bill C-75 to ban drilling on George's Bank?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that discussions and consultations are still ongoing between the federal Government and the Province of Nova Scotia. I certainly take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration and will see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources receives it.

GOVERNMENT DECISION—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Nova Scotia Legislature passed a unanimous resolution supported by all Parties opposing drilling in that region. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the GOMAC report, the Gulf of Maine Advisory Committee report, has recommended no drilling in the area and that the report is in the possession of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans? Is he aware of that information and, if so, when can the people of Nova Scotia expect a decision from the Government of Canada in light of the fact that their own Legislature is unanimous on this issue?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): I would hope very soon, Mr. Speaker, and again I will draw this matter to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

FINANCE

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM—REQUEST MADE BY SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that the small producers in the oil and gas sector are not enjoying the benefits the Minister, I am sure, would like them to have. They have requested that under the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, the Government, on October 1, instead of reducing the rate from one third to one sixth, reduce the amount on which the average is based from $10 million to $5 million, thereby ensuring that the small companies receive the benefit they received in the past.

Will the Minister of Finance, in the interests of safeguarding these companies and safeguarding jobs in the oil and gas sector, agree to the request of the small companies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member has raised this issue because I think he will agree with me it has been quite an effective incentive for the oil and gas industry, particularly for these smaller companies, members of the Small Explorers and Producers Association. We have received the representations of the association. I am always happy to receive these representations, and will be reviewing them in due course.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): With all due respect to the Minister, the question is fairly straightforward and the timing is very important because they are now planning for the exploration and development they are going to be doing in the next few months. Why can the Minister not say now whether the Government is going to grant their request, in the interests of helping small companies in the energy sector?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think my answer is any different. I appreciate the Hon. Member's concerns and I will take them under advisement.

GRAIN—INITIAL PRICES FOR 1988-89 CROP YEAR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. Western farmers are in the process of making crop decisions for 1988. They need some information in order to do that. Is the Minister prepared to make a statement now on the initial prices farmers can expect for the 1988-89 crop year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, traditionally initial payments are announced prior to spring seeding. In the last two or three years we have announced those payments towards the middle of April and we anticipate doing the same thing this coming year, that is, making an announcement on initial payments probably within the next two or three weeks.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the rising Canadian dollar is having an impact on the prices of grain. Can the Minister give us any indication of how that rising Canadian dollar will affect the initial prices he will be announcing?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that any of this kind of information is market sensitive and it is not appropriate or helpful for anyone in my position to speculate on what in fact the initial prices will be. The practice in the past has been to set initial prices as high as we possibly can, based on expectations in the market.

I can say that we will be looking to make an announcement of an interim payment under the Western Grains Stabilization Act, which we anticipate will be very helpful and will be a further indication of the kind of support this Government has provided to a part of the economy, namely, the grain and oilseed sector, which has been suffering very greatly. So I think that will be some very good news for the Hon. Member's neighbours when we announce it.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

SERVICE CHARGES—ENFORCEMENT OF SECTION 201 OF BANK ACT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Since complaints about service charges by banks and other financial institutions, and the perceived lack of notification about new charges, have been raised in this House since November, 1987, has the Minister in that time instructed the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to enforce Section 201 of the Bank Act which requires such notification?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to tell the Hon. Member that we have an interdepartmental committee examining that particular matter and it will be reporting shortly. We are also awaiting, of course, the report of the standing committee on a similar subject.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF INFORMATION DISCLOSURE LEGISLATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, now that the Standing Committee on Finance has decided to examine the administration of Section 201 of the Bank Act—and I still do not understand why the Minister needs an interdepartmental committee to enforce his own law—will the Minister tell the House when he proposes to introduce legislation which will require adequate disclosure from trust companies, caisses populaire, and other deposit-taking institutions?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that action will be taken quickly, whether it has to be done by legislation or regulation has yet to be decided, but we will not delay very long with respect to this particular issue.

LEGAL INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 201 OF ACT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. It also concerns Section 201 of the Bank Act. Is it true that one of the Minister's officials has given a legal interpretation that the banks are not in contravention of Section 201? Has such a legal opinion been sought by the Government and has it been given?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I answered the previous question, yes, we are trying to anticipate the answer to the Hon. Member's question. If he asks me whether the report is in and whether or not I have accepted it, I can tell him that the report is not yet in and I have not seen it.

REQUEST FOR ENFORCEMENT OF SECTION 201

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is, has the Government received or obtained a legal ruling or legal interpretation of Section 201, and has the interpretation determined that the banks are not breaking the law? That is the question I am really asking. Was such a legal interpretation sought by the Government and has it been given?

My second question in terms of a supplementary is this. When is the Government prepared to enforce with legislation Section 201 of the Bank Act and ensure that bank charges are not levied on the basis on which they have been previously levied by the banks, without proper agreement between the customer and the banking institution?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no doubt, if Section 201 is being violated, we will act and act immediately.

Mr. de Jong: Is it being violated is my question?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—POSITION OF CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last September

Canada led 46 nations in signing a treaty to reduce chlorofluorocarbons which destroy the ozone layer. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that an acid rain treaty must be a priority with the United States or it could cost our friendship. Could the Minister tell the House where Canada and the U.S. really stand on acid rain and how many nations have actually ratified the treaty?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that Canada provided a great deal of leadership towards the Montreal Protocol on Ozone-depletion. It is an historic document inasmuch as it is a first global treaty on the atmosphere. We hoped it might be a central part of an international Law of the Air, of which another part might well be an international accord on acid rain, towards which objective we are working hand in glove with other countries, including those of the European Community. I am advised by my senior people today that negotiations are going well.

In the meantime we think it terribly important within Canada to provide an example to the Americans, and to others, by slashing acid rain-causing emissions at source, in the case of sulphur dioxide emissions, by 50 per cent by 1994, a very substantial achievement by this Government.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

ARTICLE XI—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. It concerns the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the present negotiations. Last week, during a visit to Washington by the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons, the Assistant Trade Representative for Agriculture, Suzanne Earley, stated to our committee that the United States administration's position was to abolish or at least to render useless Article XI of the GATT which permits border controls for supply managed agricultural commodities.

• (1500)

Given that this position is supported by the Cairns Group, of which Canada is a member, can the Minister inform the House why Canada is supporting a measure which could render useless or abolish supply management in Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that that is nothing more than utter and sheer nonsense. We have to respect the fact that the Americans will take certain positions at the multilateral trade negotiations, as will a number of the other 93 countries.

We have made our position very clear as a Canadian Government that we support the system of supply management. We support the right for Canadian farmers to determine what marketing system best suits their own needs. That is why we have written Section 710 into the Canada-U.S. trade arrangement, and made specific reference to Article XI in the GATT.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is clear that in this case, Canada is certainly being "harmonized" by the Americans.

My question is this: In view of the fact that this very day, the members of the Canadian Egg Marketing Board are holding in Ottawa their Fifteenth Annual Meeting, could the Minister or his colleague the Minister for International Trade explain to us how the Tory Government can support the position of the United States and that of the Cairns countries before the GATT, when they are seeking to abolish our supply management system in Canada? How could the Canadian Government justify their support of these organizations?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we will not be taken in by any nonsense any more than we will be taken in by the position of the Hon. Member. In fact I have been advised, quite appropriately by my colleague the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, who has been actively involved in the Cairns Group, that indeed the Hon. Member is misrepresenting the Cairns Group on Article XI of the GATT.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

TORONTO HALF-WAY HOUSE—REQUEST FOR AUDIT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The Minister will know that although the Pepino inquiry concentrated on privately operated Toronto half-way houses there are allegations of serious violations of security and supervision at the government operated Keele Street Detention Centre. The Minister will also know that, although he has ordered an audit and the removal of violent offenders from Exodus Link and Montgomery House, no similar order has been issued regarding government operated half-way houses.

Will the Minister order an independent audit of all government operated half-way houses in Toronto, and the removal of violent offenders from the Keele Street Detention Centre?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the only federal government run half-way house in Toronto is the Keele Street

Centre, and that an audit is being conducted on Keele Street by my Inspector General as recommended by Recommendation 18 of the Pepino Report.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West rises on a question of privilege.

CITING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognition. I rise on a matter which I raised yesterday as a point of order.

First, I wish to say that I erred by omission in my point of order yesterday, an error I now wish to draw to the attention of the Chair.

Citation 327 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is entitled "Documents Cited". I said in my remarks on my point of order, "I admit at the outset that that is not a direct quote or citing of the document". My error was that I misquoted Beauchesne's. Beauchesne's states, "to read or quote". However, the citation is entitled "Documents Cited".

I went to some lengths this morning to look up the definition of the word "cite". The Winston Senior Dictionary states under "cite":

> —indirectly, to give in substance what he has written. To cite is to mention a passage or an author as a reference, argument or example—or illustrate something previously stated.

The Funk & Wagnalls Standard College Dictionary (Canadian Edition) states:

> To bring forward or refer to as proof or support . . . To mention or enumerate.

The Concise Oxford Dictionary states, "mention as example".

I contend that the Minister cited the CNR studies regarding the Moncton shops, because in his response to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), the Hon. Member who requested that the Minister provide the studies which supposedly show how the CNR can save money by closing down the operation, said, "CN's studies". The minute he said, "CN's studies" he mentioned, he referred and used as an example, pursuant to the definitions of "cite" to which I have referred. He said, "CN's studies show quite clearly that it will make considerable savings as a result of the decision to close these shops."

Everyone knows, including members of the Standing Committee on Transport, that that is what the CNR said. It said that it would have considerable savings, and the Government and the CNR refused to provide copies of those studies.

The fact is that the Minister cited the rationalization studies of the CNR regarding Moncton shops by the very fact that he cited the studies of the CNR. He then went on to mention, enumerate, what the CNR said in its studies. I contend that if that is not citing, I do not know what is. I respectfully suggest, Sir, that in light of the objective of the question of the Hon. Member for St. John's East, the purpose of it and the subject matter of it, and in light of the Minister's response, that he did in fact cite the CNR studies by quoting a contention of the CNR from both studies. It seems to me that it is that straightforward.

The Minister used information from the rationalization studies of Canadian National Railways to the effect that the rationalization studies of the CNR showed how much money it could save. The fact that the Minister used information that even the CNR has admitted is in its studies means purely and simply that he was citing those studies.

Therefore, Sir, I contend that the Chair should give serious and, I hope, favourable consideration to requiring the Minister to table those studies in the House. The employees are the first ones entitled to know what it is that their employers had in store for them. They cannot find out. They have tried under the Access to Information Act.

It is clear in the exchanges in the House yesterday, it is clear in the definitions contained in the four dictionaries I looked at, and it is clear in Beauchesne's Citation 327(1) which states, in part:

> . . . This restraint is similar to the rule of evidence in courts of law, which prevent counsel from citing documents which have not been produced in evidence.

Beauchesne's further states in Citation 327:

> (2) It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest . . .

There has been nothing put forward by the Government or CNR which would have any injury to the public interest. Only the document cited by the Minister need be tabled. I submit that he cited the CNR studies about Moncton shops. He did it by name, the CNR studies, two direct words.

Citation 327 of Beauchesne's further states:

> (5) To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate . . .

I wish to close my brief remarks by suggesting to you, Sir, that while this may be a departure, precedents have to be set to be followed by successive Speakers in Parliament, although I hope this Speaker is here for a lot longer than I have been.

I wish to close, Sir, by submitting to you that under the definition of "citing" in Beauchesne's, and in four different dictionaries the variety of definitions that are included under the word "cite", the Minister has in fact cited the CNR reports/studies, about the Moncton shops.

I request with all respect, Sir, that you require the Minister to table those studies in the House.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the hon. gentleman was going to raise this point yesterday, so I was not here to respond yesterday. Quite obviously the submission that he is making is erroneous. If Your Honour ever found in favour of it you would certainly go down in the history books because you would have greatly changed parliamentary procedure.

I am not going to quote Beauchesne's or any other parliamentary authority. I appeal to your common sense, Mr. Speaker, and to your knowledge of the rules.

As reported in yesterday's Hansard at pages 14187 and 14188 I was asked a question by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) with regard to the CN shops at Moncton, and the decision of CN to shut the rail and shop operation at Moncton. Moncton would still be its main base of operations in Atlantic Canada, and the great majority of their employees in Atlantic Canada would be located at Moncton.

All that was stated in reply by myself was that, "CN's studies show quite clearly that it will make considerable savings . . . " I did not refer to any document. I had no study of CN's before me to which I was referring, a study with a capital "S" or any report with a capital "R", nor did I refer to a letter, nor did I quote from any study, letter, or document. How can I be requested to table a document when I have not got such a document and did not refer to or quote from such a document?

I notice that our former colleague, the Hon. Stanley Knowles is present. He would be shocked and dumbfounded. If the NDP were still being advised by our former colleague, Mr. Knowles, on this matter, this point would never have been brought up. It just shows the intolerable ignorance of the rules on behalf of the hon. gentleman.

I know that there was a major study done some years ago by CN in connection with its position with reference to those types of shops. I do not know how many other studies were done in addition to that. I have no such study. I did not quote from any such study. I have no letter that I quoted from. I have nothing that I could table. If Your Honour was so to direct me to table, what can I table?

I would like you to act, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules and to dismiss this request.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has given me some additional argument following on his intervention yesterday, and the Hon. Minister has replied.

It is interesting to note that the Hon. Minister referred to the Hon. Stanley Knowles and his expertise in procedure. I only wish that I could refer this problem to the hon. gentleman and have him solve it, but I am afraid that I will have to take the matter under advisement and report back to the Chamber as soon as I can.

I thank both the Hon. Member and the Minister for their interventions.

PRIVILEGE

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REFERENCE TO MEMBER'S NAMES—WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): During the time reserved for Statements by Members you, Mr. Speaker, were apparently of the opinion that I made an improper use of Standing Order 21.

My only purpose was that no political Party should be allowed to promote the destruction of any community of Canada. My only purpose was to recommend to English-speaking Quebecers to stay away from the Parties that have those intentions.

I apologize to the House if, by mentioning the personal name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and the chief organizer of the Liberal Party of Canada, I disrupted the proceedings of the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I see some Hon. Members rising, but I think that under the circumstances there is probably no need for any further comment. That is a completely unequivocal withdrawal. Members will notice, as the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has just stated, I did interrupt the Hon. Member in his statement, and for reasons which are well known by all Members of the House.

I would hope that Hon. Members could accept the clear and direct statement that the Hon. Member has made. As far as the Speaker is concerned, I think that that ends the matter.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): I have to be very attentive to Your Honour's comments. Did Your Honour say "as far as the Speaker is concerned" the incident is closed? You know, Mr. Speaker, I am respectful of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I am very respectful of the Hon. Member who is an experienced Member. If he thinks that I need to hear something further on the matter, I would defer to an experienced Member such as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Before addressing the subject any further, I must say that my sense of things is that the Hon. Member for La Prairie has withdrawn. In any advice that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis may have for me, I would not want this to turn into an exchange between Members concerning a matter which has been withdrawn.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I will be very helpful to you. I have been here too long not to catch the import of Your Honour's words.

I am respectful of the rules of the House, especially when the Speaker says that an incident is closed. I abide very willingly by Your Honour's decision and will not debate any further this unfortunate incident which took place earlier.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member, and I hope that other Hon. Members would co-operate with the Chair.

I might say to all Hon. Members that it is not the habit of the Chair to interfere often in Members' statements.

The real reason for having a rule, which has been commented upon by other Speakers, is that we do not engage in personal reflection upon the motivations, characters, or otherwise of Members. Of course when that happens it tends to lead to disorder, because other Members feel that it is unacceptable and then want to retort as well.

There is common sense to these rules. It is fundamental that we do not promote or accept in the Chamber that which creates disruption.

Again I say that I appreciate very much the comments and the grace with which the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis has supported the Chair. As I have said in front of all Hon. Members of the House, I take very seriously any intervention the Hon. Member makes.

Mr. Prud'homme: We have a very wise Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPROPER RESPONSE TO A QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding an incident which happened a little earlier. I indicate to the Chair that I am prepared to move the necessary motion to refer the matter to the appropriate parliamentary committee if Your Honour deems that I have a bona fide case of privilege.

On May 5, 1986 I put question No. 565 on the Notice Paper. This question, standing in my name, asked the Department of Agriculture for a number of reports regarding sanitary conditions at packing plants in southwestern Ontario. The question was never answered. I suppose that is not unusual. It could happen that Ministers, for whatever reason, decide not to respond to an Hon. Member's question.

However, I believe that it is against acceptable practices of the House—and I believe it can be found in Beauchesne's and Erskine May—when the question of an Hon. Member is not answered, as my question was not, and the Hon. Member finds out a year and a half later that in fact the information requested was given to a reporter, one Jim Rohman of the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, in the exact format of an answer to an Order Paper question. Indeed that should be considered an abuse of my parliamentary privileges.

I have in hand a document entitled "Inquiry of Ministry". This document is usually given in response to an Hon. Member's question on the Notice Paper. The answer to question No. 565 should have been destined to myself, yet it was not given to me but to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record last week. The document provides answers to very important questions regarding sanitary conditions at certain meat packing plants in Ontario.

Perhaps it is simply a mistake of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in providing this information to the news media but not providing it to an Hon. Member of the House when the question was on the Order Paper. In fact, a copy of a notice to me, to be tabled in the House, was given to the reporter, not to myself. If it was a mistake either by the Minister or an official of his office, I will accept that, having the highest of respect for the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that I am the associate agricultural critic for our party. I accept that that could happen.

However, the failure of the Minister to provide an adequate explanation would lead me to believe that information sought by the House through a Notice Paper question, duly inscribed on the Order Paper on May 5, 1986, when his officials prepared the answer for him, when the answer was available in his office, and when the answer was provided to someone else who was not a Member of the House, was deliberately withheld from the House of Commons. Unless there is a satisfactory explanation, I would submit that that would be an infringement of my privileges as a Member of the House.

I am prepared to table for the benefit of the Chair, if there is an appropriate way to do it, information provided to me earlier today by the Kitchener-Waterloo Record which indicates quite clearly that information destined to my office or to myself or, even more important, to be tabled in the House of Commons, was not provided to me but was instead provided to a reporter. I would hope that the Minister could provide such an explanation. In the absence of the failure of the Minister to do so, I would respectfully submit that I have a bona fide case of privilege which I should like to bring to the attention of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for his intervention which was extremely clear and helpful to the Chair. Perhaps the Hon. Minister would like to respond.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's questions and, shall I say, his new-found interest in question

No. 565 which, as he indicated, was placed on the Order Paper in May, 1986.

The Hon. Member should recall that on July 24 the House prorogued. The Hon. Member knows the rules. He has spent a longer period of time in the provincial legislature than here in the House of Commons—

Mr. Boudria: Not quite. It is about even now.

Mr. Wise: —but he knows the rules very well.

When the House prorogues, items or questions on the Order Paper cease to exist. Therefore, the Minister has no facility on behalf of the Department to make the information available to the Hon. Member.

However, we have not been prorogued since July 24. At no other time in the past has the Hon. Member had sufficient interest to raise the matter in the form of a question during Question Period, nor has he demonstrated sufficient interest to reinstate the question. Consequently, the Department has had no facility to respond.

In respect of the interest of the reporter for the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, it is quite true that he certainly has an interest in the subject and has sought identical information through the access to information legislation. In keeping with the spirit of the law, my department provided him with the information. In fact, the Hon. Member said "yesterday"; my note indicates that yesterday we released, under access to information, the same material.

I have in hand a signed copy of question No. 565 of May 5, 1986. I hope this explanation will satisfy the Hon. Member, and I will be happy to send a copy across the aisle to him.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in reply.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong debate. Obviously the point is that the question was tabled in the House on May 5, 1986. The question could have been answered in plenty of time before the House prorogued. Obviously a response was prepared before the House prorogued, otherwise it would not be in the form that I now have in my hand.

Given that the reply was prepared on the proper document which is normally used to table in the House of Commons, one can only assume that the officials of the Minister's office had prepared it in order for it to be tabled in the House of Commons and in proper time. Of course, had that time expired, no one would have done the work uselessly.

Given that that is the case, I would submit that the people in the Minister's office had the intention of providing me with that answer, and I still submit that when a document is to be prepared for tabling in the House in response to rules of the House, pursuant to a question asked by an Hon. Member and tabled in the House, that information should be provided to the House at least at the same time as it is provided to anyone else. If it is provided to anyone else previously, I would consider that to be the same as if I were to leak the contents of a committee report to a reporter prior to it being tabled in the House. I have spoken on that particular issue on a number of occasions previously, chastising those who have leaked committee reports to others prior to their being tabled in the House.

It would seem to me that the Minister, prior to or at the same time as providing this document to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record should have made it a point to provide it to Parliament because it is not the Kitchener-Waterloo Record that sought this information, it is the House of Commons of Canada through a question I placed on the Notice Paper. That information is not only mine once it is tabled but it belongs to every single Member of the House. The answer to that is not provided to me but indeed to you, Mr. Speaker, as our chairman here in the House of Commons, for the benefit of all of us.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond very briefly to the point raised by the Hon. Member in his concluding remarks. It is clear that during the course of the first weeks of July, the department prepared the necessary response to the Hon. Member's question. Under normal circumstances, that question would clearly have been answered when we returned to the House in September. Of course, the House prorogued on July 24 and therefore there was no longer a session and there was indeed therefore no longer a question.

There is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the department, the Minister or any other official retained this information and withheld it from the House of Commons. That is simply not the case. By the time the material was ready, the House was no longer sitting, and of course the House subsequently prorogued.

Had the Hon. Member wished to do so, all he would have had to do when we reconvened that fall was to ask the question again. By then, of course, the information would have been available, as it has been available since that time and as the Minister now prepares to offer it to the Hon. Member and the House. It seems to me that there is no question of privilege here whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the complaint of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). At first, I was puzzled at what had happened, but I think Hon. Members would agree with me when I say that the Minister's statement and the statement of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary cleared up the chronology of what in fact did happen.

I must advise the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that under the circumstances, it is not a question of privilege. However, I might add that this might have been avoided if perhaps the Hon. Member and someone on the Minister's staff had gotten together in pursuit of the information. It is obvious that the Government was quite prepared to give out that information.

I think I can say in favour of the submission made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that it is unfortunate that that information got into the hands of someone else rather than his own when he in fact had requested it. However, I can understand how it happened and, as I say, I do not think it is a question of privilege. I thank all Hon. Members for their interventions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)) moved that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to lead off today on Bill C-121, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited. As all Hon. Members are aware by now, the federal Government and the Government of Saskatchewan reached an agreement on February 22, 1988, to merge and privatize the assets of Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. The legislation under debate today provides the federal Government with the authority to implement the commitments it made under that agreement.

This is a relatively simple Bill, but it represents a very significant step forward for the companies involved and also for the Province of Saskatchewan and for all Canadians. It also represents another landmark in our Government's highly successful efforts to bring new opportunities for growth and good management to the public sector, and that includes, of course, both government departments and Crown corporations.

[Translation]

The decision to privatize a Crown corporation is never taken lightly. First, this is a complex procedure. We have to ensure that the corporation no longer serves to meet one of the public objectives which can only be reached by the Government retaining ownership. Second, we believe that privatized corporations must be given what they need to be viable after privatization, to take full advantage of the transfer from public to private ownership and to assure the existence of new opportunities for the business and its employees.

Third, we believe that the very process of privatization must respect all the interests related directly or indirectly to the Crown corporation and its activities. I am thinking of the interests of the employees, of public safety and of the right of Canadian taxpayers to have their financial interests protected.

Madam Speaker, the Bill now under consideration will make it possible for the forces involved to combine and create a synergy which will not only protect, but also enrich these interests in decades to come.

[English]

The decision as to whether or not Eldorado needed to continue as a publicly-owned corporation was a relatively easy one. Clearly in the case of Eldorado, ownership was not necessary to achieve public policy objectives, nor had it been for a number of years.

Members opposite who were part of the previous Government will concur with this decision because they made the same decision even before our Government came to power. In 1983, the Liberal Government transferred the shares of Eldorado Nuclear to the Canada Development Investment Corporation and the Minister responsible for CDIC subsequently stated in the Senate: "I don't see any reason why the Government of Canada in the 1980s needs to maintain an investment in the uranium industry". I am sure that all Hon. Members opposite in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will support wholeheartedly the principles of the legislation before us.

Prior to our Government reaching an agreement with the Government of Saskatchewan, we, together with the CDIC and its financial advisers, assessed a range of privatization strategies. The merger of Eldorado and SMDC and the subsequent privatization of the new company is a strategy that will contribute most to future growth and opportunity, the primary goal of this process.

Eldorado Nuclear Limited has been in existence for 61 years. It is the oldest uranium producer in the entire world. It is a worldclass operation and a dependable supplier, with a solid domestic and international customer base. Eldorado is also the only integrated producer in Canada, which means that it can process ore to create uranium products for use in Canadian reactors to serve Canadian energy needs as well as for export to serve the energy needs of other countries. It has new, modern and efficient plants and owns and has interests in uranium mines that produce ore at competitive costs.

The other partner, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, is one of the world's largest suppliers of uranium, producing 7 per cent of the western world's capacity in 1986. It has very good sales contracts that extend well into the next decade. The company has emphasized exploration efforts over the last few years and, as a result, it has some of the world's largest commercial reserves.

A merger between the two will produce a company that is not only viable but will also have the potential to grow and develop because of the synergy of the assets, including reserves, production facilities, research, and personnel. Merging the two companies will produce a world class uranium production facility with the motivation, reputation and assets to play a significant role in the world market-place. Again, the prospect of enhanced economic opportunities is one of the primary reasons we have chosen this route to privatization.

The Government of Saskatchewan sees the same benefits from its own perspective when it visualizes the long-term benefits not only for SMDC but also for the people of Saskatchewan. I am sure all Members of the House will appreciate that what we are proposing is not the selling off of Crown assets, but rather the creation of a new company that will play a significant role in the world uranium mining and refining industry.

[Translation]

The ideology of some of the Members opposite will perhaps prompt them to pretend that these objectives can be met only by maintaining state control over this new company. I am convinced that, during our discussions on this Bill, we shall be hearing their detailed proposals and all the reasons they can invoke in favour of maintaining Government ownership.

However, Madam Speaker, the type of myopic thinking which hangs on to an ideology at the expense of logic is not a political approach which can succeed in convincing those on this side of the House. Thanks to our own approach, we have had one success after the other in the last three years.

[English]

To date, this Government has undertaken 3 privatization initiatives. Over 23,000 employees, formerly employed in the public sector, are now working in the same jobs but in the private sector. Many of them are in better jobs because they are now free to pursue new opportunities for growth. There is no doubt that the Canadian economy has gained significantly through that process as well. I want to give you a couple of examples of the privatization we have done to date as they relate to our achievement with Eldorado.

In 1986, de Havilland was sold to the Boeing Corporation. You may recall the doom and gloom artists on the other side of the House who told us that this merger was doomed to failure. Today at de Havilland there is more employment, more customers, a stronger future for the company, more product development, better marketing and therefore a healthier contribution to the Canadian economy and, most important of all, increased job security for the employees.

Another one is Fishery Products International, something of particular interest to my learned friend on the other side because it has done a lot for the people in his riding on Cape Breton Island. FPI is of critical importance to the Atlantic fishery, and the Atlantic economy generally. It has been sold back to the public to the benefit of the constituents of my hon. critic. I know a great many Members in this House will agree that that sale was a very successful and popular public offering, particularly in Atlantic Canada.

I could go on and list the other 11, but I wanted to give you just two examples of the success of our privatization initiatives. I will save the others for another time.

These privatizations resulted in benefits to Canadians in the Canadian economy, and demonstrate that the divestiture of Crown assets, in the right circumstances, makes good management sense as well as spurring the economy, creating jobs, and making Canada more competitive in an increasingly challenging world market-place.

Let me turn to the specifics of this legislation because this will show Canadians we are also meeting our third condition for successful privatization, maximizing the benefits to the Canadian public. First, we want control of this new and exciting company to remain in Canadian hands. It is for that reason that Article 5 of this legislation imposes constraints upon the issue, transfer and ownership of the voting securities in the new company. Article 5 ensures that, one, apart from the founding shareholders, that is the two Governments, no shareholder will be able to own more than 25 per cent of the voting shares. Two, no non-resident will be able to own more than five per cent of the voting shares. In the counting of votes, those cast by non-residents at any meeting of shareholders is to be limited to 20 per cent. In other words, 20 per cent is the maximum that foreigners can accumulate. These provisions will ensure that the new corporation will continue to remain under Canadian control and will be used to strengthen Canada's economy.

Under the terms of the agreement, the new company will initially be owned 38.5 per cent by Canada and 61.5 per cent by Saskatchewan. That split is based upon evaluations by independent financial advisers of the future contributions and profitability of the two current operations. The recommended ownership split represents the basis of an attractive business proposition that will benefit both parties as well as the current principal shareholders, that is the taxpayers of the two Governments. The recommended ownership split represents the basis of an attractive business proposition that will benefit both parties.

With a 38.5 per cent share in the new company, Canadian taxpayers will be receiving fair market value for their Eldorado assets. That is very important. Under the terms of the agreement, the new corporation will undertake a debt issue to repay promissory notes retained by the Governments of Canada and Saskatchewan. Canada will receive 38.5 per cent of the proceeds of this debt issue. The balance will be realized as Canada and Saskatchewan gradually sell their shares of the new company to Canadians.

The anticipated proceeds from these two transactions, the debt issue and subsequent selling of shares, will be used to service and pay off existing debt. As well, the new company will be taxable, representing increased revenue potential for the Government since SMDC currently enjoys federal tax exempt status. At the same time the agreement sets out the intention of both Governments to make particular efforts to achieve a broad distribution of shares to individual and institutional investors. In this manner, all Canadians, through individual investment decisions or vehicles such as pension funds, will have the opportunity to participate in the future financial success of this new company.

[Translation]

Shared ownership plans for employees have been a major factor in several privatizations. These projects are popular with the employees and represent for them an effective means to achieve ownership of their own agency.

[English]

Both Governments have agreed to reduce their share holdings by 30 per cent within two years, 60 per cent within four years, and 100 per cent within seven years. The exact timing, to be clear, will depend on the economic and financial situation at the time, because the Government wants to get the best possible return for Canadians it possibly can. However, both the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada are committed to the privatization process and wish to see an initial share offering as soon as possible, hopefully within a year of completion of the merger.

In all of this there is a key factor of Eldorado's business which will remain unchanged—and this is very important—that is, health, safety, and environment standards will continue to be strictly maintained and strictly enforced. These issues are a matter of public priority to the Government and to Canadians. They are a priority whether a company is publicly or privately owned. That does not affect the standards.

Eldorado is involved in an industry in which safety is of paramount concern for both employees and the public at large. All Canadians have concerns relating to the management of waste from the mining and the processing of radioactive materials. The requirements of the Atomic Energy Control Act and other federal and provincial laws and regulations apply equally to uranium companies in government hands and uranium companies in private hands. Under the terms of the agreement between the federal and Saskatchewan Governments the federal Government remains committed to developing and contributing to a solution to the low-level waste accumulated by Eldorado near Port Hope.

I have said on many occasions that government ownership is a very poor substitute for effective regulation in the protection of public safety. As it stands now, over 50 per cent of Canada's uranium production originates in the private sector which operates in accordance with an appropriate legislative and regulatory framework. The new company will be required to adhere to the same strict guidelines. Therefore, Canadians and, in particular, employees of Eldorado, can be assured that environmental protection objectives or public safety needs will not be compromised because of the privatization of Eldorado.

[Translation]

Similarly, Madam Speaker, Canada has long supported a policy that stresses the peaceful applications of nuclear energy and technology. Exports of uranium and nuclear products and technology are controlled and carefully monitored to ensure that others observe our policies on nuclear non-proliferation.

These policies apply as much to the private sector as they do to the public sector. The privatization of Eldorado Nuclear will have absolutely no effect on the Government's non-proliferation policies or on its efforts to reduce the non-peaceful use of nuclear energy throughout the world.

[English]

The employees of Eldorado and SMDC can look forward with justifiable optimism to the merger and the subsequent privatization process. The new company will be stronger, financially healthier, and in a better position to compete internationally than the two Crown corporations would be if they operated separately.

The Government believes strongly that job security and new employment opportunities are best provided by an aggressive, competitive private sector. To illustrate that I need only point to the state of the Canadian economy today and its job creation record over the last three and a half years—in excess of 1 million new jobs.

The new company will employ over 1,000 people. Those people represent a resource to the company as important as the uranium reserves it owns. I can assure the employees of SMDC and Eldorado that both the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan have placed a high priority on ensuring that employee concerns are adequately addressed through the negotiations leading to the final merger agreement and through the privatization process thereafter. Maintaining a committed, motivated workforce is clearly in the interests of the corporation and all Canadians.

That is why the agreement stipulates that employees be given the opportunity to participate in the ownership of the company. The details of that plan will be developed as the company moves into the privatization phase. Our record in this area, with companies like FDI and Teleglobe, is very positive and bodes well indeed for the employees of Eldorado. The company will honour all existing collective agreements. Any new union-management negotiations will be carried out in the normal course of business. Existing pension and benefit plans will be taken over by the new company to the benefit of employees.

[Translation]

Canada and Saskatchewan insist that the concerns of employees be examined at every stage of the privatization process. The transition team has set up a task force whose mandate will be to consider employee concerns and make the necessary recommendations.

Madam Speaker, this Bill makes it possible to merge two very impressive companies and thus create an integrated, first class uranium producer and processor.

The subsequent privatization process will enable the company to pursue aggressively new opportunities and become one of the most important players in the world in an industry where the competition is international.

By establishing the head office of the new corporation in Saskatchewan we are putting senior management close to the primary mining facilities of both existing companies. Most important, we are also developing a critical mass of skills and knowledge in Saskatchewan, already noted for its expertise in uranium production technology. This will help the province continue its world leadership in this area as well as providing spin-off employment benefits for others serving this industry. The decision to locate the head office in Saskatchewan also supports the Government's commitment to the policy of western economic diversification by building on the natural strengths of the region.

However, that will not take away from the new company's business commitments in the wonderful Province of Ontario which is, of course, where I come from. In fact, the long-term financial viability of the Blind River refinery and the Port Hope conversion plants will be improved because the processing operations of the new corporation will be more self-reliant and less dependent on other mineral producers than they are today.

The merger of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation will occur at a very appropriate time in the development of the Canadian economy. Under the terms of the free trade agreement the future prospects of the entire uranium industry have been heightened by lessening the uncertainty over possible U.S. import restrictions on uranium. At the same time, the modern and technologically advanced processing facilities of the new company are competitive with U.S.-based facilities.

I am very proud of the two-stage merger and privatization process which we are proposing for Eldorado Nuclear today.

[Translation]

This merger will help create a company that is far stronger than either party could ever have imagined before. Mining and development operations will be rationalized, economies of scale will improve efficiency, and the integration of mining and refining operations will enhance the long-term security of all employees.

[English]

The privatization stage of the process will enable the new company's employees to participate directly in the profit potential of this great company. Further, it will allow all Canadians to become more directly involved in a highly competitive, technologically advanced industry. It does so in a manner that recognizes and protects the interests of both company employees and Canadians generally.

In short, Madam Speaker, the enabling legislation that we have put forward demonstrates the pragmatic approach to privatization that the Government has taken since 1984. I am sure that all Members of the House will recognize the benefits of the proposal and will join with me to expedite passage of this Bill through the House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Income Tax—Funding of NDP municipal election candidates—Issuance of receipts for tax deductions; the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Administration of Justice—CIA funding of brainwashing experiments—Request for ex gratia payment to victims/Request for government action; the Hon. ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I must say that while our Party has some problems with the legislation, we feel they can be dealt with in committee. We do not oppose the thrust of the legislation. We are not opposed to the sale of Eldorado Nuclear in order to form one company with Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. However, we believe there are some difficulties with the legislation.

Of course, this agreement applies to this particular corporation because we believe there can be some benefits from the formation of one corporation. It does not apply to Radiochemical Company, Air Canada or Petro-Canada. Those are entirely different matters.

The fact is that this is not strictly a business proposition. This deal is obviously loaded in favour of the Province of Saskatchewan, which is receiving a multimillion dollar package, courtesy of the federal Government. Our Party is not opposed to millions of dollars going to Saskatchewan, but the arrangement should be identified for what it is. It has been very generous to Premier Devine for his position on free trade and his position on Meech Lake. The fact is that Eldorado Nuclear has been undervalued.

For the purposes of this transaction, the assets of Eldorado Nuclear are placed at $915.9 million, while the assets of Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation total $973.2 million. The Government of Canada will have a 39.5 per cent share of the new company while Saskatchewan will have a 61.5 per cent interest. We must also take into consideration the fact that the new company will issue promissory notes valued at 40 per cent of the fixed assets to cover all of the debt owed to the Saskatchewan Government and $230 million of the $570 million owed to the Government of Canada.

While the promissory notes cover all of the debt of the Province of Saskatchewan they will not nearly cover all of the debt of the Government of Canada.

Furthermore, it is significant to note that after this company is rolled over into one corporation and eventually sold to the private sector, the Province of Saskatchewan will hopefully recover all of the debt and its losses that it has in the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. But the Government of Canada will still be out by about $100 million.

We spoke to a representative of Burns Fry Ltd., the company which is assisting the Government in this sale. He has said that there are some difficulties in placing a value on the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado. The two companies were evaluated from a discounted cash flow basis rather than an asset basis. Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation had a lower operating cost, partially as a result of lower royalties. Eldorado was also determined to be lower in value as a result of its less profitable refinery business. Burns Fry stressed the point that the refinery business was a detriment to the value of Eldorado Nuclear.

That is a very interesting observation because the two Governments state that one of the advantages of this merger is having uranium processed in-house. They state: "A merger with SMDC will result in a company with an improved balance between its mining and refining capacities". How can that refinery which will be brought in to the merged company through Eldorado Nuclear be a detriment to the actual value of Eldorado?

There are a number of questions about what the federal Government will be paying in this arrangement. Clause 9(1) of the Bill states:

> The Minister may, pursuant to the authority of an appropriation Act and with the approval of the Minister of Finance, pay to Eldorado or to a subsidiary of Eldorado such amounts as may be necessary to enable Eldorado or the subsidiary to pay or discharge any debt or liability, whether incurred before or after the completion of the transactions referred to in subsections 4(1) and (2).

Clause 9(2) states:

> The Minister of Finance may, on behalf of Her Majesty, in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve, enter into agreements or other arrangements with any person in respect of obligations or liabilities of Eldorado or a subsidiary of Eldorado for which Her Majesty in right of Canada is liable and for that purpose may borrow money and issue and sell securities as defined in the Financial Administration Act.

Therefore, we do not know exactly what the Government will put into this new company. It states the value of Eldorado Nuclear, which our Party believes is too low. The Bill also states that the Government of Canada shall be liable for any debt or liability of Eldorado.

What will such a blanket provision cost Canadians? What liabilities exist for which Canadians will have to pay?

It is important to consider these clauses more closely in order to determine the actual cost of the new company to the people of Canada.

Clause 11 states:

> The Minister, after consultation with the President of the Treasury Board, shall cause such adjustments to be made in the accounts of Canada as are required as a result of any transaction authorized or required by this Act.

I suggest that this involves a continuing obligation with regard to liabilities which may have been incurred by Eldorado Nuclear.

Perhaps the Minister could inform us whether there will be mirror legislation in Saskatchewan that will give the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation the same back-up liability protection from the Government of Saskatchewan as Eldorado Nuclear is receiving from the Government of Canada. That is a question which certainly deserves an answer.

Clause 16 allows for investments by trust companies pursuant to the Loans Companies Act or the Trust Companies Act. I believe we should consider who will be investing as a result of this legislation. Is the Government encouraging trust companies to invest through pension funds?

If the Government is doing that, I think it has to be ensured that it is going to be a good investment for the people of Canada. It should not just go out and tell the people of Canada: "Here is a great opportunity to invest. Please come and help make this company a success by investing", because I think there is an obligation. Only the Government can really say whether this is going to be a sound investment. I think the Government has an obligation to the people of Canada through this Act, and through the actual encouraging of people to invest, to ensure that this investment is sound. If the Government does not feel that this is the case, is it not just leading the people on? Is there a chance that the investments the people make through pension funds and trust companies are not going to be successful? If there is any doubt, the Government should state the doubt and flag it, or it should give some kind of back-up provision, some kind of protection or insurance against the losses of these particular investors. After all, the Government is giving the new company an insurance policy by saying it will pick up any liabilities of Eldorado which happen to present themselves after this Act is completed.

How do we really know if the company is privatized that the Government will be able to assure us of all these good things? There has to be some kind of stipulation in the agreement that these things are actually going to take place. First, the Minister was talking about the mining operations in her home Province of Ontario. How can the Government be sure that these actual operations will continue if it does not really have any control over the corporation? If the Government is going to tell people that it is going to ensure that these operations will be a success, then there has to be some kind of condition, something in the agreement that will make sure that these operations will continue.

The Minister also said that she is encouraged by the provision that the employees of the company will be able to buy shares. Of course, once again, the shares have to be purchased before the shares of the merged company are sold to the private sector. Afterwards, there will not be any assurance that the employees will be able to buy these shares because the Government will not have control over the shares any longer. If the Government is going to protect the employees and allow them to purchase these shares, it has to put something in the legislation, or put something somewhere, that will ensure that the employees will have an opportunity to purchase these shares before the Government actually loses control of this operation.

It is also interesting to note that the two Governments state that one of the advantages of this merger is having uranium processed in-house. They say that a merger with SMDC will result in a company with an improved balance between its mining and refining capacities. As I said before, that reflects the importance of the refinery which Eldorado is bringing in. I think that gives a certain value to the refinery.

Eldorado's head office will be moved to Saskatchewan. Not only does that mean that 50 employees may be without jobs but decision-making for the company will be done in the head office in Saskatchewan, to which I have no objection whatsoever. However, the Government in its briefing notes stated that there is no anticipated impact on job security in the operations. Is that going to be the operations of the actual mining area itself or is it also putting into that the management capacity? What will it be offering to these managerial people who will be losing their jobs? It is saying that there is no anticipated impact on job security and operations. But it says later on that terminated employees, if any, are to be offered severance packages consistent with commercial and past Eldorado practice. It is either one way or the other. Either there is no anticipated impact or there is an anticipated impact and it is setting out exactly what the situation will be.

I think it is important that the Government state unequivocally that there will not be any impact on jobs from this merger. If jobs are going to be lost in the management area, it should be stated as being exactly that.

Getting back to the costing factor, we have the loss to the federal Government and we have the fact that the Government is going to support any liabilities of Eldorado Nuclear that happen to come up. We have also seen that the Government is making arrangements for existing waste disposal. I think it is very important that this be a consideration. The company is going to pay for the first $2 million of this cost. The next $98 million will be split with the new company paying $23 million of the costs and Canada paying $75 million of the costs. Canada will pay all the costs over $100 million. The Minister talks about the fact that even though it is in the private sector, we can expect to have tight controls over the waste.

However, I think if the Government is going to say that, it has to state a position on the report by the task force on low level radioactive waste disposal. The Government has not done that. Until the Government does so, anything it says with respect to this very important question will not have a great deal of validity. It is vital not only for purposes of this transaction, but for the purposes of this very important question, that the Government state its position.

On December 23, 1987, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) issued a news release which stated a new Canadian policy on uranium ownership in the uranium mine and smelting sector. This policy stipulated "that Canadians must own at least 51 per cent of an individual uranium property when it comes into production". More important, the new policy stated "that in cases where a project is controlled by Canadians, a reduction from the 51 per cent minimum Canadian participation level may be permitted, allowing Canadians more flexibility in raising capital for projects, as long as they maintain controlling interest". It does not seem like a valid policy.

I must say that the Government's intention in this Act to maintain Canadian ownership is much better and much stronger. I would hope that the statement from the Minister in this regard will be strengthened considerably. According to Bill C-121, Canadians will always retain control because the aggregate of non-resident vote cannot be more than 20 per cent of the votes cast at a shareholders' meeting. What we have in this Bill seems to be a good deal tighter than the policy the Minister stated last December. I feel that this sort of control is very important. However, once again, there is the maintenance of the Government's conviction that this will continue.

• (1620)

The Bill presents a good deal of changes which must be made. However, there are still questions which must be answered. What will be the actual cost to Canada? What will be the Government's position on low-level waste? What is the actual commitment of the Government on maintaining jobs and allowing shareholders a fair deal? Will employees be allowed to purchase the shares? Will that be done at an early opportunity before shares are sold to another party thereby reducing the chance of those workers to buy those shares?

I am hopeful that in committee we will have the opportunity to get the answers to those questions. I will be very upset if the Government does not bring those answers forward.

I feel that this is a very good deal for the Province of Saskatchewan. I feel that if the proper checks and balances are maintained then it can work. However, if the Government is merely going to slough this off under the guise of an agreement that is basically sound in the private sector with the problems and shortcomings that we have seen in it then there will be problems later on not only for the people of Saskatchewan but for all Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by expressing my concern that we were given just one hour's notice that this Bill would be debated this afternoon. It seems to me that when there is a Bill which is important, a Bill which changes the structure of a company which has been publicly owned since the 1940s, the people of Canada and Members of Parliament in particular have a right to expect more than one hour's notice before beginning debate on the subject.

It seems to me that what the Government is doing today in its proposal is not based on any real evidence that the privatization of Eldorado Nuclear, which is owned by the Government of Canada and the Saskatchewan mineral corporation, which is owned by the Government of Saskatchewan, will create a more efficient, better operated and more profitable company than the existing publicly owned corporation. What we have here is a decision to go ahead with privatization based not on any real need or any real benefits but almost exclusively on the ideological approach of the Conservative Government that anything operated by the private sector will be done better than that done by a publicly owned corporation.

This type of approach by the Government rejects all the history of the country. The economic lines of North America run north and south, not east and west. If the people who were members of the Conservative Party just before Canada became a country had the same approach which this Government has then there would be no country. Sir John A. Macdonald was the first Prime Minister and Leader of the Conservative Party. When discussions took place as to what should happen with the then colonies established by Great Britain in the northern half of North America he realized that unless the Government took the leadership and insisted, planned and pushed for the establishment of a railway which would bind the colonies from the Atlantic to the Pacific, something which would encourage, permit and almost demand movement from east to west, there would have been no country.

The same is true of many of the existing Crown corporations, both federal and provincial. After all, it was a Liberal Government which established the airline which at that time was called Trans-Canada Air Lines and which is now called Air Canada. Why did the then Government do that? It was not composed of wild-eyed socialists. In fact, if I remember correctly it was that tycoon, that great supporter of the free enterprise system, Mr. C. D. Howe, who set up the publicly owned airline.

Why did he do it? He did it because private interests were not ready to do it. They did not see the profits, at least not in the near future. So the then Government of Canada set up an airline as a publicly owned corporation.

Here in the Province of Ontario there exists a big asset which belongs to the people of Ontario. It is one of the biggest reasons that they have been able to be so successful in setting up manufacturing industries which can compete with the United States and with other countries around the world. It is because they have cheap power. Why do they have cheap power? They have cheap power because Ontario Hydro is publicly owned.

It was not some wild-eyed radical socialist who first established Ontario Hydro as a publicly owned corporation. It was Sir Adam Beck, the Leader of the Conservative Party. No Party in Ontario since then has suggested for a moment that Ontario Hydro should be privatized. In fact, the example which Ontario set has been followed in virtually every other province in the country.

We have very few privately owned electric power producing companies. Some of the publicly owned hydroelectric systems were established by, as I said, a Conservative Government of Ontario. In other provinces they were established by Liberal Governments. In the Province of Saskatchewan one was established by a CCF, NDP Government. In the Province of British Columbia one was established by a Social Credit Government. Why did these Governments do that? Because it made sense to have a publicly owned corporation which could produce and distribute the power much more efficiently and much more cheaply than any private company could have done.

There are dozens of examples of that type in the country, both at the federal and provincial levels. Crown corporations were set up because the Government of the day, federal or provincial, realized that there was a need to meet certain requirements of the people of that province or of the people of Canada as a whole and they took action. Those needs are still here. I am not saying that those two companies must be maintained as publicly owned enterprises because everything should be publicly owned. What I am saying is that there has been no real case made for the privatization of those companies. There is no evidence that the people of Canada really believe that we need to privatize all or most of the companies, both federal and provincial, which are operating as Crown corporations.

On the part of this Government we see the movement to privatize some of the smaller publicly owned corporations. It certainly has not been ready to bring forward proposals to privatize Air Canada, Canadian National, or any of the other major publicly owned corporations.

Let me deal with two illustrations of successful privatization mentioned by the Minister in her speech. Let me deal for a moment with Fisheries Products International. The fact is it was privatized. It was publicly owned at one point. Why was it publicly owned? Because the private companies that were operating in the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast were losing money, were inefficient, and were virtually bankrupt. At that point the Government of Canada stepped in and took them over and created a publicly owned corporation, Fisheries Products International. When the industry was rationalized through public ownership, when the debts had been absorbed, and when the company became efficient and profitable, because of its ideological blinders, that is when the Government decided to privatize it. Having absorbed all the losses first created by private ownership, it is then sold back to the investors in order that they can make a profit.

For a moment let us look at Canadair. I am sure that some of my colleagues who will be dealing with this at a later stage will go into more detail, but let us look at what happened at de Havilland. Because of the type of labour practices exercised by the private corporation which took over de Havilland there was a strike. The workers at de Havilland had to go on strike in order to maintain the labour conditions and the security of employment which they had when the company was publicly owned.

They were and are concerned about the fact that much of the technology which was worked out when the company was publicly owned has now gone to corporate headquarters in the United States. When the company was publicly owned local servicing and the supply of components was done by privately owned companies mainly in Ontario. The union is worried and the people of Canada should be worried about how much of that local servicing will continue to be done in Canada.

Lastly, the research and development that was done when the company was publicly owned, how much of that will be done in Canada? There may be more jobs. But it seems to us, and it seems to the union, that there will be a repetition of what happened in the automobile industry. Yes, there are more jobs in the automobile industry now than there were before the Auto Pact. But there is virtually no research and development in the auto industry done in Canada because it is all concentrated in and around the head offices of the multinational corporations that have plants in Canada.

It is also worth noting that until now the Government has concentrated its privatization efforts on some of the smaller corporations which were publicly owned. We saw the Government dispose of Canadian Arsenals; now it is proposing to dispose of Eldorado Nuclear. There is no evidence that the Canadian public wants the Government of Canada to privatize the major Crown corporations.

There was an Environics poll published earlier this month in The Globe and Mail on March 5, 1988, on the question of selling Crown corporations. When asked in this national poll whether the Government should or should not sell Air Canada, 31 per cent of Canadians indicated that they believed that the Government should, but 51 per cent indicated that they opposed the sale or privatization of Air Canada. When asked the same question about Petro-Canada, 33 per cent of Canadians supported the idea that Petro-Canada should be sold, and 50 per cent opposed the sale of Petro-Canada.

Therefore, we do not say that we are opposed to any privatization. We say that we are opposed to privatization for the sake of privatization. We say that the Canadian public agrees with us in that approach.

Let us look at Eldorado Nuclear as a company. As the Minister indicated, it was formed in 1942 and acquired by the federal Government shortly after that. Very quickly the federal Government of the day realized the implications of nuclear energy, and used the declaratory power it had to assume jurisdiction in this sector. This was a very significant step, one that should not and was not undertaken lightly. Similarly, the step that the Government is now taking to get out of the active mining and processing of uranium in Canada is also one that should not be taken lightly. We intend to debate this question seriously, and when it goes to committee to ask for and to demand very precise answers to many of the questions which we believe need to be asked.

There are profound nuclear, environmental, competition and public policy issues which have to be faced. It is our contention that the Government has not addressed any of those problems in Bill C-121.

By leaving the uranium field the Government, by its own admission, no longer wishes to be involved in discovery, mining, or processing of uranium ore for which Canada is one of the leading sources in the world, if not the major source. If this Bill is passed, the Government is contending that it will leave a complete regulatory scheme in place through the Atomic Energy Control Board and federal regulation. It loses the hands-on experience with uranium, particularly with the high grade uranium ores found in northern Saskatchewan. Given the experience in other countries and in other jurisdictions, we maintain that this is a very serious derogation of the authority and control which any federal Government should exercise in this area.

Message from the Senate

Since this Bill leaves the responsibility for dealing with nuclear waste largely with the federal Government, it is appropriate to ask why the experience in dealing with uranium ore is being forgone. Indeed the disposal of nuclear waste is the nuclear nightmare which must be addressed now. I must admit that the question of the disposal of nuclear waste has not been a major problem for me personally. However, the Minister knows that there is a great deal of concern, apprehension, and opposition to the experiments being conducted in Manitoba which many people believe will lead, if they are not prohibited, to the disposal of nuclear waste in that province. Again, as the Minister knows, there is a great deal of opposition to that in the Province of Manitoba.

• (1640)

The Eldorado waste disposal sites in the Port Hope uranium refinery area are operating on a year by year basis and no replacement has yet been found. This question must be resolved quickly, yet the Government is content to get rid of the corporation without addressing this pressing question. I say to the Minister that we will insist upon much more detailed answers than the few blithe words with which she seemed to dispose of this very important and serious question during her discussion of the Bill.

Does the inability to find new waste sites or even deal with the problems at the existing Welcome site, which is now closed, and the Granby site, which is now open on a temporary basis, say something profound about the future of uranium mining and the use of uranium in Canada, if not in the world?

I ask the question because this problem is not only causing concern in Canada but is causing tremendous concern, apprehension, and debate in the United States. We have received no answers from the Government. It seems to be sloughing off the question altogether.

Is the issue of uranium wastes so fraught with danger that a drastic scaling down, if not phasing out, of uranium use is likely to be in the cards? We do not know, but we certainly think that the matter needs to be discussed. Many responsible people believe that this is so.

The federal New Democratic Party has consistently called for a full-scale investigation of the nuclear fuel cycle and has appointed two caucus Members, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), to address the question They have been travelling across the country, holding hearings, and meeting with people who are involved and concerned. This is something that should have been done by the Government before it brought forward the proposal. Members of my Party regard the question as a serious one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately I must interrupt the Hon. Member at this time. He will be allowed to continue later.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills: Bill C-119, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1988; Bill C-120, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1989; and Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall
Ottawa

March 29, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Eric Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 29th day of March, 1988, at 4:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not want to interrupt the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) earlier, but since there has been an interruption I should like to point out that he began his remarks by saying that he had not had sufficient notice of the Bill today.

I would like it on record that he was offered, and I think received, a full briefing from my officials on Friday and that the Bill was on the Order Paper this morning at nine o'clock as a back-up Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, let me just say that there seems to have been a breakdown in communications among the House Leaders, because this Bill was not on the list of business for today which we received. I did not know about it, as I said, until two o'clock.

In the course of her discussion the Minister said that the jobs of the workers in the industry would be protected and that, as a matter of fact, there might well be more work. We have heard that before, but if there are questions about safety and decisions about scaling down the operations, which there may well be, we can foresee the privately owned industry saying that it cannot afford to scale down its operations because earnings will be lost and so on. What if the federal Government were to close its operations for the sake of safety?

Another problem is that at the present time all uranium ore produced by Eldorado is at the Port Hope refinery, the only uranium refinery in Canada. Any company wanting to ship unprocessed uranium must apply for an individual exemption. It already has a partner, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, which is shipping unprocessed uranium. No doubt pressure will be exerted to continue and to expand this exemption. How can the Government insist that upgrading continue when the company which is expected to uphold this policy no longer supports it? It may not be in its financial interest.

I should like to say something about the supposed competitive aspects of the new merged company. Nothing has been more troubling to the federal Government in recent years in this field than the identification and participation of Canada in a uranium selling cartel from 1972 to 1979. We have been given joint credit for starting the cartel with Australia and other participants including South Africa, France, and the multinational mining company, Rio Tinto Zinc. In just three years the price of uranium yellowcake went from $7 to $42 per pound and then collapsed when the cartel disbanded. Needless to say it was not a secret that there was a cartel.

In fact, the Combines Investigation Branch conducted a four-year investigation which ended with a report that was sent to the Department of Justice in 1981, when we had a Liberal Government. Despite demands by Members of Parliament who are now on the government side but were then in the Opposition that the report be made public, it was not done by the former Government. Now that former Members of the Opposition, the Conservative Members, are on the government side, they are adopting the same silent treatment that the former Liberal Government used. This is just another example showing that there is really not much difference between the two sides.

In order to dispel any notion that this merger will make cartelization of the Canadian uranium industry inevitable, we believe that the report which was brought down in 1981 must be made public. Anyone following events in the uranium industry knows that Denison Mines made an offer to purchase Eldorado and was refused and that Denison holds profitable supply contracts with Ontario Hydro and would dearly love to have access to the low-cost uranium available from northern Saskatchewan. There is nothing to prevent Denison Mines from purchasing a significant percentage of the shares of this new company when both companies which are publicly owned are privatized.

Despite the provisions for restricting individual shares in the new company to 25 per cent, it is not hard to see a takeover by like-minded partners once shares are on the public market. The idea that the newly formed corporation will remain a widely held one flies in the face of the takeover activity so obvious on world stock markets in the past few years.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1700)

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

> Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971—Chapter no. 8.
> Bill C-119, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988—Chapter 9.
> Bill C-120, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canda for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988—Chapter 10.

CONSUMER PACKAGING AND LABELLING ACT (BILINGUALISM)

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved that Bill C-280, an Act to amend the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act (bilingualism), be now read for the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his kind words in support of this Bill and to tell him that we all recognize the major contribution he has made by his consistently positive comments about official languages and the concern he has always shown for the official languages of Canada.

Madam Speaker, I introduced Bill C-280 on February 8, 1988, because after reading Bill C-72, which is now being considered by the House and which was examined in Committee this very afternoon, as I know from spending a good part of the day there, I could find no provision dealing with consumer packaging and labelling. After having noted this omission, I prepared the Bill on labelling now before the House. Some people might think it coincidental that this Bill should have been introduced at the same time as we began debate on second reading of Bill C-72, in which many Canadians have expressed a lot of interest. I must tell you, Madam Speaker, that it is no coincidence, because those who depend on coincidence in politics do not last very long.

In fact, Madam Speaker, I introduced this Bill precisely because, as I said earlier, Bill C-72 to amend the Official Languages Act does not deal with the important issue of consumer labelling. Yet, I believe that labelling is important as it concerns public safety and the right of the Canadians to know what a consumer product contains, and also to obtain this information in their own official language, because we must not forget that, according to relatively recent figures, there are in Canada 4,200,950 unilingual Francophones, 13,804,195 unilingual Anglophones and 3,681,960 bilingual people. These figures were given to me by Statistics Canada. I mention them because we must not forget that, in this vast country, consumer products which are sold and manufactured in one region or province are often transported and consumed elsewhere and must be labelled properly if Canadians are to be well-informed about their contents.

In many cases, the packaging and labelling of consumer products probably represents the first contact many young Canadians have with the linguistic duality of their country.

Everywhere, in their consumer environment, young people see, read and gradually absorb this reality of our society. They realize that in Canada, there are two official languages, two main languages. Many seldom or never hear the other official language. But the simple fact that it is there on a package of corn flakes or in the instructions provided with a toy or a tool that is used on a daily basis, such as a farm implement or a mower, the fact that instructions are available both in English and French has, in my opinion, a bearing on Canadians in their daily lives.

When bringing forward this bill, my intention was not only to provide young Canadians with a reason to learn the other language that they see on their corn flakes in the morning, as I said earlier, although the idea isn't bad since for many of these people, this would be an enriching experience. No, this is not the only purpose of this Bill. In fact, my first and foremost reason was to preserve labelling and packaging requirements by removing them from the discretionary regulatory field and putting them right in the Official Languages Act, where I think they would be sheltered from any arbitrary decision of the Governor in Council.

Madam Speaker, I felt the need to include these requirements in legislation because I was concerned. Canadians do not usually show much interest in regulations, in general, they don't really know who makes them, who controls their implementation or who amends them from time to time. Given that the Government committed the country to a free trade with the U.S., I thought it would be wise to include in legislation the requirement that consumer products provide Canadians with instructions in both English and French. As it has been said in the House on several occasions and as I have mentioned various times, the trade agreement could well deal a death blow to the specific character of Canada, unless we are careful to ensure by way of legislation that consumer products are labelled in French as well as English. Indeed, to my knowledge, there is no legislation covering consumer products, apart from those Acts which deal very specifically with medical prescription products and dangerous products, explosives, I believe. The Official Languages Act, in any case, contains no provision dealing with this matter.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, it is no coincidence that I have tabled Bill C-280. I waited to make sure that Bill C-72 contained no provision with regard to labelling. Such is the case. There are therefore no provisions, either in the present Act or in the new one, with regard to labelling and packaging and in my view, it would be a good thing to include them.

As I said, there are provisions dealing with labelling under the regulations pertaining to paragraph 18(1)(j) of the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act, whereby the Governor in Council may make regulations in matters pertaining to bilingualism. Section 6 of the regulations on packaging and labelling of consumer products deals with prescriptions and exemptions relating to bilingualism in labelling.

We should note that Section 6 contains several exceptions to the rule requiring that the information shown on the label of a prepackaged product be in both official languages. They deal with test market products, specialty products, greeting cards, books, talking toys, and games in which a knowledge of the language used is a basic factor essential to the use of the game. The Bill keeps those exceptions in order to maintain consistency throughout the legislation. That means that a whole series of regulations relating to bilingual labelling, made under other Acts and applicable to particular items, would also be exempt under Bill C-280. This is the case, for example, of baby carriages and prams, products containing petroleum distillates or pine oil, liquid cleaners for drains, and charcoal, under the Hazardous Products Act. The Explosives Act also contains standards, as well as the Radiation Emitting Devices Act and the Shipping Act.

Bill C-280 is not intended to upset completely the labelling system, but rather to strengthen the regulations by incorporating them into law. Thus, the labelling in English and French would no longer be required by regulations made by the Governor in Council, but by an Act of Parliament duly passed at all stages.

All this stems from the trade deal between the United States and Canada, which raised concerns as to its impact on the Canadian policy respecting bilingualism. Indeed, many are concerned that regulations on bilingual labelling may not be honoured by the United States who could invade the Canadian market with products labelled in one language only or who could consider regulations a commercial barrier and could perhaps . . .

M. McDermid: It is not true!

M. Gauthier: . . . I said perhaps could bring the issue to court. I heard the Hon. Member saying that it is not true. He may want to take part in the debate and correct perceptions. I said there is a perception. Interested parties have told me it is a possibility. That's why I am raising the issue. That is also why, by incorporating that labelling and packaging measure in the Official Languages Act, we could give it precedence over any future legislation arising from the trade deal under Section 3 of the present Act.

Madam Speaker, we know that, unlike an Act, regulations can be amended anytime by the Governor in Council whereas an Act must follow the various stages of the legislative process and be approved by members of both Chambers. Bill C-280 aims at ensuring that only a Parliamentary majority can legislate on that vital element of our Canadian culture and identity.

Out of respect for present regulations and the industry that has adjusted so well to them, I do not and will not propose amendments to the regulations. They are incorporated without any change in the Bill, except that the French version has been amended to correct some flaws in content and form. I sought legal advice on that and was told to tighten up and amend the French version to make it more accurate.

Madam Speaker, that explains the absence of sanctions in the Bill other than those already existing, that is those provided in sections 15, 16 and 17 of the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act regarding seizure, detention and forfeiture of consumer goods where the legislation or regulations have been violated. These would continue to apply and thus would ensure respect of the legislation. Again, as I said a moment ago, it is out of respect for the existing regulations that I decided not to add any new sanctions in the Bill. Since the present system is working, it would seem unwise to change it now and, above all, to launch a full debate on these amendments which would result in delaying passage of Bill C-280.

Madam Speaker, the bilingualism issue has achieved considerable progress these past years, through the impetus given by successive governments. First and foremost, Bill C-280 is aimed at preserving these advances in the labelling area. Time and experience have led us, Canadians, to consider as granted the fact that throughout the country our products are identified in both official languages. It is not sure whether the Americans, with the trade liberalization between our two countries, would show the same amount of good will.

Since the government did not incorporate into the trade deal clauses providing that our labelling regulations be recognized as an integral part of our cultural identity, it was necessary to proceed otherwise. A lawsuit brought under the dispute setting mechanism could easily jeopardize the obvious efforts that we have made in the labelling area.

If this bill is passed by the House, we would enjoy some form of protection since Canadian legislation is protected by the free trade agreement and particularly since the Government will be reassured, I think, concerning trade between both countries. If, Madam Speaker, pressures exerted by Americans were ever strong enough to cause us difficulties in that area of labelling and packaging, the Government would only have to say that the Canadian law prevails as passed and that the policy of the Canadian Government is to the effect that the labelling and packaging are done in Canada in both official languages.

I think, Madam Speaker, that this bill is reasonable. I do not intend to shake up or disturb anyone. There are no major changes here, except that it is time, I think, to incorporate into the law the whole question of labelling and packaging in order to ensure future continuity in that area in Canada.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate today not only because I am interested in the subject, but also because of the free trade implications which the Hon. Member has brought to the floor of the House. He has left some misconceptions which I hope to clear up.

Bill C-280, introduced by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), purports to help consumers by transferring the requirements for the bilingual labelling of consumer products into the Act itself, rather than leaving them enshrined as regulations under the Act. It was I who interrupted his speech by saying "C'est n'est pas vrai" because what he was saying was not true. I hope I can convince him that the free trade agreement in no way will jeopardize our high Canadian standards for consumer information and protection.

Presently, we have free trade in about 80 per cent of the products in which we deal with the United States. The Hon. Member raises the fear that the Americans will come here and insist upon unilingual packaging. I assume they would have done that long before now.

The needs of bilingual labelling are already being fulfilled on a uniform basis across Canada by regulations under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. These regulations have the full force of the law.

Both I and the Government fully support current statutory and regulatory requirements for bilingual labelling of consumer products. The changes proposed in Bill C-280 are purely cosmetic and totally unnecessary.

Let me point out why. I believe the Hon. Member admitted today that the Government has a full, firm and unwavering commitment to bilingualism. It has made public statements regarding free trade and its impact on bilingual labelling. There is a self-evident lack of any rationale whatsoever for change. As well, the present regulatory structure has been operating for almost 20 years, with no operational failures or glitches.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) recently released an assessment of the effect of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement on Canadian consumers. This assessment is a sound, objective and scholarly study of free trade's impact on consumers. I want to congratulate the Minister and his department for producing this information.

This assessment addressed the specific question of the potential impact of the free trade agreement on Canadian technical standards for consumer information and protection. It noted that the free trade agreement will benefit consumers by allowing for increased consumer access to imports, where technical standards unnecessarily restrict U.S. imports. In this way, the provisions of the agreement concerning technical standards ensure that consumers will realize the potential benefits from the elimination of customs tariffs.

Canadian consumers will receive the benefit of greater access to U.S. products, and at the same time under the agreement, in the words of the assessment: "Consumer information and protection is accepted as a legitimate reason to maintain technical standards. Thus, Canada's consumer information and protection legislative provisions will remain in place to protect consumers".

Canada's standards for consumer protection and information, including requirements for bilingual labelling, are among the highest in the world. This Government intends to see that they stay that way. This is not just in the area of bilingual labelling, but across the full spectrum of consumer protection and information.

For example, under the free trade agreement, bilingual labelling, as required by Canadian law, is not affected. The Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act will continue to ensure that Canadians can determine whether a product is of Canadian or U.S. origin. Canadian health and safety symbols such as the hazardous product symbols will not be affected. Canadian safety standards that exceed those in the United States, such as our crib standards, will not be relaxed.

In short, the position of the Canadian consumer after free trade comes into effect can be summed up quite simply: under the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement, Canadian consumers will be safeguarded by standards that are equal to or higher than those they enjoy now.

If the Hon. Member who introduced Bill C-280 were really serious about safeguarding the interests of the Canadian consumer, I believe he would be supporting the free trade agreement rather than opposing it.

When the agreement is fully implemented in January, 1998, Canadian consumers will reap a number of important benefits. A number of consumer gains can be expected when customs tariffs which we are currently paying on U.S. goods are completely eliminated, as they will be under the agreement. The cost of living of low income families will decline by 3 per cent, or about $325 a year. The cost of living for middle and high income families will decline by 2 per cent, or about $800 a year. The average family of four will save between $85 and $130 annually on food expenditures. The increased competition from imports will improve the price, quality and variety of all consumer products, including those produced in Canada.

As these facts and figures indicate, Canadian consumers will benefit tremendously from free trade, while high Canadian technical standards designed to protect the consumers' interest, including our bilingual labelling requirements, are maintained.

There is no need to amend the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. Under the regulations we have now, Canadian consumers are provided with bilingual labelling. This Government does not intend to tamper with success. For example, since I am working on my French, this weekend I assembled a wardrobe according to the French instructions. Those requirements for bilingual labelling with be maintained. This success has continued for 20 years. Our Government guarantees that Canadian consumers will continue to have the bilingual labelling information they need, and to which they have every right.

Bill C-280 will not improve the access that Canadians have to bilingual labelling under this Government. In fact, it may well jeopardize it by needlessly tinkering with a system that is already working very well. The Bill deserves to die on the Order Paper.

• (1730)

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-280, which has been presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

An Hon. Member: A very distinguished gentleman.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Yes, I agree he is a very distinguished Member. After all, as a colleague of his, working on the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages, we have become well acquainted and I have developed a good deal of regard for the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. It is perhaps worth noting that the Ottawa Citizen shows that this is a good day to say a few words about M. Bilinguisme in its paragraphs about his work in the Province of Ontario in advancing education for Franco-Ontarians and pressing for immersion programs for the English-speaking, and so on, which are important parts of his political and public career.

Mr. McDermid: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I think I hear the Parliamentary Secretary echoing my comments. Because I was at committee I arrived a little late so I unfortunately did not catch the Parliamentary Secretary's first comments, but his notes probably did not include these compliments, so it is a pleasure now to pass them on indirectly from the Parliamentary Secretary.

I did arrive in sufficient time, however, to catch the suggestion of the Parliamentary Secretary that the Bill is unnecessary and to listen to his reassurances that the achievement of a trade arrangement with the United States, which will have all kinds of radical impacts on the Canadian economic, social and political system, did not represent a threat to one of the very important commercial aspects of bilingualism in Canada, the regulations, in fact, which require labelling and packaging of items in English and French.

I must confess that I am not nearly as sure as the Parliamentary Secretary. The Government's performance in these areas has not often been reassuring. When I think of the activities of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in particular, or as he is labelled unofficially, the Minister for consumer loss and corporate profit, I think of his efforts on behalf of the International Pharmaceutical Manufacturers. The Government's intention was allegedly entirely distinct from any pressure from the United States, or from any kind of link to the bilateral negotiation carried on with the United States. Here was a good thing which the Canadian people would have to accept. Here was a necessary change. The licensing provisions under which drugs could be manufactured in Canada by generic producers were so objectionable, presumably, to the Canadian people that they simply had to be changed. The Canadian people did not have to worry about the consequences of it. The result would not be higher drug prices.

But in fact, once the changes were made, Canadians experienced far higher drug prices. Very steep increases in drug prices have occurred just within the last few months and it has become clear in the last months of the bilateral trade negotiations that in the American mind, these changes in the pharmaceutical and manufacturing licensing provisions were part of the negotiations.

The Canadian office involved with these trade negotiations desperately sought to get these provisions off the record, removed from the final documents. The fact that they were in other documents certainly allowed one to infer that they had been part and parcel of the whole thing. If it was not being done to satisfy the American administration and international pharmaceutical manufacturers, it certainly was not being done for the advantage of Canadian consumers, not by a long shot. It is all too likely not to be done to the advantage of Canadian scientists or researchers either, because the changes, we are told by the pharmaceutical manufacturers themselves, are not going to lead to any great increase in research in Canada. We have been sold a bill of goods by the Minister for consumer loss and corporate profit.

A Government which is capable of pulling off that kind of stunt is capable of exactly what the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is suggesting in the speech he made in support of this Bill. A Government that does that is capable of doing away with the regulations under which Canadian manufacturers have been operating. It is recognized that if there is this great change in our trading relations with the United States, if the agreement is actually carried through, if tariffs drop, there is surely going to be a significant increase in trade into Canada of grocery products.

Canadian producers of agricultural products, which are processed to make many of these grocery products, have expressed concern about that. Surely, it was very convincing to have the head of the McCain foods manufacturing empire, which began in New Brunswick and has spread out across the country, telling us that the consequences of this trade deal were going to be very serious for Canadian agricultural producers. The survival of our supply management programs, the maintenance of prices for Canadian producers, will be made very difficult under the pressure of products coming from the United States. What he was saying was that he himself supported our marketing board arrangements, and the pressure he would be under he saw as having only the most serious and detrimental effects on Canadian agricultural producers. If in fact we maintain our marketing boards and keep our prices as we want, the result will surely be the undercutting and the flowing in of products.

The Government seems to be completely committed to the idea of vastly increased trade. In those circumstances, when the Government comes under pressure from American producers of grocery products and other items which are affected by this legislation, who want to get into the Canadian market and who are going to be attacking every single item that impedes their free operation in Canada, surely the pressure will develop in the area of regulations.

The Parliamentary Secretary shakes his head vigorously. It is, of course, in his political interest. He has been defending the trade agreement with the United States. It is always a good thing. He has had to talk the government line so much that the blinkers are very tight next to his head.

Mr. McDermid: We are talking bilingualism.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I am, too. I am speaking about the impact of increased trade—

Mr. McDermid: We are talking about the very foundation of this country. Come on, get serious.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): —the pressure from American producers, their demands, that bilingual packaging is one of the impediments to their activity in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense. It is not true.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Given the lack of principle we have seen in the case of the Minister for consumer loss and corporate profit, in his activities on pharmaceutical drug licensing, we have every reason to want to take the regulations under which these things are done in Canada and put them into law. We have every reason to want to make these provisions, which are important to commerce, which are absolutely vital to the purchasing of products by Canadians who are unilingual and French, into law. It is absolutely essential that the products be made available to them in both languages. We want to be sure that that is going to stand forever. The way to do that is to have it in law. This Parliament has to change the legislation, not simply leave it to the regulations and to the activities of the Cabinet.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to address my remarks on Bill C-280 to the underlying premise that has been suggested as presenting a need for the Bill. I want to say that I disagree completely with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and his suggestion as to why this Bill should be considered. I also want to take issue with the Member who presented this Bill, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). As has been said previously, Canadian consumers enjoy the benefit of a highly developed system for protection from inferior and unsafe products, and for the provision of information regarding the packaging and labelling of consumer products. These requirements are known as technical regulations.

Many people consider Canadian technical regulations for consumer information and protection to be among the best in the world, and they are. The present system evolved over 18 years since the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act was first introduced in 1970. In fact, there are some deficiencies and some voids in that legislation. Bilingual labelling is not one of them.

Earlier on this year I offered my own motion during Private Members' Business regarding consumer labelling. It was Motion No. 86. It dealt with drug labelling and the need for total and complete labelling of all the ingredients in prescription and non-prescription drugs. That motion was debated in the House on August 18, 1987, just about a year ago.

As a result of that motion I appeared before the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare and explained the need for the implementation of my motion. The Minister also appeared. It is likely now that both the industry and the Government will work toward bringing the provisions of my motion forward. I hope to have more to say about that subject one of these days. Notwithstanding some of the voids, such as the one I pointed out regarding the need for complete and total labelling of all the ingredients in a product on the package, with respect to the packaged foods we buy or whether it be prescription or non-prescription drugs which currently do not necessarily include all of the ingredients, our consumer laws are still among the best in the world.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would have us tamper with a system for consumer protection that has been working perfectly well for more than a decade and a half. He does so not to improve the requirements for consumer information but suggests that somehow the requirements that we now have should be rewritten and the format placed in law rather than the technical regulations which outline them.

There is absolutely no need for that to be done. The Hon. Member has introduced a justification that somehow by placing these factors in an Act of Parliament they will not be vulnerable to modification or non-compliance as a result of the recently concluded and soon to be implemented Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I find it rather strange that the Leader of the Party of the Hon. Member who presents this Bill travels around the nation making speeches about how he will tear up the agreement should he ever become Prime Minister. If we were to take him seriously then we would have to conclude that if we accept the premise of this Bill then the Hon. Member must be suggesting that he has very little confidence that his leader, the Hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), will become Prime Minister. Obviously, if that were to occur there would be no need for this Bill.

There is no need for this Bill because frankly, the present Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act provides the statutory basis for the bilingual labelling of consumer goods. The Act and its regulations quite properly reflect the linguistic requirements of Canada. Most consumer pre-packaged products must display mandatory labelling in both French and English. This is equally true for goods of Canadian and foreign origin.

Canadian consumers have the right to full and complete information about the products they buy in both official languages. As consumers we must all be able to make informed and intelligent decisions in the market-place. To do so we need information. We should be able to obtain that information in whichever of Canada's official language we are most comfortable with. The Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act guarantees certain mandatory information. The regulations requiring bilingual labelling ensure that this information is provided in both French and English.

As I said, this system has been working well since the Act was passed in the early 1970s. It is consistent and is familiar to business and industry, both foreign and domestic. Suppliers know what is required of them. They have been providing bilingual labelling information to meet this requirement. In fact, I suggest they would do it as a consumer marketing device even if it were not required.

Why introduce an unnecessary change and uncertainty into a well functioning system? The reason it has been advanced for tinkering is that somehow it has something to do with the free trade agreement. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier wants to advance by hint, implication or innuendo the totally false idea that bilingualism will be affected by the free trade agreement. He does so presumably to undermine the strong and growing support for the free trade agreement as the benefits become known and understood by Canadians.

It is likely that the free trade agreement will be the best thing that ever happened to the Canadian consumer. Tariffs on American consumer goods will be totally phased out when the agreement is fully implemented. Consumers will save significantly as a result. The average consumer will likely save in the order of $500 per year. It has been suggested by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that the cost of an entire household of goods, services and appliances could be reduced by as much as $8,000. Consumers will also save because Canadian-made goods will be cheaper in price as our manufacturers gear up to access the huge American market. Service will also improve the competition, as will the choice and availability of products in the market-place.

Yes, the lot of Canadian consumers will change dramatically under free trade, and change for the better. But one thing that will not change as a result of free trade is the consumers' right to product information on pre-packaged goods in both English and French.

Bilingual labelling, as required by Canadian law, is not affected by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Despite the arguments that have been suggested here today the Government has gone on record to assure Canadians that those labelling requirements will remain an integral part of our consumer protection regulations.

The Hon. Member who sponsors this Bill has long been a promoter and staunch supporter of bilingualism. In fact, today in the local newspaper, The Ottawa Citizen, he was referred to as Mr. Bilingualism. I suggest he has nothing to fear as a result of the free trade agreement. If he wishes to further the interests of the Canadian consumer then he should be working to support the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. However, it seems that he is using his professed ideals of bilingualism as a stalking horse to attack the free trade agreement and to induce confusion. As a result, he does a disservice to the interests of Canadian consumers.

This is an unnecessary piece of legislation that would do nothing to enhance bilingualism and do nothing to improve things for Canadian consumers. I suggest that the Bill be rejected.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to take part in this discussion on Bill C-280 introduced by our distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and which is entitled: An Act to amend the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act (bilingualism).

Madam Speaker, I heard with great interest the speeches made in the House especially by Tory members, although I have also listened to the speech made by our NDP colleague. His comments were quite relevant, but I cannot say the same of those made by Tory members because I do not understand their way of thinking on that Bill.

Madam Speaker, some members maintain today that we should not amend the present legislation because we should not try to fix something that is not broken. It is a rather interesting way of thinking. We could say likewise: "Why did we sign a free trade agreement; our trade relations were surely not broken, so why fix them?" Moreover, I think that the word fix would be somewhat exaggerated under the circumstances since, as we know, the trade deal has almost nothing good to offer Canadians. In fact, the agreement itself will be disruptive instead of fixing things up.

Even those who approve the trade deal, and there are very few, would agree with me that the Government has fixed what was not broken.

Therefore, it seems that this conservative way of thinking, this traditional approach that one must not touch anything, does not apply to the free trade agreement. And it does not apply either to Bill C-280 brought forward by our distinguished colleague from Ottawa—Vanier, I suppose.

Madam Speaker, we are told that the present legislation is adequate since it did work for a number of years. It is a fact that this legislation introduced by a Liberal Government has been on the books for a long time. Besides, it was a good measure introduced by a Liberal Government which I would like to commend for what it did in order to have labelling of consumer products in both official languages in our country.

That legislation did encounter some resistance at the beginning from people who complained about the complications and the difficulties they were likely to face at breakfast time since they would have to turn over their Corn Flakes box to read what it says. That was a hard thing to get used to for those poor people. They have all my sympathy, as you can understand, Madam Speaker.

But once they recovered from that serious ordeal, they finally got used to this new legislation or these new regulations on bilingual labelling of consumer products.

And these regulations have been in force since then, but then they were not questioned at all. The only problem came from those few Canadians who did not want any bilinguism at all, but I think that the majority of Canadians agreed, that many in fact were happy when we finally had bilingual labelling in Canada.

However, the situation is different today. We are faced with the threat that comes from the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) free trade agreement. And I see that the opposite Member does not seem to be absolutely convinced that free trade poses a threat. But we all know that the free trade agreement makes no mention at all of bilingual labelling of consumer products. But we also know, Madam Speaker, that one of the objectives of the agreement is to suppress barriers or so-called barriers to bilateral trade in goods and services between Canada and the United States.

The Agreement states and I quote:

> Each Party shall, to the extent provided in this Agreement, accord national treatment with respect to investment and to trade in goods and services.

This is what is stated in clause 105 of the free trade agreement.

A little further in the free trade agreement, in Chapter 6, Madam Speaker, under the title "Technical Barriers", it is stated that technical standards relating to products can sometimes constitute barriers to trade. Now, Madam Speaker, Americans are well known for their melting pot mentality; it is quite normal for them that everybody, not only in their country but everywhere in the world, speak their language. Since it is their language, if it is good for them it must be good for everybody; it is good especially for them, but according to their way of thinking it must be good for everybody.

On that basis how can we be sure that they will not consider our labelling standards as some kind of a barrier to trade? Will they say: You know, Canadians do not really need bilingual labelling? Americans might view this as a malicious attempt by Canadians to interfere with trade. They would then say that such a requirement is unreasonable. Some Members will reply that the Americans know better than that. Well, we have had dealings with them in the past. We know that they can be reasonable at times and not so reasonable at other times, that theirs is a rather insular country, and that they often forget that there are other people in this world.

Madam Speaker, article 603 of the agreement provides that neither party will maintain or adopt normative measures which would create needless obstacles to their bilateral trade. Of course, labelling in both official languages is quite useful. We, Canadians, would therefore not view this requirement as needless. However, to come back to what I said earlier, I am not at all convinced that the Americains would not view it as an attempt to disrupt the American trading system.

On the other hand, a preliminary comment in chapter 6, which is not included in the Agreement, states that no provision of the Agreement will prevent Canada from requiring the bilingual labelling of products on the condition that this requirement apply to both domestic and imported products. However, this is not included in the Agreement, but only in a sort of preamble. These are preliminary comments at the beginning of chapter 6. They are not included in any article of the Agreement itself.

Therefore, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is now giving every one of us the opportunity to take practical action to reaffirm our commitment to bilinguism under the Act as concerns the labelling of consumer products.

As indicated earlier, Section 6 of the consumer labelling regulations now stipulate in which languages the information on consumer products must be written. However, these are only regulations, not an Act of Parliament. What the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is giving us today is an opportunity to take this action and to indicate clearly that we find this so important that it should be stated in an Act of Parliament rather than in administrative regulations established by Cabinet.

I therefore urge all my colleagues in this House to support the very useful proposal contained in Bill C-280.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—FUNDING OF NDP MUNICIPAL ELECTION CANDIDATES—ISSUANCE OF RECEIPTS FOR TAX DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I can see by the look on your face that the last thing you wanted to hear this evening is the story of my life. Brace yourself, Madam Speaker, because I am going to tell you just a little excerpt from my life history. I know that it does not really come as much of a surprise to you to know that before I stood for Parliament I served for 10 years as a municipal councillor in municipal government.

• (1800)

I served in my own municipality in Metropolitan Toronto as an alderman for four years and as a mayor of my community of East York for some six years. East York is one of the six cities which make up Metropolitan Toronto, and I had the honour of serving on the East York Council for some 10 years.

During that period of time I stood for election some five times. I can see, Madam Speaker, that you are thanking your lucky stars that you and I do not have to stand for election to this House every two years. However, I stood for election every two years at that time.

At the time of my very first election I remember thinking to myself where I would get the money from to afford my election campaign. Fortunately that very first time, although I had a lot of help—and I have had ever since—from friends, neighbours, and family who volunteered and helped me out free of charge—I had one neighbour, Charlie Greco, who tried to raise a little money for me. In fact, he raised the grand sum of something like $200. Together with other donations, during the campaign I received something like $300 in all.

I know, Madam Speaker, that you are as aware as I am that one cannot run an election campaign, even a municipal one, on something like $300. In fact, it costs thousands of dollars, not hundreds of dollars, for a campaign. I paid for it out of my own pocket, apart from the magnificent sum of $300 that I received in donations.

It is interesting to note that during that election campaign one main issue concerned development in my community and whether or not candidates were for or against redeveloping an industrial area in my community with high-rise apartments. I, as well as others, took a very hard stand against that redevelopment proposal. Out of that campaign as well came a question from the residents about whether I would accept money and donations from developers to run my campaign. Having taken the position which I did, it was obvious that there was no developer who would give me a single, solitary cent to help me in my campaign. This is another reason that I financed my campaign basically out of my pocket. That was my first election campaign.

I stood for another one as an alderman. At that time I again had to finance the campaign almost entirely out of my own pocket. In fact, nobody decided to take up a collection for me in that campaign. I guess they thought that I had been living out of the public trough, after all, for two years and that I must have amassed an enormous amount and did not need any financial help from other people.

After that I stood for mayor. As I know you are aware, Madam Speaker, a mayoralty campaign across a city costs an awful lot more money than an aldermanic campaign. Once again I had help and assistance from a couple of lawyer friends of mine. Jim Sintzel and Ed Jupp went around to friends, neighbours, and local businesses to see what they could do to raise some money for me. In fact they were somewhat successful, but certainly there was a substantial shortfall. It turned out again that I had to put my hand into my pocket to help finance the difference.

This is the way it was in my second mayoralty campaign and my third mayoralty campaign. Each time virtually all the funds came out of my own pocket. It did not come from other people. It did not come from developers. Basically I financed it myself, and none of the people who donated to my campaign expected to get a tax receipt from it. They all knew that they were not going to get a tax receipt which they could use to write off against their provincial or federal income taxes. They did not expect that at all. In fact, they assumed that it was actually illegal under the Income Tax Act and under the Election Expenses Act. Not only did they assume it was illegal but they assumed that it was certainly contrary to the intent and the spirit of elections legislation and of the Income Tax Act, for that matter, that they should get some sort of a tax benefit from this sort of thing.

What do you think my surprise was, Madam Speaker, when I learned that the NDP federal Party was actually giving tax receipts for donations to municipal NDP candidates in Toronto? The Party was giving federal tax receipts to people who made donations. It was a shock to me, a real shock, because this was coming from the NDP. The Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), is always critical of others, always self-righteous with others, always sanctimonious, always holier than thou and always beyond reproach. This was coming from the NDP, the Party led by the Hon. Member for Oshawa who is always critical of tax loopholes. In fact, it found a magnificent tax loophole and was using it to rip off the ordinary Canadians that the Party tells us it is championing.

Tonight I have one solitary question for the Parliamentary Secretary and one only. Will she permit the NDP and its Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, to get away with this rip-off of ordinary Canadian taxpayers or is she going to do something about it?

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, first I want to commend my hon. colleague for saying that he believes in the honest financing of election campaigns. I do not know if he is aware of this, but last weekend in Montreal, the Quebec wing of our Party voted on a resolution to exclude contributions from companies precisely to make the whole process of financing election campaigns very transparent and honest. If he is preaching to me, he finds in me a convert.

The very short answer to the Hon. Member's question is no, of course not. The Government of Canada could not stand by and see the Election Expenses Act and the Income Tax Act being contravened by anyone, let alone by a Canadian political Party, be it the NDP or any other Party.

The Hon. Member brought up a particular incident with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) which occurred back in December of 1987, and he is asking for a longer answer to that today. First I must tell him that confidentiality does not allow me to discuss particular receipts that might have been given for any particular contributions. All records having to do with the payment of income tax, as the Hon. Member should well know, are confidential. I cannot talk about any particular contribution, but I can tell him that the system is quite ironclad in terms of what constitutes a legitimate contribution to a political Party.

At the federal level, only contributions to a bona fide political Party will be recognized under the Income Tax Act. The receipt is issued on the basis that it is a direct contribution to a recognized political Party at the federal level for a federal election. If a complaint were to be made to Revenue Canada that certain receipts were issued for a certain candidate who did not run federally, the person who requested the receipt would find that receipt denied. If the receipt had already been given to that person under investigation, Revenue Canada would find that person in contravention of the Income Tax Act and the elections legislation. Therefore, very severe penalties would be applied.

I can assure my hon. colleague that if he is privy to any such information, Revenue Canada will consider it very seriously, as it would any request from any other Hon. Member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—CIA FUNDING OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS—REQUEST FOR EX GRATIA PAYMENT TO VICTIMS/REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to once again draw to the attention of the Government of Canada a profound injustice which has affected a number of our fellow citizens. I refer, of course, to those Canadians who were victims of the CIA brainwashing experiments from 1957 to 1962 by Dr. Ewen Cameron at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal, Quebec. It was not until 1977 that evidence of these particular experiments became public and, as we know, too many Canadians were the victims of these terrible experiments.

The details are all too familiar to Canadians. For example, I would remind you of the case of Linda Macdonald who, between May 1 and September 12, 1963, was given more than 100 electro-shock treatments, kept in a drugged sleep for 86 days, and subjected to a long program of psychic driving. Of the many Canadians who were victims of Dr. Ewen Cameron's experiments, nine filed a lawsuit in the U.S. Federal Court against the CIA. Linda Macdonald was not one of those nine but she recently filed a suit against the Government of Canada in recognition of the fact that the Government had contributed a very substantial amount of money to these experiments by Dr. Cameron.

Earlier this year, on January 19, there was a ray of hope for the victims of these experiments because the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., ruled that all but one of the Canadian victims had the right to sue the CIA for the brainwashing experiments. Obviously this was a very positive and long overdue development. The victims had been waiting some seven years for that kind of development. However, there was then a very cruel and negative decision announced by the Government of Canada on February 12 to pay the sum of $20,000 for each of the victims to help defray their legal costs. The response to this offer was profoundly negative. Indeed, it was viewed as an insult by many Canadians, not the least of whom were the victims and their families.

[Translation]

For instance, Mr. Jean-Charles Pagé, who is 55 years old and was admitted in 1959 at the Allan Memorial for alcoholism, commented: We have been waiting for over seven years to get only this? It is very disappointing. Mr. Pagé, who lives in Saint-André, a community about 50 kilometres east of Montreal, claims that he was given electro-shock treatments and drugged, kept in a sleep for 36 days while his subconscious mind was bombarded with the same messages over and over again. He added that because of the memory lapses he has experienced from time to time due to this experiment, he has been unable to work for the past eight years.

[English]

George Cooper, who was commissioned by the Government to look into the responsibility of the Government of Canada in this matter, recommended the payment of an ex gratia amount of $100,000 to each of the victims. I would remind you as well that was despite the fact that Mr. Cooper, in an astonishing finding, held that there was no legal or moral responsibility on the Government of Canada for these terrible experiments.

• (1815)

Why the double standard in Canada? George Cooper himself received some $118,000 in legal fees. The Government paid over $650,000 in legal fees for Sinclair Stevens.

[Translation]

We heard recently that the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnettte) was going to seek an award to defray his legal costs.

Madam Speaker, I simply cannot understand how this Government can insult these victims by granting them $50,000.

[English]

I want to pay tribute, in closing, to the many Canadians who have consistently voiced their concerns about this tragic situation, including the editorial collective of Phoenix Rising, Mr. Don Weitz and a number of his colleagues who have kept pressure on the Government seeking justice at last for these victims.

I call on the Government of Canada to recognize its responsibility to these victims, to recognize that $20,000 is an insult, a pittance, to pay the victims at least the $100,000 that was recommended by the Cooper Commission and, hopefully, to assist the victims far more in their lawsuit in the United States. Justice delayed is justice denied. For these victims justice has been denied for far too long.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I will not comment on the allegations the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has made concerning two former Cabinet Ministers of our Government. Because I feel we are dealing here with a serious matter, Madam Speaker, I suggest we should concentrate on the issue.

The question raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby is in connection with the assistance with which the Government of Canada has provided nine Canadians who are suing the Govermment of the United States.

As the Minister of Justice indicated in the House in his reply to the Hon. Member, he has been involved in negotiations with his colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the Hon. Member's own House Leader as well as representatives of the people who are involved in this dispute.

The Government of Canada was aware of the circumstances which resulted in their very difficult legal case against the U.S. Government and, consequently, granted the nine people involved a level of assistance unheard of. It has made a great many diplomatic representations to the U.S. Government, transmitted documents and information, allowed some civil servants to testify, met the counsels for the plaintiffs, studied thoroughly the involvement of the Canadian Government, released all the information in its possession and given financial assistance to defray legal costs.

[English]

The Hon. Member has made reference to a recommendation by Mr. Cooper of an ex gratia payment of $100,000 to each of the nine plaintiffs. I presume this is a reference to Appendix 53 of Mr. Cooper's opinion which points out that demands for compensation by the Canadian Government may arise from some quarters despite the absence of any legal or moral responsibility, based on a broader social policy for spreading the risks inherent in medical research.

In Appendix 53 of his opinion Mr. Cooper provides a general discussion regarding the philosophical question of spreading the risk for medical research. He highlights some preliminary questions that would have to be addressed before a medical research insurance scheme could be seriously considered. Even then, if a payment were to be considered, Mr. Cooper emphasizes that individual payments must be limited to a maximum of $100,000. However, he does not in fact make a recommendation in favour of such a payment.

Madam Speaker, I should like to conclude by saying that, as the Hon. Member is well aware following the question he raised in the House in December 1987, our Government has provided nevertheless to the nine plaintiffs $180,000 to cover their legal fees.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH SPACE AGENCY IN MONTREAL—QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE DECISION / AEROSPACE—MONTREAL—ECONOMIC SPINOFFS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight following a question I asked to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), which is of importance not only to Quebecers but also to Montrealers, concerning the location of the space agency in Montreal.

To my great surprise, and to the surprise of Canadians in general and Montrealers and the Government of Quebec in particular, the Minister answered at the time that the decision about the establishment of a space agency was tied to the federal Government's involvment in the U.S. space orbital station.

Madam Speaker, that statement was not consistent with the repeated statements of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) to the effect that the establishment of a space agency was not tied to such a program, since the federal Government was already spending funds in communications or satellites or in other areas, and that it was important to centralize this agency to have a better sharing of contracts.

Then, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) contradicted his Minister and the Minister of State for Science and Technology once again contradicted his Minister, but meanwhile the Minister was forced to withdraw and to admit his mistake.

Unfortunately, as stated by the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Doré, and by the Quebec Minister of Technological development, Mr. Pierre MacDonald, people are still waiting for an answer. The space agency should not be only an empty shell, but it should come with all the support staff and the economic spin-offs, as planned.

And at that time, during the Oral Question Period, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, told us that the sharing of contracts would be on a 35/35 basis, 35 to Quebec, 35 to Ontario. The reaction was very strong in Quebec. As far as we are concerned the answer is no, that kind of sharing is unacceptable because in Montreal and Quebec we have close to 57 per cent of the manpower in space technology and nearly 70 per cent of research investments.

So we find this attitude rather strange on the part of the Conservative Government which refused to split the frigate contracts when Quebec wanted to have two of them to save three shipyards in Quebec, namely Lauzon, Sorel and Montreal. The quality of manpower in the shipyards at Lauzon and elsewhere is second to none. At the time the federal Government turned thumbs down, with the result that Vickers had to close their yards, as did the shipbuilding section in Sorel.

Another rather strange thing, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will give us a more specific answer, is that they do not want to share some of the work in the automobile industry and in other sectors. As I am speaking, at a time when Quebec should be playing a leading role in the space program, they want to reduce the share which normally would go to Quebec as a means of restoring some sort of balance between Ontario and Quebec.

Quebecers reacted swiftly, and the Prime Minister had to intervene. This past weekend, along with the Liberal supporters of Montreal East, we got together and reaffirmed our support for municipalities, the Bourassa Government, the PQ opposition, and the Chamber of Commerce. All people in Montreal and in the rest of Quebec want the space agency to be located in Montreal. Even the Conservative convention supported this move. It was last in jumping on the band wagon of the space program. What we want is an honest, open and constructive response concerning the location of the space agency.

Hopefully the Parliamentary Secretary will enlighten us about contract sharing, and tell us that indeed Montreal will be the site of the space agency, that not only will we get the space agency but also that the contract will be shared on the basis of productivity, manpower skills, research and science technicians, and also on the basis of . . . To put it another way, the economic spin-offs from the space program in Quebec should be close to 60 per cent.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to be able to deal with this issue, the more so because it was considerably discussed during our week-end meeting.

When the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) claimed that only people in the Montreal area supported the establishment of a space agency in the province of Quebec, he at least overlooked the fact that, in the opinion of Conservative supporters who were there, it was the whole province.

Space is one of the areas of advanced technology which the Government has every reason to support. First, if I may, I should like to confirm what has been said publicly. There will be a space agency. The Government will announce its creation at the proper time, once we have set its mandate. And as we have already stated in the House, we are about to make several major decisions concerning such programs as the space station, our continued involvement in the European Space Agency and RADARSAT. As soon as these issues are settled, we will make the necessary organizational decisions to create the Canadian space agency.

I wish to remind all Hon. Members that the Canadian space agency is a national program which should benefit all Canadians. The agency will be the co-ordinating body responsible for implementing the national program.

Madam Speaker, Hon. Members are aware that the space industry in Canada, although national in scope, is relatively small. In spite of its limited dimensions, it has been able to stand an increasingly fierce world competition, exporting nearly 70 per cent of its production. I am proud of its accomplishment as well as of the individual corporations which have made Canada's image what it is.

There is first of all Spar Aérospatiale in Toronto and Montreal, famous throughout the world for its Canadarm and its world class communication satellites. Spar Aérospatiale in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue is one of about six or eight corporations, world wide, which have the capacity to provide complete satellite communication systems. There is also CAE in Montreal, whose spatial simulators are well known, CONDEV in Cambridge, Ontario, which conquered more than 80 per cent of the world market in hyperfrequency transmission devices installed in satellites. Let us not forget the Macdonald Dettwiler Associates companies in Vancouver, SED Systems in Saskatoon, Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg and Canadian Astronautics in Ottawa, each and every one of them leaders in their field.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) gave the Hon. Member the data he asked for about the breakdown of the space program expenditures across the country. The Hon. Member can see now that Quebec got its fair share of the federal Government contracts, about 34 per cent under the space program, not including Telesat acquisitions, and 44 per cent of all research and development activities related to the industry.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I emphasize that space technology is a strategic technology. The Canadian Space Program serves as an incentive for businesses and individuals. It is a unique opportunity to develop new techniques that will allow Canada to apply technology and innovation, and therefore guarantee its economic future and create jobs. According to studies, the space station program alone will result in 80,000 person-years and $5 billion worth of sales.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.28 p.m.

TELEFILM CANADA

TRAVEL EXPENSES OF OUTGOING CHAIRMAN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, who among us can honestly claim not to be fascinated by the lives of the rich and famous? Who among us is not anxious to share, however vicariously, in the excitement of high living? Now, thanks to the news of the money spent by Mr. Sirois, Chairman of Telefilm, and the many creative ways he raised funds, Canadians can dream of wildly expensive restaurants, flying first class around the world, holding gala parties, rubbing shoulders with movie stars, and spending a relaxing few days in Cannes. Oh, to be the Chairman of Telefilm!

However, what of the poor Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald)? Is it fair that she must travel in lesser style, with a modest drink from a plastic cup while up ahead in first class her Chairman flies about in absolute luxury? What are her thoughts as she hears the popping of champagne corks in first class and knows that the Chairman of Telefilm is entertaining in his usual generous way? Is she envious? Does she plan revenge? Or, will she call him to task?

Tune in again for another thrilling episode in this exciting drama of a cabinet Minister and her wayward Chairman.

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW LAW

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Charter declares that Canada is founded "upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law". Yet, emanating from a decision by the Supreme Court, the killing of unborn children has been legalized, completely contrary to scripture.

This is not merely a question of pro-life versus pro-choice, or even the rights of unborn children versus the rights of pregnant mothers. Rather, it is whether or not anyone in Canada has the right to terminate the life of an unborn child for any reason other than fundamental justice.

Are Members of this Parliament courageous enough to base a new law on biblical teachings? If that is contrary to the Charter of Rights, then change the Charter of Rights.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

COST OF CLOSURE OF MONCTON MAINTENANCE SHOPS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the closure of the CN rail shops in Moncton and the imminent closure of the Newfoundland Railway are but two of the most dramatic examples of the lack of commitment of Canadian National and the Government to Atlantic Canada. Twelve hundred jobs are to be lost in Moncton and 600 in Newfoundland. The Government appears content to let CN shut down operations at Moncton and yet pay over $10 million a year for up to 300 people to do nothing.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) says this makes economic sense. However, we know that CN was not even aware that it would have to pay out this money when it made the decision. This is not economic sense—it is gross mismanagement at CN and gross mismanagement by the Government of the national interest. Even government Members of Parliament from the Atlantic region have expressed their distaste and disgust at how their own Government is mishandling the issue of CN.

The Minister of Transport tells us that CN knows what it is doing with respect to closures. However, CN's actions show that it is not fully aware of its responsibility. It is time for the Government to prevent CN from downgrading service to the point that the only course of action is to auction off the Atlantic region to the private sector.

We call on the Government to force CN to spend the $250 million it will pay out to idle workers on the creation of jobs, not on their destruction.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

OWNERSHIP TRANSFER TO GOVERNMENT OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) introduced Bill C-125. This Bill transfers responsibility for and ownership of the Northern Canada Power Commission to the Government of the Northwest Territories.

Since under the Canadian constitutional system the provision and regulation of electrical energy come under provincial jurisdiction, this Bill will not only help to provide better electricity service for northerners but is also a major constitutional step forward.

Those of us who have worked for a decade and a half to achieve this transfer extend our appreciation to all those who have now made it possible.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF MONCTON MAINTENANCE SHOPS—CALL FOR RELEASE OF STUDY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my Party's complete disgust at the way the Government has treated the people of Moncton, especially the workers at the Canadian National Rail shops in that community. On two occasions I have seen first hand, walking down the line, the human tragedy caused by the slow death of these shops—the feeling of insecurity, the disruption to families.

Yesterday I met with representatives of the rail shop workers and gave them my complete support for a proposal to consolidate the shops in order to save the 350 jobs that still remain, and turn the remaining part of the facility into an industrial park.

I call upon the Government of Canada and the Canadian National Railway to release the internal study on which the decision to close the Moncton rail shops is purportedly based. I remind the Government that not too long ago the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski), when he was Minister of Transport, gave his assurance that no massive layoffs would occur at these shops. He also stated that, as long as he was a Minister, the Moncton shops would never close. So much for that promise, Mr. Speaker.

I urge the Government to keep at least one promise to Atlantic Canada. Once again, I urge the Government to save those jobs at the Moncton shops.

IMMIGRATION

SENATE'S DELAY IN PASSING BILLS C-84 AND C-55

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, last summer Parliament was recalled early to deal with a breakdown in Canada's refugee determination system. We passed Bill C-84 to supplement Bill C-55. Both Bills have had considerable discussion within this democratically elected Chamber. They would end the confusion in our refugee laws and bring some order to immigration policy.

However, neither Bill is the law of Canada and all Canadians should know why. The reason is the Canadian Senate, a group of individuals elected by no one. They have decided, against the wishes of the people of Canada, to hold up and refuse to pass Bills C-84 and C-55.

This is nothing short of a disgrace to everyone who believes in democratic principles. I hope that all of Mr. Trudeau's appointees in the Red Chamber get the message that their right to govern Canada ended in September, 1984.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

STATIONING OF CANADIAN FORCES IN GERMANY—OPINION OF FORMER CHIEF OF DEFENCE STAFF

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, "I must say it—our forces in central Europe mean next to nothing in military terms". Those are not my words, but they might have been. Last year I took a lot of flak for suggesting that keeping a small band of Canadian troops in southwest Germany was a waste of money. In fact, I was called a neutralist, isolationist, soft-on-communism radical by a lot of Members and quite a few editorial writers in this country.

Now someone else has had the courage to challenge so-called conventional thinking. This time that someone is a man who spent his entire life defending this country. The expert who says we should be doing more to defend Canada and less in central Europe is the man appointed to command Canada's Armed Forces from 1983 to 1986, former Chief of Defence Staff, General Gerard Theriault.

Let all those who accused me last year level the same charges against General Theriault, or let them honestly re-examine their own assumptions without partisan considerations.

I want to thank General Theriault, not for agreeing with me, but for helping to raise the quality of debate on defence policy in this Chamber and in Canada.

CULTURAL PROPERTY—POSITION OF THE SENATE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, while each of the Canadian Liberal senators earns at least $67,600 a year, on average an author in this country has to make do with $10,000 a year. Still, with the outright support of their caucus the Liberal senators are denying authors, programmers, compositors and other creators the right to live decently and be protected for their creative output. Such an antidemocratic attitude on the part of the Liberal Senate must be denounced by authors, sung by singers, and publicized by programmers.

Mr. Speaker, how much longer will the Liberal Senate disregard intellectual property?

PUBLICATION OF WORK DOCUMENT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister responsible for Canada Post released a discussion paper concerning an independent group's review of corporate rates and services. On page 15, they have this to say about the group: "Through its role and objectives the organization will have to abide by Government policies."

Mr. Speaker, Government policies as they relate to Canada Post are well known: first, deliver mail through superboxes and, second, shut down rural post offices. So what is the point of setting up such an organization if it cannot backtrack and rescind the Canada Post decision to deliver mail through superboxes and permanently lock up all rural post offices?

I endorse the suggestion that an independent group be appointed to review postal rates and services, but it must have real powers and be a lot more than a simple expedient to please the Minister.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

REPORT OF REVIEW COMMITTEE

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montréal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, in making public the report of the Review Committee on the activities of the Security Intelligence Service, the Solicitor General is sending a reassuring message to the labour movement. Indeed, the report indicates and I quote: It is quite clear that since July 1984, the Canadian labour movement has not been infiltrated by informers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

The Review Committee also says: "We consider that the image of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has been tarnished by conjectures which according to our inquiries are false."

Mr. Speaker, there will be no more unfounded allegations! Now that all Canadians are aware of the truth and that we have been to the bottom of the matter, it is obvious that doom sayers who wanted to undermine the credibility of the agency of which we can be proud will have to eat crow.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Solicitor General for having brought the matter to light and for his leadership.

AIM OF PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION OF CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada has launched a publicity campaign aimed at reducing the number of abortions by preventing unwanted pregnancies. In a full page ad in The Globe and Mail on the weekend, the Federation reaffirmed that the way to reduce abortions is to provide better education and clinical services, especially for teenagers who are learning about their sexuality through experience rather than through sex education programs.

Planned Parenthood has always provided excellent information on family planning and on safe contraceptive methods. It has developed an expertise in matters of sex education and reproductive health counselling. Its aim is to encourage family planning so that children will be wanted and loved, and parents will be able to provide the care that children need.

If the federal Government is really serious about reducing the number of abortions, it would support sound family planning. The Conservative Government must restore funding to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada to ensure that it will be able to continue its excellent work and especially sustain the most recent education campaign that it has launched.

APPEAL BOARD'S DECISION TO ADMIT DESERTER FROM MEXICAN ARMY DEATH SQUAD

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am sickened and disgusted with the decision made by the Immigration Appeal Board in the case of Mr. Zacarias Cruz, a deserter from a Mexican Army death squad. This individual has admitted he was following orders when he personally executed 60 innocent civilians. Yet the Immigration Appeal Board chose to disregard his crimes against humanity. Has this panel any conscience, morality or sense of justice?

Canada has no room for murderers. This decision is a slap in the face to all genuine refugees and law-abiding Canadians. I remind the panel that the argument used by Mr. Cruz for committing his crimes against humanity is the same as those used by individuals who sent the Jews to their deaths. The Minister has made the right decision to eliminate the Immigration Appeal Panel because they suffer from a total lack of judgment.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

ONTARIO CORN PRODUCERS—DELAY IN RECEIVING CHEQUES BLAMED ON COMPUTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government instituted a Special Canadian Grains Program which it has now renewed for a second year. Unfortunately, although some farmers were paid in time, a number of corn producers in my Province of Ontario, and elsewhere, have yet to be paid. In fact some people have been waiting for $17,000 cheques since the end of January. They were told by the Department of Agriculture that they would not receive their cheques before the end of April because "the computer is not ready".

I urge the Minister of Agriculture to tell those people in his Department to get the computer ready and get those cheques out for the 28,000 corn producers in Ontario, the 6,000 corn producers in Quebec, and all the other corn producers in Canada who are waiting for their money.

They need their money. They need it now. It is the fault of the Government that agriculture is in this kind of trouble. It is up to the Government to bail them out and to do it properly.

TURKISH NATIONALS—INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC HAS BEEN COMPLETED BY MINISTER Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The tragic situation of the Turks in Montreal is getting steadily worse. First they are told they can't stay in Canada, then the Minister says they can stay, and then they are told they cannot. First the Minister says he reached an agreement with the Government of Quebec and then he turns around and says there was no such agreement.

Later, he said he had the situation under control, but this morning, we heard he did not even get in touch with the Turks in Quebec.

Has the Minister reached an agreement with the Province of Quebec, yes or no?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Leader of the Opposition doesn't have his facts straight. It isn't the first time either.

Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada to refrain from enforcing the law. That is quite clear.

I challenge the Leader of the Opposition to find a single quote where I did not say during the last two weeks that people who are not refugees should be deported. However, the Quebec Government has the so-called Cullen-Couture Agreement signed by the Liberal Goverment in 1978, which gives Quebec the right to select immigrants abroad.

To my knowledge, the Turks he referred to are not abroad but in Montreal.

I am waiting for news from the Quebec Minister of Immigration, and Mrs. Robic is supposed to answer my letter today. I am waiting for her answer, and if the Government of Quebec does not ask to have these people—after issuing certificates abroad, we shall proceed as we must proceed in all cases of false refugee claims, that is, we will deport them.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is obvious that we have complete anarchy in this situation, under the responsibility of the Minister.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55 AND BILL C-84

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister keeps blaming the Liberal Opposition and the Senate, as recited by some of his government Members under Standing Order 21, for our opposition to Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. He blames us for his problem. That is not so.

Will the Minister confirm that the position taken by the Opposition, and the position taken by the Senate, is a position endorsed by the Canadian Bar Association, most of the major church groups in Canada, the Law Reform Commission, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, and by every expert on refugee matters in Canada, including the Minister's own special adviser on refugees, Rabbi Gunther Plaut?

• (1420)

Will he finally admit that Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 have nothing to do with the administrative refugee backlog that he has allowed to build up? Will he start taking responsibility for his own inaction?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the experts in this country and 80 per cent of the population want immigration laws that work. The Liberal Government has left this country in total confusion.

We have introduced legislation, and Senator Hébert himself said that the Leader of the Opposition was in favour of the Senate's obstructing bills passed by the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, it is shocking that we should have this kind of situation in our country, and I repeat that as long as the Senators continue to obstruct legislation passed in this very House, thousands of people will be taken advantage of and come to this country claiming refugee status when they have no grounds to do so.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether Canadians will be totally impressed with that performance. The Minister should stop playing ping-pong with human lives. These Turkish people are human beings, and should be treated as human beings. That is the situation that I put to the Minister.

I say with the respect that I owe the Minister that he should not let his own pride interfere with his sense of fairness and his sense of compassion. The Province of Quebec has requested an administrative review. The Minister has turned that down. Why? What are the grounds?

The Minister also has the power under the Immigration Act to proceed on humanitarian grounds. He has turned that down. Why? Will he give us the grounds for that as well?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I turned it down because there are thousands of Canadians who are waiting to have their relatives come to this country. They would like to follow the usual course.

Canadians do not like that people come as refugee claimants when they are not. They jump the queue in front of people who have been waiting to come here for years and years. The Hon. Member would like these people to queue jump.

TURKISH NATIONALS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Montrealers thought last week that the nightmare of the Turkish families was over. We all believed that, in a burst of generosity, the Minister of Employment and Immigration had accepted an arrangement suggested by Mrs. Robic to avoid the deportation of the Turkish families and to accept 37 of them as immigrants.

I simply want to ask the Minister what has changed since last week and what the Minister intends to do to keep the promise made to these Turkish families.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that he thought that such was the case. He should have looked closely at what I have said since last Monday. I never made any promise to anyone. I accepted the request of Mrs. Robic to suspend the deportation orders, and I did say suspend, because I must point out to the Hon. Member that the Minister has no right to cancel deportation orders. The Minister only has the power to suspend them until Quebec tells us its intentions.

At no time, and I challenge anyone to find any proof to the contrary, did I say that the deportation orders would not be respected. However, at the request of Quebec, we did agree to postpone their application.

After Quebec informs us of its decision, and the deadline is this evening, we shall proceed, as we must, to apply the deportation orders.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we can now see for ourselves that the apparent generosity of the Minister of Employment and Immigration was rather short-lasting. It lasted only long enough to buy peace in Montreal, and to ensure that the convention of the Conservative Party would take place without any problem.

What I want to ask the Minister is why he raised the hopes of the Turkish families needlessly. Why is he now giving Mrs. Robic full responsibility for finding a solution and why is he hiding behind the skirts of the Quebec Immigration Minister?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party showed so little respect for the provinces when it was in power that when another federal Government tries to apply signed agreements, these are the only types of comments the Liberals can make.

I had promised to suspend, and you should learn what the word "suspend" means, the deportation orders at the resquest of Quebec until such time as Quebec would inform us of its decision. This decision will be known today.

I repeat that, while the Hon. Member says that I am not being generous, I believe that a basic component of the law in Canadian society is the principle of justice. Everyone must be treated equally. That is exactly what we are going to do.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN NEW YORK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. One year ago when President Reagan visited Canada, experts on both sides of the border agreed that, in terms of dealing with the acid rain problem, what was needed was a commitment from both countries to specific targets for reduction of levels of emission.

Instead of agreeing to that, President Reagan simply and incredibly committed himself to more research. After that, the Prime Minister of Canada, equally incredibly, described the President's policy as "very significant movement".

Since Mr. Reagan will no longer be President in November and will soon be passing from the scene, will the Prime Minister now admit that his recent speech in New York had nothing to do with trying to reduce the levels of acid rain production, but had everything to do with short run political gain for the Conservatives at home?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it must have been a pretty good speech to draw that type of attention from my hon. friend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: On this very important issue that we have been attempting to deal with since we were the Government, my hon. friend, the Leader of the NDP, will acknowledge that, in fact, under preceding Governments nothing had been accomplished and nothing was done here in Canada. It is a transboundary problem.

Federal and provincial Governments have agreed on a national target of reducing acid rain emissions by 50 per cent from the 1980 levels by the year 1994. This is a significant step forward.

The federal Government has signed implementing agreements with all of the concerned provinces providing for the necessary control actions. We had the results of the Special Envoy programs where, for the first time, there was—and it might not seem revolutionary to my hon. friend—a formal acknowledgement of the transboundary nature of the problem and the transboundary implications for a solution.

We have not resolved the matter in a manner that Canada deems acceptable. There is obstruction in the Congress, there is obstruction in the private sector, and, in our judgment, there is a lack of appreciation of the gravity of this in some areas of the administration.

We have put forward a treaty that we believe is in Canada's interest, and very much in the American interest, for the protection of our mutual heritage on the environmental side. We have moved this matter forward, not completely, but we have made steady and important progress. We shall not relent until such time as we have it cleared up.

OPPORTUNITY FOR INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT ON ACID RAIN EMISSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Prime Minister of Canada said the exact opposite a year ago. It was his Minister, not the Prime Minister, who criticized President Reagan last year. We are hearing some high-sounding phrases now, but no action was taken last year. That is the problem with Canada's present Prime Minister.

Since the Prime Minister is well aware that acid rain is a very serious problem for our forests, our lakes and our maple forests, why did the Government refuse to support European governments recently on an international agreement to establish acceptable emission levels for the purpose of reducing acid rain? Why the contradiction?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP knows perfectly well there is no contradiction here. He was here in Parliament. He saw how the Liberals did strictly nothing about acid rain for twenty years. He saw . . .

An Hon. Member: The Liberals did nothing!

Mr. Mulroney: No, the Liberals did nothing. He is right. He saw how the Minister of Environment (Mr. MacMillan) brought the seven eastern provinces of this country together for the first time, to agree on a major constitutional document and funding worth hundreds of millions of dollars in order to deal with the Canadian dimension of acid rain. He saw the vigorous action taken by the Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister in dealing with the U.S. Administration. There is obstruction in the Congress and opposition from the private sector. That has yet to be resolved, but we have made substantial progress on the question of acid rain, and I hope we will soon be able to reach a final settlement.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have said publicly in the past, and I repeat it now, that the Government has made significant progress within Canada as compared with the previous Government on the problems of acid rain. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: My question was pertinent to the Prime Minister's own speech when he supported the President of the United States last year, and he is making criticism this year for what he said was acceptable last year. That approach is unacceptable to us.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is for the Prime Minister. He has indicated that once again he will raise the problems of pollution in the environment with the United States during his forthcoming summit with the President of the United States.

We have a major problem with pollution in the St. Lawrence waterway and Lake Ontario, 90 per cent of which comes from the United States.

Since we already have a Clean Water Agreement with the United States, will the Prime Minister assure us that the problems of toxic waste in Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence waterway will not only be put on the agenda but that we will be demanding some concrete action from the United States in this field?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, among the three odd questions asked by the Leader of the NDP the third is the oddest, because it does not take into account the fact that Canada and the United States just completed negotiations toward a very greatly strengthened Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, which agreement we signed—I on behalf of the Government of Canada and Lee Thomas on behalf of the United States—in Toledo just a few months ago.

By all accounts, including the word of Great Lakes United, probably the foremost environmental group on this subject, it is a very marked improvement over past agreements negotiated by previous Governments.

In the same spirit, I am negotiating on behalf of the Government of Canada, with the full co-operation of my cabinet colleagues and the backing of the Prime Minister, with my opposite number in Quebec on an accord on the St. Lawrence because it is an integral part of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin.

IMMIGRATION

CONVICTED TERRORIST—DELAY IN DEPORTATION HEARING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister's officials, before a hearing officer in the seeking of the deportation of Muhammad Issa Mohammad, asked for yet another delay, and this after 10 months from the time the Government made a decision to proceed.

Officials said that they had not managed to obtain a copy of the Greek pardon. Well, I obtained a copy of the Greek pardon, together with a certified translation, this morning from the Greek Embassy, and they said that government officials have not even asked for a copy yet.

Would the Minister explain the unconscionable delays in dealing with this important case?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government and the Department of Employment and Immigration are of course determined to proceed as quickly as possible with this case. However, when the witnesses were introduced yesterday, the adjudicator demanded that other witnesses be heard instead of the witnesses that were supposed to be heard originally, so that the Department was not prepared. The only reason the case was not heard and had to be postponed again was that the witnesses present were not those who were asked to testify at the hearing yesterday.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough. The Government failed to turn back Mr. Mohammad in Spain. It failed to stop him at the Toronto airport. It bungled an attempt to spirit him out of Canada last month. It has demonstrated that it is not even capable of proceeding with a deportation proceeding.

How can the Canadian people have any confidence that the Government can handle the immigration responsibility?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, again, I think the problem is that the Goverment has to function in a system that is not of its own making and that is far from perfect. Furthermore, when we want to improve the system, we get systematic obstruction from the Liberal Party, which has been going on for eight months. Again, it is shocking, considering the pitiful state of the immigration system we inherited, that Opposition Members and their Leader refuse to co-operate and that there are senators who keep saying it will take months before the legislation is passed.

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER HAS CONSULTED CANADIAN BAR AND THE SENATE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for Employment and Immigration. The Minister himself recognizes that Canada needs effective legislation to regulate the inflow of refugees to Canada. Such is not the case with Bill C-55. On the contrary, Bill C-55 has paralysed our system and has created such delays that no other Act could be made operational.

Is the Minister willing to consult the Canadian bar and the Senate in order to amend Bill C-55 in such a way that it be made to comply with the Supreme Court decision of three years ago stating that hearings be held for each person claiming refugee status?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Spadina refer to Bill C-55 which he has himself obstructed in the House for weeks with the help of the Liberals and which he is of course unable, imagine—even the leader of the Liberal Party cannot manage that. It is surely not in the power of a member of the NDP to convince Liberal Senators to do the work which they are supposed to be doing and which they have done for 120 years in this country, which is to abide by the will of the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR TO-DAY DELAY ON DEPORTATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister to consider the need for consulting to resolve a practical problem, and I am asking him if he will consider a package as follows: (1) a 60-day delay on deportation to allow time for consultation, (2) consultation with the Canadian Bar Association and the Senate to make Bill C-55 workable under our existing Constitution and Supreme Court, and (3), creation of a new administrative review that fairly identifies the people who are effectively established in Canada, taking into account help from their relatives and their work record?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have proposed and we have voted in the House on Bill C-55. The Bill has been before the Senate for six months. I will not accept any amendment as long as the Senators want to return the Bill to the House and until we see exactly what they want.

I am not sure that we need six months to make any recommendation. Once again, Bill C-55 is the one we need to deal with the backlog and particularly with those who abuse the system. Again, I do not understand why the Opposition does not support the Government in giving a Bill to the country and a system which permit us to deal with immigration.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS' DISPUTE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Maasai people of East Africa have the following expression: "When two bull elephants fight, it is the grass that suffers". I think that that expression applies now to the struggle of language teachers and their unions with the Treasury Board, which is causing serious problems for students and teachers in training schools across the country.

Could the Minister indicate why a solution to their contract discussions has not yet been found?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Treasury Board was prepared to enter into an agreement with the union, consistent with the recommendations of the conciliation report, and stands ready and willing to do that to this very day, and that has been communicated to the union.

• (1440)

The union has indicated that it wants to reopen negotiations. I have sent Mr. Bean a letter which indicated that our officials are prepared to explore any constructive proposals that the union may wish to put forth, and I invite it to contact officials to make the appropriate arrangements so that we can get on with that process.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—COMPLIANCE WITH CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have learned today the shocking news that, although a member of the Cabinet for two full years, the Minister of Public Works did not set up a blind trust as required by the conflict of interest guidelines. This news came not as a result of an investigation by the Government of Canada or by the Minister responsible but by the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada.

Was the Minister responsible for the conflict of interest guidelines aware of this breach of the guidelines. If so, what action did he take? If he was not, why was it that the people of Canada had to count on the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada to find out about this infraction?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Hon. Member is referring to a speculative story that appeared in today's press. The report the Hon. Member is referring to has not been released. I have been advised by the ADRG that the Minister has complied completely with the conflict of interest guidelines, and it is interesting to note that even the news report suggests that, while an investigation has been completed, there has been no public announcement. The Hon. Member is raising this issue on a purely speculative story, and I think that as a responsible Member of Parliament he should consider that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the assumption is that the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada has done an investigation into this matter. It is about to release its report indicating that the conflict of interest guidelines were breached by the Member. The Minister is responsible to ensure that those guidelines are lived up to by cabinet Ministers. Is the Minister responsible saying that there was in fact no breach at any time by the Minister of Public Works?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly not comment on the assumptions the Hon. Member may derive from a newspaper article that was written purely on speculation. I must say that I have consulted with the ADRG and he has indicated that there has been no contravention of the guidelines.

COMPLIANCE WITH CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the failure of the Minister of Public Works to establish a bona fide blind trust. The Prime Minister has assured the House on numerous occasions that the conflict of interest guidelines have been complied with. It now appears obvious, as a result of the investigation by the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada, that a bona fide trust has not been established.

Is the Prime Minister today satisfied that the conflict of interest guidelines have been respected in every way by the Minister of Public Works? Can he explain the conclusions of the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has such obvious information, I challenge him to bring it forth. He has really been basing his question and his argument on sheer speculation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the so-called blind trustee who had 20/20 vision and who was a friend of the Minister was fined $5,000 by the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada because of his failure to comply with government guidelines. That is a fact.

Again I put my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that he has assured the House on numerous occasions that the Minister was in full compliance, does the Prime Minister have the courage to rise to confirm that the Minister was in full compliance? Is it any wonder that Canadians no longer trust—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks of courage. If he had the courage of his convictions, he would rise and lay the charge, and I challenge him to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

SOVIET AIRLINE'S REQUEST FOR NEW PASSENGER RIGHTS IN CANADA

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Soviet Ambassador to Canada was informed in a letter dated February 14 that Canada refused to allow Soviet airlines to conduct passenger business in Toronto and that a similar request for Gander airport should go through diplomatic channels. That came from the Minister of Transport who promised in Newfoundland that he would grant such a request if it were made.

I ask the Minister of Transport, why is he singing one song in Newfoundland and another song here to the Russians? Is his new theme song "Help Me Fake It Through The Night"?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have been asked this question by the Hon. Member. He is asking a question, of course, on behalf of the Russian Embassy and Aeroflot. He is full of air and certainly "flots".

My correspondence with ambassadors is not extensive, but I wrote to the Ambassador of Russia on February 17 and told him that "the Government of Canada would be pleased to consider favourably a request made by your government for bilateral air negotiations to discuss possible new rights at Gander for Aeroflot. With respect to Toronto, however, you should be aware that we have been unable to identify any rights for Canadian carriers that would compensate for the value of Toronto access for Aeroflot. Therefore, we feel unable to consider access to Toronto at this time. If you wish to pursue further the issue of additional rights for Aeroflot at Gander, I would suggest making your interest known in writing through diplomatic channels". That is the normal course of procedure, not through a Member of this House.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, if the Soviets were requesting landing rights for St. John's airport, this Minister of Transport would be writing To Russia With Love. "Da, da, yes, yes, break open the vodka".

LANDING RIGHTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the Soviets have also said that unless there is a new instrument landing system, Category 2, as was put in St. John's airport, put in Gander, they will remove themselves totally from there next year? Is he hoping that that is exactly what they will do so that they will then move into St. John's, like he bullied Air Canada and the Israeli 747s to do on the weekend? This Minister should be sent to Siberia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly the best short act since the Three Stooges retired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which one are you, John?

Mr. Crosbie: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition reminds me of Leon Errol.

Gander airport, which is a magnificent airport, has a Category 1 landing system. In Gander weather conditions they are successful in landing 96.2 per cent of the time. That is a much higher reliability factor than that of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate.

A Category 2 instrument landing system serving Runway 13 at Gander would increase the airport usability by how much? It would increase it by .96 per cent so that it would increase to 97.19 per cent. The Hon. Member should relax. The Category 2 system is not needed in Gander. If it were, I would have had it there already.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER JUSTIFY CERTAIN MATTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General.

Yesterday we learned that up until very recently there had been a serious abuse of power on the part of the CSIS in view of the fact that they kept all the RCMP illegal files on the labour movement and exercised absolutely no control over the agent provocateur Marc Boivin.

Once those allegations were made public, the Minister then reacted, and only then.

How can the Minister justify the fact that neither his Inspector General nor the Security Intelligence Review Committee ever spoke about it to the CNTU or to Gérald Larose, the victims of illegal acts by the CSIS and Marc Boivin?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on page 13 of the Security Intelligence Review Committee report it says: "There is no evidence to suggest that Mr. Boivin was at any time directed or encouraged by CSIS either to commit the illegal acts for which he was convicted or to act in any other way as an agent provocateur within the CSN." He has never been an agent provocateur.

[Translation]

Mr. Robinson: The Minister does not explain why the Review Committee and his Inspector General did not even speak about it to the CNTU. Why not?

[English]

REPORTED HIRING OF LABOUR MOVEMENT INTELLIGENCE CO-ORDINATOR

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In May of 1985 CSIS hired an individual in Montreal with the title of Regional Co-ordinator of Intelligence on Subversive Activities in the Labour Movement. Are there similar posts in other regions of Canada and what precisely is the role of this Regional Co-ordinator of Intelligence Activities in the Labour Movement? What kind of attack is this on the democratic labour movement in Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the report was quite clear. If the Hon. Member had spent a little time reading it he would have seen that on page 10 the Security Intelligence Review Committee, an independent, non-partisan committee in that it is drawn from all political Parties, said since July, 1984, when CSIS was formed, the Canadian labour movement has not been targeted by CSIS human sources. I think all Canadian unions should be reassured by those findings.

AIR CANADA

FUTURE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE CENTRE

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I believe Air Canada will be making a decision in the near future regarding the type of aircraft it will be adding to its fleet. Will the Minister assure this House and the people of Winnipeg that the very cost efficient and profitable maintenance centre in Winnipeg will remain fully operational?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Don't hold your breath.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be in a position to confirm that the Winnipeg maintenance base of Air Canada is cost effective and profitable and is going to continue in operation. No matter what aircraft is chosen as the right aircraft for the future operations of Air Canada, it will continue to have a fleet of aircraft maintained at Winnipeg. In addition, it will continue to perform maintenance contracts for other carriers and continue to seek out and bid on those opportunities.

There are 450 employees at the maintenance base at present and Air Canada is very well pleased with its operation. No matter what aircraft type is chosen, the people who work in Winnipeg can be very much assured that the work will continue there, and the maintenance base is going to continue.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT WORK BE ALLOCATED TO MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Under the employment security provisions of their collective agreement, some 350 employees of CN in Moncton, New Brunswick, will continue to collect their salaries for approximately the next 27 years even though their place of employment is being removed as CN shuts down its shops in Moncton in September. These workers do not want to stay at home and collect a pay cheque and do nothing. They want to work.

In light of the fact that CN is going to pay out some $10 million annually for almost three decades to 350 employees who have no work to do, is it not time for the Minister to sit down with CN management and ensure that an adequate amount of work is available in those shops to keep these 350 employees involved in productive work, the kind in which they want to be engaged?

Mr. Benjamin: Where were you yesterday, Tobin?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a repetition of a question asked, as the hon. gentleman expostulates, yesterday or the day before by another Party in this House whose name I would not mention.

First, I would like to congratulate the hon. gentleman who just had a successful election. The Rat Pack has nibbled its way to victory over the Old Guard in the Liberal caucus. Prud'homme has been pulverized, and Allmand assassinated. Congratulations.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose it is a bit late to say to the Hon. Minister that he is out of order. Perhaps he can continue.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. gentleman's question, it points up the generous provisions that CN has made with respect to employment security. There were 1,022 employees in June, 1986, at the Moncton facility. They have all been looked after. I can give you the exact figures.

Some Hon. Members: Spare us.

Mr. Crosbie: Slightly more than 200 workers will have taken early retirement. Over 460 will have been relocated to other jobs in Moncton, the Maritimes, or elsewhere in Canada. Some 200 are eligible for the employment security and income maintenance plan to which the hon. gentleman referred. Some 20 apprentices will have completed training to move to jobs outside CN. There are about 130 people who have yet to go on lay-off status.

In addition, CN continues to employ over 2,500 people in Moncton with an annual payroll of $90 million.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, you will of course allow me to say that I accept the sincere congratulations of the Hon. Minister because I know he understands these things. He ran for the Liberal leadership in Newfoundland; did not make it. He ran for the Conservative leadership in Ottawa; did not make it. I say to Mr. Broadbent: Watch your back!

Mr. Speaker: I say to the Hon. Member: Ask your question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary directed to the Minister is clear. None of what he has said today changes the fact that starting this year CN is going to pay $10 million in salaries to employees who are entitled to those salaries but who will not, as of the end of September, have a place to work. That is an unacceptable and ridiculous situation in Canada.

Is the Minister prepared to meet with representatives of the CN workers who have been in Ottawa for a week, who have met with other Ministers but not the Minister of Transport, and sit down and come to a sensible and common sense solution to this ridiculous situation in Moncton, New Brunswick?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, isn't life strange? On January 28 CN was called before the Standing Committee on Transport to answer questions on this very subject. The hon. gentleman was made transport critic for the Official Opposition on January 15. He did not bother to attend that committee meeting. Now he is in the House asking questions about this subject which could have been asked at that time. If an in camera session had been held CN was prepared—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Crosbie: Am I doing wrong, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Speaker: Just a little bit out of order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CANADA PACKERS—CLOSURE OF WINNIPEG PLANT—WORKERS' UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In 1986 Canada Packers announced it would be closing its plant in Winnipeg in two phases. The first phase took place in April, 1987, and we all know the second phase took place just last week.

We know there have been exceptions in the first phase regarding employees' severance pay and unemployment insurance benefits. In the second phase employees have not been exempted. Is the Minister aware of this difference, and what can be done about it?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed aware of this difference. I was informed about the problem at Canada Packers in Winnipeg and I requested my Department take a very close look, and if there is anything we can do, we will do it.

Mr. Speaker: Short supplementary.

DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF SALARIED EMPLOYEES AND WAGE EARNERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there is not only a difference between the employees who were laid off in 1987 and the ones laid off in 1988, but there is also discrimination between salaried employees and wage earners. The salaried employees who were laid off last week have been granted an exemption and the 350 wage-earning employees have not been given that exemption. What is the Minister going to do about that kind of discrimination?

• (1500)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same. My colleague must consider that we have private agreements within the company. As I have just said, it is something at which we will look.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

REQUEST FOR HELICOPTER SERVICES IN SOUTHWESTERN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister is aware that recent marine incidents have again highlighted the need for helicopter search and rescue services for western Nova Scotia.

On behalf of the thousands of fishermen and their families whom I represent, I ask the Minister to advise on the status of the many requests which I have made for this service.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the concerns which have been expressed by my hon. colleague, his constituents, and others from the southwestern Nova Scotia region.

In the two most recent incidents to which the Hon. Member refers, basing helicopters in that region would not have been helpful because of weather conditions in one case, and because of a heart attack victim in the second. It might in fact have done more damage to move the heart attack victim by helicopter than to attempt to bring him in by boat. In any case, he could not have been brought in on time.

The Hon. Member has been very diligent in putting forward cases on behalf of his constituents. The issue of search and rescue is constantly under revision. As we look at it in the future we will certainly take all of his representations into consideration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On June 5, 1987, the Minister of National Defence indicated to Parliament that he had in his possession information to justify the acquisition of 10 to 12 nuclear powered submarines.

We now learn that, on the contrary, the Minister had in his possession at that time a report commissioned by his own Department and written by his own analysts which was highly critical of the White Paper's exaggeration of military threats in the Arctic.

How does the Minister expect the Canadian public to trust his judgment to go nuclear when he hid that report from Parliament and from the Standing Committee on National Defence?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting that my hon. friend should say that, because the very same report featured questions from the critic of the New Democratic Party before the Standing Committee on National Defence. If my hon. colleague had bothered to check the record he would have found that my hon. friend had a copy of the report and referred to it. Nothing was hidden.

Indeed, if my hon. colleague would take the trouble to read the report, a copy of which I have here and will be pleased to send over to him, he will find strong support for the Government's position.

EMPLOYMENT OF VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board who is undoubtedly aware of the special program to increase employment in the Public Service of members of the visible minority communities.

His predecessor promised a year ago that the 44 positions not filled in 1986-87 would, in his words "not be cancelled". Could the Minister explain why not one of those 44 positions has been utilized during the current fiscal year which ends tomorrow?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there has been a numerical target set for hiring visible minority groups which was adopted in August, 1987. This is a very important signal by the Government of Canada in terms of reaching out to visible minorities and bringing them into the Public Service.

Meetings with this particular group have indicated that they are very pleased with the actions which the Government has taken. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are getting their full co-operation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, since the House is not going to sit after today until April 11, I want to ask the Government House Leader to give us a statement of the business he intends to put before the House for the week of April 11.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, today is an Opposition Day. On Monday, April 11, we will be completing Bill C-121, which will be followed by Bills C-117, C-110, and C-30, the National Parks Act.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that there will be refreshments in Room 16 commencing at four o'clock this afternoon. I would, of course, be pleased to meet with any Members who can spend a few moments together before we adjourn for the Easter break.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-288, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, as evidenced by the seconders, all three Parties have agreed on several occasions to the amendments to the Auditor General Act which are contained in this Bill. It is a simple change which would allow the Auditor General to report intermittently rather than only once a year.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who are very concerned that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade agreement with the United States.

They believe the trade agreement that has been negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of our political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership in Canada and eliminates the effectiveness of the Government to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadian citizens.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada an opportunity to either accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I too rise to present a petition that is signed in accordance with Standing Order 106, by a number of my constituents who are also extremely concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They call upon the Government to dissolve the House and go to the people immediately on this issue.

REFUGEES—OPPOSITION TO SENATE DELAY IN PASSAGE OF CERTAIN BILLS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present to the House today a petition on behalf of residents of Parkdale—High Park who wish to express their frustration at the Senate's continued delay in providing passage to Bill C-54 and Bill C-84, the refugee determination legislation.

The petition endorses the legislation passed by the House of Commons and describes my constituents' anger at the Senate's deliberate frustration of the will of the people.

CLOSURE OF EMBASSY IN EQUADOR—REQUEST FOR REVERSAL OF DECISION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): I have the privilege to present a petition to the House on behalf of Toronto residents who wish to state their opposition to the closure of the Canadian Embassy in Equador and the hardship it has imposed on individuals seeking to apply for immigration to Canada or visitors visas.

The petitioners urge Parliament and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reverse the decision to close the embassy.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION WITH VIETNAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition from a number of residents of the constituency of Spadina, who have pointed out that Canadian immigration law has the goal of facilitating the reunion in Canada of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad.

They point out that Canadians from Vietnam find it takes months or years to bring their relatives from Vietnam to Canada as immigrants, and the Vietnamese Government, they say, has delayed or stopped immigration for many relatives of Canadians.

Therefore, the undersigned call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Canadian Government negotiates actively with Vietnam to secure an agreement providing for closer co-operation on immigration, including quicker action on Canadian sponsorships.

IMMIGRATION—FAMILY AND ASSISTED RELATIVE CLASSES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have a petition that is signed by a number of residents of Spadina who point out that on October 30, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) promised that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages will be considered as members of the family class of immigrants, and that married children of brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points instead of 10 points when assessed for immigration to Canada.

They have also pointed out that there is an unfair distinction that the Government promised to resolve between Canadian citizens and permanent residents in their right to bring their parents at the age of 55.

Therefore, since none of these promises has been fulfilled, the undersigned citizens and residents of Canada call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfills its promises now.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I have a petition from a number of residents of Spadina who point out that; whereas Canada has established good standards of refugee status determination, but our procedures have broken down; whereas a standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure and this has the support of the Canadian Council of Churches, the Bar Association, Jewish Congress and many other groups; whereas the present practice of the Government is turning away refugee claimants from ports of entry before their claims have had proper examination; therefore, we the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the immigration commission, universal access to such hearing for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who point out that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, which has no mandate of support from the people of Canada but would reduce our ability to plan our economic, social and cultural programs that we need, and would integrate Canada further with the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, these people ask that the House ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is finalized.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of my constituency who indicate that for many years farmers and fishermen have enjoyed the right to block average their incomes.

Since there has been an indication by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to eliminate block averaging, they call upon the House to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, which report was presented to the House.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by hundreds of residents of the community of Atikokan and the surrounding area. These petitioners are concerned about the fact that the township of Atikokan and surrounding areas were left off the comprehensive eligibility list for the northern residents tax deduction.

They argue that they are being affected simply because of their location next to Thunder Bay. They believe that they are part of that area of the country which is isolated, with higher costs for food, fuel, housing and transportation.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to declare the township of Atikokan and surrounding area to be eligible for the northern residents deduction.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege today to present four petitions on behalf of constituents of my riding. There are no less than 464 signatures on these four petitions which have been duly certified in conformity with Standing Order 106.

Our petitioners today call upon Parliament to provide a redress for the inequitable situation which has arisen by the unequal application of the Northern Residents Tax Allowance.

They call for all communities in what are known as Tier 3 ridings to be designated as remote communities and therefore eligible for this Northern Residents Tax Allowance. By doing so, they hope to see an inequity between northern communities eliminated.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians who are blaming the Government for signing a deal with the Americans, the so-called Mulroney-Reagan Trade Agreement. They humbly state that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return, that Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, that the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, that thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened, and that the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan Trade Agreement.

OPPOSITION TO THE EXPULSION OF TURKISH NATIONALS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I should like to table three petitions signed respectively by 37, 25 and 26 residents of Montreal or the Montreal area who oppose the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard)'s decision to deport from Montreal some 2,000 Turkish nationals. These people were hoping for a happy conclusion to this sorry situation where the Minister had failed to take into account his own mistakes or his delay in the fall of 1986 in taking steps to stop the false rumours circulating at the time, for these Turkish nationals had come to Canada in good faith, unaware of the fact that by their action they were violating the Canadian Immigration Act.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to intervene with the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the hope that once more he might reconsider his decision.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege today to present eight petitions signed by hundreds of constituents of my riding of Calgary South and, indeed, all of Calgary, who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that the unilingual speaking people have a chance for a position in the Government.

PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, It is certainly an honour and privilege to present a petition signed by 50 residents of the community of Calgary North. Inasmuch as it is becoming increasingly common to learn of abortion being used as birth control, and thousands of potential lives are unjustly terminated, and whereas abortion should not be tolerated by society except in the most dire circumstances, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act upon the problems associated with abortion by introducing and supporting legislation which protects the life of the human fetus in all but the most dire circumstances.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, question No. 244 will be answered today.

[Text]

FOREST MANAGEMENT

Question No. 244—Mr. Parry:

1. Does the Government plan to establish a department of forestry and, if so, on what date?

2. Is the Government committed to an ongoing role in the funding of forest management?

3. Is the Government committed to renewing federal/provincial forestry agreements?

4. Will the Canada/Ontario forestry agreement expire on March 31, 1989, and does the Government intend to renew the agreement and, if so, as of this date, has the Government initiated any action towards this renewal?

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices and the Office of the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) as follows:

1. The Government responded to this question on October 23, 1986, in its response to the First Report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry:

> By establishing the portfolio of Minister of State (Forestry) in September, 1984, the Government put in place a much-needed focus for this key economic sector. This initiative, in part, has strengthened this Government's efforts in forest renewal and forest research. It has also helped to ensure that the responsibilities of a number of other Ministers relating to the forest sector in such areas as international trade, industrial support, employment, environment, and native peoples have become more relevant and effective in enabling the forest sector to contribute to the present and future prosperity of Canadians.

2. The Government of Canada is very much committed to an ongoing role in the funding of forest management. In the Speech from the Throne on October 1, 1986, the Government stated that it will continue to work closely with the provinces, industry and private woodlot owners to ensure that Canada's rich forest heritage continues as a vital source of wealth and jobs for future generations.

In addition to this, the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers, which includes the federal Minister of State (Forestry and Mines), has endorsed the new National Forest Sector Strategy for Canada. This strategy was developed by all interested parties in the Forest sector, including the federal Government. The strategy specifically recommends that all elements of the forest sector, which certainly includes the Government of Canada, expand their commitment to forest management.

3. The National Forest Sector Strategy, endorsed by the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines), recommends a commitment to federal/provincial agreements. This commitment, therefore, not only expresses satisfaction with the results of the current agreements but also calls on all parties in the sector, not just government, to support a new round of agreements.

It should be noted that the federal Government, in its commitment to developing more effective means of regional economic development, is currently reviewing the Economic and Regional Development Agreements (ERDAs) which were the framework for funding the first round of forestry agreements across the country. This review will enable the Government to ensure that the ERDAs are more efficient and effective in addressing the diverse needs for regional development across Canada.

4. The Canada-Ontario Forest Resource Development Agreements ends on March 31, 1989. However, two additional years are included in the agreement in order to complete major projects initiated in the final years of the agreement.

A formal request has been received from the Minister of Natural Resources of the Province of Ontario to begin discussions aimed at developing either an extension to the current agreement or a new five-year agreement. Federal officials have begun premilinary discussions regarding possibilities for a new federal-provincial forestry initiative. It would, however, be premature to discuss a new agreement, which will depend on the Government's review of its regional development policies, the province's priorities as well as our own analysis of the needs of the sector in Ontario.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—A CANADIAN HYDROGEN AUTHORITY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville) moved:

That the Government consider the advisability of introducing legislation to establish a Canadian Hydrogen Authority which would report directly to the Minister of State for Science and Technology and whose mandate would empower it to:

(a) initiate, coordinate and oversee the research and development implied by a commitment from the government to undertake a Hydrogen Mission;

(b) consult with representatives of industry, government, labour, academia and other relevant groups in order to set an agenda determining the priorities and goals of the Mission with respect to research and the establishment of Canadian leadership in the development and production of hydrogen technology; and

(c) create a timetable according to which major projects crucial to the Mission's success are to be undertaken and completed.

He said: Madam Speaker, I hope that the scheduling of an attractive diversion by the Speaker is not a sign of the regard in which this motion is held. Nevertheless, it is with enthusiasm I rise today to address the motion concerning the creation of a Canadian Hydrogen Authority. Ultimately, of course, the decision to establish such an authority would be part of a much bigger commitment by the Canadian Government to undertake a National Hydrogen Mission.

[Translation]

In recent years we have heard a lot about industrial strategies. A national mission would define a strategy and provide an approach, a vision, a philosophy. The report on Hydrogen a national mission for Canada, is an excellent illustration of this kind of mission, an example of the way we ought to come to grips with the over-all problem of economic development.

First I should like to comment briefly on this idea of a national mission before dealing more specifically with the role of hydrogen in this strategy.

Madam Speaker, we have all heard the rather strange cliché that Canadians are supposed to be levers of wood and drawers of water. There is a certain fatalist truth to that, but it is true as well that we belong to the international fraternity when it comes to some of the newest technologies such as telecommunications, aerospace, computer science, and electronics. Clearly we are making progress and we do have what it takes to be a lot more than what the cliché would make us appear to be.

Nonetheless it is a fact that a sizeable number of our economic sectors are directly related to the extraction and export of natural resources, to the extent that we are prisoners of the vagaries of international demand and the sharp fluctuations of the price of raw materials.

This has been painfully obvious over the past five years. On the one hand, the economy of Ontario and that of Quebec—to a degree—with their leading manufacturing sectors, have been expanding at an accelerated pace despite the world recession.

On the other hand, the Atlantic provinces, the Prairies and the West Coast, dependent as they are on raw material exports, have been at a disadvantage due to the price of raw materials in international markets.

All this to say, of course, that those economies must become less dependent on raw material exports. But the question remains: How?

[English]

The advice one usually gets at this point is that diversification must build on existing strengths, which translates into the view that a manufacturing sector should be developed which is based upon reasonably strong resource industries. Thus far the advice is sound. However, a key question needs answering.

When we speak of the creation of a manufacturing sector, what kind of beast do we have in mind? Is it the kind of manufacturing which creates jobs based on secondary manufacturing through the processing of fish, wood or other resources? Perhaps, in part. But these will not replace the many jobs lost to such things as cheaper labour costs in Southeast Asian countries like South Korea, Taiwan and Singapore, with which we must compete.

Is it then capital intensive as is the case of computerized automobile assembly plants or oil refineries? If so, it probably requires that governments attract investors, mainly foreign, by providing generous tax concessions to offset the costs of locating large projects in this or that region of the country.

This strategy, rather than solving problems, really plays into the hands of our competitors. For if the over-all goal of diversification is greater local control of the economy and protection against the whims of the market, the strategy fails. It simply shifts the dependence from one external player to another. It is the owners, not the community, who control the factory's future and to that extent the local economy.

Moreover, far from injecting capital into the national economy by removing profits from the country, it may well drain it. The good thing about such projects is that once construction is finished, away they go. The whole package—products, markets and jobs—is there and functioning in the shortest possible time. For a politician who looks no farther than the next election, this is of course an attractive feature.

In large measure this is the Government's strategy. It is the promise and the danger in the free trade pact. In fact, importing packages holus-bolus creates rather than solves problems in the national economy. It may be a temporary shot in the arm for such and such a town, but in the long run permanent solutions cannot be based on quick fixes. They must evolve from the ground up, developing the strengths and special advantages of the local economy. They must merge into the broader regional and national economies to form a single, cohesive and integrated system which is given direction in some way.

Therefore, if we are serious about diversification, we must ask what is on the horizon. If we want to develop, it must be toward the future, not toward the past. It does not take much looking to see that the economies of the future will be dominated by highly sophisticated, knowledge intensive industries. Developed countries are weaning themselves of their dependence on natural resources and the manufacture of labour intensive products and replacing them with products and services which are knowledge intensive. In order to remain a developed country then, Canadians will have to make this transition.

This is a real challenge. As the recent report of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology has stated, we do not presently lead in any area of international science or technology. In spite of the engineering feats involved in the creation of, say the Canadarm, our expertise tends to be limited to the mastery of a narrow range of scientific and technological areas. In short, however good a job we are doing at working at someone else's claim, Canadians are not staking out their own territory in the scientific and technological frontiers.

Indeed, it has become a dominant strategy for Canadians to look for niches in existing markets which they can fill. In making the transition to a knowledge based economy then, we can if we wish continue the tried and true strategy of finding small holes in someone else's initiatives which we can specialize in filling. It is a proven strategy. Of course, the disadvantage is that it places us permanently in the shadow of bigger players.

The alternative is for us to strike out on our own and choose an area which can capitalize on our existing strengths instead of targeting small niches in already crowded markets. By adopting a broad strategy to develop and manage an emerging industry we can stake out our own fertile territory and cultivate it for the markets it will eventually produce. If a new area of economic development really is emerging, opportunities will abound. We need only to recognize them and have the initiative to exploit them.

In this respect our place in history would not be unlike our early settlers and entrepreneurs who created from the wilderness a nation united by railways and roads and whose economic prosperity was powered by vast resources of timber, coal, fish, minerals and so on.

Let us be candid. The creation of a new, knowledge intensive, sunrise industry is a major undertaking. It requires massive investment in research and development to build the technologies and expertise on which the new industry is based. But research and development take time. As a result there is usually a significant time gap between investment and dividend. Private investors, however, like to see quick returns on their money. They are, at best, reluctant to make long-term investments in research and development even when the sum is, relatively speaking, small.

When we start talking about billion dollar outlays to found a new industry, we simply cannot count on them to pick up the ball and run. In spite of what some economists may say, we have learned through bitter experience that one thing market forces cannot be relied upon to guarantee is innovation depending upon large-scale scientific research and development. We certainly cannot move from the premise that an opportunity, even a golden opportunity, exists in a market system to the conclusion that therefore it will be exploited. Perhaps an example will make this point.

Consider Japan's commitment to develop a fifth generation computer. This is a multibillion dollar investment which over the 10 or so years it will take to develop will unquestionably repay few dividends. It is extremely doubtful therefore that any single company or consortium of companies would have undertaken the project on its own. But in order to consolidate the country's position as a world leader in the industry the Japanese Government mobilized members of business, academia and Government and united them around the common goal of making Japan the first country to develop a fifth generation computer. This type of collective effort by members from all sectors of the community and led by Government can be called a national mission.

Canada, too, needs a national mission. Some think that our participation in the U.S. space station is such a mission for Canada. It is not. The reason why it is not is clear. A national mission is distinctly the possession of that nation which undertakes it. When the mission is extended beyond the nation it ceases to appeal to the inner sense of pride, duty and, most important, of self which sustains it.

The space station is an American initiative. Even though Canadians participate in it, we neither control nor direct it. Although Canadians can take pride in their contribution to the American space program, it is still the other guy's show.

Hence a national mission is a broadly based, government led strategy which aims at mobilizing diverse sectors of society and uniting them around a common goal. This sense of participating in a collective undertaking is crucial. This is what binds a project together and gives it a special momentum, a sense of potential national accomplishment. As such, it is the highest form of nation building.

I think I have said enough for the moment about the concept of a national mission to give other Hon. Members a pretty good idea of what I am talking about. I therefore want to move on to propose what that national mission for Canada might be. Before doing so it might be helpful to recap what I have said.

There is a transformation now under way in developed nations in the direction of knowledge based economies. Knowledge intensive industries result from innovative application of new scientific and technological knowledge. Staking out and developing one of these areas would allow Canadians to create and to establish a new industry. This is however a large scale long term costly venture requiring substantial investment in research and development. Because of this, private investors are unlikely to undertake such a project alone. Yet there is a golden opportunity for Canadians to move out of the shadows of their industrial big brothers and become a major player in the new economic order.

To do so we need the co-operation and participation of business, academia, Government, labour and so on. This can only be achieved through strong leadership provided by the federal Government under the auspices of a national mission.

I now turn to the question of hydrogen as that national mission. If Canadians want to undertake a national mission to develop a new national industry, quite simply stated that new industry should reside in the development of hydrogen technology, since hydrogen will be the energy currency of the future.

As we are all aware, the world's main energy source is fossil fuels, or as some of my friends prefer to call it, old dead dinosaurs. We also know that there are only so many dinosaurs—

Mr. Berger: Not in this House.

Mr. McCurdy: It has been suggested that certain Liberals believe that some of the dinosaurs have survived in the backbenches of the Conservative Party.

One thing we know, it will not be very long before we have to go to museums to find dinosaurs. In short, we are running out of fossil fuels.

• (1540)

But there is an even more urgent and frightening concern about fossil fuels, and that is pollution. First, the burning of fossil fuels gives us the smoggy, noxious environments of large urban centres; second, they produce acid rain. We have discovered that we are not only killing ourselves by breathing sulphur dioxide, we are also killing our lakes, rivers, forests, and everything in them.

As though this were not bad enough, we are visited by another, third, plague, the greenhouse effect, the carbon dioxide build-up in the atmosphere. If it continues at the present rate, it will drastically alter the climatic conditions and cycles of the entire planet by the middle of the next century, if not before. It means massive flooding or droughts and drastic changes to crop conditions around the world. The result would be economic chaos.

The conclusion is that depleting stocks and environmental destruction will force us to seek alternative fuels. This is where hydrogen comes in. To see why hydrogen is so important, a distinction must be made between sources of energy and energy currencies. The former includes things like coal, crude oil, hydroelectric power, uranium, sunlight and wind. The latter refers to the forms which energy takes. Thus, electrical energy being derived from sources such as wind or coal is an energy currency, not a source. Future energy needs will have to be satisfied by currencies which are non-pollutants and derived from renewable sources.

Hydrogen is an energy currency, not a source. Like electricity, it can be derived from a vast variety of renewable resources such as hydro, wind and solar. Moreover, while electricity stills looms large in the energy picture, hydrogen will inevitably play an increasingly important and complementary role.

There are three reasons for this. First, there are major tasks, such as serving as a chemical or material feedstock, which electricity cannot perform. Second, while hydrogen can be stored and transported in large quantities, electricity cannot. Lastly, there is no other known chemical currency which can be manufactured in large quantities from renewable resources.

This last point is especially important. It means that hydrogen is the inevitable choice as a feedstock in the future production of chemical commodities. This virtually guarantees the need for highly sophisticated technology to serve a multibillion dollar market. If Canadians are the first to develop that technology, they will have virtually unfettered domination of that market. Indeed, in Canada alone, hydrogen is already a one billion dollar a year industry, fully one half of which is accounted for in the manufacture of chemical products. This means that the technology is already under development.

I spoke earlier about the delay between investment and return when developing new industries. In fact, one of the great virtues of developing and marketing hydrogen technology is that the transition to the hydrogen age will be made in stages. This means that we can expect significant early returns on some investments and, equally important, permits us to develop our markets a stage at a time as these new technologies and products are phased-in.

Hydrogen technology is already widely employed in the production of just those fossil fuels which will eventually be replaced. In Alberta, it is now used in the upgrading of heavy oil from the tar sands; 30 per cent of our domestic use of hydrogen is in the petroleum and petrochemical industries. In other words, a commitment to develop hydrogen technology is not like stepping out into virgin territory. We can actually work toward the development of the new industry in and through the old one. This is consistent with the idea of building on existing strengths.

We are now on the verge of signing a deal which would purchase, at a cost of $8 to $12 billion, imported technology to build nuclear powered submarines. Would it not make more sense to invest that money in the development of a hydrogen fuel cell? A submarine powered by such a fuel cell would have under-ice capability at least equal to that of a nuclear powered submarine. It would have the added advantage of not giving off any heat exhaust by which it might be detected by the enemy. This could be an opportunity for Canadians to develop a home-grown technology which would render the current nuclear technology obsolete. Moreover, such a fuel cell could also be used to power automobiles, locomotives, aircrafts, rockets, and other types of marine vessels.

The potential applications of a hydrogen fuel cell to vehicles is nothing short of spectacular. Canada, which already has an established automobile manufacturing industry, could develop a prototype, a non-polluting vehicle. The marketing of a hydrogen powered vehicle would be a ground breaking effort in the battle against pollution, and consumers could not be held hostage to the threat of diminishing fuel supplies and rising fuel costs.

As for our natural advantages, Canada's vast hydro resources in provinces like Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia, and Ontario provide ideal locations in which to situate a plant to manufacture hydrogen by electrolytic conversion from renewable sources. It is worth noting here that Quebec has had a long standing interest in the potential of hydrogen as providing a market for its hydroelectric resources.

[Translation]

Premier Bourassa in fact mentioned in his book entitled L'énergie du Nord (Power from the North) the possibility of developing the hydrogen market. Just recently, the Government announced a $7.5 billion investment to develop James Bay and launched a study into the possibility of developing appropriate technology to transport large quantities of hydrogen by sea.

[English]

We have outlined the possibility for an industrial strategy for Canada based upon hydrogen technology. It is still early in the game. We are asking of this country to accept the challenge that will make us not a sharer in the missions of other nations, but to establish a mission of our own based on strengths that we already have.

The existing petrochemical industry already is based in large measure on the use of hydrogen generated from methane. Some day it can be produced through the hydroelectric power that so characterizes many parts of our country. It is a fuel of the future, one that is renewable in its source, and non-polluting. At a time when we need new energy sources and new energy currencies, at a time when we need to attack the problem of pollution, we have made a proposal here now before you, Madam Speaker, that can put Canada, for the first time in its history, in first place, to the benefit of the entire country and every citizen in it.

Mr. Gurbin: I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for his roundness of understanding, and for his support of the notion produced for the Government by the advisory group on hydrogen. Several years ago the Government appointed a group of prominent and capable Canadians under the leadership of Professor David Scott from the University of Toronto. The Hon. Member has certainly grasped the essence of the report and many of its important recommendations. I have several small questions to ask the Member.

I imagine that the Hon. Member understands that this study was commissioned by the Government in order to allow the Government to define its role and help to determine its actions vis-a-vis hydrogen. I would imagine that the Hon. Member knows that the Minister of State (Science and Technology) (Mr. Oberle), and his predecessor, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and his predecessor and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) have all supported the production of this report and made it possible. The recommendations have come back to the Government and have been distributed by it for consideration by a variety of Members of the Canadian community who are interested.

There is an essential recommendation in the report, not to get into technical matters, but I would like to ask the Hon. Member to which of the projects he is most attracted. Last night I came to Ottawa on the train, and it would have been pretty nice to have been on a hydrogen train that was dumping water along the way. That is certainly something that has a lot of interest, and it would look good on Canadian National Railways. I wish to ask the Hon. Member to which of the specific projects he is most attracted?.

Second, does the Hon. Member feel that the research aspect, the innovation aspect, the environmental aspect, or the industrial aspect is most important from a Canadian perspective?

Finally, what would be the position of the Hon. Member's Party on the establishment of a Canadian hydrogen authority at the federal level, and which is the essential ingredient and recommendation of the report? This authority would, at the national level, give the federal Government an opportunity, in a variety of ways, to help influence, in a constructive way, Canada's leadership and the "daring to be first" in a number of areas which are hydrogen related and hydrogen technology related?

• (1550)

Clearly the disposition of the Government would be defined in seeing the private sector develop these important technologies while assisting universities and the scientific community directly and indirectly through a number of different opportunities.

Could the Hon. Member respond to my specific questions?

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the kind comments of the Hon. Member. He has asked a great number of questions and has made a number of remarks to which I would be pleased to attempt to respond.

I am certainly cognizant of the fact that the study was commissioned by the Government. I am also cognizant of the fact that the former Minister of State for Science and Technology cancelled the $10 million alternative energy program within the NRC. This was an act which was not consistent with the ideas even then existing about the potential of hydrogen technology as an area that could constitute the Canadian mission.

In referring to the notion of a mission, I should like to re-emphasize the importance of it being a Canadian mission. As the Hon. Member knows, the author of the report indicated that it was fundamental to the mission that Canada own the technology that was developed. Obviously that has certain significances in respect of the free trade agreement and the conditions of ownership and control with regard to technology. We would hope that the industry would be in a position to sell technology to the rest of the world.

The Hon. Member asked which specific application of hydrogen technology I would most support. Of course he knows that as matters now are we have developed considerably in the area of hydrogen technology in connection with the hydrogenation of heavy petroleum from methane.

The chief source of hydrogen in the country is methane, which is a relatively expensive source in terms of the kinds of usages that might be projected. Ultimately, as fossil fuels run out, hydroelectrically produced hydrogen would be in a position in terms of cost and general economies of scale to replace those fuels for a number of ordinary fuel uses.

However, apart from developing the technology of hydrogen transport, storage, and so on, in alluding to the potential for hydrogen driven marine vessels—and specifically submarines were cited—it is an area that should be explored as soon as possible. Heavy locomotive vehicles, whether they be trains, submarines, rockets, or airplanes, are areas of the future in which we could establish our place in respect of alternative applications of hydrogen in new forms of motive power through the application of the fuel cell and other applications with which I am sure the Hon. Member is familiar.

If I were looking to the future and immediate prospects for big jumps in our advantage, those are the areas where I would seek Canadian advantage.

With regard to the roles of government and industry and the relative balance of contribution involved, of course we understand that hydrogen technology in terms of the application of hydrogen as the fuel at some future date is so far down the pipe that it would be difficult, in my view, to expect industry to make a heavy investment in it.

Having said that, I think it is up to the authority, in consultation with the players in the field, to establish the relative contributions of government and industry and the priorities chosen to pursue the development of this mission in Canada.

Mr. Tupper: Madam Speaker, I am delighted this afternoon to spend a few minutes in the House addressing the motion before us. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) for priorizing a very crucial R and D issue for us. He highlighted the fact that he would like to see Canada move into a knowledge based society. He indicated that we should develop a national mission and, in his view, that the national mission should relate to hydrogen fuel cell research.

I was somewhat surprised by his answer to the previous Hon. Member that he would identify submarine locomotion as his first priority for developing a hydrogen fuel cell engine. I did not realize that the New Democratic Party wanted to develop a submarine fleet for Canada. It really was an interesting aspect of his presentation, and I am confident that Canadians would be interested in learning about it.

My question to the Hon. Member relates to the motion which he put before us today wherein it indicates that we would create a Canadian hydrogen authority. It would probably be a very useful initiative to get this important area off the ground. My real question to him is this. Over the next three years, how much funding would he assign to the authority in order to get this initiative on the road, regardless of what part of the national mission he would like to see go forward?

I thought he might have been more expansive in his previous answer about the segments that would go forward. However, I would really like him to take a moment to share with the House how much money his Party would assign to hydrogen fuel cell research at this point in time?

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the initial kind words of my hon. colleague, a scientist and parliamentarian whom I respect very much. I am surprised that he chose to divert the discussion to quite crafty political considerations which were entirely wrong.

I did not say that the fuel cell should be the only priority. Nor did I suggest that submarines should be the priority for the application of fuel cells. Let me tell the Hon. Member that it is a fact of New Democratic defence policy, which we suggested, that we indeed buy conventional, not nuclear, submarines.

It seems to me that the Government's notion of buying nuclear submarines could have this best appraisal placed upon it—that it seeks submarines with the capacity of staying submerged for long periods of time, and hydrogen powered submarines would have that quality. The Hon. Member is wrong on two counts.

In respect of funding, if the Government restored the $10 million that it has already cut from alternative energy research, it would be a good start in getting the authority started on its job.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Madam Speaker, I am rather pleased to join in the debate this afternoon. I am thankful that the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) placed this interesting, challenging, and important topic on the agenda of the House of Commons. I am also thankful for his putting it in such a responsible, conciliatory, and non-combative fashion. Perhaps at the end of my speech I will tell him that I have no problem agreeing with almost all the principles in his motion, and I know that should please him. I know that it would please Dr. Scott, the author of this important report who is in the gallery, a former colleague, Gordon Gilchrist, and others who spent a lot of time contemplating the exciting prospect of making Canada a world leader in hydrogen technology and of having in place a national mission for the development of hydrogen in its many dimensions.

Having said that, I would be remiss if I did not engage in setting the stage and showing a larger picture of the country's national policy and national strategy within which such a hydrogen mission could be placed.

I just returned from a week-long trip, and as it happened, it coincided with a number of meetings that I had. First, I met with the Council of Science and Technology Ministers of the provinces and territories in Edmonton last Friday. Then I travelled to Vancouver on Monday. We had one of the first of five regional follow-up conferences to the national conference in Toronto in which the Hon. Member participated in part. That conference created such enthusiasm and excitement through the country. Then on Tuesday, I chaired, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a meeting of his personal advisory council, the National Advisory Council on Science and Technology. Then I had to fly back overnight to be here because I wanted to participate in this debate. I say this as a compliment to the Hon. Member, because it is very timely to discuss this.

As the Hon. Member knows, we are discussing the priorities of the Government. We have spent a lot of time and effort at the Standing Committee, and the Hon. Member participated in some of that. For the first time, the committee spoke of issues like this, giving Canadians an opportunity to bring the message to Government through the standing committee. in fact, the standing committee looked at the hydrogen report and gave it excellent marks.

I have said these things because the National Advisory Council the Prime Minister appointed dealt with the subject as well, as have all the other like bodies. It is not anything new. In fact, as the Hon. Member knows, there have been previous such studies. One of them was done within the context of the alternative energy task force on substitutes dating back to the 70s when we were suffering from the energy crisis and were looking for future energy sources. All of these things have come together and we have created quite a bit of interest throughout the country.

As I said, we have also spent a lot of time doing precisely what the Hon. Member has suggested is urgent for the country, and that is to develop a national thrust, a focus, a policy and a strategy that will take us from where we are into the new information age. The Hon. Member has said that hydrogen will be the energy currency, and I say that information and knowledge will be the currency that drives the new age. He has no disagreement with that.

I just happen to disagree with the Hon. Member on one point. He said in his speech that he does not believe that the private sector could, on its own, provide the necessary impetus to do the type of innovation that would be necessary. I say to him that only the private sector can do that. If the public sector could do it, we would not have any worries. We have attempted to do it for so many years but it has not worked.

Unless there is co-operation between the universities, the private sector and government labs, and unless we have the resources and the correct climate created through the leadership of the federal Government, I recognize that readily, nothing will happen. We will not get that required co-operation if we continue to tell the private sector to wait for us to do it, and then we will call on it whenever we are ready to pass on some of the benefits. The private sector will have to take the lead, and we intend in fact to involve the private sector very much in every stage of our future plans and programs.

The Hon. Member recognized this readily. I liked his speech because it reflected a number of the phrases I have used myself, and the Prime Minister has used in speeches, including the phrases "national trust", "national strategy", "moving into the information age" and "finding ways to diversify our economy". These phrases are indeed in line with the advice we have been receiving, the advice we have tested against the group of eminent Canadians who came together in Toronto for three days to work with the Prime Minister.

We confirmed a consensus. We looked at the principles we had identified as being the basis of a national thrust. We unveiled the policy as we see it unfolding for the role Canada will play in this new knowledge and information age. We have a national consensus and it is being celebrated throughout the country. We are rather pleased about that, because without that kind of a mobilization of all the geniuses in Canada, and without the commitment of all the stakeholders including the private sector, the provinces, universities and the federal Government, we will not be able to respond to the challenges and opportunities that exist.

What are some of our priorities? The forces we are attempting to manage and control are changing in such a revolutionary fashion. There are new market forces in the world. It became quite clear to us, as it always has been, that any policy would have to be consistent with what one might consider to be distinctively Canadian cultural values and attitudes. Any policy would have to be consistent with what Canadians consider their role to be.

Each nation has different priorities and different attitudes. The United States, for instance, sees itself as the custodian of liberty and freedom throughout the world. That is why the national Government in the United States spends 75 per cent of its research money on defence. Thank God the Americans do that, because they have helped the rest of the free world to bring about stability and peace for a period unprecedented in history.

Canadians have priorities that are somewhat different. We love our environment. We take our custodial practices over the wealth of our natural resources very seriously. Those are the priorities of Canadians.

We set out to show leadership in developing a national policy and a national strategy consistent with Canadian values. We have introduced a number of principles that underlie the national strategy. My hon. friend from Windsor—Walkerville knows of these principles. They are those included in the national policy which was signed by 10 provinces and the territories with the federal Government, the innovative action strategy.

In that strategy, one of the principles is industrial innovation and technological diffusion. The other is the effective management of federal resources, a principle that is not insignificant. This year, $4.5 billion was spent on research for development in science-related activities intramurally. The third principle is the development of the necessary highly qualified people. This requires university training. The fourth principle is public education and public awareness of the concept of a science culture, something which is critically important. Finally, of course, there is the principle of the development of our strategic technologies.

The Hon. Member has mentioned hydrogen as being a possible strategic technology. Frankly, I am as enthusiastic as he is about that particular prospect. We have done all kinds of things. We have not just consulted and planned. Canada could not wait, nor were we prepared to wait, until all the studies were complete and every Canadian had been consulted to ensure that what we are doing will be consistent with these attitudes and will in the end mobilize and inspire Canadians to join in this national mission. We did take some actions, particularly in the strategic technologies. There is the microelectronics technology to which we committed $90 million. There is the biotechnology thrust that is now gaining much momentum. There is the work that is going on in advanced materials.

How does that all tie in with what we are discussing here today? First, in light of what I said, we want to look at the proposals in Dr. Scott's report, in the report of the standing committee and in the report of the alternate fuel committee.

How would that tie in to this kind of national thrust? First, I said Canadians love the environment. We take our custodial responsibility very seriously. We have always paid a lot of attention to energy security. We live in a northern climate and every home which provides the kind of comfort and security you want has to have, in our country at least, a proper heating system. Energy has always been critically important and it has always been in the back of Canadians' minds. That is why we developed, for example, the tar sands technology far in advance of everyone else.

The Hon. Member says we have never done anything. With respect, we have the best nuclear technology in the world. The CANDU reactor is still the most efficient and safest nuclear generating system in the world. There is no doubt about that in anyone's mind.

We are the third nation in space. Why? Because of a Canadian national mission involving fascination with the idea of bridging distances and bringing our people together from coast to coast. That is why we are world leaders in transportation and communications technology. That is why we were the first nation in the world to have our own communications satellite in space.

Canadians have had all kinds of national missions in the past and I do not accept for one minute that we have never done anything or will never in the future be able to do anything. Quite the contrary. As I travel the world and meet with my counterparts in Europe and Asia I am a big wheel. It is just that Canadians at home do not understand that and have yet to celebrate the fact that we are quite good at what we do when we set our minds to turning adversity into opportunity.

Why hydrogen? Because we think seriously about energy security, we would like to find a replacement for conventional fuels which are polluting the environment. It is not just our own environment, it is the world environment. We hear alarmist reports all the time about what might happen to the ozone layer if we insist on using conventional fuels. We would like to replace the harmful chemicals we use in agriculture and forestry with perhaps biofertilizers, pesticides and herbicides. Hydrogen can play an important role in lessening our dependence upon traditional fuels.

Of course, we are uniquely positioned to take a lead in the world in the production, storage and development uses of hydrogen, but it is hardly a new idea. I am told that the Germans are launching this year a hydrogen submarine. It is not hydrogen propelled but it is used to control the environment inside the submarine. Several car manufacturers in Europe are testing hydrogen engines.

With respect to propulsion technology, we have perhaps missed a connection, but there is an exciting aspect to all this in developing strategic partnerships and alliances with other industrial countries in using our technology. We are the biggest user of hydrogen. There is a $1 billion market right here. We are using it for the upgrading of the tar sands and heavy oil production. It is of course the fuel that space rockets and other vehicles will be propelled by. That is nothing new. It is happening now.

We could develop some strategic alliances and partnerships to carve out that part of the hydrogen mission unique to us. First, we have lots of natural gas. We have an abundance of hydroelectricity which other countries do not have. We could literally take electricity, turn it into hydrogen, and export it to regenerate electricity. You could export electricity not just to California or New York but all over the world.

Everyone likes to be a little bit of a futurist and I can see us 30 or 50 years from now driving down to the grocery store to pick up a fuel cell and plug it into the side of our car. It is all right there and Canada could play an important role.

What is the hold-up? Let me tell the Hon. Member there is no hold-up. Let me tell my colleague that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and I have invited to Ottawa within the next few weeks a number of people representing various sectors of the economy, including some academics, who could help us design the next step. We have consulted and will continue to consult with industry. We have a national hydrogen council which has been working for many years, and public utilities, energy companies and so on, who have given us valuable advice.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for putting his motion on the table. As he knows, a former colleague of ours, Mr. Gilchrist, worked closely with Dr. Scott. He is one of the authors of the report. My hon. friend from Bruce—Grey is one of the early instigators of mobilizing the keenest people in the country to help us put this report together. There is no hold-up.

However, hydrogen is not the only thing we need to keep us on the crest of the wave sweeping mankind towards the next century in this new age. There are other priorities.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have not been reluctant to make tough decisions. We have stabilized university funding. With private sector support we have increased it over five years by over $1 billion. Just a month ago in Toronto the Prime Minister announced $1.3 billion in additional funding for science and technology over the next five years. I have already told the Hon. Member about the micro-electronic strategy costing $90 million. We put $28 million into the industrial assistance program last year. Some $30 million went to the unsolicited proposals program. In all, in the current fiscal year, we will be increasing spending in real terms by over 5 per cent or $2.6 billion. That is not an insignificant response to the challenges the Hon. Member has identified and with which I agree.

I thank him for his support because this issue will be raised again. Of course, one of the principles of the national strategy is public awareness and culture building. People are listening to this debate today and that will tend to help. It must be encouraging to Canadians to know that when we talk about the future of our country and a truly national mission, we can put partisanship aside and talk about a national thrust in a cohesive fashion. I think this could be one such thrust. As soon as our dialogue with the decision-makers who have to make it happen is complete, I hope to have some very good news for the Hon. Member and all Canadians. I hope that hydrogen can truly become one of our great national missions.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, let me express my appreciation for the kind remarks of the Hon. Minister with respect to the motion and my speech associated with it. I welcome the indication that the Government does intend to follow up on the recommendation contained in the motion, which recommendation, of course, has been made by others who have studied the subject.

I am rather puzzled in that while I regard the issue as a non-partisan one, I sense that the Minister strained himself trying to find some partisan exceptions to things I did not say. He indicated that in one way or other I said that industry could not do the job. I was very careful to say at least three times that the job cannot be done by industry alone, it cannot be done by government alone, and it cannot be done by academics alone. It requires a co-operative effort among all the players.

I sense that the Minister has failed to grasp the role of government in respect to this matter, which is to grab the mantle of leadership and contribute to the economy of the country as only a national mission on a grand scale can. The Minister accuses me of failing to recognize that Canada has had national missions in the past.

I am not so sure that the semantics can be dealt with adequately. One wonders whether the Candu acted as the kind of national mission about which we are talking here. Nor, in my view, does the unquestioned leadership of Canada in communications satellites constitute the kind of mission about which we are talking here. None of these things operate in areas of such widespread significance.

The thing which concerns me most is that the Hon. Minister said that we will search for some basis on which, with partners, we can carve out our own niche. I want Canada to have "the niche". I want Canada to be "the leader". I want Germany and the United States to join with us, in the same fashion in which we are joining with the Americans on the space platform, as partners on the mission, a Canadian mission. We can lead in all areas. I understand that Germany has achieved some measure of leadership in hydrogen technology, but this is not a race in which we must stay second place. We can be number one.

The Hon. Minister said that there have been some significant advances made by the Government with respect to policy advancement in the area of research and technology. I grant that there have indeed been a lot of words, indeed the right words, and the right thrust. However, the fact remains that we are spending a smaller fraction of our GNP than we were before. In real money government is spending less. I am sure that there are many out there who would like to know what is really going to happen with that $1.3 billion.

There is no question that there are some partisan issues. However, I hope we can agree, as I thought I heard the Minister suggest, that the Government could, that this hydrogen mission will be pursued and the hydrogen authority will indeed be established. If that is indeed the case, we will join hands, I am sure, with our colleagues in the Liberal Party to move into the future to make Canada number one.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should speak more often without notes. I do not know who prepared his speech, but it was more confusing than his free-wheeling oratory. It is good to have him aboard.

I shall indeed attempt, on behalf of the Government of Canada, to take this lead throughout the world and make Canada first, because the Germans and the Japanese do not have the electricity or the natural gas which is required to produce hydrogen on a large scale. It is for us to develop that, along with the handling, storage, and transportation technology.

It is all terribly exciting. However, if this is truly going to revolutionize the world, it will be handy to have in strategic alliances those in the world who will use the products and the technology we are generating, because not even the most powerful of nations can afford, all by themselves, to assume all of the risks and all of the costs which are associated with this kind of development.

Referring back to our nuclear strategy, that commitment cost us in the neighbourhood of $6 billion in research. Some of those courageous decisions were made by a Conservative Government. Everyone in the world thought that that was what the world needed in the 21st century. They could not, of course, anticipate all of the other things which would be associated with it which have caused such obstacles and barriers in people's minds and attitudes which now make it so difficult to sell our Candu reactor.

The Hon. Member is now trying to create a new mission in energy and fuel cells. I appreciate his enthusiasm and will keep it mobilized. When the time comes that I need his support and that of his Party he will be standing with me.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, early in the Minister's remarks he referred to the regional science forum which was conducted in Vancouver on the weekend as part of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) National Advisory Council of which the Minister is a very important part. Could the Minister tell us who the participants were and what subject matter was covered in the forum this past weekend?

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to do that. As the Hon. Member knows, we organized a national conference on technology innovation in Toronto to which the Prime Minister invited 200 of the key decision makers in the country to discuss Canada's future in the new information age. The response to that conference was so enormous and enthusiastic that we decided to have follow-up conferences in every region of the country. Indeed, the first such conference was held in Vancouver. There will be others in Regina, Hamilton, Montreal, and Saint John, New Brunswick, within the next few weeks.

We brought together perhaps the most eminent and influential decision makers, leaders from the academia, industrial leaders, and partners in municipal governments and industrial commissioners, to discuss some of the recommendations which had come out of the national conference in Toronto. We discussed with them the national policy, the national strategy, and the consensus around the principal elements which make up these policies and strategies. Indeed, as I anticipated, not only did we get a confirmation of the fact that we are going in the right direction, but a commitment from everyone there to become involved and make their own commitment toward the new national wave which is sweeping us toward the next century.

It was a very exhilarating experience, as we anticipated it would be. I just about did not need an aircraft to return, because British Columbia, that great region which is the gateway to the Pacific, has such inherent strength in terms of our energy resource wealth and so on to contribute to the national thrust that I feel very good about having carried out this exercise there.

• (1630)

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, before I begin with the remarks I had prepared, I want to comment on something the Minister said during his speech. He said that the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) said that the private sector cannot do it. The Minister replied that only the private sector can do it. He then referred to the necessity for leadership on the part of the Government.

There is not only a need for leadership on the part of the Government, there is a need for funding for this kind of research that will develop the use of hydrogen in Canada.

It is common knowledge that in basic research in many countries in the world Governments are funding major research programs in long-term applied research. I recall an interview that Fraser Mustard, President of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, gave at the time that Canada announced its participation in the space station. He said that it was a myth to think that this research in the United States was funded by the private sector. All of the funding for this long-term applied research and high risk research, which will only pay dividends 10 or 15 years down the road, comes from Government.

I want to remind the Minister that this kind of program will not be launched without adequate financial resources committed by the Government to spur private sector initiative.

I want to thank the Member for Windsor—Walkerville for having introduced this subject for debate today. Let me say that I agree with him that there are sound economic and environmental reasons for pursuing the development of hydrogen as an energy source.

First let us deal with the environmental considerations. We all know that the most expensive way to deal with pollution is to clean up the environment once it has been polluted. It may be impossible to do so in some cases, such as with carbon dioxide that is released into the atmosphere. It is also expensive to remove pollutants at the time they are produced. An example of this is the installation of scrubbers or other technology in some of our coal-burning plants.

It is least expensive and obviously most sound from the point of view of the environment to use a process which does not produce pollution. We avoid the problem by burning clean fuel. The significance of hydrogen is that it is the only fuel which produces nothing but water vapour when burning. There are sound environmental reasons for pursuing the development of hydrogen as an energy source.

There are also economic considerations. As I understand the report of the Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities, in suggesting a national mission in the area of hydrogen for Canada they are saying that we would not only be protecting the environment, we will be building our energy future by embarking on such a national mission. In spite of the current oil glut, fossil fuels will run out at some point in our future. There are varying estimates on when that may occur, but certainly there could be shortages caused by man-made disasters or wars in the very near future. We could experience the kind of shortages that were caused as a result of the Arab oil embargo in 1973, and again in 1979.

Apart from the shortages caused by wars or embargos, there is the reality that fossil fuels will run out. The country which will be ready to operate without them or extend the supply of fossil fuels will have a tremendous competitive energy advantage.

The other advantage that was pointed out by the Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities is that hydrogen as a future energy fuel will need a technology. There will need to be a whole technological infrastructure to make its use practical. Quite clearly, the first country to develop that technology will be able to sell it to the world.

These are what I understand to be some of the considerations that are being put forward by the Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities. While I agree with the Member for Windsor—Walkerville that we should seriously consider adopting the development of hydrogen as a national mission, there are obviously difficulties and sacrifices that will have to be made in the adoption of any such national mission. These difficulties in respect to Canada are compounded by some of the very shortsighted budget cuts that were made by the Conservative Government after taking office in 1984.

There was an energy division at the National Research Council which was engaged in research primarily in the area of renewable energy. This division was totally disbanded.

Figures which I believe relate to hydrogen indicate that in 1984 a program was founded at some $9.6 million. The work was mainly being done at the NRC, but some research was done at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of National Defence. In fiscal year 1984-85, this program was cut to $6.6 million.

The current situation, as I understand it, is that there is only funding of approximately $1 million, with research primarily being carried out at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In an appearance before the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology last week, the President of the National Research Council, Dr. Larkin Kerwin, told us how difficult it would be to gear up for another program in the area of hydrogen research. I would like to quote a few words from his submission:

> If we were to start up the Division again, it would take a very long time and a very great amount of money. I know that there is a government commission going around the country at the moment examining the problem of alternate energy sources, but if it were to start up again at NRC, it would take us a long time to reassemble this team.

So there we have the Conservative approach to research and development. They come into office, close down the energy division, then they set up, under the auspices of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, a commission to explore the potential for developing alternative energy sources. This is, of course, after they have cut all the research in the area of alternative energies. Then they start thinking about pursuing a national mission in the area of the development of hydrogen. If that is not an example of reverse logic or short-sighted thinking, I would personally have difficulty finding a better one.

I would like to say a word to the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville about the particular motion we are debating today. He is suggesting that a Canadian hydrogen authority be established. I think it may be implicit in his motion, but I would like to say to him that it is my belief, and perhaps understood in the report of the Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities, that this authority will not actually do the research but will ensure that research is done. It will, of course, need to have appropriate funding to prime research in the private sector.

I also want to say to the Member that I understand him to be proposing this as a national mission for Canada, but I do not think he is suggesting that this is perhaps the only area in which we need to consider a major project. I personally believe that in order to increase our spending on research and development, and in order to ensure that our industry is competitive in world markets in the next century, we are going to have to embark upon perhaps a number of major research projects. One could very well be in the area of hydrogen.

I think a space station has tremendous benefits for Canadian industry, if we can get a handle on the costs, and if the Government will be up front with us and let us know exactly what is happening in that particular area. Dr. Kerwin of the National Research Council mentioned a number of other areas where the National Research Council is considering what could be called major projects, such as in the area of health care technology, which would try to obtain reductions in costs in health care for Canadians. Again, I would ask the Member if this is really not his motivation in putting this motion forward. I think he is suggesting that certainly this is an area worthy of consideration as a major project, but I do not think he is saying it is the only area.

In conclusion, I want to agree with one of the comments the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville made when he was engaged in an exchange with the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle). The Minister was talking about the need to get international partners involved in this type of major undertaking. No one can quarrel with the idea of getting partners in an undertaking of this nature. However, what I think the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville was saying is that there has to be a number of areas where Canadians can take leadership, where Canadians can show the world how to do it and where other countries, for once, will have to come to us to buy technology we have developed rather than vice versa.

What the Minister may have in mind by "collaboration", is the type of thing that has happened with the RadarSat project. We had a proposal to develop a radar satellite, which in many respects corresponds much more to Canadian needs and to the capacities of our industry than the space station project. We have cut off some of the features of the radar satellite so that under the present proposal being considered by the Government its capabilities would be much less than what was initially proposed. We then went to the Americans, the British and perhaps other countries and said: "We would like you to do major parts of this particular project", in order to reduce Canadian funding. Now, basically, we cannot proceed with the project unless we get the British, in particular, to proceed with their part of it. The situation we have now is that the decision to proceed with an important Canadian priority is not being made here in Ottawa but is being made by Mrs. Thatcher in London.

If that is the kind of international collaborative effort the Minister is proposing, I would say that Canadians want no part of that kind of major project. Canadians want a project into which we can put our wits and our abilities and where Canadians can, for once, develop some kind of technology, as in the area of our space communications, where we have developed a technology and capability which are recognized and renowned throughout the world.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Laurier (M. Berger) and wish him a happy birthday.

[English]

In respect of some of the questions the Hon. Member has posed during the course of his speech, he wonders whether I had suggested that a national mission should mean that we do not continue to encourage the development of science and technology in other areas.

I do not want to have what I have suggested misunderstood. I think we have to look back on good examples of national missions of the past to get a measure of where, in the context of our over-all research and development thrust, this should be placed.

For example, let us consider the declaration of a national mission by President Kennedy to make the United States first in space. This meant the mobilization of abundant resources and the co-operation across a broad spectrum of American industry, academia and government laboratories in order to accomplish this mission, which was the dominant mission in the United States. This did not come at a cost to the rest of the research and development thrust in the United States. Indeed, at the same time there was a tremendous increase in resources being made available in the United States to all aspects of science, as well as to more research funding and to better quality teaching of science in universities and high schools.

A national mission is quite different from an area of emphasis. There is any number of areas on which we can have some emphasis. There are certainly possibilities for smaller, more narrowly defined missions. But none can take the measure of the type of national mission that is conceived of in this proposition. It challenges the imagination with respect to what it is capable of doing. It will generate new science, new industry and new engineering.

Let me point out that in developing export forms of hydrogen technology we can even look to photosynthesis, which is the biological process of primacy from which under natural conditions hydrogen really is the first product. We can talk about translating biology into engineering, to use sunlight directly to generate hydrogen. There is fantastic scope to this type of mission.

To compare this with the contribution of Canada to the space platform is to compare apples to oranges. There is no possible way that our involvement there can have the industrial and technological pay-off, diffusion of new technologies and the saleable products that this type of mission would generate.

I agree with the Hon. Member, we must continue in the broad scope of all the deficiencies that exist in Canada with respect to our standing internationally in science and research and development and we cannot let those other areas go. This is the type of mission that is not completely predictable in what it will require. We must have an abundant storehouse of knowledge, skills and education in the sciences and engineering right across the board to make this mission work.

Industry needs to do its job in developing its technology. This is an area in which the involvement of Government in providing leadership is necessary. It is also necessary that Government make a contribution to the expenditures that will not yield an immediate pay-off to industry and which therefore will not draw the type of investment during the early years in many areas that will be necessary in the long term to develop.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I participate in the debate today on the opposition motion introduced by my colleague and the critic for the New Democratic Party for science and technology. The motion is that, in essence, the Government undertake a hydrogen mission. I would like to discuss some of the concepts in the motion that we have in front of us today.

When I was critic for my Party for the science and technology portfolio after the 1984 election I was concerned at that time, and I still am, that Canada play a leading role in developing alternate technologies. At that time we were in the midst of the energy crisis. We were told that fossil fuels were fast running out. We saw the price of gasoline at the pumps jump almost on a daily basis. There was a tremendous economic shock not only to the pocket-books of the average Canadian but also to the many industries that used gasoline as their source of energy.

There was a great deal of concern at that time in terms of developing alternate energies. The Government of the day introduced home insulation type programs, programs which were meant to reduce the consumption of energy. Many of those programs were successful in reducing our dependence on fossil fuels, on energy.

It became necessary to look for other sources. We all recognize that fossil fuel is a non-renewable source of energy. Eventually, we will run out of this fuel. Thus the search goes on.

Parliament recognized that when in 1980-81 it struck a special committee of Members of Parliament on alternative energy and oil substitution. The committee produced quite an intriguing report. It was a very thorough study of Canada's energy needs at that particular time. It attempted to project the demand for energy as well as the supply for energy into the future. It attempted as well to look at some alternatives. The major conclusion that the committee drew was that Canada should move to develop a hydrogen based energy system.

I look now at another report entitled National Mission for Canada. As I look through the report I find that many of the matters that were stated in 1981 are repeated in the report of June, 1987. Again, it presented the conclusion that we must move to a hydrogen based economy, and that there is a role for Government to play in moving the country toward that objective.

As other speakers have pointed out in today's debate, there are various reasons why we should move in that direction. The first is the fact that fossil fuels are non-renewable and therefore a finite source of energy. We have to look for other sources.

Hydrogen is a beautiful alternative. Its source is from an infinite form of energy, either from hydrogen dams, that is, energy generated by the movement of water, or from another interesting and exciting area involving solar energy.

I have been intrigued in this field for a long time. I went to California in 1980 to look at a project that was being developed in which solar cells were combined to produce electricity and then through an electrolysis system hydrogen was produced. The hope was that we would have energy from sunlight and from water, two of the most common items on our planet. Through this process all regions of the world could become self-sufficient with this form of energy, hydrogen.

Since that time there has been another important aspect that has been introduced in this debate. I believe it was around 1982-83 that the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States issued its report, followed soon thereafter by reports from other eminent scientific bodies that warned us that there was a clock ticking out the time. With the consumption of carbon fuels the earth and its atmosphere was being filled with carbon particles that would create a greenhouse effect which would have a devastating impact on the climate of the world.

When that report first came out I rose in my place and asked the then Minister of Energy if he was aware of this report and if he was prepared to give the same grants and subsidies to alternative energies that were clean, like hydrogen, that he was at that time giving to the nuclear industry and to the oil industry. At that time the Minister of Energy poohpoohed my concern and stated that it had absolutely nothing to do with the burning of fossil fuels and the types of grants and subsidies given to the oil industry, and that he did not see the relevance of my question whatsoever.

It is true, and in fairness I must say that the then Minister of the Environment was concerned with the problems posed by the greenhouse effect. That Minister did give me some more honest answers. He indicated that the Government was aware of the greenhouse effect on Canada, that it was actively studying it, there was an awareness of it, and that something down the road would have to be done.

Since the report came out on the greenhouse effect, we see reports being made public by a committee of the Government that illustrates the greenhouse effect on Canada. Many of the low-lying coastal regions would be flooded. The area from which I come in southern Saskatchewan would become desert. Certainly, other areas of Canada would benefit. The more northern regions would become more hospitable in terms of agriculture and a place in which to live, and there would be a shift of population to the more northern areas of Saskatchewan, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta.

There is no doubt that a crisis is looming. We can begin to see some of the first effects of the greenhouse effect. We can see small increases in the mean temperature on the globe. Every scientist has predicted that if the trend continues there could be a warming of three, four or five degrees. This would have catastrophic effects on Canada.

In 1981 the committee made the following observation in terms of the greenhouse effect. The report stated that to most Canadians the difference of two, three, four, or five degrees is not very much. We live in a country where we can see temperatures change 10 or 20 degrees Celsius within a matter of hours or days, so what is so great about having the mean global temperature increase by a few degrees Celsius?

The report stated:

> Thus it has been suggested that the melting of the polar ice caps could be triggered by a mean global temperature rise of only one to three degrees Celsius. In fact, from the peak of the last glacial period 20,000 to 16,000 years ago to the peak of the warm interglacial period we are presently living in, the mean temperature of the ocean rose only 2 degrees Celsius and the mean global temperature rose only 5 degrees Celsius.

We can see the effects of an increase in the global temperature of only a few degrees. The difference between the ice age and our present period is only the difference of a mean global temperature of some 5 degrees Celsius. How delicate is the planet and its atmosphere!

We have received warnings from scientists that the clock is ticking away, and it requires global action.

Fossil fuels are running out and at the same time a catastrophe is beginning to occur. Hydrogen is the solution to both of those problems. Hydrogen is the cleanest fuel that anyone could hope for. Its only by-product is water vapour. Common sense, and what the best scientific minds are telling us is that that is the direction in which we have to go, and there is not all that much time.

There might be 20 to 50 years in terms of the amount of fossil fuels we have, depending upon how good we are with our technology. If we can produce more efficient cars and more efficient home insulation we can stretch out the amount of fossil fuel that we have. But eventually we must recognize that it will run out. Why not begin to develop something that one's intelligence and common sense tells us we must begin to do.

I was encouraged to hear the Minister's remarks in his response to the motion introduced by the New Democratic Party. I think that the Minister understands that this is the direction in which we have to go. He agrees that Canada has a role to play. Both the House of Commons report and the report that came out in June, 1987 state that we are in a uniquely fine position to develop and to take the lead in developing hydrogen technology. Yet there was nothing in the statements and comments of the Minister that would suggest to me that the Government is ready to take the lead. This is what is required. We need a Government that is ready to take the lead.

I am not suggesting that the new hydrogen technology be entirely developed by governments. My colleague did not suggest that. But it does require leadership. It does require an organization or some entity to pull together members from the academic community, members from industry, and various provincial utilities to start creating a working group, to start developing an agenda, to start putting some money into place, to start initiating definite research projects, and to begin to break down what has to be done to get us into the hydrogen society and start mapping out what the steps should be.

I am not suggesting some grand over-all plan because there has to be flexibility. As technology changes and new discoveries are made there must be flexibility in order to change the agenda. But there must be some entity to begin to pull it all together.

There was nothing in the statement of the Minister that would indicate to me that the Government is ready to take that step and start calling upon Canadians from labour, universities, and from the business community and challenge Canadians to a national mission. I would suggest that Canadians are ready to undertake such a mission. Canadians are concerned about their future, not only the future of the country but the future of the world. Canadians are concerned about acid rain, the greenhouse effect, and about what type of world our children will be living in.

I think Canadians would welcome a Government which would issue a challenge. I think they would welcome a Government which would come forward and say: "We believe that there is a way to save our environment, our forests, and our lakes, and that Canada has a major part to play". Canadians will respond to such a challenge. However, we need a Government with some vision, imagination, and will-power to take the lead.

I should like to refer to another aspect of the comments of my colleague. He expressed concern about whether a mission could indeed be undertaken in view of the agreement which the Government has signed with the Government of the United States.

Certainly my understanding of the agreement is that it severely restricts what Canadian society can do. It also restricts our ability for public and private co-operation in joint ventures. There is no doubt, if we are to develop into a hydrogen economy, that we will need some leadership by Government. There is no doubt that we will have to spend tax dollars, give some special tax considerations, and perhaps provide subsidies. The public role is essential to undertaking a project which might be a 10-year or a 20-year one. We need public participation.

I question whether the trade agreement between Canada and the United States, which the Government wants us to ratify at a later date, will allow for that type of co-operation. My reading of the agreement indicates that it locks us forever into a society and economy where the private sector will have to do it all. It seems to me that government participation is something that is restricted in the agreement because it would be considered unfair competition.

I wish the Minister would have addressed himself to the following question: Is it now impossible, with the free trade agreement, to undertake a national mission which also has some economic benefits? I suppose we could always take on a national mission, as did the Americans when they landed on the moon or created a space station, with minimal economic benefits. However, a project like the development of technologies that bring us into a hydrogen age is different. There are definite trade and economic implications. I fear that the agreement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States have signed severely restricts our ability to undertake such a joint mission.

In that vein let us look at the nations of the world which I feel are some of the most successful economic examples. In Japan and Germany co-operative systems are in place. There is co-operation among business, labour, and government. The trade agreement will put us into the type of economic development that I would call the Rambo economics which we find in the United States today where the public sector has been so totally and drastically reduced that it is very difficult to develop a co-operative approach among various elements in society whether they be labour, business, or government.

In conclusion, the motion calls for a new vision or the vision of a new age and a new technology sensitive to the environment. It calls for a technology which can be decentralized and used in localities and which destroys the monopolistic power of a few large utilities or corporations over the lives of millions of people.

As well it calls for a new concept of implementation, a concept of co-operation or working together to define a national goal or mission in which various elements in society come together and in a national way attempt to achieve the goal.

I am very grateful to have had the opportunity to address the motion introduced this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). It is a good motion. I am pleased as well by the various contributions made this afternoon by Hon. Members of the other political Parties. Hopefully some day we will see such a co-operative approach being adopted by whatever Government is in power at the time. For the sake of the future of the country and the future of the globe, I hope the day will come soon.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I listened with considerable care to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I in no way dispute his sincerity, because I know him to be that sort of individual and Member. However, I thought that we were hearing a paean to the new Jerusalem rather than a discourse on hydrogen.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member could answer two questions. The first one relates to the region from which he hails—western Canada. Would he be in agreement with the idea that any kind of national hydrogen mission or project should be truly national in scope and should have, at least in its first decades, two components—one based on hydrocarbons, with the immense surpluses of natural gas which exist in western Canada, and the second based on the obvious electrolysis involvement with a base in Manitoba through to Newfoundland and abundant hydroelectricity providing the opportunity to create hydrogen from our fresh water sources? Could the Hon. Member give us the guidance of his vast knowledge and experience in that regard?

Also, with reference to the Hon. Member's comment about there being minimal economic benefit from the Canadian space program, has he studied the testimony given before the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology in June of last year when Mr. Champagne gave his very strong statements on that subject?

If I may, I should like to quote briefly what Mr. Champagne said:

> Canada's commitment to participate in the United States' space station program creates a unique opportunity for development and application of new technologies appropriate to Canada.

He went on to say:

> The link between space and terrestrial activity is established through hydrogen, a ubiquitous element in the space environment for propulsion and life support, and in the industrial infrastructure for chemical process and energy applications.

Finally Mr. Champagne said:

> There is at present a window of opportunity for Canada to exploit its natural advantages in order to establish a broader key role in space and the corresponding technological leadership in hydrogen technology and its application.

He went on to cite a number of examples of how it could be done.

Given the fact that upwards of 600 tonnes daily of hydrogen go to waste in the atmosphere in western Canada, which would be more than enough to fuel a major hydrogen research program today, and given the fact that the experts in our nation on space and hydrogen have shown the clear linkage between those opportunities, could the Hon. Member give us the benefit of his wisdom in commenting on those statements?

• (1720)

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed the comments and questions raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards). First, he is concerned about the regional differences and the regional implications for the development of hydrogen. Of course, east of Manitoba, hydrogen would be using the electricity from the hydro projects of Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and further east. In the West, of course, as the Hon. Member pointed out, there is a fair amount of natural gas. That could be used to create hydrogen through ammonia.

In fact, in the early 1980s when we were still in power in the Province of Saskatchewan, I approached my colleagues in the Government to support research which would use the ammonia many farmers already have on their farms and to do research into the conversion of that so that farmers in Saskatchewan could start driving their tractors on hydrogen. I believe that the technological innovations that would occur in western Canada in the first phase of developing a hydrogen economy could conceivably be different than those in eastern Canada, as one step in the process.

We from western Canada must as well face the fact that not only are fossil fuels running out but there is an environmental problem with fossil fuels. At this time, hydrogen helps western Canada, and particularly Saskatchewan, where there is heavy oil by allowing the utilization of heavy oil.

Eventually, we in western Canada must recognize that fossil fuels are running out, that an environmental time clock is ticking away. We in western Canada would want to see some of the development and technologies necessary to develop hydrogen located in western Canada as well. We would want part of that development pie. That is why I think it is important that we get on the bandwagon.

My colleague has pointed out that Alberta already has a lead in the development and utilization of hydrogen because of the oil industry which can produce the technologies. It is a natural lead, so let us build on that lead that we have in western Canada.

The Hon. Member's second point dealt with the space station. What I was trying to get at was the difference between investing the billion odd dollars involved in a space station and investing in a project like the development of hydrogen. Common sense tells us that there is quite a difference in the pay-back period and the application time. That is not to say that a space station would not have economic benefits and impacts, but I suggest that if it becomes a choice, and in this day and age it very often becomes a choice because of scarce resources, I would definitely choose investing in something like hydrogen over spending $1 billion on making a contribution to a space station over which we have no control. We would be junior partners in someone else's project. As well, doing something that could begin to be a solution to the problem of the greenhouse effect, doing something that would guarantee us sources of energy when the fossil fuels run out, is much more important than investing in a space station.

Mr. Gagnon: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his eloquent portrayal of the problems Canada and the world face with the greenhouse effect and with the rapid transition that we will experience.

I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that the world has been much warmer, geologically speaking. The University of Saskatchewan recently dug up some leaves, not fossil leaves, from Ellesmere Island which showed a climate very similar to the climate now in northern Oregon. Forty-five million years ago, there was that sort of climate at latitude 78 degrees which right now is a very desolate tundra, devoid of much flora and fauna.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he sees nuclear energy tying into the bigger picture. I ask that because the Hon. Member has dealt with the making of hydrogen, but if we make hydrogen from fossil fuels, we still have the problem of putting more carbon dioxide into the air, the problem of the greenhouse effect.

The standing committee is currently looking at Canada's nuclear role and will take a look at the experience in Sweden where they are in the process of phasing it out and at the experience in France where they are building it as rapidly as they can. I would be curious to know what the Hon. Member's feelings are on this subject.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague from Calgary for the very legitimate question he has posed. Personally, I have always been very uncomfortable about the nuclear industry. On the one hand, when it is operating properly, it creates clean electricity, if we could only know what to do with the waste. On the other hand, we are also taking such a tremendous risk for such a tremendously long period of time with such a large part of the globe.

The accidents that occurred in Three Mile Island and in the Soviet Union will contaminate large areas of the globe for hundreds if not thousands of years to come. It is a gamble. How many more disasters can the earth afford? How many more Three Mile Islands and Chernobyl can we experience? We cannot continue taking those risks.

We must develop sources of electricity other than nuclear sources. As well, the cost effectiveness of the nuclear industry is something we must now look at seriously. Certainly there are many utilities in the United States that wish they had never come across the word "nuclear" because of the economic costs.

My hope is that we can get abundant energy from sunlight through solar cells, from hydro-electric power plants, from tides, from the temperature difference between different layers of the oceans. These are all possible infinite sources of energy. I hope we can develop those, tie them in with hydrogen and indeed find something that is clean, safe and cost-effective.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The questions and comments period has expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): First, Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) for the very positive motion he has moved today. I take this opportunity to wish the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) a happy birthday. I also want the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville to know that several of our colleagues, including the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Gurbin), work very hard on that crucial issue of hydrogen technology.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology, the Honourable Frank Oberle, I am proud to speak to you today about the government's accomplishments to date, the commitments we have made and our plans for the future in this vital field. The federal Government has made a firm commitment to give priority to science and technology and, over the past three years, it has been able to demonstrate its leadership in this field in a number of ways: by launching a major space program, increasing funding to the three granting councils, financing the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, and forming the Advisory Committee on Hydrogen Opportunities, on which I would now like to say a few words.

The Advisory Committee on Hydrogen Opportunities was established by our government as an instrument to thoroughly analyze a technology with strong worldwide potential and to determine how Canada could develop new expertise. The Committee members are eminent specialists in the private and public sectors. One of the Committee's recommendations has been that Canada set itself the objective of being the first to cross the "hydrogen threshold", that is, to develop and call our own the best available technologies utilizing hydrogen for the production of liquid fuels and other chemical products.

As has been its practice for all major S&T initiatives, the Government is currently holding extensive consultations with those industries concerned with the development of hydrogen-related technologies.

You will no doubt recall that the federal microelectronics strategy, representing some 90 million, was drawn up in the same mannner, in direct co-operation with Canadian industry. Once the consultation process is over, the Government will make a sound decision on development initiatives for this sector. Clearly, though, we cannot put all our eggs in one basket. The National Conference on Technology and Innovation held in Toronto last January gave us an opportunity to assess our progress to date and identify future challenges.

I would now like to discuss the changes brought about by our government to ensure that science and technology assume their rightful role in strengthening the national economy. The agreement for the first national S&T policy was signed by the federal, provincial and territorial ministers on March 12, 1987. With this agreement, the various governments undertook to promote entrepreneurship and to recognize the importance of

R&D for Canada's economic, social, cultural and regional development.

The Government recently prepared a decision-making framework with which it can co-ordinate and direct the $4 billion spent each year on S&T. It was also in March 1987 that the Government launched the new national strategy designed to ensure that Canadian S&T efforts are effectively guided and targetted.

This strategy can be implemented only in a climate of co-operation between the governments and the public and private sectors. Innovaction covers specific programs totalling $100 million. On August 19, 1987, $11 million more were allocated for 1987-88 to the Matching Fund Policy, a program that has been so popular that all the funds have been committed. It is a $700 million co-operation program between the private and public sectors to which the Government has contributed so far $378 million.

To go back to Innovaction: On August 25, 1987, $30 million of new funds went to the Unsolicited Proposals Program and an amount of $7 million was also added for microelectronic research. And on August 27, 1987: $28 millions of new funds over four years for the Industrial Research Assistance Program; and on September 4, 1987: $12.3 over four years for the Technology Inflow Program. There is also the famous $3.5 million Canadian Manufacturing Advanced Technology Exchange program.

Under the Canada-Quebec Agreement, the 6.9 million dollars in S&T grants awarded by Ottawa and Quebec to small and medium-sized businesses have generated more than 28 million dollars in business investment. It was also under this 100-million-dollar agreement that the National Optical Institute was established in Sainte-Foy.

The membership of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, chaired by Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), includes noted scientists, teachers, and industry and labour representatives who provide the Government with pertinent analyses and enlightened opinions about federal S & T policies. The National Advisory Board, the Standing Commitee on Research, Science and Technology and the Council of Science and Technology Ministers all represent organizational measures designed to support and promote S & T initiatives, make us more competitive internationally, and sustain economic growth in Canada.

It is obvious today that tomorrow's jobs and our future prosperity depend on our scientific and technological capital. The technological challenge that faces Canadians today does not come only from inside our borders. We live in a "global village," as Marshall McLuhan said, and all countries will henceforth be interdependent in more ways than one. Science and technology have become the driving force of the new international economic order, and Canada has also entered the race for technological survival.

When we speak of scientific potential, Canada's reputation is already established, and Canadian high technology is already known outside our borders. With free trade, Canada will become a full partner with its neighbour to the south, and not only from the economic standpoint, but also, and above all, from the standpoint of innovation.

The foundations have been laid for the scientific and technological revival that the government promised at the beginning of its mandate.

At the National Conference in Toronto, the Prime Minister announced an additional $1.3 billion for S&T, including $240 million for the establishment of networks of centres of excellence, and 80 million for scholarships in science and engineering.

This week, after the Regional Conference in Vancouver, the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology explained just how these scholarships would be awarded.

The networks of centres of excellence will be operational by the end of 1988. They will involve researchers and scientists based in small and large universities throughout the country who will conduct world-class research in areas important to Canada's long-term competitiveness.

The networks of centres of excellence will also help to strengthen links and intensify exchanges between university researchers, industry and government, which is imperative if we want to meet the technological challenge on all fronts.

The networks of centres of excellence will use the latest telecommunication systems, a field in which Canada has a worldwide reputation.

As for university research funded by the three granting councils, a budget of $3.4 billion is being allocated to these bodies over five years.

• (1740)

On the basis of the consensus reached at the national conference and the recommendations made by the participants, we have instituted a series of five regional conferences, the first of which took place in Vancouver at the beginning of the week. The other regional conferences will be held in Regina, Hamilton, Montreal and Saint-John, New Brunswick.

These conferences are pursuing the impetus of the national conference to enable more Canadians from all parts of the country to contribute to the new national S&T perspective and add a regional dimension.

We expect the science and engineering scholarships to offer further encouragement to students to pursue careers in the natural sciences and engineering.

As the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced in Vancouver this week, at least half of the 2,500 scholarships will go to women in order to produce a higher number of women scientists and engineers.

We will thus ensure that our industries will in the future never lack the highly qualified personnel to keep Canada in the forefront of international competition.

Another government initiative is likely to have a marked impact on Canada's future prosperity, because it is aimed at every citizen of the country.

At the Toronto conference, the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced the launching of a $10-million national campaign to alert the public to the importance of S&T to our country's future.

The national public awareness campaign is an important component of Innovaction. This is a long-term campaign involving governments, industry, educators, scientists and non-scientists, creators and users.

It is of vital importance to develop the scientific side of our culture by stimulating the intellectual genius of our citizens and nurturing their curiosity.

As part of this awareness campaign, an enhanced program, which we have redubbed Science Culture Canada, will provide increased assistance to non-governmental organizations initiating various projects and activities aimed at furthering public understanding of the role and impact of S&T.

A new component of Science Culture Canada is aimed directly at young Canadians, our citizens of tomorrow.

We all realize how important it is to inculcate in our young people, and particularly in our young women, a vision for their own future and a desire to contribute to the progress of their country.

At the same time, Canadians will become aware of the growing interaction between science and technology and the country's economic growth. They will no longer see innovation as a threat to their job security, but rather as a challenge designed to improve the quality of life.

Lastly, I will speak to you about the creation of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, DIST, a new organization that clearly reflects the Government's determination to give precedence to the integration of high technology in order to stimulate the competitive ability of our industry.

DIST will develop a national industrial policy which will stress advanced technologies, as much to assist in reorganizing traditional industries as to encourage activity in strategic new sectors.

Only a concerted effort on the part of the industrial and scientific communities can ensure the integration of technological knowledge in Canadian industry, and one of the main objectives of DIST will be to mobilize potential for action and production and to catalyze efforts.

Our common goal is to improve Canada's ability to compete on an international scale, not only by offering the best we have, but also by diversifying our goods and services.

We assure you that we are fully aware of the fact that the development of new technologies depends, above all, on basic research and on those who devote themselves to it.

During the past two years, the Government explicitly committed itself to improving basic research in Canada through the action of three Granting Councils, and DIST will adopt the same approach.

In conclusion, henceforward, science and technology will no longer be confined to a mere support role for society, because they have become the driving force of our social and economic growth.

In 1986-87, the Government invested $4.2 billion in science and technology, of which $2.6 billion were pumped into research and development. This makes the government the most important source of funding for all the R&D done in Canada.

The initial effects of the national conference already allow us to anticipate that the university, scientific and industrial communities will be equally willing to accept the challenge the Prime Minister gave them when he said: "The government is being challenged to do more, and we willingly accept this challenge! In return, I am asking what you intend to do to establish the new industrial, technological and educational structures that Canada needs to become a leader on the markets of the world."

Thank you for your attention, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech. I also read the comments she made last June when she asked Mr. Richard Champagne, and I quote: "If we were called upon to supply hydrogen to the American Space Program, where would our facilities be located and how would the hydrogen be brought to the American astrosupport centres?" Mr. Champagne answered, and I quote: "In the short term we clearly have very important reserves of hydrogen in the west. We have just taken stock in Alberta and we have determined that over 600 tonnes a day are being burnt or left to escape."

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis):

[English]

Given the abundance of hydrogen in the West and understanding that the long-term future of hydrogen development and strategy would be based in hydro-electricity or nuclear energy, is it possible, in the Hon. Member's view, that the initial research and development might be done in the West and may then gradually spread, given the economics of the technology, through to central and eastern Canada? I would appreciate the Hon. Member's comments on that.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As Parliamentary Secretary, I can inform the Hon. Member that I have no objection to research being done in Western Canada, and more specifically in Alberta, since the Hon. Member is from that Province. I know for a fact that research is also being done in the province of Quebec.

However, in his recommendations Mr. Champagne mentioned the provinces that had the potential for becoming major hydrogen suppliers. He mentioned British Columbia, Manitoba, Quebec and Newfoundland. He added that Ontario could also become a hydrogen-producing province.

Madam Speaker, I think the development and production of hydrogen technology is a discipline of the future, and I believe that both research and production might increase Canada's prosperity, in the near future and perhaps also in the long term.

• (1750)

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, we have been listening to government Members speak on the question of hydrogen and its importance. I do not think I have heard any greater hypocrisy than that. I say this seriously because of the situation that has existed in the last three and a half years.

When the Government came to power in 1984, there was a plan to spend between $8 million and $9 million a year on hydrogen and electrical chemical research. The spending plan for hydrogen and electrical chemical research this year is $1 million, through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Government completely disbanded the research and development projects on hydrogen that were undertaken by the National Research Council. If the Government is so concerned about hydrogen research, why did it take that action? Why have we lost a whole generation of science and research in this country?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Madam Speaker, I am surprised to hear my Opposition colleague say we are hypocrites. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that under the Canada-Quebec Agreement, we contributed towards the facilities at the electrochemical centre in Shawinigan, which is also active in this area.

Madam Speaker, I think, I hope and I am prepared to assume that the Hon. Member spoke hastily, and I trust he will take back what he said.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, my comments were not directed at the Member who just spoke, but were certainly directed at the Government. I certainly do not intend to retract the comments I made because they were directed at the Government. I think that was quite clear.

The fact remains that the Government has destroyed a whole generation of research on hydrogen as a result of its budget- cutting, beginning in November, 1984. Clearly, the Government has destroyed the hydrogen research that was undertaken.

On March 3, 1988, when opening a liquid hydrogen plant in Quebec, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) said:

> Hydrogen has the potential over the next 20 years to play a role in upgrading fossil fuels, such as Western Canada's heavy oil. During this time, if we can develop commercially feasible technologies, hydrogen could augment the existing wide range of energy sources available to Canada.

The Government's own news release states:

> Mr. Masse said the Government of Canada plans to develop a long term action plan for hydrogen use following a report from the Federal Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities released on August 26, 1987. The report identified several potential uses for hydrogen and recommended a national hydrogen mission.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is supposed to know about energy in this country and the tremendous potential of hydrogen.

Let us compare what the Minister and the Hon. Member who just spoke said about the Government's record with what Mr. Larkin Kerwin, head of the NRC, said to the standing committee. After being questioned by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), Mr. Kerwin stated:

> Concerning the hydrogen program, NRC's Energy Division has been closed down, as you know, and all of our alternate energy projects, except those very few that are connected with other divisions, have been closed down.
> If we were to start up the Division again, it would take a very long time and a very great amount of money. I know that there is a government commission going around the country at the moment examining the problem of alternate energy sources but if it were to start up again at NRC, it would take us a long time to reassemble this team.

That is incredible when we consider this tremendous energy potential. Hydrogen makes up 75 per cent of the mass of the earth. It can enrich the tar sands in Alberta to enable us to obtain gasoline. Hydrogen can be made with water and methane, as well as through electrolysis.

It is projected that by the middle of the twenty-first century one-third of all our energy will be from electricity, one-third from hydrocarbons, and one-third from hydrogen. Yet what is the Government's record? It has been completely negative, destroying whatever research was going on in this country. It is incredible to hear the Government state what it will do with hydrogen when it has destroyed the programs that already existed.

It is significant to note that Canada can be at the forefront of hydrogen technology, if we have the will to do so. There are five requirements to develop an expertise in hydrogen. First, we need natural gas, which is currently the best source of hydrogen. Second, we have abundant reserves of hydrogen-deficient hydrocarbons, such as heavy oil, which need upgrading and can be added to hydrogen to become a very valuable resource.

Third, we need a domestic electrolysis industry, with the ability to generate electricity from non fossil fuels.

The fifth requirement is the will to develop state-of-the-art hydrogen technology. I am sure that is possible once Canadians realize the importance of this element and the potential it has for replacing our diminishing non renewable resources.

Furthermore, the only byproduct of burning hydrogen is water vapour. Therefore, there is no environmental problem.

We only need the technology and the will of Government to develop this very powerful source of energy. It is unacceptable for the Government to continue to treat this simply as a topic of science and technology about which people want to hear. The Government must spend money.

This is not a new project. The Government has cut funding from $9 million in 1984 to $1 million this year, yet expects to develop a technology.

The Committee on Alternative Energy, chaired by Tom Lefebvre, suggested that the Government should spend $1 billion on hydrogen research over a five-year period. If the Government wants to take this seriously, it should begin doing something positive rather than stripping away the programs we already have.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that in accordance with Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

DESIGNATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS' DAY

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, a number of citizens in the National Capital Region have united to ask that all levels of government in the area proclaim this Public Servants' Day. On behalf of the federal Government I would like to salute the contribution which public servants make to the quality of life in the National Capital Region.

[Translation]

The federal Government is the region's biggest employer, employing over 74,000 public servants in many different fields. I am thinking, for instance, of scientists, clerks, meat inspectors, museum curators, architects, marine biologists, veterinarians and word processor operators, to name only a few. They all contribute to the quality of life in the National Capital.

In addition, another 40,000 residents in the region are employed by provincial or municipal governments. The general public does not generally make subtle distinctions between these various levels of government, and that is why, today, I think it is appropriate to take this opportunity and join provincial and municipal governments serving this region in paying tribute to our public servants.

[English]

A word of thanks is due to the organizers of this event. With volunteer help they have promoted this day throughout the region so that public servants at all levels of government might be the recipients of a well-deserved tribute. I would also like to extend my thanks and the thanks of the Government, not only to the public servants here in the National Capital Region but to all of those equally deserving Canadian public servants who are working all across Canada and abroad.

Seldom do we have the opportunity or the occasion, as a major employer, to thank our staff. I would like to take this opportunity to do just that. Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for the quiet dedication and professionalism you have shown in serving the Canadian public.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Minister and all Members of this House in emphasizing the importance of this occasion. As the Minister said himself, it is true the work of Government employees is often not given due recognition by Canadians. There is a tendency to use the old clichés of the Fifties in commenting on their work. It is time we dropped this approach.

[English]

Public servants are indeed hard-working people devoted to their work and conscious of the importance of the role they play in the administration of the country.

Over the 15 years that I have been present in this House I have paid particular attention to the preoccupations of public servants and have, on many occasions, drawn the attention of the House to some of the difficulties which they experience as groups and sometimes as individuals. I want to tell them that we always welcome their visits, that we appreciate their advice and will act accordingly.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to wish all these public servants a very good day. I think this initiative which was taken by Mayor Durrell and a number of people in Ottawa-Carleton is a good idea and perhaps it should be repeated every year.

If there is anything to criticize, I think it would be the present Government's attitude towards its public servants. I would like to recall that although today we should be celebrating, federal public servants have not forgotten a number of problems they have with this Government. It is ironic that it should be the President of the Treasury Board, or I should say, his Associate Minister, who is thanking our public servants, when we know that this Government has cut 15,000 jobs in the last three and a half years and intends to go on doing so.

Mr. Speaker, what did this Government do when language training programs were cut back and, with them, nearly 50 per cent of the jobs involved? I may remind the Government that these public servants are still on strike and that it is doing nothing. What did the Minister do when negotiations with Treasury Board on labour relations came to a standstill? What did the Minister do when public servants demonstrated across this country to . . .

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to respond to the Minister's statement concerning Public Servants' Day. As the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party, I welcome the Government's expression of appreciation for the contribution made by our public servants.

However, I also wish to point out that it takes more than fine words to create and maintain an effective public service. In this respect I very much regret the difficulties in which the Government now finds itself with respect to Public Service bargaining. The new negotiations are stalled over basic issues, such as the number of bargaining units, with the Government rejecting a very cost effective proposal by the Public Service Alliance to reduce the number from 31 to 7.

As well, we have had the adamant attitude of the Government refusing to bargain with its language teachers except on the basis of a majority conciliation report that was rejected by them almost unanimously last September.

Dare say that I wonder about the spirit of Meech Lake when I see this kind of cavalier treatment meted out to those who must implement the policy of getting to our two major language groups service from the federal Government.

Finally, I also believe that any government that has the true interests of its employees at heart would have long ago realized that the pension de-indexation in Bill C-33 is completely out of step with developments in pensions policy in the private sector and should be dropped.

A government which took action on these kinds of issues could result in a Public Servants' Day with real meaning and some real celebration. I hope that will be forthcoming next year.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents pursuant to Standing Order 106.

These petitioners are concerned that the trade deal signed between the United States and Canada would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence.

They believe that the trade deal suggests that there will be significant loss of jobs, not only in many sectors of the economy but also in many regions of Canada.

Therefore, the petitioners request that the Parliament of Canada obtain a very clear mandate from the people of Canada during a national debate on this issue in a national general election. They are asking for Parliament to dissolve to enable a national general election to take place during which a debate on the trade deal can occur.

PROHIBITION REGARDING KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, once again I stand on behalf of a number of people in British Columbia and others in cities across Canada. The petition concerns the whole question of killings using knives. There have been two such recent killings in the City of Vancouver.

The petitioners have asked repeatedly that the federal Government amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. Exceptions from this ban would only include activities where the use of the knife was integral to the legitimate work or when it was carried for religious reasons, such as with the Sikh religion.

They call on the Government to fulfill its promise to do something about this.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES . . .

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling petitions signed by residents of La Doré, Quebec; Fredericton, New Brunswick; Chibougamau, Quebec; Glenside, Saskatchewan; Brome Lake, Quebec, Fertile, Saskatchewan; and Mississauga, Ontario.

If we add their 106 signatures to other petitions I tabled in the House previously, we now have a total of 32,639 signatures. The undersigned are aware of the fact that since 1974, federal motor vehicle safety regulations allow self-inflating bags to be installed in the driver's seat of private vehicles and that this device would reduce the number of fatal and serious injuries.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray Parliament to make the following compulsory: First, installing inflatable bags on the front seat of motor vehicles and second, installing adjustable shoulder seat belts for passengers on the back seat of motor vehicles.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House that I have received two applications under Standing Order 29 for an emergency debate. I will first hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

NATIONAL UNITY—MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek leave to move a motion under Standing Order 29 that the House do now adjourn. If you find that motion in order, I would be prepared to debate that later this day.

The reason for my motion is that national unity is in peril from the difficulties relating to the recognition and protection of the Canadian duality, the fundamental characteristics of our country which both Saskatchewan and the House of Commons acknowledged by approving the constitutional resolution of 1987.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of national importance that a debate be held in this House to clarify the manner in which certain provinces interpret the Meech Lake Accord and, especially, to discuss in this House a decision made by the Province of Saskatchewan that would restrict the basic rights of Francophones in that province.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: I will hear from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who also gave you notice that he intended to rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 29 to seek leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing what has become a vital national issue.

The whole matter of minority language rights goes to the very core of what Canada is all about. It has been an issue which has been with us from the very beginning. We were pleased during the last recent debate in this House with respect to the Meech Lake Accord to see those potential wounds healed over in term of the division between anglophone and francophone rights.

Eldorado Nuclear Limited

The decision of the Saskatchewan Government to initiate legislation that would compromise francophone language rights in that province has, unfortunately, the potential, at least, to reopen some of these old wounds.

As a Parliament, we believe we cannot shy away from this issue however sensitive it might be. This issue is fundamental to our country. For that reason, we would encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to favourably consider permitting an emergency debate to take place later today to discuss this issue.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out for the record that I appreciate the difficulty in which my hon. friend found himself where the notice was given by his Leader. Technically, under the rules, the notice and the person speaking to the notice must be the same person. In view of the subject matter and in view of the fact that my friend's remarks were brief, I did not interrupt at that time. I think we should try to respect that rule, if we can, but I appreciate that there are times when one cannot.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). He, of course, correctly put the procedural position. However, the Chair felt, given the subject matter, that it would hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a brief second to indicate clearly that it was the intention of my Leader to be here at this moment but he was inadvertently delayed in coming to the House. I want to acknowledge the generosity of the Deputy House Leader for permitting this statement to take place in my Leader's absence.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his comment.

I have listened carefully and I am giving the matter, of course, serious consideration. I will reserve until this afternoon.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that, because of the Ministerial statement, Government orders will be extended by eight minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I led off this debate, but because of the Royal Assent to certain Bills I did not complete my remarks and I still have left a few minutes of the time allotted to me for my speech.

I want to deal with one more aspect of this proposal which I consider important, that is the downside of this proposal to privatize Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. We heard of the supposedly good reasons from the Minister. However, what the Minister did not tell us is that in order for this privatization to go forward, in order for this stock flotation deal to succeed—and that is all it really is—the public sector will underwrite the risks inherent in this deal by assuming the debt of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation.

The federal Government will also assume the further liability of Eldorado's nuclear waste problems at Port Hope at a cost of perhaps $75 million.

This take-back of debt has been described by the financial advisers to the Government as necessary for the success of the flotation. Eldorado's debts are substantial. We have calculated them in the range of $550 million. The federal Government will receive from the newly merged company approximately $250 million, leaving $300 million of debt which must be made up in the sale of shares in the new company before the Government breaks even on its debt obligation alone. This has nothing to do with the accumulative investment in Eldorado in the form of government equity. Therefore, the Government needs a high share price or it will wind up with a brick in its hands, something like the British Columbia resources privatization put through by the Bennett Government which issued shares at $5 and which now trade for about 90 cents. There is no evidence that this privatization deal will be any more successful.

We have to ask ourselves if there is any certainty of a high share price. Uranium markets are currently in chronic oversupply and prices are depressed. If the United States were once more to close its market to foreign producers in response to the distress of its domestic suppliers, conditions would be chaotic and, of course, the trade deal would do nothing for Canadian producers caught in this bind.

We know that uranium producers in the United States, like our friends in the Canadian Government and Canadian business, are gung-ho to see the free trade deal go through, but the reality is that if their interests are pinched, the uranium producers in the United States will become just like any other private corporation. One cannot blame them, when they see the competition they are getting and will get from Canada, for screaming that Canadian producers are being subsidized by the Government and there ought to be limits put on the sale of uranium to the United States. There are no guarantees that the federal Government will get its investment in Eldorado back, let alone cover the debts of Eldorado.

What are the other advantages or disadvantages of this deal? I talked about this in the earlier part of my speech. There are really no job guarantees. In fact, rather the opposite.

The Minister spoke of the rationalization of the two companies. Most companies know what rationalization means. "Rationalization" means being more efficient, and being more efficient means fewer workers, and fewer workers means layoffs. If the Government does not realize this, the unions certainly do. They have a desire to protect the workers in this industry. They are, to say the least, very doubtful about this whole proposal.

I want to deal with one other issue. The claim has been made so often with respect to the uranium industry that somehow Governments which operate companies as public corporations cannot be efficient and cannot look after the interests of their shareholders, in this case, the people of Canada, and that somehow privatization will be much more efficient and so on. Nothing could be further from the truth, as a matter of principle, and particularly when it comes to the uranium industry.

One does not have to be a wild-eyed socialist who believes in public ownership of everything to say that the uranium industry is a perfect example of how private industry is not efficient,and how private industry could only have existed by massive subsidies from the people and Governments of Canada.

Anyone who doubts that claim need only look at an article which appeared in Canada's national newspaper, The Globe and Mail, a few days ago on April 9. The article was entitled, "The less-than-holy Roman empire", written by Paul McKay. Mr. McKay has done a much better job than I could hope to do. I wish to put on the record some of the points made by Mr. McKay. It is as devastating a critique of a privately owned corporation as I have ever seen; its lack of concern for the welfare of its workers, its insistence on being guaranteed that in no way would that company lose money, its insistence on the part of its president, that great exponent of the free enterprise system, Stephen Roman, that he could only continue by the most massive continued and constant major subsidies by the public, by the Government of Canada, and by the Government of Ontario through Ontario Hydro.

Let me put on the record some of the points made by Paul McKay in his article:

> Medical records and royal commissions have shown that a pathetic army of the miners Mr. Roman employed at his uranium mines in Elliot Lake, Ontario, have gone to their own early graves because their lungs were needlessly poisoned with radioactivity and mine dusts—a company that refused to spend more than a pittance on mine safety equipment and a wilful ignorance of study after study proving uranium miners were being ravaged by cancer and lung disease.

Let me ask a question. What assurances can we receive from the government that when we get rid of Eldorado Mining as a Crown corporation, where hopefully there was some consideration for the workers who worked for that company, the type of attitude and approach followed by Mr. Roman in Denison Mines will not be the policy of a new privately owned company, with the same complete disregard for the welfare of the workers shown by Mr. Roman?

Let me further quote from the article:

> The truth is that Mr. Roman's uranium empire was founded on no-risk, guaranteed, cost-plus government weapons contracts, that his empire would not have survived its first 20 years without more than $1 billion in government subsidies, sweetheart contracts and special bail-outs, and that his company was pulled out of its last major tailspin with the help of a secret international uranium cartel.

This from a company whose president never got tired of preaching the benefits of the free enterprise system and condemning government intervention in the affairs of privately owned companies.

Let me further quote from the article:

> ... what the federal government, through Crown-controlled Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., was willing to sink into uranium properties. The package of subsidies included up-front development money, guaranteed sales at guaranteed prices, tax holidays, extravagant depletion allowances, millions of dollars' worth of free research and development work, and no capital gains tax if the property was sold within five years.
> In short, Eldorado was promising a no-risk, no-tax, cost-plus contract if Mr. Roman could get his mine into production by 1957.

It is lucky for the Government, the Liberal Party, and for those believers in the free enterprise system that the type of facts which we know about this situation are not known by most ordinary Canadians. If they did know those facts, we would have a revolution about the type of unfair tax system which we have in this country.

One Member of Parliament called the deal to which I referred "the biggest piece of pie ever handed to private industry in the mining industry in Canada". Every ounce of the uranium produced by Denison Mines went into United States nuclear bombs; the amounts and prices were guaranteed.

The Government of France wanted to make a deal with Mr. Roman. It wanted to buy 50,000 tons of uranium over the next 25 years at a price in the $700 million range. Mr. Roman had a lot of trouble with that because the Government of France did not want to give the assurances which the then Canadian Government insisted upon, that the uranium would not be used for military purposes. The then Government of Canada said to Mr. Roman that it would not permit that deal, but that it would arrange it so that Ottawa, the Government of Canada, would buy lots of uranium, stockpile it, and hope for sunnier days. The biggest beneficiary of the two Government's stockpile programs in the 1960s, which were worth a total of $100 million, was Denison Mines owned by that great exponent of the free enterprise system, Mr. Roman.

In late 1970, a third stockpiling program worth $39 million was announced. A new Crown corporation, Uranium Canada, would be created to run it. In early 1972 there was a situation, because of the falling price of uranium, where the Government officials set in motion the notorious uranium cartel which, through a system of phoney price bids and market quotas, triggered a 700 per cent increase in the world price of uranium in less than four years.

Who was the major beneficiary? Mr. Roman. It was the biggest sweetheart deal of them all. A 30 year cost-plus multibillion dollar contract was arranged to supply uranium to Ontario Hydro, not at the price it should have been if the free enterprise system was working and where because there was a surplus of uranium the price should have come down; oh, no. Mr. Roman was very happy to participate in the government cartel which gave him a guaranteed price far higher than the price should have been.

Mr. Blaikie: Socialism for the rich.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) states "socialism for the rich". That is what we can expect from Liberal and Conservative Governments. Socialism for the rich and—

Mr. Blaikie: Free enterprise for the poor.

Mr. Orlikow: —free enterprise for the poor.

Denison Mines found itself with a gold-plated deal that it still enjoys today. In making this deal hydro was betting that awesome amounts of uranium would be needed in the future. It was prepared to give incentives to ensure reliable long-term production for the deal. Ontario Hydro is now paying three times the world market price for the privilege of obtaining uranium mined in Ontario.

I notice, Madam Speaker, that you are telling me that my time is coming to an end. What we have here is a situation where the people of Canada have paid hundreds of millions of dollars, most of which went to Mr. Roman and Denison Mines through this agreement. The people of Ontario are paying through the nose; paying higher prices for electric power than they should be paying because Ontario Hydro was willing to make an arrangement wherein it paid far more than it should have for the uranium used in its atomic power plants.

We said at the beginning that the deal was a bad deal for the people of Canada. We are opposed to this privatization proposal because it is not in the interests of the people of Canada, nor in the interests of the people of Saskatchewan. We intend to oppose the Bill in every way we can.

Mr. Blaikie: Questions or comments, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are no questions or comments after the 40-minutes speeches. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was the first speaker for the New Democratic Party.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us respecting the proposed Eldorado Nuclear Limited reorganization and divestiture Act was introduced in the House by the then Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs on March 29, an agreement having been reached between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan in February to merge and privatize the assets of Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation.

In outlining the reasons for the merger the Minister stated three criteria which she had in mind; first, that the Crown corporation was no longer serving a public interest or public policy function which needed to be carried out by government. Second, she stated the view that privatized corporations should be given what they need to be viable after privatization. I will return to this point, because it seems as though rather a lot is being given to the Government of Saskatchewan in this deal and one must question whether it is in the best interests of Canadians. Third, the Minister said that in arriving at the decision the interests of the employee and of public safety and the rights of Canadian taxpayers to have their financial interests protected were all considered. These are good principles, but we will want to ensure at committee that the rhetoric is in fact matched by actions on the part of the Government.

In 1983 the Liberal Government of the day transferred the shares of Eldorado Nuclear to the Canada Development Investment Corporation, and was also considering privatization. I myself consider that if the private sector can do well and responsibly anything that government is now doing, there is certainly a strong argument to transfer that function to the private sector.

However, with this Government, which on a number of occasions seems to be operating on the basis of ideology—rushing to privatization without careful examination of the economic costs, without careful consideration of environmental and other public policy goods—we will want to examine this transfer very carefully, indeed.

Eldorado Nuclear has been in existence for 61 years. It is the oldest uranium producer in the world. It is also the only integrated producer in Canada, which means that it can process ore to create uranium products for use in Canadian reactors to serve Canadian energy needs, as well as for export. It has new, modern, and efficient plants and owns and has interests in uranium mines.

The other partner, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, is also a large supplier of uranium, producing 7 per cent of the western world's capacity in 1986. It has sales contracts which extend well into the next decade. It has emphasized exploration and has some of the world's largest commercial reserves.

In her speech on March 29 the Minister said that a merger between the two would produce a company which would be not only viable but would also have the potential to grow and develop because of the amalgamation of assets including reserves, production facilities, and research.

We will have questions about this, to which I will come in a few minutes, because the deal, on the face of it and on the Minister's own information, will cost Canadian taxpayers a fair amount. That is not quite consistent with the very rosy picture being given of the benefits.

The Minister says that she wants control of this new company to remain in Canadian hands, and Article V of the Bill imposes constraints on the issue, transfer, and ownership of voting securities in the new company. We will want to examine these points very carefully to ensure that in fact Canadian ownership of this important resource is protected.

The Minister also pointed out quite correctly that the rules concerning waste disposal and the rules arising out of Canada's adherence to the non-proliferation treaty, the international treaty concerning control of nuclear energy products, apply equally to the private sector and to the public sector. However, the fact that the rules are in existence and the way they are applied are two different things, and we will have further questions about it.

The intention in the Bill is to set up a task force which will order the transition as we face the amalgamation of a Crown corporation of Canada and a Crown corporation of Saskatchewan.

In her speech introducing the Bill the Minister said that she was very proud of the two-stage merger and privatization process which she was proposing for Eldorado Nuclear. It will be important to see whether that pride is in fact justified or whether this will be another case of misplaced enthusiasm for privatization without the adequate mechanisms in force to ensure that it really is a benefit to Canadians.

On the face of it, as our energy critic, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) pointed out, it is not strictly a business proposition. The deal would appear to be loaded in favour of the Province of Saskatchewan which is receiving a multimillion dollar package, courtesy of the federal Government. I have no objection to the Government deciding as part of a program for regional development to make a grant to the Government of Saskatchewan, but it should be clearly identified as such. It should not be disguised as a commercial transaction which is of equal value to all taxpayers in Canada.

Furthermore, when we look at the prices we find that Eldorado Nuclear has been undervalued and by an interesting process. For the purpose of this transaction, the assets of Eldorado Nuclear are placed at $915.9 million, while the assets of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation are valued at $973.2 million. The Government of Canada will have a 39.5 per cent share of the new company while Saskatchewan will have a 61.5 per cent interest. The new company will issue promissory notes valued at 40 per cent of the fixed assets to cover all of the debt owed to the Saskatchewan Government and only $230 million of the $570 million owed to the Government of Canada, so the promissory notes cover all of the debt of the Province of Saskatchewan but only about half of the debt of the Government of Canada. It seems that after this company is rolled over into one corporation and eventually sold to the private sector, the Province of Saskatchewan will have recovered all of its debt and losses while the Government of Canada will still be out $100 million.

It appears that in arriving at a value the two companies were evaluated from a discounted cash flow basis rather than from an asset basis. The Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation had a lower operating cost, primarily as a result of lower royalties but, interestingly, Eldorado was determined to be lower in value as a result of its less profitable refinery business. The refinery business was regarded as a detriment to the value of Eldorado Nuclear.

In the publicity surrounding this merger the two governments of Canada and Saskatchewan have said that one of the advantages of the merger is the capacity to process uranium in house. Let me quote directly from the joint press release:

> A merger—will result in a company with an improved balance between its mining and refining capacities.

This is very puzzling, Madam Speaker. On the one hand the value of Eldorado was downgraded in this transaction because the refinery was not profitable. On the other hand we are told that one of the great advantages, one of the great potentials for future profits of the merged company is the fact that the refinery exists. Which way is it? Is the refinery an advantage or not?

There are a number of other questions of this kind. There are clauses which seem, worrisomely, open ended about what the Government of Canada will put into this transaction. The Bill also leaves the Government of Canada liable for any debt or liability of Eldorado. There is no indication that there is legislation in Saskatchewan which leaves the Saskatchewan Government liable for any debts or obligations of the Saskatchewan partner.

We are left with many questions. What will be the actual cost to the taxpayers of Canada? What is the Government's position on disposal of low level waste? What is the commitment of the Government to ensure safety of handling of these materials at every point?

This merger will create the world's largest uranium producer with assets of $1.9 billion, but that market value is probably greater than Canadian investors can absorb. While the Minister has talked about the possibilities for Canadians to invest in this corporation, it is all very vague. At first blush we are left to wonder if there is any economic value whatever in this merger to the taxpayers of Canada, whether the merger achieves anything except greater concentration in an industry which already has high concentration.

The new corporation will be responsible for disposing of low level radioactive wastes left by its predecessors up to a cost of $25 million and it is not clear who bears these costs. It is not clear that the question of safety has been addressed or will be addressed.

The Minister reported that the sale of shares would cover all of the debt owed to the federal and provincial Governments, but this is not clearly required in the legislation. In fact, a single strong shareholder with 25 per cent of the voting share could, to use the Minister's words, "guide" the new corporation, "under certain circumstances". This question of Canadian ownership is worrisome and needs to be addressed much more carefully than it is in this Bill.

Complete divestiture by the two governments is expected to be complete by 1995. I would stress that I am not against privatization in the uranium industry particularly. It is a cyclical and vulnerable industry and it seems reasonable that risks should be borne by private investors and not taxpayers, to a large extent. But this Bill before us is not achieving that end. It leaves the taxpayer holding a big burden while removing some of the controls of Government.

The whole question of the use and management of uranium and the disposal of waste products is probably one of the most important and serious environmental issues facing this country and it gets little or no attention in this Bill. By 1995, when it is expected that the whole matter will be in the private sector, we are asked to take it for granted that the private sector will have adequate standards to protect the life, health and safety of Canadians. There is no indication in this legislation that the Government will deal with that problem effectively.

While we will not oppose the principle of the Bill at second reading, that is, the privatization, we will certainly want very considerable amendments, standards and safety requirements built into it at committee stage, not only to protect the Canadian taxpayers' pockets but also to protect issues of safety and environmental control.

• (1200)

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that she was not opposed to privatization in principle. Would she tell the House which companies now in the public sector she would be favourably disposed to privatize, if any?

Miss Nicholson: Madam Speaker, that is beyond the scope of the present Bill.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. We New Democrats, who are not wedded 125 per cent to the virtues of the free enterprise system, understand that when an important sector is facing difficulties, beyond its ability to deal with them, it is sometimes necessary for the Government to step in. For example, we support proposals which stabilize the price farmers get for grain.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why the former Liberal Government, when it was in office, agreed to participate with a number of other countries in a cartel which kept the price paid for uranium ore at a very high level. As I indicated earlier when I quoted from a speech reported in The Globe and Mail, the price was 700 per cent higher than it should have been.

Not only did the Liberal Government participate in that cartel, but at that time, and since then, it used every method it could, legal and otherwise, to keep the details of the cartel arrangement secret—not just at the time but ever since. The people of Canada still do not know why the Government participated in that cartel which had such a deleterious effect on Canadian people because of the price they had to pay. Why did it do that at that time and why has it continued to block every effort to make the details of that terrible cartel public?

Miss Nicholson: Madam Speaker, I was not the Minister of Energy or the Minister of Finance in the Liberal Government at the time the arrangements on pricing the Hon. Member discusses were entered into. I have no information other than that which has been made public, but I certainly would take issue with his statement that the Liberal Government of the day used all means, legal and illegal, I believe he said—

Mr. Orlikow: I did not say that, I said otherwise.

Miss Nicholson: "Otherwise"; well, I think I would certainly take strong exception to the suggestion that the Liberal Government of the day had acted in any way outside the law.

As for the Hon. Member's statement that we are now withholding information, may I point out that we are not in power. The administration of the Freedom of Information Act is in the hands of the Government of the day, not in the hands of Liberals.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) concerns a very important matter. I would like to add to his question.

The Hon. Member from Toronto will perhaps know that the cartel that was set up by the Government of which she was a supporter cost Ontarians, for example, a great deal of money in terms of the cost of hydro. She will perhaps know that the two assistants to now Senator Austin were charged criminally, as I recall, and the Senator who was then the principal officer of the cartel was not charged. Perhaps she would make a comment on that.

Does the Hon. Member realize, for example, that an Order in Council was passed barring Canadians from talking about that cartel? In short, it was one of the sorriest moments in Canadian history for those of us who believe that Governments should not break the law in the name of trying to enrich a Crown corporation. Does the Hon. Member have any sensible comments to make on any of those matters I have just raised?

Miss Nicholson: Madam Speaker, may I point out that the Bill before us is a Bill arranging for the amalgamation of a Crown corporation administered by the Government of Canada and one administered by the Government of Saskatchewan. I cannot see the ancient history that the Hon. Member is describing as having any relevance to this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I thought that someone from the government side might want to rise to defend what they are doing, but I suppose I can understand that they might not want to do that.

I begin by acknowledging a certain ambiguity that I have experienced in this debate. We have here a classic example of what is wrong with privatization and particularly what is wrong with privatization as it has been implemented by this Government.

This is a classic case. The people of Canada and the people of Saskatchewan, through the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, invested many, many millions of dollars over the years in these two corporations. As a result of the ideological commitment of this Government to privatization and the ideological commitment of the Saskatchewan Government to privatization, these two Crown corporations are to be merged and then privatized through the sale of shares in a way that involves the Canadian people and the Saskatchewan people, the Saskatchewan people being in double jeopardy because they have contributed to both corporations. These people are now picking up most of the risk because all the debts and liabilities are being picked up by the Government in order to make this particular privatization possible.

We see that this is not a case of the Canadian taxpayers benefiting from privatization. It is a case of whoever comes to be the shareholders and particularly the majority shareholders in this new company benefiting form the investment that has been made over the years by the Canadian people and the Saskatchewan people in these two corporations.

Having said that, I want to make it clear that it is not appropriate to be against privatization in every and all cases. I recall that not so long ago, in my own riding, a decision was made by the Manitoba Government to privatize Flyer Industries. In my judgment, at the time that decision was made, that was the thing to do. It was regrettable that the corporation faced the difficulties it did as a publicly-owned corporation, and some of the difficulties it faced were as a result of the fact that it was a publicly-owned corporation. These difficulties existed not through public ownership in and of itself but because, as a result of it being a publicly-owned corporation, other and more powerful private companies in the bus market-place made life very difficult for that publicly-owned corporation.

One recalls that at one point in the 1970s the Ontario Conservative Government made it clear to municipalities, which were looking for transportation grants, that if they wanted grants for the purchase of buses they had better buy their buses from General Motors rather than from Flyer Industries in Manitoba, which was publicly owned. The last thing that the Conservatives wanted to see succeed was a publicly-owned bus company.

However, I stray from the point. We are talking about the privatization of Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. I could not resist getting in that point about Flyer and the way in which the bias against public ownership on the part of the Conservative Party has, from time to time, led various federal and provincial Governments of their ilk not to let the market-place work, and publicly-owned companies to compete freely, but to try to skew the market-place in such a way as to guarantee that these corporations would not succeed as well as they might in order that they could then point, with all due sanctimoniousness, to the fact that these corporations had not done as well as some had hoped. They then blamed it on public ownership instead of on their own intervention in the very market-place they say ought not to be intervened in.

On the question of privatization, I had the privilege of being in the British House of Lords one afternoon when the Earl of Stockton, the former Conservative Prime Minister of Great Britain, Harold MacMillan, now deceased, was giving a speech. He was speaking about the privatization program of Margaret Thatcher. I was very impressed with the ability of the former Prime Minister at the age of 92 to deliver a 20-minute speech without notes of any kind.

In his very articulate comments on the Government's privatization programs, he referred to the privatization of British Crown corporations being comparable to selling off a family's silver for short-term fiscal goals, creating a longer term situation of poorness in terms of assets and one's ability to determine one's own economic destiny, et cetera.

It was a very good speech and a good analogy of what this Government has been tempted to do. In many respects it has been selling off the family silver. Some of the privatizations with which the Government has gone ahead have been particularly ill-advised and have certainly fallen into the category of selling off the family silver. However, I am not absolutely sure about this one. This privatization shows what is wrong with privatization in the way in which the public picks up the risk and the private shareholders get the benefit.

Anyone who has been in this House for any time knows that I am not a great fan of the nuclear industry, uranium mining, or nuclear power, all of the things involved in the economy with which these two corporations are tied. I would be less than frank if I did not say that I would just as soon that many of the things in which these corporation are involved were not happening, whether privately or publicly-owned.

One of the problems with the nuclear industry in this country has been that it has been so wrapped up in the public sector and the Government. Indeed, it was so close to both the Liberal bureaucracy and the Liberal Governments of the day that it is still impossible for Liberals in this House to say anything critical about the nuclear industry. That is their baby.

We had hoped that the Conservatives might have been more critical. They made a number of promises back in 1979, that they would have a full-scale inquiry into the nuclear industry in Canada. They made the same promise again in 1984. We pressed them on that in 1985 and 1986 and all we could get from the then Minister of Energy, who has since then been through several portfolios until she finally landed up in the Treasury Board, was that she would ask AECL whether it thought an inquiry was a good idea.

I think one must see the irony in a cabinet Minister of a Party which once promised an inquiry into this very Crown corporation and many of its activities rising in the House to say that she was thinking about an inquiry but was going to check with the Crown corporation to see whether or not it thought it was necessary. The Hon. Member can check the record. That is exactly what the Minister said.

It was very soon after that that we lost hope that the Conservatives would be able to muster the critical distance from the nuclear industry which we had hoped they might muster given some of the promises they made when the Liberals were in office. We then launched our own inquiry. We have been to several cities across the country and hope to have a report very soon which will make very clear the view of the NDP on a wide variety of issues pertaining to the nuclear industry.

I would not be crazy about many of the activities in which these two Crown corporations are involved whether they were done by a publicly or privately-owned company. This may be only wishful thinking, but I hope that one of the by-products of this privatization would be that the Government of Canada and other Governments, to the extent that the nuclear industry is privatized—in this case these two mining corporations—might be able to feel less attached to the whole industry.

I do not have any grounds for that wish because, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) pointed out in such detail, the private corporations in this industry have basically been able to do whatever they wanted to over the years and to attain whatever public governmental support they happened to need, whether in the form of direct subsidies, price fixings through cartels, or whatever.

So certainly there is no basis in history for hoping that the private nuclear industry will be treated with any greater critical attention than was the public sector. In fact, just the opposite has been true. The private companies have been able to operate with even less attention. However, I am hoping that at some time, some Government of Canada will turn its attention to the nuclear industry in the way that we have been calling for for some time and that it may be freer to do that if, in the case of uranium mining, these companies are completely in the private sector.

There is absolutely no doubt that there is a need for a full scale inquiry into all aspects of the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada. This is something that the Conservatives promised time and time again but have not fulfilled. This inquiry should include questions of reactor safety, emergency planning and other post Chernobyl questions that have not been addressed.

The only place where any of the more difficult questions pertaining to the nuclear fuel cycle have been addressed is in some of the committees of the House. The Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry, largely at my own initiation some time ago, began a study of the disposal of high level radioactive waste. It published a very good report entitled The Eleventh Hour. I recommend it to all Members of the House who should be interested in this whole question of the disposal of high level radioactive waste.

As well, I notice that the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources is involved in a study of the economics of nuclear power. These matters are being discussed as a result of parliamentary reform because the committees have initiated these studies on their own. It is a credit to the reform that these things are happening, but we still have not seen the Progressive Conservative Party live up to its commitment to have a full scale inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada. We will probably not see that inquiry as we enter the last stages of this Government.

If there is a shred of integrity left in the Government it will call an election before it attempts to implement the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement so that Canadians will have an opportunity to make some judgment on an agreement about which there was no intimation in the 1984 election. If the Government has any respect for democratic principles, there will be an election before that agreement happens.

Of course, this means that the Conservative Party will have gone through its four years in office without living up to its promise in 1984 to have an inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada.

There are many other issues I could speak about, but it would require more time than I have available. I know that a Member from the Liberal Party wishes to speak and I hope that I will be able to entertain some questions.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, will the Member tell us the names of any public sector companies that NDP governments in British Columbia, Saskatchewan or Manitoba have privatized? While doing so, will he tell us which companies in the federal sector his Party would like to de-privatize if they had the chance to do so?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I gave an example.

Mr. Blenkarn: You were going to privatize the banks.

Mr. Blaikie: I thought the banks were privatized. The Member is the Chairman of the Finance Committee and is talking about privatizing the banks. I would have thought he would have realized by now that they were in the private sector.

In any event, the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) asked me which companies provincial NDP governments have privatized. I cannot speak for British Columbia or Saskatchewan, but in the course of my speech I gave the example of a company in Manitoba, Flyer Industries, which was privatized. It was sold to a Dutch company which manufactures buses.

At this time the Manitoba Government is trying to find a buyer for MANFOR Industries in The Paw. Unfortunately, I would imagine that those negotiations are somewhat in limbo as a result of the election.

Far from being philosophically rigid about privatization, NDP governments have shown, quite rightly, a willingness to consider where privatization may or may not be appropriate. Obviously there is a difference between us and the Conservatives in that we do not have a bias against public ownership. We see it as a very positive, creative instrument for Canadians to determine the nature of their economy and to have more influence in economic decision-making.

Furthermore, where it is seen to be the best course of action, NDP governments have seen fit to privatize.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the Provinces of Manitoba and Québec, to mention two, have great potential to produce hydro-electric power by building dams and generators. Both provinces are understandably involved in negotiating with American states to their south for the sale of that power.

According to the news last night, the Government of Ontario is now making a decision to spend up to $500,000 to re-equip and improve safety in some of its nuclear power plants. Rather than rebuild those nuclear power plants and build new ones, would it not make better sense for the safety of Canadians for the Ontario Government to get into serious negotiations with the Provinces of Québec and Manitoba to buy the power it needs from those provinces, which is produced by hydro-electric projects?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) points to a problem with the organization of energy production in Canada, particularly when it comes to the production of electric energy. Every province is committed to its own strategy for the production of electric energy. There is very little co-ordination or effort to seek what might be best for the country as a whole or for a particular region in order to achieve some co-ordination.

At one point there was talk in western Canada of a western grid. Negotiations seemed very close to fruition, but apparently fell apart.

Rather than asking how we can sell and exchange energy between Canadian provinces in a way that is most beneficial to the Canadian environment and the safety of Canadians, every province is committed to its own somewhat isolated energy strategy. The hydro producing companies are selling hydro-electric energy to the United States while neighbouring provinces are building more nuclear reactors to get electric energy which they may well have been able to obtain from Canadian neighbours and avoid what I regard as the undesirable prospect of having to build nuclear reactors. So there is not that kind of co-ordination.

There is a lot of confusion surrounding the whole question of hydro exports. One of the areas of confusion, of course, is with respect to the whole free trade agreement and the way in which the Government is trying to make Canadians believe that through this free trade agreement they have scored some kind of victory over the coal lobby in the United States, that we will now be able to make sales to the United States of hydro exports that we would not have been able to make otherwise. The fact is that the Government was responding to a very small group of Congressmen from coal states who had the idea of having some kind of legislative prohibition against Canadian hydro exports to the U.S. That group would not have gone anywhere. It had absolutely no prospect of success. Yet, in response to that feeble threat by a small group of American politicians, the Canadian Government entered into this agreement. Now it wants us to believe that we have new opportunities to sell hydro to the U.S. because of it.

The fact is that the coal lobby actually won in this agreement. The coal lobby was very worried about these coal contracts with Ontario Hydro which will come up for renewal in 1990 and 1991, contracts with American coal producers in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, or wherever it may be. They were worried that by that time Canadians would have gotten things together and would be prepared to buy low sulphur western Canadian coal, which would be of benefit to coal producers in western Canada and to everyone employed in transporting that coal from western Canada. It would also be of benefit to the Canadian environment in terms of burning low sulphur coal as opposed to high sulphur coal.

However, in order to do that, every study has shown that there would have to be some kind of subsidy, something like we have with respect to the transportation of grain, in the nature of about 2 per cent. The free trade agreement will make this impossible. It will make impossible the very transportation subsidy that might have made possible the dreams of many of the western Canadian Conservative Members of Parliament who for years have asked why Ontario will not buy low sulphur western coal. Now, as a result of the free trade agreement, about which they are all frothing at the mouth so positively, their dream of selling low sulphur western Canadian coal to Ontario does not have a snowball's chance in hell. It will be their fault. It will be on their heads.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by assuring members of the Government that we in the Official Opposition are not planning to protract this debate to any great extent. We have had two speakers and I have a few words to add. I do not think I will take even my full 20 minutes. I will, of course, be happy to participate in the question period, then we will be happy to see this Bill, which we generally support, move ahead.

I want to indicate, however, that I have very grave reservations about the Government's privatization policy as a whole. I was intrigued by the question asked by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He asked what it was that the Government has privatized that should not have been, and what has not been privatized by former Governments or by New Democratic Governments which should have been? It is an interesting question.

I think it is very easy to characterize the position of this Government. It has a very limited view of public purpose, even in Government itself, let alone in Crown corporations. It is slavishly addicted to the market-place in the belief that the solutions the market-place provides are always right. Indeed, underlying the free trade agreement is the idea that if only the provincial governments of Canada can be forced to live with market rules, without the power to mitigate them in anyway, that somehow or other it will produce a better life for Canadians. It may certainly produce some greater efficiency. I am not challenging that. I think the great thing the market does provide is a discipline about production. However, there is more to life than that. There is even more to business than that.

I think that if the Government has made an error in its privatization approach, it is the error of thinking that no matter what it is, the market-place will do it better than planning by Government or planning by others to try to achieve other objectives than just the efficiency for which market operations are quite rightly famous. We in the Official Opposition feel it is wrong to begin with the ideology that everything should be privatized. We have objected to the privatization of certain aspects of Correctional Service Canada. We have objected to some other privatizations the Government has proposed.

For us it is a practical question. The question has to be to look at the Crown corporation and ask if there is a public purpose for it that cannot be achieved or that will be lost if the corporation is privatized? When the Government asks that question, and it looks at Crown corporation after Crown corporation, it will tend to come to the conclusion that they should be privatized, because the Government does not have a public policy purpose for Crown corporations.

For example, we have a business in Petro-Canada, but it is also a business that was established by Government to achieve a certain public purpose in addition to complying with the market-place, to being efficient and to providing a service like the service provided to the public sector. We wanted Petro-Canada to be a force in the operations of a number of private companies, which certainly operating together do not follow the typical or theoretical rules of the market-place because they are few in number, they are huge and are in fact a classical oligopoly. We wanted Petro-Canada to be out there, to be, among other things, the honest broker in the field, the corporation that would set the standard and compensate for the limitations that existed in that particular sector of our economy where so few companies together handle such an enormous volume of business.

De Havilland was another example of a corporation which was privatized. I have to say that I think the discipline of the market-place will help de Havilland. It has already begun to help. But when de Havilland was held by the Government it had a public purpose objective as well. That public purpose objective is lost now that it is owned even by a very good multinational corporation which is based and directed from the United States. The public objective which was lost was having a domestic indigenous aerospace industry in Canada, run by Canadians and achieving national objectives in its operation.

No one can say that however successful de Havilland is from now on—and I am one of those who want it to be successful and who support it—it will ever achieve that public policy objective that we had in mind when it was held in the public sector and which might have been achieved in the private sector if it had been sold to a Canadian control group.

The Eldorado Corporation is about to be put into the private sector. I think the role it has played over the years when it was in public hands justified, to a certain point, keeping it in public hands, but, as I have indicated, our energy critic and our caucus have examined the proposal and we consider it to be a proper evolution of Eldorado Corporation.

At the same time I have to say that we are very disappointed that the environmental problems caused by the use, production, exploration, or mining of uranium have not been satisfactorily addressed by the Government. We had looked forward to a continuation of work in trying to find methods of dealing with nuclear wastes that had not been found to date. We had hoped that that would continue to be a high priority.

There is nothing in this proposal to indicate that that will be a high priority and that any more than the normal concern of a private corporation will be shown to a problem of national importance and one which would have benefited from continuing high profile responsibility in the hands of the federal Government.

Like some of the others for which this Government has been responsible, we fear that this privatization is more ideology than a practical consideration of the best interests of the Canadian economy and the best interests of the corporation being privatized.

When privatization occurs, it gives the Conservative Government the opportunity to turn to its friends and give them contracts to bring them on board into the operation. I do not have to be more specific in reminding this House that the Government has abused privatization in the past as a way of rewarding friends and giving them opportunities which would not otherwise be available.

One of the other motives of privatization, which is not a legitimate motive, and which the Government has used in the past, is the use of privatization as a way of appearing to reduce the size of the Public Service. Technically, the size of the Public Service or those employed in the public sector are reduced when a Crown corporation is sold or when a government operation is privatized. Unless there is an actual reduction in that activity, I do not think the Government is justified in claiming the credit for honouring its campaign promise to reduce the size of the Public Service.

The most scandalous example of this is what the Government has done in Correctional Service Canada where people who were working in the service as parole administrators or people in charge of half-way houses owned by the Government have been fired and rehired by organizations established through public funding purportedly to continue the same type of service, but in some cases in a less effective and efficient manner than was being done while the operation was entirely within the Government.

In a case like that, what is achieved is not a cost saving or a reduction in the number of people who are being paid for their services out of tax money, but the appearance that the Public Service has been reduced in numbers because those who were formerly in the Public Service are now under contract to the Government directly or indirectly and doing exactly the same thing. Privatization has become a pretty shabby business in the hands of the Government.

In conclusion, I simply express the hope that that will not be the case in this privatization, in this merger, and in the underwritings and the share offerings that will subsequently take place, but that it will be run on an above-board basis, and that in the long term it will bring benefits to the users of nuclear fuel and to the production of nuclear fuel.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to ask the Hon. Member two questions. First, I wish to ask his views on the feelings of the union representing the de Havilland workers about privatization. While it has apparently meant more jobs at this time, what we have are more jobs in the production and assembly of the aircraft. In fact what has been lost by this privatization is the ability of that company when it was owned publicly to do the research and development which is so necessary if the industry is to continue to develop and prosper in the future. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that.

Since the Hon. Member was a member of the Cabinet in the former Liberal Government, I would like him to explain, if he can why the former Government participated in that cartel, together with countries such as the United States, Australia, and other countries that were involved, to keep the price of uranium ore hundreds of percentage points higher than it should have been? This cost the Canadian public hundreds of millions of dollars. Because Ontario Hydro was purchasing so much of that uranium for its atomic power plants, it cost the people of Ontario. Why did the then Government participate in that cartel? Even more, not only did it participate in the cartel, it used every possible method, and certainly every possible legal method, to keep secret the details of what went on, the arrangements made in that cartel and that cartel agreement, to keep the facts from the Canadian public?

Mr. Kaplan: Let me answer the last question first. Unfortunately, I do not have great first-hand knowledge of the facts in the nuclear cartel situation. I followed it with considerable interest, as did the Hon. Member, but I am not in a position to discuss the Government's motives, or the methods that it used.

It is obvious to anyone looking at it from the outside that one of the advantages of keeping a price artificially high is to encourage the continuation of exploration, development, and stockpiling of the resource. If prices are lower that will occur less. If prices are higher, that will occur more. I would assume that the primary purpose of having the cartel was to ensure that there would be continuing exploration and development of what is a very key resource in the nuclear age in which we live.

On the question of the concern about research and development, I am obviously as concerned as the Hon. Member that there be a high level of research and development at de Havilland. With the company in private hands, as it is now as a result of the action of the Conservative Government, there is less government control of that. Whether research and development occurs in Canada, in the United States, or at all, in relation to this propeller technology aircraft at de Havilland, no longer depends on the Government of Canada. It has given up the right to control that, because it is no longer the shareholder and it no longer appoints the directors of the company. That is one example of a consequence of privatization. However, I hope that the Government is calling on de Havilland, under the contract of purchase and sale which does give some rights to the federal Government and some continuing responsibilities, to assure that a high level of research and development does occur in Canada.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I have recently attended at the plant at de Havilland, and in the next few weeks a number of Members of Parliament elected in the area of the plant will be there. The amount of research and development that goes on there is impressive. One hopes that it will continue and, if possible, will increase.

On the other hand, the new element introduced into de Havilland that I support, but that I admit might be controversial, is that it is beginning to do more assembly and fabrication of other aircraft than those it is making from beginning to end in the plant. I consider that to be a good insurance policy for the corporation. After all, a one-product company is as vulnerable as that product. While de Havilland's current plane is a very big winner or a very big success, in due course it will start to become obsolete. I hope that that is a long way down the road, but when that time comes I think the union and the Member of Parliament representing the area, myself, will be very happy that the company has other lines of activity which provide high paying jobs for very highly trained people who work in the plant.

I am not sorry that it has gone into the assembly business to the extent that it has, and I am not sorry that it is more than just a one-product plant. However, there is something discouraging, I must say, about making parts which fit into somebody else's aerospace vision or into planes being designed, assembled, and flown out of other factories than the ones de Havilland has in Canada.

I remember visiting other aircraft plants in that area of Toronto which were making tail assemblies, for example. That was the whole thing the company was about or the plant was involved in. One had to be somewhat saddened that the Canadian aerospace industry had the type of truncation that it would not be doing something where creative energy or vision or research and development could enhance what it was doing. It was just making as many tails as were needed for planes which had been designed elsewhere and which were being sold and marketed elsewhere, and so on.

That is the danger of the Mulroney trade deal. It is the kind of thing that we can see happening to our plants. As the takeover of American companies continues—and the agreement encourages takeover by American companies—it could lead to a lack of autonomy about Canadian entrepreneurship, Canadian economic creativity and invention, and so on. It is a very discouraging possible result of continentalism.

As long as the plant is designing planes and making them more or less from beginning to end, and as long as there is no suggestion that it will stop doing that, I will continue to support what is happening at de Havilland. As the Dash-8 meets its market and as new designs and so on come on, I hope they will come from de Havilland, not that de Havilland will merely be a piece maker for someone else's ideas.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is also a lawyer and I should like him to tell us, if he would, how he feels about the fact that two bona fide officials were charged as junior officers in Uranium Canada, that an Order in Council was passed indicating that Canadians could not discuss that very important issue, and why the head of Uranium Canada, now Senator Jack Austin, was not charged when he in fact was the head of the company in which the two officials were charged.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member who asked the question knows that the decision about laying charges is not the province of a Cabinet or of Ministers in the aggregate. It is the unique and exclusive responsibility of the Attorney-General who is not to consult with his colleagues when decisions like that are being taken.

I think the implication in the question is that somehow or other I, as a former member of the Government, should have to defend a decision not to charge Senator Austin. If that is his point, as if it were a government decision, it is a misleading question and I would want to reject that aspect of it.

So far as the rest of the question is concerned, the Order in Council and so on, I really had no personal contact with the issue. I have nothing to add to the very full answers which were given to that question at the time it was asked of the Ministers in the Trudeau Government who were responsible for establishing the cartel.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that we should come back after the break to yet another sign that the Conservative Government continues to pursue its ideological course toward defeat.

The interesting question which arises when one starts to discuss privatization and public ownership is in fact the one which the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) raised some time ago—which kinds of companies, which sorts of enterprises would one want to see as private sector enterprises, and for what reasons would one want to see them in the public sector?

As a country we have had to make such choices on many different occasions throughout history. Ironically, earlier Conservative Governments often made the choice to put a company into the public sector for specific and important national reasons. It is for that reason that I find it especially unfortunate that the Conservative Government has taken an entirely ideological approach to reduce, for the sake of doing so, the number of companies held by the public as opposed to those in the private sector.

What is also interesting is that the approach it has taken in this area, as in so many areas, has been one of ideologically based nibbles. Yet it refuses to stand up forthrightly and take a position that reflects what it actually believes in terms of significant, large public enterprises, such as Air Canada, Petro-Canada, Canadian National, and CBC. There has not been any effort, despite ideological small harassments, to move against significant public enterprises, because it is so clear that public opinion is in favour of keeping public enterprises such as Air Canada, CBC, CN, and Petro-Canada in the public sector to ensure that they continue to serve the public as they have done in the past. Still, steps have been taken such as this one in respect of Eldorado and a series of earlier smaller steps in respect of other companies in the public sector.

If one had a philosophy respecting the public sector of trying to assess which firms should be in and which should be out, it seems to me—and perhaps this is the last point I will make before the luncheon break—that a company with so much associated with it in terms of safety, in terms of environmental concerns, and in terms of the tremendous contribution of the Government to setting it up in the first place, is the kind of firm which one would inevitably say must be within the public sector.

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Because of the Minister's statement earlier, the House will sit until eight minutes past one o'clock. The Hon. Member if he wishes may continue.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if I can pursue this point somewhat further, of all the companies which one might choose, a company which is dealing with nuclear matters is a company which should be under the most careful, most controlled scrutiny from the Government. A company which has received, as Eldorado Nuclear has, the tremendous support of government in assistance, both with respect to capital, development and marketing, through the cartel arrangements which have been discussed back and forth, that too is surely a company which should be kept within the public sector as something which the Canadian people have built and something from which the Canadian people should receive the returns.

Finally, of course, it is a company which potentially has an environmental impact that is frankly dangerous, that can damage communities and hurt workers. That too, is a company which has to be kept within the context of community ownership rather than allowed to go to the private sector where it will not have to face the same kind of responsibility to the community as a whole.

I think on that basis it is very curious that one would find this company chosen as a company to privatize. I think there are other considerations which also make it very difficult to justify the sale of this company to the private sector. One of those considerations is the simple fact that the workers, who work not just those for Eldorado but for the sister company, which will be joining it as part of the scheme, have come out absolutely and adamantly against putting this enterprise in the private sector. They have done so for the best of reasons; for reasons of health and safety for themselves as workers and for future workers as well. They have pointed to the fact that up until recently statistics have shown that for those who are within such plants as the processing plants of Eldorado Nuclear, those who are actually mining uranium, the rates of danger with respect to cancer and with respect to other consequences of radiation are significantly greater than for any other group within the economy.

So I think it is an important consideration in our decision making with respect to this privatization that we take into account that those who belong to both trade unions, the group which come from the United Steelworkers and the group which come from the energy and chemical workers, have adamantly opposed this privatization.

I think it is crucial for us to recognize that this is a tremendous sweetheart deal being offered to the private sector. There is, for instance, with respect to environmental considerations, the fact that the refinery at Port Hope essentially will be bailed out by the federal Government. With respect to the costs of dealing with that dumpsite, only the first $2 million worth of costs will be covered by the newly privatized company. For the next $98 million worth of potential problems, 76.5 per cent will be covered by the federal Government. Anything which is above that $100 million mark will be borne by the federal Government entirely. That is not the reality of private enterprise with its risks and its uncertainties. That is instead a kind of public enterprise which is really being handed to a small group of people who will receive shares in this newly privatized company.

IMMIGRATION

CRITICISM OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if the Conservatives are looking for someone else to blame for the shmozzle in refugee and immigration matters, they might remember the famous words of Pogo who said: "I have seen the enemy, and it is me".

The legislation before Parliament today has been denounced virtually unanimously by knowledgeable observers: the Canadian Bar Association, the churches, Amnesty International, Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and the Canadian Labour Congress, to name only a few. The new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has the chance to start things off on the right foot. She should listen to these observers, suspend the deportation orders, and bring in substantial amendments or entirely new legislation.

SPORT

TRIBUTE TO MARIO LEMIEUX

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, the regular season of the National Hockey League has just ended and a new leading scorer, namely Mario Lemieux, centreman for the Pittsburg Penguins has been crowned. That young athlete who is a native of Ville-Emard in the constituency of LaSalle which I have the honour to represent in this House continues to astonish experts and hockey fans thanks to his natural talent as a brilliant hockey player. When we see him play with such spirit, we cannot but expect that his feats will soon become legendary.

He thus belongs to a very select group of Canadians with Maurice Richard, Wayne Gretzky, Bobby Orr and Guy Lafleur who have reached the greatest fame and are now the pride of all Canadians.

I invite all my colleagues of this House to join me to pay tribute to Mario Lemieux for his masterful performance throughout the season and to extend to him our sincere and well-deserved congratulations as world champion of scorers. Well done Mario Lemieux of Ville-Emard!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES TRADE EMBARGO

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, now that the leaders of both the Sandinista Government of Nicaragua and the Contra rebels have entered into formal peace negotiations, I would like to express my concern about reports that the Government of the United States is considering strengthening the trade embargo against Nicaragua.

Until now, some Nicaraguan products such as coffee have been allowed to enter the United States legally through a third country. In the case of coffee, Canada happens to be one of those third countries. Therefore, it is clear that the proposed sanctions may have a detrimental effect on some Canadian interests. In short, these trade sanctions would make it illegal for Nicaraguan products of any type to be exported to the United States.

I urge the Government to oppose the actions of the Reagan administration. The Nicaraguan Government has clearly shown its willingness to resolve its differences peacefully with other political factions in Nicaragua namely, the Contra rebels. By imposing further trade sanctions, the United States might destroy the spirit of the peace negotiations. Furthermore, in my opinion and in the opinion of my colleagues, such sanctions would also cause unnecessary economic and political hardship for the Government and the people of Nicaragua.

ABORTION

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the abortion legislation in the United Kingdom and in many American states stipulates that no health care provider is under any contractual, statutory, or legal duty to participate in a procedure terminating a pregnancy if he or she has a conscientious objection, unless it is necessary to save the life of or prevent permanent injury to a pregnant woman.

Any Canadian legislation dealing with abortion must contain a similar clause to ensure that our health care providers are not required by law to act contrary to their own consciences either.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR MORE JOBS FOR YOUTH

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Conservative government, through the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), has decided to cut 2,300 summer jobs for students on the Island of Montreal and in Laval. Last year, the 23 ridings on the Island of Montreal and in Laval obtained more than $10 million for summer job creation under the Challenge 87 program, but this year, unfortunately, there will only be $6 million, a cut of $4 million, which represents a loss of 2,300 jobs that college and university students will not have this summer. Last year, there were 6,400 jobs; this year, there will be only 4,100.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by asking all members, both Liberals and Conservatives, for the 23 ridings of the Island of Montreal and Laval to put pressure on the Minister of State for Youth to correct this injustice and act fairly towards our young students from Montreal and Laval.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILIES OF ISLAMABAD VICTIMS

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my constituents of Pakistani descent who live in my beautiful constituency of La Prairie my sincere condolences for the innocent victims of Islamabad in Pakistan, their brothers and sisters who were killed following the explosion of an ammunition dump.

To their families and friends and to the Pakistani Government, I would like, Mr. Speaker, to offer, on behalf of the Canadian people and my constituents, my compassion and my efforts, if they wish, to ease the misery of those innocent victims.

It is sad to see, Mr. Speaker, a war arsenal destroy in a time of peace so many human lives. It is a truly sad day. We are praying for them.

EDUCATION

B.C. INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY—REDUCED PROVINCIAL FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business reports that nearly half of its 80,000 small and medium-sized businesses experience a shortfall of qualified labour.

We know that British Columbia has the lowest percentage of high school graduates advancing to post-secondary education of any province in Canada. Yet the British Columbia Government has just announced that it will actually reduce funding to the B.C. Institute of Technology. This prestigious and internationally renowned training and skill development institution should be provided with additional funds, well above the rate of inflation, to ensure that British Columbians receive the necessary education and training to enable them to assume their rightful place in the knowledge based economy of the future.

Instead, the British Columbia Government cuts educational funding for BCIT and, in spite of increasing enrolments, fails to fund its colleges, universities, technical and vocational institutions adequately. By this action the B.C. Government handicaps and limits as well as discriminates against its citizens and makes it impossible for British Columbians to have the same opportunities as Canadians from other provinces and territories.

REQUEST THAT PRESSURE BE EXERTED ON SENATE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada must apply the law in the case of illegal Turquish or other refugees. We Canadians live in a law abiding society, otherwise we would face anarchy.

Mr. Speaker, we live in an open and generous country: never have our doors been closed to immigrants and genuine refugees, but we cannot welcome those who enter Canada by resorting to illegal schemes, because they take the place of men and women who have gone through normal channels and are waiting.

Parliament passed two immigration Bills aimed at substituting order for the immigration chaos which the former administration did not have the courage to eliminate. However, the Liberal bigwigs in the Senate have been filibustering and sitting on these two pieces of legislation for the past nine months.

Mr. Speaker, I too feel compassionate towards these courageous Turquish workers who sold all their possessions in their country to pay their lawyer and the organization which brought them here illegally and who had long since settled in Quebec with their children.

To those who blame the Government I say blame the Senate. Walk on the Senate and into the office of John Turner who has lost control over his highly-paid and utterly inefficient Senators who have been repudiated by most Canadians.

ABORTION

MEMBER'S POSITION ON ISSUE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, one of the most difficult issues with which Parliament will probably ever deal is that of abortion. MPs in all Parties have taken or will have to take a position on this very important issue.

I had taken a position on abortion, and I am now going to do something which is probably politically frowned upon by many people. I will admit publicly that the position I had taken was wrong and that I now believe that abortion is wrong. I informed my constituents last Saturday that I intend to vote against abortion in all cases except where the mother's life is in danger.

That was not a decision which was easy for me to take. I want to thank my colleagues in this House, in particular the Members for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and London East (Mr. Jepson), and many others who, either knowingly or otherwise, have influenced me to make this decision.

I want to thank my constituents and all the people who stood by me and had the patience to put up with the wrong position which I held.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a great time to be a Tory. The Government has created over one million jobs, most of them permanent. Unemployment is down, housing starts are up, and fairer taxation is on the way.

We have made but one grave error. We have adopted the Liberal policy of Pierre Elliott Trudeau on language. Bill 101 in Québec continues to humiliate over one million Anglos in that province and 88 per cent of all Canadians, and no one decries it—a unilingual Québec and bilingual Canada.

Congratulations to Grant Devine for not allowing a mere 23,000 in a population of over one million to push him around.

Bill C-72 is reverse discrimination. It makes second class citizens of Anglophones. It dead ends promotion in the Public Service, and it creates a bad judiciary and a language czar above the law. We cannot afford any of it.

I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to see that it is drastically amended or let it die in committee. Bill C-72 is wrong. We can then go on with building this great nation by passing free trade legislation and electing a PC Government for the next four years.

CABINET SHUFFLE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it was appropriate that Canada's print media reported the recent federal Cabinet shuffle on April 1, April Fools' Day.

While the joke was on the Canadian people, it was also on the Québec caucus of the Conservative Government. The joke on Canadians was the suggestion that, by shuffling a deck of jokers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could deal himself a hand of aces. In fact the Prime Minister revealed once again his incapacity for leadership. He lacked the courage to discard some wild cards, like the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

[Translation]

But the biggest joke was on Quebec's Conservative caucus. The Prime Minister is telling his 50 Quebec Members that they are incompetent.

Lucien Bouchard, the messiah from Paris, is also a friend of Brian. He is a big catch, a big fish.

The other Members are humiliated, isolated on Government benches with an April Fools' Day joke called Lucien Bouchard!

IMPORTANCE OF SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the degradation of our fragile soil is a matter of great concern to all Canadians. The production of food to feed a hungry world is highlighted by soil conservation groups not only in Canada but all over the world.

We often say that we are living in the age of information, to indicate the vast knowledge we have at our disposal today. This knowledge points out how many of the accepted cultural practices are in fact very detrimental to the long term health of the land.

Canadian farmers recognize that they are the present-day stewards of the land and are becoming increasingly aware of their responsibilities to preserve and, in fact, enhance the productive capability of the soil so future generations may enjoy the abundance of food as well.

I want to recognize all of the individuals and various groups who are soil conservation advocates, as well as their theme, because "soil conservation is everybody's business".

INCOME TAX

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES—VALUATION OF HOUSING IN YELLOWKNIFE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, although the 1986 changes to the Income Tax Act which sought to ameliorate the high cost of living in northern Canada by altering the tax treatment of certain northern housing and travel benefits have been of net benefit to northern taxpayers, many administrative details are still causing serious troubles.

In particular, the insistence on using so-called market housing prices in the city of Yellowknife, where no true market currently exists, results in people there having to pay many thousands of dollars more tax than someone living a few miles away.

This is most unfair and the problem must be solved by assigning the same deemed values to Yellowknife housing as is the case in all other territorial locations.

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH NATIONALS—UPHOLDING OF LAWS URGED

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, hats off to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) for not succumbing to immediate pressure to allow the illegal Turkish refugees to stay in Canada. Why should these Turkish refugees be allowed to queue jump and break the rules when there are thousands of other immigrants and refugees who have followed the due process of the law and have to wait and take their turn?

I urge the Department of Immigration to carry out the law and pick up these lawbreakers and deport them to Turkey immediately.

Let the CBC Journal cameras and Toronto Star photographers follow them right to the plane's ramp if they want. It is time the media report the news and stop acting as political lobbyists.

Keep up the good work, Barbara.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSED SASKATCHEWAN LEGISLATION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Bill 2, tabled in the Saskatchewan Legislature last week, is a suppression of existing rights in favour of the French-speaking minority in Saskatchewan. The action of the Devine Government must be viewed as a backward step in terms of national unity. The Saskatchewan legislation runs directly counter to and contravenes the fundamental purpose of the Constitution of Canada which, after all, is to protect the basic rights of all Canadians.

Last week the Prime Minister wrote the Premier a somewhat ambiguous letter in which he said to the Premier of Saskatchewan that the Bill can be viewed from two different perspectives. He said it can be seen as open and generous because it implements long neglected rights and guarantees.

But he said, on the other hand, that the Bill can be seen as diminishing existing language rights.

What exactly is the position of the Prime Minister of Canada? Would he clear up some of the ambiguity in his letter and tell us whether he supports the Saskatchewan legislation or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to that question in the very letter from which my right hon. friend quotes, where I go on to point out the position of the Government of Canada which had already been stated by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Hon. Lowell Murray, who expressed the disappointment of the Government in respect to the legislation tabled and the wish that the Government of Saskatchewan would go much further in the protection of minority rights.

I am happy to tell my right hon. friend that conversations and meetings have already been initiated in this respect. Progress is in the process of being made, and I hope we will continue to make substantial progress in respect to the protection of minority language rights in Saskatchewan and, indeed, elsewhere in Canada, because it is a vital dimension of our citizenship.

TEXT OF MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while I welcome the tone of that reply, I want to be more specific. I have taken the view that the so-called Meech Lake Accord, which was enshrined in the Constitution amendment of 1987, was meant to enhance minority language rights in this country. Premier Devine seems to think otherwise.

I want to refer the Prime Minister to Section 2 of that Constitution amendment of 1987. It states that the existence of French-speaking Canadians is a fundamental characteristic of Canada. It goes on to say that it is the role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial Legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada.

Does the Prime Minister agree with my view that the legislation introduced by Premier Devine contravenes both the letter and spirit of the Meech Lake Accord as enshrined in the Constitution amendment? If he does, why did he not say so more bluntly, more specifically, and more categorically to the Premier when he wrote to him last week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my right hon. friend's assessment of the Meech Lake Accord, that it enhances minority rights. It does indeed. The Meech Lake Accord takes the protection of minority rights a step further. I can say, I think quite categorically, that had the Meech Lake Accord been passed and accepted and was part of our constitutional formation as we speak, it would be infinitely more difficult for any provinces to pass restrictive legislation and would ensure our minorities of the possibility to invoke another serious argument against any restrictive legislation. So I am in agreement with the legal assessment given by my right hon. friend.

I have already indicated to my right hon. friend that, pursuant to a decision of the Government of Saskatchewan, we initiated discussions with the province yesterday. The Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development met, at my request, in Saskatchewan with leaders of the Saskatchewan Government in the interests of promoting discussions which will result in much greater justice, fairness, and equity for the French-speaking minority in Saskatchewan. I hope my hon. friend will encourage that process.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Prime Minister endorses my opinion of Section 2 of the Constitution amendment. It is an amendment which, after all, was introduced into the Legislature of that province by the Premier of Saskatchewan and was adopted by that province. In other words, the Premier is contravening an amendment which his own Legislature has adopted.

Mr. Speaker, our Party critic, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, wrote to the Prime Minister on April 8 and asked for a unanimous resolution by the House of Commons, urging Saskatchewan to drop Bill 2. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has asked for an emergency debate by Parliament on Saskatchewan's language bill.

Why is the Prime Minister, through the Hon. Lowell Murray, refusing to support a unanimous resolution by the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the circumstances such a resolution would be premature. Important meetings are taking place at this very moment between the Government of Canada and the Governement of Saskatchewan. We are trying to find an appropriate and honourable way to deal with a difficult situation, and in the circumstances, I would urge the Hon. Member to consider, for instance, a comment by Premier Devine quoted in Saturday's Le Devoir: "Saskatchewan will be bilingual . . . at its own pace", which, if I am not mistaken, is similar to the position taken by Premier Peterson of Ontario.

These situations are not perfect or ideal, but such positions are nevertheless encouraging and deserve serious dialogue on our part, and we intend to do just that with the Government of Saskatchewan.

In the circumstances, I feel that a resolution at this time might be premature. However, we intend to engage in a very serious dialogue with the Government of Saskatchewan in order to solve this problem.

NATIONAL UNITY—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Prime Minister that the comparison with Ontario is not correct. As far as I know, there was no law in Ontario that for 83 years guaranteed access to the legislature or the courts.

In Saskatchewan, such a law existed, and that is the point. In Saskatchewan, there is a clear-cut loss of rights, and that is why we are raising the issue.

Perhaps I may remind the Prime Minister of what he said in this House on October 6, 1983.

He said, among other things, that the House has a duty to protect language minorities wherever they may be, because, and I quote:

> There is only the sanctity of minority rights. There is no obligation more compelling and no duty more irresistible in Canada than to ensure that our minorities, linguistic and otherwise, live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice.

My question to the Prime Minister is this: How can he reconcile what he said at the time with the action taken by the Saskatchewan legislature with Bill 2, which abolishes Francophone rights recognized since 1905 when the province was created? How does he reconcile this with a decision that is regressive and extremely damaging to our national unity?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to reconcile positions that are sometimes totally divergent. One hundred and twenty years ago, Canada's Prime Minister had to deal with problems on the language front. That is still the case today, and I assume it will be a hundred years from now. It is part of the very nature of our federation. Language problems will always be there to upset us, to trouble us and also to divide us. We must show maturity, leadership and generosity in dealing with these issues, and that is what we want to do. That has been, I believe, the admirable attitude of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier since he became a Member of this House. I think that has been the position taken by the Leaders of the three political parties in this House, and we intend to maintain the same maturity and dignity in dealing with difficult problems.

We have a problem today, I agree. We will have problems five, ten and fifty years from now. However, there will always be people with the leadership and the resolve to deal with these questions in the appropriate manner, and I can assure the Hon. Member of my Government's clear commitment in this respect.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL COMMUNICATE WITH ALBERTA PREMIER AND FRANCOPHONE MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Prime Minister that in the judgment rendered on February 25, the Supreme Court acknowledged that the situation in Alberta might be similar, in other words, that Section 110 also applies to Alberta. Since an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, I wonder, and I realize he is sincere when he says that he is going to try and help the language minorities, I wonder whether today, the Prime Minister will immediately consider calling his provincial counterpart in Alberta, Mr. Getty, to make him see reason, offer him the federal Government's assistance and give him every necessary technical and financial support, and does he also intend to meet the minority groups that stand to be affected by the possibility of regressive legislation in Alberta?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): We certainly do intend to meet with the minority groups. We have already been in touch with the authorities in Alberta as well as Saskatchewan. I mentioned in my letter, on page 3: . . .

• (1425)

> For its part, in addition to the items already on the agenda of the first constitutional conference to follow ratification of the Meech Lake Accord, the Government of Canada intends to address the issue of minority language rights in their broadest context, so as to build on the achievements of the Constitution Act of 1982 and the 1987 Constitutional Accord.

There is only one way to protect minority rights in this country, Mr. Speaker, and that is to entrench them in the Constitution. We had a chance in 1982 to do it perfectly, and we failed to do it perfectly. But we have built on it, and there were improvements.

In fact my hon. friend, who is perfectly consistent on this very important matter, as I recollect voted against the 1982 Constitution Accord because it failed to protect French-speaking minority rights in the Province of Ontario. He has been perfectly consistent throughout the piece.

Improvements were made in 1982. Improvements are being made in 1987. But there is only ultimately one way to ensure the sanctity and the irreversible nature of the protection of minority rights and that is to have them in the Constitution. That is the commitment of this Government. That is what we have been working toward. Tomorrow we maintain the dialogue with the Province of Saskatchewan in a sensitive and important area to make progress on behalf of a French-speaking minority in the Province of Saskatchewan.

The Premier of Saskatchewan has indicated, and if I may say to his credit, a degree of openness that he has put on the record that is encouraging, and to which we ought to respond in a mature and thoughtful way.

On behalf of the Government of Canada I propose to engage in that dialogue, with a view to providing excellent protection for our French-speaking minorities in Saskatchewan and elsewhere, for language minorities across the country, English-speaking and French-speaking. That is in the traditions of this House, that is what all Members seek, and that is to what this Government is committed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the whole country now knows, in Bill 2 the Government of Saskatchewan has replaced existing rights with the discretionary authority of the Government of the day. Most Canadians will think that this is an unacceptable course of action in a country that is deeply committed in principle to both official languages.

I want to ask questions on this that arise in part from the letter that I sent to the Prime Minister on Friday and to which he replied on the same day. In his reply the Prime Minister said: "The position of the Saskatchewan Government is evolving".

Considering that the Minister of Justice in Saskatchewan has said that there will be no amendments accepted to Bill 2, and since on the weekend the Premier of Saskatchewan, to use his words, said that he had pushed his caucus to the limit on this matter, will the Prime Minister please tell us concretely what he, the Prime Minister, thinks the Premier of Saskatchewan should do?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Premier of Saskatchewan should do what, for example, the Premier of Ontario should do, and the Premier of Quebec, and the Premier of British Columbia, and everyone, which is to ensure absolute equality and perfect protection with fairness for every citizen before the law in Canada. That is what I believe should be done. That is my vision of Canada and a perfectly bilingual society. I know it is not for tomorrow. I know we are not going to get that tomorrow no matter how hard we try. What is important is to build on the progress and the attitudes that do exist.

I submit to my hon. friend that the comments of the provincial Minister of Justice are different from the information that was imparted to me by the Deputy Prime Minister, who had an excellent meeting yesterday with representatives of the Government of Saskatchewan. There is an encouraging attitude on the part of members of the Government of Saskatchewan.

In fairness to the Premier of Saskatchewan I would urge the Leader of the NDP to read the front page story in Le Devoir in which the Premier of Saskatchewan is quoted directly in response to the following question.

[Translation]

"Are you saying that in time, in ten or fifteen years, Saskatchewan will be completely bilingual?", Mr. Devine was asked. The answer: "Absolutely!", he said, without hesitation. Mr. Devine has said quite clearly that his province will become bilingual, and so forth. I think these comments are encouraging and deserve to be met with serious dialogue on our part. That is what we intend to do, bearing in mind the interests of minority groups, the interests of the unity of this country, and the interests of Saskatchewan as a province that signed the Meech Lake Accord and has a fundamental commitment to the principles of that Accord.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one hopes that the long range forecasts of the Premier of Saskatchewan, as quoted in today's Le Devoir, turn out to be the case. However, I say to the Prime Minister with care—and I am sure that he would agree—that minority rights are important now, in the short run, not just the long run as well.

In that context the Prime Minister knows very well that just five years ago he, as the then Leader of the Opposition, the then Prime Minister, and myself met, discussed, and agreed to a resolution which had some substance to it. It was not just a body of generalities but exercised a concrete role.

Apart from the generalities with reference to rights a way down the road, is the Prime Minister prepared today to urge the Premier of Saskatchewan to do one of two things and to do them this week, publicly: first, say that he will accept amendments to Bill 2 or, failing that, say that he will not proceed with Bill 2 at this time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend, because I participated in it as well, that in October, 1983, the debate on the Manitoba minority language situation in which all three Party Leaders participated took place pursuant to a Supreme Court decision in 1979. The debate took place some four or five years later. The object of the resolution in 1983 on which we both spoke was to endorse on behalf of all Canadians the essence of the agreement reached by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba with the participation of the Société franco-manitobaine on May 16, 1983.

What had happened was that a decision of the Supreme Court had intervened. There followed discussions and negotiations between the interested parties, and the House of Commons was called upon to endorse that agreement.

What we are seeking now, as quickly as we can, is that kind of agreement that will find favour with the—

... Société franco-manitobaine, Société des Canadiens français de la Saskatchewan ...

An Hon. Member: Société des Fransaskois.

Mr. Mulroney: ... of the Government of Saskatchewan and representatives of the parties in this House.

That is the difference between the situation at the time and the situation we have today, which in no way affects the merits of the Saskatchewan case.

POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

The Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Saskatchewan Francophone representatives indicated very clearly before the weekend that the present Saskatchewan Government had not given any serious consideration to their concrete proposals, none whatsoever! My question to the Prime Minister is very simple: Does he agree with the Saskatchewan Government's present approach? If not, could he suggest a different approach, one of greater openness, to the Premier of Saskatchewan?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My ultimate goal, Mr. Speaker, is not necessarily to seek as solution which would bring about confrontation, although I would favour that if it were conducive to any improvement of the situation. What I am seeking is an honorable and effective settlement for the francophone minority in Saskatchewan, for the 23,000 to 25,000 French-speaking Canadians who live their daily lives in Saskatchewan, far away from Quebec, who live in that part of the country and who are entitled to be heard and defended, along with their interests, at all times and in all circumstances. It is a situation which has been left unattended for a hundred years. The Supreme Court has spoken on the issue. As soon as the decision was made public, the Canadian Government undertook discussions with the Government of Saskatchewan and the representatives of the French Canadian societies in Saskatchewan. The results of a meeting held yesterday in which three senior federal cabinet Ministers took part appear to be encouraging. It is a process which I think should be supported by all Members of this House in the hope that an acceptable, just and equitable settlement is found for the francophone minority and for all the people of Saskatchewan.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. First I congratulate the Minister on her new responsibilities—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: —and express the hope, on behalf of many, many Canadians, that she will address the challenges of her immigration portfolio with an open mind and with a view to finding fair and humane solutions to the many problems plaguing the immigration system.

On this note I should like to ask the Minister if she will take advantage of her unique opportunity as the new Minister of Employment and Immigration to review carefully the Government's immigration policy, particularly the two refugee Bills before the Canadian Senate, which have been vetoed by every non-governmental organization, with a view to amending these Bills so that together we can begin fairly and effectively to untangle the current mess and nightmare within the Department of Immigration.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, those Bills are very important to the refugee determination process, as the Hon. Member knows. I would not expect to introduce a Bill on a subject which is as sensitive and as important to Canadians without there being some controversy about it. That does not mean that the Bill should not be passed.

We have a big problem. We have 48,000 refugee claimants in Canada. We want to expedite the process and make it better. That is what those Bills are designed to do. They go together in order to do that, and we would appreciate the co-operation of the other place in order to get that done.

TURKISH NATIONALS—REQUEST FOR APPLICATION OF HUMANITARIAN CRITERIA

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. It concerns the more immediate immigration dilemma faced by the Turkish claimants.

While we on this side are not advocating the granting of refugee status, nor are we counselling them to break the law by ignoring deportation orders, nonetheless we believe that there is a compromise solution for the Government to take.

Given that last year the Government landed 27,000 individuals through its humanitarian program, and landed a further 16,000 individuals through ministerial permits which waived all necessary and regular processing, at the very least will the Minister consider applying the criteria of her Department's humanitarian program to these Turkish claimants on an individual basis, which will retain the ability of the Government to protect itself from health and security hazards, as one attempt to salvage and break the escalating human and emotional log jam?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I met with the Turks who are on their way to Parliament Hill on Friday night, and I explained directly to them, both individually and collectively, the process under which our legal system for immigrants operates.

I pointed out to them that it was not just these laws that are important but that one of the reasons people like to live in Canada is that it is the rule of law which is the most important contributor to fundamental justice.

There were 2,000 Turks who arrived in Canada. Several hundred of them have already returned to Turkey. Since the march began two others have gone back to Turkey.

What I have committed is that if they return and make application as other hopeful immigrants do, I will not exercise my power, as my predecessor in this portfolio said, to stand in the way of their return as legal immigrants once they have been through that process.

TRADE

EXPORTS OF URANIUM—UNITED STATES SENATE BILL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The United States Senate has actually passed a Bill that imposes penalties on U.S. utilities that use significant amounts of Canadian uranium. Does the Prime Minister agree with me that this Bill goes directly against the standstill clause in the U.S. trade deal?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is yes.

I would remind the Hon. Members that this Bill has just passed the Senate. It still has many steps to go. Congress is really not interested in this particular Bill, and we believe that not only does it violate the standstill agreement in the free trade deal but it also violates the requirements under GATT.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the vote was 62 to 28. That suggests that there was a considerable amount of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Has the Prime Minister been in touch with his ambassador to the United States concerning this piece of legislation, and what instructions have been given to him to stand up and fight for Canada and for Canadian producers of uranium who are going to be hit by this attack?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, all of a sudden there is a new found interest from the NDP in the Canadian uranium producers. It is kind of encouraging. Isn't that something new and different?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I might say that the Canadian Government has made very strong representation in this regard and will continue to do so. I can tell the Hon. Member that the administration is opposed to this legislation. I will repeat again that we feel it is in violation of the GATT rules and not only of the free trade agreement.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANUFACTURE OF LOCOMOTIVES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH CN AUTHORITIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the new Minister of Transport. I want to congratulate him on his recent appointment, and I would hope that older workers who were cut off unemployment insurance will fare better under the new Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last week, during the Easter recess, the Canadian National, a Crown corporation, awarded contracts for the building of 90 locomotives at a cost of $180 million. Unfortunately, 30 of those locomotives will be built in the United States, made in USA, and there is nothing for Quebec! The Minister knows that the CN headequarters are in Quebec and that Bombardier, which builds locomotives, is in Montreal. Can the Minister tell us whether he is going to talk to the CN management with a vow of ensuring a review of their decision, so that Quebec get some economic spinoffs and that the 90 locomotives ordered by a Crown corporation be all made in Canada?

The Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I might call on the CN management to find out exactly how those contracts were awarded. I think it is the first question of my hon. colleague. If he means whether I am going on a regular basis to start interfering with Crown corporations in an effort to alter their decisions, I do not think that he expects this to be the role of the Minister of Transport.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONTACT CN AUTHORITIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. We are off to a bad start, and I wonder if I was right to congratulate him on his appointment to his new portfolio. But what really matters is that in Quebec at this time the Bombardier Company in Montreal East is in trouble. Could the Minister assure us today that he will call on the officials of the CNR, a Crown Corporation, and ask them to review the whole contract so that since at least 30 railway engines are to be built in United States—we know that GE and Bombardier have worked together before—Quebec may get spin-offs and Bombardier, in Montreal East can build motors and other parts, thereby maintaining jobs? But if the Minister should decide to behave the way he did in similar circumstances and say that he washes his hands of the whole thing, I will remind him that Easter is behind us and conclude that once again we were taken for a ride!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie did not understand my reply. What I said is that I would check with Canadian National officials about the procedures followed. I suppose the Hon. Member does not want us to intervene constantly, in this case it suits him—but another time he might ask us to do the opposite again because it suits him. The Minister of Transport must respect the rules set by the Canadian National, but I will have to check to see whether these rules were adhered to . . . I suppose they were, but I will certainly find out; again, I will certainly do nothing to force a Crown Corporation to change its rules to meet the requests of the Hon. Member.

ACQUISITION OF NEW AIRCRAFT—ALLOCATION OF WORK

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Air Canada is considering the purchase of a substantial number of new aircraft to replace aircraft which have been in use and are now obsolete. According to news reports, Air Canada is giving very serious consideration to awarding the contract to the European consortium Airbus.

Would the Minister impress on Air Canada that in any purchase of aircraft it be clearly understood that a substantial part of the work be done in Canada, as has happened in the past?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has not indicated exactly what its choice will be and I suggest it would not be wise for me or anybody else to presume the choice which Air Canada will make.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about jumping to conclusions. I am talking about Canada following the procedures it has followed in the past.

FUTURE OF MAINTENANCE BASE IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question for the Minister, Mr. Speaker. A substantial amount of the maintenance work for Air Canada aircraft is done in Winnipeg on DC planes.

Could the Minister assure the workers in Winnipeg that, whatever new planes are ordered, maintenance work to the extent it has been carried on in the past in Winnipeg will continue to be carried on and done in Winnipeg?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I just want to refer to the press release by Air Canada dated March 24:

> Regardless of the aircraft type which is eventually selected as the replacement for Air Canada's B-727 fleet, the future of the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg is not in question.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REPORTED INTENTION OF TURKISH MIGRANTS TO CAMP ON GROUNDS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. News reports indicate that Turkish migrants plan not only to visit Parliament Hill tomorrow but to camp on its grounds. If this should be attempted, would the Minister advise the House what the Government's policy will be?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the policy of the Government is clear. There are regulations which do not permit anyone to camp or park on Parliament's precincts. I am advised that the Turks have no intention to camp, but the RCMP have responsibility and I am sure they will exercise it in the usual and appropriate way.

PURCHASE OF LOCOMOTIVES IN UNITES STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport, whom I wish to congratulate on his appointment and who may rest assured of my full co-operation.

I trust that as far as CN is concerned, the Minister unlike his predecessor will show them who is the boss.

The Minister is aware that in Moncton, CN will have to pay between $10 and $12 million per year to laid-off workers who are protected under a collective bargaining agreement.

Does the Minister intend to take action against CN's decision to purchase thirty locomotives in the United States, while these locomotives could have been built in Moncton? Couldn't the Minister persuade Canadian General Electric to use the CN workshops in Moncton to at least manufacture components for the new locomotives?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is going to confirm exactly what I said earlier to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. For three minutes the Opposition has been trying to convince me I should have intervened in Canadian National's affairs to ensure that the locomotives are not built in Montreal—this for the benefit of the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie—but in Moncton.

Mr. Speaker, I think this proves the Minister of Transport must start by respecting the decisions made by Canadian National, which does not prevent me from making enquiries. I don't expect Canadian National will tell me it should have done so, at least not in the two locations suggested.

Mr. Robichaud: I think the Minister should at least make sure the locomotives are built in Canada, either in Montreal or Moncton.

WORKERS' PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister intend to consider the problem of the Moncton workshops? There is still time to save 350 jobs. Workers have suggested a plan that would actually save those jobs. Is the Minister prepared to consider this plan and above all, is he prepared to persuade the people at CN to look at this new plan? Three hundred and fifty jobs are still at stake.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think my predecessor did a good job in the case of the Moncton workshops, and that he did what he could. However, as part of the review process . . .

An Hon. Member: The truth is hard to swallow!

Mr. Bouchard: As part of the review process a Minister usually undertakes upon arriving in a new department—obviously, I intend to look at the matter of the Moncton workshops and become acquainted with the various proposals that have been made. Subsequently, I will consider what my assessment of the situation will be. However, with all due respect for the Hon. Member, I would rather not raise any false hopes that, as a result of this process, there would be a change in policy from that of my predecessor.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED USE OF ASSASSINATION SQUADS TO KILL ANC REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the evidence that the South African Government is sending assassination squads, called Z Squads, around the world to kill ANC representatives in places such as the U.K., Belgium and France, as well as the front-line states, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate what measures the Canadian Government is taking to ensure that ANC representatives in Canada and anti-apartheid ex-patriots in Canada are protected against this kind of activity?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that would more properly be directed to my colleague, the Solicitor General, but in his absence I will certainly take the opportunity to advise the Hon. Member that we take this situation very seriously. There have been consultations among the federal police and other police forces which would be involved in guaranteeing the security of Canadian residents or Canadian citizens. That has been done both generally and in the specific cases of people who might be affected if there were in fact a threat of this kind.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would be sure that the Secretary of State would agree that a telephone call to Mr. Saloojee asking if he needs help is not quite the way of doing it, and I would hope that more is being done.

POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, has the Secretary of State called in the South African ambassador to indicate to him that if there are any assassination attempts on South African ex-patriots or ANC representatives in Canada, the Canadian Government will hold the South African Government accountable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the principal point here is to try to do everything we can, which is what we are doing, to guarantee the safety of residents and citizens of Canada. We are doing that. That has involved much more than an individual phone call.

With regard to the representations the Hon. Member makes, I will consider whether that would be a useful thing to do.

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF NEW PLANES—FUTURE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Minister of Transport as well. In answer to a previous question he cited a press release issued by Air Canada. The part of the press release he did not quote goes on to say that Air Canada will keep using the facilities to maintain the 727 fleet or one of the other aircraft types we already own.

There is no assurance in anything Air Canada or the Government has said that a new aircraft purchased by Air Canada will continue to be maintained at the Air Canada maintenance base. That is the question I would like to ask the Minister today. I would like to ask him for the assurance that any replacement aircraft for the 727s purchased by Air Canada will be maintained fully at the Air Canada base in Winnipeg.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that question in my earlier answer when I quoted the press release issued by Air Canada. Air Canada gave a very clear answer: regardless of the aircraft type which is eventually selected, the future of the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg is not in question.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can quote selectively but he should go on to read the press release which states that they may try to secure work to maintain other aircraft of other airlines as part of that future. That is not the answer for which I asked. I want an assurance from the Minister that the replacement aircraft will be maintained at the Air Canada base in Winnipeg.

I ask the Minister why it is that everyone in this town, from Frank Moores down to taxi drivers, knows that a decision has been made on a replacement aircraft but the Government has deliberately pulled it off the decision table twice in a row? Is the Minister waiting for the date of April 28? Is that why he is holding back on that decision?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think, as he did when he was Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is always mixing up the Crown corporations with the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard: I just want to repeat that as a good Minister—

Mr. Axworthy: You own the airline!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, it seems like the truth is disturbing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. He had so many assistants at that time, they were all looking after the problem of the Crown corporations and he did not have the time to—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister aware that chartered bank prime rates are about to rise for the first time in six months as a result of the continuing increase in the bank rate and that the high level of the Canadian dollar is jeopardizing Canadian jobs and Canadian exports and is now jeopardizing investment here in Canada? How long will the Government continue with its policy of high interest rates and high exchange rates, a policy of curbing growth in Ontario at the expense of jobs in the rest of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware that the House did not sit last Friday and therefore the Hon. Member would want me to remind him that the unemployment rate is now down to 7.8 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have a very healthy economy but there are some signs of inflation in the economic performance of recent months and that is the purpose for the—

Mr. Riis: Because of your taxes, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member does not want to listen to the answer. That is the reason for the policy that is being followed by the Bank of Canada, supported by the Government.

I have indicated very clearly that we want to avoid the problems we ran into in the 1970s and the early 1980s when the previous Government did not pay attention to inflation, allowed inflation to get out of control, left us with very high levels of interest rates and left us with permanent damage to our competitive position. This caused the problems of unemployment in the early 1980s and the very serious recession we ran into.

That is the purpose of the policy we are following: it is a policy direction that is looking forward, past the next week or two, and I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would cast his mind past the next week or two to understand the implications of what we are trying to achieve.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to Canadians outside Ontario just what his policy actually is? Is it not a fact that the Government now has a policy of full employment in southern Ontario, within a few miles of the CN Tower and around Toronto, and is letting the rest of the country continue to have high levels of unemployment without action from the Government? Why does the Government continue with that kind of policy? Why does it not bring interest rates down now?

● (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member reflects on that question he will understand that that just does not follow the policy which we have been following. As a Government we have taken great pride in getting interest rates down from the levels at which they were when we came into office. We understand the implications of that and the importance of that in the economic performance which we have had over the last three and a half years.

We are trying to maintain a healthy economy for another three and a half years and on into the future. We can do that if we control inflation right now. We know that when inflation started to go up in previous years in parts of central Canada it spread very quickly to other parts of the country which could not support that level of inflation. That is what we are trying to avoid.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

APPOINTMENT OF JOCELYNE OUELLETTE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, the mess that will not go away. Why did the Minister, after announcing that he intends to dismantle all or part of the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel, go on to appoint, of all people, a defeated PQ MNA, Jocelyne Ouellette, to run this scandal plagued organization? Why did the Minister not seize this opportunity to do the right thing, instead of going strictly for political partisan considerations again?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Lands Company is winding down its business. Unless a new mandate is given to it, its principal functions will be completed by the end of May with only a few bits to finish thereafter.

Ms. Ouellette was appointed on a part-time basis purely because of her competency. She has a tremendously enviable record of accomplishments in this kind of activity. The Hon. Member should enthusiastically endorse appointments of this calibre.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the period allowed for Question Period has now expired. I have a matter of some importance to all Members.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29(1)

NATIONAL UNITY—MINORITY RIGHTS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Before I call Orders of the Day I wish to inform the House that I have given very serious consideration to the application of the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) for an emergency debate.

[Translation]

The House is aware that I reserved my decision this morning, because I considered the matter was one of fundamental importance, but nevertheless, after due reflection, I feel that the request by Hon. Members does not at this time meet the procedural requirements of the Standing Orders.

Both questions and answers during Question Period were most interesting, and it may be that the matter was not proceeding to the satisfaction of Hon. Members, but for the time being it does not constitute an emergency as defined in the Standing Orders.

[English]

As I hope I have made clear, that is my response today.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) had the floor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the key theme I wanted to put before the House this morning with reference to this Bill, that is, that the Government has not thought through, in any sort of systematic way, which companies should be in the private sector and which companies should be in the public sector. What justifies Air Canada, Petro-Canada, and various other such companies being in the public sector and what justifies putting other companies such as de Havilland and Canadair into the private sector?

I do not believe that the Government has logically and sensibly analysed the public purposes of a given company or the particular nature of that company's activities, but rather has casually looked at the public opinion polls and seen that the Canadian people support keeping such companies as Air Canada, Petro-Canada, and CN in the public sector. Other companies of which the Canadian people are not as aware are potential victims for what is in effect an ideological commitment to transferring companies out of the public sector just for the sake of doing so.

That is in fact what has happened. It has already cost us some significant possibilities for the future of the country. For example, in our aircraft industry we had the possibility, with Canadair and de Havilland, of creating an aerospace industry controlled and owned by Canadians which would contribute to a high-tech future in our industrial sector. Instead, we split these two companies and privatized them. The consequence has been, as was noted by one of the Members who spoke this morning, that de Havilland is now more and more producing parts of Boeing aircraft for someone else rather than aircraft designed by Canadians creating jobs here of a high class for designers and producers, which would give the country a sense of export potential as well.

In the case of Eldorado Nuclear and the mine which is being privatized at the same time by the Saskatchewan Government I see the same kind of ideological thinking that lies behind what this Government has done so far. It is an ideological thinking that simply does not carry with it a logical, analytical point of view which looks at the nature of the companies themselves.

I said this morning, and stress again at this time, that when you are talking about an industry, such as the nuclear industry which has serious health concerns and serious consequences for the environment, like uranium mining and uranium refining, an industry on which we in this country have decided to take the military policy of not allowing our uranium to be used for military purposes—when you have an industry as unique as that, as clearly tied up with public purposes as that, that is precisely the sort of industry that we should keep in the public sector, because of these considerations.

I urge the Government to seriously reconsider its decision to privatize this company. I believe the deal it has made is financially very poor and risky.

Mr. Valcourt: You said that before.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, and it turned out to be true before. I urge the Government to back off from this piece of legislation and recognize the potential of this company to still contribute to this country and to the workers who for so long have depended on their employment at Eldorado Nuclear.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the former President of Denison Mines was a great exponent of the free enterprise system. Would the Hon. Member comment on the information we now have as to the tremendously large subsidies that company and others have received both from the Government of Canada and the Province of Ontario, through Ontario Hydro, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars without which they probably could not have continued to operate?

Mr. Langdon: The reference to Denison Mines and its owner makes it precisely clear why an industry like this should be kept in the public sector. Denison Mines itself was perhaps the most heavily subsidized, government supported, most coddled and nurtured of any corporation in this country. At the same time, the President of that company went throughout Canada preaching the virtues of unrestricted capitalism.

As was indicated in an excellent article in the The Globe and Mail, the truth is that Mr. Roman's uranium empire was founded on no-risk, guaranteed cost-plus government weapons contracts. His empire would not have survived its first 20 years without more than $1 billion in Government subsidies, sweetheart contracts and special bail-outs. His company was pulled out of its last major tailspin with the help of a secret international uranium cartel.

Incidentally, it was a cartel organized by the government of the country.

An Hon. Member: Liberal government.

Mr. Langdon: I would add. a Liberal government, for the sake of my Conservative colleagues.

Let me refer again to the article by Mr. McKay in The Globe and Mail, Mr. Roman himself was actually more hopeful about other metal prospects until he found out what the federal Government, through Crown controlled Eldorado Nuclear Limited, was willing to sink into uranium properties. The package of subsidies included up front development money, guaranteed sales at guaranteed prices, tax holidays, extravagant depreciation allowances, millions of dollars worth of free research and development work and no capital gains tax if the property was sold within five years.

That is precisely the kind of crucial public industry serving a public purpose which should be within the public sector. It seems to be absolutely illogical to put this industry into the private sector. Its lack of logic is demonstrated even more by the tremendous government support which Mr. Roman received when he with his firm was the only private sector operator in the country.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, in light of some of the articles he has written and speeches he has made, will the Hon. Member tell us why he does not think it would be better to have all the automobile manufacturing companies in the public sector as well, considering all of the arguments he has been making?

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, the points that I made with respect to how one distinguishes between a firm that makes sense as a public sector firm and one that makes sense as a private sector firm answers that question.

When one considers the environmental dangers associated with uranium mining and uranium refining, one could not associate them with automotive production any place in this country. Radiation hazards from Chrysler Corporation's activities do not exist in my constituency. They do exist from a nuclear reactor which sits just across the border. That has much more potential danger for my constituents than would be the case with the automobile industry.

If we take the question of the massive subsidies and cost guarantees which were given to the uranium industry, which I outlined in answer to the last question, that too is something which cannot be associated to nearly the same extent with the automotive industry.

It is true that loan guarantees have been provided to Chrysler Corporation in my constituency. Frankly, my position would be that if Parliament decided to provide money in the form of a large scale grant to Chrysler Corporation, as was the case with Ford's engine plant in my constituency, the Government should have some return in the form of equity investment to make a response for that particular contribution. However, that is not the case which was made with respect to Chrysler Corporation.

Finally, if we take the question of worker health and safety, it is quite clear that from the point of health and safety, the workers in this uranium industry are much more at risk. They are much more at risk because of the radiation factor and the whole nuclear connection that that implies than is the case with the workers of the automotive firms to which my friend referred. So I do not think any of those factors follow.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I take pleasure in participating in this debate, but I must say I have a real problem with Bill C-121 which intends the sale of Eldorado Nuclear and the merger with the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. I see heavy public subsidies being paid out in order to minimize the risk for the private sector.

I have been thinking about this question of privatization. One of the question asked by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) was if there were any circumstances in which the sale of a Crown corporation could be acceptable and would make sense to New Democrats. The answer, of course, is yes. As my colleague, the Hon. Member Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), said this morning, the sale of Flyer Industries by the Manitoba Government, for example, which is currently underway, is a sale which, in this case, has been compelled, if nothing else, by market conditions and by a reluctance on the part of other provincial Governments involved in the transportation field to make it possible for Flyer to continue to prosper as a publicly-owned concern, and there may be other reasons as well.

What we are faced with is not a group of decisions about which is the best way to carry out certain objects of public policy. It seems to me, if we judge questions of industrial development where Government is involved according to that yardstick, there would be certain cases where it makes sense to use the public centre to create or expand a Crown corporation to achieve a particular public goal. In other cases, it would make sense to have mixed enterprise, some kind of joint venture or co-operative venture or some kind of sharing between the public and the private sector. In other cases, it makes more sense to leave a particular enterprise or industrial initiative in the hands of the private sector without public involvement, or with very loose public involvement.

I think most Canadians would agree that to talk in those terms is quite reasonable. They support public enterprise with such very substantial and important corporations as Canadian National, Air Canada or Petro-Canada. These are part of our daily lives as Canadians. They help to knit the country together. They carry out important mandates on behalf of the people of Canada and help to maintain Canadian control in important industries such as the energy sector.

The bulk of Canadians believe these Crown corporations should remain in public hands. I think what Canadians as a whole resent, and what people I talk to resent, is the ideological approach taken. Dare I say it? If we were ideological about it, the New Democrats might be criticized on this particular question. Certainly, the Progressive Conservatives are criticized on this particular point.

Since coming to office the Government has taken the view that the private sector is by its nature good and should be supported and encouraged, and that the public sector is by its nature bad and should be discouraged. Therefore, what we are seeing is a kind of one-way flow of publicly owned Crown corporations sold off by the Conservative Government. Many have been sold at great cost to the taxpayers. We know about de Havilland and the amounts of subsidies involved there. Boeing was virtually paid to take de Havilland off the hands of the Canadian public. There was the sale of Canadian Arsenals, the sale of Teleglobe Canada under somewhat questionable circumstances, the sale of Canadair and so on.

There has been a whole series of sales. But somehow, according to this Government, there are never any important initiatives which need to be taken in which the public sector perhaps needs to be involved or if the public sector does need to be involved, there are grants, tax subsidies, concessions and contracts, that kind of thing. But these are all maintained at arm's length. When we have suggested, for example, there should be public equity in return for tax concessions or other subsidies given to the private sector, we have had scorn heaped upon us for being socialists who would bring down the fabric and structure of the enterprise system in Canada. Of course, that is absurd.

If we look to the south, to the United States, the home of free enterprise, we find that the degree of subsidization and public involvement in the private sector is, of course, even greater than it is here, particularly through its Department of National Defence. The Americans have used all kinds of tricks and devices in order to, shall we say, make private enterprise look good. I would suggest that that is not a particularly good policy to offer here.

I suggest there are reasons why Canada is somewhat different from the United States and that those reasons justify the use of public enterprise in some cases, they justify the use of mixed enterprise in some cases and they justify private enterprise in many cases, because the market can be an effective means of allocating resources. It certainly is an effective means of decentralizing decision-making. One can argue with some justice that the Government cannot make all the decisions all at the same time. When it tries to do so, it finds itself in situations which can be counterproductive.

Let me come back to this particular suggestion of privatizing Eldorado Nuclear. My colleagues who have spoken on this issue have already indicated our reservations. They have indicated the reasons for our opposition to Bill C-121, beginning with the fact that it is a bad deal. The Government of Canada is forgiving close to $600 million in loans.

There are advances which have been made to Eldorado Nuclear. In addition, it is taking on the lion's share of any environmental risks from clean-up of the Port Hope refinery. A sum of $75 million is specified and it could go much higher than that if the cost of clean-up exceeds $100 million. On top of that, there is no indication at this time of just what the share flotation of Eldorado Nuclear, or this merged company, will yield as far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned.

I would suggest that if we judge this deal on pure private sector criteria it would in fact be found wanting. The uranium markets in North America right now are depressed. The price is low. Unlike Denison Mines, the two companies in Saskatchewan do not have the benefit of sweetheart contracts with Ontario Hydro to carry them through rough times. Even though the oil reserves of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation are relatively low cost to produce, it is not a good time to be looking for substantial profits in this particular industry. The future prospect is not a heck of a lot better, I suppose, because there are questions being raised about nuclear power. The number of new nuclear power stations is very limited, so that the future demand for uranium will no longer grow at the rate anticipated in the 1970s when Ontario Hydro entered into that very rich contract to which I have just referred.

If this was Canada incorporated, a conglomerate which ran a whole range of enterprises, as in effect the Government of Canada does, and it was decided to prune in certain areas in order to augment activities in other areas, there would be real questions about selling at the bottom of the uranium market, which is essentially what is being done in disposing of Eldorado Nuclear at this particular point in time.

On top of that, there is the question of the responsibilities of a responsible shareholder, in this case the Government of Canada. Are there other reasons besides profit which induced the Canadian taxpayer to take over Eldorado during the Second World War? The answer, of course, is that there certainly were. At that time it was a new technology. It was connected with the atom bomb. At that time there were concerns, which persist to this day, about the health and safety of workers exposed to radioactive substances. Today we know a lot more about the incredible problems with respect to the disposal of nuclear wastes, refinery tailings and so on.

I am not satisfied that in privatizing Eldorado Nuclear we are seeing a situation in which the taxpayers are going to see those risks privatized. If they do see those risks privatized then it may be at the expense of the workers involved. We do not know what the situation will be for them. All of the honeyed words of the former Minister of State for Privatization have not convinced me that the jobs that will be affected will be secure, something which she tried to tell the House before this debate was adjourned prior to the Easter break.

If there are undue risks to be borne by the workers, then I have questions about that. I believe that the nuclear industry is a particularly sensitive industry. If there are risks to be assumed which will be borne by the taxpayers, then I want to know what those risks will be. What this really means is that there is a great deal of cosmetics used in order to try to make this sale look good and in order to get the company out of public hands. For what reasons? As I stated a few moments ago, it is for ideological reasons.

When the debate began I was reminded of the way the country developed. It is amazing that there has been a great deal of public intervention in Canada's economy since the foundation of our country. We have to ask why that has been the case over the course of so many years. Perhaps it is because it is something which is unique to Canadians. Perhaps it is also related to the size of our country. We would not have a country stretching 3,500 miles east to west which has been as successful, significant and important as Canada has been next to our southern neighbour if we had not interfered with market forces that would have turned Canada into a series of economic colonies of the American regions to the south.

If most Canadians were asked whether they would be willing to become new Americans and perhaps see a 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent increase in their standard of living as a consequence or whether they wanted to stay Canadians, you, Madam Speaker, know very well that their answer would be, "We wish to remain Canadians, thank you very much".

That is a strong feeling in the country. We are different in our way of doing things. One of the things that my good friend Herschel Hardin pointed out in his excellent book entitled A Nation Unaware: the Canadian Economic Culture is that Canada has a public enterprise culture. In other words, we have become quite good at using public enterprise as an instrument for national development. I suppose this came from the intendant Jean Talon who was the economic genius who helped to build the economy of New France back in the 17th century in and around what is now Quebec City. That was at a time when he worked as the Minister of Economic Affairs in conjunction with Bishop Laval. The Government of Canada assisted with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway at that time in terms of land grants. That was a premature or primitive form of public intervention. However, it ensured a national railway for Canada without which we would not have a country today.

We pride ourselves today on the competitiveness and the productivity of our steel industry in Hamilton, Sault Ste. Marie and other parts of the country. It is forgotten by those private enterprise advocates who say that Stelco and Dofasco are fine instances of Canadian productivity compared with the American steel industry that the Canadian steel industry was a wartime creation. It began life in the public sector. It was a force-fed type of economic development to give Canada a sufficient steel industry with which we could participate in the war effort during the Second World War. It is on that basis that we have an industry which has been in place for 45 or 50 years. It did not exist before that time. It would not exist had it not been for the initiative of the public sector.

Defenders of the market ignore the fact that there is intervention by any Government. The United States Government intervenes when the Senate brings in a Bill, as it just has, which will limit Canadian uranium exports and penalize American utilities which seek to use Canadian uranium as a source of energy.

The United States has a policy of intervention in the market when there is discrimination against competitively priced Canadian softwood being exported to that country. That country intervenes when it uses its countervailing procedures which are grossly unfair in order to force the price of Canadian potash above market levels and to bring them in line with the uneconomic prices of potash produced in mines in New Mexico. The American Government intervenes constantly in terms of the way in which it develops research and development contracts with the private sector for the development of weapons, something which is done in the public sector in other countries such as the United Kingdom, France and Israel.

It should not be said that there is no intervention. Almost any Government makes decisions about interest rates, credit policy, consumer protection, trade policy and tariffs. The list is endless. All of these measures represent intervention in the economy.

One form of public participation in the economy is through the use of public enterprise. There is nothing wrong with it. It is fair to add that it does not mean that it is necessarily justified in every case. As a New Democrat I believe that we should put a halt to the constant strain of piecemeal privatizations which are being brought about by a Government which somehow wants to prove to a few of its backers, such as Mr. Bulloch, the National Citizens' Coalition, the Fraser Institute and others, that it is living up to an agenda which was enforced under Ronald Reagan's Government. It has been enforced under Mrs. Thatcher's Government in Great Britain as well. It is something which has brought economic misery to large parts of Britain even today. It has not been demonstrably aided in terms of innovation and initiative in many cases. I believe it is blinkered and wrong, given the important role that public enterprise has played in Canadian and other foreign economies over many years. I do not believe that it has come to an end.

I think that when the NDP forms the Government we will have to look at the portfolio of enterprises that are in the public sector. We will have to decide that perhaps certain ones should be expanded, be given a new mandate and be allowed and encouraged to grow. Certain ones are extremely competitive and extremely effective. I refer to Air Canada. However, some are short on equity investment because of a penny-pinching attitude on the part of the Government of Canada. That is because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), his Minister responsible for privatization, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and other Members of his Cabinet have burned into their minds that private sector is good, public sector is bad. Therefore they want to demean a sector of the economy which is extremely important to many Canadians and which is the only way in many cases by which we can ensure that there is economic and social justice for large numbers of Canadians.

Today in the House of Commons I asked the Minister of Finance about the Government's policy concerning interest rates and exchange rates. They indicated that the Government wants to legislate for southern Ontario and ignore the problems that prevail in many parts of the country which do not have the buoyant economy of the area around Metropolitan Toronto. In Newfoundland there may be no other way to develop jobs and to develop enterprise except through the participation of the public sector. The provinces increasingly find, as do American states, that they have to be involved in different ways. This sometimes has to be through ownership, participation, subsidies and tax concessions.

What does it say to the people of Newfoundland if there is a Government which says, "Public sector is bad, private sector is good"? What it says is that appropriate solutions to the problems which are out there cannot be used.

That brings me back to the particular question with which we are dealing today. We think this is a bad deal. We think that the Government is paying excessively to try to make this particular deal look good. We think that the type of blank cheque that the nuclear industry as a whole has received from Government in terms of the risks that it may be forcing the Canadian public to bear is unacceptable. This is an example of how the Government intervenes in order to reduce the risk for the private sector so that it can then say, "Private sector is good, public sector is bad".

I do not want to pursue this matter too far. I find the whole tenor of thought excessively illogical and unacceptable. I fear that after this measure is passed we could see a monopoly develop, particularly if Denison Mines under its new chairman and chief executive officer bids for majority control. We could see a situation in which the United States Government decides to close the door to future exports of uranium from Canada. I would imagine that that would be a disaster for the uranium industry in Saskatchewan. I am not sure how this new corporation would be able to deal with that.

I wish to conclude by saying that there are implications for the workers which have not been met, there are implications for the environment, and there are implications in terms of future economic policies in this country, if we have a government that continues to blind itself to the fact that the public sector and public enterprise can do an effective job under certain circumstances. They should not be categorically ruled out, which is the position taken by the Government. It is wrong to take that position.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments of the Hon. Member who just spoke, and I wish he would explain. He said in his speech that when privatizing a privately-owned corporation, it was not a good idea to do it this way, because it was economically destructive and also a threat to the workers. I wish he would explain what happened to Canadair and de Havilland when they were privatized. Did it destroy the aviation industry and were people laid off or did it create more jobs? I wish he would explain, because if I remember correctly, at the time the New Democractic Party was against privatization, and I would appreciate hearing his views on the subject.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, that is a good question. If we look at de Havilland, since we have no clues as yet how Canadair is going to operate, I must say the Government did not really pursue any of the alternatives. For instance, would it not have been possible for de Havilland to conclude a marketing agreement with a company like Boeing, in order to ensure a greater market share for its aircraft? That was not pursued because the Conservative Government felt the only way to proceed was to privatize de Havilland, even if they had to pay Boeing to take over the company. I agree de Havilland is in pretty good shape today, but I suggest that if the Hon. Member were responsible for a business he had acquired for practically nothing, although it had assets worth between $700 and $800 million, he could make a profit from privatization as well.

That was the case with de Havilland, which partially explains why the company is now operating with some measure of success.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) a couple of questions. The Canada Development Investment Corporation was created by the former Government to market four Crown corporations: de Havilland, Canadair, Teleglobe, and Eldorado. There has been successful marketing of three of those corporations. De Havilland doubled employment and now has a list stretching into the 1990s for the sale of aircraft from that corporation. There is solid, first-class employment and excellent R and D; it is at the leading edge in short take-off and landing aircraft. Canadair with new contracts is indicating a new spark and go. That was a first-class privatization with the sale to Bombardier. Teleglobe has blossomed forth with a sale to Memotec. Now we have Eldorado and a situation where we want to wind up Canada Development Investment Corporation and we have a partner that has massive uranium resources, and we can combine that with the refining capacity of Eldorado.

I cannot understand why my friend would oppose that privatization or the winding down of corporations that not only this Government but the prior Government felt were no longer needed or the ownership by Canada of which was no longer in the public interest. Here is an opportunity to complete what has been a program not only of this Government but of the prior Government.

It is a situation where we continue to own shares in the corporation, where we combine with a province and a provincial Crown corporation that itself wants to bring in outside capital. I wonder where the problem is. What is the hang-up? Is the hang-up the same hang-up the Hon. Member had on the de Havilland Bill, the Canadair Bill, and the Memotec sale? Is the hang-up not that the Hon. Member does not want us to get out of business, and that the Hon. Member wants these corporations?

Mr. Cassidy: I hear my colleague, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, the Hon. Member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn), with whom I normally enjoy quite cordial relations, suggesting that the Government should get out of business. I guess what he means is that he wants the Government of Canada to sell off Air Canada, Canadian National, and Petro-Canada. I am not sure what else is on his list. The Hon. Member should reveal his shopping list. This is what is bothering me with respect to the question of Eldorado. The fit in terms of community of interest between Saskatchewan Mining and Eldorado is a natural one. I do not dispute that. But there is no particular reason why that could not have been explored in terms of the two companies working together or joining together and remaining under public ownership. But the Government intends to privatize them and sell them off.

In my speech I suggested that what is particularly objectionable is the fact that the Government is saying that it only has one solution to those questions, which is to privatize. Under no circumstances does it envisage a role for the public sector. That represents a very substantial and, I believe, undesirable turn of policy.

I remind you, Madam Speaker, that it was the Conservative Party in power which established the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Air Canada. These things have been done in a pragmatic manner by Conservative Governments in the past. It was an ultra Conservative Government in Alberta that brought Pacific Western Airlines into public ownership for a period of time. I do not see the hang-up that the Government has. Until that hang-up is over, I do not want to entrust all of the assets of the people of Canada in the industrial sector to a government that simply wants to sell them off.

Canada Development Investment Corporation is about to lose its raison d'être. The Canada Development Investment Corporation, which started with such promise 20 years ago, has now been privatized. Basically, the present Government has completed a process started by its predecessor, the Liberal Party, which effectively deprives the Canadian people of instruments by which, where public sector involvement is justifiable, we can be involved.

There may be a strong case for having a federal merchant bank or investment bank which would use investment criteria as well as public policy criteria for its involvement. That might serve the taxpayers considerably better than ad hoc hand-outs on such projects as the upgrader in Lloydminster which are not subjected to investment tests and where the public has no means of telling whether or not it is of benefit and a good use of public funds.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a supplementary, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am delighted that we now know that the New Democratic Party is against any development of an upgrader in western Canada to upgrade heavy oil.

Mr. Cassidy: I did not say that.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am surprised that it is coming out so strongly against that investment.

What we are dealing with here is a situation where there is a single company in the uranium refining business with some mining operations that we can either wind down and wind up, or we can sell off. I do not know whether my friend would have the Government of Canada pour more money into Eldorado, buy up some more mines, and get rolling in the uranium business, or whether he really wants us to wind down the uranium business and sell off our assets to people who are in the mining and refining business on a commercial basis anyway.

Does the Hon. Member really think that we ought to make Eldorado grow and be prosperous, or should we get out of the business? It has to be the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. Is that philosophy that the Government ought to be in the mining and refining of uranium, and that is what we ought to pour more taxpayers' money in, or should we leave that matter, as we have in an arrangement with Saskatchewan, to co-operate with them and get ourselves out of this business?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must have taken an ideological pep pill before making his intervention. I suggest to him that under certain circumstances it may make sense to sell off assets which are in the public sector. However, just as we are opposing the Bill, I do not think the circumstances prevail here. Just as it makes sense in certain circumstances to enter into mixed enterprise agreements, we are working to initiate measures in the public sector. However, we cannot do it just in one way. We have built the country by a combination of all three—public enterprise, mixed enterprise, and private enterprise.

In certain areas public enterprise has been a leader. I do not think we should lose sight of the fact that from time to time it can be necessary and desirable to act in that particular way. This is why I reject the kind of ideology that the Government and particularly my hon. friend from Mississauga have been trying to impose where every decision has to be: "Let's sell it off regardless of the consequences for Canadians".

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Official languages—Use of French in courts—Request that Deputy Prime Minister contact Saskatchewan Premier; the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Lack of affordable housing in Toronto; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy-River (Mr. Parry)—Taxation—Northern deductions—Eligibility of communities.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to participate in these debates, particularly after having listened to an argument between the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), accusing each other of being reactionaries on one side or another of an argument and discussing between them which one has the worst hang-ups either for or against public or private sector enterprise.

Of course the recipe is neither solely private enterprise, as the Conservatives would sometimes want us to believe, nor is it as simple as to say that if we socialize everything including the local hardware store it will solve all problems, the way New Democrats sometimes pretend it will. Life is a little more complicated than that.

Our country has been a prosperous nation because it has sought and achieved a good balance between private and public sector involvement in various areas. Of course from time to time it becomes necessary to adjust the policy, acquiring things from the private sector and equally disposing of things to the private sector if and when particular endeavours no longer achieve a useful purpose.

We in the Liberal caucus are basically in favour of the principle of disposing of that particular asset, but we have some reservations. Of course we know that the assets of Eldorado are in the area of $915 million, while the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation has assets of some $973 million. In other words, both are roughly the same in terms of assets.

We are told that the corporation will have a 38.5 per cent share of the new company while Saskatchewan will have 61.5 per cent. Of course there are questions to be asked in that regard. One must ask why it is that the merger is, if not in the form of a gift, certainly a bargain basement opportunity for the Government of Saskatchewan. As I said previously, it does not mean that we are against the privatization endeavour per se. However, it would seem that the Government should at least do a better job in justifying the means and process used to arrive at the stated price.

I should like to refer to a press release dated February 2, 1988 which was entitled on one side "Canada" and on the other side "Saskatchewan". The press release speaks of the particular merger and future privatization of both uranium companies. It indicated:

> "Both governments want individual Canadians to participate directly in the ownership of this world-class uranium mining company," said Mrs. McDougall.

It went on to indicate:

> The new company we are creating will be fully privatized through a series of public share offerings. Precisely when all shares in the company are in the hands of the private investors will be determined by market conditions. But 100 per cent of the company will move from public to private ownership within seven years.

The next sentence is a very important one:

> At all times, the control of the new company will be in the hands of Canadians.

Just how can we be that sure? Of course we are sure that it will be in the hands of Canadians while we are divesting; that is rather obvious. I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga South waving a copy of the legislation. I know that it is covered in the Bill. I do not want unduly to agitate the Hon. Member, but I bring to his attention that we could very well see again the other partners signatory to the so-called trade deal upset by a legislative measure which, when passed in the House, could very well be seen by them—and I am speaking of the Reagan administration in the United States—as a measure which in their language, not mine, is unduly restrictive for them in terms of potential investment opportunities.

I am not saying that everyone in the United States will rush to buy shares in the particular endeavour. However, human nature being what it is, all we have to do is tell people that they cannot do something and suddenly it becomes almost a prize catch if one is able to get whatever is forbidden. The perception of the grass being greener on the other side of the fence on many occasions creates that particular circumstance.

Much has been said about the Bill in the House of Commons. Many Hon. Members have spoken on it. I do not intend to delay its passage but merely to reiterate some of the concerns already expressed by my colleagues in the House. Of course my comments will be of their usual brevity, which you have undoubtedly known before, Madam Speaker.

We are informed that the head office of Eldorado will be moved to Saskatchewan. As a Member of Parliament from an area which has been subjected to transfers of government staff from time to time, namely, the Ottawa area, I want the assurance—and I have not received such assurance—that the 50 or so employees at the present head office of Eldorado will be relocated appropriately. As a matter of fact, we are led to believe that they may very well end up without jobs. We want an assurance that those people will be treated properly. We should like to see them kept on and receive appropriate treatment in terms of relocation or, in the event that employees are not willing to relocate, given fair and just compensation packages, so that they do not receive the all too familiar public service treatment given by the Conservative administration to so many of my constituents and many other people in the national capital area and elsewhere who happened to be unfortunate enough to work in the Public Service at the time the Government was elected.

We all remember that when the Government was elected it said that it had no plans for lay-offs. As a matter of fact it said that those people who were saying that the Government wanted to lay off 15,000 per year were fear-mongers and so on.

[Translation]

Well, Madam Speaker, Canadians know better today. Indeed Canadians are aware that this Conservative Government has been laying off public servants since the 1984 election, notwithstanding the formal commitments and the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Opposition.

Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Saskatchewan Liberal Party has also expressed concern about the possibility that a company or a group of individuals might buy shares up to the 25 per cent limit, and people are wondering why the Government chose the magic figure of 25 per cent. Would it be that a prospective buyer is prepared to acquire exactly 25 per cent of the shares, or was a more objective criterion used? Why not 10 per cent as in the case of a bank? Why not some other figure? The Government has yet to tell us exactly why it did favour this 25 per cent share-selling process.

• (1600)

The previous Minister said in the House of Commons that 25 per cent would enable an individual or a shareholder to guide the new corporation under certain circumstances. What does that mean, Madam Speaker? We are not sure. We really need clear statements from the Government why it has arrived at that particular figure and whether there is a potential buyer or buyers right now looking for that stated magic 25 per cent.

Having aired those concerns in the House today, I do not want to delay the passage of this Bill unduly. I want to reiterate the concerns expressed by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), who has been our lead spokesman on these issues, and an excellent lead spokesman he is, and I know, Madam Speaker, that you would want me to say that about the distinguished Member.

I will now conclude my remarks and hope that the Government will be able to answer not only the questions that I have raised in regard to this deal but also those expressed by the Member from Cape Breton—The Sydneys and other Members of Parliament during the last days of debate on this Bill.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested that I should ask a question and I wanted to make certain of being responsive to his suggestion.

The question I want to pose arises from the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who suggested that the CDIC was established with the express purpose of privatizing Crown corporations associated with CDIC.

As a member of the Party which formed the previous Government, would the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) tell us if that is the case, or was it not a much more ambiguous and careful situation than that, a situation where CDIC was to be expected to review the operations of various companies under the auspices of the corporation to see if there were some that could be amalgamated to carry forward activities more successfully in the country? For instance, there was the proposal that de Havilland and Canadair be amalgamated, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) suggested in his 1984 election campaign, thereby giving us a publicly owned aerospace company that would be able to afford the tremendous investments often required for new developments in the aerospace area.

Would the Hon. Member comment on that from an historical point of view? Perhaps he would be prepared to give us an idea of present Liberal Party thinking with respect to companies such as these which have been grouped together under CDIC?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am always pleased to see that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has heeded my request to ask questions in this debate. I listened, as he did, to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. My interpretation of what he said was that CDIC's role was to get rid of Crown corporations. It could very well be that one of the functions would be to dispose of whatever Crown corporation does not fulfil a specific or necessary public sector interest or mandate. But that does not mean that that is either its reason for existing or its sole purpose. The organization is there for a number of reasons: to review the management and operations of certain Crown corporations to determine the necessity for their remaining in the private sector and to merge some of them where required. To pretend that all we need to do now is to dispose of a few more Crown corporations, then also get rid of the agency altogether is not quite what we planned. That is a gross exaggeration. We have had that agency in place for many years. Obviously we were not planning to dispose of those assets when we put it together.

There are obviously government assets which from time to time have to be disposed of, not only Crown corporations but other things too. Other things do not have anything to do with the government-run agency. There are means of disposing of other assets elsewhere and, as I said, they are not handled through this mechanism. There could, indeed, very well be an overview in process with specific recommendations that two Crown corporations be merged and remain in the private sector. I think that that would be a totally legitimate and useful thing to do if it were determined that the Crown corporations in question would better fulfil a mandate by remaining in the private sector. It is wrong to suggest that the only thing that we want from this organization is to get rid of everything so it can do itself in as quickly as possible. It is a little more complicated than that. Of course, I am sure that on many occasions, we have seen Crown corporations being either dismantled or sold off by this Government in a way which was not in the public interest at all.

Need I remind Canadians and indeed Members of the House of the means we initially tried to use to dispose of the Canadian Arsenals Company, for instance? Why did we use that particular mechanism of starting up the bidding process three, four or five times in order to try to get rid of it? Why did we offer no protection for the workers? We eventually had to fight on the floor of the House to gain protection for the workers.

It is true that a world-class organization purchased Canadian Arsenals, so I am not blaming the purchaser of that corporation, which in that case was SNC Engineering Company, but I am blaming the Government. It was the Government's job to look after its workers, but it failed to do so. The proof was in the pudding, because eventually the Government had to backtrack, change its mind and correct the mistakes it had made.

There is plenty of proof of the fact that the job of the Government and its agencies is not strictly to get rid of everything and sell the furniture so that they can cancel the lease as quickly as possible.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I thought I would make a comment and then perhaps ask a question. The Canada Development Investment Corporation deliberately had only four Crown corporations and some shares. I believe the Massey shares were included as well as the Canada Development Corporation shares which were held by the Government, together with these particular four corporations that the Government of the time felt ought to be looked after and made available for sale. What we are really doing is completing the work of the Canada Development Investment Corporation through the final sale of the assets of the CDIC.

The former Liberal Government could have included other Crown corporations that have since been sold, had this been the package, but this particular package included, in that Government's view, the items that really did not merit further government management or organization in a consolidated sense, as the Hon. Member may think. It was certainly explained at that time that these would eventually be sold off.

As the Hon. Member may know, the CDIC has since disposed of all of its assets with the exception of Eldorado. It has been seeking unsuccessfully to sell Eldorado for some very long period of time. This arrangement with Saskatchewan seems, on the face of it, to be a reasonably sensible business arrangement. Whether it is a good deal or not is a question with which we will all have an opportunity to deal at committee when we can get into the exact details of the transaction.

Surely, in order to carry on the policy of the former Government and to complete this transaction, there would seem to be no overwhelming reason for the Government of Canada to operate a uranium-refining company with uranium mining operations that are winding down. Following on the original thought, surely Bill C-121 represents a sensible approach to handling this class of asset.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am not sure that I like the tone of the statement which included the phrase: "No overwhelming reason". We know, of course, that Crown corporations should go to the private sector to fulfil a useful purpose which is better served that way. Whether that is satisfied by an overwhelming reason, to use the words of the Hon. Member, is something about which I am not sure. I am not sure that that kind of overwhelming reason is required for a Crown corporation to remain in the public sector.

The Hon. Member will recognize that I said in my comments that we in our Party at least are not suggesting that the transfer of this Crown corporation to the Government of Saskatchewan is in itself wrong. We have a number of questions about it which, of course, as the Hon. Member said, we will want to raise in committee. There I suppose I must part company with some of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and particularly the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who said, if I can paraphrase him, that he was not interested in the divestiture of this Crown corporation to the Government of Saskatchewan in any circumstances.

Finally, we should remember the promises made by this Government in the past regarding de Havilland and Canadair. The original promises and what ended up happening were totally inconsistent with one another, to say the least.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to say a few words on Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. We are at second reading stage of this legislation, and therefore we are talking about the principle of the Bill.

Before I begin making some specific remarks on the principle of the Bill, I would like to reflect back on some past incidents. While government Members were in opposition, they promised the Canadian people on a number of occasions that they would conduct a royal commission into the nuclear industry. I recall the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and a whole host of cabinet Ministers and members of the government Party campaigning on this issue during the last federal election because of the interests Canadians have shown over the years in the existing state of the nuclear industry and the future of the nuclear industry in Canada.

Any Canadian who has given thought to this matter would say that there are still many unanswered questions about the nuclear industry. The future of the nuclear industry, not only in Canada but globally, is important for all of us. We were reminded of its importance by the Three Mile Island and the Chernobyl incidents. However, we have not seen that inquiry.

After three and a half years, there has been no indication whatsoever from the present Government that it plans to fulfil the promise it made to the people of Canada. When that became clear, the New Democratic Party decided to initiate its own inquiry into the nuclear industry. Some months ago, my colleague from Winnipeg—Birds Hill and my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway decided to co-chair an initiative to look into this important matter, and they have been conducting a very intensive and extensive inquiry into the present state of the nuclear industry. They have held hearings in all parts of Canada including communities involved in the nuclear industry and those that are not. They are attempting in a most objective and open-minded way to welcome points of view on which to make a final recommendation prior to the next federal election.

Having said that, I want to go on record as saying that we are not enthusiastic about this particular initiative before us. It flies in the face of the promise for this important inquiry, and until we have some very clear answers about just what the future of the nuclear industry in Canada ought to be, I think it would be premature for us as New Democrats to support this initiative.

As a Member of Parliament who is from British Columbia, I remember not long ago when the Social Credit Government of British Columbia came up with what it thought was a brilliant idea. That idea was to form a corporation called BCRIC and to sell off a number of Crown corporations, providing shares for the general public to buy. As a matter of fact, it was such a good idea that the Government gave every resident of British Columbia five shares in BCRIC. This was to encourage all of us to become investors and, in theory, enterprising capitalists. It was to allow us to see how the stock market worked and to be a part of this new initiative by the Social Credit Government.

This little venture into popular free enterprise did not work very well. I remember the then Premier of British Columbia saying that he had confidence that the shares, which were trading at the outset at $5 or $6, would soon be trading at $12 and might go up as high as $20, and that this was a way for the young and old of British Columbia to understand the thrilling sensation of investing in the Vancouver Stock Exchange. Well, thrilling it was. It was a tragedy. I have not checked today but the other day BCRIC was trading at 91 cents, and my hon. friend from Mississauga tells me that it may be 90 cents today.

That means that all those folks who listened to the Premier of the day on this magnificent venture into the free enterprise system lost their shirts, and I suspect some even lost their undershirts, because they took the Premier at his word. In our system I guess that is not an uncommon thing for people to do, but they certainly found out very quickly that it was not good advice to invest in BCRIC shares.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia I recall those days with less than enthusiasm, and here we are once again, through this legislation, attempting to reorganize an industry and turn it over to the private sector and perhaps sell shares. That makes one extremely nervous.

I also want to pursue this in terms of the principle of selling off government assets. This is, of course, not any government asset. It is an asset within a very critical, important, and sensitive industry which concerns many Canadians. It is very critical in terms of our future planning in both a positive and negative way.

It is important that parliamentarians recognize that from the very beginning the private and public sectors in Canada have worked co-operatively. The establishment of the first settlements in Canada involved the Government of the day giving monopolies and contracts to various companies to build bridges, wharfs, rail systems, ports, and so on. That resulted in a marriage between the private and public sectors which, most of the time over the years, has worked relatively well. Canadians find it comforting.

I think of the economic activity which has taken place in my community of Kamloops in the last number of years since I became a parliamentarian. Although unemployment has been a major problem which has plagued our area, I recall the development of a new armoury and a new airport, the upgrading of another airport, the establishment of some wharfs, community centres, highways, youth treatment centres, jails, young offenders' institutions, and lottery buildings.

I could continue for a long time making specific references to all sorts of government-initiated ventures which, with very few exceptions, were turned over to the private sector for construction. This has made a great difference in our community in the last number of years. Without these government-sponsored projects from the federal and provincial Governments there would be a significant increase in the already tragically high levels of unemployment. I simply point that out as an example of how government, industry, and business can work in a most productive and positive way.

I think it is fundamental that if one evaluates the sale of Eldorado carefully one will see that it is a bad deal. It is just not a very intelligent business arrangement. Therefore, we in the New Democratic Party oppose the deal in its present form for the simple reason that it is a bad one. It is bad because the deal is structured in such a way that the public sector takes the risks and obligations and the private sector gets the profits, not only from the commercial activities of the company merged from Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation but also from the heavy public subsidies which are given the uranium industry in the form of favourable taxation, marketing arrangements, and sweetheart contracts which I will comment on in a moment.

That is the bad deal. The private sector gets all of the goodies and the public sector, to be more specific the taxpayers of Canada, pick up the tab. I would say it is a good deal for the private sector, but for the taxpayers of Canada it leaves a great deal to be desired. That is why I wonder if some of my Conservative friends see this as a good deal for the people of Canada in the short or long term.

It is discouraging that we have had no assurances from the Government that it recognizes the sacrifice of the public sector and the public interest in this deal. It is clear that this deal has been structured so that the Government can say that privatization works, just look at the share price. What the Government does not say is that in order for this stock flotation deal to succeed—and that is what it really is—the public sector will underwrite the risks by assuming the debt of Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, and the federal Government will assume the further liability of Eldorado's nuclear waste problems at Port Hope at a cost perhaps as high as $75 million. That is only a guess at this time, but that is all we can go on.

This take-back of debt has been described by the financial advisers to the Government, Burns Fry, as necessary for this flotation initiative. Eldorado's debts are substantial. If my memory serves me well, they are in the range of $550 million. The federal Government will receive from the newly-merged company about $250 million, leaving $300 million which must be made up in the sale of shares in the new company before the Government breaks even on its debt obligation alone. This is to say nothing about the cumulative investment which has been made in Eldorado in the form of government equity.

Therefore, the Government needs a high share price or it will wind up with a brick in its hands, or something like BCRIC which started out at $5 and is presently trading at 91 cents. However, is there any certainty of a high price? The uranium markets are currently in a chronic over-supply situation and the prices are depressed. In the last number of days we have seen an initiative in the Congress of the United States which would make it very difficult to continue Canadian exports into the United States. If the United States markets were closed to foreign producers in response to the distress of its own domestic suppliers' conditions, we would be caught in a most chaotic situation. The trade deal which the Government has negotiated with the United States appears to be worthless in terms of enabling us to do anything about the congressional initiative which the Senate passed enthusiastically a few hours ago.

There is no certainty of a high share price. Since there are no guarantees that the federal Government will get its investment in Eldorado back, let alone cover the debts that Eldorado presently owes, what are the other advantages or disadvantages of this deal?

In light of the many questions which my colleagues have asked throughout the day I think it is fair to ask whether there are job guarantees for the employees. Not surprisingly, in the true fashion of the Government, there are no job guarantees. Rather, the opposite is the case as the Minister spoke of the rationalization of the two companies. You and I both know, Madam Speaker, that "rationalization" is a nice word for "lay-offs". When we say that we are going to rationalize a company, that an industry is being rationalized, or that there is rationalization going on in the textile industry, it means that hundreds, thousands, or tens of thousands of people will be laid off, that they will be jobless.

In terms of the trade deal, this has become a most popular word. Members indicate that there will be some rationalization going on. It has a positive context. Since we like to be rational, we assume that rationalization must be a very positive process. It is positive in some respects because rationalization usually means modernization and more competitive businesses. However, in human terms, which we tend to overlook in this place, it means a loss of jobs or the termination of a career in a particular industry or company.

In recognition of this euphemism, the former Minister has indicated that there are no guarantees. She essentially said that there would be job losses or lay-offs.

What is the future for the Port Hope refinery, a site which has no room for expansion at the moment? The future is not particularly bright, since Eldorado already made one attempt to build a uranium refinery in Warman, Saskatchewan, in the late 1970s.

What about the research and development prospects? There are real prospects for change in the processing of uranium enrichment, using laser technology. This will require a substantial commitment to more research and development. Will the new company pursue this research and development or, given the relaxation of enrichment requirements for Canadian uranium exports, will Canada return to being an unprocessed resource exporter?

Most Members who have spoken against this legislation are concerned that Canada will increasingly become an exporter of the raw material as opposed to developing a more finished product. The trade agreement, which drops our requirement for processing exported ore, certainly does not bode well for the future.

The Government has taken action on a number of fronts toward privatization. While the Government wants to turn all kinds of publicly owned corporations over to the private sector, according to inquiries made by various newspapers and financial publications, there seems to be some variance between what the people of Canada want and what the Government intends to do.

For example, the Government has indicated that it would like to sell Air Canada to private interests. In my province, the latest Angus Reid poll indicates that 72 per cent believe that Air Canada is well run. More than half the people in British Columbia believe the Government should not sell Air Canada. We live in a country where the majority view should prevail or be equal. It seems that the people in my Province of British Columbia feel that Air Canada is well run and should not be sold.

In British Columbia, 64 per cent of the people believe that Petro-Canada is well run, and 55 per cent say that the Government should not consider selling it in any way.

Let us consider CBC, which often gets a great deal of response from my prairie colleagues in the House. In the Prairies, 66 per cent of the people believe that CBC is well run and that it should not be sold to the private sector. An even greater majority in other areas of the country are in favour of the CBC, Air Canada and Petro-Canada.

The majority of British Columbians feel that Canadian National is well run and should not be sold to private interests.

The one exception to Crown corporations which most people believe are well run, which will come as no surprise, is Canada Post. That is the Crown corporation that I do not believe any Canadian feels is well run.

The Government is continually manipulating and changing the mandate of this corporation. One of the reasons that I believe the postal corporation is not being run well is that the Government has singled out this Crown corporation that touches the lives of every Canadian as the one which should make a profit. There is no suggestion that the Department of Immigration should make a profit, or that our hospitals, universities, or Armed Forces should make a profit. Yet when the Government decides that this one government service, which touches every family, whether urban or rural, rich or poor, should make a profit, it is not surprising that this Crown corporation is not running particularly well.

I do not support the Government's initiative with this Bill. In closing let me say that it is time that we send this matter to committee for closer examination. Hopefully we will be able to address such questions as why there are no job guarantees for the men and women who work for these companies. There are many questions that must be asked and perhaps the most appropriate place to ask them would be in committee at the end of this debate.

Mr. Cassidy: My question concerns the open-ended guarantees being given in this particular case. The Hon. Member will be aware that Eldorado has a dump site in Port Hope. There are problems in terms of the clean-up of that dump site and, according to the Library of Parliament research staff, there has been a suggestion that this could cost as much as $100 million. Only 25 per cent of that would be borne by the Government but if the costs rise above $100 million it would be borne entirely by the federal Government.

Last night on the news there were comments by representatives of Energy Probe relating to the total lack of liability in the nuclear power industry for any type of defects in nuclear power plants which might bring civil suits against the manufacturers.

What is the Hon. Member's opinion about privatizing a company while leaving the risk in public hands? The Government of Canada will get some $200 million in debt instruments from this newly merged company but will have a $75 million liability which could possibly escalate to double or triple that amount.

Does it makes sense effectively to privatize a company but not force the private owners to take the risks that I thought were part of the private sector? Should not the new privatized owners take all of the risks rather than dump some of them back on the federal Government?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, that is a very interesting question. Why are the taxpayers of Canada expected to assume all of the risks while the private sector is the recipient of all the obvious gains? That is a fundamental question which has been asked by a number of Members participating in the debate today.

My colleague has raised an issue which I did not have time to discuss. It concerns the whole matter of liability with respect to the disposal and treatment of wastes. He indicated very accurately that the taxpayers of Canada must accept that responsibility as well as the cost. It is a very unfair and unjust business transaction which is very biased in favour of the private interests. It places very little risk on the private interests and all of the risk and most of the financial liabilities on the taxpayers of Canada. That is essentially why we are opposing this legislation.

There is also the whole matter of safety in this particular industry, to which my hon. friend alluded in his question. As you are probably aware, Madam Speaker, every year at least a thousand workers, men and women, die on the job sites of this country, to say nothing of the tens of thousands who are injured and as a result of their injury often spend an entire lifetime off the job. A thousand people are actually killed on the job sites of our country each year. That is one of the reasons that two major groups involved in this particular transaction that we are discussing today, namely, the energy and chemical workers and the United Steel Workers, oppose this Bill. They feel that the industry is bad enough already and once it is turned over to private interests the pursuit of profit will be carried out with more zeal than ever at the expense of health and safety in the workplace.

That is not only occupational safety but environmental safety, in the broadest sense as well. They are very concerned that there are no safeguards, nor any particular attention given to this critical matter in Bill C-121. Not only do the taxpayers of Canada accept the brunt of the risk and the loss in terms of a safe financing of equity, but the men and women who work in these operations are also being placed at greater risk than ever before in what we already recognize as a highly risky industry.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech. I wonder what single denationalization he would be prepared to favour? The Government is not proposing to denationalize Air Canada, Petro-Canada, CBC or CN. As you know, Madam Speaker, this is one of the issues on which there is a fundamental difference. We are accused by our friends in the New Democratic Party of being hung up on ideology, but when something is not working efficiently, as de Havilland was not working efficiently, we have to do something about it.

My friend should take note of what the Mitterrand Government did after President Mitterrand was first elected. A friend of mine worked for a little bank in France which was nationalized by Mr. Mitterrand. The bank was told it should give its business to a friend of the Government. Investment fled France, the franc fell to about eight francs to the Canadian dollar, unemployment rose drastically and, basically, the Mitterrand Government had to repeal everything it had tried to do out of its socialist ideology.

What we on this side of the House are saying is that where there is a time and place for something to be denationalized, it should be done. We should not be held captive by some 19th century ideology. I submit that my friends in the New Democratic Party believe that everything that moves should be nationalized, that everything should have cement poured on it in the name of somehow helping the people who work in these companies.

Mr. Cassidy: Your view is that everything that moves should be sold and denationalized. That is the problem.

Mr. Kilgour: Well, I remind my friends that there are about 350 federal Crown corporations still around today. I put it to them that if the unfortunate day for people who want jobs in this country ever arrived while they were in office, they would not nationalize one of those companies. They would, as they have said, nationalize banks and who knows what else. I put it to those Hon. Members that we are not the prisoners of a dead ideology, it is my friends opposite who think that the only good company is one that has been nationalized. Perhaps my friend has a comment on that.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I think, once again, people get caught up in the rhetoric of this place. What my friend from Edmonton has indicated is simply not accurate. What we have said on a number of occasions is that our plans are for the traditions of the Canadian economy to continue. That is why at the outset of my presentation I thought it was appropriate to indicate that we are a nation that is recognized as a country where the private and public sectors have worked amazingly well co-operatively together in terms of generating a relatively healthy economy.

When I think back to the number of times when Governments, not only the federal Government but the Government of the province of my hon. friend, found a critical industry or business that was not working well, that was in financial difficulty or was not serving the people well, they decided that rather than simply have profit guiding every decision, it was important that people be serviced by certain kinds of industry.

So the Province of Alberta saw the wisdom of buying Pacific Western Airlines and Alberta Telephone. I remember those debates because the people of Alberta were getting hosed by the private telephone system and were not being served well by the various feeder airlines. So the Government of Alberta, which was not an NDP Government but a Government which had some imagination and reflected the views of a New Democratic Party Government, decided to take Pacific Western Airlines into its own hands in order to provide better service for Albertans, which of course it did. It then took over the private telephone system. Because it was a monopoly and, therefore, there was no competition, it was a tragic situation in terms of services, particularly to rural Alberta. The Government then provided the necessary and appropriate telephone service to Albertans regardless of where they lived. That is the kind of spirit we have seen in the past.

I do not know how long it would take to go through hours and hours of examples where provincial Governments and federal Governments have witnessed a situation where the private sector was simply failing to deliver the services they felt their respective citizens deserved and took action. So when my hon. friend asks if we would consider turning any of the Crown Corporations over to the private sector, I would say that this is something we would enjoy reviewing. We would look at the list and see as times changed that perhaps there should be some that should be brought in and some that should be left out.

What I am saying is that at a time when Canadians from one coast to the other are concerned about the future of the nuclear industry, and extremely troubled by the nuclear industry in its present form, I am particularly reminded of the Chernobyl incident. Canadians want to know the most appropriate way to proceed as a country. That is why government Members opposite promised an inquiry into this important matter, which they failed to do. It took the New Democrats to provide that initiative, thank goodness. The New Democratic Party of Canada held hearings across the country and received input into this appropriate area and it will come forward with recommendations. At that time, the Parliament of Canada, based on those thoughtful recommendations, can see how best to proceed with something like Eldorado Nuclear.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I welcome the chance to take part in the debate on this Bill and particularly on this issue in general. I want to start by saying that I am going to try to make a Conservative speech. I am going to elucidate some good, sound Conservative principles that one adheres to if one is a Conservative or if one is a so-called private enterpriser. One of the principles is that an investor is entitled to an opportunity to get a return on his investment. If he gets a return, fine, but if he does not, he takes his chances according to the free market forces. I am repeating what many of my colleagues opposite on the government side have said for yea these many years. That being the case, I submit to the House and to my good friends opposite that the public investor is just as entitled to an opportunity to get a return on an investment as any individual private investor.

We have made that point on many occasions in this House over the years. But this deal penalizes the public investor, the taxpayers of Canada, who put the hundreds of millions of investment dollars into the uranium industry, as well as lots of other industries in this country. In many instances they received a return on investment. I am sure that some of my colleagues may not be aware that, with all the difficulties that the CNR is having, over the last few years it has paid out a couple of hundred million dollars to the Government of Canada by way of dividends. That is appropriate. The public investor received some modest, to put it nicely, return on his investment.

This deal on Conservative grounds, grounds of the most solid Conservative philosophy, is a bad deal. In light of the so-called opportunities for the private sector in uranium mining, refining, processing, et cetera, taxpayer investors are not receiving the type of opportunity to which they are entitled.

They are not receiving it because of this legislation. The public investor is being denied that opportunity. Where are the Conservatives who talk about the rights of the investor and of the opportunity to which the investor is entitled?

With respect to the issue of uranium mining, refining and processing I readily admit that in my Party we have had agonizing debates on the subject for years. They have taken place in my province, British Columbia, Ontario and in the national Party. Of course there have been difficulties. However, we came to a conclusion in the Saskatchewan section of the New Democratic Party that in spite of the fact that we formed the government of the day in the province, which was in the mid-1970s, as Party policy there would be no new or additional mines or additions to the present ones. It was decided that as and when a mine that was in existence and operating was phased out because of the depletion of the ore body appropriate actions would be taken to fully compensate the communities and employees involved. That has been the policy of my Party in my province for the last number of years.

I appreciate that once an industry is established, and in this instance with public investment, and when there are trained employees and the community is built up it is not easy to say arbitrarily, "We are against uranium mining and we will stop it as of yesterday". That cannot be done. We think that we have worked out a way to do it.

With respect to some good, Conservative, hard-nosed foundation philosophy, whatever happened to the old private enterprise theory about those who invest taking the risks and dragging themselves up by the bootstraps? That philosophy dictates that one is on one's own and relies on market forces. One takes one's chances. Whatever happened to that philosophy? This deal and others that have been mooted hand the gravy over to the private sector and keep the risks and any potential damages in the hands of the Canadian taxpayer.

Surely that is some type of betrayal of the foundation of free enterprise Conservative principles. I will have my twentieth birthday in June, and I wish I were that young. In the years I have been here every time there were economic difficulties, who were the first ones to come to Ottawa with their hands out asking to be bailed out? When cattle prices went down to nothing, the big ranchers who talked to me about private enterprise and dragging themselves up by their own bootstraps, some of whom worked on land which their parents or grandparents stole from the Indians, were the first ones down here demanding national government assistance. By their own actions privatization Conservatives, the so-called private enterprisers, are freeloaders. The fact of the matter is that without public investment the private corporate sector does not and will not invest. What it wants is all the marbles. It wants a lead-pipe cinch.

If members of the private sector were made to go out to find their own uranium ore bodies, invest in them and take chances, then not a darn one would do it. If it were not for the hundreds of millions of dollars put in by the federal Government and several provinces I doubt that there would be a uranium mine anywhere in the country right now. Now that the taxpayers have made that investment, built up those industries, communities and employees, to whom will the Government turn them over? It will turn them over to those who want to become private owners.

Where were they when the country needed them? There are some Conservative thinkers who would say that if there were ever a place for the complete public control and ownership of an industry it has to be in the uranium industry. As a signatory to the non-proliferation treaty we cannot allow this industry to drift into private hands and be left to the tender mercies of the guy who will do anything to make a buck, even if it meant selling the stuff to the IRA and the PLO.

It is my belief that the Government intends to weaken the powers of the Atomic Energy Control Board, to skirt around, if not ignore, our international obligations, and to fly in the face or what is unquestionably the will of most Canadians. This is not an industry that should be left in the hands of those who are more interested in making a buck than in treating people decently and giving public investors an opportunity to obtain a return and, most important, an extension of peacemaking and peacekeeping in the world.

I take it, Madam Speaker, that you want to call Private Members' Hour. I will be happy to resume my remarks when this Bill is brought before us again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw) moved that Bill C-257, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (independence of Parliament), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have introduced this Private Member's Bill as a result of a conversation I had with the Clerks at the Table in the House, and also with some of the legal people in the House of Commons. The intent of this Private Member's Bill is simply to clarify in order that I, as a Member of Parliament, and any other Member who is also a farmer, rancher, or from whatever particular background, would be eligible for any government programs that applied to that particular class.

In the past I understand that there has been some confusion as to whether Members of Parliament actually qualified for certain government programs.

Approximately two years ago there was a great drought in southern Saskatchewan, southern Alberta, and Manitoba. Although I was not in the area that was covered by this drought, I was advised that, I would not be eligible for this government program.

I consider myself to be a farmer. I can say with some certainty that I will be farming in five or ten years from now. I cannot say that I will be in the House of Commons in five or ten years from now, because like every other Member of Parliament I have to go through that process, get the nomination for my Party, and then stand in a general election.

In order to clarify this for other people who may be contemplating running for Parliament, it should be made very clear that if the Government does in fact put a special program in place that applies to farmers or ranchers, I or some other individual who may be a Member of the House of Commons or a member of the Senate would still qualify for that program.

I have discussed this issue at some length with other Members of Parliament. I have also discussed it at some length with constituents of mine. I have asked them their views on a government program that applied to all farmers, for example, and excluded Members of Parliament or the Senate who also happened to be farmers. Each time I asked that question I was assured by my constituents that they would view that as rather a silly regulation. They do not consider me to be any less a farmer because I am also a Member of Parliament.

At the present time I operate my farm with hired help and with some of the operations done by a custom operator. But I still operate the farm, I am entitled to a Wheat Board permit, and I still carry on the operation exactly as I did before I was elected to represent my constituency. That is simply the reason that I wished to have this Bill introduced. The Bill clearly sets that out.

The key area was in some of the interpretations of the word "contract" entered into. If I were taking part in a government contract or bidding on a government contract it would be much different from simply receiving a program that was put in place to assist all grain farmers or all cattle raisers who were having difficulty because of international markets or weather conditions. The wording was very clear and indicated that the purpose of this Bill was to remove any chance that there would be a conflict of interest for a Member of the House of Commons or a Member of the Senate.

As I mentioned earlier, this apparently has been subject to question in the past with government programs that applied to a class of agricultural producers when people who actually sat in the House of Commons were questioned as to their eligibility to take part in this government assistance program. My intention was to clarify this matter in order that there would be no doubt that any general government program that applied to grain farmers, for example, would also apply to Members of the House of Commons or members of the Senate.

The present Section 20(1) wording did require some clarification. As I mentioned, it was in the definition and in the interpretation of the word "contract".

The new clause that I have suggested be inserted reads very clearly:

> 21. This Act does not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons by reason of his being
> (a) a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement with the Government of Canada, except any company that undertakes a contract for the building of any public work;
> (b) a person on whom the completion of any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, devolves by descent or limitation, or by marriage, or as devisee, legatee, executor or administrator, until twelve months have elapsed after the same has so devolved on him; or
> (c) a contractor for the loan of money or of securities for the payment of money to the Government of Canada under the authority of Parliament, after public competition, or respecting the purchase or payment of the public stock or debentures of Canada, on terms common to all person.

There was a similar clarification regarding the rights of Senators.

The intent of my Bill is very plain. I have discussed this with other Members of the House and with my constituents. There seems to me general agreement that, because the Member of Parliament is elected, he or she should be permitted to take part in any Government program that is put in place that affects that general class. In this case, the most recent program that we had last fall was the Special Canada Grains Program.

Members of this House, as do members of provincial legislatures, and members of rural, town, or city councils often have to absent themselves from a vote pertaining to any particular legislation that may be seen as beneficial to them. The same could be held in the House. If we were voting to make that particular payment as part of a national program, possibly Members could be considered in some conflict of interest if they were supporting the legislation either as a member of the Government or a member of one of the opposition Parties, and they could simply absent themselves from that vote.

I am sure that I and many other Members of this House were members of municipal governments. I was a mayor and a councillor of my town for many years before I came here. If there was any possibility of a conflict we would simply leave the room when this particular item was being discussed, particularly when it came to a vote. This is commonly done. For example, from time to time our town council used to tender for vehicles. One local automobile dealer was also a member of council and when a bid would be submitted to council by the head office of the company he represented, he would not be involved in making a decision on whether or not council would accept the contract. I am sure that the same has been done in other municipal, city, and town councils.

The purpose of the legislation is quite clear. I want to assure people who are contemplating running for office that that would not make them ineligible for programs. I can particularly speak about western agriculture with some authority. We must take advantage of various available programs, and even then it is very difficult to make ends meet. We are involved in a cost-price squeeze, a vice ever tightening. Until such time as sanity returns to the international market-place and we can once again look to it to provide us with income, it is incumbent upon Governments, particularly the federal Government, to provide some limited support to producers.

The wheat from my farm should be sold for the same price at the local elevator as that of everyone else. There is simply not enough there, so out of necessity we must look for a special government program such as the Special Canadian Grains Program or other programs which are funded jointly by producers through a levy and the federal Government. It is unfortunate that at present we must look to Government for a good portion of the money required to keep our operations viable.

I want to assure everybody who is running for office wherever they happen to be that if a government program were put in place that benefited their particular class of agriculture, they would be entitled to share in it without any problem whatsoever.

This is the reason I introduced this Private Member's Bill. I am looking forward to comments from other Members in the House to see whether or not they agree with me or whether they have other suggestions to put forward at this time.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in second reading debate of Bill C-257 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig).

A little later an amendment may be presented to the House suggesting that we refer the matter to a parliamentary committee and withdraw the actual Bill. I think that would probably be the best way, if such a motion is forthcoming a little later as I understand could be the case.

The suggestion of the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw is a good one in many respects. We do not want people in the agricultural community to be discouraged from running for public office. I certainly would not want that. I am not a farmer, but I represent a large and very fine agricultural riding. I could argue that it is the finest, of course. However, if some day my constituents wanted to present someone who was a farmer, I would not want the person to be unable to enjoy the privilege of running for public office for the mere reason that he is a farmer.

The present situation, as we know, does not preclude anyone in any occupation from seeking public office. However, as the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw quite rightly pointed out, financial constraints on the agricultural community are such at present, particularly in the grains and oilseeds sectors, that it is necessary to seek government assistance because of international pressures on agricultural commodities, namely, the price war between the EEC and the United States of America. Actually it is a subsidy war in which they insist upon bombarding each other with tax dollars to try to regain what each one feels is his rightful share of the market.

In amending the present Senate and House of Commons Act we do not want to create a situation which would prevent contractors and so on from receiving what is normally known as contracts with the federal Government. I recognize that under the Hon. Member's Bill contracts for public works would still be excluded. Nevertheless, there are other kinds of contracts which could potentially be carried out by Members of Parliament or concerns in which Members of Parliament have a share if we pass the Bill as presented to us now.

The long and the short of it is that I support what the Hon. Member is trying to do. I support his initiative in trying to create a situation which will not unduly discriminate against people who work actively in the agricultural sector from seeking public office. In my opinion we need more people in the agricultural sector to sit in Parliament. We should not do anything or create any circumstance which would make it unduly difficult for them.

Having said that, I hope we receive an amendment a little later which will refer the subject matter to a parliamentary committee for action.

In retrospect perhaps it would have been better to have a motion before the House rather than a specific Bill. However, it does not matter at this point as long as the concern is aired in the House and is referred to a parliamentary committee. Some have suggested that perhaps the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures should deal with the issue. Perhaps the committee charged with looking at the new conflict of interest Bill after it has been passed at second reading could also look at the topic. Many of the issues with which that parliamentary committee will deal concern the conflict of interest of not only cabinet Ministers, the Leader of the Opposition, and so on, but indeed every Member of the House and the other place. In my opinion it would be an appropriate occasion to discuss the issue at that point as well.

I am offering it in terms of a suggestion. I am not married to the principle that we should absolutely discuss it at the same time. However, my reason for raising it is that if we refer it to another parliamentary committee it could have a tendency to go on the back burner, whereas the conflict of interest Bill will probably be discussed in the very near future by a special legislative committee of the House. Therefore, that would enable us to discuss the topic, which the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw brought to our attention, in an expeditious manner to ensure that at the next election, whenever it comes, the potential problem could already be solved.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, having said that, I would end my remarks by expressing general support for the measure introduced by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig), but I hope the Bill will be withdrawn so that the issue raised by the Hon. Member might be debated in a parliamentary commission, and as far as I am concerned preferably the parliamentary commission responsible for looking into conflict of interests.

• (1720)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to this initiative by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) regarding some concerns that he has brought to our attention which I think are legitimate and appropriate. The essence of his Bill would remove any financial or perceived financial impediment that some people might see to their becoming candidates for elected office, in this case as Members of Parliament or, as the Bill also indicates, members of the Senate. That is really quite a statement because once you are in the Senate you are there for a long time. We are talking about people coming from agriculture who, I suppose, for the rest of their lives are subject to some concerns raised here by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw.

On balance, I believe this is an appropriate initiative and as quickly as we can we ought to put it to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. As the previous speaker indicated, since we will be discussing conflict of interest legislation very soon this could possibly be a matter that could be referred to that legislative committee at the appropriate time.

There are concerns which the Hon. Member mentioned with which I agree. He spoke about his experience at the municipal level. I guess most of us have had similar types of experiences. Whenever a vote came up that was perceived to be an obvious conflict, one simply left the room or failed to vote and doing that seemed to take care of things. In my career as a municipal politician I feel it was a rather ineffectual exercise, being well aware of how much influence a single member could exert on his or her colleagues to achieve a particular outcome with or without that individual's participation in the final vote.

A recent initiative that has caused a great deal of concern is the allocation of northern benefits. We have some pretty peculiar parts of Canada that have been referred to now as northern areas which receive special tax consideration. On one side of the street in some communities you are eligible for northern benefits, but if you live on the other side of the street you are not. I suppose if Members of Parliament had an opportunity to determine whether northern benefit allowances for tax purposes should be associated with a particular area we might be inclined for rather obvious reasons to be supportive of some of these initiatives. As the Hon. Member has indicated in his Bill, particularly in the explanatory notes, he refers to members of the class, such as farmers. The Member mentioned farmers, grain producers and ranchers.

We have various government programs to support the grain industry because of the international competition that is becoming more and more unfair as a result of increased subsidies from both the United States as well as the European Economic community. But we must think about parts of western Canada which this year will be experiencing severe drought problems unless there is quite a dramatic shift in traditional weather patterns. This would result in an initiative such as the Hon. Member is bringing to our attention and perhaps some Members of Parliament would be influenced in terms of their own ranches.

In principle, I am very supportive of the initiative and I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing it forward. Let me say that in the appropriate committee when we come to examine the behaviour of Members of Parliament as to when they should or should not vote we ought to give that a great deal of consideration.

In conclusion, I do think that rather than proceed in the usual fashion when it comes to proceeding with Private Members' Bills that would be unnecessarily cumbersome, a more expeditious approach probably would be to refer at least the content of this Bill to the appropriate committee, which presumably would be the committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to tell the House that I am a farmer and I have owned a farm so I have a particular interest in the subject which the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) has presented. I listened with interest to his speech and to the speeches of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate of Bill C-257. As all Members are aware, the conduct of parliamentarians in relation to conflict of interest is an important public concern today. The Government has acted in this area following Chief Justice Parker's report and has introduced Bill C-114, the Senate and House of Commons Conflict of Interest Act as it is known.

Bill C-257 which we are debating this afternoon also relates to laws governing the conduct of Senators and Members of Parliament in relation to conflict of interest and to the Member for Moose Jaw's concern for that very important point when it comes to general subsidization to Members of Parliament, most specially with regard to the Special Grains Act.

Here we are dealing with existing provisions contained in the Senate and House of Commons Act which prohibit Senators and Members of Parliament from benefiting from any contract, agreement or commission of the Government of Canada which involves a payment of public money. Bill C-257 sponsored by the Member from Moose Jaw would change the prohibition against receiving public money contained in the Senate and House of Commons Act and make it apply only to contracts or agreements of sale or service. In my mind, such a change would immediately raise the issue of what the definition of a contract of sale or service would be. If the present exclusion of Senators and MPs is limited only to government contracts or sale or service, loopholes could possibly arise.

I understand the Member's objective that a parliamentarian should be able to receive government funding if he or she is a Member of a broad class of individuals, for example, farmers, eligible for financial assistance under a general government program. I think that this matter can be dealt with, however, without making the proposed changes to the Senate and House of Commons Act as proposed. Perhaps the most important point to make is that the present legislation does not disqualify Senators and Members of Parliament from receiving financial assistance from the Government for which a large number of Canadians can qualify. The key word in the Act is contract. Most general assistance programs sponsored by the Government of Canada do not, strictly speaking, involve a contract.

It is one thing for a Senator or a Member of Parliament to seek a contract with the Government in competition with other individuals or businesses which would lose out if the Senator or Member of Parliament were to get the contract. In this case, there could be a suspicion of conflict of interest. This is what the Senate and House of Commons Act is intended to prevent. If, however, a contract is not involved and the financial assistance, rather than being awarded on a competitive basis, is available to a class of individuals or businesses, there would be no possibility of conflict of interest.

I would submit that the Senate and House of Commons Act even now does not apply to such programs. Having said this, it is important to ensure that Section 20(1) of the present Act is properly administered so that the statutory clause prohibiting Members of Parliament from participating in or benefiting from any government contract, agreement or commission is not inserted in any general program of financial assistance.

I know that the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw is well intended that there is a clear understanding in connection with Members and with general assistance programs. I would also suggest, and I take heed of the suggestions made, that this motion go to a standing committee for study. Therefore, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-257, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (independence of Parliament), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure".

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to say a word on this Bill. Now that a motion has been moved, I think the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) would be able to speak again. I would be interested to know if he would be prepared to accept the motion put by his colleague. If he is satisfied with it, he will not get any argument from me or my colleagues. If he is not prepared to accept it, we are quite prepared to help him turn it down, although I think he is stuck. Even if he just gets the subject matter of his Bill before committee, then at least he has gotten that far.

I think that the Hon. Member is worrying too much. There are many others of his colleagues who should have been worried about conflict of interest. In this instance, I do not believe that the Hon. Member had a worry.

With government agricultural programs to which a farmer contributes, there is no problem, whether it is crop insurance, the Western Grain Stabilization Act or other programs. If a farmer contributes, he pays a premium to be covered.

In the case of the Special Grains Program, the Hon. Member as a farmer would of course have a direct interest in the matter, and, though I am no lawyer, I think that there is something in law about the rule of general application. If a program like the Special Grains Program is universal, then every farmer who holds a Wheat Board permit is eligible. It would not matter if the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw were a farmer, a Member of Parliament, an MLA, an alderman or a rural municipal councillor, or none of the above. He would be included under the umbrella of the general application of that particular law. That is why I think the Hon. Member was worrying too much.

If we were to follow the argument to its logical conclusion, then all of us would be in conflict of interest. For example, Members from all sides fight for improved old age pensions for which we are eligible. At the same time, MPs draw a pension as MPs if they have been here for six years or longer. One could conclude that there is a conflict there.

Corporate executives often come to this place. If a Member were to be on leave of absence from a corporation and his corporation, by taking advantage of a government program which meant millions and millions of dollars for the corporation, were to give him a better deal on his stock options, his dividends or his pension, he would be in a conflict of interest. That is why I think my hon. friend is worrying too much about this matter.

In any case, if this will make the Hon. Member or any other Hon. Members who come here from the farming or fishing communities feel more comfortable and more straightforward, that is fine. I have no problem with that. If that is all it will take to make them feel better, I am quite willing to help.

I wish to say something else as well. When I came here, I burned all my bridges behind me. I learned from other people who had been in this place years and years before me that if an MP is to do a full, good job representing his federal constituency, he does not have time for anything else. Some of my caucus colleagues gave up their law practices, ministries or businesses completely to be Members of Parliament on a full-time basis.

A dear friend of mine served as a Member of Parliament for the old Kindersley constituency in the 1950s. After he had been here for about two or three years, he showed me the books for his farm. He was subsidizing the farm out of his MP's pay. That was in about 1955 when the pay was about $8,000 per year with about $1,500 per year expense allowance. He was subsidizing his farm out of MP's pay. I suspect, or at least I would not be surprised if the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw were doing the same damned thing right now. In the perception of the public, I believe that no one with a fair mind would think for one moment that the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw or anyone like him is in a conflict of interest.

I want to emphasize for all of us that if we decide to run for Parliament and if our constituents decide that we are the ones they want to be here on their behalf, we do not have time for anything else if we are to do a good job at it. I do not want to butt into the Hon. Member's private affairs, but I know that if I had a farm, I would sell it if I could find someone to buy it at a reasonable price, or I would have it incorporated. I would have no part whatsoever in it. The wife, the kids or a hired man would run it and I would have no part in it whatsoever. It would be at more than arm's length because the load is too heavy.

With the problems farmers are having nowadays along with the duties of a Member of Parliament who represents the thousands and thousands of square miles that the Hon. Member represents as well as 60,000 or 70,000 people, Members do not have time to worry about their farms. I just offer that as some free, unsolicited advice to my hon. friend from Moose Jaw, but I think it applies to all of us. We do not have time to run home for a couple or for three days a week to work on our real estate businesses, our insurance businesses or our law practices. If we are to do a half-decent job down here, we should not mix the two together. It does not work. I have seen too many who did not survive in this place for very long.

One of the reasons for the high turnaround here is that Members kept mixing one business with the other when the main reason they were here was to be Members of Parliament. If that is not their main business, they should quit. I know that that sounds harsh and hard, but I think that all of us here have a job, an honourable and worth-while profession. I think we all work very hard at governing ourselves accordingly.

Having given free advice to my hon. friend and having given my little lecture for the benefit of all of us, I want to say that I hope that the Government will at least agree to have this matter brought into committee. I hope it will also agree that any new conflict of interest guidelines will specifically include the rule of general application or universality for payments from the Government under any kind of program of this nature. If the Hon. Member's farm were eligible for $1,000 or $2,000 from the Special Grains Program and he had spent it all on a wild time in Mexico, I would be a little leery. However, I know darn well that if he was eligible and did get any money, he sunk it all back into the farm and must put some more in. That is why he need not worry about conflict of interest in an instance such as this.

Mr. Gottselig: Madam Speaker, it was generally accepted that the principle which I was trying to establish was supported by all Parties in the House. Each speaker in turn has referred to my intent. As a result of the intervention made by my colleague, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), I wanted to add that I understood that in the past there was an instance in which a farmer's right to a program was questioned by virtue of the fact that he was a Member of the House of Commons.

I wanted to clarify that in order that anyone contemplating running for the job of a Member of Parliament would know full well that they would be eligible for any government programs which may be made available. As the Member for Regina West has mentioned as well, I am fully aware that we are, of course, fully entitled to partake in any program for which we pay a premium to belong.

The motion introduced by my colleague, the Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), is, of course, certainly acceptable to me. I intend to pursue this with the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure in order to ensure that it does proceed from there, that it is not put on the back burner and left there until we all forget about it, because I do believe that this should be clarified. Legal advice that I received from House of Commons staff was that this standing committee was the proper one to examine this. I certainly have no difficulty with that.

I would like to thank the Hon. Members who took part in this debate this afternoon. This is another example of how we can all agree on legislation. We all understand the intent of my Private Members' Bill and it was supported by all Members of all Parties who spoke this afternoon. I would just like to thank them for their support.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. James) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Accordingly, the Order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—LACK OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN TORONTO

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I take the floor this afternoon to refer to the need for the Government to deal with the housing crisis in Metro Toronto in a unique way. Prices have soared to heights that no one would have believed possible even five years ago. Rents have gone into orbit. There is no relief in sight.

My reason for focusing attention on this issue today is to ask the Government to face the reality difficult for many Canadians to see, that is, that the problem is not the same uniformly throughout the country. Metro Toronto and other massive urban communities like it are not the same as towns, villages, and smaller cities and they should not be treated the same. When government policy on housing is determined, it is not good enough to have a policy that seems good across Canada. Some areas have special needs and need special policies. Metro Toronto is one of these.

It is possible for apartment vacancy rates to vary so much across the country that the rate can be zero in the City of Scarborough, the city in which I live and which I represent, while apartments are plentiful in communities elsewhere in the country. In 1985, for example, the national vacancy rate was 1.4. The Metro Toronto vacancy rate was only 0.4, three and one-half times less the national average. It is even more serious, more critical, more impossible, in Metro Toronto now.

In 1987 the price of a standard two-storey house in the Halifax-Dartmouth area went up on an average of about 4 per cent. In Vancouver the rise in the same year was about 8 per cent. These are very serious rises in view of the general cost of living going up about 4 per cent, but in the Toronto area the increases varied district by district from a low of 18 per cent to a high of 77 per cent in 1987.

Just recognize what that means to a person seeking a home, not just because he or she prefers to live there for personal reasons, but because that may be the place where there is an opportunity for a job, a chance to practice a profession, a chance to rise in an organization. There is no doubt that work is there. We have unemployment rates approaching zero. However, the pressure on people to find housing that they can afford makes the invitation of full employment less attractive than it should be.

I will not be surprised if the spokesperson for the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation replies by telling us how much has been spent on social housing in Toronto, how many housing units have been started in Metro Toronto either under government funding or by private enterprise. With all respect to the spokesperson, Madam Speaker, that reply will be like claiming that we have found a cure for cancer because we have increased the supply of aspirin.

The solution does not lie in meeting some of the need that would be normal in normal times. Our need is critical in a crisis time, made so not because Metro Toronto people are greedier than anywhere else, not because they are grasping in a way that you will not find anywhere else, but obviously because the population there is growing at a rate which outstrips almost any other area in the country.

I submit that that is to the good, not only of the people of Metro Toronto but to the people of Canada generally because the prosperity and upturn of business in that area creates purchasing of products and commodities which come from elsewhere in the country. We are, by our very growth in Metro Toronto, serving Canada. That same growth is making it almost impossible for many people in Toronto to find accommodation.

I am asking that for once Metropolitan Toronto and other massive urban areas like it begin to get the kind of recognition that their people deserve. I am impressed how business in the metropolitan area of Montreal has taken an upturn in recent years. I rejoice in the renewed prosperity there. That is putting a pressure on housing in Montreal and it is striking to contrast the prices for accommodation in Montreal today and just a few years ago.

I am not asking for a favour to be given to one area, rather, recognition to be given to one type of area which is growing at breakneck speed. Because the demand for accommodation is pressing on the available supply, we are facing prices for houses and rents for apartments that a few years ago would have defied imagination.

I ask that we recognize this situation. If we have a special problem, let us deal with it in special terms. Why treat those areas as though they were like anywhere else when they are not? The Government should issue as soon as possible a policy on housing in major metropolitan areas. If we make the effort and come forth with a creative and imaginative solution, we will find a response from people from one coast to another.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the federal government's initiatives in providing adequate and affordable housing for Canadians, particularly as it affects the people of Toronto.

The government is aware of the situation in Toronto and is monitoring the market very carefully. Of course the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) is greatly interested in this question and keeps the Government aware of developments in that sector. We are all indebted to him.

Madam Speaker, the federal government is doing a great deal to facilitate the activities of the private market and is promoting access to and security of homeownership in a number of ways: through public mortgage insurance, the new mortgage-backed securities program, policies to support moderate and stable interest rates, and, more generally, through good economic management.

Since September 1984, the Ontario and Toronto economy has been booming. It may be the strongest economic area in North America. Madam Speaker, in 1987 there were 33,613 housing starts in the Toronto area, compared with 21,430 in 1986: a 57 per cent increase and 12,000 additional jobs.

The market is operating at capacity and federal government intervention would create an inflationary environment that can do more harm than good. It certainly would not help those in greatest need.

As the Hon. Member is aware all government funds are now being directed to those in greatest need. This applies to Toronto and throughout the rest of the country.

Because social housing is an area of shared federal/provincial responsibility, it has meant more funds than ever before are now being directed to those in greatest need. Madam Speaker, I vividly remember the representations which the Hon. Member for Scarborough made before our caucus and which prompted the Government to make this decision. Again, we are grateful to him.

In the Toronto area in 1987, the federal and provincial governments provided assistance to more than 2,200 units under the social housing and co-operative index-linked mortgage programs. This is more than 38 per cent of the total for Ontario. Over the past five years over 12,000 social housing units have been provided. This is in addition to the existing 100,000 households in the metro Toronto area already receiving federal assistance.

Madam Speaker, providing affordable housing is not exclusively a government concern. The Toronto area home-builders have recently brought forward interesting design proposals. The not-for-profit housing sector continues to be actively involved. Municipalities have an increasingly important role to play in ensuring the creation of affordable housing, as does the provincial Government.

The Hon. Member is quite right when stating that the situation in Toronto is tragic. I would hope that the provincial Government of Mr. Peterson—to a large extent it is responsible for finding the solutions required—will soon be in a position to unveil a policy to encourage contractors to build affordable housing units for Toronto residents.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—USE OF FRENCH IN COURTS—REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER CONTACT SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On March 28, Madam Speaker, I directed a question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to find out what his Government intended to do to encourage, urge and if necessary pressure certain provinces to recognize Canada's linguistic duality which they endorsed in the 1987 constitutional deal known as the Meech Lake Accord. I am referring to the situation which exists in particular in Saskatchewan where an historic decision rendered by the Supreme Court on February the 25th of this year completely changed the status of the linguistic rights of the French minority in that province and probably in Alberta as well. The whole affair began five years ago in 1983 when Father Mercure, a Saskatchewan resident was arrested for speeding by a police officer. Upon being issued a citation in English, Father Mercure decided to complain and demanded a speeding ticket in French. Moreover, he asked for a French copy of the Saskatchewan Motor Vehicle Legislation as well as a trial in French. After being turned down by various jurisdictions, his case was finally heard by the Supreme Court—

[English]

More specifically, the appellant wanted to know whether Section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act continued to apply to Saskatchewan by virtue of the Saskatchewan Act, and whether the rights derived from this section require the Saskatchewan legislature to publish its laws in English and French. Furthermore, the appellant wanted to know if he has the right to use the French language in proceedings before the Saskatchewan courts as derived from Section 110.

The Supreme Court said yes to all those questions. This judgment invalidates all provincial laws adopted since 1905 in Saskatchewan because they were unilingual English and established the right to speak French before the courts and the legislatures.

[Translation]

From a strictly legal point of view, Madam Speaker, the situation is clear. Either the province translates all the statutes it has adopted since 1905 because they are invalid in their English only version, or it adopts bilingual legislation, which is ironic, but it is nevertheless the solution which the Supreme Court suggested, making it possible for the province to bypass Section 110 as it is authorized to do under Section 14 and 16(1) of the Saskatchewan Act.

Hardly a week ago, more specifically on Monday April the 4th, 1988, the Saskatchewan Government introduced Bill 2 to repeal Section 110 in Saskatchewan. This action is legal, there is no doubt about that, in view of the ruling of the Supreme Court to the effect that the province could choose this option. But is it fair? We will see. Personally, I feel it will cause serious problems for the Francophone minority in Saskatchewan as well as other minorities in this country, whether Quebec Anglophones or Outside Quebec Francophones. Is it fair? That is the question.

An Hon. Member: It is unfair!

Mr. Gauthier: That is the whole issue, and we should not overlook the fact that the Saskatchewan Legislature adopted a resolution stemming from the Meech Lake Accord. The House will remember that three provinces, namely Saskatchewan, Alberta and Quebec agreed to the Meech Lake Accord. Here, in Ottawa, the House of Commons itself voted recently on this. So, there is nevertheless a certain spirit in the Meech Lake Accord that should be respected and in introducing Bill 2 to repeal Section 110 Saskatchewan reduces the basic rights. This is clearly a step backward and no step forward in that matter. This is clearly a setback for fundamental rights, the rights of access to the legislature and the courts in that province, in French and in English.

The irony here, Madam Speaker, is the wonderful rethoric of the province saying that the rights will be exercised now and that it recognizes that this Bill might not be the solution to this problem but it is a step in the right direction. As for me, I said it earlier and I repeat it, to curtail those rights looks to me like an affront to those rights, those established rights French speaking people enjoyed in Saskatchewan. All the Francophones, not only those living there but all the Francophones in the country had, in Saskatchewan, rights they could exercise sometimes if they had to come before the courts or before the legislature.

Premier Devine could have shown leadership. He missed a great opportunity to be generous. As for me, I said it before and I say it again: in making that decision, Saskatchewan is far from being open, generous and concerned with minorities. It is a step back and a regressive measure which limits the rights of Francophones in that province and, as far as I am concerned, it is not a step forward.

As for Prime Minister Mulroney, he missed an opportunity to show national leadership. He didn't move until both governments were at loggerheads. He didn't do anything between February 25 and April 8. On April 8, following three letters I sent him on April 5, 6 and 7, he finally wrote Mr. Devine, the Saskatchewan Premier, to ask him to do more and more quickly because, as is often the case with the Prime Minister, he applies a double standard. He said that some people see it as a petty measure restricting the rights of Francophones. We do not accept that provision because, in the spirit of Meech Lake, we must protect minorities.

But other people feel that it is a step forward, like the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lowell Murray) who said: It is not a big step, but it is a step in the right direction. I told Mr. Murray, that he was wrong because, once again, we must show faith in that province. And who could show faith, Madam Speaker? If I had the time, I could list the difficulties we had in getting Saskatchewan to honour Section 23 of the Constitution dealing with education. It has been five years since that legislation was passed, since the Constitution was amended and since Saskatchewan committed itself to protecting the fundamental education rights of its larger minority, the Saskatchewan Francophones, and nothing, absolutely nothing was done during all that time for that minority, Madam Speaker. I repeat nothing, no French schools, no administration of independent French schools, no Francophone school board, nothing! Absolutely nothing under Section 23! How do you expect me or other people to trust a Premier who said: wait another 10 or 15 years and this province will be bilingual as our Prime Minister reported today.

Mrs. Speaker, you do not take fundamental rights away from a group of people in a province and say that those rights will be restored in 15 years. That is not how justice works in Canada and that is not what my country is all about, Mrs. Speaker.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when I hear comments of that nature from the Opposition side . . . Perhaps his party, when it was in power, could have done its share too.

On March 28, 1988, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) asked a series of questions related to the following three subjects: implementation of minority-language education rights under Section 23 of the Charter, implementation of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to the language of trials and the use of the official languages in the Province of Saskatchewan as a result of the decision rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada on Section 110 of the former Northwest Territories Act.

Madam Speaker, although it is up to the provinces to respect their own constitutional obligations in the field of education, the Government of Canada has intervened in almost all cases affecting minority-language education rights in order to promote a broad and equitable interpretation of Section 23 of the Charter. In terms of policy, the Government of Canada has made a solemn commitment in Bill C-72 to encourage the country's francophone and anglophone minorities. To this end, it has confirmed the role that the Secretary of State of Canada has long played in this field. Among other responsibilities, the Secretary of State through some measures encourages and assists provincial Governments in the development of our French-speaking and English-speaking minorities by enabling them to have their children educated in their own language. In this regard, the federal-provincial agreements on education in both official languages are an important part of the cooperation.

As far as court language, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the provisions of Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code which give the accused the right to have a trial before a judge or a judge and a jury speaking his or her official language, will be implemented in all jurisdictions by 1990. This is guaranteed by Clause 89 of Bill C-72. In the meantime, Clause 98 of the same Bill provides that in all the provinces where Part XIV.1 is not yet in force, the accused has a right to the interpretation of proceedings both at the preliminary hearing and at the trial, and the witnesses can testify in the official language of their choice. Needless to say the Minister of Justice is in consultation with the provinces . . .

Mr. Gauthier: Eleven years!

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member from the Opposition says: Eleven years. The Conservative Party as been in power for only four years. More has been done in the last four years than in the last eleven years. The Opposition member is the one who brought the issue.

Hence, needless to underline the fact that the Minister of Justice continues his consultations with the provinces in order that Part XIV.1 of the Code be applied as soon as possible. Such efforts have already brought in 1987 three provinces, including Saskatchewan, to proclaim these clauses.

Madam Speaker, as far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, the Hon. Member should know that the Prime Minister has written the provincial Premier to confirm the statement made earlier by the federal Minister of Justice to the effect that the Canadian government is ready to offer the same help it previously gave in similar circumstances in view of a full application of the Supreme Court decision. Furthermore, the Prime Minister has asked the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State to immediately resume discussions with Saskatchewan officials. As well, the Prime Minister has asked the Secretary of State to personally negotiate a general agreement on official languages with the province of Saskatchewan. The Hon. Member will thus recognize that the Canadian Government does not spare its efforts in order to try and solve this national issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p. m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.07 p. m.

POINT OF ORDER

PROVISION OF ADVANCE COPIES OF PROPOSED STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, considering that it is customary to distribute copies of Ministers' statements in advance and we have yet to receive a copy of this document, and considering that this is parliamentary practice and that we appreciate civility in this House, the Minister should have given us reasonable notice. It is now 11.17 a.m., and we have not yet received a copy of the statement. I therefore suggest that the Minister, in the interests of this House and of intelligent and democratic debate, postpone his statement until we have the copies and have had time to look at them, and I suggest that we revert to Statements by Ministers later today.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to simply register a concern that if the Minister is going to be making a minor statement or perhaps an almost inconsequential statement on some matter, one might understand that he might be a bit remiss in providing us with a copy in advance of such a statement. However, in this regard, I would like to suggest that the Chair consider one of two alternatives, that is, that adequate time be given to the Opposition to review the statement in order to allow us to reflect and provide an intelligent and thoughtful response, or, as a last resort, at least an opportunity be given so that there will be a chance later in the day for the opposition Parties to respond to the Minister's statement.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond, if I may, to my colleagues' comments.

Our Government has tried wherever possible to make full use of ministerial statements so that important government announcements are made in the House of Commons where they should be made and wherever possible we have done that. Also, in keeping with the courtesies of the House, we have made every effort to make copies of the statement available to the Opposition House Leaders and critics in order that they may respond to the statement made. We understand that need.

I would suggest, in view of the nature of the statement, which I am sure will become clear to the House, that the appropriate method in this case would be to have the Minister make his statement and to reserve, which in fact will give my colleagues more time than usual, the time which would be given normally to the opposition Parties to reply. We can reserve that time and I can meet with my colleagues to decide on an appropriate time. They may wish to do it shortly after Question Period, but I can work that out with the Opposition House Leaders.

We have copies of the statement. We would be prepared to distribute those as quickly as possible so that those Members can follow along as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) makes his statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier made a statement about a traditional custom in this House which consists in receiving a copy of a Minister's statement in advance. This custom is very important in terms of co-operation among the Members and Parties in this House.

But we also have a comment by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) . . .

• (1120)

[English]

He has made it quite clear that in his own Party's view, and under all the circumstances, the Opposition should have had a copy of the statement. However, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has risen and expressed some regret that that was not possible at this time. He has proposed that the Hon. Minister make his statement now and that time be reserved later in the day for an adequate response by spokespersons for the Official Opposition and for the New Democratic Party.

As far as the Chair is concerned, if that is the disposition of the House, then the Chair would be very pleased to co-operate. Perhaps the Chair can have some response from Hon. Members.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we thank you for your comments. I thank the Minister of State for his comments as well.

I operate under the assumption that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) would have preferred that I have in my hand and that my colleague from the New Democratic Party have in his hand a copy of the statement which the Minister is about to deliver. I operate under the assumption that the Deputy Prime Minister would have preferred that that notice, which I received as the Speaker was speaking and which states that there will be a statement, had arrived an hour or an hour and a half ago. I operate under positive assumptions about the Government's intentions.

I say to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the Minister of State that there is a resolution to this problem. It is a problem and it concerns an important tradition in this place. The Deputy Prime Minister wanted us to have copies of the statement but for some reason outside the House that did not work. He will talk to the appropriate staff people. I spoke a moment ago to the Deputy Prime Minister who told me that he was hoping that the statement would be here momentarily. Let me suggest that it would be in the interests of the House, in the interests of the Government and in the interests of the traditions of this place that the Deputy Prime Minister make his statement at 12 o'clock. Hopefully the statement that the Deputy Prime Minister assured me would be forthcoming momentarily will be in our hands within five minutes. That would give us the usual time to have a look at it. We could then have the Minister's statement, not delayed too long, and the response of the spokespersons all at the same time in the House.

With all-Party consent that is more than a reasonable suggestion I would submit to you and to all my colleagues in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the suggestion made by the Hon. Member from Newfoundland. As spokesperson for the New Democratic Party on this subject, I understand that the statement the Minister is proposing to make is very important. It is a statement which would change the status of a major Crown corporation.

It seems to us obvious, and I think all Hon. Members would agree, that spokespersons for the opposition Parties ought to have an opportunity to give consideration so that they can comment in a constructive way in response to an important change being proposed by the Government. I see no reason why we could not have this matter delayed until 12 o'clock at which time we could deal with the matter in the usual way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, up until a few moments ago we were dealing with this matter in the hypothetical with respect to its subject matter. I submit that, in view of the fact that the subject matter is now on the floor of the House, the appropriate thing to do is have the Deputy Prime Minister proceed with his statement. We will reserve and make arrangements at whatever time is convenient to the Opposition for time to respond. We will co-operate so that they can respond comprehensively to the Deputy Prime Minister's statement.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the subject matter is now on the floor of the House and within the public purview, that it would be appropriate for the Deputy Prime Minister to proceed at this time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister cannot understand the dilemma we are in. I am not arguing the substance of the subject matter. As a matter of fact, officially, I do not know what the statement is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: If the substance of the matter is in front of us I admit that I do not know what is being talked about in terms of what the Minister will say in his statement except that it is in regard to something relative to his portfolio.

I know the option that the Government can use. The Minister can go out of the House and make the statement, and no one in the House can stop him from doing that. I realize and appreciate that. The Minister is trying to co-operate with us. We should be given copies of the documents and we should wait a few minutes. The Government should be reasonable with us. We will hear his statement and our responses will be made in a democratic way. We will have debate. That is what the House of Commons is all about. We do not want to have a debate on one subject and a response to it a half an hour or an hour later.

I see that the statement is being circulated now. I am very happy. Give us 20 minutes to read it and we will proceed. The House of Commons will not fall because of that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there is a serious problem before us. There is a resolution. We have just now been presented with the Minister's statement. It is a reasonably lengthy statement compared to most.

As the Deputy House Leader has indicated, we follow the tradition in a most appropriate way. I cannot recall, other than the odd exception, when a Minister has not given us more than adequate advance notice concerning a statement to be made.

May I suggest, since the Government has indicated that it is not prepared to provide us with a few moments to read the statement, and in view of the fact that it has only been circulated in one official language, which is a problem, and an understandable one, and I believe we now understand at least the nature of the statement and we recognize its importance, that at least a few moments be set aside. As a result I would move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Just to recapitulate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) have risen on the same point of order. We have continued on that same point of order.

Basically, members of the Opposition have been asking that they have some time to read a copy of the Minister's statement. I think the general consensus on the opposition side is that they would return within a reasonable period of time, perhaps by noon, when the Minister would give the statement and the Opposition would then reply.

First, let us consider the procedural law. It is quite clear that if the Minister wishes to go ahead, and while I have certainly remarked to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier that there is a long-standing tradition of giving notice to the Opposition, strictly speaking, he can go ahead at this time and make a statement.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has proposed, in view of the fact that this discussion has gone back and forth and has not resulted in a complete agreement, to move that the House adjourn. I have to advise the Hon. Member that there are long-standing precedents that make it quite clear that such a motion to adjourn, which in ordinary circumstances is not debatable, cannot be made on a point of order. I bring that to the attention of the Hon. Member.

I have a suggestion to make; that I adjourn statements by Ministers for the moment and carry on with routine proceedings. I suggest that both sides speak with each other, and it might be that by the time I have finished with routine proceedings they will have resolved this matter in an agreeable way.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments and am naturally guided by your wisdom. However, I think the whole point of this is that this matter could have been handled strictly by discussion among the House Leaders, in the hypothetical, if in fact the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had not brought the matter to the floor of the House. I think that is a subject to which the Chair might wish to apply itself.

Mr. Tobin: When you give advance notice you always mention the subject matter. That is not a good argument.

Mr. Lewis: It is because notice is often given with the understanding that it is embargoed. As my hon. friend for Ottawa—Vanier has said, he has no official notice of what is the subject matter of the debate. Therefore we were able to deal with the hypothetical until, unfortunately, our colleague from Winnipeg spilled the beans, so to speak.

• (1130)

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this statement that we should proceed to put it on the floor of the House immediately, and give the Opposition an opportunity to respond, at its timing. I am prepared to do that, whether the members of the Opposition want to do it earlier or later.

I wish to return to the original point. Yesterday we saw a request for an emergency debate in which technically the person who had asked for it was not present. We acquiesced and let my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) go ahead and make his argument. You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that there is no opportunity to respond. We let that happen. We are now asking for the same spirit of co-operation; not motions to adjourn the House—

Ms. Mitchell: It is a very different issue.

Mr. Lewis: —in order that this important statement can be made on the floor of the House of Commons. It could obviously be made at a press conference and brought back here to be debated.

Ms. Mitchell: Admit it, you made a mistake.

Mr. Lewis: But we have done the honourable thing by bringing it to the floor of the House of Commons first. In view of the nature of the statement and its subject matter, I suggest that it would be appropriate for it proceed now, and during the statement the House Leaders could co-operate in finding an appropriate time to respond.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, it is clear to those who respect this House as we do . . .

[English]

As it is your duty, Your Honour has made a very reasonable proposal to the House; not cutting off the debate tomorrow morning or this afternoon. Your Honour has made a sound and reasonable proposal that will meet all the requirements and the traditions of the House, which is to have at least a few moments of reflection. It is not enough only to read the statement. My colleague who is the critic will want to consult for at least a few minutes. I am sure that the same applies to members of the third Party in the House, that they would like to reflect for a few moments before responding.

I have just learned myself that it is a statement of immense importance to the country. I know that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), and the new Minister of State for Transport (Mr. St. Germain) are reasonable men. At this time I would like to take the first opportunity to congratulate the new Minister of State for Transport for his new appointment.

Surely, either the House follows your good advice and suspends for a little while, or I will make a suggestion directly to the Deputy Prime Minister. My colleague asked to suspend until 12 o'clock, others have said this afternoon. Why do we not follow the very intelligent suggestion of the Speaker to temporarily suspend and do the entire "show" at 12.15 p.m in a row.

Personally, I would like to say to the Deputy Prime Minister that it is a good proposal, but I do not like it. It is a precedent. The British parliamentary system works by precedent. Why should we have a statement first? Give us some time for reflection and then we will come back. The press will already have the full statement of the Minister. Then while they are doing their very important work we will ask any critic if he or she has anything to say now, but it will not matter any more.

I like the manner in which we have always proceeded. The Minister makes a statement and it is immediately followed by the various critics, then the press, which has an important job to do in reporting, can report in total and not partially on what is taking place.

My suggestion to you, Sir, as the Speaker and the guardian of the rights of the minority in this House, is that you made a proposal; if need be, why do we not adjust your proposal to fit the suggestion of the Deputy House Leader, and forget the time until 12.15 p.m. and do the full "show" at 12.15.

Surely the Deputy Prime Minister wants to have an orderly House. I see an Hon. Member indicating no. I want to have an orderly House. I know that the Deputy Prime Minister wants to make an important statement, or whomever is responsible. Surely it is not unreasonable to ask to postpone everything until 12.15.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I genuinely appreciate the words of my hon. friend who is a very distinguished Hon. Member of this House. I think that he also realizes and recognizes that when a statement is made it usually sets in motion a number of other activities and events so that it can be properly explained to the public at large.

I notice that Hon. Members were talking about 12 o'clock. The statement is before the respective Members now. Perhaps if I have a chance to explain it and elaborate as they follow through, it will be helpful to them in terms of responding. I submit that perhaps by the time I am finished it will in fact be 12 o'clock. With the very articulate and comprehensive explanation that I would provide to the House and the elaboration of some of the things contained in the statement, I think that Hon. Members will be much more enlightened and be able to respond more effectively.

As has been pointed out, as a Government we have made use of ministerial statements on many occasions. We believe that Parliament is where major and important statements should be made. There have been times when it has been absolutely impossible to get the notices to individual Members.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, have been around this House for a long time and have served in opposition. I can recall on many occasions that we were given an advance copy of a statement, or sometimes not even an advance copy of a statement, simply notice; perhaps at five or ten minutes to the hour, or during Question Period we would receive a copy of the statement and we would have to adjust our minds to responding to that statement.

Mr. Prud'homme: It was wrong then.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, it was wrong. In all deference to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I think he would agree that we as a Government have tried to improve that situation.

I have to say to the Hon. Member opposite that the decision was only concluded by Cabinet this morning. It was impossible to give notice at a much earlier stage. I regret it very much. It is not my pattern, it is not my tradition, and it is not my custom. It is not our Government's tradition. I explained to the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and I tried to explain to the hon. critic, my friend who represents his province so eloquently and the transport industry so well. I tried to make that explanation. I am not attempting to use the House of Commons in a callous fashion. I regret it very much, and I apologize to Hon. Members. I hope that with the fullness of time and the appropriateness of the statement that I am going to make they will understand and be in a position within 15 or 20 minutes to respond. I know that they will respond with vigour, conviction, and in a comprehensive manner.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has indicated that he plans to proceed regardless of the suggestion made by yourself or by others in this House in terms of a more businesslike manner in which to proceed.

I do wish to indicate clearly that I take exception to the position taken by the Hon. Deputy House Leader when he blames this debacle on the Member from Winnipeg. The Government has obviously made a gross error in bungling even the introduction of this major announcement, and it is a major announcement.

If this is the manner in which the Government plans to introduce this major change in government policy, God help us in terms of what that change will actually result in.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I too am disappointed that the Government has decided not to wait until 12 or 12.15 p.m., which would have been in the spirit of reform that we were told was introduced in this place, along with respect for members of all Parties who do not sit on the cabinet benches. I am sure my friend from British Columbia, although he has only recently arrived on the cabinet benches, is outraged, but is compelled by his cabinet solidarity to sit and say nothing.

• (1140)

Let me say to the Deputy Prime Minister that we hope this does not happen again. As I listened over the last 20 minutes of debate which Your Honour has wisely allowed, I have hardly had time to read the full 10 pages of the statement.

However, because Your Honour allowed this debate so that important points could be made, I nevertheless was able to focus on the important points being made and on the 10 page document.

With regret I now sit down and await the Minister's statement. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, if you know what I mean.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear one other Member on this point of order. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Government have considered that this is a very serious decision which they are about to announce. I am also wondering whether the Government has considered the impact of this statement, in particular on the stock markets. This is a matter which will result in the privatization of a significant portion—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He may well have a very important point, but it is beyond the point of order we are discussing.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a personal point of privilege. I did not want to raise the issue, but since the NDP House Leader raised it, I hope the Government will have the French copies available to all of us at this time, so that some members of my caucus who cannot work in the English language could follow and possibly read the document as soon as possible. Make it a practice, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. I was unaware of that.

[Translation]

I can assure you I was entirely unaware of the fact that no French copy is available for my colleague who wishes to take part in this debate. I think that is really going too far, Mr. Speaker. I know the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski). I know he is a reasonable man. I am sure he would agree to postpone his statement until 12.15 p.m. We are not asking for the moon!

[English]

May I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that we are now entering what perhaps will be the longest 12 weeks in a row since I have sat in Parliament. There will be no adjournment, nothing.

I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister knows that he will get my total co-operation if I could at times cool the atmosphere. However, it is going to be a hell of a long 12 weeks in the House, and this is not the way to proceed today.

It is a major announcement. We do not even have the French text. Mr. Speaker, you know that I am always sensitive when we talk about French and English.

[Translation]

But we don't even have the French copy. We cannot proceed at this time. Mr. Speaker, I suggest you make a special appeal to the Deputy Prime Minister and have the speech postponed. It is already 11.45 a.m.. Soon it will be noon, and we might go on talking until 12.15 p.m. Please try and show some co-operation. We aren't asking for the moon.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a very short intervention.

Mr. Nunziata: This is not the first time the Government has introduced matters in the House without having the document in both official languages, at a time when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government are critical of what is happening in the Province of Saskatchewan where minority language rights—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry about this because, as I said before, we have a tradition in this House of co-operation among the Parties and it includes giving the Opposition advance copies of Ministers' statements. Apparently, today that was not feasible. I listened carefully to the Deputy Prime Minister's statement.

[English]

I have made a suggestion which might resolve both complaints, that is, insufficient notice and the difficulty of not having a copy of the statement in our other official language.

I have listened very carefully to all Hon. Members, but I hope the House will bear with me when I say that, strictly speaking and under the rules of this place, I cannot unilaterally intervene. The Hon. Minister has the right at this time to make the statement.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED PARTIAL PRIVATIZATION OF CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I refer to the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I have apologized to him, and I want to assure him, although we did not have a copy in French, that copies are being sent to him right now. This is certainly not to be construed as an affront to him personally, or as an affront to my good friend the Deputy House Leader of the Liberal Party. I have tried to explain and I will continue to try to explain the reason for it. However, as I have said, we have made it a practice of trying to make as many statements in the House as outside the House. Quite frankly, according to past traditions, a statement of this nature would not have been made in the House; it would have been made outside the House.

I can assure Hon. Members that there will be lots of opportunity for debate. We are making a statement of government intentions, and I would hope Hon. Members would take it in that light.

I respect your tolerance and patience, Mr. Speaker, and I say to my hon. friends opposite that I appreciate their understanding, even though I know that if I were over there I would probably be doing the same. There is that understanding, and I guess it is one of the advantages of having had the opportunity to serve on both sides of the House, something which the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has not experienced and probably never will. Notwithstanding, I respect him as a colleague and as a friend. He always adds a lot of spice and vigour to debate in the House of Commons. I want to apologize to him as well for this misfortune. Hopefully he will understand and, as I go through the statement, he will recognize the importance of it and the implications.

My colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), tabled just a few moments ago the 1987 annual report of Air Canada. As one who has had the honour of serving as Canada's Minister of Transport, I have had the responsibility of being accountable to the House for Air Canada. I am thus particularly aware of the pride and expertise required of Air Canada's more than 22,000 employees necessary to achieve yet another successful year in providing safe and efficient air services to Canadians.

Air Canada's accomplishments are all the more impressive when the strong and competitive nature of the Canadian airline industry is considered. Air Canada has not operated under the protection of government regulation for several years. Indeed, the entire industry responded admirably to the inevitability of a freer market environment long before the National Transportation Act was passed.

Regulatory reform has increased competition and resulted in better service to all Canadians, whether through the three national airlines or the extensive and growing network of regional and local carriers which has provided better and more frequent service to many Canadian communities, particularly in the outer regions.

Rather than competing for a static, regulated market, Canada's airlines are now expanding the market by providing better service across Canada through innovation and efficiency. They are striving to meet the needs of the travelling public rather than the needs of a regulatory agency.

All airlines, including Air Canada, continue to serve important public purposes, but complete Crown ownership is not necessary to carry this out. In fact, the reverse may be true.

As Air Canada prepares itself for the 1990s, major new investments will be required. Air Canada must be able to make its own financial and capital decisions to remain and develop as a world-class airline company. Air Canada needs the same opportunities as its competitors to get the investment dollars it must have to grow. This morning the Cabinet committee of Planning and Priorities reviewed this matter and we have reached a decision.

[Translation]

Therefore, the Government has decided to allow Air Canada the freedom and financial options it needs to grow and continue to serve Canadians—while remaining Canadian-owned and controlled.

• (1150)

[English]

Consequently, legislation will be introduced shortly to permit all Canadians, but particularly Air Canada employees, to participate directly in the ownership of this internationally respected and successful airline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The legislation will permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public. Once the legislation is passed, appropriate financial regulatory steps are taken, and market conditions permit, the Board of Directors of Air

Canada will be asked initially to offer a treasury issue to all Canadians. On completion of this initial offering the Government's holding will be reduced to no less than 55 per cent of the shares of Air Canada.

In January of 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that while Air Canada was not for sale at that time "There may be some persuasive arguments in the case of Air Canada that some people can make in regard to the disposition of equity. I'll take a look at it, but Canada needs a national airline".

The policy announced today is fully consistent with the Prime Minister's statement to ensure the existence of a national airline while allowing for the disposition of equity so as to attract new capital which is clearly required.

Since that statement was made some three years ago we have taken a careful and exhaustive look at the industry and at Air Canada, and indeed there are persuasive arguments for taking this initiative at this time. Canada has now not one national airline but three. The results of regulatory reform and the passage of the National Transportation Act have created a new environment and with it a stable, viable, and very competitive airline industry in Canada.

In 1988, partly due to the policies of the Government and largely due to the remarkable success stories of the employees of Air Canada and its competitors, both Air Canada and the industry are ready. Indeed, blind devotion to state enterprises would be the only possible reason for not proceeding at this time. Government should not jeopardize the airline's future by denying it the chance it wants and has earned, after 51 years in the public sector, to fly independently.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: While full details of this initiative will be contained in the legislation and will be developed by the Board of Air Canada over the coming months, I wish to inform the House further today of a few of the most important provisions under which this initiative will proceed.

First, Air Canada will be directed to use innovative new approaches to ensure that as many Canadians as possible will have the opportunity to participate in the ownership of the airline. Second, an employee share purchase plan will be established and financed by Air Canada and will be ready at the time of the initial offering. Third, no individual shareholder will be permitted to own over 10 per cent of the publicly issued shares.

Ms. Mitchell: B.C.—BCRIC all over again.

Mr. Mazankowski: I know my socialist friends across the way don't like private enterprise except in Oshawa.

Fourth, cumulative foreign ownership will be subject to a restriction of 25 per cent of the publicly issued shares. Fifth, the Minister responsible for privatization will retain the Government's shareholding but will not intervene in Air Canada's commercial decisions. Sixth, the Government will instruct the Chairman of Air Canada's Board of Directors to vote its shares in accordance with the majority of the public shareholders. Therefore, it will be clearly an arm's length relationship.

The major operational and overhaul centres which have been built up over the years in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg are sources of great pride for Air Canada and fundamental to the success of this airline. No centres will be degraded. The overhaul base in Winnipeg will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada and an aircraft fleet will continue to be maintained there. These centres which have been built up over the years will be continued as the airline builds for the future in the new market-driven environment.

The provisions of the legislation and/or the articles of incorporation of the new company will ensure that the location of the corporate headquarters remains in Montreal, that the requirement that Air Canada provide services in both official languages consistent with the Official Languages Act will be maintained, as well as adherence to the Employment Equity Act. Air Canada employees can be assured, furthermore, that Air Canada policies such as those governing salaries, pensions, benefits, relationship with unionized workforce, official languages, and employment equity will be continued.

Of course, the National Transportation Act will continue to give the Government complete jurisdiction over critical areas such as safety and security, our first priorities in setting any transportation policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the privilege to announce the Government's decision with respect to the future of Air Canada.

[English]

It marks the ultimate success in the 51 year history of Air Canada. From a modest beginning it has grown to a vibrant, optimistic, and promising company of 22,000 employees, employees eager and capable of taking on the challenge of the 1990s in direct partnership with Canadians without Government in the middle.

I can think of no more appropriate way to conclude my statement than to quote Air Canada's own invitation to all Canadians to "share our tomorrows".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I should inform the House that I am advised that if under the circumstances representatives of the opposition Parties wish more time, the Government is in agreement with that. I take some guidance from the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to respond now and, of course, reserve the right to examine this statement in more detail by bringing out a huge fan to blow away the smoke, and by bringing out a construction crew to fold down the mirrors in order to ensure that we see the statement for just what it is.

We have a saying in the Province of Newfoundland. Of course, it is known across the country. It is frequently used in Newfoundland, namely, belling the cat when people try to present themselves as being all things to every special interest group. In addition it has been said that you cannot be half pregnant. The Government is today trying desperately hard to be half pregnant on the question of in respect of Air Canada and Air Canada's role within the country and within the country's transportation needs.

The most incredible thing in the statement of the Minister is that on the one hand he tells us that Air Canada needs to be privatized because it has reached a certain point in its existence and evolution where only privatization will allow it to be successful. On the other hand he spent some minutes in his statement telling us what a wonderful airline it was, that it is a leader in the world. In fact, Air Canada was the recipient only a few years ago of a major international award recognizing its contribution to airline travel in this country.

On the one hand, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is telling the people of Canada not to worry, Air Canada will continue its important public policy role. On the other hand, this Minister assures us that when we pass over the shares, it will be at arm's length. The Government will not tell the board of directors what to do. It will be entirely in the hands of the private sector. It will run this airline. Before he can draw another breath, he is again assuring us that the public purpose, the public policy and the public need will be looked after.

By now Canadians are wondering how we will identify what the public need is, and then ensure that that public need and purpose is fulfilled, when in the same breath we say it will be at arm's length, we will have nothing to do with it, the private sector will run it. Is the Minister really saying that Air Canada's public purpose will be fulfilled as determined by the private sector? That kind of a public purpose as determined by the private sector is far and away different from what may be the public purpose, the needs of the people of Canada as determined by the Parliament of Canada.

Let us examine the most blatant contradiction in the Minister's statement. It was a very interesting one. The statement that was made today was extremely sensitive when it was drafted. It was tailored to the fact that there is an election in Manitoba. In the written copy of the Minister's statement, there are a couple of summary pages, and I find this amusing. These are pages seven and eight in English and later pages in French. Let us examine what the Minister tells us. It is a delight to be here. We do not need any more preparation time.

The Minister tells us first that the Minister responsible for privatization will retain the Government's shareholding. The Government will retain 55 per cent after the first offering. In the first offering 45 per cent of the shares will be privatized. The Minister says that while we are a majority shareholder, the Minister responsible for privatization will hold those shares but will not intervene in Air Canada's commercial decisions. Did everyone hear that? That is qualifier number one.

What is qualifier number two? The Minister says that the Government will instruct the chairman of Air Canada's board of directors, the government-appointed chairman, to vote his shares in accordance with the majority of public shareholders. The chairman of the board who works for the Government and will continue to have 55 per cent of the shares will be told that he is to vote in accordance with what the 45 per cent of the shares that have been privatized are saying.

Number one, we will not exercise our majority position. Number two, our guy on the board will vote with the private sector which holds the minority position. That is qualifier number two. Do we all have that?

Now what is the next incredible thing the Minister says? The Minister then says that he wants to assure us that Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg are sources of great pride to Air Canada. Maintenance bases have been built up in those areas and all three of those bases will be continued. He goes on to say that they will be continued as the airline builds for the future in the new market-driven environment, and this was for the Manitoba election, that the Winnipeg overhaul base will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada and Air Canada's fleet will continue to be maintained there.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in good conscience, stand in the House and set out conditions which make it clear that the Government will no longer have any say in the operation of Air Canada, yet make clear that the minority shareholder, the privatized shares, will be running the show; that it will be a clear arm's-length relationship in the one breath and in the very next breath, for political purposes, tell the people of Manitoba not to worry because the base will be continued? The Minister cannot make that statement, and he knows it.

That is what I mean when I say that this Deputy Prime Minister is attempting a very difficult proposition today, which no one has yet managed, and that is to be half pregnant. The Deputy Prime Minister cannot assure the people of Manitoba who are in the middle of an election campaign and for whom this statement was crafted—the smoke and mirrors will disappear on April 26, the date of the election—that they will have the maintenance base, the many jobs and the technology in that regional centre, when he told them in his previous breath that it is the private sector, at arm's length from the Government, that will determine the future of this airline. He cannot have it both ways.

I say that what the Minister is really telling the people of Manitoba—or for that matter, the people of Toronto, the people of Montreal and the people of Stephenville, Newfoundland, from where I come, a place that now has an Air Canada jet service—is that he does not know what commercial decisions will be made in the future. What he does know is that whatever the nature of those decisions will be, the Government will no longer have the ability to interfere. The Government will no longer have the ability to intervene, to give guidance or to ensure that an airline built with the dollars of the taxpayers of Canada to serve the country from British Columbia to Newfoundland will continue to serve on that basis.

This airline will operate on the principle of the bottom line, even though the taxpayers, having built this airline over 50 years, retain a majority of the shares. That is what being half pregnant means. That is why people who attempt that kind of proposition have no credibility and cannot be taken seriously.

I say to the Deputy Prime Minister, a gentleman to whom I normally listen attentively, a gentleman who is normally a straight shooter, that his attempt to qualify the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the future of Air Canada, by saying that what the Prime Minister really said was that Air Canada would be sold at an appropriate moment, as we say in Newfoundland, takes all the nerve of a toothache. That would need the face of a robber's horse, and of course we know what part of the robber's horse we see when it is running away, and it is not the part that has the bit in its mouth.

To say that the Prime Minister did not make a clear statement on Air Canada is to defy the facts and the record. The Globe and Mail of January 15, 1985, ran a big banner headline reading: "PM says CBC, Air Canada not for sale". It did not say that the PM said that Air Canada might be for sale, may be for sale, could be for sale or shall be for sale. It said that Air Canada is not for sale.

The Deputy Prime Minister stood up today to tell the House of Commons, and through the House of Commons the people of Canada, that this is a part of the Prime Minister's master plan. I say to the Prime Minister that there really is no Santa Claus either. He will figure that out one of these days.

On January 15, 1985 the Prime Minister said that some people want to buy the CBC but the CBC is not for sale and Air Canada is not for sale. That is what the Prime Minister said. Today, we have once again discovered the value of the Prime Minister's word and the Prime Minister's favourite expression, "sacred". He says that aeroplanes are sacred instruments of travel, that the House of Commons is a sacred instrument of communication and that promises are sacred commitments to the people in the land where they live. We found out that that sacred trust is not worth the paper The Globe and Mail printed it on.

The Deputy Prime Minister today has come here with a policy that is in direct contradiction with the assurance that no less a person than the Prime Minister of Canada gave Canadians on the future of their national airline. That cannot be wishy-washied or shilly-shallied away by a few choice phrases on the part of the Deputy Prime Minister here today.

One wonders about competence. The Government cannot even bring in a statement today with the normal, traditional, courteous advance notice to the Opposition. It cannot even manage to avoid that kind of a crisis. That Government will now try to manage the privatization of Air Canada. That would lead one to be very worried about the Government's plan.

The Government has announced today that in the first issue of shares 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada will be sold, with the intention being, I suppose, because it is not clear, that there will be a second share issue following which 100 per cent of the shares of Air Canada will have been sold. The Minister stands in his place, puffs out his chest and lowers his voice, much like his seat-mate to the right, the Prime Minister, does from time to time, and then he says that this means that Canadians will be able to own Air Canada. Have you ever heard such a bit of double-speak in all your life, Mr. Speaker? Who do you think owns Air Canada right now, the Shah of Iran? Canadians own Air Canada.

The Minister tells us that we have entered into an environment of deregulation, a brand new day for Canada. It reminds me of the words we heard during the last election campaign, "inflicting prosperity on the nation". In Atlantic Canada they are not calling it an infliction, they are calling it an affliction.

In this new day of deregulation, the Deputy Prime Minister says that we now have three national airlines. I like Max Ward. I think he is a dynamic fellow. I think he is going places. I think he is a great Canadian entrepreneur. I think he has done exciting things for the airline industry. However, not even Max Ward, in the middle of his fantasies between the hours of 2 a.m. and 4 a.m. prior to waking, would describe Wardair as a third national airline. That may be where he is attempting to go and, God bless him, we wish him well. We hope he gets there. However, Wardair is not a national airline. There are two national airlines. One is Canadian International and the other is Air Canada. In the deregulated environment that we have lived in for the last two and a half or three years the airline industry in Canada is more concentrated than we have ever seen it before.

In conclusion, let me say that this statement is obviously the first step before the Government announces which company will supply the replacement aircraft for Air Canada's 727 fleet. There is great concern in the Province of Manitoba, where the 727 is serviced, that as it is replaced Manitoba could lose jobs. This statement is clear evidence that the Government cannot guarantee Manitoba that the replacement aircraft will be maintained in Manitoba, no more than it can guarantee any other part of Canada that Air Canada services will continue. That is the blunt reality. That is not my interpretation. The words are there and the Government simply did not have the good sense to realize what a contradiction it had committed to paper.

A final word, Mr. Speaker. Bilingualism cannot be assured by the Government as a continuing characteristic of Air Canada if that corporation and its future is placed in the hands of minority shareholders. The Government is walking away from that commitment. Bill C-72 says that a Crown corporation means a corporation ultimately accountable through a Minister to Parliament for the conduct of its affairs. Under this plan Air Canada will not be a Crown corporation and the Government will not be able to guarantee that it will continue to provide bilingual services. The Government is again attempting to be half pregnant and generate as much smoke as possible.

Mr. Mazankowski: I guess I should have given you more time.

Mr. Tobin: This is a very disappointing statement. As I said before, you would need to have the face of a robber's horse to try and make it fly in this place. Air Canada, as presently constituted, flies very well, thank you very much, and we do not need this kind of half-baked scheme.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that this statement, which the Minister tried to smuggle in without giving adequate notice, got such a sharp negative reaction from Members on the opposition side. It should have had the same opposition from members on the government side if they really gave any consideration to the important step being taken.

We are changing a system which has existed for more than 50 years. We are doing it, not because there is a need for it, not because there has been any evidence that Air Canada is not efficient or has not operated for the benefit of the people of Canada as a publicly-owned corporation, but because of the blind ideological belief of the Conservative Government that the private sector can do anything better than the public sector. Yet there is no evidence of that at all.

As the Minister pointed out, Air Canada was established more than 50 years ago as a publicly-owned Crown corporation. This was done under a Liberal Government and Minister, Mr. C. D. Howe, who had the closest association with the big business community of Canada of any Minister at that time or probably since that time. Why did he do it? Not because he was a great believer in the virtues of public ownership. He did it for two reasons. First, because he realized the absolute necessity for Canada to have an air traffic system, and because he knew, as a result of his conversations and consultations with important leaders in the private sector, that they were not prepared to move in this direction. This was for a very good reason from their point of view. They could not see that they would make a profit at that time. After all, that is why private business functions. We do not question that. They operate if and when they can see a profit. They could not see a profit at that time so they were not prepared to do it. Mr. Howe and the then Liberal Government decided that we needed a national air service and established a Crown corporation.

Air Canada has been an efficient company. Even the Minister said that today. It has provided the people of Canada with high quality service, and not just in the high density traffic areas. Any company can make money serving people who want to fly from Toronto to Montreal or Ottawa or Vancouver. Over the years Air Canada has done what the private companies did not want to do because they could not make a profit. I do not blame them for that. That is the reason they are in business. However, Air Canada provided service to the sparsely-populated areas of Canada. It supplied service to small towns; for example, to Brandon, Manitoba. Since that town was sloughed off to the private companies it has had increasing difficulties getting service. The same is true of almost every other small town in this country. Competition and the need to show a profit every year has brought poorer service to most of the small towns and isolated areas in Canada.

We are seeing today another illustration of the failure of the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to live up to the promises. I have before me a news story which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on January 15, 1985. The headline is: "PM says CBC, Air Canada not for sale". The story goes on to say that the Prime Minister gave assurances that the federal Government had no plans to sell either the CBC or Air Canada. He is quoted as saying: "Some people want to buy the CBC. The CBC is not for sale. Air Canada is not for sale." That is what the Prime Minister said.

The people of Canada agree today with what the Prime Minister said in 1985. On March 5, 1988, The Globe and Mail published an Environics poll concerning the selling of Crown corporations. The question was asked: Do you think the Government should or should not sell Air Canada? The response was: should, 31 per cent; should not, 51 per cent. It was the same in almost every region.

A similar poll which appeared in The Toronto Star on March 31, 1981, conducted by Angus Reid. The poll asked whether or not the following corporations were well run. With respect to Air Canada, 63 per cent said it was well run and 20 per cent said it was not well run. Fifty-three per cent said the Government should not sell Air Canada to the private sector while 35 per cent said it should sell.

An overwhelming majority of Canadians agree with the position taken by the Prime Minister in 1985. It is not the people who have changed but the Prime Minister, who is reneging on the promise he made in 1985.

The Government has prided itself on being different than the former Liberal Government. It said it would consult with the people and its employees. I am told that the employees who work for Air Canada were not consulted about this proposal to partially privatize Air Canada. There have been no discussion between their unions and the Government or the Minister since last fall. The Government talked about consultation and co-operation with the people, yet it has not consulted or co-operated with its 22,000 employees who work for Air Canada.

We are told by the Minister that the reason for this privatization is that, like most airlines, Air Canada's airplanes are reaching the end of their service and must be replaced. It will have to spend large sums of money to purchase new, modern and more efficient airplanes. We do not question that. But where is the evidence that Air Canada as a Crown corporation cannot get the money it needs, as do other companies, to replace equipment?

If there are any questions about the ability of Crown corporations to borrow the money they need, one need only look at the provinces, virtually all of which have publicly owned utility companies. Every one of them has gone or will go to the market to borrow billions of dollars. There have been major expansions in Quebec, as well as new hydro-electric dams and power stations in Manitoba and British Columbia. There are major expansions of nuclear power plants in Ontario. All of these systems are publicly owned and none are having difficulty in going to the market to borrow the money they need for that expansion. In fact, they are having less difficulty than private companies because they are backed by the financial ability of the people of those provinces.

There is no question in my mind that Air Canada, as the publicly owned corporation it has been for the last 50 years, could continue to borrow the money it needs without this kind of privatization.

The Government is not taking this step because Air Canada cannot get the money but because it really does not believe in public ownership. It sincerely believes that the private sector can do anything better than the public sector.

We have other reservations about this policy. The Minister stated: "On completion of this initial offering, the Government's holding will be reduced to no less than 55 per cent of the shares of Air Canada". We have every right to be suspicious about that statement. The initial offering will be 45 per cent for the minority. Since the Government does not believe in public ownership and has no real commitment to it, what is to prevent it from presenting another offering in the future so that the Government's share of ownership will be 45 per cent or 35 per cent? That is just one of our main concerns.

The price for the shares that will be sold soon after a Bill passes Parliament will be low. It will be low because the Government is proposing the sale of a minority share, with no takeover possibility in the near future. We have some very canny and shrewd investors in Canada, and sometimes we worry about the ethics of some of them. I believe some of these large investors will be quite willing to buy minority shares at a low price because they believe, justifiably so, that in the not too distant future more shares will be put on the market. At that time they could take control of the company and the value of the shares would rise sharply.

Let me remind the House that among the big winners in the sale of shares are the brokers. We know that in the takeover battle Mr. Campeau carried on in the United States recently the brokers and people involved in the buying and selling of shares made hundreds of millions of dollars for their involvement. This sale will bring in about $300 million, if that is what 45 per cent of the shares will bring in. They will get 45 per cent of a company which probably has assets worth $5 billion. This proposal comes from a Government which prides itself on being a sound business operator.

Let me deal with one more point which is very important to me and the people of Winnipeg. It concerns the Government's promise that the work done at the maintenance facility in Winnipeg will continue. I think the people of Winnipeg, for very good reasons, will be very upset, skeptical and suspicious. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) shakes his head. I was here when the former Government permitted Air Canada, or as it then was called, Trans-Canada Air Lines, to move its head office and most of its facilities from Winnipeg, where they were first established, to Montreal, step by step. What do we have now? What we have is a promise that the present maintenance work will continue to be done in Winnipeg. But the present work is being done on DC-type aircraft. What happens when the DC-type aircraft are gone? What happens if Air Canada buys airbus aircraft?

Mr. Holtmann: It's a big hangar.

Mr. Orlikow: And we have seen lots of empty hangars in Winnipeg. We have seen the workforce in Winnipeg go from thousands to hundreds under a Liberal Government. The people of Manitoba are afraid that this is just one more step in the dissemination of the air industry in Manitoba which was so important for so many years, for generations. We are going to oppose this Bill in every way we can, both in Parliament and outside.

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, concerning A Review of the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings].

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, there is a particular point I think should be raised right now. I just heard that a press conference on this report has just ended. The press conference, held by two Opposition Members, concerned a report not yet tabled in this House.

I realize the report was supposed to be tabled around 11.05 a.m. and that the press conference had been called for 11.15 and would end at noon. However, the press conference was held without the Committee Chairman, without a single Member of the Government being present, and before the report was even tabled in this House, which is highly irregular.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege as soon as I have all the facts about a situation which to me is irregular to say the least and a reflection of the cavalier attitude of the Opposition.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member has any complaints he should direct them to his own Government and especially to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), because of the way he made his statement about the privatization of Air Canada. If the Hon. Member's privileges were breached, they were breached by his own Government, and especially by the Minister of Transport because of the way he made his statement on the privatization of Air Canada. I think the Hon. Member raised a question that has nothing to do with the Opposition and a great deal to do with his own Government.

Mr. Lanthier: Madam Speaker, with all due respect for the Hon. Member's experience in this House, and far be it from me to measure my experience against his, but nevertheless, if we had decided to delay tabling this report until tomorrow morning or next week or even this afternoon or another more appropriate time, what would have happened? Doesn't it mean the press would have been advised of the report by Opposition Members a week before the report was officially tabled in the House? I still say this is irregular, and in time I intend to raise a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) has informed the House of something which happened this morning and has told the Chair that he is reserving his right to raise the question of privilege. After having checked the facts, if the Hon. Member wishes to do so, I am sure that he will take the usual means, that is he will state those facts in writing to the Chair who will then make a decision.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure and, indeed, an honour, to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 dealing with the free trade deal.

This petition is signed by quite a large number of constituents who are of the view that the trade deal between Canada and the United States will have a serious impact on our ability as a country to continue independent action on economic, cultural and political matters. They are of the understanding that the agreement will result in a loss of jobs in a number of sectors of the economy as well as a number of regions of Canada.

The petitioners simply call upon the Parliament of Canada to dissolve in order to enable an election to take place so that the people of Canada can hear the views presented by the different Parties on the matter and can make a decision on something which will have a profound impact on their lives and, perhaps more importantly, on their children's lives and their children's children's lives. They are asking that they have a chance to have input into this debate during a national general election.

DOMICILIARY CARE FACILITIES FOR VETERANS

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the veterans of the region of Bathurst, New Brunswick. They request the establishment of domiciliary care facilities for veterans at the Chaleur General Hospital or one of the nursing homes nearby.

I am sure you would be interested to know, Madam Speaker, that presently the families of the veterans of this area care for their loved ones at a considerable distance from their homes. They ask that this House remedy the situation as soon as possible by establishing domiciliary care facilities for veterans in the Bathurst area.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, as a result of negotiations, I think that the House is willing to defer applications made under Standing Order 29 till 3 p.m. to facilitate consideration of certain items on the orders of the day and that the Speaker himself is aware of my request and will hear me at 3 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comments. There has been indeed an agreement between the various parties and the Chair and applications under Standing Order 29 will be heard after the Oral Question Period.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, April 11, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the Ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 47 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, as I was saying yesterday on debate on this Bill, there is ample evidence to show that in most cases privatizers are free-loaders and that without public investment the private corporate sector will not invest. That was amplified again this morning in the case of the announcement concerning Air Canada.

One can ask how the employees in the uranium industry feel about this. I refer to the employees of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and the employees of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation which corporations are to merge. There are two major unions involved in this matter. The union of energy and chemical workers represents the employees at Cluff Lake mine in northern Saskatchewan in which SMDC holds a minority share. The steelworkers represent employees at the Key Lake mine in which both SMDC and Eldorado have a share and the Rabbit Lake mine. Both mines are in northern Saskatchewan. There are three steelworkers' locals involved in Eldorado at Port Hope.

Both these unions have been the subject of glowing testimonials by the former Minister of State for Privatization concerning the prospects of the new company, in particular the shareholdings which will go to them. This is a promise which is quite vague. Despite it the unions and employees concerned are implacably opposed to the privatization of these companies. There are many good reasons for this.

The Canadian labour movement was four-square in its support of the disarmament and non-proliferation treaty. It has been four-square in its support of full and adequate environmental, safety and health concerns. Members of the labour movement believe, and I think with justification, that these matters are in jeopardy or will receive less attention by a privately owned company.

In this respect one has only to look at what happened in Uranium City and how a policy for one-industry towns is desperately overdue. It is not too late in the uranium industry and in a number of others for a special fund to be established which would see so many dollars per tonne, per kilogram or pound of production out of all production set aside. When an ore body is gone in 20 years, 30 years, or 40 years the community in which it existed, all the businesses, homes and employees will be protected. These funds would be for retraining, for moving expenses and early retirement. People could be paid for the businesses which they will lose and for the homes which are boarded up. Such a national policy is long overdue. We need only look to Uranium City to see the terrible situation which transpired there.

Since this is such a bad Bill I therefore wish to move an amendment as follows:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: "Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestitute of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair recognizes the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I do so even more determinedly than in the early stages of the debate, given the announcement by the Government today about its intention to begin the privatization of Air Canada. That move is just one other indication of the determination of the Government to continue at an accelerated pace its program of privatization.

It is a program based not on whether Crown corporations are operating efficiently, or on meeting the needs of the people in the areas in which they operate, or on an examination of the reasons former Governments established these Crown corporations, but rather on the Government's rigid, ideological belief that anything private industry does will operate better, more efficiently, more profitably and more in the interests of the public than a publicly owned corporation. There is no evidence of that.

The fact is that we have never had in Canada at the level of the country as a whole a Government, a CCF Government, an NDP Government, or a Government with social democratic ideas, which believes that in many areas of life in the country public ownership would meet the needs of the people better than private ownership. All the Crown corporations we have in place were established by Liberal or Conservative Governments. Very often they were established because the private operators in those areas, and I am thinking of the railways, were virtually bankrupt and thus unable to fulfil their obligations in terms of meeting the needs of the people of Canada by providing transportation facilities.

At the time to which I refer the Government took over all the private companies which were virtually bankrupt. It paid much more than should have been paid for them. It established the Canadian National Railway as a Crown corporation owned by the people of Canada.

This proposal of the Conservative Government in Ottawa and the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan to take the publicly owned Eldorado Nuclear Limited, which is owned by the people of Canada and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, which is owned by the people of Saskatchewan, and amalgamate them, privatize them and sell shares in them is not based on factual evidence that these companies will operate better or more efficiently than the presently publicly owned companies, but on the ideological views of the Government.

I should make it clear that those views are not the views of the people of Canada. In recent polls the people of Canada have shown quite clearly that they believe that most, if not all, of the Crown corporations are well run. They believe in public ownership. In a recent poll conducted by Angus Reid the question asked was, "Are the following Crown corporations well run or not well run?" For Air Canada, 63 per cent believe it is well run; 20 per cent believe it is not well run. For CBC, 62 per cent believe it is well run; 25 per cent believe it is not well run. For Canadian National, which we know has had its problems, as have all publicly or privately owned railway companies, 47 per cent believe it is well run, and 30 per cent believe it is not well run. For Petro-Canada, another company that the former Conservative Government promised to privatize and which this Conservative Government will probably want to bring forward proposals to privatize, 59 per cent of the people of Canada say it is well run, and only 20 per cent say it is not well run.

The Angus Reid poll also asked the question, "Should the Government sell any of the following Crown corporations to the private sector?" The poll lists the following results: Air Canada, sell, 35 per cent, not sell, 53 per cent; CBC, sell, 27 per cent, not sell, 62 per cent; Canadian National, sell, 31 per cent, not sell, 54 per cent; Petro-Canada, sell, 37 per cent, not sell, 49 per cent. That is the view of the people of Canada with respect to privatization of the major Crown corporations in this country. They are opposed to it.

We oppose the sale of Eldorado Nuclear because we believe it is a bad deal. Why? Because the deal is so structured that the public sector takes the risks and obligations, as it has up until now, and the private sector will get the profits, not only from the commercial activities of the company when Eldorado and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation are merged, but also from the heavy public subsidies which are given the uranium mining industry in the form of favourable taxation, marketing arrangements, and sweetheart contracts.

We have had no assurances from the Government that it recognizes the sacrifice of the public sector and the public interest in this deal. It is clear that this deal has been structured so that the Government can say that privatization works. One only need look at the share price. What the Government does not say, and what it wants the public to ignore, is that in order for this stock flotation deal to succeed, which is all it really is, the public sector will underwrite the risks by assuming the debt of Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan company, and the federal Government will assume the further liability of Eldorado's nuclear waste problems at Port Hope at a cost of perhaps up to $75 million.

This take-back of debt has been described by the financial advisers to the Government as necessary for the flotation. I wish to remind Members of Parliament that Eldorado's debts are substantial. They are in the range of $550 million. The federal Government will receive from the newly merged company approximately $250 million leaving $300 million that must be made up in the sale of shares in the new company before the Government breaks even on its debt obligation alone. This says nothing about the cumulative investment which has been made in Eldorado in the form of government equity.

The Government needs a high share price or else it will wind up with a brick in its hands. We know what happened in British Columbia with BCRIC, the privatization of the Bennett Social Credit Government; it issued shares at $5 which now trade at 90 cents.

Is there any certainty of a high share price? No, because uranium markets are currently in chronic over-supply and prices are depressed. If the United States were once more to close its market to foreign producers, in response to the distress of its own suppliers, conditions would be chaotic. Of course, the trade deal that we talked about would do nothing for Canadian producers caught in this bind.

For proof of what I have stated, let me refer to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on March 31, 1988. The article was entitled, "U.S. Senate passes bill on uranium that would undercut free-trade pact", and it is under the by-line of Jennifer Lewington. I wish to quote a few paragraphs from that article:

> One part of the Senate bill, which passed by a vote of 62 to 28, would penalize use of foreign uranium, including imports from Canada—a direct violation of the proposed trade agreement.

The article further states:

> One Canadian official who monitored the floor fight yesterday, said the Senate bill "absolutely" violates a "standstill" clause in the U.S.-Canada free-trade agreement in which both sides pledged not to go against the terms before the deal is implemented January 1, 1989 . . .
> Under the bill, between now and 1994, U.S. utilities that use foreign-enriched uranium for between 37.5 and 50 per cent of a their supply would pay a penalty fee of $200 (U.S.) a kilogram. The penalty would decline in time over a 12-year period.

It is not surprising they passed a Bill like this. As this article states, Senator Jeff Bingaman, a Democrat from New Mexico where a large part of the American uranium comes from, supports the uranium Bill, and criticized the free trade deal with Canada. He said, "In its present form, the proposed agreement will place our uranium supply and industry in jeopardy". He also criticized the trade deal for retaining restrictions on U.S. investment in Canadian uranium while allowing "Canadian ownership, financing and subsidization of the industry".

The prospects for this company when it is privately owned are less than perfect. The ability of the company to repay the debt which it is undertaking when it purchases this company from the Government of Canada is, to say the least, doubtful.

I wish to talk for a few moments about the reaction of the people who work in the industry. After all, they have a major stake in the continued successful operation of these two companies. Two of the major unions representing workers at Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Corporation are the steel workers and energy and chemical workers unions. The energy and chemical workers represent employees of the Cluff Lake mine in northern Saskatchewan in which the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation holds a minority share. The steel workers union represent employees at the Key Lake Mine in which the Saskatchewan company and Eldorado hold minority shares, and the Rabbit Lake Mine. Both those mines are in northern Saskatchewan. The steel workers union represent three locals at the Eldorado Uranium Refinery at Port Hope, Ontario. Both of those unions have been subject to the growing testimonial by the former Minister responsible for privatization about the prospect for the new company, and particularly the shareholders which will go to them.

When introducing the Bill on March 29, the former Minister said:

> The new company will employ over 1,000 people. Those people represent a resource to the company as important as the uranium reserves it owns. I can assure the employees of SMDC and Eldorado that both the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan have placed a high priority on ensuring that employee concerns are adequately addressed through the negotiations leading to the final merger agreement and through the privatization process thereafter. Maintaining a committed, motivated workforce is clearly in the interests of the corporation and all Canadians.
> That is why the agreement stipulates that employees be given the opportunity to participate in the ownership of the company. The details of that plan will be developed as the company moves into the privatization phase.

Despite this supposed shareholding—and it is a promise although it is quite vague—the unions concerned are implacably opposed to the privatization. Why? There are many good reasons about which they have told us. I am sure they would have told the Minister and the Government about them. I am sure that the Government would have listened if it were really concerned about the views and feelings of the workers.

Let me deal with the question of safety. Perhaps the greatest concern of the workers and their unions is the federal Government pulling back in the safety area, safety in the broadest sense including occupational safety, environmental safety, and public health.

In the 1940s the federal Government recognized the importance of nuclear energy by first expropriating the assets of Eldorado mines and then using the declaratory power in the then BNA Act to take jurisdiction of the resource. This federal involvement and taking of responsibility underlines the seriousness with which nuclear energy was regarded and still should be regarded. The question now being asked by the unions and ourselves is, should the Canadian Government be backing out of the nuclear field when the problems which were beginning to be recognized when the declaratory power was invoked are now with us and are intensifying? We realize how much more serious and important are those problems.

Here are some of the issues which the unions have raised with us. They have talked about increased problems in nuclear plant safety and have used the United States model as an example. They have referred to the problem encountered at the Kerr-McGee company operations. Hon. Members will remember the Karen Silkwood case, which was made into a major movie, and the almost complete meltdown which occurred at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant. They also referred to the difficulties faced by the American people in getting information in both cases. The unions believe—and we believe it as well—that we would encounter similar difficulties here in Canada if these two companies were privatized.

We also have the specific Canadian example in the negotiation of federal regulations governing the nuclear industry between 1982 and 1988. There should have been tripartite discussions among labour, business, and Government. Without hands-on experience there will be less information for the federal Government to draw on.

The alternative is to use political pressure to get the federal Government to address safety questions. We have had continuing problems in Canada with radioactive waste and their disposition. The people in Manitoba are very concerned that Atomic Energy and the Government will try to dispose of waste plant material in northeastern Manitoba. They have made it quite clear that they do not want it.

It is no longer just a regulatory matter. Political leaders can be approached. As I indicated when I spoke earlier, we have the record of Mr. Roman and his complete opposition to taking known steps to protect the workers in his companies against the danger of being seriously and adversely affected health-wise in uranium mines.

The workers realize that there is tremendous political sensitivity to the nuclear industry. They know they can expect some justice in dealings with the employer when the employer is the Government, federal or provincial, because of this awareness. They know that the closure of the Eldorado mine at Uranium City in 1981 brought attention to the problem of what happens, when a mine closes, to workers living near the mine site who are carrying mortgages on the homes they have purchased. These homes are their only real savings. When the mine suddenly closes down they are left with nothing. They cannot sell their homes because very few people will be living in the area. Because the mines were publicly owned, the workers who had to leave Uranium City obtained a fairer settlement. It was not only a few who had to leave Uranium City; the whole population had to leave. The settlement at Uranium City was superior to what employees received when the Pine Point mine closed. It was operated by Cominco, a subsidiary of a great corporation which over the years has demonstrated little concern for its employees or the people of Canada—Canadian Pacific.

There is a great fear that in this deal the new private owners will be able to walk away from any facility which does not fit the corporate plan—in other words, any facility which does not provide adequate profits in the view of the new private owners—and the workers will have to pay the price.

There are two obvious examples—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I apologize but I must interrupt the Hon. Member as his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words about Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

The Bill which was put forward by the previous Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs would certainly make dramatic changes to the structure of the Canadian uranium mining industry. It would create a large new corporation by merging the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear Limited. Both companies have mining operations or shares in mining operations in Saskatchewan, as well as major refining and upgrading facilities at Blind River and Port Hope in Ontario.

This would create a major world-class Canadian uranium mining and processing company. I understand it will have some of the largest and lowest priced reserves in the country and will be able to compete on an international level. This is important for an industry which has been going through an extremely adverse period of time over the last several years during which world prices have dropped from the 1970 level of $40 to $50 per pound to around $17 U.S. per pound today. Of course this puts many companies in a position of not being able to compete in a world market situation, whereas the proposed Eldorado-Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation will be able to compete with low world market prices at the present time.

I understand from information provided to Members that the new company would have some 1,000 employees as well as some 400 employees in the Key Lake Mining Company. The over-all assets are estimated to be $1.6 billion with sales annually of some $500 million. The legislation does provide that the shares will be divested over a 7-year period and no Canadian shareholder will have more than 25 per cent of the shares and no non-Canadian will hold over 5 per cent of the shares.

We have here a merger of two major uranium mining companies. When we look at the documentation provided, though, we wonder why the Government was so generous in its arrangements with the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Devine. It appears that even though Eldorado resources have close to the same amount of assets, it ended up with a very small percentage of the ownership of the proposed new company. Eldorado has assets worth $950 million and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation has assets worth $973 million. Yet, the percentage of ownership in the deal will leave Eldorado with only 38.5 per cent and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Saskatchewan Government with some 61.5 per cent of the ownership in the company.

We must look at the Government's strategy in most of these privatizations. The strategy which applies to the Eldorado case is to sell the operating company and its assets, in this case for cash, and leave the debt with the Government of Canada. In that way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is able to take the cash realized from the sale of the shares and apply it to the current year's operation to reduce the deficit of the year. That was done in the Teleglobe case. The Minister was able to lower the deficit a year ago to below the $30 billion mark by selling off $500 million or $600 million worth of shares. I understand that that is the technique being used in this case, to leave the debt with the Government of Canada and apply whatever cash can be realized from the sale to the current operating year's deficit in order to reduce it.

In this case there is one other twist in that Eldorado resources has large environmental responsibilities in the town of Port Hope and surrounding townships for low-level nuclear waste from its refining and upgrading operations over the past years which must be cleaned up. The Government has made a commitment to do that. In this procedure the Government is selling the operating company to the private sector and leaving the financial responsibility for the environmental clean-up with the Government of Canada. Some of the documentation provided by the Government estimates the cost of that to be $100 million. Most of the responsibility for that will be left with the Government of Canada and not charged against the sale of the current corporation.

That does not seem to make much sense in that the Government of Canada will be left with all of these costs. The Minister will sell the company and get his cash, but the Government has not spelled out what it will do about the environmental clean-up of the low-level wastes in and around Port Hope or what it will cost. There is a formula presented in the documentation as to the sharing of that cost, but it appears that most of that will be left with the Government of Canada rather than charged against the Eldorado sale itself.

It is not even clear whether the Government is going to carry that out. The Prime Minister made a commitment in 1984 to do it. There has been a task force appointed and a proposal made for that environmental project, but no actual decision has been made on whether that task force report is to be acted upon in any way. Clearly the Tories have a bad record as far as Eldorado resources and the entire uranium mining industry is concerned. In 1979 when they came into power they immediately decided to put the new refining operation at Port Hope, even though the uranium in Ontario was being produced in the Blind River-Elliott Lake area.

When the Liberal Government came to power in 1980 we immediately acted upon a policy and commitment which we had made in the 1980 election campaign that we would locate refining and upgrading facilities for natural resources in and near the communities where those minerals were being processed or mined. That policy has resulted in a great deal of benefit for the town of Blind River. The $150 million refinery established there has created 180 jobs, provided important income for the community, and has provided a major industry for that town which lost its main sawmilling operation 10 years ago.

The other aspect in play in this agreement is that in the free trade agreement the Government gave up the further upgrading policy of the Government of Canada, that being that we would process and upgrade our uranium resources and other natural resources within our own country. In the free trade deal we gave up the right to that policy and could well face the prospect of the loss of the processing of uranium in our own processing facilities which could cost the Government several hundred million dollars. The idea of processing our uranium in the United States or European countries does not make sense, especially since the Government of Canada has gone to the expense of building major refining and processing industries in our country.

It is interesting to note that in establishing its refinery in Blind River, Eldorado resources brought in people from all over Canada; some from Port Hope, some from the Ottawa area, some from Uranium City. It has developed a very good working relationship with that community. It is often described as a model corporate citizen. I suppose there are always some tensions between a major player and municipal corporations, but I think that on the whole the arrangement in Blind River has been excellent. There has been great co-operation in assisting, through corporate donations, in the provision of major facilities such as their sportsplex, civil recreation facility, and golf course. They have played a major role in the community. I think that it has been a model relationship and one that has been extremely helpful. I would hope that in the divestiture, those commitments and promises made through the policies of Eldorado resources to provide assistance to the communities, both in recreation and in civic development, will be maintained. That would be a major concern of my constituents and of the residents of the Town of Blind River.

We know that under this divestiture the ownership of the company will move to the shareholders of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. The headquarters will move from Ontario to Saskatchewan and 61 per cent of the control will be moved with it to the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. There must be a firm and determined commitment from the new corporation that will be created, Eldorado Resources, to maintain those responsibilities to the community.

It is interesting that in the free trade agreement, which the Government has been ballyhooing in its $12-million advertising campaign designed to sell it to Canadians, not once has it been mentioned that we are giving up our policy of further upgrading uranium resources in Canada. Surely every Government of the past has struggled to do further upgrading of resources, but that will be given up, supposedly in return for improved assess to the U.S. market.

This week we heard that the United States Senate has already passed a resolution which will impose penalties on United States utilities that use foreign uranium to meet more than 30 per cent of their needs. Of course, this resolution has not been passed by the United States Congress yet so it has not become law, but we are still very unclear on whether or not there will be total access.

A legal injunction is now before the Supreme Court of the United States. That court may rule on a previous decision of a lower court in that regard as well. Clearly, wide-open access to the United States market is in question. If the United States is not competitive, I do not think that we will ever have it.

If the Bill to which I referred is voted down in Congress, and if the legal questions before the Supreme Court of the United States are ruled on in a certain way, there will still be no guarantee that inefficient U.S. producers in New Mexico and those states which have imposed dumping duties on western Canadian potash will not do the identical thing to uranium. As long as the Americans are getting their share of the market and are able to compete, the markets will somehow stay open. However, if they are not, there will be countervailing duties.

It would not be difficult for inefficient American producers to claim that Eldorado and SMDC are subsidized because they received government guarantees for their debt instruments. Clearly, the American producers would not have any trouble showing that these companies were dumping against the Elliot Lake producers who sell to the Ontario Government, because they could prove that uranium was being sold in the U.S. at a lower price than it was being sold to Ontario Hydro.

Whether or not there is a free trade, if United States producers are threatened they will maintain control on imports, either through the congressional system, the regulatory system or countervailing duties. That will become very important to the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Resources.

Over the years, no company other than the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation has demanded that it be exempt from the further upgrading policies of the Government of Canada. It is content to see its uranium processed in the United States. If this Bill goes through and the corporation is formed, I hope it will have enough concern for the communities of Blind River and Port Hope that it will want to see uranium upgraded in Canada rather than going to the United States as yellowcake.

Again, I would hope that the services, the labour relations and the worker benefits which have applied to Eldorado workers in places like Blind River and Port Hope will be maintained and that the company's commitment to the communities, both through good corporate citizenship and through grants and assistance to the communities, as well as its policy of operating a high level of activity, will be maintained and that in giving up its right to further upgrading of uranium in Canada the Government will not undercut that commitment.

There is a certain balance to be maintained in the production of uranium-trioxide in Blind River and the upgrading of it at the Port Hope facility. It is not clear whether or not Eldorado's Port Hope facility can meet the full capacity of the Blind River operation.

Those are some of the concerns I have about this Bill. I understand that we will be dealing with it in committee. This is a corporation with very rich reserves that can compete on a world scale. It is important to do further processing of our uranium and natural resources, and I want to see that done in an efficient way so that we are making the very best use of our resources and providing the maximum employment in communities like Blind River in which major Eldorado resources processing plants are located.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the amendment moved by my colleague from Regina. That amendment suggests that there should be a delay of six months before this Bill is read for the second time. Of course, the reasoning behind such a decision to delay second reading consideration is itself deeply affected by our understanding of the context within which this privatization is taking place.

Yesterday the chairperson of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs stood up and said this privatization was the last of a set of steps taken under the Canada Development Investment Corporation. Those steps included Teleglobe, de Havilland, Canadair, and now Eldorado. Yet today we have an entirely different situation because the Government suddenly decided to dramatically expand its efforts to privatize crucial public institutions, which have been at the heart of this country for years, by announcing that, and I quote from the statement of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), that this legislation will permit the transfer of all Air Canada's shares to the public.

That puts an entirely different framework around discussions about privatizing Crown corporations such as Eldorado. For that reason it is absolutely crucial that we postpone consideration of this specific decision until we can get a sense of this rather bizarre and remarkably sudden step taken by the Government. It was done so quickly that the Minister's statement could not even be handed to opposition critics before it was delivered in the House.

We now have a sudden and tremendous expansion of the scope of the privatization thrust by the Government. That, it seems to me, forces this House to take very seriously the amendment of my friend which suggests that this legislation be not now read a second time, but that it be done six months hence. It is quite clear that the Government has not spelled out its strategy with respect to privatization. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has not articulated the strategy. In fact, if anything, he has articulated promises in the past which now seem to be in direct conflict with the strategy with which the Government seems to be proceeding.

I am sure I do not need to remind you that in January of 1985 the Prime Minister said Air Canada was not for sale. Yet this morning we have an announcement that all of Air Canada's shares will be transferred to the private sector. That is a complete contradiction of a promise made not during an election campaign but during the current term of the Government. That suggests that the Government is not following a strategy. If there was a strategy to get the CDIC portfolios transferred to the private sector, as was claimed by the chairperson of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs yesterday, it has now been abandoned. Instead, a tremendously dangerous new step has been taken in the Government's attempt to severely damage the public sector. That step marks a major escalation in the approach the Government has taken to this point.

As well, this step has been taken without dozens of key questions being answered. How will it be possible in this far-flung country for us to maintain public service to isolated communities which are difficult to serve? What constraints will exist on these companies once they are privatized? How will it be possible for the Government to give up control of a key institution like Air Canada and at the same time say it will keep the maintenance facilities in Montreal and Winnipeg? You cannot hand over control to someone else and yet tell them what they are supposed to do. It is not possible. That is a complete contradiction.

Neither is it possible to say that Air Canada employees can be assured that policies such as those governing salaries, pensions, other benefits, relationships with unionized workers and employment equity will be continued. You cannot say that because you are passing control of this key national institution to the private sector.

As I said, this morning the House was given a complete redefinition of the privatization strategy which has functioned up to this point. Given that, it is not possible to look at the isolated case of Eldorado Nuclear at this stage and come to any kind of sensible conclusion. The broader strategy is not spelled out, and it must be there to justify a set of privatizations such as the Government seems to be undertaking. That is why we have moved this amendment.

We moved this amendment despite some of the tortuous argument presented to us this morning, suggesting that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has somehow maintained his previous position with respect to Air Canada. It is not possible to say that Air Canada is not for sale and then announce on behalf of the Government and Cabinet that Air Canada will be entirely sold to the public. It is not possible to do that without making a complete U-turn, as the Government has done. In doing so, it has thrown completely into question any strategy or framework it has so far followed with respect to privatization. What will be the result of this new strategy for communities like mine, for communities in eastern Canada and communities in isolated parts of western Canada?

It is no accident that the polls concerning the operation of the Crown corporation talked about by the Deputy Prime Minister show that the Atlantic Provinces, British Columbia and the outlying parts of our country have the highest support for this airline as a national institution. In the case of British Columbia, 72 per cent of Canadians felt that Air Canada was well run. In the case of Atlantic Canada, it was 67 per cent compared to only 17 per cent and 19 per cent respectively who felt that it was not well run.

When asked whether any national institution should be sold, 53 per cent of British Columbians and 58 per cent of Atlantic Canadians were against the sale of Air Canada. I come from one of these more isolated constituencies which face serious problems with respect to airline service.

Since Canadian Airlines became an amalgamated institution, it has cut out its direct service into Windsor and decided to subcontract to a Canadian partner, as it calls it, which uses a smaller aircraft that is much more uncomfortable. We will see precisely the same kind of decisions take place on the part of Air Canada when it must look at its bottom line rather than consider national service and public accountability. That is why it is crucial that we accept this amendment and put off consideration of this Bill with respect to Eldorado Nuclear until we get a clear sense from the Government of what its new strategy represents.

At the moment, its new strategy looks certain to result in a dangerous shambles for the people from outlying Atlantic Canada, outlying western and northern Canada and for the people in places like southern and northern Ontario who will be hard hit as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are three minutes left. Does the Hon. Member wish to use that time after Question Period, or will we go into questions and comments?

Mr. Langdon: I am finished with my comments, Madam Speaker.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—EARLY MORNING PROTEST VIGILS HELD IN OTTAWA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this week the Ottawa Coalition against Political Executions in South Africa have been holding early morning vigils in front of the Langevin Block to raise awareness about the plight of many political prisoners who are now facing death in South Africa, part of whom are the Sharpeville Six. Their efforts seem to be falling on deaf ears given the Government's reluctance to act decisively on the South African question.

In 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) assured the membership of the United Nations that:

> If there is no progress in the dismantling of apartheid, our relations with South Africa may have to be severed absolutely.

The Prime Minister knows, as do all Canadians, that the Botha regime is not interested in taking steps to abolish apartheid. Why does the Prime Minister not face the fact that, unless the South African community can be economically and diplomatically isolated, South African political prisoners will continue to be put to death, development efforts in the neighbouring countries will continue to be sabotaged, and the African population will continue to live in a country where racism is an institutionalized way of life?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL SOIL CONSERVATION WEEK

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Soil Conservation Week. Soil is a resource that is degrading at an alarming rate. Total on-farm costs of land degradation in Canada are approaching $1 billion annually. It took Saskatchewan soils over 10,000 years to form, yet in less than 100 years of farming nearly half of the organic matter has been lost.

That is why we should applaud the three-year $500,000 joint Federal-Provincial Soil Conservation Program called "Save our Soils". The purpose of this venture is to encourage soil and crop management practices by farmers. This program aims at raising public awareness, establishing on-farm demonstration projects, and monitoring soil degradation levels in each region of the country. Furthermore, Saskatchewan's Agriculture Development Fund is assessing innovative farming methods, and farmers are demonstrating ways to maintain long-term viability and soil productivity. These efforts will be supported by the International Soils Conference sponsored by CIDA to be held in Saskatoon in June of 1989.

Congratulations to all those who are working today to preserve our soil resource for future generations.

CULTURE

TRIBUTE TO FILMMAKER FRÉDÉRIC BACK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw attention to the success of one of our fellow citizens and the international tribute paid to him yesterday. Frédéric Back won an Oscar for his film L'homme qui plantait des arbres. What is extraordinary, Mr. Speaker, is that Mr. Back already won an Oscar in 1982 for his film Crac.

[English]

I would also like to congratulate the National Film Board whose animated short George and Rosemary was nominated, and the great Canadian director, Norman Jewison, whose film Moonstruck won three Oscars.

The striking international success of our filmmakers only serves to highlight the immediate need for film distribution in Canada so Canadians can see our films. As filmmaker Jean-Claude Lauzon said at the Genies Awards: "Glory means nothing if Canadians do not see our films".

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) promised such legislation in February, 1987. Rather than delivering, she has caved in to Jack Valenti and the U.S. film lobby. I urge her to introduce this Bill now and allow Canadians to see our excellent Canadian films before she wins the Oscar for worst non-performance by a Minister for the third straight year.

LOW PRICES RECEIVED BY ALFALFA GROWERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the irrigated alfalfa industry was well able to compete with other crops when the majority of income came from the sale of the crops, but now the competitive crops receive income from government sources while the alfalfa growers receive no help whatsoever. The claim that the alfalfa industry is depressed due to the low price of hay does not take into consideration the economic mechanism responsible for the low prices, such as large acreages of annual crops like barley and oats which do receive government money, and which are cut and baled as forage. How can the farmer who specializes in a perennial hay crop as a cash crop compete against such assistance? Consequently his market vanishes and the price he gets is cut in half.

Do you know what? Our irrigated alfalfa producers will soon disappear as well if the help given to their competitors is not also offered to them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

LATVIA—INTERFERENCE WITH CEREMONY TO COMMEMORATE VICTIMS OF STALINIST DEPORTATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on March 24, 1988, I spoke in this House about a ceremony planned for the following day in Riga, Latvia, to commemorate the victims of the mass deportations of 1949 from Latvia. I said at the time that if the U.S.S.R. authorities allowed the ceremony in Riga to proceed peacefully, we would have seen a concrete example of glasnost.

Unfortunately, the demonstration was not allowed to proceed. Riga radio reported that the site of the gathering at the Statue of Liberty was sealed off one half-hour before the scheduled commemoration. According to another report from Riga, the life of a representative for one of the unofficial journals was repeatedly threatened if he gave information about the events in Riga. In Tallinn, at least five Estonian human rights activists were detained by police ahead of similar memorial activities.

These events do not greatly inspire confidence in the policy of glasnost, but one must hope for future change.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES TO ONTARIO SOYBEAN GROWERS

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, contrary to some reports by members of the opposition, the Special Canadian Grains Program is running smoothly and cheques are being delivered to producers as quickly as possible. By the end of March, approximately 33,000 producers outside the Wheat Board area were issued first payments based on last year's acreage. Those who have not received cheques are Ontario producers with soybean acreage in 1987. Their payments will be issued by the end of April based on last year's applications.

This delay was unavoidable because of the shift in production patterns from winter wheat and corn to soybeans between 1986 and 1987. Due to this changing cropping pattern, first instalment payments for producers with soybean acreage could not be based on 1986 program records. The shift in production was first noted by the producer associations, and after discussions with them and other producers it was decided to base this year's program on 1987 claims. Delays in the first payment issue were considered preferable to making overpayments.

Every effort is being made to ensure that funds are in these producers' hands before spring seeding operations to provide cash flow to assist with the 1988 plantings.

COMMUNICATIONS

EFFECT OF TAX ON NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, once again rural and northern Canadians are being treated unfairly by the Government's policies. As a result of the 10 per cent telecommunications tax imposed on January 1 of this year, local and long distance calls made from mobile telephones are taxed, even though local calls from regular telephones are not.

For many people who live in the North and rural areas, a mobile phone is not a luxury, it is a complete necessity. By definition, every call to your child's school, the doctor, the dentist or to your neighbour is a long distance call when you live in a rural area. For safety reasons alone, many northerners feel it is crucial to have a mobile phone in their vehicle, on their trapline, or in their cabins. Others need mobile phones because their livelihood takes them to remote areas where other phones are not available.

It is completely absurd and grossly unfair that mobile phone calls in the North or remote areas are taxed. I urge the Government to remove this unfair tax. We are not asking for special treatment. We are asking for fair treatment.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SALE OF SENNETERRE STATION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the sale of the Canadian Forces Station in Senneterre was announced on March 8, 1988. This sale is part of the program to shut down 17 stations on the CADIN/Pinetree line announced in 1985.

Since the shutdown of this base was announced, I have cooperated very closely with the recovery committee, the town council, Canadian Forces representatives, employees of the base and Public Works Canada.

The Town of Senneterre has sought to acquire this property, considering it to be an important element of its economic development policy.

I would like to mention the outstanding work done by Major Gabriel Tremblay, Mayor Denis Sawyer, the town councillors, Roger St-Pierre, Jean Roy, president of the community development project, and the town's general manager, Yvon Boucher.

Mr. Speaker, I have full confidence in the ability of the Town of Senneterre to put this magnificent station to excellent use.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

LOCAL GOVERNMENT WEEK IN ONTARIO

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this week, the week of April 11 to April 15, is Local Government Week in the Province of Ontario. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. John Eakins, for taking this initiative which is in its fourth year. The Parliamentary Assistant to Mr. Eakins, Mr. David Neumann, the Member of the Provincial Parliament for Brantford, is in the Ottawa area promoting this particular initiative. He is visiting Ottawa, Kemptville, Merrickville, Brockville, among other municipalities, in order to promote Local Government Week.

S. O. 21

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this fall we will have municipal elections in the Province of Ontario. It is important for citizens to be aware of their responsibilities with regard to municipal elections.

The initiative of Local Government Week will serve to promote local government, to advise citizens of their rights under local government, and to ensure that citizens participate to the fullest.

SCARBOROUGH'S ROUGE RIVER VALLEY—CALL FOR PRESERVATION OF WILDLIFE AREA

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Rouge River Valley in Scarborough is a precious natural treasure. As well as containing rare wildlife, the valley's 5,000 acres serve as an outdoor classroom for thousands of school children who visit the area to learn about conservation.

Despite the valley's natural significance the Ontario Government is determined to develop it for luxury housing. Representatives of the Save the Rouge Valley System organization are here in Ottawa to gather support for preserving the valley.

I have been pleased to join with Jim Robb, Glenn De Baeremaeker, Ron Moeser, Gloria Reszler, and Cathy Gregorio in their meetings here to lend my support to their efforts.

Tomorrow the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) will visit the Rouge for a first-hand look at this beautiful area.

At this point, the start of Wildlife Week in Canada, I call on the Ontario Government to listen to the people and to save the Rouge Valley for our children and our future.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER'S SPEECH

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, during debate in the Saskatchewan Legislature to ratify the Meech Lake Accord several short months ago the Premier of Saskatchewan said this:

> Section 2 of the new amendment recognizes the existence of French-speaking Canadians, located primarily in Quebec, but also present elsewhere in Canada—as a fundamental characteristic of our nation . . . Affirmation is given to the role of Canada, as well as that of every province, to preserve the linguistic duality of Canada.

If the Premier still believes that it is the role of Canada as well as that of every province to preserve the linguistic duality of Canada, then presumably the size of the linguistic minority is not relevant. Fundamental principles are.

The Premier's new language legislation, by failing to implement the fundamental principle of linguistic duality, betrays both the spirit and the letter of the Meech Lake Accord, and belies the Premier's own words in the Legislature last July 9. Surely even Conservatives understand this.

PEACE

SEARCH FOR A LASTING PEACE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, last weekend, from April 9 to 11, I attended in Oxford, England, an international conference on peace and development in Central America. More than 20 countries, including Canada, were represented at that conference by parliamentarians of all political parties. That conference will not have been fruitless but, on the contrary, very productive since tens of proposals have been put forward for the establishment of a lasting peace plan in Central America.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to recall that the crucial problems of the five Central American countries are a growing debt and an urgent need for economic development assistance. I am sure that our government will not be insensitive to the present plight in that part of the world and that it will spare no efforts to bring a lasting peace to more than 20 million human beings who deserve more than the indifference of their fellow creatures.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the farm debt crisis has steadily worsened since the Government came to power in 1984.

The Farm Credit Corporation has been prevented from doing its job because of the lack of action and decision by the Government. In July of 1985 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) ordered a review of the Farm Credit Corporation's mandate and operations and promised to report by September of 1985. Almost three years later we still do not have that report.

The situation has worsened steadily. For instance, last year the FCC went into a negative equity position of $124 million. It is estimated that that figure will be $300 million this year.

How can an agency such as the Farm Credit Corporation which is insolvent itself help farmers who are in financial difficulty? Over 30 per cent of our farmers are in serious financial difficulty.

I call upon the Minister of Agriculture and the Government to put the FCC back on a sound financial basis so that it can help the farmers whom it was set up and designed to help.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENT TO MANITOBA

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): First, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada has created such an economic boom that the federal transfer payment formula has triggered an additional $77 million for Manitoba.

Second, the former NDP Howard Pawley administration kept this information from Manitobans and, in fact, had Manitoba NDP Members of Parliament cry, plead, and beg for more federal funds for hospitals, health care, pharmacare and highways.

Third, the NDP Government in Manitoba collapsed.

Fourth, a desperate New Democratic Party elected a desperate leader from a desperate labour union by the name of Gary Doer. When Doer discovered on a shelf this $77 million of additional transfer dollars he made an election promise to give a tax break to Manitobans using federal transfer funds.

I feel sorry for the NDP Members from Manitoba and all Manitobans who have been deceived by this new leader.

What happened to health care? What happened to highways? What happened to education? What happened to pharmacare?

At 20 per cent of the popularity in Manitoba is it possible that the Democrats under Doer are done?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIR CANADA

SALE OF SHARES TO PUBLIC—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On January 14, 1985, in Montreal the Prime Minister said: "Air Canada is not for sale". Now this morning the Deputy Prime Minister stated in a tortuous way that what the Prime Minister had really said was that Air Canada was not for sale at that time.

The Deputy Prime Minister is wrong. He knows that he is wrong. He has been trying to cover up for the Prime Minister. What the Prime Minister said was that Air Canada was not for sale period. That is what the Prime Minister of Canada said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That statement, made in the company of his friend Louis Laberge, ranks now with the statement that our social programs are a sacred trust—and he then moved to deindex old age pensions; the statement he made to his Party during the leadership convention that he would never lead Canada into a free trade agreement. There is another broken promise.

I do not want to hear from the Deputy Prime Minister in one of those tortuous rationalizations he attempted this morning, or from the new Minister of Transport with a phoney argument. I want to hear from the Prime Minister of Canada why he broke his word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says, and I am quoting him exactly: "The Prime Minister said that Air Canada is not for sale period."

I refer my right hon. friend to The Gazette of Montreal of January 16, 1985, which reports what I said: "Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said Monday in Montreal that Air Canada is not for sale, but did not rule out selling a minority interest". That is exactly what the Government has done today, sell a minority interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Because the Leader of the Opposition has completely distorted my statement in English, and for the benefit of his transport critic I want to give him a reporter's report from January 15 as well in French, from La Presse, which states:

[Translation]

"There is a possibility that shares in Air Canada will be sold to the public, but the Government would certainly retain a majority interest." That was my position in January 1985, and it is the same position being taken by this Government today.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, Louis Laberge, the President of the Québec Federation of Labour, took the same meaning from the Prime Minister's statement that everybody else in the country did. To quote the Prime Minister: "Canada needs a national airline. Air Canada is not for sale." That is what he said in the company of Louis Laberge.

[Translation]

Perhaps we should ask Mr. Laberge what he thought about the Prime Minister's statement.

EFFECT OF PRIVATIZATION ON SERVICE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, clearly, Canadians can no longer depend on the Prime Minister's promises. What is going to happen to small communities in Canada that depend on Air Canada's services, when decisions on flight routes are taken by the private sector? How can the Deputy Prime Minister claim that air transportation facilities will remain open in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, when it will be up to the private sector to decide whether to maintain or terminate these facilities? Why can't the Government at least be frank with Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just as I thought: First, the Leader of the Opposition distorted my statement in English, as usual, and now he has distorted it in French as well. I would like to quote what Pierre Vennat wrote in La Presse on January 15, 1985, and this is a direct quote of the Prime Minister's words: There may be good reasons for selling Air Canada, said the Leader of the Government. I will consider the matter, but Canada needs a national airline. In fact, there will be a national airline, Air Canada, which in addition to its more obvious responsiblities will also be responsible for serving the most remote areas in this country and ensuring their survival. The management of Air Canada sincerely believes, and has said so publicly, that the corporation will be able to do so with increased participation on the part of the Canadian public, including Air Canada employees, which will make the airline stronger, more efficient, more profitable and more effective as a national airline.

APPARENT CONTRADICTION BETWEEN DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER AND PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in this morning's statement, the Deputy Prime Minister said that the legislation will include the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public, which is not what was said this afternoon by the Prime Minister. Everybody in Canada had understood the Prime Minister had made a solemn commitment to the effect that Air Canada would remain in the public sector in this country.

[English]

The Deputy Prime Minister said this morning, Mr. Speaker, that now Canadians can own Air Canada. That was a surprise to us. We thought that Canadians already owned Air Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In his trade deal the Prime Minister is selling out Canada. Now today he begins to sell out the infrastructure that has held this country together.

Mr. McDermid: No one believes that except you and the NDP.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This country was built on a national railway. This country was built on a national broadcasting—

An Hon. Member: You have been wrong in every one of your predictions and you are wrong again.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will put the question, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The people of Canada want to know what else is up for sale. What other promises of the Prime Minister will be broken? Is the CNR up for sale? Is Petro-Canada up for sale? Is the CBC up for sale? Let us know what is up for sale in this country.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is not only distorting what the Prime Minister has said and what we in fact have announced today, but he is distorting what was traditionally the position of the Liberal Party, particularly of his seat mate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, who, on April 12, 1985, said it was "important that Air Canada sever its financial ties with the federal Government. It does not have to put it on the block right away, but the industry must be aware that the Government is moving toward privatization".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, that selective quote, I am sure, will be answered by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry for the deliberate mistruth that it is.

SALE OF SHARES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. It was amusing a moment ago to hear the Prime Minister defend his flip-flop on Air Canada by suggesting that he indicated there might be a minority share position offered, therefore, that explained his flip-flop.

I noticed that the Deputy Prime Minister's ears literally glowed. This morning in the House he stated, and I quote directly from his words a few hours ago that are still echoing in this place, "The legislation will permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public", 100 per cent of the shares.

Now, Prime Minister, you are so anxious to stand—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Mr. Tobin: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister, you are so anxious to stand and defend—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member can put the question appropriately.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister, is the Prime Minister telling the House now, a few hours past the Deputy Prime Minister's statement, that in fact the Government's plan is not to sell all of Air Canada shares but only a minority position? The Prime Minister ought to be aware that this morning we were told the first offering was 45 per cent, with all of the remaining shares to be sold at a later date.

Now, Prime Minister, have you got your act together? Can you remember your story?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to respect the proper way to ask questions and the proper way to respond. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that 45 per cent of these shares will be offered in the form of Treasury shares immediately, and the legislation will call for the eventual transferral to the public depending upon the conditions.

Mr. Tobin: It's all shares now.

Mr. Mazankowski: I find it very strange, because if we are to take the Opposition at its word, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry said that this is precisely what we should do, don't "put it on the block right away, but the industry must be aware that the Government is moving toward privatization". That is precisely what we are doing, Mr. Speaker.

Why is the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe attempting to distort the words of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who has a keen interest in this issue, who I think has spoken out with clarity, and I respect him for it? We have taken his comments into consideration as we studied this issue.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is obviously spending too much time in the company of the Member for St. John's West, but he is only half as funny.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I have to defend my fellow Newfoundlander at this pale attempt to imitate him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are only half as witty.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe is defending the Hon. Member for St. John's West. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is defending the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: In this unusual spirit of unity, perhaps the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe can put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that I think someone in the Gallery went too far when they said the Deputy Prime Minister was only half a wit, or a half-wit.

PROTECTION OF MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following. This morning the Deputy Prime Minister said in his statement to the House that the Government of Canada would have an arm's length relationship with Air Canada, that it would let the company operate on a commercial basis, and would not interfere in any way, shape, or form in its decisions.

In the very next breath the Deputy Prime Minister went on to say that he wanted to assure the people of Winnipeg that the Air Canada maintenance centre there would be protected, the same in Toronto and Montreal.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister on the one hand offer shares on the basis that the Government will have its hands off, and in the next breath pretend that he can give assurances to Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, or Stephenville, Newfoundland, about Air Canada's future operations?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman does not have to believe me, but I would think that he would want to believe Air Canada. That is fine. That is his privilege and his prerogative, and he has made that very clear. He called me a liar in an indirect way, and I would ask him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —to reconsider it.

Mr. Tobin: I called you a half-wit.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will want to check the "blues", because I think the words "deliberately distorted" attributed to me is unparliamentary—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, of course, has every right to check the "blues" and bring the matter in front of the Chair at an appropriate time, but this is not the appropriate time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that if the Hon. Member paid a little attention to the structure of Air Canada he would know that 80 per cent of its employees are located in the three major centres of Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg, very important operational, overhaul, and maintenance centres.

With regard to the situation in Winnipeg—and it was raised by Hon. Members opposite; we did not raise it but it has to be clarified—the statement reads: " 'Regardless of the aircraft type which is eventually selected as a replacement for Air Canada B-727 fleet, the future of Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg is not in question', says the airline's Vice-President of Maintenance and Engineering".

Mr. Tobin: Not "says the Government".

Mr. Mazankowski: "Air Canada is very pleased with the work being done here. We fully intend to keep using these facilities whether we maintain the 727 replacement fleet or one of the other aircraft types we already own". What could be more clear than that, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister broke his promise to pensioners. He broke his promise to taxpayers. He broke his promise to those who wanted regional development—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —and now he has done it with Air Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that recently a majority of Canadians have said that they like Air Canada in terms of its performance and that they want to maintain the present structure of Air Canada, how can the Prime Minister account for this broken promise, once again, other than the triumph of Conservative ideology over good, practical, common Canadian sense?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the NDP were interested in the well-being of Air Canada, its employees, and the people it serves, he would pay much more attention to the kinds of initiatives that are being put forward today, and a lot less to public opinion polls. He should stop relying on public opinion polls and rely on important matters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to—

Mr. Riis: Call an election.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I can't hear him, guys.

Mr. McDermid: Don't forget Imperial Oil, Ed.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: In deference to my hon. friend I would ask him to take the time to read the compte rendu of The Gazette of January 16, 1985, which says: "Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said Monday in Montreal that Air Canada is not for sale but did not rule out selling a minority interest. A group of Air Canada employees says it is interested in purchasing up to a 40 per cent share in the airline".

This was said both in English and in French. It was said in the presence of a distinguished Canadian, as was mentioned, Louis Laberge.

My hon. friend will agree, I think, as he reviews the statement, that what has taken place today is perfectly consistent with what I said in January, 1985, and is very much—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Mulroney: The NDP may think the world stands still, but it does not and there are requirements for the future. We are going to meet this on behalf of all Canadians to make a stronger and a better Air Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SALE OF SHARES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I tell the Prime Minister, as is usually the case, that I always check his immortal words before I come into Question Period. I saw his quote about perhaps selling a minority of shares, but I want to ask the Prime Minister why he is misleading the people of Canada today.

We have had it admitted by the Deputy Prime Minister earlier in the House in his statement, and in Question Period, that the intention of the Government is not simply to sell a minority of shares; the eventual goal is to sell all of Air Canada.

Since in 1985 the Prime Minister talked only about a minority share, why have they done a flip-flop and now committed themselves to selling out Air Canada completely? That is the issue.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, what happened? Why don't you answer, Brian?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the New Democratic Party should cool down a little bit. He gets awfully angry when he asks questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, yes, we like the truth in here.

Mr. Riis: We like the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is hurting his image a little bit.

Mr. Masse: It is not good for the polls.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are giving away our country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hang on to your seat, Derek.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would just hope that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would consider the statement in its fullest. The expectation is that legislation will allow the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public eventually.

Mr. Broadbent: Right, that is the betrayal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Once the legislation is passed, appropriate financial and regulatory steps are taken, and market conditions permit, the board of directors will be asked to offer initially a Treasury sale of up to 45 per cent, and the Government's holding would remain in the 55 per cent range. If it is then in the best interest of the corporation, the best interest of the airline, and the best interest of Canadians to proceed further, then it will—

Mr. Riis: He promised that you wouldn't.

Mr. Mazankowski: —but 55 per cent will remain in the hands of the Government until such time as further action might be taken.

WINNIPEG OVERHAUL BASE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the country will have noted that the Prime Minister refused to answer that question, because he knows he has been caught making another broken promise—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, whether it is the Prime Minister or his spokesperson, the Deputy Prime Minister, today, since they promised—and it was not Air Canada; it was the Deputy Prime Minister's words today with reference to the overhaul base at Winnipeg—that the "Winnipeg overhaul base will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada", and if the intention is to turn, as was made clear in another part of his statement, operational control over to the new shareholders, how can that promise ever be kept down the road?

Isn't the real reason that we are seeing this reference today simply another disguising scheme to get the Conservatives through the Manitoba election? Is that not what that is all about?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Remember the CF-18.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if we want to talk about disguising schemes, I have it right here, and I am quoting:

> —we in the NDP are not against privatization per se, but there must be a practical reason for selling a Crown corporation.
> For example, if there was bad management in the Crown corporation, it did not have sufficient money, or there was no public policy reason for keeping the corporation, then maybe it could be sold to the private sector.

• (1440)

Who said it? Ian Waddell, Hansard, February 13, 1987.

Mr. Broadbent: That's right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We'll campaign on that.

Mr. Riis: Please call an election now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on over, Lloyd.

Some Hon. Members: We want Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will accept that I am somewhat overwhelmed by the wild endorsement from the other side.

Mr. Speaker: I am overwhelmed by both sides.

Mr. Axworthy: And I hope from the Chair itself as well, Mr. Speaker.

FUTURE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while talking about the source of policy, I think it is proper to point out that if the Deputy Prime Minister is referring to the speech I gave to the Financial Post conference, he should properly read the speech which recommended, first, a recapitalization of Air Canada, which the Government has not done, followed by public hearings on Air Canada so that full exposure of the pros and cons of its role could be properly discussed and so that public education could take place.

In keeping with the habits of the Prime Minister, they never follow my good advice. That is why they are in the trouble in which they are today with this measure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question with the Deputy Prime Minister. In the statement made this morning the Government makes very clear that it is going to incorporate into legislation a commitment to retain the corporate headquarters of Air Canada in Montreal. That is a good stand with which I agree.

However, why, in terms of commitments to the maintenance base in Winnipeg, is there no such commitment incorporated in legislation? All we have are good intentions which the Government cannot back up because it is giving away the power to back up those commitments.

Why will the Deputy Prime Minister not incorporate the commitment to Toronto and Winnipeg as it has for Montreal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry for giving me the benefit of his advice, counsel, and wisdom over the years. We have followed a number of his speeches and comments. He talks about the qualification which he put on that particular statement. My understanding is that if it was to be recapitalized, in some way, shape, or form, Air Canada would have had to have had an injection of money.

Mr. Axworthy: Right. You got it.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am surprised that when the Member was the Minister of Transport he did not elect to do that. On March 29, 1984—and I think he was the Minister of Transport at that time—he said: "The company Air Canada has good opportunities for growth but the Government is not willing to make the necessary capital investments". That statement was attributed to the Minister of Transportation by The Globe and Mail on March 29, 1984.

He had the opportunity, he had the option. Why did he not choose to do it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What's the point?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition, I was clarifying his colleague's statement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Thank you. We had difficulty following that one.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to reread the statement which provides assurance of an employee share purchase plan, that no individual shareholder will be permitted to own over 10 per cent of the publicly issued shares, and that cumulative foreign ownership will be subject to a restriction of 25 per cent.

It then goes on to say:

> That the major operational and overhaul centres which have been built up over the years in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg are sources of great pride for Air Canada and fundamental to the success of this airline . . . The overhaul base in Winnipeg will continue as a prominent and integral function . . .

It is all part and parcel of the same qualifications and commitments that we made.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it comes as a surprise to me that they use my speeches for advice. I thought they got all their advice from Frank Moores.

RETENTION OF MONTREAL HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made a very clear commitment to entrench in legislation the preservation of company headquarters in Montreal, which is a proper case. However, under the statement made by the Minister today the Government has no powers to do that for any other establishments of Air Canada, including those in Toronto and Winnipeg. We want to know why the Government is prepared to do that for one centre but not the others.

Taking into account the Minister's so-called commitments, will he say today in this House of Commons, in Question Period, that he will make the commitment to Winnipeg and Toronto that they will get the same protection in legislation as he is offering to Montreal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, obviously the corporation, whether a Crown corporation or a private corporation, has to have a head office. That is incorporated in the legislation as other areas will be incorporated in the legislation and/or the Articles of Incorporation. That is what I said.

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—MINISTER'S COMMITMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In his statement this morning he makes it clear that the Chairman of Air Canada will vote in accordance with the directions of the private shareholders. How can the Minister guarantee the 2,300 employees of Air Canada in Winnipeg, and particularly the large number who work in the maintenance base, that the private shareholders will follow the commitment which the Minister is making in his statement today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is a firm undertaking in an Air Canada public release which is obviously endorsed by the Chairman of Air Canada and indeed the President of Air Canada. That is the same today as it was yesterday.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How about a year from now?

FUTURE OF WINNIPEG BASE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of Air Canada made a statement based on instructions he received from the present owners. However, the Minister is proposing that in the future the Chairman will take his instructions from the private shareholders.

What is to prevent the private shareholders, who are quite legitimately interested mainly in making a profit, from saying that it does not pay them to maintain the base in Winnipeg or bases in other cities? Surely the requirement is an assurance in legislation that the bases in Winnipeg and Toronto will be maintained at their present or higher levels.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot imagine why the Hon. Member is so nervous about Winnipeg. It is a profitable maintenance centre, it does good service, and has dedicated employees. Air Canada has made a firm commitment.

Mr. Riis: Remember the F-18.

Mr. Mazankowski: In the event that the Hon. Member is not aware of everything that goes on there, in addition to maintaining its own aircraft Air Canada's Winnipeg maintenance base also performs maintenance contracts for other carriers and the airline will continue seeking out and bidding for these opportunities. It is a going concern. Why would you want to remove it, Mr. Speaker?

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH DELEGATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the plight of the Turkish claimants who are here today on Parliament Hill.

I understand that the Minister has recently met with representatives of the Turkish delegation. Can the Minister inform the House of the discussions which she just completed with the delegation? Can she further elaborate for the House upon whether she informed the group that she, as Minister, can and will act under Section 115(2) of the Immigration Act which permits the federal Government to admit any individual into this country under compassionate or humanitarian considerations?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the Act. My discussion with the leader of the Turkish community which is in Ottawa today was to inform them that the process which we put in place last Friday, and the commitment which I made to them, would end with their demonstration on Parliament Hill. I will be making a statement to inform the House more fully at three o'clock.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Surely the Minister knows that the humanitarian and discretionary powers afforded her under the Act exist for a specific reason, to deal largely with humane cases which are neither black nor white and arise unannounced, whether through natural disasters or man-made unscrupulous scams.

Given that the former Minister of State for Immigration has described these individuals as "innocent victims of unscrupulous consultants," the consultants being the real cancer of the disease who go unaddressed, why is the Minister so steadfastly opposed to administering the humanitarian criteria which the Government used 40,000 times last year, one of which times was for Professor Georges Grossmann who did not need humanitarian assistance to stay in Canada?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what we as a Government want to accomplish in terms of immigration and refugees is that the law be applied not in an arbitrary fashion; in a humane fashion and a compassionate fashion, but not in an arbitrary fashion. That is why there are two Bills that we would like to get passed so that we can deal with the larger issue of refugees and immigrants, and refugees' families and immigrants' families, and family reunification, and the growth we want in immigration in Canada and our ability to be humane in a fair way to everyone.

NATIVE PEOPLES

RELOCATION OF PORT BURWELL INUIT GROUP—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Inuit in New Quebec told me about a problem concerning a group of Inuit who were moved from Port Burwell in 1978.

As you know, in 1984 former residents of Port Burwell started proceedings to sue the federal Government for $55 million. In October 1987, the Minister announced that negotiations had started between his special representative on the James Bay agreements and the Makivik Corporation.

My question is this: What tangible progress has been achieved in these negotiations toward settling a question that is very important to the Inuit of New Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, as always, has expressed a concern on behalf of his constituents. I am pleased to inform him that the eight families from Port Burwell will receive compensation by the Government of Canada of some $2.5 million to go toward their relocation. The other part of the assistance is that, because they are beneficiaries under the James Bay Agreement, they will receive assistance in continuing their relocation.

The negotiation process, I believe, was successful. I believe all sides benefited, and we would hope to look forward to further negotiations on other issues involving the James Bay and Northern Québec Agreement.

AIR CANADA

SALE OF SHARES—TAXPAYERS' REPRESENTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on reading the Minister's statement for the third time, I have concluded that the most half-baked, hare-brained paragraph in the whole statement is an abdication of the Government's responsibility to the taxpayers. The Minister says that 55 per cent of the control of Air Canada will remain in the hands of the public, and in his statement he said that the Government will instruct the Chairman of Air Canada's board of directors to vote its shares in accordance with the public shareholders who are the minority shareholders. Who will represent the taxpayers of Canada who own 55 per cent of the airline?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman calls it a hare-brained, half-baked idea, but the Chairman of Air Canada said this morning at a press conference something to the effect that this initiative is good for the employees, good for customers, good for communities, and it is good for Canada. I think the Hon. Member should take that into consideration.

Air Canada has been functioning as a commercial corporation in a newly structured regulatory environment. It competes with the private sector and it behaves in every respect as a private sector corporation. As a Government we have not intervened in the day-to-day operations and management of Air Canada, and that is consistent with what has been going on in the past.

ACQUISITION OF SHARES—CONTROL OF CORPORATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am just flabbergasted that the Tories are continuing a policy the Liberals started. I ask the Minister what, in his statement or in the Government's policy, will prevent a group of individuals who happen to be on the boards of several airlines, or several airlines, themselves from acquiring 10 per cent of the shares each and having effective control of Air Canada, or what will prevent a foreign owned airline from having 12 per cent of the shares and having effective control of Air Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather convoluted assessment. If the Hon. Member looked at this again, he would find that only 10 per cent of the publicly issued shares could fall into the hands of one person, and that would be roughly about 4.5 per cent. In the case of foreign ownership—

Mr. Benjamin: But you're going to sell all of them.

Mr. Mazankowski: We made a clear commitment here that 45 per cent of Treasury shares are to be issued—

Mr. Benjamin: Initially.

Mr. Mazankowski: Maybe 10 years down the road, maybe five years down the road—

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe two years.

Mr. Cassidy: We'll make sure that you never do it.

Mr. Mazankowski: If it is in the best interests of the corporation to do more, that is when that decision will be taken—

Mr. Cassidy: Trust is the issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Hon. Members do not want to listen to the answer.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SASKATCHEWAN BILL—REQUEST THAT FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BE OFFERED TO PROVINCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I want to refer to Saskatchewan's language law, Bill 2. We are told today by press reports that Mr. Devine, the Premier of that province, will not accept any amendments to his controversial language Bill.

Given that the powers of persuasion, powers that we thought would be the best avenue to use to convince Saskatchewan to be generous and open, have failed to bring the matter to a satisfactory solution, I wonder if the federal Government could not now use its spending power. As we know, the federal Government can offer financial and technical assistance. However, we are not aware of what the offer has been. Could the Prime Minister share with us what the offer has been and what he intends to do to come to an amicable, more generous, more open, and perhaps more caring solution to the problem?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member because it is certainly in line with discussions that are ongoing and are taking place now with senior Ministers of the Government of Saskatchewan. I am glad to be able to report to the Hon. Member that we are canvassing on an urgent basis the implications and ramifications of the decision in a very wide range. I think this is a very hopeful sign.

This is a Government that is giving leadership under the Prime Minister with respect to a very important issue. It is not taking us four or five years, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister yesterday, to try to resolve these matters. Rather, we are dealing with them on a very important and urgent basis.

Yes, we will be talking in terms of assistance that can be rendered to the Province of Saskatchewan in order to ensure that the interests of minorities are in fact protected in Saskatchewan and that the interests not only of the minorities but of all the citizens of Saskatchewan and of Canada are properly represented at the federal level.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the question that begs to be asked is how long are these discussions going on and what happens at the end of the day.

[Translation]

SURVIVAL OF MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): My supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Premier of Saskatchewan was quoted as saying that Saskatchewan would be completely bilingual in ten or fifteen years. You yourself quoted the Premier's statement in the House yesterday. We know it has now been six years since the Constitution Act of Canada gave official language minorities the right to be educated in their own language anywhere in Canada. In Saskatchewan there are no French school boards or French schools. Six years after the Constitution Act was passed there is still no access to education in French in Saskatchewan. Why do minority groups believe . . . what does the Prime Minister have to say to minority groups? What do we have to do to make this Government understand it is time to act, to stop talking and really do something about introducing measures that will give minority groups a chance to survive in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, the report of the Commissioner for Official Languages indicates that in recent years there has been substantial progress in Saskatchewan with respect to the use of French. I agree this does not relieve us of our responsibility as the federal Parliament, as the federal Government, to do more. That is what the Minister was referring to. We are going to use all our resources at the federal level to help the provincial government provide various services and opportunities for the linguistic, cultural and social enhancement of the Francophone minority of Saskatchewan. I think that this is entirely in line with the results being sought by the Hon. Member.

OZONE LAYER TREATY—FORTHCOMING MEETING OF G-7 COUNTRIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last September in Montreal, Canada and 30 other countries signed a treaty aimed at trying to restore the world's ozone layer which has been seriously damaged by the use of CFCs in aerosols. Five of the G-7 countries which will be meeting at the Toronto summit in June represent two-thirds of the world's use of CFCs. In the past the Prime Minister has not hesitated to raise other issues such as South Africa at economic summits. Therefore, will he undertake to raise the issue of the ozone layer treaty at the Toronto economic summit, and at the same time urge the other five countries to follow the lead of Canada and the U.S. in banning the use of CFCs in aerosols?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canada is of course deeply concerned by the evidence of the thinning of the ozone layer. On behalf of all Members of Parliament I want in a special way to congratulate the Minister of the Environment for the tremendous leadership he provided at the Montreal conference in this regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He has had discussions regarding our G-7 partners concerning the matters which should be on the agenda. There is a strong view that this dimension of the environment should be considered by the participants at the Toronto summit in June. I take good note of the suggestion of my hon. colleague and will bring it forward for consideration by the other leaders at the industrialized summit.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that this will be the last question of Question Period.

TURKISH REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—REQUEST FOR DELAY OF DEPORTATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, first I take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration on her new appointment and I wish her well. I also have a question for her.

Considering her Government's delay in imposing a visa requirement on Turkey for months after it knew of the racketeers and false promises which brought many Turks here without proper status, will she consider a two-month delay in further deportations of people in the backlog in order to allow time for consultations, both to put Bill C-55 into working order for control of refugee status determination, and to work out a consistent and fair method of handling the 48,000 in the backlog?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his good wishes.

I should say that the normal process followed with a friendly country was followed with the Turkish refugee claimants, that is, there was a period of discussion with the Turkish Government and the visa requirements were put in as soon as practical.

I have examined that part of the issue very carefully and some of the delays in the process were of course because the refugee claimants wanted to take advantage of our appeal process, which they have every right to do. However, it is too lengthy, and I agree with the Hon. Member that Bill C-55 will help us to deal with these things more expeditiously. Of course, after that time we will have to look at the 48,000 in the backlog and I will thank him for his support in promoting Bill C-55.

BILL C-55—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that all non-governmental spokespeople in Canada, church, labour and Bar associations, as well as others, have condemned Bill C-55 because it violates the Supreme Court decision three years ago on oral hearings, will the Minister consider the delay I suggested in order to negotiate with the Canadian Bar association and the Senate for amendments to Bill C-55 that would make it workable and capable of being passed without challenges immediately at the Supreme Court?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I wish my hon. friend were in a position to help me in the Senate. I could use it.

Let me just say that we regard Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as parts of a complete package dealing with this issue. It is the two taken together that will help us deal with this problem.

PRIVILEGE

DESIGNATION OF MEMBER BY NAME

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the distinguished Deputy Prime Minister, who is after all a former House Leader, would want to take the opportunity to correct his mistake in Question Period when he referred to me by name. He must know that I am the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. In spite of all the Government's efforts to get me out of that riding I am still the Member.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it certainly was not my intention to aid in that unfortunate process going on in Vancouver. I was merely quoting an extract from a statement the Hon. Member made. I apologize to him. Who would not know that the Hon. Member is the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway? I apologize for that.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

NATIONAL UNITY—RIGHTS OF LINGUISTIC MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I ask for leave to move a motion that the House do now adjourn and, as I did yesterday, I would like to make a few points in support of that proposal. If the motion is deemed in order, I would be ready to debate it tonight, as provided for in the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons why I once more ask for that emergency debate on the language situation in Saskatchewan. First, there is no need in my view to remind you of the situation as such, because everyone knows it raises constitutional questions, especially as to the interpretation of the Meech Lake Accord.

Moreover, we should keep in mind that the Supreme Court recognized that the rights of French speaking Canadians in Saskatchewan had been violated since 1905. This is not a trivial matter, it is a serious injustice that must be addressed without delay.

Since Bill 2 tabled in the Saskatchewan Legislature also flies in the face of the spirit of national conciliation that prevailed in the Meech Lake Accord, and since Bill 2 in no case can redress the harm and injustice done to Francophones in that province, I believe those facts alone warrant an emergency debate because it is this Federal Government's direct responsibility to ensure that minority rights are respected.

Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons why the debate must take place as soon as possible. The Prime Minister stated in this House that he and his ministers had discussions with Premier Devine over the weekend. Unfortunately, the media this morning reported those negotiations had failed since Premier Devine stated nothing could convince him to amend Bill 2 in any way. This points to the total failure of the Prime Minister's persuasion effort.

As an alternative, the Government could use its spending power, as I mentioned earlier. Now, the Prime Minister stated he had or would make offers to the province, but we are in the dark as to what is going on, as to what those offers are. We do not know who is involved and at what level. However, since it is a direct administrative responsibility of the Government to financially help provinces to honour their Constitutional obligations, I think that it would be in this House's interest to know those objectives.

Finally, I think an emergency debate must be held because we are told that the province is going to pass the Bill as quickly as possible, probably before the weekend. That will make the situation almost impossible to change. Therefore, we must act quickly to prevent such a situation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in the power of persuasion, I believe in the respect Canadians have for their Parliament. I believe that democracy is deeply rooted in the heart of citizens. That is why we must hold an emergency debate, because it will allow all voices to be heard.

It would not only be the Prime Minister's power of persuasion but the elected Hon. Members of this House calling on their fellow citizens' common sense, finer feelings and generosity.

Mr. Speaker, I would like us to seriously and thoroughly debate that issue tonight in this democratic forum.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has made the same request yesterday. Having given much consideration and attention to it, and under the circumstances, I decided yesterday that it would not be appropriate to hold an emergency debate on that matter, and I do not think the situation is any different today. I know that this issue is most important for both Francophone and Anglophone minorities in Canada as well as for the country's unity, but I must repeat today that an emergency debate would not be appropriate under our Standing Order. I want to assure again the Hon. Member that this issue is very important to the House of Commons and to all Canadians. And I thank him for addressing it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House Leaders and I think you will find that there is agreement to revert to Statements by Ministers in order to permit the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to make a statement and for the opposition spokespersons to respond.

I also believe that within the context of that agreement it is also understood that the hour of the adjournment of the House will not be extended under Standing Order 19.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there have been such consultations. Quite frankly, after the conduct of the Government this morning with respect to the statement on the privatization of Air Canada, our first inclination was that the Government did not deserve to be allowed to depart from the ordinary rules of the House and to be given permission to give a statement other than during the time set for it.

However, we noted that the subject matter of the statement to be given dealt with the issue of the Turkish claimants, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) did find it possible to provide us with copies of that statement in both French and English well before the time she wanted to give the statement. It is not clear why it was possible for that to be done on the part of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and not possible for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). It is another example of the complete bungling and confusion when it comes to the handling of the business of the House.

In any event, under the circumstances and particularly in light of the subject matter of the statement, we are prepared to give unanimous consent to allow her to give the statement at this time, provided that the House will adjourn at the ordinary time of adjournment and the sitting not be extended by virtue of the time the Minister will take for her statement.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, indeed there were positive discussions between the House Leaders earlier today. I want to use this occasion to thank the Minister in her new portfolio for giving us the courtesy as opposition spokespersons of having an indication of her comments well in advance, in both official languages. It is a very appropriate and thoughtful initiative.

It was that which encouraged us to agree unanimously to revert to Statements by Ministers to hear her comments and allow the spokespersons of the opposition Parties to respond.

Let me take this opportunity to say that it is quite in contrast to the bungling process we saw earlier today with respect to the proceeding dealing with the Government selling off Air Canada to private interests. However, we are enthusiastic in terms of supporting the Minister in her comments regarding the Turkish claimants who are in town today.

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH NATIONALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, like other Members of the House and other Canadians, I have concerns for the situation in which the Turks who arrived in Canada to claim refugee status, ultimately without success, find themselves.

Last Friday evening I went to meet the group of marchers to explain the Government's position to them. I met them collectively and individually so that they would have an opportunity to ask any questions.

Today I met with their leaders again to explain directly to them my position at this moment and to reiterate once again that our Immigration Act must be respected.

[Translation]

I repeat, Mr. Speaker that last Friday I went to meet the group of marchers, and today I met them again to explain directly my position and to reiterate that the Immigration Act must be respected.

[English]

As Hon. Members in the House know, Canada's Immigration Act provides us with a legal process to assess claims to refugee status that are made in Canada. The process allows for various levels of appeal, all of which have been tried and exhausted by these people.

We recognize that these Turkish citizens were originally the victims of unscrupulous travel consultants, but once in Canada they have taken every opportunity to exercise their appeal rights under due process of the law. Those who remained chose to continue with the process.

The prevention of this kind of unfortunate situation is one of the reasons we have been attempting to introduce new legislation in the form of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. Bill C-55 will allow the Government to deal more quickly with refugee claims and thus reduce the incidents of people remaining in Canada while their claims are under review, sometimes for many months or years.

We recognize that this is a stressful time and a difficult time, but we must also remember that in reality these people are hopeful immigrants and not refugees. If we allow our system to be abused, those who are in genuine fear of their lives and need our protection will be at risk.

[Translation]

If these people leave voluntarily and respect our laws, once they are in Turkey they can go through regular channels and make a new application for entry into Canada.

As the Minister responsible, I will not hold the deportation order against them. If they satisfy the selection criteria for Canada and Quebec, they will be accepted.

As I said before, these people have had the benefit of due process. They have made use of the various provisions and guarantees available under our legislation. Their claims for refugee status were examined thoroughly and rejected by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, by the Immigration Appeal Board, and, for those who decided to take their case even further, by the Federal Court of Canada. At each level, their claim for refugee status was denied.

[English]

Under Canada's immigration law, due process is a lengthy process. Complying with removal orders is the last step in the process for these people. I should also point out that some 400 of their compatriots have already chosen to return to Turkey of their own volition.

• (1520)

In considering the situation of these Turks, I am also mindful that today there are some 48,000 persons in Canada claiming refugee status, more people than live in a city in Canada such as Rimouski. Each of these persons also has a story to tell and they, too, must receive our attention and our fairness. Canada has a record of fairness. It has a record of compassion in the treatment of real refugees. It is important to examine this situation in the light of our broader efforts on behalf of refugees.

In 1987, 17,000 refugees were resettled from abroad, 12,000 came from government sponsorships and 5,000, I am pleased to say, were sponsored by private groups who are showing a growing interest in helping real refugees. In 1988, this Government has increased its sponsorship to 13,000 and we expect that private groups will continue to expand their sponsorship this year to some 6,000. It is interesting to note that in 1987, 8,165 of the sponsored refugees were women. Canada contributes millions of dollars annually, in addition, to refugee assistance abroad.

[Translation]

Canada provides every protection for genuine refugees arriving at its borders. Despite its record, the Government realized that its current method of processing refugee claims was inefficient.

Bill C-55 was introduced to provide for a more efficient, entirely equitable and faster process for refugee status recognition.

Madam Speaker, the issue today is those people who were ordered to leave Canada on the weekend and who decided not to obey that order. I stand behind this commitment. I wrote to the Turks to ask for their co-operation and compliance with the laws of Canada.

[English]

Both they and I have so far met our obligations under the law and we must continue to do so. Finally, I am tabling for the House my letter to the Turks as well as a backgrounder on the situation.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister for the process by which this statement arrived today. I must say that to a certain degree I regret the philosophy that has characterized the Minister's statement because it is a philosophy that essentially gripped her predecessors. When I say I am regretful, I say with the utmost respect that I think the Minister's appointment as the new Minister responsible for immigration was met with substantial enthusiasm across the country by various organizations. It was perceived that the new Minister would bring a refreshing outlook in respect of the immigration policy. However, early in the mandate we still see the traces of her predecessors.

I believe, as do most Canadians, that the situation facing the Turkish claimants and the situation they in turn have imposed upon the Government and Parliament is very difficult. It is a difficult situation because it is emotionally charged. There are human beings involved and the future of young and old is affected. Anytime those variables are put into the equation any conclusion will be derived at through much pain.

I appreciate, as all Canadians do, the difficulty of the situation. We are not making impossible demands, nor are we trying to suggest an irresponsible response from the Government that would jeopardize our immigration or refugee programs. We have not suggested, nor will we suggest, that these individuals be given refugee status. Their own lawyers have concluded that the majority of them are not refugees under the United Nations Convention definition. We are also not suggesting that they break any Canadian law by overstepping or ignoring deportation orders. We may disagree with the law or with the deportation order, but our position is that in the end one must respect the laws of this country.

We are not recommending to these individuals that they camp here overnight regardless of the decision just handed down by the Minister. As much as we believe in the democratic right of individuals and groups to demonstrate before Parliament, we also value and respect the properties surrounding Parliament Hill. Therefore, we believe that that would be a set-back in terms of receiving the compassion this Government may be prepared to offer. Therefore, we are not making those demands.

As an opposition Party, we recognize something the former Minister of State for Immigration recognized. He told our committee that these individual claimants are innocent victims of an unscrupulous network of scams and con artists who have profited from these actions and that these are the symptoms of a larger, cancerous cause. He recognized the cause of these people coming here. He recognized that they have basically sold everything and have nothing to return to. The Minister in her own speech a few moments ago recognized that these persons are a by-product of an unscrupulous network of individuals. But what is the Government doing about the cause of this problem which continues to manifest itself? We saw a few months ago the same thing in Portugal. We placed a visa requirement on Portugal, and they moved to Brazil. We put a visa requirement on Brazil, and they moved to Turkey.

We put a visa requirement on Turkey. Where is this problem going to manifest itself now? How many other people will become the victims of individuals who profit from the desperation of human beings? Is it not a responsibility of this Government, or any other government, to stop the racketeering and trading in human flesh? Is it not their responsibility to prosecute, to throw these people behind bars, to strip them of their dignity as they have stripped these people of their dignity?

The Minister said she must abide by and respect the rule of law. We do not argue that. She stated that the Immigration Act must be respected. We are not urging the Minister to show disrespect. We are not urging the Minister to go above and beyond the Immigration Act. Section 115(2) indicates that it is completely lawful and in keeping with the Immigration Act to offer humanitarian assistance in some cases. It reads:

> The Governor in Council may by regulation exempt any person from any regulation made under subsection (1) or otherwise facilitate the admission of any person where the Governor in Council—

That is the Government or Minister.

> —is satisfied that the person should be exempted from such regulation or his admission should be facilitated for reasons of public policy or due to the existence of compassionate or humanitarian considerations.

• (1530)

This clause is not without precedent. Her own Government last year admitted under the humanitarian program some 27,000 individuals. Under the provision of ministerial permits, which waives all necessary processing because of the circumstances, an additional 18,000 people were admitted. This means that in 1987 alone there were some 43,000 people who were allowed into the country. Why?

The answer is because Governments, including this one, have recognized that immigration questions are not always black or white, that many times there are cases that fall between the cracks. Any Government is in need of a humanitarian stream that will allow it to react compassionately and humanely where justified. That is how we reacted to victims of natural disasters or, as in this case, victims of unscrupulous consultants. That is how we reacted in the 1970s and 1980s when, above and beyond our immigration program, there were waves of different special individuals coming in. Those Governments were open and recognized the dilemma that these individuals faced.

We have not been asking the Government to break the law, to go beyond what is empowered in the Immigration Act, but merely to consider—and not even to guarantee—that the Minister apply the humanitarian criteria that are at her disposal. We ask her to do this not on a group basis but on an individual case basis. This would allow the Government the ability to protect itself from those who perhaps are a security or a health threat or those who are not meritorious in terms of receiving humanitarian compassion. We would rest by the decision taken by the Minister after the application of such a humanitarian program, whether it be in the affirmative or in the negative.

Throughout the process we have recognized that it is not an easy one. We have recognized that there is a long-term viability to the system which must be protected by the actions of one Government. This Government in the past, as others have done, has stepped in when humanitarian considerations have required it to do so in order to reach a fair and humane solution.

This dilemma is a human dilemma. These individuals came here as a result of misleading information. We met with them this morning. We were told that they sold everything to buy their tickets and to bring their families here. They did not do that to undermine our country. They do not wish to stay here to subvert this country. They came here with expectations and dreams. They were misled, yes, but they are in a human catch-22 situation. All we have suggested and continue to suggest to the Government is that these people are not refugees and that it should not break the law but that there is a compromise here to consider. We urge it to consider that compromise because there is considerable confusion in the system.

People will see that the Government permitted over a year convicted terrorists to stay in the country. There was the situation involving Mr. Finkel who was convicted of several crimes in several countries. He was given permission to stay here. Contra rebels, who may have been involved in atrocities in their homeland, have been allowed to come into Canada as refugees. We saw the entrance of Professor Georges Grossmann under humanitarian considerations. There is legitimate concern for who gets in and who gets out.

I see that you are indicating, Madam Speaker, that my time is nearly up. I conclude by asking the Minister, who is a fair-minded individual and a colleague from Toronto, one who understands well the dilemma of a multicultural, multiracial society and the role that immigration has played in the evolution of our own city and, indeed, of our country, to search, not for ways of breaking the law or undermining the refugee program, but a human solution that will address a human problem.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I also wish to thank the Minister for having provided us with good advance notice of her statement in both official languages. I commend her in the short time in which she has been Minister for having acted as she did to go to meet with the Turks a few days ago and to meet with them again today. I know that there can hardly be anyone in the House who has a heavier load of duties than does the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). I am very glad that she undertook that face-to-face meeting with the people who are perhaps to be deported from Canada.

However, I cannot agree with her statement. There is much in it that is reasonable. But there are certain points that I feel at best betray a lack of attention on her part to what has happened in the last few years.

For example, the Minister spoke at the beginning of her statement about respect for the Immigration Act, yet her Government I would add, not of course in her administration of the Act but previously, and the former Government in some ways treated the Act without respect and set an example that, unfortunately, has been followed by many people, especially the racketeers who found a loophole and have made millions and millions of dollars out of it.

I am particularly concerned that the Minister should consider that her Government, while she was a cabinet Minister, although not in this portfolio, from the fall of 1984 delayed and delayed action on this Bill. After the Supreme Court decision early in April of 1985 her Government delayed action to bring in a new law. After the Plaut report was received, held for several months, tabled and published in June of 1985, her Government referred it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and asked for comments.

That committee studied it, heard the officials, who were supposed to have the information about how they conduct the refugee matters, heard the public, and every person from the public who came asked for respect for the Supreme Court decision. The committee reported in October of 1985. On the backlog specifically it reported in December of 1985.

The Minister's Government ignored that report, violating the standing rules of the House, and neglected entirely to answer any of the recommendations. A year and a half later it still has not taken action either to correct the weaknesses in the Immigration Act or to put in any of the recommendations asked for unanimously by that committee. In fact, it has allowed the backlog to grow alarmingly, far bigger than it had been before.

In May, one year ago, the Government introduced a Bill that flies in the face of the Supreme Court decision of three years ago that requires an oral hearing with all the meaning that that carries in national and international legislation.

The Minister talked about respect for the law. Bill C-55 flies in the face of the convention that Canada signed 20 years ago with the United Nations. The United Nations representative in Canada pointed out inconsistencies between the Bill and the convention and asked the Government to make amendments. Of course it did not order that amendments be made. Of course it put its concerns in gentle language because it has no coercive power. It can only try to persuade.

Every public witness out of several dozen witnesses that came before the House to speak on Bill C-55 condemned it for that reason as well as for others. The only public witness who did not condemn it and who was strictly neutral was the representative from the airlines who came only to protect their financial interests. In answer to questions he stated that he had no comment on the Bill. The only witnesses who supported the Bill were the former Ministers and the officials who had drafted it.

• (1540)

The Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Bar Association representing 35,000 lawyers in private practice—this Government is busy privatizing says that private enterprise is the engine of recovery yet this bureaucrat absolutely rejected the advice of the representative of 35,000 lawyers in private practice. The Canadian Labour Congress, La Confédération des Syndicats Nationaux, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, and dozens of smaller groups wrote, petitioned, and in many ways urged the Government not to adopt the Bill without amendment.

Since the Government absolutely refused to consider the amendments that they asked for, and insisted on the screening system and on the refusal of a review or appeal in the Bill, the public opposition has remained so strong that when the other place recently conducted hearings from coast to coast it found the same thing—every witness that appeared opposed the Bill as it stands.

It is unfortunate that it is the Government which has demonstrated a lack of respect for the rule of law, and specifically a lack of respect for the Immigration Act and for the need of making amendment to it. I think it is very unfortunate that up until this point the Government has declined to listen to the Canadian public who have expressed themselves through well respected public institutions, including those who have given their own time and money to feed, clothe, house, and otherwise help refugees because they believe those people were in need.

That Bill and the other Bill C-84 will not work as they stand. Every lawyer who is not paid by the Government has said that they will not work. The lawyers who are paid by the Government are the ones who led the Government into the debacle of the Singh decision three years ago in the Justice Department.

Therefore, I urge the Hon. Minister to consider that it is monstrous for her to assume that she is only deporting 30 or 40 Turks, and perhaps a few more. According to the Government's estimate there is a big majority of 48,000 more people to whom she will have to give consideration.

The public support for the Turks in Quebec, where most of them live, has reversed the previous public alarm at their entry. In every community I know of across Canada the public who have met refugees and even met those who have been brought on a scam like that, or met those who came not narrowly as refugees but because they feared for their lives in Iran, Beirut, the Soviet Union, El Salvador, or Chile, prefer to give them the benefit of the doubt and to help them rather than take the chance on sending them back.

Turkey has a record of human rights violations. It even has some opposition Members of Parliament in jail. I know that there are Members on the government side who take a dim view of that, since they remember that they were in opposition once. That is not a country to which we should be forcing people to return, especially given Bill 140 in Turkey which can be used by the Government there as an excuse to punish any of those Turks who have spoken in criticism, even in justifiable criticism, of his or her Government while outside the country.

I would urge the Minister to reconsider the decision she has given us today and to consider the honourable course of revising her approach in the manner that I have suggested.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House. I would have some brief comments on this question, and if I am not mistaken, occasionally Members are allowed to comment on Ministers' statements.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is asking for unanimous consent of the House to make a statement following the statement of the Minister and the Member of his own Party. Is there unanimous consent?

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 14369).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) had completed his remarks. Are there any questions or comments following his speech?

Eldorado Nuclear Limited

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to ask my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), if he could comment a little on what he can discern about the privatization policy of the Government. Yesterday the Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Blenkarn), the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, assured the House that Air Canada was not for sale. Today we find out that Air Canada is for sale. Yesterday Petro-Canada was not for sale, but perhaps tomorrow it will be for sale. Yesterday, although Eldorado was on the block, we were told that the CBC was not for sale. It is going to build a fancy and substantial new headquarters in Toronto, and perhaps it will be on the sale list tomorrow. What the devil is going on? I ask my friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, if he can explain, since the Government cannot or will not, whether Canadians will have any social investment, or whether it will all go into the private sector regardless of the impact on taxpayers, and regardless of the impact on service to the Canadian people?

Mr. Langdon: It is a remarkable and difficult task to explain what is Conservative logic within its privatization policy. There is simply no such logic. There has been a complete reversal, a complete flip-flop today, a breaking of promises, a recognition of one policy strategy yesterday and today a recognition of a completely different strategy and policy. I must say that this is consistent with the lack of direction and the lack of consistency of the Government throughout its nearly four years in office.

The only explanation which can be given for this dramatically poor performance in terms of leadership, in terms of explaining itself to the public, is that the Government is an incompetent Government which has not yet managed to get its act together and, therefore, Madam Speaker, is doomed from ever having that chance in the future.

Mr. Schellenberger: I have a question, Madam Speaker. My constituents are very much in favour of the move that has been announced today to privatize part of Air Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: How do you know?

Mr. Schellenberger: Because I check with them constantly, something the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), I believe, does not perhaps often do.

Mr. Cassidy: I meet my constituents every day.

Mr. Schellenberger: I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) whether he might explain to the country and to my constituents the policy of his Party of nationalizing the banks in this country.

Mr. Langdon: I am quite interested to hear the suggestion from the Hon. Member that his constituents are in favour of selling Air Canada. The most recent polling information available on the subject comes from the March 5, 1988 edition of The Globe and Mail. It indicates that in every region of the country there is a preponderance of people in favour of keeping Air Canada within the public sector.

• (1550)

This assures that we will have at least one airline committed to a national service crossing the country, reaching remote communities, and providing regular service to communities which do not necessarily have the population to justify it.

I point out to the Hon. Member that even among Conservatives identified in this poll, 43 per cent are against the sale of Air Canada and 42 per cent are in favour of it. Even within his own Party there is no support for the ridiculous move which has been made today.

As I am certain the Hon. Member knows, our policies are adopted at conventions. We have never made a commitment to nationalize all banks in the country. There is no such commitment, and I say that as the previous policy chairman of my Party responsible for much of the policy development at conventions in the 1970s and 1980s. No such policy was ever adopted to nationalize the banks.

There was a policy adopted to nationalize a single bank, which was justified at that time as a policy to give greater control over the financial and monetary policy of the country, given the fact that the Bank Act had just been passed by the previous Government which loosened that control very considerably. I have absolutely no apology for such a pragmatic and sensible response to a foolish move on the part of the previous Government.

Mr. James: Madam Speaker, I should like to make a comment. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has said on a number of occasions that the objectives have not been stated by the Government in connection with privatization. I should like to bring to his attention excerpts from the speech of the former Minister of State for Privatization on May 6, 1987 wherein she indicated the five basic objectives for the federal Government choosing the privatization initiative.

The first was the changing economic environment for many Crown corporations. The original objectives behind their creation were no longer valid. Some Crown corporations were created to meet public policy goals which are no longer legitimate. The case has been stated in connection with Air Canada and Eldorado.

In addition, Governments have other options than the owner taxation and spending regulations available to public policy. It was indicated that we must study effectiveness, and the Hon. Member's Party seems to be positive with regard to the effectiveness of privatization in Manitoba recently.

There is abundant evidence to suggest that many Crown corporations are not as effective in serving their clients as the private sector. We must take a look at that and see if they are. That is an objective.

Public funds must be considered. Public ownership of Crown corporations places enormous demands on government resources to manage and financially support various enterprises, and it is taxpayers' money.

On a day to day basis accountability is not always focused as it should be. In addition, some Crown corporations cannot expect the infusion of the federal funds necessary to expand in the global economy.

If we use the example of Air Canada, it is difficult for the corporation to compete with private sector airlines without a great infusion of capital. If it does not get it from the private sector through investment, it will come out of the pockets of taxpayers.

Then the Minister dealt with management styles, as well as fairness and equity. Many Crown corporations compete directly with the private sector. In effect, some businesses have indicated, as was stated by the competitors of Air Canada and Eldorado, that they are competing against themselves. That is not fair and must be taken into consideration.

I think the evaluation process which must take place in connection with selling Crown corporations has been stated in an emphatic, positive, and straightforward manner by the Government.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, very briefly we have a national institution in the shape of Air Canada which was created to serve the vast transportation needs of a country which is unique in its size, unique in the diverse spread of its economic activities, and unique in its population.

It is very difficult to believe that a private sector operator will take on the difficult servicing of remote communities, the regular servicing of communities which need air service yet cannot provide the population base for such heavy servicing, such as the Hon. Member's own constituency of Sarnia—Lambton.

If the creation of a national institution made sense and was crucial in the past, if it could make money available in the past, not by taking it from government tax coffers but by the loans it was able to pay back to refurbish its fleet, why the sudden u-turn today? There is simply no national logic and certainly no logic suggested in that statement of a year ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Labour Relations—Federal minimum wage; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Canada Elections Act—Funding of municipal New Democratic Party candidates in Toronto; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry)—Taxation—Northern deductions—Eligibility of communities.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 14369).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since we have resumed debate I should like to warn all Hon. Members to be very careful. Because of today's announcement it seems that we are getting more and more away from the subject matter of the Bill that is being discussed.

I would not want anyone to raise the question of relevancy, so I would advise Hon. Members to be careful.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to make a comment in respect of that last point. I certainly respect the Chair's concern in terms of the direction of the debate being kept within the confines of the motion before us. I express some concern, however, since the motion before us is to postpone consideration for six months rather than to adopt the Bill.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do understand what the Hon. Member is trying to say. I understand that privatization in itself could be relevant. However, the Hon. Member was talking about the comfort and size of airplanes, and I have a problem with relevancy on that. I think everyone understands what I was trying to say. We shall continue with debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your comments. It is going to be a little difficult but I assure you I will not raise questions about relevancy during the course of my remarks.

The motion before the House now deals with the Eldorado question in the light of the government policy of privatization. The motion proposed is to delay the privatization of Eldorado and the merger with the Saskatchewan mining corporation for six months. The reason for raising that now is extremely relevant because suddenly the whole privatization policy of the Government is up for grabs as a result of the announcement made today.

Up until now we have been assured that the Government was going to privatize a bit of this, a bit of that and a bit of the other thing, and that the subsidiaries of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, of which Eldorado is one, would be hived off to the private sector, but that the large corporations which were assets in the Government's portfolio would in fact not be sold off.

Regardless of the qualifications which the Prime Minister tries to put upon it, there is no question that Canadians understood that his pledge after meetings in Montreal in 1985 was that Air Canada would not be privatized.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I very much appreciated your comments about relevancy. It is a time-honoured tradition in the House that a motion to postpone consideration for six months is really a filibuster type of motion. It will not postpone the privatization of the corporation, as the Hon. Member has said, but postpones Parliament's consideration of the wisdom of the legislation brought forward to the House by the Cabinet.

We have immediately seen the Member ignoring the comments which you made about relevance. He has gone on to make a quite inaccurate statement on government policy. The government policy has been clear and consistent prior to the last election and subsequent to the last election.

We have the filibuster amendment before the House. Surely that is enough of a parliamentary tactic for the Opposition. The least we can expect is that they will stay relevant to the motion to postpone consideration of the Bill rather than going off on these wild goose chases.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The point has been made to the House and I do expect that Hon. Members will be careful.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I assure you that I am always careful. Regardless of the niceties which the Member from Calgary is suggesting, the impact of a motion for a six-month hoist is that you do not carry out a measure now but rather in six months' time. One purpose of waiting for six months is to get clarification of what the Government intends to do with respect to privatization. Is everything on the block or not? It looks to me increasingly as though everything is on the block.

I think that is relevant and important. I think Canadians should know exactly what the Government intends to do because Canadians have indicated overwhelmingly that they do not want major Crown corporations to be privatized. They have questions about the privatization of smaller Crown corporations such as Eldorado, which happens to be before us now. We have not had an opportunity in this House to have a profound discussion on the principles which were put forward by the former Minister of State for Privatization, which were quoted by the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

If that is the Government's policy, then let the Government bring back policy to the House of Commons and let the House of Commons reach a judgment as to whether or not those principles are valid. Having done so, let us look at any proposals the Government may have with respect to privatization in the light of those principles.

The Minister of State would have been a lot more helpful if she had talked about principles on public involvement and public intervention, not only with a view to getting things out the door but also to getting things in, because there are many instances in which it is entirely appropriate for there to be social ownership and for there to be public participation. I was commenting on some of those cases yesterday. However, Madam Speaker, we have not had that debate.

It was argued by the Minister of State in her speech that if the environment changes maybe you should privatize. I am not sure how that applies to Eldorado, and even if there are changes in the economic environment I am not sure that there are not other approaches which should have been examined and canvassed rather than the one chosen by the Government.

If I may say so, certainly the same question arises with respect to the issue of the day which, I am sure you will agree, one cannot help but refer to a bit, that is, the announcement with respect to Air Canada. With regard to the question of whether other options are available, the other options were not examined in the case of Eldorado and there is no indication that they were examined with respect to Air Canada either.

With regard to the question of effectiveness, it was suggested by the Minister of State responsible for Crown corporations—although it turns out she is responsible for getting rid of them—that Crown corporations are less effective than those in the private sector. Again, I am not sure how that conclusion is reached with respect to Eldorado and certainly the statement made today by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was fulsome in its praise of the effectiveness of the way in which Air Canada had operated in competition with airline companies in the private sector.

There is the question of public funds. I am not sure what public funds were required for Eldorado to remain in the public sector. We have not received that kind of information and, regrettably, it is not the practice to table that kind of information in the House of Commons. I say very seriously that the Members of Parliament who make the ultimate decisions on such issues as this should be much better informed than we are. The information provided to Cabinet and officials making decisions such as the Eldorado decision or the Air Canada decision should be made available to Members of Parliament, the opposition Parties, and the public in order that we can judge whether we are getting a good deal or a bad deal.

We have concluded that we are getting a bad deal on Eldorado. One of the reasons for that is that we have learned, with regard to the costs and benefits to the public of Canada, that the public is giving a blank cheque in terms of the prospective costs of cleaning up the Eldorado refinery site in Port Hope. We are selling off hundreds of millions of dollars of debt at 30 cents or 40 cents on the dollar to the newly merged corporation. That does not sound like a particularly good deal to me. It suggests to me that the Government has slashed the price of Eldorado at a time when the market is weak in order to get it out of the Government's portfolio.

We do not know what the case is with Air Canada, but it seems to me that if it is not less effective there must have been other ways of handling it. I think Canadians will conclude that today's announcement by the Deputy Prime Minister is a bad deal for Canadians. It is a bad deal to have a privatization policy which that particular deal violates, according to the criteria set out by the Minister responsible for privatization. It violates it in almost every respect, and yet the Government is still apparently planning to go ahead with it.

Then there is the question of accountability. We have raised questions about Eldorado, but we have not had them adequately answered. How will the uranium mining industry as represented by Eldorado, a major player, be accountable to the public on such issues as safety from nuclear radiation and the safety and health of the workers involved?

As an Ontario politician, I was involved when we in Ontario were attempting to get a handle on the dangers to health and safety to the miners of Denison Mines in Elliot Lake. Believe me, it was an impossible situation, exacerbated by the intervention at that time of the Government of Canada which sought to impose weak health and safety rules on the workers. In fact, it seems to me that the matter was extremely badly handled at that time.

Eldorado is about to be privatized. We want this to be delayed. We do not think it should occur because we think it is a bad deal. At the very least, we should have some understanding of how accountability for the workers and for the Canadians who may be affected by radiation will occur. We do not have that information.

If I can extend the parallel, we do not know how accountability will take place with respect to Air Canada either. In uranium mining, as in air transportation and rail transportation, we have developed a unique structure which has served Canada well. That structure has been provided by initiatives taken by the public sector. Eldorado is one example of this and Canadian National and Air Canada are other examples. There has been the continuation of private sector companies as well.

There has been healthy competition between the public and the private sector, and this has served Canada well. This has been a difficult country to develop, and one of the reasons we have succeeded in making this country work has been the initiatives of these public as well as private sector enterprises.

We are about to abandon that approach. The Government says that it is abandoning the whole idea of a public enterprise culture which is what has helped to make this country great. Many parts of Canada will continue to depend on that intervention by Government. "Intervention" is not a dirty word to me, particularly in those cases when it is absolutely essential that there be public involvement so that Canadians can have adequate standards of living, reasonable opportunities and reasonable equality. This is only ensured through acting together.

In a family, there is nothing wrong with acting together to make sure that the kids get educated and that the old people are looked after. Canada is a big family as well. We use different means in order to ensure the same kinds of things if we are a caring, a sharing and a compassionate society. However, we are pulling away from that kind of society and are letting the law of the market rule in more and more sectors.

Yesterday there were reports in Montreal newspapers about the rather extraordinary speech made by Robert Campeau, a man who has now become an American industrialist, to the Canadian Club in Montreal. I regret that he had almost nothing to say in French, his native tongue, to the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, but he was blaming and damning the Government for being too soft. He was suggesting that we should get out of medicare and that we are spending too much on social welfare and the like. He somehow conveniently forgot that the Campeau Corporation, now the proprietor of some $12-worth of retailing assets in the United States, in fact benefited at its initial stages from the intervention and participation of the Government of Canada, the City of Ottawa and the public sector. This gave Mr. Robert Campeau, his colleagues and his associates a springboard from which they were able to build the multibillion dollar corporate empire which Mr. Campeau now controls.

I asked myself what the devil is going on. I ask why these things are happening. What is the Government hearing? What is really involved?

If there had been opinion polling about the privatization of Eldorado, I suspect that it would have duplicated the results of recent opinion polls which have suggested that even a majority of Progressive Conservative supporters, and that is rock bottom because they are down so far in the polls, think that Air Canada should have stayed in public hands. I bet that they would say the same thing about Eldorado as well.

I do not know what the political strategy of the Government is. If it tries to pull in New Democratic votes or Liberal votes on issues like privatization, it will find itself running into a brick wall of resistance.

Why do Canadians resist this ideological drive to privatization? What is the reason for this? I would say it is quite simply because Canadians are satisfied, deep down, that it makes sense to do certain things publicly, just as it makes sense to do certain things privately, and just as sometimes it makes sense to do things jointly between the public sector and the private sector.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I don't want to dwell too long on the issue of Air Canada, but just the same, I think it should be said that the Prime Minister of our country made a very clear promise that Canada was not for sale and that perhaps a minority interest would be sold. Now that promise has been completely forgotten after the statement made today by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). He made it very clear that now all Air Canada shares would be available, that privatization would allow the sale of all shares to the private sector, without any control or direction from the Government. There were no assurances that in future, we as Canadian taxpayers would be able to pressure the management of a corporation like Air Canada to provide air services to remote communities lacking transportation facilities.

Madam Speaker, the same applies to Eldorado. We will have no authority to instruct the corporation to take action in the interests of Canadian men and women and of its workers who are at risk because they work in uranium mines.

[English]

I regret the broken promises of the Government. I regret the degree to which it is now apparently moving toward Thatcherism and Reaganism, moving toward all the worst nostrums of the right wing of politics, nostrums which have been discredited in the United States and which have helped increasingly to make that country an economic weakling in the world despite the fact that it is still a superpower militarily.

We have also seen how Great Britain's employment and manufacturing bases have been undermined by the kinds of policies followed by the Government of Great Britain. Nonetheless, we are now seeing the Government here following that same course.

Canadians increasingly distrust the Government. They get calmed down for a while because the Government toes a narrow line, does not say very much and hides its true intentions. Then, all of sudden, when we see a Bill like this one on Eldorado or hear a statement like today's statement on Air Canada, the true colours of the Progressive Conservative Government come out all at once.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, that is not why Quebecers voted for the Progressive Conservative Party in 1984. At the time, Quebec voters thought the Conservatives were really progressive. Madam Speaker, you were among those Conservative candidates who joined the Progressive Conservative Party because they thought it was really a progressive party. It isn't. It is clear, Madam Speaker, that the Conservatives want to impose right wing policies. They want to impose policies borrowed from President Ronald Reagan in United States and Mrs. Thatcher in Great Britain, policies that run counter to the opinions of Canadian men and women. That is why, Madam Speaker, we are in favour of applying a six-month hoist to the proposed legislation on Eldorado Nuclear Limited. We want discussion and debate in the House on privatization policies before proceeding with a measure like the privatization of Eldorado. Now that the Government has started to privatize big corporations like Air Canada, will Petro-Canada and the CBC be next? I really don't know. In any case the Government is clearly taking another step backward in terms of the progressive policies sought by Canadian men and women across this country.

• (1620)

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Speaker, does the Hon. Member think it is a good idea for employees of a Crown corporation to have some ownership in that corporation, which is one of the proposed ways of privatizing Crown corporations?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the Liberal Government prior to 1984 and the Conservative Government since 1984 had the opportunity to democratize and open up the management of Crown corporations. They failed to do so. Since those Crown corporations are owned by the people of Canada already it seems to me that the issue is, what is it about the direction of Crown corporations that should be different, if anything? I happen to think that a substantial amount of change can and should have taken place. For example, representatives of the employees should have been put on the board of directors of every major Crown corporation. That is a good idea. I think different means of decision-making and working styles should have been developed within Crown corporations as an example of how the Government of the day expected management to function in the private sector as well.

We know the degree to which Japanese corporations have been extremely successful in penetrating the North American market. One of the reasons is that the management style is much more participatory, open, and extends responsibility and authority right down to the sweeper, the mechanic or assembly person on the shop floor. That of course has not occurred in this country because of blind resistance to having trade unions or workers involved in decision-making affecting their workplace, their work, or the company for whom they work. That occurs in the private sector and, unfortunately, in the public sector as well. I have to say that even companies as effectively managed as Air Canada have not come nearly as far as they should have in that particular direction.

The Hon. Member talked about share ownership in Crown corporations, the idea that you have to privatize Crown corporations in order to give a few shares to employees because somehow that is going to make the place work better. If you look at options, opportunities and alternative methods, that could have been done without having to go to privatization.

There is no particular necessity or requirement under privatization that those employees' share ownership continue. As the shares are sold off, as employees' priorities change, they may end up back in the hands of large corporate shareholders.

Mr. Thacker: That is called freedom of choice.

Mr. Cassidy: Management may cease to put shares in the hands of employees. There is no guarantee that the employees with a handful of shares have any meaningful voice in the place they work. I think that is wrong. There are other ways we can handle this question.

I appreciate the Hon. Member raising the issue because it concerns work styles and the way workers organize, which I believe is a fundamental issue for Canadians in the 1990s.

Mr. James: Madam Speaker, I wanted to speak to some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I am very concerned about this allegation that the Government does not talk about its agenda. The Hon. Member indicated that no statements had been made on this subject. There are newspaper reports which indicate that we talked about examining all Crown corporations, including Eldorado and Air Canada. Certainly one of our campaign themes in 1984 was to better manage Crown corporations. In the November 1984 Economic Statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as well as the Budget of May, 1984, concrete plans were announced for the rationalization and privatization of Crown corporations. If this is a surprise to Members opposite then I am a little concerned about what they have been reading.

In addition, there are public documents which concern how we think employees should be taken into consideration. I am surprised that the NDP, as defender of the worker, is not talking more about that. These public documents show how we want to take employees into consideration. For example, the Government requires a new owner of a Crown corporation to provide a superannuation plan at least as generous as the norm for the industry in which the new company operates. There are all sorts of things like that.

What we are really hearing is the philosophy of the Party which the Hon. Member represents. That Party believes in state intervention. All this other stuff the Hon. Member brings up is just camouflage. The NDP see us moving away from the present system to where we have more and more free enterprise that will allow for employee involvement and growth such as we have at de Havilland. Just look at the mess Boeing took over at de Havilland. The order book was a mile long and the ability to produce was one yard long. What a job they have had to turn that around and keep all those people at work! That is an example of privatization.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be arguing that there should be no government involvement in the private sector. He is of course arguing against the policies of his own Government. Through its tax policy, tariff policy, trade promotion policy, consumer standards policy, indeed any number of policies, the Government is constantly involved in a very intimate way with the fortunes and future of different companies in different regions of Canada.

For example, there was the loan to General Motors at Ste. Thérèse on very preferential terms. That was direct intervention in the largest single industrial corporation in the country. In theory, I suppose the Hon. Member would say that he and his Party are opposed to that kind of intervention. Yet they do it all the time.

My Party has no problem with saying yes. Where it is of benefit to Canadians, it makes sense to have public intervention. Governments do it all the time. What I believe is wrong is the hypocrisy of a Party which says it does not believe in that kind of thing, but when the chips are down it will go ahead and do it. However, because it does not believe in it, therefore the Government is not prepared to plan for it and do it in a coherent way. That is what bothers me about this whole question of privatization. Whether it is Air Canada or Eldorado, basically the view is, let us get them off our plate and out of the government sector regardless of whether or not that is a sensible decision. The Government never sees any reason, at least officially and in theory, for new public initiatives in cases where it is desirable.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think I will take up this debate where we left off with the question of the reason for privatization and what is the role of state enterprise.

You will recall that in Question Period today the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned my name in a quotation of a statement in which where I supposedly supported the privatization of Air Canada. I think that stems from a speech I gave in this House on December 1, 1986, when as NDP privatization critic I tried to define the issues in the debate. I was trying not to be an ideologue. The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) said a few moments ago that we are blind ideologues. We just want to have state enterprise and we cannot deal with the possibility of privatization because state enterprises are the basis of socialism. He accuses us, by implication, of being ideologues. I will admit that we sometimes do that on this side of the House, too. We throw things at the Government and say, "You are blind ideologues. You just want to privatize for the sake of privatizing. You are a Margaret Thatcher, or that kind of right wing idealist".

• (1630)

In my speech on December 1, 1986, I was trying to deal with the notion that perhaps within the Canadian tradition we could have a sensible way to look at our mixed economy where there are some Crown corporations and many private corporations. Crown corporations only amount to 12 per cent of businesses in our country. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Sarnia that that is not out of line with other industrialized countries.

In my speech on December 1, 1986, as reported at page 1627 of Hansard, I said:

> We in the NDP are not necessarily against privatization. We are not saying in every case we should not privatize, we are saying that you have to have sound economic reasons for it. We want to know what they are in this case.

I do not have the exact quote of the Deputy Prime Minister from Question Period, but it was similar to what I said. The Government should not privatize if there is sound management, if the company is being supported by Canadians and it has a public policy role.

My personal view is that if it does not fulfil those requirements we should certainly look at privatization. I do not consider myself a blind ideologue, nor do I consider the Member for Sarnia and some of his colleagues to be blind ideologues.

Those who support Crown corporations should examine the role they are playing, and those other Canadians who want to privatize Crown corporations should look at the reasons for that privatization and the inherent dangers that are involved.

I am particularly concerned about Eldorado Nuclear because my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and I are presently conducting an inquiry on behalf of the New Democratic Party into the nuclear industry.

We visited the Port Hope area and indeed held a hearing there on February 5, 1987. I referred to this in Hansard, as reported at page 3193 on February 6, 1987. I said:

> I was in Port Hope last night to hold an inquiry on behalf of the New Democratic Party into the nuclear industry there. Last night we heard from people who are concerned about the low level waste disposal, that is, all the nuclear waste which was mined in the past through refineries and by Eldorado Nuclear in Port Hope, Ontario. Port Hope is about 120 kilometres east of Toronto. I heard from 13 people representing unions, government bodies, industry and from ordinary people who live there regarding their concerns about nuclear waste. It is a big concern in the country. The Government of Canada is deeply involved in that.

One of the concerns of those people was how environmental problems would be dealt with if Eldorado Nuclear was privatized.

I want to deal with the environmental implications of this proposal. In considering the environmental aspects of Bill C-121, consideration should be given to the situation at Eldorado Nuclear now and the wider implications of uranium mining which the newly merged company will encounter. Eldorado Nuclear has severe environmental problems to deal with, especially at its Port Hope, Ontario, refinery, where there has been a difficult struggle about the nuclear dump site, as well as at the northern Saskatchewan mine sites.

Essentially, Eldorado's Port Hope dump site is full, and the situation has been summarized very well by the Library of Parliament in its research paper. It states:

> The effluent treatment process at the Port Hope refinery produces approximately 600 tonnes/year of solid waste that is mainly calcium oxide (lime) containing calcium floride and uranium at 500 to 1,000 ppm. This material, and much smaller quantities of other solid wastes that contain metallic impurities including arsenic, are dumped at a licensed site near Port Hope (the Granby dump site). This depository is close to being full and yet no alternate site or plan has been selected. Eldorado has been waiting for the federal Government to decide what should be done with this dump, and presumably the new company will also wait for direction. Any plan that requires the removal of the material to a new site will be very expensive (mainly transportation), and according to the details released with the merger plans, the costs will be borne mainly by the federal government (possibly to as much as $100 million).

Why is the federal Government continuing to bear this cost after the privatization?

One of the unsolved problems we are hearing about in our inquiry into the nuclear industry is the disposal of nuclear wastes. For years, companies like Eldorado Nuclear and others have been producing nuclear materials but have been unable to come up with guaranteed ways of disposing waste, either in the case of low level nuclear waste at Port Hope or in the case of Ontario Hydro with their swimming pools in the nuclear reactors which have used rods of a high level of nuclear wastes. The cost of disposing of this waste has never been taken into account and it has become a big issue in terms of the privatization of this company.

The resolution of Port Hope is mainly to dump the responsibility onto the federal Government which will pay the bulk of the costs.

The first $2 million will be borne by the company, 23.5 per cent of the next $98 million will be borne by the company, and 76.5 per cent by the federal Government. Anything over $100 million will be borne by the federal Government entirely. Certainly, this is somewhat of a sweetheart deal for the company.

Normally, companies are purchased with assets and liabilities, but in this case some key liabilities have been taken over by the federal Government. Why? I think the answer is simply that the Government in its desire to privatize at all cost is desperately anxious for a good share price on the flotation of the new company's stock. What better way for the federal Government to get that than to assume the liabilities of environmental responsibility and of Eldorado's enormous debt. The Government can then privatize to one of its friends, in this case, Denison Mine, one of the companies in the empire of the late Stephen Roman.

There was an article in The Globe and Mail last weekend written by Paul McKay. He said that medical records and royal commissions have shown that a pathetic army of the miners Mr. Roman employed at his uranium mines in Elliot Lake, Ontario, have gone to their own early graves because their lungs were needlessly poisoned with radioactivity and mine dust. The article went on to say that because the problems can surface many years after contamination more are fated to follow them.

He said that they will be the victims of two decades of primitive mine conditions in a company that refused to spend more than a pittance on mine safety equipment and which had a wilful ignorance of study after study proving that uranium miners were being ravaged by cancer and lung disease. The article went on to state that only after one of Canada's most bitter wildcat strikes in 1974 and a subsequent royal commission that publicly vindicated the health and safety experts, did Mr. Roman and his company, Denison Mines Limited, install safety equipment.

That is rather a damning indictment of Roman and Denison Mines. Mr. Roman, the great free enterprise buccaneer, of course got most of his money in the development of Denison Mines from hand-outs from Eldorado Nuclear and guarantees from the Government's Eldorado Nuclear.

The Government is now prepared to sell Eldorado Nuclear without including the entire environmental responsibility and the enormous debt. The environmental difficulties do not end with dump sites. There are further problems in Port Hope and in Saskatchewan mine mills. Continued operation of the Port Hope facility, especially at the present high rates of production—9,000 tonnes of UF6 annually—will generate considerable levels of solid and liquid waste. With the proximity of the plant to both Lake Ontario and the townsite, the new company would do its image a great deal of good by committing itself to efforts to recycle or clean up and sell all such wastes. No mention has been made of such an approach.

Clean-up problems also exist in the mills in Saskatchewan. The tailings that are produced contain small amounts of uranium, radium and other elements. Very good effluent treatment is required on an ongoing basis and a thorough understanding of the principles involved have to be taught to the personnel involved. Historically, such understanding has been suspect at best. These are problems the Government is not really acknowledging.

It seems to me it is too early to privatize Eldorado Nuclear. We need a full government inquiry into the nuclear industry and what is happening in the nuclear industry and how we can deal with some of these environmental problems such as the disposal of high level and low level nuclear waste with which Eldorado Nuclear is so involved. So I think it is too early to privatize Eldorado Nuclear. I also think the Government has taken too much of the responsibility for the debts and for the immense environmental problems.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House my speech of December 1, 1986. I tried to deal with some of the principles of privatization in that speech. I pointed out that the Government's privatization campaign, as I saw it, was not a response to public pressure. I said, as reported at page 1626 of Hansard:

> Rather, it seems to stem from a neo-Conservative ideology which I think is at odds with Canada's history. Crown corporations go back to the construction of the Lachine Canal in 1921. That was our first public enterprise and it was undertaken by the Government of Lower Canada when a private firm involved failed. We have seen the same pattern throughout Canadian history. Our Crown corporations have been a binding force for a small population in this vast country which is next door to the most powerful country in the world. We have had our reasons for Crown corporations. They have been justified by the need to provide essential services, develop national resources, operate public utilities, bail out private sector firms, or pioneer in new fields.
> They were established not only for a public presence but also a Canadian presence in areas where the Americans might well have otherwise stepped in.

We in the New Democratic Party believe there must be, then, reasons for privatizing the Crown corporations, given that they have a role to play in Canadian history. There have been public opinion polls taken on this issue. Those polls show that most people want to keep Crown corporations except for one group, those who earn over $55,000 a year. The rich want to sell the Crown corporations. I suspect it is because they would like to buy them so they can benefit by picking up these jewels that Canada owns. It is a phoney question to ask if we would not want the workers to own it. The workers already own it. We all own it, collectively. There is room for the workers to become more involved by getting them on the board of directors and having them involved in the health and safety aspects of the enterprise, particularly in the uranium industry. The steel workers have made great improvements there and are still fighting to make better improvements.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House a paper prepared by Professor John Langford for the Institute for Research and Public Policy at a conference a couple of years ago on privatization. Professor Langford is a professor of public administration at the University of Victoria. He attempted to analyse the reasons for advocating privatization. He said one belief is that privatization will remove the state enterprise threat to the mixed economy. The premise is that Governments now own too much of the economy. How much state enterprise in some industrial sectors is significant or insignificant? He said the fact is that state enterprise accounts for only about 12 per cent of the economic activity in Canada. That is not out of line with the situation prevailing in a number of other successful industrialized countries.

That refutes the argument that there is too much state enterprise. Another reason given in support of privatization is that it will create new jobs, new investment, a renewed economy, and a rationalized private sector. While that may sound promising, I am wondering about the historical evidence in this area. The Hon. Member from Sarnia told us of an experience he had. I can speak about my experience from British Columbia. The former Premier, Bill Bennett, privatized many of the Crown corporations in British Columbia in one lump. It was called the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation. People bought shares for $6 a share. They now sell at less than a $1 a share. That privatization scheme was a disaster and some investors are still paying for it. It did not particularly create any jobs.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) once said: "I have yet to see a takeover that created a single job except for lawyers and accountants". Privatization could be spoken of in the same way and it could simply lead to further corporate concentration. Privatization does not necessarily create jobs. It has to be shown where the jobs will be created. In the glut in the world right now with respect to uranium, and in the basic failure of the nuclear industry and the reactors, the fall-out from Chernobyl and Three Mile Island, it will be very difficult to expand the nuclear industry whether it is private or public.

Another thought is that the Crown corporations demoralize or damage the private sector by draining off available capital and competing unfairly. Professor Langford considers the prerogatives of Crown corporations. He pointed out that in some instances Crown corporations have to move in ways that private corporations would not do, for example, in certain public policy initiatives.

I could go on and speak about the arguments on privatization, pro and con, but all I will say is that we think this is a bad deal. We think the Government is giving it away, likely to its friends, perhaps to Denison which has such a bad environmental record. We think the Government is picking up untold costs for environmental clean-up. I have been there and I have seen the problems associated with it. We do not think this will create any more jobs or create more economic growth. It is just privatization for the sake of privatization. When that happens, we in the New Democratic Party will oppose it, as we do now.

Mr. James: Madam Speaker, I just want to say to my hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and my neighbour in the Confederation Building, that I am a little concerned when he says the federal Government is attempting to put Eldorado Nuclear in good financial shape. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) seemed to be lauding the Government, or being positive towards the Government being involved in state intervention or financial assistance in connection with private enterprise. He mentioned General Motors in Ste. Thérèse. It appears likely that the Government will have to look at every individual situation.

My colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway said he is not necessarily against privatization, but he is saying we are going into wholesale privatization. In three and a half years we have privatized, if we add a lot of incidentals, perhaps 19 corporations. We have 127 corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada which fall under 54 parent corporations.

• (1650)

He says that his Party is not necessarily against privatization. I ask him which privatizations Members in the socialist Party have supported. I do not know of any that have been brought forward by the Government that they have supported. I know that the Hon. Member speaks convincingly and with heart. I ask the Hon. Member when his Party has supported such privatizations and which ones.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, that is a pretty hypothetical question. The Hon. Member cannot argue that the Government has not privatized a great many corporations and then ask us which ones we support. We will obviously not support the privatization of Air Canada because the company is working well. It is functioning well, pursuing a public purpose and the people do not want it. Why should we support that?

If the Hon. Member were to give me one that is a real dog and for which there is a good sale, then we will support that.

I wish to take up the first point raised by the Hon. Member. Let me clarify what I was arguing. I was saying that in this deal with Eldorado Nuclear Limited the Government is in fact taking all the risks. It is assuming debt liabilities and environmental liabilities. With Eldorado Nuclear those are the big risks.

The Government is doing that to push up the value of the shares so that it will look as if it is getting a good deal for the shares. But the Canadian taxpayer will be paying down the line when it assumes debts and big liabilities for environmental clean-up. That is what I am saying.

This is something like smoke and mirrors, something like saying, "We are doing well. We will put this on the market at a high share price". But in fact through the back door we are paying the costs of the environmental clean-up which is to come in the future and assuming debt liabilities. That is why I think it is a bad deal. It is also a phoney one.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question about the environmental problem with Eldorado and in particular with respect to the question of the clean-up of the Port Hope refinery. I am disturbed over the fact that the risks that are entailed there are being overwhelmingly taken by the public sector despite the fact that Eldorado is being privatized. So it seems like there is a policy to privatize the profits and keep the losses or costs in the public sector.

Does my hon. friend agree with that? Does he feel that the estimates that have been given, which could put the costs as high as $75 million to $100 million or more of extra public expense involved with the clean-up of the refinery waste at Port Hope are realistic? If so, how does it benefit the taxpayer if we take in $100 million or $200 million in the sell-off of Eldorado and then turn around to pay out $100 million or more for the clean-up of the refinery wastes? Is that not like the de Havilland deal where the Government paid Boeing to take over de Havilland? Is that not the type of situation which is occurring?

Mr. Waddell: It is a shell game, Madam Speaker. Of course that is what it is. That is what is going on.

With respect to the low level wastes, I think the figure cited by the Hon. Member may be grossly too low. The problem results from the 1930s or the 1940s when radium was processed. At that time we did not know the same things that we know today so there was a lot of it dumped around.

The low level wastes are the wastes that come from the production of uranium products and the yellow cake that ultimately goes to be used in other aspects of the uranium fuel cycle. These are not the radioactive rods that are in the big hydro generating nuclear plants. However, they are very important.

People in Scarborough will know that in the McClure Crescent area of Scarborough there are 6,000 tonnes of soil which are contaminated. They are talking about removing that. I can tell the Hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that we have some of this in British Columbia. We have a problem in Surrey with low level nuclear wastes.

When we were having our hearings we were told that in the Port Hope area there is something in the order of 1,200,000 tonnes. Can Hon. Members imagine the cost of removing that? That cannot be put into the lake. Some of it is leaching into the lake. This is a serious matter.

I am astounded by the environmental problems and the contaminant problems that exist in the Golden Horseshoe area around Toronto and in southern Ontario. It is something which astounded me when we took our trip into that area. I do not think that anyone in the federal Government, the Crown corporation, until now Eldorado Nuclear, or the Province of Ontario has really faced up to what that clean-up bill will be. It will be a huge bill.

Under this legislation, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre points out, the Government has committed itself to picking up a lot of the costs. I think I cited the exact figures. The first $2 million will be borne by the company. Of the next $98 million, 23 per cent will be borne by the company and 76.5 per cent by the federal Government. We are looking at about $75 million or $76 million. The cost to clean up the rest of the wastes will be borne entirely by the federal Government. That is a nice way to get Eldorado Nuclear out of its historic environmental waste disposal problem. It is one of the big liabilities, if not the biggest, of the company. It is just being quietly shelved out the back door.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I realize that we will not have much time to complete the debate today. Perhaps I can make a few comments before we wrap it up for today's session.

I begin my comments on the amendment put forward by my colleague from Regina on a rather sad note. This is a very dark day for the country. We are discussing turning over Eldorado Nuclear to private interests without any context of an over-all plan for turning over Crown corporations to private interests. Earlier today the people of Canada were shocked with the announcement of another initiative of the Government with respect to turning over Air Canada to private interests. Again, this is being done without the benefit of a comprehensive program or any context for this particular initiative. It is simply an ideological response on the eve of the pre-election period.

I suppose in a sense that we can talk about both of these initiatives because we in the New Democratic Party are deeply troubled when we see the Government going against what is obviously the wish of the public.

I would like to consider the result of some polls that have been conducted in the last couple of days. For example, in my own Province of British Columbia I notice that when residents there are asked, some 72 per cent of British Columbians feel that Air Canada is a well run enterprise. When asked whether or not it should be sold to the private sector, the overwhelming majority of British Columbians say no, it should not. They are proud of Air Canada. They feel that it is well run and that it serves Canada. They say that it is internationally renowned. It is considered one of the best 10 airlines in the world. It is profitable.

I suppose that Canadians from my Province of British Columbia have certainly indicated clearly what they want done. It goes contrary to the Government's initiative. Perhaps that helps to explain why the popularity of the Government is so low in the country and particularly in places like British Columbia. It is because people simply do not have faith in the initiatives of turning over publicly owned enterprises to private interests.

I see, Madam Speaker, that it is time to complete my remarks for today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West) moved that Bill C-245, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (suspension), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to speak today and introduce the subject of my Bill, C-245, which is intended to further the spirit of honourable conduct and thought which motivate both this House and the other place. Perhaps I might also extend that to include committees, following my experience of the last hour or so, where we spent the better part of an hour on a procedural matter that should have taken a minute or so, primarily due to what I might call the grandstanding of a particular Member who was not a regular member of that committee, but who chose to use the opportunity to engage in partisanship or other activities not germane to the subject to attempt to draw attention to himself.

The Chambers of Parliament are properly the forum to address long-standing questions of proper management, economic justice, and a fair society. They are properly the realm of reasoned debate, where individual insights contribute to a collective wisdom. Parliament should be the hub of political action with the rays of its policy deliberations stretching over an ever mobile society.

There are moments when those goals are not upheld. There are times when Members fail to abide by the rules of the House. This Bill is an effort to ensure that those moments are less frequent. The Bill is a statement that the House does not support the actions of a Member who deliberately flouts the traditions and practices which bring credibility and responsibility to these Chambers.

The Bill would ensure that, if a Member is ejected from this House or a Senator from the other place, his or her sessional allowance would be deducted for the period of suspension. In other words, the Bill is an unequivocal statement that the House, and indirectly the people of Canada, do not support the actions of Members which are unacceptable in the parliamentary tradition.

The monetary penalty is not the significant issue, because in reality it is not an amount that is so large as to have a great impact. It is somewhat like a hockey player who earns a $300,000 salary receiving a fine of $1,000. What is significant, just like the hockey fine, is that it sends a signal regarding appropriate or, more correctly, inappropriate behaviour in this place.

There is no doubt that behaviour of the type we have seen displayed in this House from time to time is unbecoming, and is offensive to most Canadians who watch these proceedings. It casts a negative cloud on all Members of the House, not only the offenders. It reduces the respect of Canadians for politicians, Parliament, and governments. This is neither healthy nor desirable in a democratic society.

I have a list here of some past incidents and Members who were suspended. I have decided not to reiterate those events as it would simply give credit, credibility, and attention that they do not deserve.

Members of the House have welcomed the increased independence and responsibility that our work has been given through parliamentary reform. Through recent reforms to the committee system and the process of Private Members' Bills such as this one, we are increasingly given the opportunity to voice our individual opinions, expertise and dissension, and to seek the inclusion of those views in public policy.

This is certainly a legitimate process, and it is an integral part of our representation of constituency and regional concerns. We are failing to serve our electors if we do not effectively use parliamentary debate and scrutiny.

However, there are cases when a Member persists in actions which do not serve the interests of Parliament or constituents. Members can, through intentional misconduct or a mere lapse, bring discredit to the House. It is neither warranted by tradition nor desired by our colleagues. The Speaker may intervene to avoid conflict, and will always exercise great care in ensuring that the rules of the House are followed. In most cases, the Speaker uses the skills of tact and knowledge of procedure to effect a resolution. In a few cases reconciliation is not possible, and disciplinary action must be taken.

Currently, the strongest punishment that the House through the Chair can exact is suspension. This penalty is not levied frivolously. In fact, a full series of events must occur before suspension is considered. A Member might challenge another's statements in terminology that is unparliamentary, or refuse to withdraw an inflammatory comment. Under recent reforms, the Speaker may eject that Member from the House without, as was previously the case, seeking a vote in the House. This single reform removed the ties of political partisanship from the disciplinary process. The second reform that I am proposing strengthens that process.

This Bill will not mean the end of suspensions from the House. Differences of opinion and interpretation will continue to mean that Members oppose one another's analysis of events and policies. This opposition is constructive, because it improves the openness of Government and the effectiveness of its policy. Rather, this Bill will mean that suspension is discouraged as as means to achieve goals which are inconsistent with the honour of these Chambers. Regretfully, what is chastisement to the House is an event to the media, and Members can incur a suspension for purposes of showmanship, not thoughtful criticism.

Clearly, a suspension of a Member may come about because he or she chooses to put political grandstanding ahead of the work of the House. Priorities such as this reflect poorly on all politicians individually, and on our parliamentary system generally.

This Bill will not prevent Members from establishing those priorities should they so choose, and it will not prevent suspensions in the future. It simply states that parliamentarians will not receive benefits for violating decorum in the House for personal political advantage.

In summary, the Bill asks Hon. Members to stengthen their commitment to decent parliamentary behaviour and practice. It asks them to assert unequivocally that they do not support the actions of those who flout the guidelines of the House. This is a Bill consistent with the goals of reason and discipline which the House espouses, and I feel it is worthy of support.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised an interesting point in presenting this Bill to the House. I certainly would like to see the matter studied further. I do want to observe that the impression that might be conveyed to someone following these proceedings is that nowadays the naming of a Member and the resulting suspension of that Member from the sitting is a frequent occurrence, so frequent that some additional sanction is required in order to prevent this from happening.

Over the last year or two, it seems to me that the actual naming and suspension of a Member from a sitting has become extremely rare. This is due not only to the interest of Members in maintaining decorum, which may not always appear to be the case, but I do think that that interest is there, but also to the manner in which the current Speaker works to diffuse potentially difficult situations, rather than letting them mount to the point where the only way to restore order is by naming a Member and suspending him or her from the sitting, thereby ejecting them from the House.

I must say that, upon reflection, to some extent I take issue with what may be implied by the Hon. Member's remarks, that is, that it happens frequently nowadays that Members, in order to gain publicity, deliberately seek to have themselves named and ejected from the House. I cannot say that this has never happened over the history of Parliament but it is certainly not the case nowadays, not according to my own observations. While it may be argued that the remedy proposed in the Hon. Member's Bill would be a useful tool in maintaining the decorum of the House and in discouraging Hon. Members from getting themselves named and ejected, I think it could honestly be asked whether this additional sanction proposed in the Hon. Member's Bill is necessary if one looks at the number of times in the past 12 months, or for that matter in the past 24 months, that Hon. Members have actually been named and ejected from the House. I think if we look at those statistics we will find that this has happened very rarely.

• (1710)

I predict that this is likely to be the case in future, dependent of course on the way the Speaker of the day works to defuse situations rather than to allow them to build up to the point that it is necessary to restore order by naming an Hon. Member and actually having that Member ejected from the House for the day or the remainder of the sitting.

While I think the Hon. Member has raised an interesting point and while I should like to see it studied further, I want to place on record my view that we are not, currently at least, faced with a situation where a clear case has been made for an additional sanction to prevent people from trying to get themselves named and removed from the House in order to seek publicity.

I do not want to see people doing that deliberately. I think that should be discouraged, but I think we should examine to what extent this is actually happening or is likely to happen in future.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the House Leader of the Liberal Party indicate that he thinks there may indeed be good reason to study the matter further. I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). I think he brought the matter forward for the first time some time ago. His persistence over three and a half years is laudable.

I think most thoughtful Members of the Chamber value very highly the authority of the Speaker, the necessity of the Speaker, and the role the Speaker plays in our proceedings. With 282 strong-minded individuals—and after the next election there will be about 13 more—it is easy sometimes to envision chaos because feelings run deep and strong.

In my close to nine years in the Chamber I have seen some of that. I guess the strongest feelings I saw were related to amendments to the Canadian Constitution some years ago, back in the early part of the 1980s. Feelings ran deep and the job of the Speaker was very difficult indeed. I think situations like that led the parliamentary reform committee, which has served the House so admirably since the last election in bringing forward progressive and positive changes, to recommend some changes in the authority of the Speaker to name Members.

Members may recall when they were first elected, those who came to the House in 1984 and those of us who served earlier, that the Speaker would name a Member. That step in the Chamber had to be followed by a motion, which usually came from the Government House Leader and most often resulted in a standing vote. We were really voting to uphold the ruling of the Speaker to suspend a Member for the balance of the sitting day. That was the usual form of the motion, although historically I think there are some precedents where the motion has called for longer periods of time.

The reform committee, supported, I think it is fair to say, by all three Parties in the House, decided that the Speaker on the Speaker's own initiative when dealing with repeated actions by Hon. Members which disregard the authority of the Chair should indeed have the authority to name a Member. The second part of the suggestion of the reform committee—and it was picked up by the House and is now part of our Standing Orders—is that the Speaker could then call upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to ensure that the Speaker's order was carried out if in those rare instances a Member refused to comply with the naming.

We have taken it away from the authority of the House in terms of the Commons. The old system still applies in the Senate, in that the Senate works under the system which was prevalent in this Chamber prior to the latest changes in our Standing Orders.

I think we have all applauded that. I think the last time, just in a statistical sense, that someone was named in the Chamber was on June 11, 1986. That is getting close to two years ago. That is a distinct improvement over the first couple of years of the life of this House when there was a great deal of discourse, a great deal of naming, and a great deal of disregard for the authority of the Chair which indeed, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton West pointed out, resulted in publicity on almost each and every occasion for the Member who chose to disregard the authority of the Chair.

We are facing another election soon and subsequent thereto we may indeed have many new Members in the Chamber who do not really recognize, at least in the beginning, the importance of the authority of the Chair. I think that was true after the 1980 election. There are probably more incidents of naming in the first year or two of a Parliament than there tends to be near the end of a Parliament when Members have had an opportunity to work together and to understand the importance of chairmen in committees and the importance of the Speaker in the House.

Bill C-245 is a very simple one. It probably has one negative ribbon in that it tells the Speaker that, through the act of naming the Speaker can affect the Member's paycheque. Indeed it is something that we may want to consider. In terms of what we want to do with a Member's allowance or a Member's indemnity, it might be better to have the authority of the House involved. For instance, on a second offence or a repeated disregard of the authority of the Chair, it might be smarter to deal with the issue of indemnity on the basis of a motion which could be considered by the House and voted on by the House.

I am thinking in terms of those very rare situations when Members are suspended for perhaps a week on the authority of the House. Certainly there are many examples in society. The use of money, in this case the withholding of money, would be a publicly visible symbol of the displeasure of the Speaker, should it be, or the displeasure of the Chamber with the behaviour of a Member and what it does to our traditions.

If I listened carefully to my friend across the way in the Liberal Party, and I have had some discussion with the Hon. Member who moved the motion, I think there might be a predisposition on the part of the House to accept the motion which I intend to move. Therefore I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-245, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (suspension), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill be withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Hawkes) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Accordingly the Order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Therefore the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—FUNDING OF MUNICIPAL NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY CANDIDATES IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, if you remember back to your high school days, I will bet that you read a lot of books and probably some books by Charles Dickens. Do you remember those wonderful novels by Charles Dickens; David Copperfield, Nicholas Nickleby, A Tale of Two Cities, Bleak House and A Christmas Carol? I am sure you remember as well the marvellous novel, Oliver Twist. I am sure you read Oliver Twist but if you did not, I will bet you saw the musical at the movies.

You must remember all the marvellous characters in Oliver Twist. Do you remember the scene where young Oliver actually said "Please, Sir, may I have some more"? That was a great scene. You must remember some of the other characters in that novel including Fagin and the Artful Dodger. What is that, Madam Speaker? Yes, you are right, Fagin and the Artful Dodger are actually pick-pockets. They put their hands into other peoples' pockets and took their money out.

Do you know, Madam Speaker, that that is happening to you, I, and every Canadian right now? We are actually having our pockets picked. You know, of course, of whom I am speaking. I am speaking of the artful dodgers of the NDP who are actually picking our pockets right now.

I know that you were as shocked as was I, Madam Speaker, when you heard the story. If an NDP supporter wants to make a financial contribution, not to the federal New Democratic Party but to a candidate in a municipal election in Toronto, that supporter sends the contribution, not to the municipal candidate but to the federal New Democratic Party. The New Democratic Party sends that contribution back to the municipal candidate. The municipal candidate does not get it directly but rather through this roundabout scam through the federal New Democratic Party.

The federal New Democratic Party then actually issues a tax receipt to the contributor for a contribution used not by the federal NDP but by a municipal candidate. That tax receipt can be used by the contributor as a deduction directly from federal income tax, not from the taxable income but from their federal income tax directly. In that way they get a tremendous benefit.

Do you think that that is legal, Madam Speaker? Do you think that that is in keeping with the spirit of the federal elections expenditure legislation? Do you think it is moral? My answer to all of those questions would be absolutely no.

What does the NDP say about that? The Hon. Leader—and I put that word in quotation marks—of the NDP, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), says that there is nothing wrong with that at all, it is quite legal, do not worry about it, everything is fine. Other members of the federal NDP caucus say that it is great. However, I must qualify that because not every Member of the New Democratic Party federal caucus says that it is great, legal, and moral. Some of them have told me that I am right, that this is not a proper thing to do and that they wish they were not doing it. However, their Leader says that it is okay and legal and so they go right on doing it even though they do not think it is the proper thing to do.

You may remember, Madam Speaker, that the NDP used to wash these contributions through the Ontario New Democratic Party. They used to turn them over to the Ontario New Democratic Party which, in turn, would give them to the municipal candidate and issue a tax receipt against Ontario provincial income tax. They do not do that anymore because the Ontario legislature, in its great wisdom, has said that that practice should not be legal, that it is contrary to the spirit of the elections contributions and expenses legislation and that it is immoral. It passed legislation which made it absolutely clear that it was illegal.

If I was an NDP candidate running for municipal office in Toronto at the moment, in light of this great scam set up by the federal New Democratic Party I would probably decide to pay for the election campaign out of my own pocket. Instead of spending the money directly from my own pocket, I would send it to the federal New Democratic Party which would send it back to me along with a tax receipt which I could deduct from my federal taxes. At the same time I would have the money in my hand to spend on my campaign.

What a scam. What a rip-off. It is just atrocious. The NDP has been using this tax loophole and it should not be allowed to get away with it. It should not be allowed to put its hand in our pockets. We must stop the artful dodgers of the NDP from doing this. Is the Parliamentary Secretary going to get the hand of the NDP out of my pocket and that of the rest of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I heard a Member of the New Democratic Party across the way say that the previous speaker is always worth the price of admission. I wonder out of whose pocket the price is coming.

The Member raised this issue in the House, and justifiably so, at a time when other issues were being raised about the reporting of expenditures in the last election campaign.

The House is having difficulty concluding second reading of amendments to the Elections Act. It is a very thick Bill and we are having trouble at the grass roots Party level and in this Chamber agreeing to a short debate and movement of the Bill to committee where these issues could be dealt with in statute form.

The Member is right that it is a pocket-picking exercise for people to get tax receipts, therefore reducing the amount of money coming into the federal Treasury, and then spend the money for purposes which do not relate to federal politics. That is the issue the Member raises. There are other issues which came out of the examination by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the election expenses returns for the County of Frontenac.

I had occasion to go through a number of election expense returns from all Parties, including my own. It is interesting to see the way in which Parties tend to treat elections in terms of both sides of the equation. There are a great many returns from some Parties on which the names of individuals making donations do not appear because the limit is set at $100 and Parties only have to report the names of people who donate $100 or more. We find large donations from political associations and unions. Then, with other Parties, the names of a great many individuals are reported as making donations. It is not that people are getting the tax receipt in one case and not in the other. It is simply the way Parties deal with the reporting of the names of individuals.

Another part of the form deals with rebates for election expenses. Money can be spent during an election campaign on campaign expenses, candidates' expenses and election expenses. Election expenses produce a refund, another pocket-picking exercise. Fifty per cent of the money spent on election expenses is refunded, and we must wonder whether, in some cases, items that properly belong under candidates' expenses or campaign expenses are put under election expenses simply to get a larger rebate, another pocket-picking exercise.

The Hon. Member has done the Chamber a favour by raising the issue. I hope that the Chamber will have the will to pass Bill C-79 through second reading stage and get it into committee so that we can get on with the business of amending the Elections Act prior to the next election. A little co-operation would be very much appreciated.

TAXATION—NORTHERN DEDUCTIONS—ELIGIBILITY OF COMMUNITIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to rise again on the matter of the northern residents' tax deduction. This question arises from my dissatisfaction with the response given to me by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on March 4.

In his response to repeated questions concerning the tax deduction eligibility criteria for the northern residents' tax allowance, the Minister of Finance has only said that there will be a commission established and, frankly, that is not an answer that I or my constituents can be satisfied with.

As a result of regulations which have been introduced, the situation in my own riding—and I use it as an example, of course, because it is nearest and dearest to my heart—is that it has become absolutely checkerboarded by the application of 14 pages of regulations that were passed, apparently without any analysis having been done as to the relationship between the text of the regulations and the reality of the divisions created when those regulations were superimposed upon the map of northwestern Ontario. For example, there is a certain road in the Town of Fort Frances, and the people who live on one side of this road qualify for the northern residents' tax allowance while the people who live on the other side of this road and are within the town boundary do not qualify.

The point that I want to expand on more for the benefit of the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary is that this leads to a distortion of the economics of the whole area. Even if the Government felt that it could set aside the issue of fairness and equity between people living on one side of the street and people living on the other side of the street, it surely could not set aside the question of the economic effects on the Town of Fort Frances of this situation.

Essentially, a family in the highest tax bracket will be offered a premium of something in the order of $50 per week to move out of Fort Frances into one of the neighbouring eligible townships. In the case I already mentioned, that family would sell its house on one side of the road and move to a house on the other side of the road where they would be $50-per-week better off by way of the tax allowance because of the way in which these regulations were written and the way in which they have been applied without any reference to the geographic, socio-economic or resource realities of northwestern Ontario.

I have another couple of reasons why a definite reply is required. I think we had a fairly good reply from the Minister but I would like to hear from the Government about retroactivity. If it is decided that communities should qualify, will it be retroactive to the start of the northern resident tax allowance? Another thing which caused me dissatisfaction was that the Hon. Minister said the commission to review the application of the allowance would be set up soon. My constituents would certainly want to know when. It is now over a month since the Minister said it would be "soon".

This issue has brought people together in my riding more than any other issue, certainly while I have been their representative. Many people have written more than one letter on this issue to me and the Minister. Very often we are talking about handwritten or typed original letters. Something over 2,000 people in the riding have signed petitions to the effect that they feel all northerners should be treated equally. Many have written outlining the particular peculiarities which have occurred in their own area. For instance, Mr. Murray Kelso of Fort Frances, in his second letter to me on this topic, and I know there will be more if the Minister does not respond, talks about a small town, a Mine Centre 35 miles east of Fort Frances which is not listed to receive the deduction.

A few miles further east is an even smaller community, Crelly which is on the list. A few miles further east of there is another very small community, Flanders, which is not on the list. There seems to be not only no rhyme nor reason in the imposition of this 14-page text on the realities of geography and economics, there also appears to have been errors made in the interpretation of the 14 pages of regulations.

The bottom line is, as my correspondent says: "I don't mind paying taxes but why as a pensioner should I pay much more than a working man in the paper mill who has the good fortune to select a residence west of the community of Fort Frances?"

The people in my riding would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary a commitment to fairness, an idea when the question will be decided, and some indication that the Minister is prepared to meet with municipal leaders who have requested a meeting with him on this question.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this Government is committed to implement a fair and logical tax system in the case of people living in northern and isolated communities. Our eligibility criteria in that respect are basically the same as those which applied to the old remission orders and are in line with Treasury Board instructions concerning federal civil service eligibility for this benefit.

In addition to being readily identified with the concept of isolation, these criteria are based on such factors as population, remoteness from major urban centres, access to roads, as well as climatic and geographical conditions. They make it possible to determine whether a community can fund its own health, education, entertainment and retail sale facilities, or whether local residents must cover great distances to have access to them.

It has been suggested that all Tier 3 regions as defined by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion be eligible for isolated community benefits. This is unacceptable because a number of major Canadian centres would then become eligible—including one with 100,000 residents. Most of the criteria applicable to the tier system are based on employment and income levels, two considerations which do not quite square with the notion of isolation.

The Treasury Board instructions and the remission orders have been with us for a number of years, and experience has shown that they have passed the test of time and are readily accepted by the residents involved. They also happen to be the best means to implement the new tax system in northern regions.

Madam Speaker, I received a number of communications from residents of communities which are uneligible for benefits and which are located close to eligible communities. This situation has nothing to do with existing instructions. This problem of borders would still be there regardless of criteria. My departmental assistants have considered a good many options but were unable to find an acceptable solution. The matter needs further consideration, and this is why the Minister suggested that a task force might review the relevancy of criteria and make appropriate recommendations.

Madam Speaker, we must not lose sight of the justification for this policy: a fairer tax system has been set up for northern regions because the old system did have serious drawbacks. It provided generous tax incentives for workers who were paid rather big housing allowances by their employers, but not for the self-employed, retired people, and workers who did not get such allowances.

Generally speaking, the new tax system for northern communities is much more generous and much more equitable. This policy is our response to the existing problems and high housing costs, and it contributes to the economic development of Canada's northern and isolated communities.

Satisfied though the majority of residents involved may be with this measure, the Minister remains fully prepared to listen to reservations expressed about the eligibility criteria. I am confident that we will find a satisfactory solution to this problem. We will give this matter top priority, and announcements should be made very soon, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The House was very quick in dealing with Private Members' Hour today. There was unanimous consent to call it six o'clock somewhat earlier than usual.

I think that created a problem for one Member who wanted to participate in the adjournment debate. He has not yet arrived in the House. Could we perhaps suspend the sitting for a few moments in order to give him an opportunity to arrive and participate in the debate which was agreed to earlier today?

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, yesterday I was in the same situation as the Hon. Member's colleague, whereby upon arriving at the House yesterday I observed the Mace leaving by the rear door. In fact, I was unable to participate in the adjournment debate.

I might offer as a suggestion, while I take up a little time in order for our hon. colleague to make it here, that perhaps instruction could be given that some assistant to the Clerk at the Table in future notify directly those Members who are slated to participate in the adjournment debate proceedings.

I realize that it would be ideal if Members were monitoring the proceedings of the House on a continuous basis. That had been my intention yesterday until I discovered that my television had broken down and was unable to observe Private Members' Hour, and therefore had not noted that it had drawn to a close earlier yesterday as it did today.

Given the circumstances, I would certainly be agreeable to the sitting being suspended, as my hon. friend suggested. In the long run, there are some administrative measures that might be taken to prevent a repetition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank both the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for their comments. I must say that because Private Members' Hour was dealt with quickly, I decided not to look at the order in which Hon. Members were to be recognized in the adjournment debate. I would have recognized the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) had he arrived at any time. There was a tentative approach to reach Hon. Members and Parliamentary Secretaries to notify them that proceedings today would finish earlier than usual. Unfortunately, I guess no one could reach the Hon. Member. As he is someone who shows a lot of assiduity in the House, I am sure he will have the opportunity to raise this point again.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.
