Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, obviously the discussion that we have heard to date on Bill C-72 has been very important. The New Democrats have had three speakers and we would like to have two more presentations today. I do want to indicate very clearly that we are prepared by the end of the day to wrap up this stage, namely, the debate on principle stage. When you look back over the debate that has occurred, the principles of this Bill have been clearly articulated and now we can move to some of the specifics, which is the next stage.

I simply want to say that we are quite prepared to see a vote on this before the day is out.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of my colleague from the New Democratic Party.

I want to point out to the House that the Bill was called for debate. We are in no way trying to preclude speakers from the other Parties. As well, I would like to say that there is no question about the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) commitment to this subject because the Bill stands in his name. We are ready to vote on the principle of the Bill and put it into committee for second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Madam Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 39 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) had the floor. He had used up four of the usual 20 minutes allowed in this debate. I take it for granted that he has chosen not to resume his remarks, that the Opposition should now have the floor, and that alternance between government and opposition Members will continue today.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, the last time I had the occasion in the Chamber to speak on the issue of language was in 1984. At that time, I presented on behalf of the then Government a resolution dealing with a solution to the very serious and painful experience of Manitoba as it was trying to realize its own language issues. By way of comment, I should say that my introduction was immediately followed by the words of the newly-minted Leader of the Opposition of the time who gave what I consider to be one of the finest addresses he has made in this House. I am only sorry that he is not making himself available today to give similar testimony on behalf of such an important issue.

• (1200)

At that time, it was very crucial for the House to assert the national interest, the public interest, in my province, one of the western provinces. There were at the time a number of voices being heard from western Canada, voices of hatred, voices of extremism, voices of terrible and awful prejudice. These voices tended to cloud the issue. I believe that it was a fine moment when members of all Parties clearly expressed their support for the Manitoba Government's efforts to find an acceptable way of implementing its responsibility to ensure the protection of minority language rights in that province.

In some ways, we have a reflection of that same kind of debate today. Once again, we have been presented with a fundamental responsibility on behalf of all Canadians to assert one of the fundamental elements of Canadian society. Once again, we are hearing an echo of those voices that are attempting to fan hatred, distrust and intolerance.

Historically, this Parliament has over many generations had to address itself to three very important axioms of Canadian unity. One is our relationship with the United States. We share a continent with one of the most powerful countries in the world. It has always been one of the most sacred trusts of this Parliament to ensure that that relationship was designed in a way that would ensure the integrity and independence of a Canadian society against the incredibly powerful pull of the other country.

A second axiom has been to deal with the centrifugal pull of the regions, the way in which there has always been a move toward fragmentation, a pulling away from the centre. Again, it has been this Chamber which has had to express itself on behalf of a notion of one Canada. We have tried to build institutions, practices and programs that would hold Canada together.

On those two counts, the present Government has not played fairly with Canada. I have been most critical of it, particularly on the first question. The Government has forgotten the need to ensure integrity and independence and the need to ensure that there is a strong, effective national Government able to represent all Canadians.

The third axiom has been the delicate and sensitive relationship between French and English, the need to maintain a balance of languages. On that count, I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and those in his Government have served and expressed the interests of Canada. They have not forgotten the historical lessons, nor have they attempted in any way to alter what has been a very important responsibility and obligation of this Chamber which represents the entire country. However, there are those within those ranks who disagree. That is one of the reasons why we must maintain this debate.

We must ensure that that minority within the government ranks is not given the credence and credibility it sometimes seeks to attain. That is why it is important for me as a western Member of Parliament who comes from a western province to clearly assert my support for this legislation and to say very clearly that those from my province who have spoken against this issue as Members of Parliament or as others do not speak for the majority of the people of the Province of Manitoba. It is important to understand that, so that those in the rest of Canada——particularly in regions of Canada where French is spoken, like New Brunswick, Quebec and other areas of the country, to understand that some people in western Canada strongly support this initiative and the Bill we are considering today. Most western Canadians endorse this measure. There is no minority voice, the voice of prejudice which represents the attitudes and views of western Canadians.

[English]

That is why it is essential that we examine clearly what is being said and what successes we have had. It is so unfortunate that there are those among us who try to dredge up the old skeletons of history, who reach back into the chamber of horrors of the past and try to pull out old political shibboleths that no longer make sense.

The successes and achievements of this country have been unique. Think how many other countries in the world are torn apart in the most divisive, fratricidal conflicts. Places like Sri Lanka, Ireland and Lebanon have been sheared, dividing families, communities and neighbourhoods over matters of language and culture. Yet we in Canada have found answers, sometimes in an awkward way, sometimes in a divisive way, but we have found answers that have allowed us to maintain a sense of community and to overcome those kinds of divisions. That is a unique achievement.

That achievement has been particularly important in western Canada because the experience and presence of the French language is not strong. Statistically, the languages of origin of many of the people of the West are perhaps German, Ukrainian or Italian. Yet in the last 20 years or so, western Canadians have clearly come to see that this is not a regional issue or a parochial issue, it is a Canadian issue. Therefore, they have been prepared to support and work at the implementation and the advancement of language rights, French and English, right across the country.

The Government to which I belonged enacted the Official Languages Act of 1969. At that time, there was a clear distinction made that the protection and enhancement of the official languages was in no way a qualification of the multicultural fact of Canada. The two could live side by side because in fact, when talking about language rights, we were talking about individual rights, not group rights. Individual rights are the rights of Canadians. Of course, the entrenchment of those rights in the Charter of Rights of 1982 made them a part of the fundamental law of the land.

Mistakes are made at times. I refer with some trepidation to the Meech Lake Accord which advances the concept that we are now establishing group rights in Canada, that rights are established according to one's collectivity, according to the group to which one belongs, not according to the fact that one is an individual who happens to speak French or English. That in itself must be looked at as a trend to be treated with some wariness. As long as we were able to assert the principle of language rights as individual rights it did not damage or begin to infringe upon the concept of cultural rights as we have come to understand them and use them in this country. I believe that that has been one of the successful formulas which has resulted in the majority of western Canadians supporting and promoting the enhancement and protection of language rights across Canada as a Canadian issue. If we find ourselves straying from that very successful formula of ensuring individual rights we could be opening up an avenue of further dispute and conflict.

However, this Bill does not do that. This Bill is very much within the tradition of asserting, before the courts, in the provision of services, and in the use of language within the federal apparatus, that French and English have equal status and are to be used equally by all Canadians regardless of what their mother tongue might be. This Bill is very much in keeping with the precedent, the body of law, and the judgment of past Parliaments.

The view which I am trying to express was well put in part in an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press. That is not usually my favourite source of quotation, for a variety of reasons, but I think that on this issue they got it right. It reads:

> The anti-bilingual group could have proposed changes that would arouse interest outside their own ranks and would stand some chance of being adopted. They chose not to. They chose to propose a policy so blatantly anti-French, so remote from policy that all federal Parliaments have endorsed . . . that they knew it had no chance of arousing interest among other MPs. That is not policy-making. That is posturing to arouse and delight ethnic prejudice.
> Playing to communal hatreds is an easy, sleazy game played usually by politicians and demagogues of the lowest type.

The editorial goes on to talk about the fact that it is so easy to arouse fear among people, as I am sure all of us in this Chamber have seen. Parents in my riding ask whether this means that their children will be denied promotion and advancement in the Public Service of Canada. That, of course, is not the case, but that is the fear which is aroused by the initiatives being taken by my colleague who represents the constituency next to mine. That kind of distortion, when not clearly counted, can lead to the misunderstandings and fears which are expressed. Civil servants in a Crown corporation in Winnipeg have asked me whether further advancement will be based upon one's capacity in French and English. Of course, there is nothing in Bill C-72 which would provide any bias one way or the other. However, the fears which have been expressed give credence and impetus to those fears and concerns.

I would hope that Members of this House would use this time in this Chamber to counter that kind of demagoguery and appeal to hatred because, as the Winnipeg Free Press says, that is the easy, sleazy game played by politicians of the lowest type. I think that is the proper definition of it.

Our position on this Bill has been very clear. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated it effectively and my colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), has been perhaps the most outstanding defender and advocate of it in this House over the last several years. It is incumbent upon the rest of us not only to adopt the official position but to try to speak, as I am trying to do today, from our own regions and our own communities. We must plead with those who have aroused so much antagonism, resentment, and reaction to this Bill to cease and desist. They are not helping the country. They are not advancing the public interest in any demonstrable way. They are simply retreating into the past and relying upon an appeal which goes to the roots of our being, but which civilized society has built up institutions, laws, and practices to suppress and restrain.

Our country is facing so many other pressures. There is that pull from the south, that incredible magnetic power which seems to be so attractive to so many Canadians, particularly Members opposite. There is the centrifugal tendency to pull the county apart over various issues, one being the increasing power of provinces and regions to assert their own positions, sometimes in total disregard of national interest. If there is one place in the country where that must be fought against, it is here. That is the mandate we accepted as federal Members of Parliament. We must think beyond parochial or provincial boundaries and try to establish laws which will represent all Canadians and will provide guideposts for future Canadians.

One of the finer hours of this House was in February of 1984 when the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister, in his first address to this House spoke eloquently and with some understanding of the concerns and fears of western Canadians about language legislation. He clearly spoke for all Canadians when he said that one must not succumb but must in fact educate, enhance, and broaden those concepts. That is the same kind of responsibility which we face today with this legislation. It is the same call for a unified and non-partisan approach. Those of us who represent western constituencies can only suggest as strongly as possible that the minority view which has been expressed from some parts of our region does not reflect that which most people think, believe, or would like to see happen.

I ask my colleagues from western Canada to understand the responsibilities which they bear as Members of this House, to speak for a wider and broader concept and belief which their own Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the NDP, and all three caucuses have adopted. They must ensure that this Bill does not become the source of further controversy, apprehension, or fear among Canadians but, in fact, becomes an accomplishment, a further step toward the unification of this country. If we can approach it in that spirit we will have again done our work well on the fundamental issue of how we keep Canada together.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. member. He was here, as was I, in 1969 when Parliament passed the Official Languages Act. It was passed with a very large majority and a majority of the Members of every political Party represented here. It was brought forward because it was considered by the Government of the day and by the vast majority of the Members of Parliament, to be one method, one means, of helping to keep this country together.

I will support the Bill we are discussing for the same reason. I am certain that a majority of Members of Parliament from all Parties will support the Bill.

As the Hon. Member has said, there are some people in Parliament and outside Parliament who oppose the Bill and who never accepted the idea that this country should recognize the two languages, as declared by Parliament. We are hearing criticism that is very often based on misrepresentation. For instance, the magazine Western Report stated that it will not be long before every public servant in this country will have to know both languages, and that every judge appointed by the federal Government will have to be fluent in both languages in the event that someone in the West or Atlantic Canada insists on having a trial conducted in French.

I do not believe that any of these statements are factually correct. I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) have received letters and phone calls protesting the Bill, as have I. I called the Public Service Commission office in Winnipeg and was told that there are some 6,900 federal public servants, of which 3.6 per cent are Francophone. After almost 19 years of the Official Languages Act, there is still a very small percentage of Francophones.

The Hon. Member was a cabinet Minister and Minister of Transport for a number of years. Does he have any information like that which was given by the Public Service in Winnipeg about the situation in Winnipeg and western Canada concerning Crown corporations such as the CNR, VIA Rail and Air Canada which employ a large number of people in western Canada?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, first, let me say that the amendments proposed by the Member who shares representation of part of the City of Winnipeg would set back substantially whatever progress has been made. It would lead to the absurd result in St. Boniface, which is a French speaking area of Manitoba, where civil servants working in that language in that part of Manitoba would not only be unable to use the language of their mother tongue but to speak the language of those whom they are serving. Of course, that concept is perverse in the extreme and turns the whole concept of official languages on its head.

There are certain designated services to the public, such as in the airline industry, where that service at the Winnipeg airport must be available in both French and English at all times so that travellers from across Canada can be understood and served. There has been no particular designation other than in those areas where such services are required.

The phobia that the Western Report and others are trying to instill is not based on fact. Indeed, I suggest that progress has not been made in many of our Crown corporations to properly ensure adequate representation in both French and English. As the Commissioner of Official Languages pointed out, there are still some areas where much work needs to be done. I hope that this legislation will do that and clearly signify that the steps taken by the Charter in 1982 are now the policy and program of the Government of Canada. That would require the managers of our Crown corporations and Public Service departments to be more solicitous and responsible in bringing about further changes.

The requirements under the present Official Languages Act are not to displace English but to ensure the protection of language rights in both languages. That is a principle that we often forget. I hope that answers my colleague.

I believe this is cornerstone legislation that can provide the basis on which to build in the future. That is why it is important it receive the unanimous support of the House.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment and then ask the Hon. Member a question. I will have been in legislatures and the House of Commons for 48 years next May. I have seen many kinds of Bills come and go. I seldom hear people question the procedures of democracy. We do not know what is in a Bill when it is introduced. Once it has been printed we are given a reasonable time, sometimes a long time, to study the Bill. We then have the right to vote on the principle of the Bill, after which it goes to a committee where changes may be made.

The purpose of sending a Bill to committee is to make changes if they are necessary, to clarify the wording or the intent so that the principle can be followed. It then comes back for report stage where there is another opportunity to determine whether the Bill is in its desired form.

Finally, there is third reading stage where the Bill can be either supported or thrown out.

We must remember that we are in a democracy. As the Hon Member said, the principle of this Bill is bilingualism. That principle was adopted many years ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you for it now?

Mr. Taylor: Bilingualism has been accepted. My people support it and I support it—

Mr. Cassidy: You support it?

Mr. Taylor: Yes.

Mr. Cassidy: Well!

Mr. Taylor: What made you think that I did not?

Mr. Cassidy: You voted against it in 1973.

Mr. Taylor: That is the trouble, Madam Speaker. Some people try to stir things up to hurt what they are supposed to be supporting. Of course I support bilingualism. Anyone in this country who wants to be fair will want all of our people, unilingual and bilingual, to be treated fairly.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you support this Bill?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member leaves all his courtesy and common sense at home he should stay home with them. He will have a chance to make a speech. I do not know why he is questioning the things I am saying, which are straight democratic principles.

• (1230)

Mr. Cassidy: Yes or no? One word, yes or no?

Miss MacDonald: You are out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We all know that every time a conversation starts up from across the floor, it becomes very difficult to listen to the person who has the floor and who should be allowed to express his or her opinion.

Mr. Cassidy: But it is much more revealing, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The time for questions and comments has actually expired. However, if the House agrees, we will allow the Hon. Member to conclude and give a short time for reply to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: I will do so rapidly, Madam Speaker. The point I am trying to make is that we go to committee to make changes, if changes are necessary. For instance, in this Bill, the English Part I says "all" judges, any judge. The French part says "a" judge. Consequently, I think some thought that every judge would have to be bilingual. It will be many, many years before everyone in Canada is bilingual. So things like that should be changed.

Surely the Hon. Member would agree that that is why we are going to committee. I am sure that with his experience, he is not going to say we should not make any changes which are sensible and reasonable and are in accord with the thinking of people in western and eastern Canada, of Canada as a whole. The kind of country we want is one in which we can work out our differences, a united country. Some groups in western Canada, and perhaps some groups in eastern Canada, want to separate this country and sever us so we cannot operate as one Canadian country.

Mr. Axworthy: I thank you, Madam Speaker, for the courtesy of extending a few minutes. I was afraid for a moment that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) was going to provide the response, which I would not share.

I certainly have no quarrel with the description by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) as to how the House works. In my remarks I was not referring to the kind of technical amendments which would improve the Bill about which he is speaking. I was specifically speaking to the proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) on behalf of a group of members of his Party, I think there are some 15 or so signatures. It states, for example, that the new language Bill should reaffirm the right of Canadians to remain unilingual without prejudice. Simply put, the advancement of the official languages should never be the responsibility of Government. In other words, the amendments being put forward on behalf of those Members are of such Draconian extent, they would totally and completely not only gut the Bill but cause a major crisis and confrontation among Canadians.

It was to those amendments specifically that I was referring and which I found unacceptable. I would hope the Hon. Member for Bow River, in rising to speak, would not associate himself with this particular set of amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to take part in this debate. I was born in British Columbia and grew up in Toronto, but I also had a very interesting experience, an important one for Canadians. I not only worked in Montreal but also spent a year at school at the seminary in Quebec City. That is where I learnt French, and it was a rare opportunity for an English-speaking Canadian to become thoroughly familiar with the French milieu in Quebec.

Madam Speaker, I am relieved that finally, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), managed to impose a measure of silence on some of the Members in his caucus who want to undermine Bill C-72, and that the Government's commitment to this Bill remains intact. Nevertheless, I am afraid the Conservatives have sent two messages to Canadians, one that they will support bilingualism and the other that they also want to be of some help or give some assurances to those who are opposed to bilingualism, that it is okay, that they have friends in the Conservative Party.

I support Bill C-72, and that is also the position of my Party. Although I know some of my English-speaking constituents, for instance, will be affected by certain problems, since there are bound to be problems when changing a modus operandi that has been in effect since Confederation, we are certainly not going to emphasize those problems. I think these issues are important to all Canadians, and we must not forget that the rights Bill C-72 gives to Francophones are also given to Anglophones.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-72 brings us a step closer towards the full equality of English and French as official languages in Canada. In essence, the legislation contains the basic elements of the 1969 Official Languages Act, while clauses have been added that arise from guarantees contained in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Constitution. The Bill also includes practices that came into effect after the 1969 Act was implemented.

A discussion of the principles of Bill C-72 means going straight to the heart of bilingualism and how it has been embodied historically.

Madam Speaker, I am not going to enumerate all the principles of this Bill. I am sure you know them. I support those principles, and I believe they should be implemented, although certain technical amendments are in order. But what worries me—

[English]

What I am afraid of is the degree to which certain back-bench Conservatives seem to want to basically gut this Bill. I note that in 1973 there were 16 members of the Conservative Party who were opposed to the resolution which at that point related the application of the principle of bilingualism to the Public Service of Canada. A number of those 16 Members are as strong today in quiet, I suppose suppressed, opposition to this Bill as they were at that time.

It is fortunate that the Conservative Party, by putting forward this Bill, is now lending its official support to the concept of bilingualism, something we have always supported and something which was initiated by a Liberal Government. Nonetheless, I have had the opportunity to look at the proposal for supposed re-evaluation presented by the back-bench committee of the Progressive Conservative Government. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) suggested, this is something that should be taken slowly because it could be indigestible if read inattentively and quickly.

The proposal, to begin with, according to this back-bench committee, which I believe includes the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), states that all references in the preamble, the purpose statement, and other clauses of the Bill, should be—

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is insinuating that I am a part of some back-bench committee. That is a lie. Let us straighten that out. Why does he not make his own speech instead of making speeches for Members on this side of House?

Mr. Cassidy: I stand corrected and I certainly withdraw that reference.

Miss MacDonald: It is not the first time you have had to withdraw something.

Mr. Manly: We are pleased he is not a member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) will want to stand corrected and the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has, I think, made his point very strongly and in language that is perhaps not very useful in this House.

Mr. Cassidy: I would hope the Hon. Member would withdraw the word he used, which I believe is unparliamentary. But I have already stated that I apologize to him and I withdraw the reference and I stand corrected on that particular point.

Mr. Taylor: I so withdraw.

Mr. Gauthier: That was not recorded.

Mr. Cassidy: Perhaps that could be recorded.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We sometimes have a problem when Hon. Members make statements and the microphones in front of them are not open because they have not been given the floor by the Chair. Sometimes they are recorded by the Hansard reporters, but it is difficult for the Chair to know what has been officially withdrawn or accepted if Hon. Members do speak without the microphones being open.

I do take for granted that the Hon. Member does agree that some language was perhaps too strong for this House. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has withdrawn. The Hon. Member for Bow River has accepted the apology. I think we can get on with debate.

• (1240)

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I would ask simply that you check the "blues".

May I point out that this back-bench committee stated that all references in the preamble, the purpose statement and other clauses of the Bill to establishing bilingualism as a goal of the Government and in federal institutions and to extending bilingualism to the private sector and to Canadian society generally should be withdrawn. Instead of that Members of this committee proposed that alternative words be placed in the preamble.

They want it to read that, whereas the Government of Canada is committed to preserving the rights and freedoms of the unilingual public whether they speak French or English and without discouraging the efforts of individual Canadians to speak the other official language for the betterment of themselves as individuals and as citizens of Canada.

That proposal, wherever it comes from within the Conservative back-benches, and I do not know who the members of this back-bench committee are, goes directly contrary, not just to Bill C-72 but to the Constitution of Canada which provides that English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges. It goes directly contrary to the Official Languages Act of 1969 which was adopted by all Parties in the House and which states:

> The English and French languages are the official languages of Canada for all purposes of the Parliament and Government of Canada, and possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights—

It goes contrary to the changes to Article 16 of the Constitution Act, 1982, which states:

> English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of the Parliament and government of Canada.

It goes directly contrary to the 1973 statement on the Public Service which was adopted by all Parties.

We are talking about measures which have been supported by all Parties. If there is an element within the Conservative Party that thinks otherwise, then those in it should come forward and let their names be made public. I think that what they are doing is profoundly dangerous to the country and to the historic agreement under which we created a society which is bilingual and multicultural, a society in which all Canadians have the right to recognition of the language in which they want to work.

There were about 15 other proposals. The back-bench committee wanted to gut, to eliminate the power of the Commissioner of Official Languages. It wanted to eliminate the right of the Federal Court of Canada to enforce Bill C-72. It wanted effectively to gut the whole set of provisions with respect to the languages of work. It suggested that any person working in the Government of Canada should have the right to work in their designated language only without prejudice to their job status in accordance with this part.

As far as I understand it, that means that the back-bench committee is trying to rewrite 20 years of efforts to create a bilingual Public Service by saying that anybody who is bilingual will not be able to communicate with someone who is a superior because that superior will have no obligation under any circumstances to work in other than their official language. In other words, there could be English-speaking Deputy Ministers or French-speaking ADMs and branch directors who would have no obligation at all to communicate with people who respond to them in the language in which they have the right to work.

The committee also proposed that the language of work for the national capital region should be English unless a position, section or department should be designated bilingual or French essential. Imagine how most Canadians would feel if it were stated that the language of work in the national capital should be French unless it had been designated to be English or bilingual by the Governor in Council. We would have had outrage from across the country. Yet back-benchers of the Conservative Party see nothing wrong in having that principle go in the other direction.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, it is also suggested that English should be the language of work for components of the Canadian Armed Forces that are directly or indirectly involved in combat. Are we really going to tell members of the Vandoos and other regiments that they will have to learn English if they want to be able to work in the Canadian Armed Forces? I find that intolerable, Madam Speaker. It is like telling someone from British Columbia who wants to become a member of the Canadian Armed Forces that he will first have to learn French.

Finally, Madam Speaker, these back-benchers are suggesting that the primacy of Bill C-72, proposed in this legislation and, although it did not exist before, nevertheless necessary to ensure the principle of bilingualism is truly applied, be struck from the Bill.

Madam Speaker, I would like to mention a specific problem, but before I do, since we have several language teachers with us here in the House, I would like to try and put the situation into perspective by quoting certain figures that reveal to what extent Canadians are involved in this question.

[English]

At the present time in the Public Service of Canada 60 per cent of the jobs are designated English essential and 28 per cent are designated bilingual. Seven per cent are designated French essential while 5 per cent are designated either French or English. Therefore English-speaking Canadians without learning a word of French now have access to 65 per cent of the total number of Public Service jobs as opposed to 12 per cent of unilingual French-speaking Canadians who have access to those jobs that are either French essential or designated either French or English. With the increasing percentage of English-speaking Canadians learning the second official language through immersion, for example, Anglophones who have become bilingual, if the current designation remains the same, will have access to 93 per cent of all federal government jobs.

It is therefore difficult to contend that the official language policy is an instrument which prevents English-speaking Canadians from having access to the Public Service. Indeed, it may very well become a tool which will facilitate access to the federal Public Service by Canadians whose first official language is English provided they make the commitment to bilingualism by learning the second official language, French.

I want to point out in particular that the suggestion that somehow French is being pushed down the throats of people in Alberta, western Canada or in other parts of the country is ridiculous. For example, in Manitoba, only 5.5 per cent of the federal government jobs in that province have been designated bilingual while the remaining 94 per cent are English-only positions.

It is interesting that of those 547 bilingual positions in Manitoba 228, or 42 per cent, are occupied by individuals whose first language is English but who have since become bilingual. This illustrates how the challenge of bilingualism is being met very successfully by English-speaking Canadians across the country and in this particular instance in Manitoba.

The two major bilingual districts in the country are the national capital region and Montreal. If one travels outside this area and looks at the situation they will see that in western Canada as a whole out of 50,000 federal government employees only 1,300 positions are bilingual and 63 per cent of those positions are occupied by Anglophones. In Ontario, outside the national capital region, there were 2,613 bilingual positions out of 35,000 public employees. Some 60 per cent of those positions in Ontario outside the national capital region were occupied by Anglophones who have become bilingual. In Ontario, outside the national capital region, there were 1,700 federal government positions occupied by Francophones which represented 4.8 per cent of the total. It is not that great. It is interesting that in western Canada there are three positions designated French essential. Of those three jobs two are currently held by Anglophones. The 18 French essential positions in Ontario are currently held by Francophones.

In Atlantic Canada there were approximately 20,990 federal government positions in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Of those positions 1,086 were bilingual and two-thirds were held by Anglophones. In New Brunswick, which is officially bilingual, there were about 7,500 federal government positions. About 2,400 were designated bilingual. It is interesting to note that more than one-third of those bilingual positions were held by Anglophones. In other words, the suggestion that Anglophones are being excluded from bilingual positions does not square with the facts at all.

Madam Speaker, I would now like to deal with the implementation aspect of the Official Languages Bill. Perhaps you could let me know how much time I have left after the remarks of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Last week, I had a chance to meet a number of language teachers, some of whom are in the House today. They are involved in a labour dispute with the Government or, more specifically, with Treasury Board. Now why is this significant? It is because in Bill C-72 Treasury Board is designated as the agent responsible for the administration and implementation of bilingualism in the federal Government. Among other things, Treasury Board is to submit an annual report to Parliament on the implementation of bilingualism in the Public Service.

Madam Speaker, today, we have a big problem. The big problem is that our language teachers, whose work is essential in order to provide for bilingualism in the Public Service of the Government of Canada, are now in a situation where Treasury Board adamantly refuses to listen and is trying to impose very unfair changes in their working conditions.

• (1250)

[English]

The situation is that up until September of last year, it was normal that the professors of the official languages, or people teaching official languages in the Government of Canada, taught for approximately 20 hours a week and had a substantial amount of time for preparation. Is that necessary? Yes, it is. Why is it necessary? It is necessary because a great deal of the instruction that they are carrying in the other official language is with officials who have to work with complicated technical subjects. To use their time effectively and teach them effectively then preparation is necessary; for example, in order to be able to deal with a Department of Justice official who needs to know how to work in the other official language for legal drafting, or someone who is a scientist who needs to know technical terms for dealing with environmental issues in the other official language because it happens to be a part of their responsibility. I could extend that to include an economist who needs to know how to communicate with officials of the Government of Quebec or New Brunswick en français over very complex or difficult economic issues.

Someone cannot do that and teach 30 or 35 hours a week. Yet that is precisely what the Treasury Board is asking of the language professors. What the Treasury Board is saying is that those language professors will have to teach as much as 37 hours a week with no time for preparation or marking.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Parliamentary Secretary, on a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, I think we are discussing a very important Bill, Bill C-72 on official languages, and I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is discussing another measure that concerns language teachers, a measure that comes from Treasury Board. I think it would be more appropriate for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to discuss the contents of the Official Languages Bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is saying we should talk about official languages and bilingualism in the abstract, without getting specific. I am all for discussing principles, and we support the principle, but we also want to look at how this Government is practising its principles. In this instance, I am talking about language teachers who give courses for Francophones who want to learn English and who have to learn English to remain in a bilingual position, and for Anglophones who need French to be able to function. The Government has now changed their working conditions in such a way that they cannot do a professional job, and as a result, this will deprive public servants of their right and of an opportunity to work in the other official language. How can the Government honour its commitment to bilingualism if there are no teachers to teach the other language? They have been without a contract for eight months. The right of teachers to be guaranteed a certain number of hours to prepare their classes is being ignored, a right that the Government or, more specifically, Treasury Board has refused to recognize in the bargaining process so far.

[English]

I wish to conclude by saying in a very strong manner how much I deplore an advertisement that appeared in The Ottawa Citizen and other newspapers recently by the Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada. The ad states, "Wake up Canada racism runs rampant on Parliament Hill. Proposed Official Languages Act a racist document". I wish that there was some way by which that particular group could be brought before the courts, or in some other way forced to apologize to the people of Canada and to this Parliament for that type of slur on Parliament in trying to bring official bilingualism up to date 20 years after the Act of 1969.

The misinformation, the lies, and the misrepresentations in this particular advertisement are contemptible and should not exist in a free society. I urge all Canadians who look at this to say yes, there may be some contention about how we apply bilingualism, but let us not dispute the principle. Let us work constructively in order to ensure that this society is genuinely committed in act as well as in theory to the principles of bilingualism, and ensure that that is a reality for every Canadian, so that every Canadian of whatever official language group can be served in the language of their choice by the Government that we have in this great country.

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member states that he deplores the misstatements of fact which were made in the ad he referred to, and in some of the material that we in western Canada see, for example, in the Western Report.

Does the Hon. Member agree with me that the real feelings of people in western Canada, in cities like Ottawa, and other cities is seen in the thousands of Anglophone parents who arrange for their children to be educated in the French language? Those parents recognize the value of having a knowledge of more than one language, rather than the nonsense espoused by the view contained in that particular advertisement.

Mr. Cassidy: It is quite extraordinary if one goes to Whitehorse, Edmonton, Calgary, or Winnipeg, to see the degree to which parents have opted to have their children go into immersion programs and learn French, and the degree to which parents have been pressing the school boards, not only in the major cities of western Canada, but also in smaller communities, to offer education in both official languages.

I represent an area where the question of bilingualism has been a difficult one at times. On the one hand, people have chosen in a very strong way to have their children educated in the other official language. In particular, the Catholic school boards in Ottawa do an excellent job. But it is true that for unilingual civil servants who are 40 or 50 that it has been tough. Changing things is not easy. But at the same time we have to understand that the principle of bilingualism is important. We all want to maintain a country. A country cannot be maintained if we hark back to the 1960s when CN did not make its cheques or its menus available in both official languages, but only in English, depending on where one was.

I mentioned the misrepresentations of the Alliance for the Preservation of English. This advertisement states that the Bill would have the Government "authorized to infiltrate provinces, municipalities, business, labour, and volunteer organizations with its insidious bilingual policy". That is totally untrue. It states that, "All federal judges will have to be fluently bilingual, translations and interpreters are to be eliminated". That is patently and completely untrue. It states that, the Official Languages Commissioner would become "investigator, policeman, prosecutor, witness and judge as and when he chooses". That is completely untrue. Those types of misrepresentation are what I believe can poison relationships between the two official language groups in this country when we should be looking for statesmanship.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciated the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) as he spoke in support of Bill C-72, the re-enactment and revision of the Official Languages Act of 1969. The Hon. Member was commenting in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) about the way in which English-speaking Canadians across the country have recognized the way in which the country has changed. They are sending their children to French immersion classes to equip them for the new Canada.

Has the Hon. Member seen something of the survey done by the Canadian Facts people a couple of years ago? Could he say something more about the way in which legislation when it responds to a national necessity, which the Official Languages Bill did in 1969, can play its part in changing a country, developing new attitudes and giving us a Canada which is much more sensitive to the realities of French and English in this country than was the case back in the days when even federal Crown corporations could be found quite blind to the reality that there were many Canadians who preferred to speak in French or who were even French unilingual but were neglected?

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I grew up in the 1950s. I was fortunate to become bilingual as a child. It is a real privilege and it is something now which has become much more open to Canadians than it was. I was the only Anglophone in a French speaking collége classique in Quebec, totally immersed, and being the only Anglophone indicated how few Anglophones had that particular experience.

I am very much familiar with the degree to which we had two solitudes in Canada up until the end of the 1960s. Yes, I believe we have changed and changed substantially since then. Change is not without difficulty. We see that even today as Quebec struggles with such issues as the question of Bill 101.

I think that after 20 years of worrying about Quebec's future status and whether Quebec would be part of Canada, we now have a constitutional accord in which Quebec agrees that it wants to be a part of Canada. That in itself is a tribute to the foresight of all three Parties in adopting the Official Languages Act in 1969 as one of a number of significant steps to ensuring greater equality for the two language groups and for ensuring that French speaking Canadians were not locked into a linguistic ghetto which excluded them from the rest of Canada.

It is also fair to point out that in 1969 there were problems for French Canadians while in that period of time English Canadians in Quebec, then as now, had a wide range of services in the Province of Quebec, yet French Canadians outside of Quebec did not. To this day there are still problems. Nonetheless, for French Canadians in the other provinces outside of Quebec the situation has improved dramatically over the course of the last 20 years. Education is now available for their children in the language of their choice, a choice which hardly existed back 20 years ago. A number of provinces, including Ontario, albeit with difficulty, and certainly New Brunswick which has become officially bilingual, have recognized the existence of the linguistic minority. These have also been essential building blocks toward the creation of a country which can live with itself and where linguistic groups can live with each other much more happily and constructively and, I hope, permanently than perhaps was the case 20 years ago.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, this is a Bill that we celebrate in the Official Opposition. We are pleased to see it brought forward. We were anxious during a period of delay and during a controversial period when media reported hesitations and uncertainties. I was hoping that today at the beginning the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would be on his feet.

[Translation]

I am told he was in the House today, to emphasize his commitment to this Bill and to give us the assurance that it will be passed with its main principles intact and perhaps even strengthened in committee, and that we will soon embark on this second, very important stage in providing for an official languages policy that is fair to all Canadians.

[English]

I have thousands and thousands of bilingual Canadians living in my riding of York Centre. But the second language which they speak is not French. The first language is English. The second language could be Italian, it could be Hindi, it could be Urdu, it could be eastern European and it could be Spanish, to a growing degree. The bilingual Canadians of York Centre are, by and large, not English-French speakers but English and something else.

As many of them are new to our country, a question they undoubtedly ask is why is Canada committed to official languages French and English and why not to Ukrainian as a second language or to one of the many, second languages that are spoken in my riding. There is a very good answer to that question, a very important one. It is an answer more and more with which newcomers to our country come into contact and which I believe once understood gives a very wide acceptance and understanding about why French and English are the official languages of Canada. The answer lies in our history. The answer lies in our constitutional arrangements. The answer, I would assert, lies in the soul of our country. More and more I hope Canadians will come not only to accept and understand but to recognize the source of strength that we derive from having two such important historic and widely understood languages as the official languages of our country.

So far as the numbers are concerned, there is no other language group that can claim the numbers that there are of French speaking people in our country. The Ukrainian community which might be third or the German community which might be third is very far behind the Italian community which has, I think, 400,000 Italian Canadians of Italian origin, born in Italy, living in the Metropolitan Toronto region. Even they, with their very large numbers, are far behind the French fact in Canada, the millions and millions of Canadians for whom French is their first language and is still the main language they speak.

On the numbers question, although you may lift up your head in York Centre and look hard to find a French speaking person, looking across the national scene there is no doubt that French is the predominant, second most frequently used language in Canada. That though is not the whole of the story. The important fact is our constitutional arrangements. We would not have a Canada, a country stretching from sea to sea if a fundamental understanding had not been reached that the official language minority, the English in Quebec, the French living in the rest of the country would have their linguistic rights protected.

That understanding and engagement which was reached back in the 1860s in its original version provided the cement in sufficient quantity to tie together a huge continent north of the United States as one country.

To show how important that cement is, we do not have to look very far back in our history. We have simply to look back to the late 1960s and 1970s when a fear of survival on the part of Francophones mainly living in Quebec was behind a great shaking of the foundations of Canada, the possible risk of us losing our nation, a debate, a campaign, a period of soul searching by the people of Quebec and the rest of us and a commitment to a renewed and strengthened federalism in Canada. It is that renewed and strengthened federalism which provides the latest historic reinforcement of our two official languages of French and English.

Those who have arrived in Canada lately, of whom so many are my constituents, appreciate this country tremendously. It is for them a land of opportunity, and it is an opportunity for us to have them here with their energy, education, resources, muscles and talents, all the things they offer to build our country. It is important for them to recognize, as I think they do, that a life in Canada would not be possible if this were not a bilingual country where French and English were equally respected.

I would like to turn to the Bill, but first I would like to say one more thing about French and English. We are lucky, and we do not appreciate our good fortune, to have these two particular languages as our official languages. It is worth reminding Canadians who are mainly unilingual about the richness and power of the other of our great languages. We do not have the problem a country like Belgium has with part of the population speaking French and the other part speaking Flemish, a language with its own richness but a language with a very small international community behind it.

We do not have the problem of an African country where one of the official languages is Swahili, a language which may well be a rich and interesting one but is one with no written dimension and no literature, spoken by 150,000 or 160,000 people. Yet the exigencies of that country make Swahili an official language and ask others to learn that language. We could handle a challenge like that in Canada, I think, but we do not have to. We have two rich, full, historic languages which have so much merit that more and more Canadians are learning to speak and use two languages.

Some Canadians who attack the official policy of bilingualism indeed think that we are talking about requiring people to learn to speak both official languages. One can understand why they might think so. They see thousands and thousands of people, particularly young Canadians, making themselves bilingual. They are doing this in parts of Canada where it is hard to find native speakers of the second official language they wish to learn. I am thinking of our western cities and of my own City of Toronto where, until very recently, it was hard to practise French on anyone. High school teachers were themselves teaching a language in which they were not very comfortable, a language they had studied academically but could not really converse or live in. Recently, however, Toronto has become more cosmopolitan and more Canadian in the sense that there are rich resources of the second official language available to those who want to learn it and share it with people who have been speaking it from birth or are very fluent in it.

We have to remind those who oppose this flourishing of bilingual Canadians and who feel threatened by it that that is not fundamental to the official languages policy of Canada. Bilingual people have a lot to celebrate. There are a lot of reasons for wanting to become bilingual, but the official languages policy is, as it happens, precisely the opposite.

The official languages policy ensures that French or English-speaking people ought to be able to live their lives as much as possible only in that one language. It is designed to ensure that those who want to live their lives in French or in English, as much as is reasonably possible depending on the region in which one lives, the profession one has chosen, one's community, and one's relationship with anything that Parliament can control including federal government agencies, should not have to use the other language. Service should be available in the language of one's choice. This is an important point for critics of this Bill to recognize.

We are seeking, if I can put it this way, to protect the unilingualism of the group which does not want to have the federal Government deal with it in the other language. When that is understood, it will become much easier and more realistic for Canadians to accept the advances that are represented in this Bill.

I would like to make another point that I consider to be pretty fundamental. The fact that a Government of Canada, Liberal or Conservative, could bring forward a Bill like this at this time tells us a great deal about the evolution of our country since the first official languages Bill. There are features of this Bill that would not have been realistic as part of the original Bill because we would not have been able to put them into effect. It would not have been realistic, for example, to find in every province at least one judge for every Section 96 court who could speak the official minority language of that province.

[Translation]

French-speaking Canadians in our western provinces will be able to be heard before the courts in the language of their choice. That is something new for Canada, the fact that we have that possibility.

[English]

I do not think it is off topic to mention that I have complained to the Government about the evolution of the criminal justice system as it pertains to bilingualism. When the Liberals were in power, we made provision for language minority speakers in any province of the country to have the legal right to a trial in their own languages, not just to have interpreters present. We provided that one should be able to be tried in his own language, and that meant that we would need prosecutors, judges and jurors who spoke the second official language. That provision was contained in the criminal law reform brought forward by the former Liberal Government.

In that Bill, we provided for late proclamation of that provision. Some people would ask why we did not proclaim it right away if we were so committed to it. We were committed to it, but if we had proclaimed it right away we would not have been able to try people in every province of Canada. There were not jurors, prosecutors or judges all over the place who could deliver on that provision. It would have been against the interests of justice to have proclaimed it in every province.

We provided for proclamation by the Governor General when the system in each province had reached the point where that type of service could be provided. I think it is disgraceful that with the new Government in office for three years there are still provinces which have not proclaimed that law. In Newfoundland and Alberta where it has not been proclaimed, it is possible to have a complete criminal trial in French, and it has already been done in both provinces. That proves that it can be done, yet those provisions have not been proclaimed. Cases are now being taken to court by French speakers who want to have their right to be tried in French in those provinces. Since the Governments of the provinces have not forthrightly declared the provisions to be in force they are having to argue under the Charter that they are entitled to have their trials completely in the language of their choice.

I am not going to attack the good faith of the Government. As I said, I would like to have heard some members of the government Party reaffirm their commitment today and say that the Bill is moving forward to be sustained in principle and to be implemented. I am assuming that that will happen. I am looking forward to seeing the Bill go to committee. My Party has some points it will want to make. However, I would very much like to have seen a proclamation of the right to trial in the official minority language after all these years that it has been in effect in every province.

As a result of this Bill there will be better access to justice in the two languages. There will be ready availability and visibility of bilingual federal services in communications. We can look forward to a recognition of the right of Canadians to work in their own official language in federal institutions in accordance with the linguistic responsibilities of those institutions. There will be a confirmation of the principle of full participation of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians in federal institutions. I hope there will be substance to the commitment to enhance the vitality of official language minority communities and to promote the official languages in Canadian society.

I was critical that the Meech Lake Accord did not contain a more forthright commitment to protect and promote the official language minority in every province. There is now a great opening for the federal Government to act in connection with the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision in Saskatchewan about the status of French in that province. I hope, expect, and demand that the federal Government act to promote the recognition and enhancement of the French language in that province. That would be one way of showing that within the prerogative of power of the federal Government, and within its responsibilities, there is an openness toward the francophone community and the French language in that province. The federal Government ought to take on the responsibility of standing up for official language minority groups wherever they are in the country.

The Bill also provides for federal co-operation with the provinces and the private and voluntary sectors to provide and extend bilingual services. The suggestion which I just made with regard to Saskatchewan would be well within the spirit of that aspect of the Bill.

I welcome the legislative framework contained within the Bill setting out the powers and co-ordinating roles of the Secretary of State in promoting official languages and providing support to official language minority communities. There is a confirmation of the policy role of the Treasury Board and recognition of its mandate to monitor the implementation of the legislation by federal institutions. There is an enhancement of the role of the Commissioner of Official Languages and as important and perhaps more important than that, the Bill provides judicial recourse so that Canadians of other language expression who feel dissatisfied with the way in which the law is being applied and believe they have a legal grievance can go not only to the Official Languages Commissioner, who will undoubtedly act in his best discretion as he sees it, but also before the courts to make their point. That is a breakthrough which I welcome.

Finally, there is provision for the primacy of the rights and obligations under the official languages Bill over any federal legislation which may appear to conflict.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed the speech of the Hon. Member very much. He emphasized the fact, with which I agree, that the country will always, or at least for a long time, be partly unilingual. The time to learn a language is when you are very young. For many years in Alberta we made the mistake of starting to teach a language in grade nine or ten. That did not work. Today 23,000 boys and girls are learning the second official language in the Province of Alberta. This is encouraged by the Government of Alberta which has put in charge of this program a man who is completely bilingual.

Since there will always be, or at least for many years, people who are not bilingual, would the Hon. Member agree that applications for jobs, appointments to boards, and promotions in the Public Service, including the RCMP and the military, should be primarily based on merit so that there will be no special favours given to either those who are bilingual or those who are unilingual? If such things are based on merit we will get the very best treatment possible in each category. Would the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, of course I agree with that. This gives me an opportunity to talk about some details of the Bill. Clause 38(3), which is the relevant section, preserves the merit principle. It provides that:

> Nothing in this section shall be construed as abrogating or derogating from the principle of selection of personnel according to merit.

Merit has a very well understood meaning and has a lot of experience and decision-making behind it. I am confident about the Public Service Commission's general appreciation of the principle. However, it must also be recognized that if the official languages law is the law of the land, one of the requirements is the ability to provide service to the public in French and English, not everywhere, but in areas where numbers warrant. Also, officials who want to work in the language of their choice must be able to do so and fit within a federal public service environment which can accommodate their wish to work in the official language of their choice.

Therefore, merit is relevant; merit and relevant merit in some cases—certainly not in all, and not even in the majority—will require the person involved to be able to speak both of the official languages. That is understood. It is a set-back for some individuals and that ought to be frankly recognized because it limits the scope within which otherwise meritorious persons would be able to perform their duties. However, it does not eliminate their place in the federal Public Service.

The Member's preliminary point was that there are a number of Canadians who can speak only one official language and probably, he said with some regret, that will always be the case or will be the case for a very long time. I go further than that. I would say that it would be a sign of health in our country, a sign of the freedom of choice that there ought to be, if there are always people in Canada who decide that they want to speak only English or are in a situation in which they only speak English, and others in another part of our country who limit themselves to wanting to speak only the other official language. We do not have in this country the goal of making everyone bilingual. We can certainly celebrate the fact that there is a choice now and that even the province of the Hon. Member, which has no recent bilingual tradition, although it has an historic bilingual tradition, is making its own bilingual tradition. They are making it in our time through these 28,000 young people and others who will be able to speak French in that part of Canada.

I should have stated earlier that it is worth noting that one of the greatest sources of strength for those who have wanted to learn the other official language has been Radio Canada which has produced and provided French language radio and television throughout the country since the mid 1970s. In my case, I owe a great deal of my bilingualism to Radio Canada. I did not learn to speak French when I was growing up as a student, but learned it as an adult and mature student. Radio Canada and the French language CBC network were very important tools for me to acquire the idiom, the way the language is spoken.

For those who want to live their lives in English and those who want to live their lives in French, let us hope that nothing in the Official Languages Act will ever make it Canadian policy to try to reduce their rights.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of comments and will then ask the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) to expand on one particular section of the Bill. He has studied the Bill carefully and has had some involvement with the spread of judicial services across Canada for persons in the official language minority. He just observed that he would not mind if there were always Canadians who were unilingual. It may be worth noting that the Canadian facts public opinion survey in 1985 authorized by the Commissioner of Official Languages found that 99 per cent of those surveyed in Quebec thought it desirable that a person should know both English and French. I believe the proportion for British Columbia, where one might find the other extreme in opinion, was about 76 per cent who shared the opinion in Quebec.

Therefore, there are many Canadians who believe that certainly young people should be educated in both languages and should be capable of working in the federal Public Service in particular with both language abilities.

One aspect of fear mongering, like that to which my friend, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) alluded, is the attempt to turn the Commissioner of Official Languages himself into a dreadful power. Anyone who believes that would do well to compare Bill C-72 with the Official Languages Act of 1969. The powers of the Commissioner of Official Languages have not been enlarged in this Bill.

Of course, the opportunities for individuals to pursue matters before the Federal Court of Canada and obtain some leverage on the federal Government has certainly taken place. That is worth noting.

I see that the time for questions and comments has expired. I will not have the opportunity to ask about another provision.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to make a few comments about Bill C-72. As we have seen in the House, this is a very emotional issue for a number of Members. It is also an emotional issue for people throughout the country.

I attended accountability meetings in my riding two weeks ago. At two of those meetings I met people who had read the recent issue of Western Report. They stood up to ask what is this dreadful new Bill being imposed upon western Canada. I want to reassure them that they will be able to carry on and live good lives.

I do not think the emotions surrounding this issue should surprise us. Bill C-72 deals with the language of work and the language of justice. It deals with the language in which people can obtain Government service. In my riding there are people who felt that they personally have been hurt by the program of bilingualism as it was instituted. They felt that their careers had been red circled by bilingualism. Rightly or wrongly, they have a certain sense of grievance about the whole question of bilingualism. Bill C-72 and bilingualism deal with the fundamental relationship between English speaking and French speaking Canadians. It also deals with the relationship of those who come from another language tradition.

The importance of this issue is evidenced by the fact that we refer to the language we learn as children as our mother tongue. Our thought patterns are conditioned in our mother tongue and it is around those patterns and that first language that we have some very deep seated emotions. This is evident when we consider our attitudes toward people who speak with a different accent or a different dialect of the same language.

We sometimes take a very humorous approach to people who speak with an accent that we regard as strange and are sometimes shocked that other people may believe our accent is strange or somewhat funny. These differences are sometimes the source of humour and sometimes the source of snobbery. Sometimes people are educated out of their original accent, so that some people who go to Oxford ultimately have an accent that is stronger than people who have grown up in that area.

Often there is a deep seated prejudice toward another language. This is usually based on fear that is masked by an attitude of contempt. We as Members of Parliament, who pretend to be leaders in this country, must try to address the fear of people, rather than manipulate it, and deal with it in an intelligent and straightforward manner.

First, I believe it would be helpful if both French and English speaking people recognized that both our language traditions have traditions of linguistic imperialism. Perhaps one of the worst examples for Anglophones is the residential schools where Indian young people would have their mouths washed out with soap for speaking in their native language. They were told to speak English.

I hope to resume my comments after Question Period, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will want to continue after Question Period.

It being 1.40 o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.40 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REINSTATEMENT OF WOMEN ON RESERVES—LACK OF HOUSING

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is preventing women who recently regained Indian status from getting decent housing on reserves. The ambiguous position of the Conservative Government is forcing native women into unwholesome competition with their own people for one of the basic necessities of life, housing.

About 95,000 people have applied to Ottawa for reinstatement to the reserves across the country and most of them are women. They have applied for housing on reserves because the 1985 legislation, Bill C-31, now allows women and their children to return to the reserves if they so wish.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that these women lost their Indian status because they married white men or someone other than a status Indian. However, the problem is that although the Government provided special funding for reserve housing for reinstated women, it did not give band councils clear criteria about how it was to be spent. The result is that money is being spent for general housing needs.

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mrs. Killens: There is already not enough money for Indian housing on reserves—

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mrs. Killens: —so once again the women are paying the price.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CITY OF PORT COQUITLAM—DIAMOND JUBILEE CELEBRATION

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today on behalf of all residents—

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Speaker: There have been some interventions on the part of Members with respect to the general question of time for Members' Statements. As Members know, it is 60 seconds. Those Members who cut it below 60 seconds are doing a favour for their colleagues, and those who go over are doing a disfavour, and if there is too much agitation, of course the Chair has to step in. However, I would ask Hon. Members to leave it to the Chair.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today on behalf of all residents of the City of Port Coquitlam in British Columbia, both past and present. It was 75 years ago that Port Coquitlam was officially incorporated as a City.

In honour of this occasion, I would like to read into the record books an excerpt from the Mayor's Proclamation:

> And whereas on March 7th, 1913 the said Letters Patent under the Great Seal were so issued thereby creating the "Corporation of the City of Port Coquitlam".
> And whereas exactly seventy-five years have elapsed between the date of the Letters Patent and March 7th, 1988;
> Now therefore be it resolved that by virtue of the powers vested in me as Mayor of the Corporation of the City of Port Coquitlam, I Leonard M. Traboulay, do now declare March 7th, 1988 to be "Diamond Anniversary Day" in the City of Port Coquitlam and do urge all our citizens to take part in the many festivities planned for the balance of our Diamond Jubilee Year;

I am honoured, as the city's Member of Parliament, to invite everyone from Port Coquitlam and the surrounding communities, and people from all over Canada to join in the festivities and celebrate the Diamond Anniversary of the City of Port Coquitlam.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT'S AGRICULTURAL ASSESSMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government has published a very sleek publication entitled: The Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement and Agriculture—An Assessment which was distributed to Members' offices on Friday. Can the Government explain why this so-called assessment fails to show the value of U.S. agricultural trade to Canada? Why the blank spot on page 11 where it should have appeared? Was the Government afraid the fact that the U.S. has always had the trade advantage in agricultural trade would change the reader's view of the agreement?

Can the Government explain why it chose to leave the impression that poultry imports are to be computed only on the basis of a moving average when the agreement specifically states that there shall first of all be not less than 7.5 per cent of Canadian requirements filled from the U.S.? Why did it neglect that fact? It is not in here.

More than a third of Ontario grape growers and virtually all British Columbia grape growers will be forced out of business according to the data contained in this assessment. Yet we are told that they "face adjustments" but this will "enhance competitiveness". How does being put out of business make one competitive?

IMMIGRATION

PRESENCE IN CANADA OF FORMER KHYMER ROUGE MEMBERS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, recently in a major article, the Toronto Star reported that individuals who belonged to the Khymer Rouge and participated in genocidal acts in Cambodia are residing in Canada as landed immigrants. This is a very serious allegation since the Khymer Rouge were responsible for two million innocent deaths, often using methods which rivalled the Nazis.

Such individuals have no right whatsoever to be allowed to live among civilized people. The Immigration Department and CSIS should immediately commence a full investigation to ascertain if the allegations are true. If it is found that indeed there are Khymer Rouge mass murderers in Canada, they should be charged with crimes against humanity. We must send out a strong message that there is no sanctuary in Canada, nor is there any clemency for this type of action against humanity.

DISASTERS

FIRE FATALITIES IN FORT ALBANY, ONT.—LACK OF ADEQUATE FIRE PREVENTION FOR SCHOOLCHILDREN

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, March 4, four citizens of Fort Albany, Ontario, a small isolated native community near James Bay, perished in a tragic fire. Delna Edwards, age 21, and her three sons, Kenny, Peter and Jeremy, all died, burned beyond recognition, because the community had no way to fight the fire other than with five-gallon pails. Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to the entire Fort Albany community.

This type of incident should not be occurring in native communities. Ste. Anne's School in the same community provides yet another example of a tragedy waiting to occur. It took repeated warnings by fire inspectors before the Government took action to close the school. The children have now been without educational facilities for a month.

When will the Government realize that it has an obligation to take prompt action to guarantee that all Indian communities across the country are provided with the means to ensure that the safety of their people is not in constant jeopardy? The Government must re-examine its priorities and give Canadian native communities the attention and support they rightly deserve.

FISHERIES

SITUATION IN GASPÉ—REQUEST THAT QUOTA BE SECURED WITHIN 200-MILE ZONE

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, the Gaspé peninsula once more is faced with a plant shutdown. The Purdel Inc. group decided not to reopen its ground fish line in Rivière-au-Renard, putting some 300 seasonal employees out of work. One of the reasons given by the company is the impossibility to obtain raw materials. It feels a fishing quota within the 200-mile zone would have been a solution to the problem.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that in December 1987 fishing industry groups in Quebec were denied access to the 200-mile zone by the Minister of Fisheries and Ocean (Mr. Siddon).

In view of the increasingly sad situation of the fishing industry in Quebec, it was agreed on my request that a meeting would take place in Gaspé within two weeks, in order to regroup the Quebec fishing industry and to resume discussions on the possible access of Quebec to the 200-mile zone. Until a longer-term solution is found I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that this Government will help the people in Rivière-au-Renard overcome that unhappy experience.

ABORTION

CANADA HEALTH ACT—CRITICISM OF SYSTEM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, following the Morgentaler decision, predominately male politicians feel burdened by a heavy responsibility to reach a decision which they think is morally right and politically acceptable. Any decision should respect different personal and religious views that are deeply held in a pluristic society but should not impose those views on others.

The Canada Health Act states:

> The primary objective of Canadian health care policy is to protect, promote, and to restore the physical and mental well-being of residents of Canada and to facilitate reasonable access to health services without financial or other barriers.

The policy of British Columbia of paying only for abortions when a woman's life is threatened is in direct contravention of the Canada Health Act and only serves to penalize women of low income. It establishes a two-tier health care system, one for the rich and one for the poor. It is also in contradiction with the views of two-thirds of British Columbians, as can be seen in a poll released today in British Columbia. When can we expect the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to restore equity to the health care system?

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF HOPE VOLUNTEER SEARCH AND RESCUE GROUP

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, 1988 marks the twenty-fifth year of service of the Hope Volunteer Search and Rescue Group. The 23 members log 4,000 hours of volunteer work a year to train and to search for and rescue victims of mountain, water, and vehicle accidents. This is no small feat when one considers the rugged terrain surrounding the Town of Hope, British Columbia. Of the approximately 40 calls received a year, 38 victims are saved by the efforts of these people.

On February 27 I was pleased to attend the anniversary dinner and dance and to join with the others in honouring Clarence Kolcun for his 25 years of service. He is now the Honorary Director for Life of the Hope Search and Rescue Group. I would like to take this time to thank Barry Gannon, president of the group, his executive and hard-working members, for their dedication and service to the community of Hope. We are very proud of their achievements.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER SCHOOL BOARD—PROVISION OF MEALS FOR HUNGRY STUDENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, hungry school children in Vancouver are caught between the bureaucratic regulations of the Canada Assistance Plan and the ideological blindness of the Vander Zalm Government. The Vancouver School Board is currently using reserve funds for an emergency program, feeding about 600 children in 23 schools, but a school board application for help from the Canada Assistance Plan has been denied because the plan can only make money available to the city or province if they participate financially, and not to a school board.

The Social Credit Government refuses to participate because it fears the program will create dependency. Instead, Claude Richmond, the Minister of Social Services, wants teachers to let his Department know the names of hungry children so that their parents can be taught nutrition. We repudiate this hypocrisy which claims that the fundamental problem is not with poverty but with the family.

Next week Vancouver officials will appeal directly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I urge him to work out a creative solution which will cut through the red tape and ensure that school children in Canada do not go hungry.

CONSTITUENCY OF LÉVIS

SEARCH FOR LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today the Leader of the Liberal Party himself is going from door to door in the city halls in the constituency of Lévis in order to convince one mayor to run against me.

Those mayors should ask why his caucus is still opposing Quebec's entry into Confederation. Why do the Liberals still oppose in effect the Meech Lake Agreement? Why did the Liberals vote against the Bill concerning Quebec's pharmaceutical industry, against 1 300 jobs being created in Montreal? Why will the Liberal Leader gut the free trade agreement, something that will allow Quebecers to sell $20 billion worth of goods to the United States? A serious candidate should put those questions to the Liberal Leader who is going from door to door.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ATTACK BY CONTRA FORCES ON CANADIAN AID PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, we learned over the weekend that, once again, the Contras attacked a project in Nicaragua in which Canadians were involved. I refer to the Farmers for Peace from Alberta.

There were numerous Nicaraguans captured by the Contras, as well as an American. Fortunately, no Canadians were captured, but great damage was done to the project, to the equipment, and to the buildings.

It is time once again to call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to condemn American funding to the Contras and to send a strong message to Washington that the Canadian Government does not take lightly this destruction being visited upon Canadian sponsored projects by a group that is funded from Washington.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

CANADIAN WAR MUSEUM—EXPANSION OF FACILITIES ADVOCATED

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, a resolution from the Defence Association of Canada focuses attention on what many people are already aware of, that is, that the Canadian War Museum has been grossly neglected as an historical, memorial, military, and research institution because of gross neglect by successive former Governments.

The museum cannot perform its role effectively because it is underfunded, underequipped, and housed in inadequate and insufficient space to fulfil its role as a memorial to those who made the supreme sacrifice in the service of Canada in war and in peace-keeping operations. It is also the focal national institution to record, preserve, and present the military heritage of Canada in peace and war.

I therefore ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and the Cabinet to initiate action for a major expansion of its facilities, and institute other support programs to ensure that Canadians from every walk of life are made aware of our proud military heritage.

FISHERIES

CHINOOK SALMON—CONSERVATION PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, today in Vancouver the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is announcing an important conservation program that will affect all groups of fishermen—sports, native, and commercial.

It is well known in my Province of British Columbia that over the last 10 years the catch and escapement of Chinook, our king salmon, declined by some 75 per cent in the lower Strait of Georgia. The stocks are being overfished. Thus new enhancement and conservation measures must be introduced.

Beginning on April 10 all fishermen will be required to affix conservation tags to Chinook caught in B.C. waters. The harvest rate will be reduced by some 20 per cent. However, at the same time, increased enhancement measures will be undertaken on the Nanaimo, Cowichan, and Squamish Rivers.

The battle to rebuild the Strait of Georgia Chinook stocks has begun. Our Government and our fishermen believe it is a battle that we can win.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

MONEY ALLOTTED FOR DEVELOPMENT OF WESTERN CANADA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I direct my question to either the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister.

There was a report this morning from the special assistant to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which points out that in the coming years under the Western Diversification Program western Canada will receive less money than it did last year under the normal Estimates of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

I want to ask the Prime Minister what kind of con job is going on. How can we promise westerners further expansion and diversification when in fact the federal Government is spending less money to develop the west than it did last year and the year before that? Is this not a clear contradiction of the aims and objectives set forward in the Western Diversification Program? The rhetoric is okay but the cash is not there to back it up.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the statement to which the Hon. Member refers is a statement which says that spending in the west will increase by 15.4 per cent this year because of the announcement of the Western Diversification Fund. The new Department that is being created will not be abandoning western Canada. The Department that is being created will have a national mandate, and it will recognize that national mandate.

The additional funding of $1.2 billion in western Canada and the additional funding of over $1 billion in Atlantic Canada are funding that will be on top of existing funding. Therefore the report identifies an increase of 15.4 per cent in spending in western Canada.

TOTAL FUNDING FOR WESTERN DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is fudging the figures again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I wish to point out to the Minister the statement made by the official in the office of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who said that the total funding of the federal Government for regional development will be less this year in western Canada than it was the year before, and substantially less in Atlantic Canada. In both cases the federal Government is pulling back its commitment to the two regions of the country which need that type of funding most.

To quote the president elect of the Chamber of Commerce of Edmonton: "Western Canada is once again getting the short end of the stick". What will the Government do to restore proper funding to achieve proper regional development?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about proper funding. A phantom $4 billion was identified by the previous administration for economic development in western Canada. Some $4 billion was identified in the 1980 Budget. The next Budget saw the figure reduced to $2 billion, and it was just earmarked.

The Hon. Member mentioned the other day $3.5 billion identified for western rail infrastructure. If the Government attempted to use that type of shellgame we would identify $1 billion in the first Special Grains Program, $1 billion in the second Special Grains Program, $800 million in PGRT, and $350 million to $400 million in special oil programming. All those programs that are over and above existing funding to western Canada have been recognized by the Government, and there is $1.2 billion for western diversification.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that once again we are being treated to the funny world of Tory economics and mathematics which does not know how to add or subtract. As a result the regions get the short end of the stick, as the Chamber of Commerce has properly said.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It is another question related to regional development.

On Friday, Canada's Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Gotlieb, wrote a letter to the U.S. Congress stating clearly that Canada wants a full exemption in the Omnibus Trade Bill from the language of the Congress which will define substantially the nature of subsidy which will involve regional development programs.

Concerning the important contradiction that has to regional development programs in Canada will the Prime Minister commit here and now that, unless the Congress of the United States totally eliminates all language and reference to subsidies and gives Canada an exemption, the Government will not go ahead and sign the trade deal that it negotiated with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, after the way the Hon. Member was dealt with by my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I understand why he changed the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We expect the United States to honour the undertakings it made in the free trade agreement.

CHILD CARE

PROVISION OF NATIONAL SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. Given that the Government has set up no national standard of quality or affordability in its child care program, and given that American firms must be accorded national treatment under free trade, we are now threatened by the invasion of low quality expensive child care services in Canada.

The Government is not talking about its day care plan any more. Why has the Government lost all its drive with regard to providing a first-class national day care system? Is it because it has now become obvious that the Canada-U.S. trade deal will make it impossible for the Government to keep its promises to the women of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, if there is any Government that has kept its promises to the women of Canada, it is this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: I cannot imagine a member of a Party that for 17 years did nothing on child care after a Royal Commission attacking us for the program of $5.4 billion that we have put into child care. As we know, this is a program in which we work with the provinces.

The same standards cannot be established in small communities in Newfoundland as could be established in downtown Toronto or in Montreal. The reason that this program is important is because it provides the flexibility for communities and parents to meet the needs that they think are important. They are the ones who have to determine what is the best type of care for their children.

GUARANTEE OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Minister that she has failed to reply to my question.

My supplementary question is this: How can the Tory Government be so sure that the Free Trade Agreement is good for women when we know that in the services industry, American companies with which Canadian companies will have to compete have no minimum wages to pay, no social benefits to provide and no employment equity program to live with? So I should like the Minister to tell us how the Government can assure women that they will keep all the social programs they had to fight for and that their jobs will be protected instead of melting like butter in a pan!

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, our social programs have nothing to do with the free trade agreement. Women have always done well in a prosperous economy. If one looks at the world today, where are women doing well? They are doing well in prosperous countries. Free trade will be the best thing that has happened to the women in this country for a long time in terms of job opportunities in the service sector, future training, apprenticeship, and entrepreneurship. There was a report last week on the number of women who are now entrepreneurs and how well they are doing, and how well they will do under free trade.

I think for the next century that free trade will see women's economic equality proceed even further than it has done.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF MASSEY COMBINES PLANT IN BRANTFORD—RETENTION OF TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for DRIE, I will put my question directly to the Prime Minister. I am rising on a very serious matter, the loss of 2,500 jobs in my home town of Brantford.

More than 2,500 people who are either working or are on lay-off are looking to the Government to ensure that their jobs are not lost forever. Canadian men and women want assurances that we will not lose the rotary combine technology that was developed with taxpayers' money, leaving this country without a major producer in this vital area.

Will the Prime Minister assure those workers that the Government will seek out a Canadian buyer that will use that technology to build combines and provide jobs in Brantford?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion I would like to inform the Hon. Member that discussions are presently under way to discover whatever redeeming features there are in the circumstances. It is quite true that receivers have been called in.

Of course the interests of the workers, those who are disabled, those who are on early retirement, and those who had expected to be hired back, are paramount to us. We are concerned about the retention of the technology. We are concerned about the public interest generally. Discussions are under way, and we should have something more to report quite soon.

PROTECTION OF WORKERS' PENSION FUND

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): I appreciate the concerns of the Government. We are now looking for action. While the Minister is concerning himself, I would like to know if he would assure those workers that any money coming from Varity Corporation will be used to keep the pension fund viable, assist any disabled workers, and help any workers whose pensions and benefits might not be covered in the 1986 bail-out, amounting to some $30 million to $33 million?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): The question of the pension obligation is one that is very serious. There is a provincial role in the event that there should be any unfulfilled obligations. Discussions are going on with the province. There is the additional problem of continuation of parts supply to farmers who have become dependent on this particular combine machine.

All those things are being seriously discussed between officials, our provincial counterparts, and company principals.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE UNDER INDUSTRIAL REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister responsible for CDIC, who was proclaiming the great benefits of free trade. Massey is a victim of free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Will the Minister provide assistance under the Industrial Regional Development Program to help a Canadian buyer keep the people working with this Canadian technology, in view of the fact that there is more than 12 per cent unemployment in Brantford now and we qualify under Tier 2 of the IRDA program?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I think that all of us on this side of the House are concerned about some of the issues raised by the Hon. Member. We have talked about the need for parts, and so on.

The problems at Massey Ferguson have nothing to do with free trade. I have had an association with this company all of my life, and I knew something about it long before I was in government. I can tell Hon. Members right now that there has been free trade in farm machinery ever since I can remember. There are U.S. producers of farm machinery.

The problem in the farm machinery industry has to do with the protectionism that has been rising in the United States that has led to difficult times for farmers.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's nonsense.

Mrs. McDougall: That is as much a part of it as anything else. It has nothing to do with free trade.

REPLACEMENT PARTS FOR EXISTING COMBINES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Industry, and it concerns the shutdown of the Massey plant in Brantford.

Since there was a specific agreement in 1985 that the federal Government would keep the specialized technology in Canada for this combine, could the Minister be more specific that that technology will stay in Canada? Could the Minister also be more specific that replacement parts will be available to the thousands of farmers who have Massey combines across the country, and that there will be a dealer network to service the combines that are presently in use across the country? This is an important decision that harms thousands of Canadian farmers.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): The Hon. Member is quite correct, but I answered his question at least in part. It is anticipated that Varity will assume some of the responsibility to have a continued parts flow. Certainly, in terms of the technology there were undertakings that this technology would stay in Canada. It is entirely possible that a buyer will come along and purchase that technology, or assume it.

As I stated, all of those serious problems are being discussed with our provincial counterparts who also have an interest in terms of the equity that the federal Government has in the plant. On three occasions we have been involved in extending the life of this particular company. The interests of the farmers and the interests of the workers are uppermost in our minds. We will come to as good a solution as can be worked out under the circumstances.

STATUS OF U.S. BANKS' INVESTMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. He will know that 3,300 workers at Massey are part of the pension plan and there is, in fact, a $54 million shortfall in that pension plan. I would like to ask the Minister a very specific question.

His Government claims that free trade has nothing to do with this deal. Can he explain why the U.S. banks are preferred creditors and they will get their investment of approximately $75 million back before the workers at Massey-Ferguson can touch a penny of severance pay? Why the U.S. banks first by this Government?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I don't for a moment accept the Hon. Member's premise that that is actually what is happening. It is true the receiver is on site and that obviously disbursements are being discussed.

Let me tell the Hon. Member, as I said in my earlier answers, that that part of the problem which may result in unfulfilled obligations to workers who have taken early retirement is uppermost in our minds. There is a provincial responsibility, but safeguards are in both provincial and federal legislation to make sure that workers will not be deprived of what they have earned in pension benefits.

BENEFITS FOR OLDER WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one for the Minister of Labour.

Given that this Government is the Government that removed labour adjustment benefits for older workers from this sector in Brantford in 1986, will the Government itself now restore these benefits for older workers to provide some kind of hope for the future for men and women in the city of Brantford?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to my hon. colleague that this Government did not remove the program that was in existence. It was scheduled to terminate under the previous Government in 1985. We continued it into 1986 in order to develop with the provinces and the private sector a better program that would govern all older workers—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Where is it?

Mr. Cadieux: —not just some older workers. May I remind my hon. colleague that under the old program the workers to which he is referring would not be covered.

Hopefully, this POWA agreement on which we have been working for the past two years will be finalized in the coming weeks. As a matter of fact, I have already communicated with my colleague in Ontario today, and we are scheduled to meet on Friday.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

STRENGTHENING OF RESERVES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. All Canadians are very proud of our Armed Forces reserves and were very much encouraged by the White Paper on defence and that the Government will be increasing the reserves.

Will the Minister tell this House when he plans to implement the program?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, our intention over the course of the next 15 years is to treble the size of the primary reserves. We will start by adding some 2,000 members to the reserves this year. We are also procuring new equipment for them.

As my colleague, the Associate Minister for National Defence, indicated last week, we will be starting with the naval reserves to purchase vessels which can be used by them for minesweeping, in the very near future.

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES—EXCLUSION OF NEW BRUNSWICK COMMUNITIES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it relates to the northern allowance. The Prime Minister is aware that more than 600 communities in Atlantic Canada qualify for this isolation allowance. Of those 600 communities, not one, not a single one, is in New Brunswick.

Why is there not a single community in New Brunswick included in that list? Can the Prime Minister explain why there is such discrimination with regard to New Brunswick?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the program of northern allowances is, as the Hon. Member knows, one that was put together based on Treasury Board documents on a program it had for the public servants. We have, as a Government, made a commitment that we will have a commission of inquiry to study the appropriateness of the criteria in place for determining the isolated areas. The Hon. Member can make his points there as well as in the House.

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF ÎLE MISCOU ON LIST

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to direct to the same Minister.

I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that, in New Brunswick, the Miscou Island community, with a population of fewer than 1 000 inhabitants, was isolated for over two and a half months last Winter without ferry or air service. Surely this island meets the criteria of the National Revenue Department!

Will the Minister make sure that this community is included on the list beginning this year, so that it may avail itself this year of these benefits in respect of tax year 1987?

Why must New Brunswick people wait and why will they be the last to get these benefits? Why this unfair treatment?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the program was put together on a basis that was arrived at for public servants a number of years ago. That is the basis. That is why we are having a commission of inquiry to see if it should be extended further and be added to. We will be glad to listen to the representations of the Hon. Member.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

JOB RE-ENTRY PROGRAM—ACCESS BY WOMEN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. To be eligible for the Job Re-entry Program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy a woman must be out of the labour force for three years and engaged primarily in homemaking activities, yet the reality is that many women must, out of economic necessity, take menial low paying jobs or part-time work and are, therefore, denied access to the program.

Can the Minister assure this House that these eligibility requirements will be abandoned in order to provide women with greater access to the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has already adequately answered this question. As soon as any country experiences prosperity, women will improve their lot. There has been more entrepreneurship in the last few years and, therefore, that is the greatest opportunity for women.

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has failed to reply to my question.

I want to tell him that the women who are eligible for the Canadian Jobs Strategy are found in the poorly paid jobs which traditionally have been women's ghettos.

Will the Minister agree to amend the Canadian Jobs Strategy to ensure that the training programs will prepare Canadian women for non-traditional and well paid jobs?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is working extraordinarily well for women because it is the most flexible job program that we have ever seen in the history of Canada. There is a particular component in it for women. It is to deal with problems of the women who are the worst off, and they are the women who have been out of the labour force for quite a long time.

There is a non-traditional component in it. Let me say that when I was in British Columbia last year I was talking to a woman entrepreneur who, under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, was teaching other women in her community about working on logging rigs and in the woods. If that is not non-traditional for women, I do not know what is.

Let me say as well that we have, in conjunction with the provinces, a new training agreement which the Prime Minister brought forward at the First Ministers' Conference. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has been working very hard with the provinces on apprenticeship programs for women. We have been moving forward very strongly on this issue and we will continue to do so.

INCOME TAX

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES—EXCLUSION OF SOME COMMUNITIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. The Department of Finance's rules on deductions for residents of northern and isolated communities are the most arbitrary and fundamentally discriminatory piece of tax law ever put in place by any Government in the history of Canada.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You have forgotten Allan MacEachen.

Mr. Tobin: How is it that communities that have substantial services available to them in rural Canada qualify for the special tax treatment and yet communities like Trout River on the great northern peninsula, an isolated community, or communities on the Port-au-Port peninsula, isolated communities, that have no services and 75 per cent unemployment, do not qualify for this program? How does the Minister explain that inequity in this program? Will he do something more than appoint another expensive commission to bring justice and fairness to the tax system?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the House should know that there are dozens, at least 100 communities, in Gander—Twillingate, for example, that are included under the program. There are dozens of communities in Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe that are included. The Hon. Member knows that. Cochrane—Superior and all northern ridings in the House are well represented by the program. We are trying to improve the program. That is why we have the commission of inquiry.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing worse than an ivory-towered, well-heeled, smug Minister of Finance other than one who does not know he is smug.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

REQUEST FOR NEW RULES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of State for Finance if he realizes that, even in those communities where this tax deduction is available, there is a feeling of outrage in this land because a neighbour one or two kilometres away does not qualify. Even those who have the benefit of this package want fairness, justice and equity in the tax system. They do not want another expensive and long drawn out commission.

Will the Minister tell taxpayers in rural and isolated communities to apply for that deduction, that it will be paid, and that when the Government cleans up its act it will publish a new set of rules some years down the road and that the people will not be made to suffer for the Government's incompetence now?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is essentially asking for no discrimination whatsoever. This program has helped thousands of Canadian families and will continue to do so. We will improve it in certain details as best we can through the commission of inquiry. The Hon. Member is arguing for no program at all.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who will know that the special assistant to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion indicated earlier in the weekend that the percentage of funds in the regional development programs allocated to both western Canada and Atlantic Canada was substantially reduced this year from last year. Would the Deputy Prime Minister be nice enough to explain to the House what he plans to do, in light of this revelation, to ensure that western Canadians get their fair share of economic development funds?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I did answer that question in reply to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I can only add for the Hon. Member that considering the drought relief, the $658 million contributed annually for the transportation of grain, the over $3 million put into the Canadian Wheat Board pool and the Prime Minister's announcement of ACOA and western diversification, along with a statement that these agencies will provide additional funding, all I can say is that whatever official the Hon. Member is quoting is inaccurate.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned here with funds that will result in the diversification of the western economy and the economy of Atlantic Canada, not with the variety of programs that are statutory or that the regions can expect as a natural course.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What do you mean by a natural course?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Some people might think that this is very, very funny. Since western Canadians now represent about 30 per cent of the population of Canada, why is it that the amount of funds set aside for economic development for western Canada accounts for about 15 per cent? Western Canadians are not asking for anything special, just to receive their fair share.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, first the statement in the news report the Hon. Member is quoting is a 15.2 per cent increase because of western diversification. Why did the NDP vote against the $127 million for the Atlantic program? Why did the NDP vote against $101 million for western diversification? Why did it vote against $456 million for regional industrial expansion? Why did it vote against $38 million for agriculture—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

FINANCE

GOODYEAR TIRE COMPANY—TAX REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. I have here the remission order granted by the Government for Goodyear Tire Company worth about $50 million, a remission order granted on December 22 of last year, the same year that Goodyear closed its plant in Etobicoke—Lakeshore and over 1,500 workers there lost their jobs. Mr. Peter Rose of Goodyear has subsequently stated publicly that the expansions carried out by Goodyear would have been done without the $50 million benefit of the tax remissions. My question, therefore, is in two parts.

First, in light of that, would the Minister consider rescinding the remission order? Second, if he is not prepared to do that, could he at least inform the House what mechanism is in place to ensure that this tax expenditure will bring a benefit to Canada that is at least equal to the $50 million that has been made available to Goodyear?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern about this matter which deals with an important organization in his riding, and he has gone through the history of this very carefully. However, I have to tell him that he is wrong in his recommendations about the duty remission scheme. It is in place generally to prevent future closures and to maintain present jobs. We have here a scheme in place which will help specialization, modernization and expansion in the tire industry within Canada. The duty-remission scheme allows that, and without it, it would be much more problematic.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

MINISTER'S LETTER TO PREMIERS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and again concerns the letter the Minister sent to the Premiers urging a political boycott of three Sikh organizations. The Minister's answers in the House in recent days have been equally deplorable. The Government should realize that simply ignoring and denying the injustice done against these Canadians will not lessen the hurt and damage that have been inflicted.

Given that the Premier of British Columbia has refused to co-operate with the Minister, that the Premier of Ontario has not supported the letter despite claims made by the Secretary of State in the House, and that members of his own Government have attacked his position, will the Secretary of State finally do the honourable thing and withdraw these offensive allegations? If he will not, will he agree to establish an inquiry that would investigate the evidence upon which the Government is rationalizing this most questionable action?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no. With regard to the position of the Premier of Ontario, I was only quoting what I had seen him quoted as saying in the newspapers. It was The Toronto Star, and perhaps that was wrong, and I will check that again.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You quote from The Toronto Star?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is a terrible thing, Derek, and the Hon. Member and I will not persist in it.

Let me finally say that in an issue of this kind that is very sensitive, there is an opportunity, if political Parties wish to do so, to try to exploit the issue for partisan advantage. I hope that Members of this House would be above that standard of conduct.

TREATMENT OF ETHNOCULTURAL GROUPS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, members of his own Government have recognized that the Secretary of State, through this letter, is playing dangerously with the social and cultural fabric of Canada. He ought to stop making jokes about it and begin to deal with it in a serious and sensitive fashion.

Since we only learned of this letter because it was leaked, and since the Government's policy is now to condemn entire groups and organizations because of the alleged and unproven acts of a few, would the Minister advise the House if any other Canadian ethnocultural group or community has been irresponsibly targeted for such offensive treatment by the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume that question was put precisely. The precise answer is that no group in Canada has been irresponsibly targeted by the Government.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

MANITOBA—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister who is supposed to be looking after Manitoba's interests; or perhaps the Minister in charge of the Western Diversification Office.

There is growing concern in Manitoba about delays in the approval of projects and the percentage of funding which is going to Manitoba through the Western Diversification Office. Who in the Government can say today what the Government is planning to do to solve the obvious problems which exist in Manitoba with regard to funding from the Western Diversification Office?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Member asks a question which is very important. The fund is not designed for one province. It is designed for western Canada. The initiatives which have taken place in other provinces involve the industry in most cases, provincial funding, and top-up from western development.

In seriousness, the $3 billion wish list put forward by the Government of Manitoba was not helpful. If that Government had developed one or two major initiatives with which we could have joined, we could now be involved in funding.

I can assure the Hon. Member that in the near future we will be able to come to an agreement with the Province of Manitoba and enter into funding which will strengthen the whole economy in western Canada.

PROPOSED HEALTH INDUSTRY INITIATIVE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that it is not only with regard to proposals made by the Manitoba Government but also with regard to proposals made by the private sector that there has been a great deal of concern about delay.

I would like to ask the Minister about one particular proposal from the Manitoba Government which, as I understand it, has been on his desk for some time now. That is with regard to the health industry initiative.

Can the Minister say when the federal Government is going to respond to that? It is quite far along. The ball is now in the Minister's court and people in Manitoba want to know when they will have an answer from the Minister with regard to that proposal.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has already taken steps with the announcement of over $90 million of investment in the LCDC Lab to be located in Manitoba.

Mr. Blaikie: That's different.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member says that that is in the past, but it is a large expenditure and it will be part of the business support structure which will bring other health initiatives into Manitoba.

I can assure the Hon. Member that if the Province of Manitoba can identify, not health care projects but health research initiatives, our colleagues in Manitoba and myself are ready to sit down and discuss projects one at a time to bring benefit to Winnipeg.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF UNITED STATES PLYWOOD STANDARD

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for housing my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A section of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement calls for CMHC to decide by March 15, next Tuesday, whether it will accept the U.S. C-D grade plywood for use in housing financed by CMHC. The Minister knows that at the present CMHC requires construction plywood to be C-C grade in Canada, a higher standard than the U.S. C-D grade.

Under the free trade agreement the phase-out of the plywood tariffs over the next 10 years is subject to CMHC's approval of the U.S. lower grade. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that Canada will not yield once again to this unfair pressure from the U.S. Government?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is doing government business outside the House. I will take that question as notice and reply to my colleague.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I presume that the subject has already been discussed in Cabinet but I respect the fact that perhaps the Minister is not yet ready to tell us about it.

CANADIAN STANDARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the climate of Canada is very cold and rigorous. The Minister who responded to me is responsible for Indian Affairs. He knows that we are responsible for building Indian housing on reserves. We certainly do not want to lower our standards on the reserves of Canada.

Why should it always be Canada that lowers its standards to please the mighty United States? Can the Minister explain this to the people of Canada?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the criteria that are established. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in conjunction with the building industry in Canada and the research that has been put forward—

Ms. Copps: What about the consumers?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East talks about the consumers. I can inform the Hon. Member for Hamilton East that the consumers in Canada have benefited through the social housing policies designed by the Government. More social housing units have been provided in the last three years by the Government than were provided in the previous four-year period by the previous administration.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

DECISION ON EXPORTS OF PROCESSED FISH PRODUCTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The GATT prohibition on Canada's export restrictions for unprocessed herring and salmon will mean the loss of 4,000 shore workers' jobs on the coast of British Columbia. Seventy per cent of these jobs are held by women, many of them single parents, many living in isolated communities where there are no alternate sources of employment.

Will the Minister guarantee that these jobs will not be lost and assure the House that he will not accept a GATT decision which guts our fish processing industry and takes away our right to manage our own resources?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand the deep concern of the Member and, indeed, of all Members with that GATT ruling. I must say that I find it odd that a Party that has spoken so unequivocally in favour of the GATT could, with any sense of consistency or honesty, now be attacking the GATT process which it has so resolutely defended on every other occasion.

The Hon. Member will know that there have been extensive vigorous representations by Canada to other countries involved in the GATT panel. He will know that there are discussions ongoing now involving the industry and the provinces. He will know that there is a meeting on March 9 to deal with this very important question and that we are looking for a solution which will respect the GATT, which most of the House, and the NDP most of the time, supports, and protects the interests of fishermen, fishing interests, and fish processing plants on the West Coast.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has been consistent and unequivocal in its support of jobs and of workers' rights to have those jobs. We do not want the Government to bargain those jobs away.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT ALLOW GATT DECISION TO STAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister guarantee that the Government will not allow that GATT decision to stand? If it stands we will lose those jobs because the Government has shown itself to be incapable of bargaining with the United States.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the experience that the House is now having with the NDP on GATT is illustrative of what Canadians would find if they look at what the NDP does and not only at what it says. The NDP is for GATT in principle and against GATT in practice. You cannot have it both ways if there is to be an effective international system.

We have given the guarantees that we are in a position to give with regard to fish processing and other related industries on the West Coast of Canada. We are proceeding in a practical way with the industry, the fishermen involved, with the provinces, and with other Governments. We are looking for a solution which is consistent with Canadian international trading principles and consistent with the requirements and needs of that industry in western Canada.

AGRICULTURE

MASSEY COMBINES—AVAILABILITY OF SPARE PARTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture deals with the closing of the Massey grain combine plant.

Is the Minister of Agriculture prepared to announce to the House today that concrete steps will be taken to make sure that the Canadian farm community will be able to purchase spare parts for these combines and obtain after-sales service for these Massey-Ferguson grain combines? What concrete steps can he announce to the House to reassure the Canadian farm community?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member drafted his question before I gave two answers to it on a previous occasion. The Government is very concerned, in particular, about the retention of the technology in Canada. As I said earlier, discussions are under way to safeguard the interests of farmers and dealers. It is anticipated that Varity and other companies will assure that there is a continued supply of those essential replacement parts in the event that there are no redeeming features to the present circumstances at Massey-Ferguson.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will have a short supplementary question, followed by a single question by the Member for Scarborough West. That will close Question Period.

EMPLOYEES' PENSION FUND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we still did not get an answer. My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the 3,300 pensioners and would-be pensioners of the Massey-Ferguson plant.

Will the Prime Minister meet with the provincial authorities of Ontario who now have a committee to assist the employees with the $54 million shortfall in the Massey-Ferguson employees' pension fund in Ontario? Will the federal Government agree now to participate financially with the Province of Ontario in a rescue plan for the funds of the pensioners?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question earlier as well. There is the question of the pensioners and the question of the approximately 300 disabled workers who are uppermost in our minds.

There are discussions with our provincial counterparts to determine just what are our respective jurisdictions and responsibilities. There will be no unsatisfied obligations to any person who has earned certain pension rights from this company.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—RESETTLEMENT PROGRAM FOR PEASANTS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Marxist Mengistu Government of Ethiopia is reported to have used coercion to compel unwilling peasants to submit to its resettlement program.

Insofar as Canada is partially aiding this program, what action will the Government take to ensure that Chairman Mengistu will honour his commitment to Canada that Ethiopians will participate in this program only by their own individual free choice?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when my colleague, the Minister for International Relations, was in Ethiopia a few weeks ago she raised precisely that question with the Government of Ethiopia. She was given an assurance at that time that there was no forced resettlement.

I want to make two points. First, a voluntary resettlement program is something that can be accepted by all Members of this House as a necessary part of development. This House, this Government and Members in it, are opposed to forced resettlement programs.

Second, if any evidence of forced resettlement with regard to the settlement program can be brought to my attention or that of my colleague, the Minister for International Relations, I would like to have it. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will bring it directly and immediately to the attention of Ethiopian authorities.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and the use of the Official Languages of Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) had the floor.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, just before the House rose for lunch I was pointing out that there is a lot of emotion surrounding the whole subject of language. There is a certain degree of fear, some prejudice and sometimes there are people who attempt to manipulate our fears and prejudices.

I also pointed to what I called linguistic imperialism. Certainly both English and French have been used in an imperialistic way to force themselves upon other peoples around the world. That is generally true of European languages, as I suppose it is of other languages in other parts of the world.

I pointed to the Canadian experience where Indian young people who went to residential schools and spoke their own Indian language were forced to speak English. Their mouths were washed out with soap if they spoke their own Indian language.

Today there is a situation in which many Indian nations are faced with the loss of their languages. Indeed, some have been lost because of that kind of cultural imperialism.

This Bill represents an attempt to do something quite different. We are trying to guarantee the equality of both our official languages.

Everyone recognizes that it is difficult to maintain a language when one is in a minority situation. That is certainly obvious when we consider Canada west of the Ottawa River. The further west one travels, the more difficult it is for francophone communities to maintain their own language. In British Columbia, for example, Maillardville is the only francophone community in that province which still maintains French as the language of the community.

At this time I want to pay tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the kind of leadership he has shown in this whole question of language. I wish he had continued to show that leadership today by speaking on this Bill because it would have been helpful if he had spoken. However, he chose not to do so.

When he was Leader of the Opposition he showed a degree of leadership and courage in standing up to some Conservatives from Manitoba who were obstructing the process toward getting linguistic justice in Manitoba.

What the Prime Minister is saying through Bill C-72 is that the whole program of bilingualism is not just a Trudeau-Liberal plot that has been foisted upon Canadians by Quebec, but a fundamental recognition of the true linguistic nature of Canada. I give credit to the Prime Minister for taking that approach.

We saw a similar act of leadership by a former leader of the Conservative Opposition, Robert Stanfield, when he refused the candidacy of Leonard Jones because Leonard Jones was taking such an intransigent approach to the whole question of francophone rights. This is not and should not be a partisan matter. It is, however, an area where leadership has and will continue to be needed. That is particularly true in western Canada where there is deep misunderstanding of the French fact.

We must admit that it is not limited to the Conservative Party but is an historic fact that runs deep. For instance, there was the situation in 1890 when Anglophones forming a majority in Manitoba stripped the francophone minority of their historic rights in their own language.

David Lewis, former leader of the NDP and former federal secretary of the old CCF Party, pointed out some of the difficulties in our own historic traditions regarding language. He pointed out that he always had some difficulty getting our previous leaders, including M.J. Caldwell and J.S. Woodsworth, to recognize the importance of linguistic and cultural matters to Quebec. He told the story of Harold Winch, a very distinguished member of the CCF who, in 1955, made an offhand remark that all MPs in the House of Commons should be speaking English. That was a completely outrageous suggestion. It was uttered before the time of simultaneous translation. It caused a furore because it was completely contrary to Party policy. However, it was the type of remark that western Canadians were inclined to make in the House of Commons. That took place over 30 years ago, and we have made progress since then. However, there are some people who are still rooted in those old fears and prejudices. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to give some real leadership in this matter, not only in terms of bringing this Bill forward and ensuring it gets through the House, but in addressing the real fears some people have, fears which some people are attempting to manipulate in what I consider to be an unscrupulous way.

It is on that basis that I welcomed the letter that was put into the Western Report by 10 western cabinet Ministers. I think that is important. I think it would also be important if the Prime Minister had spoken in this debate. I think it would have been important if more of the back-benchers from western Canada had been willing to speak in this debate. Not all of the back-benchers from western Canada in the Conservative Party agree with the Neanderthal attitude of the Back-Bench Committee. There are a number of back-benchers in the Conservative Party who take a reasoned approach to this. I think more of those people should have spoken up to assure the people of western Canada that this legislation is good legislation and there is nothing to fear from it.

I would be glad to answer any questions that any Member has.

Mr. Winegard: Madam Speaker, I have listened to this debate through most of the morning and now into the afternoon. What I really do not understand is, since we obviously have agreement in principle, why we do not get busy and vote on it. I ask my colleagues to my right if they are ready to vote. I do not know why we continue to talk. Let us get the Bill into committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there any more questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I do not believe there is anyone in this House who disagrees with the main principle of this Bill, which is that Canadians, in terms of the Constitution of Canada, where there is significant demand, will be able to get services in the official language of their choice. I do not think there is any disagreement with that at all. But there is another principle contained in the Bill that in fact has nothing to do with official languages and has everything to do with constitutional changes as they affect the northern territories. I want to address this very briefly.

This principle is contained in Clause 90 of the Bill which states as follows:

> The ordinance entitled the Official Languages Act, made on June 28, 1984 by the Commissioner in Council, as amended on June 26, 1986, may be amended or repealed by the Commissioner in Council only if the amendment or repeal is concurred in by Parliament through an amendment to this Act.

Of course, the Official Languages Act referred to here is the Official Languages Act of the Northwest Territories, a statute passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories.

The inclusion of this principle in the Bill is adding insult to the Meech Lake injury. It says in effect that the elected representatives of the people of the territories, at the provincial-type level, are not to be trusted, that Ottawa in some way has to maintain control, that the apron strings will remain tied.

There is no precedent in the Northwest Territories Act or any of the Acts establishing provinces where this type of control is to be maintained by the Parliament of Canada. In fact, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the people I represent, it is completely unnecessary and, coming as it does after the Meech Lake agreement in which the territories were treated so badly, it cannot fail to elicit this deep feeling on the part of my constituents.

If one examines the language laws in the Northwest Territories, one will find that we have probably the most progressive language law in the whole of Canada. Not only does the Act respect English and French as official languages, but it also respects the many indigenous languages spoken in the Territories which were spoken there probably thousands of years before ever a word of English or French was uttered on this continent. The people who speak those languages do not want to lose them. They are faithful to those languages. They feel the same way about their languages as the people in Quebec undoubtedly feel about the French language.

Much work has been done in the territories with respect to the extension of French language services to the small French speaking minority there. We would have to thank the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie) for making funds available so that those services can be extended.

The history of Clause 90 goes back to the Joyal—Nerysoo Agreement of 1984. At that time Serge Joyal was the Secretary of State for Canada, and I suspect this was a rather unequal treaty. It is my suspicion that it was forced on Richard Nerysoo, who was then the Government Leader in the territories. It was done at a time when funds were to be made available to the territories for the provision of these French services as well as services in indigenous languages.

The agreement specified that Clause 90 as it now reads be applied to a Bill which was then entitled Bill C-25. It was the official languages Bill—not unlike the Bill we have before us today—which was to have been brought forward by the Liberal Government of the day but, for some reason or other, it died on the Order Paper.

Whatever the situation was in 1984, it certainly does not exist today. Clause 90 is redundant, superfluous and unnecessary. If for some remote reason, and I cannot foresee it happening, the territories wanted to amend their Official Languages Act in a way which took away the rights of French-speaking people—and I do not think this would happen—there are various recourses available to the federal Government to deal with this situation. It is not necessary to put Clause 90 in the Bill. Federal authorities can instruct the Commissioner of the Territories to refuse consent to any amendment to the Official Languages Act of the Northwest Territories. Federal authorities retain the power of disallowance. It can disallow any territorial legislation. Over and above that, it has the power to enact overriding legislation should it so choose. Therefore, Clause 90 is not necessary at all.

On February 17, the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, feeling as strongly about this issue as I do, adopted the following resolution:

> Whereas the people of the Northwest Territories and the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories have in recent years taken large steps towards the achievement of responsible government;
> And whereas there is presently, before the Parliament of Canada, a federal Bill which provides for a reduction in the legislative authority of the Legislative Assembly of the N.W.T.;
> Therefore, be it resolved:
> —that this Legislative Assembly declare its strong opposition, through the Speaker, to the enactment of Clause 90 of Federal Bill C-72 presently before the Parliament of Canada, which clause reduces the legislative authority of this Assembly.

• (1520)

I would like to record my thanks to two Members of the House of Commons in particular who have spoken on this issue already. One, of course, is the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) representing the Liberal Party who is in the House this afternoon. The other is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) of the New Democratic Party.

Those of us who are familiar with northern issues realize that this is not a Party issue. Rather, it is one that acts against the interests of the territories eventually becoming a province in their own right. Hopefully, that is something that we are all agreed upon regardless of our Party persuasions.

I am not really pessimistic about this because I have every expectation that Clause 90 will be removed at committee stage. Therefore I would like to get this matter to committee at an early opportunity. Presumably, at that time, the Governments of the territories will have an opportunity to appear as witnesses. I think that this is really a technicality that can be put to rights with no great problem.

Finally, I would like to say that the territories have now come of age. Constitutional authority once granted to them is not to be rescinded. Here we are trying to rescind that authority under the guise of a Bill that deals with official languages. That is not acceptable to me or to my constituents. Therefore I hope that every consideration will be given to the remarks that I have made and to the remarks of other Members of the House of Commons speaking on the same issue when the Bill is referred to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I listened with care to the comments of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He has addressed an important matter felt quite keenly in the Northwest Territories. I would like to say something along a very similar line on behalf of the Government of the Yukon and in recognition of the fact that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) is not able to be here today. I know that she wanted to address a particular concern which is quite similar to the one which has just been put forward regarding the Northwest Territories.

We are concerned that the Bill be considered carefully in committee. We expect that it will soon go to committee. We are concerned that in Clause 3 of the Bill in which federal institutions are defined there is an exclusion, which is, of course, relevant to what the Hon. Member was just addressing. The definition of federal institution does not include any institution of the Council or Government of the Northwest Territories. Because that particular exclusion is in place one might conclude that the Government of the Yukon, an institution of the Council or the Government of the Yukon, is in fact included under "federal institutions". That is a matter of grave concern to the Government of the Yukon. I think I can say that it is of grave concern to the entire Legislature and to all the people of that part of Canada.

This concern is very similar to the one expressed by the Hon. Member from the Northwest Territories and requires application here because the Yukon is practising full self-government. After the Meech Lake meeting the question of the Yukon, as with the Northwest Territories, achieving provincial status becomes profoundly problematic. That is one of the objectionable points that has been raised about the Meech Lake agreement.

It is proper that the Parliament of Canada should respect the Legislature, Council and Government of the Yukon and not impose on them official bilingualism but rather have them accept as we wish it to happen in the other provinces of Canada, the standing of English and French as official languages as is true in New Brunswick. We would like that to happen in other cases. The Government of the Yukon is advancing services and extending services and so on. But it is necessary at committee to take this up.

As the Hon. Member has anticipated, some revisions relating to the imposition of constraints on the Government of the Assembly of the Northwest Territories are essential. Similarly, there needs to be a recognition of this concern for the Yukon in the committee's consideration of the Bill.

I appreciate your allowing me the time, Madam Speaker, to put this case on behalf of the Yukon in the absence of the Hon. Member who is away on business elsewhere.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, all I can say is that I agree with the comments of the Hon. Member. I did not speak of the Yukon in my address because I was not entirely clear what it is that the Government of the Yukon wants. It has not advised me of its particular standing on the issue. I would be pleased if it would be so kind as to do so.

When one looks at the Bill one sees that in many respects the Yukon has been treated even worse than the territories. The Government and the Legislature of the Yukon have been treated very much as a federal government Department in the Bill. I am sure that although the Government has not told me this, it would find that unacceptable.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by commending my friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), for drawing attention to the difficulties with respect to Clause 90. Toward the end of my remarks I wish to indicate my strong support for an amendment to that particular clause which in no way affects the principle of the Bill.

I am prepared to vote on the Bill, but my constituents would expect me, because of its great importance to French-speaking people outside Quebec, to express a strong word in favour of Bill C-72 which I consider to be an important Bill for Canada. I consider it to be a necessary Bill. I consider it to be a piece of legislation which is in fact long overdue.

All of us here are aware that the Constitution of Canada provides that English and French be the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all of the institutions of Parliament and the Government of Canada.

However, the linguistic rights so guaranteed do not go far enough, in my view and certainly in the view of the Government and of the framers of the legislation, for example, in the area of the language of work. Hence there is a need for Bill C-72 which will serve to ensure respect for English and French as the official languages of Canada, especially in those areas in which there has been some difficulty in the recent past. I am thinking of the administration of justice. I am thinking of providing services to the public in all areas of Canada. I am thinking of carrying out the work of federal institutions in either one of the official languages.

Further than that, and most important to me and to the constituency in northern Ontario which I represent which has a significant Franco-Ontarian population, is one of the stated objects of Bill C-72. I refer to the support and the development of English and French linguistic minority communities and generally the advancement of the equality of status and use of the English and French languages within Canadian society.

Some Members of Parliament who keep abreast of these matters will know that in one of the major communities in my constituency, namely, Kapuskasing, there was in fact a struggle that finally ended up in the courts when the local council attempted to have the community designated as bilingual. In the end, because of the court decision, it had to pursue the goal of bilingualism in a somewhat different fashion. But had Bill C-72 been in place at the time, the cause of bilingualism would have been greatly strengthened.

Supporters of Canadian bilingualism will certainly hail and applaud this Bill. Bill C-72 bodes very well for the future of bilingualism in Canada. It builds on the very solid foundation that has been established by past Prime Ministers, including the Right Hon. John. G. Diefenbaker, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, and, most particularly, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

With a view to strengthening federal legislation on the official languages, Bill C-72 has a three-fold objective: first to ensure the equality of the official languages, second to support the development of the official languages minorities and the advancement of equal status for both official languages and, third, to define the powers and obligations of federal institutions with respect to this matter.

[English]

Clause 33 of Bill C-72 makes English and French the languages of work in all federal institutions. It grants to officers and employees of all federal institutions the right to use either of the official languages.

It has already been drawn to the attention of this House that the February issue of Western Report interprets this clause to mean that if a person is not bilingual then——you cannot work for the federal Government.

[English]

That, of course, is a gross misinterpretation. In that context, it does seem to me that a new generation of young Canadians is coming to realize that to be bilingual is a qualification which will assist enormously in promoting a career in the federal Public Service. The fact that many jobs now require fluency in both official languages should upset no one. In the same manner as mathematics is essential for engineering, chemistry is necessary to a career in pharmacy, and anatomy is required for medicine, it is increasingly recognized, if a person chooses a career in the Public Service of Canada at the federal level, that bilingualism is a prerequisite for that person to extend his or her career as far as his or her abilities will allow.

I was able to cut my political teeth on the policy of official bilingualism. I did so especially during the first Trudeau administration. I did so in all parts of the country where initially the policy was extremely unpopular. For example, I can remember on a radio call-in show where a man said to me that he was sick and tired of having French jammed down his throat. I asked him to elaborate a little, and he made reference to the famous cornflakes box. The conversation ended very abruptly when I told him that he was meant to eat the contents of the box, not the box itself.

Clause 40 of this Bill has particular appeal for me, and also for the Franco-Ontarian constituents whom I represent in this House. Under Clause 40 the federal Government is committed to enhancing the vitality of minority communities, supporting and assisting their development, and fostering the full recognition and use of both official languages.

It will be the task of Canada's Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) to direct a co-ordinated approach to the implementation of this provision. Federal Ministers will be empowered by Bill C-72, if they are so designated by the Governor in Council or the Cabinet, to consult and negotiate with provincial Governments to ensure the co-ordination of federal, provincial, and municipal educational services in both official languages.

Canada's first Prime Minister said it as well as anyone. Sir John A. Macdonald, a Conservative Prime Minister, when speaking to the House of Commons on February 17, 1890, as reported on page 745 of Hansard, stated:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other; I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible.

Canada's first Prime Minister was correct. His statement, however, was made with a negative connotation. He spoke of the futility of repressing one language or the other in Canada.

Today, with Bill C-72, we are able to speak of the advancement of bilingualism, enhancing the vitality of English and French where it is necessary to do so, assisting the development of two official languages, and fostering their full recognition.

To the Party opposite, which now forms the Government of Canada, I can only say, "Congratulations. You have come a long way". In this legislation what the Government is doing is essentially right in every respect.

Henri Bourassa wrote this in 1916:

> The preservation and simultaneous growth of two national languages—far from being an obstacle to the progress of Canada, constitutes its most powerful factor and our greatest national asset.

At this time we are only considering the principle of the Bill. There will be another time and occasion for a clause by clause analysis. With reference to one clause which I referred to earlier, I do wish to raise the need for an amendment. In advancing the cause of bilingualism, which I fully support, I fail to see why it is necessary to reduce the legislative authority of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. I refer to Clause 90 of Bill C-72 which prohibits that Legislature from amending one of its own statutes, namely, the Northwest Territories Official Languages Act, without the prior approval of the federal Parliament.

Hon. Members opposite will be quick to point out to me, as some have already done, that Clause 90 is consistent with an agreement reached between the then Secretary of State and the Government of the Northwest Territories on June 28, 1984. That is an agreement made by the previous Liberal Government.

I say to the House that such a provision was unnecessary then, and I further submit that paragraph 8, which put that obligation on the Legislative Assembly to seek permission from this Parliament, is no longer even in effect. The Bill which gave it effect, Bill C-26 of the day, died on the Order Paper.

All of that aside, we are now living in 1988. Despite the Meech Lake Accord which is a set-back for the North, the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories is rapidly evolving toward full responsible Government. There is no agreement now in effect regarding official languages. The Northwest Territories has its own statute. Therefore, it is entirely logical and reasonable to argue that Clause 90 is not required.

Therefore, at a later stage in the consideration of this Bill, I will either move an amendment myself, or if the amendment comes from my friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, I will support it. As I stated earlier, this in no way touches on the principle of this excellent piece of legislation.

I wish to conclude by commending the Government in general for bringing forward Bill C-72. I applaud its efforts, I welcome all aspects of this Bill, the thrust of it, and in particular I extend my congratulations to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Bill.

Mr. Taylor: I enjoyed listening to the Hon. Member. His address was positive. I believe some of the points he was raising are very important. For instance, the Bill does not require everybody to be bilingual. The Bill is based on the fact that there will always be English-speaking and French-speaking unilingual people in this country. A second language is always advantageous, whether it is French, Ukrainian, Danish, Swedish, Chinese or whatever. There are Canadians today who speak two and three languages. There are others who never in a lifetime will want nor will there be a need for them to have a second language. Consequently, I think we have to make it very clear in our regulations and in the committee as it goes through this Bill that there will be no discrimination against unilinguals in the market-place where the work is done.

There is always the hope that people will be able to learn another language. As I mentioned this morning, the Government of Alberta is already encouraging people to learn the second official language. Some 23,000 students are enrolled in that program under the auspices of the Government of Alberta.

I would like the Hon. Member's comments. In the everyday working place that is wholly unilingual, the foreman, or the boss as he is sometimes called, should never be worried about the fact that he will not be promoted because he knows only one language, the one being the language of his working place. I think Canadians should be aware of that point and the committee should also cover it very carefully.

There is another point I would like to mention. I mention both points now to save time. The Hon. Member talked about federal institutions. He is right. This Bill does apply to federal institutions. Consequently, there is no reason at this time for people in provincial or municipal courts or provincial or municipal bodies to fear that someone will force them to speak a second language whether that language is French or English. I think that is a very important point we have to recognize.

The Bill is very important and the regulations and the administration of it are very important. I hope that when the Bill comes out of the committee it will be abundantly clear to all concerned that in a unilingual area there will be no pressure whatsoever placed on people forcing them to learn another language and that they will be able to have their promotions on merit and ability. I would appreciate hearing the Hon. Member's comments.

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has raised that matter. The Bill itself takes account of the concern, the concern about the merit principle. In Clause 38 of the Bill in Part VI which deals with the language of work, it says quite clearly:

> Nothing in this section shall be construed as abrogating or derogating from the principle of selection of personnel according to merit.

I notice that the Hon. Member for Bow River was very precise in raising the point. He is talking about those areas where it is unnecessary to be bilingual, and in that area of the Public Service promotion should not be denied because a person does not have the capacity to speak both official languages. The Bill makes that perfectly clear. I think the Hon. Member from Bow River raised the point because I indicated to him that there is a growing number of positions in the federal service, certainly senior positions, in which bilingualism is required. I think I would continue to make it an appeal to the young people of Canada, and I know the young people in Alberta have responded very positively to it, that if they want a senior career or want to advance their career in the Public Service of Canada then bilingualism is one of the attributes they should have on their curriculum vitae. It will help them enormously.

It has now become commonplace to say that it is unthinkable that we would ever have a Prime Minister again in this country who is not fluently bilingual. If that is true for the Prime Minister of the country, it is true for many other senior positions in the Public Service, and the young people of the country will want to be cognizant of that. Having said that, however, the point made by the Hon. Member for Bow River is a valid one that where only one language is required, no one should be restricted from being promoted in a particular area.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure that I take part in the debate on Bill C-72 this afternoon. We are asked to consider Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada so as to promote respect for this country's linguistic duality. Madam Speaker, we need this piece of legislation to reaffirm our commitment respecting Canada's bilingualism policy. And even if there were no other reason to introduce Bill C-72, this reason in itself is enough to justify reaffirming this commitment in the House of Commons today. Of course, Madam Speaker, there are other reasons, and I will be dealing with them in the course of my remarks later this afternoon.

The first thing I want to say about this measure is: at last we are debating it in the House of Commons. I say "at last", Madam Speaker, because we have been waiting for two years to have this kind of measure. The Bill was introduced in the House on June 25, 1987 and promptly forgotten. Indeed the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) moved a non-confidence motion in the House on February 1 last to denounce the Government's refusal to forge ahead with the official languages issue. Here is the text of the motion sponsored by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier:

> That this House condemns the government for its inaction, its lack of political will and its hesitation to accept debate in the House of Commons, at the second reading stage, on Bill C-72 respecting the status and use of the official languages, thus causing a clear setback in the application of the Act by federal departments and agencies, in addition to having detrimental effects on national unity.

A hard-hitting motion, Madam Speaker, but still it did stir up some action: a few days later, on February 8, the House began the second reading debate on Bill C-72. It lasted two days and during that time seven Government Members and five opposition Members took the floor, hardly justification to claim that the measure has been debated at length in the House of Commons. Yet earlier today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took pleasure in blaming the Opposition for the snail-pace progress of this legislation. As he is wont to do, the Prime Minister takes it out on parliamentarians and other political Parties whenever he wants to hide his incompetence. We know better, Madam Speaker, we know that this measure has been at a standstill for two weeks and I would urge the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) to pay attention—

Mr. Grisé: If the Prime Minister had spoken to this Bill you would still be making the same remarks.

Mr. Boudria: —because he too has a lot to learn, Madam Speaker, a lot more than most other people, and if he listens carefully he just might learn something.

Finally, we have today this third day of debate in the House and, although the Prime Minister has chosen not to participate in it, he is to be blamed just the same for the lack of progress of the issue in the House. The two other political leaders, namely the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) have both participated in it. So far, the Prime Minister has refused to do so. I trust that he will honour us with his participation before this second reading debate comes to an end.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, even if it were for no other reason than to reaffirm our commitment to the official languages issue, we should have Bill C-72 just the same. As I was saying, however, there are other reasons: first of all, since the original Official Languages Act was adopted, we have passed the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter dealing with the official languages issue. We have had also the Meech Lake Accord, so that we need to make a sort of new commitment and rejuvenate this legislation which is already several years old.

There had been several other previous initiatives which recognized the linguistic duality of this country so that the Official Languages Act is not the first. Think of the history of our country: The Quebec Act, 1774, made reference to the linguistic duality; The Union Act, 1840; The British North America Act, 1867; and The Manitoba Act, 1870, even if this legislation was never or almost never enforced, and many others. Finally, let us not forget the Laurendeau-Dunton Report which gave birth to the present Official Languages Act. Naturally, this Laurendeau-Dunton Report was prepared at the request of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, a former Primer Minister of Canada. In this Laurendeau-Dunton Report, the so-called Royal Commission of Inquiry on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in Canada concluded that our country needed an Official Languages Act to recognize in a concrete fashion the Canadian linguistic duality, as well as the need, privilege and right of every Canadian to be served by the Federal Government in the language of his or her choice.

[English]

Some have asked why we need a new Bill and why we need it now. We need it because it is finally time for us to revamp a law which has aged many years and because of the constitutional amendments we have made over recent decades including the Meech Lake constitutional Accord which has not yet been fully adopted and the 1982 constitutional document.

Madam Speaker, the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, in a press release dated February 4, deplores the Government's failure to act on the official languages issue, and I want to quote the following from the text released by the Fédération:

> What is the Mulroney Government waiting for? Why won't it proceed with second and third reading of a Bill that was tabled six months ago? We can find no explanation for the delay, and we want the Government to proceed immediately.

Madam Speaker, it is clear Francophones outside Quebec are upset about the Conservative Government's failure to act. What does the Bill contain? I think it would be in order to give a brief enumeration of the main points of Bill C-72. First of all, the Bill will contain a preamble, defining the Government's commitments with respect to official languages. It will contain measures to provide for improved access to the administration of justice in both languages, a very important issue.

There will also be measures to improve the access to, and the direct visibility of, bilingual federal communications and services.

There are provisions recognizing the rights of Canadians to work in the official language of their choice in federal institutions, in accordance with the linguistic responsibility of these institutions.

There is also recognition of the principle of full participation by French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians in federal institutions.

There are many other measures, but I would like to conclude with what I consider to be a very important one, namely, the primacy of the rights and obligations of the future legislation or this new Act over federal statutes that are not compatible with its provisions.

Madam Speaker, I have the honour of representing in the House the electoral district with the highest percentage of Francophones outside the province of Quebec.

There are about 70,000 Francophones in my riding, the electoral district of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. The riding borders on Quebec, and as you know, Madam Speaker, since you cross my riding on your way to Ottawa, some parts of the riding border on Quebec to the north, east and south. So although we are in Ontario, we are almost surrounded by Quebec, which partly explains the high percentage of Francophones in my riding.

I was born in Quebec and am a Franco-Ontarian by adoption, so I see myself as a Franco-Ontarian, as a Quebecer, but above all, as a French-speaking Canadian.

[English]

When we discuss the issue of official languages, it is important to bring to the attention of the House the commitment of the Government in that regard. One thing which has happened over the last few years which best describes to me what I believe is a lack of commitment on the part of the present Government was the trial of one Luc Paquette. Mr. Paquette asked the Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta for a French trial. He won the right to a French trial with a judge, jury and Crown Attorney. The federal Government appealed that decision to the Court of Appeal and challenged Mr. Paquette's right to the trial. Mr. Paquette ended up losing his right, though others who had made similar applications before were successful. Those who will make similar applications in the future, because of the precedent-setting decision in the Paquette case, will not be successful. I feel that that is an unfortunate move on the part of the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn), one which should not have been contemplated and one which this Government will live to regret.

We know, Madam Speaker, that many conservative members do not support the Official Languages Bill. To my knowledge, this is the only legislation since I came to this House that, despite unanimous support from Cabinet ministers and both opposition parties, does not enjoy the unanimous support of Government back-benchers.

Mr. Blenkarn: We will soon see!

Mr. Boudria: This is a very special situation, and a conservative member opposite is suggesting we will soon see. Indeed, Madam Speaker, we will see, first, whether Government members, who expressed such disagreement on the Bill, will be present to demand a division, since five members must rise to indicate their disapproval before there can be a division. Secondly, we will see whether there will be a division in this House and whether hon. members will be present to vote in line with the views they expressed in this House in the past.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Let's get on with the vote now.

Mr. Boudria: Once again, we hear from government Members who do not think that debating this issue is important. They have a right to think that. However, we have been debating this Bill for three days in the House of Commons, and for an inept Member to state otherwise is totally inaccurate. He should be ashamed of himself that such an important piece of legislation is being refused the opportunity to be debated.

Some will suggest, Madam Speaker, that the official languages Bill will force Canadians to be bilingual in order to work in the Public Service. I have here the February 1, 1988 copy of the Alberta Report, an English language magazine published in western Canada, and I would like to show it to you, but since this is contrary to our rules, I will simply read the cover which states:

> Si vous ne pouvez pas lire ceci, vous ne pouvez pas travailler pour le gouvernement fédéral.

• (1600)

Translation: "If you can't read this, you can't work for the federal Government".

Madam Speaker, we know that such a statement is totally inaccurate. We know that of the 221,000 jobs in the Public Service, 60 per cent require English only; 7 per cent, French only, and 28 per cent are designated bilingual.

How is it then possible to utter such nonsense, suggesting that if a Canadian is not totally bilingual he or she cannot work in the Public Service? This is absolutely false, as most hon. members in this House know.

[English]

Earlier this year there was an election in the Province of Ontario which, of course, was won in a landslide by the Liberal Party. In that election one political Party chose to fight the election against bilingualism and, in my opinion, on the backs of French Canadians in Ontario.

This political Party, supported by an outfit calling itself APEC, the so-called Alliance for the Preservation of English in Canada, was going from constituency to constituency trying to convince municipalities to adopt resolutions declaring themselves officially unilingual. In my opinion those resolutions were reprehensible, and luckily only a few municipalities fell for that trap set by APEC and the issue went nowhere. However, the general theme was picked up by the provincial leader of the Conservative Party and that Party was just about wiped out in the election.

There was a message in that, the message being that Canadians have now evolved beyond that. If such schemes ever worked, they will not work in 1988. I am sure that the present federal Government has realized that and I hope that it will assist in their decision some of the back-benchers who had some reservations about the Bill.

Mr. Horner: You haven't convinced anybody.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, it is not important that I convince anyone. What is important is that the people of Canada have an Official Languages Act which is in their interest and will reflect the fact that we live in 1988, not that we are vestiges of the former century, as some Members of this House would like us to be.

I will conclude by reminding this House that the Mayor of Alexandria, a town in my constituency, said not long ago that APEC should stand for "All People Created Equal".

[Translation]

All Canadians are equal. All Canadians have equal rights. We will know in a few moments whether Government back-benchers will have the courage to express their convictions, whether they will rise in this House to demand a division to determine whether members support or reject Bill C-72. I hope we will enact the Bill. Naturally, as anyone else I wish for amendments, improvements, but a vast majority in this House will support Bill C-72 today, and we will send it to a committee of the House. But Bill C-72 must not die in that committee! We must discuss the matter, we must discuss it rapidly, and bring it back in this House to enact it in order that Canada in 1988 may have an Official Languages Act, 1988.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: I heard someone say no.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I did not hear a "no" but I will ask the question again to make sure that there is unanimity. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

AGRICULTURE

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING A NATIONAL FOOD POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing an improved national marketing structure for all major farm produced commodities and negotiate with the provinces a national food policy with over-all production targets and market sharing.

He said: Madam Speaker, last Friday night I attended the Essex County Federation of Agriculture annual meeting to honour their activities. I found myself sitting opposite two young people who had been working since they entered the labour force to try to earn enough to provide some kind of basis on which they could purchase a farm. They came from farming families and wanted to establish a future in farming for themselves. This motion is very much directed at them and toward hundreds of farmers across my constituency with whom I have talked in the last three and a half years.

Frankly, they have faced very difficult circumstances throughout that three and a half year period. The two young people I faced last Friday should be the future of our farming community, yet that young woman and man had found themselves in a position where the prospect of getting into farming, rather than becoming a more realistic goal, was becoming less likely, despite the fact they were earning more and saving more money.

I suggest that this is just one sign of the reality of the farm crisis which exists across Canada. The farm crisis in Essex County and in many other parts of Canada can be seen in terms of the very heavy debt loads which farmers are carrying. The crisis in Essex County is shown by a drop from one-third to two-fifths in the price of land which farmers have held for the last four to six years. The consequence of this to a farmer who has contracted a very significant debt is that the asset which covers that debt is very much reduced year by year.

However, the heart of the crisis is not the debt load which farmers carry. As the Essex County Federation of Agriculture told the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in a letter: "Despite highly efficient agricultural operations the current prices for farm commodities do not cover the basic costs of production in many cases, do not provide any return on investment, nor a reasonable wage for labour expended plus management skills".

In addition, as I have suggested in the House on a number of occasions, there are various mechanisms of harassment which Governments seem to be using to undercut farmers' potential for the future. For instance, one has seen in Essex County a doubling in the tax audits affecting farmers in the past year. Much tougher definitions are being applied in the process of this auditing, which has the effect of putting the farmer in a catch 22 situation. He or she must go out to find a job off farm in order to cover debts and the low prices for commodities, then tax audits refuse to classify this farmer as a full-time farmer because of the job he or she has had to take off farm. The consequence is that they are able to write off much less of their losses than was true previously.

Of course, farmers are not just sitting back and taking this. Farmers across Essex County and right across the country are fighting back with imaginative approaches and new methods of organization.

Again, to use my own constituency of Essex—Windsor, as an example the National Farmers' Union has formed a new local within the county which has expanded tremendously. One of the methods it is using to fight back is to hire people with an accounting background to go to the various Farm Debt Review Boards, which are held to look at the farmers who have got into difficult debt positions, and through the National Farmers' Union could work out as effective and optimistic a picture of the farm operation under scrutiny as is possible.

The union has been quite successful in a number of cases in persuading both Farm Debt Review Boards and banks that farms which appeared at first glance to be non-viable, with some satisfactory writing down of debt, some sort of sharing of the debt burden—for which farmers are not responsible—are really viable. It is not farmers who raised interest rates to 22 per cent in the early 1980s. Yet they are the people who are having to carry the burden of this increase.

The National Farmers' Union has fought back on that level. The Essex County Federation of Agriculture has fought back on the question of prices and the lack of relationship between prices and the cost of production for most farmers. Our office in the last few days has been talking with various experts in the farm community in Essex County. They have been able to generate figures which give one a sense of the depth of the crisis. The cost of production of soybeans is about $6.08 per bushel. The soybean growers' estimate of what they will receive as a price is $6.42 per bushel. It is at least some positive return, but a very small one. The cost of production of soft winter white wheat, another major crop in Essex County, is estimated at $3.19 per bushel. The market price as of today is $3.45 per bushel. Most farmers would have delivered their wheat in August of 1987, at which point the price was $3 per bushel. They would have lost something in the order of 19 cents to 20 cents per bushel with respect to their soft winter white wheat.

Perhaps the most hardest hit of commodities in my county is corn. The cost of production is approximately $3.18 per bushel. The market price is $2.02. The loss is over one dollar per bushel for these farmers.

What can we do when we are faced with these prices? I think it is something that has to concern all of us in this House. It is why I have tried on as many occasions as I could to speak out about these farm concerns. I think the first thing we have to do is to look at our marketing structures throughout this country. With respect to dairy farmers, with the feather industry, it has become viable, for the most part, to be a farmer, because there is successful supply management which works well. I speak with some personal experience on this subject. My family has operated a dairy farm north of Guelph very successfully since the period that supply management came in. So it has worked and it has worked with the feather industry.

Poultry farms are successful now and would not have been in the past. I recognize it is more complex for crops which are exported rather than serving the domestic market, as is the case, for the most part, with dairy products and the feather industry. However, with respect to those export crops, it is possible to have a two-price system. We have had it with respect to wheat quite successfully. One of my great sorrows with respect to the trade deal which has been presented by the Government to us in the House is that the two-price system for wheat is going to disappear. With respect to the two-price wheat system, the Ontario Wheat Board stated that Canada's two-price wheat policy has been a very important stabilizing factor in the general domestic wheat industry. The pricing mechanism provided by the policy has worked well for both the marketing board and the millers. Supplies have been assured and purchase risks have been eliminated through established prices to millers and processors.

It is not just processors; consumers as well have a predictable price. They do not see these jumps and ups and downs which have taken place in many farm commodities, which make it hard to predict. So they have a world for which they have been able to budget and which they understand. I think it is absolutely crucial that we have an improved marketing structure for all major farm produced commodities. It will have to be negotiated with the provinces. It will have to involve a national food policy, not just provincial food policies. We will have to accept over-all production targets and market sharing within our domestic market. Of course, we have to accept as a reality also that for exports we cannot apply that kind of price predictability. We have to accept that those ups and downs are going to take place.

We have to negotiate with the provinces for the fullest possible coverage, for help for starting farmers. We have to deal with some of the problems, which, I admit, have existed with respect to national marketing structures, including the accelerated cost of quotas which have prevented some young farmers from getting into farming.

The last word I want to leave with the House is that besides the points made in this motion I stress that it is crucial that we keep in Canada the capacity to direct our own affairs with respect to agricultural policy. That is why I find the free trade proposal of the Government, the trade deal with the United States, to be so destructive with respect to many parts of agriculture, specifically those parts of agriculture that I represent in my constituency.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join in this debate in Private Member's Hour on the motion raised by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

The Hon. Member has touched on problems which are certainly common to agriculture across the country and which I think relate specifically to the grains and oilseeds sector which has been beset by low prices as a result of conditions in the market-place lying beyond the borders of our country. Of course, I am talking about the trade war between the United States and the European Economic Community. This is a problem which has been discussed countless times in the House. I do not think it needs revisiting at this point in time.

The question is what to do about it. Of course, a number of initiatives have been taken by the Government which I intend to enlarge upon later in my remarks.

First, I want to say in response to the Hon. Member's remarks that, certainly, there is an enormous overhang of farm debt out there. We are told right now that there is something in the order of $22 billion owing against farms in Canada. It is worth noting that the Standing Committee on Agriculture at this time is embarking upon a study of that very problem. It is called the "22 billion dollar problem". It is intended to try to seek some solutions to this overhang of farm debt resulting from the overcapitalization of agriculture during a period of rampant inflation followed by the catastrophic drop in grain and oil seed prices.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Clark) seconded the Hon. Member's motion. The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to indicate that he did so, not out of support for the intent of the motion, but because in the absence of any opposition Member in the House at that time he wanted the Member's motion to be heard. It was for that reason that he seconded the motion.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor talked about domestic wheat pricing, the two-price wheat policy, as some sort of argument in favour of the thrust of his motion that the Government consider further supply management schemes relative, I gather, to the grain sector. Frankly, I found that rather curious. There is no question that the domestic wheat benefit, the two-price wheat system, is being phased out at this time, not as a result of anything relating to the trade agreement between Canada and the United States but, rather, to the distorting influences which that artificial program has had on production and cropping patterns across Canada over the past several years.

In that regard I want to refer the Hon. Member to the report of the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat which reported to the House in the spring of 1986. That was an all-Party committee which travelled across the country. It listened to the interests of farm groups, producers, Governments and food processors. It concluded that there were problems relating to the policy. In particular it related to the fact that it was already leading to a distortion and a displacement of production in the sense that an artificial price of $6 or $7 per bushel of wheat would tend to encourage a tremendous movement into that kind of production in areas where, traditionally, other crops had been grown. Over the past two years we have seen the problems that that committee flagged becoming exacerbated.

As the Hon. Member has pointed out, the result is that in Ontario there has been a tremendous movement into the production of hard wheat, which traditionally has not been grown there, with a consequent displacement of that domestic wheat benefit and a shift in it from western Canada into Ontario and, indeed, into other areas of the country. I think that has caused considerable difficulties. It perhaps points out one of the problems relating to the sort of policy which has the capability of sending the wrong signals into the market-place, distorting production and sending producers chasing after something that is artificial. I think it has caused a problem.

In any event, I want to assure the House that the Government well knows the importance of agriculture to the country. It recognizes the enormous contribution that agriculture makes to our economy. It well understands that it has a responsibility to ensure that agriculture has a strong and stable future.

It is important to be clear about this responsibility. I do not believe it is up to the Government to impose marketing systems that Canadian farmers neither need nor want. What the Government must do is to continue to work with the provinces and with the private sector to develop effective long-term plans. That is exactly what it is doing at this time. The national agriculture strategy signed by the federal and provincial Ministers of Agriculture in the fall of 1986 is a major milestone in federal-provincial relations.

At that meeting the Ministers agreed that the long-term future of the agri-food industry depends upon maintaining existing markets, developing new markets and responding to changes in the domestic and international environment. It depends on effective measures to address farm income problems.

Regulated marketing can be an important part of the solution. Supply management has certainly helped to provide stable incomes to producers in certain sectors, particularly the dairy, poultry and egg sectors. The policy of the Government and of the Progressive Conservative Party has been to look to producer choice in those particular sectors. If the bulk of producers want that form of program, it has been the policy of the Government to attempt to assist. In that regard I cite the establishment of the Canadian Broiler Hatching Egg Agency in 1986 during the term of this Government.

There is no question that supply management can be effective in certain sectors, notably ones that I think would have difficulty in the international market, those sectors which traditionally have not been exporters. Of course, it was the producers themselves who asked for the authority to establish national marketing plans in these areas. It was the producers themselves who helped to bring their own supply management systems about.

Producers in many other sectors simply do not consider supply management to be a viable solution. I cite cattle and hog producers who are strongly opposed to production targets and to market shares. Although the issue is raised repeatedly, a majority of red meat producers have rejected consistently supply management as being incompatible with their marketing goals. Our red meat industry competes successfully in the international market-place exporting much of what it produces.

Another example of course is the grains and oilseeds sector in which production targets and market sharing run against the current consensus among grain and oil seed producers and their organizations. The fact is that fully 80 per cent of our production of wheat, for example, goes into the international market-place. Clearly, with that kind of emphasis on export it is impossible to apply any sort of suggestion such as the Hon. Member has made relative to that sector.

I see that my time is almost up. I wish to reiterate that the Government recognizes the crisis caused by the international trade war in the grains and oilseeds sector. It has come forward with programs of historical magnitude in terms of assistance to the grains and oilseeds producers, including huge payments under western grain stabilization, two successive Canadian special grains programs, fuel tax rebates, and a myriad of other programs to help tide the grain producers over this time of crisis.

On the international scene, various Ministers, including the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer), through the Cairns Group have been actively pursuing attempts to bring a measure of sanity back into the international market-place. Indeed, this week the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds returned from Argentina after another round of talks to attempt to reduce the effects of subsidies world-wide which have had the effect of causing these disastrous prices to our producers.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for again flagging the problem. It gives us an opportunity here to point out that some of it is caused by factors beyond our borders, but Government is responding to it in a measure which is unparalleled in Canadian history.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to say a few words on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Agricultural marketing is perhaps the most difficult and challenging responsibility for farmers and Governments across the country in the whole agricultural production question.

We are very capable, particularly in the developed countries of the world, of producing massive amounts of food. The question is, how can we market those products both domestically and internationally at a price that is adequate to give the farmer a decent return on his investment?

We have seen the chaos created by the United States with its Farm Bill and with the massive subsidy program, which is not only designed to drive down the price of food, especially grains and cash crop items, but at the same time guarantee its own producers a very reasonable level of return. At the same time as the United States is driving down the world price, it has been providing massive export subsidies to its markets. It has been estimated that it has driven the price down by approximately $3 billion and provided some $6 billion or $8 billion per year in compensation to its producers.

This total chaos has been the greatest challenge ever faced by Canadian agriculture. No piece of legislation in the history of our country, in this Legislature or in any other, has had such a devastating impact on Canadian agriculture. Thousands and thousands of farmers have been put out of business because of the international trade wars which are now going on between the United States and the European Economic Community.

The disturbing part is that perhaps those trade wars are not finished. At some stage in the next year or two we hope that the United States and the EEC will draw back. Although the funding is only for three years, the American Bill provides for the legislation being in place for five years. If the funding continues and no international agreements are made, then the same chaos will continue.

We have seen a dramatic rise in the number of farmers in our country who are facing bankruptcy. It has risen from 30,000 or 32,000 to approximately 50,000 farmers who are either in serious financial difficulty or who are totally insolvent. The Government has not responded. Over one year ago the FCC went into a lack of financial viability. The Government has not responded by providing funding to take FCC out of its state of insolvency. On April 30, 1987 that was estimated at $124 million, and the estimates are that by the end of this fiscal year it will be up to $300 million. It is clear that the situation for many farmers is untenable with regard to the farm debt crisis.

The situation of extremely low world prices, farm debt brought on by devaluation in farm land, put in context with the uncertainty of the whole supply managed market for the dairy and poultry industries, for the fruit and vegetable industry, for the grape industry, and for many other industries, by the free trade deal with the United States, has caused either the greatest financial instability, in the case of supply management managed commodities, or the greatest uncertainty which our country has ever seen in agriculture.

The free trade deal will cause immediate violent repercussions in some areas, for example, in the production of grapes. Our grape producers in the Okanagan Valley and the Niagara Escarpment have input costs of $600 to $800 a tonne for grapes, competing with grapes produced in the southern areas of California at $100 to $200 a tonne. This is simply not viable. That whole industry is facing a colossal disaster, an agricultural and industrial adjustment of tremendous proportions, yet there is no provision in the free trade agreement for that. Simply put, they have been sacrificed. They know it. They have been promised there would be a phase-out or adjustment period of 10 years. There is no adjustment period of 10 years; it is cold turkey next January, if the deal is passed.

The deal may not be passed. The United States Congress may well turn it down. The United States Congress may well require that the Government of Canada fulfil its commitment in the trade deal to ensure that the provinces will comply. The Government stated it would do that. There is no known way that that can be done, unless the Government invokes the peace, order, and good government clause, the emergency stand-by powers of the Constitution. As I understand it, the Government has stated it will not invoke those sections of the Constitution in order to implement the trade deal, so the deal may fall apart because of that. It may fall apart because of a general election. But at this stage we have to assume that the Government, having 210 Members of Parliament, will likely pass the enabling legislation.

The whole range of agricultural commodities will face the problems of the free trade deal, including canola meal and canola oil, which have found a tremendous market in the Pacific northwest, where it will be subjected to the loss of transportation assistance under the Western Grain Transportation Act. It is expected they will lose some $30 or $35 a tonne for transportation under the free trade deal, whereas the tariffs which apply to canola meal and to canola oil going to the Pacific Northwest running as high as over $30 a tonne will not be viable for them. It is just the same with fruit and vegetables. The growers have operated under the protection of seasonal tariffs. If they are an expanding industry, those tariffs are removed. The snap-back provision, which is in the Act and often hailed by the Government, is not in fact available.

Without getting into all of the commodities, Madam Speaker, you can see that the free trade deal with the United States will have an extremely adverse effect on the marketing of a number of commodities. The commodities are simply not viable when put into direct competition with low-priced commodities coming in from the United States at uncontrolled levels and price.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to enter into this debate on the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who is proposing that we have a national food policy with production targets and market shares for all major farm commodities. He is suggesting that we have supply management for industries that depend greatly on export. If we followed his suggestion, we would lose 35 per cent of all the pork producers in Canada. One in three, every third person down the road, would be out of business. If we followed his suggestion, we would have 80 per cent of the wheat producers in Canada out of business and 12 per cent of the beef producers. The Member is suggesting that we can find some way to have both supply management and an export market, but I do not think that is at all possible and the end result will be as I have already said.

The Canadian Consumers Association emphasized that point and the producers in the dairy, poultry and egg sectors have benefited greatly from the supply management schemes that are in place at the present time. Other countries have not had these programs and they have paid through massive export subsidies, subsidies which the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) spoke about as disrupting farm income in Canada, and, indeed, in North America. The Americans have had to do something by trying to buy down the excess dairy cattle. This happened in the United States last year and in the European Economic Community before. Certainly supply management has cost Canadian consumers a small amount, but they have a good and high quality product on a regular basis and consumers and producers have been well served.

This Government is fully supportive of supply management schemes. In fact, we have, since we came into power, brought in the latest of the supply management schemes through a national marketing agency for broiler hatching eggs which was created in 1986. Supply management is not the panacea for the entire agricultural industry. It is important that we recognize that the agricultural industry is very diverse and that what works in one sector indeed will not necessarily work in another sector or may perhaps be unnecessary in another sector. That is why the Government has made a commitment to producers that we will support whatever marketing systems producers decide work best for their particular commodities, as long as those interests are also in the public interest. Some commodity sectors believe that they are better off with a free market system. Most red meat producers, for instance, are opposed to supply management.

In 1986, beef producers in this country earned cash receipts of $3.6 billion. Of this amount, more than $413 million came from exports of beef and beef products. This is the amount the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor would be prepared to sacrifice for a supply management scheme. Hog producers reported cash receipts of $2.1 billion. Exports accounted for more than $800 million of this amount. Again, this is the amount that would be sacrificed. Red meat exports earned more than $1.2 billion for the Canadian economy. That is more than $1.2 billion toward a favourable trade balance. Canada simply cannot afford to produce red meat exclusively for the domestic market. The red meat sector is certainly among the healthiest parts of the Canadian farm economy.

When dairy, poultry and egg producers opted for the supply management system, it was to bring order out of chaos. Their sectors had been ravaged by boom and bust cycles that cost them and Canadians a great deal. They sought some sort of orderly marketing to provide stability to their sectors. Red meat producers prefer unfettered markets, and they are managing quite well. What is more, contrary to what the Member for Algoma has just said, red meat producers are excited by their prospects under the free trade agreement. They anticipate increased export opportunities under free trade with the United States. This would be lost under a supply-managed scheme.

Many farm sectors will benefit from the removal of tariffs and the elimination of technical barriers, but perhaps none more so than the red meat sector. Stan Wilson, President of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, has said free trade is welcomed by cattle producers right across the country. Bill Vaggs, head of the Canadian Pork Council, said he is "very comfortable" with the free trade agreement. He has urged the federal Government to do everything in its power to keep the doors open to the United States market for Canada's hog and pork exports.

Even the report by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food, a ministry headed by a person dedicated to finding reasons why free trade is bad for Ontario agriculture, even that department working under that kind of direction failed to find a problem for the read meat sector. In fact, it found that there would be some $18 million advantage per year in Ontario alone for the red meat sector. This same study, I believe, forgot that farmers are consumers and consume a great deal of products in their farm operation and would benefit from a reduction in tariffs and the products which they consume. It also failed to realize that many farmers have children, even farmers themselves who work off the farm and would benefit from more jobs that pay higher in their communities. The very least optimistic report which the Ontario Government could find still showed an $18 million advantage for Ontario red meat producers.

In recent years, the value of Canadian red meat and live animal exports to the United States has totalled more than $1 billion a year, nearly half of Canada's farm exports to that country. Our red meat sector is fully competitive with the U.S.

Its assured duty free access to the U.S. market helps guarantee the continued well-being of this sector.

The free trade agreement will exempt both our countries from each other's meat import laws. Without an agreement, U.S. meat import law could limit Canada's beef and veal exports to the United States, either through formal import quotas or so-called voluntary export restraints. The agreement is going to provide an improved environment for additional investment in meat processing plants since there is now much greater certainty of continued access to the U.S. market. That, of course, demonstrates again the tendency for years where we in Canada have sent more money out of this country across the border to invest in American business to avoid tariffs, money that could have stayed here at home to produce Canadian jobs. Of course, the more money we keep at home, the greater the chance for Canadian employment.

The particular advantage that Canadian meat producers will have will be the removal of the tariffs on portion-controlled cuts of high quality beef. This should provide a greatly increased market in the United States.

The trade deal also addressed the broadest possible package of mutually beneficial trade barrier reductions, an end to the misuse of technical barriers in such areas as meat inspection where every lot could have been inspected as it went across the border, and the misuse of food additives as well as the use of specific veterinary drugs will facilitate red meat export. How well the pork industry knows of the problem with chloramphenical, indeed, the long-lasting problem of chloramphenical which is not presently available to the Canadian producer. Red meat producers have every reason to be optimistic about their prospects under free trade and every reason to be optimistic about their industry's future.

The motion before us today is not new. Back in 1971, beginning with Bill C-176 it was proposed that we establish the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Originally, cattle and hogs were covered under this Act. A very spirited defence from a variety of organizations fought over a year and had the red meat sector excluded. Since that time the issue has resurfaced on many occasions and is resurfacing in the Ontario sector on a regular basis through the Federation of Agriculture. Some individuals favour supply management for red meat. However, the majority of the industry is clearly not in support of this alternative.

In 1986, at a national workshop on hog marketing alternatives, Canada's pork producers turned thumbs down on supply management. There are certainly viable alternatives, however, for the industry. These would include tripartite stabilization plans, the new commodity type mortgages under the Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Debt Review Agency about which the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor talked.

The red meat industry is not asking for supply management. Without any sort of regulated intervention in the marketplace, the red meat industry is competing with vigour and with success. There are better methods of supporting the industry, methods that I outlined briefly above, and that is the course this Government will take.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join in the balance of the debate on Motion No. 99 presented by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) calling for the establishment of an improved national marketing strategy for all major farm-produced commodities and for the negotiation with the provinces of a national food policy with over-all production targets and market sharing.

I think some Hon. Members who have spoken, particularly those on the government side, seem to have taken this motion somewhat out of context. They immediately say that this is an attempt to set up supply-managed marketing for all commodities across Canada. That is not necessarily so. It is an attempt to discuss with the provinces a long-term national marketing strategy.

This motion is timely because of the circumstances in which we live. We have seen develop over the last four or five years an income crisis in agriculture as farm returns do not meet the cost of production. This has in turn augmented a debt crisis so $22 billion to $23 billion-worth of debt is now being carried by Canada's farmers, a debt load which they cannot afford to carry, given the current value of land and the market outlook.

We have watched as land and agricultural assets have deteriorated in value. There has been deflation in the agricultural sector for the last five years, yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is still attempting to fight inflation. In rural areas across Canada, land values are between 40 per cent and 50 per cent lower than they were four or five years ago. Yet the Minister persists in trying to fight what he calls inflation. To do that, he has kept the interest rate higher than it needs to be. It is 1.25 per cent higher this year than it was a year ago. This has meant high fixed rates for Farm Credit Corporation loans. These rates are so high that the very small amount of money the Government made available for the FCC to lend was not even taken up by farmers. They went elsewhere to get loans at much cheaper rates.

Because the Government persists in holding the interest rate higher than it needs to be in order to fight inflation in the Toronto area, the Canadian dollar has risen to the 79-cent level from about 71 cents or 72 cents in the past year. This means that for farmers who export, the price of their commodities has effectively fallen 10 to 12 per cent and the cost of borrowing money has risen 1 per cent to 1.25 per cent.

A bit over a year ago, the agriculture committee took it upon itself to investigate ways of reducing costs at the farm gate and attempted to look at the price of inputs and what could be done by Government and farmers to reduce those input costs. We found that there was not very much that could be done in terms of real savings, which would have meant more money in farmers' pockets. Very little could be achieved. There has been virtual free trade in farm chemicals and most farm inputs including farm machinery. The trade deal would not solve that problem and has not solved that problem. It may have exacerbated some other problems on the market side, but I will deal with that later.

The only hope farmers have of having a bottom line that leaves money in their pockets is in doing something about the marketing end. In a number of commodities, farmers have turned their attention to that in the past, and I will review very quickly, because I see that time is short, the three methods farmers have utilized to improve their bargaining power in the market over the past 50 or 60 years.

During the First World War, the Canadian Wheat Board was first established as a single-desk seller of all western Canadian wheat. The farmers hated it. There was a great political furore when the Government set up that Wheat Board. In fact, the political impetus for setting it up, going back in history, was that the grain traders on the grain exchange had got themselves into a box they could not get out of, so the Government intervened, froze all the assets and began marketing the grain itself. The grain traders had sold four, five and six times as much grain as actually existed and there was no way that contracts could be met.

After a year's experience with the board, farmers began to see the advantage of single-desk selling. They got a higher price for that crop of grain than they had ever received before. They got an even price, regardless of when they were able to deliver. They all got the same price, and they decided that they liked that. There is no way now that farmers would give up that single-desk selling agency, the Canadian Wheat Board, which markets export grain at the moment and has been undermined a bit over the years.

Another type of single-desk agency is provincial hog marketing boards, one of which I was active in setting up in the Province of Saskatchewan. They function like little wheat boards with less bargaining power because they restrict themselves to their own bailiwick. If they were able to get together across the nation and market through one desk nationally, they would be able to extract another one cent, two cents or three cents per pound for hogs from the various processing firms. That is an option that is held back from them by the current legislation which does not permit any commodity to put together that kind of a national program except those that are named in the legislation including dairy products, poultry, eggs, now tobacco and soon, I hope, potatoes.

The third type of system is the type everyone hates, everyone on the government side at least, and that is the supply managed marketing boards, which work very well and are the epitome of efficiency in commodities that are very necessary for the maintenance of good food and nutrition. They have done a good job of providing consumers with exactly the amount needed without producing waste which only adds to the cost and is an unnecessary expense to the system. I regret to see that my time is up, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions, Nos. 332-3739 to 332-3743 inclusive, and 332-3817 to 332-3819 inclusive.

I might indicate to the House that three of those were certified on November 2 but not presented to the House until February 3. The Government has responded to them as quickly as possible, but it would be helpful if Members would present petitions soon after certification.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That statement is uncalled for, unnecessary and absolutely cheap. We table petitions whenever we have a chance. Sometimes they are post dated, if you like, but sometimes we also have difficulty organizing our time.

Members have committees to attend and other things to do. There is no rule that states the petition must be presented the day or day after its certification by the Clerk at the Table.

The Hon. Member knows that we can get difficult as well. If the Member wants to get very difficult, if he wants to play that kind of a game, we will start playing that game, too. I am giving him fair notice right now.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the Hon. Member has raised this issue. I know that we in the New Democratic Party have received literally thousands of petitions on the trade deal. The importance is that this issue is still before the House and the trade deal will not take effect until next year. Petitions that oppose the trade deal with the United States have been coming in month after month. Until the deal is actually in place, and while there is a shred of hope that the Government will see the wisdom of backing off from this sell-out to the United States, we feel an obligation on behalf of our constituents who have submitted these petitions to raise them, even on a daily basis.

For the Hon. Member to suggest that there has been any impropriety is wrong and, quite frankly, it is not the way to encourage co-operation in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, under our reform rules the Government has an obligation, for the first time in parliamentary history, to respond to petitions. The Government has had urging from the other side of the House on many occasions to be more prompt in its responses, and I have been working on the Order Paper questions to see that we have quicker responses.

I am anxious to get responses to petitions before the House as quickly as possible because people sign petitions expecting that Parliament, particularly the Government, will listen to their petitions. It puts the Government in a very difficult position when people petition the Government of Canada and believe we should respond, but we do not have the chance to respond until the petition is tabled.

I would point out to Hon. Members that there are two methods to present petitions, first, to rise in the House and present the petition. I can understand that occasionally there are difficulties with committee travel and, therefore, some reason for delay. There is another method of simply presenting petitions to the table, which staff can do on behalf of Members. That is a faster way to bring the petitions to the attention of the Government.

I just indicate to the House that I will do my best to see that petitions are responded to quickly, adequately and thoroughly. However, I need the co-operation of the whole House in presenting them as quickly as possible.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House and Canadians should be reminded about how the process works. First, Members of Parliament receive petitions in their constituency offices, by mail or by a variety of ways. There is a new certification process but there is nothing that says that that certification process must be gone through within a certain number of days after a Member of Parliament receives a petition.

Further, Mr. Speaker, you will know that once the petition is certified, if all Members rose in the House every day we received a certified petition, this whole House would be bogged down doing nothing else but presenting petitions. Indeed, it is sometimes appropriate to accumulate a number of petitions in the spirit of the co-operation that Members of Parliament are trying to display in not stalling this House unduly for ridiculous reasons, such as the reasons presented to us by the Parliamentary Secretary.

If I was to present every petition, one by one, as I received them, and if all of us did that, we would never get to Orders of the Day and the Government would then accuse us of delaying the House. That is totally ridiculous. The Parliamentary Secretary should not have even brought the topic up this morning. Now that he has, I am sure he regrets it, and he should apologize.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reiterate the point the Parliamentary Secretary was making. That is that in the dating it is necessary to advise people, and he was merely pointing out that there are lapses in the timing. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) says that he has never accumulated things and is always very expeditious. I have sat in this House and observed him on occasions taking quite a length of time in presenting petitions.

Mr. Boudria: When? Name one day.

Mr. Belsher: I can look back on the record and I am sure we could find it.

Mr. Boudria: I think you should. Good luck!

Mr. Belsher: There is no justification for Hon. Members of either opposition Party to impugn the integrity of the Parliamentary Secretary when he is stating the facts. Therefore, I would hope that this issue would die now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has raised a matter which perhaps more properly ought to have been raised on a point of order, not as a part of his tabling of documents. I say this because I am very conscious of the fact that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) does pay attention to these rules and would, I think, agree with me, and I hope other Hon. Members would accept that.

The issue is literally that the Government has said, please, those Members presenting petitions, try to get them in as soon after they have been sworn and certified as is possible. There is some merit in the position taken by the Government because people, having signed a petition, now that the rules require that the Government respond to it within so many days, would understandably wonder why there had been a long delay. However, I am certainly not at the moment going to make any kind of ruling on this, except to caution the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that I think, strictly speaking, those comments at the time they are presented are more properly matters that should be brought up on a particular point of order. I think it would not be appropriate to continue making those remarks.

The Government, of course, has another option, and that is, when sending its responses to those who have made out a petition, it can factually set out when it received the petition and when it replied.

The other side of the coin is that I think it is probably appropriate, and I think the public watching this would think it is probably appropriate—of course, the public realizes there are many hundreds of petitions and Members are not always able to put those petitions in immediately—that there may be very good reason why, in order to have perhaps a more effective impact, Members, using their own good judgment would support the very aim of the petitioners by holding some petitions and bringing them forward collectively. These are all matters of common sense and reason.

I think fundamental to it all is that all Hon. Members ought to try to co-operate as closely as possible with the rules so that the public is confident that the petitions they bring to the House of Commons are answered as quickly as possible. Unless there is further difficulty, I do not think there is any need for further comment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have petitions that I intended to table this morning. I just wonder if the Government in this good spirit, since it was suggested by the Speaker, perhaps would like to write to every one of those people who signed this petition and give them its answer. If that is what the Government is talking about, then I would agree it would need time to get the names and addresses of the 25 people per petition. If the Parliamentary Secretary is talking about that, that is a different point. However, up until now these petitions have been tabled, a response has been prepared by the Government—

Mr. Speaker: I have a very high regard for the procedural comments made by the Hon. Member to assist the Chair. However, I think, under the circumstances, all Members could reflect on the comments of each other and on the comments of the Chair and I hope we will not have any more difficulty with the matter.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE CANADIAN BRANCH OF THE COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Hon. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association attending the seminar on Parliamentary Practice in St. Lucia on February 13 to February 21, 1988.

[Editors note: See today's Votes and Proceedings]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in both official languages. The report is in connection with Bill C-109, the Borrowing Authority Act, which is reported without amendment.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURES—EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the eighth report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures on the Canada Elections Act, in both official languages.

This has been accomplished with respect to the ruling of January 28, 1988 of the Speaker on a point of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops Shuswap (Mr. Riis), in which you did state that it was in order for this Standing Committee to study and report on matters relating to the process and procedure followed by the Chief Electoral Officer and his officials.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House four of the most significant conclusions arrived at by the committee. Recommendation No. 26 states:

> The officials of Elections Canada stated that they had no direct evidence that Mr. Masse counselled Lavalin Inc. to breach the Act. They stated that the evidence they would have used to support a charge was circumstantial and that, in their opinion, a charge based on that evidence would not likely have succeeded.

Recommendation No. 27 states:

> The opinion of the Commissioner of Canada Elections continues to be that charges should not be laid against Mr. Masse.

Recommendation No. 30 states in part:

> Your Committee recommends that the Act be amended as quickly as possible in those sections dealing with expenses so that it precisely defines those election expenses which should be the subject of spending controls and rebates.

Recommendation No. 34 states in part:

> Your Committee recommends that the Statutory Report of the Chief Electoral Officer which follows a general election contain a more detailed section relating to specific problems with the Act encountered during the election. Your Committee will report with its view on the problems thus identified at the earliest possible date.

As Chairman I would like to thank all members of the committee who participated in this matter, as well as the staff members.

Petitions

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 it is my pleasure to present a petition which was collected back in October and November but which is as valid today as it was then. I know that these constituents who signed the petition would want me to keep raising the matter to try to bring the Government to its senses.

They make the point that the Conservative Government lacked a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade agreement because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was on record as opposing a trade deal with the United States. All major Cabinet Ministers were also on record as opposing the deal. They betrayed their word and did exactly the opposite. These people are very concerned about this apparent betrayal.

They point out that this deal certainly threatens the very fabric of our political and economic life in Canada because it gives away complete control to the Americans in terms of controlling and owning our economy. It gives Americans total access to our energy supplies and, essentially, sells out the whole energy sector to the United States. Obviously, these people are very concerned. I know that the Parliamentary Secretary does not want us to remind the Government about the concerns of these petitioners but I feel an obligation to do so.

To summarize, these petitioners simply suggest that Parliament dissolve now, immediately, to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to go to the polls and to let the people of Canada tell the Government what they think of it.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Parliamentary Secretary's edict I am tabling at the earliest possible time eight petitions which comply with the provisions of Standing Order 106.

The petitioners state that whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return; whereas Canadian industries are still not protected by this so-called agreement from U.S. trade laws; whereas the United States obtained everything that it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment; whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, the undersigned, the petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement. Shame!

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition pursuant to the Parliamentary Secretary's edict. It is from many Canadians who are stating essentially the same thing.

They state that Canada has given away far more than it has gained. It has given away jurisdiction over energy so that energy developments in the future will be much more difficult to undertake.

Also, they state that there will be areas in the country that will be impacted negatively by this without any support at all for training for workers who are dislocated.

The undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing this trade deal.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petition is certified correct as to form and content. It was certified on January 25, 1988.

The people who have signed this petition are from all parts of Canada. They explain that they are against what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is doing. They believe he has broken his promise in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations. They believe that Canadian sovereignty will be compromised by this act.

I am sure the people who have signed this petition want it presented in the House of Commons and to have it explained as fully as possible. Since the Parliamentary Secretary believes it is important to have their words brought forward to the House of Commons as soon as possible and in as much detail as possible, I think I should read on a bit in terms of some of the information that has been given.

The petitioners believe that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They believe that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market that was the key objective in these negotiations but that it also threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

They believe that the Government did not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States.

They believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the people who have signed this petition who want it presented to Parliament humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the free trade arrangement during a national general election.

I believe from the date here that most of the people signed the petition on January 14, 1988, and that they do represent a good cross-section of the people of Canada even though they only live in one or two communities.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility to table a petition signed by residents of Hamilton, Sarnia, Dundas, Thamesville, Ottawa, Orleans, Onaping Falls, Nepean, Sudbury, South Gillies, Chatham, Dresden, Tilbury, Blenheim, which are all in Ontario, as well as Winnipeg, Manitoba and Regina, Saskatchewan.

The petitioners in signing this petition clearly point out that the Government had no mandate to enter into the sell-out euphemistically known as the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement.

Furthermore, they state that that sell-out, that deal, in fact gave up Canada's sovereignty, that Canada's sovereignty has been compromised by this deal.

The petitioners have also said in signing these petitions that this sell-out would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society that is distinct from that of the United States.

As a result of this sell-out the people are calling upon Parliament to dissolve and let the people of Canada decide, let them have the opportunity to accept or reject this proposed sell-out deal between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and Ronald Reagan of the United States.

• (1130)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Pursuant to the Parliamentary Secretary's edict, I am proceeding with due dispatch to present a petition today signed by 25 Canadians who are protesting the Canada-U.S. so-called free trade deal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). These petitioners are from the Brantford area of the fine Province of Ontario.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition duly certified. It is interesting to note that it was certified on January 26, 1988. The petitioners signed the petition on December 9, 1987. Obviously it takes some time for these things to work their way through the system.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. In the course of bilateral trade negotiations, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

The petitioners point out that the trade agreement negotiated by the Prime Minister threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty. It removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve—if we can only find the solvent—and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the split infinitive, I agree whole-heartedly with the petition.

DESIGNATION REGARDING NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting two petitions. These petitions are freshly minted, recently signed, and newly certified.

The petitioners call upon the Government to redress the inequitable situation which has been allowed to arise in the application of the northern residents tax allowance. This petition is signed by a majority of the adult residents of Nestor Falls, Ontario.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-33—INDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is also of commendable recency. It calls upon the Government to withdraw the provisions of Bill C-33 which would inequitably and unfairly deprive public servants of the indexation that they have for many years been paying for by way of their pension contributions.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 263 will be answered today.

[Text]

PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKER ADJUSTMENT

Question No. 263—Ms. Dewar:

> Are there any negotiations in progress to establish the Program for Older Worker Adjustment (POWA) and, if so (a) what stage have they reached (b) by what date is this program expected to be in place?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): In the 1986 Budget, the federal Government announced its intention to undertake negotiations with the provinces to develop the proposed Program for Older Worker Adjustment (POWA) and allocated $125 million to this new initiative.

Since the Budget announcement of POWA, the federal Government has been involved in continuous and constructive negotiations with all the provinces on the development of the proposed program.

The federal Government is continuing to have fruitful discussions with provincial Governments on how best to proceed with a program to help older workers affected by major lay-offs. Accordingly, the Government will be making an announcement with regard to the program for older workers' adjustment in the near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by—

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, No. 209, dated October 15, 1987, which asks the Government for statistics, facts and figures on the National Arts Centre catering department. I think this is a question the Government could have answered within the forty-five days required by our Standing Orders. I may remind the House that Standing Order 64(3)(b) reads as follows:

> A Member may request that the Ministry respond to a specific question within forty-five days by so indicating when filing his or her question.

That is what I did on October 15 last year. This morning, the Parliamentary Secretary looked so pleased in the knowledge that he was being efficient and was answering questions as quickly as possible. Mr. Speaker, could he at least observe the Standing Orders of the House, before snapping his suspenders, and answer questions within the prescribed forty-five days and give me a good reason why the information I asked for in question No. 209 has not been given by the Government? Are they afraid of the answer? Are they afraid of answering serious questions put to them by the Opposition? There are four more questions that date back to September, October and November, which the Parliamentary Secretary has yet to answer, although an answer within forty-five days was required. Can't he at least do the easiest, the basic part of his job which is to observe the Standing Orders and answer questions within forty-five days? He can give us a lecture on parliamentary procedure some other time!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is ready. We had considerable difficulty with this question. The problem was the question itself, because we had to get in touch with every single Government department for one question.

[English]

The difficulty is that we had information from a number of departments of Government very early on following the question. Because of the form of the question, where every department of Government had to be contacted, it has taken some time. There are different record-keeping systems in different departments. It has been more difficult for some departments than others. If Members have questions that could be dealt with in relation to one department, then I think they would find that our record is better. The more departments involved the more difficulty.

Probably this week the answer will be tabled in the House. I will have to ask for it to be an order for return because it is such a thick answer. It has taken a great deal of time and effort to come up with a response across every government department. Members might wish to do a series of questions, if they are anxious for the information. If Members narrow it down to single departments, they will receive quicker answers. But on something that is so broad and general it does take a great deal of time and effort.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, was given first reading in the House of Commons on Tuesday, June 30, 1987, that event represented a benchmark in dealing with a subject that had commanded considerable attention over the years. More particularly, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when introducing this Government's major initiative on public sector ethics in September, 1985, undertook to introduce legislation to monitor lobbying as one element of that package.

In order to ensure that the subject of lobbying was given a thorough airing, the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tabled a discussion paper entitled "Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists" in December, 1985. This paper was referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper).

In due course, that committee made its report available to the House in January, 1987, unanimously endorsing the implementation of a registration system for paid lobbyists.

During debate in the House of Commons in February all Parties again supported the concept of a registration system. I had the privilege of participating and commenting on the committee's excellent work.

The standing committee recorded many of the complexities related to the issue in its report and recommendations. The proposed legislation fully endorses the concepts outlined by the parliamentary committee. I should like to stress that it minimizes the administrative burden on lobbyists and government and provides for fair and reasonable distinctions in treating different types of lobbyists. These distinctions are based on the need to clarify whom lobbyists represent.

"Lobbying" is defined as communicating with a public office holder in an attempt to influence making or amending federal legislation and regulations; developing or changing federal policies or programs; decisions on awarding grants, contributions; and federal appointments to public office. Also included is any attempt by third party paid lobbyists to influence public office holders regarding the awarding of contracts.

The definition of "lobbying" does not include appearances before boards, tribunals, commissions or committees, nor does it include communications with public office holders regarding day-to-day government business or information on government policies and programs.

The proposed registration system is based on four principles: transparency, clarity, access and simplicity.

Preference is given to a two-tier system in order to keep administrative procedures for the majority of individuals who deal with public office holders to a minimum.

[English]

At the same time it permits public scrutiny of those who approach the federal Government and on whose behalf they do so. Where it is clear who a lobbyist represents, for instance, in an employer-employee relationship, the reporting requirements will be simpler.

A professional lobbyist will report under Tier I. A Tier I lobbyist is anyone who under contract to third parties approaches public office holders, even for the purpose of arranging meetings for clients. Tier I lobbyists will be required to provide their name, firm's name and firm's address, the names and addresses of clients, including details of parent and subsidiary companies where applicable, and, for each client, the particular issues to which the lobbying activities relate. This information will be kept in a registry by the Assistant Deputy Registrar General of Canada. Registration must be done within 10 days of the commencement of any lobbying activity. When clients and/or issues change, an update of the information will be required.

Other lobbyists will be included under Tier II. A Tier II lobbyist includes employees and officers of trade organizations, labour federations, professional associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, businesses, unions, and voluntary, charitable and interest groups which lobby for their employers as a significant part of their duties. Tier II lobbyists will also be required to register with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General.

However, the demands on them are less onerous. Since it is clear to the public office holder just who such lobbyists represent, they must register only their names and the names of the organizations employing them. The information must be updated and certified annually.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the term lobbyist does not apply to private citizens who communicate with a public office holder on their own behalf, nor does it apply to volunteers who do not receive any remuneration or personal benefit from the agency they represent when lobbying public office holders.

[English]

This two tier registration system is based on the well established distinction between the often, perhaps, or possible hidden interests of the clients of third party paid lobbyists, Tier I, and the transparent and well understood interests of corporations, industry associations, public interest groups, and other such organizations whose staff lobby on their behalf, Tier II.

Even among paid employees there are distinctions worthy of recognition. Certain individuals may, on rare occasions, represent the views of their business or association but are not primarily engaged by the employer for the purpose of lobbying. By contrast, many groups and corporations retain full-time individuals on staff who are responsible for liaison with and communicating ideas and concerns to government. While the latter should be required to register as lobbyists, the former can hardly be considered paid lobbyists.

I should conclude by saying a few words about administration. The administrative responsibility for the registry will rest with the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, reporting annually to the Registrar General.

The Assistant Deputy Registrar General will be able to provide advisory interpretations where it may be unclear if a particular activity could be construed as lobbying subject to registration. All information contained in the registry will be available for public scrutiny. There will be no charge to lobbyists to register, and there will be only a nominal cost to cover photocopying and such, for people seeking information from the system.

Once the legislation is passed, it is expected that there will be a transition period before proclamation. This should allow sufficient time for public education and awareness programs, as well as preparation and gazetting of the necessary regulations and form.

Since this is the first time such legislation will have been implemented in Canada, the Registrar General will table a report to Parliament annually so that a review of the system's effectiveness can be undertaken. Provision has been made for a parliamentary review in three years. It is expected that this period will be required to uncover fully any administrative difficulties or questions of scope.

Since Bill C-82 was tabled I have been pleased to note that the proposed system of lobbyist registration received generally favourable comment from those people who will be expected to register. In fact, so enthusiastic were some groups, they attempted to register forthwith. I think that sort of reaction augurs well for a registry of lobbyists under the Lobbyists Registration Act.

Some of those commenting on Bill C-82 have offered pertinent questions and constructive criticism which have led to the identification of certain areas of the Bill that could be clarified. I am grateful for this input and, as a result, I will be making a number of recommendations in committee with a view to improving the Bill at that stage.

The amendments I have in mind are technical changes. The substantive policy of the Lobbyists Registration Act remain intact.

I sincerely hope that Parliament will give swift but considered passage to this legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to participate on behalf of my Party in the debate on Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists.

The idea of registering lobbyists is not a novel one. It is not a new one and, of course, it is not something invented by the present Government. Indeed, the United States of America has had lobbying legislation since 1946. In the United States, Table III of the Legislative Reorganization Act, 1946 is entitled "The Registration of Lobbying Act", which of course has essentially been the legislation governing the registration of lobbyists in the U.S.A. Several states of the union also have Bills governing the registration of lobbyists. For example, the State of California has quite stringent rules. As a matter of fact, they were so stringent that we in the parliamentary committee felt that they were too onerous and too costly to operate, notwithstanding the fact that they afforded a considerable amount of transparency.

In Canada the first Bill to register lobbyists was proposed in the House in 1969 by then Member of Parliament, Mr. Barry Mather. On February 26, 1969, Mr. Mather tabled the Bill. He was a member of the New Democratic Party at that time, or was it still the CCF? I am not sure; it was before my day.

Mr. Rodriguez: The NDP.

Mr. Manly: He goes back to both.

Mr. Boudria: He goes back to both, so I am told. In any case, he tabled that Bill in February, 1969. In October, 1969, at a different session of Parliament, Mr. Mather proposed a second Bill. A third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Bill were proposed by the same Member of Parliament.

In 1974, Ken Robinson, a very distinguished Member of Parliament, proposed a Bill to register lobbyists. Later in 1974, Mr. John Reynolds, a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, proposed a similar Bill in the House.

In 1976, the late, great Hon. Walter Baker from the riding of Nepean—Carleton proposed his Bill in the House of Commons. Mr. Baker, as we all know, proposed a number of such Bills and initiated considerable debate in the House on the issue of the registration of lobbyists.

A number of others were proposed in this House in 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979 and 1980. Finally in 1985 two Bills were proposed, one by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and one by the former Member for St. John's East, the Hon. James McGrath. Those Bills were basically all the same. In one form or other they would require that paid lobbyists be registered in Canada.

Apart from those legislative initiatives from opposition Members, I think it is important to bring to the attention of the House why we got into this business of talking about registering paid lobbyists. It is not because one Member of the Opposition introduced a private Members' Bill or anything like that.

After the election of 1984, some Canadians decided that they would get into the business of lobbying the Government, which is not abnormal in itself. Lobbying is a profession and it has existed for some time. However, these new people in Ottawa, because there was a new Government, decided to approach the issue of lobbying in a rather different way than had been the case in the past. They decided that they would be higher profile and that they would somehow bend the rules a trifle or bend the practice at least, if not the rules—because, of course there were no rules—in order to get their message across and attract publicity and to be what they considered effective lobbyists. I have a series of newspaper clippings. I just want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, the headlines of some of them:

Lobbyists say Moores won't play by rules.

That article was from The Gazette for July 20, 1985. On July 22, 1985 we find:

Ex-premier still controversial and private-sector incarnation.

This particular article is about one Frank Moores. Another article is headed:

Moores says consulting business is fun.

It sounds like a lot of fun, Mr. Speaker. Here is another headline:

Regulate lobbyists Moores urges.

Now we have this particular lobbyist saying that he would be in favour of a Bill registering lobbyists in Canada.

I want to read a portion of an article by Linda Diebel of The Gazette which reads:

Frank Moores, the former Conservative premier of Newfoundland, called yesterday for government regulation of the political lobbying business.

But he denied any conflict of interest in his own Ottawa lobbying.

"This work is my means of earning a livelihood . . . it is my profession and one of which I am proud,"

Moores said in a four page statement in response to a report in Saturday's Gazette.

The Gazette said two lobbying firms owned by Moores—recently appointed a director of Air Canada—act as consultants for two of the national airline's competitors.

Officials at Montreal-based Nordair Inc. and Wardair Ltd. of Edmonton confirmed that they have consulting agreements with Moores's companies, Government Consultants International Inc. (GCI) and Alta Nova Associates Inc.

Right from the beginning, this particular lobbyist was attracting considerable attention here in Ottawa because of his unusual ways in which he went about doing his business, to say the least.

On July 23, 1985, The Gazette had an editorial which was entitled:

Questions about Mr. Moores.

It reads in part:

If Prime Minister Mulroney is to regain credibility as a foe of patronage sleaze as he portrayed himself only a year ago in his first election debate, he will have to deal swiftly and convincingly with the matter of Frank Moores.

This editorial very clearly questioned the activity of that particular lobbyist.

I have another article by Canadian Press printed in The Ottawa Citizen for July 23, 1985 entitled:

Moores denies Air Canada conflict.

On August 24, 1985, again The Gazette had an editorial entitled:

Who pays the pipers?

It reads:

Brian Mulroney's latest promise to raise standards of political morality in Ottawa are essentially those he made in his successful election campaign, but has not kept in his first year as prime minister.

Nevertheless, they are good promises and the additional pledge of a law to govern the registration and conduct of foreign and Canadian lobbyists in the Canadian capital gives reason to hope the prime minister is finally ready to translate his words into action.

Notice the date on that article, Mr. Speaker, it is August 24, 1985 and the Prime Minister was ready at that particular point to have a law governing lobbying activities. The article continues about the activities of a certain lobbyist by the name of Frank Moores.

I have another article dated March 8, 1986 which is entitled:

> Tory wary of contender tied to lobbyist Moores.

This is a Canadian Press article which reads:

> A candidate for president of the Conservative party's youth wing is a lobbyist in Ottawa associated with former Newfoundland premier Frank Moores and could have conflicting interests if elected, a senior member of the Tory youth branch says.
> Tory activist Alan Riddell said that Eric Dorion, 25, is seeking to represent the young Conservatives whose views could clash with the interests of his clients.
> The election for president will be held at a Party convention that begins Thursday in Montreal.

The article goes on to describe again the activities of this particular lobbying firm.

I could go on for several more minutes reading excerpts from various newspaper articles, columns and editorials concerning the issue of paid lobbyists and the controversy around some individuals involved in that profession. However, I want to move on to a promise which the Prime Minister made in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rose in the House of Commons to make a short statement to the effect that Parliament would have a new code of public sector ethics.

One of the components of the code tabled here in the House on September 9, 1985, was the following and I want to quote Section 5 of the new document on public sector ethics tabled in the House on September 9, 1985, which reads as follows:

> Lobbying legislation. The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date, legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists.

Listen carefully, Mr. Speaker!

> We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients. This will enable persons who are approached by unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.
> I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed that on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister said: "On an urgent basis". It was an urgent and important document, and according to the Prime Minister, the Government had to take immediate action.

I would now like to go on with the Prime Minister's statement, and I quote:

> This initiative should not be misinterpreted to mean that this Government is aware of particular improprieties in the conduct of lobbyists or that it considers lobbying to be an inappropriate activity. On the contrary, the practice of lobbying plays an important role in ensuring that governments, in taking the decisions which affect the lives of all of us, are able to take properly into account the multitude of diverse interests involved. This Government is simply saying that something so important should not be shrouded in mystery.

That was the statement the Prime Minister made on September 9, 1985.

What has happened since then? First of all, we have already established that the Government considered the registration of lobbyists to be an urgent matter. Several months later, on December 19, 1985, when Members were still waiting for the Bill on the registration of lobbyists promised by the Prime Minister, on that day, instead of a Bill, a discussion paper entitled: "Lobbying and registration of paid lobbyists" was tabled in the House.

So no Bill on December 19. Instead of a Bill, we were given a discussion paper that was several pages long, plus copies of Bills that had already been tabled in the House, other copies of legislation tabled in the United States, and a paper, in which the author wondered whether Canada really needed a Bill on lobbyists, which identified a number of alternatives, which were either to do nothing at all, ask lobbyists to register themselves, or have the Government legislate their registration. So still no Bill on December 1985.

And then, Mr. Speaker, the discussion paper was shelved for nearly five months. On April 1986, following various scandals and precarious situations to which the Conservative Government had been exposed, the Government decided to order the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure to study the registration of lobbyists.

• (1200)

The committee was charged in April of 1986 with studying the possibility of registering lobbyists, using as background the discussion paper proposed by the Government some months prior.

The committee, under the able chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) and having as its members the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish), myself and a few other members who changed around every now and then, started a series of hearings on this issue.

We then went to Washington and to Sacramento, California, to see what kind of legislation they had there. Indeed, we discovered that registering lobbyists was not impossible or pie in the sky, it was a logical thing to do for a Parliament that wanted to have some transparency when knowing who was doing what to whom and at what cost.

Many of the government members who were with us on the trip to Washington and Sacramento were not initially of the opinion that the registration of lobbyists was desirable or even feasible, but after going to Washington some government members noticed that that great bastion of free enterprise, the United States of America, indeed had a system for registering lobbyists and that this system did not require thousands or even hundreds of civil servants to administer it. The United States Congress deals with some 8,000 lobbyists and the total staff assigned to registering lobbyists and access to that register is composed of some eight people. It is not beyond the reach of this House of Commons to install a system to register lobbyists in Canada.

How many lobbyists are there in Canada? It is difficult to say, because at this time they are not registered. All things being equal, given that there are some 8,000 registered lobbyists in the United States and given that Canada's population is one-tenth of that of the United States, I think it would be fair to say that there are probably 1,000 or so lobbyists in Canada.

The committee did its work, but unfortunately could not complete its agenda before the summer recess of 1986. Hon. Members will recall that in early September of 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to wipe the slate clean and start afresh so he prorogued Parliament and started off with a new Session. The result of that, of course, was that all our committee work theoretically vanished into thin air because the House had been prorogued. However, the Government did reactivate the committee by a motion of the House on November 19, 1986, and the committee got back to work to finish what it had started.

I must say that at the stage the committee was at in November of 1986, there were still a number of differing views held by members of the committee, but everyone compromised a little and we were able to present a report to the House of Commons on January 27, 1987, not simply a majority report or a report proposed by government members but, indeed, a unanimous report recommending the registering of lobbyists in Canada. I have a copy of that report here and I would like to share very briefly some of its contents with Hon. Members.

First, our committee recommended that we adopt a system of registering paid lobbyists in Canada. We recommended further that lobbying be defined and that such definition should be stated as attempting to influence directly or indirectly governmental decisions, whether they be legislative or administrative.

We recommended that the act of lobbying Government be defined to include attempts to influence the making or amending of legislation or regulations, attempting to influence the making or changing of federal policies or programs, attempting to influence federal decisions on the awarding of grants, contracts, contributions or any other similar benefits and attempting to influence federal appointments to boards, commissions and any other public office.

We further recommended that in order to escape the problems which have plagued the United States federal lobbying Act, approaches to influence the executive Members of Parliament including both Members of the House of Commons and of the Senate and their staffs and the bureaucracy be considered to be activities within the definition of lobbying. The United States legislation is quite old. It was to have been amended at one particular point in the early 1980s, but I believe the Bill died at the conference stage. Unfortunately, that legislation is deficient because in the United States one is not a lobbyist unless one approaches a Member of Congress. The difficulty with that is that Members of Congress are probably very busy, as are Members of Parliament, and sometimes a lobbyist will meet with an executive assistant, a chief of staff or the number two person in the Congressman's office. That, of course, under American law as I understand it, is not considered to be lobbying.

We do not want that kind of deficiency in our legislation. The committee felt that if we are to register lobbyists, the registration should be done in such a way as to include everyone who lobbies the Government for a fee.

Our committee felt we should register only paid lobbyists. If you asked everyone else who lobbies to register, a case could be made that you were impinging upon the democratic rights of Canadians who wish to communicate with their Member of Parliament or Senator. After all, every Canadian lobbies in one way or other when they contact their Member of Parliament to express their view on an issue and to ask that Member to vote one way or other on any given Bill.

Our committee did not want to stop people communicating with their Members of Parliament or Senator from their provinces. Therefore, we felt restricting it to paid lobbyists was a fair compromise. We knew there would probably be some individual who would want to register but could not if they are not paid. However, it was a good a saw-off point at which to determine who was and who was not a lobbyist.

We have been talking briefly about the report presented to Parliament by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure of January 20, 1987. Time again flew by and it was only on June 30, 1987 that the Government presented Bill C-82 in this House. On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister said in this House that he would ask his Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to present the Bill forthwith. One can hardly describe June 30, 1987, as being forthwith. You would think that a Bill which enjoys the support of all Parties would have been proceeded with immediately at second reading stage. Not so. It took eight and a half months before the debate started. This is now March 8, 1988, and we are discussing a Bill promised on an urgent basis on September 9, 1985.

We have talked about the history of the Bill. Perhaps we should briefly discuss what it contains. Again, I want all Members of Parliament to understand that in my opinion this Bill does merit our support.

First, it would register lobbyists in such a way that we will have two tiers of lobbying activity. The Tier I lobbyist that the Minister referred to will be a lobbyist on contract to a client; in other words, a consultant type of person such as Mr. Moores. I use his name because I have discussed him earlier, but there are of course many others who do the same kind of work.

This would also include a member of any profession when engaged in lobbying for pay. In other words, if a lawyer decides he wants to do some lobbying, he would have to register. If an engineer says, "I am not really a lobbyist, I am an engineer who does lobbying", that is not good enough. If he is an engineer, lawyer or doctor who does lobbying, he is a lobbyist as far as the Minister's Bill is concerned and I agree with that.

The registry for those people will have information in some detail. However, some detail will be missing. In my opinion, if we required that fees paid to lobbyists be registered as well as their expenses, the Bill would be better. However, perhaps three years from now, when we have a review of the legislation and we see that registering a lobbyist is not that onerous, we could then add that second component. I wish we would do it right now, but in keeping with the unanimous support of this legislation I am prepared to go along with a scheme that will not require registration of fees initially. Reluctantly, I might add, but nevertheless I will go along.

There will also be Tier II lobbyists. They are people who are sometimes the vice-president of communications working for a large corporate entity. In other words, in-house lobbyists. Unions have such people, as do trade organizations, business organizations, voluntary groups and others. They are in-house people who do nothing else but liaise with Government. Perhaps I should reword that and say they work at liaising with Government for a considerable portion of their time. The registry in that case will have very limited information and will not have the same requirements as those for Tier I lobbyists.

The Bill asks that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General be charged with administration of this Act. That is consistent with our committee's recommendation. However, since then we have seen a new initiative proposed by the Prime Minister with respect to conflict of interest. He is suggesting that an officer of this House be appointed as the ethics commissioner or something like that. In my view, the registration of lobbyists should be given to that commissioner, an officer of Parliament, as opposed to a civil servant.

The reason our committee did not recommend that is twofold. First, we did not have the ethics commissioner at the time. Second, we did not want to create a new position in order to register lobbyists. If we are now going to create that new position anyway, then in my opinion we should give the ethics commissioner other things to do besides registering conflict of interest regulations. We should ask that that officer be appointed by Parliament to look after the registration of lobbyists as well.

As I said previously, the Bill has a few weaknesses. It will not deal with fees. In other words, we will not know whether a consultant is, well, shall I say, buying a parliamentarian or a civil servant an expensive dinner at some real fancy place. Perhaps there is nothing wrong with that, but the public has a right to know who is doing what for whom and how much is being spent doing it.

The Bill also does not prohibit contingency fees. In my opinion that is a major weakness. Right now a lobbyist could go to an individual and say, "Mr. fisherman, if you want to get your fishing licence I will charge you $1,000 for my fee. However, if I am successful, you owe me another $10,000". A lobbyist could do that right now because there are no rules, but even under this Bill contingency fees could be charged. I do not think that is appropriate. In most provincial jurisdictions in Canada contingency fees by lawyers are not permitted. I do not think they should be permitted by lobbyists either.

The Bill does not require that there be a record of official contacts, so that we do not know who was being lobbied. For instance, when a budgetary document of the Government reveals that certain tax concessions have been given to a certain group, no one can go back to the registry to determine who was lobbied in order to effect that particular change. That is a weakness in the Bill.

Another weakness is that the Bill contains no provision to stop someone from registering after having been fined or jailed for making a false statement. Parliament would have no recourse to stop someone who has deliberately flaunted the law proposed by Parliament from registering in the future. The Bill should contain a provision which states that anyone who has committed a certain contravention of the legislation may not register for a certain period of time. It would be similar to disbarring someone who has proven he or she cannot live by the rules.

Some lobbyists stated publicly after the Bill was presented that they do not intend to register. In my opinion, simply allowing such people to register once they decide to do so does not provide enough incentive for people to observe the rules.

The Bill does not include the registration of mass mailings and publicity campaigns. While our committee considered this question and believed such registration would be advisable, it is rather difficult to identify how one would go about doing that. Needless to say, we feel there is a shortcoming in the Bill in this area but we are not sure how to address it.

There are no provisions in the Bill to create an agency to police the legislation in question. It seems little can be done to ensure compliance with the registration of lobbyists legislation. Presumably a person could be fined on summary conviction, but there is no means of policing in the legislation.

These deficiencies are not enough to prevent me from supporting this Bill. I do not want to unduly delay its passage at second reading, but a number of important points had to be made. I am sure that a Bill such as this, which so directly affects the parliamentary privileges of Members, will require further debate. However, I ask my colleagues on all sides of the House to support this Bill and allow it to go to a parliamentary committee.

I have stated previously that the Bill should be dealt with by a standing committee of the House as opposed to a legislative committee. The Government now agrees with that opinion as well, but the difficulty is that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which dealt with this Bill in the past has changed its membership considerably. Since the Members who have expertise in the Bill are no longer members of that committee, I would ask that the Government consider striking a legislative committee.

Perhaps I am speaking out of turn on this particular topic, but I hope the Government asks the Hon. Member for Peace River to be chairman of that committee because he did a very good job as chairman of the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

The Member for Peace River is very knowledgeable in the area of registration of lobbyists. He is also very adept at obtaining a consensus when probably no one else could. I did not believe he could get us on the same side of the issue but somehow managed to do so. I give him credit for that and hope the Government will consider my suggestion.

I hope to have the opportunity to participate on that committee, as well as the Member for Nickel Belt, because I believe that we put forward good suggestions to the House. The fact that the Government adopted a large number of the unanimous recommendations that we proposed in our report is proof that we had some valuable recommendations.

I am pleased that the Minister is finally proceeding with the Bill even though it is much too late. This was a promise the Prime Minister made in the summer of 1985 and reiterated on the floor of the House on September 9, 1985. Nevertheless, it is better late than never and I will be glad when the law is finally in place.

I will be anxiously waiting to see whether or not lobbyists will adhere to these new rules, as I hope and trust the majority of them will. Parliament will be a better place when there is legislation governing lobbyists and we know what kind of lobbying activity is taking place.

Lobbying is an honourable profession. However, transparency is required and should be achieved in some measure with this Bill. Hopefully, three years after its passage transparency will be augmented. In the meantime, let us support this legislation.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we have certainly waited a long time for Bill C-82, which is better known in consulting circles as the Frank Moores bill. In fact, our Party, those on this side of the House, have no problem with the principle of Bill C-82, which is that lobbyists—those who are engaged for pay in persuading, influencing, making representations to elected politicians, the bureaucracy and their staffs—be registered. We support the principle of the Bill.

In fact, others have promoted that principle, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on August 12, 1984 when campaigning in Kingston, Ontario. He spoke on the question of open Government, saying, "If the Canadian people see fit to give us their trust, we will always give them ours. That means an end to the obsession with secrecy". In another part of the same speech, the man who is now Prime Minister said, "The present Government believes you have only limited rights to know. Conservatives believe you have every right to know". That was pre-September 4, 1984.

The Prime Minister came to power and we do not know what happened to the whole business of the right to know. Somehow it went into recession. It receded into the darkest parts of the Prime Minister's mind. It was completely forgotten, only to be dredged up like some Loch Ness monster from the bottom of the lake, by one Gerry Doucet, Gary Ouellet and Frank Moores, who established themselves as GCI, Government Consultants International. All of this came to light and focused the Prime Minister's mind on what he had said about openness in those pre-September 4 days in Kingston.

It is not a question that Government Ministers do not understand what is involved. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) said that lobbying threatens Parties and that the danger inherent in lobbying is that it gives disproportionate weight to the opinions of the rich and powerful. "How do you explain that in the United States barely half the electorate exercises its right to vote?", the Minister asked.

The Prime Minister before he was elected recognized that the Government should be open and transparent, that it must not only be open and transparent, it must be seen to be open and transparent. But all of this knowledge receded to the back of his mind.

On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister sent an open letter to Members of Parliament and Senators. He began by saying that it is a great principle of public administration, I could even say an imperative, that to function effectively, the Government and the Public Service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the Government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct.

No one in this House would have refuted or argued with that. He outlined five steps in achieving that goal. Number 5 is entitled "Lobbying Legislation", about which the Prime Minister in his letter to his colleagues said the fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of the Government to introduce into the House of Commons at an early date legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists. He said that we will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients.

This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.

No one would quarrel with that. That was on September 9, 1985. We all know that a lot of water has passed under the bridge since then. We had "Frankie baby", the Tory Member of Parliament, the former Premier of Newfoundland, joining GCI and for $2,000 got Mr. U. Snarby his appointment with the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans so he could get a fishing licence.

We had the spectacle of Mr. Frank Moores sitting on the Board of Directors of Air Canada, appointed by the Prime Minister, and he is lobbying for other airline companies, Wardair and Nordair. He is also representing foreign airline companies, foreign manufacturers of airlines, with Air Canada for Air Canada's purchase of their equipment. That is what was happening.

We now have the spectacle of Mr. Bill Neville who has now formed his own consultant "lobbyist" business. These are the euphemisms we have to learn around here. Any time we see a card which says "GCI Consultants or Susan Murray Consultants", bells start to ring—read "lobbyist" for "consultants". We all know that Billy the kid Neville was close to the Prime Minister and we hear of the role he is playing with respect to Bill C-51 with the tobacco companies.

We know that the Tories have no lock on to this business of an easy movement from Government benches to the lobbyists' benches. The Tories have no monopoly on that. We all know the Liberals did it for years. There were the Sky Shop scandals, with lobbying in the other place for the Sky Shop monopolies at airports. Recently the former Member for Nickel Belt moved very cosily across to the Pharmaceutical Association, representing the multinational pharmaceutical companies for $100,000 a year. She is representing their interests, lobbying with former colleagues and with Ministers. Of course, she took that contract away from GCI, because the pharmaceutical companies had previously hired GCI to do the lobbying on Bill C-22.

We have the spectacle of the former Minister of Defence, the former Member for Nipissing, who is now a lobbyist for the French firm which is trying to sell nuclear submarines to the Tory Government. We have seen the spectacle of Francis Fox, the former Member of the Liberal Cabinet, becoming part of the Frank Moores gang. This is what goes on.

The people of Canada have a right to know who is doing what to whom, when, and for how much. They have a right to know that. If it is happening to them, they ought to at least know who is doing it. It ought to be open and above board.

Certainly a democratic system has more legitimacy when it is open and transparent to the public and when it gives equal access to Canadians. That is really what motivates the desire to register lobbyists.

We have other pieces of legislation which provide the public with information. For example, we have the access to information legislation which is a desire to provide Canadians with information about Government. There is also the Election Expenses Act, under which legislation we may be provided with information respecting who contributes how much to each of the political Parties. The legislation before us is the completion of that system of open and transparent Government.

Abraham Ribicoff, a former Senator of the United States, said the following with respect to registering lobbyists and the role and function which they play. I do not think anyone in the House could say it better than he said it. I want to put his words on the record because they are as true now as they were then. He said:

> To protect the democratic process itself and assure public confidence in it, the lobbyist must work in the open. His work must not be cloaked in secrecy. Secrecy inevitably spreads public suspicion. Secrecy helps disguise the voice of a single special interest as the voice of the general public. The stream of letters or mailgrams we all receive may be a spontaneous reflection of the public view, or it may only represent a secretly generated campaign by just one special interest. Congress and the public have a right to know which it is.

I would say that Parliament and Canadians also have a right to know which it is.

We have no difficulties with the principles behind this Bill, none whatsoever. We support the principles behind Bill C-82. We know that scandals and lobbying are not unknown in Canadian history. We are all well aware of that. In this respect we can go back to the Pacific scandal. We can go right back to John A. Macdonald. We can go back through all of the First World War and all the scandals that had to do with the rich and the powerful getting their way. We know that oftentimes the Income Tax Act is drafted in the way in which it is because of lobbying activities by the rich and the powerful.

However, in 1988 we can no longer treat this reality by turning a blind eye to it, as we did in previous years. The time has come to register lobbyists. It is time for lobbyists to come out of the lake. It is time for them to surface. They need air and they must surface. This Bill will go some way to achieving that end.

What does this Bill provide? It provides for the registering of lobbyists basically in two tiers or two levels. This was not the recommendation of the standing committee. The standing committee recommended that all paid lobbyists be registered. We did not simplify lobbyists into two tiers. The Bill before us does that. Lobbyists in the first tier will be those who, like the Frank Moores operation, represent clients directly.

What will lobbyists in the first tier have to divulge? They will have to divulge their name and address, the name and address of the company for which they are doing work, and the particular issue on which they are lobbying. They will not be required to divulge how much they are spending on the lobbying operation. That is the first shortcoming of the Bill.

I say to the Minister that that is an important piece of information that Canadians must know. It indicates the seriousness of this issue to the people involved. If considerable amounts of money are being spent by lobbyists with respect to Bill C-22, then it is a signal to the public of Canada that it is an important issue. The bells should go off in our heads. That is important.

Until Bill C-22 was tabled we did not know all the shenanigans that were going on behind the scenes. Nobody was talking. Even Frank Moores was close-mouthed on this one. They were all close-mouthed in spite of the fact that Gary Ouellet is a first-class magician. He has written 14 books. Did you know that, Mr. Speaker? He has written 14 books on magic. That guy is a lobbyist. This lobbyist has a coat with 14 pockets. It is not multi-coloured but it does have 14 pockets. One can imagine the tricks that one can play with such a coat, especially when one is visiting Parliament Hill. It ought to be required of all lobbyists that they be some sort of amateur magicians. This guy is an expert on the matter. I will come to him later because he is quite interesting.

Do you think that I am joking about the aggressiveness and the extent to which these lobbyists will go, Mr. Speaker? Last May the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was invited down to Nova Scotia to receive an honorary doctorate degree. This example illustrates the resourcefulness of a good lobbyist. What did Gary Ouellet do? The minute he recognized that the Minister was going down he phoned up a couple who lived down there and asked them if he could use their big house. This couple did not know the Deputy Prime Minister. This guy Ouellet laid on the lobster. He laid on the champagne. He had painters' caps with the words "Doctor Maz" printed on them. He brought in special buddies of the Deputy Prime Minister. The guy who owns the house served the champagne. They ate the lobster. Word has it that the Tories in the local ridings were very upset because they were not invited to the party. The lobbying firm which threw the party is the same firm that represents transport companies and other companies which do business with the Government.

Mr. Andre: There is evil everywhere!

Mr. Rodriguez: We all know about the lobbying that went on around Bill C-22. I want to tell the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that it was a neat little trick he turned when he got all the lobbyists to pressure the Government and to use their influence with it.

If we look at the lobbyists who are floating around such as Bill Neville, Gerry Doucet, and Gary Ouellet, one will see that they are all involved with consulting firms known as lobbyists. They all have their inner connections to Cabinet. They have brothers working in the Prime Minister's office. They themselves may have worked there. Some of them helped the Prime Minister become Prime Minister.

What do you expect Canadians to think, Mr. Speaker, when they see a wheel within a wheel? There is a dark empire, and not registering lobbyists and getting full disclosure encourages and reinforces in the minds of many Canadians, and I tell the Minister this, that something is rotten in the state of Denmark. Every time a contract is let the question would be there at the back of the mind. The only way that can be dealt with, Mr. Minister, is by full disclosure. The system has to be transparent.

Mr. Andre: Every contract is fully disclosed, as the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Rodriguez: We want to know who are the lobbyists approaching civil servants and governments. That is the important part of this legislation. It is extremely important that we should have the information of how much is spent on the lobbying activity for that particular issue that they are lobbying on.

The other thing that we do not like about this Bill is that it sets up a Tier II. That Tier II is for those who are in the employ of a company. For example, INCO has one of its vice-presidents designated as the government relations officer. In other words, he is a consultant. He is a lobbyist on staff. He comes up to the Hill or goes to the bureaucrats to make representations. All he has to declare is his name, address, the name of his company, and its address. He does not have to identify the specific issue.

The same thing applies to associations. The Pharmaceutical Association, for which the former Member for Nickel Belt is now the lobbyist, does not have to declare the particular issue on which it is lobbying. Again, they do not have to disclose the specific issue and the amount of money being spent on that particular issue on which they are lobbying.

The other problem that I have with the Bill, and I speak directly to the Minister, is that it does not register indirect lobbying. In our offices, many of us receive considerable numbers of letters. Most of those letters are worded exactly the same. Who has organized that lobby? Who is spending a considerable amount of bucks in that particular effort? The public wants to know, and we want to know who is behind it. The United States recognized the danger to its open and democratic system, and so it has required registering of indirect lobbying such as I have described.

The other problem with the Bill, which is the one that Frankie baby and the boys at GCI are all on to, and one of the big differences, apart from Gerry Doucet, between GCI and the other consultants, is contingency fees. In other words they have introduced into the waters a white shark. For a fishing licence, 2,000 bucks; access to this Minister, 3,000 bucks; I do this for you, then you pay me. There is a contingency fee now rather than a contract fee. Now the sharks have to be more aggressive. The danger here is that anything goes. To get the fee one has to deliver the contingent. If access to the Minister is not delivered, one does not get paid. Hence one does all sorts of things, like kiss the Minister's toes, his ankles, his knees, and I will stop right there, Mr. Speaker. That is when out comes the lobster, the wine, the champagne, and the painter hats with "Dr. Maz". It leads to and breeds that type of response. They become more aggressive because there is no prohibition against contingency fees in the Bill, none. I see that as a detriment to the Bill, and I would want to correct it.

The other thing that is not in the Bill, and which the standing committee recommended, was that the ADRG—the Assistant Deputy Registrar General—ought to be given some powers to verify information. With respect to verification, this Bill is a toothless rabbit. It has no ability to verify. It has no ability to check out information which has been put on the registry. It has no ability to investigate whether the information that is on the registry is in fact accurate.

It seems to me that this failing in the Bill is detrimental to the Bill. Someone can blow the whistle all he or she wants. Can you see it now, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) can blow the whistle, go to the ARDG and say, "I know so and so is not registered and he is lobbying". The ARDG says, "So". I know that the Member would insist that something be done, as any Member would, but the ARDG says, "I have no power to do that. I can't do that". So who, in effect, brings action against the offenders of the Act? Who will do that? Who does that? That is a glaring shortcoming in the Bill. I have some difficulties with that, and I think it should be there.

I do not believe that there should be two tiers in the Bill. As the standing committee recommended, I think that there should be one tier. Everyone who for a fee tries to influence, or makes representation to, should register as a lobbyist. In fact, if I may be so bold as to define lobbyists as stated in my Private Member's Bill which was introduced in the House on February 19, 1987, it is:

> "lobbyist" means any person who, for payment, attempts to influence, directly or indirectly,
> (a) the introduction, passage, defeat or amendment of any legislation before either House of Parliament, or
> (b) a decision to be taken on any matter coming within the administrative jurisdiction of a Minister of the Crown, whether or not that matter has come or is likely to come before either House of Parliament for legislative action;

It seems to me that that is the definition of a lobbyist. One cannot dilute that definition by setting up Tier I and Tier II. In fact, it is very important that in respect of any lobbyist who comes to the Hill and approaches a Member of Parliament, or a member of the bureaucracy, or a staff member, the public has a right to know what is the issue that that person is after.

For example, in the case of INCO, people in the Sudbury basin were interested to know exactly why the vice-president responsible for government relations was approaching their Member of Parliament. What was the issue that the vice-president was trying to lobby the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) about? Was it to get a break in the levels of SO2 emissions coming out of the stack? Was it from Falconbridge to get a permit to continue shipping out raw nickel to Norway for refining?

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes remaining in his speech after Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

RULING AGAINST REGULATION PROHIBITING UNPROCESSED FISH EXPORTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared that a free trade deal with the United States would create hundreds of thousands of new jobs. When Canadians refused to buy that line, the Prime Minister stated that a free trade deal would protect existing jobs from increasing trade protectionism in the United States.

This is simply not true. Ask the thousands of workers in the British Columbia fishing industry whose jobs are at risk because of the desperate efforts of the federal Government to get a trade deal with the Americans.

Last November the Americans won a decision before the GATT panel against B.C. regulations which prohibit the export of unprocessed fish. Since then the federal Government has done nothing to protect the thousands of jobs that would be lost if the ruling is approved by the full GATT Council. This would have a devastating impact on coastal communities which depend on the fishery.

Last Friday plant workers held work stoppages to protest the federal Government's bungling. This week a delegation of workers is here in Ottawa to express their concerns firsthand.

On behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal Party, I urge the Conservative Cabinet to get its act together and protect those jobs. Anything less is absolutely unacceptable.

CELEBRATION '88

DEMONSTRATION OF THE OLYMPIC SPIRIT

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the federal Government's Celebration '88 program, all Canadians had a chance to participate in the festivities which were part of the Calgary Olympics.

By virtue of the very hard work of hundreds of volunteers on Celebration '88 award selection committees all across Victoria—Haliburton, 15 communities submitted nominations for awards. It was my distinct pleasure to present medals and certificates at 18 different ceremonies to the most deserving citizens who demonstrated the Olympic spirit in their daily lives.

Even at the Olympic Games in Calgary, I did not see any function at which the pride in our nationhood shone through more brightly than on the faces of thousands of my constituents who came out to support the Olympics through Celebration '88.

On behalf of my constituents and many others who participated in Celebration '88 events, I commend the Government on a job well done.

In the same spirit of pride and accomplishment, I ask all my colleagues, on behalf of Canadians across the country, to welcome appreciatively a number of our finest Olympic athletes when they are introduced to the House in a very few minutes. Let's show them how we feel.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

TRIBUTE TO OUTSTANDING WOMEN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, today is a wonderful day of celebration for women around the world. For many decades women have made March 8 their day, that is, International Women's Day, a time to pay respect to the struggles of the past and to seek strength for the work ahead. It is particularly inspiring to remember our foremothers who made today's celebrations possible.

[Translation]

More especially I have in mind our native sisters who have shown great courage throughout history. Then there are the first immigrant women from Europe and those who are arriving today, quite prepared to begin a new life in Canada.

[English]

Women have made very positive contributions to world history. We have struggled for justice, equality, and peace. Today I like to think of Dr. Lise Meitner who, along with a male colleague, was the first to split the atom. A pacifist, she was horrified by the military implications of her discovery and refused to work on the atomic bomb. Not only was she a pioneer in her own non-traditional field, but she wanted to do things differently.

This is what women are asking for today—equality in a just and peaceful world.

WOMEN'S CONTRIBUTION TO SOCIETY

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, today we are celebrating International Women's Day. Since 1910, March 8 has been a day of renewed involvement for Canadian women. In their homes and communities women are making an unmeasurable contribution to our society.

Mr. Speaker, women account for one half of the talents of the Canadian people. Thanks to the perseverance and determination of women, a number of questions are brought forward and gain political currency. Mr. Speaker, we have the full support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The Meech Lake Accord and the free trade initiative again attest to the Government's will to make it easier for women to play an active and leading role in the economic and social life of our country.

Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate our past. Tomorrow we will continue to prepare our future.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

SIZE OF ENVIRONMENT CANADA'S BUDGET

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this year's Estimates reveal that over-all government spending goes up over 8 per cent, but Environment Canada's budget goes up only 3.5 per cent, less than the rate of inflation. By contrast, the budget of Energy, Mines and Resources is up 30 per cent, Agriculture is up 24 per cent, Fisheries and Oceans is up 23 per cent, Finance is up 13.5 per cent, Indian and Northern Affairs is up 11.5 per cent, Communications is up 11 per cent, National Defence is up 8.3 per cent, and Transport is up 7.3 per cent.

Considering that in poll after poll Canadians say that environmental protection is the most important issue, the 3.5 per cent budget increase of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is pitiful.

Since 1984, Environment Canada's budget has lost $70 million to inflation. Compared to 1984, this year's budget of Environment Canada is weaker by 17 per cent. The contrast between the Minister's rhetoric and his actions is appalling.

PACIFIC FISHING INDUSTRY—CONCERN ABOUT RULING ON FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I met with four representatives of the Pacific fishing industry, John Malm, Janet Duplisse, Arnold Nagy and Judy Thompson.

These people are here in Ottawa as part of a delegation from British Columbia to express their concern with the impact of the GATT ruling on their industry. I share their concern, and so should all Members of this House. The commercial fishing and processing industries are the lifeblood of the economy of many of B.C.'s coastal communities.

To the many British Columbians who are dependent on the fishing industry, and their friends and families, I would like to say that our Government, particularly the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are doing everything possible, and I repeat everything possible, to bring about a positive solution to their problem. We will continue to work for you and with you as a fishing industry. Your jobs and your communities are priorities with this Government and we will continue the fight on your behalf.

FIGHT AGAINST RACISM THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Montreal's black community can tell us that racism is not dead in Canada.

[English]

The National Congress of Black Women has stated that much must be done by Governments in Canada before the ideal of complete racial equality is achieved. The Congress delivered its message here in the precincts of a Parliament that represents all of the people of Canada equally. Its members were heard with respect, with interest, and with a willingness to pursue change.

What a difference has been dramatized on this International Women's Day between a civilized democracy, such as ours, and South Africa where white, black, and brown women found that being together merely to talk freedom, equality, and participation is a virtual crime against the state, to be exercised only through subtle strategies lest they place themselves at risk.

They are of the international sisterhood. We share their oppression, and their struggle is ours.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—ALLEGED POSITIONS ON BILL C-33

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to every issue, and Canada's socialist Party often agrees with both.

Last month a brown envelope under my door gave two responses prepared by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on Bill C-33 for his NDP caucus colleagues.

First, for those who write who are opposed, say the following:

Dear friend, please be assured that I oppose this Bill. I cannot support legislation which will deindex superannuation of federal public servants.

Blah, blah, blah.

Second, for those who write and support this Bill, say the following:

Dear friend, thank you for your letter and your concern for inclusion of benefits in C-33. I and my Party are fully in support of these pension improvements which include survivor benefits, death benefits and equality provisions. We have urged the Government to bring these needed improvements forward as soon as possible.

Blah, blah, blah.

There will be no callouses on the NDP Members from sitting on the fence, just grease for sliding from one side of the issue to the other.

FUNDAMENTAL EQUALITY BETWEEN THE SEXES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Today being International Women's Day, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that this year more than ever before, this day should provide us with an opportunity to reflect upon several basic issues which are currently debated in our country.

Whether in the area of abortion, daycare, equal opportunities on the labour market or equal pay for equal work, the Canadian society has more than ever to make choices.

After years of efforts trying to make Canadians aware of the great principles of basic equality between the sexes, we can observe undeniable progress.

We must now be twice as careful and make sure that the critical decisions which we will make collectively within the next year will adequately reflect the new realities.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

FORUM SCHEDULED TO BE HELD ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, there is another step in the long journey for social justice in Canada.

I would like to inform Members of this House that the Parliamentary Committee on Disabled Persons is going to organize a parliamentary forum that will take place here on May 30 on Parliament Hill. This forum will coincide with the first ever National Awareness Week for the Disabled in Canada.

To you personally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in light of your strong personal interest and record of accomplishment in this area, what a pleasure it is for me as Chairman of the Committee to be co-hosting that event with you. There will be representation from all provinces and the territorial councils as well as this House.

The forum will be designed to increase awareness of the social and economic issues which affect disabled Canadians, particularly in terms of employment. It will be another example of institutional leadership to show that these matters of concern to all Canadians can be brought forward.

To conclude, I would like to express my personal hope that by the end of 1988 there will exist in provincial Legislatures and Councils committees similar to that which we have here in the House of Commons.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—CONDEMNATION OF EXECUTION OF PASSENGERS IN HIJACKED BUS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in the last few months, many of us in the House have had occasion to be severely critical of Israel for human rights violations in the occupied territories and for the brutal and often lethal way that Israeli troops have dealt with the Palestinian anger coming at them in the form of stones. Having said that, it now needs to be said that the execution of passengers on a hijacked bus is also morally reprehensible and certainly is not a milestone on the path to a peace conference, let alone peace.

Whether it was the PLO or a faction of the PLO, whether it was sanctioned by Arafat or designed to undermine him, whether it was designed to disable the peace process or mistakenly thought to be something that would help it along, this hijacking was wrong. I hope I speak for all Members of Parliament when I call on those responsible for this action to think again. A return to terrorism is not the answer.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, now that all Quebeckers are finally rallying around a more open and understanding Canada through the Meech Lake Accord, some wet blankets are still trying to undermine this historical agreement. Where do they come from? From the Liberal Party's lack of leadership? From the Socialist leader's lack of clarity and honesty? Is it a pure coincidence that all the wet blankets happen to be Liberals or Socialists?

Liberal Members from Quebec, you must send convincing and guiding messages to your Liberal colleagues from Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Ontario!

Liberal Members, do not destroy Canada!

FUTURE FOR THE ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today is International Women's Day, but we have to deplore the unfortunate treatment which the Conservative Government has afforded needy senior citizens. It is a well known fact that according to statistics 50 per cent of senior citizens living alone are under the poverty line and that 82 per cent of them are women. Unfortunately, the Conservative Government has done nothing to help these people.

In addition, everyone knows that needy people aged between 60 and 64 still suffer because of the way in which the Conservative Government discriminates against 80 per cent of elderly women by denying them the spouse's allowance simply because they are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there will be an election soon. Women will remember the Conservative Government and they will make sure that it will not be back after the next election.

SPORTS

SPECIAL OLYMPIC GAMES IN EDMUNSTON

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, the magnificent Calgary games are now over. I now wish to welcome everyone to the Special Olympics Games in the Madawaska—Victoria riding! Mrs. Mulroney will be inaugurating these games today in Edmundston.

I can predict, Mr. Speaker, that the Special Olympics will be a great success. These athletes, showing their extraordinary courage, tenacity and uncommon will, will prove to everyone that life is good and that nothing can stop someone who wants to reach new heights. We can only rejoice with them and applaud their performance.

On behalf of all Canadians, I congragulate all the organizers and wish good luck to all participants!

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPORTANCE OF LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR IMMIGRANT WOMEN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, through today's recognition of International Women's Day it is hoped that all Canadians will celebrate the contributions of women. However, it should also inspire us to be aware of the unique problems which still prevent their fullest participation in and rewards from our Canadian system. Moreover, the difficulties encountered by immigrant visible minority women are vastly multiplied and their failure to obtain adequate language training is at the centre of their nightmares.

If Governments talk about improving the employment, educational and literacy skills of women, then it is absolutely crucial for the federal Government to reform its language training criteria so that immigrant women are not penalized because they happen to be women. We cannot afford to permit them to be ghettoized in their homes and to live isolated from the mainstream of our national life. Like their husbands working outside the home, or their children who attend primary or secondary schools, these women must also have the opportunity to become proficient in either English or French, the first important step toward being a contributing and integrated member of Canadian society. It is therefore urgent that the Government move to make this reality a right rather than a privilege.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

STATUS OF WOMEN

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON WOMEN'S UNEMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are proud of them all.

My question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. She knows that the industries facing the greatest threat under the proposed Canada-U.S. trade agreement will be the manufacturing and service industries. The Minister also knows that women make up 63 per cent of the labour force in manufacturing industries, indeed 78 per cent in the clothing industry alone, and 80 per cent of the labour force in the service industries.

Will the Minister tell us what action the Government intends to take to ensure that the jobs of these women are not jeopardized by the trade deal, and what new assistance the Government will propose in order to provide adjustment and assistance for the women whose jobs are being thrown at risk?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, since the premise of the question is totally wrong let me say what the free trade agreement will do for women. First, women are involved in industries such as the service industry. For the first time in the history of trade agreements there is an ability to have a bilateral agreement on services. It is one of the greatest opportunities for the Canadian service industry we have ever seen.

Women are full participants in that. They will benefit from that, as will other people in that industry. People in the manufacturing industry will benefit from that.

I do not agree with the Hon. Member's suggestion that Canadian women and Canadian industries are not competitive enough.

MONEY FOR JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I can only say that the Minister cannot be serious. She is not for real.

Mr. Speaker, she must talk to her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration who stated that, as a result of the signing of this agreement with the United States, the jobs of 500,000 people could be lost or put in jeopardy. And the Minister knows perfectly well that most of those jobs are held by women.

Considering those frightening statistics, could the Minister explain to the House why the Government drastically reduced the funding of on-the-job training programs since 1985, and why it did not bring forward new programs to help women who will lose their jobs because of that trade agreement with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, let me reflect for a few minutes on what the Government has done for women, compared to the Government with which the Hon. Member was intimately associated. First, over a 55-month period under the Liberals 467,000 jobs were created for women, while 611,000 jobs have been created for women since September, 1984. That average is double that of the previous Government.

Furthermore, 47 per cent of the jobs created for women under the Liberals were full-time, while 77 per cent of the jobs created for women under this Government were full-time.

The number of adult women living below the poverty line under the previous Government increased by 227,000. The number of adult women living below the poverty line has fallen by 178,000 since 1984.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mrs. McDougall: In 1984 women accounted for 15 per cent of those serving on government boards and agencies.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. McDougall: Today it is 30 per cent—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the House should recognize that the Minister in no way is dealing with the hundreds of thousands of women who are vulnerable under this trade agreement with the the United States. The selective recitation of those statistics will give no comfort at all to the thousands and hundreds of thousands of women who are concerned and reflecting about their own jobs in the future of this country.

PROTECTION OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Given that Canadian companies, if this agreement, God forbid, goes through, will have to face competition with some American jurisdictions which have no minimum wage, no child care programs, no employment equity programs, and given that this deal commits Canada to a five to seven year negotiating process toward the definition of subsidy and, more important, to harmonizing our social programs with those of the United States, how can the Minister guarantee that the social programs for which Canadian women have fought for generations will not be sacrificed and generate—hold on!

Some Hon. Members: Hold on! Hold on!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint Jacques): The question does not matter.

Mr. Gauthier: The question is irrelevant.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what the answer will be, but the Hon. Minister seems to have something to say. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister should wait for her cue or wait for the gun.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What guarantee is she going to give to the hundreds of thousands of Canadian women whose social programs will be jeopardized by the harmonization program in this agreement with the United States?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, not only are our social programs not in any way threatened or violated by this agreement, what it means is there will be greater prosperity for Canadian women. There are 120,000 new jobs predicted in a conservative way by the Department of Finance, many of which will go to women.

Those social programs of which we are all so proud have to be paid for out of the prosperity of our country. With free trade, with additional prosperity, we will be able to do more and better things in this country for the people who need them, the people who were neglected by the former Government which did not know how to create prosperity.

DAY CARE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT QUICKLY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Prime Minister stated in 1984 that daycare was key to equality for women. Four years later, Canadian women and children are still waiting for a fair solution to the problem of daycare centres.

In December last, the Government proposed a federal-provincial cost-sharing program for child care. The government has remained silent since December 3, 1987.

Can the Minister report on negotiations with the provinces? When will they be completed? And when will Canadian women see the number of spaces in daycare centres increased? When will the Government act quickly in that respect?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member on that question. She is right when she says that this Government came in with a child care program of $5.4 billion for a seven year boost period, which is bigger than anything that had ever happened before in child care in Canada, and bigger than anything that had ever been done by former Governments.

We said we would have negotiations with the provinces and I can report to the Hon. Member that these negotiations are going well. As she knows, as do possibly some of her own colleagues, the money is available as of April 1, 1988, for the completion of those negotiations. I look forward to making announcements very shortly. I hope the Hon. Member will be there to applaud inasmuch as the scope and breadth of the program are larger than anything her Government did before.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to tell the Minister that is very good propaganda, but it in no way reflects that the situation. You have failed to respond to the problem of lack of spaces.

DEMAND THAT QUALITY OF SERVICES BE GUARANTEED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would also like the Minister to inform the House how he can guarantee quality daycare services, since his Government does not set any national standards for quality and negotiations with the provinces are getting nowhere fast.

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member was on the parliamentary committee she will know that in terms of spaces there are approximately 110,000 that are so-called non-profit spaces. There are approximately 225,000 spaces in total. Additionally, the seven-year boost will give an increase of 200,000 spaces on the non-profit side, which is an increase of over 200 per cent.

The Hon. Member talks about the numbers of spaces that they created as compared to the number of spaces that will be created under the new program. There is no relationship between what they did and what we are doing.

In the negotiations with respect to the number of spaces that the provinces want to take up, what is interesting is that we are going to meet the number of spaces. In respect to the standards, the Hon. Member knows that we are going to have standards. The provinces with which we are negotiating want exactly those.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORTION

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT DECISION—PROVISIONS OF CANADA HEALTH ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am sure he will agree that the women of British Columbia have the same right to equality in the law as do women of other provinces. In that context I want to ask him this.

Considering that the Supreme Court of British Columbia yesterday declared that a provincial government regulation that prohibited medicare funding for abortions was ultra vires, and considering that the same regulation contravenes the Canada Health Act, in the interests of equality for the women of British Columbia has the Minister informed the Government of British Columbia that this regulation is in clear violation of the Canada Health Act?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the judgment came down yesterday. I want to be very careful in respect to the words of the judgment which I do not think were in relation to the Canada Health Act, although I think that that is an entirely valid debate, as I think the Hon. Member will agree.

As I understand it, the judgment noted that the Government could have been acting within its authority if it had enacted a regulation that declared abortions not to be an insured health service. In other words, we are talking about a provincial service in respect to the regulation.

I think the Hon. Member can see that, obviously, we are waiting to see what the reaction of the Government of B.C. will be. I think the court's position is very clear in terms of the process and the action that it should take.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DECLARE PROVINCIAL REGULATION TO BE IN VIOLATION OF CANADA HEALTH ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that if the Government of British Columbia had chosen the other option to which he alluded then it would have been clearly in violation of the Charter of Rights. I see that the Minister is nodding his head in agreement with that. Both options, the one that has been chosen and the hypothetical one to which the Minister has just alluded, would have meant that the Government of B.C. would have been in violation of the Charter of Rights or the Canada Health Act.

I want to ask the Minister this. Since there are other provinces involved in this problem, to understate it a wee bit, and since the country is looking for some national leadership, will the Minister now make it clear that it is his view as the Minister responsible for the Canada Health Act that this type of regulation, whether it is in British Columbia or in any other province, which denies equality to Canadian women, is in violation of the Canada Health Act?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member, the ruling came down yesterday. As I have said, we do not know how the Government of B.C. will react to it or whether it will appeal it. As I have said to the Hon. Member before, I will hold that judgment or that opinion until my cabinet colleagues and I have consulted with respect to it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE LEADERSHIP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has already indicated that the decision by the Supreme Court of British Columbia is not directly relevant to my question, but in any event, my question is relevant to the Canada Health Act because there are other provinces that now have the same regulations, more or less, as the Government of British Columbia. Does the Minister intend to show some leadership at the national level on this issue and tell the provinces that such action is not acceptable, especially in terms of equality for Canadian women?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add in terms of how the Government will react to the decision of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. The answer stands for anyone who has looked at court decisions. A period of time will have to elapse in terms of any other action being taken by the federal Government.

People on both sides of this issue generally recognize both its complexity and its difficulty not only for Governments but for Canadian society in general. When the Government of Canada has made a decision I believe that it will be made in respect to those various issues and considerations by all parties concerned. Only then will I give the answers of the Government of Canada, as I have been asked to do, but I will not give a decision or an opinion on the Canada Health Act on the floor of the House of Commons.

HOUSING

THE HOMELESS—DEMAND FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): In the absence of the Minister responsible for housing, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last year, 27 per cent of the homeless in this country were women and 11 per cent were children under 15. Women living in inadequate and unsanitary accommodation are not included in these figures.

Two governments, the Government of Great Britain and the Australian Government, have passed federal legislation to protect the homeless. Canadians want to know where the Conservative Government's leadership is on this matter.

Could the Minister inform the House why the Government has failed to do anything for the homeless since the International Conference on Shelter for the Homeless in September 1987? And if it does intend to do something, what will it be?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of my colleague who is responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I would also draw to the Hon. Member's attention that discussions were held previously between both municipal and provincial administrations and there is a responsibility on all levels of government. We have in the past, as the Hon. Member is aware, entered into agreements with the provinces. With respect to most social housing the provinces provide 25 per cent of the dollars needed and the Government of Canada provides 75 per cent of the dollars needed. We have entered into agreements that allow for efficiencies of administration between these two levels of government.

As always, we will be interested in the views of municipalities in supplying housing which may benefit those to whom the Hon. Member refers as homeless.

ELIGIBILITY FOR PROGRAMS—POSITION OF WOMEN WITHOUT HOME ADDRESSES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, needless to say I am very disappointed in the answer. The problem will not just go away.

Since the problem is worse for women and their children, and since the Minister knows that in order to qualify for any government program one must have an address, and homeless Canadians do not have an address, will the Minister tell us if he has approached the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister responsible for the status of women in order to find solutions to this problem?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member refers to is not something that is new. It is not something that she has just discovered. These problems have existed for many years.

In addressing social housing, in particular the co-op housing initiatives taken by the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada, to assure that there is a market efficient co-op housing program we have provided in that a component for social housing, which is administered by local co-ops, by local people.

In regard to the initiative discussed by the Hon. Member, we have as Ministers of the Crown discussed it amongst ourselves. But we are also asking the provinces and the municipalities to join with us in solving what we recognize to be a problem, as I am sure these jurisdictions do.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

EQUAL ACCESS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I find myself a little dismayed because it is my understanding the Minister stated that he did not want to give an opinion on the Canada Health Act.

As the Minister responsible, is he telling this House that he is not willing to stand up for the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act which mean equal access?

Mr. Speaker: There is a difference between expressing his views as to whether or not the Canada Health Act is in place, but to ask for a legal opinion is, of course, out of order.

Ms. Dewar: I didn't ask for a legal opinion.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have stated before, and I will repeat to the Hon. Member that I will not speculate on a legal opinion. In terms of any opinion with respect to whether a province is in contravention of the Canada Health Act, I said if that has been determined in any way, only at that time would I make a statement.

ADMINISTRATION OF ACT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Health Act guarantees access to health services in this country to Canadian citizens.

I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare is he reneging on his responsibility to administer the Canada Health Act to Canadian women.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not reneging. The Hon. Member should know that, in respect to the Canada Health Act, the interpretation that she is placing on it was an interpretation which many groups brought forward to it, but was not accepted in terms of the powers that could be exercised by the federal Government over delivery of health care in the provinces. That has been a fundamental difference of view right through the whole debate on the Canada Health Act.

In respect to the specific issue of abortion and those services, I have given an answer very clearly as to what I will do.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

MINING PROJECT IN PICTOU COUNTY—EFFECT ON CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for regional industrial development, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that the future of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, owned and operated by the Government of Canada, has been put into serious question by the activities of senior members of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, as well as the senior officials of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why the Government of Canada, through ACOA, is in the process of providing funding to a private company with no proven mining track record, $75 million of taxpayers' money, to build a mine in Pictou County, the home of the Minister of National Revenue, which will be in direct conflict with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, throwing 275 men out of work in Cape Breton, and reducing the revenues of that Crown corporation by some $20 million?

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, why is the Government of Canada part and parcel of this scheme?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the Hon. Member's question, may I simply point out that this Government has been very supportive of Devco in many ways; it has been very supportive of Atlantic development through ACOA and through other regional industrial expansion programs.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member would take exception to any new initiatives that would be taken in the Atlantic region that would provide jobs and greater industrial and economic opportunities.

DOCUMENT PREPARED BY CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have to say, with great regret, that I have in my hands a confidential document—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: —prepared by the Government's own Crown corporation, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which was submitted to the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia in December, 1987. This document of some 12 pages spells out very clearly that it will result in 275 jobs lost at the Lingan Colliery in Cape Breton.

I wish to ask the Minister, in view of these facts, and in view of this document which I will table at three o'clock, why are the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government of Canada playing worker against worker, community against community, and company against company? Why this action on behalf of the Government of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member still thinks that he is in government, because that was precisely the policy of the Liberal Party when it was in government. This Government does not do business that way.

I do not know what document the Hon. Member has, but if he wants to give me a copy I will look at it. I am sure that my interpretation and his would probably be different.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and it arises out of the changing bank policies under the guise of handling or service charges. Those charges are sometimes imposed without notice and sometimes without service, such as a charge of $1 per month on an inactive account under $100, or $2.50 a day for an overdrawn account, over and above an interest charge, and the list goes on.

May I ask the Chairman if the committee is prepared to conduct a survey or a review of those escalating charges for services that were once offered to get the ordinary person to use the banks in the first place?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for St. Catharines for the question, and advise the House that the finance committee engaged its research staff in December of last year to do a comprehensive study on bank service charges, and indeed services charges of trust companies and credit unions, to determine the nature and type of those charges, whether constituents were receiving fair service for fair money, and whether the banks in particular had been complying with Section 201 of the Bank Act.

We hope to be able to have a paper on that matter available to the House well before Easter. It may be that the committee will then commence public hearings on the matter.

EMPLOYMENT

INNOVATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and has to do with a project to recuperate and recycle household garbage, an ecological project to create jobs at the same time.

Can the Minister now respond favourably to the Récupération Bois-Francs project launched a year ago and sponsored by neighbouring towns, labour unions and local churches? What is the response to this excellent project on which his department has been sitting for a year?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague did not specify exactly where this program is supposed to fit in. Perhaps it comes under the Innovation Program.

The Hon. Member probably knows as well that a national committee reporting on the Innovation Program is expected to recommend acceptance by the Minister, but admittedly the various phases may take up quite some time. But still some of the criteria are particularly strict. If the program is recommended to us we will give the matter every consideration.

REQUEST THAT PROJECT PROCEED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. This project has gone the rounds from the Prime Minister, to Environment, to other different Departments. Everyone agrees that it is a good idea, and technical evaluations are excellent.

I am now asking the Minister will he take it up with his colleagues, stop sending it around, and find some way of seeing that it is done? It is an excellent program, but it does not fit the criteria. Every Ministry that has dealt with it has said that it is a good idea, but it is not quite the right place. Will the Minister find a place for it and see that it happens?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when we propose a project in the Department of Employment and Immigration, I have to remind the Hon. Member that first it is to create jobs. I am not the Minister of the Environment, I am the Minister of Employment. That is the reason we have to take a look at the project, see if it creates jobs, and fits into the criteria of the Department. I said that I would take a look but, once again, I am the Minister of Employment.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUPREME COURT DECISION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the Minister of Health and the subject of yesterday's British Columbia Supreme Court decision on payment for abortions. I would like to ask the Minister, given that the Government of British Columbia has indicated that it is going to try to get around this decision and find a lawful way to deny payment for abortions to some women, whether the Government is prepared to show some leadership, and whether the federal Government agrees with the position that women across Canada should be equally entitled to medical services.

Surely the federal Government, with British Columbia reconsidering its position, should take a position on equal treatment for all women in Canada.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have said to other Members in the House today that I will not speculate on the judgment or on the actions which the B.C. Government might take. Those have not been brought to my attention or to the attention of the Government.

In respect of equal access for women, the answer to that is yes. That has always been the case and the underlying principle of the Canada Health Act.

What we are dealing with here is what the province will do in terms of the question of what is referred to in the Canada Health Act as medically necessary, and that is from where the divergence of views in B.C. comes.

EQUAL ACCESS TO MEDICAL SERVICES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister has indicated, as he has, that it is the federal position—and I think it is important for the British Columbia Government to hear this—that women in Canada should have equal access across the country to medical services, my next question to the Minister is this. What will the federal Government do about it?

Is it prepared to act under the Canada Health Act? Is it prepared, besides consulting provinces, to notify them that it is the position of the Government of Canada, and indeed of Parliament, that equal access should be available to all women?

Why is he waffling on this important subject?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government expects that British Columbia will respect the ruling of the court. That is our position, and we expect that.

Till there has been other action, on which I cannot speculate, I do not think it is appropriate for me or the Hon. Member to go down those trails of speculation.

RULING AFFECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding consistency and honesty.

Yesterday the Minister revealed that he is unaware that the GATT ruling against the B.C. fishing industry is contrary to the Law of the Sea, is contrary to the Canada-U.S. Salmon Treaty, and is a fishing issue, not a trade issue.

Since the Government understood the sovereign right to protect processing and conservation and protected the fishing industries in Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland from U.S. interference, why is the Government planning to support a proposal tomorrow in Washington which will gut the B.C. industry and place the entire Atlantic fishing industry at risk?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks of consistency and honesty. I practise those virtues. If he follows a practice different from that, that is his to decide.

I made clear yesterday that there have been extensive negotiations and discussions with the industry and with the provinces, and that Canada went to the other nations involved in the GATT panel and made our case. We did not succeed in that case, so we are now meeting again, tomorrow, to see if there are other ways in which we could proceed to resolve this very serious question.

Of course the other matter that arises is that the New Democratic Party on GATT issues speaks out of both sides of its mouth. It supports GATT in principle, it claims, yet in practice it wants us to get out of the GATT.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF WORKERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister and is on the point of consistency.

We have a $750 million industry in British Columbia, principally employing women in high-paying, unionized jobs. They are not ghettoized as they are in many areas of the Canadian economy. There are 7,500 jobs at risk.

When the Americans find GATT rulings that they do not like on Canadian oil, on Spanish soybeans, and on trade embargoes with Nicaragua, they do not implement them. The Minister of Fisheries says that he opposes the GATT ruling, but he has been muzzled by Cabinet.

I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is going to stand up and show consistency. You protected the five Atlantic provinces. You forgot about British Columbia. What is going on? Why not protect the workers of B.C.?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the question of consistency, when the United States rejected the decision of the International Court on Nicaragua, this Government opposed that decision by the United States and upheld an international regime.

The New Democratic Party said that we should do that. Now the New Democratic Party is quoting as a precedent to Canada the very action by the United States which it condemned in the House.

The New Democratic Party is talking out of both sides of its mouth, and it should stop doing that in the interest of consistency and in the interest of honesty.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN HOMEMAKERS TO SECURE RIGHT TO PUBLIC PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. During the last election campaign, the Conservative Government made a commitment to allow homemakers to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. We all know there are now an estimated three million homemakers who are not entitled to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan or Quebec Pension Plan, and the Minister knows perfectly well that if nothing is done on an urgent basis, these people are doomed to be either dependent on their spouse or to live in poverty.

Could the Minister inform the House why his Government has failed to keep this promise after nearly four years in power?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member asked that question. The Government has brought in changes to the Canada Pension Plan which brought it parallel to some changes that had already taken place in the Quebec Pension Plan and which have helped women, especially under the Canada Pension Plan. For example, there is the matter of credit splitting and the matter of earlier vesting.

On the question of a homemaker's pension, when we ran for office in 1984 the Government said very clearly that we favoured a homemaker's pension. The general vehicle at which we were looking was the Canada Pension Plan.

It is for that reason that coming out of Bill C-116 there were two studies further commissioned with the federal and provincial Governments. One was on survivors' benefits and the other was on homemakers. I have not yet had that report.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, 3 million women at home do not benefit from the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is urgent because these people need an answer, not a study. Could the Minister inform the House what kind of strategy he has in mind for solving this problem before an election is called?

[English]

What is your strategy to help these women?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member is endorsing the platform of the Conservative Party, something which he opposed during the election. I take it that now he has had a conversion on that issue, and I am glad that he has come to our side.

In respect of what actions we will take, I am sure he will wait with anticipation and bated breath to see what steps we will take and that he can endorse those, as well, in the next election campaign.

TAX REFORM

EFFECT ON WOMEN WAGE EARNERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. The National Council on Welfare has shown that the Government's tax reform is giving $1 in every $5 of tax savings to the 2 per cent of Canadian families with incomes over $100,000, while the average full-time employed Canadian woman earns approximately $18,000. Could the Minister explain why the Government has chosen to give the wealthy tax cuts of around $1,700 per annum apiece, when the average Canadian working woman will get a tax cut of only $100 per annum, according to the National Council's figures?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I reject the figures. They are not consistent with the figures in the document entitled "A Summary for Taxpayers", which sets out a range of income groups, a range of income earners, and types of family situations.

If the Hon. Member wishes to review the numbers in this booklet, I believe he will find that they are accurate. They have been reviewed by tax accountants and have been commented on in the media as being accurate.

There may be some specific situation that is being used to make a general point of view. As a statement of the general effects of tax reform this document stands on its own. Eighty-five per cent of Canadians will be better off with tax reform. One of the ways that we would be paying for those tax reductions is by reducing some of the tax preferences that are primarily available to those in upper income brackets.

• (1500)

BENEFITS FOR FAMILIES HEADED BY WOMEN

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister who is answering for the Minister responsible for the status of women wants other figures, he will be aware that the average wealthy family earning over $100,000 gets a cut of about $4,300 per annum whereas single parent women earning the average for full-time women get a cut of maybe $100 or $200 a year. The Minister seems to think that is okay.

Can the Minister explain to the women of Canada who head most single parent families why the Government has cut almost $400 in benefits going to the average family with children since 1984, and why it seems to have targeted reductions in child tax benefits when that is particularly damaging for single parent families headed by women?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is forgetting the fact that we have increased the child tax credit two or three times since September, 1984. We have advanced the payment of the child tax credit so that people do not have to make use of tax discounters. We also introduced the refundable sales tax credit which is directed at the very people the Hon. Member is talking about, so that in many ways we have recognized the problem that is in existence when we inherited the Government. Now we are addressing these things and will address them further in tax reform.

As I indicated, the figures set out in the government document on tax reform are accurate. They are directed at the general impact, not a very specific impact, which I think the Member is trying to draw out.

Mr. Cassidy: Single parents.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, Mr. Speaker. That is not the point I was making. The point I am making is that the figures I have quoted here in this document are general, according to various categories of earners, not very specific figures which may apply to a very limited number of people.

Mr. Cassidy: Single parent families headed by women. Shame on you, Mr. Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—EXPULSION OF PALESTINIANS FROM OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Minister accept or condone the policy of Israel of expelling Palestinians from the occupied territories, or does the Minister reject and condemn these actions by Israel which appear to violate international conventions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our judgment that those actions by Israel do, in fact, violate the fourth Geneva Convention which applies to the West Bank. I have expressed that view, and I have instructed our officials at the United Nations to support the Security Council resolution which opposes that action by Israel.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SALE OF HOTELS TO CANADIAN PACIFIC—EFFECT ON JOBS IN MONTREAL

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I would direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In late January, Ron Lawless, the chief executive officer of Canadian National, in announcing the sale of CN hotels to Canadian Pacific stated that Canadian Pacific had agreed to "maintain all existing labour contracts and pension benefits and to absorb all existing employees".

We have since learned that most of the 63 national sales and head office jobs in Montreal will be lost. They will not be protected as had been said by the President of CN. How can the Minister justify the sale to CP which will result in the loss of many jobs in Montreal that were supposed to be protected, according to the President of Canadian National?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am simply unable to answer the question because the information that has come up is not information that I have seen and differs quite substantially from the information that is available. Therefore, if my friend would be kind enough to give us that information, we will dig into it and provide him with an appropriate answer.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that, given the hour, this will be the end of Question Period. Perhaps the Hon. Member could pursue this matter and perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary might be able to give some kind of an answer tomorrow.

I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

PRIVILEGE

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO MPS—DIFFERENCE IN TIMING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Question Period the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberger) raised an issue relating to announcements made by the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans regarding Chinook salmon, including a major announcement of new enhancement on the Cowichan River which is in my constituency. When my office phoned the Vancouver Department of Fisheries and Oceans to ask for information on this, my assistant was told that DFO communications had been instructed to send five Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament the information at nine o'clock in the morning on Monday, Eastern Standard Time, which was prior to the Minister's press conference at which he announced these proposals.

There was a second list of other MPs who were to receive the information at 1 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. We did not receive this information, vital to my constituency, until 4 p.m. yesterday afternoon.

I submit that this constitutes blatant discrimination against opposition MPs. It is the use of Department of Fisheries offices for partisan political purposes. I submit that it constitutes a question of privilege, and if you find that there is a prima facie case of privilege I am prepared to move the requisite motion.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Member brings to the attention of the House some interesting information from his perspective. It is the first time that we have heard of it on this side of the House.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is not here. I think the House would be best served if we took a little time to give us a chance to look into the situation and report back to the House at a later point.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has raised a matter which comes down to this, that some Members have received some information from a department earlier and under different circumstances than other Members. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, I think, has made a very useful suggestion. I would ask that he take it up with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and, as soon as possible, perhaps indicate to the Chair when the Chair might hear him. Would that be acceptable to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands?

Mr. Manly: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

PRESENCE IN THE HOUSE OF MEMBER

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I notice that today's Hansard shows no record of my abstention from yesterday's NATO support motion. As a matter of fact, there is no indication of my presence in the Chamber during the vote. Could you let the record show that I was present in the Chamber and abstained from voting on the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) for his representation and the Chair will ensure that the record is properly adjusted.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre, that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) had the floor.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the lunch hour interrupted me, and if my memory trusts me well, we have no problem with the principle of Bill C-82. We support the principle, but there are issues in the Bill, things that we would like to see tightened up. In brief, we mention the provision of a two tier system. There is no need for a two tier system of registry of lobbyists. We ought to have one tier of registry of lobbyists.

Second, the Bill does not provide for a prohibition of contingency lobbying. We believe that this is a shortcoming in the Bill. The fact is that attaching a fee by a lobbyist for the accomplishment of the lobbying objectives is, in our view, contrary to the kinds of presentations which lobbyists make to bureaucrats and to Members of Parliament.

Third, we believe that the Bill ought to have prohibited the indirect lobbying by mass mailings which, in our discovery in the jurisdiction of the United States, are covered by U.S. lobbying legislation. In fact, that could be one method used to circumvent the intent of this Bill.

There is no doubt in my mind, and recent surveys reflect this, that Canadians have lost confidence in the ability of their political leaders when it comes to honesty, ethics and a whole host of other issues that are very important to the democratic process. I think that is what the Prime Minister sensed when, in 1985, in a letter to Members of Parliament, he recognized that lobbyists had to be registered. Subsequently, events have shown that there are questionable activities by lobbyists at this time, activities that can only serve to reinforce in the minds of Canadians the notion that politicians deal with ethical matters and matters of state in questionable ways.

I said earlier today that registering lobbyists is the completion of a process of open Government. We have the freedom of information legislation and the election expenses legislation. These pieces of legislation were all implemented to create a greater transparency in Government, to provide Canadians with more information about the manner in which they are governed. If contributions are made to Parties or to individuals, they are on the record. The public has access to that information. That can only serve to buttress democracy in a system such as ours. This piece of legislation which provides for the registering of lobbyists is indeed extremely important to the process.

It is unfortunate that the Bill is lacking in what I would call teeth. There is no provision in the Bill for the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to verify the information which lobbyists will put in the registry. There is no way of initiating any investigation—

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt my colleague, but with the unanimous consent of the House, I would ask to table the document that I referred to during Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The only way that could be done, of course, is with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF SUBMISSION OF CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I was asked during Question Period if I would table a document to which I had made reference in my question. I would now like to table the document to which I referred.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, one of the shortcomings of the Bill is that it gives the Assistant Deputy Registrar General no power to verify the information which lobbyists will put on the registry. The ADRG has no power to conduct investigations. The Bill does not even say who can initiate an action.

If a Member of Parliament or a civil servant brings to the attention of the ADRG a lobbyist who is not acting within the parameters of the Bill, who initiates the action? Who verifies it, who collects the information, who starts the process? Nothing in the Bill ascribes that particular function to the ADRG.

We think the Bill must be improved. While we agree with the Bill in principle, we believe that in committee we will use every opportunity to amend the Bill in order to strengthen it. We hope that the Government will see that our amendments are useful and helpful and will provide the kind of transparency and openness which I believe Canadians demand and would welcome.

I must point out that the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, on which I served, studied the question of a lobbying registry and visited the closest jurisdiction which has a registry of lobbyists. Within the group, there were those who really did not feel the need for such registration. When we went to the United States to look into this matter. There were those who were convinced that there was no need for a registry of lobbyists and that in fact we ought to leave the lobbyists to regulate themselves.

When we met with lobbyists in the United States, one of the questions we put to them was what would be the main thrust of their proposals if they were in our spot and had to draft registry rules for lobbyists. They all said, almost with one voice, that they would make it tough. This blew the minds of the Conservative members of the committee who were not wedded to that idea. They were absolutely shocked that lobbyists would demand that lobbying legislation be tough.

When the lobbyists explained the reasons for saying that, we found that their argument was quite reasonable. They said they wanted to ensure that a code be established for them within the legal framework because that is how they convince clients that they operate under a very strict legal code and under the laws of the country. That is the best guarantee that the client will be getting professional services.

The lobbyists to whom we spoke were proud to run off computer lists of their clients and their charges to show to the committee. It was interesting to note that well-known multinationals and other corporations were on that list as well as the issues they were lobbying for and the amounts of money charged. That is what we will be promoting in our amendments when we get to committee. We will be looking for that kind of openness in the legislation.

It seems to me that people who want to do business with the Government ought to be doing so, but Canadians ought to be able to know who they are and what they are charging. That is a system that is accountable as well as transparent.

The other question with which we dealt as a committee was foreign lobbyists from foreign Governments. In our report we recognized that foreign Governments have embassies here in Ottawa and they have government-to-government relations. They consult with Departments, and we have excluded them from our recommendations on lobbying. I notice that they are not included in the Bill.

In conclusion, I want to say that Bill C-82 is a small step, but it is a step in the right direction. We have to move this Bill forward as quickly as possible into committee. I support the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who made a wise suggestion. While we originally recommended that the Bill should be sent to the committee that studied the lobbying question, he said it should go to a legislative committee, hopefully made up of members of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, for study. I hope the Government will follow that suggestion.

We hope the Minister has listened attentively to the points we have raised and recognizes that we are not trying to destroy the Bill. We want to make it better, more effective, and make Government more open and accountable. Therefore we hope the suggestions we have made will find their way into the Bill as amendments.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words on this Bill. I think some of the suggestions made by the Hon. Member who just spoke should be taken into account by the Minister when this Bill gets to committee stage. Some of the points raised are very important. Perhaps I can just review those points.

Keep in mind that since 1984 we have seen a great proliferation of lobbying firms throughout the country. They are engaged in various activities for the benefit of certain clients; not that there is anything wrong with that. Yet some of those clients who received favourable attention from the Government might have gotten it anyway without hiring the lobbying firm. In fact, I would say in a great many cases it is a tremendous waste of money to hire one of these lobbying outfits when the client could perhaps see hers or his own local Member of Parliament or make representations directly to the Government.

The Bill defines professional lobbyists as:

> Every individual who, for payment, on behalf of any person or organization—undertakes to arrange a meeting with a public office holder or to communicate with a public office holder in an attempt to influence

(a) the development of a legislative proposal by the Government of Canada—

That means someone who was hired to arrange for the presentation of a Bill before the House of Commons. It then goes on to say someone who attempts to influence:

(b) the introduction, passage, defeat or amendment of any Bill—

In other words, any individual, organization or group interested in amending a Bill.

Then it says:

(c) the making of any regulation, order or other instrument—

Which, as you know, are made by the Government of Canada. Then it talks about the development of any policy by the Government. That is a general enough clause in the Bill which would probably cover anything having to do with public policy.

Then it talks about the appointment of individuals to any body or office. I suppose, for example, if someone wanted to be appointed to the Senate or some board and hired a lobbying firm to do that, they would be covered by that part. Then it refers to the awarding of any grant, contribution or similar benefit, or a contract by the Government.

What must that person or group do? They must register with the registrar not later than 10 days after entering into the undertaking. If they do not, what happens? Under the offences part it says:

Every individual who contravenes or fails to comply with any provision of this Act is guilty of an offence—

What will happen to them if they are brought before a court? There is a fine of not more than $25,000 or a trip to prison for a term not to exceed six months. Then it says in Clause 13(b):

—on proceedings by way of indictment, to a fine not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years—

In other words, the value of someone's time outside of a prison is seen by this Act to be about $50,000 a year. If you can pay $50,000 you do not have to go to jail for a year. If you cannot pay it, then off you go. It is very interesting to look at some of these Acts and see how much time adds up to $1,000 in the view of our legal system. It means if you have lots of money, you do not have to serve any of these jail terms.

I suppose the Bill sounds pretty conclusive. It is fairly thorough. There is a problem, though, as some speakers have pointed out. You do not really have to register if you call yourself a public relations firm, I suppose. You do not have to say how much money you are getting for your lobbying activities. There are several lobbying firms here in Ottawa and in provincial capitals, and under this Act they are not going to have to say how much money they receive, whether it is $1,000 or $100,000 or $1 million. They should have to. What was the value of their input to the Government of Canada?

I would like to suggest to the Minister another area which is perhaps not covered at all under this legislation but which should be. Perhaps he can address this in committee or at third reading. The problem is this. If you examine all of the sales by agencies of the federal Government this year and last you will see something interesting, for example, the sale of the hotels owned by Canadian National just recently. What was the procedure used? The bids on those hotels had to be received by someone from someone. In other words, there were people in Canada interested in bidding on the Château Laurier and the Hotel Newfoundland and every other CN hotel right across Canada. Someone had to receive those bids. The Cabinet approved the sale, as was brought out in Question Period today.

Who determined which was the best bid or who would get those hotels for that particular amount of money? It said in the bidding process that not necessarily the highest bid would be accepted. It got into the hands of the Cabinet because the people involved who wanted to buy those hotels had hired lobbying firms. Canadian National hired a consulting firm in New York to arrange the bids, to seek out the prospective bidders and then prepare a document for the board of Canadian National, who looked at the recommendation of the consulting firm from New York and either accepted or rejected it. It then sent its recommendation to the federal Cabinet for approval or rejection.

The lobbying firms that were hired by those bidders did not lobby a government official, a cabinet Minister or any of the people named in this Bill.

Some of the lobbying firms that were mentioned in the House today by the two Members who spoke previously are being hired today to lobby on behalf of certain interests to buy two telephone companies in Canada. Northwest Tel, which covers all the Northwest Territories, is up for sale by the Government of Canada. That telephone company is very profitable. It made between $8 million and $10 million in net profits last year and pumped millions of dollars in capital expenditures. One could likely get a profit of $20 million from Northwest Tel.

Another telephone company in the eastern part of Canada, Terra Nova Telecommunications, is also owned by the federal Government. It made a profit of approximately $5 million and pumped $11 million into its capital expansion. Some of the consulting firms named in the House today have been hired by interests who want to purchase those profitable telephone companies. Telephone companies are licensed to make money because their profits are guaranteed.

The consumers must pay and the telephone companies will make the profits. We even have public bodies that are appointed to ensure these companies make a reasonable profit, one that is not too much or too little.

In this situation a consulting firm is hired in Ottawa to lobby on behalf of another telephone company that wishes to purchase Terra Nova Telecommunications and a telephone company on the West Coast that wishes to purchase Northwest Telephone. These consulting firms are being paid enormous amounts of money through their offices in Ottawa, Vancouver, Toronto and St. John's, Newfoundland, to work on these proposals on behalf of big business interests in Canada.

These lobbying firms are of quite some prominence in Canada. Indeed, I noticed that one of the lobbying firms is headed by a former prominent Conservative Member of Parliament from Newfoundland. He was hired by a telephone company in Newfoundland to prepare a bid for the purchase of Terra Nova Telecommunications.

One must question whether these consulting firms, which are being paid substantial amounts of money, are covered under this Bill. I am willing to bet that the successful bidder on the stock exchange for Terra Nova Telecommunications will be Newfoundland Telephone. I believe it will be successful because not only can it offer a large amount of money, it certainly has a foot in the door. I suggest that even the other bidders who will be putting forward their bids for the purchase of that extremely profitable telephone company realize that fact.

The same thing is happening with Northwest Telephone in northern Canada. Consulting firms are being hired at varying costs. Certainly, the lobbying firms are making a bundle of money.

My objection is that I do not believe these procedures are covered under this legislation. In other words, the lobbying firm hired by Newfoundland Telephone in Newfoundland should have to register under this legislation and indicate that it is hired for the express purpose of trying to get a successful bid for the purchase of Terra Nova Telecommunications. There should then be a requirement on the part of the lobbying firms hired by telephone companies in western Canada for the purchase of Northwest Telephone.

The current arrangement is that an accounting firm has been designated by Canadian National to handle the sale of Northwest Telephone. In the case of Terra Nova Telecommunications, the bids are submitted to the consulting firm of Canada Capital Corporation, which I understand is a very competent company in downtown Toronto. It does all the research, prepares the bids, and accepts them on behalf of Canadian National. The bids then go to the board of Canadian National who make their judgment and send that to the federal Cabinet for its decision.

I would like the Minister to address this complicated procedure when he addresses the Bill either in committee stage or at third reading.

If the lobbying firms are to assume control over what happens, when, where and how in all of these decisions in Canada, we should certainly know the identity of these lobbying firms and how much they are being paid. They should not be allowed to hide behind a consulting firm from New York State, as in the case of Canadian National hotels where the bid can go back to the board of CN and then to Cabinet for final approval. Who is trying to fool whom?

We now have the case of the telephone companies and the lobbying firms. I know personally the lobbyists who have been hired. They know the system intimately. They know what to do, and when, to make sure their clients meet with success.

I do hope the Minister will take that into account because that is one of the big loopholes. The other, as I mentioned, is the salary. For goodness' sake, we should know how much these fellows are raking in when they are successful in purchasing a telephone company for $180 million, or $200 million in the case of Northwest Telephone. How much are the consulting firms being paid? Is it 5 per cent? Is it 10 per cent? We are into big money here and we should know how much they are being paid. We all know who they are, but I would love to know how much these fellows are being paid for performing the job.

I have one word of caution, however, for these companies. I think in a lot of cases it is a waste of money. I think probably if the right bid was submitted, if it was the highest bid, they should not have to worry. There should be some procedure whereby they can appeal, certainly to the federal Cabinet, if they are not treated fairly. Perhaps they are wasting their money by going to these lobbying firms.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have made a prediction that a particular company will be successful in its bid to purchase Terra Nova Telecommunications very shortly. I have made the prediction and it is on the official record. Watch for it, Mr. Speaker, because that is what is going to happen.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I am looking at this lobbyist legislation and I would like to make some comments and ask a question. In the interpretation, "public office holder" is defined as a member of the Senate or the House of Commons and an individual who is appointed by the Governor in Council, an officer, director or employee of any federal board, a member of the Canadian Armed Forces and a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I wonder if the mandarins were forgotten. I mean the upper echelon bureaucrats, the deputy ministers, the assistant deputy ministers and the program officers. The lobbyist tries to influence in order to get a contract and, naturally, at one point he is going to see the deputy minister, the assistant deputy minister or the person who develops the program. I wonder if they should not be included in this Bill. Could the Hon. Member give me an opinion on whether he believes that the mandarins, who really run this country, the permanent Government of Canada, should be included in the Bill? I do not see why a member of the RCMP should be included. He does not give any favours. But why are the mandarins not in the definition of "public office holder"?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, looking at the section to which the Hon. Member is referring I would have to say right off the bat that I agree that certainly they should be included. However, under the interpretation section, Clause 2(1), it states that "public office holder" means any officer or employee of Her Majesty in right of Canada and includes a member of the Senate or the House of Commons, an individual appointed to any office or body with the approval of the Governor in Council, which is the Cabinet, or a Minister of the Crown, an officer, or director of any federal board or commission, a member of the Canadian Armed Forces and a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could inform me as to whether he believes that that clause excludes certain public servants. The normal way of drafting that definition, I believe, would be the way it is done. In other words, it says "public office holder' means any officer or employee of Her Majesty in right of Canada, and it includes a specific list under the general definition. As a former Law Clerk of a legislature, I would say that this would cover all the public servants to which the hon. gentleman referred, but perhaps he has additional information or an interpretation from the drafter of the legislation that is to the contrary.

Mr. Kindy: I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. Naturally, as he indicates, these persons are defined under "public office holder". I wonder whether it would be better to have another section saying that this includes as well all civil servants in the employ of a Minister, so it would be more specific and precise and not left to the interpretation of a judge or the bureaucrats.

Mr. Baker: Perhaps, for clarity, you will notice, Mr. Speaker, in certain definitions when it makes a broad statement as to interpretation and definition, the hon. gentleman is partially correct, because sometimes it gives the general meaning, and in this particular case it means any officer or employee of Her Majesty in right of Canada, which means everyone that the federal Government pays. Then, as the hon. gentleman points out, there could be a period there and it could say: "This definition includes", and it could list whatever should be listed, but then it could be repeated in the first section what is said in the preamble. It could be reiterated in that way.

I would suggest that the Hon. Member make that point to the Minister as a matter of clarity. We have some of the finest drafters of legislation in the world employed by the federal Government in the Department of Justice. We have the same quality of drafters in the provincial administration. They are some of the finest in the world. A great many of them have come over from Scotland and Great Britain and they are very fine drafters of legislation. The problem is not with the drafters of the legislation. The problem is with the Government because it gives them things which cannot really be drafted properly by anyone.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of brief points. First, on the question of the definition of "public office holder", it is quite clear in my mind that this covers everyone who is an employee of the federal Government. The reason the committee in its report recommended that everyone be covered lies in the fact that in the United States of America the law states that lobbying activity only occurs when a lobbyist meets an elected person. That, of course, is not good enough. We wanted to include everyone. In my opinion, the Minister has done that. If it can be further clarified, that is all right with me, as long as it covers everyone.

I want to direct a question on a slightly different topic to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I want to congratulate him, by the way, for his excellent speech. I am sure you would want me to do that, Mr. Speaker. I am of the opinion that the Bill should include a provision to disallow such a thing as contingency fees. I think it is an acceptable practice in the legal profession, at least in some provinces, that one cannot charge a contingency fee. In other words one cannot say, "Mr. So-and-so, I will get you an appointment with the Minister to get you a fishing licence, and that will cost you $2,000. However, if you are successful in your application you owe me another $8,000". In the unlikely event that a lobbyist would want to do something like that, I think it should be disallowed, not that any lobbyist would ever want to do anything like that.

I want to ask my colleague whether or not he agrees that that type of a contingency fee would or should be unacceptable since it is not accepted in the legal profession, at least in most provinces. As a matter of fact, it would be disallowed in most of the states of the United States.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, of course the point is that we will never know if there is a contingency fee or if there is a sliding fee, a flat fee, an advance fee, an after-thought fee, or any other kind of fee. We will never know because under the legislation nothing has to be declared. The Hon. Member's point is very well taken.

What has happened in a great many of these cases today in which lobbying firms represent companies to try to get something out of the Government is that some of these firms have formed other lobbying firms and the same people might be lobbying both sides of the same issue. In that case there is an almost assured contingency fee no matter who gets it. What has happened is that they have become quite prominent in Canada. All of the big bidders, such as the telephone companies which are now bidding for these two particular telephone companies which are up for sale in Canada, Northwest Tel and Terra Nova Telecommunications, are putting up big bids. Bids of some $150 million and $200,000 are coming in today. Those great telephone companies have guaranteed profits. I believe they have all hired the same firms, which are all interconnected in the bidding.

If we were to boil it down we should at least know who these companies are. There should be a referee somewhere. One of them has to have the successful bid. But it should be advertised as to how much profit is being made out of it as well as how much money they are charging. Some of these lobbyists are becoming multimillionaires.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, to put it mildly the Bill we are discussing today is long overdue. It was on September 9, 1985, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in an open letter to all Members of Parliament and Senators stated:

> It is a great principle of public administration—I could even say an 'imperative'—that to function effectively the government and the public service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the government must be able to provide constant management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct.

He then went on to outline a number of measures he proposed to bring forward to achieve the aims which he outlined in the paragraph from which I have just quoted, including a new conflict of interest post-employment code for public office holders; instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members; and letters to the Leaders of the Opposition on the subject of ethical standards for MPs and Senators. Later on in the same letter he referred to the conflict of interest code and said:

> Among my first actions upon assuming office was to give the Deputy Prime Minister a mandate to: review existing conflict of interest and post-employment guidelines—

The fifth item on this list was with respect to lobbying legislation. He stated:

> The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date, legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists.

If two and a half years from the time that that letter was written is an early date, then I would hate to think of what a late date would be.

This Bill is not just one to register lobbyists but a response to the very serious problems concerning the activities of many people in public life and their subsequent or related activities. Perhaps the most singular thing about this thirty-third Parliament is that the beginning of 1984 marked the first opportunity for a major change in patronage appointments since 1963.

Those of us who watched the debate held between the leaders of the three political Parties just before the election of 1984 saw the present Prime Minister say to the former Prime Minister, now the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), that he had an option. When he agreed to appoint to the Senate and to other positions Liberals recommended by former Prime Minister Trudeau the Prime Minister said at the time that the Leader of the Official Opposition had an option. He said that he did not have to make those appointments.

The present Prime Minister had an option. He could have brought this legislation and other legislation forward a long time ago. But he did not.

There are two pictures of this Prime Minister. The first version is of him as the Leader of the Opposition going around to Conservative Party meetings entertaining those gatherings by listing the patronage appointments made by the Liberal Governments and saying that the Government he headed would appoint Senators, judges, and we would probably have to wait about a hundred years until anybody but a Conservative received an appointment. Then there was the version that I spoke about a few minutes ago when he said to the present Leader of the Official Opposition that he had an option, he could have done things differently.

This Prime Minister has continued and probably accelerated the rate at which he and his Government have made patronage appointments. He and his Government have handed out patronage appointments and contracts to people without very much concern about whether they are the best, the cheapest or anything else.

I would now like to say something about the comments made by my friend from Newfoundland who spoke before I did. Those of us who are here who were here during the Liberal years remember how Liberal Governments awarded contracts for the building of huge office buildings to various people, including Mr. Teron and Mr. Campeau, without calling for bids. They did extremely well. The Government is now rewarding its friends and some of its former friends with the type of ability given to the new public relations organizations, the new lobby organizations which have grown so quickly under this Conservative Government.

Some of those operators have to be given credit because they have been wise enough not to restrict the membership and the benefits of lobbying organizations only to Conservatives. We see the establishment of the organization headed by a former Conservative Member of Parliament from Newfoundland, later the Premier of Newfoundland, who established Government Consultants International. This organization includes not only Mr. Moores, but Gerry Doucet, former Liberal cabinet Minister, Francis Fox, and others. They have grown. One has to ask, what do they do that permits them to be so successful? How is it that they are able to get the type of clients that they have in such a short period of time?

I wish to put on the record some of their clients. Mercedes-Benz; Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., which was awarded a $3.5 billion contract to build the six navy frigates; Iron Ore Co. of Canada, which was headed by the present Prime Minister before he entered Parliament; American Express Canada; Nabisco Brands Canada. The President of this company in the United States, Ross Johnson, is a Manitoba native who is a very close friend of the Prime Minister. Until recently American Express Canada was represented by a different company, Public Affairs International, and one has to ask why.

Another client is the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. Those of us who were involved, as I was, in opposing the introduction and passage of Bill C-22, which will cost the people of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars over the next few years, know the major efforts done by the lobbyists to line up support for the Government's legislation and to oppose the views expressed by organizations representing consumers, seniors, labour, and some of the farm organizations. We know the lobbying that went on. We know that this company was paid at least $100,000 for its work for the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada.

Gulf and Western, the U.S. based entertainment conglomerate, hired GCI to push for its takeover of the publisher Prentice-Hall Canada. Huang and Danczkay hired this company when it went after and won the contract for a new terminal at the Pearson International Airport. Microtel, the B.C. Telephone subsidiary, along with a subsidiary of CNR called CANAC, is part of a joint venture that won a $255 million contract to provide a new electronic defence system against air attacks. This group hired Mr. Moores as their lobbyist. Bombardier Inc., Messerschmidt-Bolkow-Blohm, and Honeywell Ltd. are only a few illustrations of what this company has been able to do.

One has to ask, what does this company do for its clients? How much does this company cost the Canadian people in excess costs for projects which the Canadian Government funds as a result of its work? It has now opened offices in Montreal and in Toronto. It is associated with firms in Calgary, Paris, and Washington. Canadians need to be concerned about this. It is not the only lobbying firm.

There is Bill Neville who was a consultant and worked for the former Prime Minister, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and for the present Government. He was and still is the President of William Neville and Associates. Recently, he accepted a lucrative appointment as President of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council. We know what his mandate is. He has to try to save the embattled tobacco industry from the advertising ban that the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been pushing. He is supposed to try to persuade the present Finance Minister to stop penalizing smokers in every Budget and to design a long-term strategy for the industry at a time of declining tobacco consumption and increasing public hostility.

Why did he get that appointment? Obviously he got the appointment because the tobacco industry knew the very close relationship between Mr. Neville and members of the Government. Therefore, we have the situation of former Members of Parliament and people close to the Prime Minister who are doing this.

As I have indicated, they are not all Conservatives. There is the former Minister of National Defence in the Liberal Government, Mr. Jean-Jacques Blais, who is now acting on behalf of the nuclear sub makers in France. As I indicated, Francis Fox is now a member of GCI.

We have to be very concerned about the activities of former senior public servants who start acting as lobbyists. I refer to that well known spokesperson and negotiator for this Government on free trade, Mr. Reisman, and his partner James Grandy who are doing extremely well acting as lobbyists for some of the biggest companies in this country. The former Deputy Minister of National Defence, Ramsey Withers, was the Deputy Minister of Transport since 1983. When he leaves the Government he will become GCI's chief operating officer.

These are some of the concerns that we have. We have to wonder why it has taken the Government so long to take action, and how serious it is, given what we have seen happen in recent times.

This legislation goes only a very short distance to meet the problems which we have experienced in recent years, both under the present Conservative Government and in previous years when the Liberal Government was in office. We have had a parliamentary committee look at those questions. It made a very comprehensive study of lobbying, and it proposed a model for lobby registration. The report made in 1987 was unanimous. The committee studied the issue carefully for almost a year, visited lobbying registries in Washington and in Sacramento, California. The committee recommended a lobby registry which would force all paid lobbyists to register and disclose important aspects of their activity, and it would impose severe sanctions on those who did not comply, yet would minimize the bureaucratic paper burden on legitimate interest groups.

We must ask ourselves whether Canadians can trust the Government to provide leadership in the areas of public sector ethics and open government. The track record of the Government suggests that Canadians really have no reason to expect that kind of leadership from the Government.

Does the Bill address the problems I have noted and meet the criteria set by the committee? We do not believe that it does. We believe that it is a start, but it is severely lacking in several respects.

In committee we intend to deal with some of its shortcomings. The first shortcoming concerns the information which Tier I and Tier II lobbyists are supposed to register. If government is to be truly transparent, lobbyists should report not only the subject of their lobbying but their contacts. One possible way to do it was suggested by Paul Cross in his November policy options article. He suggested that lobbyists should be required to report each time the amount of the lobbying campaign, disclosing the objectives of the campaign and the categories of officials to be approached.

We believe that the definition of lobbying should be broadened to include those who initiate and those who are paid to organize mass mailings or advertising campaigns to disseminate material designed to influence government through public opinion.

I am sure I am not alone in a recent experience I had on two questions which Parliament is in the process of discussing. I have received letters, as have other Members, opposing the legislation with regard to prohibiting tobacco advertising. Thousands of letters have come to parliamentarians. Obviously they were not all self-starters. Obviously they were orchestrated, planned, and developed by the tobacco industry and its lobbyists. It was a similar situation for the proposed taxation on life insurance; we received hundreds of letters. We know that these letters were not spontaneous. They were designed, promoted, and pushed by the insurance industry and its lobbyists. These are the kinds of things with which this Bill and similar ones need to deal.

Another problem is the two tier system. We accept that Tier I lobbyists, government relations consultants such as PAI and GCI, disclose their clients and the purpose of their meeting with the Government. However, why should Tier II special interest groups with paid lobbyists on staff be exempt from disclosing such information?

I want to close by simply saying that members of the New Democratic Party intend to give this question critical and careful study when the Bill is sent to committee.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether he has an alternative package on the registration of lobbyists and how his package would differ from that put forward by the Government.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the Hon. Member that I do not have the package because I am not the member of the New Democratic Party who worked on it.

However, I can assure the Hon. Member that in committee our Member or Members will have some very specific proposals to improve this legislation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member has any views on the fact that contingency fees have not been specifically mentioned as being prohibited in this particular piece of legislation. What is his view on the collection of contingency fees for lobbying firms?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if by contingency fees the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) means that firms get a retainer, again I cannot claim detailed knowledge of all aspects of the proposed legislation. However, if it means that a lobbyist or a lobbying firm would receive a retainer from a company, I do not suppose that it is any worse than many other areas in which there are contingency fees.

We would want to look at it in more detail when the committee meets for clause by clause study of the Bill.

Ms. Copps: I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us whether he believes that once lobbyists register it would be important for them to provide a client list.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, I think it is pretty obvious that the public needs to know for whom the lobbyists are acting, for which company, companies, or individuals the lobbyists are working, what they are required to do in that arrangement, and what kind of payment they are receiving. These are obvious needs. Without that kind of information, there is not much purpose in passing the legislation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in relation to the client list, could the Hon. Member tell us whether he feels that fees paid to lobbyists should be recorded and whether they should be updated quarterly or annually?

Mr. Orlikow: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, I think that they should be recorded. How often they should be recorded is a detail to which I have not given much consideration.

It is one of the questions which I think should be worked out during clause by clause discussion of the Bill in committee.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would like to comment on the question of the cooling off period for people who have been active at a senior bureaucratic level, or even as in the case of the former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, at the ministerial level, and have gone to a lobbying firm or lobbying organization to deal on the basis of lobbyists, for profit of course, with the Department for which they previously worked or even supervised.

Does he think that the cooling off period should be graduated the same in all cases? How wide would he cast the net in terms of framing legislation to provide for cooling off periods?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague has raised a very important and interesting question. Thousands of Canadians who were opposed to the passage of Bill C-22—and as I indicated a few moments ago, it will cost Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars in the next few years through increased prescription drug prices—were, to say the least, flabbergasted when they saw the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the Liberal Government, the former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, Mrs. Erola, take on the job as head of the Pharmaceutical Association of Canada at a salary of $100,000 per year.

I would hope that the committee would look at American legislation which prohibits people who hold important policy influencing positions in the federal Government of the United States from becoming lobbyists for—and I am speaking from memory—a period of at least a year.

In the last couple of months, as a result of court cases at least two senior officials in the Reagan administration, Michael Deaver and Lyn Nofziger, have been found guilty of violating their laws and have either been sentenced or are awaiting sentence. That is a section of their law to which I think the committee should give very careful consideration.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question. Did the Hon. Member feel it was wrong for Tommy Douglas to take the position as adviser to Husky Oil or wrong for Ian Deans to take the position offered by the Government as Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as a director of Husky Oil I am sure Mr. Douglas was in no position to influence government policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: As far as Mr. Deans is concerned, I would hope that Members would give some thought to the position which he has taken as head of the Public Service Staff Relations Board which is not political. It is a position that is important because the chairman of that body obviously needs to have the confidence of both the employer, which is the federal Government, and the employees who are members of the various unions which represent federal public servants. Since I believe the Government obviously believed that he could fill that position, I do not see that there is any conflict of interest at all in the appointment or in the proposal that he be appointed or in his acceptance of the appointment.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to get away from some of the diversionary irrelevancies introduced by our Liberal colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parry: I would like the Hon. Member's opinion on substantive matters relating to former successful lobbying, particularly of Liberal Governments, which of course have been notoriously vulnerable to lobbying of any sort, particularly when it was associated with money.

Thinking particularly and quoting from an article by Linda Diebel of The Gazette Ottawa bureau, I think this is from 1985 or 1986, it reads in part:

> Hyundai Auto Canada Inc.'s President Park Sung Hak, won the elimination of planned tariff restrictions on South Korean cars from the 1984 Liberal budget, according to Roy MacLaren, former Minister of State for Finance.

When the Hon. Member is confronted with this sort of effective lobbying of a weak and vacillating Government, could he suggest anything that could be incorporated in the Bill that might control this sort of lobbying from outside the country, which is, as we have seen, something that can be amazingly effective and perhaps even more effective than lobbying from inside the country?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think all of us should be concerned about the way in which federal Governments have encouraged the offshore automobile companies from Japan and South Korea to open plants in Canada. It is obvious that in a few years from now we will have a tremendous surplus capacity. Some plants will close. The plants that will close are not the offshore companies which are only establishing assembly plants but plants from the big three auto makers which have integrated their operations and produced cars and most of the parts but do not just assemble them. We should look at the kind of lobbying which was done on behalf of offshore companies.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the bold-faced hypocrisy of the NDP is unfortunately just too much for even me to stomach.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Do you believe your ears, Mr. Speaker? First, we have the fed question by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). He suggests that the former Minister from Sudbury, Judy Erola, got a job with a Canadian drug company, working for a multinational concern, but it was after the specified period during which she was restricted by her employment as a cabinet Minister. The Member does not mind taking a cheap shot at her, somebody who needed a job. Believe me, after the next election the Hon. Members in the NDP may find themselves in the same situation so they should not be so critical of people needing work. However, when the selfsame Party is confronted with the fact that the ultimate socialist takes a $96,000 a year job to work for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the Public Service Staff Relations Board, somehow that is all right. It is all right that the selfsame Member, only two weeks prior to his hasty exit to collect and cash in on his Loto 6/49, said that he was leaving politics forever because he could not stand the face of the Prime Minister. But when the Prime Minister offered him a job, he grabbed it quicker than you can say "I am not a socialist anymore".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Frankly, I was not intending to respond to that kind of partisan jibe but I could not let that particular cheap shot go unchallenged.

I think we have to return to the question at hand.

An Hon. Member: Who got us away from it?

Ms. Copps: The person who got us away from it was the person who raised the questions concerning the former Member for Sudbury.

We are here today to talk about the infamous Bill C-82. It is an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists. We have to hearken back for a moment and remember on what infamous day was this particular piece of legislation first spoken about in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister published an open letter to all Members and all Senators.

[English]

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that in September, 1985 the Prime Minister came into the House with his new ethics package. He introduced an open letter to all Members and Senators in which he outlined his attack and how he was going to clean up the ethics in government. We had a very hefty document. It was actually englobed in a blue ribbon. In a very proud way the Prime Minister stood up in the House and said "Mr. Speaker, these are the toughest conflict of interest guidelines in the western world. Coupled with those guidelines, I am going to be moving on a law to seek the registration of lobbyists. That was in 1985 before the situation with the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens), and before the litany of scandals which have plagued this Government and after the Prime Minister said that he had already introduced the toughest guidelines in the western world.

What can we draw from that, Mr. Speaker? You can have the toughest criminal code in the world, but it does not stop people from robbing banks. If people want to rob banks or if they want to be dishonest either in government or in the application of their government contacts, they will do so and it will be so. There is no way that any law, however well meaning, can actually legislate the ethical standards of people who are in political life and people who seek to serve the political process in the form of lobbying.

Let us not be bound by the mistaken impression that a Bill, whether it be Bill C-82 or the new conflict of interest guidelines or the old conflict of interest guidelines, which were supposedly the toughest in the western world, can solve the problem. The guidelines are the laws that will lay out the law of the land, but if people want to get around that law they will find ways of doing so. It is our job by way of this particular legislation to make it as difficult as possible for anybody who intends to subvert or to break the intent of the registration of lobbyists. I am not optimistic that the mere introduction of an Act, which we have not yet seen come to fruition—I am glad the Government has finally brought it forward—will solve the problem of lobbyists. In 1985 the Prime Minister said he was going to bring a Bill forward in this regard at the earliest possible opportunity, that speed was of the essence. Here we are in 1988 and we are only now debating the second reading of the said subject.

Let us look at examples where we do have fairly strict regulations governing the registration of lobbyists, namely, in the United States. In the United States, those who represent foreign Governments or lobbying interests are required to register as either a foreign or a paid domestic lobbyist. The current system in the United States consists of political action committees funded in very large measure by either large corporations or large unions which want to promote specific philosophies or policies. No one would want to see the type of political indebtedness that we see in the United States come to Canada. Unfortunately, the new development in lobbying is that Canadian politicians are becoming more and more subject to the artful measures taken by paid lobbyists to get their companies through to a Minister. That is an attempt to subvert the democratic process. It is not an attempt just to provide information but in fact it is an attempt to get a contract through a bureaucrat or a Minister.

An article most recently published in The Globe and Mail's Report on Business by Stevie Cameron entitled "Like Magic" outlines the new direction Canadian lobbying firms are taking. It is a new direction which does not bode well for the democratic and political process in Canada. The author takes some time to examine in the article the work of Government Consultants International and writes:

> What is plain to anyone, however, is that GCI has come a long way very fast. Set up by former Newfoundland premier Frank Moores and former Nova Scotia cabinet minister Gerald Doucet shortly after the Mulroney Conservatives won a landslide victory in 1984, GCI has grown into the country's second-largest lobbying firm with billings in 1986 of $4.5 million.

That in and of itself is not news. What is news is the fact that this newcomer to the lobbying game has brought with it practices that have changed the nature of lobbying in Canada. The article continues:

> Nevertheless, GCI is better known for flouting the traditional rules than for bringing in any of its own.

The article states that previous lobbying firms provided their clients with research, with intelligence and with a sort of users' guide so they could then go to Government and try to get action through the democratic process. The article goes on:

> But where the older companies drew the line at actually pushing the buttons with direct lobbying, GCI has taken off the white gloves and waded right in.
> "We pride ourselves on results," says Ouellet. "The other firms just push a lot of paper at clients, tell them to go away and read it and make their own decisions and appointments." Not GCI.

Unfortunately, in the past few years, we have seen a number of examples of this. Fishermen who wanted to put forward their perspective on an issue with a particular Minister tried and tried through the normal democratic process to get through, but it was not until a phone call came from Mr. Moores that finally action came forward. That says to me that lobbying firms in Canada are going in a new direction.

Instead of telling their clients that since they live in a democracy, they have the same right as every other Canadian to have access to their politicians and Ministers, and instead of advising their clients on how best to get through to their Ministers by contacting local Members of Parliament in their constituencies, by coming to Ottawa and by meeting with bureaucrats, lobbyists are being paid to make the contacts. They use their clubby former political contacts with Ministers to open doors that are not open to the average citizen of Canada.

Frankly, the legislation that is being proposed will do nothing to subvert that very dangerous trend in lobbying. Unfortunately, lobbying in Canada is moving in the direction of the establishment of the political action committees which have been established in the United States. Any of us who have studied the American system will know that once a politician is hostage to a political action committee, he or she no longer has the right to speak out on issues about which he or she feels very strongly because he or she will have to check first with the PAC. Political Parties or individual politicians cannot take independent stands because someone in the background is footing the bills. Unfortunately, we are seeing that kind of thing with lobbying in Canada.

This particular Bill does not deal with the issue of contingency fees. It does not deal with who makes the contacts and who is being contacted. It is fine to tell GCI to register. Of course GCI will register like every other lobby firm will, and the Tier I firms will register in one way and Tier II firms will register in another way. Unless we have access to more information about the very special relationship that is established between a Minister and an employee of GCI, for example, there is no way that the public can have confidence that GCI is not simply selling its political connections to secure contracts and financial and monetary benefits for its clients.

One of the ways to solve that problem would be full disclosure. We might broaden this legislation to provide not only that companies register but that they provide quarterly statements which include their client base, fees paid, and a chronology of when a Minister or the Government is contacted for the purpose of lobbying. Without knowing that the fishermen's union cannot get through to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) but a phone call from Frank Moores will rectify that, there is no way we can stop that kind of abuse. We must call for fuller disclosure.

We certainly support the move to regulate lobbyists. It is a move that has been made necessary as a result of a series of questions that have been raised about the activities of the Government and the way it does business. De facto we need to have the registration of lobbyists. However, the registration of lobbyists in and of itself will not solve the problem, which is that we are travelling down a very slippery slope. The ultimate result of that will be a country that is controlled not by Parliament, not by members of all three political Parties who reach a consensus or at least have an honest and open vote in the House of Commons on the issues, but by people behind the scenes who can pay to have access to Ministers in a way that no ordinary Canadian could ever expect.

We have to be realistic about this. We know that both formally and informally, constituents, businesses, unions and voluntary organizations all seek to improve their own communications with Government. Far be it from us to say that there is no role to be played by lobbying firms. There is a role. It is to educate the customer, the consumer and the constituent as to how he or she may best get his or her particular viewpoint expressed in Parliament.

The lobbyist's role is to say, for example, to the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario or the Canadian Nurses' Association that if it wants to effect change, if it wants to see its profession represented nationally in a way that it is not currently represented, these are the steps that should be followed. It only makes common sense to make these tools available to voluntary organizations as well as paid businesses. However, there is a quantum leap between that kind of initiative and the kind which provides that if a company wants to get a contract, it has to go to Frank Moores because Frank Moores can deliver the Government's dollars. That is not lobbying, that is trading on a political connection which is not available to the public.

The skeleton of a Lobbyists Registration Act is here but it has not been fleshed out. John and Jane Q. public cannot go to the registrar and see: "GCI. Contact: Minister of Fisheries; paid $3,000. Contact: Minister of Agriculture; paid $10,000 re: contract related to tile drainage in southwestern Ontario."

Those are the full disclosures which must be available if we are to have a lobbying Bill worth the paper it is printed on. If it is merely a system which says GCI is a paid lobbying firm, well, we know that already. We do not have to have a registrar, we just have to pick up the Report on Business or The Financial Post, or even The Ottawa Citizen, I believe. Last week The Toronto Star had a very extensive article about connections in Government.

An Hon. Member: Who pays for it?

Ms. Copps: Pardon me? I think the question is: Who pays for it? The answer is, if we do not have it, we pay for it. Without it, the Frank Moores of this country are permitted to go to the Minister and say: "Hey, you did not grant that licence. We have a little problem. We will straighten it out and get the licence." In the long run the people will pay far more dearly if we have a system subject to the pressures of private influence trading than if we have full disclosure through beefed-up legislation on the registration of lobbyists.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have a good Criminal Code in Canada, but this does not prevent bank robbers from taking what they want from the banks. The same is true about any legislation which deals with conflicts of interests, the integrity of politicians and the integrity of companies competing for Government contracts.

We only have the bare bones, without any skin or flesh when we ask companies to register. This is all very well, but what will be the point if we cannot get more information, for instance, how much was paid for a specific contract or which contacts were made in such or such a department or with such or such a minister or public servant?

We know that, in the case of many of the decisions which are made, public servants are quite influential when its comes to the promotion of such or such a project. If we introduce a Bill which simply says that lobbyists will be registered without revealing the related information, we shall only have a shell.

What we are asking and what was proposed by my colleague, the able and hardworking Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who is not here now, but I saw his colleague who . . . I thought that they were both here.

He did a good job himself, and I believe that the Government should include in this Bill the Hon. Member's suggestions about providing more information in relation with the registration of lobbyists because, while we do want to have a Bill, we want it to reflect the fact that, if we do not provide more information, we shall only have the shell of a legislation which would not prevent companies wishing to take advantage of the federal Government and politicians from doing so. We do not want to follow the same path as the United States, because their system does not work that well. American politicians are manipulated by political action committees. We do not want the same to happen in Canada. This is why we ask for amendments which will improve this Bill and develop a new procedure for lobbying in Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Questions or comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I could very easily ignore the allegation by the Hon. Member that I was less than fair. I am sure Mr. Deans, now Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, would give the same kind of consideration to the remarks made about him by the Hon. Member. I rise because what the Hon. Member did was not a disservice to me or to Mr. Deans. If she thinks about it she will know it was a disservice to the whole process of collective bargaining that we have established.

Surely the Hon. Member knows she was talking nonsense when she said Mr. Deans works for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I think those are her words.

Ms. Copps: He was appointed by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nunziata: Sold his soul.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Deans does not work for the Prime Minister. He is the chairman of a quasi-judicial board established by an Act of Parliament with all the independence—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Appointed by the Prime Minister. And Ray Hnatyshyn!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, no, I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Orlikow: As I was saying, he has all the independence that any chairman of such boards has. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Prime Minister or any other member of the Government is trying, has tried or will try to tell the Chairman of the PSSRB what kind of decisions he should make? Of course they have not.

Let us keep in mind that the Parliament of Canada gave to the public servants employed by the Government of Canada the right to bargain collectively. To administer that process, the PSSRB was set up. It is the function of that board, and the Chairman is one of its members, to interpret difficulties and make decisions on questions which arise when there are differences of opinion as to what the Act provides for between the employer, in this case the Treasury Board, and the employees' organizations, whether it be the PSAC or the Professional Institute.

Obviously it is important that the Chairman have the confidence of both the employer and the employees. It is obvious that both parties have confidence in Mr. Deans. Members interested in collective bargaining and the welfare of the people who work for the federal Government will know that the board, with Mr. Deans as chairman, made a number of very important rulings. Those rulings have not been challenged by either the employee or the employer. I say that the attack made on Mr. Deans by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was entirely unwarranted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Order, please. I would like to caution Hon. Members that Mr. Deans is not the subject of the debate. He is not here to defend himself either. Therefore, I ask Hon. Members to stick to the substance of the Bill before us.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to see the NDP rewrite history. I guess the reason I was provoked is that while this is a political forum and we are all engaged in political battle, the one thing about the NDP that drives me crazy is that, boy, they can dish it out but they sure cannot take it.

Mr. Orlikow: I can take anything you can dish out.

Ms. Copps: I did not raise the name of a former Member. It was the NDP who started berating the former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt because she needed a job and went to work for a private company. Frankly, when you leave public life, the job offers are not always flying in fast and furious. I know members of provincial legislatures who have ended up as school janitors.

The NDP raised in this House the issue of the former Minister and I am saying to them: Please do not be so holier than thou and judge the former Hon. Member for Nickel Belt when your own colleague turned around and took an appointment from the Prime Minister not two weeks after he said he was leaving politics because he could not stand the Prime Minister.

We are not talking about the substance of the job. The issue of Members taking jobs was raised by the New Democratic Party. Frankly, if you are prepared to dish it out, you should also be prepared to take it and stop being so sanctimoniously holier than thou.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for her excellent speech and the excellent way in which she responded, particularly to the NDP.

This Bill does not contain any provision which could preclude contingency fees. For example, a lobbyist could charge someone seeking a fishing licence, for example, a fee of $2,000 and also apply a contingency fee, which means the lobbyist could charge an extra $8,000 or $10,000 for successfully gaining that licence. As far as I am concerned, the possibility of charging a contingency fee is wrong.

Mr. Nunziata: It is not allowed in the legal profession.

Mr. Boudria: My distinguished colleague, the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), says that it is not allowed in the legal profession in Ontario, nor should it be.

Does the Hon. Member agree that lobbyists should not be allowed to charge contingency fees, and the type of procedure to which I just referred should be disallowed?

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member makes a good point. The law should discourage the notion that one should receive a bigger reward for securing a contract. The intention of a prohibition on such a contingency fee is that the services of a lobbying firm should be costed on the basis of what they include, not on the basis of how much money a contract secures from the Government.

By permitting contingency fees, it sets the stage for companies to ask for 10 per cent of what a company may get, or kicking in on the basis of how much they succeed in getting from the Government in the way of a contract. I think that is a bad precedent and certainly one which the legal profession in Canada has successfully discouraged. It has led to a situation in Canada where our legal bills in that regard tend to be somewhat less than those in the United States.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in putting my question to the distinguished Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I want to get back to the NDP.

I have been patiently listening to members of the New Democratic Party speak through both sides of their mouths. As all Members know, in this hallowed Chamber, members of the New Democratic Party have mastered the art of speaking out of both sides of their mouths.

Did not the people of Hamilton Mountain put their trust in Mr. Deans to represent them for a term of office? In 1984, the people of Hamilton Mountain voted for Ian Deans as their federal representative in Ottawa. A couple of years later the member breached that trust with them, causing a costly by-election in Hamilton Mountain.

As well, several weeks before, when resigning his seat, he indicated that he was leaving politics because of his disillusionment with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservative Government.

Will the Member explain why he left after serving six years in this place? As she knows, a Member becomes eligible for a pension after serving for six years. In her view, did that have anything to do with his decision to leave this honourable place?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think I agree with the Member who spoke previously and said that we are really not here to talk about individual Members. As one who worked closely with the former member for Hamilton Mountain, I think he was a good member. I believe he served his constituents well.

I disagreed with my colleagues in the NDP this afternoon when they attacked a former Liberal who was defeated in an election and was without a job. Some three years later she took a job with a company. They were criticizing her for taking such a job, yet remained silent about the fact that their former member took a very lucrative job at $96,000 a year, topped off by several pensions. That is why I attack him. I do not intend to attack him on his record as a Member because I believe he was a good Member for the area.

With respect to his decision to leave, there are many times in life that we have to make difficult decisions. Presumably the voters will be the judge of that in the next election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. Does the House wish to call it five o'clock or does it wish to continue questions and comments for two minutes, on the understanding that the Member for Kenora—

Rainy River (Mr. Parry) will have the floor the next time the matter is debated?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I would like her to comment on some events that have occurred in the wonderful Province of Manitoba under the New Democratic Government and which deal with the very area we are discussing today.

Before the former Minister of National Health and Welfare resigned, he was appointed as an executive director of the Manitoba Health Association to lobby his own Government. How does she envision that the new Bill on conflict of interest would guide this individual?

Let me give another example. The New Democratic Party of Manitoba uses a polling firm, with untendered contracts, which is made up of former NDP MLA's. Talk about a conflict of interest. Will the Hon. Member comment on that situation under an NDP regime? Would she also comment on the access to information, which is not even allowed in Manitoba?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I could say that it proves that the NDP are no better than the Tories, but I do not want to be provocative.

This Bill does not deal with the issue of former cabinet Ministers. I believe the current federal legislation prohibits Ministers from being involved in areas that relate to their Department for two years. The conflict of interest code prevents federal Ministers from being involved with their Departments for two years. Therefore, if this person were a Minister subject to federal conflict of interest guidelines, that person could not be appointed to an organization that would be dealing directly with the Government. One assumes they need a code in Manitoba.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

ADVISABILITY OF INTENSIFYING RESEARCH FOR ALTERNATIVES TO REFRIGERANTS

The House resumed from Thursday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants, such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate on the motion of the Liberal Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I would like to state at the outset, and emphasize, as has been done in previous debates on this very motion, the importance the Government places on the issue of ozone depletion. I want Hon. Members to know that this has been exemplified in the role Canada has played in the development of the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer. Canada was the first nation to ratify this in June of 1986 and continues to play a role in the implementation of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, which Canada signed with 23 other nations and the European Economic Community in September of last year. Canada, hopefully, will be among the first nations to ratify, under authority of the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act currently before a legislative committee.

What is really important is that the Government and this House did not really require the Hon. Member to bring forward such a resolution because of the actions initiated by the Government, actions which are light years ahead of the previous administration in recognizing and dealing with a problem of grave importance to all countries. We recognize that the ozone layer is a shared responsibility. Governments, industries, environmental groups and consumer groups all have important roles to play in addressing this serious problem and in our endeavour to correct it.

For example, consumers can play an important role by expressing their preference for products which do not destroy the ozone layer. I believe everyone in the House will recognize that if these products are identified in such a way it will be a beginning. This was clearly demonstrated through consumer groups' involvement in the Government's announcement to ban CFCs and certain aerosol products back in the mid 1970s.

Industry also has accepted its role in the development of environmentally safe products and technologies. At a conference on substitutes and alternatives to CFCs and halons in Washington in January of this year, which Environment Canada co-sponsored with the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the Conservation Foundation, over 700 representatives of industry, environmental groups and Governments from over 20 countries expressed a consensus viewpoint that action is needed now.

Industry described new programs and initiatives to reduce emissions and to find environmentally acceptable substitutes for CFCs and halons. For example, the major producers of these chemicals announced a joint toxicity program costing some $8 million to facilitate information transfer and thereby speed up the process of bringing environmentally acceptable substitutes to the market. I think this also demonstrates that through the actions of this Government and through the actions of private industry, the assimilation of knowledge by everyone interested in doing something about this problem has increased significantly.

What about Government itself? The Hon. Member stated in his motion that Government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to CFCs and refrigerants. Certainly, research is fundamental to getting environmentally safe substitutes to market. But given the potential profits, is this not an activity that would be best left to the private sector? For its part, the international community has created a glowing market opportunity for envirnomentally acceptable substitute chemicals and products by setting consumption reduction targets in the Montreal protocol, and industry has responded by beefing up its research into alternatives.

What is significant about those activities is that the private sector has taken up the challenge. It has in fact very quickly moved because it can see this as being profitable to itself. As consumers have a better understanding of some of the harmful uses of certain chemicals, they would preferably want to purchase something that would not harm the environment.

I would submit that Government can be much more effective in dealing with ozone layer depletion by putting in place a control strategy which will decrease industrial and consumer demand and hence decrease consumption of ozone depleting chemicals. The Government in fact has begun to put together the elements of such a strategy. I would like to describe this briefly in general terms to give an idea of the general direction we are presently considering. Before I do that, let me emphasize once again that Canada is fully committed to ratifying the Montreal protocol and to meeting the reductions set out therein. The Government has had a lot of meaningful discussions in this particular area and it is abundantly clear that we are about to move on this in a very forthright manner.

In order to develop the necessary regulatory controls to accomplish this, we will need the legislative authorities contained in the new Canadian Environmental Protection Act which is currently before a parliamentary committee. I had the privilege of sitting on that committee and listening to the Hon. Member who proposed the motion argue and debate the good and bad points of changing the Bill or making it stronger. I think his interjection is welcomed. It is fair and it is useful, although it is a little out of time now to be debating such a motion. However, the Hon. Member has taken a keen interest in the subject. And I am sure he will continue to do so in that interest.

In order to carry out this analysis, we must gather information from industry concerning the amounts of CFCs and halons produced, consumed and traded. We must also consider the impact on industry and the numbers of jobs that may be affected by any regulatory decision we may take. Members of the oppositions Parties from time to time criticize the Government because an industry may have lay-offs. Let us be honest enough to say that actions taken by this Government and other Governments and businesses in this field around the world may affect someone's job. I think the Government has realized that and has in fact set forth areas of assistance. In return for a greater environmental control of our globe, we are prepared to accept the fact that some jobs may be jeopardized and, if so, I am sure this Government will take the appropriate action to compensate those affected or retrain them.

These activities are well under way and we intend to have a control options report available later this summer or early this fall. This report will be the starting point for our multi-stakeholder consultative process. We will be seeking the views of all concerned parties on the pros and cons of these options.

This is a tremendous step forward for the Government on the environment. I think it is appropriate from time to time for the opposition critics to ask the Government what it is doing. I think, though, in this short 10 minutes, I have been able to demonstrate that we have done a tremendous amount. We are not shirking our responsibility. We are taking the environment, the ozone layer, as a very serious matter. We will continue to do so.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I begin by saying that I do not know what the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said when he first spoke to this Bill. However, I think that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) should see Private Members' Business for what it is. It is not intended to be either an attack on the Government, or an opportunity to get up to be overly defensive about the Government's record or, for that matter, to proclaim the Government's record as one tremendous step after another in the defence of the environment. If you like, Mr. Speaker, the tone of the Hon. Member's remarks was inappropriate to what this hour is about.

He mentioned the Montreal protocol. Certainly we were all glad of the Montreal protocol. Although, according to the judgment of those who are concerned about the ozone layer, it fell short of what we would have liked to see. However, at the time, and still, one has to remark that it was a significant achievement, not just with respect to the ozone layer but with respect to the fact of having an international protocol at all. There are many other matters with respect to which we would love to have an international protocol, whether it be on acid rain or a variety of other environmental problems. We do not have them. So in so far as the Montreal protocol, given its limits, sets a precedent, we hope that it will be precedent-setting and that we will see other global protocols with respect to global environmental problems.

The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake derided the notion that the Government should be involved in the intensification of research with respect to finding substitutes for freon and other substances that release the chlorofluorocarbons that eventually erode the ozone layer. I do not think that it is an inappropriate suggestion on the part of the Hon. Member for Davenport at all. I think that what the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake does not realize is the urgency with which this problem should be viewed.

We have an eroding ozone layer. We have that eroding ozone layer on the basis of what ozone-eroding substances have already made their way up into the atmosphere. That does not count all the CFCs, or chlorofluorocarbons, that are already on the earth's surface at this point in the form of discarded styrofoam cups, discarded or still in use refrigerators, foam cushions, waste solvents, or whatever, and which have yet to make their way up to the point where they pose a threat to the ozone layer. Even if we were to stop the production of these substances today, we would still have a much more serious problem than we have today with ozone layer erosion because, whether we like it or not, all these substances which have not yet made their way to the ozone layer will in fact make their way to the ozone layer eventually.

I think it becomes a matter of not just a technological but a moral urgency. These are the type of questions that test whether or not we have any sense of what I would call intergenerational morality, whether or not for short term, practical or, as in the case of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake, ideological goals we will put off, retard or not promote as much as we should urgent activity with respect to finding a solution to this problem.

Every time we use one of these substances in whatever way that we use them, we are in fact, to the extent that it could be avoided, putting our own personal material convenience ahead of the welfare of people who will come after us, particularly those who may be more vulnerable than most to diseases such as skin cancer. The primary worry is about increased levels of skin cancer. This is what one thinks about when one thinks about the erosion of the ozone layer and the health problems associated with it.

I just wanted to get those points across, especially with respect to the sense of urgency, because it does not appear urgent and, yet it is. It is extremely hard to get people excited about the fact that over the Antarctic there is a hole developing in the ozone layer. But the fact is that the ozone layer problem is not just with respect to the hole in the ozone layer over the Antarctic but it also has to do with the thinning of the ozone everywhere. It is countries such as Canada and people such as Canadians in the northern hemisphere who are most vulnerable to the effects of a thinned ozone layer. It is precisely for that reason that Canada should not only be showing the leadership that it has been but should be showing even more leadership. That will mean making some tough decisions with respect to what I would call environmental substance abuse.

I have mentioned in the House before that we continue to contribute to the problem here ourselves by virtue of the fact that we churn out every day I do not know how many styrofoam cups in this place, in committees and in the House. Everyone is guilty of it. At some of the churches that I have been at one would think that the styrofoam cup is a sacramental object. One cannot escape it. Yet the styrofoam cups which are needlessly being produced and used are not disappearing. They are going somewhere. Somewhere there could be a mountain of styrofoam cups, if we could get them all together. That would be offensive enough in terms of producing useless garbage. But the fact of the matter is that when this useless garbage finally breaks down it releases these CFCs which eventually accumulate at the level of the ozone layer and have the effect of destroying the ozone.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I say it as one who, when I need a cup of coffee around here, uses one of those styrofoam cups myself, so I do not say this self-righteously, that it is a perfect example of how we cannot rely on individual decisions if we want to be environmentally responsible. We have to change the structures. We have to change the products. We have to change the things which are available to people and the choices which are available to them, even if that means restricting choices that are available.

I think we should start right here in the House of Commons with respect to some of these issues. Styrofoam cups is a good place to start. I am sorry for having to bring this in but it is a pet peeve of mine and has been for some 10 years now. It just goes to show how difficult it is to make just one little change in the habits of people.

Because I see you indicating my time is soon to come to an end, Mr. Speaker, at least with respect to my speech, I wish to make a final comment with respect to the question of the environment and jobs. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake referred to this, and I am glad he did. One of the things that has always puzzled me is that in our society it is okay—I do not mean to say that I think it is okay, but it is generally accepted as being okay—that people should lose their jobs because the quarterly profit margin of some corporation is down and it needs to improve its cash flow, its credit rating, or whatever the case may be, so it has to lay off a lot of people. Or someone has bought another plant, bought out a competitor, and the most rational and efficient thing to do is to shut the plant down because it is too old.

I refer to all these excuses that are given all the time by the corporate world, and by Government for that matter, for shutting down plants and laying off people and getting rid of jobs, because by contrast if one suggests for a moment that jobs should be lost, that substantial adjustments should be made in the economy or in any particular sector in order to save the planet, then one is told to forget it. It can be done for the quarterly profit margin of CNR or INCO. To meet the fiscal objectives of the Government all types of people can lose their jobs. But, by God, do not threaten jobs to save the planet Earth, or to ensure sure that there is not an epidemic of skin cancer in the future, or various other things. That would not be a good reason. That would be a lousy reason, according to the conventional wisdom.

I say that it is about time that we stopped putting as much priority as we do on the short-term economic goals and put more priority on long-term environmental goals. If that means that we come into conflict with employment, we have to take that conflict seriously and put the environment first and be prepared to provide the necessary adjustment programs for workers who are affected by those environmental decisions, but we have to start making those environmental decisions or future generations will come to revile us for not taking them into account.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I too take pleasure in rising in this debate in support of the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). The motion states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants, such as freon, which contain chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) that erode the earth's ozone layer.

Chlorofluorocarbons or CFCs, as we all know by now, are used as a coolant in refrigerators, freezers, and air-conditioning units. They are also used in foam, including rigid insulation foam, flexible foam for cushions, and foam for packaging foods. The use of CFCs in aerosols, such as hair spray, was banned in 1980, but CFCs are used extensively in various consumer goods.

The threat posed by CFCs is that they erode the ozone layer in the stratosphere some 20 to 40 kilometres above the earth. Once released into the atmosphere they can last some 60 to 300 years.

As many as Canadians now know, the ozone layer acts as earth's sun screen. It blocks some of the sun's ultraviolet radiation from reaching the surface of the earth and from reaching the bodies of human beings and other animals. If ultraviolet radiation were to be increased, the health of the human species and other species would be seriously affected, as well as the environment in which we live.

As many Members who have spoken in this debate have mentioned, in September, 1987, the UNEP, the United Nations Environment Program sponsored a protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layers. This was signed in Montreal by some 24 nations and the European Economic Community. If ratified and implemented, it would reduce the global consumption of CFCs to 50 per cent of the 1986 level by 1998.

Is this reduction the limit? Certainly this reduction is important, but let us try to put it in perspective. It will partially solve the problem, but how effective will it be in solving the problem which is the depletion of the ozone layer?

Environment Canada has taken as its position that, because of the long life of CFCs in the stratosphere, some 60 to 300 years, a reduction of 85 per cent is required. The 50 per cent reduction that was agreed to in Montreal in September, 1987 is not sufficient. A reduction of 85 per cent would be required to stabilize the levels of ozone in the atmosphere, that is, to ensure that there would be no increase above the levels that are currently present. This view is endorsed by many environmental groups and organizations that advocate the complete elimination as soon as possible.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport, in his remarks in the House emphasized that there is a role for Government, for industry, and for consumers in fighting this question and in trying to seek a reduction and an elimination of the release of CFCs into the atmosphere. Consumers can reduce consumption of products which contain CFCs. There has been considerable public concern for this issue.

Recently, Provigo, a leading grocery chain in Quebec, announced that it would be eliminating the use of packaging which contains CFCs or which release CFCs into the atmosphere. That is an indication that industry will respond to consumer demand and that it is prepared to play a role in this question. The Government could help the consumer make an informed choice by introducing labelling requirements to identify products that contain CFCs.

In addition to that, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport, asked the Government to go beyond the protocol that was signed last September. He asked the Government to ratify the protocol immediately, but also to develop a strategy to reduce the consumption of CFCs to zero, and to launch a global initiative with like-minded Governments to eliminate completely ozone depleting CFCs.

With respect to the particular motion before us, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Member urged or asked that the Government consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants that contain CFCs. This motion was selected by a committee of this House for debate over a five-hour period.

I found it quite remarkable that the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) who spoke earlier this afternoon questioned why the Member for Davenport even brought forward this motion. He stated that the Government was doing all it can and there is really no need to debate this issue. In reply to the Member for Selkirk—Interlake, I would remind him that this motion was selected by a committee of our peers in this House for debate, because they considered it important enough to merit the attention of all Members of this House. They considered it important enough to be debated during Private Members' hour for a five-hour period, at which point there will be a vote on this motion.

In his comments in the House the Hon. Member for Davenport urged that the Government intensify research for non-CFC solutions in a number of areas. Without repeating his suggestions, I urge other Members who participate in the debate to read those suggestions and to try to engage in some kind of constructive debate on his various proposals.

It would seem that this is an ideal opportunity for Hon. Members to make themselves aware of the kind of research which is being conducted in this field. Perhaps they could request the Library of Parliament or the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to provide us with some kind of status report so that we can see what is happening in industry and in government labs and what kind of money is being spent in Canada on researching this issue. Then we could try to compare what we are doing in Canada with what is being done in other countries. I think we all know that a major challenge which we face in Canada is the need to increase our capacity for research.

In conclusion let me indicate that we lack an industrial research base. Very little research and development is conducted in Canada. If there were one area in which Canadians could make a contribution, certainly it would be in ensuring that our industry develops a capacity for producing manufacturing equipment and products which respect our northern environment. Certainly there is an increasing demand in the world for environmentally sound products and manufacturing processes.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport provides opportunity for Members of Parliament to inquire about the state of industrial and governmental research on this subject. Hopefully it will add impetus, as the Hon. Member suggested, to a search for solutions to a problem of great concern to the earth and its inhabitants, human and otherwise.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): As someone pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is urging the Government to consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to substances which harm the ozone layer. Substitute products and technologies play an important role in any effort designed to reduce our dependency on chemicals which adversely affect the ozone layer. The solution to the international problem created by such chemicals depends on these products and technologies.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is fully aware of these facts. After all, if there were no substitute products which are harmless to the environment our society would have to make a decision: to protect the ozone layer, or to go on using a number of products which are absolutely essential to the health and well-being of mankind. Were we forced to make this kind of decision, Mr. Speaker, our efforts to implement programs to protect the ozone layer against the harmful effects of chemical products would be severely curtailed. Indeed it would be tantamount to an unfortunate backward step after the progress recorded in Montreal last September.

Adoption of the Montreal protocol concerning substances which are harmful to the ozone layer is an unmistakable reminder to industry that time has come to find substitutes for chlorofluorocarbons and halons. Fully aware of the trade benefits which will flow from the development of substitute products which are harmless to the environment, the industrial sector will live up to the challenge. Extensive research and development projects are already under way concerning major uses for such products as plastic foams, cooling fluids, substances used in portable air conditioning units and fire extinguishers, sterilizers and cleaning solvents. The public sector has been involved in many aspects of these projects. Mr. Speaker, I would simply give a few examples to the House.

First of all, as mentioned earlier, the Federal Government, together with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Conservation Foundation of the United States, sponsored in Washington, from January 13 to 15, a technical conference on alternative substances. On this occasion, producers and users of these substances, as well as scientists and representatives of regulatory agencies, shared the most recent technical developments on these substances and their marketing.

Also, we continue to promote the use, whenever possible, of alternative substances and technologies which are not detrimental to the environment, in order to reduce the demand for the CFCs and halons, hence their consumption. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government intends also to show leadership in making sure not to indirectly create obstacles to the marketing of alternative products and technologies. We intend therefore to reduce as much as possible in our codes and standards the requirements for CFCs and specific halons.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that the development and marketing of alternative subtances and technologies are only one element in our fight to protect the ozone layer from harmful effects. The Government is determined to assume the responsibilities described in the Montreal Protocol towards future generations and the international community. In this connection, in Canada we have initiated a series of activities. I should like to describe briefly some of these activities.

First of all, we have started to determine the various ways to reduce CFCs and halons consumption. Later on, we shall examine each of the options from the view point of cost and benefits to our society. Meanwhile, we shall consult the interested parties, the so-called interests. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the result of cost-benefit analysis will vary greatly depending on whether there are alternatives to the substances which harm the earth's ozone layer.

Also, we have initiated a major study in the industry in order to determine the levels of production, use and sale of the CFCs, halons and substances containing them. By repeating this study each year, we will be able to monitor market development, the effectiveness of regulatory legislation, as well as determine the effects of alternative substances and technologies available on the market.

Finally, we should not overlook the fact that science should greatly contribute to the solution of the thinning of the ozone layer problem. Mr. Speaker, by allowing the implementation of stringent regulatory measures at the international level, should it become necessary on the basis of scientific data to prevent further depletion of the ozone layer the Montreal Protocol provides that solution.

As to the ozone layer itself, control and research activities, which of necessity are international in scope, are coordinated by the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Program, and the International Commission on Ozone, which comes under the International Council of Scientific Unions. In Canada, there are ozone layer control stations in Toronto, Edmonton, Churchill, Goose Bay and Resolute Bay. Measurements are taken every week from these stations, except the one in Toronto. We are thus making a substantial contribution to the world network for monitoring the ozone layer, which consists of 94 stations, 21 of whom are measuring regularly. The network's activities are coordinated by the WMO. Canada also operates the World Ozone Data Centre for the WMO, and we are responsible for archiving and publishing ozone data from all parts of the world.

Although measuring is now done by satellite, data collected by land-based stations provide a set of basic historical data that are essential in determining how the ozone layer evolves. For more than forty years measurements were taken with a Dobson spectrophotometer, but laboratories at Environment Canada have now developed a new instrument, the Brewer spectrophotometer, which can measure ozone and sulphur dioxide concentrations automatically and also more accurately than was the case before. The Brewer instruments are manufactured by Sci-Tec in Saskatoon, which has sold orders in Sweden, Germany, Belgium and Greece.

On the space shuttle's 41-G Mission, Marc Garneau, the first Canadian astronaut, took along equipment to measure the ozone layer with the help of a solar photometer. The data collected by Mr. Garneau are now being analyzed to establish profiles of ozone, water vapour and aerosol concentrations and to compare these with measurements taken by instruments on board satellites, instruments that cannot be calibrated directly.

Canadian scientists regularly participate in NASA experiments concerning the stratosphere. Many of these experiments involve measuring trace-constituents from large stratospheric balloons that go up to altitudes of 30 to 35 kilometres and from rockets that go up as far as 50 kilometres.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Canadians can be proud of their scientists who are making an important contribution to world research on the ozone layer.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I have been able to shed some light on the very substantial efforts being deployed in the public and private sectors to develop substitutes for CFCs and halons and to make these available as soon as possible. In concluding, I would like to mention that Environment Canada will continue to work very closely with the research and development sector, and that if certain aspects require additional support, the Government will do everything in its power to provide that support.

• (1740)

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join in the debate today. I want to emphasize the importance this Government places on the acute problem of ozone depletion now before us, and the longer term, more chronic problem of man-induced climate change.

I find it interesting to hear today that the Canadian Government has outlined several activities it has embarked upon and some of the support it has had. It is important that we recognize the issues and recognize that the private sector has been involved. Self-interest and concern about the environment are prompting chemical companies to develop compounds as commercial alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons. An article in The Financial Post outlined that in the private sector there is a great deal of involvement by chemical companies which realize the days of widespread use of CFCs are numbered. There are two choices. Either lose a relatively small but lucrative market, or come up with a safer chemical. Clearly companies are coming up with safer chemicals. This approach will help us all. If the market-driven forces can come up with new approaches and give safety to Canadians, then we will all be in a much better shape.

We have to ask ourselves a series of questions in order to form an opinion on this motion. For example, what needs to be done globally to design and implement comprehensive remedial measures to address this issue? What role should Canada continue or start to play internationally that is consistent with our resource capabilities and expertise? What should Canada do domestically to meet the requirements of the Montreal protocol? What can we do domestically in a regulatory sense to go beyond the protocol in order to serve as a role model? How do we facilitate the orderly transition away from these ozone depleting substances so as to avoid any unnecessary unemployment or other social upheavals? How can we work constructively with industry and environmental groups to achieve the previous point? What role can the Canadian Government play domestically and internationally to facilitate the required technology transfer? What research is currently ongoing in what areas? Is it enough? Can it be better co-ordinated or focused? What role can or should the Canadian Government play in the global research effort, taking into account our contributions to the previous points?

In the introduction to my speech I said that the Canadian Government has taken this into account and has provided an environment in our country where private sector companies, as mentioned in The Financial Post report of February 12, 1988, would come forward. I believe that 12 companies now, Canadian companies in the main, have come forward and spoken about sales in the CFC area of $50 million. These sales would provide jobs for Canadians and the forefront of the research and development would help future generations of Canadians. In fact, we feel that over $10 million would be put into research alone in one group for this effort. There is no other sharing of information because the companies are still competing, trying to be the first with the appropriate alternatives and with commercializing them.

This is a very important issue to which the private sector is responding and which we think will be in the best interests of Canadians. The Government has not shirked its responsibility. In fact, Environment Canada officials have just returned from an informal meeting in Paris where strategic discussions took place on the various ways and means of encouraging the earliest possible entry into force date for both the Vienna Convention and the Montreal protocol. To date, 16 countries have ratified the Vienna Convention and three more are expected to ratify it very shortly. The Vienna Convention must enter into force before the Montreal protocol can be brought into being.

There is another reason that the entry into force of this convention is important, notably, the convention's subsidiary requirement to adopt programs for research, systematic observations, scientific and technological co-operation, exchange of information and technological transfer. The entry into force of the convention should create an enhanced focus on a global scale on the research activities into these substitutes.

The Montreal protocol requires 11 ratifications. We expect that these criteria will be met sometime this year, 1988. However, our concern is that we must have all of the world's major producers and consumers ratified to feel secure in the knowledge that the problem has been truly harnessed and a meaningful solution is clearly in the process of implementation.

Let us focus on what role Canada should play in the ongoing research efforts to find environmentally acceptable alternatives for the ozone-depleting substances. Since the early 1970s when concern was first raised about CFCs, the producers of CFCs have been searching for environmentally acceptable alternatives. I have spoken about the growth of research and development in the private sector in this industry by Canadian firms. They have been eager, worked ahead and are truly finding substitutes and alternatives. They have produced some new chemicals that have appeared to be more environmentally acceptable. At this stage they are working on their commercial viability.

This spark of industrial research interest seemed to go through stages where it was on a downturn between 1980 and 1985. With the Vienna Convention and the Montreal protocol this has encouraged research to such an extent that it is now carrying on at an unprecedented rate. We recognize that the same expensive toxicity testing will be required globally. Many of the world's CFC producers have joined in a co-operative research program worth about $8 million. The work will focus predominantly on HCFC 123 and HCFC 134A. These are promising candidates to replace CFCs in refrigeration and other major applications. These chemicals contain a hydrogen atom, are therefore less stable and consequently have little or no ozone layer-depleting potential. The industry expects that this testing program will take about five years, but we are hopeful that it can be completed sooner.

The depth of the research and development of new products and materials shows that the Government is interested in co-operating not just with the Canadian industry but globally with all the companies of the world. We are focusing on this problem and we think that research and development will bode well for the future of Canadians. All the citizens of the world can rest a little easier tonight knowing that this Government, the people of Canada and the top young researchers of Canada are eagerly working within the private sector as well as through government initiatives to ensure that we can work together to defeat this problem which affects our future.

It is good to see Canada in a leadership role in this scientific research and development. We are playing our part and paying our dues. Because we are one of the most scientifically educated nations in the world, our young people have the ideas, the foresight and, above all, the drive and desire to participate in the solving of the world's problems. The ozone problem is clearly one of the major scientific problems that must be addressed. I am very proud that young Canadians have come forward to show the Canadian flag to the world. We indeed will be part of the solution. These new substitutes will enhance our viability and we are just delighted to be involved with that.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be involved in this debate today. I would like to thank my colleagues who have spoken before me for the number of points they have made on this private Member's motion.

The motion is certainly one that, at first blush, all Hon. Members would find generally supportable. Upon further examination, however, I fear that the motion only covers one very small part of what is a major issue facing not only the environmental community but indeed all Canadians.

The motion calls for the Government to consider the advisability of intensifying research for alternatives to refrigerants such as freon which contain chlorofluorocarbons, CFCs, that erode the earth's ozone layer. Indeed, we have heard a number of Hon. Members speak, not only today but in past debates on this motion, and I think they have touched on many good points.

Obviously, whenever one jumps in or out of an air-conditioned vehicle or building, one does not stop to try to understand the way refrigerant coolants work. Certainly few people give serious enough consideration to the impact on the ozone layer and indeed the environment generally of the generically-named chlorofluorocarbons or CFCs.

In closing off this hour of debate tonight, I would like to paraphrase briefly a number of points my colleagues have made. We heard of many of the major events that led up to the Vienna Convention for the protection of the ozone layer and the Montreal protocol. My colleague from London just now spoke eloquently of the role Canada has played in the development of these conventions and protocols and how we are working on international institutional mechanisms that will be in place on a global scale, as well as dealt with the domestic treatment of CFCs.

It has also been pointed out tonight that the need for scientific research is imperative. This need is probably exceeded only by the need for not only Canada but many of the countries of the world to recognize that shortsightedness and narrow self-interest will imperil all of us. The matter should be dealt with appropriately.

We recall the highlights of the conference co-sponsored by Environment Canada held in Washington in January. This conference was important because it identified concretely that there is a tremendous level of activity in the private sector to share research information and to initiate joint programs. As well, there is a sharing of information on current technologies designed to reduce CFCs and halons. Some of these initiatives include substitute chemicals, recycling, recovery and destruction.

The conference showed that producers, researchers, regulators, environmental groups and even the media are discussing the status of the development of product substitutes and alternative processes. Things are moving forward. A platform was also provided at the Washington conference for industry to report on its progress to date, a key element which goes to the heart of the motion that is before us today.

In debate, Hon. Members have talked about the unprecedented level of research that has been done. Research is moving forward on several fronts. We are clearly faced with an environmental problem caused by our ever-growing dependence on so-called halons and CFCs which are currently used in what many consider to be essential uses.

We have identified in a general way the Government's intention to address the obligations in the protocol arising from the Vienna Conference. Our Government has spoken very directly about continuing research efforts to find suitable alternative chemicals. We have pointed out that there are many hurdles remaining. We have discussed the products and the services, the technologies we now need to ensure that there is an orderly transition to more environmentally suitable products.

The Government has attempted to provide Hon. Members in this debate with a sense of our action plan and our timetable for meeting the mandated global reduction requirements for CFCs and halons. We have indicated that we are now doing several things. We are preparing for ratification of the Montreal protocol. We are preparing a comprehensive control options report. As well, we are collecting data to determine the cost benefits and the potential dislocations associated with each of the options to which I have referred. We have stated on numerous occasions that we need the Canadian environmental protection Act, not just to ratify the Montreal protocol but also to implement many of the control actions that will be taken.

In respect of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the message of this Government is clear. There are many things that Government, industry, consumers and indeed all Canadians can and should be doing to remedy the ozone-depletion problem. Every participant in this issue should play a role to some extent.

Industry has an important responsibility, and I have mentioned thus far many of the actions internationally and domestically that the Government has taken. I want to end off this evening by touching briefly on the role of industry.

Because of the market-driven nature of this issue, we have seen the industry has what could only be called a foot race. This foot race involves the development and the technological advancement of alternatives to CFCs. In The Globe and Mail of February, just over a month ago, there was an article entitled "CFC replacement produced". It was a short piece which talked about the work of the Dupont chemical company in developing research in CFC alternatives at its New Jersey plant as well as in Canada.

While it is important that Government continue the work we are undertaking, I think this motion does not go far enough in saying what industry and indeed all Canadians can do.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On an issue as tremendously important as this one, one which affects virtually every human being on this planet, it is interesting to note that not only is the mover of the motion not in the House but there is one opposition Member present for this debate.

Mr. Gormley: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

• (1800)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: First, I do not believe that it is a point of order. If it is the same point of order, I do not know what argument can be made, but I do not think it is a point of order. Members know of course that Members from all Parties have many duties to attend to. For one thing, we have a number of committees sitting at this time. In any case, it is 6 p.m.

Adjournment Debate

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—DISPATCH OF PARLIAMENTARY MISSION TO HAÏTI—CONDITIONS/QUERY WHETHER ARRANGEMENTS MADE TO HOLD TRULY DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS IN HAÏTI

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on February 2 last, I asked the Government whether it was judicious to send a delegation of Canadian parliamentarians to Haïti.

I received then rather vague answers that, I must say, resemble the position of the Canadian Government towards a country that unfortunately has been through very tragic events.

However, I would like now, a month later, to report on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada on the work of the Group of parliamentarians responsible for examining Canada's relations with Haïti. I wish first to thank the officials of the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency for the very useful information they provided us at the briefing meetings we had in Ottawa, which I found not only instructive but quite thorough. We greatly appreciated their willingness to help and most of all their candour.

I would also like to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister for the way he chaired the public hearings in Montreal, on February 16, 17 and 18 last. I was very happy with the calibre and diversity of the submissions we received. I am convinced we should take them into consideration when we draft our report to the Minister.

Earlier this week, the Government published a statement confirming the visit of the Group of paliamentarians to Haïti next week.

The fourth paragraph of the statement says the following:

> During their visit to Haïti, Canadian parliamentarians will have an opportunity to meet with representatives of the new Haïtian Government, unions, business communities, members of organizations for the protection of human rights. They will also have the opportunity to visit aid projects in and outside the capital of Port-au-Prince and to discuss with the beneficiaries of those programs.
> They will also contact members of the Canadian community in Haïti, as well as representatives of international organizations and other countries maintaining relations with Haïti.

It is on the strenght of that program that we think our visit to Haïti will be useful. I will therefore be happy to join that delegation where I will represent the Liberal Party of Canada.

We fully realize that we cannot rewrite recent Haïtian history. We believe that the Haïtian people were ready for democracy but that bloody events have clouded the issue. While recognizing that Mr. Leslie Manigat has come to power in rather special circumstances, we cannot in all fairness hold him responsible for the incidents that happened at the end of 87.

As a witness was saying in Montreal last month, and I quote,

> The record of new President Leslie Manigat speaks in his favor and gives the people some hope as to his competence. However, we must be aware of the political and economic context in which the new President will assume his duties.

I must also say that the electoral program of Mr. Manigat's political organization, which was sent to us and which I reviewed very carefully, is very impressive. And surely if Haïti can implement that program, the Haïtian people will benefit substantially.

Therefore, I hope to hold frank discussions with both government and opposition representatives during my stay in Port-au-Prince. However, I would be greatly disappointed if our parliamentry delegation was unable to meet with the President himself to discuss frankly and informally with him his intentions concerning the enforcement of the Constitution which has been readily and massively supported by the Haïtian people. That new Constitution prescribes some duties to the government and we hope that the new President will comply with them.

Secondly, we will have to inquire directly to the president, the prime minister and senior ministers about Canadian aid. We have been advised by party representatives that the new President disapproved of the proliferation of non-governmental organizations. Yet, a very high percentage is not vitually all of the Canadian aid to Haïti goes through non-governmental organizations and surely if this type of aid is not welcomed, the nature of Canadian aid in that country could be substantially altered.

Finally, in closing I should like to ask this government what are its intentions concerning the enforcement of human rights. Unquestionably, the bloody events of last year were absolutely unfortunate, those responsible of such incidents must be brought before the courts and justice must be done. And it would be interesting and even important to learn from the President himself what he intends to do about that.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as announced yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the parliamentary group responsible for looking at relations between Canada and Haïti will visit Haïti from March 13 to 18, 1988.

After the installation of the new Haïti Government on February 12, our Embassy had an opportunity to discuss with the authorities in charge the details of the group's visit. The Haïtian authorities have requested a slight postponement, to have more time to ready themselves and to sift through their outstanding business. In turn, the Embassy will arrange meetings of parliamentarians with various non-governmental groups, such as representatives of the opposition, churches, labour unions, business groups, human rights organizations. Members of the group also will have an opportunity to visit aid projects, to meet members of the Canadian community and representatives of international organizations and other countries active in Haïti.

This is therefore a major program that should allow the group to proceed with the completion of their mandate. The latter essentially is to observe the situation in Haïti on the aftermath of the January 17 elections, as well as the mechanics of Canadian co-operation, in order to determine how Canada's relations with Haïti can best be organized to meet the Haïtian needs and aspirations, including their desire for a better democratic life.

In fulfilling its mandate, the group will be careful to respect Haïti's internal sovereignty and resist pressures that might lead it to launch into investigations beyond its terms of reference.

In conclusion, I would like to point out there is every appearance that the parliamentary group will visit Haïti in a period of significant calm, after two years of political turmoil in that country. The new Haïtian Government seems to be enjoying favourable conditions to put in place the elements that will allow it to implement its political agenda, but considering the challenges of economic development and prevailing social divisions in Haïti it presumably will not enjoy a long respite. In that context, the comments and recommendations the parliamentary group may want to share with us will rapidly face the test of reality.

CRIMINAL CODE—GUN CONTROL—AMENDMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Over the last few months and years, Mr. Speaker, I have told you a number of stories. I wonder if I have ever told you the story of the Canadian who went to visit the United States. He travelled to Windsor, drove across the border and up to the U.S. Immigration Customs official. The official, of course, asked him the standard question: "Where were you born?". His answer was: "Toronna". That is the way we refer to Toronto in our city. The next question was: "Where are you going?" He said he was going to Detroit. The officer then asked: "Are you carrying a gun?" This particular person was taken aback but he said, no, of course not. The officer reached in his pocket and said: "Here, take mine, because if you are going to Detroit, you will need it".

I do know whether or not you thought that was a humorous story, Mr. Speaker. It was intended to be a little humorous, but it is an illustration of a tragic fact. It is tragic that someone might even consider that one should need a gun if one went to visit Detroit or, indeed, many other places in the United States. I think there are a number of Canadians and other people who feel that that in fact is the case, that it would be essential. They feel that because, after all, some of the crime statistics in the United States are frightening.

For instance, in 1985 in the City of Chicago, which is somewhat comparable in size to the City of Toronto, there were 666 murders as compared to only 61 murders in Toronto. In 1985 in the City of Houston, which is comparable to your city, Mr. Speaker, Montreal, there were 457 murders compared to only 81 in Montreal.

In Washington, D.C. which is comparable to the City of Calgary, there were 147 murders as compared to 16 in Calgary. Milwaukee is roughly about the same size as Winnipeg. It had 68 murders as compared to 16 in Winnipeg. Jacksonville, Florida, is roughly the same size as Edmonton, Alberta. It had some 90 murders in 1985 compared to only 19 in Edmonton.

When I mention Jacksonville, Florida, immediately comes to my mind the fact that last year the State of Florida passed some new gun laws. It passed something called the Concealed Weapons Licensing Act. That particular Act did not in any way restrict the use of or the carrying of hand guns. In fact, it did not control hand guns in any way. What it did was allow all the citizens of Florida to carry hand guns. That is exactly the opposite to some sort of gun-control law. Now everyone in the State of Florida can carry a hand gun, the taxi driver, the local butcher, the baker or candlestick maker. Any of them under this legislation can carry a hand gun, a colt, a magnum, a barretta, you name it, Mr. Speaker, they are all quite legal now in the State of Florida.

I know that the United States Rifle Association thinks that is probably a good idea. After all, it is consistent with the American Constitutional right to bear arms and it is consistent with the concept of fighting crime, I suppose. I suspect at the same time there are many Canadians who would agree with that and who feel that the Florida gun law was probably quite appropriate. Perhaps you do, Mr. Speaker, although I hope not. I am glad to see you shaking your head, Mr. Speaker.

However, there are as you know, Mr. Speaker, rural Canadians, hunters, those in gun clubs—perhaps even the Parliamentary Secretary is a hunter, I do not know, although we will be hearing from him in a minute—who feel that we do not need stricter gun control laws. I was speaking to the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) yesterday and when he heard the mention of gun control laws, his hair stood on end. He was shocked by the very thought.

However, my constituents, at least most of them, being urban constituents feel very strongly that we need some stricter gun control laws in Canada. They feel that way because they know that the police say that there is actually a direct link between the availability of guns and the number of people who get killed or injured each year. They recall and in fact become jittery when they think of the fact that last August Canada Customs seized a shipment of more than 900—more than 900—fully automatic light and heavy machine guns that were bound for Calgary.

These things disturb me, and they disturb my constituents. That is why back on October 14, 1986—not 1987 but 1986—I asked the Minister if he intended to further tighten up our gun control laws and when we could expect this. The Minister's answer at that time, back in October of 1986, was that we could expect those new gun control laws "shortly".

Time passed and in November of 1987, over one year later, I again asked the Minister in the House when was "shortly". What was the Minister's reply? The Minister replied that shortly is soon.

A little later than that, in October of last year, Mr. Nick Austin, who is one of the chief bureaucrats in charge of gun control legislation, was quoted in the newspapers as saying that we could expect gun control legislation to come in before the end of the year. That was 1987. However, he said that more likely it would be "early" in the new year. That was 1988. We are now into March, getting close to being a little later than early.

Tonight I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he can tell my constituents, and Canadians, how shortly is shortly? How soon is soon? How early is early? I hope that we will get a response from the Government to indicate that we will get some action on this matter, and get some action quickly. I would hate to have the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) have to return to the House as a Minister in order to get some action on gun control laws.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), that I do not even own a pellet gun. So, he can rest assured in that respect.

Gun control has a long history in Canada. It has been supported by successive Governments. In fact, the first nation-wide permit system respecting hand guns was introduced in the 1892 Criminal Code. The strict control of hand guns has been a fundamental principle of Canada's gun control program.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) assured the House in a statement on November 3, 1987, the Government does not intend to emulate the State of Florida by relaxing the control of hand guns.

Mr. Speaker, Parliament made major changes to the firearm legislative provisions in its 1977 legislation amending the Criminal Code. Following the implementation of these provisions in 1979, an independant assessment carried out over a three year period brought to light positive changes in the use of firearms and the sentences imposed in criminal matters. For instance, murders committed with firearms as a percentage of all murders are considerably down. The 1986 statistics on homicides published recently by Statistics Canada also demonstrate that Canada's legislative provisions have a positive effect since the proportion of homicides committed with firearms went down from nearly 40 per cent in 1976 to 30,8 per cent in 1986.

The Statistics Canada report also indicates that in 1986, the number of offenses committed with handguns was considerably down compared to the total number of offenses committed with firearms. It went down from an average of 29.3 per cent over the past ten years to 21.7 per cent. In 1986, 39 homicides were committed with handguns in Canada compared with 10,000 in the United States. In other words, the number of murders committed with handguns is 25 times greater in the United States than in Canada, taking into account our respective populations.

As the Minister of Justice has previously indicated, a process of ongoing review and extensive consultations are continuing to identify where amendments to the firearms legislation might be appropriate. However, substantial shifts in the direction of Canada's gun laws are not contemplated.

The Government favours a balanced approach which recognizes the legitimate interests of firearms users and the needs of public safety. In seeking to strike an appropriate balance, the Government has welcomed representations from all those groups and individuals affected by the legislation, and federal and provincial officials have maintained a close collaboration.

At this moment, Mr. Speaker, available evidence suggests that there is no need for changes to Canada's firearms legislation.

In closing, if at any time the Hon. Member for York East has the intention of looking at the application and supervision of the law in Florida, and if he wishes to visit Miami, I will fully support and offer my service to join with him in his visit and to see that in Miami there is not only vice but there is something nice too.

NATIONAL REVENUE—NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE AMENDED/APPLICATION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to interrogate the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Grisé) on the northern tax allowance. I am also a little regretful in that the answer given to me on February 23 when I raised this matter in the House was not that far from satisfactory, and certainly better to receive than some that loosely pass for answers in this place.

Yet it is a matter I have no alternative but to pursue, because the way in which the regulations for the northern residents tax allowance have been framed set up major inequities between neighbouring communities in many parts of the country, although most of the examples that I use will be from my riding.

On a seemingly arbitrary basis some communities which are as isolated and remote, or more isolated and more remote than some of their neighbours, appear to be excluded, while others have been accepted for a tax provision that I think I can say in a non-partisan way is a relatively generous recognition of some of the problems faced in day-to-day living by residents who live in remote and northern areas of our great country.

The Minister did indeed acknowledge in his response that there are some anomalies in the legislation. He noted that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will soon be appointing a committee to explore some of the difficulties that may exist. Last Friday, the Minister of Finance again used the word "soon", which brings up a theme that my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), was expounding on to very good effect. We now have a movement in northwestern Ontario to ask the Government to introduce some equity into this whole situation. Mr. Michael Powers, Mayor of Geraldton and President of Northern Ontario Municipal Association, has asked the Minister for a meeting, as have the presidents of the Thunder Bay Municipal Association and the Kenora District Municipal Association, Wendy Bell and Sandra Walkey respectively, as well as Dick Lyons, Mayor of Fort Frances, and George Boissenault, Mayor of Dryden. These community leaders are concerned about not only the equity of the situation but the effect on their tax base when, by the operation of these distinctions, essentially their residents are being offered a premium of up to $60 per week, in some cases, to move just outside the boundaries of their communities and thus undercut the tax base of the community providing the services.

I should like to refer to some brief examples. Kenora, a principal town in my riding, is too close to Winnipeg to qualify. Vermilion Bay, a much smaller town of some 700 people, 90 kilometres from Kenora, is judged too close to Kenora. Dryden, 140 kilometres from Kenora, is judged too close to Kenora. Yet, when we get to Wabigoon, just 15 kilometres from Dryden, it is judged to be an isolated community. Dinorwic, just 6 kilometres down the road from Wabigoon, does not appear on the list of excluded or included communities. Borups Corners, a hamlet of some 30 people, is absent from either list. Ignace, surely one of the most isolated towns in northwestern Ontario although it is on the Trans-Canada Highway, is judged to be too close to Thunder Bay.

Similarly down in Rainy River, Fort Frances, the major community, is excluded but communities to the west, to the east, and to the north of Fort Frances are all judged to be eligible. Nestor Falls, whose students face the longest bus ride anywhere in North America to get to high school, is also excluded, as is its neighbour, Sioux Narrows, another community which falls to about 300 people in the winter-time. Both these communities have the majority of their adult residents—and I think it is somewhere in the 80 per cent range—signing petitions against this inequitable application.

My constituents and many other Canadians in remote communities want to know if the operations of the Minister's committee will be open to the public, if the conclusions will be retroactive, and primarily, of course, if the communities I have listed, as the Minister asked me to, in letters to him last Monday and Tuesday will be admitted to the operation of the northern residents' tax allowance.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious question on a very serious issue to which I will try to reply in the few minutes I have left, because the Sergeant-at-Arms is on a very strict schedule.

For several years before 1986, some fortunate people benefitted from special tax privileges granted to the residents of isolated areas. They had the good fortune of working for corporations or businesses that were able to give their employees generous tax-exempt benefits under income tax remission orders.

When the Government introduced northern tax allowances in 1986, it marked the beginning of a new era of tax fairness for people residing in remore regions. Now not only employees but also retired people, independent workers and all taxpayers living in remote regions may ask for tax deductions to offset the high cost of living in these regions.

It is a sizeable deduction, Mr. Speaker, but more important still, it is much fairer. This legislative measure ensures that nobody becomes entitled to unduly generous tax benefits related to employment conditions in remote regions while others do not. This legislation ensures equitable tax treatment for everyone as all residents of a community designated by regulation can claim a deduction on the basis of their place of residence.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we all agree with the concept of tax equity for the residents of remote areas. However, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has raised the issue of tax inequity. He has vigorously stated that the list of remote communities whose residents are eligible to the deduction does not include certain communities which could be considered remote and which do not receive such tax benefits. He demands that changes be made to the list.

[English]

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) has already conceded that the legislation creates anomalies in some areas. In addition, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will soon be appointing Members to a committee that will explore these anomalies with a view to fine tuning the legislation. In the interim, Mr. Speaker, you have the commitment of the Government that it will exercise compassion, sound judgment and administrative accommodation wherever possible. Across this country, employees of the tax department are routinely checking and rechecking the designation of communities to ensure fair treatment for all taxpayers.

The Government is on the right track. We are confident that the premises of the legislation are on target. Any review of their intent will serve to show that, indeed, this Government has succeeded in bringing far greater equity to the tax system than existed previously.

I have every sympathy for people in communities adjacent to eligible communities, who may feel they are being treated unfairly. That certainly is not our intention.

You may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that when members of Mr. Wilson's task force have completed their study and made their conclusions known to the Government, all Canadians will be convinced we took note of their concerns and responded to their expectancies, which has always been the basic feature of this Conservative Government's policy.

MASSEY FERGUSON PLANT CLOSURE—FORMER EMPLOYEES' HEALTH CARE COVERAGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this Government is always first in line to take credit for job creation—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: —but it is amazing how quickly the Ministers disappear when there are job losses.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the Government is first in line to take the credit but it is ducking in terms of the blame. There were 1,300 jobs lost at Firestone and there was not a word from the Minister who should have been responsible. There were 3,000 jobs lost at Massey Ferguson in Brantford. We now know that 5,000 workers, their families, their widows, have now lost their health care coverage as a result of the decision by the company to terminate Green Shield benefits.

I call upon the Prime Minister to follow up on a request from Bob White—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —the president of the United Auto Workers. As a 20 per cent shareholder in the company the Government should immediately reinstate Green Shield benefits so widows who have drug costs of over $200 a month, retired people, and people on disability benefits, can at least rest assured that they will continue to have health care coverage.

Stand in line for the blame because in this particular case, as a 20 per cent shareholder, the federal Government has a responsibility to continue that health care coverage for those 5,000 people.

HUMAN RIGHTS

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL—"HUMAN RIGHTS NOW" CAMPAIGN

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, this week marks a major event for Amnesty International as it begins its "Human Rights Now" campaign here at home and around the world.

"Human Rights Now" heralds the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as adopted by the United Nations and which defines the rights of humanity.

This campaign will strive to raise mankind's awareness and recognition of every individual's entitlement to human rights, and to encourage the Governments of the world to strengthen their domestic and international protection of human rights.

Today in Ottawa and across the country Amnesty International groups will be approaching Canadians to sign petitions promoting human rights which will then be circulated worldwide throughout the campaign. We as Canadians should applaud and support Amnesty International in its ongoing battle to protect our human rights and to improve the quality of life for people the world over.

ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM SOUGHT FOR UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been promising an adjustment program to help laid off older workers since the 1986 Budget, but nothing has been implemented.

Major lay-offs resulting from plant closures in cities such as Hamilton, Brantford, and now Winnipeg-St. Boniface have produced no specific help for these employees. At the Canada Packers plant in St. Boniface a detailed study by two university professors, Jeremy Hull and Jim Silver, done after last year's lay-offs, shows that four months later fully 35 per cent of former employees were jobless and that those with jobs were earning an average of $3 an hour less than when they worked for Canada Packers.

A second group of 400 workers at Canada Packers will be laid off March 31, and fully one-third of these are 55 years of age and older.

The treatment of these workers, many of whom will have great difficulty finding alternative work, is a test case for the Government. If there is no help for St. Boniface, Brantford and Hamilton now, what hope is there for the thousands of workers who will lose similar production jobs under the proposed free trade deal?

I call on the Government to make good on its promises to older Canadian workers by putting in place a meaningful—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

MANITOBA—IMPENDING ELECTION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Manitoba are going to be asking the following questions of Mr. Pawley's defunct Government. Were the NDP able to manage auto insurance?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Holtmann: Were the NDP able to manage workmen's compensation?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Holtmann: Were the NDP able to manage Manitoba's telephone system?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Holtmann: Were the NDP able to manage Manitoba's Crown corporations?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Holtmann: Was Mr. Pawley able to speak for Manitoba on free trade?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Holtmann: The socialists here in this House have been crying: "Call an election on free trade! Call an election on free trade! Call an election!" Well, my socialist friends, you've got one! You can all come to Manitoba to share the blame for Pawley's flickering flame.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-ISRAEL FRIENDSHIP DAY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, today is Canada-Israel Friendship Day, a day that celebrates the friendship that has existed between Canada and Israel for the past 40 years. Since 1948 Canada has constantly supported Israel's right to exist as an independent state within recognized boundaries, and has played a leading role in peace-keeping and moderating in the Middle East.

This friendship has resulted in closer cultural and economic ties, including the establishment of a Joint Economic Committee on Trade and Economic Expansion, a Canada-Israel Cultural Foundation, and a Chair in Canadian Studies at Hebrew University. This special relationship with Israel has existed alongside and has been balanced by Canada's friendly relations with Arab nations in the Middle East.

Recently, Canadians have become more and more disturbed by the situation in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. I ask Israel as a long-time friend to use restraint in its dealings with Palestinians in the occupied territories. These violent actions aimed at crushing Palestinian unrest are contrary to the spirit and traditions of the Israeli nation.

Just as no lasting peace can be achieved without the recognition of Israel, there must also be recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people to a homeland. The animosity is real, and certainly presents a seemingly insurmountable obstacle to a lasting peace. But men and women of moderation must continue to work toward that goal. The Israel-Egypt agreement is a good example that the seemingly impossible can happen when historical enemies settle their disputes at a negotiating table.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Liberal Party financial contributors are aware that since 1984 the Liberal Party has used its election campaign contributions to pay nearly $3,000 a month, or $35,000 a year, to provide their Leader with an apartment in Toronto's fashionable Avenue Road and St. Clair district.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and members of the Official Opposition continually call for other Members of Parliament and other political Parties to be open, honest, and conflict free.

What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker!

MANITOBA—TRIBUTE TO RETIRING PREMIER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House are aware that the Pawley Government in Manitoba lost a Budget vote last night. Members of the House are probably not aware that half an hour ago Mr. Pawley announced that he will not be the Premier in the Province of Manitoba—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Everybody in this House came into politics to try to do something for our country. When a statement like this is being made, Members might pay some respect to someone else who undoubtedly was trying to do something for his country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: I do believe that Members of this House in all Parties, and Manitobans, wish to congratulate Mr. Pawley on his achievements, and wish to accept the fact that he has contributed many, many years of service to the people of Manitoba and to the people of Canada.

Not all of us have agreed on the issues, but that does not take away from the contribution. On behalf of our Party, and on behalf of other Members of the House, I do wish to offer our congratulations to Mr. Pawley for his courageous decision and for his contributions to all Manitobans.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN LIBERALS AND CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, when the present Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner) was a member of the Government, he helped to accumulate this country's many billions of dollars of debts.

During the three years he has been Leader of the Opposition, his Party has yet to pay debts totalling $5 million, although that same Party is paying its Leader's rent, which amounts to $35,000 annually.

On our side of the House, for the first time ever a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is paying his own meal expenses, and also for the first time, the Prime Minister is not letting taxpayers pay the cost of renovating his official residence.

Mr. Speaker, the difference is that Conservatives know how to administer this country, while the Liberals only get it deeper in debt.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION STRIKE—REFUSAL OF BENEFITS FOR OTHER LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of this House the plight of the striking steel workers at the Sydney Steel Corporation. This House should know that because of the strike some workers have been laid off. Workers such as those in Locals 6516 and 6537 are not eligible for strike pay from the union because their locals are not on strike.

Two days ago the members in both locals were informed that the Unemployment Insurance Commission refuses to pay them their unemployment insurance benefits because they do not qualify under Section 44(1) of the Act. All of the players involved in this decision know that this is not a good enough reason to refuse benefits; it is a technicality. These men are not working due to circumstances beyond their control. They have families to care for and they need financial assistance while the strike continues.

I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to overrule this ridiculous decision and to release the unemployment insurance cheques to those needy workers. It is time for the Government of Canada to show some compassion and economic leadership and provide justice to those needy workers.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF THE MEMBER FOR ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, when Vote No. 314 was being taken in the House on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) asked: "Where is Mr. St-Julien?" Mr. Speaker, I was in Amos and Val d'Or to deal with unemployment and immigration problems and to prepare a request for a new federal program to promote mining exploration. I also had a few meetings with business people in connection with the Challenge '88 student employment program.

That same day I also received a very moving telephone call from Moses Idlout in Inukjuak. His five-year old daughter, Sarah, had to go to the dentist in Povungnituk right away, and he could not get a seat on the plane. After several phone calls between four and six that afternoon, I managed to get him a seat on the plane for the next day.

Mr. Speaker, as you can imagine, March 3 was a very busy day for me in Abitibi, and I was anxious to get home to my daughter Saunya and my wife Diane.

UNITED STATES ACTION AFFECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA FISH PROCESSORS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As a result of American harassment, 7,500 fish processing jobs in British Columbia are now at stake. Canadians have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in ensuring the high quality of our fish, and now the Americans are trying to reap the benefit of that investment.

Could the Prime Minister explain why the United States continues to harass our fish processors, when the Prime Minister promised that such harassment would end with the trade deal? Could he explain why his trade deal with the United States does nothing to preserve the jobs of these thousands of fish processors in British Columbia?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on September 28, 1987, in Toronto the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said, and I quote: "I believe the better route to greater prosperity, more jobs, and greater independence is a global trade strategy for Canada. The principal mechanism for realizing that strategy is the GATT".

What he refers to as harassment by the United States is an action that was taken under the GATT. This Government, which believes in the importance of international trading arrangements and believes profoundly in the importance of the GATT—

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot have it both ways, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —believes that the Leader of the Opposition, if I may quote his Whip, "cannot have it both ways". Either he is for the GATT or he is against the GATT.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are for the GATT, and we continue to support the GATT process.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the question is to demonstrate to the people of British Columbia and Canadians on both coasts that the Government gave away our rights under the GATT.

Before the Prime Minister signed this deal, Canada could have fought back by imposing an export tax on fish leaving the country, but now, under the trade deal, Canada is no longer allowed to impose an export tax to protect our fish processers.

I cite page 55 of the so-called trade agreement, Article 408, which prohibits Canada now imposing the type of tax that would have protected West Coast and East Coast fish processors under GATT.

Under existing rules, that is to say, prior to the trade agreement, Canada could honour international law, keep 7,500 fish processing jobs in British Columbia, ensure the high quality of our fish, and recoup Canadian investment.

Under the proposed trade deal, Canada has yielded its rights under GATT and its remedies under GATT by Article 408 of the trade agreement.

Why did the Prime Minister agree to such a deal which throws away thousands of jobs in the West Coast food and fish processing industries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am a western Canadian all the time, not simply a western Canadian by constituency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As a western Canadian who represents a constituency involved in natural resource production, I am certainly well aware of the capacity of Governments to trade away the interests of Canadian resource industries under the GATT. That is what Liberal Governments, including Liberal Governments of which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was a member, did for years. That is one of the reasons this Government took a new approach to international trade, including an approach that respects the importance of those industries to Canada. Canada has available to it remedies that will be effective in the negotiations under way with regard to the processing industry in British Columbia.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I shouldn't respond to that cheap shot, but I will.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to remind the right hon. gentleman that my family has been settled in British Columbia since 1896 in the Kootenay Valley.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And that the people of Vancouver Quadra gave me the right to speak on behalf of British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In any event, Mr. Speaker, I take pride in speaking in this House as a Canadian and I expect the right hon. gentleman to reply as a Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

SITUATION OF EAST COAST FISH PROCESSORS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister gave away our ability to protect our West Coast fish processors, the ability we had under GATT before he signed his deal, he likes to pretend that at least he has protected East Coast fish processors.

Is it not true that under the trade deal, and I refer the right hon. gentleman again to the trade deal, the Americans now have the right to challenge internationally the New Brunswick Fish Processing Act, the Newfoundland Fish Inspection Act, the Nova Scotia Fisheries Act and the Prince Edward Island Fish Inspection Act? Why doesn't this deal prohibit the Americans from challenging our East Coast legislation and from harassing our East Coast fish processors? Why did this Government and this Prime Minister give up our rights when the Americans have not yielded any of their rights?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has me on one point. I was not there in 1896.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I also know that, while the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a Member for Vancouver, when he took it upon himself to attack the free trade agreement he did not do that in Vancouver—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, I did.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —he went to Toronto where he thought the attack might be popular.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Government of Canada has the capacity to deal with legitimate interests of Atlantic Canada and of the Pacific Coast. We intend to protect them. We have in the past.

There are discussions under way now with regard to the fish processing industry on the West Coast. We expect that we will be able not only to respect our obligations under the GATT but to serve the legitimate interests of industries in British Columbia as well.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, East Coast fishermen not only have problems with American protectionism but also with French overfishing. It was announced yesterday that France and Canada would resume talks on the problems associated with offshore Newfoundland. A French ministry spokesman said: "There seems to have been some movement in the Canadian position".

I ask whatever Minister is going to answer a question on this subject today. What kind of a movement has taken place in the Canadian Government's position? Is it the kind of movement that we have become used to by this Government when dealing with foreign powers? Has the Government bent over backwards once again to the Government of France?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman's Party was in office in 1972 the movement we experienced was illustrated by the old game, "Hoist your sails and run".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That is what the Liberals did in 1972 with the treaty into which they entered.

In the last several days it has been agreed that the negotiators will meet together again to discuss what is the best procedure to try to reach a negotiated settlement of the dispute on fisheries and boundary matters. This is the same position we have been taking since October 9 when the French representatives left the talks. We will not bend over backwards for anyone but Canadians. In fact we will not even bend over Chirac-wards.

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: France is not the only problem. Starting in April, we will have to say: "Le petit homard pour les Canadiens ... et le gros homard pour les Américains". A nice "poisson d'avril"!

[English]

LOBSTER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): I ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: And that was French, in case he is wondering. I ask the Minister of Fisheries now, the real Minister of Fisheries, if he realizes that for the first time in Canadian history, next month with the opening of the lobster season it will be illegal to export minimum-sized lobsters, legal in Canada, to the eastern United States because of new state laws? What will the Government do about it? It will not just be the lobsters that will be boiled alive this season but the Canadian lobster fishermen.

[Translation]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is definitely "petit homard"!

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I try to keep up with my hon. colleague. Under U.S. federal law an exemption has been granted to undersized lobsters exported into the United States for some time by way of a certification recognizing that some of our lobsters grow smaller than theirs. The Hon. Member realizes that.

Some State Governments, and particularly the Government of Massachusetts, have increased the carapace size to something larger than our normal Canadian size for export of canners and small lobsters, representing some 3 per cent of all lobsters exported to the United States. The Government of Canada filed an official note of protest with the U.S. Government in January to seek an enforcement of the federal law which requires that Canadian exports by certification be allowed entry into the U.S. market.

REQUEST THAT CANADA VETO PRELIMINARY DECISION ON WEST COAST FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question about the GATT ruling. I think we can all recognize that the Americans had a legitimate complaint about Canadian fish processors buying American roe herring. This $2-million to $3-million grievance should have been settled easily and amicably by the two countries, especially considering the Government's boast about better relations with the Americans. Instead, the Americans appealed to GATT whose preliminary ruling now threatens the $750-million industry and 4,000 jobs.

If Canada is not able to negotiate a satisfactory bilateral agreement with the United States in Washington today and tomorrow, why will Canada not exercise its rights under GATT, rights that are legitimate under the GATT agreement, to veto the preliminary decision?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am pleased if the NDP is coming back to the support of GATT that has been the policy it has pretended to claim most of the time. I would be pleased if that is the case.

The Hon. Member indicated that there are negotiations under way now on this issue. Those negotiations have fully involved the industry, the provinces, and others who are concerned. The Hon. Member would understand that it is prudent for this country, operating in full respect of our GATT obligations and our GATT opportunities, to take this a step at a time. We are involved today in negotiations and we expect to be involved tomorrow in those negotiations. I am sure the Hon. Member hopes that those negotiations will prove positive.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell the House, the representatives of the fishing industry who are here in the House today, and the people of British Columbia that if these negotiations are not concluded in a way that is satisfactory to Canada, Canada will exercise its options under the GATT to veto that preliminary ruling? That is what we want to hear.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand the question and I understand the interest. The Hon. Member will understand that we are involved in discussions now and we are hopeful that those discussions will prove productive. If something occurs that causes us to have to contemplate another step, we will then contemplate that other step.

• (1430)

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF DECISION AND OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister can answer this. Article 1205 of the trade agreement under "GATT Rights" says:

> The Parties retain their rights and obligations under GATT and agreements negotiated under the GATT with respect to matters exempt from this Part under Articles 1203 and 1204.

Article 1203 is the section which purports to exempt Atlantic provinces' regulations regarding fisheries.

Will the Minister agree that if this GATT ruling is allowed to stand, and if this free trade agreement goes into effect, in effect our entire Atlantic coast fishery as well as the Pacific coast fishery will be jeopardized and the Americans will have their goal of a continental resource policy put into place by the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a very extreme statement and one that is not accurate. However, I think the Hon. Member is asking if we will indicate today, a day on which we are involved in negotiations, a course of action as to what we might do if the negotiations today do not succeed.

We are anticipating that the negotiations in which we are involved today and tomorrow will succeed. If they do not, we will then consider the next step that would be open to us. That is a very reasonable position and I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to suggest anything that might prejudice our capacity to succeed in the negotiations now under way.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—EFFECT OF PROPOSED PICTOU COUNTY COAL MINE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who is also responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Minister will know that a fundamental principle in fighting regional disparity is that one does not take jobs from one poor community to give to another poor community.

Would the Minister explain to the House why the Government of Canada is in the process of considering the possibility of funding Westray Coal company with $75 million of taxpayers' money to build a coal mine in Pictou County, thereby displacing 275 jobs at the Lingan Colliery in Cape Breton which is Crown corporation owned and operated by the Government of Canada? Would the Minister explain that to the people of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will explain that to the Hon. Member with great pleasure. First, the question was why we are considering the request. It is incumbent upon any Government which receives a request in due form to consider the request. The request is under study within the Department. I have had representations from people in Cape Breton, from the Premier of the Province, from MLAs, and from MPs who are concerned about the project. All of those are being kept on file and will be considered before any decision is made.

We have no intention of shifting jobs from DEVCO to a new project which as yet has to be determined to be financially viable. For that matter, I have not seen the final results of the analysis. I have not received any recommendations. The request was made in due form, as I said, and we are looking at it. That is all I can tell the Hon. Member.

I have also been in touch, obviously, with the board of directors and the Chairman of DEVCO in order to hear their opinions about that potential development. No decision has been made and the study has not even been completed.

CROWN CORPORATION'S REPORT ON POSSIBLE JOB DISPLACEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister will know that the federal Crown corporation, DEVCO, submitted a 12-page report to the Government of Nova Scotia and to senior officials of his Department no later than December 8, 1987, wherein it is spelled out very clearly that the decision of which they were informed, which was imminent in terms of the funding of the particular new mine for Pictou County, would cause a displacement of 275 jobs at the Lingan Colliery, reduce DEVCO revenue by $20 million, cost the taxpayers of Canada $90 million, and have negative effects on the economy of Nova Scotia.

I ask, on behalf of the miners, on behalf of the families, and on behalf of the people of Cape Breton that the Minister give an undertaking today that he will not fund this proposal in Pictou County.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the undertaking I am willing to give today to this House and to my hon. colleague is that we will do in this case what we have done in every other case. We will look after the workers. We will ensure that the workers' rights are protected in the same way as we have just done in the case of Hawker Siddeley, as we committed to do. That was done yesterday. We will do that in this case.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE REPORT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COSTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister confirm that the Government was aware of a U.S. Congressional Committee report that said that the multinational drug companies misrepresented the facts in claiming that much higher drug prices were required for research and development, and that the Government nevertheless followed the drug company line, hook, line and sinker, in passing Bill C-22 without a provision requiring the production of research and development in this country?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Waxman report to which the Hon. Member is referring is a study done in the United States. The Hon. Member knows that the period of exclusivity in the United States is 17 years. It is 10 in Canada. The Hon. Member knows that Bill C-22 provides for commitment to research and development. There is no such commitment in the United States. The Hon. Member also knows that in Bill C-22 there happens to be—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the problem that Hon. Members are having. I am sure they understand Bill C-22 because they lobbied against its benefits for Canadians.

Is the Hon. Member telling this House that Canada should wait to do something for Canadians until the Americans have made a decision on what they would like to do? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, that is a strange answer from the Hon. Minister. His question as to whether we understand the Bill is most peculiar and is a demonstration that he does not understand it at all if he thinks it includes a provision for research and development to be produced in this country.

PROVISIONS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we understand that it is the position of the Government that after review this legislation can be changed and that, in the event of failure to adhere to the pricing requirements, exclusivity might be withdrawn.

How will that be possible? Is it not true that the United States Government will be in a position to retaliate under Article 20(11) of the trade pact in respect to nullification and impairment of an advantage by an American firm in Canada on that account?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I really fail to understand the concern of the New Democratic Party that we should wait to do something for Canadians until the Americans make a decision.

Mr. Althouse: Listen to the question.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member does not understand the benefits of Bill C-22. I have in my hand examples of the research and development that was brought about by Bill C-22. It includes $10 million at Burroughs Wellcome in Montreal, $45 million at Nordic Laboratories, and $70 million in new research and development in Halifax and Saint John. In Calgary and Edmonton there was $132 million.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED UNITED NATIONS STUDY OF TREATIES WITH INDIGENOUS PEOPLES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week, in response to a question asked in this House on a proposed United Nations study of treaties with indigenous peoples, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Canada was "looking for, working for, and arguing for a broader mandate for" this study.

• (1440)

Is the Minister aware that what Canada is actually arguing for in Geneva is not a broader mandate, but rather the mere preparation of an outline to look at the potential utility of these treaties, and all of that to be considered further 12 months hence? To me that looks like a watering down, a shift away from the issue and deliberate delay.

Will the Minister not agree, and will he tell the House what Canada is actually doing in Geneva on this important issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree. I indicated to the House earlier, as the Hon. Member said, what Canada is doing in Geneva.

I remind the Hon. Member, and I think he knows the facts better than other Members of the House might, that the proposal now before the commission in Geneva would have more limited rather than broader application. Canada believes that the actions by that commission should have broader application rather than more limited application.

CANADA'S HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have good evidence to the contrary, but I ask the Minister if it is not really the case that Canada fears international scrutiny of our Indian treaties because we know such scrutiny will reveal that our record on human rights in this country is not everything we want the world to believe it is?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Ministers of this Government, from the Prime Minister right through the Cabinet, have frequently indicated that we believe improvements have to be made in the status of aboriginal people in this country. We are acting to accomplish those improvements.

When an issue comes before the UN in the normal way, in other words, when avenues in Canada are exhausted, and the UN comes to a judgment, as was the case in one particular instance, a former Government, of which the Hon. Member was a part, did not act to correct the problem. This Government acted.

COMPOSITION OF PANEL DISCUSSING CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. To celebrate International Women's Day a coalition of groups involving the whole spectrum of the movement across Ontario invited the Prime Minister to be a panelist on a discussion of the free trade agreement. We understand he was not available and I can sympathize because I understand what his timetable must be like. However, it seems to me that when the Prime Minister can authorize $15 million to sell an agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry but that was not a question, that was a statement. The Hon. Member on a supplementary.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, why could the Prime Minister not find a single Conservative politician to be on the panel to discuss the trade agreement with the women of Ontario?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the comment of my hon. friend. There is a story today in the Star-Phoenix about an independent study dated March 8, 1988, which says that free trade is seen as being very beneficial to women. The study was done by Katie McMillan and says: "Far from sounding an economic death knell for working women, the agreement will result in more women getting better jobs at higher salaries."

That has been the record of economic development of this Government. More than 1,100,000 new jobs have been created, and in excess of 55 per cent of those jobs went directly to women. That is progress, that is social justice, and the free trade agreement is going to enhance and expand upon that to ensure greater justice for women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain on a very short question.

NON-REPRESENTATION OF GOVERNMENT ON PANEL

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister authorized $15 million to sell an agreement. Why could a politician not be on the panel to defend this agreement to the women of Ontario? Please answer the question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: Send somebody. Anybody.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If we send anybody, we will send you, Les.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be happy to try to answer. My hon. friend has a panel she would like us to appear on. I have not—

Ms. Dewar: You were asked.

Mr. Mulroney: Pardon me?

Ms. Dewar: You were asked by the Ontario women.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to give an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I think in the interests of other Hon. Members we must proceed. The Hon. Member for Egmont.

ENERGY

EXPORTS OF ELECTRICAL ENERGY—PROTECTION REQUEST FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the federal regulation plan, or I guess we could call it the deregulation plan, for energy.

The Minister will be aware that on March 6, 1986, the Government asked for a review of the export regulations. The review panel has made its recommendations. Therefore, will the Minister assure this House today, and all Prince Edward Islanders, that the proposed amendments to the National Energy Board Act regulating the export of electrical energy will not alter the fundamental rights contained in the second price test as it is now interpreted, which protects the interests of power consuming provinces such as Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in several sectors, including the energy sector, the Government's policy is to use deregulation to expand trading in those sectors.

Furthermore, the Government is committed to carrying out this process in consultation with the groups concerned. In the case of electric power, the Government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are engaged in frequent consultations with the Minister's provincial counterparts, and as part of this process, next week I will have the pleasure of meeting with the Minister from Prince Edward Island to discuss these matters.

[English]

PRICE PAID FOR ELECTRICITY BY POWER IMPORTING PROVINCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite satisfied with that answer. I want assurances from the Minister today, as indeed do all Prince Edward Islanders, that any changes in the regulations governing the export of electricity will ensure that power importing provinces such as Prince Edward Island will not pay a higher price for their electricity from exporting provinces than would be charged to American energy consumers. That is the assurance we want today. It is incumbent upon him to ensure that this does not happen under free trade or anything else.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the specific problems of Prince Edward Island will be given due consideration by the Government.

MARINE ATLANTIC

USE OF EMPLOYEE'S PERSONAL IDENTIFICATION NUMBER ON ENVELOPE CONTAINING MAIL FROM NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, an employee of Marine Atlantic recently complained that material sent to him by the NDP contained his personal identification number. He feels that is a breach of confidentiality and an infringement upon his democratic rights.

Is the Minister of Transport aware of this incident and, if so, has he investigated it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had this matter investigated. As the Hon. Member said, an employee of Marine Atlantic received a two-page letter from the Leader of the NDP attacking free trade and asking him to send an enclosed card to the Prime Minister, postage free. It also asked him to fill in a second card and send it back to the Leader of the NDP, postage free. The NDP never pay for anything, you will notice, Mr. Speaker.

We had this piece of political propaganda looked into. On the envelope there was the personal identification number of the person involved. I am assured by Marine Atlantic that they did not release his name, nor would they release any names of their employees to any political Party. It so happens that the company had to supply the union involved with the union dues deduction listings.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That listing has a label with the number on it. I have advised that particular employee to apply to union officials to discover why possibly they were supplying names and identification numbers to the Leader of the NDP so he could send out unsolicited propaganda, untrue propaganda, inaccurate propaganda, to people who work for Marine Atlantic, encouraging them to bog up the mails with free cards directed to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the NDP.

INDUSTRY

MASSEY PLANT CLOSURE—WORKERS' HEALTH CARE BENEFITS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. As of Monday, health care benefits for some 4,000 Massey workers, retirees and spouses were cancelled. Given that the Government of Canada is one of three major shareholders in this company, will the Government, in this difficult interim period, move at once to cover the health costs for these people? Will it show some compassion at least this once?

• (1450)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not accept the latter part of the question, "at least this once". I think once again this Government will show all its compassion. We are aware there are some problems concerning health care benefits with the workers of this particular company. I have instructed my officials to look into it. Not through my instructions, but I understand as well that officials of the Government of Ontario are looking into this very matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a short supplemental.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR WORKERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given, once more, the Government's major shareholding position in this company, will it take responsibility as well for setting up immediately adjustment assistance programs for the workers who are affected in this particular, very difficult case?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member no doubt knows, the situation that exists at the moment is not a new problem. Governments have been struggling with this situation since 1981. The former Government dealt with the situation in its way to try to redress the problem. The latest attempt by Governments to do something was in 1986. It has now proven to be futile. It has been proven we cannot get that company on a viable course.

What we as a Government have done is deal with the pension issue, to ensure the company would live up to the undertakings it made in 1986 vis-à-vis the pensions of the workers of that corporation.

We are also in negotiation at the moment with the Province of Ontario in terms of older worker adjustment programs. We hope those negotiations will be concluded soon so that the workers, and I emphasize the workers, not the corporation—we have done everything we can there—are fully protected. That is what this Government stands for and that is what this Government will fight for.

PORTS

DEVELOPMENT OF OLD PORT OF MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in November 1986, the Committee chaired by Mr. Laurent Picard published its recommendations for the development of Greater Montreal. These recommendations included asking the federal Government to grant funds for the development of the Vieux-Port in Montreal and to locate the space agency in that city.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion responded to these recommendations with some well-meaning platitudes, and the business community, the unions and even the Mayor of Montreal were disappointed in the federal Government's failure to act decisively.

My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Could the Minister inform the House whether the Conservative Government is going to announce the injection of the $140 million needed to develop the Vieux-Port in Montreal before or during the election campaign?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to answer the Hon. Member's question, and I may say that recently, I had several meetings with my Quebec counterpart who is responsible for the Montreal area, Mr. Daniel Johnson, and with Mayor Jean Doré.

As you know, the development of the Vieux-Port in Montreal involves all three levels of government, which are working together on this project.

Saturday, before he left for Europe on an economic promotion tour, the Quebec Minister called to let me know that matters were proceeding to his satisfaction.

We have been ready to act for months. We have to wait—

Mr. Malépart: Liar!

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary, please.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been giving the same answer for months. Here is my supplementary: The Mayor of Montreal and Quebec authorities disagree with the statements and the federal Government—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but this is not a supplementary question.

The Hon. Member for Beaches.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DISABILITY BENEFITS—DELAYS IN DEALING WITH APPEALS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, there have been delays of a year or more between the time an individual lodges an appeal against a decision to disqualify him or her from receipt of Canada Pension disability benefits, and the hearing on an appeal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Could the Minister tell the House and those Canadians what steps he has taken to speed up those appeal processes because—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: —as the Minister must know, many, if not most of the appellants, are living in real financial stress—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can understand there may be disagreement between the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and a few of his colleagues, but other Hon. Members have not yet had an opportunity to ask questions. Let us extend some courtesy to other Members.

The Hon. Member for Beaches.

[English]

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will repeat the question. As the Minister knows, there are many, many appellants who are appealing decisions of disqualification for Canada Pension Plan disability benefits. Many of those individuals' appeals have taken a year or more even to be heard. Could the Minister advise the House what steps he has taken to have these appeals speeded up? As he knows, many of these individuals are suffering real financial hardship as a result.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member says is correct. It goes back, I think, to a number of points. I know of both his interest in the field and his understanding of it.

The Canada Pension Plan and the disability clauses in the Canada Pension Plan, as he knows, were structured very tightly at the time of the passage of the Act. The point was that Governments of the day, both provincial and federal, did not want the disability clauses to reflect, for instance, on Workers' Compensation, both rulings and programs, within the given provinces.

I have also not been satisfied with the appeal process on two counts. First, to my mind there is lack or a gap within Canadian programs in terms of disability. That has been discussed many times in this House and in various pension reform committees. Second, is the matter of—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Order, Jake!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I have asked the Pension Review Commission to give me some recommendations as to how we can speed up that process. I do not have that report.

Mr. Speaker: Given the hour, I am going to proceed with some single questions. The Hon. Member for Trinity.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

FOREIGN OWNED FIRMS—PURCHASE OF CANADIAN MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS' INTERESTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the current trend for foreign owned firms in Canada to buy out their Canadian minority shareholders. Does the Minister agree with this activity, which runs counter to previous government policy of encouraging foreign businesses to have Canadian shareholders thus obliging public disclosure and accountability in Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to examine how important that phenomenon is in the over-all investment intentions in Canada. It was just announced today that 17 per cent increased investment is expected next year in the Canadian economy. This is the highest rate in the last nine years. The vast preponderance of that investment will be different from what the Hon. Member suggests. However, I will be glad to look at the magnitude of the question she asks.

Miss Nicholson: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Just a single question, I am sorry.

MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

GUIDELINES ON ETHICAL CONDUCT OF RESEARCH INVOLVING HUMAN SUBJECTS

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have in my hand the Guidelines on Research Involving Human Subjects released on March 3 by the Medical Research Council of Canada. On page 11 it states: "—at this time the use of Guidelines within the current body of law is sufficient to reinforce the ethical conduct of research with human subjects."

Did the Minister play any role in the development of these guidelines? Does he consider this to be an adequate framework for those decisions that must be taken for the protection of human life rather than treating human life as a commodity?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines to which the Hon. Member refers were developed by the Medical Research Council. That council has an ethics committee.

As well, we have convened in Canada under the G-7 umbrella a study on ethical questions relating to research involving human subjects. In fact, the report of that committee was taken by the Prime Minister to the Summit in Venice.

There is a larger question involved here. I know that the Hon. Member has been very active in the area of whether, from an ethical point of view and from a public policy point of view, Canadians should examine this question in a larger or in a broader context, not only within the medical community but without. I have had a fair amount of representation not only from the Member of Parliament but from others that we should consider that. The Government has not taken a decision on that specific part.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the time for Question Period has ended.

I understand that there is a question of privilege to be raised by the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret).

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

MR. DE COTRET—REQUEST THAT THE MEMBER FOR MONTREAL—SAINTE-MARIE WITHDRAW HIS WORDS

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I was replying as honestly and as fully as possible, within the time limits provided during the Oral Question period, to a question asked by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the language used by the Hon. Member was at the very least unparliamentary. Mr. Speaker, I consider myself an honourable and honest man, and I have tried to reply to questions asked in this House with all the honesty and the knowledge available to me.

Twice, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has called me a liar.

An Hon. Member: As usual!

Mr. de Cotret: I ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie at least to withdraw his offensive and unfair comments and also to apologize to the House, because I find such an occurrence unpleasant and an affront to all Members of this House.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the truth would hurt the Minister. However, Mr. Speaker, out of respect for yourself and for the rest of this House, I shall withdraw my comments, but I maintain what I think because I know that I was right!

PRIVILEGE

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO MPS—DIFFERENCE IN TIMING

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at 3 p.m. the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) rose to allege a question of privilege relating to an announcement which had been issued by my office on Monday morning, March 7. This announcement related to a number of important conservation measures designed to reduce the toll taken of our precious lower Georgia Strait Chinook salmon stocks in British Columbia waters.

I can assure the Hon. Member that this announcement was finalized at about 8 a.m., Vancouver time, and on my instructions members of my staff distributed through the parliamentary mail system copies of this release to all Members of Parliament from British Columbia. I only regret that the Hon. Member did not receive it until 4 p.m. It was placed in the mail system at 11.30 a.m. here in Ottawa and distributed to all British Columbia Members of Parliament.

Next time we will call the Hon. Member in advance so that he knows that such an announcement is coming.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The facts are that there were five Conservative Members of Parliament who received advance notice of this statement. In the past it has been the practice of the Minister's Department to courier notices to the official critic of the New Democratic Party. This was not done. Simply to place something in the mail and expect that staff will pick it up after the mail has been cleared first thing in the morning is not a satisfactory procedure.

I thank the Minister for his assurance that in the future such items will be hand delivered and that we will receive advance copies.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, not to prolong the debate, I believe I indicated that the copy was finalized about 8 a.m., Vancouver time, or 11 a.m. Ottawa time, because of some changes that I requested upon viewing it on the Sunday evening. It was distributed equitably to all Members' offices some two and a half hours before the actual announcement was made in Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) raised this matter on an earlier occasion. I thank the Minister for coming into the Chamber to explain the facts as he sees them. I hope that on other occasions every effort will be made, as it clearly ought to be, to ensure that all Hon. Members receive communications from Departments at the same time. I think that that closes the matter.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act and another Act in consequence thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURE

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think Your Honour would find that there would be unanimous consent to move the motion which I will read and to pass it immediately. I move:

> That, the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the necessary staff be authorized to travel to Washington, D.C. from March 21 to 24, 1988 inclusive for the purpose of continuing its ongoing study of the current international crisis in grain and oilseed prices.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I just want to be sure that the record will indicate that there was unanimous consent to move the motion without notice, and then unanimous consent to the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DESIGNATION REGARDING NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition bearing a substantial number of signatures from the people of Dubreuilville, which is a small isolated community in northern Ontario. The petitioners know what it is to be underserviced. They have no bus service, no resident doctor or dentist, no bank, no lawyer or social workers.

• (1510)

They call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to broaden the regulations so that they may be included under the northern tax credit benefit program.

FISHERIES—OPPOSITION TO GATT RULING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition that was drawn up, certified, and signed today. It is from Canadian citizens who live in Prince Rupert, Surrey, Richmond, Vancouver, Powell River, Ucluelet, and in other places.

The petitioners point out that the preliminary GATT ruling has struck down Canadian export restrictions on unprocessed salmon and herring; that the majority of the West Coast fishing industry is opposed to the adoption of the ruling knowing that it would put the 4,000 jobs of B.C. shore workers in jeopardy.

The petitioners point out that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have all failed to give assurances that they will do all in their power to stop the adoption of the GATT ruling. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has even refused to meet with members of the fishing industry lobby who are presently in Ottawa.

Today officials of the Department of External Affairs are proceeding to Washington to try to negotiate a bilateral agreement, but are unlikely to reach a satisfactory solution due to the U.S. intransigence.

Therefore, the undersigned citizens of Canada now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present the petition asking that Parliament fully support the West Coast fishing industry in its fight to stop the adoption of the GATT decision and take unilateral action to protect the jobs of Canadian workers, and retain our sovereign right to make decisions on allocating Canadian resources with the Government of Canada.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by residents of communities in the Northwest Territories, namely, Lake Harbour, Coral Harbour, Rankin Inlet, Cape Dorset, Sachs Harbour, and Fort Smith.

The petitioners are seriously concerned about the potential environmental results if plutonium is flown over Canada's north, as well as the potential contribution to nuclear proliferation.

The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize the dangers of such flights and say no to plutonium flights over northern Canadian territory.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of western Canadian constituents who believe that the Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada by which to conclude a trade deal. The petitioners believe that the trade deal that was negotiated threatens the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty.

The petitioners have many other concerns, Mr. Speaker, which you can read later. I will simply say that they are calling upon Parliament to dissolve to enable the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the trade deal during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO MANUFACTURE AND DISTRIBUTION OF FILM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions on two different topics.

First, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the Abbey district in Saskatchewan. They are concerned about a National Film Board of Canada film entitled The Kid Who Couldn't Miss. They note that the film has done grievous damage to the reputation of Air Marshall Bishop, caused grief to the surviving members of his family, and demeaned Canada as a nation in the sacrifice and heroism of Canadian veterans everywhere.

Therefore, the petitioners urge that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) instruct the National Film Board to take action to have the National Film Board production of The Kid Who Couldn't Miss removed from distribution because it defames without proof whatsoever, Billy Bishop, V.C., Canada's most highly decorated serviceman.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): In addition, I have 13 petitions from all over southwestern Saskatchewan. They are signed by more than 600 producers who note that, whereas farmers have for many years enjoyed the right to block average their income, and whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in December, 1987 indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain five-year block averaging for farmers, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on Tax Reform, stage one.

IRDP—WEST EDMONTON MALL FANTASYLAND PROJECT

Question No. 214—Mr. Kaplan:

What application of funds was made or undertaken to be made of the contribution under the Industrial and Regional Development Act to the West Edmonton Mall Fantasyland project?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): During Phase II of the West Edmonton Mall development, a number of amusement rides had been introduced.

The applications submitted under the Industrial and Regional Development Program (IRDP), which applied to part of the Phase III development, was provided to expand this concept and to incorporate an amusement park, a water park, a marine world and a miniature golf course to function as major tourist attractions and to be promoted as "Fantasyland".

The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion contribution of $5 million was offered toward eligible capital costs including construction sitework for the Fantasyland portion of the Mall; equipment (rides) and animals; fees (engineering, architects) and other associated costs.

IRDP contributions are eligible for payment after 50 per cent of eligible assets have been in operation for 30 continuous working days. This occurred on April 15, 1986, and a payment claim was received from the applicant.

Standard claim auditing procedures found $56.1 million of these costs to be eligible under the contribution agreement; accordingly a cheque for $4.5 million was requisitioned representing the amount of the departmental contribution less a 10 per cent holdback.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to make significant progress towards eliminating discrimination against women, especially in areas such as employment equity, child care, and programs for native women.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to the concerns of Canadian women. This is certainly a week when we celebrate the accomplishments of women. We must also recognize that many of the things that women have been fighting for over the years are not being realized.

Among the temporary special measures taken by the Government to eliminate discrimination against women is the adoption of employment equity legislation in June, 1986, legislation responding to the recommendations of Judge Rosalie Abella's landmark study on equality in employment. Judge Abella certainly did give us many recommendations that were worth while. Unfortunately, those recommendations were not taken into total consideration when the legislation was brought forward.

What does the legislation actually do? Does it truly respond to Judge Abella's recommendations? Does it work effectively to eliminate employment discrimination against women? The first major problem with the Act is that there is no real enforcement mechanism. Judge Abella had stated that, to be adequately enforced, the implementation of employment equity requires an independent agency to oversee the development of equity plans.

What does the legislation give us in terms of enforcement powers? First, it requires employers to file annual reports on the workplace composition, occupations, and salary ranges. While there is a penalty for not filing a report, it is too minimal to be of consequence for many of the large firms covered by the legislation, and could simply be absorbed by these firms as a business cost. There is no penalty, however, for failure to improve the workplace in terms of employment equity. An employer could file the same report year after year and not be penalized for workplace discrimination.

Companies are also required to prepare action plans with goals and timetables to remove discriminatory practices. These action plans are held strictly confidential—don't let anybody know how we are discriminating, keep it a secret. There is no penalty for failing to develop an action plan. Employers are not required to file their action plans with the CEIC or with the Human Rights Commission, or even to post their plans in the workplace.

Employers are required to evaluate their "employment practices" and to institute "positive policies and practices" to achieve an equitable representation of target groups in the workplace. Neither "employment practices", nor "positive policies and practices" are defined in the legislation. This makes it difficult to determine what constitutes employment discrimination, and what constitutes effective redress for employment discrimination.

The second major problem with the present legislation is that it makes no reference to equal pay for work of equal value. Such groups as the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Canadian Labour Congress have urged that pay equity legislation be included in any employment equity plan. Judge Abella stated, "Equal pay is an integral element in the implementation of employment equity. It must be included in any undertaking by employers to make the practices in the workplace more equitable".

There has been for almost 10 years a federal law under which employers are required to pay the same salary to both men and women assuming similar functions.

However, redress of pay inequities depends essentially on complaints lodged by individual employees who feel discriminated against. But it is the employers who are responsible for eliminating pay disparities based on sex.

As for the Federal Government, it must introduce legislation positively requiring employers to implement a pay equity program. We know that if we rely on voluntary measures, women's salaries will be slow to improve.

• (1520)

Last summer the Canadian Human Rights Commission called upon the Government to introduce stronger pay equity legislation, specifically legislation which would require employers to work with employee representatives to implement pay equity measures.

We have seen the success of this collective approach to pay equity in Hamilton where an historic collective agreement was recently signed. The Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Hamilton School Board agreed to work together to develop a plan which would close the wage gap between female cleaners and male caretakers within two years. Hopefully this agreement opened the door for other public service unions to bargain pay equity.

The role of bargaining and negotiation is neglected in the Government's employment equity legislation. While the employer is required to consult with the employee, there is no obligation to negotiate. I point out the large difference between consultation and negotiation. As the Hamilton example illustrates, unions have been at the forefront of the struggle for employment equity. The invaluable knowledge of the workplace that the union can provide must be recognized by requiring employers to negotiate with union representatives.

The present legislation is also flawed by its limited application to federal government contractors. It only applies to firms with 100 or more employees. It only applies if the contract exceeds $200,000, and it does not apply to construction. Firms seeking government contracts must only indicate their intention to implement the employment equity guidelines. They are not required to submit annual reports or workplace data. They are subject to random inspections to monitor compliance. No effective mechanism exists to enforce this legislation.

Finally, the legislation does not even apply to all federal departments. The Government claims that the departments not covered by the Act are already protected by adequate affirmative action plans. However, we know that these programs are totally management controlled. Many of them are not subject to bargaining under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Most seek to promote some women to higher management positions, while they ignore the majority of women workers. Like the employment equity and equal pay legislation, they lack the force and commitment of law.

Judge Abella recommended that all federally regulated employers be included under the legislation, but the Government chose to ignore her recommendations. When we are talking about the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women which the Minister tabled in the House, certainly Judge Abella's report was mentioned. However, what was not mentioned was the lack of legislation being introduced which was comprehensive enough to follow through on the recommendations.

Also I would like to look at some of the problems in employment equity, job training, and job re-entry. We know that the Canadian Jobs Strategy program specifically designed for women—they were the target group—required women to have spent at least three years out of the labour force to be eligible for training. This does not make any sense whatsoever. Many women who want to re-enter the labour force have spent much time in part-time, low-paying jobs. They had to do things to keep body and soul together and, therefore, they do not comply with the terms of reference for job re-entry.

We are also very concerned about the lack of language training for immigrant women. We know that a lawsuit has been launched respecting discrimination against immigrant women who are not allowed to take language training. The Government has not seen fit to say that these women are eligible for language training even though they were certainly welcomed into the country. We look forward to them being a strong component of the country. We say, in terms of Canadian policies, that we want immigrant women to add to the fabric and rich culture of the country, yet we discriminate against them and do not allow them to have language training. The tensions and anxiety we put on these women are very difficult to document in that they are so vast. They need language skills and communications skills just to get their report cards from school, to talk to teachers, for home and school interviews, or to know what kinds of jobs are available to them in the workforce. It really is important, for them to become part of society, to be eligible for language training, but the Government has refused to incorporate that.

I would like to deal with single mothers who have looked at job re-entry. Very often these women find themselves in a situation where they have not been out of the workforce for three years. Often they are the sole bread-winners, whether they be separated, divorced, or widowed, yet they find themselves not eligible for job re-entry. I was dismayed when I heard at committee just this past week that it was thought that the eligibility recommendations should not be changed because it would cost too much. Well, it will cost much more if we relegate these women to a role of poverty and inability to participate in the labour force for many years. It is a very crucial matter as far as the whole program of Canadian Jobs Strategy is concerned.

The skills and shortage program of Canadian Jobs Strategy had a female participation rate of 8.5 per cent. It is a program with an abundance of non-traditional occupations for women. Clearly women continue to face substantial barriers in entering into non-traditional occupations, evidenced in regional employment and immigration managers being committed to the equity principle in differing degrees. Some of it is very discriminatory and very subjective depending upon region. Some areas of the country are encouraging women to enter non-traditional jobs and better paying occupations. However, there is need for an over-all national strategy to tackle the occupational segregation of women.

We also recognize that in some areas it is an attitudinal problem and that we must encourage women by telling them that there is a future for them and that they do not have to stay in low-paying jobs.

I should like to refer to some of the facts in the report of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. For example, in Newfoundland, four out of eleven re-entry programs teach office skills. In New Brunswick, all four re-entry projects teach home-making, clerical, and word processing skills. Six out of ten entry projects are for training to women in sales, food services and hospitality. I must say those are not non-traditional occupations. In Toronto, Ontario, 15 out of 16 re-entry projects were in sales, clerical occupations and health services. It is all very well to say that we are encouraging women to take on non-traditional occupations but the reality is that it is not happening. In British Columbia and the Yukon 36 per cent of job development training provided to women was in the clerical, sales and service occupations. Nearly every one of the 20 re-entry projects was related to office skills and clerical occupations. Women are being ghettoized into job occupations that are low paying. They have little opportunity for advancement and they experience a very high rate of unemployment.

We have heard a lot from the Government about the kind of child care needed in the country. A task force was appointed but we did not need another task force. We knew that there were two million children in need of child care. The task force recommended the phasing in of a publicly funded universally accessible cost shared system between the federal and provincial Governments. We also know that that is not what the Government's progress report is to the United Nations. The Government said that it had appointed a task force, but the Government ignored the recommendations of the task force which makes a very different kind of report. Had the report been complete it would have shown the recommendations of the task force and what the possibilities for Canadian children of the future could have been. However, the national strategy on child care will not provide Canadian families with affordable, accessible quality child care.

We know that the child care strategy which the Conservative Government is talking about is a strategy that will allow for tax benefits to people who already have their children in child care. There are no national standards to ensure quality. Yet the task force cried out for the kind of national standards that would guarantee that people who are giving care to our children will be trained in what pre-school child development is all about.

[Translation]

The federal Government rejected the principle for national objectives determination in its child care plan. It is therefore quite possible day care services offered Canadian families will differ from one province to the next.

[English]

Fifty per cent of the strategy budget is allocated toward tax measures, such as the doubling of the child tax deduction which does not benefit any low-income families. Tax measures also do not result in an increase in day care spaces. There will remain important shortages in day care spaces. That surely is what the priority must be.

The Government intends to create 200,000 new day care spaces over seven years. This rate of increase is actually less than what we saw in 1974. The program limits the rate of increase of funds presently being put forward by the Government. It seems to me it is very clear that the Government is implementing the kind of legislation that will meet the needs of women of Canada. There has been absolutely no action on extended parental leave.

The New Democrats had hoped some measures would be initiated regarding long leaves of absence for parents who could then stay home with their young children. The Conservatives' strategy does not take that valid option into consideration for working parents.

Canadian families deserve a better national child care program. The New Democrats have asked that parents be offered real choices.

An equitable system must create a greater number of places for 1,800,000 children who need them. It will also have to try to help parents by allowing them to take long parental leaves of absence and by providing for more community resources.

If we really do believe that there will be equality for women in this country we have to recognize that there will be economic equality. There will never be economic equality if we do not provide adequate child care. To the present, at least in technology, women are the only ones who can produce children. If women can be competitive in the workforce outside the home it is imperative that they enter into the labour force without having concerns of what is happening to their children.

There are far too many latchkey children in the country today. There are far too many children who are being looked after in informal care. Some of it is very good but a lot of it is informal care and we do not really recognize the downfalls and the downsides until we see the results and we have had some tragedies already. We know the most crucial years are the first eight years of a child's life. We have known that for a long time. We are requiring child care workers to have two years post-secondary training, so surely we should not expect these people to work below the poverty line, but that is what is happening in Canada today.

If the Government is sincere about Canadian women having equal opportunity with men, the wage gap must be closed. We have to make sure that real opportunities and real choices for women are there in the labour force. We have to implement a child care program with national objectives and national quality in its delivery. If the Government were sincere, it would have implemented some of these things instead of shadow boxing with the legislation.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify for the Hon. Member some things about the jobs strategy and employment equity that I think are important for the House to recognize.

In terms of employment equity, I think the Hon. Member does know that Rosie Abella, who prepared the very excellent employment equity report, was very pleased with the quick response of the Government to many of her recommendations. Our employment equity initiative continues to go into effect, I think, in a very positive way. In terms of trying to expand it or change it, let me say that mandatory annual reports are due in June, 1988 and those reports will be available to the public. The failure to report can result in a $50,000 fine. I have been in business a long time, Mr. Speaker, and no company likes to pay that kind of a fine nor does a company like to be publicly embarrassed.

Under the federal contractors program, as of January 1, 1988, approximately 900 companies had signed certificates. By January 30, 44 companies had been reviewed and arrangements were in progress to review an additional 24 companies in accordance with on site compliance. This is very active. Companies that do not comply can be barred from future contracts. Bids from two companies which refused to comply have been rejected. We have been fortunate because we found in most cases that companies are prepared to comply when we put their feet to the fire. The program is working and it is a big incentive.

I want to talk briefly about the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program. Of the participants in job development, job entry, skill shortages, skill investment, training has been received in the following occupations: managerial, professional, semi-professional, technical, supervisory and, for women, skill crafts trades and semi-skilled workers.

Women comprised 42.5 per cent of the Canadian Jobs Strategy participants last year and preliminary figures for this year indicate an increase to 44 per cent. Also, there has been $48.5 million in dependant care allowances directed to approximately 22,000 of these participants.

One very important point on the Canadian Jobs Strategy is its particular sensitivity to the needs of immigrant and native women because by transferring this severely employment disadvantaged option from job development to job entry it ensures easier access for native and immigrant women.

So that the Hon. Member is not expected just to take my word for this, I have a couple of letters from people who participated in the job entry program. One says:

> In addition to just providing me with a formal education in a marketable skill the job re-entry program also made day care affordable, which in turn allowed me to attend daily classes. The job placement enabled me to put a recent previous employer on my resume. Without all three parts of this program I know that I would not be here, out in the work force, today.

Another woman writes:

> —thanks again for giving me this wonderful opportunity to acquire this knowledge and self-confidence needed to get a job I really want and need. (I was already offered an excellent position that I couldn't have dreamt about just a few months ago). I hope you will continue this program, so other women will get the same education I was privileged to get.

I want to leave the Hon. Member with these thoughts on the programs. She talked about the need to extend this program and about how many women are underemployed as well as unemployed. I certainly recognize that difficulty. We are, of course, trying to extend our resources as far as we can, given that our legacy from the previous Government is that 25 cents out of every tax dollar Canadians pay us goes to pay the interest on the debt and is therefore not available for worthwhile programs such as these.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to say that reports will be filed this June, but the point I was trying to make was that though there is a punishment if reports are not filed, there is absolutely no punishment if the reports identify discrimination. There is nothing to remedy that. That is our major concern.

It is very good that some women have been able to take advantage of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, but the committee heard brief after brief from witness after witness indicating that women were mostly in job re-entry for the lower-paid jobs, the traditional jobs. As I said earlier, the Minister's own report of the advisory council indicates that 8.5 per cent of women were able to get non-traditional jobs. That is not adequate for equality for women in the economy.

It is important that we not use just one or two cases and say that these women have been successful. That is not what we are talking about. We are talking about the reality, about what the facts and figures show us, and the programs do need to be expanded. There is a limitation to the programs because women have to be out of the labour force for three years. Those are the kinds of things I would like the Minister to look at so that she may recommend to her colleague in Employment and Immigration that more women participate in the job re-entry programs and that job skills be non-traditional skills so that women as well as men can get well paid jobs.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to what my friend from Hamilton Mountain had to say. However, I do not want to let her speech go by without noting something from this side.

Not only did we hear brief after brief from women's group after women's group in city after city from one end of the country to the other when the Standing Committee of the Secretary of State was investigating funding for women's programs, but we produced a report entitled "Fairness in Funding". That report was unanimously adopted by members of all three Parties, including the Hon. Member's colleague from Vancouver East who made a very valuable contribution to that unanimous, all-Party report.

In essence, the report recognized all of the questions which were raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) in her remarks and also recommended that this Government, and I cannot think of any other Government before this one which has so urgently and responsibly addressed this matter, look at the bottom line as being equality of women in the workforce, in the market-place and in any way possible.

Our report contained a series of recommendations which would make it possible for women across Canada to address the very matters the Hon. Member has raised, matters I am sure the Hon. Member from the Liberal side will also raise. We wanted to make sure that women have access to the wide range of programs that the Government is providing so that the bottom line will be equality for women in Canada.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did appreciate the committee's unanimous report. We are looking for implementation of those recommendations as quickly as possible. Certainly some of the programs I addressed are the kind of programs that will put some substance into the report's recommendations.

Women across Canada have experienced the discrimination that has been dealt out over the years and are saying that they will not wait any longer, they need equity. I was addressing the programs that are in place now, programs which are not adequate to address the inequity that exists. Certainly, they are a first step but they are not enough.

We should not say that we have done enough and that women are now equal partners. It does not work if companies simply have to file reports. There must be some kind of implementation of the recommendations of reports like the one to which the Hon. Member referred. I believe the Hon. Member heard that as well while travelling with the committee.

Women do not want lip service any longer, they want action. They need money for programs and they need action. The work of the committee will certainly help, but we want the Government to implement stronger legislation.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House condemns the Government for its lack of progress in giving women a fair deal in the workplace and the labour market. We in the Liberal Party support the motion.

We support the motion because there is still too much systemic discrimination against women who try to enter certain trades and professions. We support the motion because there is still too great a gap between women's wages and men's wages, even when they are doing the same work or work of equal value. We support the motion because there are still too many barriers to women gaining access to training, especially training for non-traditional work. Finally, we support the motion because there are insufficient support programs for women who want to work or train. Here I have in mind in particular adequate day care programs, and my hon. colleague from Outremont will deal more fully with that subject when she speaks.

Yes, we should condemn the Government for this lack of progress. I will give details on each point I raised. The reason we have not had the progress we should have had is because the Government is basically a laissez-faire Government. It is basically a small "c" conservative Government that does not have the political will to do what it says is right.

Government members say the right things. They say that they are in favour of employment equity. They say that they are in favour of closing the wage gap. Then they introduce half-measures to accomplish the goals they say they favour. They adopt measures which do not effectively accomplish the goals that they say are good goals. They talk a good game, but they do not follow it up with action.

A good example of this is the employment equity legislation which was passed in June of 1986, Bill C-62. That legislation does not provide for any sanctions whatsoever if the companies touched by the legislation do not advance employment equity or affirmative action for women. As my hon. colleague from Hamilton Mountain said, there are fines if the companies do not file reports indicating how many men, women and visible minorities are employed. However, if they do not progress along the road to employment equity, there are no sanctions. There are no fines.

Judge Rosalie Abella was appointed by the former Liberal Government in February of 1983 to study the whole problem of employment equity. She came to the conclusion that there was systemic discrimination against women and minorities in the workplace. She said there had to be enforceable legislation to correct that. The Government introduced a Bill but it did not provide what Judge Abella recommended, enforceable legislation with sanctions.

During the debate on that Bill, Bill C-62, we in the Liberal Party presented 36 amendments to make it stronger, provide enforceable mechanisms, and so on. Members on the government side voted down every amendment except for a few minor ones. As I said before, the Government talks a good game with respect to employment equity and the wage gap and all these other things, but it does not have the political will or political philosophy to do something effective about it.

Are these criticisms I am making just those of the opposition or just criticisms that we make in Parliament simply for the sake of criticizing? Let us look at the record to see who else makes these very same criticisms to show it is not just Liberal or NDP Members. Here we have a former Conservative Member of Parliament, then chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, who said, as quoted in The Ottawa Citizen of June 26, 1987, that: "Human Rights Commission urges system of fines to enforce pay equity." It continues:

> The Canadian Human Rights Act must be given teeth to force employers to pay women the same as men for work of equal value, Canada's chief Human Rights Commissioner says.

He went on to say:

> It is time for a major shift in the way in which we pursue equal pay at the federal level.

That was not a Liberal or NDP Member, that was a former Conservative Member of Parliament who was then chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. He saw that the legislation was not working. He pointed out that there are 300,000 women who work for federally-regulated employers and there was a 35 per cent wage gap relating to those women.

Then there is a 1986 report published by the Economic Council of Canada. It deals with women re-entering the labour force and training programs and was written by D. Boothby. What does it say? At page 42:

> I conclude—that discrimination is a significant source of occupational differences between men and women.

He goes on to say:

> While employment and immigration personnel do not select trainees for these programs, the use of federal funding makes it imperative to ensure that these programs are operated in a non-discriminatory manner.

He is talking about training programs and he said that was not being done at present. Again, those recommendations have not been acted upon. The Government did not act upon the recommendations of Judge Abella, Mr. Fairweather, or Mr. Boothby to strengthen the legislation.

In 1987, for the first time in 18 years, the wage gap between men and women widened. For 18 consecutive years the gap had been narrowing so that women's wages were getting closer to men's, but in 1986, under a Conservative Government, they widened for the first time. Thank goodness that last year they started to narrow again, but in 1986 the wage gap was $10,257. That is the largest gap in the history of Canada since statistics have been kept. Again, that is not Liberal or NDP Members speaking, that is StatsCan. If that rate of progress was to continue, it would take another 79 years for women's wages to equal men's wages for the same type of work. That indicates that a laissez-faire, small "c" conservative approach will not work. We need legislative action.

The Human Rights Commissioner called on the Government, as I said earlier, to introduce a federal law similar to the pay equity law introduced in Ontario. Eight months have gone by and nothing has been done. Here we have a situation where women have been put into traditional type jobs, are moving into service type jobs which are low-paying, non-union, often at minimum wage, and without pension, health or other benefits. Many of them are single working mothers taking care of children all by themselves.

As a result of this growing wage gap, we are seeing a growing poverty rate under this Conservative Government. I have not a Liberal or NDP report, but a report put out by the National Council on Welfare in November, 1987. It pointed out that over one million children in Canada live in poverty. It referred to StatsCan figures which show that in 1986 there were 1,016,000 children under 16, more than one out of six, who were members of families whose incomes were below the poverty line. It points out that while that proportion, 17.6 per cent, is down from the peak of 20.8 per cent in 1984 during the recession, it is still higher than the rate in 1981, before the recession, of 16.5 per cent. Under the Conservative Government we have a rate of families living under the poverty line greater than prior to the recession in 1982.

The figures also point out that the average income for a family with a single parent taking care of the children was $17,353, compared to $44,919 for two-parent families. That is quite a gap. Between 1971 and 1981 single-parent families headed by women increased by almost 60 per cent. The number of those families now amounts to approximately 600,000.

It is not just these figures that point out this very sad state of affairs. I refer to an article in the Montreal Gazette dated October 17, 1987, following a study on poverty done by an investigative reporter in the year. It was found that there were more soup kitchens in Montreal than there were during the depression of the 1930s. We have several in my own constituency and it is a very sad state of affairs. A large number of those people are women who have been abandoned or divorced, single mothers taking care of families with no other resources except welfare, which is not sufficient, and they have to use soup kitchens.

I have further evidence that these programs which the Government is very proud of are not working. I have a report by la Fédération des femmes du Québec which says the economic future of women in Quebec and the rest of Canada appears more cloudy than rosy. They point out that women are being relegated more than in the past to job ghettos. Nothing is being done to take them out of those ghettos and the programs of the Government are not working.

There are several studies on this subject which back up the contention that progress is not being made in employment equity despite the boasts and bragging of the Government. On that point, in statements which Ministers of the Government make in the House in answer to our questions and in debates such as the one which is taking place today, they keep glossing over the problem and presenting the picture in a very rosy way. One would think that they would finally realize that that is not being bought by the Canadian people, that it is not credible.

These reports tell why it is not credible. For the last two years the Government has been down in the polls. It has been down to 23 per cent, up to 27 per cent and 30 per cent, and back down to 27 per cent. One would think they would realize that people are not believing them.

I am sure that the Minister will get up and say what a rosy place Canada is because the Conservatives are doing so many wonderful things. She compares what is happening in 1988 to figures from the depths of the recession of 1982 and 1983 to show what great progress she has made. However, she does not compare the figures of 1988 with either 1980 or 1981 or the period which I pointed out the other day, 1970 to 1975.

If she wants to compare the Conservative record with the Liberal record let her do it over a period of years. She will find that the rate of unemployment under Liberal Governments from 1965 to 1980 was 5.6 per cent. In 1981, the year before the recession, the rate of unemployment was 7.5 per cent. The rate has now been reduced to 8.1 per cent, four years after the recession, and they think they have done a wonderful job.

Everyone knows that during the recession of 1982-83 there were high rates of unemployment in the United States, Britain, Belgium, Holland and all over the world. The Minister should know that we are living in an interdependent world economically. The great crash of last October did not take place only in New York City. The crash of stock markets took place in Toronto, London, Tokyo, and around the world.

One could go on for a long while criticizing the programs of the Government. With regard to the Canadian Jobs Strategy, we on the Standing Committee of Labour, Employment and Immigration have been doing a study of that program for the last two or three months and are going to issue a report very soon in which we will show the inadequacy of the program.

The Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) who just spoke pointed out some of the inadequacies including the program's inflexibility and its targeting on groups such as women's groups. It is just not working the way it should. One of the harshest reports which the Auditor General ever made was his report last October with regard to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. It is not doing the things that it should do and it should be changed. I think the committee will make a unanimous report which will point to those failings in the program and call on the Government to change it.

If the Government is serious about employment equity, let us see something which will strengthen the legislation which we now have. Let us see the Government bring forward amendments and act on the recommendations which Mr. Fairweather made last summer as Chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Let the Government amend the employment equity Bill to provide enforcement mechanisms and wider coverage than it presently has, such as Judge Abella recommended. The Government did not do what Judge Abella recommended. She recommended that there be enforceable employment equity legislation rather than the wishy-washy type of legislation which we have. Let the Government put something into the legislation which will mandate a program of equal pay for work of equal value.

If the Government did those things it might see its credibility improve and it might see its fortunes go up in the polls. That may be bad for us in the Opposition but it would be good for the Canadian people because they would realize that when the Government says something it means it and it does it. However, up until now the Government has said one thing and has come forward with half measures, wishy-washy measures which are not accomplishing what it says it wants to accomplish.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I am a little disappointed that the Hon. Member suggests that every time we stand up over here we suggest that things are really rosy. I do not think we have ever suggested that. We have suggested that we are trying to ensure that things continue to get better for women. That is an entirely different kind of debate.

One of the reasons that we have worked so hard to ensure that things get better for women is because things have not been good for women in Canada, certainly throughout my lifetime and certainly throughout the tenure of the previous Government. You can pick any year you like. You can talk about the prosperity between 1965 and 1970. I was in the workforce at that time and I do not recall that it was a singularly wonderful time to be a woman working in Canada with regard to discrimination, employment equity, and wage gap. I do not recall the then Government, which is now the Opposition, saying one single word to help me as a working woman in Canada.

I am a little bit bemused because members of the Government are trying to ensure that women are prepared with flexible career opportunities and child care. Child care was first declared an urgent matter in 1970 by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. I do not recall a whole lot being done between 1970 and 1984. When we came into power we appointed a parliamentary committee to travel across Canada to talk to women and other people who were interested in child care. Out of that came a strategy which will meet the needs of Canadians. We did that within three years. It did not take us 17 years. Whereas I am quite prepared to accept that things are not all rosy across Canada for women, I know that the Government has increased the momentum for women quite considerably.

As well, in terms of women being poor, the Hon. Member quoted some poverty statistics from Montreal. We are very aware of this and that is one of the reasons that we have tried to enhance training and apprenticeship programs with the provinces. The number of adult women living below the poverty line increased by 227,000 between 1981 and 1984 during the Liberal-induced recession.

Our economy during that recession was considerably worse than that of other countries. We suffered much more severely as a result of that recession, in part because of Liberal Government policies, because the deficit had run away with us long before the recession ever began, because of the National Energy Program, and because of other things done by that Government. That was harder on women, as things always are, than it was on other Canadians.

The number of adult women living below the poverty line in the last three and a half years has fallen by 178,000. I would hope that the Hon. Member would be happy to celebrate that. I am delighted to hear it.

The wage gap has taken a little downturn and I remain concerned about that 34-cent gap; we must continue to work toward an improvement of that. That means, of course, moving women into non-traditional jobs as well as employment equity and so on.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the previous Liberal Government had so much power, that we were able to induce a recession not only in Canada but in Britain where the rate of unemployment went to over 13 per cent and in Belgium where it went to over 14 per cent. The entire western world had extremely high rates of unemployment at that time. Anyone who looks at the statistics will see that they jumped significantly in all those countries from 1981 to 1982 and started coming down in 1983-84.

When the Hon. Member says she cannot recall anything being done in 17 years, I do not know where she was. It seems to me that a very significant measure was passed in 1982. Section 15 of the Charter of Rights was passed by this Parliament, by a Liberal Government, which has led to some landmark decisions with respect to women. I could point to the establishment of the Canadian Human Rights Act in 1978, the Affirmative Action Program in the Public Service in 1983, the ratification of the Convention of the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women in December 1981.

I would refer the Minister to a short booklet put out by the Library of Parliament. It is entitled Unemployment in Canada—Its Differential Impact by Age and Sex. It lists a long number of things, going back to the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1967, all of which were accomplished by Liberal Governments.

I admit that the Minister and perhaps some of the people in the Government do not say that things are rosy all the time. However, if one listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and some others, one would think this country is nirvana under the Conservatives.

I would agree with the Minister that she is trying to improve things, but the difference between her Conservative Party and our Party is that we, in trying to improve things, are willing to legislate enforceable laws to do so. The Party opposite is not willing to do that. It says it wants to get rid of discrimination in employment for women but it introduces a law with no enforceable mechanism.

Yes, the Conservatives are advancing slowly, bit by bit, but if they did what Judge Abella recommended, it would advance much faster. That is exactly what the motion before the House says. It criticizes the Government for its failure to make significant progress. If the Government did what Judge Abella and Gordon Fairweather, the former chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, recommended and legislate enforceable mechanisms to get rid of discrimination against women, things would move faster. Things are moving too slow under this Government.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I certainly found the Hon. Member's comments very instructive and agreed with many of them. I would like to remind the Hon. Member, however, that it was not just one Party that was dedicated to ensuring that women would be recognized in the Charter. I do believe it was the women of all Parties who fought very hard to ensure that the equality of women was included in the Charter.

I would like to ask a question with respect to affirmative action about which the Hon. Member commented. As I recall, in 1984, the Leader of the Liberal Party at a meeting of Liberal women said that he did not support affirmative action for women in the private sector. "Instead", he said, "I prefer to negotiate such goals on the basis of goodwill". In the past, goodwill has not really done much for the women of Canada. The Charter debate, to which I referred earlier, I think is a very good example of that. Does the Hon. Member's Party still consider that voluntary programs are an appropriate response to the systemic discrimination that women face in employment?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, but I think we were debating the employment equity Bill before the Hon. Member came to this House. As I mentioned in my remarks, our Party moved 36 amendments, one of which was to make employment equity and affirmative action enforceable for all those industries under federal jurisdiction.

It may be that in the election campaign of 1984 our Leader took that position, but we had discussed this at great length in our caucus over the two years prior to that legislation coming in. We looked at the Abella report and became convinced that the only way to solve the problem was by enforceable legislation. We took that position and moved those amendments.

On the Hon. Member's other point, I would agree there was among women in Canada, and among minorities in general, great support for an entrenched Charter of Rights. However, I was simply responding to the Minister when she said she could not recall anything being done in 17 years. If I had the time I could have put on the record a large number of things.

The problem, of course, is that we all know, for example, that in 1950 only 23.2 per cent of women were in the workforce. It was as we moved into the 1960s that women decided they wanted to work and then ran up against problems of discrimination, lack of day care, and so on. Then Governments had to start dealing with these problems.

As time went on it became necessary for parliaments and governments to deal with these issues. That is why in 1967, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, who was Prime Minister at the time, set up the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. From that time on this Party has introduced some of the recommendations. We have been moving ahead. However, I think there is a big difference between the Minister's Party and our Party in that she takes a more laissez-faire attitude. She is also the Minister of Privatization—let the private sector do it. We do not believe that. We believe we need legislation in certain cases. That marks the difference between the Liberal and Conservative Parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak today against this motion as presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). As a member of this Government, and as a woman, I am somewhat bemused that the Hon. Member would condemn our Government for its efforts to eliminate discrimination against women in Canada. This Government has made more progress in enhancing women's equality in Canada than any Government, in fact, more than all previous Governments combined.

[Translation]

Our Goverment and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) certainly did not opt for the path of least resistance, as the Hon. Member implied in her attack on the Government. The Prime Minister was very demanding in the objectives he set for this Government. He promised we would double the percentage of women appointed, from 15 per cent to 30 per cent, and we have reached that objective. In Cabinet alone, there are five women, and there are now more women judges, ambassadors and deputy ministers, as well as senior officials responsible for policy development and decision-making.

[English]

Today I can reinforce what my colleague, the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), said today, that the federal Government has reached its first major hiring target for women in the management category of the Public Service. The Government has been striving to more than double the number of women in the management category from 217 in 1983 to 475 by March 31, 1988. As of yesterday, we are beyond 475. There are now 509 women in the management category. I think the Government is to be congratulated.

We are now about to set new targets for the next three years. We will see, I think, a more positive momentum forward. Special training in employment programs within the Government is being provided, with 250 person-years and $8.8 million over five years to assist women in pursuing non-traditional occupations. Together with 13 Public Service unions, the Government has launched one of the largest equal pay studies ever, involving more than 4,400 employees. The results will be available in late 1989.

If all of this had been in place when we came to office, we could be moving forward a little more rapidly. But we are doing, I think, extraordinarily well because our Government does not talk about equality, we do something about it. Unlike the Hon. Member whose motion this is, we do not believe that women must continue to be presented only as victims. We are determined to create a social and economic environment in which women can be full participants, as they deserve to be, and in which women can contribute to the full extent of their skills and their talents.

We do not believe that the state or the Government can manage every aspect of a woman's life better than the woman herself. The NDP would like to help women. They would like to give women everything except opportunity and the choice for women to be themselves.

We do not believe women are all alike, and we praise their differences. There are women who choose to work in the home and women who want to work outside the home. There are women who earn their living in traditional occupations, and there are women who have been pioneers in forestry, engineering, architecture and even in space.

[English]

We are no longer living in the early 1900s when women did not have the vote. They had to fight and fight to get it. Nor is it 1929 when women had to fight and fight to be declared persons. This is not the 1950s when women who served overseas or who worked in factories during the war returned home and stayed home. It is not even the 1960s when women organized themselves into what we now call the contemporary women's movement.

This is the 1980s. Women do not and will not take a back seat to anyone. Issues that once were never discussed in public, issues such as family violence, sexual harassment, defaulting spouses and unequal pay are now front and centre, not only because women have put them there, which they have, but also because women have developed allies, women and men who will do something about these issues.

The Hon. Member who presents the motion condemns our Government in the area of child care. Let me correct just one point in this area. When I said nothing had been done I referred to the Royal Commission on the Status of Women which declared child care an urgent matter in 1970. What was done about child care? That was the point that I made earlier, and I will repeat it now. Nothing—nothing was done about child care, except there was a great deal of talk, promise and more spending on other items by the former Government so that it became less and less affordable; and another whole generation grew up.

Our Government has acted. We have a national child care strategy that will create over 200,000 new subsidized child care spaces. We will provide support to families, whatever their preferred choice for providing care to their children. Choice is the key word.

This is a telling difference between our Government and the Parties opposite. We believe that Canadians everywhere know best how child care should be provided. That is why we have a special child care initiatives fund that will provide $100 million worth of assistance to Canadians to meet the child care needs of special situations such as children who are ill, children who are disabled, as well as the needs of rural women, seasonal workers and those in other situations which we expect will be brought forward. I refer to items such as culturally-centred child care.

As a Government, we want to act as partners with the parents, day care experts, teachers and provincial and municipal governments—with all parties that have an important role to play in this sector. We do not intend to lay down a single set of rules for what is good for every child in Canada.

[English]

If giving women in families a choice in child care is discrimination then, yes, we are guilty. If putting billions of dollars where others put volumes of rhetoric and promises is discrimination then, yes, we are guilty. If trusting in the good sense of Canadians to know what is best for their children is discrimination then, yes, we are guilty. If the definition of discrimination by Members opposite is choice, concerted action and faith in individual Canadians and their families then, alas, yes, we have failed. But I believe that the hundreds of thousands of Canadian women, men and children who will benefit from our child care initiative will tell the Hon. Member and her Party that they are tired of outdated definitions, false accusations and hollow condemnations.

Our Party has shown common sense and the practical management experience to shake the Canadian economy out of the doldrums that threatened to mortgage the lives of our children and our grandchildren and make child care not affordable.

[Translation]

The NDP would keep women in traditional jobs. Under the NDP, women would have to pay their union dues but their advancement to executive positions would be blocked.

[English]

While we are talking about unions, let me just point out that women comprise 36.2 per cent of union membership and only 19.3 per cent of union executive boards. That figure is up by only 1 per cent since 1978. So where is the union leadership and the leadership of the NDP?

By working with the private sector we are able to make a great many changes. The federal Government has set up a joint program with the Canadian Construction Association—and someone mentioned construction earlier—to look at the barriers to women entering that field. This is the first time ever that the Government and the private sector have taken a sectoral approach to this problem. This is a project worth $345,000, much of which is being paid by the federal Government in order to ensure that in that non-traditional sector there will be more momentum. This is the best way we can get at the wage gap.

No, the Hon. Member opposite and her Party are not the great protectors of women, any more than those Members of the last Government that mumbled on and on for all those years are the great protectors of women. Let me say that the Hon. Member who has presented this motion has worked for women and for women's issues long and hard throughout her career. I have a great deal of respect for her and her point of view.

However, in terms of our Party, we realize that there can be no social progress unless we have the economic framework that can support the development and the expansion that is necessary for women who comprise 52 per cent of our population to be contributors, as they want to be. That is why we have worked hard on a program of economic renewal. It is why we made our first objective jobs, a tangible, measurable indicator of performance.

Have we performed? Some 1,156,0000 jobs have been created since 1984. Of those jobs 611,000 went to women, 85 per cent of them full time. Compare that to the fact that under the previous Government—and pick your time, Mr. Speaker—only 20 per cent of new jobs created were full time. We have broadened the opportunities for women by expanding, training and skills development through the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We have made special provision for the needs of immigrant women and visible minority women.

We have also used our influence as an employer to accelerate women's equality on the labour market. We passed the Employment Equity Act, obliging Crown corporations and federally regulated businesses to implement employment equity programs under which women and visible minorities are offered better employment opportunities. Corporations and businesses which have one hundred or more employees must set objectives, establish action plans and time frames, and submit annual reports. The legislation affects about 1,000 businesses with over 950,000 employees. This is a major step towards employment equity.

• (1630)

The federal contractors program requires companies with 100 or more employees that bid on federal contracts worth $200,000 or more to introduce employment equity. We mean business. They are subject to on site compliance. We have already invoked this clause a number of times for multimillion dollar contracts where bidders were not compliant.

I believe that it is more than evident that on the matter of our Government's record on employment equity, the Member's motion flies in the face of reality. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, in response to the previous Member of the Official Opposition who spoke, that the number of low income women in Canada has declined by 5.7 per cent. By pushing away on all those factors we are making it better for women.

The Member raises the question of programs for native women. That is something that I personally regard as very important, as does our Government. With the passage of Bill C-31 discrimination on the basis of sex has been eliminated from the Indian Act. There are more than 45,000 native women who are taking advantage of this. That was something that native women had requested many years ago. We went even further last year for the first time by making the aboriginal women's program a permanent program. That signals our long-term commitment to supporting the full social, cultural, and political participation of aboriginal women in Canadian society. In 1986-87 alone, 69 groups, 87 projects, received support under this program on a wide range of issues of particular interest to native women.

As a Government we are committed to the native peoples of Canada, women and men, and we will continue to work towards a better future for our native peoples, protecting the cultural heritage of their own traditions and respecting women within that native community.

I could go on and deal with other areas that have eliminated long-standing forms of discrimination against women, such as family order enforcement, pension reform, and new roles for women in the military.

I would like to conclude with a statement of our Party's over-all philosophy in the matter of discrimination against women. It is our view that women represent not only 52 per cent of the population in Canada, but 52 per cent of the total capabilities of this country, the talents and skills that we have. Any law, policy, or measure that restricts women's full equality lessens our effectiveness as a nation. Our Party will continue to work for the full legal, social, economic, and political equality of women. We will not rest until that equality has been achieved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: I wish to comment a little and ask a question of the Minister. The Conservative Government has done a lot of talking, and perhaps a certain amount of putting in place of reports, but there has been very little action or leadership as far as a number of areas are concerned. I particularly want to talk about the area of child care. There is still a major shortage of child care spaces. The Government's policy, of which it speaks a lot but on which it has not taken much action, will not increase the number of child care spaces any faster than they were being increased before.

Low income people who need the child care do not get any tax breaks. In many cases, they are unable to make use of the breaks that are available to them. There is no parental leave established in the sense that it be made available for those people who need it the most. There are no increased resources to the community which would support parents in the home. The $200 tax break is quite inadequate for anyone who needs to make use of it. There has been a lot of talk about what the Government intends to do, or what it will do sometime in the future, but very little action or real movement toward making child care available to the people who really need it.

That is the type of smoke and mirrors which this Government seems to think is good enough to treat the really major problems of women who want to be in the workforce.

Mrs. McDougall: In terms of action, it is very important to know what the Government has done on child care. We have a national child care strategy, something that we have never had in this country before.

Mr. Hovdebo: No action.

Mrs. McDougall: The Hon. Member knows that this has to be negotiated with the provinces. It is under provincial jurisdiction. The Hon. Member also knows that funding will be available as of the next fiscal year starting April 1. The funding is there and it is in place, as soon as the details can be worked out with the provinces. This is an enormous step forward.

The Hon. Member made reference to the myth of the NDP that spaces would have increased faster under the old system. There were several things wrong with the old system. First, the shared cost program with the provinces meant that hardly any of the provinces could afford to increase child care any faster. Second, it was under the Canada Assistance Plan. That provided some relief, but it was essentially a welfare-based program. This is not a welfare issue. This is a national issue of some significance. By taking all of that and moving it into a new child care strategy, we have given child care a life of its own on a national scale. This is a seven-year program, but at the end of that seven years it will continue. There will be more to be done.

I know that the Hon. Member comes from an agricultural area. In developing this strategy we were very sensitive to the particular needs of farm women, who need child care perhaps 24 hours a day during the planting and harvesting seasons and perhaps not much in between, but their pattern is very different from those of women. With the special initiatives fund they have been given an opportunity to develop the types of solutions that they need when the nearest town may be 40 miles away, or when they are helping their husbands in the field.

Our national child care strategy is an attempt to be sensitive to different needs across Canada in little communities, in big communities, in isolated regions, for farm women, shift workers, and so on. It is a very exciting step forward on behalf of the women of Canada and, more particularly of course, for the children of Canada.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for the status of women mentioned that a seven year program would be targeted at specific projects and would be made available to people as of April 1.

However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tolds us, when the Government tabled its answer in the House that these funds were definitely earmarked for special programs over a seven year period, but should they all be used up after two years, the programs would have to be terminated.

Therefore, I would like the Minister to tell us whether it would not have been better to put a little more money in the programs, in child care spaces rather than allocating funds to programs where in a matter of perhaps two years, there would not be any money left.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: In our program we have come up with a balanced approach. Women who stay at home and work in the home and care for their children also deserve some consideration. We found when we discussed this with the women across Canada that they expressed some frustration around a space being the only answer. Not everyone wants to put their child into a child care space. We recognize the need for spaces, and we want them to grow as fast as we can develop a program for better spaces and more spaces. We know that the provinces' ability to fund these spaces varies from one province to another. It is up to us to try to help them meet their objectives as well as our national objective.

Women at home, women who want time to be with their children, deserve some recognition as well. That is one part of the tax side. Of course the other is a tax with receipted expenses to allow people to take advantage of it and to recognize better than before the legitimate costs. It used to be that the maximum one could claim against tax was $2,000. We have doubled that amount for pre-school children to $4,000. It is another area which should have been changed a long time ago to reflect the reality of the workplace.

With the combination of our tax provisions, our special initiatives fund, which is sensitive to needs across Canada, and the new spaces which will be developed, we are seeing a momentum in this area that we have never before seen in Canada. It will carry us further over the next seven years and will recognize that child care is an issue for all Canadians—women working outside the home, women working in the home, and fathers. We want to work with all of them because, of course, it is on behalf of our children.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up on child care spaces. A $200 tax credit is certainly not adequate to encourage a mother to stay at home. For either a mother or father to stay at home for a $200 tax credit per annum is an insult to the value of the work he or she does. Tax breaks do not come to low-income families.

When we are stressing the need for more spaces, we are talking about a variety of ways; they can be flexible. However, for goodness' sake, let us look at reality and recognize the fact that children need an identifiable unit of care. This is what we are really talking about. I do not think that a tax break actually provides that. It is really important to clarify it, because low-income families will not benefit from it.

Does the Minister have a commitment to ensuring that the federal Government will respond to the Canadian Human Rights Commission by bringing forth the effective and mandatory pay equity legislation for which it asked?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, on the child care issue, the credit will be $700, not $200. This was an augmentation, and we recognize that it is not an income replacement program.

As far as spaces for women who are poor are concerned, there are a number of ways in which they are helped. One is that they qualify for subsidized space. Second, if they are taking a training program, they frequently get a child care allowance. There are many ways to help them.

Let me say, in terms of the pay equity provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, that we will be watching how it works over the next while. We are pleased that the Canadian Human Rights Commission is monitoring the situation. In fact, I met with the Human Rights Commissioner just today, and we discussed a number of issues affecting the status of women in Canada. We recognize very much their role, but I think it is premature to move into some new aspect when things are clearly getting considerably better. We do not want to come down with a great anvil on a situation that we think will be considerably better over the next few years.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the motion of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). As one who has also been involved, as have many Hon. Members in the House, in the women's movement for a number of years, it seems that each year we keep discovering women again and discovering new aspects of women. We have shown some progress over the years. Women are represented in the labour force in greater numbers. There has been legislation to reflect that, and there have been programs to reflect that. As I said, I am pleased to speak today on the motion because there is still lots to do. I do not suspect that the Minister or anyone else would disagree with that.

I should like to address two specific areas which I think illustrate perhaps different reasons for putting forth the motion today. The first one deals with Bill C-31 and Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, to which I believe the Minister referred. For those who are not familiar with it, it is an example of legislation brought in to redress discrimination. I think it was a very positive measure. The purpose was to allow women who lost their Indian status through marriage to regain that status and membership in bands upon application, as well as their dependent children and first generation children. It was a positive aspect to address discrimination, and I will expand on some of the problems that I see in that regard.

The second issue about which I would like to talk is the trade policy of the Government that is directed generally to the economy and how it impacts negatively on certain sectors of the women's community perhaps more severely than on others. It addresses this motion not because it has an aspect of discrimination per se, but certainly the fall-out from such a policy will, in my view, have a discriminatory effect on women in certain segments.

The struggle for equality for women is not over. It is ever continuing. As I mentioned, the two issues about which I will speak highlight that.

Turning to Bill C-31 and Section 12(1)(b) affecting aboriginal women, it is an example of a piece of legislation brought in to redress discrimination, to correct some of the discriminatory actions of past legislation. When the Indian Act first came in, women were seen as chattels of their spouses and, therefore, their rights were not considered. If they married a non-aboriginal person they lost their status. We now recognize that that was certainly an historical mistake in attempting to redress it.

The problem is not that the intent is not good. The problem is that we must have adequate resources committed to implementing the intent of such legislation. We are sadly lacking in this area. There has been a problem right from the start of the two years that Bill C-31 has been in effect in ensuring that the legislation can be implemented in a fair and just way. I should mention, first of all, the fact that there were not adequate resources. We see this now in the areas of housing, post-secondary education, and in the simple processing of applications.

I would mention, for example, that in February of this year a constituent of mine, Jean Gleason, who also happens to be on the executive of the Native Women's Association of Canada, representing 95,987 native Canadians, came to Ottawa to speak to the committee on Bill C-31. In a February 23, 1988 article in The Toronto Star, she is quoted as identifying a number of the problems that she sees with the implementation of the legislation. What she mentions, for example, is that native Canadians are being required to do great amounts of research to prove their status. She says that someone had to find birth certificates of relations. Others have had to retain lawyers to help them wade through the paperwork required. This, as we see, does not enable women to take advantage of these attempts to redress discrimination. Miss Gleason and the Native Women's Association of Canada at that time were urging the Government to hire more staff to work through the great backlog of applications. They were hoping that the Government would look at such things as more toll-free telephone lines and would hire native Canadians to work in this field helping people find appropriate documentation for their status applications.

It is clear, and the Government has said on several occasions, that the number of people re-applying for Indian status was greatly underestimated. Now is the time to put in adequate resources so people who are re-applying can take advantage.

I would like to go on a little bit about the problems when adequate resources are not committed to legislation. As we all know, Sandra Lovelace a number of years ago went to the United Nations and began this fight for the rights of Indian women. Mary Two-Axe Early was also involved and was a great leader. At great personal expense they have carried on and paved the way for the bringing in of such legislation.

As Miss Gleason pointed out in her presentation at the committee, there is great concern within the Department of Indian Affairs among its employees about the inability to process applications, thus creating a huge backlog, with the result that many people are not receiving the benefits to which they are entitled. Nowhere does this inadequacy of funding become more apparent than in the area of housing. It is a well-known fact in this country that housing on Indian reserves and the money available for housing has been woefully inadequate. We have some of the most shocking housing situations on reserves, and the resources have not been committed to addressing that. Housing is a right under the Indian Act. The Government does have an obligation to provide housing for aboriginal people. Under Bill C-31, with the reinstatement of a number of new additions to the band list, the need for housing has simply increased exponentially.

So we have a situation which is very, very serious and is creating another kind of social situation. What about new people who are being added to a community who, in a sense, achieve some special status, in this case under Bill C-31, and who may receive funding for housing while others who have been waiting do not? This is a very serious problem in some communities but not in all. Again, we come back to the issue of not putting in adequate resources to implement non-discriminatory legislation.

In a second area there are such issues as post-secondary education. Many aboriginal people and groups themselves have talked about the necessity to increase educational and training resources for their people so they can become self-sufficient. But there are inadequate funds in the Budget for post-secondary education. We see many people who may take advantage of this benefit and who have the right to take advantage of this benefit under the legislation but who are unable to do so because the Government says, "Sorry, we have run out of money". This is just not good enough. It is not good enough to have the words and not the resources.

A number of groups have commented on this. For example, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in March this year in presenting its brief to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, mentioned the need for housing resources and post-secondary resources. There were a number of recommendations that would, I think, ease the situation if the resources were committed. Another issue in the brief is that the funds of the Department of Indian affairs are not available for many applicants who wish or need to take their cases to court if they feel there are violations to the law. Funds should be available so women who have rights given to them by law can take advantage of them.

In The Toronto Star for October 29, 1987, Ontario leaders were charging that again Parliament and the Government had not lived up to its promise, that it had not put in the resources, that the resources of Indian bands and reserves were being strained and this was creating both dissension within the community as well as unfairness to women.

There are many ways to look at the question of discrimination. We applaud such things as Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act and Bill C-31, but things are only as good as the funds the Government is willing to commit to implement legislation.

Second, I want to say a few words about the potential effects of the trade deal on certain women in the workforce. Poverty, as we know, has largely been shown to be a female phenomenon—I think the Minister referred to that this afternoon—whether it is single mothers, working mothers or working mothers who are having trouble getting child care. I believe that about 66 per cent of those who live under the poverty line are women. It is my contention that the trade deal will seriously impact on many of them. I want to mention certain sectors. First, the manufacturing sector. In a recent release from the Canadian Labour Congress, it was shown that women comprised 51 per cent of the workforce in poultry products, 62 per cent in leather products, and 79 per cent in the clothing industry. We know from the Government's own studies that these sectors will be most severely impacted by the trade deal. We have large numbers of women working in those sectors.

About 83 per cent of women who are employed work in the service sector, including education and health, social services, transportation, advertising, banking and so on. Here is another sector which will be severely impacted. In an Ontario study it was estimated that 44 per cent of the women in the manufacturing sector were at risk, while 27.6 per cent of men in that same sector were at risk.

I would like to address some areas that we see are in jeopardy under this trade deal and which will lead to further discrimination against women. For many years, Parties have worked for legislation, such as maternity benefits, minimum wage, health and safety regulations and employment standards. Many of the women in the manufacturing and service sectors are not unionized. Those women are relying on government legislation to protect their right to ward off deterioration in health and safety in the workplace. Under the trade deal these things could be in jeopardy if our trading partners were to say they are unfair subsidies. We want a level playing field. Women have never had a level playing field. This trade deal will not make a level playing field for women. It will simply increase the already existing imbalance.

I believe the Minister mentioned this afternoon that about 32 per cent of unionized workers are women. I am sure that this is quite true. When people have job dislocation—and the Government's own studies have indicated dislocation in this sector—women have not fared nearly as well as men in re-employment. For example, one Ontario study indicated that after job dislocation in a number of sectors, 72 per cent of men were re-employed but only 62 per cent of women.

In many sectors, we often see immigrant women, women whose first language may not be French or English. We see women who have less transferable skills. There are no unskilled women, only those with perhaps less transferable skills. These are the women who will have difficulty finding re-employment.

I mentioned earlier that it is legislation that has protected many women in the workplace. Unions have also fought for many of these benefits. We have seen through further studies on dislocation that unionization is often reduced by about 30 per cent as there is a greater pressure to decrease wages and be more competitive.

These are important impacts on women in the workplace. For example, today we had a fair degree of discussion about the GATT ruling on the West Coast fisheries. This is a situation that exemplifies what I am talking about, namely, sectoral impacts on women. About 70 per cent of those working in fish-processing plants are women. Many of them represent that group I just mentioned, immigrant women, women who will require considerable retraining to take a place in the job market.

That brings me to another factor of history from which we can learn in the issue of impacts on women leading to more discriminatory measures. The Canadian Jobs Strategy program has been referred to in the debate this afternoon. It has not been a great success for women. The Canadian Jobs Strategy has not attacked the needs for upgrading and for literacy skills or many of the other specific training needs. In the attempt to privatize the training sector by moving funds over to private industry, we are shortchanging these people, many of whom are women.

We see here some very serious potential difficulties. I received a letter from one of my constituents, Joyce Hayden, who expressed her concern about the impact of this trade deal on older women. Again, older women tend to be the last hired and the first fired. We have also seen that adjustment programs for older workers promised by the Government have not come into effect. Again, this group of women will be very negatively affected.

In supporting this motion, we have to be very aware of two things. First, we must put the resources behind the rhetoric. As well, and the Minister said this this afternoon, when there is dislocation, women are often impacted very severely.

I would like to end on a more hopeful note by quoting some statistics. As usual, the Government of the Yukon is leading the way, being a New Democratic Government. The report of the Secretary of State on the elimination of forms of discrimination against women contains some very interesting statistics. The number of women represented in legislatures across Canada range from about 2 per cent in Newfoundland to 7 per cent in Ontario and 10 per cent in British Columbia, but in the Yukon, it is 18.7 per cent, topping the list. The representation of women on municipal councils, in the positions of mayors and councillors, ranges from about 8.5 per cent in Manitoba, 6.4 per cent in Ontario, 13 per cent in Prince Edward Island, and 33.3 per cent in the Yukon. The representation of women on school boards is 35 per cent in Quebec but it is 56.2 per cent in the Yukon. Finally, federal appointments to provincial, territorial and lower courts range from 6.1 per cent in British Columbia to 6.3 per cent in Alberta, zero per cent in the Northwest Territories, I am sad to say, 4 per cent in Saskatchewan and 33.3 per cent in the Yukon.

Where there is a will there is a way. We need to put some teeth into anti-discriminatory legislation and we need to look forward to more programs which will effectively eliminate all forms of discrimination against all women in Canada.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague from the Yukon for her very clear positions on how women are suffering in the labour force. The employment equity Bill requires that annual reports be filed. Has the Hon. Member looked at what effect that has had on women in the workforce who will be threatened because of the readjustment program which will be necessary if this dreadful trade Bill ever gets implemented? Is there an ability, by passing legislation with clout, to protect these women? What kind of adjustment programs would the Hon. Member be suggesting?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the kernel of the problem. I mentioned earlier a level playing field and what will constitute an unfair subsidy. This is one of the problems with the whole trade deal.

In terms of programs which may assist women who are dislocated through this deal or through other measures, there are a number of things that could be done. Certainly there could be programs to assist older workers. Older women contribute much to our economy.

As I mentioned earlier, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has glaring gaps. In study after study, there has been identified one of the basic needs which is for literacy programs and upgrading programs for both men and women. Again, we are simply seeing more money going to the private sector and less money going to the colleges that do this kind of work. This is a very severe crisis.

I have spoken with many people in my constituency and in others about funding for literacy programs, for example, and that level of funding is abysmal. Yet we do not seem to want to come to grips with the fact that a very large percentage of our citizens are not literate.

There are many programs that could be put into place to assist women in getting training. Some of the CEIC programs are very restrictive in terms of the allowances given for child care. We keep coming back to child care. I am sorry to say that we have to keep coming back to it.

I was speaking about aboriginal women earlier. Child care is an extremely serious issue on reserves. Many women who want to work simply cannot. In fact, many native women to whom I have spoken in my constituency simply cannot work because there is no child care available. Similarly, if they wish to obtain training they cannot because there is no child care available. We keep returning to that issue, and that will certainly be a very major factor.

Child care is not a woman's program, it is a family program. However, it will certainly help those women who are dislocated, either through simple changes in industry or through the trade deal, and those women who wish to upgrade their skills so that they can be more competitive in the market-place.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise in this House in support of the effort to provide more equality, freedom and opportunities for women. I would like to thank my colleague of the New Democratic Party for having moved this motion.

I believe that the Conservative Government has made some effort to help women achieve equality. However, there is still a lot of room for improvement. We only have to look at child care, employment equity and programs for women in non-traditional sectors. I think that the Government should do more in these areas.

First, however, I would like to deal with what women do now and how they live today. I know that the Canadian family has changed a lot and that 60 per cent of couples with children work full-time because they need two salaries to raise their children properly.

Naturally, the majority of women today try to combine their heavy workload at home with their job in the labour force, and as everyone knows, the cost of raising children is increasing. From the moment a child starts to go to school until the age of 18, he will cost $106,000. In addition, a couple with children must earn $6,000 more a year to have the same way of life as a childless couple. Moreoever, child care costs between $4,000 and $8,000 a year per child.

If we look at single-parent families, we wonder how they can possibly afford these services. We must not forget, as was mentioned by a number of our colleagues, that 72 per cent of single-parent families are headed by women, and that half of that 72 per cent lives on less than $10,000 a year. These are recent statistics, and the figures are not for 1981 but for 1985-86.

These figures should come as no surprise, when we consider that the majority of part-time workers are women, and that these women do not get maternity leave, annual leave or sick leave.

• (1710)

[English]

These are things most people take for granted. The unemployment rate is considerably higher for women than it is for men. Women's salaries are still only 60 per cent of men's salaries. Women make up 82 per cent of the labour force in low-paying clerical jobs, and 63 per cent of the unskilled manufacturing jobs.

Mr. Speaker, these figures tell us that the role of women and the role of the family has changed. Although women have more choices than they had before, they still have a long way to go, and we should not forget that the majority of women are relegated to employment ghettos, in other words, to low-paying jobs.

Is it so surprising that one million children in Canada live in poverty? Is it so surprising that our birth rate is only 1.7? Is it so surprising that parents decide to have fewer children? They cannot afford more, and our society does not provide them with the support services they need to raise happy, healthy children.

As a society, we claim to believe in equality. We support the principle that women must have the same opportunities as men. How can we expect to achieve equality if we do not help women to carry the heavy domestic burden that is traditionally theirs?

What will ever become of Canadian families if we continue to expect each working woman to be a superwoman, busy with a full-time career and all the while raising her children? Pious wishes are simply not good enough, Mr. Speaker, action is what we need.

[English]

One of the things the federal Government has done is to allocate $5.4 billion to a new national strategy for child care. This sounds very impressive, but if we look closely at the program we see that the Conservative Government has actually cheated the less-privileged children in Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised affordable, quality child care for all Canadian children, but on December 3, 1987, he broke that promise.

The government program allocated $3 billion of the $5.4 billion to federal-provincial cost-sharing programs, with the objective of creating 200,000 new day care spaces.

We have a problem here, Mr. Speaker: only 10 per cent of all children aged 13 or under have access to child care programs. Over a million children are looking for day care space, yet at this time the Government can respond to only 25 per cent of all applications.

We know that over the past five years day care spaces have increased by 19 per cent; now if that rate were to be maintained during the next seven years, and without assistance under the program established by the Conservative Government, we would end up with more than 900,000 spaces in 1995, but instead we will have only 400,000. Thence the impression that the Conservative Government limits instead of speeding up the creation of day care spaces.

[English]

The Liberal Party has been demanding a national child care program for a long time. The Government did a good job of avoiding the issue for a long time. The Liberal Party demanded and is still demanding immediate funds to meet the immediate crisis of a lack of child care spaces, but we do not know when we are going to see those new spaces created. The Government will hand out money for space creation only when it has negotiated with the provinces. When will these negotiations be completed? Next month? Next year? Two years from now? What will Canadian children do in the meantime?

It will also be very important for the federal Government to set a goal in terms of the percentage of spaces it would like to fund through the CAP because, depending on the wealth of each province, the Government could provide support and ensure access to low and medium income families.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party also proposes both the establisment of a program of quality and the provision of funds that would also be paid for staffing those child care centres. But right now there is very little spaces being created and very little money paid to ensure quality, because the Government set no standards and established no supervision program as to how the money will be used, how it will be spent and what types of child care services will be created in the various provinces.

There is a danger of course of having service disparities based on the direction taken by each province, and we could wake up with child care services that would be operated on the same basis as senior citizen homes, namely that if you have money you will have good services for your children in those child care centres—if parents have the money—and if you have less money there would be lower quality services. I do not think Canada is on the verge of collapse to the point of not being more open to child care. People always state child care centres are a priority, more money is needed. But those who want to operate a parking lot can more easily get bank loans than people who want to open child care centres, because let us not forget, people who want to open child care centres cannot get bank loans!

In fact, they will be told that this is not a business, it is not taken seriously. On the other hand, you can obtain a bank loan for any small concern that you want to set up. However, daycare centres are not considered a business. As far as I can remember, the federal Government has not responded to one of the recommendations made in the report suggesting that people who would like to open day care centres at home or elsewhere be entitled to bank loans.

In addition, when we consider the cost of day care centres, we realize that a child can cost from $4,000 to $8,000 per year. Of course, at present most families cannot afford such services. The cost of those services should be divided among federal and provincial governments, employers and parents. And the parents should not pay more than a pro rata of their earnings or half of the fees at day care centres, especially the average family.

And of course, there is the famous CAP which should be open and made available to low and average income families. We are still waiting for it. The Government says that it has taken steps, but once again, we would like to speed them up. Unfortunately, the Tory government did not hear our pleas. Instead of creating more spaces, it provides $2.3 billion for new income tax deductions. This means that those who can afford to pay $5,000 per year for the care of their children can obtain a $4,000 deduction. However, those who cannot pay that amount, will receive absolutely nothing.

Canadian women need immediate funds from the Government to create new child care spaces now. Every province should be adhering to nationally set standards of quality and affordability. We need money put into programs for latchkey children, for longer parental leave at birth, for day care at night and for quality day care training, not for regressive tax deductions. This is an issue of extreme importance for Canadian women and the present Government has bypassed it.

In this Tory Government's response to the majority report, there is no mention of parental leaves. Recommendations have been made to the Government because we feel that if we want couples to have more children, we must provide them with support services. In addition to day care services, we must provide them with parental leave.

The majority report on day care services was not the only report which had made recommendations to this effect, Mr. Speaker. The Forget Report and the equality report had asked for an extension of up to 26 weeks of parental leave. There is no mention of this in the Government's response. There is no mention either of what will happen to the "latchkey children". We know that 54 per cent of all children between the ages of 6 and 13 are alone at home when they return from school. Of course, the Government is quite silent concerning the recommendations we had made in this report.

In the United States, according to a recently published study which appeared yesterday in the media, an increasing number of children between the ages of 6 and 13 find refuge in libraries. In fact, the Governments of several states have introduced legislation to make it illegal for parents to leave their children in libraries after school. It is because the need for day care services has not been met there, and I would not want a similar situation to occur in Canada. Several parents came forward with a request to see to it that parents may have access to school premises once school is over. We know that the province of Quebec is the only province where school principals are authorized to keep school premises open for parents who want to organize supervision committes to keep an eye on their children until 6 p.m. or 7 p.m.

A number of recommendations have been made to that end—we know that this is a provincial responsibility—and when the time comes for the federal Government to meet its Provincial counterparts to discuss the CAP program, it might show leadership and ask provincial Governments, especially through their Ministers of Education, to act with extreme diligence in this matter to take care of these children. It would certainly be far less expensive for the federal Government and the provincial Governments to provide day care for children than to pay delinquency costs. We know that a deliquent child costs us $44,000 a year. Children who are in foster homes cost a lot of money to the Government, but if we had a prevention policy, we could plan and it would be less expensive and our children would be far better off.

Furthermore, the Government committed itself to the promotion of job equality for women and to their participation in the job-entry programs in non traditional sectors. I think that my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) demonstrated very well that the Conservative Government has been dragging its feet in this area and that it has not yet kept all its promises. I would also like to mention—

[English]

The Conservative Government has cut spending on job training by 23 per cent since 1985. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy program funds were shifted from the public to the private sector for on the job training. It has been found that employers have favoured men over women for training. There are no controls in place to monitor employers or to evaluate the work skills acquired by training.

Also, there is almost no funding in language training to help female immigrants. The Government seems to assume that female immigrants will be provided for by their spouses or will take jobs that do not require language skills. As a result, many find themselves doing menial labour with no benefits and no way out.

Some programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy are targeted at women. To be eligible for most of these programs women must be unemployed anywhere from eight months to three years. Any woman who cannot afford to stay out of work that long cannot profit from these training programs.

Training allowances are still less than minimum wage. How can a woman who supports a family afford to get job training if the Government gives her no financial aid? Unless the training programs change and unless the Government allocates more funds soon, many women will have little hope of bettering their economic prospect.

There is still looming on the horizon the free trade agreement. We have heard women and we know that for several months now they have been voicing their concern about that agreement because it will affect the service sector in which most of them work. We ask the Government to move quickly, to establish programs that will help women adjust to the new conditions. I just want to say that I recognize the Liberal Government had made room for women and I wish the Conservative Government would follow in its steps. I think the Liberal Government showed the direction in which I would like to see the Conservative Government go. I agree of course with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women and I know she cares very much about the condition of women in Canada, but I would like her party to be as concerned as she is and act with greater vigour and leadership.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in her remarks, the Hon. Member referred to what is occurring in the United States where parents, mothers, leave their children in libraries. I wonder whether she could provide more information about that.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, there have been reports published about libraries being the favorite places for kids to gather after school. Having no place else to go after school hours, and with parents still at work, kids are invading every public library.

Confronted with that situation, library managers have complained that their premises were no child care centre. And parents were thus requested to look after their children. With the result now that several states just passed legislation providing that parents will be charged with gross negligence if their children, between 6 and 13 years of age, are found in a public library after school. Those parents will have to arrange to have their children looked after elsewhere.

That worries me because it shows there is a problem, not only here, in Canada, where 54 per cent of our children are concerned, but also in the United States, and, as the saying goes, when the United States has a cold, Canada catches pneumonia six months later! I would not like the same to happen here. I believe it is still time to remedy the situation in Canada, providing the Government establishes a program and makes recommendations regarding "latchkey children" because, right now, some have nowhere to turn. It could, as I mentioned earlier, co-operate with provincial Governments and the Ministers of Education. The latter could decide to open their schools to these children. Surely, parents would agree to sharing the cost of paying a salary to those who would supervise their children after school hours.

Unfortunately, however, I am somewhat concerned since the Government did not respond at all to the recommendations contained in the majority report.

Thus the Government must act diligently on this issue, and without any delay.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by this statement about children being left in libraries in the U.S. In her comments, the Hon. Member seemed to say that they were of course left by themselves without any supervision.

Could the Hon. Member gives us more details? What did these children do during the long hours they were left alone? Were they going around looking at books? I understand the librarians did not like it very much.

I was also wondering about the children's age. She said they were from 10 to 12 years old, but were there among them any children under six left without any supervision?

Of course, that would make the example more concrete and understandable. If there were three or four-year olds left by themselves, then it would reinforce the example just mentioned by the Hon. Member.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, the report was referring to school children from first grade up. Those children range in age from 5 to 12. They invade libraries where they take up space, and adults cannot read in peace. You know what six-year-old children are like, how they whisper and so on—all peace and quiet was gone. Above all, librarians said that their job was to serve customers and not to keep an eye on children running everywhere. They can be allowed to read a book but . . . The library was turning into a day care centre!

However, I was told that in Montreal and some other big cities Canadian parents are already using the same strategy. They say, "We are going to leave our child at the library because it is safe." They tell the child, "Wait for mommy or daddy to come and pick you up at such and such a time." Then, after school, the child goes to the library, sits down and reads. If there is only one or two, they will be quiet. But if you have 10 or so children of the same age, they are very difficult to control and it is no longer a library. Adults were also quite disturbed and said: "It is impossible for us to come and read peacefully because at those hours, children invade the libraries."

What worries me, is the fact that the Government adopted a very strict law accusing parents of gross negligence with their children. But on the other side, parents need only a service to help them with their children. I don't want the same kind of situation here. Usually, we don't do anything for those children. During the committee hearings on child care, parents from all over Canada asked us the same thing: "Please, do something for our children!" It would be socially less costly to act. Some say that there are too many delinquents, that our children are depressed, that teenagers commit suicide, and it has always been our conviction that if we could provide good child care services to low income families with low education, those children would graduate from high school, probably go to college and would be in a position to find a job instead of becoming members of a third generation of welfare recipients because nobody ever took care of them.

[English]

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to join in the debate this afternoon on the motion of the Hon. Member for Hamilton (Ms. Dewar). To begin with, I must say that I do not agree with her motion. In fact, I would say the situation is quite the opposite. Since this Government came to office in September, 1984, we have deliberately and intentionally taken initiatives and advanced policies which clearly demonstrate our support for the aspirations of Canadian women.

We have also attacked the sources of discrimination. It sometimes seems as though opposition Members want to turn a blind eye to all of these accomplishments and a deaf ear to our achievements in fostering equality for women. As the Hon. Minister has already indicated, and as I have myself, we are particularly proud of our achievements with respect to the opportunities for women in the labour force. We look over the past three and a half years and we see over 1.1 million jobs created, the majority of those jobs being for women. We have seen an increasing number of women coming into the workforce. In fact, the recent Statistics Canada report indicates some very major changes which are taking place in our society. It shows that the women's labour force participation rate has increased from 51.8 per cent, to 55.9 per cent and that the highest participation rate is for married women living with a spouse whose children are under the age of six. In fact, that rate has increased from 49.5 per cent in 1981 to 62.1 per cent in 1986. Obviously, the majority are women in their twenties and early thirties. They may have taken a break for a period of time when bearing their children, but they are now going back to work and pursuing a career or job for a variety of reasons. It could be for their own sense of self-fulfilment and in other circumstances it could be economically necessary. I do not think the reason matters. We are seeing some major changes taking place in Canadian society.

I wanted to focus my remarks today on a very important strategy of the Government which, I think, appropriately reflects this change in the workforce, particularly the fact that so many women with children under the age of six are maintaining their role in the workforce. That, of course, is the issue of child care and the recognition of its importance with the introduction of the national strategy on child care as a case in point.

We have heard that there are about 250,000 child care spaces in Canada. These spaces are all that exist to serve the needs of working women, women who seek to improve themselves through education and training. One might conclude from the recent report of Statistics Canada that a quarter of a million spaces is obviously not enough to provide the child care services required for working mothers. I remind the House that this situation did not arise suddenly and without warning. It was allowed to develop over a succession of Governments. This Government sought election on the promise of the expansion of child care services in Canada. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has delivered on this promise with his presentation of the National Strategy on Child Care.

It is both unreasonable and unfair to assert, as does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, that the Government has failed to address discrimination against Canadian women. Indeed, the national strategy is clear and irrefutable evidence that this Government is deliberate in its support of the rights and aspirations of women to participate as equals in the Canadian workforce.

Let us consider Canadian mothers who, because of income or circumstances, cannot afford the necessary child care to free them to take a job or to seek education. Over the past 15 years federal Governments have shared, through the Canada Assistance Plan, provincial development of child care systems. As we all know, the delivery of this service is within the jurisdiction of the provinces. To date this has resulted in the creation of 140,000 subsidized child care spaces across the country. We know that this number of spaces is not sufficient to meet the needs of lower income working women or single mothers who need child care to allow them to take the training which would give them access to the workforce. The Government did not, like others before it, simply pay lip-service to the need for more subsidized child care spaces. Nor was it satisfied to see an unsystematic increase in spaces. Rather, within the national strategy, it intentionally set a goal for the creation of new subsidized spaces.

Within the next seven years we will see the creation of some 200,000 new subsidized spaces. Within seven years there will be almost three times the number of currently subsidized spaces. Within the next seven years there will be created almost twice the number of subsidized spaces created over the past 15 years. I think that record of progress and its acceleration is very dramatic.

Surely any fair and reasonable person would accept the Government's commitment to the creation of this number of subsidized child care spaces as evidence of sensitivity to the needs of those women who have the greatest child care needs because those are the women at whom this program is directed. It is directed at those women in the lower income areas who need access to subsidized child care. It is also evidence of concern that the lack of affordable child care is a barrier to women assuming an equitable place in the workforce and a commitment to reduce discrimination against women.

In short, it is self-evident that the national strategy on child care is predicated upon addressing a fundamental basis of discrimination against women. As mothers we are the primary care givers to children. Yet our choices are often fewer because our priority will always be with our children. In the interests of our children it is sometimes necessary to either sacrifice or to reduce our career aspirations. When we do venture into the workforce we have had sometimes to settle for jobs that are lower paying, below our capabilities and sometimes not particularly challenging because we are having to balance the issue of addressing our responsibilities to our families with trying to maintain a job.

However, in other circumstances, there really is not even a choice for the single woman, for the woman in a low income household. They really have to venture into the workforce to provide a semblance of economic stability for themselves and their children. However, often they are very vulnerable to discrimination. Thus working mothers without access to child care are, by definition, the victims of discrimination.

The longer Canada's child care policy and system was allowed to unfold as it might without any set goals, the longer such discrimination continued. It was this Government which recognized the simple fact and intervened deliberately to see that more child care spaces would become available to working women and that more of these spaces would be affordable and thus accessible to women who need them most. That is an important differentiation to make.

When I hear members of other Parties suggest that child care should be universally available or free I do not think the majority of Canadians feel that way. I think the majority of Canadians feel that it is important to have high quality child care services available and that for those women who need the assistance there should be appropriate subsidies available for them.

It is a very familiar complaint, particularly of young parents, that the bulk of the incomes of working mothers goes to pay their child care costs. While working mothers may be satisfying career aspirations, they are not left with enough take-home pay to make much of a difference in the quality of their family lives. Child care has become an onerous cost of employment for women. That, too, is a form of discrimination.

Thus, as we saw with the national strategy on child care within the recent Budget, the Government recognized that the burden of child care costs was discriminatory. We have taken steps to reduce that burden through changes to the tax system as it applies to child care. The child care expense deduction has been doubled from $2,000 to $4,000 per annum for each child six years and younger and for children with special care needs beyond that age. As a result, parents will be able to deduct more of their real child care costs when calculating their income tax. The working woman will be able to have more of her income in hand. Even though my children are well beyond those ages I know, from looking back at the time when they were small and I was working, that that certainly would have been a very welcome initiative. In those days my income was not very great. This is something which will help women from all sectors in coping with the increasing costs of child care.

Young and growing families will benefit from the removal of the $8,000 ceiling on their child care expense deduction. Parents are now allowed to deduct $4,000 of child care receipts for each of their children six years and under, and $2,000 for children age seven to fourteen years regardless of the total of these deductions. Thus for larger families child care has become more affordable. We are no longer discriminating against larger families. It seems to me that the policies that were in place before were unfair and inappropriate to larger families.

There are many Canadian families which make use of informal child care, the baby-sitting type arrangement. They do not receive receipts for the costs of the care. Under the tax deduction for income tax one has to have these receipts. This is to ensure that people are not trying to fool the system. However, this measure will allow more flexibility for families to choose traditional day care arrangements, to have someone come into the home or to have other arrangements. I believe that Canadian families want that kind of flexibility. They do not want one limited kind of system. Those who are not taking advantage of this, such as lower income parents, will benefit from the new $200 supplement to the child tax credit. Beginning this year, 1988, such parents will receive a supplement of $100 in respect of children six years and younger. They will receive an additional $100 next year.

These supplements will increase the child tax credit from about $535 to $760 per child in 1989. That is really quite a significant amount of money, particularly for lower income families. The effect of these changes in the tax system is to make child care more affordable to Canadian families. They reduce the burden of child care as an expense in employment for the working mother. They address a source of discrimination against tens if not hundreds of thousands of women. Once again, any fair or reasonable person would not see in this initiative a failure to address discrimination against Canadian women. Indeed, any fair and reasonable person would see in this initiative an attempt to ensure for women increasing equity in their disposable incomes.

Sometimes discrimination is a matter of locality or geography. Because Canada is such a large country this sometimes happens. No one would deny that farm women are partners in operating Canada's farms. They work as hard and as long as any woman who has a career in business, industry or the professions. However, they do not usually have access to care for their children. Canada's child care system has not expanded into most of rural Canada. Similarly, young families in the northern reaches of our provinces and in our two northern territories generally do not have access to child care.

As part of the national child care strategy there is the new child care initiatives fund. It will support innovative demonstration, development and applied research projects to child care. It will look at opportunities to provide child care in rural and under-serviced areas to provide for the needs of women going into special training programs. I hope it will also look at the needs of young women in the school system. In Ottawa, Rideau High School has established an informal child care program, and they are talking about expanding it. This will support the teenage woman who wants to go back to high school. She would have the child care facilities right there in school. That would be a big encouragement for those young women to be able to return to school and complete their education, and ultimately become economically self-sufficient. That seems to me one way of not only reducing discrimination, but of creating real opportunities and choices for the women of this country. Surely, that is the goal of all of us on all sides of this House.

As the country proceeds to expand the availability of child care spaces, there will be a continued demand for qualified child care workers. The expansion of Canadian child care services will create 40,000 new jobs across this land. Under the Canadian Jobs Strategy program the Government has supported and will continue to support the training of new child care workers, most of whom will probably be new entrants into the workforce.

Even this very cursory examination of the national strategy on child care would lead any fair and reasonable person to conclude that we are indeed preoccupied with the equity of women as participants in Canadian society, with the economic equality of Canadian women, and with equality of opportunity for women. The national strategy is not an element of discrimination, and does not fail to address discrimination against women. Rather, it is a full-blown attack upon a major source of discrimination.

The Government is providing, in partnership with the provinces, territories, and parents, a tremendous boost to the expansion of child care services. We have allocated $5.4 billion over the next seven years to support that expansion. That breaks down to federal Government cost sharing expenditures of $3 billion, tax measures of $2.3 billion, and the special initiatives fund of $100 million. It lays the ground work for a new social utility in this country to support the aspiring and working women of Canada.

In looking in more detail at only the federal-provincial cost sharing aspect, I would ask you to consider this fact, Mr. Speaker. In the 15 years that the federal Government has been cost sharing child care with the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan, the Government has spent approximately $1.5 billion as its share of the cost. However, within the new national strategy, the Government proposes within only the federal-provincial cost sharing arrangement to spend $3 billion over the next seven years. In other words, the Government will spend twice the amount of money in half the amount of time on cost sharing federal-provincial programs for child care.

If this magnitude of commitment to child care is judged by the Hon. Member to represent failure, then one is hard pressed to characterize the performance of previous Governments. No, Mr. Speaker, this Government has not failed Canadian women. It has decreased sources of discrimination, it is empowering women to participate more fully, and it is promoting their economic equality. Any fair and reasonable review of the national strategy on child care would conclude that this is so, and not only in the field of child care, but in employment and in all the policies of this Government. Canadian women can look forward to increased economic opportunities and increased opportunities for social justice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no questions and comments, shall I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

POINT OF ORDER

RESIGNATION FROM NDP OF MANITOBA PREMIER—NON-PARTISAN TRIBUTE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday during the time allotted for statements pursuant to Standing Order 21 the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) made a very useful intervention with respect to the situation in Manitoba. There was some commotion in the House at the time. I should explain to the House, and I want it to go on the record, that Your Honour's remarks at that time were very helpful.

At the time that my hon. friend was making his statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 I do not think there was a realization on this side of the House that Premier Pawley had resigned as Leader of the Party. Naturally, we understood that the Government of Manitoba had been defeated but there was no understanding that he had resigned as Leader of the Party.

My friend from Churchill made reference to the contribution that Premier Pawley had made to his province and to Canada. We also recognize that, although we may not agree on philosophies.

I want to have it made clear on the record that the natural partisan nature of the House spilled over at that point. But at the time I do not think there was a realization that the Premier of Manitoba had resigned as Leader of the Party.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say to my hon. friend how much we appreciate his generous comments. Anyone in an elected position who serves his country, his province and the people of Canada always deserves to be recognized and have our appreciation extended to him. I appreciate the generous comment that my hon. colleague has made today.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) for his helpful and gracious comments. I also want to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his gracious reply.

I say to some other Hon. Members who may have considered that my intervention yesterday was by way of admonishment that I am very glad to have the explanation which the Minister has given. The exchange this morning is in keeping with the best traditions of this place. I thank the Minister and I thank the Hon. Member.

Introduction of Bills

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-285, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (pregnancy).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to introduce this Bill for first reading. This Bill will remedy what I believe is an injustice under the Unemployment Insurance Act. It will enable women whose children are born either prematurely or with severe health problems and have to remain in hospital for a period of time to postpone taking the remainder of their maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act until such time as the child is released from hospital. This has occurred in several cases recently and brought to our attention in the House. It is something that I hope Members on all sides of the House will support and agree to.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO THE FREE TRADE ACCORD WITH THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling petitions signed by residents of Saint-Léonard, Montreal North, Aylmer, Hull and Pointe-Claire, all in Quebec.

Your petitioners believe that by signing the Free Trade Agreement, the Mulroney Government sold out Canada without getting anything in return, and that Canadian industries still have no protection against U.S. trade laws. They also believe that the jobs of thousands of Canadians, especially women, are threatened, and that the Conservative Government has yet to make any provision for helping them through the transition period.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to condemn the Government for having signed the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement.

OPPOSITION TO THE IRRADIATION OF FOOD

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to table a petition signed by a number of constituents in my riding and neighbouring ridings. The undersigned refuse to eat irradiated food and are opposed to the construction of food irradiation centres. They ask for the immediate withdrawal of all irradiated food now on the market that does not bear the international symbol for irradiated products, and that such withdrawal be legislated.

They also ask that all irradiated products be labelled as follows: "This product has been irradiated with radioactive isotopes as a preservative measure; the effects on health are unknown".

PORNOGRAPHY—SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by some 350 residents of southwestern Saskatchewan concerning Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code which creates new laws against the production, sale, rental, and distribution of pornography.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support the Bill which will make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell, or rent pornographic material as defined.

The petitioners call upon the Government to pass Bill C-54 without dilution in the belief that this Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who believe that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

The petitioners believe that the trade deal that was negotiated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) threatens the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership in Canada, and it removes the ability of the Canadian Government to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians. It also eliminates or severely reduces the possibility of equalizing opportunities between the regions of Canada.

The petitioners believe that this trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and thereby undermine our ability as Canadians to develop a society distinct from that of the United States.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve in order to allow the people of Canada an opportunity to decide on this trade deal during a national general election.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility of registering with this House a petition that is signed by many Canadians from across Canada.

The petitioners feel that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and that it would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the American market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF PENSION INDEXATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of approximately 75 constituents, most of whom are public servants. The petitioners are concerned that Bill C-33 will affect their future pensions. They contributed to indexation as well as to pensions, and the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain legislated full indexation of the federal Public Service, Canadian Armed Forces, and Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension benefits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 209 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—SIKH ORGANIZATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs erred seriously in urging upon the Provincial Premiers a political boycott of three Sikh organizations in Canada, thereby condemning entire groups on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations against individuals and, consequently undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society;

That this House, while condemning violence and terrorism as political instruments, affirms that all Canadian citizens, regardless of origin must not be subjected to any coercion, intimidation or other action by the Government designed to prevent their free and peaceful expression of their opinions and concerns about events and issues in Canada or in other lands; and

That this House therefore demands that the Government provide Parliament with all relevant information that led to its aforementioned communication with the Provinces and provide the Canadian Sikh community with a full, public opportunity to defend its honour and integrity and that the Government immediately withdraw its allegations and issue a full apology to all Canadians, and to the Canadian Sikh community in particular, for initiating an unprovoked attack on the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens and for thereby subverting federal multiculturalism policy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a certain degree of sadness that I raise on behalf of my Liberal caucus colleagues the matter before the House of Commons, and it is with a great deal of sadness that I have had to rise in my place over the last number of days to ask the Government, particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), to account for the letter he wrote and sent to seven Premiers which urged a boycott of the activities of Sikh organizations.

I believe that those actions constitute an undermining of the social and cultural fabric which is Canada as we know it. They dangerously play with that very tender fabric by attacking the dignity and honour of an entire membership of Canadians in three organizations. In this attack I believe that the Government is contributing to, perhaps not intentionally, but the fallout is contributing to and aggravating racial tensions and race relations in Canada.

While it is with sadness that I rise in my place, I believe it is a necessary undertaking, because we must constantly remind ourselves as a Parliament that our country is as strong as its treatment of its weakest minorities within its borders.

We know that the Canadian Sikh community has been besieged in recent days and in recent times. However, this should not condone its further abuse as a member of the Canadian community or as a member of the Canadian family.

I am confused and bewildered by the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because only last June, 1987, at a convention of the World Sikh Organization in Vancouver, the following message was brought to the membership:

> —I am delighted to extend my warmest greetings and sincere best wishes to the members of the World Sikh Organization of Canada.
> The Sikh community in Canada represents an important component of this country's multicultural structure, one which we, as Canadians, are proud of. Ours is a nation that has been strengthened by the cultural and ethnic diversity of its peoples; by celebrating your role in Canadian society you are helping to unite not only the people of your community, but the people of Canada as well.
> On behalf of the Government of Canada, may I wish the members of your community continued health and prosperity.

That letter was signed by no less than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and sent to the same organization in June, 1987. It is the same organization which is now being targeted for political boycott.

In 1985, a year after the Government took office, at another conference of the same organization a message was delivered by the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) of the Conservative Party, in which he said:

> —I am here today not representing the Government of Canada, but I am here as an independent individual Member of Parliament. I do however have the blessings of the Minister of External Affairs, the Right Hon. Joe Clark.

Therefore I am confused, as a Member of Parliament, that only last June the Prime Minister of Canada publicly congratulated, welcomed, and recognized this organization, and then in the same year, while one thing was being done publicly, the exact opposite was being advocated secretly. I bring that to the attention of the House of Commons because I believe to a certain degree that those two contradictory actions are deplorable.

First, there are two problems with the letter—one is procedural and one is on substance. From a procedural viewpoint, I question why the Secretary of State for External Affairs only sent the letter to seven Premiers, not to all of them. Why were federal Members of Parliament not sent the letter if it was a matter of urgent necessity? Why were the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), not briefed and provided with the same information? Why were municipal leaders not advised?

I am talking about the elected leadership of the country who work and mingle with the community organizations from which the Secretary of State for External Affairs asked the Premiers to dissociate themselves. On top of that, we only found out about the existence of the letter through a leak. If it were not leaked, we would not be having the debate today; we would still be in the dark.

Therefore, this leads me to ask what other letters have been written and sent to various elected representatives in the country about the Sikh organizations or the Sikh communities? What other ethnocultural groups have been targeted with similar letters?

Finally, on the question of procedure, I find it puzzling that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has asked us to be ignorant and to ignore these three organizations. If we take a very different example—and I admit that it is a very different example—in South Africa, the Minister said that notwithstanding the fact that we believe that the Botha Government in South Africa is a repugnant, offensive regime which continues to prop up institutionalized racism, as bad and as evil as we know that Government to be, we will not break diplomatic relations because we will try to have that flicker of hope remain so that we can change a bad situation into a good one from within.

To a certain degree I sympathize, although we have taken a somewhat different attitude, with the attempted logic and sincerity of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, if we accept that attitude with that evil regime and, to a lesser degree, if the Minister has proof of individual members of these organizations having clearly participated, with evidence, in various violent activities, why would he not try to keep the channels of communication open with these organizations to bring these people to justice and to try to work from within rather than to say to the Premiers to treat individual organizations and the Canadian members of these organizations as political lepers?

How will ignorance produce justice? How are we to stem the tide if these elements exist in any organization or community, if we in fact send out a letter saying, "Don't bother with these organizations"? It does not solve the problem.

As I have mentioned, the second problem is the question of substance. One justification for the letter is that the Minister stated that there were some members who were engaged in these activities. In the letter to the Premiers he said:

> Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities—

Is that proper justification for the letter? Why take an unproven or alleged matter, a matter of individual responsibility, and transpose it into a blanket of collective guilt which covers all Canadian membership in those organizations? Why be a contributor to creating a stigma which is difficult for that community to shake?

This is not a problem faced by only first generation Canadians of that community. It is a stigma which takes root in their youngsters, in the young men and women who should have the same future and opportunities in the country, but because of the stigma they start at a different place than do their peers in Canadian society.

Why does the federal Government, through this letter, begin to equate Sikhism with terrorism by that collective guilt allegation? There have been enough injustices in the past that one would have thought we would have avoided another occurrence, that we would have avoided bringing further pain and in some quarters, further shame in being who you are in this country.

We had the situation of the Japanese Canadian redress where Canadian citizens were discriminated blatantly by governments and other Canadians because of who they were. We still have elements in our society that lay the blame on the whole dark episode of Naziism on the doorsteps of certain German Canadian elements in this country. Recently in my own community, in the Canadian Italian community, certain elements have tried to equate Italianism with the Mafia. That hurts, Mr. Speaker. First it hurts because it is not true of that community. Second, it hurts because it creates baggage which must be carried, not by one generation but by second and third generation Canadians.

While every sensible Canadian condemns terrorism and any act of violence as a means of arriving at any end, which is shared by all Members and Parties in this House, it does not give the Government or the Minister the right or the licence to take on an individual responsibility and say, "Therefore, the collectivity of that membership is guilty". That is not the way our justice system works in Canada.

If there are cases of individual responsibilities, then what is achieved by this letter? Does this letter bring those individual members to justice? Does this letter provide us with the evidence that would suggest that certain members perhaps should face justice? What gain do we have by painting those three organizations and, through other debates, the community with that same brush?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs who will participate in this debate may say that certain members within the world Sikh organizations at some time or other may have said certain things. He might draw to the attention of the House that a certain Secretary General of the World Sikh Organization, General Bhullar Singh, may have said at one point that he would like to obtain arms to help obtain a homeland. Mr. Didar Bains, the United States Vice-President of the World Sikh Organization may have made statements suggesting that the assassination of Mrs. Ghandi was a legitimate means to achieve that end.

There was a debate whether or not those statements were said. Assuming they were said, this Member, this Party, dissociate ourselves with those statements. More important, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian membership in these organizations, attacked by the Minister, who are in this Chamber participating and listening to this debate, have dissociated themselves from those comments, if they were ever made, and condemn those comments, if they were ever made. Those statements were deposited with me in my own office when I raised these issues. Therefore, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if he has the Canadian membership of these organizations which dissociate themselves from these statements, why prosecute, through this letter, the collectivity?

The second justification for the letter is to propose a boycott because these groups advocated an independent Sikh homeland in India. The Minister writes to the Premiers:

> I would appreciate your co-operation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.

This issue of an independent homeland is clearly a foreign issue which is sovereign only to the citizens of India who in the end, in their own time, in their own way, must come to grips with that. Since when should our federal Government take sides on an issue, state its preference in favour of the current Indian administration and then on its strength punish Canadians of Sikh origin in Canada who may not share this view? How could the rights of full citizenship in this country with the freedom of participating in the community and political life of Canada be denied and infringed upon by a government which urges a boycott of those organizations?

Foreign policy is an outgrowth of domestic policy. Foreign policy is a reflection of the principles, the ideals and the aspirations to which we as a Canadian people subscribe. We cannot always do and say what the world wants us to do and say. Instead, we must do and we must say what the Canadian citizens permit us as a society to say. Therefore, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has the standards for a foreign policy backwards. He should not be putting it backwards because there are serious repercussions with that procedure.

What happens if the Government of Yugoslavia were to call or write our Minister and say, "We don't want your politicians associating themselves with Croatian Canadian clubs". If Greece were to do the same thing with Turkish Canadian clubs, what then? What about the situation between the Sinhalese and the Tamils? We cannot be coerced or intimidated into taking a certain foreign stand on an issue and allowing that issue to undermine rights of Canadians back home, whoever those Canadians are, wherever they came from and however long they have been in this country.

The Minister for External Affairs is either the Minister for External Affairs for Canada or he is the Minister of External Affairs for India. If he is the Minister of External Affairs for the latter, he might have some justification for saying the things he did because that would be his prerogative. But he is not the Minister of External Affairs for India. He is a Canadian Minister, a Canadian Member of Parliament, who must always maintain the first rule, which is to stand up for Canada and stand up for Canadians whoever those Canadians may be. He abdicated that responsibility and I draw it to this attention.

The third and final justification for the Minister's letter is that the boycott was favoured to a certain degree by the Government of India. Again, the Minister writes in his letter:

> The activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India. The Government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.

The Minister is implying that the reason he wrote the letter was to secure relations with India. Past governments have always tried to secure a working respectable relationship with India. Previous Liberal administrations did not do so to the detriment of Canadians back home. We were not willing, in order to enjoy the favour of the existing Indian Government, to sacrifice Canadians of Sikh origin here, nor should we in any relationship with any other government. But this Government was prepared to sacrifice the citizenship of Canadians back home. One would have at least expected the Indian authorities to have defended, come forward and supported the Minister. But what happened, Mr. Speaker? Well, I will tell you what happened. A spokesperson for the Indian High Commission in Ottawa completely dissociated herself from that letter. She was quoted as saying in a Globe and Mail article for February 26:

> But India has not complained about the involvement of elected officials with these groups, she said.
> "What transpires between federal and provincial governments in Canada is purely an internal matter".

Those were the words of Mrs. Tripathi of the Indian High Commission. I asked the Minister the other day whether he could explain the discrepancy. Could he explain why the Indian High Commission in Ottawa is saying that it did not order or suggest a political boycott? I asked why the Minister implied in his letter to the Premiers that that was the case. If it did not come from the Indian Government, then what was the justification and by whom was that seed planted? That brings us to the issue that is at the heart of this dilemma.

This is more than a struggle for the Canadian Sikh community. Naturally, they feel the most pain and they feel the challenge of overcoming the stigma of yet another attack. However, this struggle has manifested itself in other communities. This latest allegation, an official statement of the Conservative Government, tramples also on the larger question of the principles underpinning our multiculturalism policy and the multiculturalism that is the reality of Canada.

It is sad to see that the Minister of State for multiculturalism has been silent during this entire debate. It is equally deplorable that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, rather than coming forward with evidence that would in any way substantiate the actions his letter recommends, rather than retract his letter in the absence of such evidence, prefers to hide behind these general, unproven allegations that cut Canadians deeply.

I see that you are indicating that my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker. I appeal to the Chair for some understanding because of the sensitivity of this issue. I conclude by saying that the Government has the responsibility to provide the House and, and through it, Canadians with an inquiry so that we may have the documentation and information that is in the possession of the Government of Canada that prompted such action. This inquiry would provide a forum in which Canadians, members of these three organizations and members of the larger Canadian Sikh community could defend their honour, their integrity and their place within Canada. If there is to be no such inquiry, then the Minister ought to withdraw the letter or apologize for writing it.

The Premier of B.C. has refused to respect the Minister's letter. The Premier of Ontario does not support the letter, despite claims made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House. Members of provincial legislatures across Canada are writing to say that they will not follow the letter. Members of the Government's own Conservative Party have publicly criticized and attacked the Minister's letter. The Minister should finally realize, therefore, that he is becoming increasingly isolated in his defence of the indefensible.

I ask the Minister today to do the honourable thing, to provide this House with the evidence so that we can get to the issue at hand and clear the name of this community.

Finally, we in this House must recognize one unmistakable, unquestionable reality. History has placed all of us in Canada within one common border and under one common law. All of us, from the most powerful and the wealthiest of men to the poorest of children share one possession; that is, being Canadian. Granted, it is difficult to know from time to time what that precisely means because it means so many different things to so many different people. In part, to be a Canadian means to have once been a stranger, to have left the old and familiar for the new. But it also means that those who deny the strangers among us also deny the strength and the future of Canada. I ask the Government to stop denying Canada.

Mr. Speaker: There had perhaps been an understanding that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) would be followed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), but the Minister has indicated that he would like to speak now and that would be the usual arrangement. I would hope that Hon. Members would accede to that.

Mr. Riis: Questions and comments.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am rising to speak, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I intend—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the right hon. gentleman. I think we have a bit of a procedural matter to sort out here.

I will recognize the right hon. gentleman in a moment. However, there is the usual 10-minute question and comment period, and I think the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend's comments. I must say that I agree, by and large, with the points he was raising.

The Hon. Member knows, of course, of the wounded feeling which exists within the Sikh community across Canada today as a result of recent developments. However, that is part of an ongoing process, and the Hon. Member will be well aware of that.

While I listened to the Hon. Member's remarks I could not help but think that years ago Jews living in Canada urged and worked toward the creation of the State of Israel. Today, Palestinians as well as Canadian citizens are urging the creation of a homeland for Palestinians. On Parliament Hill we have seen demonstrations of people of Croatian origin urging the creation of a Croatian state. We have seen Ukrainians, Slovaks and a long list of people appear on Parliament Hill, all in their own way, and I might add in their own peaceful way with an emphasis on the word "peaceful", indicating their concern for the creation of a homeland or a state for their people.

Is there something different here? Again, people of the Sikh faith are urging the creation of a homeland for their people. I do not see much difference between that and the Jews some years back urging the creation of the State of Israel.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a very interesting question. He asked about the similarity between the struggle for a defensible State of Israel and the one that is being advocated by Sikhs in India through peaceful means. Those human struggles are the same. Although there are different forces at play in those different regions of the world, the human desire to live in peace and in dignity and to have a place to stand is shared, whether we are talking about an independent homeland for Sikhs in India or about the struggle of Jews who wanted to be able to live behind identifiable and defensible borders.

The second aspect of this question is the more delicate part. When previous Governments of Canada supported clearly and unequivocally a state for Israel, those Governments did not create a backlash affecting Canadians of Arab or Palestinian descent. Regardless of our position on Israel, that position was not used as a way of politically boycotting the Arab community. We did not suggest to the premiers that they treat those individuals as political lepers because we supported a state for Israel.

What we have here is a double standard. As far as we know, we did not politically boycott those Palestinian and Arab elements within Canada at that time. Those people are now Canadians because being an immigrant must stop at a certain point in one's life. The word "immigration" describes a process. However, after you have been here 5 years, 10 years or 20 years and you take the oath, you are a Canadian and the immigration process is behind you.

What is happening here is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying that he agrees with India not granting an independent homeland for Sikhs. That is debatable given the fact of the state of Israel. Yet more importantly, the fact that the three organizations mentioned in the December 11 letter stand for an independent Sikh homeland in India is used as justification for boycotting those organizations. That is the shame. That is the knife wound.

Canadians, regardless of background, have freedom of speech. They are free to meet and discuss local issues or issues from afar in a non-violent, non-subversive way. I find it offensive that a foreign policy initiative is undermining domestic policy with respect to the rights of Canadians. We cannot allow that. Domestic policy draws its strength from a secure situation at home. It is only from that secure base that we can export our freedom, our democracy, our progressive vision to help an ailing world.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will know, I am sure, that the Sikh community throughout Canada has worked hard in adversity since its arrival in the last century. Can the Hon. Member speak to the allegations concerning Secretary General Bhullar Singh and Mr. Didar Bains? Can he give us anything more than he has as to whether or not there was violence done by any member of the World Sikh Organization in Canada?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the information the Hon. Member seeks beyond what I mentioned. It has gotten back to me from a number of Members of this House in the last 24 hours that some of these statements may be raised on the floor of the House. I accept that. The reason I drew that to the attention of the House is so that the Minister could bring forward evidence of terrorist activities. In the end that might hurt the community, but I welcome it in the sense that there is more public discussion about possible terrorist activities by some members of that community. I welcome an intelligent debate that would rid that community and others of the cloud that continues to follow them and which suggests that being a Sikh is equivalent to being a terrorist. I made some of the statements I did because that is a preoccupation of some Canadians in the Sikh community. They told me they were prepared to go public to condemn and dissociate themselves from any terrorist activities or statements made by those two gentlemen.

I would also like to offer a confidential communiqué dated May 14, 1985, sent to the national councils of the World Sikh Organization in Canada, the U.S. and Great Britain. It is from the Secretary General and says that the World Sikh Organization constitution lays down that it is a peaceful organization working for human rights of Sikhs in India. Therefore, membership screening committees in those countries I mentioned should be instructed not to accept membership from known or proven terrorists. Any member who is guilty of terrorism should be removed from the World Sikh Organization according to its constitution.

I think this directive is proof that those Canadians who have been maligned because of their association with those organizations do not agree with or promote the subversion of any entity in the world. I offer that communiqué so that we are aware of the facts of the situation and not just the fears and misconceptions which might exist over this debate.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I might caution Hon. Members of the House about drawing parallels between the situation in India respecting Khalistan and other events in the world. I think before they begin to make those statements in the name of their Party, which there is some temptation to do by both my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap and the Hon. Member who introduced the motion, they would want to carefully consider the implications of what they are saying.

Sir, I intend to be as dispassionate as I can be in this debate. I think it would be helpful if I began by reading the letter in which the Official Opposition wants to make an issue. The letter was tabled in the House the other day and it states:

> I am writing to you concerning possible invitations to you or members of your government to attend functions organized by members of the Canadian Sikh community.
> The majority of these invitations are valuable in ensuring that your Government is kept informed of developments in the Sikh community and that the community is encouraged to participate fully in Canadian life.
> There are, however, three Sikh organizations which exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state, known as "Khalistan". These three organizations are the Babbar Khalsa, the International Sikh Youth Federation, and the World Sikh Organization. Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities aimed at Indian interests in Canada and elsewhere. The activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India. The Government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.
> I fully understand the dilemma that elected officials face in making decisions as to which functions to attend. In some instances the sponsoring organization may not be readily apparent. Despite these difficulties, I would appreciate your co-operation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.
> I would also request that you consider circulating a copy of this letter to members of your Cabinet and caucus. Should you require any additional information on this matter, please contact me.

That was the content of the letter which the Liberal Party is seeking to generate a debate over. I had hoped this sensitive issue would not be exploited for partisan purposes but the Liberal Party has chosen to put a motion forward in this House and therefore we will reply.

Sir, no one in this House should need reminding that modern societies are complex, and they are becoming more complex. Unhappily, one element of that complexity, one phase of modern international and national life, is that there is an increasing recourse to violence, not simply in the world apart from Canada but also in Canada. All civilized societies wish to work to overcome those tendencies toward violence, to deal with the root causes, to not participate innocently in the encouraging of activities which might have a violent consequence. Certainly that is a deep commitment of this country and this Government.

Sir, we must not forget that Canadians have been victims of terrorism both at home and abroad. The pervasive fear that affected all Canadians as a result of the terrorism of the October crisis in Canada in 1970 can never be far from our minds. Even more recently Canadians have experienced the tragic consequences of terrorism. Canadians narrowly escaped death in the hijacking at Karachi in 1986. Canadians were aboard the Italian cruise ship, the Achille Lauro, which was hijacked in September, 1985, which was the scene of the murder of one of the passengers by terrorists. Three hundred and twenty-nine people, most of them Canadians, died in the Air India tragedy in 1985. A Canadian was killed in the attack on the Turkish Embassy in 1985 and in the same year Toronto's subway system was held hostage by terrorists. In November of that year a Canadian mother and her infant son lost their lives in a terrorist attack on an Egyptian airliner in Malta. In 1986 there was an assassination attempt against a visiting Indian state cabinet Minister on Vancouver Island.

• (1200)

In the course of my responsibilities I have stood at the graveside in Beiseker, Alberta, when the Canadian woman and her infant son, victims of terrorism abroad, were laid to rest in Canada. In the carrying out of my functions I have been representing Canada and this Parliament on the peninsula near Cork in Ireland where a memorial is established to the Canadian victims of the Air India tragedy. Sir, I have been to too many funerals to take this question lightly. Yet I am acutely aware that other of my colleagues in other countries less orderly and less free than ours have been to more funerals.

We have an obligation in this House to the nature, the freedom, and the multicultural reality of Canada, to ensure that we do everything that we can to allow Canadians to pursue their goals and live their lives in peace and freedom.

As I said in the House on the occasion of the death of Valinda Leonard and her infant son in the Egyptian air incident, no nation is immune to the scourge of terrorism. It is for this reason that it is essential that we pursue with our allies the development of concrete measures to combat terrorism. Similarly, we must put in place protective measures at home and be vigilant in ensuring the prevention of occasions and opportunities for terrorism to incubate or to strike.

That, Sir, if I may say so, is particularly important in a country like Canada precisely because we are a multicultural nation that encourages people to come here from every corner and every colour of the world and to follow their goals, their religions, and their views here in Canada in accordance with Canadian law. There is more opportunity for more people to come here to express their traditions, to live their lives, than is the case in many other countries. As we provide more opportunity, that imposes upon us a greater obligation of care and imposes upon public officials a greater sense of responsibility.

The obligation is greater for us also because we are a free nation and we take our freedom seriously. It is protected in the courts, it is enshrined in the Charter, it is part of the practice of life in Canada. Sir, we all know the elemental reality that there can be no freedom for a society if there are not restraints accepted by individuals. Some of those restraints are set out in law and in policy.

Surely, Sir, we who hold the trust as public office holders have a particular obligation to ensure that laws are respected in Canada, to ensure that this country and its officials do not inadvertently become instruments of organizations or of interests which might seek the dismemberment of friendly states or which might promote or encourage the violence which could be so destructive to the freedom and the multicultural reality that we know here.

Separatism has a particular meaning for Canada. It reminds us of a very difficult period in our history. I think that most Canadians would strongly object to any other country giving support to anyone who promoted separatism in Canada, particularly through violent means. We would certainly press to have that country's government not give, or even be seen to give, any kind of support to such activities.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, The Sikh community has a long history in Canada. It has made an outstanding contribution to Canadian society, and as I said in the House on March 3: This House knows that the vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin are first-class Canadian citizens trying to raise their families in peace and trying to raise their families in freedom. The Government has a duty to help them do so.

[English]

I have been privileged to visit Sikh temples in Toronto. I have met with representatives of the Sikh community across the country. I have also celebrated with them the richness of Sikh traditions which are enhanced so much when the adherents of Sikh traditions are free to practise their religion in peace. I also had the sad duty, as I told the House earlier, in June, 1986, of dedicating a memorial in Dunmanus Bay, Ireland, to the victims of the Air India tragedy, many of whom were Canadian Sikhs.

As I said in the House on March 3, "This House knows that the vast majority of Canadians of Sikh origin are first class Canadian citizens trying to raise their families in peace and trying to raise their families in freedom". The Government has a duty to help Canadians do that.

However, let us face the facts. The activities of a small, militant minority in the Sikh community represent the most serious internal security threat that Canada faces today. Undeniably this minority seeks to dismember a friendly country, either through peaceful means or violent means. My friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), asked the other day whether there was not a difference between the World Sikh Organization and the other two. Indeed, Sir, there is a difference, but the constitution of the World Sikh Organization clearly states that one of its objectives is "to strive through peaceful means for the establishment of a Sikh nation, Khalistan". At the time that constitution was adopted there was a vigorous debate within the World Sikh Organization. They knew then that their decision would be controversial and the consequence of their decision is that their objectives are incompatible with Canadian policy.

Let me give you, Sir, some background on the other two organizations mentioned in my letter. The Babbar Khalsa is an India-based international organization comprising Sikhs whose objectives are the eradication of Sikh apostasy and the establishment of an independent state of Khalistan. In India the Babbar Khalsa has been involved in numerous acts of terror against moderate Sikhs, Hindus, and official representatives of the Government of India and its composite states. The Canadian branch is relatively small, but its total devotion to Sikh independence and its willingness to undertake acts of violence make it a serious source of concern.

In May, 1986, members of the Montreal area Canadian Babbar Khalsa were involved in a plot to place a bomb on an Air India flight from New York. Two were convicted and given life sentences. On May 25, 1986, four members of the ISYF attempted to assassinate a visiting Punjab state Minister in British Columbia. They were each sentenced to 20 years for this offence. As a Government, Sir, we cannot ignore these facts, nor can we ignore other cases of terrorism that we have encountered.

The International Sikh Youth Federation has its roots in the All India Sikh Student Federation, the largest and best organized Sikh extremist organization in India. The All India Sikh Student Federation activities and programs are directed toward disrupting and subverting the civil and political process in India for the express purpose of establishing an independent Sikh state of Khalistan. Members of that organization have been involved in aircraft hijackings, political assassinations, and the random, indiscriminate killings of both Sikh moderates and Hindus.

Moreover, these two organizations have occasionally attempted to dupe Members of Parliament or public figures in Canada into supporting their cause, for example, by having them photographed under the Khalistan flag or wearing buttons indicating support for Khalistan.

• (1210)

These groups exist largely to promote the creation of an independent Sikh state known as Khalistan based on the Indian state of Punjab. In pursuit of that objective some members of that organization have used, counselled or promoted the use of violence.

The Canadian Government cannot remain silent when individuals or organizations advocate the use of violence for political ends, namely, the dismemberment of another country with which we have a longstanding and friendly relationship. My letter, therefore, asked our provincial Premiers to avoid appearing at organized events or activities which could inadvertently lend their endorsement to the separatist objectives of these groups.

My letter did not ask Premiers to avoid receiving or meeting with any particular individuals, whatever views they may espouse. Even though this Government rejects their separatist cause, we fully recognize all Canadians' right to freedom of expression. It is the attendance or participation by representatives of the Canadian people in events or functions sponsored by these three organizations about which I am concerned.

When political leaders openly associate with such groups, whether they intend to do so or not, they lend credence and support to the objectives for which those organizations stand. These organizations have in the past taken advantage of politicians attending their functions. I believe most Canadians would very strongly object and would want its government to object to another country's leaders giving support of any kind to anyone who promoted separatism in Canada, particularly through violent means. This Government would certainly press to have that country's government not give or even be seen to give any kind of support to such activities.

Naturally enough, such activities invite representations to the Government of Canada from the Government of India, just as Canada made representations to other countries in 1970 during the period of the FLQ. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I would be delinquent if I did not take account of the foreign policy implications, particularly for our relations with a friendly government on an issue which they regard as vital to their national integrity.

These activities also created deep concerns in Canada, particularly because the actions of a small minority are tearing the Canadian Sikh community apart. The point of concern and the reasons for sending my letter were activities within Canada. I act as a Canadian Minister in the interest of all Canadians.

As I said earlier, the activities of a small group of Sikhs in Canada constitutes one of the most serious internal security threats which Canada faces today. A militant minority in Canada has, through violence and intimidation, been able to exert a disproportionate influence in the community of Sikh origin in Canada.

A number of initiatives have been taken by the Canadian Government to deal with the present situation so as to avoid any possibility of Canada becoming a centre of Sikh extremism.

Our most important initiative has been our attempt to express encouragement and support for moderate Sikhs who have decided to oppose the excesses of a militant minority that wants to wage, within our borders, a war that has its origins in another country.

[English]

Some have asked whether the Government has exercised its responsibility to warn public figures about other organizations in Canada. The answer is clearly yes, respecting the activities of groups which themselves, or through their members, are associated with violence or with the purpose of dismantling other friendly countries in Europe and elsewhere. I and my officials have received many inquiries from Members of Parliament and provincial governments about the nature and the objectives of groups which have requested meetings with public figures. We have provided the appropriate advice and have received co-operation in these instances.

The principle is the same. This is not a new policy. Other Canadian Governments have adopted similar positions. I note the presence in the House of the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the former Solicitor General. In addressing a comparable problem in 1984, he argued that acts of violence or terrorism in support of a free Armenia would not be tolerated in Canada and that this country should not become a surrogate battleground for alien causes. Rightly, he said that this would invite anarchy. He also said at the time that the efforts of the Government of the day, the Liberal Government in which he was a minister, were directed only at those who violate the laws of Canada. I would add that they should also be directed at those who counsel violation of our laws, directly or indirectly.

I said that the Government would be willing to provide briefings to Members of Parliament in camera. In that non-partisan spirit, I must say that the External Affairs critic of the New Democratic Party has approached us. We have agreed to provide him with such a briefing. That option is open to other interested Members.

The real problem here is that whatever we might wish, Canada is not immune to violence and to terrorism. There have been too many instances of terrorism in this country. We, as the Government, have the responsibility to respond with firmness, within the bounds and the laws of a free and multicultural society. We owe that to all Canadians, but we owe it particularly to the great majority of Canadians of Sikh origin who are not, in a situation in which excessive pressures exist, free to pursue their goals in accordance with the traditions which drew them and so many to this country.

Where we are not doing enough as Members of the House of Commons is in reaching out to encourage the moderate majority of the Sikh community in Canada to stand strong against the tiny minority who practise or counsel terrorism or violence. We are having a debate today. I suggest to all Members of the House that the best next step for all Members would be to ensure and encourage the freedom of Canadians of Sikh origin in this country to pursue their goals in Canada in accordance with their tradition and the laws of this country.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to be quoted by the Hon. Member and I stand exactly by everything the Member quoted. Does he not see a very great difference between the position of the former Government and the position which he has espoused? I was talking about breaking laws in Canada or advocating breaking laws elsewhere to achieve a separation in a country by violent means. It is one thing for us in this country to oppose international violence, it is quite another thing—and novel, I assert—for the Government of Canada to take sides on a question of separation where violent means are not the issue.

I will deal with the violence question in a moment because I think the Minister is wrong there as well. However, fundamentally, why does he believe that the Government of Canada should stand for any particular arrangement in a foreign country? Is it not for the Indians to determine the shape and the extent of their country? Is that not an issue on which people who are interested in India, wherever they are in the world, should be able to take a view and advocate by peaceful means? Why is the Government of Canada suddenly taking a position that the Conservative Government believes the present arrangements in different countries in the world are the correct ones?

The Armenian community of Canada, all of them proudly, and the overwhelming majority of them peacefully, would like to see a separate Armenia established partly in Turkey, which is a country with which we have an alliance. Does the Government of Canada not support listening to the Armenians and allowing members of the Canadian community to take sides on that question about whether or not there should be a separate Armenia? Again, we are not talking about violence.

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) targeted the Armenian community for boycotting the Armenian Association that he knows well in Toronto? During the last election campaign his Cabinet colleagues visited them, made speeches and promises to them. What is wrong with people from a certain country wanting to see that country separate?

The Hon. Minister said, "We are opposed to the dismemberment of friendly states, particularly through violent means". I will agree that we are opposed to the dismemberment of friendly states through violent means. However, what about the dismemberment of friendly states through separatism, as a result of decisions the people of those countries might make and that Canadians with ties to that homeland might advocate? Why is the Minister introducing into the foreign policy of Canada the notion that we are committed to oppose the dismemberment of friendly states?

I can remember when I was a Minister and we were talking about the separation of Canada and fighting it. The United States let it be known, not through a formal statement but clearly and unambiguously, that it wanted Canada to remain united. Was that helpful to us?

The point I want to make is why do countries which have friendly relations with another country feel that they have to take sides, for or against, concerning questions of separatism? Specifically, why does the Armenian community receive such different treatment from the Government than it is according to the Sikh community?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the essential allegation is that this is a sudden policy or a new policy. It is not. The example that the Hon. Member used is the example that I will quote back to him. It was not very long ago when the Government of which he was a back-bench supporter in 1970 was dealing with the question of the FLQ and all of the consequences of that matter.

He has asked me if the expression by the United States of its belief in a united Canada was helpful to Canada. Let me put this question to him. What would the reaction of his friend, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, have been if the Government of the United States, through some of its senior members or through some of its leading parliamentarians, were to appear at meetings of the FLQ? What would be his reaction?

It is not an academic question since there was a position taken by the Government of Canada at that time.

The position that was taken by the Government of Canada at that time was based precisely upon the principle that I am invoking here.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has asked me a question. The FLQ was a terrorist organization. I challenge the Minister to characterize these organizations as terrorist organizations. He said that some members have promoted violence. Perhaps some members have. It has not been proven. But even if they have some members of a very large organization who may be promoting terrorism, that is a very unfair basis on which to characterize these organizations.

The Minister missed another point in the answer that he gave to me. He asked me how I would like it if the official position of the United States was for separation in Canada. I would not like the Americans to be for separation. I would not like them to be against it either. It is a matter for Canada. So when the United States takes an official position for or against it, it is stepping over the limit. That is my point.

For others, for provincial Premiers and for leading parliamentarians, surely a democracy such as India would understand that provincial premiers and leading parliamentarians are not the official voice of Canada. They are people who oppose in many cases the official voice of Canada.

Does the Secretary of State not see the difference between a country such as Canada taking a position for or against, which I think is quite wrong, and leading parliamentarians or provincial premiers being able to take positions? I am limiting this to the non-violent context because a terrorist organization, as I indicated in my letter which was quoted by the Minister, is in a totally different situation.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, not to prolong this, to the best of my belief the position being articulated now by the Hon. Member is a position different from that followed in practice by the Government of which he was a supporter in 1970. Its concerns expressed to other countries did not relate exclusively to the FLQ but to the appearance of giving official support by countries friendly to Canada to separatist forces, however they were pursuing their goals within Canada. That is the answer to the best of my belief. I believe the record will prove that my recollection is correct.

The Hon. Member had a second question. I made a note of it, however, I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that my writing becomes so illegible sometimes that I cannot understand it.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have a question on another tangent. The first words expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his remarks were with respect to an implication that I was exploiting for partisan gain this issue. I take offence to that. That offence does not come lightly. I take offence to that because I want to know why it is that whenever someone stands up in this Chamber and attempts to discuss or to defend a perceived injustice against a minority in our country the first response from the Government must always be that someone is trying to exploit for partisan gain.

I just want to put on the record that when one stands up for minorities it should not be construed as being for offensive, political partisan gain. The numbers are clearly not there to suggest that if one deals with perceptions one will necessarily gain politically from this issue. I point that out to the Minister quite honestly and candidly. The perception of political gain may be on the Government side. I allow the Minister those political gains.

What I am not prepared to say, Sir, is that it is fine to support one minority and to hold qualified support for another minority because that minority might not be as popular in this day and age. I refuse to subscribe to that qualified support for minorities. Either one is in favour of standing up for minorities or one is not.

I would like to ask the Minister this. He mentioned that members of a small militant group might be causing terrorist activities. I do not want it to be construed that we are sanctioning that small militant group, if in fact there is evidence to suggest that that is going on. There are 250,000 plus Canadians of Sikh origin. Some 20,000 Canadians of Sikh origin belong to the World Sikh Organization. There were 700 individuals who came out to a meeting on Sunday evening in my riding. It was attended by myself, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and others. These people came out to the meeting partly because they had never met a Member of Parliament in their lives. They brought their wives, they did not leave them at home. They also brought their children dressed in the costume of their nation. There were 700 people in a room that was meant to hold 500. Why in the name of goodness is the Minister trying to equate the membership of those organizations and that community with this type of letter?

I visited a city in our country just the other day where there were a number of municipal aldermen who were implicated in some wrongdoing in that city. The first question I was asked by a member of the media was, "Because you are of Italian extraction, Mr. Marchi, don't you feel a bit guilty or ashamed?" I said, "Why should I? I am not a municipal alderman in that city being implicated. Whether it is true or whether it is not is besides the point. Why should I feel ashamed? Why should my son or daughter carry that shame?" I suggested to this person that we have had individual Members of Parliament who have been implicated in wrongdoing. Is that to suggest that all Canadians of anglophone persuasion or of francophone persuasion ought to carry that shame? Of course not.

When will Canadians who are not from either French or English background cease to carry the shame of a few rather than having to carry the shame of an implication that is theirs by right through collectivity? The time has come to end that kind of thing.

Mr. Speaker: We are a bit over the prescribed time for questions and comments. I know that often the House is prepared to go a little bit beyond the allotted time. I am asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he wishes to reply.

• (1230)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The first point which the Hon. Member described as a tangent had to do with partisanship. His allegations, I reject.

The point that I meant to raise to my good friend, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), was that naturally the people to whom I gave my considered advice are free to follow it or to reject it. They were owed, I believe, my considered judgment, and they have received it.

Third, as I mentioned in my remarks, the World Sikh Organization itself in debating its constitution spent a great deal of time discussing whether or not there would be a reference in that constitution to the independent state of Khalistan. They knew the controversy at the time that that constitution was debated.

Fourth, a large part of our purpose here is to try to create a set of circumstances in which that great majority of Canadians of Sikh origin will in fact be free to pursue their own values in this country and not be subject to the types of pressures that we all know exist now and that impose a very real burden on them.

Finally, Sir, on a matter of apology, I advise my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that, unfortunately, I am due to be hosting a luncheon for Lord Peter Carrington at precisely this moment. I know the profound interest of my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and he would not want me to be absent from the lunch. I normally try to stay in the House on debates in which I am involved, but I cannot in these circumstances.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say that this is not a happy day for myself, and I suspect for most if not all Members of Parliament, to have to chastise the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on a particular initiative that he has decided to launch.

It is sad because this is a very dark day for the Canadian Sikh community; a quarter million Canadians of the Sikh culture and the Sikh faith are wounded as the result of the decision of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to suggest to Canadians that certain Sikh organizations are not worthy of a visit by a Member of Parliament, or others.

It is a dark day for the Sikh community when the Secretary of State draws attention to what he states are inappropriate actions on behalf of certain Sikh organizations and, in a sense, it casts a pall over the entire Sikh community. Today a dark cloud hangs over the Sikh community of Canada which simply fans the fires of discrimination and racism that we see glimpses of today. The sad part about it is that it should never have happened. While I applaud a number of initiatives undertaken by the Secretary of State on behalf of our country, this is not one of them. His initiative was wrong. His condemnation of the World Sikh Organization was completely and totally inappropriate.

I speak for my colleagues in the New Democratic Party who have a long history of speaking out in support of minority groups in Canada. The history of Sikhs in Canada has not always been an easy one. From their origins before the turn of the century when the first Sikhs entered Canada to become some of the most exemplary groups of Canadians that we have ever witnessed, they have encountered difficulties. In 1908 the Government of Canada banned Sikh migration. In 1914 during the Kamagata Maru incident nearly 400 Sikhs who had indicated an interest in journeying to Canada to become citizens were stopped at the Port of Vancouver and through a Canadian gun ship were eventually forced to return to India.

In an effort to remind ourselves of this incredibly black incident, I have a Private Member's Motion that, if passed by the House, would see the erection of a memorial cairn on the West Coast to remind us that certain groups of Canadians have had a difficult time in our country. We ought to go out of our way, as parliamentarians, and the Government of Canada ought to go out of its way, to ensure that all Canadians are treated fairly, and that as a result of a Government initiative no Canadian ought to feel any sense of discrimination, harassment, or feel any of the pangs of racist activity.

Sikhs have assisted Canada in its development in the forest industry, in agriculture, in commerce, in the professions, and as I stated earlier, Sikhs have become exemplary citizens in virtually every walk of life. One of the reasons that Sikhs were attracted to our country and have assisted in its development can be found in what Canada is and what it represents in the world nations. This is a country that prides itself on its multicultural policies, and its Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There is a section in our Constitution that states that Canadians will have the freedom of conscience and religion; Canadians will have the freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, and Canadians will have the freedom of peaceful assembly. That is what members of the World Sikh Organization thought existed in Canada.

In the constitution and by-laws of the World Sikh Organization there are a number of objectives, for example:

> To promote and facilitate an active line of communication amongst the Sikhs of the world.
> To promote and protect Sikh interests all over the world by participating in the formulation and implementation of the policies of the Sikh nation.
> To work for the promotion of the ideals of universal brotherhood, peace, justice, freedom of worship and speech, respect for cultural diversity and human dignity for all, without any distinction as per the instruments and covenants of the United Nations' Organization.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is the important one:

> To strive through peaceful means, for the establishment of a Sikh nation, Khalistan, in order to protect the Sikh identity and faith as ordained by Guru Panth in the daily prayer 'Raj Karega Khalsa'.

I wish to emphasize the words "peaceful means". In the very statement of objectives of the World Sikh Organization, the organization indicates that it will work through peaceful means.

The Secretary of State has indicated that he was concerned about terrorism and violence. All parliamentarians oppose terrorism of any type. All parliamentarians oppose the use of terrorism in terms of fostering any peaceful action. Whether it is terrorism by Canadians or on Canadian soil or elsewhere, it must be opposed.

The manner in which this is opposed is by Governments encouraging peaceful political action, peaceful protest, and peaceful discussion. Therefore, I believe that encouragement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the seven Premiers to whom he wrote hampers peaceful political pursuits of any multicultural organization. It contradicts his goal of fighting terrorism.

Many of us have attended meetings of the World Sikh Organization. Many of us who have gurdwaras in our own communities know members of the World Sikh Organization and have good friends who are members of that organization. We take some offence to the letter that the Secretary of State for External Affairs sent to seven Premiers. We take offence for two reasons. The first is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not feel it was appropriate to send the same information to Members of Parliament, did not feel it was appropriate to send the same information to the Leaders of the opposition Parties in the House of Commons, and felt it was not appropriate or necessary to send the same letter to mayors and councils of the metropolitan areas of Canada, some of which represent millions of Canadians.

• (1240)

I want to read from the letter which was sent to the seven Premiers. In part the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote:

> I would appreciate your co-operation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.

Of course one organization mentioned was the World Sikh Organization. What goes on in the country of India is of little interest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or at least it ought to be. It is a concern of the Government of India. Whether or not the political organizations of India in terms of territory are appropriate is not for the Government of Canada to hold a view on; it is a matter for the Government of India.

The fact that there are Canadian citizens, people living in Canada, who have personal views about the need for a country such as Khalistan ought to be of little concern to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. These are Canadian citizens who, by our Constitution, have the right to hold whatever views they wish to hold in terms of having the freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression. I must also remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canadians have the freedom of peaceful assembly to discuss matters of concern to them, whatever they may be.

In terms of history, I recall Canadian citizens who had concerns regarding the eventual formation of the State of Israel and Canadians today of Palestinian origin who are interested in the creation of a homeland for Palestinians. They have meetings and discuss the matter. I also recall Slovaks, Croatians, and Ukrainians living in Canada who have an interest in the creation of homelands for their peoples.

The fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would single out this particular incident, take sides with a foreign country, and say that we support the position of the Government of India against the views held by Canadian citizens is completely and totally inappropriate.

What we see here, in a sense, is group condemnation. When we single out an organization, such as the World Sikh Organization with membership in the tens of thousands, and recognize that across Canada our friends and colleagues are members of the World Sikh Organization and therefore, by implication, are condemned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for harbouring terrorist notions and supporting violence and terrorism, it is completely inappropriate. This collective guilt which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has created, this group guilt or group condemnation, is completely unacceptable.

He went on to indicate in his letter that members of these organizations had also engaged in or promoted violent activities. I want to remind him that organizations do not carry out violent activities; individuals do. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs has information that people are participating in violent activities, arranging terrorist activities or participating in terrorist activities, then we should take the appropriate steps and lay charges. We should deal with these individuals as individuals in Canada, but not condemn an entire organization and, by implication, an entire community in Canada.

The Sikh community is grieving today. It is being torn apart and is being ghettoized in a community sense because of the sweeping generalization and sweeping condemnation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as a result of the letter. If he has evidence that indeed terrorism is being encouraged, that terrorist activities are being organized, and that violence is occurring as a result of some organizations, let him take action and provide evidence.

I listened very carefully to his words today. There was not a shred of evidence, not a single fact which would give his initiative any credibility. It is easy to stand and condemn a group of innocent people but, quite frankly, that activity has no place in a free and democratic society.

It seems that the only appropriate action now would be to clear the air. I am very saddened by the fact that the matter will now have to go to some form of inquiry, but I think it is the only alternative left. This means that the issue will stay on the front pages of newspapers and be reiterated time and time again in the news media, which will lead to more and more of a cloud over this very critical, important, and integral community in Canada.

Whether that is done through the appropriate standing committees of the House of Commons, whether the matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, to the Standing Committee on Human Rights, to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, or to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, I do not think is particularly critical, as long as the Secretary of State for External Affairs is called upon either to provide evidence or to apologize to the Sikh community of Canada and to the organizations he has named in his letter. If he does not, it will be up to the Sikh community to take action, because I believe that there is no way the Sikh community can stand condemned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs without fighting back for its rights.

It is sad that this must take place in a free and democratic country like Canada. Of course its initiatives can take the form of hearings through the Canadian Human Rights Commission or the form of court actions to clear the names of the World Sikh Organization and the other named organizations.

It seems puzzling that the whole matter has occurred. I would like to think that it has no relationship at all to our trade relationship with India. Indian government representatives in Canada have dissociated themselves totally from the initiative taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They say that in no way did they urge the Minister to take this initiative, that in no way did they counsel the Minister that this was appropriate or necessary. It was simply something done by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, presumably on his own decision. It is puzzling, because I recall attending meetings and conventions of various Sikh organizations where there were representatives of the government Party in attendance and where members of Cabinet sent greetings and so on, presumably endorsing the goals of the organization or their efforts in Canada.

The fact that the World Sikh Organization has as one of its goals the creation of an independent Sikh homeland, does not mean that a Member of Parliament attending a meeting of that organization necessarily supports that particular initiative or particular goal. I notice that the Secretary of State for External Affairs meets regularly with representatives of the South African Government. Presumably that does not mean that the Government of Canada supports apartheid. I could think of a number of public meetings or public gatherings of organizations which I attended. That would certainly not mean that I support all their goals and objectives.

Actually, we as a Parliament must go beyond simply clearing the air on this particular issue. We also have to take other actions. We have to take action in our immigration offices. We have to take action in our customs offices. We have to take action through CSIS and the RCMP and through our High Commissioner in India. I am sure all Members of Parliament who have Sikhs in their communities could identify countless examples of discrimination against Sikhs, discrimination against Canadian citizens who we know very well and work alongside, but who happen to be different because their name is Singh and because they are members of the Sikh organization.

I heard of a sad situation the other day. A gentleman, was crossing the border coming from the United States into Canada. A Sikh was accompanying him. As he was stopped at the border the customs officer looked into the vehicle and said, "That's fine, Sir. You can go through. But we will have to question this associate of yours". When asked why the officer said, "We are under orders to do that". Presumably the only difference was that one man had a turban and one man did not, one man's name included the word Singh and the other one did not. One was a Sikh and the other was not. Because of the ability of the customs officer to identify the individual's cultural heritage meant that he would be interrogated because there were orders to do so. In a country that prides itself on its freedom, its multicultural heritage and policy, whose government puts out a report called "Equality Now", we cannot tolerate that kind of discrimination at our borders.

We all know of individual immigration cases that we work on. Again, there are subtle ways of discriminating against people of the Sikh faith. The Secretary of State for External Affairs must provide a forum in which to justify his particular behaviour in this instance, or he must apologize to the World Sikh Organization and to the Sikhs of Canada. It is now obligatory for the Government to take a number of other actions, as I said earlier, with our customs officials, our Immigration departments, in New Delhi through the High Commissioner's office, with the police and with CSIS to ensure that appropriate missives are communicated. Discrimination against those of the Sikh faith cannot be tolerated and the Sikhs in Canada should be able to play their rightful role as Canadian citizens.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) of the New Democratic Party. I think he made some very valid points. I would like to dwell on freedom of expression and freedom of association. I think it is a fundamental right for Canadians to have this freedom. Our Charter guarantees that freedom to all Canadians. What bothers me about the whole situation is that in trying to influence other members of governments whether provincial or federal, telling them that they can or should not attend certain functions, is contrary to the fundamental principle of Canadian justice and the Charter.

Does the Hon. Member believe that we as Canadians have to uphold the fundamental principles of the Charter, the freedom of expression and the freedom of association?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention of my hon. colleague from Calgary. Yes, not only must we take steps to ensure that the rights and freedoms of Canadians are upheld, but perhaps we should go beyond that and take extraordinarily steps at times to ensure that no Canadian is ever left with the impression that his or her rights are less than others.

This particular issue gives us that opportunity. We have heard from Members on all sides of this House. The matter has cut across partisan political lines. We have heard from Members of the Liberal Party, Members of the Conservative Party and Members of the New Democratic Party condemning the Secretary of State for External Affairs for inappropriate action, for an action, if you like, that virtually encourages terrorist activities. It works against people expressing their views in an open and free way.

There is another fundamental right that we as parliamentarians have to be particularly sensitive to, namely, being asked not to attend certain kinds of functions. We all have the intelligence to decide what groups we are prepared to discuss issues with and what organizations we are prepared to meet with. We do not need a lecture from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to indicate to Members of Parliament which are or are not appropriate groups.

When it comes to domestic affairs in India, that is the concern of the Indian Government. Our Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think, would be spending his time more appropriately taking steps to ensure that the rights and freedoms of Canadians are being upheld as opposed to being, if you like, a voice, which in this case, obviously was for another Government.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, first, I want to commend my colleague from British Columbia on a very well thought and articulated representation in the House on this sensible issue. I applaud the courage and the decency of stating one's convictions, which the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) did. I am pleased that the House Leader for the New Democratic Party has signalled publicly his support for the appropriate forum and inquiry, as difficult as it will be for the community and for the Canadian fabric, to try to clear the air on this issue. Hopefully we will get the Government to concede on that point, notwithstanding that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not refuse or agree to such an inquiry. I hope my submission to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, which was one of the committees mentioned by the NDP House Leader, will be successful in trying to evaluate that evidence which is currently confidential and in the possession of the Government.

Could the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) tell us why the Prime Minister of Canada would send his congratulations, recognition and best wishes publicly on June 7 to the World Sikh Organization meeting in his own province while probably at the same time—the letter was dated December 7 and as the Member knows it takes quite a bit of time to consider action, write a letter and redraft it—secretly the Government was making moves in the very opposite direction from the public endorsation of the Prime Minister?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to finish up briefly, please.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. It points out vividly that once again the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) erred in the decision to send that letter. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) obviously was indicating the Government's support for the World Sikh Organization while the Secretary of State for External Affairs was of a totally different mind. That lends more support for the need for an inquiry of some kind.

It also raises the spectre of what other letters have been sent. This one simply came into our hands as an error. It was leaked and it became public. If this letter became public, are there other letters being sent to organizations or to individuals saying, "Do not attend this or that meeting?" This is a big brother approach that I do not think we want to see continue any longer. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs takes seriously the suggestion made by the two opposition Parties for some kind of a hearing, either public, parliamentary, or a hearing by one of the standing committees of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The floor will be free after Question Period. It being a little after one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.01 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TIBET—SUPPORT URGED FOR INDEPENDENCE AND FREEDOM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, once again the Tibetan people are demanding their independence and freedom. It has now been 38 years since China marched into Tibet to enforce its rule on this small, peaceful country, and it is 29 years since the uprising of Tibetans on March 10, 1959, to protest the foreign domination of their country. On that occasion tens of thousands of Tibetans were killed by Chinese security forces and it is that date which they are recalling today.

It is interesting but sad to note that, while the world has given a lot of attention to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and to the problems in South Africa and Central America, very little attention has been given to this occupation of Tibet. Tibet and the Tibetan people have the right to freedom and I ask the Canadian Government to support their demands.

REVENUE CANADA

REASSESSMENT OF USED FARM MACHINERY TRADE-IN PRICES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, would any MP in this House like to have his or her income tax reassessed because Revenue Canada deemed that a garage allowed too high a sum for a used auto that was traded in three years ago? No, not one.

That is what some farmers who traded used farm machines in on new ones three or four years ago are facing. In effect, Revenue officials are asking our farmers to change the figures on bills of sale. If a company allowed too much for the used machine, why should the farmer be responsible?

All of us, and probably all Canadians, get as much as possible for used machines when buying new ones. If the company pays too much, it has the God-given right to go broke, but the farmer should not now be reassessed because some ridiculous regulation was promoted by a bureaucrat who thinks he knows more about the price of farm equipment than the farmer or the manufacturer. I urge the Minister to rescind this ridiculous regulation and to stop his officials from harassing our farmers.

EXTERNAL AID

SUGGESTION PROJECTS IMPROVING WOMEN'S LIVING CONDITIONS BE EMPHASIZED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in Africa where 80 per cent of the people live in rural areas, women do about 70 per cent of the work. Yet traditionally, aid funding has gone to men. Training has been provided for men despite the fact that women actually do the job. Women in developing countries need more training and land ownership, more equality in access to credit, and more legal protection.

The Government recently released a strategy paper which read in part:

> Women are half the world's population but they put in two-thirds of its work hours, receive one-tenth of its income and own less than one-hundredth of its property.

The strategy paper states that CIDA supports grassroots projects developed by and for women.

Another new report by the North-South Institute presents an overview of NGO activity under the title "Bridges of Hope". It points out that in only 33 per cent of projects were local women actually involved in project design.

We must assure Canadians that the larger percentage of money going to NGOs and businesses will be dependent to some extent on the degree to which projects improve the living conditions of women.

NARCOTICS

INITIATIVE TO STOP DRUG ABUSE IN PENITENTIARIES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, this week the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) made an important announcement at an international conference on substance abuse. He stated that both CSC and RCMP have launched a joint initiative to fight the flow of drugs both into and within prisons. The Minister has to be congratulated for his leadership and for his important contribution to the National Drug Strategy.

As a member of the legal and justice committee, I have visited many institutions over the last few months and have met many inmates. As Hon. Members are aware, the process of rehabilitating inmates is much more difficult when drugs are readily available. I can assure Hon. Members that the step taken by the Solicitor General is one that will really help those who want to be rehabilitated.

Fewer drugs in prisons will result in a more sound environment for inmates and prison workers, as well as a safer place within which to work. As a Canadian citizen and as a father, I am proud of the Minister's initiative. It provides Canadians with a safer society to live in and sets a good example for all citizens to follow.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MONTREAL REGION'S ECONOMIC RENEWAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal are becoming increasingly impatient with the federal Government's failure to act decisively on projects as important as the development of the Vieux-Port and the space agency.

We all remember that in November 1986, the Committee chaired by Mr. Laurent Picard made these projects its two main recommendations for reviving the economy of Greater Montreal. Unfortunately, on December 2 the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) responded to these recommendations with some well-meaning platitudes, and two days later, all those representing Montreal's socio-economic and political interests deplored this lack of decisive action.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal want to know what the federal Government intends to do about the space agency. Is the federal Government going to announce its decision before, during or after the election campaign, which means never?

TRANSPORT

THREE-WHEEL ALL-TERRAIN VEHICLES NEEDED IN NORTHERN REGIONS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada has suspended the sale of three-wheel all-terrain vehicles in Canada, following as usual the lead of the United States. The suspension may be acceptable in the provinces where roads have been developed, and the suspension is enforced in areas where the vehicles cannot be used anyway. However, in the Keewatin and central Arctic regions, where there is a lot of tundra and muskeg, the three-wheel ATVs are less expensive than the four-wheel versions, and are used extensively for hunting and for work.

• (1405)

Northerners have already been hit hard financially by the anti-fur lobby. Forcing them to buy four-wheel ATVs instead of three-wheel ATVs imposes a further financial burden because the price difference can be as much as $1,000 to $3,000.

S. O. 21

Suspension of the three-wheel ATVs was opposed by all the callers to a territorial open-line program held at Rankin Inlet last Friday. Therefore, I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to allow the sale of the three-wheel version to northern residents until roads have been built.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM—AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES-JAPAN AGREEMENT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, last year the U.S. and Japanese Governments signed a nuclear agreement calling for possible transportation of plutonium, a speck of which can cause cancer, over Canada. Canadians did not like this idea and said so.

From Arctic Bay to Eskimo Point to Iqualit, to Whitehorse, to Toronto, to Faro, to Edmonton, to Vancouver and to Haines Junction in the Yukon, and in many other communities, thousands of Canadians signed petitions to this Parliament opposing those flights. Letters were sent to Canadian and American government officials. NDP and Liberal MPs demanded answers. The Canadian and U.S. media followed the issue closely.

Tad Homer-Dixon, a Canadian student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, worked to oppose these flights. John Polanyi, Nobel Prize winner, spoke out in opposition.

For those cynics who say ordinary persons cannot make a difference, here is proof positive that they can. We have learned through the U.S. Department of State that the U.S.-Japan nuclear agreement will be modified through an official exchange of letters requiring the Japanese to pursue an all-water route.

There are still concerns. Nuclear proliferation is a real threat. There are environmental dangers. The fight is not over but we can be pleased that we, ordinary people, have won a major battle.

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as we mark the end of International Women's Week it is appropriate to bring to light the dramatic progress this Government has made in appointing women to key decision-making positions.

We have almost doubled the percentage of women appointed to federal boards, agencies and commissions. The figure now stands at 28.6 per cent, compared to 15 per cent under the previous Government.

The number of federally appointed women judges has risen to 20, a 22 per cent increase since our Government took office. Appointments of women to senior levels in the federal Public Service have more than doubled.

Twelve women have been appointed to positions as Ambassadors, High Commissioners, and Consuls General, a rate six times higher than that of the previous Government.

This is not a token gesture but clear evidence of this Government's recognition of the talents and competence of Canadian women.

TELEFILM CANADA

ANNOUNCED RETIREMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, he finally did it.

Mr. Tobin: Did what?

Mr. Boudria: He threw in the towel.

Mr. Tobin: Who?

Mr. Boudria: I am glad the Hon. Member asked. Jean Sirois, of course. Jean Sirois, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) friend, Tory bagman, leadership supporter of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), an all-round Tory, has decided that he no longer wants a juicy $64,000 a year political appointment as Chairman of Telefilm Canada, effective April 13. He wants to go back to his law business where he can make the real dough, such as $400,000 legal contracts which he recently got from the federal Government and his friend, the Prime Minister.

Canadians are relieved that Jean Sirois is leaving. He has long since worn out his welcome at Telefilm Canada. However, we want to know why April 13. The Prime Minister should phone him up today and tell him to leave the keys to the executive washroom before he goes home tonight.

Mr. Speaker, why wait until spring? I say we should fire Jean Sirois as of now!

TAXATION

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—APPLICATION TO SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in December, 1986, a list of communities qualifying for northern resident tax benefits was released by the Department of Finance. Surprisingly, the list included several villages in southwestern Saskatchewan. Because it is manifestly unfair that residents of one community qualify for the tax benefit while those all around it do not, I raised the matter in this House on several occasions in April of 1987, requesting revision of the criteria used in designating an isolated post. Unfortunately, the subsequent revisions merely exacerbated the problem by confirming the original list, while excluding all other communities.

• (1410)

The determination procedure is arbitrary, inequitable, and capricious, and requires urgent attention. I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to act quickly by putting a senior person in charge of drafting common sense criteria which ensure that all residents of an area are treated fairly, evenly, and consistently.

IMMIGRATION

TREATMENT OF FOREIGN DOMESTIC WORKERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last week a senior immigration official spoke about foreign domestic workers as follows:

> So what we have is a half-way house, really. We bring them in, and if they prove that they are good at their job then we land them and then they can stay in that job if they want or go on to something else. But at least they have two years in which they have to stay with the family and do what we ask them to do. In the old system, when we brought them in just as immigrants, they would never stay. They would do day work, but they would never live in the house and stay, because they are out of their environment with the people of their own group.

Half-way houses are for unfortunates such as prisoners being rehabilitated, or ex-psychiatric patients, or the mentally retarded. It is wrong to speak so paternalistically about the hundreds of women, mostly Caribbean or Filipino, who come to work hard as domestics for Canadian families. Their pay is often shockingly low and they are often treated very badly. Federal or provincial laws or unions give them almost no protection. Canada needs these domestic workers. Immigration workers ought not to insult them.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO RESPECT HUMAN LIFE

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada's decision of January 28, 1988, has left the country without an abortion law. It is now possible for abortion to take place any time during the nine months after conception.

We must, as parliamentarians, move quickly to remedy this deplorable situation. Nothing in the Supreme Court of Canada's decision establishes abortion as a right. We must, therefore, find a way to give both mothers and children the right to life and freedom.

Accordingly, we must bring in legislation which respects human life at all stages of development. A human foetus in the womb at three weeks is just as valuable to society and as much human as an unborn child at 24 weeks.

On this, the great moral question of the 20th century, all Members of Parliament must state clearly where they stand on the question of life or death for unborn children. I am proud to stand with those millions of Canadians who condemn the present situation. I join their plea for protection of unborn children.

CRIMINAL CODE

FINANCING OF PREGNANCY INTERRUPTION AND FREEDOM OF CHOICE—POSITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SOCIAL CREDIT MEMBER OF LEGISLATURE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today I want to congratulate Miss Kim Campbell, Social Credit MLA in British Columbia, for having had the courage of her convictions.

Yesterday, Miss Campbell openly defied Premier Vander Zalm by saying she supported public financing for abortions and freedom of choice for women. "I am not for sale", said Miss Campbell.

Mr. Speaker, I admire and respect the stand she has taken. In fact, isn't this what politics is all about: Having the courage of one's own and one's constituents' convictions, whatever the political cost?

Premier Vander Zalm has publicly ignored the will of the majority of the voters in his province and has rejected the wisdom of the Supreme Court.

Miss Campbell is to be commended for her integrity and honesty. By her actions she has strengthened the democratic process, speaking up for those whose views are being ignored by Mr. Vander Zalm.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EFFECT ON DEMOCRACY—THE ULTIMATE AUTHORITY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the Charter is diluting democracy in Canada. We now have two kinds of government, the elected government of Parliament and the unelected government of judges. The elected government proposes, the unelected government disposes.

The fault with this does not lie in the quality of decisions. The recent decision of British Columbia was right in my judgment. The fault lies in the way that the ultimate authority is no longer the elected government and, therefore, the ultimate authority is no longer the electors it represents.

This subject will not command the headlines or the television news. It has no quick fix, but it is fundamental to the future of democracy in Canada and it should be on the forward planning agenda of Parliament.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ELECTION OF LIBERAL IN PROVINCIAL BY-ELECTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I note that it is 2.15 and I am delighted because many Members are here to hear the good news. It has been nearly four decades since Newfoundland joined Confederation, nearly 40 years. In all of those 40 years the constituents of Waterford-Kenmount, which riding in the area of St. John's West previously went by other names, had always voted Conservative.

Wednesday night, in the middle of the riding of St. John's West, the riding of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), the people of Waterford-Kenmount returned a Liberal, with a huge shot in the arm for the Liberal Party of Newfoundland. This is equivalent to the Riverview win in New Brunswick.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, as night follows day this means that the Liberal Party in Newfoundland and Labrador is on its way to government. I know that the Member for St. John's West, the Minister of Transport, joins me in congratulating Mr. Eric Gullage, the brand new Member in his federal riding, for a job well done and for the beginning of a brand new Liberal Government in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—SUGGESTED EXPANSION INTO NETWORK CONCEPT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) January announcement that Canada would spend an additional $1.3 billion on research and development and would foster the establishment of centres of excellence has been enthusiastically received by the research community, and stimulated much discussion around the centres of excellence concept.

Perhaps this should be expanded into "networks of excellence". This is the view of Professor Gilles Barbery, Director of Mines and Metallurgy at Laval University. His field of research is one in which Canada ought naturally to excel. It is, however, shared by several universities, business corporations, and both provincial and federal government research establishments such as CANMET. Instead of centering all research in a specific geographical location we should strengthen the network, each component of which could develop its own speciality.

The same of course is true for other areas of research such as medicine, communications, or space technology.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA POST CORPORATION

EQUAL ACCESS TO POSTAL DELIVERY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. During the last general election the Prime Minister said:

> The postal service is an essential service for every Canadian ... A new Progressive Conservative government ... will continue to improve the standards of delivery providing all Canadians equal access to postal delivery.

The Minister nods. Some promise. Three hundred thousand Canadians now have to use those absurd supermailboxes. They do not work, they are vandalized, they lower property values, and they cause serious inconvenience to thousands of senior citizens.

Rural Canadians must drive 30 to 40 miles because the rural postal routes have been closed. Rural routes are a thing of the past.

Why did the Prime Minister promise all Canadians that they would have equal access to daily mail delivery if he did not intend to keep that promise, or did the Prime Minister really mean that Canadians would get fair and equitable delivery unless they happen to live in rural Canada, in a new housing development, or in a suburb? Is that what the Prime Minister really meant?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are a great number of inaccuracies in the preamble of the question by the Leader of the Opposition. I will deal with just one. No rural routes were cut, contrary to what the Leader of the Opposition has indicated.

He talks about delivering mail through group mailboxes. That in fact arose out of a decision by the then Postmaster General in 1974. I believe the Leader of the Opposition was a member of the Government that made that decision.

In order to restore door-to-door delivery in all homes now served by group mailboxes, it would cost $1.3 billion over the next five years, with ongoing expenses of $400 million a year after that. I recognize that the Leader of the Opposition is sensitive to deficits these days, but he should be applauding the Post Office for the fact that this year it will make a profit in excess of $20 million, which is what we have accomplished in our term of office so far.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will admit to one inaccuracy in the preamble. It was the Prime Minister's statement. One could fill one of those superboxes with the broken promises of the Prime Minister.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said in this House on December 5, 1986: "There shall be no second class citizens in this country as long as this Government remains in office,—"

Mr. Mazankowski: Right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "—postal services or otherwise". The Deputy Prime Minister may want to answer this question, since he has intervened.

• (1420)

I guess the Prime Minister was right. People in new subdivisions, people in rural Canada, people in the Deputy Prime Minister's part of rural Alberta, and people in new housing developments are not second-class citizens under this Government, they are third-class citizens.

I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Why does the Prime Minister think that the only way to improve the Post Office is to cut postal service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no postal services have been cut.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Leader of the Opposition is as accurate about the operations of the Post Office as he was about the considerations concerning what submarines are all about.

The fact of the matter is that over the next four years there will be 6,000 new post office outlets opened to serve the public. The fact of the matter is that the Post Office finally is operating in the black. When our Government took over it had a deficit of over $500 million. I recognize that the Leader of the Liberal Party is not concerned about a mere $500 million. That is trivial. The Royal Bank can take care of that in no time at all. But as a—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion for the Minister. Perhaps he would like to join me out in Manitoba on the rural mail routes and try to defend that proposition in the next provincial election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPERMAILBOXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I heard the Minister correctly, he said that the Prime Minister did not tell the truth during the last election campaign and did not tell the truth either before the House. What kind of answer does the Minister have for hundreds of thousands of Canadians who saw the value of their homes go down because superboxes were installed in front of those homes and because they are not getting daily home delivery? What kind of answer does he have to that?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition continues in making these false statements—

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Mr. Andre: —and then asks me to justify a completely false, baseless, unprovable accusation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Rat Pack behind him does not want to hear the answer.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated in the House on other occasions, where supermailboxes have been in place and the users polled the approval rating is about 95 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, sure!

Mr. Andre: There is absolutely no justification whatsoever for the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition about property values going down. He knows that that is not true.

Now that the Post Office is making a profit we are able to look at expanding the service which was cut back in 1974. It will be done in a responsible way, not by incurring huge deficits to be paid off by some future generation.

SUPERMAILBOXES—PROPERTY TAX REDUCTION IN ONTARIO

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the same Minister. On November 27, 1986, I warned the Conservative Government in the House that the installation of supermailboxes would reduce property values and penalize Canadian homeowners in new subdivisions. Yesterday the Ontario Municipal Board ruled to reduce property taxes by 5 per cent on houses where supermailboxes had been installed because those property owners suffer a loss of privacy.

How long will it take the Government to understand that the supermailboxes are unfair and discriminatory, and that they deprive Canadians of the most fundamental right, privacy? Who will pay for the loss of their property value because of the installation of supermailboxes? Is the Minister going to reimburse them?

• (1425)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the Ontario Municipal Board specifically stated that there was no drop in property values, contrary to what the Hon. Member has said. What the Municipal Board stated in this case is that there was nuisance value to people as a result—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Why, were you delivering the mail, Harvey?

Mr. Andre: Apparently members of the Liberal Party are not willing to listen to the truth. They continuously make false accusations and then sit there braying like mules—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

DEVALUATION OF REAL ESTATE—MUNICIPALITIES' LOSS OF REVENUE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, municipalities will have to cut their tax bills because of the superboxes, since the Ontario Municipal Board ruled yesterday that the boxes reduced property value. Does the Government intend to compensate municipalities for the loss of revenue? Is the Government going to compensate homeowners for the loss of property value?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I guess the real question is, is the Liberal Party going to come out in favour of a 60-cent stamp which would be required to pay for what it has just requested. Those are the facts. A 60-cent stamp will be required.

If that is the position of the Leader of the Liberal Party, let him take it honestly and go out and campaign on it, a 60-cent stamp to accomplish what he feels should be accomplished.

SUPERMAILBOXES—ONTARIO GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON PROPERTY TAXES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister aware that the Ontario Government, not one hour ago, announced that it is not only prepared to abide by the OMB decision that was made yesterday for those residents who are unfortunate enough to have those boxes in their communities, but also for individuals in surrounding communities it is prepared to reduce property taxes by 5 per cent?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT COMPENSATE MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister does not know, I am telling him that those superboxes do in fact reduce property values in those communities where they are located.

Will the Minister take steps to compensate municipalities and property owners because of the loss of tax base in those communities where the boxes are located, and indeed for the people who have those boxes inflicted upon them?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will not be offended if he allows me to wait until I get the facts before accepting what he has to say as factual.

Very specifically, the OMB stated that there was no evidence of loss in property values. There have been independent studies, and I will be glad to show them to the Hon. Member that, in fact, property values are not affected.

After all, when bread delivery was stopped and when door-to-door milk delivery was stopped there was not a horrendous drop in property values because people had to buy their milk and bread in a different fashion. So, Mr. Speaker, get with it, the times are changing.

Mr. Broadbent: There were no superbreadboxes put up. That's a great comparison, Harvie.

DOOR DELIVERY—REAL ESTATE ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Is the Minister aware that many real estate agents are now advertising door-to-door mail delivery as a special feature for individuals who are trying to sell property? Is the Minister aware of that? If he is, why does the Minister not do the right thing and restore door-to-door delivery mail service for all Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as indicated, the cost of that is $1.3 billion over the next five years. If the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party feel that that should be done and that we should incur the additional $400 million a year continuing expenditures, or pay for it by a 60-cent stamp, let them advocate that position. Certainly, I am sure the Government would consider it. There is no such thing as a free lunch.

That is what they are advocating—an additional expenditure of $400 million a year. One has to balance that. Would we rather spend it that way, or on better child care for Canadian mothers? Make the choice. Those are the types of alternatives we are looking at.

FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS ON FISH EXPORTS—PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that the discussions with the United States which are taking place today, in Washington, regarding export restrictions on British Columbia herring and salmon, appear to be going nowhere.

Yesterday in the House the Minister said that he would protect the fishing industry and the jobs of fish plant workers.

Since the Minister had time last night to think out how he will protect those jobs, what action does he intend to take now to protect them?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Egmont indicated, the discussions are continuing in Washington. As I tried to indicate yesterday in the House, I think it would not be helpful to the Canadian position for us to speculate on what we might do after those discussions.

We will take it one step at a time. We are involved very closely in consultations with the industry, with the provinces, and with others. The discussions are continuing today.

EXPORT TAXES—EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, the workers in British Columbia are tremendously concerned about the issue, as are plant workers in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada.

At first glance, under Article 1203 of the free trade deal, Atlantic Canada is exempt from the fish processing regulations. However, the Minister would have to agree that Article 1205 indicates that everything under the free trade agreement as far as fish exporting regulations are concerned also comes under GATT.

The Minister knows that, under Article 408 of the free trade agreement, we have given up the right to impose export taxes, in order to fight a ruling against us. He also knows that any nation only has two options to consider—first, to prohibit the export of raw resources or, second, to impose export taxes.

Will the Minister not agree and tell the House today that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal does nothing whatsoever to protect the fishing industry and the fishing jobs in Canada? In other words, it does the reverse.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to that very extensive question, and the answer is no.

IMMIGRATION

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD HEARINGS—FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA RULING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, today the Federal Court of Canada has prohibited the Immigration Appeal Board from hearing the case of a refugee claimant because the Government's Bill C-55 has created a "reasonable apprehension of bias" through its Section 38, which provides for firing all members of the board when the Act comes into force and rehiring only those whom the Government likes.

Therefore, will the Minister confirm to this House that, if the Federal Court decision stands, the fact is that the Immigration Appeal Board may be prohibited from hearing any and all cases, not only of refugees, but also, for example, of Canadian citizens seeking to appeal in an effort to bring over their relatives as immigrants? Will the Minister confirm that that is what can now happen?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the judgment of the Federal Court requires careful consideration. We are seeking legal advice from the Department of Justice.

However, I am very surprised that the Hon. Member for Spadina, who filibustered Bill C-84 for eight months, could ask any question about the status of refugees.

REQUEST THAT BILL C-55 BE AMENDED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Minister is not ready to understand this issue, since the Canadian Bar Association warned him, on October 21, in speaking about Bill C-55, that exactly this was likely to happen, and that in the last four months the Minister has not done anything to prepare himself for this.

Therefore, I will ask the Minister if he will now undertake to bring into Parliament an amendment to Bill C-55 which will assure members of the Immigration Appeal Board that they will have the normal rights and protection of tenure, that is, that they will not be dismissed during their term of office except for cause.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I won't bring in any amendment to Bill C-84, but I will tell the Opposition that we do not have a system in the country which is operating, which is working.

For eight months Canadians have wanted legislation to deal with the status of refugees. However, systematically you are stalling and dragging your feet on the refugee issue. I hope that you will face the problem today and that you will take your responsibilities.

AIRPORTS

NANAIMO—CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL BUILDING COMPLEX

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is aware, because he has been there several times, that the Nanaimo Airport needs a terminal building. It is one of the busiest airports on the West Coast, served by a half-dozen airlines operating out of a half-dozen trailers along the taxiway.

My question is simply this. When will the people of Nanaimo, of Ladysmith, and of Duncan have the airport terminal building they have been demanding for years and years and years?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —that this has been very much on my mind and that approval has been given for the construction of an air terminal building complex at the Nanaimo Airport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I cannot understand how our predecessor Government ignored this obvious need.

The complex will include a parking lot, roadways, utility services, airline ticket and baggage claim services.

TAXATION

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES—EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN COMMUNITIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it is on the subject of the tax deduction for northern residents, which is grossly unfair in its administration.

There are islands off the East Coast and the West Coast which are not on the list. Not a single community in New Brunswick is on the list. There are communities in Saskatchewan which are not on the list. As a matter of fact, his own Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek today in the House called the Minister's administration arbitrary and capricious.

Will the Minister stop being arbitrary and capricious? Will he now intervene personally, or the Minister of National Revenue, stop hiding behind an inquiry, and put on that list those communities which so obviously deserve to be there?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the rhetoric the Hon. Member has just used I think he is ignoring the fact that a number of people have been very favourably treated as a result of the fact that the remission order, which was very temporary and only applied to a few people in northern communities for many, many years, is now on a permanent basis.

There are pensioners, self-employed people, and native peoples who now have assurance that the benefits are being received and will continue to be received by them.

The Hon. Member has referred to some problems on the borderlines—which communities should be in and which communities should be outside the treatment for northern communities. We have called for the creation of a commission to review it, so that people can make representations to the commission on whether or not they should be in.

In the meantime, some communities might qualify which are not sure whether they qualify now. The Department of National Revenue can provide them with that sort of information, at this point in time, prior to the creation of the commission.

Mr. Rompkey: People are paying taxes now. They cannot wait for an inquiry. The system is unfair.

REQUEST THAT CERTAIN COMMUNITIES BE ADDED TO LIST

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, let me point out another thing. If one pays for a medical emergency in the North, in the Arctic, one cannot claim it on one's income tax. However, if one's employer pays for it, one can. It is that kind of inequity which needs to be rectified now.

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't you change it?

Mr. Rompkey: As a matter of fact, the list has been revised because Trepassey in St. John's West has been added to it. We want other communities which similarly qualify to be added now; not after the inquiry, but now when they are paying their taxes.

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member would reflect on what he has just said, instead of having a borderline here, he would have the borderline moved here. The precise point is that we want to have it assessed by an objective commissioner. With 208 ridings held by the Conservative Party in Canada, I am sure the Hon. Member would be critical of the Government for saying that this or that community is in. Because we have so many ridings it would be expected that there would be many more Conservative ridings favoured as a result. That is why we are proposing the creation of the commission to make these judgments.

There is $150 million worth of tax benefit being generated by this new provision in the Income Tax Act for people living in northern Canada. I am sure that the Hon. Member would be quite complimentary that we have made this very progressive move.

NATIONAL REVENUE

WOMEN HEADS OF SINGLE PARENT FAMILIES—EQUIVALENCE OF SPOUSE'S EXEMPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and concerns women who head single-parent families and live together to save money. These women cannot claim the equivalent to married exemption. My question is this: Is this a fair and reasonable way to treat women living in such difficult circumstances? Why not amend the regulations to allow these women to claim the equivalent of the married exemption?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my colleague, I will study this representation.

The Minister of Finance has pointed out that our Government has brought a lot of tax equity into situations where previously none existed. I will take her question as a representation.

EQUIVALENT OF MARRIED STATUS REQUESTED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is not a representation. It is a request that has been around for a long time.

Would the Minister tell us about the principle that it should be possible for women in these circumstances, who are the prime members of the poverty group, single parents with children, trying to stretch their very few dollars as much as possible, to get the equivalent of married status? How soon will the Minister respond on the practicality if he agrees with the principle?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this Government has always agreed with the principle of tax equity. That is why we brought in some very progressive measures, such as child tax credits, and as the Minister of Finance has just said, benefits for people who live in the northern regions of the country.

We have studied the situation concerning women, single parents, who are living in conditions of poverty, and we will continue to do so.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

FOREIGN OWNED COMPANIES—CORPORATE CITIZENSHIP—MAINTENANCE OF CANADIAN VOICE IN DECISION MAKING

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I spoke of the trend for foreign owned firms in Canada to buy out their Canadian minority shareholders.

Since management will clearly find it easier to integrate Canadian and North American operations under the new trade agreement when there are no minority shareholders to deal with, does the Minister intend to take action such as issuing guidelines for good corporate conduct to encourage publicly traded companies to maintain a Canadian voice in decision making?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are guidelines that have been outstanding for some while now on the question of good corporate citizenship which include, among other things, just what the Member has said.

As my colleague pointed out yesterday, it is important to realize, looked at in the broadest sense, that investment in Canada expanded last year and it appears this year we will have very, very positive results. Investment intentions are up by 17 per cent this current year over last year. As one commentator said, "There are sure no signs of recession on the horizon this year".

Oral Questions

OFFERS TO BUY OUT MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question was not concerned with investment per se but with the behaviour of foreign owned companies within Canada.

Since Toronto based CIL Inc. has accepted a $184 million offer from its British parent to buy out CIL's minority shareholders, and an offer by a major pillar of Canada's food service industry, Nabisco Brands, to buy out minority shareholders closed on March 2, is this not evidence of a trend to buy out Canadian minority shareholders about which the Government should do something? We know the guidelines have existed since the previous Government, but are they being honoured and does the Government believe in them?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, before the Nabisco transaction took place there were discussions with Investment Canada, as there have to be under the guidelines, and Nabisco gave additional undertakings in areas such as world product mandates and increased capital investment that will significantly improve the longer term growth potential of the Canadian business and will secure additional employment for Canadians and maintain existing employment.

There are guidelines. Those guidelines were followed by the company in question. They were reviewed by Investment Canada and finally approved by the Minister responsible. Everything was done according to the law and according to the rules which govern the behaviour of foreign corporate citizens in this country.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

TWO-PRICE WHEAT POLICY—REGIONAL MARKET SHARES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. The Government has indicated that it intends to change the two-price wheat policy in such a way that producers will continue to receive support.

Two years ago an all-Party committee of this House recommended to the Minister of State that he explore, in conjunction with the Canadian Wheat Board and other wheat producer representative bodies, mechanisms to ensure that the two-price wheat policy continues to reflect historic regional market share of all wheat types. Has he had meetings in regard to this recommendation concerning historic regional market share as a basis for distribution of the benefit?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we said before Christmas that we wanted to change the way the producers receive the benefit to do two things: to see the producer simply continue to enjoy the benefit, and to make the industry competitive with product coming in from the outside. In line with that, I have had consultations with the industry and three meetings with producers in an attempt to arrive at a solution that takes as many points of view into account as possible, with the over-all objective of treating producers fairly whether they produce wheat in Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Quebec, on the Prairies or in British Columbia.

We are presently finished our consultations and are going through the process of determining how we will accomplish that, again in line with the basis of treating producers, no matter where they are in the country, as fairly as we possibly can.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—JOB ACTION TAKEN BY SHOPCRAFT UNIONS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister of Labour cannot be here today. Therefore, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I am sure he knows that the shopcraft unions have taken job action against CP Rail in Winnipeg which will not affect CN or VIA in any way and will, according to CP officials, only affect CP Rail in a limited way.

Could the Minister assure the House that he, the Minister of Labour, and the Cabinet will not, I repeat will not, proclaim Parts 2 and 3 of Bill C-85 passed last fall in order to force the shopcraft unions from not taking job action?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I am sure the Minister of Labour and the Government will look at the situation and make an assessment. I certainly cannot state that we will not take any particular action that might be authorized by legislation, but we will certainly examine the situation carefully first.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, since those shopcraft unions were not involved in any strike last year but were lumped in with all the others, will the Minister see to it that the collective bargaining process is allowed to proceed with those unions? In light of the hundreds of millions that poor old CPR made the last couple of years—

Mr. Nystrom: Poor?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, poor—it asked for 17 job concessions and then refused to negotiate for a year, would the Minister see to it that those unions are allowed to continue the collective bargaining process, and quit coming to the rescue of Canadian Pacific and the railways to the jeopardy of thousands of railway workers?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hate to see one Hon. Member of the House attack another Hon. Member like the hon. gentleman just attacked the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who, of course, was a director of CP before he came back into the House.

The hon. gentleman knows that we believe in the collective bargaining process and I am sure the Minister of Labour will not want to intervene unless there is some compelling reason why he must in the national interest. I can only repeat that we will look at the situation very carefully.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—PICTOU COUNTY COAL MINE PROJECT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Minister responsible for the operations of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Minister will know of a document which was submitted to the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia in December of 1987 with regard to the new coal mine for Pictou County. The document said that DEVCO's board of directors believe that they have a duty to respectfully advise both levels of government of DEVCO's considered opinion that a deep coal mine in Pictou County would not give benefit to Nova Scotia's economy, and that the impact such a mine would have upon the province's existing coal industry would offset any benefit.

I would ask the Minister whether or not he agrees with that particular opinion, since he and his Government appointed the senior management of DEVCO as well as the members of the board of directors.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question fully yesterday. I acknowledged that we have received that opinion and I also acknowledged that we did receive a request from Westray Coal Inc. for the development of a coal mine in Pictou County.

As in any case, whether it be in mining or any other industry and whether it be in Pictou County or anywhere else in Canada, every company has the ability to put in a request to the Department. That request is under study. No decision has been made. We have the point of view of the DEVCO board and the DEVCO management as of the date the report was submitted to us. We also have the point of view of local members of the community, including the Government of Nova Scotia.

I can only assure the Hon. Member that all these considerations are being looked into. I can only tell him once again that no decision has been taken and I have yet to see the final financial and marketing results of the studies that are under way.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REJECT WESTRAY COAL INCORPORATED PROPOSAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the board of directors and senior management submitted this report to the Minister, it would seem to me to be a lack of confidence in that senior management and board of directors if the Minister does not accept their findings.

In view of the Minister's commitment yesterday that he believes in the fundamental principle of not shifting jobs from one poor area of a province to another poor area, and in view of the recommendations which clearly spell out dislocation of 275 jobs and a lessening of revenue of $20 million annually to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, does it not logically follow that he ought to do the reasonable thing and reject outright the proposal submitted by Westray Coal Inc.?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I still stand by the statement I made yesterday. As Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I do not believe that it is a good policy to shift jobs from any region of the country to any other region of the country, let alone from one region of a province to another region of a province. That goes without saying. I have mentioned it before and I stand by that statement.

What the Hon. Member is suggesting is preposterous. He is trying to say that we should deny outright the rights of a corporate group to be heard. By extension, he is asking me to suggest that the Government would deny the rights of any Canadian to be heard before any tribunal, administrative or otherwise, in Canada. That I refuse. We are looking at the proposal, and as soon as I have the financial analysis I will be in a position to make a decision, taking into consideration the report the hon. gentleman has just mentioned.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Thousands of Canadian small businesses and indeed hundreds of thousands of Canadians are grateful that we have seen a drop of 360 bases points in interest rates since the Government has come to office, and nearly 1,300 bases points since the height of 22 per cent interest rates under the previous Government. However, in light of the very strong dollar, there still remains a 2 per cent gap between interest rates in Canada and those in the United States. I wonder if the Minister can explain why we do not see interest rates dropping more these days.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has pointed out, interest rates have come down quite considerably since we took office. I should point out that he has made one comparison between interest rates in Canada and those in the United States. If he were to look at the prime bank rate of the two countries, I believe he would see that the gap is 1.25 per cent.

I have indicated and the Governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated that we are watching this very closely. We do have some concerns about the incipient inflationary pressure and we want to make sure that we deal with that now, rather than allow it to become a major problem in the future. This is contrary to what had been done in the past. In 1981-82 we saw the results of that inactivity. That is the basis of the interest rate policies of the Government of Canada, but I do appreciate the concern the Hon. Member has expressed, and we will be watching it very closely.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POLICE PROGRAM ON ONTARIO RESERVES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question concerning the status of Indian policing in the Province of Ontario.

The Solicitor General may or may not know that the federal Government has refused so far to increase its share of funding of the present program and that the Indian chiefs of Ontario do not want to see this program become dependent on the provincial Government for its funding for obvious constitutional reasons. Since half the reserve communities in Ontario do not have resident police protection, I wonder if I could ask the Government what it is prepared to do to extend that police protection to those communities that need it.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs is aware of the difficulty and is in consultation with the Minister of the Ontario Government. We are looking very closely at what alternatives are available, but I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and seek further advice for him from the Minister.

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH SPACE AGENCY IN MONTREAL—QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE DECISION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, for months, representatives of the business community in Montreal, including employers, unions and politicians, have had to use advertising to ask the federal Government to locate the space agency in Montreal. On television, we see the director of La Presse, Mr. Landry, and the owner of the Journal de Montréal, M. Péladeau, saying: "Montréal c'est spatial".

My question is quite simple, and in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology I will direct it to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The people of Montreal want to know whether the decision about the space agency will be made public before, during or after the election campaign, which means never.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that the Minister of State for Science and Technology is indeed in the House and is now about to answer his question.

Second, I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that agencies are not created in a vacuum. They are created to accomplish certain tasks. In this particular case, the existence of a space agency will depend basically on whether the Government decides to proceed with a space station.

As soon as we in the Government have reached a decision on participating in the space station or the European Space Program or similar programs, an announcement about creating an agency will be made.

Unlike the previous Government, we do not create agencies with no purpose or mission in life. We create agencies to administer programs.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie on a supplementary, but very short please.

AEROSPACE—MONTREAL—ECONOMIC SPINOFFS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I think and the Minister will admit that the Montreal people will be very disappointed, for they were expecting a firm commitment that the space agency would be located in Montreal.

In view of his reply, I should like to know who decides about all the contracts which are awarded in all space research areas. The available information indicates that Quebec is getting only what trickles down. If there is no space agency and if there is no decision, could the Minister tell the House how come although "Montréal est spatial", that city is not getting the economic spinoffs it is entitled to?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can simply tell you that as far as research and development, science and technology are concerned, funds are very equitably distributed throughout Canada. Clearly an exception should be made for the National Capital region which is getting more than its fair share because of the historical evolution of an organization such as the National Research Council and its laboratories here in Ottawa.

I will be most pleased to try to obtain for my hon. friend precise figures, province by province, excluding the National Capital area; figures for the National Capital area will be given as well. I can tell you, however, that as far as science and technology expenditures are concerned, Quebec has never been and shall never be overlooked.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

FUND DEFICIT—CASH NEEDS OF CERTAIN FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to one of the Ministers of Agriculture. As part of the farm aid package to western farmers last December the Government announced $750 million would go to reducing the deficit in the western grain stabilization fund. Since that fund was designed to be self-financing with approximately two government dollars matching each producer dollar, and since only 80 per cent of western farmers who participate will receive the benefit of this assistance, can the Government explain what, if anything, it is proposing to do to meet the cash needs of the other 20 per cent?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very valid question. We said at the time that in order to keep the fund solvent we wanted to do two things: write down the deficit; at the same time, realizing not everyone participated, we wanted to give them an opportunity to join as of August 1, 1987. About 13 per cent of producers do not participate. We will very shortly be introducing amendments to take into account as best we can the concerns raised by the Hon. Member. He raises a very legitimate concern on behalf of producers who are not now participants in the western grain stabilization fund.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Deputy Government House Leader must recognize that in rising I am confirming that today is Thursday and he therefore has to give us a statement of government business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member very much for his information about the day.

I am pleased to advise the House that tomorrow we expect to deal with two Bills. The first one is Bill C-76 at report and third reading stage. Then we will move to C-109, the borrowing authority, at report and third reading stage.

On Monday we anticipate we will call Bill C-82 for further debate. It is our understanding there might be a disposition to wrap that up reasonably soon during the day and then move to further consideration of a motion which would deal with the subject matter of the Western Diversification Act passed earlier this week.

On Tuesday we will call Bill C-93, the Multiculturalism Act. We hope that very important Bill can receive second reading approval on Tuesday. On Wednesday it is our intention to call second reading of Bill C-79, the Elections Act.

At the present time it is our intention to designate Thursday and Friday as allotted days.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchi:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs erred seriously in urging upon the Provincial Premiers a political boycott of three Sikh organizations in Canada, thereby condemning entire groups on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations against individuals and, consequently undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society;

That this House, while condemning violence and terrorism as political instruments, affirms that all Canadian citizens, regardless of origin must not be subjected to any coercion, intimidation or other action by the Government designed to prevent their free and peaceful expression of their opinions and concerns about events and issues in Canada or in other lands; and

That this House therefore demands that the Government provide Parliament with all relevant information that led to its aforementioned communication with the Provinces and provide the Canadian Sikh community with a full, public opportunity to defend its honour and integrity and that the Government immediately withdraw its allegations and issue a full apology to all Canadians, and to the Canadian Sikh community in particular, for initiating an unprovoked attack on the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens and for thereby subverting federal multiculturalism policy.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to participate in the debate today on the motion put forward by the Official Opposition. We have put forward this resolution because we want to bring to the attention of the Canadian people and the Government that a policy has been introduced by the Government which amounts to nothing less than a betrayal of the policy of multiculturalism. It is also a violation of the rights of free speech and free association, not just of the Sikh community which is the target for the Secretary of State for External Affairs' attack, but of all minority groups and all ethnic groups.

I participated in the debate earlier today when I had the opportunity to have some exchanges with the Minister. In the 20 minutes I have to participate now I want to deal with two questions in the context of this outrageous letter from the Minister. First, what is the proper role for the Government of Canada in the face of some or all members of any ethnic community espousing as a cause the separation of all or part of their historic homeland from its present arrangements? What attitude should the Government take toward that situation? Second, how is that affected by the intrusion of violence or unlawful means to effect that end?

The advocacy and promotion of separation in any part of the world can be democratic. When we are looking at the question, we ought to give that the first look. Then we should turn to how the position of the Government of Canada should be affected when it appears that violence or other unlawful means are associated with the cause.

The Minister made clear the position of his Government on that question. There is not much doubt about it. He said the official government position is to oppose the dismemberment or dismantling of friendly states, and then he added, "particularly through violent means". I will deal with that, but let us just deal with the dismemberment of friendly states.

I do not think it ought to be the official position of the Government of Canada, and I insist it has not been in the past, that Canada was in favour of or opposed to dismemberment of any particular state by peaceful, lawful means. Surely that is an issue for the people in the country concerned to decide. They have to decide on the shape and extent of their nation. However, here is the important additional point. People living in Canada have a right to their views about the situation in other countries, whether they are elected or not. That has nothing to do with the official position of the Government of Canada which, as I say, should be neither for nor against. Within our country, I argue that the people have the right to have views, to promote their views, to advocate their views, peacefully, lawfully, as to the separation or otherwise of some other country.

The Minister made one particularly outrageous statement in his remarks and I want to explore it. I will give the House the tenor of the statement because I do not have the exact words in front of me. He said the vast majority of Sikhs want to come to Canada to live their lives peacefully. The implication was that they did not want to have anything to do with the situation in the homeland. He could be right about that; maybe the majority do, maybe some do, but that is their business. However, the idea that somehow or other it is wrong for them to have views about the arrangements in their historic homeland is so fundamentally offensive to our notion of multiculturalism that it has to be challenged right here in this place. The Government of Canada has no business suggesting that nice boys and girls who come to this country from another country should live their lives in Canada with nothing to say and nothing to think about their historic homeland. Just to put the proposition is to show how offensive it is.

People come to this country from many troubled places in the world. They bring all kinds of baggage with them including how they feel about the way their country is developing, their relatives, and their former fellow citizens, or perhaps their present fellow citizens because they may continue, under the laws of Canada, to remain citizens of both countries. Mr. Clark is telling the multicultural communities of this country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I would like to bring to the attention of this long-term Member, who knows better, that he should not be using the Minister's name.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am rarely as outraged as I am by this and I apologize to you for referring to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) by his surname.

He is telling these people to come to Canada, to make this their homeland, to bring us their ideas, their songs, their dances, and their dishes, but not to open their baggage. He is telling them to leave their suitcases closed, to lock them up in their cupboards and not to start bringing out the things which bothered them when they were living in their historic homeland.

What nonsense that is. It is completely unacceptable to limit multicultural communities to living their lives in Canada now, to tell them that now that they are in Canada they must be good boys and girls and forget about the problems in the part of the world from which they came.

Well, Mr. Secretary of State for External Affairs, the communities which come to Canada are entitled to have their views, to form associations, and to express their views without being told that that is somehow un-Canadian and without having officials of the Government of Canada, elected officials, and provincial premiers warned not to visit a group because it espouses the dismantlement of a friendly state.

We know something about the possibilities of separation in our country; we lived with that. It is always a possibility on the horizon of any great federal state that there will be a movement which will want to separate. What attitude should countries that are friendly to Canada take? Should they take the view that Canada has no business going through a debate about separation, that they are in favour of our country remaining united, or the opposite?

I draw a distinction between the official position of a country and the position of other elected people in the country or other prominent opinion leaders in the country. The official position should be neutral. When the President of France came to Canada and said "Vive le Québec libre" meaning "I, France, am in favour of Quebec being an independent country" he was kicked out, and quite rightly, because he was speaking for France. He was the head of a country visiting our country and taking sides. That is wrong. However, to suggest that members of the French society should not have views on whether Canada should be separate or together, or advocate or promote them, is a totally different thing. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reconsider that position and to return to the traditional view that we do not take sides on the shape or extent of nations, friendly or unfriendly.

The Minister has picked on the Sikhs who are, unfortunately, the targets of a lot of criticism in this country, undeservedly so as far as the vast majority are concerned. What about the Armenians who live in Canada? They advocate the separation of that part of Turkey and the Soviet Union and the creation of an independent state. What about the Ukrainians? Do you think that Ukrainian Canadians are happy watching the nationalism of their homeland being snuffed out? Do you think they must remain silent about it and that no Ministers or Members of Parliament should listen to the aspirations of Ukrainian Canadians to have their historic homeland returned to an independent country? There are the Croations, the Basques in Spain, the Estonians, the Lithuanians, and the Latvians. The list is endless. For the Government of Canada to tell all of those ethnic groups to keep their baggage closed if they want to be considered good Canadians, not to let out these ideas which make certain foreign powers uncomfortable, is not the Canadian way to handle irredentism, to handle separatist aspirations or democratic nationalistic aspirations which multicultural communities have.

There are some rules. This type of recognition can create some tensions in our country. There is no doubt that it can. However, we fortunately have some rules for guiding the debate in our country. They do not include the kind of smarmy letter, to which I referred earlier, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs had the crust to read in his debate. The rules we have are not his fancy opinions. The rules we have are the laws of this country and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the other point which I wanted to make.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs read a letter that I sent while I was Solicitor General, which I was pleased to hear and which I endorse. I reminded the House that we must be vigilant to oppose and stamp out violence, terrorism, or unlawful means, even if the target is outside of Canada. If we allow terrorist activities to be planned in our country, to be practised in our country, to be financed and provisioned from our country, we risk bringing terrorism to Canada and increase the threat to innocent people around the world of being killed and injured. We have a policy in that area, a policy of opposing the use of violence. When a group espouses violence we should oppose the whole group.

The Secretary of State referred to the case of the FLQ. He tried to suggest that somehow or other that was like the three groups about which I am going to speak in a minute. The FLQ was a secret association dedicated, by its constitution and its common bond, to the violent overthrow of the established government in the Province of Quebec and in Canada. It participated officially in secret meetings, bombings and dynamiting. The Minister tried to draw an analogy between that and these three organizations, a meeting of one of which I and some of my colleagues attended. Wives, spouses, and children were present and it was a far cry from anything which could be called a terrorist organization.

On March 16, 1987, the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote another letter warning Canadians about another group in the Sikh community called the Federation of Sikh Societies in Canada. What happened to them? I am not suggesting that he should have targeted that group, but why was the menu last year the Federation of Sikh Societies in Canada when this year the menu is three other Sikh groups in Canada? What is the Minister trying to tell us? What kind of consistency is coming from the Government? How can the Minister call a group a terrorist group on the basis that, as is indicated in the letter, although it is hard to believe, "some of their members have promoted or engaged in acts of violence"?

I want to pick a group which is beyond criticism to use as an example. Take the Roman Catholic Church and look at what some of its members are doing in Northern Ireland. They are terrorists. What does that tell you? Does that tell you that the Roman Catholic Church is a terrorist organization? Does that mean that Ministers of the Crown, Members of Parliament, and provincial premiers should stay away from Catholic organizations because some of their members are dedicated to the violent overthrow of the Government of Northern Ireland, the British Government, and to the establishment of an independent state there or an annexation or whatever? That is ridiculous. Yet that is exactly what he has done in this case.

The fact that he designated three groups, without adding the one group from last year, shows how mischievous this type of approach is. It has been alleged that some of the members of these groups have engaged in violence. For my purposes, I will not contest that, but what I am contesting is drawing a generalization about the group as a whole from the activities of a few members.

It would be different if these were terrorist groups. If the Minister or the Solicitor General were telling us that these were terrorist groups, he would even be fulfilling a duty because we should be warned by the Government of Canada about these matters. The Government has the powerful instruments of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the RCMP to learn about these activities which happen in Canadian society. It would be doing a service to Members of Parliament and provincial Premiers to warn us off from groups like that.

However, it is going too far for a Minister to draw a conclusion, from alleged facts that some members have engaged in or promoted terrorist activities, that the whole group is contaminated, irrespective of its goals, its membership and modus operandi.

My colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), already stated that there are 20,000 Sikhs in one of these three organizations. It is an atrocious slur against a group of 20,000 people to say we should stay away from their meetings because some of their members—one, two or ten of the 20,000—have promoted or were engaged in terrorist activities.

The Government has betrayed us on multiculturalism. It has betrayed us on the proper approach to take in the face of separatism in other countries around the world. I hope this debate will lead the Government back to a more sensible, restrained and appropriate approach for a country like Canada toward the communities that live here and want to live freely and make all their views and values known in a law abiding manner, respectful of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think I listened carefully to what the Hon. Member said and tried to grasp the full meaning of his remarks. Setting aside the whole issue of terrorism, he spent a good deal of his time dealing with what he believes is a legitimate role for Canada, that is, to use Canada as a base of operations to promote separatism in other countries as long as it is peaceful dissent, as I understand him, in a land of free speech.

Will he enlarge on his concept of franchise operations in Canada from around the world who would feel free to use Canada as a base to promote separatism in other countries?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if "franchise operations" is a term of art. Unless it has some special meaning, I have no objection to that.

Let us take any particular ethnic community in Canada, including mine, for example. I am a member of the Jewish community. I am a Zionist. As a member of the Jewish community and as a Zionist, I have a view of how events in the Middle East should unfold. I am interested in it, I make financial contributions to it. I attend meetings on that subject and talk about how I feel that portion of the world should resolve its problems. Surely I am free to do that in this country.

I have Armenian friends and recently attended an important meeting at the Armenian Hall. They have ideas and expressed their views about what Turkey should do in relation to a very troubled province in their country.

The Government of Canada could be interested when manipulation of these groups occurs. Occasionally, foreign governments and international organizations may try to stage-manage the way in which a group would conduct itself. They may conduct various activities in an attempt to undermine some of the leaders of the community, for example, or in some way undermine the authenticity of the program of that community group. When that happens I think there is a role for the Government of Canada.

For example, when I was Solicitor General I learned how a community that was advocating independence in one part of the world was infiltrated by a foreign government opposed to that type of independence. There is a role for the Government to play in that circumstance. However, the Secretary of State has made statements about a group with 20,000 people, the World Sikh Organization, whose objectives as stated in its charter are, "To strive through peaceful means for the establishment of a Sikh nation Khalistan—". I am not suggesting that the Government or the RCMP must take that at face value. Perhaps a group will put in writing that it wants to use peaceful means in order to disguise the fact they are a terrorist organization. In this case, I do not believe that they are, nor does this group. The Government is not saying they are a terrorist organization, it is simply referring to some members out of that 20,000.

I am pleased to have this question because I want Government Members to at least see what it is they are rejecting. They are rejecting the idea that an ethnic community ought to be able to advocate what I call change in a certain part of the world. I have named a dozen areas where Canadians from those areas want change. I think the Government should not take sides officially, but certainly should not try to deter the groups by keeping other Canadians away from them.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there are Tamils living in Canada who are concerned about the situation in Sri Lanka. There are Spanish people living in Canada who are concerned about the Basque and an area in France. There are Irish people concerned about what is happening in Northern Ireland. There are probably very few countries in the world today that do not have some group advocating separatism.

Toronto is a place where many immigrants and refugees have found a home but who still have legitimate domestic ties to their homeland. How many countries would the Hon. Member estimate should be encouraged, in one way or other, to carry on this kind of activity in Canada that would encourage separatism in another country? How many countries in the world can be represented in our country, which is then used as a base of operations to carry on strategic goals in another country?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member, in asking that question, has a number in mind? I can only say that as long as these are authentic feelings being expressed by ethnic communities, the number will be the bottom line after freedom of expression is recognized for all the groups that care to express themselves.

I think it is also worth noting that there may be many other groups in the country or members of the community who feel that the country should stay together. A great many people who have come from India and Canada feel that India should stay together and remain one country. They have other ways of solving the grievances that are being put forward by the World Sikh Organization. Maybe there are even Sikhs—and I know there are—who feel that that country should stay together.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that somehow or other the Government should take their side, that it should support that organization, that Members of Parliament and provincial Premiers attend their meetings while they boycott the meetings of the other side? Just to put the proposition is to show how ridiculous it is and how the position of the Government of Canada on this subject has not been thought out. Leave it to them, provided that they are bound by the fundamental code that they obey the laws of our country and respect the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If we cannot say that they do not, then they have to be recognized as being allowed to do that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has understandably been very critical of the policy of the federal Government as expressed in the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I fully support the anger and the outrage of the Liberal Party and of the Official Opposition on this matter.

If the Hon. Member and his Party feel so deeply that this letter was unfair and unwarranted, as we New Democrats certainly feel, why is it then that the Liberal Premier of Ontario indicated that he would in fact respect the wish of the Secretary of State for External Affairs? The Premier of Ontario, David Peterson, who received a copy of the letter from the Secretary of State said, "Yes, we will take it seriously. Obviously, we do not want to cause some kind of international incident or something embarrassing to the Secretary of State".

If this was such a destructive policy, if it was so deeply offensive, as it is to the World Sikh Organization and to the other organizations which are singled out in the letter, that is, Babbar Khalsa and the International Sikh Youth Federation, why is the Liberal Party in Ontario saying one thing and the Liberal Party nationally saying something quite different?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, of course I am not in a position to speak for the Government of Ontario. However, neither is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in that position. He characterized the language to which the Hon. Member just referred as an endorsement of his policy. I characterize it as a polite reply, an indication that the letter will be examined. I think any letter that is sent by a Minister of the Government to a provincial Government ought at least to be received with respect, but the proof of the pudding will be in the eating. I assure the Hon. Member that no Liberal will be able to accept the advice contained in that letter when it is considered on reflection.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Hon. Member for York Centre indicates that the Premier of Ontario stated that he would examine the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That, with respect, is simply not the case.

The Premier of Ontario indicated that in fact he would obey the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am now asking the Hon. Member for York Centre this: Has the Liberal Premier of Ontario had a change of heart? Have there been some consultations and is it now the position of the Liberal Premier of Ontario that, indeed, he will not obey the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs? In fact will he not take the request seriously but, rather, reject it as being a totally unwarranted and unfair attack on a community which has contributed a great deal to Canada?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is wrong. The letter does not say that the Government of Ontario or the Premier of Ontario will obey the letter that was received from Ottawa.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) on debate.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate arising from the motion of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). This motion states that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) urged upon the provincial Premiers a political boycott of three Sikh organizations in Canada. This potentially inflammatory interpretation of the Minister's remarks is an injustice to both the intent and the substance of his message which was to caution provincial Premiers who might be "drawn inadvertently" into activities associating them with individuals who condone acts of violence as a means of achieving political ends.

I wish to stress the word "individuals". It is of course evident to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to all Hon. Members that the Government condemns the violent actions of certain individuals within a community, and not the community as a whole. Under no circumstances are we prepared to accept the notion that threats or actions endangering the life or well-being of any Canadian citizen, or any other person, are justified.

This Government embraces the belief that all Canadian citizens of every origin, including the Sikh community, many of whom live and worship in my riding of Lachine, have the constitutional freedom to be full and equal partners in the political, social, cultural and economic life of Canada. This nation was founded on that belief.

From the time of its first occupation by our aboriginal peoples to the arrival of British and French settlers and then immigrants from Europe and all parts of the world this country has been defined by a diversity of cultures, traditions and beliefs. It has promised certain freedoms to all those who choose to live here. As Canada grew and became a nation the ideal of a truly free country in which the rights of all its citizens are respected and protected grew with it.

Writing in 1865, Sir Hector Langevin, who became Canada's first Secretary of State, declared the principle, "Justice to all races, to all regions, to all nationalities and to all interests". That principle not only became a primary feature of government policy and legislation in the years to come, it became one of the fundamental values of our society as well.

On August 4, 1960, the values of equality of opportunity and participation for all members of our society were upheld by law when the Canadian Bill of Rights was approved by the House of Commons and signed by that great parliamentarian and Prime Minister of the day, John G. Diefenbaker. The Bill affirmed privileges to which all Canadians are entitled. It states:

> In Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex . . . human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Again, in 1982, the Bill's guarantee of human rights was greatly strengthened with the proclamation of a new Constitution Act which contained the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In both spirit and wording the Charter provides the guidance through which this Government seeks to ensure the full and equal partnership of all Canadians in the life of their country. It also clearly states the rights and responsibilities of all citizens. I want to remind Hon. Members of some of the Charter's basic commitments.

Article 15 affirms equality rights for every individual. Article 25 recognizes aboriginal rights. Article 27 is an affirmation of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

After the current Government took office in September, 1984, it initiated a review of existing multiculturalism policy and programs with the aim of developing a new policy based on the realities of today and the expectations of tomorrow. But even while this review was under way the Government was taking significant steps to reinforce multiculturalism as a cornerstone of Canadian life.

They include establishing the House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism; convening the first national conference on policing in urban multicultural societies held in Vancouver in 1984, and continued collaboration on a national strategy on police-minority relations; holding the first federal-provincial-territorial conference of Ministers responsible for multiculturalism in Winnipeg in 1985; and introducing the Employment Equity Act of 1986, which required federally-regulated employers to provide improved access to employment opportunities for women and the disabled, as well as for aboriginal peoples and racial minorities.

Also included is the launching of a program within federal Departments and agencies to ensure the hiring and promotion of members of racial minorities; increasing the rate of appointments of qualified members of Canadian cultural communities to federal boards and commissions in order that they better reflect the cultural diversity of Canada; and finally, proclaiming Canada's participation in the second decade for action to combat racism and racial discrimination. In regard to this latter initiative, the Department of the Secretary of State has a mandate for implementing Canada's international human rights obligations. It carries out that mandate in co-operation with various federal and provincial authorities.

The Department co-ordinates Canada's federal-provincial monitoring of how we are complying with measures guaranteeing the rights contained in the United Nations international convenant on civil and political rights, and the international convenant on economic and social rights, as well as certain other human rights treaties.

Through the Department of the Secretary of State the Government focuses on promoting human rights throughout the population at large. It is concerned with creating a wide-ranging awareness of understanding of basic human rights and freedoms. It concerns itself with the voluntary sector, with community-based projects that safeguard human rights, with public education and curriculum materials promoting knowledge of human rights. At the same time, the Department is concerned with enshrining justice in law.

In fact, the preamble to the Canadian multiculturalism Act, Bill C-93, tabled in this House on December 1, invokes the minority and racial rights provisions of the international convenant on civil and political rights, and the international convention on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

The proposed multiculturalism Act is an historic piece of legislation which will be debated fully in this House next week. I wish to remind Hon. Members of some of its highlights and its provisions to ensure the preservation of cultural heritage of all Canadians of every origin, to promote the full participation of all Canadians in our society, and to enhance harmonious race relations and cross-cultural understanding.

The multiculturalism Act acknowledges the vital contribution to Canada of all its cultural and racial communities. It lays out the framework in which everyone will be able to participate in the business of the nation on a basis of complete equality. The supremacy of human rights is the essence of equality.

Far from boycotting any of Canada's racial communities, this Government seeks to affirm in law that all Canadian citizens are full and equal partners in our society. It seeks to recognize multiculturalism as a central feature of our society, not only for today but for the 21st century and beyond.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) clearly stated:

> Multiculturalism is an affirmation of our commitment that Canadians of all ethnic and racial backgrounds have the right to equal recognition and equal opportunity in this country. Thus multiculturalism lies at the very heart of the idea of Canada, of our sense of country . . . It reflects where we have come from and where we are going.

The Canadian multiculturalism Bill sets forth the multiculturalism policy of Canada and it entrenches in law a government-wide commitment to implement that policy. It states that the federal Government will provide leadership to Canadian institutions and people to reinforce an appreciation and understanding of multiculturalism throughout the country.

The Bill sets out a clear mandate for the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. In particular, it assigns to the Minister the responsibility to encourage and promote a co-ordinated approach to multiculturalism throughout the federal Government. The Bill provides in legislation a clear and direct process of accountability through the tabling of an annual report to Parliament on the implementation of the multiculturalism policy of Canada, and the review of this report on a permanent basis by a parliamentary committee.

When passed, the multiculturalism Bill will not only preserve the diverse heritage of this country's identity, it will provide a means of improving intercultural relationships in the present. The Bill provides a legislative base for programs that will assist cultural preservation, combat discrimination, and promote institutional change.

For many years the Government has supported programs which preserve and promote multiculturalism and which work to protect human rights in Canada. But the proposed Act gives legal substance to those programs. It underlines the commitment of the Government of Canada to help to create a fair and tolerant society for all Canadians in which the principles of equality, diversity, and community are an overriding characteristic.

The Government has reason to be proud of its record. It is a Government that refuses to accept discrimination, intolerance or bigotry against any racial or cultural community or individual member of that community.

It has been proven again and again that Canada's unique multicultural character helps to give this country a healthy and dynamic social life, cultural life, and business life. Our diversity is one of our greatest national assets. It has brought us enormous economic benefits and increasing international respect.

We have shown the world that we are a nation committed to fairness, equality, and freedom. That conviction may be our most valuable natural resource, and one that we can be proud to export to the world.

Mr. Manly: I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments in favour of multiculturalism. Would he be willing to address the following issue. What does he think about the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) sent a letter to seven Premiers in which he indicated that, in his opinion, they should not attend meetings organized by three Sikh organizations? By sending this letter there was a secret process involved, not a public one, which had the effect of shutting off a whole group of people from access to public officials and to provincial politicians. It shut them off from having any access to being able to raise issues that are of importance to them. It tarred them all with the terrorist brush.

Would the Hon. Member address that issue, as well as the broader issue of multiculturalism? When it comes right down to it, the degree to which we deal with individual situations like that is the degree to which our whole policy on multiculturalism stands or falls. It is fine to have policy written on paper, but what do we do in a concrete situation? I would like the Hon. Member to address that concrete situation.

Mr. Layton: In response to the question posed by my colleague, as I understood it, the interpretation of the letter that was quoted in the motion and also by the Secretary of State for External Affairs this morning in the debate was to caution provincial Premiers who might inadvertently be drawn into activities or being associated with individuals who condone acts of violence as a means of achieving political ends.

What we have heard in the debate today was that this was not a representation to avoid contact with the Sikh or other cultural communities across the country, but rather not to be drawn into situations which condone acts of violence as a means of achieving political ends.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke indicated that it was not the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to ask elected officials to avoid events which may be sponsored by the three Sikh organizations in question. I have in front of me a copy of the letter that was sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I invite the Hon. Member who has just spoken to read the letter as well. In the letter he says:

—I would appreciate your co-operation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.

Quite clearly the Minister is saying, avoid, stay away from events which are sponsored by these organizations. Does the Hon. Member agree with that suggestion?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the emphasis placed by my hon. colleague on the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. "Despite these difficulties, I would appreciate your co-operation", he said in writing to the Premiers and offering his counsel from his position as official Secretary of State for External Affairs, "in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state". The emphasis is on those activities and events which occur.

Like many of my colleagues, I have enjoyed the community of Sikhs living on the West Island of Montreal. They are very peace-loving and very appreciative of the role they play as full Canadian citizens.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to get back to the text of what the Minister actually said in the letter. I should like to read, again for the record, the opening paragraph of the letter:

I am writing to you concerning possible invitations to you or members of your government to attend functions organized by members of the Canadian Sikh community. The majority of these invitations are valuable in ensuring that your government is kept informed of developments in the Sikh community and that the community is encouraged to participate fully in Canadian life.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member who has just spoken the following: What in this letter or in that particular paragraph of the letter could be construed to mean that the Minister is trying to cut off the circulation of honourable Canadian citizens in the full participation in Canadian life?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, in response to my colleague, the interpretation which I place upon the words used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is that we are encouraged, as we are with all cultural communities, to enjoy, to participate in, and to be informed about the events and the activities of these societies.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs was alerting his colleagues, political officers of the provincial Governments, to the possibility that some of these events might be organized to take advantage of their official roles in society. When these events are for engaging in conversation and enjoying the activity, I do not see any restriction.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchi:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs erred seriously in urging upon the Provincial Premiers a political boycott of three Sikh organizations in Canada, thereby condemning entire groups on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations against individuals and, consequently undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society;

That this House, while condemning violence and terrorism as political instruments, affirms that all Canadian citizens regardless of origin must not be subjected to any coercion, intimidation or other action by the Government designed to prevent their free and peceful expression of their opinions and concerns about events and issues in Canada or in other lands; and

That this House therefore demands that the Government provide Parliament with all relevant information that led to its aforementioned communication with the Provinces and provide the Canadian Sikh community with a full, public opportunity to defend its honour and integrity and that the Government immediately withdraw its allegations and issue a full apology to all Canadians, and to the Canadian Sikh community in particular, for initiating an unprovoked attack on the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens and for thereby subverting federal multiculturalism policy.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this very fundamental question of human rights, a question which really goes to the core of Canada as a multicultural nation.

Canadians across the land were shocked when they learned of the attempt by the Conservative Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to dictate to elected officials at the provincial level, and presumably to officials at the local level and even officials in his own caucus, which organizations they could meet with in Canada.

Let us clear up the confusion right now. The Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) who spoke just a few minutes ago suggested that the Minister was simply saying that there may be certain functions which might be inappropriate to be attended. That is simply not the case.

The letter—and I have a copy of it before me—sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Premiers states that the majority of invitations received from the Canadian Sikh community indeed can be accepted and would be valuable, but it goes on to say:

> There are, however, three Sikh organizations which exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state, known as "Khalistan". These . . . organizations are the Babbar Khalsa, the International Sikh Youth Federation . . . and the World Sikh Organization.

The letter goes on to suggest:

> Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities aimed at Indian interests in Canada or elsewhere. The activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India. The government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.

Who is it that is running the foreign affairs policy of Canada? Is it the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada, or is it the Government of India?

When we examine the response of our Secretary of State for External Affairs, it seems that in fact our policy in respect of this very important question is not being dictated by Canadians, by Canadian interests, but rather is a policy which is being dictated by the Government of India itself. I take exception to that suggestion, and I believe that many Canadians take exception to it.

The letter goes on to indicate that the Secretary of State for External Affairs believes that elected officials should avoid "events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state".

Many of us thought that we had a Charter of Rights and Freedoms which respected freedom of speech, which respected freedom of association, and which respected the multicultural heritage of Canadians. However, this kind of insulting, degrading attack on a community which has contributed an enormous amount to Canada is fundamentally unacceptable.

I would have hoped that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have recognized that, would have stood in his place and said: "I am sorry, upon reflection I realize that I was tarnishing an entire community", a community of some 200,000 Canadians who have contributed an enormous amount to our society, I might say, in the face of considerable adversity over the years.

It was early in this century, just after the turn of the century, that the first Sikhs came to Canada, to my own Province of British Columbia, to work in the forest industry. From the very beginning the Sikh community in Canada was the subject of government-sponsored, government initiated racist policies. The vote was denied to them, even though they were all British subjects and other British subjects were entitled to the vote. They were forbidden to bring their wives and their families to join them. They were forbidden to own any timber-cutting rights or to hold any public office.

In an incident that we remember particularly vividly in British Columbia in 1914, some 376 would-be Sikh immigrants were kept stranded aboard a freighter, the Kamagata Maru, for some two months without water, without food, and were finally turned around and sent back to Asia, leaving the local community in turmoil. That long history of racism is one which we should recognize and take steps to overcome.

Evidently we have seen other disturbing illustrations of unfair attacks on the Sikh community in Canada. CSIS, the civilian security intelligence service, and indeed the RCMP, in their response to certain violent incidents, have effectively branded an entire community as being unlawful or as supporting terrorism. Members of the Sikh community are law-abiding, upright, outstanding Canadians who have contributed a great deal to Canadian society. That community itself is the first to denounce violence and acts of terrorism. It is for that reason that the community has taken such strong exception to some of the actions of CSIS and the RCMP in recent months.

I have been privileged to attend a number of functions at Sikh temples in the lower mainland of British Columbia at the Khalsa Diwan temple, the Akali Singh Sikh and others. I have spoken at various public meetings. In attendance at those public meetings have been representatives of organizations which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has singled out. I make no apology for that, Mr. Speaker. I was proud to have been invited to participate in those functions and proud to be invited to speak to Canadians who have contributed a great deal. Many of my constituents are from the Sikh community in Burnaby. Indeed, there are 60,000 Sikhs in British Columbia out of a population in Canada of some 200,000. It is precisely because of the strong history of respect for the law that this kind of attack on these three organizations is so unacceptable.

I noted in the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the Government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations. There are some who are concerned. I have heard a number of representatives at the Sikh community voice this concern that, indeed, agents of the Indian security service may, in fact, be participating in actions here in Canada to undermine the credibility and respect of the Sikh community. We know that the Canadian Government sent back to India rather quickly certain people who supposedly were diplomats working out of the consulate, I believe, in Toronto. I want to flag this as one area of concern that Canada not in any way permit agents of the Indian security service to work on Canadian soil, whether they be acting as agents provocateurs or in any other capacity whatsoever.

The implications of this letter written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs are deeply troubling. If this very dangerous policy is applied in other sectors of Canadian society, where will it stop?

I recently returned from a visit to the Middle East. While there I visited the occupied West Bank, and Gaza, Israel. I met with Palestinians who are part of a national tragedy whose plight has been ignored for far too long by the community of nations, Palestinians who are seeking the right to self-determination, the right to decide for themselves on their own future, to decide who will represent them in international forums and ultimately to have the right of statehood accepted. Is it, in fact, the policy of the Government of Canada that Palestinian organizations in Canada that advocate an independent state for the Palestinians should be boycotted by elected representatives? That would be deeply offensive and would be an unwarranted interference in the lives of those particular organizations.

The implication of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs is doing is very dangerous. He is cutting off the channels of communication through various organizations, the World Sikh Organization, the Babbar Khalsa and the International Sikh Youth Federation. One can only imagine who else is on the list. He is cutting off communication with these organizations, which are certainly advocating a number of important policies but which are advocating them in a peaceful and open way. If these organizations are being told that they cannot communicate with other Canadians, that they cannot communicate with elected representatives then, in effect, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is encouraging the very kinds of acts that he purports to be opposed to. That is the danger of this approach.

It is through these organizations that the Sikh community in Canada can communicate its concerns to elected representatives. If then the organizations are treated as persona non grata, if they are driven underground and dealt with as if they do not exist, then as sure as I am standing here other organizations will surface which say, "If the Government of Canada will not speak to our elected representatives then we will take action". That action may be precisely what the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicates he wants to avoid. I suggest that, from that perspective alone, this policy is not only insulting but is counterproductive.

Where do we go from here, Mr. Speaker? I would suggest that this matter must not be allowed to rest with a one day debate in the House of Commons. I would suggest rather, as my colleague the House Leader for the New Democratic Party has proposed during his very thoughtful remarks earlier today, that either a special parliamentary committee be struck or that a standing committee be given a mandate to inquire into the implications of this matter from the perspective of human rights, of the multiculturalism policy in Canada, and, most important, of the implications for a proud and law abiding community of Sikhs in Canada that has been tarnished and insulted by the actions of this Minister.

I was disappointed that the Premier of Ontario in responding to the letter of the Secretary of State for External Affairs chose to indicate that the Liberal Government in Ontario would respect that decision. I quote from a story in The Globe and Mail, a respected national newspaper, for February 26, which reads:

> Ontario Premier David Peterson promised yesterday to obey Mr. Clark's request. "We will take it seriously", he told reporters outside his office. "Obviously we don't want to cause some kind of international incident or something embarrassing to the Minister of External Affairs".

If the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) wants to get up and disagree with the Premier of Ontario, certainly that is his right to do so.

Mr. Marchi: Check with your colleagues.

Mr. Robinson: He will have the opportunity to do that. I know, for example, that the Premier of Quebec has certain views on the question of free trade which are at variance with the Member's leader. These differences exist within that Party and we understand that. It is a broad church, Mr. Speaker.

I think it is important and it is regrettable that the Liberal Premier of Ontario apparently has jumped into bed with the Tory Secretary of State for External Affairs in a way that does no credit whatsoever to the Sikh community in Canada. I would urge the Government to reconsider and recognize that a mistake has been made, not just a mistake that can be remedied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs standing up saying Canadians are free to attend whichever organizations they want, but one that can be remedied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs standing in his place in the House saying, "I was wrong, Mr. Speaker. I made a mistake. I tarnished and insulted the Sikh community in Canada unfairly. I recognize that and I want to apologize to that community".

That would be the honourable and noble thing to do. That is what we hoped the Secretary of State for External Affairs might have done today. In the absence of that, we are left with the alternative of proceeding to a parliamentary committee. Certainly we in the New Democratic Party intend to take this matter up in the appropriate parliamentary committee. It should not be left to the Sikh community to sue for libel. It has been suggested that there may be a lawsuit. Lawsuits cost money. When the community has been attacked, why should it have to spend resources to defend itself? Surely that is the role of the Government. The role of the Government is to stand up for the multicultural traditions of Canada and not to attack a community that has contributed an enormous amount to Canadian society.

I support the motion and I join with my colleagues in condemning this attack on the Sikh community of Canada.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was not intending to rise because I agreed with many of the points the Hon. Member raised earlier. However, not surprisingly, he then got into his sanctimonious monopoly on virtue. That was a carry over from an earlier question he asked the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) about Premier Peterson's position.

The Hon. Member is basically twisting and turning the words the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) used in the House to suggest that a Premier of a province simply said that he would consider a letter sent to him by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it is not every day that a Secretary of State for External Affairs writes to a Premier. What Premier Peterson said was that he was neither endorsing nor supporting, publicly or privately, the letter. I checked with his office as late as yesterday. All he said was that he was still in the process of generally considering the letter. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that to say otherwise would be to play a game of intellectual dishonesty.

Moreover, I think it ill behooves the Hon. Member to play that little game when, for the last week or so, his Party has not had the courage to ask questions on this issue. One Statement Pursuant to Standing Order 21 was made by the NDP multiculturalism critic, whom I applaud. Yet day in and day out, we have at least had the interest to ask approximately six questions. Two members of the Government's own caucus have asked more questions on this subject than did members of the NDP.

When the Hon. Member wants to be sanctimonious, I would ask him to check with his own colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), on his position on Mr. Clark's letter. While the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has been away on other business for the last little while—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope the Hon. Member would address the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, not by his surname.

Mr. Marchi: You are correct, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who has been away on other business during the last week, to check with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway about why, in his humble opinion, Mr. Clark was right, why he continued to badger—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have said it twice and I will not say it a third time. The Hon. Member has been here for a while now. He should know that he should address the Hon. Minister by his title, that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Marchi: You are absolutely correct again. Again, I would ask the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who laughs and shakes his head, why it is that his own colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, agrees with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and why that same Hon. Member continued to badger our side when we were asking pertinent questions of the Minister and why the NDP Member for Vancouver—Kingsway feels that his statements are correct when he says that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is correct that there are radical, violent groups within the Sikh community in British Columbia.

Rather than being sanctimonious and rather than trying to twist and turn the words of the Premier of Ontario, why does the Hon. Member not have the courage and decency to try to turn around the members of his own political Party who disagree with the motion and agree with the statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs? That is probably why in the last 10 days the NDP caucus has not found the courage to ask one single question in the House on this issue.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, in the limited time available to me to respond, I will try to be brief and focus on the issues as opposed to the rhetoric. First, with respect to the suggestion that we as New Democrats have not aggressively pursued this issue, I would note that it was my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), who on February 29 made a very eloquent statement in the House, I believe the first statement made on this particular subject. In his statement, my colleague called upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reconsider his discriminatory and divisive action and to withdraw his letter to the Premiers.

I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for having aggressively pursued this matter in the House. Certainly he has done an excellent job in ensuring that this matter remain at the forefront of the parliamentary agenda. My colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon has worked on a variety of issues. He has worked on the establishment of the Chair of Sikh studies, and I know that my colleague for York West would want to join with me in congratulating him on the hard work and dedication he showed in seeing that particular project through to fruition.

With respect to the question of the stance of the Ontario Liberal Government, I am glad that the Liberal Premier of Ontario clarified his position to my colleague for York West yesterday. I accept his words, though the position he took with the reporter from The Globe and Mail was obviously different. Now he has had a chance to reflect and I am very pleased that he has had an opportunity to reflect on this matter.

With respect to the alleged position of my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway, I would simply ask the Hon. Member for York West where, anywhere on the record, he can point to my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway having said that. My colleague has been a strong and eloquent defender of the Sikh community on many occasions and has spoken in the Sikh temple in Vancouver on many occasions. Where, anywhere, in newspapers, in Hansard or in letters, can the Hon. Member point to any suggestion that my colleague has indeed supported the policy of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the letter he circulated? I suggest that the Hon. Member either put up or shut up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the supplementary question. I am just trying to figure out who is asking who questions here. Does the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) have a question for the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I am answering his. He asked me to either put up or shut up. I am asking him to get his colleague for Vancouver—Kingsway to come to the House and put up or shut up because I have put up.

I was not looking for applause from the Hon. Member nor from any other Hon. Member for any action I have taken. That was not my point. My point was that it seemed to me that this Hon. Member is certainly not aware of the nuances of this debate which has taken place over the course of the last seven days or so. He is certainly not aware of the actions of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. Perhaps his comments were picked up by Hansard in his constant badgering during Question Period—

Mr. Robinson: Where?

Mr. Marchi: In his discussions with individual Members of Parliament and in discussions with our own leader, we have heard the very real concerns and feelings expressed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. I think if anyone ought to put up or shut up, it is certainly members of that Party who should try to tell us why there has been silence and inaction over the last week.

Is this the Party that shows qualified support for minority groups? Is this the Party that qualifies its support for certain minorities depending upon which way the winds of popularity are blowing? I take great offence at the sanctimonious words of this Hon. Member, given the record of his Party on this issue, and given the expressions of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. I think the Hon. Member has to put up and provide the answers rather than ask the questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to rebut.

Mr. Robinson: Just very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I can understand the sensitivity of the Hon. Member. Of course, given the drop in the recent Gallup poll and the fact that his Party is dropping like a stone, there is a certain sensitivity there and I respect that.

• (1620)

I come back to the fundamental point.

Ms. Copps: We are in first place.

Mr. Robinson: The Hon. Member has not been able to point to one example anywhere in Hansard, or anywhere else, of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) doing anything other than standing up and vigorously promoting and defending the Sikh community in Canada. I am still waiting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps fortuitous that I have a chance to enter the debate at this moment. The Hon. Member will know that I am a person who speaks the truth. I heard his colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), say on more than one occasion that the Liberals were barking up the wrong tree, that we were trying to score cheap political points and we should not ask questions on this issue. He shouted those remarks from his seat. I heard them quite distinctly. He said the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was right. I suspect that is why the NDP has not asked any questions on this issue in the House.

However, I am happy the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is here. I hope he can get his colleague on the right track and that he will lead the charge with questions in the House. He can join with some Members on the government side who have displayed courage in standing up to the Minister. He is a very powerful Minister in the Government, and even some Conservative Members stood up and questioned his wisdom in this letter and its slur on the Sikh community.

I welcome the participation of the NDP in this debate. I am glad they have finally seen the light. I can only say, thank God for Members like the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who continued to pursue this issue in the House. Thank God for Members like the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) as well. If they had not continued to pursue the issue in the House, I dare say we would not be having this debate today, which debate I think is very important to the fundamental principles of democracy in this country.

In his letter the Minister points out a number of reasons why he claims that we as Members of Parliament should not attend functions of the International Sikh Youth Federation, the World Sikh Organization, or the Babbar Khalsa. One reason is that these organizations exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state known as "Khalistan". I suggest that if Members of Parliament follow that advice and refuse to attend functions of any organization that wishes to dissociate itself from a Government under whose umbrella it is currently found, we would not be allowed to attend Ukrainian functions or functions of many eastern bloc countries including Lithuania. We would not be allowed to attend functions of organizations promoting the freedom of the people of Afghanistan. This weekend I am going to be attending a function in my riding dealing with a small community in eastern Europe known as the Slovaks. If I took the words of the Minister to heart and substituted the word "Slovak" for the word "Sikh", then I should not go to that function. They would like to see the creation of an independent Slovak state. The same thing applies to Ukrainian Freedom Fighters and the Canadian Polish Congress.

There are many nations around the world fighting for an independent cultural and political identity. Are we as Canadians then to say that we will attend no functions organized by the Tamil community? I dare say that Members of Parliament not only have a responsibility but a right to attend cultural functions of people in our communities who represent various political points of view. They may represent viewpoints which differ from that of their respective Governments. That is why we live in a democracy. That is why Canada is the greatest country on earth. People come to this country and they have an opportunity, if they disagree with the Government of their homeland, to form an organization to that effect.

The Parti Québécois had as one of its founding principles the separation of Quebec from Canada. They exercised their democratic right to express their point of view and they represented the majority in certain legislatures at certain times in our history. I did not agree with them or that principle, but I defended to the utmost their right to express those views in a free and democratic society.

If you listen to the remarks of the Minister in the House in responding to the questions of the Hon. Member, he keeps going back to the fact that these organizations exist largely because they support a political viewpoint different from that of the Government of India. Frankly that is no answer at all. That response eliminates any involvement by Canadian politicians with Ukrainian Freedom Fighters, the Canadian Polish Congress, or dozens of other Canadian-based organizations which exist in whole or in part to promote freedom from enslavement in their own countries. That is the kind of expression of support for freedom that we as Canadians support and want to foster.

That is one part of the Minister's letter which is absolutely and totally false and groundless. Let us get to the second part which deals with his contention that:

> Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities—

The Roman Catholic Church is a very large organization in Canada. I happen to be a member of that church. Does that mean that if another Roman Catholic is caught robbing a bank or in some way breaking the law of the land, somehow all members of the Roman Catholic Church are now persona non grata? If you apply the logic, or the lack of logic, of the Minister in this letter, that is the position all Canadians must take. If any person in any organization is involved in any criminal activity, then de facto, Members of Parliament are supposed to refuse to associate with other members of that organization.

Does the Minister not realize that this kind of slanderous accusation against the whole community is a blight on what we respect and know as democracy? Surely there is not a Canadian, whether of Sikh, Ukrainian or other origin, who would not want to see terrorism in this and other countries stamped out, terrorism of any stripe by any organization. However, the Minister does not cite individuals in his letter. No individual charges have been laid. If they are, then let them be dealt with in a court of law. What he is doing is appealing to the lowest common denominator. He is appealing to a sense of racism which says that this organization will be blackballed by all Canadians because the Minister claims some members are involved in so-called violent activities.

The Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) put it best when he said that if people are involved in violent activities, whether they be members of these organizations, the Canadian Legion, or whatever, we must seek them out, lay charges, and prosecute them in a court of law. That is why we have a justice system. The system is not such that the Minister, who is supposed to represent the interests of Canada, can issue a letter which, in one fell swoop, discredits the hard work of a whole community and the thousands of Canadians of Sikh origin who are working hard to build lives for themselves and their children in Canada and have the right to belong to cultural and social organizations which give them some link with their past and the futures of their families and their own cultural heritage. I do not think we deny that right.

I will speak next April at a rally to be held by the Armenian community in this country. We do not want to see the day when the Secretary of State for External Affairs will write a letter saying that someone has been involved in something. Armenians have been subject to that kind of blasphemy, not by the Secretary of State for External Affairs but by allegations that an individual was involved in a terrorist act. Yes, Mr. Speaker, individuals in every community will, from time to time, break the law. They will, in a misguided way, decide to take out their frustrations in a violent fashion. They should be prosecuted with the full force of the law of this country.

However, we do not want to create a system similar in many respects to what many of these people have left behind. We do not want to create a system where, by virtue of sanction of the Government of Canada, we are blackballing a whole people, a whole community, a whole culture, a whole racial group because of the activities of a few and, in this case, the unproven allegation of the activities of a few.

I cannot tell you, Mr. Speaker, how offensive I find the contents of this letter. The Secretary of State talked about Members of Parliament lending their good offices or stature to organizations by attending functions and supporting, or at least involving themselves in, the work of those organizations. What disturbs me most is that the Secretary of State does not realize that this letter, written in his capacity as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is, in my opinion, a travesty of democracy. It should be the bane of every freedom-loving individual in this country. It should be rejected by every person who has chosen to come to Canada or been born in Canada because of the freedom which we have here. The Minister should realize that when he lends his name, his Department, and his reputation to the attack present in the allegations made in this letter he is discrediting the whole country of Canada.

As a country we have developed a certain reputation, sometimes warranted and sometimes not. Last night we saw a very sad story on the CBC with regard to our native community. Sometimes our record is not what we would like it to be. However, as a nation we have developed a worldwide reputation for tolerance, justice, and understanding. When Canadians go to Europe or other countries they receive a warm welcome as Canadians and this is very special for this country. We are the only country which, as a nation, has been awarded international recognition for our work in accepting refugees as a result of the involvement of church groups and individuals in the exodus of the boat people from Vietnam. We have a long and proud tradition, and the Minister does not realize that in one fell swoop, with a single letter, he can destroy that whole tradition.

No one is asking Members of Parliament to support the objectives of the World Sikh Organization. No one is asking Canadian Members of Parliament to say yea or nay, to say that they believe that there should be the creation of an independent Sikh state or that they believe that there should not. However, as Canadians and parliamentarians we owe our constituents the right to a climate within which to express their point of view. We should join them and point out the activities which we have seen, including the questionable activities of the police of the state of India with regard to search and seizure and the transfer of information between the RCMP in Canada and the police in India. We have a responsibility to ensure that the RCMP or CSIS is not aiding and abetting the persecution of the families of Canadian nationals back in their homeland as a result of the exchange of erroneous information.

We have a job to do. I have met on many occasions with representatives of the Sikh community in my riding. I have written to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to express my concern, and I consider that to be part of my responsibility. If I have the opportunity to support the work of freedom-loving people in all parts of the globe I consider it my responsibility to do so. Surely that is all that Members of Parliament ask from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They do not ask for a blanket condemnation of an entire group of people based on the alleged actions of a few which, if proven, must be illegal and therefore must be dealt with properly in a court of law.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is anything surprising about the fact that in this country, where people have found the freedom they sought... I did not agree with the Parti Québécois. I did not agree with their desire to create a political party here in Canada for the purpose of separating from Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, in a democracy, and that is the whole point of a democracy, we can fight it out in the House of Commons or, in the case of the Parti Québécois, in the National Assembly. We can do that, and we can go to the people and ask them to decide. This does not deny them the right to express their views and to say that the aim of the Parti Québécois is to separate from Canada. Everybody knew about it and it was not illegal. However, if you read the letter sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), it claims that Members of Parliament may not in any way associate with the World Sikh Organization or other organizations such as Babbar Khalsa and the International Sikh Youth Federation, the reason given being that they want to separate from India.

Mr. Speaker, it is not up to us here in Parliament to decide whether a new Sikh State will be created. As Canadians, however, we at least have the right to ensure that our Sikh population has the same rights as all other Canadian citizens, and that there is no unlawful exchange of information between the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the Indian police, which have more or less resolved to kill members of Sikh families in that country. I think that is the point, Mr. Speaker. If we live in a democracy, and if we believe in democracy and want to keep that democracy, we can never accept this kind of letter, and the only way to deal with this problem is to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to withdraw what he said, to apologize to the Sikh population in Canada and to start rebuilding trust in the Canadian people. Here in Canada we have freedom of speech, and we live in a democracy, not anarchy.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and I want to commend her for her articulate and emotional intervention on this subject.

• (1640)

I would like the Hon. Member to give us her views on a question which I raised earlier. On June 7, 1987, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent a letter to the World Sikh Organization which was having its conference in Vancouver. His letter essentially recognized the worth of that organization, the role that it played within the Canadian family and recognized the strength that the group brought not only to the Sikh Canadian community but to the Canadian community as a whole.

Then we have a letter dated December 7, 1987, sent secretly by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to seven of the ten Premiers, advocating the very opposite, which is the political boycott of this organization. He was asking that the Premiers treat this organization as a political leper.

I suggest that this letter was probably in the mill during the summertime, subject to consultations between the Minister and External Affairs officials about whether or not it should be written and to whom it should be written. What does the Hon. Member make of a public statement by the Prime Minister, recognizing the value of this organization, while at the same time a secret letter was sent advocating the very opposite of what the Prime Minister was promoting publicly?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, that would not surprise me. It would be completely in character.

[Translation]

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, within today's debate it is important in my view to stress this government's performance in the area of human rights.

As you know, the Secretary of State is responsible for co-ordinating human rights in Canada. In that capacity, he works with his Cabinet colleagues and the provincial ministers responsible for human rights to ensure the fulfilment of our national and internationl commitments in that area.

Promoting human rights is not the specific responsibility of any one level of Government or interest group. It is of basic importance to all human beings on the planet. We should all be concerned with promoting better public awareness and understanding of human rights matters. Awareness helps preserve those rights we fought at home and abroad to protect an improve upon. Canada is party to a number of international agreements dealing with human rights, including the International Covenant—Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civic and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhumane and Degrading Penalties or Treatments.

Co-operation with the United Nations, Canada is taking an active part in the implementation of special projects, including the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and the Racial Discrimination and the Decade on the Handicapped. Those are programs extending over 10 years and promoting public awareness of those specific problems.

In that respect, during the coming Federal-Provincial-Territorial Conference of ministers in charge of human rights, that will be chaired by the Secretary of State, participants will have an opportunity to discuss the second Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

As you can see, Ministers and officials responsible for human rights within federal, provincial and territorial administrations meet regularly to consider issues raised by the implementation of international treaties related to human rights and, more generally, to keep abreast of new developments in that field.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote brief passages from some of the instruments and covenants to which Canada is a signatory, just so you may fully appreciate the scope of our country's commitments.

First, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights provides that nations, and I quote:

> —shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance—

Canada also ratified the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Here is article 13(1):

> Member States recognize the right of everyone to education. They agree that education shall be directed to the development of the human personality and sense of dignity, and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Canada simply cannot take such commitments lightly. We are expected to report to international organizations on progress we make in honouring our commitments.

We discharge this obligation through reports drafted in close co-operation with the provinces and territories, as well as with federal ministries and organizations responsible for implementing various measures specified in treaties.

In 1986-87, the Human Rights Directorate of the Department of the Secretary of State contributed substantially to Canada's delegations when the United Nations was examining the report on Sections 13 to 15 of the International Convenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in April 1986, in New York, and also when the United States was studying Canada's Seventh and Eighth Report concerning the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination, in Geneva in March 1987.

Mr. Speaker, the reports were well received. Canada was commended by the United Nations for taking its international obligations very seriously and for the quality and depth of its reports.

Perhaps I may take as an example a passage from the report tabled by the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination during the forty-second session of the UN General Assembly in 1987.

The reports were presented by Canada's representative, who referred to various constitutional and legislative mechanisms that for ensuring respect for human rights, including the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as incorporated in the Canadian Constitution Act, 1982, the Canadian Criminal Code and the Quebec Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms.

He emphasized the leading role played by Canada, more specifically within the Commonwealth, in the fight against apartheid as well as his Government's commitment to continue to put pressure on the South African Government to abolish this system. He informed members of the Committee of measures taken by the federal Government and the provincial and territorial governments to achieve the objectives of the second decade of the fight against racism and racial discrimination, and he mentioned the Special Committee on Visible Minorities created by the Parliament of Canada as well as special measures to promote and protect vulnerable groups with respect to employment and training.

New legislation had been passed concerning employment equity, which obliged federally regulated employers to establish action plans guaranteeing equality in the workplace for visible minorities, women, the disabled and native people. In the case of the latter, Canada's representative informed the Committee that important initiatives had been taken for their benefit.

Committee members stressed the quality of the reports submitted and commended the Canadian Government for its efforts in implementing the Convention and recognizing the ethnic character of a multicultural society.

The mass of information they contained deserved the attention of all other nations party to the Convention. Those reports could be taken as models by all federal states where the responsibility for human rights is shared between the Federation and its component parts.

You will probably agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite encouraging to receive such praise from the United Nations on the implementation of human rights in Canada.

Canada has a lot to offer to the international community. In that respect, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced in December 1987 the government's intention to establish an international co-operation center for the promotion of human rights and the development and strengthening of democratic institutions. That new Crown corporation will be called the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development. It will deal first and foremost with co-operation between Canada and developing nations, and will be funded as such under Official Development Assistance. Eventually, the new centre may call upon other public and private sources to enter, if it so wishes into co-operation with developed countries.

The establishment of such an institution was first proposed in 1986 by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Canada's external relations, and accepted in principle by this Government in December of the same year.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs announced a month ago the appointment of two eminent Canadians, Professor Gisèle Côté-Harper and Mr. John Courtney, to undertake a series of consultations across the country with non-governmental organizations, labour unions, religious groups and interested individuals. Those consultations are aimed at obtaining views and suggestions on the establishment of such an institution and on the ways and means of promoting co-operation with Third World Countries in the area of human rights and democratic development.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took every opportunity during their journeys through foreign lands to state clearly what we think of human rights violations. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pleaded directly with Messrs. Gromyko and Shevardnadze, here and in the Soviet Union, to secure the release of political and other prisoners.

In recognition of his efforts, Mr. Speaker, last November the Association of Canadian Lawyers and Jurists for Soviet Jewry presented him with its annual human rights award.

During his recent visit to Zimbabwe and Senegal the Prime Minister met with six heads of African governments, including the President of the Front Line States and the former President of the Organization of African Unity.

In his discussions with the African leaders, reference was often made to the rapidly deteriorating situation in South Africa and its impact on neighbouring nations. Considering that the problem may not be solved through negotiations, the Prime Minister again set forth Canada's position as he had explained it in his October 1985 address to the United Nations, namely that existing sanctions will indeed be maintained.

The Prime Minister made it quite clear that Canada would bring pressure to bear in support of those who seek to restore justice in South Africa. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, it was in December 1986 that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees presented the Governor General with the Nansen medal. The decoration was not meant for a Canadian citizen in particular but for the entire Canadian people as acknowledgement of their essential and lasting contribution to the refugee cause.

I might point out that it was the first time the medal, created in 1954, was awarded to a country. We can all stand proud.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to highlight some of the achievements of our Government and to tell the Canadian people that their Government's performance in the realm of human rights is second to none.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to make a few comments on the motion of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). I think that he has moved a very good and valuable motion, and I would like to read it into the record one more time. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs erred seriously in urging upon the Provincial Premiers a political boycott of three Sikh organizations in Canada, thereby condemning entire groups on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations against individuals and, consequently undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society;
> That this House, while condemning violence and terrorism as political instruments, affirms that all Canadian citizens, regardless of origin must not be subjected to any coercion, intimidation or other action by the Government designed to prevent their free and peaceful expression of their opinions and concerns about events and issues in Canada or in other lands; and
> That this House therefore demands that the Government provide Parliament with all relevant information that led to its aforementioned communication with the Provinces and provide the Canadian Sikh community with a full, public opportunity to defend its honour and integrity and that the Government immediately withdraw its allegations and issue a full apology to all Canadians, and to the Canadian Sikh community in particular, for initiating an unprovoked attack on the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens and for thereby subverting federal multiculturalism policy.

The reason for the Hon. Member's motion is the letter that was sent last December by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to seven provincial Premiers. In that letter he states:

> There are, however, three Sikh organizations which exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state, known as "Khalistan". These three organizations are the Babbar Khalsa, the International Sikh Youth Federation, and the World Sikh Organization. Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activities aimed at Indian interests in Canada and elsewhere. The activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India. The government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.

Later on in the letter he states:

> —I would appreciate your cooperation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh state.

When we consider the fact that this letter was sent secretly to seven Premiers we have to ask some very serious questions about what the Government is trying to do in terms of its relationship to the multicultural community in Canada, in particular its relationship to the Sikh community. What we are dealing with is a secret memo, a memo that would have the effect of subverting the access that members of the Sikh community would have to elected provincial officials.

They would not know what had happened to them. It was as though a whispering campaign had taken place saying that such and such a person has some grave disease and no one should associate with him and yet no one would come out in the open to make any accusations. In effect, that is what the Government has done with the Sikh community and with these organizations. It is a silent denial of access. It is a whispering campaign.

I know that it is not considered good parliamentary form to mention the Secretary of State for External Affairs by name. However, I would like to point out that he seems to have taken his namesake rather too seriously. I refer to his name, Joe. He seems to be taking rather seriously his relationship with another Joe, Joe McCarthy, because this kind of tactic smacks of McCarthyism. It is the sort of tactic that Joe McCarthy would use. It is not worthy of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is an attempt to smear an entire organization by association.

• (1700)

We could ask where it will all end. Different Hon. Members have asked that and have pointed out that Members attend meetings of Ukranian, Estonian, Latvian, and Lithuanian organizations. The Eritreans have been involved in a long-term struggle against Ethiopia for independence. There are Members of the House who meet with the Eritrean organizations, and I presume that there are Members who give funds to Eritrean relief.

Where will it all end? What will be considered to be beyond the pale as far as the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned?

We must recognize that all Members of Parliament, all public officials, be they provincial, municipal, or federal, must exercise some discretion when it comes to meeting with different organizations. However, to put some groups beyond the pale and to circulate a memo suggesting that elected officials should not meet with them raises very serious questions about the openness of our democracy.

A few weeks ago I attended a kind of ethnic organization dinner and was seated next to a person who spoke with a fairly heavy accent. He was advocating the dismemberment of a country with which we have very close relations. In fact, he was a Scottish nationalist and I was attending a Burns' dinner. He was advocating Scottish nationalism, the breaking up of the United Kingdom. We have very close relations with the United Kingdom. Many of us are members of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. There I was sitting next to someone who was a Scottish nationalist. Perhaps that is beyond the pale as well. I see that Your Honour recognizes that that is a rather ludicrous situation, but I submit that what we have here is a ludicrous situation which has tragic implications for the Sikh community.

When we step back a little and look at what has happened, we realize that a people have been maligned unjustly. Sikhs form a very important cultural and religious community within my constituency, within my Province of British Columbia, and within Canada as a whole. They have a long history in the Cowichan Valley. They first arrived in the Cowichan Valley at the turn of the century and were very involved in the sawmilling industry. Because of the racist immigration policies of Canada at that time, there was a long period of time when they were not allowed to bring in their families. There was also a time when they were denied the vote, even though they were British subjects. They were not allowed to have timber licences. They were really confined in a ghetto or ghettoized, yet they continued to work and to add to the prosperity of British Columbia.

These early immigrants worked to build a union and fought for better conditions for all woodworkers in British Columbia. Since 1967, when the immigration laws were changed, more immigrant families have come to the area. I think that this has changed the whole perception of the Sikh community in the Cowichan Valley. They used to be forced to live as single males in bunk houses. Now we see them as family people, people concerned about their families, about their communities, about building their temples, and about maintaining their religious faith. Of course, being long established in the Cowichan Valley, they diversified. They are no longer simply involved in the woodworking industry. They are involved in business and in the professions as teachers, lawyers, and public sector workers.

Two years ago the first member of the Sikh community was elected to the Legislature of British Columbia. Mo Sihota, from the constituency of Esquimalt—Port Renfrew, which takes in part of my constituency, I am proud to say is a New Democrat. I am also proud to say that he is one of the most outstanding members of the British Columbia Legislature today, which is recognized by people right across the board. He is an outstanding member of the Legislature, coming from the Sikh community with its history.

It has been my privilege at different times to attend worship services in three of the Sikh temples in my constituency. It is worth-while reminding Canadians of some of the basic Sikh beliefs. They believe in one God. They believe in equality for all people. After every worship service there is a communal meal at which people share food. This is important in our world where food is not shared, where large numbers of people go hungry. It is important to have that sacramental sense of sharing food and tying it in with worship.

It is important to recognize the contributions of Sikhs to my particular area, to my province, and to Canada as a whole. Also it is important to emphasize the fact that they are family people. They are community people. They are hard working and they are thrifty.

As I said, recently we have had more immigrants from India, mainly from the Punjab, the traditional homeland of the Sikhs. I remember in the late 1970s, when I was first becoming involved in running for federal office, talking with the late Tommy Douglas who pointed out that most Sikhs in our area were supporters of the All-Indian Congress Party, the forerunner of the Congress I Party. This meant that at that time they were supporters of a united India. Many of them believed in a united India, which was part of the vision of Mahatma Gandhi. The Sikhs had worked with other Indians in support of that ideal.

However, there was the growth of a separatist movement in India, a movement for a separate state called Khalistan. Unfortunately, that movement has been tragically mishandled, and I think that there have been tragic mistakes made on both sides of the issue. We can say that, looking at the situation from the security and comfort of Canada. One tragedy seemed to lead to another. When, on the orders of Indira Gandhi, the troops stormed the sacred temple, the Golden Temple at Amritsar, 1,000 people were killed. That destroyed any sense of confidence of the people in the Congress I Party. The Sikhs were no longer able to have faith in that kind of situation. Then, when two Sikh bodyguards assassinated Indira Ganghi, the tragedy was compounded. To compound it even more, it unleashed a fury of violence, which resulted in the massacre of some 3,000 Sikhs in India, mostly in the capital of Delhi. The Government took no real action to protect them at that time.

Naturally it had an effect upon Canadian Sikhs, particularly upon more recent immigrants who still had relatives and friends back in India, and naturally this feeling was exploited by militants who looked to the establishment of Khalistan.

Certainly there have been some very well publicized instances of violence. There have been suggestions that perhaps some of those instances of violence were caused by agents provocateurs from the Indian Government. I do not know. There is sufficient doubt at least to place questions on the issue, and the Canadian Government has requested that some people be sent back to India from our consulates.

• (1710)

In my own riding, there was a police raid on the Sikh temple at Duncan, which was highly publicized. We had great difficulty in trying to get information as to what was behind the raid. For months and even years the police refused to release information. Here we have this letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs saying:

> There are, however, three Sikh organizations which exist largely to advocate the creation of an independent Sikh state, known as "Khalistan".

I can understand that there might be organizations that want to promote a separate state, but I do not see that that is necessarily wrong, even within Canada. The letter goes on to say:

> These three organizations are the Babbar Khalsa, the International Sikh Youth Federation and the World Sikh Organization. Some members of these organizations have also engaged in or promote violent activity.

Some members of the Conservative Party have been involved in violent activities. Some members of the New Democratic Party have been involved in violent activities, and even some members of the Liberal Party have been involved in violent activities. Does that mean we tarnish all these organizations as being violent? The letter goes on to say:

> The activities of these organizations have been a significant irritant in our relations with India.

I can appreciate they might be an irritant in our relations with India. Some of the activities of the Ukrainian organizations are irritants in our relations with Russia, but that does not mean that we feel that we have any right or obligation to boycott those organizations. Some of the activities of some of the solidarity groups, solidarity groups from Central America, are significant irritants in our relations with the United States. The letter goes on:

> The government of India has taken particular exception when elected officials attend functions sponsored by these organizations.

I can understand that the Government of India might take exception. So what, Mr. Speaker? Are we not an independent nation? Are not our elected officials elected to be responsible to the Canadian people? We are not talking about getting involved in subversion in India. We are talking about elected officials meeting with legitimate Canadian organizations. The letter continues:

> I would appreciate your co-operation in avoiding events and activities which could be perceived as supporting the Sikh organizations mentioned above or their objective in the creation of an independent Sikh society.

"Activities which could be perceived", and the question is perceived by whom? Perceived by the Indian Government?

Obviously the Indian Government is supersensitive on this whole issue.

Reference was made earlier by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), to the establishment of a chair of Sikh studies at the University of British Columbia. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) encouraged the Government to fund the chair. Out of sensitivity to what the Indian Government might perceive as support for the Sikhs, the Department of External Affairs dragged its feet all the way and put up roadblocks against the creation of a chair of Sikh studies at UBC.

A Globe and Mail article for December 13, 1986 points out:

> Documents obtained under the Access to Information Act reveal that an External Affairs official believed a federal grant for a chair in Punjabi literature and Sikh studies at the University of British Columbia would be misunderstood by the Government of India.
> "While I fully understand that Canada's multiculturalism policies will be guided primarily by Canadian domestic considerations, the implications in terms of foreign policy must also be considered, "E. G. Drake, an Assistant Deputy Minister in External Affairs, wrote in April, 1985 to a Secretary of State official.

Multiculturalism here is being subject to foreign policy considerations. Mr. Drake continued:

> "I hope, therefore, that the Indian Government's likely reaction can be taken into account before any conclusion is reached", "he stated.
> Mr. Drake wrote that, should federal financing materialize it "would likely be misunderstood by the Government of India and might well cause damage to our bilateral relations with India."

A few weeks ago, when she was resigning, a former assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the Department of External Affairs as a hotbed of cold feet. I cannot think of a better characterization for this Department. A hotbed of cold feet, and so afraid of our relationship with India that it attempts to subvert our multiculturalism policy.

Mr. Layton: No.

Mr. Manly: We see the same kind of cold feet in regard to standing up to France on the St. Pierre-Miquelon issue. We see it in regard to the United States on our Central American policy. We are just not prepared to stand up as a nation. We are so concerned about our bilateral relations with India that we are not prepared to fund a chair of Sikh studies at one of our Canadian universities, which is fully in accordance with Canadian multiculturalism policies.

I was glad to see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs finally went over External Affairs on that issue and a year ago in February there was a grant for the funding of the chair at UBC. Credit has to go not only to the Sikh community, which pushed and advocated the chair but also to my colleague, the New Democratic Party critic for multiculturalism, the Member from Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

What we have with this letter is a slight on an entire community, a slight with no proof. Allegations are made of individual violence but no proof was made of that, and from that the entire three organizations are placed beyond the pale for provincial politicians. It is a form, as I said earlier, of McCarthyism.

I object to the effect that this letter has had on my constituents, my friends, on the entire Sikh community and on the entire multicultural community in Canada. Who knows what other letters similar to this one might be in effect? It is an insidious sort of thing. The letter was written in secret. We did not even know what the Secretary of State for External Affairs was thinking about.

I fully support the suggestion by my House Leader, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that the entire matter should be the subject of investigation by a parliamentary committee. The parliamentary committee should have access to whatever proof the Government thinks it has that these organizations are subversive. It should give access to the Sikh community so that it can come before this organization and state its goals and methods and clear itself. This letter has had the effect of maligning not only these organizations but, by implication, the entire community.

Finally, there should be very clear directions given to the Canadian government organizations that deal with Sikhs and with other multicultural communities, to CSIS, to the RCMP, to the Department of Immigration and to Customs to quit hassling and harassing them and to recognize their rights.

I think it would be in the interests of this House and of the parliamentary democracy of Canada and in the interests of the multicultural policy for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to step back a little bit from his involvement in this issue. I know that he has a personal emotional investment, having written the letter and having had to defend it. If he could step back a little bit and look at the implications of the letter, what it means for the Sikh community, and perhaps get a bit of perspective on his actions, then I think he would want to apologize through the House to the Sikh community.

I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is a person who basically seeks what is best for the Canadian community. I do not think that this letter is worthy of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he is at his best. I would hope that he would step back, look at the situation, recognize that he made a mistake and apologize to the Canadian people and in particular to the Sikh community.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, debate.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are discussing today is a serious motion. I give the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) credit for the seriousness of his intent. The motion contains within it several items with which I propose to deal separately.

The first paragraph of the motion contains the assertion that the letter in question urges a political boycott of the Sikh organizations, and there is a further implication later on that Sikhs in general are being affected by this. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that, as he acknowledged earlier in today's debate, I intervened directly on this issue in the House and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) indeed confirmed that it was not his intention in any way, shape or form to inhibit Members of Parliament from meeting with members of these organizations, from listening to their concerns or from becoming informed as to their views or concerns either about the situation in Canada or the situation abroad.

The second paragraph of the motion indicates that this is designed to prevent free and peaceful expressions of the opinions and concerns of Canadians of all origins about events and issues in Canada and in other lands. I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware that there is no prohibition at all on members of these communities meeting with the press, with the media, with Members of Parliament, with provincial Members of Parliament or with Premiers. Nor is there any ban on public meetings or on expressing views very forcefully, nor has there been censorship by the media. Indeed, members of the World Sikh Organization have been able not only to meet with MPs regularly but they have been able to meet with officials of the Department of External Affairs to brief the Department briefly on their particular concerns.

The letter issued by Mr. Clark deals with one specific issue, and that is the issue—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must bring to the Hon. Member's attention that it is the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, you have been consistent in your rulings on that all day, and I should have picked it up.

The letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs deals with the specific issue of attending, on a public platform, a meeting organized by one of the three organizations mentioned and somehow appearing to endorse unwittingly the aims and objectives of the organization. Should there be any doubt as to the aims and objectives of the organization, I would point out that Objective 2.0.2 of the World Sikh Organization is to strive, and I do emphasize, through peaceful means, for the establishment of a Sikh nation, Khalistan, in order to protect the Sikh identity and faith as ordained by the Guru Panth in the daily prayer "Raj Karega Khalsa". The organization clearly calls for the establishment of a separate state in India and in fact for the dismemberment of the country of India. I merely point this out because we in Canada ourselves took offence in 1967 when another foreign power appeared to endorse the aims of groups within our own country which sought the separation of Canada.

I also want to raise another general issue and that is that the United Nations has established codes of conduct for relationships between friendly Governments and for co-operation. One of the principles established by the United Nations in the twenty-fifth Assembly was that states should refrain from actions aimed at the political independence or the territorial integrity of any state.

We as Canadians were very conscious of outside endorsement of actions which might represent a threat to our territorial integrity. Indeed, because of the general principles established by the United Nations, principles to which we subscribe, we must also be very conscious of appearing to endorse an action which threatens the territorial integrity of another friendly member of the United Nations.

I did mention that while an objective of the World Sikh Organization is to strive to establish Khalistan, it is striving to do this through peaceful means. However, my understanding is that senior members of the organizations, and as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) indicated, not just ordinary parishioners in the Catholic Church, made emotional statements following Operation Blue Star in 1984, statements which indeed advocated violent activities. To the best of my knowledge, these statements have never been repudiated. This information has been communicated to the organization involved, and certainly I would encourage it to repudiate these alleged statements because they certainly do not conform with my understanding of the group's aims and objectives at this time.

I wish to devote the remainder of my discussion to the assertion which is at the bottom of the first paragraph of the motion which is, that the letter constitutes a demonstration that the Government is undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society. In the four years since this Government took office, it has demonstrated time and time again its fervent belief in the concept of multiculturalism. It has done so because it has a deep-rooted belief in human rights and in the equality of all people.

Racism and discrimination have no place in Canada and, in numerous ways, the federal Government has sought to combat and root out manifestations of intolerance and social injustice. While the task is not yet done, we can take pride in what we have accomplished so far. When I say we, I refer not only to the Government but also to all Canadians from coast to coast who are working hard as the Hon. Member for York West who presented the motion today is working hard to make this a land of civility, generosity and openness.

No Government can achieve tolerance and racial harmony by ignoring the situation of its own agencies and Departments. For this reason, the Government has worked hard to see that the multicultural nature of Canada is reflected in the make-up of the federal Public Service. As Members may know, the percentage of our appointments to boards, agencies and commissions from the ethnocultural communities is something like 50 per cent higher than that of the previous Government. At Treasury Board numerous initiatives have been developed to promote employment opportunities for visible minorities. Indeed, the Government introduced an affirmative action program for visible minorities, including the setting of numerical targets. The Public Service Commission is in the process of establishing a network of visible minority co-ordinators responsible for recruitment, inventory maintenance, marketing and counselling of visible minority candidates. These and other initiatives represent an important start in correcting the imbalance which has long existed in the federal Public Service.

The Government also brought in employment equity legislation in 1986. Under the legislation, Crown corporations and federally-regulated employers with more than 100 employees will be required to provide equitable employment opportunities for designated groups such as women, persons with disabilities, aboriginal peoples, and members of visible minorities. Recently this House gave first reading to Bill C-93, Canada's first multiculturalism Bill. Soon it will receive second reading. When passed, the legislation will affirm a central feature of Canadian life. It will reflect our national conviction that regardless of origin, every Canadian citizen has an equal chance to participate in and contribute to the social, economic, political and cultural life of the country.

Because the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is committed to fairness, it brought in a multiculturalism Bill. Because it stands for equality of opportunity, it brought in an employment equity Bill. Because it clearly appreciates the multicultural reality of Canada, it brought in special measures to promote the employment of visible minorities in federal structures. Therefore, let no Member of the House attempt to mislead Canadians about our Government's commitment to a multiculturalism policy. Let no one attempt to deny our commitment to racial harmony and social equality. Let no one accuse us of attacking anyone's rights, for we sought to do precisely the reverse and safeguard and enhance the rights and opportunities of Canadians.

The concern this Government has shown for minority communities encompasses all groups, religions and ethnic backgrounds. The Sikh community in Canada, like other communities which make up our national fabric, has received financial support for its worthy undertakings in recognition of the contribution it has made to Canadian society. Sikhs have been part of our multicultural nation for many years. They began emigrating to this country at the very beginning of this century. Since then their numbers have grown steadily and they have established roots all across the country. Today Sikh Canadians represent nearly 200,000 Canadians in all provinces, with particularly strong representation in British Columbia and Ontario. With their strong sense of family and their religious belief in morality, selflessness and responsibility, Sikhs have made a contribution to Canadian society greater than their numbers would indicate. They have shown a strong sense of entrepreneurship and made a very real impact on business and in the professions.

Sikhs have integrated well into Canadian society. They have also been diligent in passing on their linguistic and cultural heritage from generation to generation. For example, virtually all second generation Sikh Canadians can understand Punjabi. Despite their record of achievement and their exemplary citizenship, Canadian Sikhs, like other visible minorities, are from time to time faced with problems of discrimination, ignorance or prejudice. I personally have been involved in some of these issues for over 10 years, beginning with some of the hard hat cases when I first became an MP 10 year ago, to establishing an immigration policy for Sikh priests and others because their religious needs were not being adequately recognized by the Government.

Equality of opportunity in the workplace and in society generally is of major concern. Sikhs are naturally concerned by the reporting of events in the Punjab and by what they feel is often a stereotyped depiction of their people, one which tends to overlook the very real contribution they have made to Canadian society. Indeed, I can cite a personal example of this in my own riding where the Sikh community is in the process of attempting to construct a new church. The reaction from the community was, my gosh, these are violent people, they must not build this anywhere close to our neighbourhood. Indeed, I took the opportunity to testify in Scarborough Council of my personal knowledge of the congregation and their belief in peace and their positive contribution to society.

In working to combat prejudice and discrimination, Canada's Sikh community, like other minority groups, received a good deal of direct and indirect support from the Canadian Government. The federal Government, through the Secretary of State's multicultural program, provided and continues to provide strong support to Canadian Sikhs. During the past two fiscal years, for example, more than $500,000 in grant money has been provided for some 64 individual projects. Many of those grants have gone toward school and educational projects to help new generations of Sikh Canadians understand and appreciate their heritage and retain and reinforce their traditional language skills. Others have gone to support cultural activities and programs aimed at better educating and informing other Canadians about Sikh Canadians.

One particularly important step was the Secretary of State's agreement to provide major financing support for the establishment of the chair in Punjabi language, literature and Sikh studies at the University of B.C. This chair, established last fall, received a $350,000 federal grant covering 50 per cent of the total required funding. Establishment of this chair represents the culmination of some four years of discussions and co-operative planning in which I was deeply involved, involving the Federation of Sikh Societies in Canada, the University of British Columbia, and the Department of the Secretary of State. Its goal is to initiate and promote research, both at the graduate and at the undergraduate level, in the areas of Punjabi language and literature as well as Sikhism, Sikh history and other aspects of Sikh studies.

The chair has established a focal point for generating a better understanding of Canada's pluralistic and multicultural nature, and of Sikhs and Sikhism in Canada. It will conduct research into the contributions Sikhs have made to Canadian society and will encourage publication of this research so Canadians will have a better understanding and appreciation of this contribution. All in all, this new chair will make a valuable contribution to our knowledge and understanding, and I am proud our Government has played such a major role in its development and to have been involved so personally in seeing it established.

I might also mention that our Government provided major funding for a conference of Sikhism at the University of Toronto just over a year ago. This Government has given more support and encouragement to Canada's diverse ethnic communities than any other in our history. I think the Secretary of State summed it up well when he said a multicultural Canada is an enriched Canada. The more successfully we share our different cultural backgrounds, the more harmonious and unified we become as a society. The Sikh community, he said, has contributed much to our society. They have strived to meet the complexity and challenges of integration into the mainstream of Canadian life while still retaining the essential qualities of their own unique heritage.

Hard-working Sikh people have contributed much to Canada's economic prosperity and cultural richness. This Government will continue to work with vigour with all our culture minorities, as we have over the past three and a half years. We will help them retain their distinctive qualities, their cultural and language. We will also help them to integrate and achieve full participation in Canadian society. We will work with them to combat prejudice and ignorance wherever they exist in society. This is a commitment we have lived up to in the past and we have reaffirmed that commitment in the multiculturalism Bill which this House will be considering next week.

In summary, I do not think that when one examines the actions of the Government one can conceivably sustain the assertion in the first paragraph of the resolution that this Government has been undermining the multicultural fabric of Canadian society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, let me first pay respect to the Hon. Member for his participation in the issue of Canadians of Sikh origin. I know his record in Toronto and it speaks highly of his commitment and the values he holds dear.

The debate is now winding down and I was just wondering what his thoughts were about a standing committee of Parliament providing a forum to evaluate the information which prompted Mr. Clark's letter, and at the same time providing the members of those organizations a forum to defend their honour and their actions as a community. Does the Member favour such a forum in one of our standing committees?

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. Stackhouse), but the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has struck out today. That is the fourth time that he has referred to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) by his name.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I will try not to repeat the mistake. The Member asks whether I think it would be appropriate to establish a special committee. I think it may be, but not as a first step. I met for over three hours yesterday with representatives of Sikh organizations. There are two issues that have been raised.

First, the community has a feeling that it is being harassed by statements in the press or, indeed, by activities of CSIS. I told the members that, with regard to the activities of CSIS Parliament made a decision when it established CSIS that, unlike in the United States where the CIA and the FBI are subject to congressional oversight, a different mechanism would be set up in Canada with regard to CSIS. That mechanism was to provide a special committee of former Members of the House, Privy Councillors all, of different Parties under the chairmanship of the Hon. Ron Atkey, a former distinguished Member of this House. I suggested that an appropriate first step for the organizations involved would be to approach the CSIS oversight committee and take up their allegations with it, which is not directly in Parliament.

With regard to the other issues as to whether there were or were not statements made which advocated violence, which certainly run contrary to the constitution of the World Sikh Organization in Canada, those allegations were brought to the attention of members of the organization yesterday. I am sure that they will want to take the time to examine whether the statements were made by senior members of their organization. If so, since they run contrary to the constitution of the organization, they may feel that it is an opportune time to state categorically that these do not represent the aims and objectives of the organization in order that the WSO would not be seen to be in a position of advocating violence even though in the past, in a very emotional moment, individual senior officers might well have made statements which have that direct interpretation.

Finally, if the organizations involved cannot achieve resolution of their problems through the first two steps which I think should be taken, I would indeed be willing to meet with them again to discuss the possibility of further pursuing the issue in one of the standing committees.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I do not take part in this debate with any great satisfaction in being able to criticize the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I regard him as a decent man with great respect for people and I am sorry to see him embroiled in this kind of a controversy. I cannot imagine why he signed the letter that went to the provinces. I would normally have expected him to be very much more sensitive.

The Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) who has just spoken made reference to how Canadians felt when a French visitor seemed to be encouraging separatism. Perhaps it is reasonable for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tell provincial Premiers what his views are on certain sensitivities and how he would like them treated. However, unfortunately the form of this particular letter was such that it caused a great deal of pain to Canadian citizens.

What was wrong with the letter? For one thing it pointed to three Sikh organizations. However, organizations do not commit terrorist activities or cause difficulties for the host country; individuals do. The World Sikh Organization has some 20,000 members. The International Sikh Youth Federation is only two years old and has perhaps 2,000 members, and Babbar Khalsa has perhaps 200 members. Therefore, a very large and established organization was included, perhaps inappropriately, with two other organizations. In any case, to talk about organizations as if they were all-embracing, as if every individual who belongs to an organization shares the same views, surely is not realistic, as has been pointed out several times today.

The pain which was caused to Canadians of Sikh origin by the release of this letter added to the pain which they have been suffering ever since the Air India disaster. Many people have forgotten that terrorists do not spare their own. There were Sikhs who died in the Air India disaster too.

I was privileged to attend a religious service last July which was sponsored by many groups including the Vishnu Temple, the Kannada Sangha, the Hindu Sabha Mandir, the Bharati Kala Manram, the Hindu Prarthana Samaj, the Hindu Federation, the Zorastrian Society of Ontario, and the Association of Women of India in Canada. It was a memorial service for the victims of the Air India disaster, a most moving expression where prayers were offered by, among others, Sikhs. Prayers were also offered by Christians, Islamics, Hindus, Jainists, Buddhists, and people from the Jewish and Zorastrian faiths. It was a most poignant expression of grief for the deaths of many people but it was grief without bitterness. As one person who lost his two sons said:

> The fact we are all victims here together sharing our grief makes life liveable.

That is the kind of spirit that I have seen in the Sikhs whom I have come to know well since that Air India disaster. Sikhs in Canada are, for the most part, peaceful people. They have been horrified by the terrorism from which they too have suffered. They do not condone it. They have been pained by the assumption that they accept terrorism.

I have here a statement of the objectives of the World Sikh Organization. The first is to promote and follow the teachings of the ten gurus. The second is to strive through peaceful means for the establishment of a Sikh nation, Khalistan, in order to protect the Sikh identity. The fourth is to work for the promotion of ideals of universal brotherhood, peace, justice, freedom of worship and speech, respect for cultural diversity and human dignity for all, without any distinction as per the instruments and covenants of the United Nations Organization.

These are very worthy objectives. As has been said, in an organization of 20,000, one cannot guarantee that every individual subscribes to those objectives. However, those are the objectives of the organization.

The organization has taken some steps over the years to dissociate itself from violence. I have a copy of a letter dated May 14, 1985, from the General Secretary of the World Sikh Organization to the National Councils of the U.S.A., Canada and the United Kingdom. It reads:

> WSO constitution lays down that we are a peaceful organization working for human rights of Sikhs in India. Therefore, Membership Screening Committee in your countries should be instructed not to accept membership from known or proved terrorists and any member who is guilty of terrorism should be removed from WSO membership according to our constitution.

Another letter dated April 2, 1985, from the General Secretary to the National Councils of Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom reads in part: "We would appeal that the utmost care should be taken to avoid violence and provocation. Meetings and processions should be strictly in accordance with the laws of the land". It goes on: "We must fully co-operate with the authorities and abide by the laws of the land". Those are the stated purposes of the World Sikh Organization.

We are all aware of the violence in the Punjab. I was there a year ago and the situation indeed is one where grievances over riparian rights and religious differences have escalated over the years. They are not being solved by political or democratic means. There is violence on the part of Sikh terrorists and there is violence on the part of others. It is a country where the habeas corpus does not operate and people are detained without trial for very long periods. There are allegations of torture and mistreatment.

Surely citizens of Canada are entitled to talk to their Members of Parliament and provincial politicians about their concerns for the human rights of their relatives and friends in another country.

This has been the case with people in a long list of countries. There are many organizations here which exist to keep us aware of conditions in their country of origin. We have always claimed that this is part of their democratic rights.

Of course, none of us wants to encourage violence. None of us will have much time for anybody who is acting in any way against the laws of our land. However, I suggest that Canadians of Sikh origin by and large are excellent citizens. They are thrifty, hard working, peaceful people who are very family oriented. It has been a source of great pain to them that there is so much violence in their own country of origin and that some of that violence has shown in Canada.

The statements I have read make it clear that the World Sikh Organization does not condone violence. I think it behooves all of us to ensure that Canadians are able to exercise their democratic rights and express their concerns about conditions in their country of origin as long as they do it in peaceful ways. Whole communities should not be tarred with the excesses of a few, the excesses which the communities themselves have condemned and made clear they do not support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being six o'clock, the proceedings under Standing Order 82(12) have expired.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS—SHELTER CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION/NEED FOR ROOMS—REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important to recall my intervention this evening. As you know, 1987 was the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless and my question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) dealt with the fact that, according to the figures of the Canadian Council on Social Development, over 100,000 people in Canada were homeless and had to seek shelter in night hostels.

Moreover, on January 22, 1987, a flash survey carried out throughout Canada showed that nearly 8,000 people had used emergency hostels that night. First, there were 100 in Montreal.

[English]

There were 1,800 in Toronto, 700 in Winnipeg, 400 in Vancouver, 400 in Moncton and even more homeless people who every night go to sleep on the park benches.

• (1800)

As usual, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) did not provide a satisfactory answer to my question about the needs of these people, and I adressed a supplementary to the Prime Minister to explain what should be done, as outlined by the groups that care for the homeless in Montreal. These groups have asked the federal Government to finance, through the Canada Mortage and Housing Corporation, about 10,000 housing units consisting simply of rooms, not two-room apartments, and so on. What these people need are not rental apartments, but room and board as well as human services.

I think that everyone listening to us and everyone in this House knows quite well that the homeless are people with problems caused either by alcohol, drugs or something else. These people need assistance and I believe that they should receive this assistance from the Government. In passing, I would like to take this opportunity to congragulate those who devote their time and energy to the care of these people because their work is not easy and it is the duty of Parliamentarians and Governments to give them financial assistance. I think this project deserved a satisfactory answer.

Speaking of people with problems, Jean Lapointe who is a well-known Quebec artist—as a matter of fact, he is quite famous and has quite a reputation in the arts community—had a drinking problem, and today, we have a home called la Maison Jean Lapointe, and on the weekend I will be glad to make my contribution, and Quebecers will have a chance to do so on Sunday's telethon, to help la Maison Jean Lapointe with donations so that it and similar homes and shelters will be able to provide not only a place to sleep but also social and technical assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has yet to respond to this need, unfortunately. The only thing that happened in 1987 was a national conference. The Government did very little to meet the demand for housing units, and I would like to know whether since that time, the Government has revised its housing policy. I recall the requests that were made, and this weekend, in my riding, my future riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie and Montreal—Sainte-Marie, I will be meeting with people who work to provide shelter for the homeless. One parish has set up a very useful project in a church basement. The basement was under-utilized, so the archdiocese, together with various organizations, turned it into a set of rooms. There are also resource persons to help the homeless find shelter, and meals are provided as well. I personally contribute to this project. We can help through the New Horizons Program, but I think it is high time the Government decided to have a straightforward assistance program, a comprehensive program, instead of piecemeal assistance, to help the homeless and try and reduce the problem and help these people improve their circumstances. I think it should be the Government's role to inject money into the construction of rooming houses, and provide funding to help resource persons encourage and educate these people to become responsible citizens and also to help co-ordinate all these activities.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works will have some good news and some good answers, not necessarily for me personally but for the homeless, so that they will see the Government intends to help them.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is wont to exaggerate and I am very pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the federal Government's initiatives to assist homelessness in Canada.

Homelessness in Canada is not exclusively a question of affordable housing. It includes a range of social problems such as health care, job skills of young people and family violence. To resolve these problems, a concerted effort must be made by governments, social agencies and a wide range of community based groups. The federal Government has committed itself to work in partnership with these groups to find permanent, lasting solutions.

During 1987, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH), Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation provided $1.7 million to various projects for research to measure the extent of homelessness, clarify its causes, identify successful solutions and explore new approaches.

Although it is necessary to provide transitional shelter, emphasis on finding a permanent solution is required.

[English]

CMHC has been providing permanent housing for Canadians through its social housing programs for the last 40 years. Over 500,000 units have received assistance under various social housing programs. In addition, almost 400,000 homes have been saved from deterioration through rehabilitation assistance. The federal Government is now spending $1.5 billion annually on social housing.

• (1805)

It was not until the housing directions were announced in December 1985, that all social housing assistance was targeted to those households most in need, of which the homeless are the extreme.

Agreements were signed with the provinces and territories which are now participating through cost-sharing and delivery, resulting in more units being directed to low income people than previously.

Housing assistance is provided for transitional and permanent shelter mainly under the non-profit, Rental Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program (RRAP) and rent supplement programs.

The Non-Profit Housing Program addresses the needs of many Canadians, including the working poor, senior citizens, single-parent families, natives and the disabled. It generally creates new units including hostel beds.

Federal funding is also being directed to the repair of rooming houses, hostels and self-contained accommodation under the RRAP program.

Rent supplement assistance is available to assist individual tenants in private accommodation and in co-op projects. Through construction or rehabilitation, some 55,000 social housing units are funded annually.

The provinces and territories are responsible for the provision of social services including the administration of financial assistance programs which provide basic incomes for the most needy Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the federal Government supports the provinces and territories in these endeavours by offering substantial funding through the cost-sharing provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

The program, which is administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, enables the federal Government to reimburse provinces 50 per cent of select costs which these jurisdictions incur in the provision of a wide range of personal social services and financial assistance programs to needy persons.

Currently, annual expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan exceed four billion dollars.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY—BRITISH PLANS TO LABEL FUR PRODUCTS—EFFECTS ON LIVELIHOOD OF CANADIAN TRAPPERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, we all know that when it comes to animals, the English are afflicted with what might best be described as collective nuttiness. On the one hand, that fair country is the home of blood sports where lords and ladies delight in seeing harmless foxes ripped to shreds by vicious hounds. On the other hand, they engage in sugary sentimentality and ascribe to animals almost human sensibilities.

I read in an English paper not too long ago about them providing tunnels underneath roads for hedgehogs to travel through so that they would not get squashed by passing trucks.

However, this nuttiness was best demonstrated earlier in February when they proposed the fur labelling rule. We are all familiar with what it is, so I do not need to describe it.

This prompted me, on February 10, to question the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in the House of Commons about what action the Government of Canada was proposing to take to countermand this action on the part of the British authorities.

The Minister's reply was excellent. It was forceful. It showed that he was familiar with the issue, that we were not going to be caught off guard as we were with the seal skin issue, and that our High Commissions and Embassies in Europe would be fully aware of the position of the Government of Canada on the issue. Headlines in various newspapers the next day reflected this.

[Translation]

—La Presse on February 11: "Fur trade: Ottawa will protest British regulations".

[English]

The headline in The Globe and Mail read: "Clark to protest plan to tag fur items in U.K.".

The importance of the issue in northern Canada, where the fur industry is still very important, is indicated in a letter from the Hon. Titus Allooloo, Minister of Renewable Resources with the Government of the Northwest Territories, addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and dated February 15. I would like to read most of the text of this letter into the record. It commences:

• (1810)

> The Government of the Northwest Territories wishes to express its strongest objections to proposed actions by the British Government to legislate a requirement of retailers to prominently display labels on products which contain the pelts of wild animals that may have been caught with a "steel-jaw leghold trap".
> Once again, we experience the highest levels of frustration and, indeed indignation that foreign governments and/or agencies are taking actions without due regard to the detrimental consequences their actions have on the basic livelihood of groups of people around the world.
> I request your assistance on communicating to the British Government our total rejection of such a proposal. In addition, we would offer to, once again, present our positions to them in the most effective manner possible, including direct representation.
> We have appreciated your high level of support in the past to counter these measures. The funding support to lobby organizations, such as the Fur Institute of Canada and Indigenous Survival International, are good examples of your dedicated support.
> We thank you also for your prompt statements in the House of Commons and the media. Your proposed meeting with Sir Geoffery Howe is of special interest to us as we feel it may prove to be a most effective action.

The Right Reverend John Sperry, Anglican Bishop of the Arctic has also been very active on this issue, Mr. Speaker. He wrote to The Times of London. If you want to influence British opinion, that is one of the avenues available to you. In his letter of February 23, 1988 to The Times he states:

> Perhaps there has been no news item causing greater dismay and incredulity among Canada's northern native people in recent times than the announcement that the British Government proposes legislation to label all fur products imported by the United Kingdom as to their precise method of being harvested.

In his final paragraph he wrote:

> —Sir, to exalt the animal kingdom on the wreckage of human distress and enforced poverty, however noble the intention, is an affront to both the Biblical and Christian precepts in regard to human/animal relationships.

In a similar letter, the reverend gentleman wrote to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mrs. Thatcher. In part, his letter reads:

> My plea, Mrs. Thatcher, is that for the sake of all our harassed and bewildered native people at least the British Government will delay any precipitous action on this issue—

Despite all the good efforts on the part of Government and other agencies, we do not seem to have made very much progress on this issue. The CBC in a news item, dateline London, February 19, 1988 says:

> A delegation of Canadian native people have failed to persuade the British Government not to go through with a campaign to put labels on fur coats from half a dozen species of wild animals . . . although the British Government felt Erasmus presented his case very well they feel public opinion cannot be ignored and the labels will be put into effect as planned in May.

The Erasmus referred to is George Erasmus, the co-chairman of Indigenous Survival International.

What I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to do in his response now is to tell us what other actions the Government of Canada might be taking on this issue, how we might eventually get the Government of Great Britain to see reason on this most important issue.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 9, the Minister of International Trade for the United Kingdom announced his intention to enact regulations requiring the labelling of bobcat, coyote, lynx and certain species of fox with the notation "includes fur from animals commonly caught in leghold traps". The response from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was immediate. On February 10, in the House of Commons, he stated:

> Mr. Speaker, I was surprised by that announcement by the British Minister. We will oppose it, and we will fight it. It constitutes a very serious threat to the livelihood of Indian, Métis, and Inuit Canadians who depend upon the fur industry to live.
> I must say that I particularly regret that there was virtually no advance warning to this Government by the Government of Great Britain in bringing in this matter. I will be pursuing it personally with the British Foreign Secretary, and with others.

• (1815)

His words reflect the Government's very serious concern over the proposed regulations which threaten the livelihood of 100,000 Canadian trappers, half of whom are aboriginal Canadians. Fur harvesting constitutes the major economic activity in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The fur industry over-all is a $1-billion industry and 50 per cent of that fur is from wild sources.

The Government of Canada has taken a number of steps to respond to this threat to the Canadian fur industry. In addition to high-level meetings of Canadian officials with their British counterparts in the foreign and home offices and in the Ministries of International Trade and of the Environment, an official note of protest has been delivered to the British Government.

The Department of External Affairs has also helped co-ordinate meetings with British officials for representatives of the Canadian fur industry, including Indigenous Survival International and the Fur Institute of Canada as well as for Canadian Parliamentarians, including the Yukon's Minister of Renewable Resources, the Hon. Dave Porter, the Minister of Renewable Resources of the Northwest Territories, the Hon. Titus Allooloo and Manitoba's Minister of Northern Affairs, the Hon. Elijah Harper.

In addition, the Department of External Affairs has been actively working with other nations with important fur interest such as the U.S.A. and the Nordic countries to convince the United Kingdom to abandon its proposed regulations.

In closing, I would add that the Department of External Affairs, which in October of 1987 provided almost $1.5 million in funding to the Canadian fur industry to develop an international communications strategy to promote the industry, will continue to do everything it can to support and to promote this vital Canadian industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—QUERY WHY GOVERNMENT AUTHORIZED CANADIAN COMPANY TO BECOME MAIN SUPPLIER TO IRANIAN ARTILLERY/GOVERNMENT EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on November 20, I asked a question in the House of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) which was replied to by my colleague, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Hudon). This question concerned Expro, a company in Valleyfield, Quebec, which apparently had an order at that time, very shortly to be fulfilled, to ship approximately 1,250 tonnes of explosive powder to a Portuguese company over a six-month period. At that time, the CBC apparently claimed that a link had been identified between that Portuguese company and the Iranian Government.

On November 20, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister and my hon. colleague replying for the Government, first, whether or not Canada had any control over the possible re-exportation and, second, whether the Government would instruct an ambassador in Lisbon to determine if in fact the explosives were re-exported. I was quite dissatisfied with the responses given to me that day by my hon. colleague, so I would like now to take the opportunity to ask three questions in the hope that he will be able to reply to them directly.

First, I would like to ask if the Government cares about what happens to explosives after they leave the country. Second, in order to obtain a Canadian export permit, does the importing country or company not have to provide any details as to the eventual use of those explosive materials? Third, did the Government in fact instruct our Ambassador in Lisbon to attempt to determine whether or not this particular explosive was re-exported from Portugal?

• (1820)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in November 1987, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River asked why the Government had authorized Expro to become the main supplier of the Iranian artillery. The answer to such an irresponsible and bizarre allegation is simple: We have done no such thing. What we did was to authorize a company in my constituency to export a propellant for military use to responsible corporations located in NATO countries.

Before issuing these permits, Mr. Speaker, we obtained from the Netherlands and Portugal import certificates, which are official Government documents, clearly stating that these materials were to be used only by the recipient country and were not to be re-exported or diverted without the express consent of the issuing country, in this case the Netherlands and Portugal. We had obtained these certificates. As both countries are allies of Canada and members of NATO and as they benefit from various co-operation arrangements to promote the state of preparedness of inter-allied defence, there is nothing improper about shipping propellants to these countries. These procedures for monitoring exports between allies have existed for some time and are considered most effective in preventing the diversion of exports.

Muiden Chimie, the Dutch company involved, has exclusive marketing rights to this specific propellant in Europe and sells it to various NATO countries. It frequently orders the product from Expro, which, in passing, holds the license for this product in North America, to meet large orders in Europe which exceed its own capacity. This is why the shipments were made directly to Portugal. Muiden Chimie is a respected Dutch company whose board of directors includes Government appointed members.

As was indicated in the House in November last, the RCMP and our embassies in those countries further studied the matter. While there is evidence of an illegal re-shipment to Holland that is now under investigation by Dutch police, no proof has been presented to Canadian authorities of any offence by a Canadian company. I have no reason to believe that the Canadian company acted irresponsibly. It got all the required authorizations, and the Canadian Government was prudent in seeking assurances from importing governments. Our export control system is very efficient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing order 3(1).

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-76, an Act to provide for emergency preparedness and to make related amendments to the National Defence Act, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Beatty moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on June 26 of last year the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) tabled Bill C-76 in the House and announced that the federal Government had withdrawn the Emergency Planning Order of 1981 and was introducing new federal emergencies legislation to replace it.

As events continually show, emergencies do not wait for any timetable; they can happen at any time anywhere in Canada. With the adoption of Bill C-76, Parliament will be moving a step closer to a highly effective emergency planning and response system.

The Auditor General's annual report for the fiscal year ending March 1, 1987, included a special examination of emergency preparedness arrangements. He specifically recommended that consideration be given to providing statutory authority for federal emergency planning, and for the Government to declare a national emergency in peacetime. More explicitly, Mr. Dye said, "Co-ordination and the testing of specific national emergency plans between federal entities and between the federal Government and the provinces should be made the responsibility of a designated federal agency.

Emergency Preparedness Canada, the agency responsible for co-ordinating this response, has never had its role, responsibilities and mandate set out in an Act of Parliament; it has been acting under a series of ad hoc authorities that were not subject to parliamentary scrutiny.

This Bill will go a long way toward meeting the Auditor General's concerns. On behalf of the Minister responsible for emergency preparedness, I wish to thank Members of the legislative committee who reviewed this Bill carefully. It is a tribute to their understanding of the importance for the federal Government to be able to act swiftly and decisively in emergencies that they moved Bill C-76 forward so quickly. I am sure that the other place will see fit to deal with Bill C-76 as expeditiously.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief and to the point. Bill C-76 is essentially a Bill that is administrative in nature to replace the Emergency Measures Organization. The Official Opposition has no difficulties with the Bill as it reports to the House. As we have indicated earlier, it simply establishes the rules under which provinces will be entitled to declare an emergency, and it utilizes all of the resources of the federal institutions to aid the provincial authorities in dealing with emergencies.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, we have no difficulty with Bill C-76. I would imagine that the debate will lie in committee on Bill C-77 where there will be a clause-by-clause examination in the coming days and which will then report back to the House on Bill C-77.

• (1010)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I breathed a sigh of relief this morning when the Government introduced its amendment.

The amendment was necessary because when the Bill was first introduced it sent a shudder through the country. As the House will recall, Clause 5(1) in part indicated the following:

> The functions of Emergency Preparedness Canada with respect to the development of civil emergency plans are . . .
> (f) to provide for the continuity of government during and after an emergency.

The Government was saying that if an emergency occurred, Emergency Preparedness Canada would become the Government of Canada. It would set aside our constitutional rights and our parliamentary rights. It would do away with the House of Commons and the other place—the whole institution of Parliament.

I hope that it was simply a drafting oversight, but it sent a shudder throughout the country. I think the Government was about to set up what would essentially be a dictatorial panel to run Canada.

However, that has been clarified this morning, thank goodness, through the amendment with which we have already dealt.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Are you for or against it?

Mr. Riis: I hear my friend across the way from Ottawa—Carleton. He can bet that I am for it. We already have a Government which has lost some of its senses in terms of some of its powers, but to give it emergency powers into the future to do away with Parliament—

Mr. Frith: Nelson, that clause was their only hope, given the polls.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. colleague indicates, given the polls, perhaps it was their only hope for staying in government for some time beyond the next few months.

However, setting that aside, I do not want to sound flippant as it is a very serious piece of legislation. Having made those comments with regard to Bill C-76, I want to applaud the Government for having brought it forward.

As we know, the previous Government was going to deal with emergency situations through Privy Council Order 1305, which was a very worrisome piece of legislation. For example, it allowed for such ridiculous things as the planning of civilian internment camps. In other words, it would give the Government, with no accountability whatsoever, the right to set up civilian internment camps around the country, presumably to herd Canadian into during a state of emergency. The previous Liberal Government had no mandate from Parliament or legislative authority for such action. Parliament would have had no way to monitor what was going on even after the fact.

While Bill C-76 is a housekeeping Bill in many respects, it is certainly very welcome and long overdue when we consider what the Liberals had introduced for their so-called emergency preparedness.

While we are fortunate to live in a peaceful and relatively prosperous country, we tend sometimes to take these conditions for granted. However, we have had reminders in the past little while, such as the Edmonton tornado, the very serious Mississauga train derailment, and the ongoing discussions on the West Coast about a possible earthquake and the damage and chaos which would result from such an event. Obviously we must be prepared. We need emergency planning to guarantee help for those people stricken by a disaster and to ensure a rapid return to normal circumstances. This has really been put off for too long, which basically means that Canada and Canadians have been put at risk.

Thank goodness that Privy Council Order 1305 has now been put aside. Bill C-76 changes all this. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) will be responsible to Parliament for emergency planning. Essentially he will become the lead Minister during a crisis in the country. However, as a result of the Bill, parliamentarians will be able to scrutinize government activities and government spending in the area of emergency planning to ensure that the plans are appropriate, protect Canadians, and do not threaten the rights of Canadians.

One component of the Liberal initiative a few years ago under Privy Council Order 1305 concerned many of us who pride ourselves on being parliamentarians. I am referring to the opportunity to set up civilian internment camps. At that time questions were asked in the House about why the Government felt it was necessary to set up such camps and why it was necessary to have this particular power as a result of the Privy Council Order. It caused a lot of concern for Canadians who remembered their previous experiences in other countries when Governments had the right to set up internment camps for civilian populations.

Obviously the amendment is welcome because it supports the principle of constitutional government. The amendment itself indicates that we will establish arrangements for ensuring the continuity of constitutional government during an emergency. This is what we struggled to have included, and I thank the Government for seeing the wisdom in doing just that. It will ensure that emergency planning will aim to restore Parliament as soon as possible. I think it is a very appropriate measure.

Once the Bill has passed, Parliament will have told the Government to ensure that necessary measures are taken to protect Canadians in an emergency. As Canadians, people have a right to expect peace, order, and good government. While they have the right to expect peace and order, I guess Canadians are wondering whether in fact they have good government. In principle that is something we certainly want to see in place. When the situation is disturbed by some unforeseen disaster like the Edmonton tornado, Canadians expect their Government to be prepared to come to their assistance quickly or expeditiously. They expect their Government to have a great deal of tentative planning in place to provide for such an emergency, and Bill C-76 gives the Government the proper mandate from the Parliament of Canada to plan for such protection.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in my weakened condition today, I should like to make some very brief remarks on Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

First I should like to thank very much members of the House of Commons finance committee for the expeditious way in which they have dealt with the Bill. Certainly their co-operation will assist the Government in moving ahead with the process of an orderly debt management program in dealing with the substantial cash requirements of the Government of Canada.

As a Government we have fulfilled our responsibilities following the budget process as I outlined in the discussion paper some three years ago. We said that we wanted to have a Budget, the Main Estimates, and that thereafter we would present a borrowing authority Bill and look for speedy passage in order to allow us to proceed with our financial program.

Also the finance committee has fulfilled its responsibilities by dealing with the Bill expeditiously in committee as part of the budget debate. I thank Hon. Members. It is a good example of Members of Parliament from all Parties showing how Parliament can work in a very effective manner.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by commenting briefly on the Minister's statement that the opposition Parties had co-operated in speedy passage of this Bill. We in the Official Opposition did this because the Government must be able to carry on its business in an orderly way. While we may not always agree with the way in which that business is carried on, the Government does have a mandate from the Canadian people and we respect that and have not delayed the Bill unusually. But I must point out that when the Minister was in opposition, his Party generally kept the borrowing authority in the House for weeks.

I must also remind the House that when the borrowing authority Bill was introduced a couple of weeks ago, it was introduced after the presentation of an insubstantial, empty Budget, which was replete with self-congratulation. In fact, one newspaper commentator wondered if the Minister might have slipped a disc patting himself on the back. This approval we were initially asked to give on faith because we had not even seen the Estimates.

I listed my misgivings in my speech at second reading and during the Budget debate. This morning I wish to reiterate just a few crucial points and raise others concerning the financial management of the Government.

For this particular Bill, the Government asks for authority to borrow $25.3 billion after a Budget which was long on self-congratulation and short on substance. The Government really is asking to borrow too much money when one considers that it has not kept its promises, a key one being that taxes would not be raised and the deficit would be lowered.

We initially said we would not pass this Bill until we saw the Estimates. Indeed, having seen the Estimates did not inspire any great confidence either. There were a number of items the Government announced which were not covered in the Estimates, and obviously later in the year there will be Supplementary Estimates. There is also some money on reserve which has not been defined and, again, there is a mystery about how this money will be spent.

I want to talk a bit about the federal sales tax. In the February 10 Budget, the Minister spoke of new rules concerning the manufacturers' sales tax. This is a tax which has been described by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as a killer of jobs and is to be replaced sometime in the future by a new consumption sales tax. That date though is being put farther and farther back. Officials at the Department of Finance are now talking about a three to four year time frame for the new consumption sales tax, so that the increased use of the manufacturers' of sales tax, which was supposed to be an interim measure, will clearly be with us for some time. The Government is continuing to raise taxes, yet the public debt is not being reduced.

Here are some of the increases Canadians have experienced since 1984. There was an increase of 1 per cent in the sales tax in 1984, which brought $1 billion to the Government's Treasury. In 1986 there was a second increase of 1 per cent in the sales tax, bringing another $1 billion to the Government's Treasury. In 1986, we had a third increase of 1 per cent in sales tax, bringing in a further $1 billion. In 1985, we saw an increase of 2 cents a litre on gas, bringing in $930 million in revenue. In 1987, there was a second increase of 1 cent a litre on gas, bringing a further $450 million in revenue. In 1987, the equalization of sales tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline netted the Government $30 million. In 1985, we had the extension of sales tax on candy, soft drinks and pet food, netting the Government $400 million. In 1987, the extension of sales tax on snack foods brought the Government $60 million. In 1985, we saw the first increase in cigarette and tobacco taxes, amounting to $320 million in revenue to the Government.

In 1986, there was a second increase in tobacco and alcohol taxes, netting $150 million to the Government this time. In 1987, we had a third increase of 4 per cent in tobacco taxes, amounting to $70 million. In 1985, we saw the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Program, which captured for the Government $105 million in revenue. In 1986, there was the deindexation of the personal income tax system, which brought the Government $635 million. The elimination of the federal tax reduction in 1986 captured $650 million. Changes to marital exemptions in 1986 brought in $20 million.

The general 3 per cent surtax in 1986 netted $1,200 million, and that surtax is still there.

Many of the measures which I have described go on from year to year silently. They are no longer shown specifically in Budgets because they have been built into the system. While this Government raises and raises taxes, the public debt is not being reduced. We have also seen some creative accounting to indicate that the debt is lower than it is. I spoke on this point before and it has been commented on by external, more objective authorities perhaps, such as the Bank of Montreal and in Peat Marwick's tax letter.

Then we come to the question of fiscal transfers to the provinces. Not long after this Government came to power, it said a cap would be put on the growth of fiscal transfers to the Government. The Government did not like calling this a cut. It said it was limiting growth. That was the statement in Canada. However, in February, 1986, in a special glossy publication called The Canadian Budget in Perspective, which was distributed to our embassies overseas, the Government stated:

> The rate of increase of federal transfers to provincial Governments for health care and post-secondary education has been reduced.

This information was not in the 1986 Budget Speech, but the provinces are certainly aware of it and are feeling the effects now.

The Government has certainly made some absolutely enormous tax grabs. The question is, can the taxpayers be assured that the Government is practising sound financial management? Unfortunately, we cannot assure them of that. The amount required to finance the national debt has risen steadily since this Government came to power. In this, our sixth year of recovery after the recession, we are not likely to see the rapid growth that we experienced in pre-recession years. That is why the Government must be particularly responsible when managing its expenditures and managing the national debt.

• (1030)

In the past, Canada and other western democracies relied on increased economic growth to redress social disparities. We are not likely to see again the kind of very rapid growth that was experienced some years ago, but we still want to maintain our social programs and equality of opportunity in the workforce and in the educational system. Canadians should not have to come from wealthy families in order to obtain post-secondary education and equip themselves for satisfying careers. We also need to be aware of regional disparities, but all these services must be delivered effectively, efficiently and economically.

My Party and I have always regarded as an essential plank of Liberalism the goal of social betterment. Therefore, in consideration of future generations of Canadians and in consideration of having options to develop programs that make for real equality of opportunity, we must not compromise our future by anything less than prudent financial management.

Let us look at some of the frivolous expenses we have seen the Government approve. We have seen one plane following another when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travels. We have seen a plane to carry video equipment. We have seen extraordinarily increased travel expenses.

Mr. Edwards: Nonsense.

Miss Nicholson: In these times—yes, the Conservative Member says, "nonsense". I absolutely agree with him. Indeed, it is nonsense to spend money frivolously when there are still Canadians who are living in poverty, there are still children who are living in poverty and who will not be able to achieve their full potential.

With those remarks, I would exhort the Government to make some real attempt to manage better, to spend money in the best interests of Canadians, to develop sound public policies, to limit the frivolous expenses and to stop this policy of tax more and spend more.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am less than happy to have the chance to make some remarks today about this borrowing Bill. I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is here, so I will say the good thing I have to say right off the top.

For many years, while the Liberals were in government, borrowing authority Bills would trickle in throughout the year. We would be asked to approve $5 billion here, $10 billion there and $6 billion there. This was done to try to give the impression that the Liberals were not borrowing very much. Estimates and Budgets were brought in at all times of the year in an attempt to destabilize the management of the country's finances.

At that time, we advocated that the Budget should be brought in at a particular time each year and that the borrowing requirements ought to be identified and the Estimates and tax expenditures provided all in one fell swoop. By and large, the Government is doing that. That is the good news, and I think we have made some progress in enabling parliamentarians to understand the nation's financial arrangements.

Today the Government is asking us to approve the borrowing of $25.3 billion. I do not think that we need to borrow $25.3 billion. I think it is unfortunate that so much of this is going to servicing a debt that keeps going up and up. While the deficit has stabilized somewhat, it is still too large.

I cannot for the life of me understand why the Minister of Finance does not rise later today, perhaps close to midday, to announce that he is concerned about the high interest rates that went up this week, as a matter of fact. They marginally increased again. There is a tremendous gap that exists between Canadian short-term interest rates and short-term interest rates in the United States.

If the Minister of Finance were to say that he was concerned about the deficit and the increasing debt and that one of the ways to deal with that quickly and efficiently would be to reduce interest rates so that the cost of servicing the debt is reduced, that one decision could start reducing the debt of Canada by billions of dollars. I would hope that we would see some action on that front taken by the Minister of Finance shortly. That is to say nothing of the benefits that would accrue to many Canadians if there were to be another drop in the interest rates of 1 per cent or 2 per cent.

I was hoping that the Minister of Finance would use the opportunity today to explain what the $2.5-billion slush fund will be used for. In the Estimates, there is a very clear listing of $2.5 billion, with no indication of what government programs will be used for. Some of us call it a pre-election slush fund which gives the Government the ability to dish out a few million dollars here, a few million dollars there, for this project and that project, to try to enhance the Government's image. As the Gallup poll reminded us yesterday, that image still needs enhancing. At 28 per cent, the Government still has a long way to go.

Quite frankly, I am astounded by that figure, considering that the Government has 208 Members of Parliament going across the country selling their policies. They have unlimited government expenses to sell their policies, and still the people of Canada are able to see through all of this. They know that the Government does not represent the ordinary Canadian but represents instead a very select, small group of Canadians, a very influential, powerful, wealthy minority. That minority is represented well, but ordinary Canadian citizens must look to other Parties, and I suspect that they will probably look to the New Democratic Party the next time they go to the polls.

My hon. friend from Trinity started to outline the long list of silly expenditures of this Government. If we are interested in reducing government spending, we could reduce interest rates, the most obvious initiative. The second most obvious initiative would be to eliminate the slush fund. A third initiative would be to do away with the silly spending the Government has done. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) indicated that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) feels that he has to lug an extra plane along filled with movie and video equipment in order to catch the few good things he does across Canada, presumably for election purposes. There is a long list of other such expenditures.

Some of the most powerful people in Canada built the West Edmonton Mall, and they came to the Government and asked for $5 million. The Minister of Finance said: "Right on, here is $5 million," wrote out a cheque and gave it to them. They did not need $5 million to build the West Edmonton Mall. Again, this is one of the richest families in Canada, one of the most influential business families, and the Government wrote them out a cheque for $5 million. Quite frankly, time does not permit me to go through the long list of peculiar government expenditures.

I noticed with interest today that the unemployment rates in parts of Canada have increased. Let me talk about the constituency that I represent. Back in September of 1984 when the present Government was elected, the unemployment rate in Kamloops—Shuswap was 16.3 per cent. This morning, the unemployment rate is at 20.9 per cent. In other words—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): An effective Member of Parliament.

Mr. Riis: That is indicative as well of constituencies surrounding Kamloops—Shuswap including the Kootenays area and the northern part of British Columbia. I could list constituencies right across the country.

We appreciate that prosperity has returned to pockets in Ontario. However, that prosperity does not exist in other parts of Canada. In fact, since the Progressive Conservative Government took office, the unemployment statistics indicate that in Kamloops—Shuswap, there has been an increase in unemployment of over 4 per cent. In other words, when the question is put to people in the regions: Is your life better today than it was in September of 1984? The answer is clear: Absolutely not.

• (1040)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Absolutely yes.

Mr. Riis: If you ask that question in a select few centres in Ontario, the answer is yes. Not all of Ontario. With the big closure of Massey, thousands of people are going to be out of work. Thousands of other people who depend upon that industry will be out of work. Look at northern Ontario, northern Quebec, Atlantic Canada, the North, the West, including British Columbia. As you well know, the situation for most Canadians living in the regions is not better than it was back in September of 1984. That is the proof of the pudding. That is why I am puzzled that the Minister of Finance did not stand in his place today and say: We recognize this reality. We recognize that the economic prosperity we find in parts of Ontario does not exist in the regions. We, as a compassionate, concerned, caring Government, are going to take steps to overcome that. Yet, no, the Minister was mute on this issue.

When you add up the regional development expenditures of the Government you see there have been cuts in the percentage of money going to the regions. When you look at the funding of the western diversification fund you find there has been a reduction in relative terms in funds set aside for regional economic expansion in western Canada.

This is a very serious issue and there are so many initiatives the Government could take to assist the regions. I just want to go through two or three to help the Minister of Finance if he is looking for initiatives the Government can take to assist people in the regions. Let me suggest a few that would apply to one part of British Columbia.

There is a major dependency on the forest resource in that province. The resource needs to be improved. It needs to be nurtured, supported, developed, husbanded. The forest requires thinning programs, spacing programs, fertilizing programs, disease and pest control programs, road building, research and development. Provincial foresters say there are thousands and thousands of jobs that need to be done to husband that resource; not could be done, but must be done if we are going to maintain the industry as we know it today, let alone expand it.

What about agriculture? When you look at the farms across the country you recognize that we are rapidly approaching what for many farmers can only be described as a debt crisis. The cost of growing food overshadows the revenue. Our farmers are in a very serious situation these days. What is the Government doing about it? Is it providing long-term low interest loans to farmers? No. Do the interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation make sense for the farm community? No. It is time that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues recognized that for the farm sector to survive, and it is quite capable of doing so given its human and natural resources, it has to have money at acceptable interest rates. That means around the 6 per cent level. That can be done. Other countries do it. Yet the Government of Canada refuses to take this step.

What about all of the other programs that could be put in place? For example, a decent child care program. We learned just the other day that over 60 per cent of the women of this country are in the workforce, yet decent child care facilities are just not in place. It disappoints me to have to say that my province is one of the worst offenders. There are tens of thousands of young children in inappropriate child care facilities because there are no alternatives. Their parents have to work to maintain the family. Yet there are very few adequate child care facilities in that province.

Why does the federal Government not take some steps to provide some leadership in child care so those hundreds of thousands of young children in inadequate child care facilities every day are properly cared for? One spin-off would be job creation. Another would be the peace of mind for the parents. Here is an initiative which must be taken in a progressive country in the 1980s.

I wanted the Minister of Finance to indicate today that he had rethought his tax reform program. I think most Canadian families now know that since the Conservative Government took office in September of 1984, the average family, regardless of tax reform, will be paying at least $1,000 more in federal taxes. That means $1,000 out of the pockets and purses of every Canadian family. That money is just taken to Ottawa. It does not circulate in the Chicoutimis and Red Deers and Thunder Bays. The money should be distributed to where it can be used most appropriately and effectively and that is in the hands of Canadians. Stop gouging. Stop prying every cent out of families.

If you ask the question: How are these expenditures going to be made up? I will tell you how. Why, if we have a progressive country, would we permit a situation where, in spite of tax reform, 60,000 profitable corporations will still be in a position to pay not a single penny in income tax? The Americans do not tolerate that. The U.S. looked around and saw that in 1986 there were hundreds of thousands of firms not paying one penny in income tax in spite of their profits. Those profits might be $100 million or $200 million or $300 million, yet they are still not paying a penny in federal taxes. Congress said that was not right, that was unfair, unjust and discriminatory. When those profitable corporations pay nothing, the average working person has to pay more than he or she should be paying.

Our Government does not take that attitude. I could not believe the Minister of Finance when he walked in a little while back and said we are going to introduce tax reform, and then opened up his book to explain what it was all about. He said we are still going to allow 60,000 profitable corporations to escape paying taxes. These are not your beauty salons or welding shops on the corner. They include Power Corporation, Argus Corporation, Cadillac-Fairview, the Royal Bank of Canada, Shell Oil, General Motors. In some years they do not pay a single penny in income tax. Can you imagine a tax system in the 1980s that allows a teller working for the Royal Bank or the Bank of Montreal to pay more income tax in some years than the entire Royal Bank or Bank of Montreal? Yet that is what our tax system permits and will continue to permit.

Mr. Crosby: How come the shares are dropping?

Mr. Riis: I hear some bleating down in the corner about shares. Presumably the Hon. Member is justifying this system. The U.S. does not tolerate this for a minute.

Mr. Crosby: Tell us why the shares are dropping?

Mr. Riis: Why should we tolerate it for a minute?

• (1050)

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) comes before Parliament, as he has done today, and asks for the authority to borrow $25.3 billion, I think it is only right for us to ask why we do not have an effective and fair tax system which collects billions of dollars more each year. Why do we not reduce interest rates so that the cost of servicing the debt would be significantly less, thereby saving billions of dollars? Why not stop some of the frivolous government spending which takes place, thereby saving hundreds of millions of dollars each year? Why do we have billion dollar slush funds for pre-election purposes?

These are questions that Canadians are asking. These are questions which ought to be answered if the Minister of Finance believes that what he is doing is appropriate, right, fair, and honest.

Since the Minister refuses to answer these questions I can only assume that the Government is trying to play a smoke and mirrors game, trying to pull the wool over the eyes of Canadians. However, I do not think the Government can do it. I think Canadians realize that our tax system is unjust, unfair, discriminatory and biased, that it favours large corporations over small businesses and upper-income influential Canadians over the ordinary Canadian working man and woman.

These are the realities. I think that the Minister of Finance or other members of the Cabinet should stand today in this debate to explain to the people of Canada why the Government continues to keep this unjust system in place at the same time as he asks permission to borrow more than $25 billion.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is with a certain sense of regret that I participate in this debate. Canadians are indicating to the Government in a variety of ways, particularly through polls, that they are very preoccupied with the state of the environment. Yet the Government is not paying attention to that public preoccupation and has come forward in its budgetary provisions for this fiscal year with a budget for Environment Canada which increases the monetary allocation to that Department by 3.6 per cent. To put that in context, the over-all increase in government spending this year is 8 per cent. Inflation is 4.5 per cent. Therefore, in its 1988-89 budget, Environment Canada loses twice, first in relation to the over-all increase of the Government and, second, with an increase which is below the rate of inflation.

Once again, since 1984 the Department of the Environment is not able, with the money it is receiving from the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board, to keep up with inflation, let alone make any further expansions or launching the programs which need to be launched in light of the environmental situation which is emerging, particularly in water and air, which demands a strong federal presence and strong initiative through federal programs.

While Environment Canada is receiving only a 3.6 per cent increase to its budget this year, other Departments of the Government are doing extremely well. For example, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has increased its budget by 30 per cent, the Department of Agriculture by 24 per cent, the Department of Transport by 7.5 per cent, National Defence by 8.3 per cent, the Department of Communications by 11 per cent, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by 11.5 per cent, the Department of Finance by 13.5 per cent, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans by 23 per cent.

If you compare the budget of Environment Canada in 1984 with the budget of Environment Canada today you will find that in relation to inflation it is weaker by no less than 17 per cent. Environment Canada has lost 17 per cent of its purchasing power between 1984 and 1988. As a result of this weakening of purchasing power, 336 positions have been lost over these four years. Scientists, technicians, and support people had to be dismissed over the course of these years as a result of this weakening of the Department's role.

While this is going on, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has come forward in the House and elsewhere and made strong statements about the Government's commitment to the environment. I regret to say that that strong commitment is, unfortunately, not backed up by facts. When you look at the figures and the budgetary performance, you discover with dismay that those words are hollow.

Two days ago there was in the Toronto Star a letter by the Minister of the Environment rushing to his own defence after two non-governmental groups pointed out that Environment Canada was getting a percentage increase well below the average increase of all other Departments. The Minister wrote a lengthy letter in defence of his actions. He states, first, that the increase for Environment Canada is 3.6 per cent. That is accurate and it is one of the reasons that I am pointing out to the Government that the Department, with inflation ranging between 4 and 4.5 per cent, is losing ground in terms of its purchasing power.

Second, in order to enhance the impact of his letter, the Minister of the Environment went on to say that there is $150 million in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in an attempt to create the impression that that money is available to that Department to enhance environmental programs.

Shall we call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

WILDLIFE

WOLVES—B.C. SUPREME COURT RULING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, there is celebration in British Columbia and across Canada. Wolves are not to be shot from aircraft by government biologists because, in the opinion of the British Columbia Supreme Court, doing so violates the Government's own hunting laws. It is a victory for wildlife and a defeat for the contention of the Government of British Columbia that wolves should be exterminated to ensure sufficient numbers of elk, caribou, moose and stone sheep for commercial hunting.

• (1100)

Since 1982 the Government has killed about 1,000 wolves in an attempt to increase the numbers of those trophy animals that attract hunters from around the world.

This ruling is a victory in recognition that wildlife should no longer be the objective of reckless exploitation. The message is that wildlife has a greater value than the economic value we assign and that each species plays an important role in the balance of nature.

Those who want to kill elk, caribou, moose and stone sheep for entertainment and relaxation, or for the sake of a stuffed trophy on their walls, are invited to find another hobby. They could trade their high powered rifles for a pair of cross country skis.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF PIER 21—HALIFAX

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, every port city has its special memories and the Port of Halifax is no exception. This week and throughout 1988 attention will be focused on Pier 21 and its 60 years of history as Canada's gateway.

From 1928 to the 1970s, Pier 21 was the portal through which 1.25 million persons immigrated to become new Canadians. Equally important was the return to Canada of 400,000 soldiers from the strife of World War II, and some were later to be joined by their war brides.

These families are today represented in virtually every Canadian community, including Parliament. But Halifax Harbour and Pier 21 provided their first view of Canada.

Our ocean ports are no longer the entrance way to Canada for those seeking a new life and new opportunities, but we should recognize the role played by our immigration facilities and the officials and volunteers who served in them as these events pass into Canadian history.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S WEEK

CONTRIBUTION OF ABORIGINAL WOMEN

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in celebrating International Women's Week, I take great pride in honouring the efforts of Canadian aboriginal women who are working for justice and equality. Unfortunately, while women in general have all too often suffered discrimination, aboriginal women have been hit even harder. These are women who are part of Canada's first nations, who have helped maintain cultural traditions and deserve our recognition.

First, let us honour those who worked tirelessly for legislation, which was eventually brought in in 1985, which brings the Indian Act in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and restores official recognition and federal services to thousands of native women and their children who lost their status by marrying non-status Indians.

We honour the women of the Tobique Band of New Brunswick, who marched in Ottawa in the late 1970s; Sandra Lovelace, who went to the United Nations on behalf of native women who had lost their status through marriage; Mary Two-Axe Early, who has been largely credited with the resulting change to the Indian Act in 1985; from the Yukon, Margaret Joe, the first aboriginal woman cabinet minister in Canada.

We honour also Mary Simon, president of the Ottawa based Inuit Circumpolar Conference; Maria Campbell, Métis author of Half Breed; Rosemarie Kuptana, president of the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation; Roberta Jamieson, a Mohawk lawyer and Indian Commissioner of Ontario; and Rhoda Innukshuk, president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. We applaud the fine work of these women.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CANADIAN ABHORRENCE OF VIOLATIONS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, Canada has shown consistency, has now demonstrated consistency by speaking out against human rights violations wherever they occur in whatever hemisphere, throughout the world.

Honest dialogue among friends and nations is seldom easy. Honest dialogue between friends can indeed be most difficult. While peace and security of all people, especially the people of Israel, is uppermost in the minds of Canadians, so, too, is our abhorrence of human rights violations by whomever, wherever.

I believe the Canadian position is now very clear. Canada cannot be loyal to friends in all things, if they cannot be true in all things to themselves.

To speak in this day and age of occupation—occupied land and occupied people—is a contradiction to the fundamental rights and freedoms which all people should be able to enjoy.

We would hope that we will now see some positive change to the attitudes and events of recent months in Palestine which have caused such dismay and anguish with all friends of Israel.

VIA RAIL

REQUEST TO LOWER FARES TO YOUTH

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, a number of young people have been complaining that VIA Rail is acting just like the Tory Government. Indeed, like the Government, this corporation is laughing at them. With or without the complicity of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), it wanted to show its magnanimity towards young Canadians.

For some time, VIA Rail has been offering to young people, a 30 per cent discount on all normal rates on every day of the week. Is it an excessive reduction? No, Mr. Speaker, because such discount does not apply on Fridays and Sundays from noon to 6 p.m.! Now considering their status as student, it is precisely the two periods of the week when students can really travel by train. One could argue that such restriction ends at 6 p.m. and that students can travel by train later. But no, VIA Rail has anticipated such a move. There is no departure after 6 p.m. for the main places of destination where students are bound.

This is entirely unacceptable. Either VIA Rail shows that it really wants to help young people and offers an unrestricted discount or it continues to look ridiculous.

Who within the Tory Government will assume his responsibilities and solve that problem for young people? Since I have no confidence in the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest), I am directing my comment to the Minister of Transport.

HEALTH CARE SERVICES

CONSTRUCTION OF GERIATRIC FACILITY

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) announced this week that the federal and Ontario Governments will negotiate the transfer of the Rideau Veterans Home in Ottawa to the Perley Hospital and will open up 50 new chronic care-beds in a new jointly funded state of the art 450-bed geriatric facility to be built on the present National Defence Medical Centre Rideau Veterans Home site.

At present, 142 veterans are cared for at the Rideau Veterans Home and 50 veterans are in the care of the National Defence Medical Centre. In the new geriatric complex, 250 beds will become available for veterans. These additional beds will be a blessing for veterans who are waiting to get into the Rideau Veterans Home.

Furthermore, combining the Rideau Veterans Home and the National Defence Medical Centre would provide improved care for all veterans.

I am pleased that the federal Government will be working with the Ontario Government to bring about more and enhanced chronic care for both veterans and patients in a new geriatric facility. This is the work of a caring Government.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

GOVERNMENT'S ACHIEVEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women across the country celebrated last March 8 International Women's Day by staging numerous activities throughout the week. They celebrated victories won in the last decades and reviewed the work that remains to be done. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the present Government did not keep the electoral promises it made to women. Its attitude on issues regarding the status of women was obvious this week.

[English]

On Tuesday, International Women's Day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was invited to take part in a panel discussion on the trade deal. He was unable to attend. Not one Conservative Member of Parliament could be found to address the concerns of the women of Ontario.

On Wednesday, a forum on women in federal politics was co-sponsored by the International Women's Week Committee, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and Canadian Women for Political Responsibility. Once more, the Conservatives could not find one Member to attend.

These absences call into question the Conservative Government's commitment to women despite the admirable promises we have heard in the House this week.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party campaigned in the summer of 1984 on jobs, jobs, jobs.

In keeping with that theme, I am pleased to note the creation of a further 57,000 jobs in February of which 42,000 went to women. Some 515,000 jobs have been created in the past 12 months and the cumulative totals since this Government took office is 1.213 million. Furthermore, over 85 per cent of those jobs are full time, and over 50 per cent of them have gone to women.

Today there are 1.213 million more Canadians working than just three and one-half years ago. The unemployment rate, at 7.8 per cent, is at its lowest since August, 1981. In every province in this country the unemployment rate is lower than it was in September, 1984.

I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for their responsible approach to deficit reduction which has created an environment in which the initiative, entrepreneurship and energy of Canadians has been able to manifest itself in this outstanding record of job creation.

IN MEMORY OF CHARLES BRUNEAU

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers mourn the loss of the most charming little boy, who was a ray of hope, who fought for his life, who built up courage and was confident in the future. That little boy was Charles Bruneau who appeared in advertisements for LEUCAN. He suffered from leukemia, and right to the end, to the last minute, he was courageous and full of hope.

I would like to extend my condolences to the family of young Charles Bruneau, Mr. Speaker, and I hope Members and Ministers will remember him when they study the Government's Estimates. When the time will come to allocate billions of dollars for arms or submarines, thought should be given to acquire one less submarine and use the money for research, for saving lives. I hope the memory of this young man remains with us a long time.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REPRESENTATION OF WOMEN IN THE SCIENCES

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, Women in Scholarship, Engineering, Science and Technology, WISEST, is a committee made up of scientists, engineers, scholars, educators and students from the University of Alberta, the Alberta Government and the private sector. Its mandate is to increase the representation of women in all fields of scholarship, particularly in the areas of the sciences, engineering and technology, where women are very much under-represented in decision-making roles.

One initiative which WISEST has developed to increase the number of women in these fields is a program for Grade 11 high school students who spend six weeks during the summer working in established research groups at the University of Alberta. Between 15 and 25 students are accepted each summer. The program also includes small numbers of male students working in home economics and nursing. WISEST believes this program is unique in Canada. With Alberta's unemployment down 31 per cent since September 1984, such programs may be especially helpful in meeting specialized labour demands in the coming years.

WAR MEASURES ACT

DIARY OF FORMER MINISTER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in October, 1970 the Pierre Trudeau Government was proclaiming a state of emergency and imposing war measures. Hundreds of people were arrested during the night, jailed and released without being charged with anything. Cities like Montreal and Ottawa were under siege. All freedoms were abolished. Today, notes taken by a former Minister, Mr. Donald Jamieson, show that there was no evidence of an insurrection.

[English]

The then Minister of Justice, now the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), said that someday the Canadian people should know the facts about the imposition of the War Measures Act. Now is the time for the Leader of the Liberal Party, and for other Members of that Cabinet, to come clean with the Canadian people and tell them why the War Measures Act was imposed without ample justification?

UNEMPLOYMENT

CONTINUOUS DIMINUTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, jobs, jobs, jobs! Today is a great day for Canadians because they will see and hear through the media that the Conservative Government is keeping its 1984 election promise to create jobs. Since we have come to power, 1,200,000 jobs have been created. Since 1984, unemployment among men, women and young people has been reduced by 33 1/3 per cent. Unemployment is at its lowest level in several years: 7.8 per cent in Canada. Listen, Members of the Opposition: 7.8 per cent in Canada, 33 1/3 per cent less than in 1984! It will be a day filled with pride and satisfaction for Canadians knowing that the Conservative Government works for them and keeps its promises.

Mr. Speaker, jobs, jobs, jobs!

TAXATION

EFFECT OF SALES TAX ON LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, last June the Government announced a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls. That tax discriminates against rural residents. If one lives in the country or a small town, one's business, school, and personal contacts are likely to be in another telephone exchange. This means that the taxes become an extra burden for businesses and citizens in rural areas, an extra burden carried not because of the use of the facility but because of where they live or carry on their business or, even in some cases, where they send their children to school.

It is time the Government corrected its mistake which discriminates against rural Canada.

ABORTION

PROTECTION FOR THE UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise to encourage the Government to show strong national leadership on a very sensitive and important social issue affecting families today, the issue of abortion. During the hearings held last year, the Committee on child care, of which I was a Member, was told of the need for support of the Canadian family.

I would hope that our society has, or will have, sufficient support mechanisms in place so that if a woman has a so-called "unwanted" pregnancy, counselling, support and constructive help for her and her unborn child will be easily accessible. She must realize that there is an alternative to abortion.

I have received approximately 1,800 letters from my constituents to date who feel that Parliament must recognize the unborn child and his or her right to life from the moment of conception. I would strongly urge that any legislation or proposed motion on this matter should be framed from the basis of the value of life. For the sake of the Canadian family, present and future, we must act strongly and with conviction.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRE-RETIREMENT LEAVE PLAN—DEDUCTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Pre-retirement Leave Plan of the Cape Breton Development Corporation was designed purposely to have the workers affected to continue to be employed under a contract of service to Devco in order that they be eligible to continue to earn entitlement to various benefits, including the Canada Pension Plan. With very few exceptions, income from employment for purposes of one of the Acts I have mentioned is income from employment for the purposes of the other.

Since the Pre-Retirement Leave plan of 1971, many miners have now gone for a compassionate disability pension and programs under the Labour Adjustment Program. Under these programs, individuals were not being requested to pay unemployment insurance premiums. Hence, individuals who participated in the Devco pre-retirement leave plan of 1971 must pay unemployment insurance premiums. This is financial discrimination since these persons will never obtain employment with this federally owned Crown corporation.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) as well as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to change this absurd and unfair deduction. Both Ministers realize that if these deductions are cancelled, both the miners and senior management of Cape Breton Development Corporation would have substantial savings. I urge the Government of Canada to show some compassion for these needy persons.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the people of Canada did themselves a favour by voting for jobs and a Progressive Conservative Government. We have delivered the jobs, 1,213,000 of them since the election; jobs for women, jobs for youth and jobs in the regions. There are so many jobs it is almost an embarrassment. Statistics Canada computers are running red hot just trying to count them all.

The number of jobs is equalled only by the stony silence of the Liberals and New Democratic Party on our jobs policy. They know that in a thousand years, they could never match our record.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUMAN RIGHTS—MINISTER'S SPEECH—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping to put a question to the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister as to whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs was speaking yesterday on behalf of the Government, and represented government policy, in two speeches he made. I will have to put the question to him both in his capacity, I gather, as Acting Prime Minister and as Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I say to him and to the House that all Canadians abhor human rights abuse. All Canadians denounce violence. However, there is also a particular responsibility for national leaders of this country to help heal wounds and provide constructive and thoughtful solutions to difficult problems in fragile parts of the world.

It is particularly important, given our country's well-earned record as a peacemaker, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs not pour oil on flames. In two speeches yesterday, in the House as it related to Sikh organizations in Canada, and then before the Canadian-Israeli Committee, the Minister did pour oil on flames with respect to two very sensitive issues.

I want to ask whether the Prime Minister of this country approves in its entirety the speech of the right hon. gentleman, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, made yesterday to the Canada-Israel Committee. And does the Prime Minister believe that speech constitutes a constructive process and solution to the achievement of peace in the Middle East, to the termination of violence in the Middle East—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and to the finding of a homeland for the Palestinian people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to those questions is, of course.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I gather "of course, yes" is the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1120)

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS IN CANADA—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State. Last summer, the Prime Minister praised a Sikh organization for "helping to unite not only the people of your community but the people of Canada as well". Those were the words of the Prime Minister.

Yesterday in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Members of that very same organization that the Prime Minister praised, "are part of the most serious internal security threat that Canada faces today". Those were the words used by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, does the Prime Minister approve in its entirety the speech which he delivered to Members in this House yesterday? Does the Prime Minister think it fair of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tarnish the reputation of all Canadians of the Sikh faith?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, of course, yes.

With regard to the second question with respect to a letter by the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister was responding to a request, and I will quote it into the record, "that the Prime Minister give a message to all the Sikhs of Canada which we would like to publish in an historic document" that was being published by that organization.

In this instance, the Prime Minister's message was correctly quoted by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. His message to all the Sikhs of Canada, in response to the invitation was, "You are all in Canadian society, you are helping to unite not only the people of your community but the people of Canada as well".

With regard to the question of tarring all groups, my speech makes it very clear that we are not doing that at all. We are dealing with a very serious problem to public order in Canada, and to the right of Canadians of Sikh origin and of other origins to pursue their lives in peace and freedom.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I take seriously what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition states about not pouring oil on flames. That is a responsibility of all Members on both sides of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST OF SIKH ORGANIZATIONS FOR AN APOLOGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Unfortunately, members of Sikh organizations across the country are demanding an apology from the Minister for his earlier statement, and for the speech that he made yesterday in the House.

INQUIRY REGARDING PRIME MINISTER'S SUPPORT OF RECENT SPEECHES OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with due respect, in his two speeches yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs took a firm but not very constructive position. He failed in his duty to propose constructive solutions for delicate and difficult problems. I will ask my question again. Will the Prime Minister specifically endorse the two speeches the Minister made yesterday, one before the House about the Sikhs and one to the Canada-Israël Committee yesterday afternoon? Is the Prime Minister going to say where he stands?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no divisions on this side.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—EFFECT ON TAX ASSESSMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has to do with his famous supermailboxes. The Minister knows that the Ontario Municipal Board ruled a 5 per cent reduction in property taxes for some individuals. The Ontario Ministry of Revenue has stated that it will abide by that decision. It also stated that an additional 20 home owners who appealed their 1987 property tax assessments before this year's deadline, and who had those community boxes in front of or beside their homes, will qualify for this 5 per cent reduction.

I would like to ask the Minister who is responsible for protecting and promoting consumers' interests, if he will now inform the House as to what he is going to do about this nuisance caused by those so-called supermailboxes?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, prior to undertaking this program and fulfilling the policy which was laid down as long ago as 1974, the Post Office undertook test studies and had independent appraisers look at what effect those supermailboxes would have on the communities and on property values.

There was an independent appraisal done which stated that "Based on surveys undertaken in the three communities within York division, Streetsville, Oakville, and Markham, we find no evidence that the Canada Post superbox has any effect on value of neighbouring residential properties". That was stated by an independent appraiser.

Why the Ontario Municipal Board would reach the conclusion that it did, less than 48 hours after the supermailbox was in fact put into use, is something for the Government of Ontario to work out, and if it has reached its decision, it is entitled to do that.

COMPENSATION TO HOME OWNERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same Minister. This Minister is abdicating his responsibilities for consumers in this country. He knows full well that an Ontario Municipal Board now supported by the Ministry of Revenue in the Government of Ontario has stated very clearly that his now famous superduper mailboxes are a nuisance.

The Minister has a choice. He can either scrap this particular program, which is just absolutely ridiculous for Canadians, or he can compensate those individuals, particularly the municipalities that will lose revenue as a result.

Is the Minister going to accept his responsibilities and act on behalf of consumers as opposed to the corporate interests continuously?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Ontario Municipal Board reached a decision about two home owners and one location. That is all. Why that was extrapolated to include everybody else is a question that the Government of Ontario will have to answer.

Mr. Dingwall: What a cop-out.

Mr. Andre: If it is the interest of consumers that is really of concern to Members of the Liberal Party, then they should be aware that fulfilling the policy commitments I guess they made—I am not sure, one is never sure from day to day—but if they are talking about having door-to-door delivery in every area now served by group mailboxes, they are talking about charging the consumer 60 cents to mail a letter. That is protecting consumers according to the Liberal Party, is it?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): That's nonsense. The facts do not support that.

FREE TRADE

CONFERENCE BOARD ANALYSIS REPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance will be aware that the Conference Board of Canada which recently analyzed the Canada-U.S. trade deal released a report yesterday. In the report it indicated very clearly that the lost revenues as a result of a reduction in tariffs will require one of two actions on the part of the Government. Either to have taxes increased substantially, or to have a significant increase in the deficit.

Will the Minister of Finance indicate to the House and to the people of Canada which one of those options the Government plans to pursue?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, neither. The Hon. Member should refer to the budget papers that I put out with the last Budget which indicate that a 1 per cent increase in the economic growth in Canada will lead to $1.1 billion worth of increased revenues in the first year, and increasing after that. If that is transposed into what we expect is a 2.0 to 2.5 per cent increase in economic growth, it can be seen that that will be greater than the amount of revenues that would be lost as a result of the tariff reduction.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member ignores the fact that we have a very strong economy, and a growing economy. In his earlier comments he ignored the fact that there was a .3 per cent reduction in the unemployment rate in February to 7.8 per cent, which is the lowest level since 1981.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The increase in jobs created, as we now have over 1.2 million jobs created since September, 1984, together with other news of a 17 per cent increase in investment intentions, a very strong period of economic growth last year with the highest level of growth in the fourth quarter, indicate that we are going into 1988 in the strong period; all of those things together say that we have a very strong economy, an economy that is responding well to the economic policies of the Government of Canada. Possibly the Hon. Member should stray from his normal characteristic of walking around with a cloud over his head.

EFFECT OF POTENTIAL LOSS IN REVENUES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refers to the budget papers. The budget papers point out very clearly one initiative that the Government took was to increase gasoline taxes which will offset the loss in revenues of the first two years of the tariff phase-out.

My question to the Minister of Finance is the following. In the study done by the Conference Board of Canada it indicates that, "Our analysis shows that this reduction in tariffs is not off-set by federal revenue gains from a faster growing economy".

• (1130)

If the Conference Board of Canada, as a result of its very thorough analysis of the trade deal, comes up with that type of observation, just what is the benefit to the people of Canada as a result of the trade deal?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Conference Board has been wrong in the past once or twice.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You only refer to them when you think they are right.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that I only refer to them when I think they are right. I refer to them when they are wrong, as I am doing right now.

If the Hon. Member is asking for the reasons that we are entering into the trade agreement, perhaps I could have about half an hour, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question.

However, let me just give him a few examples. His Leader has said that we should be expanding trade with other countries. We expect, as a result of the trade agreement with the United States, that our productivity will be better. The Conference Board says that, we say that, and all economic studies say that. That will improve our competitiveness, not just with the United States but with other countries. We will be improving our trade capabilities in relation to Third World countries as well. That will create jobs in British Columbia, Ontario, and Nova Scotia—right across the country.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister of Finance that in a number of areas of British Columbia the unemployment rates have increased from September, 1984 by four or five percentage points. Since the Government took office, the situation is incredibly worse in a number of areas of British Columbia.

NATIONAL SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my third question is for the Minister of Finance. The Conference Board of Canada points out that there are two alternatives as a result of the reduced revenues coming in from the tariff phase-out, that is, either an increase in taxes or an increase in the deficit.

Since the Minister of Finance has indicated that the Government plans to introduce phase two of tax reform, which of course will be the imposition of a national sales tax, is the reason for doing this that it is the Government's way of offsetting the losses which accrue to the Government of Canada as a result of the tariff phase-out?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me just comment on one element of the preamble to the question.

Since September, 1984 the unemployment rate in British Columbia has gone down from 15.2 per cent to 10.7 per cent, which is a drop of 4.5 per cent. It is higher than the national average, but that represents 138,000 jobs created and a drop in unemployment of 54,000 people. The economic policies of the Government of Canada are working in British Columbia as well as in other parts of Canada.

The Hon. Member is specifically asking how we will finance the drop in tariffs. I have indicated that because of the growth in the economy over and above what would be expected from the growth that is there now, which I indicated is very strong, additional revenues will be generated that are far more than what is necessary to cover the loss in tariff revenue.

What the Hon. Member is saying, that we have to use stage two tax reform to do this, demonstrates that he is out to lunch. He does not understand what he is talking about when he draws those conclusions.

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD REPORT—GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Conference Board study is not the only one which has suggested that the Minister's projections are rosy and that economic growth in coming years will not be large enough to do all the things the Minister is anticipating. For instance, the Minister talks about increased employment, yet we know that we need 3 per cent growth just to stand still in terms of employment creation.

Miss MacDonald: That is what we have been having.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Somebody says that that is what we have, but the Minister is saying that it is about to increase and that we will have a tremendous increase in employment.

Since the Conference Board study is not the only one which points out that there will be limits to growth, how in fact does the Minister intend to extract this $2.9 billion from Canadians whom he has already taxed almost beyond endurance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is attacking my projections. I will go back to November, 1984 and compare my projections with those of other Members of the House of Commons. I remind her that her Leader said in November, 1984 and in May, 1985 that the policies of this Government would cost us 50,000 or 100,000 jobs. I believe that was the figure he used at that time. Since then we have created 1,213,000 jobs, so our projections on this side of the House speak for themselves.

We have a strong economy. I have said that this year the economy will increase by 2.8 per cent. Some of the economists are coming out today and saying, as a result of the unemployment rate drop announced this morning, plus the investment intention increase of 17 per cent for this year, plus the strength in the fourth quarter last year which no one had anticipated, that my figures are low. They are saying that there will be a 3 per cent increase in growth this year.

What we have indicated for the free trade agreement—the 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent increase in productivity and the 120,000 jobs—is on the low side again.

SOURCE OF ADDITIONAL REVENUE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government has very substantially increased manufacturing sales tax. It was supposed to be an interim measure, until the new consumption tax came in. Now we find that the consumption tax will not be introduced for at least three years.

Again I ask the Minister from where the additional revenue is coming, or will he increase the use of sleight of hand in his Budgets to disguise the real facts from Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I refer to the appendix to The Fiscal Plan, which demonstrates that with an increase in economic activity of 1 per cent there is a $1.1 billion increase in revenues in the first year, and that increases as time goes by. That in itself will more than offset the loss in tariff revenues.

However, as I have also indicated, we believe that the Department of Finance study on the expected results, the impact of the free trade agreement, is on the conservative side, because it does not measure certain intangible elements such as the response of business people to the greater degree of confidence in access to the United States market—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister may need more time. Perhaps he could use another occasion to do it.

REVENUE

COLLECTION OF CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I am sure he is aware that a Federal Court judge has ordered the people of Canada to pay back some $141 million in taxes plus interest to a single oil company.

We are concerned about a sum of nearly $1 billion owed to the people of Canada by some 80,000 corporations in unpaid taxes. We want to know what the Government is doing to collect these undisputed taxes which are owed to the people of Canada.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the recent decision by Judge Muldoon in the Irving Oil case, of course our judicial system provides for an appeal mechanism if it is appropriate. Our Department is studying the decision, and it has been referred to Justice for proper analysis.

As far as the other matter which the Hon. Member raises is concerned, he knows that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has since 1984 in his economic statement made comprehensive efforts to remove some of the more inappropriate tax loopholes and programs.

Our Department is attempting in a comprehensive and fair way to assess and audit corporations which owe taxes and, in cases where appropriate, we will take action.

On the other hand, in areas where there are legitimate losses, the corporations are entitled to take them into account against income. We respect that as well.

• (1140)

TAXPAYERS—DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Minister is aware from the information provided to me in September last year that there is nearly $1 billion in unpaid taxes. These are not taxes in dispute but are owing to the Government. As well, the Minister's own figures show that there were some 20,000 corporations which avoided paying over $320 million in taxes for over two years.

Will the Minister explain to the people of Canada how it is possible that more than 20,000 corporations can end up avoiding paying the taxes which they owe while individual taxpayers, if they are behind in paying their taxes, are hauled to court?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my colleague as a knowledgeable individual knows that any taxpayer, including corporations that avoid paying taxes, are properly liable to be taken to court.

We acknowledge that there are accounts out there we have to collect and we are doing our best to collect them. We have many accounts being assessed. Interest is accruing on them. There is always room for improvement. Our department, I repeat, is doing the best we can and I think we are making some progress.

UNEMPLOYEMENT

CREATION OF NEW JOBS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

All Canadians know that unemployment has reached its lowest level in many years. It is now at 7.8 per cent, one-third lower than it was in 1984. The Minister obviously agrees with the Government's employment policy.

My question is this: Does the Minister have a specific objective, a target percentage for the unemployment rate? Does he intend to introduce other policies? Could he perhaps inform the House what he intends to do in future to further reduce unemployment and create new jobs?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians were delighted this morning to hear that the unemployment rate has reached its lowest level, 7.8 per cent, since 1981.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East will keep quiet if I tell her that unemployment among women has dropped 3.6 per cent, thanks to one of the most successful job creation programs in Western countries.

In fact, Canada has done better than West Germany, the United Kingdom, Italy and France. In three years, Canada has created more jobs than all industrialized countries in what we call the Western world. Again, I think we have been very successful. And I also believe that all Members, and even for a few seconds, Opposition Members, will have to admit that the Conservative Government's record has never even been touched by the Liberal Government.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister of State for Science and Technology, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion answered one of my questions, saying that creating a space agency would depend on the Canadian Government's participation in the space station. On February 7, 1987, the Minister of State (Science and Technology) stated at a press conference that there was no connection between the plan to create a space agency and the space station. Could the Acting Prime Minister explain to the House the reason for this change of heart, this about-face? Would he agree that this new decision or new approach merely reflects the lack of political courage on this issue, to quote the president of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Garcia?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I think I can best answer the Hon. Member by quoting the Minister, who said:

> I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that agencies are not crated in a vacuum. They are created to accomplish certain tasks. In this particular case, the existence of a space agency will depend basically on whether the Government decides to proceed with a space station.

As soon as we in the Government have reached a decision on participating in the space station or the European Space Program or similar programs, an announcement about creating an agency will be made.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, we must assume from the Government's answer that the Minister of State (Science and Technology) was not being forthright with reporters when he said that there was no connection. So the Governement has had a change of heart.

We know that the Space Agency will involve $824 million and that the space station represents a mere $26 million.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT'S REVERSAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): In my supplementary to the Deputy Prime Minister, I would like to remind him that the Government of Quebec was given a raw deal by this Government on the shipyards issue, especially in connection with the frigates. I get the impression the same thing is happening with the space industry.

The Prime Minister of Canada came to Montreal to meet with the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec, and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion had a meeting with the municipal authorities. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec were told that the Space Agency would be created only if we were involved in the space station, or, as was reported by the media, did the Government give the people of Montreal the impression they would get the space agency and is it now backtracking on the deal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is just repeating the first question he put yesterday to my colleague, the responsible Minister. He was given a specific answer yesterday, and I can only repeat that answer today.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELIVERY SERVICES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, the Minister stated in the House, and I quote from Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, no postal services have been cut.

Does the Minister mean to tell me, when the people from Ruskin, B.C., Ninga, Manitoba and Rainy River, Ontario, who have lost their services and have to travel many kilometers to get the kind of services they had, that no services have been cut?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over-all the changes that are occurring in the postal service, Canada Post Corporation, are a result of changing demographics, of people moving into the cities from the country and of smaller communities losing their retail outlets and so on.

There are changes in the Post Office, but over-all it is easier now to find a place to buy stamps and obtain postal services at times most convenient to the purchaser. The delivery systems are being improved.

Mr. Penner: Do you believe that?

Mr. Andre: There are independent audits now. A lot of progress is yet to be made. The Post Office was in a terrible mess but the current management is making progress in that regard, although it is not helped by people spreading false stories.

RURAL POSTAL SERVICES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the people in Ruskin, B.C. have to go an extra 32 kilometers to get their services. The people in Rainy River have to go an extra 64 kilometers, and the people in Ninga, Manitoba, have to go an additional 35 kilometers for their service. Over 194 rural post offices have been closed.

Will the Minister restore to the people of rural Canada the postal services to which all Canadians have a right? Please tell this House what the rural services in Canada are all about.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to come to some of the committee meetings at which representatives of the Post Office attend. She ought not to be listening to representatives of the union who are interested in protecting union positions—

Ms. Dewar: They are the facts.

Mr. Andre: —not in servicing the public. If the Member attended some of these meetings, she would find out that in many cases it simply makes no economic sense to carry on the traditional types of services, but replacements have ensured that people are able to get their mail in appropriate time.

Ms. Dewar: They can't buy stamps.

Mr. Andre: They buy the stamps the same place they buy their milk and bread and get their dry cleaning services and so on.

Ms. Dewar: No they can't.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Acting Prime Minister on the question of the space agency. In the Speech from the Throne in 1986 the Government announced it would establish a Canadian space agency to bring together activities which are now dispersed in a variety of agencies and departments. Just a month ago, the Minister of State for Science and Technology was talking about the need to establish a space agency.

Why is the Government through the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Secretary of State now saying that we do not need a space agency when just a month ago the Minister of State for Science and Technology said we did need one and one was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne?

• (1150)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is—how do I put this—exaggerating. The situation, and it is quite—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is only quoting the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If he were only quoting the Speech from the Throne, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not only be right, he would be popular.

The situation with the space agency is quite clear. We are taking a look at the question—

Ms. Copps: Bring back Maureen.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Did you say, "Bring back Maureen"? I will report that.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My apologies, Mr. Speaker. The Government of Canada is considering the participation with the Government of the United States and other countries in a space station. The Hon. Member, because he is very interested in this subject, will know that that is a matter that could, among other things, involve very expensive commitments by Canada and potentially by the United States.

We are assessing the question of our participation in that station, assessing it very carefully. Obviously our decision as to the nature and extent of our space program will have an impact upon the decision as to the necessity for a space agency in Canada.

REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister probably should know that the space agency was to co-ordinate a number of activities such as a mobile satellite system, and the Minister of Communications could perhaps tell him a word or two about that, and a radar satellite. Is the Minister saying that we should forget about these activities as well?

Why is the Government ignoring the Standing Committee report entitled Voyage to the Future which reported that there was essentially unanimous support from witnesses who appeared before the committee for the creation of a space agency? Is it because the Government wants Canada to go back to the future?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I really do believe that I have answered that question.

A question has been raised as to the status and the necessity of a space agency. I have indicated to the Hon. Member as directly as I could at this stage of government discussions the matters we are considering regarding the participation in the United States space centre. That is a complicated matter, and I think the Hon. Member understands that.

With regard to the other elements of Canadian policy to which he made reference, we have made clear announcements of government policy in support of those kinds of ventures. The situation is precisely as I explained it a moment ago, and I would hope that the Hon. Member, with the interest he has shown in science policy, will not seek to create misunderstandings.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—EFFECT ON PROPERTY VALUES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, in response to a question I asked him, he said that property values did not decline as a result of locating supermailboxes on properties. Yet that flies in the face of what the real estate industry is saying, what municipal Governments are saying, what the Ontario Government is saying and certainly what home owners who have those supermailboxes on their front lawns are saying.

Could the Minister tell us why he is the only one who is out of step and the only one who believes that property values do not decline by locating supermailboxes on home owners' properties?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that was the statement made by the Ontario Municipal Board yesterday or the day before. It said that there was no evidence of property values being decreased as a result of supermailboxes. That was a statement made by this independent tribunal.

I quoted earlier today, in answer to a question put by the Member from Cape Breton, an appraisal by independent appraisers who did an appraisal of areas where supermailboxes were located and reached the conclusion there was no evidence whatsoever of any diminution in property values as a result of supermailboxes, which incidentally are not put on people's front lawns, contrary to what the Hon. Member said.

Faced with these independent sources making that statement, I do not see why it is so surprising to the Hon. Member that I should offer them in reply to him.

LOCATING OF A SUPERMAILBOX

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister really believes that these supermailboxes are the greatest thing since sliced bread, why does the Minister not instruct Canada Post to stick one of these in front of his house and see what happens to his property values?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in front of my house is a mailbox, an electric utility box and telephone poles. That comes from living in an urban environment. These objects must be put there to supply the services we require.

The fact that there are now supermailboxes along with electric utilities, fire hydrants and telephone poles does not suddenly cause the value of property to diminish by 50 per cent as the Hon. Member seems to be implying.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—REQUEST FOR EARLY RESOLUTION TO CONFLICT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Treasury Board). Several language teachers in my riding are concerned about the quality of the courses they teach. I am told that Treasury Board wants to increase the number of hours they spend in the classroom. For the teachers this would be unacceptable. It would have a negative impact on their professional performance, since they would only have a few hours left for course preparation.

I would like to know how discussions with Treasury Board are proceeding, and whether the Government is prepared to resolve this dispute very shortly.

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that this is a legal strike situation. There was a settlement reached in September of last year which unfortunately was rejected by the membership. In January of this year there was a majority conciliation report issued which recommended that the settlement reached in September be adopted by the parties without change. We have informed the bargaining agent that we are prepared to sign an agreement on that basis, but there has not been any response from the union to this point.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANSBOUNDARY POLLUTION—COST OF DAMAGE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is connected with the upcoming summit meeting in Washington between the Prime Minister and President Reagan.

In view of the fact that transboundary air pollution coming from the United States is causing continuous damage from millions of tonnes of SO2 coming across the border, damaging our forests and agriculture, our buildings and monuments, our water resources and the like, I would ask the Secretary of State whether he would be willing to direct government Departments and agencies to prepare a bill for the damage Canada is suffering yearly as a result of transboundary pollution.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows that the question of dealing with that transboundary pollution has been a very high priority of this Government and that we are still involved in discussions with the United States about it. We are not optimistic about the nature of those discussions, but we are pursuing them very seriously. The Hon. Member is making a proposal that, to my knowledge, he did not make when he was the Minister responsible.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, mainly because I did not raise the expectations of Canadians, as the Prime Minister of Canada did in 1985, 1986 and 1987, that this matter could be easily resolved on a bilateral basis just because of a special relationship he announced in Quebec City on the occasion of the first summit. There is an element of expectation that this Government has raised—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, given the time.

BILLING FOR DAMAGES OF TRANSBOUNDARY POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State therefore take this matter up with the Prime Minister and prepare a bill for the damages we are suffering as the years go by?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport has certainly never raised anyone's expectations. I take seriously recommendations made by Members of the House and for that reason, I will look at that proposal.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION

FUNDS TO ASSIST NON-PARTICIPATING PRODUCERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister wrote off $750 million of the Western Grain Stabilization deficit last December. That money came directly from the taxpayers and not through the contributory program. It is therefore highly unfair to those producers who did not participate in the program. They have been short-changed by about $164 million.

• (1200)

Will the Minister find the funds to alleviate this unfairness to this small group of grain producers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member reflects on the motivation for doing this he will see we are trying to remove a disincentive to those who are not part of the fund and encourage them to come in without having to worry about how the deficit will be funded. That is the reason we are taking this action. I hope the result will be that more farmers who are not taking advantage of the western grain stabilization fund will become part of that program.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise Hon. Members that because of the time we are proceeding to single questions.

INCOME TAX

FRAUDULENT USE OF T4 SLIPS—PROPOSED SAFEGUARDS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. He will no doubt be aware that six people in the City of Hamilton have been charged as a result of a phoney income tax scam involving fraudulent use of T4 slips which were floating around for anyone to pick up and take advantage of.

I would like to know what system he has put in place to prevent this kind of rip-off of the taxpayers taking place and whether he is aware of this type of scam happening in other parts of the country. Can he tell us whether this ring was just in southern Ontario or had it spread across the country, and what action is he taking to restrict access to T4 slips to prevent a future tax scam?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to restrict access to T4 slips. In fact, in most cases our department is trying to increase access to those slips. I take the Hon. Member's question seriously but in all honestly I will have to take it as notice and give her a more detailed report later.

FISHERIES

REFUSAL OF ACCESS TO 200-MILE-ZONE TO QUEBEC FISHING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, Groupe Purdel Inc. has decided against reopening a large section of its fish plant in Rivière-au-Renard in the Gaspé. According to the company and the Quebec Minister responsible for Fisheries, the decision is due to the fact that Fisheries and Oceans Canada has banned Quebec-based industrial fishing from the 200-mile zone. Could the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans explain to the House why this was done?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member for Gaspé has a very keen interest in this matter. As the Hon. Member is aware, there have been discussions involving both representatives of the various governments involved and the industry, prior to formulating a plan. I may add that I will make a note of the Hon. Member's question and that I intend to discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. If anything positive can be done, it will be done!

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and pursuant to Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an order of the day be designated for Ways and Means Motions Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 35.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-113

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think, after I give a short explanation, you will find the House is prepared to give consent to the putting of this motion.

On Monday, the House passed Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of western Canada. Unfortunately, some Members were unable to participate in the debate since it was what we often call back-up legislation, in this case to Bill C-72. Under the circumstances, the Government is prepared to accommodate those Members of Parliament and arrange for a further debate on the subject of western diversification. Therefore, I am advising the House that we will call Bill C-82, the Lobbyist Registration Act, on Monday. Once the debate is finished on that and the question decided, we will call the special Government order now on the Order Paper pursuant to the following order. I therefore move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, on Monday, March 14, 1988, the House will not adjourn until completion of proceedings on a special Government order, respecting Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other acts; and that any speeches in debate on the special Government order be limited to 20 minutes, with 10 minutes of questions and comments; and that, if such proceedings are not completed before 5 p.m. that day, Private Members' Business will be taken up from 5 to 6 p.m. but the adjournment proceedings will not be taken up that day; and that, any recorded division on the said special Government order be deferred until the calling of Government Orders the next day; and that, in any case, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the normal time of sitting the next day.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Minister. As he indicated, when we moved quite expeditiously the other day in voting unanimously on the official languages Bill and Bill C-113 was called, it is fair to say that the right people were not in the right places at the right moment. Therefore, when the request was made for a recognition of the fact that some Hon. Members, and the number at this point is unknown but I do not expect it to be large, were still interested in making some remarks at second reading, which of course is when we discuss the legislation in principle, the Minister agreed that this would be done. I simply want to say to him on behalf of my colleagues in the NDP that we appreciate his generosity in enabling this debate to be concluded in the way it should be.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties, and the order the Minister read earlier was agreed to and received the consent of our Party. We intend to support this order.

However, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Government whether we can expect the Report of the Striking Committee establishing the membership of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-72 to be tabled very shortly in the House.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I believe we just got it. I think if he checks with the Table he will find that it has been deposited.

Mr. Speaker: I might advise the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) that the Minister has correctly divined the situation and the list is at the Table.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present, on behalf of a number of constituents, a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners believe that the Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and that it now obviously has been compromised. They also believe that the trade deal denies Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermines Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that in the United States.

They feel very strongly that this whole trade deal threatens the fabric of our political and economic sovereignty. Therefore, they now ask that Parliament dissolve in order to allow the people of Canada an opportunity either to accept or reject this trade deal during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House today petitions from over 1,700 citizens of Abbotsford, Clearbrook, and other lower mainland communities in British Columbia. These concerned Canadians call on Parliament to define human life as being created at the moment of conception and ask that this be reflected in a newly created law.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition from Canadian citizens from London and Toronto, Ontario, and other municipalities.

The petitioners state that whereas in February, 1985, the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights; and whereas in October of that same year the subcommittee on equality rights and the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs submitted a report to the House recommending that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas under federal jurisdiction including the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces and in age of consent legislation with regard to sexual orientation or practice; and whereas the Government has yet to introduce significant legislation acting upon these recommendations supported by the Government, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament act to implement the recommendations contained in the report as specified above with all due haste and speed.

Order Paper Questions

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition from many residents of Canada on the subject of the Government's legislation in Bill C-55 which these citizens believe threatens Canada's traditional commitment to the assistance of refugees.

They point out that refugees reaching our border will be turned away without having their claims heard on the merits. They point out that the standing committee of Parliament did propose a procedure for refugees which would have been both quick and fair and which has received the support of all the public groups in Canada which have commented on it, including the churches and the Bar Association.

They therefore call upon Parliament to ensure that Bill C-55 will be withdrawn and that legislation will be substituted for it which involves the principles of fair, quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the immigration commission, universal access to these hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

LOW LEVEL FLIGHTS OVER GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are concerned that the flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador, is disrupting the way of life of many of the native people there who prefer hunting, fishing, tourism, and mining as a means of earning a living to employment on the base.

The petition also points out that this flight training to train pilots to fly under radar into eastern Europe is a provocative, aggressive, war-fighting action which tends to endanger world peace. They ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all the low-level flight training at Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Spadina with regard to the trade deal negotiated between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States which, they point out, would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural, and political independence and would cause the loss of jobs in many sectors.

Therefore, they request Parliament to obtain a clear mandate from the Canadian people through a national debate on the alternatives available to Canada and that this debate result in a national election prior to the finalizing of such an agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 245 and 255.

[Text]

RCMP MISSING CHILDREN REGISTRY

Question No. 245—Mr. Howie:

What federal facilities or procedures are available to assist in the search for missing children?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): The RCMP Missing Children Registry (MCR) in Ottawa was established by the federal Government to assist all police departments in recovering missing children. Since July 1986, it has ensured that missing children reports from across Canada are entered immediately into the Canadian Police Information Computer (CPIC). The Registry offers the following services:

(i) co-ordinates inquiries from small Canadian police departments regarding abductions;

(ii) provides an interface with all Canadian police agencies and private organizations concerned with missing children, such as Child Find, Victims of Violence, and the Tania Murrell Society;

(iii) acts as a clearing house for Canada in connection with missing children cases when dealing with U.S. and international police departments, state clearing houses, and organizations such as the U.S. National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children;

(iv) searches Registry files in order to associate unidentified bodies with any missing children reports.

The MCR is also involved in developing search techniques. A representative of the MCR participated in the work of an RCMP committee which has developed a standard technique for urban and rural searches for missing children.

The Report of that committee, entitled Police Procedures for Ground Searches and Rescue for Lost and Missing Persons, has been approved by the Canadian police community and is now undergoing final editing prior to publication and distribution to Canadian police departments.

CBC—BID FOR ALL-NEWS BROADCAST LICENCE

Question No. 255—Mr. Dorin:

1. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation engage the services of a paid consultant, adviser or lobbyist, either an individual or a firm, in the course of preparing and promoting its bid for an all-news broadcast licence to the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission and, if so, what was the total cost involved?

2. Did a representative of the (a) Department of Communications (b) Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission meet with a representative of (i) the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (ii) Allarcom

Limited for the purpose of reviewing or discussing that organization's application for an all-news broadcast license?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): In reply to the above-mentioned question, I have been informed as follows:

1. The CBC did not hire any lobbyist in the course of preparing its bid for an all-news broadcast licence to the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. The Corporation did hire some consultants to help prepare its application. With respect to the cost of these consulting services, it has not been customary for Parliament to require the Corporation to provide details of its internal management and administration such as payments made for professional services. The background to this custom is explained in the reply to question No. 2,530 answered November 6, 1975.

2. (a) (i) No, (ii) no, (b) (i) no, (ii) On March 20, 1987, two senior staff of the CRTC (Colin Nelson and Patrick Tourigny) met with Yves Mayrand of Allarcom, at the latter's request, to discuss Allarcom's intention to file an application for a news and information specialty programming service.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1988-89

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-109, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in resuming my intervention in this debate I would like to bring to your attention the fact that the Department of the Environment is being treated as the Cinderella of Departments of the Government. The amount being allocated to this Department this year, in terms of percentage, is less than half of the percentage increase of the over-all Budget for the fiscal year 1988-89.

As though this were not bad enough, upon considering what has happened to that Department since 1984 you find that the loss of purchasing power of the Department of the Environment as a result of inflation is in the range of 17 per cent. Every pensioner in this country and everyone who lives on a fixed income knows what it means to lose ground to inflation.

This is exactly what is happening to the Department of the Environment despite the fact that in poll after poll Canadians are indicating that the condition of the environment is an issue to which they attribute one of the highest priorities.

As a result of this reduction of 17 per cent in purchasing power, the Department of the Environment has lost 336 scientists, technicians, and support people. How can this Department perform the role of vigilance, protection, advocacy and protection of the environment when it is not only not holding its own with regard to inflation but is, year after year, losing ground? That escapes the ability to understand of Members on this side of the House.

What is worse is the rhetoric of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) who is trying to convince Canadians to the contrary, as is proven by the letter he wrote to the Toronto Star to which I made reference earlier in this debate. In a desperate attempt to create an impression that things are fine with regard to the budget of that Department, the Minister made reference to $106 million for the establishment of South Moresby over the next 10 years. That is a good development, but it has nothing to do with the capacity of the Environment Department to function this year.

In another desperate attempt to create a smoke and mirrors effect he mentions a $150 million allocation to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. That $150 million is in 1982 dollars and there is a very good reason for that. It has been ear-marked since 1982 to be made available to non-ferrous smelters when they proceed with the modernization of those plants in order to introduce anti-pollution equipment. It is a situation in which the Minister is invoking figures from other Departments to shore up the abysmal picture that is emerging for Environment Canada.

While I welcome a substantial increase, such as those for Agriculture and other Departments, it hurts to see this Department being treated like Cinderella, with an increase of 3.6 per cent in this year. At the same time, we must listen to the rhetoric of the Government and the Minister of the Environment, who claims the contrary. Not only does it hurt, it is offensive and disregards the priorities which Canadians want the Government to give to the environment.

We are on the eve of another summit in Washington next month between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan, where the question of acid rain will be raised again. The summit in Quebec City took place in 1985. It was an expensive event at which the Prime Minister displayed his skills as a tenor. I do not know whether that was good enough to convince President Reagan that Canadians mean business about the matter of transboundary pollution, because we are on the eve of the fourth summit and the situation has not changed, unfortunately. We were hoping that the Prime Minister's claim of a special relationship with President Reagan would achieve our goal of a treaty on acid rain pollution abatement.

At least four million tonnes of sulphur dioxide crosses the Canadian-American border each year. That transboundary pollution is damaging our waters, our forests, our agriculture, fish spawning grounds and the fisheries in general. It is also damaging our building structures and monuments. It is damaging human health. The total yearly damage runs into the millions of dollars.

Having listened to the invocations and incantations, and having watched the smoke and mirror performances over the last three years, on the eve of the fourth summit it becomes imperative in this debate to impress upon the Government the need to muster the courage and present a bill for damages to President Reagan when they meet again in April.

Considering the expectations that were raised by the Prime Minister in 1985, this matter can no longer be allowed to drag. Expectations were raised with the Canadian public in this very Chamber a year ago when President Reagan was here. When he left Ottawa that day the Prime Minister proclaimed the event as a breakthrough and a success in terms of acid rain reduction. Since April of last year, after proclaiming there had been a breakthrough, nothing has happened. There has not been a reduction of one ounce in the tonnage of sulphur dioxide that crosses the border between Canada and the United States. The damage is the same, and it continues. Our resources are facing even more damage as a result of this.

Canada has embarked on a program to cut our pollution. The Americans who are downwind from us will benefit from our program. The transboundary pollution from Canada into the United States will be reduced by half between now and 1994. The least we can expect is reciprocity. Since we are not getting this reciprocity under the present Government and the Reagan regime, our only alternative is to present a bill for damages being caused to the Canadian economy, human health and Canadian resources as a whole.

We also want to consider the over-all picture in this debate. While the Government continues to increase taxes, it has not lowered the public debt as it promised to do in the 1984 campaign. The taxes, particularly the invisible federal sales tax, have been increased methodically year by year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired. I gave him an extra few minutes. Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, we are in fact facing this morning a situation that is something of a paradox concerning the Bill now before us, because the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) boasted during Question Period of this Conservative Government's prowess in the area of employment. We now find ourselves with a proposal to give the Government authority to borrow an extra $25 billion in order to operate till the end of the year.

To dare claim, as my colleague for La Prairie did, that the employment situation is almost exclusively due to this Government's prowess, is showing misplaced boastfulness, Mr. Speaker, and more still this is misleading Canadians because all the previous governments, including the short-lived conservative ones, always have been at the mercy of the global economic situation.

When the global economic situation was good, jobs were created. But when we are going through a period of recession, global recession, then we have unemployment. And if at this time the Government can show pride, it is not necessarily because of its prowess but rather because of a global economy that is totally favourable and that results in a strong economy, an economy that can create jobs, an economy that normally should be allowing the Government to manage public finance without having to ask for a $25 billion borrowing authority, as we have now.

Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have an opportunity to rise on this borrowing authority requested by the Government, and as my colleague for Trinity (Mrs. Nicholson) mentioned earlier, this Bill was tabled before the Government came up with its Estimates. As she said this morning, even after examining them I fail to understand why, at a time when the international economy and our domestic economy are in excellent shape, the Government is obliged to ask for an additional $25 billion to be able to run this country.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of bragging about the fact that 1,200,000 jobs have been created since 1984. Normally, those jobs would generate additional revenue for the Government, through taxes. So I fail to understand why the Government wants to maintain a borrowing authority of $25 billion when its revenues are increasing, unless its expenditures are increasing at a tremendous rate as well, since the deficit is going down far less than the Minister of Finance said it would when he tabled his forecasts in previous years.

Mr. Speaker, when I spoke the first time, I said that this Bill was a perfect example of the poor management the Conservative Government has been inflicting on Canadians during the past four years.

I would also like to express my grave concern about the precarious situation in which our youth finds itself, and about the many problems connected with regional disparity in Canada.

As we all know, if the Bill is passed, the Government will be able to increase the national debt by $25.3 billion in the course of the financial year starting on April 1. Twenty five billion may not sound like much, just another loan added to a national debt that is already far too high. At the end of this financial year our national debt will total nearly $3 billion. This works out to a little over $12,000 per Canadian, per year. That is a tremendous burden, Mr. Speaker. It is a serious problem, when we consider that despite the fact that the economy is in very good shape, the Conservative Government keeps increasing our debt.

I have said it before, Mr. Speaker, and I say it again: As a Canadian citizen, I am very concerned about the fact that this Government has failed to take advantage of the excellent economic situation this country has enjoyed in the past four years. Actually, $25.3 billion is far too much for a Government that has undermined the confidence of Canadians by failing to keep its promises. It is an incredible amount of money for a Minister of Finance who in his last Budget made it clear he was totally unqualified to manage the money of Canadian taxpayers. It is incredible, when we consider that with all the money it has borrowed and collected in the form of taxes, and despite the excellent state of the economy, the Conservative Goverment still has nothing to offer the poorest and neediest among us, and especially our youth.

The times we live in demand strong intervention by the federal Government in a number of areas, such as guaranteed income, education and training, quality of life and housing. This Government tends to neglect these serious issues and remains supremely indifferent to the legitimate concerns of Canadian men and women who have to cope with these problems.

Poverty lies at the heart of most of Canada's social problems, including poor health, crime, unsanitary accommodation, family violence and mental illness. The Government cannot continue to maintain that improving the economy will make it possible to bridge the gap between rich and poor. The poor are not necessarily unemployed. It is because of their jobs pay such low wages that some workers are poor. It is wrong to suggest that society helps everyone when the heads of 55 per cent of poor families in Canada have a paying job.

Families are hit especially hard by poverty. However, the measures contained in the last Budgets and the tax reform have challenged the principle that Governments agree to compensate parents for the costs they incur in raising their children. This Government has partially de-indexed family allowances, lowered the ceiling for elegibility to the child tax credit and eliminated the child exemption.

In another area, the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless has gone by without the Government really dealing with this issue.

In 1986, over 100,000 Canadians were homeless at one time or another. In 1987, the situation did not improve and it may even have worsened. It is estimated that 750,000 more families had an urgent need or decent or affordable housing. In the area of housing, the Conservative Governement has constantly imposed enormous budgetary restrictions, limited elegibility to subsidized housing, thus victimizing low and middle income families, and delegated its responsabilities to the provinces.

Throughout Canada, the streets, the water mains and the bridges are cracking up and becoming corroded and distorted because they are put to a greater use than previously and less maintenance is being done on them. While the Federation of Canadian Municipalities is requesting new federal initiatives to provide part of the $15 billion investment necessary to modernize municipal services, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has stated that municipalities should increase the water rates paid by consumers to repair the water supply system.

As a former mayor, Mr. Speaker, I can say that I intend to move a motion in the near future to ask for a national water purification program and a municipal toxic waste elimination program to provide assistance to the municipalities, which, because of weak federal or provincial legislation, are not necessarily responsible for all the pollution, caused, even though this unfortunately comes under their jurisdiction at the present time.

Also, we had to wait nearly two years following the cancellation of the Manpower Adjustment Program before the Government introduced its Older Worker Adjustment Program. In 1982, 4.8 per cent of the unemployed had been without jobs for over a year. In late 1987, this proportion had increased to nearly 20 per cent, which represents about 200,000 Canadians. On the other hand, 158,000 people had been looking for jobs for a period ranging from 27 to 52 weeks. To the number of those who are chronically unemployed, we must add the 400,000 people who are considered fringe workers. At the end of 1987, there were in Canada 55,000 disillusioned unemployed workers who had stopped looking for jobs, feeling that their chances of finding jobs were pratically non-existent. Faced with this serious problem, the Tory Government continued just the same to reduce the funds allocated for the Formal Training Program, while subsidizing jobs in the private sector.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brags about the results his Government has achieved with job creation, he overlooks the fact that these jobs are unequally distributed among the provinces, between men and women and among the various age groups. Data collected by Statistics Canada reveal the following discrepancies: Ontario, with 38 per cent of the total labour force in Canada, had bagged 45 per cent of all the jobs created in Canada in 1987. Which means that 62 per cent of the manpower in Canada had to be satisfied with the remaining 55 per cent of the new jobs. While men lay claim to 61 per cent or the majority of all full-time jobs, women hold 71 per cent or most part-time jobs. Part-time workers are paid a lower average hourly salary, about equal to 79 per cent of the salary paid to full-time employees, and often receive no social benefits.

In December 1987, the unemployment rate for our labor force generally was 8.1 per cent, but it was 8.6 per cent among women and only 7.7 per cent among men. For the same month, the unemployment rate among people between 15 and 19 years of age was 13.5 per cent.

In spite of this evidence, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance continues to describe Canada as a country of affluent men and women driving Le Baron cars and whose portfolios withstood quite well the crash of last Fall. In short, the Minister of Finance feels that everything is fine and dandy in Canada.

He does not seem to realize what it means to be poor in Canada. To be poor in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is to be put at an unfair disadvantage when it comes to housing, education and training, daycare and legal aid services, credit and health care.

Many of the Canadian poor live on welfare. Many others are small-wage earners. The majority of single seniors and single families headed by women have an income that is hundreds and often thousands of dollars below the poverty line. The economic difficulties of this decade have swelled the ranks of the poor and hardened society's reaction to that fact of everyday life. Poverty affects people of all ages, but the saddest thing about existing programs for fighting poverty is that 20 per cent of Canadian children live in an underprivileged environment.

In 1986, Mr. Speaker, 3.7 million Canadians, or 14.9 per cent of the population, lived below the poverty line. Last year, more than 34 per cent of single persons were poor. That amounts to 982,000 Canadians. More than a million children below 16, that is 1,016,000 children, live in poverty. Nearly 57 per cent of the poor in Canada are women, although women account for only 51 per cent of the population. And more than half, or 56 per cent, of single families headed by women are poor.

The number of Canadians with an income below the poverty line rose from 3,475,000 in 1980 to 4,240,000 in 1984. The number has decreased since then, but the 1986 figures were still higher than those of 1980, before the recession, Mr. Speaker.

In 1986, the total income of the poorest 20 per cent of Canadians was only 4.7 per cent of the over all income of the Canadian population. By contrast, the richest 20 per cent had 43 per cent of the over all income, nine times the income of the poorest group.

In spite of these alarming facts, Mr. Speaker, this Government brags so loudly about the people who are benefiting from the improved economic situation that it cannot hear the complaints of those who benefit not at all or very little from it. As a Liberal concerned for the welfare of all Canadians, I reject a plan which is supportive of the well-to-do privileged classes while the poorest and neediest suffer.

The Government still brags about its job creation figures. While the situation is improving, which is quite normal after six years of recovery, there are still over one million unemployed in Canada, but the Government does not seem to care. It regularly cuts back its job creation programs on the assumption that our economy is doing so well that people should be able to find a job without Government assistance. As I have already said, this might be true in certain regions, but it is certainly not the case everywhere in Canada, and it is certainly not the case for young people, whose unemployment rate is still twice as high as the national average.

Mr. Speaker, if the Bill now before the House was a guarantee that the Government will create jobs for young people, that it will create or implement programs or projects to reduce poverty in Canada, that part of these amounts will be used to improve the quality of life for all Canadians, and more particularly for all young people in Canada, then, Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to voting for this Bill. However, as we are aware of the wasteful spending which occurs during certain trips and as we know that these $25 billion could be used for purposes which will not benefit all Canadians, we cannot agree to provide this Government with the power to borrow $25 billion more.

• (1240)

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to participate in the debate. The Government is asking us to approve its borrowing measure of more than $25 billion. I believe that that is the largest sum that any Government has ever asked Parliament's permission to borrow. Given the type of deficits accumulated over the years, one can understand that the sum that the Government needs to borrow has progressively increased year after year.

I wish to place on the record, despite some of the statements made by both Conservative and Liberal Party Members, that New Democrats are concerned about the deficit.

Historically, in my own Province of Saskatchewan when a CCF Government was elected in 1944, essentially the province was broke. Yet over the years we were able to bring the economy of the province back up, implement a program of rural electrification, which cost a fair amount of money for Saskatchewan, introduce a system of regional and local hospitals and schools and a road system throughout that huge province.

That was done without leaving large accumulated debts. One of the things that we were proud of in Saskatchewan was that we consistently ran surpluses if not balanced budgets. The same was true during the period 1971 to 1982 when the New Democratic Party formed the Government in Saskatchewan. In those years we ran balanced budgets. It took the election of a Conservative Government in Saskatchewan in 1982 to introduce deficits into Saskatchewan. At the present time, the people of Saskatchewan are burdened with a horrendous debt and an accumulated deficit of several billions of dollars that will take several hundreds of years into the future to pay off.

In looking at the federal debt, one realizes that paying the interest on the debt is one of the largest, if not the largest expenditure of government. There is certainly nothing socialist about paying several million dollars every year on the interest on what the Government owes. As New Democrats we are committed to seeing that the deficit is wiped off the books as quickly as possible and as humanely as possible.

It is interesting to note that historically it seems that during periods of Conservative Governments the debt seems to increase. That is certainly true in the United States. Under President Reagan the United States has had the largest deficit in its history. The same can be said of the Government of Margaret Thatcher. Certainly, in the Province of Saskatchewan there has been a debt increase since the Conservatives were elected. One becomes puzzled why this is so. After all, Conservative Governments are noted for cut-backs in government service. The philosophy of the Conservative Government is that government should not play an active role in the society, and Conservative Governments talk in terms of fiscal responsibility and Government living within its means. Indeed, under Conservative Governments generally there is a decrease in government expenditures. Yet the deficit increases. Why?

I think that the answer can be found in the fact that generally under Conservative Governments one finds tax breaks particularly for the wealthy, and that the revenue source for Government decreases under Tory Governments. That is true in the United States, it is true in Great Britain under the Thatcher Government, it certainly was true in Saskatchewan whom the Government of Premier Grant Devine dramatically decreased the taxes that the oil industry had been paying into the coffers of Saskatchewan, and I think it is also true in Canada.

Despite the tax reform introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he still admitted in his papers when he introduced tax reform that there will be some 60,000 well-to-do profitable corporations that will still not pay one cent of tax. Among the 60,000 will be found some smaller companies, but also some of the larger companies. Is it any wonder that there is this large accumulated deficit in Canada when one considers that, in 1983, a teller with the Royal Bank of Canada paid more in taxes than did the Royal Bank of Canada? Although the Royal Bank of Canada, in 1983, had over $360 million in profits, it did not pay one cent in taxes. In fact, it received a tax credit of some $20 million. The Government felt that it was not profitable enough, so it gave the bank a tax credit of some $20 million.

Perhaps one should not single out the Royal Bank of Canada because it certainly was not the only one. Most other banks did not pay a cent in tax. Most trust companies did not pay a cent in tax. Certainly none of the insurance companies with billions of dollars in profits paid a cent in tax. No wonder we have a deficit like the one we have.

Some folk will say that the reason for the large deficit is that we have been living beyond our means or that the social programs in Canada are too rich. Tory spokespersons like to indicate that the Government has been handing out money to the poor, spending too much money on education, health, housing, and other social programs, and that is why we have a deficit. However, when we look at what we in Canada spend as a percentage of our gross domestic product on social programs, compared with other industrialized nations in the world, we find that we are the second lowest. We spend less on things like housing, education, maternity care, job creation, pensions, unemployment insurance, and so forth than Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Great Britain, France, and Italy. Countries that have fewer resources than we have, countries that have much larger populations in much smaller areas, countries that have a much older population, all spend a greater amount on social programs as a percentage of gross domestic product than we do in Canada.

For me to hear people say that we are living beyond our means in Canada is something that I just cannot accept. I cannot accept that when I see in my home City of Regina young children going hungry. Here in the bread-basket of the world we have young kids going hungry. In our largest cities we see the homeless, people who cannot afford to put a decent roof over their heads because they do not have the income. We see line-ups at food banks from coast to coast. Surely to say that we are living beyond our means is really to crack a cruel joke.

The fact of the matter is that we are not living beyond our means. There is real poverty in the country. In a country so blessed with richness and wealth there are over 4 million people who are living below the poverty line, who are living in poverty. For Conservative spokespersons to claim that we are living beyond our means is nothing but propaganda. It is not true; it is not true at all.

Essentially we heard from the Minister of Finance as he presented his Budget and as he justified his borrowing authority Bill, that under the leadership of the Conservative Government the economy of Canada is doing quite well. Of course it is all relative. Indeed there are fewer people who are unemployed today than there were in 1984. That is very true. However, we must not forget that, compared with the United States, for example, our unemployment is still quite high, unacceptably high.

Let us step back one second. When inflation was out of control in the late 1970s or early 1980s, industrialized countries decided in a joint effort to wrestle inflation to the ground. They did it by increasing the interest rate, in essence by taking the steam out of the economy and forcing the western economy into a recession. Well, it certainly brought down the inflation rate. Right now it is running at some 4 per cent, but this was done at the price of an economic slow-down and at the price of millions of men and women in the western world losing their jobs, being thrown on the heap of unemployed. It was particularly severe for working Canadian men and women.

Our unemployment rate was one of the highest of western industrialized countries. The recovery from the recession in Canada was slower than other industrialized countries. When the Conservatives came to power in 1984 we still had an unduly high unemployment rate. The recovery from the recession had been slower in Canada, in part because of the type of economy we have. A large part of our economy depends upon the export of basic raw materials. When there is an economic recovery, the suppliers of raw materials are the countries that experience the recovery as being slower than in other more industrialized countries. It took a while for the recovery in western economies to be felt in Canada.

In a sense the Conservatives were lucky that they were elected in a period when the recovery started to occur. Yes, unemployment has declined dramatically in Canada. The Minister of Finance is happy to point out that it has declined more rapidly in Canada than in other industrialized countries. However, one begins to wonder whether or not it was as a result of the actions of the Government. It might very well be that the Conservatives were lucky to be elected in a period when the recovery was occurring.

We also wonder how a Government, which does not believe in becoming involved in the economy and which has a basic philosophy of laissez-faire, could take credit for the economic recovery. In fact, the Minister stated that in more or less those terms when he appeared before the finance committee last week. He said: "We cannot really take credit for this; it is the industry out there that has created the jobs".

One could wonder what sort of economic situation we would be in, had we had a Government which believed that the public sector had a role to play and that indeed we could devise economic strategies to create jobs. In fact, one could wonder how much better off Canadians would be, particularly in regions where we still have 10 per cent, 15 per cent, and 20 per cent unemployment, if we had a Government which believed that the public sector had a role to play and had some economic strategy to make certain that economic recovery occurred in all regions of the country.

We have asked the Government, as part of an initiative to help create more jobs, to lower the interest rate by 1 or 2 per cent. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) calls us irresponsible. In fact, in committee the other day, the Minister of Finance told my colleague that what we were saying was garbage. The funny thing is that when the Minister of Finance was in opposition, he was also calling for the Government to lower the interest rate. It must have been garbage back then as well. It is amazing how the Liberals and Tories change their tune when they cross from one side of the floor to the other. When the Tories were in opposition, they were calling for a lower interest rate. Now that they are in government, they say they cannot do it. When the Liberals were in power, they said they could not lower the interest rate, but now that they are in opposition they are, in turn, calling for a lower interest rate. It is amazing how the Liberals and Tories flip back and forth on the question. We suggest that we can lower the interest rate by 1 or 2 per cent without causing undue inflationary pressure.

The Minister of Finance says that inflation at 4 per cent is unacceptable. I agree with him. But it is not the interest rate that is keeping inflation at 4 per cent, it is the action of the very Government. The Government has increased taxes, increased public transportation costs, fuel, oil and gas taxes. We have seen property tax increase. Tuition fees for post-secondary education, tobacco and alcohol taxes and electricity costs have all increased. The present Government has also introduced a 10 per cent telecommunications tax. These tax increases, many of them imposed by the federal Government, some of them by the provinces and local municipalities because of the cut-backs in transfer payments, have resulted in prices going up and an inflation rate of 4 per cent. It is not because of low interest rates, nor is it because workers are demanding higher wages. In fact, the wage level has been below the inflationary level. Those are not the targets anymore. The reasons for high inflation are the revenue and tax grabs by the federal Government.

Yes, we can have a lower interest rate. Yes, the cost of production can be lower in Canada so that we can be competitive with our trading partners, who pay lower interest costs as a cost of their production. Unfortunately, we have a government that had its head in the sand and is not providing the economic type of leadership that Canada surely deserves. Canada deserves economic leadership. The poor in this country deserve some leadership, and they have not received it from this Government.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak on the Government's Bill C-109, the Bill in which the Government asks for the authority to borrow $25.3 billion, almost the amount of the deficit. That is what the Government is borrowing. It is necessary for us to give some attention to what the Government may do with the money and how it will use what it gets from the taxpayers.

There is the old principle that you should look at what a person does rather than what he says. The same applies to government. How the Government spends the taxpayers' money demonstrates where its priorities really are. That is what we have to examine in this debate about borrowing $25.3 billion.

The Budget that proceeded this borrowing Bill was fairly skimpy on information. There was a great deal of self congratulation in it, pages and pages of glowing expensively printed remarks about what a fine Government it is. There was much less information than usual about the details of the Government's plans and priorities. However, there is some information on which I want to focus, particularly in two areas. They present a very striking contrast and they show where the priorities of the Government really are. The first area is defence in the general sense and, in particular, the nuclear powered attack submarines.

This year the Government plans to spend $23 million simply on preparation, making the plans and so on, to buy these attack submarines. The total cost of the submarines will be somewhere between $7 billion and $15 billion. Some estimates are higher. The Government used to have a lower estimate, but it got laughed out of that. The $7 billion to $15 billion range depends on whether we look at the bare bones submarines themselves or whether we include the support facilities and the necessary base.

The other area I want to look at is child care. Some of the money from this borrowing Bill will be spent on the Government's child care plans. The plans are to spend about $5.4 billion over seven years on child care. At first, $5.4 billion sounds generous. It sounds almost like the cost of three or four submarines. We have to look closer. The Government's plan appears to be comprehensive on the surface, and there is a significant amount of money involved. The Government will spend $2.3 billion over this seven years on tax breaks for parents with children. The Government will spend $3 billion for capital and operating costs for child care centres and $100 million for special initiatives for research and pilot projects among special groups.

One thing which is a matter of common experience is that tax programs are generally the least effective way of creating public programs because it gives the Government very little power to direct where the money that comes from tax breaks will be spent. In other words, spending what are called tax expenditures. In this case, the tax expenditures are particularly hypocritical. The Government, at the same time as it undertakes to spend this money on day care through tax breaks, will be cutting family benefits. By 1991 these family benefit cuts will have taken $1.5 billion out of the pockets of families.

Let us take a closer look at both tax breaks. Together they will amount to a total of $2.4 billion. If this money were used to create new child care spaces, an additional 170,000 Canadian children would have spaces. That is not the way it is going to be done. The tax programs mean that there will be a refundable child tax credit with a maximum of $200 a year per child. That is not enough to pay for even informal non-market, non-receipted child care. It is a drop in the bucket compared to the cost of child care these days. It is not enough to enable a couple to make the decision to forego the income from one of them working so that that he or she can stay home to take care of a child or children. It offers a little extra fuel to the so-called underground market, whatever kind of unreceipted day care may be offered on a very informal basis, with no assurance of quality for the parents and no assurance of quality for the kids, but the parents are forced to take it because that is all there is. It is called choice, but it is a situation of no choice.

Second, the doubling of the child care expense deduction for receipted child care sounds generous, but in reality, on the basis of past experience only a minority, the well-to-do minority of families, can benefit from this amount. In 1984 only 15 per cent of families could afford to save money this way. It does not work for the big majority of the population. The average family could only take advantage of one-half of the deduction that is being provided, one that will give, of course, full benefit to the wealthier families. This is another way of rewarding those who already have much more income than most people in this country.

The next important area in this program is the capital and operating grants. The system the Government has proposed has led some day care people to call it a child care limitation plan. In the past, under Canada Assistance, there was no ceiling set, no cap set on how much could be done by the shared programs in which the Government participated to 50 per cent. But now there is a cap set and the government objective is to create 200,000 spaces during the next seven years. That is a slower rate, a far slower rate than the rate at which they were created during the years since 1974. In other words, there will be a slowdown in the creation of new spaces for child care; that is, for licensed, receiptable, quality child care. Furthermore, by the end of the seven years, the operating funds provided by the Government will have been reduced to less than $2 per child per day.

What will we have at the end of seven years for this program? We will not have this Government, of course, but if this program continues, what will we have at the end of seven years? There will be two million children—this is the Government's figure—still without access to licensed day care spaces. There will be no action on the kind of maternal or parental leave provisions that might make home care a reality. There will be an expensive tax deduction and credit program that helps rich families more than ordinary families, and a program that fails to provide real choices or real assistance to the majority of families. In short, it is a typical Tory program that helps the well-to-do with the tax money that comes at the expense of ordinary Canadians, a program that fails to deliver its promises.

I would like to direct attention to the Minister of National Defence's nuclear-attack subs. This is a Budget which involves spending $23 million this year for the preliminary planning work, the project-definition phase, but the rumours are that that has to be pushed this year because DND is desperately trying to get the contracts firmly in place before the Tory Government is defeated in the next election. The original price tag for the total project was said to be $5 billion. That caused great laughter throughout Canada and throughout the western world since, obviously, that was more like half price for 10 to 12 subs.

The Government has discovered that the subs in fact need shore bases. It appears that it left that out. Shore bases cost money. So the total project cost now, according to independent critics which the Government does not answer in any detail, is somewhere between $10 billion and $15 billion. Those are the costs.

We know that the Government's child care program is not going to work. The question is, will the subs work. The question is what will they do. Well, they will travel under the ice. That is quite true. They will travel under the ice. The question then is, what for. What work will they do when they have travelled under the ice?

The Minister's original rationale was, he said, to protect our sovereignty in northern waters and to protect us against the supposed Soviet cruise missile attack. Well, as Professor James Eayers who has studied this matter for many years said, and I quote:

> It is the most bizarre decision in Canadian weapons policy since the premier of British Columbia bought two submarines originally built in Seattle for Chile.

That fantastic decision was made during World War I. It was supposed to protect British Columbia coastal fishing from raids by German ships, Germany being on the other side of the Atlantic.

Well, this is the World War III equivalent, I guess, by our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), of the folly of World War I. The decision that was made in World War I was to protect the citizens of British Columbia from a non-existent threat. But there at least was then a real war, and it was hot. Today's decision takes place in the midst of a war that is real, but cold. It is real because people like the Minister of National Defence work very hard at keeping it going.

Canada has the doubtful distinction of having a Defence Minister who is more of a hawk than Ronald Reagan, and is insisting on Canadian subs which neither NATO nor the United States have asked for. Granted, if we offered to donate them to Lord Carrington, he would say thank you, but this was never considered a necessary part of defence.

The estimate of the Soviet forces and the Soviet threat in the White Paper are even more exaggerated than the estimates in the Pentagon's propaganda. President Reagan on the one hand is willing to discuss with the Russians the possibility of limited cuts to nuclear weapons in the intermediate-range and long-range departments, but the Defence Minister will have nothing to do with discussion of arms reductions with the Russians. He is not even willing to begin seriously discussing nuclear weapons free reduction or exclusion or limitation in the zone of the Arctic.

He should recall by his reading what was said by a well-known leader of defence, Sir Winston Churchill, some years ago. It is always better to jaw-jaw than to war-war. Even Churchill, though he was a good leader in war, preferred to negotiate where there was an opportunity to do that. We have a Defence Minister who would rather spend, spend than negotiate. In fact, he would rather spend, spend than have an arms reduction.

His spending will increase the chance of war. These attack subs, whether they are nuclear or otherwise, do not have a genuine defensive role for Canada. The Arctic waters of Canada are not and will not be the forward staging areas for some supposed Soviet attack. They are not suitable. They are narrow, they are shallow, they are ice clogged and most submarine-launched cruise missiles such as might be feared from those subs do not have the range to hit American targets from the Canadian Arctic. The Russian ballistic-missile submarines do not have to come near Canadian waters to launch their missiles. They can do it more conveniently from the Atlantic or the Pacific.

Using these subs for coastal defence does not make much sense. How does a sub warn off surface ships as effectively as a frigate can? It just does not make sense. But what may be the Government's logic is something far more dangerous than that to peace.

On February 3, Vice Admiral John Anderson of the Canadian navy testified before the House of Commons defence committee. He told the committee that in times of heightened tension, Canadian nuclear attack submarines might be sent to attack Soviet strategic submarines. That is about as dangerous a strategy as can be imagined. It is part of the United States navy doctrine, the so-called forward maritime strategy. What it means is that the United States, or in this case the United States and Canada, or by a trade off, the United States and Canada together, would send large numbers of nuclear submarines and aircraft carriers into the Soviet northern waters at the first hint of any crisis. Their mission would be to sink Soviet strategic submarines in the Barents Sea as soon as there was any outbreak or skirmish of conventional war. In other words, as soon as there may be a war anywhere with conventional weapons, we might have Canada with the United States initiating a nuclear war, which most Governments and experts, both in our country and elsewhere, have admitted would not allow survivors. In other words, a nuclear war is not a war in the conventional sense that there is a winner and a loser. It is an exchange of weapons with the result that all would be losers. This would be the result of the American forward maritime strategy, which is the only logical use for the proposed Canadian nuclear submarines.

That strategy is a most dangerous military proposal, probably the most dangerous the Reagan Government has prepared, and we should not be going along with it. It makes war more likely, not less likely.

We have to look at what the Government does with our money, not what it says, when we consider lending it the money. It announced a day care program that would leave hundreds of thousands of Canadian children without day care. If, as the NDP suggests, all the money in this program had been used to create new spaces, we estimate that at least 170,000 more spaces would have been created over the life of the program. Instead, the Government spends the money we need for child care on nuclear attack submarines. Those submarines make nuclear war and the end of the human race much more likely. This is a very poor Budget and a very poor reason for borrowing $25.3 billion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to what the Hon. Member was saying about submarines. I think it was inadvertence that caused him to put his adjectives the way he did in the final sentences of his speech when he suggested that nuclear attack submarines bring nuclear war closer. Can the Hon. Member give the House his understanding of the nuclear nature of the proposed Canadian submarines? Does he understand them to be nuclear armed or nuclear powered, and in what way would the fact of their nuclear power likely lead to nuclear war?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Canadian Government has proposed that these submarines could replace American submarines to make the American submarines available for attack on the Russian submarines. It is also clear that a plan for armament of the Canadian submarines may be developed or revised once the proposal is under way.

The nuclear component of the subs is nuclear power, not nuclear missiles or any of those things used in American, British and Soviet submarines. However, those submarines are described as attack submarines, therefore their target is clearly Soviet submarines.

The point at which I say it increases the risk of war is that if there is some little skirmish and the Soviet Government knows that Canadian submarines, either by replacing American submarines or by attacking themselves, may destroy the Soviet submarines, it may very well act on the principle of: Use them or lose them. It might be prompted to initiate nuclear war in order not to be wiped out by a first strike of NATO forces. That is why that kind of provocative armament makes nuclear war more likely and peace less likely.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few remarks on the Government request to borrow some $25 billion. I want to suggest that the Government's priorities, as revealed in the Budget tabled last month, are wrong. The Budget essentially says to Canadians who are unemployed or having a very difficult time making ends meet that, "I'm all right, Jack". That just is not good enough.

It boasts about bringing unemployment down. We heard more boasts about that this morning. Certainly we on this side of the House are pleased to see any reduction in unemployment. However, on Vancouver Island we have exactly the same number of unemployed today as we had in September of 1984. Nothing has changed. Some 35,000 people are still listed in official statistics as being unemployed and the Budget does absolutely nothing about that.

I want to mention a couple of specifics, first regarding small craft harbours. That issue is of particular concern in my riding but it is also of concern in ridings on both coasts and, indeed, in the other parts of Canada. Last spring the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans held a number of hearings on this issue. In June it submitted its report, and I would like to refer to that.

The report says that investigations by the committee reveal that the level of effort dedicated to the repair and maintenance of federal small craft harbours is inadequate, which is inconsistent with the stated Government goal of providing increased safety for our fishermen and protecting their material investments. In the short term, this inadequacy will prolong disruptions to commercial fishing, endanger harbour users or their property, and result in increased repair or maintenance costs when necessary work is delayed. In the long term the level of effort will neither protect the value of the assets nor sustain the harbours in safe and usable condition for those they serve.

The report went on to say that the committee heard testimony from Department of Fisheries and Oceans' officials that the minimum requirement to have all commercial fishing in recreational harbours under the administration of the Department and meet the small craft harbour guidelines is $120 million a year for the next five years. It was also indicated to the committee that should the small craft harbours program be required to continue at the present base funding of $48.5 million, there would be the inevitable closure of at least 150 harbours within five years.

Those very serious facts have been addressed in a most inadequate fashion by the Minister, his Department, and the Government. Instead of bringing forward a realistic Budget with projections over a number of years to deal with this problem, we have instead a phoney small craft harbour revitalization program which is really a dressed-up system of privatization that will provide an initial grant to municipalities or user groups, after which they will have the responsibility for maintenance and operation. It is a way for the federal Government to get out from under its historic responsibility of maintaining the infrastructure across Canada.

At least one community in my constituency has looked at this whole situation, and they feel it is just not feasible for them to get involved in taking over responsibility for a harbour. They have looked at the statistics and seen that when other communities have done this, they have inevitably lost money. That is not surprising. I do not think that our harbours should necessarily be money-makers. We do not expect that our roads be money-makers, and our airports are not money-makers. Why are we loading that burden upon small communities which depend upon these harbours for their fishing industry and, in many cases, their tourism and recreational industry? Why do we try to shuffle federal responsibility on to communities or user groups?

I want to mention some specific harbours in my riding. The harbour of Sooke on the west coast of Vancouver Island is protected by a well known land form called the Whiffen Spit, a very beautiful piece of land which stretches out and protects the harbour. In recent years it has been subjected to a great deal of erosion. There has been a jurisdictional dispute between the federal Government, which has responsibility for maintaining the harbour, and the provincial government, which actually owns the land.

Because these two levels of government have not been able to get together to solve a real problem for this community, the Whiffen Spit is eroding very badly. I visited it not long ago. There is a gap in the spit some 10 feet deep and 500 feet long. That means that storms will be able to move right through the spit which traditionally provided a very effective breakwater.

That will do damage to government facilities at the small craft harbour floats, to private marinas, and to the Uplands property owners. It will make it very difficult for the local mill to get barges in and out and to maintain the mill. It is essential that the two levels of government get together and find some way of solving the problem of the Whiffen Spit in the interests of the total community. So far we have not seen any real action on that.

There is also the situation of Cowichan Bay. A year ago I wrote to the Minister and pointed out that there is a very difficult situation there, that the breakwater is inadequate and that repairs should be undertaken immediately to extend it and provide additional protection to what the present breakwater gives. Admittedly, it will be an expensive proposition, but we are talking about the need to protect hundreds of thousands of dollars of both public and private investment. We received no positive response from the Minister on this. This past winter a very bad storm did a great deal of damage in Cowichan Bay, and the community is now looking to the Government in hopes of getting some federal assistance to rebuild.

In Ladysmith they need federal help to upgrade their Department of Fisheries and Oceans small craft harbour, but have been told that they can only get help if they form a local harbour authority and go for the government privatization program which it calls revitalization.

It is the Government's refusal to accept its historic responsibilities and its attempts to get out from under that makes us very leery of giving the Government permission to borrow $25 billion.

In Port Renfrew, another community on the west coast of Vancouver Island, there is a Transport Canada wharf which is urgently in need of repairs to bring it up to standard. These repairs will be expensive, costing some $900,000. Instead of looking at possibilities for increasing the use of this wharf if it is brought up to standard, Transport Canada simply decided to write it off, saying that the present level of usage does not justify that expense.

I have received correspondence from the community of Snug Cove on Bowen Island in another riding. There is a proposal there to get rid of the Department of Transport's floats and replace them with a private development. Local people are very concerned about what kind of access they will have and what the effect on the environment will be.

Speaking of the environment, we must question the commitment of the Government to taking action on the environment. We have been drifting along and acting as though everything is going okay with the environment while the environmental crisis is mounting in Canada and around the world. In the last few months we have seen a great deal of evidence that pulp mills are discharging toxic wastes which have a very severe effect upon the environment and marine life.

In my riding there is a pulp mill at Crofton. Some of the tests done there showed that oysters and crabs there had above safe levels of 2378TCDD, one of the most dangerous toxins known to humanity. We have not taken the action with regard to that toxin or others which is required. There is a whole range of toxins which are not even being adequately tested. The Government does not have the facilities to do the tests in the short length of time which this urgency requires. It has not put the muscle into enforcing environmental standards which the health, safety, and environment of Canadians demands. That raises questions about granting the Government this borrowing authority.

With regard to Canada's commitment to development assistance, we remember that when the Government was first elected the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made a solemn declaration at the United Nations on behalf of Canadians that we were going to reach .7 per cent of our GNP by 1990. Since then, of course, there has been one retreat after another from that figure. We are now talking about possibly reaching .7 per cent by the 21st century. Last year when the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade studied Canada's development assistance policy and the Government's commitment in that area it said:

> We doubt that the current plan to hold the ratio steady at 0.5 per cent until 1990 and then increase it sharply to 0.6 per cent in the following five years is realistic, particularly considering that we are now at a level slightly below 0.5 per cent.
> We are concerned that Canada may find itself once more in the position of abandoning its commitments. In the Committee's view, a plan is needed that would take us to the 0.6 per cent level in 1995-96 by steady, achievable annual increments. Accordingly, the Committee recommends that progress towards achieving the 0.6 per cent target in 1995-96 should begin in the 1988-89 fiscal year, rather than the current plan of fiscal year 1990-91, and proceed by steady annual increases. We estimate that would bring the ODA/GNP ratio to 0.53 per cent in fiscal year 1990-91.

In the just-released government strategy paper Sharing our Future, the Government rejected this recommendation which was made by the Conservative members of the committee. The Liberal member and myself had recommended that the Government should move toward its original commitment of 0.7 by 1990. That was too much for the Conservative members. They were concerned that unless some action was taken our percentage of development assistance would not increase so that by the 1990s there would be a steep increase and Canada would once again welsh on its commitments. We are concerned about this refusal to take our commitments to development assistance seriously. There are crying needs for development in other parts of the world, including Africa, Asia, Central and South America. Canada can be a real world leader because, while we are doing considerable already, we could do many other things to help countries reduce their debts and reach self sufficiency in food production. Much more needs to be done, and that is what we as a nation should be doing.

The Government's attitude that it need not push toward the 0.7 per cent goal, or even work in increments toward reaching the 0.6 per cent goal, is unconscionable in the face of world needs. At the same time, Canada has a government that is dedicated to borrowing billions of dollars to purchase nuclear submarines.

We also witnessed the kind of Government profligacy as detailed in this morning's story about a one-night stop in an Ontario city where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be spending $1,900 without even having a public meeting. Profligate spending on expensive and dangerous toys like nuclear submarines does not contribute to world peace or Canadian security and at the same time neglects vital interests at home. The Government is not dealing with the problems of unemployment in the regions, nor maintaining the infrastructure of industries, such as our fishing industry with small craft harbours. It is not fulfilling the commitments it should in this hurting and hungry world. That is why we have great difficulty with this request to borrow money.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate the Government's request to borrow $25 billion to cover some of the shortfall in the Budget that was presented just over a month ago. I do so in the context of my riding in Saskatchewan because people in that area are curious about the Government's expenditures and its handling of the economy.

Last year, inflation was some 4.5 per cent. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has suddenly decided that it is extremely important to fight inflation and is doing so by keeping interest rates high. In turn, high interest rates have led to an increase in the Canadian dollar by 12 per cent or 13 per cent in the last year. People living in rural areas who produce for an export-price related market will have decreased incomes.

For example, people in my riding who produce grains and oilseeds and whose sales are made in American dollars will face a decrease in sales of some 11 per cent to 12 per cent as a result of the Government's policy with regard to interest rates. People who export beef and pork to the United States will receive 12 per cent or 13 per cent less for those exports because they are dealing in U.S. funds.

There are a number of manufacturers of farm machinery in my riding who primarily export to the United States. It is more difficult for them to export into the United States as the Canadian dollar strengthens and the value of those exports drop accordingly. As a result, some of those companies have been forced to lay off even more workers.

The general tenure of the economy in my part of the country is one of decline. The fight against inflation in rural Saskatchewan has meant a great deal of deflation. Farm land prices have declined by as much as 50 per cent in my area in the past five years, primarily since the Government came to power. Inflation is not the problem. There are towns and villages in my constituency which have 20 or 30 good quality houses for sale because there is no one to live in them. The prices for such houses have declined by as much as 50 per cent in the last six years which I suggest represents deflation, not inflation.

The Government is mistaken if it believes it can fight inflation with a high interest rate policy. It is a lose-lose situation for my constituents. Since they have lost on the income side by some 12 per cent or 13 per cent, they must borrow money to keep in business but find that interest rates have increased by one per cent to 1.25 per cent in the last year. Therefore, they must pay more money to stay in business. Their income has decreased because of the Government's economic policies and their cost of staying in business is increasing because interest rates are rising according to Government policy.

The Government often talks about win-win situations. Its approach to the economy and the management of the Budget for people in my part of the country is definitely a lose-lose situation. Of course, we cannot all be consistent winners in an economic program. In order for someone to gain an advantage, another must make a sacrifice. In our case, the Minister of Finance has developed a growing economy in an area with which he is more familiar. Unemployment is going down in the Toronto area, and I understand that inflation is rising as property values increase and a hot investment climate continues. However, that is not the case in the West, the Prairies, the North, eastern or Atlantic Canada. The Government should be fighting a war against deflation rather than inflation.

The $25 billion which the Government seeks in borrowing authority will essentially go to pay off the cost of previously borrowed money. Many businesses and farms in my part of the country have been in this kind of financing position for a few years. Ultimately most of them have had to quit.

The net public debt at the end of last fiscal year was $264 billion. We are into the last few weeks of the 1987-88 fiscal year, which means we can add approximately $30 billion as the deficit for this past year. That brings the accumulated deficit the Government is leaving us with in the neighbourhood of $300 billion. Even if the Government is able to borrow money at 8 per cent or 9 per cent to keep paying for that accumulated deficit, that debt, which makes up just about 52 per cent of our Gross National Product on an annual basis, the amount of money the Government wants permission to borrow is not quite enough to pay the interest on that accumulated debt. The $25 billion will barely do that.

I only point that out because I have a lot of constituents, some of whom have been in this situation. A lot of them have watched relatives, friends and neighbours become involved in a similar kind of situation over the last number of years where at the end of the year they could not pay any of the debt and had to go to the bank, credit union or relatives to borrow money to keep the accumulated debt going for another year. That is basically what we are trying to do. This request by the Government to be given another $25 billion of borrowing power is to permit it to stay afloat for the coming year. The amount in taxes it is receiving will not meet the expenditures which the Government itself has set.

That seems a little strange coming from a Minister of Finance who tells us the problem he faces is a problem of inflation. The textbook definition of inflation is "too many dollars chasing too few goods". Does it not seem ironic that we are borrowing another $25 billion to add to the amount of dollars we are using to chase inadequate government services? Does it not seem ironic that a Government which is worried about inflation would do this sort of thing? Some members of the Government recently attacked me when I made a speech on this matter earlier in the second reading debate. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) said his Government was doing a good job, that this was nothing like the radical spending that took place under what he called the "NDP-Liberal alliance" back in the 1970s.

History books do not record any such NDP-Liberal alliance. The Hon. Member referred to the early 1970s. I would like to direct the attention of the House to the record presented by the Minister of Finance when he presented his fiscal plan on February 10, page 96. We see that in 1971-72, at the beginning of that period of this alleged plot, with the NDP forcing the Liberals into all sorts of rapid expenditures and expansion, the net public debt as a percentage of the GNP was 20.5 per cent. That was fairly high. As we went through that two or three years, it dropped. The first year it went down to 19.9 per cent. The following year it dropped to 18.5 per cent. At the end of the period it was at 16.8 per cent. That was from a starting point of 20.5 per cent. If the New Democratic Party had very much influence on the Liberal administration at that time, I submit it was a very good influence because it substantially brought down the proportion of public debt to the Gross National Product.

The Liberals were forced by this Party to follow a certain amount of proper expenditure programs, and were putting government funds into items and projects that would create growth. I think it should be noted that at the beginning of that period the Gross National Product was some $97 billion. At the end of that period, it was at $152 billion, a growth in excess of 50 per cent. That was because of following some of the advice of the New Democrats in that period of time.

I will complete my remarks by simply saying that I find it very strange that the Government persists in trying to fight inflation when, for most of the regions of this country, including my own, the problem is deflation, debt, lower prices, lower incomes and higher costs because the interest rates in this country are far too high.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, January 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Horner that Bill C-264, an Act to amend the criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! I would like to advise the House that when the debate adjourned, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) was to take the floor. As he is absent, I give the floor to the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, although the use of narcotics and some other drugs is now illegal, literature promoting the use of drugs, instruments and kits which facilitate their use, can be bought freely in stores or head shops specialized in the sale of such paraphernalia.

[English]

The national drug strategy that was announced last May is proof of our commitment to specific undertakings that were made in the Speech from the Throne as solemn promises to the families and parents of Canada. For example, we are dedicated in our intent to eradicate the vast profits that are to be made from the trafficking in illicit drugs by the presentation of the proceeds of crime legislation in Bill C-61.

At the time of its introduction, this legislation received unanimous support from all sides of this House and I, for one, welcome its consideration in committee and speedy return to this Chamber for early passage. Hitting the offender in his or her pocket-book is the only realistic way of terminating the cycle of enterprise crime. More profits breed more crime. We are profoundly concerned about this problem.

There is a dichotomy evident, on the one hand, in the clear statement enunciated in the national drug strategy and, on the other hand, the continued existence of businesses that apparently flourish on the merchandising of so-called drug paraphernalia. A consistent message is fundamental to a successful initiative against drug abuse. There is no room for the impressionable in society, especially our youth, to feel that drug use is acceptable social behaviour. That is the message these entrepreneurs attempt to convey.

The thrust of Bill C-264 is to criminalize any dealings such as importing or selling drug paraphernalia which is defined by the legislation as an "instrument for illicit drug use". This in turn is defined as:

> —anything designed primarily or intended under the circumstances for consuming or to facilitate the consumption of an illicit drug.

The question I would ask is, to whom does the intention apply, that is, does it apply to the seller or to the buyer? Despite the obvious good intentions of the sponsor of this Bill, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), I am concerned that this definition may create a field day for inventive members of the Criminal Defence Bar. That is not to say that members of the Defence Bar are criminals. I wish to be very clear that when one attaches two adjectives to a noun, as did my friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), earlier in the day, it is not to be seen that members of the Bar are criminals but rather members of the Criminal Law Defence Bar. This would then result in the initiative being ineffective. We must consider any legislation very carefully, especially in this era which is more and more being shaped by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I am not suggesting that we are paralysed from acting decisively.

I am simply saying that our effort must be consistent with the constitutional rights enshrined in the Charter. Since we can always learn from the experience of others, I suggest we might look at the British experience.

The Parliament of the United Kingdom recently passed "drug paraphernalia" legislation. It is contained in the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 which came into force on January 12, 1987. The major part of that legislation is similar to our proceeds of crime legislation, Bill C-61, which provides for the seizure, freezing and forfeiture of the proceeds of drug trafficking, including assets that are physically situated in Canada. It is interesting to note that Canadian assets can be taken into account for the purposes of a confiscation order made by a British court. Section 34 of the British statute which deals with drug paraphernalia states:

> (1) Any person who supplies or offers to supply any article which may be used or adapted to be used (whether by itself or in combination with another article or other articles) in the administration by any person of a controlled drug to himself or another, believing that the article (or the article as adapted) is to be so used in circumstances where the administration is unlawful, is guilty of an offence.

Hypodermic syringes or any part thereof are specifically exempted from the operation of this provision by subsection (2). Assuming the evidence establishes a belief that the administration of the substance, for instance, heroin, is illegal, one wonders why this exemption for hypodermic syringes was created. It may have some connection with the growing AIDS epidemic that is aggravated by individuals sharing needles for "shooting-up" purposes. The supply of articles for the purpose of preparing a controlled substance for administration is the subject matter of the prohibition in subsection (3). As in Canada, the lawful administration of controlled substances is defined by regulation.

The breadth of those prohibitions is potentially very wide in that they catch every imaginable article in existence that can be employed or adapted for use in the administration or preparation of illicit drugs. The limitation in the provision is created by the requirement that the person who supplies believes that the article is to be employed in either the administration or preparation of administration of a controlled drug. This would appear to be a subjective test which I admit may be quite difficult to prove.

Because of the recent passage of this legislation, experience in the British case has not been able to tell us how useful this approach will be. It may be that an objective test would have been a more effective basis for belief, that is, where there are reasonable grounds to believe that the article will be used for the improper purpose. That would mean that even in situations where the purchaser does not intend to employ the article for illicit administration of drugs, the supplier could still be found guilty because all the surrounding circumstances pointed to the creation in the mind of a reasonable man of a likelihood that unlawful use of the article would be taking place. This type of approach would also assist in the use of undercover police operations to detect and prosecute offenders of this enactment.

This legislation from the United Kingdom is a model that bears consideration and examination. It also points to the level of concern in other countries about the problem of drug paraphernalia. I am sure that the working group that has been set up by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will be able to provide a much fuller analysis of this provision when its report is delivered. I would prefer to await the delivery of this report which will examine all aspects of the problem.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to have an opportunity to say a few words regarding Bill C-264. This Bill focuses attention on one of the major crises facing our country today, that is, the widespread drug and alcohol abuse that afflicts so many Canadians, and the fact that it is a growing problem. I do not suppose that there are many of us in the House of Commons who do not know someone or know a family where drug abuse has caused a great deal of heartache, severe problems, and has hampered the future of individuals.

In light of those comments, Mr. Speaker, I want to share with you my surprise on a number of occasions when walking into a certain shop on a certain street and noticing in the display cases all types of interesting paraphernalia, little ceramic pipes, holders, syringes, water-pipes, and certain types of fancy cigarette papers. One can find all types of interesting tidbits. The only thing that those articles can be used for is to roll joints, smoke hash, munch up magic mushrooms, or whatever it is that people might be into. This is all right out in the open. At the side of the room there are many brochures and booklets on how to grow your own marijuana or how to harvest marijuana plants to get the maximum amount of good oil out of them, and on and on. Then one thinks, Mr. Speaker, my goodness, all of this is illegal in Canada. We are not supposed to smoke hashish, eat magic mushrooms, or take LSD.

I went to the library and got a number of recent studies. Those studies list pages and pages of illicit drugs that can probably be bought on any college campus, in any high school, or on many street corners in the City of Ottawa as well as other cities across the country. The descriptions are vivid, and those studies list the fines attached to summary conviction for possession or trafficking. There is page after page and report after report of the illicit drug situation in Canada. The report on drug abuse and availability of illicit drugs in Canada has perhaps 300 pages of descriptions of what happens town by town in terms of the various types of drugs that have been uncovered by police. It is a horrendous problem that we face.

Bill C-264 comes to grips with this incredible hypocrisy. In the head shops around the country there are people who are presumably making a living selling the paraphernalia and gadgetry that goes with smoking illicit substances, eating them, chewing them, rubbing them, or whatever people might do with them, and that this is apparently okay. This Bill says: "Listen, if you are going to manufacture, promote or sell instruments or offer literature for illicit drug use then it will be considered an offence, you will be guilty, and you will be liable on a summary conviction."

I have just been passed a piece of information that reminds me that in the part of the country I come from on the west coast, magic mushrooms are dried in dryers in the laundromats to make things easier. I do not suppose that laundromats are covered in Bill C-264. Perhaps that might be the next stage.

This is not a laughing matter. It is an attempt by an individual to deal with the problem. It does not deal with the problem. We must not get caught up in concerning ourselves with water-pipes or other apparatus. We must ask ourselves what is behind all of this. What has led to increasing numbers of young people in the country taking mind altering substances? What has driven people, particularly young people, to this kind of behaviour?

There are high levels of unemployment in various parts of Canada, about which we were unfortunately reminded today. In many communities, particularly some of the smaller and remote ones, 20 per cent, 30 per cent, and 40 per cent of the population are unemployed. There are incredible divergences in terms of social guidelines for young people wherein appropriate behaviour or appropriate action is confusing. Job opportunities for young people are limited. Career opportunities for young people are limited. One could go on and on in terms of the very difficult challenges and problems confronting Canadians today, particularly our young people, but I will not do so. One way to deal with the situation has been to lose oneself by using a mind altering drug or by excessive use of alcohol.

When it comes to smoking, the federal Government has decided to take certain steps. These days we are debating a piece of legislation which will hopefully encourage people to smoke less and consequently save tens of thousands of Canadians each year from all the problems associated with smoking. It is a positive initiative which I think most Canadians would applaud.

Dealing with Bill C-264, which I suspect is honourably motivated, and concerning ourselves with pins, water-pipes, and so on surely misses the point. The point is: Why are these shops necessary? Why is there a need for this paraphernalia? What is behind it? I think that is where we should be focusing our energies and efforts as responsible parliamentarians.

This is not to say that the Government does absolutely nothing in this area, but I think the public is demanding that we do more. Federal, provincial, and local Governments, as well as many agencies, should be taking much more affirmative action in terms of setting the stage so that Canadians, particularly younger ones, learn that the need to escape from reality or the real world through mind altering substances is no longer necessary and that they can live and develop their lives as productive and contributory citizens. At that point we will know that we have been successful in advancing Canada to a more progressive and more civilized country.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) for his obvious interest in the health and welfare of Canada's youth and for his efforts in presenting Bill C-264 to the House.

I recognize—and I believe most Members recognize it as well—that the spread in the abuse of various substances by our youth, not only those prohibited or controlled under the Narcotic Control Act or the Food and Drugs Act, is damaging the lives of young Canadians from St. John's to Victoria and from Toronto to the smallest settlements in the Arctic. As other Hon. Members have quite properly noted, there can be no one in society today who has not been touched in some way by the ravages of drug abuse. There can be no doubt that for those who peddle illicit drugs profit is the only motivation and that, indeed, large profits can be obtained through this immoral exploitation of young people.

I should like to focus my remarks today on one aspect of the proposed legislation—the control of literature for illicit drug use. This expression is defined in the Hon. Member's proposed Section 420.1 as meaning the following:

> —any printed matter describing or depicting, and designed primarily or intended under the circumstances to promote or glamorize, the production, preparation or consumption of illicit drugs.

To a great extent the media—and here I do not limit my remarks to the print media but would include the film and television media—have exercised a responsible approach to the publication of material regarding the illicit drug industry. However, there is a segment of the publishing industry which has done much to facilitate the efforts of the drug trafficker through the creation of a mystique surrounding both those who traffic and those who consume illicit drugs. These publishers collectively bear some considerable measure of responsibility for the popularization of so-called soft drugs, and it is toward those publishers that proposed Section 420.1 of Bill C-264 is directed.

The impressionable, the naive, those lacking in self-esteem and self-confidence, are drawn in many ways to experiment with drugs and to be part of a lifestyle they are made to perceive as attractive. Some publishers do not exercise any self-censorship but rather, in seeking to expand their circulation or reputation, do not hesitate to publish that which they would describe as literature—the glorification of successful drug traffickers. I am certain we all support freedom of expression and free exchange of information. However, in a free and democratic society we recognize that reasonable limits may be placed upon such principles.

In a similar fashion small store owners and operators of so-called head shops, specializing in the distribution of devices which have no other legitimate purpose than to facilitate the consumption of drugs, make profit from those who consume illicit drugs. They, too, exploit the victims of organized crime. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, drug trafficking accounts for the largest share of the criminal transactions of organized crime.

Ultimately all society is the victim of such organized criminal activity. The taxpayer pays for the law enforcement efforts directed at combating and eradicating the illicit drug trade and the cost of imprisoning convicted offenders who trafficked in these substances or committed other crimes in order to obtain money to buy drugs. Of course the victims include those whose lives are forever harmed and destroyed by the consumption of drugs, as well as those who had criminal acts committed against them either by persons under the influence of these substances or by persons who, in order to obtain money to buy drugs, violated their property rights.

On a larger scale, I submit that millions of people unknown to us in the poorer countries of the Third World where many of these drugs are produced are also the victims of this illicit commercial activity. They live in terror, the subjects of drug overlords who hold sway over large territories in South America and Asia. So long as a market for their goods exists in developed nations such as Canada, these drug lords will continue to produce. Their markets will not shrink if nothing is done to counter portrayals in some media that it is good to be bad. Education is the key.

One cannot expect law enforcement officials or the criminal justice system to succeed in the fight against organized crime without the support of society at large. More must be done to generate awareness of the economic and social impact of drug trafficking in Canada and abroad. Active measures which involve the community at large must be developed.

Bill C-264 speaks to an inconsistency in our approach to drug abuse. We prohibit the trafficking in or possession of illicit drugs, yet do nothing to prevent the commercial sale of paraphernalia which have no other use than to facilitate the consumption and use of such substances. To the average man or woman on the street, this is incomprehensible and I suspect that there is a great deal of support for the thrust for Bill C-264.

However, I have a major concern on which I would like to briefly touch. I am worried about that part of the proposed amendment to the Criminal Code which would have the effect of imposing a form of censorship over what Canadians are permitted to read. Hon. Members will note that the Bill makes no attempt to control any printed matter other than those few publications which specialize in the promotion of the consumption of illicit drugs. I am concerned that this legislation might be attacked under the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which protect the freedom of expression and the freedom of communication of the press and other media.

Would the courts accept that there has been a need demonstrated for the introduction of such a measure? There are other publications disseminating information which, it could be argued, have no legitimate purpose in being distributed. Here I would refer the House to the report of the Senate Special Committee on Terrorism and the Public Safety which specifically addressed the topic of so-called mayhem manuals.

The committee recommended that the Government look at ways to prescribe the importation, production, distribution or sale of manuals which had as their dominant primary characteristic the description of how to fabricate weapons or bombs, or the description of tactics that could be of practical assistance in mounting terrorist attacks.

I believe a parallel may be drawn between these two types of publications, mayhem manuals on the one hand and literature for illicit drug use on the other. Neither serve any positive social purpose nor contribute to the good of Canadian society. Both are examples of specialized publications which reflect the views and interests of an extremely small segment of society. They are, however, instrumental in the dissemination of a set of values which are inconsistent with those held by the majority of Canadians. Both mayhem manuals and literature for illicit drug use are, in my submission, areas where the courts may support an exception to the protection of the fundamental freedoms listed in Section 2 of the Charter.

I have one final concern which also results from the Charter. The publishers of these specialized publications may point to their colleagues who communicate such information through other means and claim that they are being discriminated against. Would it not be wiser to expand the ambit of the proposed amendment to the Criminal Code to bring other forms of communication within its control?

In closing, I would invite Hon. Members to consider all aspects of this proposed legislation and not to dismiss it lightly. Fundamentally, what is proposed in Bill C-264 is sound and generally consistent with other legislation in this area. I salute the Hon. Member for Mississauga North for bringing this Bill forward. However, the working group established by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to review the issue of drug paraphernalia will report within the year. I, therefore, recommend that the study of Bill C-264 be deferred until the conclusions of that report are known.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to enter this debate and offer some observations on the topic. For a period of time, mainly from 1969 to 1975, I worked with a youth agency in Vancouver where we very often dealt with young people who had overdosed on drugs, young people who had taken LSD and were on bummers, so to speak. I speak with a certain amount of knowledge as to the usage of illicit drugs, particularly in Vancouver during that period of the latter 1960s and the early 1970s.

I would like to say at the outset that the Private Members' Bill offered to us today really will not be very effective. You just do not deal with that problem by outlawing head shops, Mr. Speaker. It might satisfy some cravings of Hon. Members that they have struck a blow for righteousness and goodness, but I am afraid that is all it will do.

First, let us talk about head shops. Generally there are different types of cigarette paper. Does that mean you will outlaw all cigarette paper? That would be quite difficult. Does it mean that tobacconists will not be able to sell cigarette paper? That would be a little difficult. I hear an Hon. Member suggest that is a different thing. It really is not different. Essentially you can use these cigarette papers to roll a joint, a marijuana cigarette or a tobacco cigarette. To outlaw cigarette papers per se I do not think will accomplish very much. You can outlaw some of the other paraphernalia. Some of the other paraphernalia would be what is called "roach holders". For heaven's sake, Mr. Speaker, bobby pins can be used as roach holders. Will you outlaw bobby pins? Of course not, that is ridiculous. What about pipes? Some of these are what is called hookah pipes. Generally you find these in the Middle Eastern countries. They can be used either to smoke marijuana, hashish or tobacco. Will you outlaw them? Again, that is quite a different call to make. By outlawing pipes that can be used for the smoking or inhaling of illegal substances, at the same time you will be prohibiting the smoking of legal substances. That does not make much sense either.

I suppose we now come to things that would be sold like posters and magazines that would extol the use of marijuana and other illicit substances. I might say that I have never seen a publication that encourages the use of what I would call the real dangerous drugs, namely, heroin, the hard drugs, the drugs that are addictive. I would say in my experience that marijuana, hashish and even mushrooms and LSD, from what I observed in the young people with whom I was dealing in Vancouver, are not really addictive. You can make a claim that they are psychologically addictive. Certainly I have known many young people who have used these substances on quite a regular basis, but you cannot describe them as being physically addictive as heroin would be, or, for that matter, alcohol or tobacco. In fact, from dealing with people who have gone through drug treatment programs, having been addicted to heroin, they tell me that they find it more difficult to quit smoking than to break the heroin habit. As I mentioned before, I have never seen a publication that extols the use or encourages the reader to use such hard drugs as heroin.

Are we going to outlaw these publications? The way the Bill is drafted, it is so open that major pieces of literature would also have to be outlawed. For instance, the Kubla Khan, A Vision in a Dream by Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Ulalume by Edgar Allen Poe, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Alice in Wonderland by Lewis Carroll, Tropic of Capricorn by Henry Miller, Naked Lunch by William S. Burroughs, On the Road by Jack Kerouac, Howl and Other Poems by Allen Ginsburg, Beneath the Underdog by Charles Mingus and The Collected Works of Billy the Kid by Michael Ondaatje, winner of the Governor General's Award for poetry in 1971. Those are some of the publications that would conceivably fall under the ban proposed in this Private Members' Bill.

I do not understand why the drafter of the Bill, if he is concerned about magazines and pieces of literature that perhaps put into a positive light the taking of such illicit substances as marijuana and hashish, would stop at the printed word. Certainly popular music today, and has I would say for the last decade or decade and a half, has positive suggestions. There are several pieces by The Beatles that would also surely be banned if you used the same criteria that is being used in this Bill today.

Do well-intentioned Hon. Members, by outlawing and bringing the law to bear on businesses like head shops feel that they are doing something to deal with the drug problem? I would suggest that that is really not the case. They are really not dealing with the problem. It will not make any difference whatsoever if there are no so-called head shops around.

There is a drug problem that exists in society. Most of the problem has to do with hard drugs and with alcohol. Those two cause the most serious drug problems in society.

We all know about alcohol. We know of the untold deaths that occur on the highways because of drinking and driving. We know of marriage breakups that occur because of alcoholism within families. We know of the loss of jobs and economic security, again caused by alcoholism.

I would say that alcoholism is the most serious drug problem that exists in our society today. The second most serious problem is caused by heroin and morphine, two variations of the same drug, one being harder and having a different chemical consistency. In essence, they are both pain killers.

Heroin definitely causes serious social concerns. The funny thing is that part of the reason for heroin being a problem to society is that it is illegal. It has been noted that there are professional people like doctors who have access to heroin and have become heroin addicts but who can function quite well and competently as doctors. It is because the substance is illegal and so addictive that people will commit all sorts of crimes to get the money to satisfy their habits.

A proposal that has at times been brought forward but, I understand, never really seriously discussed is the consideration of what England has done, and that is to treat heroin addiction as a medical problem rather than as a legal problem. I suspect that if we treat it as a medical problem, we would not have the type of crime we have today. There would be a much better chance of having treatment programs and certainly we would not have the murders and thefts that occur because of heroin.

I see that you are indicating to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest to Hon. Members, even though I laud their intention and do not take issue with it, that the Bill is not appropriate. It will not do what they hope it will do.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, unlike my colleague from the New Democratic Party who spoke before me, I do not think that my colleague from Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) introduced this Bill because he felt a wave of puritanism and wanted to express his opposition to a softening of social standards. On the contrary, I think he is a very responsible man who has seen the ravages caused by drugs among young people and who is looking for a solution to that problem.

This bill to amend the Criminal Code may not be the ideal or the only way to go about it, but I do not question in any way the sincerity of my colleague from Mississauga North when he approaches the problem by suggesting we must do something now.

I know full well the ravages caused by drugs. I represent, Mr. Speaker, a constituency where 45 per cent of the urban population is under 35. About two years ago, I had to work with Gatineau policemen, particularly with police chief Joël Chéruet, to try and make illegal the setting up of arcades and pinball machines near elementary schools in the city of Gatineau. Because unfortunately in those arcades could be found not only pinball machines but also drug traffickers who took advantage of the tender age of those schoolchildren to get them addicted. As a result of their addiction, those children began to steal from automatic vending machines, in churches and also from older citizens coming back from senior citizens' clubs. They stole coins, mostly quarters from them to play those pinball machines in the arcades and to purchase drugs. It was noted that a gang of young schoolchildren were involved in drugs due to the proximity of those arcades where traffickers would be waiting for them.

Now this is a serious question. We found it difficult to convince civic authorities that such arcades near schools should be banned. They referred to business rights, to what my NDP colleague said a while ago about privacy and they told us that we should not be too coercive. Our efforts to protect those defenceless young people were thus undermined.

Faced with such a problem we should refrain from saying: "Oh dear, our community should not become puritan as a result of such problem." This is not the case. Indeed, we have a very serious problem.

I am also aware of the devastation caused by drugs because in my constituency there is an organization called Le bon samaritain led by Carole Dagenais, Carole Mongeon and Robert Gervais from the CIP and many others who are very devoted individuals. Those I know are working with former drug addicts. Whenever I visit "Le bon samaritain", I notice that the average age is very low. Therefore, it is a problem I am very familiar with.

I suggest it is our duty, as citizens, elected representatives and leaders of the community, not to discourage people like my friend the Hon. Member for Mississauga North when they suggest ways and means to try and stop drug trafficking. Rather than amending the Criminal Code, we could emphasize and enhance a number of Criminal Code provisions. I refer for instance to Section 422 of the Code which states:

> 422. Except where otherwise expressly provided by law, the following provisions apply in respect of persons who counsel other persons to commit offences, namely,
> (a) every one who counsels another person to commit an indictable offence is, if the offence is not committed, guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to the same punishment to which a person who attempts to commit that offence is liable; and
> (b) every one who counsels another person to commit an offence punishable on summary conviction is, if the offence is not committed, guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

I was quoting from 1953-54, Chap. 51, Sec. 407; 1985, Chap. 19, Sec. 61.

So, Section 22 of the Criminal Code defines a "counsellor" as a person who counsels or procures another person to be a party to an offense. Jurisprudence has it that, in order to obtain a conviction, it is not necessary to prove that the other person has committed the offense which was counselled to him or her by the accused. Simple counselling is enough for an offense. So we could use this section.

It would be difficult to find a basic difference between the action the people doing that kind of counselling are accused of and the behaviour of the people involved in the sale of illicit drug paraphernalia. Under the Criminal Code, it is clear that offering the devices and kits freely available in the so-called "head shops" to make the use and, therefore, possession of illicit drugs more attractive, make any person, especially the owners and employees of the shops, liable to criminal pursuit for having counseled persons into committing an offense.

I hope that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will consider using Section 422 of the Criminal Code as a means to solve the problem resulting from the possession and sale of illicit drug paraphernalia in this country.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, if this Bill was voted on and deferred to a legislative committee, we could deal with the measures suggested by my colleague the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) for the purpose of improving it and dealing then with the use of Section 422 or other ways to proceed. However, Mr. Speaker, I object to people imputing motives on someone who wishes to deal with the difficult drug addiction problem, especially when young people are involved. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that instead of taking offense for a wording that might differ from his way of life or his ideas, he participates in a constructive way to this debate in order that we find, and this very rapidly, the best possible solution to this terrible problem. I wish as well to encourage my colleagues in the House to actively participate in crime prevention movements that are being launched here and there in Canada, because parents of young people already hooked are often those who assume the whole task.

I believe those fortunate enough to have children who escaped this drug addiction calamity should get very personally involved with these prevention groups, because they are the ones who could bring with a clear mind the right answers, whereas parents of children who were once or still are drug addicts are sometimes so emotionally disturbed by their family problem that they fail to calmly consider the issue.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having listened to me with much attention and I am sure that my colleagues will have a second thought before casting aspersions on a person who only wishes to resolve such a problem.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to comment on that important question. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) has introduced a legislation amending the Criminal Code to prohibit the sale of drug paraphernalia. As we all know, while narcotics and some other drugs are actually prohibited, it is still possible and easy to find litterature promoting such drug use as well as drug paraphernalia and kits in shops specializing in the sale of such paraphernalia.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has announced last May its national Strategy against drug use thus manifesting its firm intention of finding solutions to the problem of drug abuse. The matter of drug paraphernalia is directly related to the problem of drug abuse.

As you will surely know, several states have passed legislations to eliminate the sale of drug paraphernalia. I would like to take a few moments to trace the history of the problem of drug parahernalia South of our frontier.

Early in the 1960's, most Americans had almost never experimented with drugs, except naturally for alcool, tobacco and coffee. It is through newspapers, novels and movies that people have learned about the way of life of the drug addicts. It was among the poor, mainly the black, the spanish immigrants and the native that illicit drug use was more prevalent. In their mind, the people associated drug use with criminals and other marginal sub-cultures such as the beatnicks among whom some of the greatest poets, artists and musicians of their generation are found. The average American did not have much to go with drugs but they were omnipresent in the dregs of society as well as among the anti-establishment intelligentsia.

As the 1960's went by, drug abuse skyrocketed. Thanks to progress made in medicine and in pharmacology the number of available drugs increased considerably. Vitamins began to be used in millions of homes. Large immunization campaigns were carried out. Millions of people were prescribed tranquilizers for the relief of stress symptoms.

The introduction of oral contraceptives has set in motion a sexual revolution and created a direct association between pills and pleasure. Other factors, such as social unrest prevalent in those times, have contributed to an increase in drug abuse behaviour. Arts and cinema became psychedelic; in Woodstock, the generation of the Sixties was celebrating its liberation with protest songs and acid rock.

Civil disobedience had become the accepted way of fighting against discrimination, encouraged by the State. The notion that governments could and should be opposed has contributed to the political anti-establishment activities which have marked the Vietnam War years. In the late Sixties and early Seventies, the morality of the governments and of the Establishment was questioned, and many people, mostly young people, were suspicious of the foreign racial and drugs policies of the United States. Even in the most respectable circles it was good to criticize government policy, and the attitude towards drugs was the most permissive ever seen. Pressure groups were set up to promote the reform of drug legislation and some States went even as far as to decriminalize marijuana. In many other States, sentences imposed for minor drug offences became much lighter in most if not all cases. In that context, it is impossible to ascertain if the increase in drug abuse resulted from a temporary mental aberration or rather from the cohesion of a sub-culture. But repression of drug abuse, so dearly won during the first half of the century, was wiped out within a decade. The most widespread drugs were marijuana, pharmaceutical products, hallucinogens and, to a certain extent, cocain and opiates.

On the list of articles useful or necessary for drug use, we find pipes, water pipes, cigarette papers, tweezers, mirrors, razor blades and a whole range of accessories for illicit preparation, conservation and consumption of illegal drugs.

Those accessories, although they were not widely available, appeared in the sixties in headshops and record stores. Their growing popularity brought about an increase in the number of stores where they were available. The marketing and distribution became more and more sophisticated. In 1974, the magazine High Times was published for the first time, 20,000 copies being printed; it was an immediate hit. High Times publishes reports and editorials pushing for recreational use of drugs while at the same time providing the manufacturers of thoses accessories with a medium to advertise their products.

Opposition against the instrument industry first came from parents, church leaders, and government authorities. In the early days the opposition was weak and disorganized. The first organized group that challenged the drug device makers was established in 1977 in the American state of Georgia. Its members maintained that the whole industry was violating the government's drug control policies and that shops gave youngsters the impression that drugs were socially acceptable. Similar groups were set up in other parts of the country and brought pressure to bear on local governments so they would issue regulations outlawing the sale of drug paraphernalia.

Between 1977 and 1979 a number of states and municipalities passed legislation to prohibit possession and distribution of such devices. Those first laws were all declared unconstitutional. In May, 1979, the White House requested that the Department of Justice's Drug Enforcement Agency attempt to develop a constitutionally permissible approach to the control of paraphernalia.

The DEA's response to the White House request was to develop a model drug paraphernalia Act. Hearings were held before the House Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse control in November, 1979, to review the model Act. The committee concluded its review by finding that the paraphernalia industry contributed to the flagrant and harmful use of drugs and found that the model Act was necessary to eradicate the paraphernalia industry.

I would like to go over some of the basic provisions of the American model Act.

First, it provides a comprehensive definition of the term "drug paraphernalia" with specific descriptions of the most common forms of paraphernalia.

It lists the factors which must be taken into account to determine whether an item is covered by this definition.

It makes it an offense to manufacture, advertise, deliver or use drug paraphernalia.

It makes it a special offense to deliver drug paraphernalia to anyone under 18 years of age.

It precisely defines outlawed acts in the manufacture, advertising, delivery and use of drug paraphernalia and specifies the culpable intent necessary to commit the offense.

It provides for seizure and confiscation of drug paraphernalia.

To date, some 40 American states have adopted the uniform legislation proposed to control drug paraphernalia.

In my opinion, the problem of drug abuse and drug paraphernalia is more serious in the United States than in Canada. We can only approve any initiative which might help to put an end to the social calamity which drug use has now become. The purpose of the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member is quite laudable, but I do not believe that the means suggested by the Hon. Member are appropriate to meet this purpose. In any case, the Department of Justice has undertaken a review of this whole issue, and during this process, it will consult those concerned and professional groups. It should be able to publish its conclusions later this year. I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that the debate should be postponed until the findings of this study have been published.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are four minutes left in the time for debate. The Member will not be able to complete her comments today, but I will recognize the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to participate in this debate. While we certainly endorse the comments that have been made by a number of speakers this afternoon, we would like to point out that Bill C-264 is in fact a follow-through on what has already been proposed by a standing committee of the House of Commons. More specifically, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deemed that because there was a drug epidemic in the United States, there was also a drug epidemic in Canada. As a result of that statement, there was a study launched by the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare which examined the whole range of licit and illicit drugs in Canada.

One of the areas which that committee studied was head shops and the paraphernalia sold in head shops. The committee made a number of very salient and proper recommendations in that regard. That report was entitled "Booze, Pills & Dope; Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada" and was tabled here in the House of Commons some months ago. Yet, we have heard absolutely nothing from the Government.

It is all well and good for us to stand up and say "Let's support this wonderful Private Member's Bill". With respect, Mr. Speaker, it is motherhood. Of course no one in their right mind is going to stand up and say that we should support the sale of illegal drug paraphernalia in Canada. Of course we should be acting.

However, I must ask the Government today why it is leaving the job up to Private Members in the form of Private Members' Bills and why it has refused to respond to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare when in September, 1986, I believe, the Prime Minister said that there was a drug epidemic. He has had a report on the matter sitting on the desk of the Government for a number of months and there has been no response.

Therefore, can we stop hiding behind Private Members' Bills and the very good intentions of Members of Parliament on all sides of the House and start doing something, start showing some leadership? Private Members' Bills in this House will be debated. We will all have a chance to put our thoughts on the record and send our messages to our constituents so that they will know that we are speaking out on the important issues. However, Private Members' Bills seldom become the law of the land.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has had in his possession a series of recommendations which specifically address the problem of head shops in Canada and he has chosen to ignore them. Why do we not cut out this hypocrisy?

According to Standing Order 96(2) the the study "Booze, Pills & Dope; Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada" was reported to the House of Commons and we are still waiting for the reply of the Government. There were a number of government Members on this committee. The Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) was the chairman of the committee and the Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) was the vice-chairman. The Members for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White), and Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) were members of the committee as well as myself and the Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin). A lot of Members worked on this report and came up with some extremely good recommendations, one of which specifically dealt with the question of drug paraphernalia and nothing has been done.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not know why I should entertain a point of order when the time for Private Members' Business has now expired. The Hon. Member has 30 seconds to put his point of order, otherwise the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired and pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 2.57 p.m.

COMMONWEALTH DAY

OBSERVANCE OF ANNIVERSARY

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, today we join a quarter of the world's people in observing Commonwealth Day. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada has been very active in the Commonwealth over the past year. Last October we hosted the heads of Government meeting in Vancouver. Last month the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) chaired the first meeting of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa, created at Vancouver.

Canada continues to be one of the strongest supporters of the Commonwealth. It has given us easy, privileged access to a large group of Third World countries, all of whom were, like Canada, once members of the British Empire. Our Commonwealth experience has provided inspiration for Canada to seek parallel institutions to cement our ties with the French-speaking world. That experience was part of the reason we hosted the Francophone Summit last year in Quebec City.

The Vancouver meeting of the heads of Government of the Commonwealth reviewed the multi-faceted activities of the organization. It addressed major international political and economic issues ranging from Third World debt, to the status of women in society, to the threat to low-lying states from rising water levels.

Canadian Development Assistance, a major dimension of our foreign policy and international identity, has its roots in the Colombo plan of the early 1950s. Today, the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation, CFTC, provides technical assistance to all parts of the developing Commonwealth.

The fund is virtually unique in that almost all members contribute, and it makes maximum use of experts from developing countries. Canada is the single largest donor to the CFTC, providing approximately $17.5 million in 1987-88, well over one-third of its total resources.

As the meeting in Vancouver demonstrated, the Commonwealth not only consults on major world issues but takes concerted action. The meeting launched three important initiatives.

First, it adopted a new plan of action for southern Africa including assistance to the Front Line States and Mozambique. A committee of eight foreign ministers was established, chaired by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was created to provided impetus and guidance in the Commonwealth's struggle against apartheid in South Africa. It has already proved to be a valuable forum in responding to South Africa's recent restrictive actions against opposition groups.

Second, it issued a declaration on world trade to encourage a more liberalized global trading system and reinforce the current round of multilateral trade negotiations. Canada also wrote off the official debt of the poorest Commonwealth African countries.

• (1110)

Third, it endorsed an imaginative scheme for Commonwealth collaboration in distance education based on a Canadian initiative to promote the exchange of information, training, technical assistance and research in the application of distance education techniques at post secondary and vocational levels in the developing Commonwealth countries.

These three initiatives illustrate the breadth of the Commonwealth contribution. The organization we honour today, in which we find common ground and purpose with a billion people in countries large and small around the world, is worthy of our enthusiastic and abiding support.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition takes pleasure in joining with the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State for Senior Citizens in his statement celebrating the Commonwealth and its accomplishments in the past and certainly its aspirations for the future. But we would want to take careful note that the Commonwealth at this point in its history faces perhaps its most serious challenge and a serious difficulty. We should not simply celebrate by fond rhetoric or past memories. We should in our rededication apply the principles upon which the Commonwealth has been built and use it as a way of encouraging this Government through its position of leadership in the Commonwealth to continue to press for the kinds of efforts and initiatives to deal with the ever-growing seriousness of the problem in South Africa.

Each night we see a further escalation of the conflict of oppression and a denial of all the values to which we adhere. It is for that reason as you know, Mr. Speaker, that our own Party has called clearly for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to live up to the commitments he made almost two years ago at the United Nations to take a more forceful and dramatic step in dealing with both economic and diplomatic sanctions.

I noted with some interest that on Saturday night in an address the Prime Minister indicated that the Government is now reviewing its position, something we have called for it to do over the last several weeks. We hope the Government will.

We believe the position that Canada occupies in the Commonwealth is an important one. The steps we take in relation to South Africa will obviously have a major influence and impact upon decisions of other countries in the Commonwealth. We recognize, I think, to be candid, that the leadership of Great Britain at the present time takes a different point of view, but this may be the time for us to demonstrate that the new generation of Commonwealth leadership has a different perspective than that espoused by Mrs. Thatcher. We use this occasion of the statement of the Minister to add our voice of urgency and the sense of need for the Government of Canada through the Commonwealth to demonstrate to the rest of the world that the actions of the South African Government are not to be tolerated and that apartheid must come to an end.

The Minister made reference to both aid and trade as a characteristic of the Commonwealth which should be noted and celebrated. I agree with him again in principle but raise questions about the Government's willingness to follow through on it. I take note that trade with many of the countries in the Commonwealth has fallen drastically over the past three years. Trade with African countries has dropped almost 25 per cent. We have not undertaken the kind of multilateral international trade initiatives that would be required to come to grips with our debt problems in a significant way. More important, we should be creative and imaginative in opening up new trade opportunities with Third World countries, many of which are Commonwealth partners.

I think it is important for this House to note just how drastic has been the shrinkage in trade around the world, other than with the United States. I can only conclude it is because of the particular pre-occupation which the Government has with that trading relationship that the others are being ignored.

I would say as well on the issue of aid that again we applaud the objectives but have questions about the practice. The statement made last week by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) setting out new guidelines for the CIDA programs by the Government of Canada has once again set back even further our intention to raise our foreign aid commitment to 0.7 per cent of GNP. The promise made in the 1984 election has now gone through a successive series of further delays and restraints.

In conclusion, the Commonwealth deserves celebration, but it also deserves clear and forthright action in the area of politics, trade and aid. We would encourage the Government to make better use of the Commonwealth than we believe has been made up to this point in time.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I too would like to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs, (Mr. Hees), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and all Members of the House in observing Commonwealth Day.

New Democrats have a long history of support for global multilateral institutions, including the United Nations and the Commonwealth, because we believe these organizations to be the most effective means at our disposal to address global concerns, whether they be economic, social, military or environmental. However, the Commonwealth is unique.

Born out of conquest and colonialism, the Commonwealth has become a model of international co-operation based on shared values that transcend race, religion and culture. In this respect, the Commonwealth is, perhaps more than any other international institution, an example of how one billion diverse people can put aside their differences and, indeed, the sometimes bitter history they share to work together in the pursuit of common goals.

The Minister has outlined some of the many co-operative endeavours of the Commonwealth, such as the Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation, efforts to liberalize trade, debt restructuring, and the list goes on and on. In many of these areas, Canada has become a Commonwealth leader, some even say that Canada has become the Commonwealth leader. This is a testament to our own commitment as a nation to multiculturalism, tolerance and social justice.

In some areas, however, the Commonwealth has not been as successful as many would like. A case in point is that of South Africa. While the Commonwealth has been one of the sharpest critics of apartheid in South Africa, concrete efforts on the part of the Commonwealth to bring about change in South Africa have been modest. This, of course, is partly due to the very diversity within the Commonwealth that we generally applaud. However, the system of apartheid in South Africa is so abhorrent to the world community, including the Commonwealth, and the prospect of violence is so great, that I call on the Commonwealth to redouble its efforts to bring about meaningful change in South Africa. In this respect, we believe the Canadian Government must provide even greater leadership, both independently and with other Commonwealth countries.

We believe the Commonwealth has demonstrated that the people of the world can put aside differences and work together for a better global future. We also believe the Commonwealth and the world community as a whole can, and should do more in this regard.

We are happy to join with all Canadians in observing Commonwealth Day and we look forward to greater co-operation and concerted global action on the part of the Commonwealth in the future.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-NINTH AND THIRTIETH REPORTS OF THE CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the twenty-ninth and the thirtieth reports, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by residents of Chatham and St. Thomas, Ontario.

The petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conduct a free trade agreement with the United States and, furthermore, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

In view of the fact that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, the petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO THE ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have two duly certified petitions. The first concerns the purchase of nuclear-powered submarines for Canada. The petitioners point out the great danger of accidents while nuclear-armed or nuclear-powered ships are in Canadian ports and point out that this is a threat both to the environment and to Canadian citizens. They call upon the Government not to purchase these nuclear-powered submarines.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, the second petition points out that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in October of 1985, submitted a report to the House recommending that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas under federal jurisdiction. In March of 1986, the Government accepted this report and its recommendations, saying that it would take whatever measures necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibitive ground of discrimination. The Government has yet to introduce significant legislation acting upon these recommendations.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament act to implement the recommendations contained in the report.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of people dealing with the so-called free trade agreement.

These people say that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government with the Americans will remove the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, not other people, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

They suggest—demand, indeed, and I would agree—that we should have an election soon before we implement this so-called free trade agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling two petitions before this honourable House. The first petition was signed mainly by residents of the province of Quebec. The undersigned state that the Government never received a mandate from the Canadian people to enter into a free trade agreement with the United States, and they want the Government to give Canadians a chance to approve or reject this proposal by calling a general election.

DESIGNATION REGARDING NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, the second petition is signed by some 200 residents of the community of Fort Frances in my riding, adding to the more than 1,000 who have now signed petitions on this subject. This petition was signed beginning February 23. It arrived in my office on March 10 and was certified on March 11. It is now being presented on March 14.

Since the Government has committed itself to expediting all such fresh petitions, I would like to present it today with the observation that this petition, petitions against the discriminatory and unfair aspects of the application of the northern residents' tax allowance which, by the operation of the present regulations, simply divides northern Ontario, neighbour between neighbour, on the basis of those who will qualify for this exemption and those who will not qualify.

Of course, the petitioners pray that all communities in Tier 3 ridings be eligible for the northern residents' tax allowance deduction.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. Both have been certified correct according to Standing Order 106. The first is from residents of northwestern Ontario and expresses concern about the application of the northern residents' tax deduction whereby a number of communities with costs higher than those in the major cities have been excluded from this benefit which is substantial for northern residents, and they call for changes in the rules to allow the non-designated communities to be part of the tax deduction.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, the second petition is signed by residents of Saskatchewan. These petitioners are concerned about the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They offer a number of arguments as to why they do not support the deal and they call upon Parliament to dissolve so that the people of Canada can have an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed agreement in a national General Election.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the Ministerial Statement, Government Orders will be extended by 14 minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to add my thoughts and observations to those of my colleagues from other Parties concerning Bill C-82, the Bill proposing the registration of lobbyists in Canada.

This Bill represents the culmination of a legislative movement that has been fermenting and growing within the House of Commons and, indeed, within Canada for some time now. This movement has seen the introduction in the House of several Private Members' Bills dealing with the registration of lobbyists, principally, of course, presented by members of my Party, including one presented by our Party's spokesman for consumer and corporate affairs, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Finally, the pressure of public opinion in respect of legislative initiative led the Government to realize that this was a matter of serious concern and import to a large number of Canadians. Consequently, in September of 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in the context of a fairly wide-ranging statement on public-sector ethics, announced the Government's intention to have lobbyists registered. I think it is well worth the time to excerpt some of the statements the Prime Minister made in that open letter.

Along with instructions to Ministers on the hiring of family members, the conflict of interest post-employment code for public office holders and the experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments, on which the jury is still out since we have only had limited experience of it, the Prime Minister included as point five of his open letter the registration of lobbying activity. In expanding on that theme, he stated that we will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients.

Within the life of the Government there has certainly been bad publicity surrounding the activities of lobbyists. However, let us not forget that in previous Liberal Governments similar activity took place, attracting similar publicity, and justly so, because there were often cases where it was felt that people, for hire or for reward, had undertaken a key role in influencing legislation, its design or structuring programs, their drafting and implementation, and even the timing of regulations in some cases.

My Party is in broad agreement with the legislation the Government has introduced in Bill C-82. We are glad that the time has finally come when Canada will have a regime of registration of lobbyists that will allow Canadians comparable access to the sort of information that our cousins in the U.S. have had for many years; that is, information on who is trying to influence the Government, who is drawing a salary, remuneration or reward for their activities in trying to influence the process of Government, and who is buying the services of these lobbyists. They are known as lobbyists because of the tradition that they operate within the lobbies of this very Chamber. We will know who is paying them and what are their objectives.

First and foremost I think we should say that our Party is quite dubious about the value of the Tier I and Tier II formats that this Bill establishes. We would like to see all lobbyists disgorge the sort of information being demanded from Tier I lobbyists, who we might see as the full-time professional, free-lance lobbyists, those who are always up for hire, so to speak, for sale to the highest bidder, compared with the Tier II lobbyists who are largely those instructed by their employers, professional associations, corporate business and trade associations, to seek not only specific legislative initiatives but also to broadly influence the climate of opinion, the focus of debate, the movement and interplay of ideas within Government and Parliament. Some of those lobbyists would have the facility, indeed, in some cases to be more influential than those who move from client to client or who, like many of the leading lobbying firms, have a number of clients on retainer and draw specific fees for specific assignments. Canadians are entitled to know who is doing what, who they are doing it for, who they are talking to, and how much money is changing hands on account of this lobbying.

Lobbying, of course, is a practice which has always been carried on, but in recent years it has become professionalized, commercialized, and much more organized as well as much more recognized. Some 40 or 50 years ago people might undertake to act for some nominal recognition or compensation by way of intermediary in an age when communications were much less developed. When contact on a direct basis with a Member of Parliament or a member of the Government was certainly much more difficult than it is now, people might undertake to meet the Minister or Member of Parliament or even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) within the lobby of the House and raise the concern of an individual or the legislative request of a group or body. Now, despite the fact that it is surely easier than it ever has been for the ordinary citizen, company, trade union or association, provincial Government or professional agency to contact members of the Government or organizations within our Parliament, we have this professionalization, and perhaps that is a word I am using a little loosely, but certainly this commercialization of the lobbying process which seems to have no end to it, which seems to be continually growing.

It was alleged back in 1985, and this may have something to do with the introduction of this legislation, that a company which has already been named here accepted a commission of some $2,000 to arrange a meeting between a fisherman and the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. This is an example, surely, of the type of lobbying which really should be eliminated, along with a recognition that there are indeed legitimate types of lobbying and very legitimate lobbying objectives.

It seems that most lobbying occurs in secrecy. That is one of the problems this Bill is designed to address. Academic literature indicates that the bureaucracy is the subject of roughly 40 per cent of lobbying activity, and Canadians have to examine whether or not that constitutes an undercutting of the role of Parliament in the policy process. To the extent that Members of Parliament are lobbied, they are often not aware of the role of the individual who makes the contact as a paid lobbyist on a commercial basis. They are often not informed or not aware as to how representative the client group doing the lobbying indeed is.

The American experience is instructive, not simply because of the common language we use or indeed the many similarities between our cultures and our geographic proximity. It is instructive because it is the best documented, the most obvious, and arguably the most widespread example of the lobbying phenomena that the world affords. To quote a former American Senator, Mr. Abraham Ribicoff, in 1975 he said that to protect the democratic process itself, and assure public confidence in it, the lobbyist must work in the open. His work must not be cloaked in secrecy. Secrecy inevitably spreads public suspicion. That has been the objective of the NDP in putting forward Bills on this topic and in addressing this Bill. Lobbying activity should be brought out in the open.

However, I think we must emphasize that a lobby registry is not aimed at policing or restricting access to Government, but merely to make sure those interested in knowing the nature of this access can have access to the information and can know the lines along which paid commercial lobbying within the country is proceeding.

We have had one comprehensive study of lobbying which proposed a model for a lobby registry. I am talking of course of the unanimous report submitted in 1987 by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which studied the issue for approximately one year. It visited lobbying registries in various parts of the U.S., including Washington and Sacramento.

We also have to look at indirect lobbying. Members of Parliament, I am sure all of us, will be familiar with the recent case where apparently original letters were distributed very widely by the tobacco companies or their proxies so that these could be signed by individuals and submitted to give the appearance of a mass campaign. The literary style, the use of a limited number of type faces, the structure and phrasing and contextualization of the return addresses, and indeed the addresses these were sent to, soon gave away this mass mailing lobbying campaign. I think we should be looking very hard at the nature of those campaigns and whether they constitute a form of lobbying.

The proposed lobby registry could be given much sharper teeth with which to enforce this legislation. It is conceivable that the fines provided for in the legislation, because of the potential profit in the business, could simply be seen as a form of toll-gating to stay in the game. It is conceivable, after all, that lobbying firms could be organized on a partnership basis, could form and reform in order to get around any strictures put on them. Although, of course, a challenge on the basis of freedom of expression is foreseeable, the Government has to protect the integrity of the governmental and democratic processes, complex as these have become.

Another defect that we see is the lack of power for the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to investigate the information which he or she is given. We believe that the lack of investigatory power would be a handicap and that the ADRG should have the opportunity to review and verify any information that is given.

We have often heard opposition to new legislative initiatives on the grounds of the bureaucracy that would be created by them. I am glad to say that it appears, from the United States experience, that the operation of a lobby registry should not be a major imposition upon the bureaucracy and should not lead to the creation of a large bureaucratic machine. Apparently the American lobby registry in Washington, handling information for over 10,000 lobbyists, is staffed by only three people, which gives us a good idea of what can be done in the computer age.

As I have said previously, this Bill does not provide for prohibition of commercial lobbying, nor should it. However, there is one form of commercial lobbying at which I think we should look very hard to determine whether we want to see it continued; that is, lobbying on the basis of contingency fee whereby if the lobbyist is successful in obtaining a certain conclusion the fee will be larger than if the lobbyist is unsuccessful, in which case the lobbyist may get no fee.

It is to be noted that within our legal system contingency fees are not permitted on that basis and we think they should be prohibited in the practice of lobbying as well.

We see this piece of legislation providing for the registration of lobbyists as essential, not only in buttressing the integrity of the democratic and governmental process but also in allowing the continuance of the legitimate activities of commercial lobbyists and the legitimate paid activities that they will undertake.

With regard to structuring the lobbying legislation, there is one final thing that I would like to note; that is, once a lobbying registration system is in use it appears that there is very little pressure from the lobbying industry or lobbying community, if you like, to drop the system. It appears that it is something to which the industry is well able to adapt, that given the lighter public scrutiny this is in some cases, and in the cases of the longest established operations, seen as a benefit in that there is no longer a need for the light of suspicion to be cast on them when the information is freely, publicly, and openly available as to who their clients are, what objectives they are seeking, and who they are influencing or seeking to influence within the Government.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, we see faults and deficiencies within this piece of legislation, but we see it as legislation which Canada needs in order to protect the integrity of the process of government and the operations of democracy in an era when lobbying is becoming far more prevalent, far more pervasive and, we may opine, far more successful.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I too want to avail myself of this opportunity to make some comments on Bill C-82. I join with my colleague who has just spoken in indicating that we in the Liberal Party as well endorse Bill C-82 in principle. Indeed, it is a giant step in the right direction to begin the lobbying process.

Veteran Members of this House, certainly those with more experience than I, will recall that over the last few decades various private Members in all three Parties have made attempts to see legislation pass this House requiring the registration of lobbyists. Indeed, this Bill is long overdue.

Since I have some concerns about this Bill, and in order that my comments not be misunderstood, let me say that the Liberal Party is prepared to have this Bill passed at this stage of debate in order for it to go to committee. It is our hope that in committee some improvements can be made to Bill C-82 by all-Party consensus. It is my understanding, although I was not a member of the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which worked on this, that indeed all three Parties worked well to produce the recommendations out of which flowed the legislation that is now before us.

We do have some problems with the Bill. As has been said by earlier speakers, the Bill sets up two categories of lobbyists. Basically I do not have much problem with one of the categories. I am not one of those who believes that every single person who wants to make representations to government on behalf of a particular employee group or association which they represent must, in massive detail, provide information to a registry in Ottawa. However, with regard to the registration of lobbyists of the kind which are best personified by the Frank Moores operation in Ottawa, which have evolved over the last couple of years, and indeed there are others, I think this Bill does not go far enough.

Let me begin by talking about the registration process for lobbyists contained in this Bill. Most Canadians who are watching this debate are saying that it is a good thing to make lobbyists register, that the people who traditionally operate in the shadowed, smokey back rooms will now have to come out into the full glaring light of day and register. They are saying that that is a good thing.

Canadians should know that there is no provision in the Bill that lobbyists register who they are making contact with and on whose behalf. There is no provision in the Bill to give the designated registrar the authority to check the information that is being registered. In other words, it is an act of faith. Information is provided and there is no mechanism or authority in this Bill to check the information which is being registered.

There is a larger problem. The Bill recommends that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General be the authority empowered to hold this information, be the registrar for lobbyists. That is a very impressive sounding title and Canadians should be asking who is the Assistant Deputy Registrar General. Is it someone like the Auditor General, an independent officer of Parliament who is not directly under the direction or authority of the Government or the Opposition? Is that who the Assistant Deputy Registrar General is? No, that is not who he is. He is not like the Auditor General.

The Assistant Deputy Registrar General is a civil servant. He is an employee of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. His job, indeed his career path, is not independent of the Government, his Minister, or political consideration. His job, his career path, is directly linked, or at least can be directly linked to the happiness or unhappiness of his political masters.

Why am I raising this point about who this authority is going to be?

• (1150)

Canadians will recall that a few months ago the present Assistant Deputy Registrar General stated that certain Conservative Party moneys made available to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were subject to the conflict of interest guidelines and should have been registered. This statement was made on Friday and headlines throughout Canada were that a Minister of the Crown, in this case the Prime Minister, had not complied with the conflict of interest guidelines. By Monday the Prime Minister produced in the House of Commons a letter by the same Assistant Deputy Registrar General saying that there had been no violation of the conflict of interest guidelines. That rather dramatic conversion did not really upset Members of the House. In fairness to the gentleman involved, perhaps upon reflection he had come to the conclusion that his statements on Friday were ill conceived and, therefore, clarified the matter on Monday.

However, what did upset Parliament and every right thinking Canadian was that, despite repeated requests for a clarification, a briefing or explanation for the ruling of the Assistant Deputy Registrar General on Monday, he refused to give one. When we asked to which clause and which section of the conflict of guidelines we should refer to understand the dramatically different ruling he gave from the one three days earlier, we were met with silence. In the interest of fairness, I personally called this gentleman on the telephone but was merely told that he could not comment.

I was not going to speak on this Bill until I read in the Bill that the authority in whom shall be vested all of the information required under Bill C-82 is the same Assistant Deputy Registrar General. I have a serious problem with the Bill in those circumstances.

I do not question the integrity or the honesty of the gentleman who holds the job. In fairness to him, I suggest that he is in a difficult position because he does not have the protection of an independent, arm's length relationship with the Government like that held by the Auditor General, an ability to be accountable only to Parliament as a whole rather than to any particular political party.

The gentleman who must hold this job is a public servant. According to this Bill, a civil servant is being asked to assume a quasi judicial authority and to exercise a measure of independence. Yet this is made impossible by the fact that he is indeed a public servant who is dependent upon the goodwill of his Minister and the Government that he serves.

Therefore, my first point is that the authority in whom shall reside the information and the responsibility to police this legislation cannot be a public servant, no matter how flamboyant his title. The authority in whom the information required under the lobbying Bill shall reside must be an officer of Parliament who is independent of any consideration to the Government, the Opposition, whether Conservative, New Democratic or Liberal. Only then can Parliament and, more important, the people of Canada be assured that the registration of the information provided and the enforcement of the rules will be above board. I believe this is a matter that Members of the House will want to address and improve when this Bill goes to committee.

There are a number of other fundamental flaws in the Bill that I believe Members of all Parties will want to address, because I believe there is goodwill among Members of every Party to pass legislation that works well.

There is no provision in the Bill to deal with the question of fees of lobbyists for activities they conduct on behalf of a client. Canadians should be aware of an interesting new wrinkle that has evolved in the last few years with respect to the activities of lobbyists. One originally thought of lobbyists as people who would accept a fee to go to a Minister of the Crown of the government of the day and make one's case as best they could, to make one's views known about a piece of legislation, to request new legislation or amendments to current legislation in an attempt to influence the decision a government might make in a matter of national or public importance. This is quite acceptable, providing those lobbyists are registered.

However, the new practice, which is best personified by the work of the Frank Moores' operation in Ottawa, involves contingency fees. For example, Mr. Moores may tell a client that he will take on a case for $1,000 but, if successful, will then be paid another $10,000. This practice means that not only is there a payment for supposedly professional services to make the case in a lobbying effort, there is an additional payment if that effort is successful. I believe that most Canadians are not aware of this practice and simply think of contingency fees as another Ottawa buzz word. Contingency fees means that one pays the lobbyists for making the case and pays much more if the lobbyist wins the case.

Surely a contingency fee system in which a lobbyist may be paid tenfold his initial fee for successfully making the case on behalf of an individual or corporation is a temptation to be less than forthright in those lobbying efforts. Suddenly, the lobbyist no longer uses all his professional skills for a certain fee. Lobbyists now face the prospect of making substantially more money if their lobbying is successful. I submit that such a system in which substantial amounts can be made—perhaps $500,000 or even $5 million—creates an atmosphere and the potential for corruption, and the exchange of rewards or gifts becomes much more likely. It is not now simply someone doing his best to make a case, but someone who knows that the financial reward is fantastic if he is successful and the temptation to do whatever is necessary to get the right decision will rise dramatically. The whole matter of contingency fees which is being practised, as I say, foremost by the Frank Moores firm, but perhaps by others, is not dealt with in this Bill.

There is another matter of great concern with respect to Bill C-82, at which I think Members, particularly those who made the recommendations out of which flowed Bill C-82, will want to have a very serious look. In essence, the Bill sets up a system in which the only person required to register as a lobbyist is the individual who, for a fee or, in the case I just mentioned, a contingency fee—and that should be made illegal—makes a representation to the Government. That is a lobbyist, someone who is making a case. That allows a broad group of people to escape having to register as having had a lobbyist in Ottawa. Unless the lobbyist is actually making a case on behalf of a client he is not required to register.

What is the problem, you ask, Madam Speaker? What about the firm which hires a lobbyist not to make a case to the federal Government on its behalf but to merely solicit information? They are not asking for anything to be changed or for a piece of legislation, nor are they asking for an amendment to a decision. They only want information. For example, a real estate speculator hires a lobbyist, giving him a yearly fee. He does not want any lobbying done. That lobbyist, who is now not required to register because he is not making a case for anyone, in the course of his business discovers that an airport is to be built at a particular site or that a new highway is going to be re-routed in a certain way. He gives that information to the real estate firm which promptly goes out and buys all the land in the vicinity, realizing a huge profit on that insider information.

Under the provisions of this Bill, because no representation was made, that lobby effort is not required to be registered. Parliament has no right to know that a particular individual, who made a profit because of access to insider information, was being represented or had a lobbyist acting on his behalf in the nation's capital. The Bill is specifically worded to say that a lobbyist must only report when he is acting in a representative capacity. There is nothing about an advisory capacity. There is nothing in the Bill with respect to a lobbyist who provides insider information, all of which flows from the individuals, groups, departments and directors of Parliament Hill. He is exempt.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, and to Members, that that kind of lobbying, the indirect kind of lobbying, the exchange of information kind of lobbying, is perhaps more potentially susceptible to illegal practices and fantastic profits because of privileged information than is direct lobbying where it is up front. That is another area which I believe the committee has to consider and make amendments.

I said at the beginning that my Party and I support this Bill. We support it because a baby must learn to walk before it can run. This Bill takes us into the process so that we can begin to walk. Certainly, if it is to be a good Bill, there is room, and I hope there is the will, to substantially amend it at committee stage.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I was following the Member's speech with interest. Would he indicate, beyond what he has already indicated, what further changes he would like made to the Bill?

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Madam Speaker, there are a number of other changes I would like to see made to the Bill. First, the Bill does not require, as currently drafted, that there be a record of official contacts. No record whatsoever is required to be kept in the event at a later date of some questioning or some unusual circumstances arising with respect to a particular Government transaction. We are not going to be able to go back in the records to see who was acting for whom and what contacts were made because that is not required in the Bill.

The Bill has no provisions to stop a lobbyist from registering even after that person has been fined or jailed for making false statements. In other words, there is no provision in the Bill to prohibit someone who, having once violated—for that matter, many times—not only the spirit of the legislation but in fact the detail of the legislation, from subsequently registering and acting as a lobbyist. I think that is another matter at which we would want to take a close look. Those are two other areas of concern.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MOTION TO ENDORSE THE MOTION OF MR. MULRONEY

The House proceeded to the consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That this House endorses the adoption of the motion, on Monday, March 7, 1988, of the Prime Minister for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-113, An Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since the motion of the Minister of State for Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) received unanimous consent Friday, and considering comments made by Members of the various Parties in the House, we have a clear indication that the House wishes to consider this motion concerning Bill C-113, a motion about which I would normally have serious reservations.

[English]

It is a basic rule of the parliamentary system that a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative cannot be questioned again but must stand as a judgment of the House. This is quoted in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 150, citation 416.

[Translation]

The Chair certainly does not intend to oppose the will of the House with respect to a procedure it has unanimously decided to follow, but it is my duty to make it quite clear to all Members and to the public watching these proceedings that today's debate on this special motion should not be seen as a precedent for future proceedings in the House.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this important Bill for western Canada. I am also appreciative of the fact that this debate today is somewhat unconventional. I think it is important, though, that all sides of the House do agree that we have the opportunity to debate more fully a law which is so important for western Canada.

Our Party is in support of the principle of the Bill. We have long been calling for diversification of the western economy. We are in support of the principle of decentralization of the powers for doing this in western Canada. However, we question the Government's commitment. How seriously is the Government taking the whole question of western diversification? I will be looking more closely at the fact that only $1.2 billion is estimated to be spent on this initiative in the next five years.

From the time of Confederation there have been policies in Canada to encourage regional development. They have been an important part of Canadian politics. Even the Constitution Act of 1867 called for the building of the Intercolonial Railway, which was an important regional development initiative at that time.

John A. Macdonald's national policy, when it was fully developed, had not only the element of a tariff structure to encourage industry formation in central Canada, but it also called for the building of the CPR as a link to the Pacific and the developing of the Pacific coast. As well there was the Dominion Lands Act which looked to the opening up of the Prairies. We had the development of the Crow's Nest rate to help agriculture on the Prairies.

In spite of these initiatives that have been taken from time to time in the last 20 years we have become very much aware of continuing disparities. Eastern Canada suffers from lower wages and from higher rates of unemployment than other parts of Canada. Western Canada has had a boom and bust economy. Indeed, many Members might recall the famous analogy that Tommy Douglas used about Canada being like a cow. He said it was fed in the West, milked in central Canada and God only knows what it is doing in the Maritimes, in eastern Canada.

Patricia Marchak, a UBC economist, has pointed to some of the problems in the economy of British Columbia. She points to our great dependence upon the forest industry. She says that the relative positions of primary metals, metal fabricating, chemicals, printing and publishing, foods, non-metallic minerals and electric products have declined in the last few years. The positions of transportation equipment, non-electric machinery and, of course, petroleum products have improved. Others have remained constant.

She states:

> Considering the enormous wealth created in British Columbia during this decade, the expansion of timberlands under production, and the amount of forestry products exported the growth in secondary industries is not impressive.

She also stated:

> Signally missing from the regional landscape are firms manufacturing pulpmill machinery, chemicals, and computer equipment: all high-value, technologically advanced equipment and supplies for the pulping sector . . . Pulpmill machinery and computer equipment, however, are important . . . Total employment in secondary manufacturing was estimated by Statistics Canada to be 77,000—6 per cent of the labour force.
> Relative to the total labour force, workers in metal fabricating and transportation equipment combined were 1 per cent. Chemicals, machinery-industries, electrical products, and non-metallic mineral products—the other sectors that might be expected to generate new employment in a forestry-dependent region—were negligible as employers—
> The same is true of consumer products unrelated to forestry. Apart from food and beverages, B.C. does not have a substantial consumer products industry. There are small companies producing textiles, clothing, furniture and fixtures, leather goods, and other, more miscellaneous goods but the vast majority of household goods and personal consumer items purchased are manufactured elsewhere.

Professor Marchak points to the dangers of depending upon a staples economy. She states that the so-called theories of comparative advantage might work to the interests of the companies that are developing the resource and exploiting the resource. If there is an international downturn, then they can take their profits and move them elsewhere. This type of dependence upon single industries, this dependence upon basic resources, has not served the people of western Canada well.

Perhaps this is as good a way as any for us to understand the continuing and growing bitter debate in British Columbia between those people who are concerned about resource extraction and those who are concerned about questions such as environmental protection or land claims. What we have in British Columbia is a great deal of pressure upon a resource base that has been exploited over the last number of years without too much thought for the future. We are now getting back to logging and mining in areas that should never have been logged or mined. These are areas that are ecologically sensitive. They are areas that are sacred and of symbolic as well as economic importance to the aboriginal peoples of British Columbia.

Because we have not taken advantage of the wealth that has been created over the past 100 years by the exploitation of the forest industry and the mining industry, which has been largely hived off to other areas, and because we have not diversified, we as a province continue to be highly dependent upon those extractive resources. We are now moving into areas in which there are great social conflicts. Thus it is important that we have regional development policies that address this type of boom and bust economy in western Canada.

The problems of regional development in western Canada are different from those in Atlantic Canada. The Government recognizes this when it talks about a western economic diversification fund. What we need is economic diversification. Over the past number of years different Governments have tried different approaches to the whole business of economic diversification. In a study that was prepared for the Macdonald Commission by Norie, Simeon and Krasnick, entitled Federalism and the Economic Union of Canada, the authors have summarized the different approaches. They speak of three continuing tensions in the area of the economic development.

First, Canadians have never been able to come up with theories or policies, or even projects, that appeared to work. Policy has staggered from being oriented toward sectors, as in ARDA, to being oriented to area economic development more generally, including adjustment out of the region—that is helping people to move away from depressed areas—to orientation toward growth poles, ADA and DREE. Programs have ranged from adjustment assistance to infrastructure grants, to tax breaks, to direct subsidies, to regionally differentiated investment and employment credits.

Second, we have never settled on the proper relation between federal and provincial responsibilities for regional economic development. Early federal efforts were highly centralized and tended to ignore provincial wishes. During the GDA period almost the reverse was true. The federal Government paid the tab for province building. The pendulum again swung in the opposite direction for a brief period, and today it remains in motion.

Finally, the federal Government has never managed to link its regional development responsibilities satisfactorily with its broader national economic management role. The best manifestation of its failure is the constant rearranging of the federal bureaucracy, first to bring regional interests into a separate department, then to make all departments consider regional implications implicitly, and finally to drift back to the single ministry concept.

So what we have had over the last number of years is a constant shifting from one kind of program to another. Sometimes the shifts have been more apparent than real. Sometimes they have been real shifts. We have moved back and forth between talking about regions to talking about provinces and so on. It remains to be seen whether the initiative that we have in Bill C-113 to establish the western diversification fund will come to grips with these problems representing a long term, sustained commitment to deal with the problems of the needs of the western economy for diversification.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that previous efforts at regional development have not worked and that we cannot simply solve the problem by throwing money at it. However, the federal-provincial task force on regional development assessment, prepared for the First Ministers' Economic Conference last November, pointed out that the resources supplied to regional development over the past 25 years have been small in relative terms. We have not thrown that much money at the problem.

Expenditures for Canada were in the order of 3 per cent of total federal economic expenditures and are now less than that. Greater expenditures could well have had significantly greater results. Regional development efforts in the 1970s were successful in the context of the amount of resources applied to them. In other words, we got what we paid for. Under the new diversification fund we will get what we pay for. If we do not put much money in, we will not get very much out of it.

It has also been shown that the actions of federal line Departments can have a very much greater impact than specific regional development programs because of their greater expenditure base. The frequently expressed negative view of regional development programs is due, to a great extent, to the expectations raised by such programs. Results must be judged on the resources used to achieve them rather than on total needs.

We are concerned that there is a great deal of hype about western diversification and the fact that the Government is decentralizing and establishing an office in Edmonton, as well as regional offices in Vancouver, Saskatoon, and Winnipeg. There is a build-up of expectation. However, when we look for a commitment of funds, we find that the commitment is not there. The sum of $1.2 billion over five years amounts to some $60 million per year for each of the four western provinces. It is not really very much money.

In 1977 the Economic Council of Canada pointed out that even the highly controversial program of incentive grants to influence companies to locate in the Atlantic area had had modest success. Again I say that we get some return for the money we are prepared to spend, but we cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. If the Government is not prepared to spend money in this area, it cannot expect that there will be significant successes in terms of development.

Since the 1981-82 recession we have seen dramatic growth in the economy of central Canada, particularly that of southern Ontario. The regions of Canada have been much slower in recovering. Indeed, in parts of Canada it would be a mistake to speak of recovery at all. In my area on Vancouver Island the number of unemployed, according to the latest jobless figures, is exactly the same as it was in September, 1984, so we cannot speak of a recovery.

When we look at Bill C-113 we are concerned about the lack of a clear government strategy in terms of what it is really encouraging the western economy to do. It talks about flexibility. Certainly our Party supports the concept of flexibility in the way in which the diversification fund should be applied. As admirable as flexibility is as a goal and a means, it should not be used as justification for lack of a clear policy. We do not see that clear policy in what the Government has announced.

Over the last 3.5 years we have seen an increase in the percentage of DRIE funds going to central Canada and we have seen 47 per cent of all jobs created going to Ontario. The Government seems to be letting the economy drift and is now making a modest effort at diversification, but we do not see the required commitment.

Last summer the New Democratic Party, led by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), released its own paper on economic diversification for the West. I should like to refer to some of the points that we made.

First, we should be adding value to western resources. There are many opportunities for creating new industries and new jobs in upgrading or adding value to our natural resource exports. Of course, a good example of that would be the lumber industry, as well as the petrochemical and food processing sectors.

Second, we should do more to serve the needs of the resource industry. Earlier I referred to Patricia Marchak who pointed out how complex machinery used in our pulp mills, as well as a great deal of machinery used in our mining and logging industries, is not produced in western Canada but comes from abroad. The West is a major user of machinery and equipment, but we do not produce it ourselves. If we developed industries to serve the resource industries in our part of the country, if we developed the kinds of industries which produced pulp mill, logging, and mining equipment, we could hope that in time these industries would not only be serving local markets but would be expanding and developing into important export industries in their own right.

We also need support for the manufacturing industry in the West. The Government promised to increase procurement in the West. Quite frankly it has a shameful record in that regard. If we look at 1981-82, we see that 15.5 per cent of government procurements came from the four western provinces. In 1982-83, that declined to 14.7 per cent. In 1983-84, it was a disaster as far as the West was concerned; only 9.8 per cent of procurements were in western Canada. They increased to 13.9 per cent in 1984-85, declined in 1985-86 to 12.8 per cent, and declined again in 1986-87 to 11.5 per cent.

The Government says that it will do something about it, but it has not set any targets or goals. If it were really serious about it, it would be prepared to show its commitment by setting out some kind of affirmative action program for procurement in western Canada. It could set targets and say that it would work toward reaching the proper percentage of purchases in western Canada in proportion to the population by a certain time. Instead, there is a vague commitment toward procurement policies despite the sorry record of the Government over the last 3.5 years.

It also talked about creating new industries and jobs. Our study pointed out that some of the historic disadvantages of the West, such as long distances from markets and so on, are disappearing because of the development of new industries and high technology. Here is something important in my own area, an area with great natural scenery and a very attractive climate. We should be building upon that kind of resource in attracting new non-polluting industries.

• (1230)

When we look at the expenses in British Columbia, we have to question whether or not the Government is taking seriously new initiatives, or if it is simply using the $1.2 billion to plug loopholes that should have been met from other departmental expenses.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I would like to follow up his last suggestion of environmentally sensitive and good industries. Surely that is the way of the future. He and I are both from British Columbia and we share a real sensitivity to the environment because it is so good. I am sure all Hon. Members will not like it but I can't resist telling everyone that the tulips are out in my backyard in Vancouver. I have an old convertible and the top is down already. Could the Member follow up about money being spent and how it was spent from departmental funds. Also, could he comment on the kind of future industries that he would like to see in British Columbia.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, first, the kind of industries we would like to see in the future include the high tech sector. The kind of future industries I am looking for for Vancouver Island are those which take advantage of rapid transportation by air that will not be expensive in weight and volume. On that basis, one of our fundamental economic needs is to preserve the environment of Vancouver Island as a good place for people to live and, therefore, as a good place for industries to locate.

With regard to the money that has already been spent, let us look at three expenses the Government took out of the $1.2 billion last year before the fund got fully operational. First was $79 million over five years for South Moresby Park. Members on all sides of the House supported the creation of South Moresby Park. But should that money necessarily have come out of the Western Diversification Fund?

Second, there was $9.5 million for shakes and shingles market development. The shakes and shingles economy of British Columbia was hit by the 35 per cent tariff imposed by our friends in the United States. In co-operation with the shakes and shingles manufacturers, the Western Diversification Fund is putting $9.5 million trying to expand that market again and perhaps find other markets.

What about the $53 million for the salmon enhancement project? It is this program that I want to question because that $53 million will be spent over the next five years. It will be added to $154.3 million spread over five years, money that will come from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the Salmonoid Enhancement Program has been the responsibility of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. During this last year the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) went to the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Regional Development to tap into the policy reserve funds to the tune of some $50 million per year for the next five years. He was not given that money from the policy reserve fund from where it should have come. Instead, money was made available from the Western Diversification Fund. It is less money than the Minister was seeking, and it is just enough to barely maintain the current project levels. It is important funding.

The Salmonoid Enhancement Program is important to British Columbia. But is there some kind of a hoax being perpetrated on us? This money should have come from the regular Estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or from policy reserve funds. Instead, the Government makes a great show of announcing extra funding. It is called new money from the Western Diversification Fund but it is going back into what should have come from a line department. This use of the Western Diversification Fund to meet commitments that should be made from other departments, is, I think, a hoax.

While we support the concept and the principle of this Bill, we have to ask whether or not the Government is really committed. It seems the Government is not prepared to put its money where its mouth is in this whole area.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. The so-called free trade agreement with the United States has also to be considered in western diversification and regional growth. There is a body of opinion in British Columbia reflected this weekend in the polls shown in The Vancouver Sun. People do not really understand the free trade agreement, although they think it will go through. Although there tends to be a split, the majority are in favour of it. Interestingly enough, a huge majority feel the Americans will benefit by the deal.

I am concerned that a lot of British Columbians do not understand that we never won what British Columbians hoped we would win in the free trade agreement, namely, secure access to the American market. An economy like British Columbia's is an undiversified economy, really, an export economy of raw materials. We will be giving away control of our energy resources and threatening our sovereignty by it, but we are going to take this leap of faith. We should at least have been given a guarantee of access to the American market for our fish and forest products, mining and so on. I do not think we got that in the deal. In fact, I know we do not have it in the deal because I have read it. Congress can still pass countervailing laws that will do the same thing again as was done to our lumber and shakes and shingles industry. Does the Hon. Member have any comment whether the two are intertwined as I think they are?

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, very briefly, I agree 100 per cent with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Not only that, but the western diversification initiative itself along with the regional development program for Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario can be made the subject of controversy over the next five to seven years under this agreement. Canada and the United States have to sit down, bargain and horse trade as to what constitutes an acceptable or unacceptable subsidy. Although from the point of view of western Canada this $1.2 billion is insufficient to help us diversify, in the eyes of the Americans it might seem to be a great deal of money for them to look at as an unjustified subsidy and, therefore, subject to countervail. The Hon. Member is quite right, that we do not have the kind of secure access under the trade agreement that was promised to us by the Prime Minister.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, when the Bill was called this morning again, as you explained it, I was doing some research on the western Canadian economy. I cannot pass up this opportunity to make some comments about a matter so important for the 7.3 million people who live in the West today. First, I would like to comment about the point my friend from Vancouver—Kingsway made on the trade agreement with which I will deal at some length in a moment.

• (1240)

In view of the fact that there is now an election campaign in Manitoba, I wonder if any of my friends from the New Democratic Party know that Manitoba has a payroll tax under the present New Democratic Government. If a payroll is greater than a certain amount, I believe a 2 per cent or 2.5 per cent tax is paid. If my friends from the New Democratic Party could think of one device that is more anti-employment and more harmful to the creation of new jobs in a province, I wish they would tell me. To my knowledge, Manitoba is the only province in Canada which has such a tax. It is the only—

Mr. Waddell: It has a lower unemployment rate than your province.

Mr. Kilgour: I will come to that in a moment. One wonders why the New Democratic Party is at 25 per cent in Manitoba now. I gather it will go lower. One of the reasons for that is that payroll tax which has made it harder for people to create new jobs in Manitoba. I can assure the Hon. Members from the New Democratic Party, as a former Manitoban, that Manitoba has done well in spite of the New Democratic Party's policies, not because of them.

Mr. Axworthy: And Filmon is going to keep it.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has made a comment on behalf of the Liberal Party. It has been so long since there has been a Liberal Party in Manitoba that even my family used to belong to it.

The labour force information that came out this morning gives us figures for the various parts of the country. We see, for example, that Oshawa's unemployment rate is 4.4 per cent. Taking a quick look, I see that that is the lowest figure for any city in Canada. Why is that? Is it because of the Auto Pact, the Auto Pact that will be enshrined in the trade agreement? If the United States wanted to cancel the Auto Pact, which it could do with a year's notice, it would have to cancel the entire trade agreement. That is a point that Liberals and New Democrats might contemplate.

In the West, the unemployment rate in Winnipeg is 8.5 per cent in Regina it is 6.2 per cent, in Saskatoon it is 12.6 per cent, in Calgary it is 8.0 per cent, in Edmonton it is 11.6 per cent, in Vancouver it is 9.7 per cent and in Victoria it is 11.9 per cent. Let us compare that with Toronto which has an unemployment rate of 3.9 per cent.

We cannot have a united country when the unemployment rate is higher in Newfoundland, New Brunswick and western Canada than it is elsewhere. That is why all of us in western Canada want to do something about creating more opportunities for young and for middle-aged people. That is the way to build a country with strong, diversified economies in the Maritimes and western Canada.

The old national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald and Wilfrid Laurier created strong, diversified, stable economies in central Canada. Those of us in outer Canada now feel it is time we had a new national policy which would do the same things for the other eight provinces and the North. I believe that this Bill is a step in the direction a new national policy would be required to take.

It was asked whether or not the trade agreement will help the West. Hon. Members will notice that three of the four western premiers are strongly in favour of the proposed trade agreement. I trust that on April 26, four premiers from western Canada will be in favour of it.

Business groups, farming groups and western Canadians everywhere believe that this is our chance to have an opportunity, not just for western Canadians but for all Canadians, to have more stability, security and discipline in our trading relationships. I wonder if Hon. Members know that between two million and three million Canadians depend upon access to the U.S. market for their livelihoods. Based on the fact that about one-third of the population is in the West, by my arithmetic, about 600,000 western Canadians are dependent upon the U.S. market for their pay cheques. In that sense, whether one is a pensioner, an artist or a provincial public employee, the trade agreement and the promise it offers for the creation and security of employment is very important to all westerners and to all Canadians, in my submission.

Western Canada's major exports to the United States include a good share of the almost $3 billion in agricultural products of all sorts sold by Canadian farmers in the U.S. last year. Our grains, beef, pork, natural gas, oil and potash all have faced barriers. The trade agreement will give us more secure access than we would have otherwise.

Do Hon. Members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties really think that tearing up the agreement, something which both of them have promised to do, will do anything for their constituents or for western Canada? As someone said the other day, as soon as one of them were to tear up the trade agreement, the new American administration, whether under President Bush or President Dukakis, would simply say, "I have something to tear up for you," and that would be the Auto Pact. I think the support for the trade agreement is strong in western Canada among all thoughtful men and women who want to improve the standard of living in our regions.

It seems to me that the models we should be looking at for western Canada might well be Switzerland, West Germany and Japan. Each of those countries has achieved a high general standard of living and relatively full employment throughout their respective countries by producing a range of high-quality finished products which are exported with major marketing skill and with first-class service to customers. All three populations know that success today in the increasingly interdependent world economy depends on intelligence, quality control and technology, and they act accordingly. I feel that this Bill will move us in this direction, and therefore I think it is one which all Hon. Members should support.

In the West, economic life has historically depended upon things like fish, fur, wheat, beef, forest products, coal, oil, gas and minerals. All of these resource products continue to play a substantial role in our economy. The prosperity of architects, teachers and public employees all depend in a very real way on how these resource products are doing.

Let me give Hon. Members an example of the way one northwestern Canadian put it. Not too long ago he said of a typical Yukon mining development, that the ore goes to Tokyo, the profits to Toronto, the taxes to Ottawa, the jobs to Vancouver, and they are left with a hole in the ground which, if the federal Government gives permission, they could use as a garbage dump. When coal moves to Japan, it comes back as Toyotas or other Japanese cars. Unemployment in that country is virtually non-existent whereas unemployment in the West, as I have indicated before and as we all know, is far too high.

Hon. Members will know that the current prospects for some of the resource sectors such as grains and oilseeds are not as promising as we would like them to be. Therefore, we must come up with a new strategy that will help us create jobs in other sectors.

As an example of what I hope the western diversification strategy will do, I would point to the case of an alfalfa heater which is being built in my own constituency. I understand that it has a market in Nebraska and someone will pay about half a million dollars for that unit. Someone else in south Edmonton is trying to develop a super computer.

As Members know, we have an extremely talented, highly educated population throughout the west. We have a multicultural population, people from all over the world. Many of them are very entrepreneurial, and many know about other cultures and economies and how we can find a niche in those economies. We have an entrepreneurial dynamism in the west. We have, if you like, a necessity to compete and do well as part of Canada. The ingredients for high technology are all there, as a study by the OECD pointed out. We have a great many things going for us as a region. We have the people, the resources, the will, and this Bill will perhaps give us a little bit more help to put these things in place.

I might say just a few words about oil sands, which are so important to Alberta. If Alberta and western Canada can become the leading centre of oil sands technology in the world we could help develop and build plants in our own region, environmentally sound plants, and go on to help develop oil sands in other parts of the world. We are already using our oil and gas technology in China and the Soviet Union. There is no reason that we cannot build a technology-based superstructure, if you like, in western Canada that would export services around the world.

That is probably where the best hope for the western economy lies. Not to abandon or put aside or stop stressing our resources, but to build a technological base on top of those resources. For example, let me give some suggestions with respect to forestry, since the Hon. Member spoke of it. Why not give further encouragement to harvesting energy from forest biomass? This could be an economic boost for our forest industry and help Canada become a world leader in biomass energy technology. Why not upgrade the importance of the federal Minister responsible for forestry, in part by having him or her responsible for forestry alone? Why not do more research, as I hope we will under this Bill, on things like forest farming on marginal agricultural land and more research into methods of utilizing species such as birch, green ash, willow, alder and soft maples? Why not give some additional federal support to the two forestry schools in western Canada at the University of Alberta and the University of British Columbia? Can we not recruit to public and private forestry service more scientists, more policy analysts and economists? How about more federal funding for western forest renewal through agreements with all four western provinces?

Tourism has been talked about at great length in this House. We could say that British Columbia depends upon three sectors: tourism, forestry and mining. If you reduce U.S. access to all three of those sectors, then you will have calamity in that province. The same for Alberta. Our tourism offers enormous potential. There is potential in Saskatchewan and Manitoba which should be developed. This, as many people have said, is the perfect industry because it brings people in, uses existing facilities, and they leave without pollution. I very much hope that tourism is one area that the western diversification office will look at very carefully because I am told by the end of the century it will be the largest industry in Canada. It offers enormous promise to western Canada.

I must not sit down without saying a word about natural gas. As we know, the industry has had some difficulties. The private sector is understandably reluctant to undertake some of these large oil sands and gas projects because they lack a sense of what the price will be. My suggestion would be that if the difference between the price for some of these oil sands and other projects and the world price could be negotiated in advance, perhaps with the help of the department, it might make the chances of these projects going ahead much better. Security of future supply is so critical that in my view the risk is warranted.

We must give encouragement to new oil sands technology, new ways of separating the sand from the oil. Let me end my remarks with this example because it makes the point probably more strongly than anything I can say and I believe all of this is true. There is an Albertan by the name of Shannon who spent 12 years trying to develop a process for putting coal and bitumen together to produce a clean fuel. I gather within the last several months the method has been perfected. He received I think a $45 million grant from the U.S. Department of Energy to build a plant, not in Canada but in Ohio. It is going to be almost a quarter of a billion dollar plant and it will take Ohio coal and bitumen, and would you believe 85 per cent of it will come from Cold Lake, Alberta by pipeline, put those two together and produce a new clean fuel.

The question that all of us in western Canada ask is, why on earth is that project being built in Ohio? Why is it not being built in Alberta where we have an abundance of both coal and bitumen?

This is the kind of thing I hope this Bill will ensure that we stop doing to ourselves. I hope from this Bill will come an era in which it will be unheard of that anyone would put the first pilot project for a plant to use bitumen and coal somewhere other than western Canada. Therefore, I say in support of the Bill that it is a step in the right direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have a copy of a letter to the editor of The Ottawa Citizen of August 1, 1981, signed by David Kilgour, MP, Edmonton—Strathcona. As an avid reader of newspapers and a pack-rat I found this in my files. It says in part:

> The sending of Bruce Rawson to Edmonton as the federal government's "senior advisor on Western Canadian affairs" will be seen by many Westerners as another in a long series of gimmicks from a regime which sees our region primarily as a convenient whipping boy in an attempt to shore up political support elsewhere.

The Hon. Member was very critical of Mr. Rawson being sent to western Canada by the former Liberal Government. Mr. Rawson is now the new head of the western diversification office and is being sent to Edmonton by the present Government.

Very simply, has the Hon. Member changed his mind on the competence of Mr. Rawson? Is he acceptable now where he was not before?

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I am truly impressed by the research facilities of the NDP and the Hon. Member. They must read an awful lot of newspapers very carefully.

Mr. Rawson is a distinguished Albertan. He started out in the Alberta Attorney General's department long before I was there. His wife continued to live in Edmonton, I believe his children were in university there, while he was here. Having worked with him when he was Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs in the days when I was a Parliamentary Secretary, I can assure the Hon. Member that Mr. Rawson is a highly competent individual. I have since laughed with him about that letter and I have changed my view of him. He is an excellent individual for this job and I cannot think of anyone who would do a better job than Bruce Rawson.

While I have had some problems getting some projects approved, as I am sure the Hon. Member has, I think Mr. Rawson is eminently qualified to be heading up this new department.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, it is certainly my intention to debate this issue but, noting the clock, I wonder whether the Speaker would like to defer the beginning of my remarks until after Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are 13 minutes left if the Hon. Member would like to start his comments. However, if there is unanimous consent by the House to call it 1.l4, I will do so.

Mr. Axworthy: I am quite prepared to go on. I was not aware that there was a 14-minute extension as I was not in the House when it was announced. I am quite prepared to start now if you like.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to address once again the issue of western development. I have read with interest the comments of the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) who just spoke. I want to compliment him in particular for an article he wrote recently entitled "Policy Options". It was a very thoughtful piece. I did not agree entirely with the content, but I did admire his efforts to put western development into a framework of analysis, even though I think he fell substantially short on some of his prescriptions.

The Member mentioned how the trade agreement will affect western Canada. It has been heralded by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as the great salvation for the West. It has been held out as the generator of massive economic growth, all kinds of new initiatives, and development of industry.

Even as late as this weekend the Economic Conference Board has estimated that any expectations for a grand economic bonanza are fallacious. The Department of Finance, now confirmed by the Economic Conference Board, pointed out that the best we can assume, the most optimistic scenario of economic benefits of the trade agreement, is half of 1 per cent of gross per year which, any economitrician will tell you, is within the margin of error of any forecasting model. It is so marginal, so meaningless, as to not even be within the capacity to make an accurate forecast.

This consistent effort to try to paint the trade agreement as being the key which will open economic riches is in fact contradicted, first by the Government's own report put forward by the Department of Finance, and now confirmed by the Economic Conference Board, which in itself supports a trade agreement for other reasons but confirms that any expectation that it will result in huge economic growth is not to be believed.

I suggest that the Hon. Member go back and look at the hard facts, rather than the theology, as presented in his Government's own analysis and in the recent analysis by the Economic Conference Board. It is simply not there. The expectations which were raised over two years ago are not being borne out.

In fact, as the Conference Board itself points out, the Government will be facing a major deficit that will have to be made up by increased taxation. The Conference Board estimates an annual deficit of close to $4 billion cumulative that will have to be made up by increased taxes, or increasing the deficit of the Government itself. It would be very prudent for Conservative Members of Parliament, before talking about the trade agreement, to check their facts. They need not believe me, they need only believe their own Government, their own Department of Finance, and the Economic Conference Board which is a business based group. Those are the prescriptions of those organizations.

Second, it is important to put some perspective as well on whether in fact the free trade agreement will have a specific incentive for regional development. I am often amused by the efforts of the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona and other Conservative Members to make a comparison between the Auto Pact and western Canada. They constantly use the argument that if the Auto Pact was good for Oshawa the free trade agreement should be good for western Canada, as if they were the same thing when in fact they are not. They are quite different, quite contrary trade agreements.

The Auto Pact is a managed trade agreement which carries within it very clear safeguards ensuring that job investment takes place in Canada, whereas the proposed agreement with the Americans contains none of those safeguards. In fact, they have taken the safeguards away from the Auto Pact itself and have put no safeguards in for any other industry. They will be applying the principle of national treatment, which is that there can be no safeguards, preferences, or advantages for Canadian businesses over American businesses. Therefore, any effort to try to make the comparison is fallacious, it does not hold true.

I would only ask the Member, who I believe has a commitment to doing proper research, to look at what happened to various regions in Europe after the Common Market. Has it helped the north of England for example? In fact, the north of England has become more depressed since joining the Common Market than it was before. Certain regions of the southeast portion of France have become more depressed. The Mediere region, for example, has suffered more as a result of that than it did previously. One of the reasons for that is that once you apply a simple market-based system and eliminate the opportunity to undertake public action to provide for a redress of imbalances, of course the forces of the market-place and geography take over and you eliminate the opportunity to have a political economy, to make certain choices from the public sector to compensate for or reallocate the market-place.

That, after all, has been the history of Canada. There would not be a Canada if those choices had not been made. The founders of Confederation from Lower and Upper Canada and the Maritimes formed this country based upon a political choice. They could have easily followed the north-south lines of the market-place and geography but they did not. They wanted to create a different country. Since then we have had to take decisions like building a railroad with great government subsidy from east to west to hold the country together, a public sector communications system, a national health system, and regional development programs. The impact of the trade agreement will be to reduce substantially and limit the capacity of federal and provincial governments to undertake those initiatives.

Let me give the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona an example. He concluded his remarks by talking about a project to turn coal into a new form of energy. There is another coal project which is very important to western Canada, that is, the movement of western Canadian coal to Ontario to be burned in the hydro plants of Ontario in order for them to meet their environmental restraints.

A task force of federal-provincial public servants reported about a year ago on a very exciting economic development project for western Canada. They pointed out that the Government of Ontario presently buys about $1 billion worth of coal a year from the Americans. However, it is coal with a high sulphur content, it is dirty coal and it spews acid rain into the air. Ontario Hydro must reduce those emissions by 50 per cent by the year 1990. They have a choice. They can either invest very heavily in expensive scrubbers and technologies to eliminate the sulphur content, or they can purchase western Canadian coal from the foothills of Alberta.

That would have enormous economic payoffs. There would be $6 billion or $7 billion of new capital investment and 20,000 to 30,000 new jobs, not only in the mines themselves but along the railroad lines from western Canada to the hydro plants in Ontario. That is an incredibly important regional development project for the West.

The key to making it work, as the task force reported, would be necessary freight rate subsidies of about $6 or $7 a tonne. No one should be frightened by that. We have been using freight rate subsidies in Canada since Confederation in order to compensate for our geography. There are freight rate programs in the Atlantic. Of course, the most important freight rate program is under the Western Grain Transportation Act, which subsidized the movement of grain by about $60 and $70 a tonne. Without that we would not be able to export our grain because we must send our wheat and barley along an extensive railway line.

The task force reported that the key to making it work is a freight rate program. That is a legitimate and interesting possibility for western Canadian development. It would involve $6 billion or $7 billion of investment and some 20,000 to 30,000 jobs.

While this would make for a useful debate for Canadians, we will no longer have the right to make that decision on the day the trade agreement the Prime Minister has signed comes into effect. Western Canadians will not be able to bring about that kind of program because the trade agreement would clearly eliminate the possibility of a new freight rate subsidy for the movement of western coal. Once the agreement is signed, would the Americans watch a $1 billion a year purchase be replaced by western Canadian coal without kicking up a fuss or threatening to abrogate the agreement because it betrays the principles of national treatment? Would they not undertake trade actions against this?

The Member from Alberta should have a strong interest in the development of western Canadian coal. If he supports that trade agreement he will be rejecting one of the most important potential projects for western Canadian economic development in this generation. How can he say that this will be a great boon for western Canada when it will be eliminating some of the major projects that we would have.

That is not the only example. Mr. Archie McLean, Vice-President of McCain's Food, who is a Conservative by his own admission, wrote to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). He said that while he is a hard core Conservative, she is dead wrong when it comes to the trade agreement. The food processing industry is an essential part of the food chain in Canada and an essential industry in western Canada. Mr. McLean said that as a Canadian food processor he has the choice either to shut down his plants in Canada or move south.

Western Canada bases a large part of its industry on agriculture and food processing. That industry is being put into jeopardy, and let me give an example of why. McCain's has a large plant in Portage la Prairie where it makes frozen French fries. They buy potatoes from the farmers of the Portage Interlake district of Manitoba for about $120 a tonne. This is a very important source of supply for those farmers. However, McCains can get the same potatoes in Idaho for $93 a tonne. Mr. McLean suggests that his next plant would be located where the input costs are lower. The same example applies to other vegetables, chickens and other products.

Madam Speaker, I hope I will be able to continue after Question Period and edify the House as to why the trade agreement is a disaster for western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will be welcome to continue his speech after Question Period.

It being 1.14 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.14 p.m., the House took recess.

THE LATE JUDGE MARCEL CRÊTE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay a last tribute to a great Canadian, the Hon. Marcel Crête, Chief Justice of the Quebec Court of Appeal, who died Friday night in Montreal. We were very sad at the news of his death. Judge Crête contributed greatly to the development of law in Quebec.

Born in La Tuque, the Chief Justice went to school in Grand-Mère and Trois-Rivières before going to Laval University. He was called to the bar in 1937 and studied at Osgoode Hall in Toronto.

The Chief Justice practised law in Grand-Mère for 29 years before being appointed to the Superior Court of Trois-Rivières in September 1966. He was subsequently appointed to the highest court in the province, the Quebec Court of Appeal, in January 1972. Finally, in 1980 he became Chief Justice.

Respected by his colleagues and friends, Judge Marcel Crête was a man of integrity and principle. In 1986, he was awarded the Médaille du Barreau in recognition of his great legal skills and commitment to the community.

S. O. 21

The death of Chief Justic Marcel Crête is a great loss to us all. I am sure my colleagues in the House share my grief and will want to join me in extending our sincere condolences to his family and friends.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—SUPPORT FOR REFUSAL OF APPLICATION TO SELL LIFE INSURANCE

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, Canadian banks are still asking for permission to get into the life insurance business but our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is right in not allowing Canadian banks to sell life insurance.

There has been little or no movement from banks to stop the petty charges that are a burden to their customers. The banks have not stopped charging customers for services they did not explain to customers when their accounts were opened, nor do they feel they have to give an explanation or proof of work done when money is taken out of a customer's account without the customer's knowledge.

Can you imagine the games, Mr. Speaker, that could be played with insurance? I have already heard of one banking institution which refused to pay an insured loan because it claimed the insured customer knew of his health condition when the loan was taken out. I agree with the Minister.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF NOVA SCOTIAN FISHING VESSEL WITH LOSS OF LIVES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members will want to express sympathy to the community of Sambro, Nova Scotia, for the apparent loss of a 68-foot wooden vessel, Bonnie Lou II, and a crew of five young men. The subsequent search and rescue attempt took place in very heavy seas under adverse weather conditions, once again showing the danger and difficulty of a fishing occupation in Canada.

In October the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) released the Coast Guard Study into Fishing Vessel Safety. Much attention was given to the placement of blame on those who fish for a living and the way they practise their trade, suggesting that fishermen were careless.

There are a number of issues that need to be addressed by the Minister. First, mandatory use of EPRBs aboard fishing vessels would ensure that distress signals can be monitored. Recently two resolutions were passed in the Nova Scotia Legislature, supported by all Parties, calling upon the federal Government to establish a search and rescue base at Yarmouth for the South West Nova region. I urge that sympathy be followed by action so that the dangers inherent in this occupation can be reduced.

QUÉBEC

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT BOURASSA

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 8 the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Robert Bourassa, announced that Quebec would start building new hydro-electric power stations this year.

Construction on three new stations at LG-1, Laforge and Brisay at James Bay, in the federal riding of Abitibi, at a cost of $7.5 billion during the next seven years, is a reassuring prospect for Quebecers, since it will create 40,000 jobs, involve major investments, and we will be able to export our surplus power to the United States.

Mr. Bourassa said that to him, letting Quebecers benefit from this natural resource was a tangible form of patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, it is a source of pride for Quebecers who believe in this great project and it is a source of great satisfaction for me as a former employee with technical surveys at Hydro-Quebec from 1965 to 1968.

Bravo, Mr. Bourassa, you are a great Quebecer!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—AMENDMENT OF STATUTES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in a study which has just been completed for us by the Law and Government Division of the Library of Parliament, it appears there may be as many as 21 individual Acts of Parliament that will have to be amended before the trade deal with the United States can be put into effect, everything from the Bank Act to the Copyright Act to the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Yet no Canadian House of Commons committee is even holding hearings on this vast deal, and no committee has held such hearings since the final text of the agreement was issued.

Compare this with the United States. There, at least nine congressional committees and subcommittees are holding hearings, including Agriculture, Energy and Power, Consumer Protection, Mining and Natural Resources, Small Business, Finance, Foreign Affairs, and the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade. All these hearings permit American special interests to push hard for changes favouring them.

In short, we see here yet another—

EMPLOYMENT

NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED SINCE 1984

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw your attention to Statistics Canada employment figures which were released last Friday. In 1984 we promised jobs, jobs, jobs. Have we delivered? Some 1,213,000 jobs have been created across Canada. Unemployment figures have fallen. In 1984 they were 11.7 per cent. They are now down to 7.8 per cent, the lowest in seven years. The number of unemployed persons has decreased by 420,000.

Some 84 per cent of these jobs are full-time. By contrast, under the last Liberal administration 80 per cent of the jobs were part-time.

Youth unemployment has fallen from 18.3 per cent to 12 per cent. By contrast, it rose 5.4 per cent under the last Liberal Government, and it rose 2.5 per cent when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Finance.

Unemployment has decreased in all areas across Canada. In my area of Ontario we are at 5.1 per cent unemployment, the lowest level in 13 years.

What have we done for women? The number of women in managerial positions has increased 36 per cent since 1984—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

WAR MEASURES ACT

INVOCATION IN 1970—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, back in October, 1970, I was proud to be one of 16 Members in the House of Commons who voted against the imposition of the War Measures Act. We did so because there was no evidence of an apprehended insurrection at that time.

The recent release of Don Jamieson's diary appears to substantiate the view that there wasn't any evidence of an apprehended insurrection. At that time the Conservative Party of Canada voted for the imposition of the War Measures Act.

Over the weekend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in effect counselled the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to break the law by revealing some cabinet secrets. I suggest that, instead of that, the Prime Minister should explain why his Party supported the imposition of the War Measures Act back in 1970. Can he tell us why his Party voted in favour of that particular Act? Can he tell us what his own role was at that particular time?

From a very reliable book entitled Friends in High Places by Claire Hoy I quote the following:

> "Brian was the point man for a lot of people, for a lot of passing on of information" and that "he was dealing with Claude Ryan and Bourassa and Claude Castonguay, and for a whole lot of people."

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

FINANCE

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is just a year ago that the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs presented its report on credit card interest rates in Canada.

Contrary to speculation around the Hill, my broken wrist is not due to having my arm twisted by any credit card lobbyist.

I refer to the report because it is a demonstration of how Parliament can work for Canadian consumers. Since the report, interest rates on credit cards have been reduced, and there have been other gains made for consumers. But there is much yet to be done.

The deficiencies in what has been done thus far will be made up by the Private Member's Bill, Bill C-266, which I have introduced. I hope that in the near future the Bill will be drawn for second reading and that it will receive support from all Parties in the House.

DISASTERS

CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT—RADIATION LEVELS—INCIDENCE OF SICKNESS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it has now been almost two years since the Chernobyl nuclear accident in April, 1986. There has been some evidence that sickness from radioactive fall-out is on the increase in Ukraine. Malnutrition is also a problem. Some residents of the Ukraine are unable to secure food from uncontaminated areas and are afraid to use local meat or milk.

The Soviet news agency, Tass, reported in July, 1987, that almost 75 per cent of the land around Chernobyl has been recultivated. Some 14 settlements that were evacuated at the time of the accident have been resettled, while another 20 will soon follow. These measures may very well increase the numbers of people becoming sick because of exposure to radiation in the environment and in the food chain.

Granted that the Chernobyl reactor lacked the safety features of later models such as the CANDU, the public is still very concerned about the possibility of another nuclear accident.

Therefore, I urge the Government to support the work being done internationally in such areas as evaluating acceptable levels of radiation and forms of intervention, informing the public, ensuring prompt notification of accidents, and supporting a proposal by the OECD to require states to consult their neighbours before building nuclear power stations in frontier areas.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

APPOINTMENT OF GIL SCOTT AS PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONER

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the struggle for equality for opportunity took another giant step forward last Saturday night at the Harry Jerome awards dinner in Toronto when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the appointment of Gil Scott as a Commissioner of the Public Service Commission of Canada, the first ever visible minority person to hold that position.

This, combined with the appointment of Lincoln Alexander, the first ever visible minority person to serve as Lieutenant-Governor; the appointment of Cal Best, the first ever visible minority person to serve as a Canadian Ambassador; the Employment Equity Act, and the Affirmative Action Program for visible minorities in the Public Service, all in just over three years, is a record of which the Prime Minister and the Government can be proud.

However, the struggle for equal opportunity is not over and, in the words of one young Harry Jerome award winner last Saturday night, "the future is now".

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMPARISON OF CONDITIONS ON RESERVES AND IN MÉTIS COMMUNITIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this weekend I had an opportunity to tour some remote communities in the Churchill riding. I was depressed by the fact that after many years of both Liberal and Conservative regimes the people living on reserves do not have water systems, do not have sewage systems, do not have adequate housing, and do not have the same amount of money spent per capita on their young children for education.

At the same time I toured some of my Métis communities which in many cases have water and sewage systems, more money spent on education, and better housing programs.

I call upon the federal Government to live up to its responsibilities to provide native people not only of northern Manitoba but of the whole country with adequate systems of housing, of water, of sewage, and of education.

I am concerned about the seniors in my riding, but I am more concerned about the youth. To see three-year olds, four-year olds, and five-year olds living and growing up at the end of the 20th century and not to see any attempt by the federal Government to resolve the problems is a complete catastrophe and a national disgrace.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO—INCREASE IN PROVINCIAL DEFICIT

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to believe, but the economic boom times in Ontario seem to be bringing about a spending binge by the provincial Liberals that would make even Pierre Elliott Trudeau blush.

David Peterson is throwing money in every direction, and the people continue to line up for more. They think that Santa Claus has come to town again.

Last year's newly discovered $1 billion is gone. Even with a 5.9 per cent spending increase, Ontario could have balanced its books this year. Instead, unprecedented spending has gobbled up that $1 billion windfall, has increased the Ontario annual deficit again this year, and now the Premier is forecasting increased taxes.

What a pity that the federal Government continues to put the Trudeau mess in order but Ontario may not benefit as it begins borrowing itself into economic chaos.

The piper will have to be paid. How long will it be before someone else will have to be brought into Ontario, this time to fix up the David Peterson economic mess?

IMMIGRATION

CANADIAN INVESTOR PROGRAM—QUÉBEC PRACTICE HALTED

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Investor Program allowed individuals with a net worth of $500,000 to attain landed status if they invest $250,000 in a Canadian venture for three years.

Recently Québec Immigration found a loophole whereby immigrant investors were being guaranteed their investments of $250,000 and received an annual interest rate of 3 per cent on the amount. This practice is contrary to the Immigration Act. The Minister, once informed of this practice, moved quickly and suspended the guarantees. He will not allow visas to be sold.

This scheme probably pre-empted the standard medical and security clearances, and it is not fair nor ethical for all those wishing to enter Canada. One immigration law must apply all across Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—MINISTER'S SPEECH—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Over the weekend the Prime Minister avoided or evaded answering questions concerning the speech given last week by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the very important matter of the Middle East. Considering both the confusion and the concern those remarks have raised, it is important for Canadians to know if the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are speaking with the same voice and from the same text.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister the following questions. Did he discuss this matter with the Secretary of State and review the speech? Did he approve of the final text of the remarks given by the Secretary of State and, perhaps, most important, do the remarks of the Secretary of State explicitly express the position of the Prime Minister and his Government on the very important and delicate matters taking place in the Middle East?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House the other day, the statement I made to the Canada-Israel Committee of course reflects the policy of the Government of Canada.

It is a policy that has been expressed, both in the letter which the Prime Minister wrote to the Prime Minister of Israel, in answers that I have given in the House of Commons, and in other positions the Government has taken.

The Hon. Member asks if the Prime Minister and I have discussed the matter in detail. He is asking the question: Did the Prime Minister of Canada and the Secretary of State for External Affairs discuss this speech word for word for word. Of course we did not. This Prime Minister of Canada has distinguished himself, among other ways, in encouraging his Ministers to exercise their responsibilities in their own fields and in their own Departments. I have done that. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has done that. We do it with the full support of the Prime Minister of Canada.

The position of this country on issues relating to the Middle East is clear and is stated consistently by the Prime Minister, by myself, and by other spokesmen authorized to speak in that field for the Government.

CONTENT OF SPEECH—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we know what the Secretary of State for External Affairs believes and what he has stated. My question was for the Prime Minister.

I want to repeat my question to the Prime Minister especially in light of his statement over the weekend about the remarks given by the Secretary of State. He said, "In speaking frankly you may question his words, but not his motives".

In this case the words are very important. They carry a great deal of meaning. I want to ask the Prime Minister explicitly: Does he question the words of the Secretary of State? Is he differing in any way from the remarks that were given in front of the Canada-Israel Committee last week? Does he have reservations and concerns about the kind of tone and nature of the remarks given by the Secretary of State?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of my hon. friend is very surprising in light of a statement made this morning by his colleague, the Liberal Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. He was quoted as saying this morning, referring to the NDP and Liberal speeches, and the Conservative speech given by the Secretary of State, that he read all of the speeches very thoroughly and it seems to him that there are no contradictions between any of the speeches and that the basic policy of the three Parties is the same. This was a statement made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East this morning. I wonder where my hon. friend is coming from.

• (1420)

With regard to my position, I have been on the record consistently. Perhaps I could quote something that I indicated on Saturday in Toronto. I said: "With regard to statements elsewhere, Mr. Clark has been a firm and a loyal friend of Israel throughout his entire political life. He spoke as a friend of Israel. "He spoke very much as a solid and a committed friend of Israel, trying to send out a message that a true friend can give, . . . that violence breeds violence and it would be most unfortunate if this gave rise to a situation which endangered this fragile democracy in the Middle East which is Israel and which we all support. Mr. Clark was attempting to be constructive to a friend . . . He spoke with the conviction of someone who believes he could be frank because his friendship with Israel could never be question questioned."

The speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs issued support for Israel, support for negotiated peace with the moderate Arab states. It called for restraint and an end to violence on both sides, and it spoke of his active support of the Shultz plan for a negotiated peace in the area. Surely no Member of the House would quarrel with any of those objectives.

NEGOTIATION OF PEACE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ARAB COUNTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, no one quarrels with those objectives, but the speech contained many other remarks that the Prime Minister did not cite. We are trying to determine whether the Prime Minister is in full agreement with the full and complete text of the remarks given by the Secretary of State.

If I might, I would like to ask an explicit question. The Secretary of State said that the Government of Canada had evidence that Saudi Arabia, Jordan, and Egypt were prepared to lend their assistance in negotiations toward peace. That is something we would all welcome. I would ask the Prime Minister if he would share that evidence with the House and if he would be able to provide a clear demonstration that these three countries are in fact prepared to negotiate a peace agreement with Israel that will recognize its existence. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether the other countries of the Middle East which have been part of those hostilities, particularly Syria, share those same views? These are very important questions, and I want to know if the Prime Minister therefore agrees with the assertions made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Hon. Member is genuinely interested in the attitude of countries that are neighbours to Israel with regard to the peace process. If he would read my speech to the Canada-Israel Committee, and I would recommend that all Canadians and Hon. Members who are interested in that speech read it carefully, he would find that I made reference to conversations I have had with leaders of Egypt, leaders of Saudi Arabia, and leaders of Jordan. My conclusion from those conversations was that they are interested in playing a constructive role toward the achievement of a peaceful situation in that region. That is the case.

There is another option open to everyone with this issue, and that is the option of making this a matter of partisan disagreement. I share the view of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East that this is not and should not be a matter of partisan disagreement. If the Hon. Member wants to get into the business of quoting statements made by individual Members of this House, I have some statements that I can enter into the debate. I would prefer not to do that because I think it is not constructive.

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF AIRCRAFT—REPORTED PURCHASE FROM EUROPEAN AIRBUS CONSORTIUM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last Friday's Financial Post reported that Air Canada is awaiting government approval to proceed with a $1.5 billion purchase of 34 aircraft from the European consortium, Airbus Industrie.

The Minister knows that the lobbying firm of Government Consultants International owned by Frank Moores, former Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, is acting on behalf of the European consortium. He knows as well that Government Consultants International has hired the Minister's Deputy Minister, Ramsey Withers, as its new president and chief executive officer. Will the Minister tell the House whether or not Mr. Ramsey Withers had any role whatsoever to play in screening or approving Air Canada's new corporate plan?

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, without the newspapers, of course, the Opposition would be silent in the House.

With respect to the question, I do not know who Government Consultants International—

Mr. Benjamin: Not all of us.

Mr. Crosbie: Good. Some of them have fantasies, of course.

I do not know who Government Consultants International represent. I do not know whether they represent the Airbus consortium or not. Nor do I know whether or not Air Canada is going to recommend to the Government that it replace its present aircraft with aircraft from Airbus. We have not received any decision from Air Canada.

With respect to Mr. Withers, he is a man of complete integrity, honour, faithful service, and rectitude. He has complied completely with the conflict of interest guidelines. He has nothing whatsoever to do with Air Canada's recommendation in this matter. I have to ask my hon. friend, is there no smear too low, no person too remote—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

Mr. Crosbie: —to impugn their integrity in a base manner as he is now attempting to do?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if hot air, bluster and false outrage were the mark—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would be proper if the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe put his question succinctly. Perhaps I can prevail upon the Hon. Minister to answer in the same way.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, he has been touchy ever since a provincial Liberal won a seat in his riding a few days ago.

POSSIBLE ROLE OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-82, with respect to registration of lobbyists, received second reading in the House today. The Bill creates certain requirements for lobbyists. In the spirit of that Bill, is the Minister prepared to make available to the House a list of all contacts and representations made to him or any official of Transport Canada by GCI, which is owned by his good friend Frank Moores, whom he claims to know nothing about, or by other lobbying agencies acting on behalf of companies that want to provide new aircraft to Air Canada?

This is a $1.5 billion contract we are talking about and the people of Canada have the right to have questions asked of and answers given by a Minister without bluster or false outrage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Everyone in the press gallery is smiling, Brian.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will answer without either of the last two adjectives.

Mr. Benjamin: What a hope.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Charles Laughton will never be dead as long as the hon. gentleman is around to feign injured innocence.

Let me say that Mr. Withers, who is not a politician and who has given 40 years of his life to serving the Government of Canada in Defence and Transport, has had no connection with this matter. It is a sign of a desperate Party opposite that they have to try to malign a civil servant, people not even in politics, with such scurrilous questions, trying to tie together Government Consultants—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his answer.

Mr. Crosbie: In short, my answer is this. The question is beyond contempt, absolutely beyond contempt.

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications but in her absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

He will be aware of the excellent performance his Minister gave in the TV show The Campbells. It is just too bad she could not put on the same performance in her portfolio.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I want to ask him about that.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell: Mr. Speaker, a year ago in February 1987, the Government promised it would table a Bill on film distribution in Canada.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister when the Government intends to table this Bill in the House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr Speaker, the Hon. Member was quite right to comment favourably on the performance of the Minister of Communications. She is an altogether exceptional person and has served this country admirably. She is now breaking new ground in the field of culture and communications, and I am sure the Hon. Member will be very pleased with the end results, which the Minister will table at the appropriate time. However, the situation is a delicate one, and the Minister is anxious to turn this into an impressive finale, as I am sure she will.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell the House why it is a difficult situation? We have been waiting a year for the Bill.

Would he care to comment to the House on a report which has come from Washington that there is now to be perhaps a side letter to the free trade Bill in which Washington might pledge to initiate an unfair trade action under U.S. trade law if Ottawa adopts the film legislation?

Would the Prime Minister not acknowledge that it has been American pressure, from the President, to Jack Valenti, to other lobbyists, that in fact has prevented the Government from bringing forward the long awaited film distribution legislation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that he has just made an unfair and inaccurate statement. Between two sovereign nations, the United States of America and Canada, we have a free trade agreement. I will not dignify any comment coming from an anonymous source in Washington or elsewhere in respect of any possible side letters which would demean the existence of the treaty itself. I know that, upon reflection, my hon. friend will want to withdraw any such allusion.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will note that I have not made any allusions. I am just asking him when we are going to have the Bill and we are not getting any answers.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

ACQUISITION OF GINN TEXTBOOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will ask my final supplementary question on a related topic, publishing. Under the so-called Baie Comeau agreement, if you like, or policy, which will be dear to the Prime Minister's heart, when a Canadian subsidiary of an American publishing company is taken over it has to be offered for sale to a Canadian company. That is true in the case of Ginn Company right now.

Would the Prime Minister guarantee that once a company is taken over under this policy Canadians in fact have control of the company, rather than a back-door control by Gulf and Western as is happening right now with the sale of Ginn Company?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the evidence of the answer is in the action that the Government took. The Government has moved quickly and consistently, both with the Baie Comeau book publishing policy and in the context of the free trade agreement, on a policy which means a great deal to the Government, particularly given that this arrangement with Gulf and Western regarding Ginn was made before either of those policies was in place and we were able to get this agreement from them.

We are very pleased with this. It means that Ginn will remain in Canadian hands. Since its major product is primary school textbooks, I think it was a good one for us to start with on this book publishing policy.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN BE PROLONGED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is aware that the budget for the Eastern Quebec development agreement expires on March 31, and since the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has a habit of being late, whether we are talking about Montreal East or the space agency, could the Prime Minister inform the House whether his Government will be able to announce that the Eastern Quebec development plan and the agencies for outlying regions will be extended after March 31?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member refers to the Government's or the Minister's record on industrial development in Quebec, he should remember that from September 1984 to January 1988, $532 million in federal assistance was spent in Quebec. If the Hon. Member were to look at the situation objectively, he would be embarrassed to compare this record with that of the previous Liberal Government.

As for extending the Eastern Quebec plan or other regional programs, the Minister, as you well know, has already mentioned a number of proposals, and when he is ready to announce either an extension or new initiatives, he will do so at the appropriate time.

TERMINATION OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says not to worry because everything is all right in regional economic development, but could he perhaps explain to the House why his own Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has been telling his colleagues Quebecers must be shown that the Government's determination to renew its regional development policy does not stop at the borders of Quebec?

The IRDP will expire at the beginning of June, and the Government has no plans for a substitute in Quebec. Could the Minister inform the House whether this Government intends to establish a realistic regional economic development program for Quebec as it has done in other parts of the country? Why are we going to be the last ones in on regional economic development?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's ignorance is appalling. As far as regional development is concerned, the amounts spent in Quebec and across Canada compare more than favorably with what was done before under the Liberal Government.

For instance, in 1984-85, $832 million was spent on subsidies and grants, and now we have matched that with an additional $868 million. This is more than $1 billion. It is certainly not true to say that Quebec has been left out.

When the IRDP expires at the end of June, 1988, as provided under the legislation, other programs will be set up to support industrial development in all parts of Quebec.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

PRELIMINARY RULING ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. In spite of intensive negotiations last week in Washington, Canada and the United States have been unable to agree on alternatives to the GATT preliminary ruling on Canada's export restrictions on unprocessed salmon and herring.

Because the fishing industry, in co-operation with the Government, needs more time to study possible solutions to this impasse, will the Minister assure the House and the West Coast fishing industry that Canada will not accept the GATT ruling when the full GATT Council meets on March 22 and that there will be more time to study this issue so that a satisfactory resolution can be found?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important issue as is understood by all Members of this House and particularly West Coast Members who have been in touch with me and other Ministers.

I would like to amend the observation made by the Hon. Member in the preface to his question. Canada and the United States have not yet reached agreement. The discussions that occurred last week were constructive. We are considering now, at the ministerial level in both Canada and the United States, what our next step will be.

As I indicated to the Member when he put a similar question earlier in this process, last week, I think it is not helpful to the Canadian position to get ahead of ourselves. We have to take this step by step and we are doing that.

REQUEST THAT CANADA REJECT GATT RULING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not agree that the United States appears to be using this GATT ruling to get access to our fisheries resource and is blowing up a $2 million or $3 million problem to get at a $750 million industry?

If the Minister agrees with that, why will he not commit Canada to refuse the GATT ruling which is going to destroy completely our ability to manage our own resource?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as we have discussed in this House before, there are two questions at issue here. One is how we resolve this particular problem. I have just given a report to the House as to our progress on that matter.

The second has to do with the consistency of the New Democratic Party on the question of GATT. One day, in a statement of principle, it is for GATT. Then, when GATT is applied, it is against GATT. The New Democratic Party cannot have it both ways. It has to get its act together.

FINANCE

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—GEOGRAPHICAL DELINEATION OF AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is with regard to the special tax benefit for northern and isolated communities. I wonder whether the Minister is aware of how much unfairness has been created as a result of the regulations related to this tax measure.

For example, there are a great many communities which over-qualify on the Minister's point system which, yet, are ruled ineligible simply because they are just a few kilometres short of the required distance.

Has the Minister had the time and the opportunity to consider carefully a proposal which I formally submitted to him whereby the distance factor would be folded in with the point system? It is my submission that this would give this important useful measure greater equity.

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would agree with me that we have taken a very important step forward. A number of communities now have permanent access to the northern benefit, and pensioners, small business people, and native peoples who previously did not have access to the remission order providing for the northern benefits now have access on a permanent basis. That is an important starting point in any discussion of northern benefits.

He has pointed out the problems he has seen in his constituency on the borderline between communities within the prescribed region for northern benefits and those that are just outside. We recognize that there are difficulties. That is why we have called for the appointment of a commission that can study these in various parts of the country so that there will be an equitable system that will apply equally to different parts of the country and provide a more equitable basis upon which this northern benefit can contribute.

Mr. Penner: What ought to be a most useful tax measure is in fact causing confusion, causing division, and causing a good deal of distress in many communities.

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE AMENDED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister move quickly to amend these regulations and not pass on his responsibility to a commission or task force? We know what has to be done. Why do we not just get on and do it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that he knows what has to be done. I suggest to him that that is a very facile way of dealing with the problem. If we knew what had to be done we would not be calling for the creation of this commission.

These borderlines between different communities are very difficult to address and very difficult to delineate because different sizes of communities, different geographical relationships and elements that are important in deciding whether a community should be inside or outside the prescribed areas are important questions upon which an objective person like a commissioner can give the Government some guidelines. Otherwise, I am sure that he or his colleagues would be the first to say that certain communities received special treatment because they have a Conservative Member of Parliament and another did not because it had a Liberal or NDP Member of Parliament. In fact, I believe that was already stated in this House last week.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance announced his intention to change the taxation policy for northern benefits almost two years ago. A year and one-half ago he announced the specifics of his intention. At that time I and others wrote him about the problems. One of his own Conservative Members rose in the House to say there was a problem.

Why is he only now setting up a commission to look into the problems with regard to this tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since the time that the Hon. Member wrote we spent much effort in trying to find the proper resolution. It has been very difficult to do so and that is why we believe the best way to proceed is to have an objective commissioner travel to different parts of the country and give us some advice on this.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that the value of this benefit is some $150 million to $175 million, which is considerably greater than the some $50 million under the remission order. Therefore, a number of communities have benefited by this and, as I indicated previously, pensioners, native people, small business people and others who did not have access to this benefit have access to it now.

We are trying to ensure that it is equitable, but the benefit has been provided to a much larger group of people. I do not think we should lose sight of that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, there are people who can swim across to the American border who would benefit from this particular exclusion. There are others who live in the North who do not qualify. In the age of parliamentary reform and tax reform, why would the Minister not listen to Members of Parliament? Why did he not act when people were complaining about this problem? Since he refused to act, will he make whatever changes come about retroactive because there are people in the North, not only in Manitoba but in other parts of Canada, who are excluded and unfairly treated because he would not listen and act when he should have.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I think it is quite wrong to say that I have not listened.

Mr. Murphy: You said no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have listened to a wide range of Members of Parliament.

Mr. Murphy: You said no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member cannot ask his question seriously if he has his mouth open during the time I am trying to answer. We believe that the best way to deal with this is through a commissioner. We feel that will lead to a more objective resolution for difficult problems.

He says there are many people in the North who are not receiving this benefit. I say to those people that nothing has been taken away from them. Many people in the North are now receiving this benefit for the first time.

WAR MEASURES ACT

INVOCATION IN 1970—REQUEST FOR MEASURE TO ENSURE AGAINST REPETITION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. According to a recent report, the diaries of the late Don Jamieson indicate that the War Measures Act was invoked in 1970 on the basis of very flimsy evidence. This is a matter of great concern to all Canadians, particularly to Canadians of Japanese origin who felt the sting of the War Measures Act in the past.

Will the Minister agree to amend the emergency measures legislation currently before the House to ensure that this sort of thing can never ever happen again in this new legislation, based on flimsy evidence? Let us get it right this time.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I fully share my hon. friend's concern. It is important that we protect civil liberties even in times of crisis. As a result of that, I proposed amendments some days ago which would give any citizen of Canada who felt aggrieved the ability to take the Government to court and insist that the Government demonstrate to the court that it had just cause for invoking the new legislation. If it could not justify that, the legislation's invocation would be struck down by the courts.

I call upon Members of the House to pass this legislation as expeditiously as possible.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—REQUEST THAT CANADA DEMAND APOLOGY FOR FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S STATEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, St. Pierre and Miquelon have been officially declared a disaster area because, according to the Government of France: "The fishery around St. Pierre has been depleted and the Canadian Government won't allow them into other areas".

My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this situation was caused by overfishing by the metropolitan fleet from France, will the Government of Canada demand an apology from the Government of France for painting Canada as being the villain in this declaration of disaster?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the situation to which the Hon. Member refers is a result of the firm position taken by the Government of Canada in the matter of this fisheries dispute, particularly since negotiations regrettably broke off last October 9.

The Hon. Member knows that our negotiator, Mr. Fortier, and the French representative are to meet again shortly and attempt to discuss how and by what procedures the matter can be restarted. We hope there will be a settlement. In the meantime, we believe that our firm position is having a great deal of influence on the situation.

• (1450)

It is true that France has declared Saint Pierre and Miquelon a disaster zone. The hon. gentleman is familiar with disaster zones; he sits in one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

OPERATIONS OF FRENCH FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, today four gigantic factory freezer trawlers from France are operating off the south coast of Newfoundland. They have caught 11,000 tonnes of fish, double the entire quota for 1988 allocated by the Government of France. They are going back to France next week to process their fish, to come back in the fall to load up again.

In view of that fact, will the Government of Canada ask the Government of France to make the metropolitan fleet end its fishing now for 1988 before the south coast of Newfoundland has to be a declared a disaster area?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, not only is the hon. gentleman sitting in a disaster zone, he is led by a disaster— "Ali Babble and the Forty Rodents", Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will attempt to answer the question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): In fact, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans checked on the matter today and it says that the 3PS cod fishery is following the same pattern this year as in previous years. The Canadian fishery in that area is following the normal pattern, and total catches to date are about the same as in 1987. What seems to have happened is that the cod stocks have moved out of the disputed 3PS zone because, as the hon. gentleman knows, cod fish are apt to swim and move. They have moved off into the Burgeo bank area in the western gullies where the French are no longer permitted to fish as a result of actions taken by this Government which the Hon. Member should be down on his knees praying for every day.

RAILWAYS

BRANCH LINE REHABILITATION PROGRAM—EXPENDITURES IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The 10-year rail line rehabilitation program is fast approaching its end and there are still hundreds of miles of branch lines needing rehabilitation work. Will the Minister explain why, with only one year and $140 million left in the rehab program, he has decided to spend only $25 million this year to upgrade lines in western Canada? There is much work to do and so little time to do it.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman refers to a cause that is very popular, of course, in the West. I do not believe the program is scheduled to end until 1990. We will be dealing with other projects during the year, and as to whether the spending will be just $25 million or three times $25 million will be determined during the course of the year.

REQUEST THAT TERMINATOR DATE BE EXTENDED

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is in existence contracts with the rail companies totalling more than $140 million on the rehab program. The program is over in 1989. Will the Minister assure those communities which need work done that he will extend the time to 1990, as he suggested, in order to spend that $140 million and get the job completed as far as the need is presently established?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly assure the hon. gentleman that the fund will be used and further branch lines will be rehabilitated so long as we have the agreement of the grain companies, users, and those involved that these lines are lines that can properly be rehabilitated and that this is the best use of the funds. So there certainly will be additional moneys spent on branch line rehabilitation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—SHULTZ PEACE PLAN—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the current visit to Washington of Prime Minister Shamir, reportedly to discuss the Shultz peace plan, will the Minister advise the House if the Government has shared with Washington its views on this plan? And will the Minister inform the House what those views are?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these, of course, are very critical days for the development of the possible movement toward peace in the Middle East. Mr. Shamir arrives today in Washington. Canada has expressed clearly and unequivocally our support for the initiatives being taken by the United States Secretary of State. As the House will know, they are based upon the principle of territorial compromise in accordance with Security Council Resolution 242. That requires movement by both sides.

To that end, among other initiatives in which we might have some influence, I have instructed Ambassadors for Canada in countries in the Middle East, and in countries that might have some influence upon Palestinians, to encourage Palestinian leaders vigorously to recognize formally and declare formally their acceptance of the independence and territorial integrity of the State of Israel.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN SPACE PROGRAM—ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRAL AGENCY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology has to do with the space agency.

[English]

In an interview last week, the Minister of State for Science and Technology referred to the varied elements of Canada's space program such as radar satellite and mobile communications saying: "All of this begs to be co-ordinated by a central agency". Is it still the Minister's position that Canada needs a central agency to co-ordinate space activities whether or not Canada proceeds with the American space station?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, several of the major components of the comprehensive space effort have moved beyond a conceptual phase into a more detailed design phase. The eventual technical nature of these facilities, be it a space station or Radarsat program, will, of course, influence the design, shape, mandate and mission of a central co-ordinating agency. Cabinet is seized with a number of options being considered within the next two weeks and will make a decision on the agency following that.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): I do not know why the Minister tries to avoid the question. Last week he said, when he was asked whether the space agency depended on the space station: "Well, I mean, I don't want to mix up the two". He went on to say: "There remains a requirement for a central agency to co-ordinate and manage these international obligations". So I come back to my question. Will the Minister rise in his place and state unequivocally, as he did in an interview with CBO Radio last week, that Canada needs a space agency whether or not we proceed with the American space station?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall using the words, "mixed up". The Hon. Member has been known to mix up agencies with stations.

The fact is that a number of the major components of the space program are moving into another phase and Cabinet is considering various options which are available. The necessity to co-ordinate these efforts will emerge, and the shape of an agency will emerge, after this has been considered.

Canada is a leading nation in space and we have no intention whatever to give up that lead. We have every intention to co-ordinate properly and manage any of the international obligations that are associated with that.

IMMIGRATION

FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA RULING—POWERS OF IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week a ruling by the Federal Court of Canada curtailed the powers of the Immigration Appeal Board. Could the Minister inform the House of the absolute chaos and consequences to Canada's immigration system as a result of this ruling, coupled with the Senate's inaction on Bill C-55 and Bill C-84?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. I know how sensitive he is to immigration issues. We have not yet taken a decision as to whether or not we will go before the Court of Appeal about the decision with respect to the Immigration Appeal Board.

I have said in the House many times that the House of Commons has already voted on two Bills to deal with the immigration issues. We just have to look every day in the newspapers to see the problems we increasingly face. As long as the Senators will not make up their minds about this Bill, and as long as they drag their feet on this decision, I can do nothing.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—GRAPE GROWERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since everyone, including the Government, admits that grape growers are going to be put out of business by the free trade agreement, can the Government tell us the amount of assistance and the type of assistance that will be made available to the large number of Canadian producers of wine grapes in Ontario and British Columbia who will be put out of business upon implementation of this agreement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to reject the contents of the Hon. Member's observation. We must recognize that the difficulty that the grape and wine industry finds itself in is a direct result of provincial trade barriers and of provincial pricing mechanisms.

The Hon. Member will know that those negotiations go on, led quite appropriately by the federal Government, in co-operation and conjunction with the provinces.

He should take some satisfaction, as the industry is taking some satisfaction, with the fact that I convened a meeting of all the provincial players within the industry, as early as December 4, I believe. Meetings have been held in B.C. and also in Ontario since that period of time at almost two-week intervals. I expect to receive recommendations from the federal-provincial industry committee in the not too distant future.

Mr. Althouse: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question in Question Period, given the time. A single question by the Hon. Member for York West.

IMMIGRATION

FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA RULING—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT LAUNCH APPEAL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the Federal Court ruling which effectively places the Immigration Appeal Board in a straitjacket because of the provisions of the Bill. The problem is with the Bill and not with the Senators, including Conservative Senators who are equally incensed.

Given that the Government's own legislation even before it becomes law has caused this paralysis in the system which will only aggravate the backlog, will the Minister give us an undertaking that he will not appeal the situation, which will lengthen the time in procedure, but instead that he will remove this provision from the Bill and allow the independence of the system and the effectiveness of the system to continue rather than causing this paralysis?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will not give any undertaking to my friend, but if you will tell your friends on the other side—

Mr. Marchi: Address the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

PRIVILEGE

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-72

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which notice was given to you this morning. This question of privilege is with respect to the striking of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-72 last Friday.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-72 is the Bill on official languages. In particular, this is a Bill designed to help the language minority communities in Canada.

My complaint and the basis for my question of privilege is that this legislative committee has no representation from the anglophone minority from Quebec, although that could have been done. It is well known that this community has considerable concern for this Bill and has considerable concern for language rights.

I also point out that the Acadian community in Canada is not represented on the committee, nor is the francophone community of the West.

I have no objection to those people who are named, in particular the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who is the only representative of a language minority on the committee. Surely, the other language minorities should be represented. This is particularly so because there has been an attempt by certain Conservative Members in the House to amend and weaken the Bill—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member rises with respect to the appointments to a legislative committee. So that the public that is watching and listening to this will understand what this means, after a Bill has passed second reading it then goes in most cases to a legislative committee. The members of the legislative committee are determined by the Whips of all three Parties. It is for the Speaker to appoint the chairperson.

Depending on the wish of all three Parties, the legislative committee can be of different sizes. The Hon. Member is rising on a question of privilege because he says that some groups in the country that are important in this matter do not have, I take it, a Member who sits specifically in a seat which represents their concerns. That is the Hon. Member's concern. I would ask the Hon. Member not to again get into the debate on second reading of Bill C-72.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will get right to the point. Under Standing Order 93(1) legislative committees can have up to 30 members. I am not suggesting for one moment that we should have a committee of 30 members, but surely the committee should have more than seven members, the number which it presently has, particularly to allow different language minorities in the country to be represented on the committee.

I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to use your influence, since you have a role to play in the appointment of the chairperson of the committee, to see if this committee cannot be enlarged in accordance with the Standing Orders so that the Anglophones from Quebec, the Acadians from the Atlantic provinces and western Francophones can also be represented on this committee. This would ensure that all interests, especially the interest of those for whom the Bill was designed, come out of that committee in a substantial, sound way.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has raised a question which is clearly of very great importance to the Chair. Bill C-72, quite properly so, has gained a great deal of attention from all sides of the House. There have been different views as to the Bill itself.

What the Hon. Member is now asking the Chair to do is something that the Chair cannot do, that is, expand unilaterally the numbers on a committee, or for that matter determine the appointment of Hon. Members to the committee, which as I indicated a few minutes ago is the prerogative of each of the Parties.

It is true that the Chair, that is, myself, has not only the privilege but the obligation to appoint the chairperson of that committee. Hon. Members will know that I have exercised that prerogative, and I think properly so, by appointing my Deputy Speaker, who I think will not only be acceptable to all Members in the House but who has clearly demonstrated on many occasions his impartiality and his concern for both linguistic communities.

I am sorry to have to advise the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East that, despite the fact that he might very well have a complaint with his colleagues in his own Party, or his own Whip, or others in the Chamber, it is not a matter on which the Chair can intervene. I know that the Hon. Member will understand that I cannot let the matter go on any further because I am powerless to intervene. I have also to advise that, while it may very well be an appropriate complaint to be taken elsewhere, it is not a question of privilege before this Chamber.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter relating to this question of privilege. Of course, I find it very difficult to accept that the committee should be composed of only seven members and that we have only one from this caucus on the committee. I understand the feelings of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). It was not our decision but the decision of the government Members who form a majority on the committee to restrict the number to seven.

My point to you, Mr. Speaker, deals with Standing Order 93(3), which deals with the requirement that within two days after adoption of a Bill at second reading, the legislative committee must meet to set its priorities and to set its meeting schedule. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there were some difficulties in getting this committee struck. I shared with you in confidence some of my concerns about that, Mr. Speaker. I did not raise them in the House.

However, I am now concerned that the committee will have to sit soon, and it will have to sit according to our Standing Orders within two days after adoption, which is now impossible, since that was last Monday. A week ago in the House we adopted the said Bill C-72. We are one week into our agenda. The committee has not met and will not meet today or tomorrow. I understand that it will meet some time this week. So that my concerns on this matter can be met in an effective and efficient manner, I wonder if the Speaker can tell me when he expects the committee to meet so that we can have some idea.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised an important point under our Standing Orders, but I feel it would not be proper for the Chair to comment today on the date on which the committee should meet for the first time. I fully understand the Hon. Member's concern, and he has indeed told me about the delay. Clearly this delay is contrary to our Standing Orders. Now, I think that the committee will meet for the first time soon, hopefully sometime this week. I understand this is a very important matter, but discussions with the Government Leader in the House and with other Hon. Members concerning the exact date would be useful to the Hon. Member. But it would not be proper for the Chair to set up the date of the first meeting.

Mr. Gauthier: That was not my point, Mr. Speaker. My point was that under S.O. 93,(3) which reads:

> (3) A legislative committee constituted pursuant to sections (1) and (2) of this Standing Order, shall meet within two sittings days after the adoption of the motion for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of the bill . . .

Mr. Speaker, my point is that until today, which is March 14, we are in violation of our Standing Orders because the committee has failed to meet. It happens sometimes that the Government fails to reply to our questions within the 45 statutory days. There is no possible remedy for that, other than a request to the Chair asking him to do something to speed up matters.

In this case, to say the least, there was clearly a breach of S.O. 93,(3). I would like an assurance from the Chair that the Committee will meet as soon as possible, and I will be satisfied with that.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could be of some help to the Hon. Member. He is perfectly right. This is clearly a situation where there has been a breach of our Standing Orders. Since the first intervention, I have been advised that the first meeting will probably be held on Thursday.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MOTION TO ENDORSE THE MOTION OF MR. MULRONEY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That this House endorses the adoption of the motion, on Monday, March 7, 1988, of the Prime Minister for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-113, An Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

Mr. Speaker: When the House took recess at 1.14 p.m., the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) had the floor.

• (1510)

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, just before I continue, I wonder whether the Chair could indicate how much time I have remaining.

Mr. Speaker: Seven minutes.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, seven minutes will not do justice to the remarks I want to make, but I will do my best.

As I was pointing out before the luncheon break, the proposed trade agreement being negotiated when signed will have a devastating effect upon the western Canadian economy in a number of areas. I cited as evidence the representations of the food processing industry. It is also instructive to look at the kinds of concerns being raised by the agricultural community. The abandonment of the clear principle of subsidies on the transportation system, the surrender of that basic principle, will cause enormous consternation in the future. When we become involved in the negotiations at Geneva concerning agriculture, the precedent that the Government has now accepted and established in the Western Grain Transportation Act, which in fact is a trade related subsidy, will be used by other countries as a way to force the veto of that very essential means of development.

If we look at the fruit and vegetable industry, the whole development of the Fraser Valley in British Columbia will be put in jeopardy. The British Columbia Federation of Agriculture appeared before our task force just a few weeks ago and clearly enunciated major concerns that the horticultural industry of the province would be in jeopardy. It is also true for the vegetable industry of Manitoba with the problems being faced in that area.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) went to great length to indicate the bonanza which would be created in the petrochemical, oil, and gas industries—the energy field. The effect of the trade agreement on the energy sector will be more serious than on any other sector. For example, the United States needs our energy resources. It has the biggest appetite for energy of any country in the world. Basically it is becoming a buyer's market. At the very moment when we know that the United States desperately needs our energy resources, what do we do? We fix a price. We do not go to a market price, or to allowing that kind of demand to set prices. The constraint is that if we raise prices for the Americans we would have to raise them for Canadian consumers. We will not be able to take full advantage of the opportunities created by the fact that it is now a buyer's market.

I submit that we are giving up one of the most competitive advantages of western Canada. Let us also consider the petrochemical field. How was it formed? How were various industries in Manitoba formed? They were formed by using energy as a competitive advantage. We gave a special price to those users, but we could no longer do that.

The trade agreement will substantially limit the major industrial advantage we have in terms of developing a new comparative arrangement vis-à-vis the United States. Where do we have an advantage over them? Is it in skilled manpower or resources? The Americans have those commodities. Increasingly our advantage is in cheaper energy resources. However, the Government is giving it up. The Government is surrendering it. It is abandoning the future of western Canada in utilizing hydroelectric power, natural gas, and petroleum to give Canadian industry a substantial advantage in competing with the Americans and competing world-wide. That totally denies logic and the opportunity for industry to grow in western Canada. We are the source blood of energy, whether it is hydroelectric power in British Columbia and Manitoba or natural gas in Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan. The fact is that that is the key to the future of the western Canadian economy. However, the Government has put a lock on it. It has put a fix on it. It has given away that opportunity.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona attempted to justify the trade deal as being a great bonanza. The fact is that we will lose jobs in a number of existing industries. Also we are giving up a major competitive advantage in one of our most important industries. I submit that western Canada will be devastated in its opportunity and its potential. Whatever small amount of money will trickle in as a result of western diversification, it will be lost in comparison with the enormous subtraction that will take place as a consequence of the Government going ahead and ratifying the particular deal with the Americans.

That is the real story for western Canada. Contrary to the claims and promises, it will become an albatross around western Canada and a major deterrent to the development of new industrial and resource based industries in the West. That is the real tragedy, and the House should be debating the surrender and abandonment of the western Canadian economy by the Government.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly to a number of points which the Hon. Member raised. He told us that the Auto Pact was managed trade. Will he tell us when other than I believe in 1968, when any of the minimum production safeguards were used other than briefly in 1980 or 1981 when Chrysler was in difficulty. In fact, to all intents and purposes we have free trade in the auto industry. That is why Oshawa and southern Ontario is doing so well. In western Canada we are all delighted about that, but I do not think it is fair for the Member to pretend that the Auto Pact is not a free trade agreement. It is one that can be terminated on one year's notice by the Congress, whereas under the trade deal if Congress wants to kill the Auto Pact it will have to kill the entire trade agreement. In that sense it entrenches a very good thing for southern Ontario and parts of Quebec, and I am all for it.

The Member mentioned the use of high sulphur coal. I have looked into this matter. I share fully the concerns of my fellow western Canadian colleagues about the use of high sulphur coal. Perhaps the Hon. Member can do something with Premier Peterson about encouraging Ontario Hydro not to use high sulphur coal. I was told recently that in a few years when those contracts run out we will be able to move low sulphur western coal by pipeline through to Ontario Hydro. There will no need for a transportation subsidy. I assume the subsidy is what the Hon. Member is concerned about in the trade agreement.

The Hon. Member mentioned food processing. I tried over the lunch hour to get a list of the organizations in western Canada in favour of the trade agreement but three or four provincial Governments are in favour, presumably four on April 26 with Manitoba, the Canada West Foundation, the C. D. Howe Institute, the Canadian Cattlemen and Milton Harris. I remind the Hon. Member that Mr. Harris is president of the Harris steel group. He said he will abandon his lifelong Liberal membership because he feels so strongly that this agreement is good for the steel industry across Canada. The grain and oil seed sector will benefit, the lumber industry will benefit. Who in western Canada other than the Hon. Member and the outgoing dead or dying Government of Manitoba and Mel Hurtig, a friend of mine in Edmonton, agrees with the Hon. Member on this?

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) referred to the energy agreement. I have a paper here by Professor Brian Scarfe of the University of Alberta on the trade agreement. Professor Scarfe certainly thinks, as do most people in the energy industry in Calgary, Edmonton, Saskatoon and everywhere else, that the agreement will do a great deal to help create jobs and keep jobs in the energy industry. Perhaps the Member might like to deal with some of those points, or perhaps his friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), might do it for him.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, first let me comment on the Auto Pact. It is instructive that Victor Lomo who represents the Auto Pacts Manufacturers of Canada, a most important industrial based group, has said he is against this agreement because it will devastate the auto parts industry of Ontario. He appeared before a Liberal trade task force about four weeks ago. I will be glad to send the Hon. Member the comments of Mr. Lomo.

Second, the Member raises the question about the coal project. The fact is, and I use it as illustration, that the choice and option for Canadians to use a form of subsidy for regional development is now constrained by this trade agreement. We know that all kinds of projects in the future will require that kind of investment in the infrastructure of western Canada because of our geography and climate. In fact, the restraint and inhibition put on developing the western coal project as it now stands is one of the most serious and clear examples of how we put a straitjacket on regional development for western Canada from a federal level.

Third, who supports the trade deal? We finished a series of hearings across the West. I can name groups. There are the data processors, a number of agricultural groups, a number of social organizations and coalitions. If the Hon. Member looked at the surveys he will see that one was just conducted in British Columbia last week which pointed out that 60 per cent of the people want an election to determine this matter and a large percentage of women are against it.

Mr. Waddell: Eighty per cent think that Americans will benefit.

Mr. Axworthy: And 80 per cent think the Americans will benefit. I suggest the Hon. Member should consult western Canadians. There are as many people concerned about the trade deal as are in favour of it. There are many industrial groups which know they will be seriously affected. The truckers, the furniture manufacturers, the food processors, the data processors and people in the high technology industries all realize that they have been put in jeopardy.

The Hon. Member mentions lumber. This agreement entrenches an $800 million tax on the Canadian lumber industry. It requires us to impose a penalty on ourselves and it has not been negotiated away. Similarly, the Government gave away in the agreement the right of the fish processing industry to use an export tax to protect processing industries on the West Coast and on the East Coast. The Government had an opportunity to gain an advantage for western Canadians but the Government gave it away. The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and other Members from western Canada have not subjected the deal to the kind of clear analysis required for its economic impact. I submit to this House that if Members look at this in an honest way and look at the figures of the Government's own analysis, western Canada ends up the economic loser under the Mulroney trade deal.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I wish to ask the Member who was at one time a Cabinet Minister in the Liberal Government what happened to the western development fund. In doing so, I would like to quote from western Canadian newspapers including The Winnipeg Free Press. On October 29, 1980 there is a picture of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was a Cabinet Minister talking about this bonus to Manitoba and speaking about the western development fund of $4 billion which will be used to help the western economy diversify. The article goes on to talk about the types of initiatives that should take place. That was October, 1980.

In January, 1981 a Saskatchewan paper had an article saying that the province is in the dark concerning the western development fund.

Going a bit further, in May, 1981 there is an article in The Financial Post about the western development fund saying that the $4 billion has been put on ice.

In June, 1981 we have the person who normally occupies the Chair, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) asking what has happened to the western development fund. The Hon. Member from Winnipeg—Fort Garry says "It is cynical to say that the western development fund has disappeared or that it is not going to be used.

I can go on month after month, year after year, but since the Member was the man who was supposed to be, to use the quote from The Winnipeg Free Press, "parcelling out the money to western Canada", can he explain to this House what happened to that promise? Here we are in 1988 four years after his Party left, so we cannot blame him for the problems of the last four years, but what happened in 1980? What happened in 1981? What happened in 1982? What happened in 1983? And what happened before September 4, 1984?

I know the Member from Winnipeg—Fort Garry knows there was high unemployment, that the agricultural industry was suffering, that the provinces at that time were quite willing to participate in a western development fund. I do not want to cut the Member off, but I do want to have a chance to answer the question. It seems to me that the $4 billion was a phantom fund. Certainly some money was spent in western Canada but all the hype, the publicity, the PR and all the promises disappeared. Since the Member was the person who was supposed to be parcelling out the money, perhaps he can explain, four years after he is no longer a Minister, what happened to the dollars?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I am surprised the Hon. Member who comes from western Canada is so totally and absolutely ignorant about what did happen to it. I would have thought a Member serving his constituents would have spent a little time determining the facts. They are very simple.

Of the $4 billion, $3.5 billion was spent on modernizing the railway system of western Canada. That was based upon consultation with the provinces, with the industry and with the sector. The conclusion was very clear. But the single most important investment required was the total modernization of the railway system. We could not move the products from his riding to ports with the deterioration that was going on in the railway system. The Government of Canada, through the western cabinet committee, made a clear decision to invest $3.5 billion in the modernization of railways. That has taken place and is ongoing at the present time.

• (1530)

I am really surprised that the Hon. Member does not know that the rest of the money was established as part of a native economic development fund, setting up a bank to allow native groups across western Canada to start their own businesses and self-development projects, many of which are now working. The fact that an Hon. Member with a large native population in his riding does not know about that simply shows that he has not been doing his homework.

While we are on the subject, I would simply point out that in addition to those two major investments, the previous Government also put $1.2 billion into a special regional allocation of which over $550 million was spent in my home Province of Manitoba. That was matched by private sector and provincial moneys, so in fact an additional $2.1 billion was spent by 1984 on a whole range of projects for the development of western Canada.

I would be glad to elaborate on this some more if the Hon. Member really wants to know. I am totally surprised that he would not know by this time, four years later, what an important and effective investment we made in the West.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on debate today, particularly because in the last couple of weeks, I have seen this particular fund in action. I am quite excited about the projects that are being considered or have been approved by the fund.

We all know that the fund was established because western Canada is a very unique region and its resources of mining, fishing and agriculture are susceptible to international markets. As the market falls internationally, there is a bust and if there are good prices on those commodities, there is a boom. Our Government has said that that is not satisfactory, that we have to diversify the West. Not only that, the Government has said that westerners should say what they want. The people and the businesses of western Canada should have input.

The Government has assigned a western cabinet Minister the responsibility for the western diversification fund. A Deputy Minister is located in western Canada and now western Canadians are making the decisions in Edmonton, a centre of western Canada.

I would like to tell Hon. Members of one of the projects I had an opportunity to announce in my riding in Winnipeg last week, and that is the Elder's Aquafarm. I think this is a very unique project. There was a malting plant right in the centre of Winnipeg that was not being utilized any longer for environmental reasons. The Elder's Grain Company came up with the idea of converting the tanks used for malting into fish tanks. The company started to proceed with this project and it will cost in excess of some $2 million to achieve it. The interesting part is that there are now fish being raised economically in the centre of Winnipeg. Profits will be made by this private company in association with the western diversification fund.

An Hon. Member: Winnipeg goldeye?

Mr. Minaker: No, it is not Winnipeg goldeye. The company is raising Arctic char and trout. They anticipate that within a couple of years, over one million pounds of pan-sized fish will be produced by this plant to be sold in western Canada and the United States. This has come about because of the diversification fund which has assisted the company to some degree. I might add that the fund has made a loan that the company will be paying back, it was not an outright grant. This project will create 15 jobs.

Another project the western diversification office is looking at is one which I think is very interesting, namely, a robotics paint shop for commercial aeroplanes. Aeroplanes could be automatically painted by robots without any human contact with the fumes and the deadly gases. The company that is dealing with the western diversification office on this has already designed a robotic shop for the CN Railway yards in Transcona, and that has been a success. The company can now take this knowledge and software and develop it not only in Manitoba but in Saskatchewan. The company would then develop through private enterprise this paint shop for aeroplanes located in Winnipeg which will create many, many jobs. These are the kinds of projects this fund is attracting.

Another area that is being attracted by the fund is the geriatric health field. A company is interested in developing and expanding its location with a product developed in Europe. This company wants to bring this technology to western Canada and is talking about doubling the size of the plant. It is talking about 50 jobs. This is what the diversification fund is doing in my area, and I am sure this is happening in Saskatchewan and elsewhere as well. Our Government believes that westerners should have a chance at these kinds of projects.

Just to give Hon. Members an idea of the interest of the Opposition in this, members of the NDP voted against providing the western diversification fund with an initial $100 million, and they also voted against the $127 million for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We know what they are interested in.

Liberal Members talk about being interested in diversification in the West. I would like to tell Hon. Members about the voting record of Liberal Members. That pattern of voting would turn down the economy of western Canada even further than it would have gone if they had stayed in Government.

We know how important the energy sector is for western Canada. In the first session, the Liberals voted against the repeal of the disastrous National Energy Program, including changes to the royalty regime. They voted against the repeal of the incremental oil revenue tax in that first session.

The Liberals voted against competition in air and rail transportation. We all know that transportation plays a very important part in the economy of the western provinces. Our goods must be transported across such a large area. The Liberals voted against increased competition in transportation which would mean lower transportation rates.

The agricultural sector is a very important part of the economy of western Canada as well. The Liberals voted against the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for Canadian farmers and so did the NDP. They do not realize that farms are the pension plans of farming families. If farmers were taxed on capital gains, they would not find it worth their while to sell the farms. There would not be a changeover within a family unit or within the sector, and we need new blood in the farming community.

The Liberals also voted against the expenditure of $92 million for drought relief for western farmers, Bill C-101, in the first session. This is the kind of interest members of the Liberal Party have in western Canada. No wonder they talk negatively about the western diversification fund. It is good for western Canada, and it would appear from their voting record that they are not interested in western Canada.

The Liberals voted against giving the Canadian Wheat Board $200 million to meet its deficit, Bill C-47 in the second session. Again, they were not interested in western Canada. The Liberals voted against increased foreign investment through the creation of Investment Canada and the dismantling of FIRA in the first session. We know how important foreign investment is. Foreign investment is now encouraged to come to Canada.

The project to which I referred earlier dealing with geriatric health involves foreign investment which is willing to invest and expand in Winnipeg and bring technology with it. I am sure it would not be interested in doing that if FIRA were still in place. That is the kind of attitude members of the Opposition have toward diversification. We are fortunate to some degree in Manitoba that we are probably more diversified than most western provinces. Yet even then, we are still at the mercy of international wheat prices.

We as a Government saw fit to support strongly the farm community in its time of need over the past two years. We injected billions of dollars into that sector, not only in western Canada but in all of Canada, to make it stay alive. We also made sure the towns and communities dependent upon the industry stayed alive.

I was at a meeting with my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), organized by the Keystone Agriculture Organization. Delegate after delegate, all of them farmers, stood up and thanked our Government for taking an interest in agriculture, which is the opposite of what the NDP Government of Manitoba did. We have increased payments to the industry by some 400 per cent since we became the Government. That shows the interest we have in agriculture, particularly in western Canada.

I know you have been signalling that my time is running out, Madam Speaker, so I will sit down and let someone else continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I would like to hear more from the Hon. Member, if he would be so kind as to tell us about what the diversification strategy would tend to do in his province. He will recall that I mentioned earlier the payroll tax, which is such a disincentive to employment in Manitoba. Can he tell us anything more about that and what other disincentives there are in Manitoba?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I think I gave examples of the type of diversification taking place in my riding. There was, as well, an announcement concerning research work in the engineering department at the University of Manitoba. There has also been some expansion in the plastics industry. We have a big aerospace industry which, in turn, is looking at ways it can diversify and expand.

Obviously the best way, in our opinion, for Manitoba to diversify is through free trade. There is no question about it. Free trade will be very good for Manitoba. That is why I could never understand why my friend from Churchill never supported free trade. Some 6.1 per cent of our export sales to the U.S. are in softwood lumber. I think all of the softwood lumber in Manitoba is in the Churchill riding. Similarly, International Nickel and the mining association completely endorse free trade. Thompson, Manitoba, a great city, relies completely on the sale of minerals, over 80 per cent of which are exported to the U.S. Therefore, I cannot understand why the Hon. Member for Churchill does not support free trade. It is good for Manitoba, particularly his region. I would think the majority of the major employers in his region depend on trade with the U.S. These are the areas where diversification will take place, particularly as free trade comes in.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about economic development in the North. As he knows, the present Government of Manitoba invested incredible amounts of money in hydroelectric development in the North. Can the Hon. Member tell us something about where the market for that hydroelectricity would likely be? If it is the U.S., would the people of Manitoba not benefit from free trade because they would be able to export that electricity to the U.S?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. As a matter of fact, at present some 6 per cent of our exports to the U.S. consist of hydroelectric energy. There is a potential market there which could result in further hydro-generating stations being built on the Nelson River. There is still something like 3,000 megawatts of energy flowing down the river unused. Clearly, the market to the south is a good one and free trade will open it up and encourage us to export energy to the U.S.

It is ironic that the former NDP Government of Manitoba actually pays a lobbyist in Washington to try to protect that province's present sales to the U.S. There are protectionist Senators who want to restrict or place a tariff on hydro energy exported to the U.S. It is ironic that the NDP Government will pay literally tens of thousands of dollars to a lobbyist in Washington to try to protect existing sales but will not support free trade which opens up the opportunity to sell even more to the U.S.

Then again, when one talks and listens to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), leader of the NDP, one can understand fully. He is opposed to free trade but his riding probably benefits the most from the Auto Pact. Billions of dollars have been invested by the auto industry in Oshawa. On the one hand, he is happy that they are doing this, but on the other hand, when he leaves Oshawa, he says he is against free trade. I cannot understand where the NDP is coming from.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was saying, this will certainly be the best speech we hear today.

Mr. Redway: Don't denigrate your own comments.

Mr. Murphy: Of course, the Deputy Government House Leader was sitting here and encouraged me to get up and speak only because he recognizes the need to have someone speak on behalf of western Canada. The reason that this is necessary is that when the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) got up and asked a hard-hitting question of a fellow Conservative Member, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker), about the payroll tax in Manitoba, the Hon. Member absolutely refused to deal with it. Do you know why? Because his leader in Manitoba, flip-flop Filmon, decided that he will now defend the payroll tax. Here is an opportunity for the Hon. Member to slam the New Democrats on something that is, according to the Hon. Member, very unpopular in Manitoba. Yet the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James does not want to be in the position of attacking his former cabinet colleague in Manitoba, Mr. Filmon, and avoids the question.

• (1550)

This is an opportunity for me to speak on the issues on which the Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) is afraid to speak. However, before I talk about this particular problem I want to add to the comments that I made when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James spoke earlier. We are now in a situation similar to that in October, 1980 when the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, who is now in the other place, declared that there was going to be $4 billion for a western development fund. We waited through the rest of 1980, through 1981, through 1982, through 1983, and until the Liberals were defeated in 1984, and the western development fund did not come into being.

The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said that a lot of money was spent on transportation and the rest was spent on native economic development. Yes, there was money spent on western transportation and there was money committed for native economic development, money that was never spent. The former Minister, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, had talked about a western development fund for diversifying the West, a fund which would create new industries in the West and would help all parts of the West to have industrial development. That money never came. In the West we started calling it the phantom fund.

We can understand the nervousness of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry because, as I said earlier, he was the Minister in the Liberal regime and was supposed to parcel out the money. He travelled to B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba talking about how valuable this $4 billion would be for the West. We are still waiting. It never happened. That was a broken promise of the Liberals. That is the sort of thing which makes people in western Canada upset about what happens on this Hill.

In 1980 and 1981 people in the West thought the Government was giving them the shaft. In October, 1980, there was a sense that we had finally been recognized as a region of Canada which would no longer only be involved in growing wheat and exporting natural resources. The talk about a $4 billion western development fund gave a lot of hope to people in the West. As time passed, that hope was taken away and we saw that nothing was going to happen. First there was a retreat. It was no longer $4 billion but became $2 billion. It was no longer to diversify the West, it was, as the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry just said, to help maintain the transportation system in the West. We were not told the truth, and every time a cabinet Minister stood up we found out that there was less and less money for the West and that the money would be used for fewer and fewer programs.

Here we are, four years after the defeat of the Liberals, with another Government. this Government has less than 18 months left in its term of office and last year it promised a western diversification fund. Legislation is before a committee of this House at this time and nothing has happened. People in the West are again asking what is going on. They were promised the money and the provinces have put forward proposals, but the Government did not even introduce the legislation into the House until just over a month ago.

We in the West feel that we are again being given more cynical political promises. We went through that with the former Liberal Government. The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry never defended the West, and his answers in the House today proved that the western development fund was a myth.

The same situation is now occurring with the Conservatives. In answer to questions from his own colleagues, the Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) and the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, the Member for Winnipeg—St. James went off on a tirade on free trade because he did not dare to answer anything about the government program. The Member for Winnipeg—St. James, a Manitoba Member, did not talk about any of the proposals made by the Manitoba Government. He did not mention one of those programs which could benefit from the western diversification plan.

We have talked about the $3 billion which the Government of Manitoba has suggested as a priority. The Government of Manitoba said that it would not inflict its political philosophy on the federal Government but would give it an option. In November, 1987, this package was sent to the federal Government explaining a number of proposals which the federal Government could consider if it wanted to spend some of the money from the western diversification fund in Manitoba. As I indicated earlier, Vic Schroeder, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, said that Manitoba was presenting these proposals to the federal Government for its assessment. The Government of Manitoba was willing to meet with the federal Ministers responsible to discuss the programs upon which further action could be taken.

As you know, about two weeks ago the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), the Chairman of the Manitoba PC caucus in this place, said that money was not going to Manitoba because the Howard Pawley Government was attacking the federal Tories and that it was not very nice to attack the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on free trade and say that perhaps the federal Government was not doing a great job in some areas. He implied that that was the reason Manitoba was not getting money. That was not accepted very well in Manitoba and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) went to Manitoba and said that that was not a problem, that the Government was not punishing Manitoba. He said that Manitobans should forget what the Member for St. Boniface, the Chairman of the Conservative caucus, said, that the federal Government is working on it.

Then the election was called in Manitoba, and two days later the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister officially appointed by the Prime Minister to be responsible for Manitoba, says that things will be happening on western diversification in the Province of Manitoba and that they will happen before the election is over. He said that proposals will be approved by Cabinet before April 26, 1988. The Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) says that that sounds good, and it does sound good.

There was reference in the Winnipeg Free Press on Friday to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am not allowed to use his name so I will refer to him as the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Member responsible for Manitoba, which is acceptable. However, it is what he said that is not acceptable. He said that he has not seen any proposals on the province's $3 billion list worthy of western diversification funding, but added that individual applications will be approved on their own merit.

• (1600)

Some four months after the Manitoba Government sent the proposals, the Minister responsible for Manitoba says that he has not seen any worthy proposals. Yet at the same time he said that the Government will give money to Manitoba for some of these presumably unworthy proposals before the people of Manitoba vote in six weeks from now. People must be cynical when a cabinet Minister says that, and must be extremely cynical when it is said by a cabinet Minister who did not defend Manitoba when it came to a decision—

Mr. Horner: What has that got to do with anything?

Mr. Murphy: We are talking about the western diversification fund. The Member on the far right asks what it is all about. We are talking about the western diversification fund and what the Minister responsible for Manitoba said in Manitoba. Presumably it is relevant, and I am quite willing to let him read the Free Press. If he does not believe what the Minister said, he can talk to him in caucus. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare in a quiet, closed room, with no press available, can defend his actions better than he has done so far.

This promise of money from the same Minister who said that none of the projects are worthy is a cynical act. Later I will list those projects to show the importance of some of them. While we may not agree on the specifics of some of the proposals, I am sure you will agree that some of the ideas being suggested have merit.

Before I was interrupted by the Conservative Member opposite, I was saying how people were cynical when the previous Liberals were in power. They thought the western development fund was a fraud and that the previous Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, tried to create an illusion. They were cynical when the money for the western development fund promised by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry when he was Minister of Transport never appeared.

People in the West have become cynical. It is no wonder that they are cynical when one considers the statement by the Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) that he does not believe the proposals are worthy but will ratify and fund some of them before April 26 of this year. This is the same Government that awarded the CF-18 program to Montreal over what the Government's own official said was a technically better and cheaper proposal from an outfit in Manitoba. This is the same Government that did not hear the cries of the farmers. It was not concerned about the plight of farmers until 5 a.m.—

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): That is a lot of garbage.

Mr. Murphy: They are a little upset over there. They do not like being reminded of this. No one has ever denied that that phone call took place. At 5 a.m., the Premier of Saskatchewan, in the last weeks of an election campaign, phoned the Prime Minister to plead for some action for the farmers. It is not because the farmers are in trouble—

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): That is a lot of garbage.

Mr. Murphy: —not because they are going bankrupt, because of interest rates or farm foreclosures, but because the Conservative Government of Grant Devine was in trouble. Suddenly a billion dollars is promised.

Mr. Hardey: That is the most ridiculous poppycock I ever heard.

Mr. Murphy: It is no wonder that people are cynical when one considers the Government's actions with respect to the CF-18 decision, the plight of the farmers and how the Liberals utilized the western development fund. It is no wonder they are cynical when the Minister for National Health and Welfare makes such a promise during an election campaign in Manitoba. It is no wonder that people do not trust the Government.

The situation facing the farmers was serious long before the Saskatchewan election was called. The problems of the West existed not just in 1987 but also in 1984 when the Government was elected. It took until 1987 for the Government to discover that there were problems in the West and perhaps it should create a new fund with a name other than the western development fund, because the Liberals ruined that. The Government decided to call this new fund the western diversification fund.

Mr. Hardey: Are you against that program?

Mr. Murphy: The Member opposite asks if we are against the program. We are not against the program, but we are saying that we do not want any more phantoms.

In 1980, a Liberal could have asked if we are against the western development fund. We would have said that we are not against the program but we want something real.

We do not want political patronage or favouritism. We do not want the cynicism of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We do not want the threats of the Member from St. Boniface who chaired the Conservative caucus.

Let me list some of the projects for Manitoba. When the Government of Manitoba sent its proposals to the federal Government, I am sure Conservative Members of the House would have seen them as well. They would have seen specific and concrete proposals.

There was a request to meet with the federal Minister responsible, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

You indicate that I only have one minute left, Madam Speaker, which means I have less time left than the Conservative Member who sat down because he had run out of time.

We talked about a propulsion system centre, upgrading the copper zinc in my riding, the health industry, the energy industry and the rural problem. We talked about grain handling, rural sewer and water infrastructure and a number of different programs.

There is no way I can go through all of those programs in the time I have left. However, I am certainly willing to explain those priorities if the Conservative Member wishes to ask me.

The point is that proposals were made to the federal Government which we are told have not been found worthy by the Minister responsible for Manitoba. We have also been told that he will approve some of them because something is needed in Manitoba to make the federal Tories look good before the next election.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I am holding a document containing the resolutions of the fifty-eighth Congress of the Federal New Democratic Party. There are some rather surprising resolutions.

I want to ask the Member about three of the economic resolutions of his own constituency association. One states that the Churchill NDP move that it become the policy of the NDP that the federal Government directly control interest rates. Does that mean the Bank of Canada is no longer to be involved in that process?

Second, the Churchill NDP resolved that the NDP press the Government to regulate the wholesale price of fossil fuels with a view to equalizing cost across the country. How does he believe that will help western Canada?

• (1610)

Third, the resolution submitted by the Hon. Member's constituency is asking for voluntary retirement at the age of 55 years without penalty. Would he tell us whether that means there would be no penalty with respect to a pension normally taken at the age of 65 years, or what does he have in mind?

If he has time, would he please tell us whether his Party was in favour of or opposed to the National Energy Program?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I am not afraid to defend the resolutions presented by the membership in my riding. I presume, in the same vein, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) still believes in the many letters he used to write when he was an opposition Member, for example, his letter in 1981 when he attacked the use of Bruce Rawson as a senior adviser to the Government on western Canadian affairs. That was in 1981 when the Liberals were in power. We also have the Hon. Member's long article attacking the appointment of Mr. Rawson. Presumably, Mr. Rawson, in the mind of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, was an unworthy person for that appointment. We do know, and I know the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona knows, that the Conservatives appointed that same Mr. Rawson to be the senior person with respect to the western diversification fund.

I do not want to accuse the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona for having different thoughts now that he is on the government side than he did when he was in the Opposition with respect to people, programs and philosophies because I know that that same Member has held different views as a Conservative. Sometimes he thinks the Government is doing a good job for the West and other times he is appalled at the job the Conservatives are doing for the West. He is appalled to the extent that he refuses to go to caucus meetings of his own Party. He refuses to meet with his fellow Conservative Members of Parliament. So I am not concerned that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona says one thing about Mr. Rawson in 1981 and says the exact opposite in this House today. He does have a record of inconsistent statements.

With respect to the three specific resolutions, I am quite willing to talk about those, although they do not deal with western diversification, nor with the problems and proposals of people from western Canada. I wish the Hon. Member had asked me a question on that. I think it is very important for Members from different provinces to hear what people in the West are saying. First, the Hon. Member seemed to imply that there was something wrong with my riding association saying that we should do something to control interest rates. My riding association, like many other riding associations, whether New Democratic, Liberal or Conservative, are very concerned about interest rates because we have seen farm foreclosures and small industries going under. We have seen people lose their homes. I make absolutely no apology. For that matter, I am proud that members of my constituency association are saying we have to do something to control interest rates.

That does not mean there is no role for the central bank. It does mean that the federal Government has a role to play as well. We have to take a look at the situation. We do not want to go back to the days of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) where interest rates were at 18 per cent, 19 per cent and 20 per cent. What my riding association is saying is that there are other things to consider than what the Chairman of the Bank of Canada thinks. He may be concerned about inflation, which tends to be the main preoccupation of the Bank of Canada, but there are people in the regions, on farms, people in small business, men and women right across this country, who are very concerned about keeping their businesses operating and interest rates have killed and maimed many small businesses.

Despite the implications made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, I think a resolution saying we should look at controlling interest rates is a damn good thing for this country.

Second, the Hon. Member referred to controlling the price of fossil fuels. Let me explain why that resolution was introduced in 1985. For his benefit, I will point out that I represent a northern riding where most of the communities are 300, 400, 500 or 600 miles north of the City of Winnipeg. The people in my riding buy gasoline just as do people right across this country. However, they noticed that if they drive to a community to the south, they pay 36 cents a litre for gas, if they go 50 miles north, they pay 40 cents a litre for gas. If they go 150 miles north, they pay 50 cents a litre for gas, and if they go further north they pay more than that. The City of Thompson, Manitoba decided to abandon the commercial dealerships. It decided not to pay those high prices that Esso, Texaco or Shell insisted on. The people of that city were going to put together a gas co-op. The community of Thompson discovered they could sell gas for 10 cents a litre less than the commercial operators were charging. The City of Thompson could do that quite easily because it had a fairly large population. It had a population of 14,000 people and all of them wanted to set up their own gas co-op and be able to sell gas for a lot less. However, that is not so easy for the people in smaller towns.

The people in smaller towns went to Shell and to the other companies and told them that Thompson, Manitoba, 250 miles away, was selling gas for 6 cents, 7 cents or 8 cents a litre less than people were paying in The Pas or in some of the other communities. They wanted to know why. We have an oligarchy in this country which basically controls the wholesale distribution and price of gas.

I notice that the Member who asked the question has disappeared. I think the answer overwhelmed him. The northern communities realized they were not in a situation where there was free enterprise and competition. They were being told by the local dealer that he would love to sell gas to them at a cheaper price but he could not because Shell and the other gas companies would not let him. So the people in my riding said we should have some system put in place which allowed for the freight cost into the North because it does cost more when you ship oil and gas to the North. They found out that they could move gas 450 miles into Thompson and still sell it for 10 cents a litre less than what the private enterprise competition was charging.

I can understand why the people in my riding put forward a resolution saying, yes, we should do something to regulate fossil fuel prices so that people do not get ripped off, and I support the people in my riding association who put that forward. I suspect that most of the people in a producing province and in a producing city such as Alberta would also support the same type of resolution.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I was about to say that it is a pleasure to participate in the April 26 Manitoba election campaign.

Mr. Murphy: That's not true. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) avoided it.

Mr. Edwards: It seemed as if we were getting into the preliminary skirmishes, but then of course we do not know who the players are and that may be premature.

It has been stated by Members on both sides of the House that others have talked about western diversification, but it is only now and only recently that something substantial is being done about it. I can recall attending a national industry meeting in Winnipeg in April, 1982, and having the Prime Minister of the day, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, speak on his vision of western Canada. Those who were not amused were bemused. It seemed to be an awakening on the road to Damascus on the part of this remarkable Canadian. Of course, as the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has so aptly put it, that was the beginning and the end of it. There was double-tracking, which I think was credited to the Liberals' account. But there was more double-talking than there was double-tracking.

We are now doing something about it. I should point out that the Government did not wait until the legislation appeared in the House to act on western diversification. In fact, not long after the announcement was made in Edmonton on August 4, 1987, applications began to flood in. In fact, there was so much interest and so much pre-activity shown with respect to the issue of western diversification that I am told there was a considerable amount of staff burn-out and staff turnover in the beginning weeks.

Frankly, while it was known that there was western entrepreneurial genius and outstanding ideas within western Canada, no one quite estimated the quality, depth and volume of that activity. It is now six months since the initiative was announced. I am happy to report that based on my experience it is operating very well. The office in Edmonton is running well. Many projects have been approved or are in the final assessment phase. Others, for various reasons, have been sent back for modification or, in fact, have been rejected for not meeting the criteria. I hope that there will be some time to touch upon those criteria.

There are quite a few distinguishing characteristics of the western diversification initiative that set it apart from previous initiatives of previous Governments and, indeed, initiatives of provincial Governments, in that it is designed to top up, to facilitate, to lever, to be last dollar in. In other words, it is the final achiever of projects that are otherwise worthy.

I could touch on one or two examples of initiatives that went through prior to the establishment of western diversification. I think of the western transportation diversification fund, which was a last gasp effort of the previous Government but which we have acted on.

I point out that in the cultural field, in which I have more than a passing interest, I had the privilege of participating just last Tuesday at the ribbon-cutting of a new $7 million motion picture production studio in my constituency which was enabled in part through a grant from WTID.

This is quite a departure in philosophy from that of previous Governments, as I have mentioned. We have stopped the process of throwing dollars at the sunset. That is a significant departure. If there is one thing which rankles the populace, it is the idea of keeping alive an industry which should not be kept alive through government intervention. Indeed, a great deal of research, planning and consultation went into the establishment of the western diversification fund and the western diversification office. At the request of at least two provincial Governments the announcement of the initiative was delayed on two occasions so that the provincial Governments could have their proper input. I know that that occurred. I know that the initiative will succeed with greater efficacy because of that consultation and that input.

There are a good many examples of value added in the traditional fields of oil and gas and agriculture in my own Province of Alberta which had been enhanced or were in the process of being enhanced. There are a great many others in the process. But it is in the field of research and technology that I think we can take greatest pride in some of the achievements that have already gone ahead in the Province of Alberta.

Some of these are tangential to western diversification, within the umbrella of the initiative that is, and others are directly within the umbrella. For example, there was established in April of 1986 the Canada-Alberta subsidiary agreement on northern development, a $40 million program offering assistance in three key areas: expanded diversity of economic development in the North; assistance for northern residents to develop and access employment opportunities; and facilitation of the development of community and regional infrastructure in order to improve the long-term viability of business and industrial initiatives.

As you are well aware, Madam Speaker, our Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) chairs a committee which is instrumental in striving to bring western Canadian low-sulphur coal to Ontario for the use of Ontario Hydro. The committee is chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and consists of Premiers Getty, Vander Zalm, Devine and Peterson. The objective is to improve the economic attractiveness of western Canadian coal so that Ontario coal users will make commercial decisions to increase their use of Canadian coal.

As well, there have been a number of initiatives undertaken by the Government of Alberta which is pushing forward high technology and research at the Alberta Microelectronics Centre, a non-profit organization located at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. The fabrication facility is in the northern city. The design facility is in the Stampede city. That centre will assist Alberta's growing electronics industry with the design and manufacture of leading-edge products which can be marketed worldwide. The Government of Alberta, I am happy to note, has contributed $14 million over three years for the centre starting in 1985.

The Alberta Laser Institute, which many of my colleagues are following with considerable interest, was established to work closely with private sector companies to transfer technology involving materials processing, laser sensors and the medical and electronic application of lasers to improve productivity, competitiveness and new product development. Again, I congratulate the Government of Alberta for contributing $5 million over five years.

So far there have been two major announcements under western diversification within the Province of Alberta. There was the $9.5 million participation in Daishowa Canada Limited, which will construct a major greenfield bleached kraft pulpmill near Peace River. That mill will cost more than $500 million and will create 630 mill and woodland jobs and 1,260 indirect jobs. The provincial Government is co-operating by assisting with rail and road access and other infrastructure.

This mill is unique because it is based on the use of aspen, or, as we used to call it, poplar, which is in some of our Alberta forests and which is certainly regarded by Alberta homesteaders and those who are trying to grow gardens as something of a weed. But it is now being put to proper use. I know that the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) has been very much involved in the encouragement and the development of research in the use of aspen, which is no longer a weed but a distinct asset.

I had the opportunity just two weeks ago to tour a facility in the constituency of my friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). The proprietor of the business happens to be a resident of my constituency. This is typical of the kind of world-scale research that is going on in the Province of Alberta, which will overcome the great handicap of distance and absence of markets which has plagued and hindered the diversification of the western economy heretofore. This particular facility is owned by local interests and collaborates with Japanese interests. It is known as Synphar Chemicals and is associated with the Taiho conglomerate of Japan. The work in which they are engaged relates to the extraction of natural compounds from plants and exotic seeds to substitute for the worrisome products derived from coal tar, which are used extensively in cosmetics and are unfortunately used in some food additives.

• (1630)

This research is going forward. At the end of the tour I said to the proprietor: "Are you looking for something from the Government?" He said: "No, Sir, we are not. We are going to do it on our own". I am happy to say that there are some situations which do not require government intervention. However, I am happy to say that western diversification will assist those who do, where it is critical to the success or failure of the venture.

Other work done by Norac Technologies Inc. relates to the extraction of natural compounds from plants and exotic seeds to substitute for the worrisome products derived from coal tar, which are used extensively in cosmetics and are unfortunately used in some food additives.

I was a little perturbed to hear the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) criticizing a distinguished public servant, the Deputy Minister who, by the way, is designated to reside in Edmonton. I think it is unique in Canadian legislation that the head office of an authority would be established outside the national capital region. Perhaps the Atlantic authority has a similar designation in its legislation. The Deputy Minister in question, to whom the Hon. Member for Churchill referred, I am happy to say is—and this is not his only qualification for the job—a resident of the constituency of Edmonton South. I found that he and his staff have been exceedingly helpful, despite the tremendous volume of work they must do in sorting and assessing various proposals. They have been extremely helpful when my colleagues and I have been asked to refer to the office to determine the status of any particular project.

The people in the WDO office work long hours. They are committed to the success of western diversification. They are co-operative with provincial officials and with those who bring forward proposals.

I wish to touch on another role of the western diversification initiative, that is, the path-finding role. There are many other government programs which can be made applicable to our western situation. I am pleased that the WDO in Edmonton—and I am sure it is the same in the other offices across western Canada—has the capability of seeking out government programs, be they in the cultural field, telecommunications, agriculture, or whatever application, and of bringing the proposers and the doers together.

I mentioned that heretofore there have been two major announcements under WDO in the Province of Alberta. I touched briefly on the Daishowa project, which was announced on February 8 in a joint announcement by the federal and provincial Governments and the Japanese-based company.

In addition, I should like to take a moment or two of the time of the House to touch on the Centre for Frontier Engineering Research. It was my privilege to have worked with the project since the fall of 1984 to try to assist in bringing it to fruition. It is a remarkable institute. The concept of the Centre for Frontier Energy Research is a dual one. The interest in frontier engineering research is reflected in an industry-driven program aimed at materials design and constructed for Arctic and offshore energy development. The commitment which the centre has made to technological frontiers can be seen in its program of ground-breaking research focused on conventional, heavy oil, and oil sands operations.

The areas of research are two—offshore structures and down hole tubular systems. In addition, the Centre for Frontier Energy Research has a mandate including a commitment to networking, the movement of current technical information through industry. CFER Atlantic operating out of the technical university of Nova Scotia has also been developing well. The proposed laboratories are now properly funded and are proceeding well under the construction program that was laid out for them when the project was announced on December 22, 1987.

The joint federal-provincial commitment is $18 million. The federal Government will provide a $7.75 million capital contribution, and $1 million of that will be matched by CFER through industry supporters. The Alberta Government will provide a total of $6.75 million, which includes a $4.5 million capital grant, $1.25 million toward operating funds through to 1993, and a $1 million maximum interest subsidy. The province will also provide a loan guarantee of up to $5 million.

In the words of the Deputy Prime Minister who participated in the announcement, the facility will increase Canada's competitiveness in world markets and increase opportunities for Canadian engineering firms to compete on a worldwide basis. The engineering profession, the consulting industry in the Province of Alberta, was decimated through the depression of the early 1980s. We were at risk of losing the critical core of that profession, a profession truly in the forefront of world competence in the areas of civil engineering, petroleum engineering, and soil mechanics. Institutes such as the Centre for Frontier Engineering Research and others to come will do a great deal to provide a sea anchor to guard against that loss of competence and that loss of a critical mass.

I was pleased to note, at the announcement of the establishment of CFER, that the frontiers are not limited to our western and northern frontiers and that indeed there is an Atlantic dimension to the capability of the institute.

I want to dwell for just a moment on one or two aspects of the western diversification project so that there is some clarity as to what kind of assistance is available and what kind of projects are to be funded. One key feature is that service industries and resource-related industries are eligible for funding. The definition of who may apply has been expanded to include non-profit business organizations.

Examples of the kinds of projects which will be considered for funding—and I stress the word "considered"—are those in the general area of business projects or activities that would involve the initiation, promotion, or expansion of enterprises.

In addition, projects which contribute to the enhancement of the business climate or the development of business infrastructure will be considered, as will proposals for the modernization or expansion of existing industrial facilities.

I have dwelt at some length on research and development, another prime area of interest of the western diversification initiative. Projects involving systems or software development, new product identification, and the development of productivity improvement will be eligible as well.

We also have an eye to the export opportunities of the nation. Projects and activities with the capability of market development, whether it be domestic or international, fall within the terms of reference of the proposals.

Of course there are certain kinds of enterprises which are not eligible. Briefly, in the time remaining, I should caution that the program will not fund projects where the economic or employment benefits would apply primarily outside the western provinces. Projects designed to replace existing capital or operating requirements of government Departments of any of the three levels of government are not eligible for support. The program will not assist projects designed to create municipal infrastructure or foster urban redevelopment. In the case of commercial or industrial projects, the program cannot support proposals where the applicant's net equity position is unreasonably low.

• (1640)

I appreciate this opportunity to touch on some aspects of western diversification. I, for one, am delighted and proud that the Government of the day has seen fit to bring in this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there any questions or comments? Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate because the people of Manitoba welcome the proposal of the Conservative Government to establish this western diversification program. The Premier of Manitoba welcomed the agreement and indicated that Manitoba would co-operate fully and that Manitoba expected to get its fair share of the $1.2 billion which we were led to believe the program would have in the way of funds to be allocated over the next five years.

It is not surprising that people in Manitoba, as people in the four western provinces and in Atlantic Canada, were vitally interested in this proposal of the federal Government because people in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada have felt for a long time that they have been treated as second class citizens. The major benefits in this country of ours have gone to central Canada, to the people and the industries of Ontario and Quebec. It was felt that western Canada was looked upon as a resource hinterland for central Canada and that attempts to diversify the have-not regions of Canada have, to a large extent, failed. The first real thought given to this problem was that given by the Rowell-Sirois Commission in the 1930s which investigated these regional disparities and provided the rationale for the transfer of federal payments to the poorer provinces.

We have had a number of programs whose design and intent was to help the poorer provinces of this country move up and improve their economies so people in those areas would be provided with a better standard of living. We saw in the period of the former Conservative Government headed by Mr. Diefenbaker the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a cabinet Minister at that time, who helped to establish the Agricultural Rehabilitation Development Act, ARDA, as it is known, in 1961. Its purpose was to take marginal farmland and marginal farming operations out of production and put them into other activities. In the Pearson and Trudeau Governments we had the development of programs such as DEVCO, DREE and DRIE. These have had some success, but to a large extent the have-not provinces of Canada and the people in those provinces still have a standard of living far lower than the people in the Province of Ontario and, to a somewhat lesser extent, the Province of Quebec.

One inquiry into the effectiveness of DREE was conducted by the Economic Council of Canada in its 1977 study entitled Living Together. The Council found that DREE expenditures were significant enough to measure against other economic activity in only one region, that of Atlantic Canada. The council concluded that there was suggestive evidence that DREE had helped to provide half of the additional jobs required in the 1970-75 period caused by decreased out-migration and a reduction in the employment rate of about 1 per cent. In other provinces, such as Quebec, Saskatchewan and elsewhere, no reduction in disparity was measurable, most likely because the DREE expenditure was so small on a per capita basis as to be unmeasurable. It did not say that DREE was immune from criticism.

DREE began as a federal initiative, became a conduit for funds for provincial projects and then became a federal agency again. These projects led to political battles between the provinces and the federal Government as to which initiative should be taken. Of course, federal Governments, Liberal or Conservative, wanted a higher profile in western Canada. These arguments were not surprising.

There is a rationale and a convincing one for the need for joint federal-provincial initiatives if regional development plans are to be successful. Nowhere is this more true than in the Province of Manitoba where the provincial Government has taken a highly successful approach to encouraging job creation through its job fund activities. The result of those activities and because of the well diversified economy in Manitoba, the unemployment rates in Manitoba for the last five or six years have been continuously either the lowest of any province or the second lowest.

It is an unexpected but unfortunate fact that throughout the 1980s the mineral, grains and petroleum markets, so important in Saskatchewan and Alberta, were uniformly depressed. Yet, here is where we get to the problem that we see about the nature of this western diversification fund and the $1.2 billion which is to be allocated. We see that certain provinces, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan have already been able to get approved, through this fund, tens of millions of dollars, while Manitoba has received virtually nothing. It is not surprising that there was a great deal of anger and hostility when the Conservative Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), in explaining why Manitoba has so far received so little in approvals as compared to other provinces said, as reported in The Winnipeg Free Press, on February 29:

> If you want to work co-operatively, it doesn't help to criticize. It isn't helpful to engage in fed bashing.

Many Manitobans, and I think quite correctly, took exception and became angry by what they considered to be an attempt by the Member from St. Boniface—hopefully he was not speaking for the Conservative Government of Canada—to blackmail the people of Manitoba and to blackmail the Government of Manitoba. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) reacted, and I believe he spoke for most Manitobans when he made a statement on March 1 in response as follows:

> I ask Members opposite, was Manitoba supposed to be happy in the early stages of this Government about the cancellation of the VIA Rail shop and its subsequent downsizing? Were we supposed to be happy about the cancellation of the manufacturing and research technology centre? Were we supposed to be happy about the repeated attempts, now succeeding, to erode Winnipeg's role as a transportation sector in western Canada? Were we supposed to be happy about that abominable decision to award the CF-18 contract to Montreal?
> Were we supposed to just lie down and be quiet about all these things? Is the Manitoba Government to give up its principles with respect to free trade and other issues on which it disagrees with the federal Government? Is this a counsel on the part of the Member for St. Boniface and the Government to a lack of integrity in the political process? Are we all supposed to suck up to the federal Government in order for our regions to be treated well? It is totally unacceptable.

That is how the people of Manitoba, regardless of political Party, feel, and it is the way they should feel.

• (1650)

Another suggestion was that because there was an NDP Government in Manitoba, which is supposedly opposed to the private sector, all the proposals it made, and it made many proposals, were laughed at because they totalled billions of dollars. Manitoba did not expect to get billions of dollars. However, what it did expect, and what Manitobans, regardless of Party, will demand, is its fair share of the funds which will be allocated through the western diversification fund.

Another suggestion was that the reason Manitoba did not get approval was that it had an NDP Government which was not friendly or supportive of the private sector and all the proposals made by Manitoba were for government programs. That is not true either and I want to put on the record a few examples of the proposals which were brought forward and which have not yet been approved by the Conservative Government.

In the City of Flin Flon in northwestern Manitoba, the Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting Co. has a copper smelter and a zinc refinery. That company has been operating in Flin Flon for more than 50 years. It provides direct employment for over 2,000 workers in Flin Flon, Leaf Rapids and Snow Lake, Manitoba, and Creighton, Saskatchewan. That plant needs major modernization so that it can be more productive and competitive with other operations in other countries and so that it can meet the new environmental standards which have been set. We are talking about a $100-million modernization program. The Government of Manitoba expects the entire cost of that modernization to come from the federal Government through the western diversification fund, and this is a project which would meet any criteria which any Government would set.

There was a proposal for an agricultural biotechnology and training consortium made by the University of Manitoba, the Brandon University and the Assiniboine Community College, in co-operation with agricultural organizations and the private sector, and I emphasize the private sector. This proposal is to set up a consortium to focus on developing applications in agricultural biotechnology and providing agricultural management training.

One does not have to be an expert and read technical journals, one need only read The New York Times, Time magazine, Newsweek or any of the financial newspapers published in Canada to know that almost every week new discoveries are made in the field of agriculture so that tomatoes, potatoes or the like will be made resistant to the pests which attack them. Canada is lagging very seriously behind in research in this area.

A proposal came from the Government of Manitoba to set up a biotechnology and training consortium, and given the difficulties western Canadian farmers are having competing for the sale of grain and other products with countries which subsidize very heavily their agricultural industries, the management abilities of Manitoba farmers are more and more important than ever. This consortium would help with that, but again there has been no response from the federal Government.

A rural industrial project was proposed by the Manitoba Government to its federal counterparts. It wanted to designate a site in a rural area of Manitoba where there is very little industrial activity and high unemployment rates on which would be established a $60-million oriented strandboard plant. That plant would provide 130 direct jobs plus employment in gathering and hauling the wood to the site. Of course, government funding was required, but the bulk of the funding would come from the private sector. Again, there has been no response from the federal Government.

There was a proposal that the Red River Community College, the large community college established in the City of Winnipeg, have its learning resource centre expanded. The present facility which was built some years ago was built to accommodate about 2,700 students. It now services over 5,000 full-time and several thousand part-time students.

I do not have to remind Hon. Members of the tremendous revolutions that are taking place in computers and their use and the need to expand the software which services those computers. It seems to me that the community college proposal has merit which no one can dispute. It is the high technology areas where we will find the jobs we will need for young people entering the job market and for those who will be displaced as traditional manufacturing industries become more efficient or obsolete. That is the kind of project we need, and we need it now.

A series of reports have been written as a result of studies done in Ontario and articles appearing in various journals telling us how badly we are doing in training Canadians, both young Canadians who will enter the job market in the next year or two and adults who are finding their jobs have become obsolete. We are not doing the job which is required. There was a report in The Globe and Mail either yesterday or today which said that many of our manufacturing industries which are moving into more highly sophisticated operations are telling us that we do not have the skilled workers required. We do not have the tool and die makers, the machinists or the people qualified in the newest electronics jobs. This proposal came from the Government of Manitoba that the community college be expanded and modernized so that it could do the job required. What did we hear from the federal Government? Nothing.

The people of Manitoba want to know why this situation is continuing. They want to know why these very practical proposals which have come from the Government of Manitoba have been ignored and downgraded by the federal Government.

One of the specific proposals made by the Government of Manitoba concerned increased procurement by the federal Government in the West. This is one area in which the Conservatives have consistently promised they will do better because this is something they consistently harped on when they were in opposition. I was here on many occasions when western Conservative Members and Atlantic Conservative Members complained loudly, and justifiably, that under the Liberal Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time for his intervention has now expired. A period of questions or comments could follow Private Members' Business.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved that Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (survivor's pension), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I should start off with the genesis of Bill C-250 which seeks to amend the Canada Pension Plan Act, Section 44(1)(d).

The reason I presented this Bill, and have been presenting it since 1979, and it is a very tragic reason, is because of a 40-year old miner who was killed in the mines in Sudbury. After the tragedy of burying the miner, his spouse, having to get on with her life with her dependants, went to the local Canada Pension Plan office to apply for survivor's benefits for herself and her dependants under the Act. She filled out the form and the person dealing with her said he was sorry but she did not qualify for survivor's benefits. She asked why she did not qualify for survivor's benefits. He said she did not qualify because she was 34 years of age.

Under the Canada Pension Plan Act, Section 44(1)(d), any surviving spouse under the age of 35 is not eligible to collect survivor's benefits. Not a penny. Here we have a widow with two dependent children, who had not been in the workforce since she had been married, being told that she would get at that time about $80 a month for each of the children and she would have to go on welfare.

There is another example of an older gentleman who went to Poland. He met and fell in love with a young woman and brought her back to Canada. He was in his late 50s, she in her late 20s. They had one child before he dropped dead of a heart attack one day. She was ineligible to collect survivor's benefits under the Act. Again, the invocation of Section 44(1)(d). What does that section say? It says:

> a survivor's pension shall be paid to the surviving spouse, as determined pursuant to this Act, of a deceased contributor who has made contributions for not less than the minimum qualifying period if, the surviving spouse has
> (i) reached 65 years of age, or
> (ii) in the case of a surviving spouse who has not reached 65 years of age,
> (A) had at the time of the death of the contributor reached 35 years of age.

She had not reached the age of 35 at the time of the death of her spouse and she would not be eligible for survivor's benefits. I would like to say unequivocally that that is discrimination based on age.

This issue was looked at by the parliamentary task force on pension reform chaired by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). The task force, after considering a large number of proposals and briefs, concluded that before comprehensive changes to the Canada Pension Plan survivor's benefits could be recommended, further study was required. That further study was done. A White Paper was issued which looked at the Canada Pension Plan and specifically at the question of survivor's provisions. I just want to read from page 39 of that White Paper published in September, 1987, just last fall. It said:

> Survivors who are under age 35 at the time of the death of their spouse, and who are not caring for a dependent child of the contributor, are not eligible for a survivor benefit until they reach age 65, unless they are disabled or become disabled.

We know that is what is provided for. This White Paper recognizes the discriminatory nature of Section 44(1)(d) and recommends that the surviving spouse ought to get the Canada Pension Plan benefit irrespective of age.

The report of the parliamentary committee on equality rights, in 1985, on page 40, under the subtitle "Benefits for Surviving Spouses" had this to say:

> Although CPP benefits for surviving spouses are not restricted to female spouses, it seems clear that these eligibility rules are based on assumptions about the dependency of women that may no longer be valid and that are unfair on their face. For example, the exclusion of spouses under 35 years of age who are neither disabled nor have dependent children is probably based on the theory that surviving spouses in their twenties and early thirties usually have little difficulty in finding employment or remarrying.

That committee recognized as well the discriminatory nature of Section 44(1)(d). It goes on to recommend that it be removed from the Act.

It seems to me that in that Act, when it deals with surviving spouses, there are other discriminatory provisions. If the surviving spouse is under 45 but over 35, they get a partial pension. They do not get the full pension. Their benefits are reduced by 1 1/20th for each month he or she is under 45. This works out to a pension of roughly $145.18.

• (1710)

The age provisions are clearly discriminatory and are contrary to the Charter of Rights. In fact, this whole question of survivor's benefits under the Canada Pension Plan Act are under review by the parliamentary committee which is studying the White Paper on survivor benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. I would hope that the committee, too, will recognize the discriminatory nature of Section 44(1)(d). In fact, I have been informed that both the provinces and the federal Government recognize that 44(1)(d) is indeed discriminatory. Therefore, why do we have to wait?

Canada Pension Plan officials in my riding told a woman who was under 35 who appeared before them seeking survivor's benefits that they could not give her the benefit but that she should take the issue to the Human Rights Commission and appeal through the process. We all know that to go through the courts is a very costly and protracted route. I do not know where poor people would get the money to challenge Section 44(1)(d) of the Canada Pension Plan Act. If what I have heard is true, that the federal Government, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and his provincial counterparts have recognized the discriminatory nature of 44(1)(d), then surely with that kind of unanimity and with determination of purpose it would be easy to bring in an amendment to the Act.

I am sure that Members on this side of the House would be only too pleased to expedite an amendment to the Act which would create justice and remove an obviously discriminatory section of the Act. Incidentally, the reason I brought Bill C-250 forward was the very fact that we could expedite it and not have to put poor people through a whole process of legalisms which could go on indefinitely.

As an aside to the main purpose of this Bill, I have discovered that the federal Government has made certain changes to the benefits under the Canada Pension Plan disability benefits. These were all improvements to give recipients an increase in their pensions. However, private sector employers have been grabbing the money instead of allowing the pensioners to get the increases. Even more outrageous, provincial Governments have been grabbing the increases which the federal Government has granted to those who are in receipt of disability pensions. The Province of Ontario is blatant in its grabbing from the pockets of the disabled and the poor. It is reducing the community and social services benefits to the poor. The Government of Ontario is reaching on to the table and taking the bread and meat right off the tables of poor people. I think that is a disgrace.

I have written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about this, but all I hear back is that they are discussing it with the provinces. Well, that is not good enough. They have been discussing it with the provinces for two years and that is not good enough for the poor who have an entitlement to a disbility pension.

I ask Members not to let this Bill go the way of other Private Members' Bills which are debated for an hour and then talked out. I ask Members not to talk the Bill out, to take this opportunity to make a strike for what is right and just. For once, let this Bill go to committee, especially since the Government is in agreement that Section 44(1)(d) is indeed discriminatory.

I appeal to Members to let the Bill go. Do not talk the Bill out but let it go to committee so that we can eventually have the Act amended. I will not take credit for it. If the Government wants the credit for it, that is fine with me. I am prepared to erase C-250 from the front of the Bill and put the Minister's name there in lights. I am just a humble Member in this House. I do not seek the glory of having an amendment made to the Act. The Government can have the credit. All I want is justice for the poor people of the country who have been discriminated against, particularly women upon whom it has fallen harder than it has on men.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate and I would like to begin by saying to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), whose Private Members' Bill we are discussing today, that while I might question his contention that he is just a humble Member of the House, because I think he is far more than whatever those words may imply, I do not in any way question his sincerity. I would applaud him for that and for his persistence in ensuring that this issue, which has been brought before the House on many occasions, remains before the House. In fact, I think he understands that the Government is as committed as is he to addressing the principles of the Bill before us.

As most Members know, the proposal set forth in Bill C-250 is an important and topical one. The issues of age discrimination and other equality considerations in the context of the Canada Pension Plan are an active concern of the Government at this time. In fact, on September 24, 1987, a consultation paper on survivor benefits under the Canada Pension Plan was tabled in the House of Commons and was referred to the standing committee. We are still eagerly looking forward to the standing committee's report.

In other words, Madam Speaker, we are now in the process of a major review of Canada Pension Plan survivor provisions. This review was undertaken so that federal and provincial Governments, which share jurisdiction over the Canada Pension Plan, could determine the most appropriate way to bring the plan's survivor benefits directly in line with equality provisions under the new Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in line with changes in family structure and other social changes that have taken place in Canada since the CPP's inception some 22 years ago.

When the Canada Pension Plan was being designed in the early 1960s the majority of Canadian families were one-earner families. Legislators therefore decided that when a contributor died a portion of his or her Canada Pension Plan retirement pension would be paid to the surviving spouse in certain circumstances. The benefit levels and eligibility requirements for survivor pensions were based on specific criteria which reflected the then current assumption that the majority of married women were financially dependent on their spouse for life. These dependency criteria included the recipient's age, the presence of dependent children or a disability, and a survivor's eligibility for other benefits under the plan.

During the pension reform discussions of recent years numerous Canadians have indicated that they share the Hon. Member's dissatisfaction with the Canada Pension Plan's existing structure for survivor benefits. Many have suggested that the dependency criterion has become outmoded and arbitrary and may be discriminatory in light of the Charter. There has been a growing perception, moreover, that application of the current survivor benefit eligibility criteria have resulted too often in a level of income protection inconsistent with the situation of Canadians who have become widowed.

As Hon. Members are aware, major changes to the Canada Pension Plan do require the approval of two-thirds of the Canadian provinces having two-thirds of the Canadian population, as well as the approval of Parliament. Federal and provincial legislators did reach a consensus on a comprehensive restructuring of Canada Pension Plan survivor benefits in time for such a reform to be included in Bill C-116.

Nevertheless, a federal-provincial working group of officials was established expressly for the purpose of re-examining the role of CPP survivor provisions in light of equality provisions under the Charter, as well as in view of growing pressure to improve benefit adequacy and the over-all context of social changes. In pursuing this task, the working group reviewed the substantial body of recommendations and other input which had already been presented to legislators and which has remained a matter of official record. The consultation paper on CPP survivor benefits, which presents a comprehensive proposal for reform, and to which I and my hon. friend made reference earlier, was developed as a direct result of this study.

In essence, the proposals outlined in the consultation paper have provided us with a sound but flexible basis for public discussion and the means for determining whether the requisite consensus for a major reform of CPP survivor provisions exists or, alternatively, can be arrived at among both legislators and the public at large.

The consultation paper proposes a new benefit structure for future survivors that responds to the equality provisions under the Charter and to projected social changes. It also proposes improvements to the existing CPP structure to ensure that current survivors would also be treated in accordance with the Charter.

Finally, it proposes increases in benefits payable on behalf of children. Eligibility for CPP survivor benefits under the new structure, therefore, would not be based directly on considerations of age, disability and family status, as was the case during the first two decades of this plan's existence.

The consultation paper's proposals recognize instead, that financial difficulties may be experienced by surviving spouses of all ages, and that such difficulties may be greater and longer lasting when young children are present. The paper recognizes that a Canadian family's subsistence today is increasingly based on the gainful employment of both spouses and on the pension protection accumulated by each.

Reflecting these circumstances, the paper proposes to pay substantially higher monthly benefits concentrated over the difficult years of adjustment following a spouse's death, normally five years, rather than much lower lifetime payments. If implemented, this proposed new structure would initially apply only to future generations of younger Canadians as they experience widowhood. In recognition that all widowed individuals face a degree of difficulty following bereavement, the proposed new structure would provide surviving spouses with benefits on an equal basis, in accordance with the deceased spouse's CPP record of earnings.

Survivors who are carrying for dependent children would, however, be eligible for benefits over a longer period. As well, the consultation paper proposes important increases for CPP benefits payable in respect of dependent children of a deceased CPP contributor.

As I have stated, the consultation paper also proposes that benefits under the existing structure be substantially modified. Such changes would apply to current beneficiaries, as well as to the current older generation of Canadians who, in the event of being widowed at a future date, would have the option of choosing coverage under either the improved existing structure or the proposed new benefit structure.

Improvements to the current structure would include doubling the flat rate portion of CPP survivor benefits payable to all survivors under age 65. As well, the reductions which currently apply to survivors younger than age 45 would be eliminated, and survivors who, to date, have been denied CPP survivor payments because they were younger than age 35 when their spouse died—the Hon. Member referred to such a tragic case—would become eligible to receive benefits under the plan. Finally, children's benefits would have the same improvements that would be implemented under the proposed new benefit structure.

With regard to Bill C-250, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt hopefully will be assured that Canadians are already in full agreement with his sentiments.

At the same time, it is important to recognize that federal and provincial legislators should not and cannot amend the CPP in haste. As I have explained, major amendments to the plan require a high level of consensus among the Canadian public and among legislators at both levels.

The federal Government, nevertheless, is committed to making changes as soon as such a consensus can be achieved. We may expect, therefore, to proceed with further consultation and negotiation among concerned Canadians, as soon as the Government has received the report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-250. When examining the premise upon which the legislation is being suggested by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I find that the basic intent of the Bill is to eliminate discrimination from the current provisions of the Canada Pension Plan in relation to widow's benefits or survivor's benefits. The notion of eliminating discrimination on the basis of age is a laudable one theoretically. However, one can see that even in the context of the Bill itself, it still has an unequal application. To my knowledge, the effect of passing his amendment would be to say that any person who is a survivor would be entitled to a benefit. Presumably, that person would be entitled to a benefit until the age 65 when a different benefit package would kick in. Quite clearly, even with that cut-off point, there is discrimination on the basis of age.

While eliminating discrimination on the basis of age may sound good in principle, there may be practical reasons to have discrimination on the basis of age.

Mr. Rodriguez: They would switch to regular CPP at age 65.

Ms. Copps: I understand that they would switch to regular CPP at 65, but I am simply saying that the principle of eliminating age discrimination sounds good in theory but may not always be applicable in practice.

Let me point out one area where I believe the principle of this Bill would not stand up to serious examination. It is an area within some of the discussion paper that relates to survivors' benefits and about which we were extremely concerned in the standing committee.

Let us consider the situation of a widow over the age 45. The discussion paper is based on the theory that as more and more women enter the workforce, since women tend to be the recipient in the application of spouse's benefits, the Government felt it might be better to provide them with a short-term bridging benefit of a period of three years' additional help. They would be expected to reintegrate into the workforce following this, and earn money that would then eliminate the necessity for survivor's benefits.

Statistics show that more and more young women are entering the workforce whether or not they have children, school age and below. I believe the flaw in the Member's Bill relates to the discussion of survivors between the ages of 45 and 65. The discussion paper suggests that since women are entering the workforce in greater numbers, they should be allowed this bridging benefit and be able to go into the workforce after this three-year period to compete essentially for the same wage as their male counterpart.

Two factors were discussed in the context of our response to the discussion paper which have not been touched on today. These factors, I believe, are relevant in the context of awarding survivors' benefits. First is the question of earnings. If we look at the typical woman under the age of 45, currently widowed, we find that 74.4 per cent actually reported earnings in 1985. We do not specify exactly at what amount those earnings are placed, but basically three-quarters of the widowed population at that point would be earning some kind of salary outside the home. That number drops, when one looks at widowed women between the ages of 45 and 54 years, to 67.2 per cent. Subsequent to that we see a dramatic drop in the number of widowed women between the ages of 55 and 64 years reporting earnings, so much so that only 38.7 per cent actually reported any earnings in 1985. That means that as public policy makers we may want to examine a policy in relation to survivor's benefits which is in fact discriminatory in a positive sense towards those older women who may not have a significant chance of re-entering the workforce.

Another element which we felt would certainly be relevant in the context of determining Canada Pension Plan benefits is again related to age statistics. It is the question of how many widowed women will go on to remarry and into a second financial partnership. For those people who are widowed under the age of 35 years, according to figures based on 1984 statistics, we can expect that 77.6 per cent of those particular widows will go on to remarry. However, if we look at the age category of 45 to 54 years, we find that only 38.9 per cent of that particular group can be expected to remarry. Obviously, if they are not entering into a second legal and financial partnership, their needs will be quite different. Again, those needs may be quantifiably different on the basis of age.

If we look at the category of widowed women between the ages of 55 and 64 years, we find that only 28.8 per cent will be going on to a second marriage. Therefore, the vast majority of widowed women over the age of 45 years do not expect to enter into another legal partnership of marriage or a financial partnership. So they will be totally on their own.

I do not feel it is realistic for us as public policy makers to say that in practical application there should not necessarily be discrimination on the basis of age. In fact, I think the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt was one of those who has been highly critical of the Government for not responding specifically with its promise to the older workers in the form of a replacement for the Labour Adjustments Benefits program.

The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program was a policy of the previous Liberal Government to provide long-term assistance to workers over the age of 55 years, in the so-called "sunset" category of industries. Those workers were eligible on the basis of their age. As public policy makers we recognize the principle that at a certain age and stage of one's life, one's chances of re-employment are much diminished. That is why I think that while the principle on the surface looks laudable, in practice, if we apply the principle that there should be absolutely no discrimination on the basis of age in the area of Canada Pension Plan benefits, we may cut off our nose to spite our face in the sense that we will not be able to help older widows who will, of necessity, need our help the most.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the Hon. Member, whose talents are also much appreciated on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, for his insights and his interest in improving the survivor's benefits program under the Canada Pension Plan. I also wish to thank him for giving us this opportunity to consider a matter that, I believe, encompasses far more than merely eliminating the age factor from the present framework of survivor's benefits. I am of course referring to the possibility of the surviving spouse being under 65.

Madam Speaker, I think that in addition to the age factor, we should also be examining the basis of the entire structure of survivor's benefits as it now exists. I do not want to give the impression, however, that I disagree with the structure established by the fathers of the Canada Pension Plan when the Plan was set up in the sixties. This Plan was designed to respond to the needs of the sixties, and we can say that all things considered, it has worked quite well, thank you!

It is a fact, however, that the premises on which the present structure of survivor's benefits is based are no longer as relevant today and in fact have almost lost their raison d'être.

The society in which we live today no longer corresponds to the projection made of that society in the sixties or even to the image extrapolated at the time.

The social conditions that prevailed during that period have changed—some will say for the worse, others for the better—and meanwhile, the structure of the survivor's benefits program has remained virtually the same, immutably laid down in the regulatory framework common to all Acts of Parliament.

The House will recall that the present structure of the survivor's benefits program under the Canada Pension Plan was designed mainly to guarantee income stability for surviving wives. This concept corresponded to the family situation prevailing when the Canada Pension Plan became effective in the sixties.

At the time, and we have to go back about 25 years, it was reasonable to expect that the contributions made by spouses to the family unit were well defined according to sex and reflected the traditional view that the wife was a mother and housewife, while the husband was the bread winner or wage earner. It was also reasonable to expect that the marriage would be long-lasting. Since women had little or no contact with the labour market for many years, it was expected that many women, especially if they were not old enough at the time of the decease of their spouse, would not be able to earn enough money to maintain their previous standard of living or be able to remarry or even to get by without necessarily maintaining their previous standard of living.

Madam Speaker, 20 years later, the same concept is still being used to provide the same kind of guarantees for persons who survive their spouses, although the situation has changed completely and is totally different from the conditions that prevailed 20 years ago. During the past two decades some major changes have taken place in the structure of the family unit and the role of spouses in that unit and in the economy. A striking example of it is the substantial increase in the number of women in the labour force.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to name some of the most important changes that have taken place when women started achieving greater financial independence, and I will also provide some figures to illustrate those changes.

I suggest that my facts can be easily checked by referring directly to the various documents I consulted, and I intend to table a list of those documents later on.

Madam Speaker, I was saying that during the last couple of decades, the labour force participation rate of women had substantially increased. In fact, it has increased steadily since the fifties, and it is expected that by the year 2000, one out of every two workers will be a woman, although in 1950 the ratio was only one out of five. In other words, by the year 2000 the ratio will be the same in the labour force and the general population.

Considering, however, that women's labour force participation rate only reflects the number of working women as a percentage of the total labour force, we must be careful when using these figures because they also depend on the number of men in the labour force. For instance, if the number of men in the labour force were to go down, this would raise the percentage of women in the labour force while there would be no increase in the actual number of working women.

Madam Speaker, that is why I think it is far more useful to consider the women's participation rate, which gives us the ratio of working women to the group of women 15 years or over. Between 1967 and 1985, which means from the time the regulations came into effect up to the present decade, the women's participation rate jumped from 40 per cent to about 70 per cent. We also see that the increase is largely due to the behaviour of married women, whose participation rate rose from 40 per cent in 1967 to 66 per cent in 1985, an increase of two-thirds. Various factors contributed to this increase.

I think it is important to consider this development, because each of these more or less irreversible factors shows that the survivor's circumstances no longer are, and no longer will be, the same as they were during the past 20 or 30 years.

First of all, we have seen a change in women's attitudes to their traditional role and in the perception they have of themselves. Women no longer see marriage as the ultimate goal nor as a protective shield that will save them forever more from solitude and financial insecurity. The rising divorce rate observed in recent years is certainly a reflection of this change in attitude.

Madam Speaker, between 1970 and 1983—within a period of 13, not 25 years the divorce rate doubled. Women feel a need to become more self-reliant and provide for their own financial security. They have become aware of their own potential, shed the traditional and discriminatory stereotypes, get a better education in a wider variety of subjects and increasingly take charge of their own economic circumstances.

To a certain extent, we can measure these changes using a number of indicators. The marriage rate is dropping and the birth rate as well. We are also seeing people postponing marriage and the birth of their first child until they are older. Women are less likely to leave their jobs when they marry or when they have children.

If we look at the participation rate of women in terms of family situation and in terms of the presence of children, we see that even with preschool children, married women have doubled their participation rate. From 34 per cent in 1967, the participation rate of married women with children of preschool age went up to twice that rate, 68 per cent, in 1985. Women with school age children went from 40 per cent up to 70 per cent in 1985, an increase of 75 per cent over the rate observed 20 years before.

Madam Speaker, we can even conclude that although the presence of children tends to restrict women's participation in the labour force, it is less restrictive in 1981 than it was in 1971. We can also assume that on the whole, women are more likely to see their labour market participation as a permanent activity, even if about 50 per cent of married women work part-time.

Madam Speaker, women's education has also changed dramatically in recent years. These changes are particularly noticeable at the university and college levels, where the number of women enrolled has increased considerably. Interestingly, women students at universities and colleges are majoring in a wider variety of subjects than was previously the case. They have made considerable inroads in fields that traditionally have been a male preserve, which to a certain extent is an indication of a definite change in orientation.

Madam Speaker, it also reflects a turning away from the kind of training that prepared for responsibilities within the home. They now tend the focus on careers that will keep them on the labour market.

Madam Speaker, I see you are signalling that my time is almost up. The Government is now waiting for the Standing Committee of the House on National Health and Welfare, which was asked to proceed with public hearings on the subject, to submit its report. In the light of the results of this major consultation process, this Government, after obtaining the approval of the provinces, will implement new measures to provide Canadian men and women, through the Canada Pension Plan, with a survivor's benefits program that is better adapted to their changing needs.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for giving us the opportunity to talk about this extremely important matter in the House today. He tells us he has been fighting this issue since 1979. I can only say that perhaps his arguments as presented over the years were what convinced and persuaded the federal Government and the provincial Governments to agree to bring about amendments to the Canada Pension Plan to do what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has been arguing about over the years.

While I welcome some of the improvements that are proposed in the discussion paper on survivor benefits I want to say that in my view some of the assumptions made in it are faulty. I have argued this in the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare which is now seized of that document.

That document makes a number of assumptions which do not hold up. The first is that because there is a greater participation of women in the workforce there is less need to pay survivor benefits to those women. It neglects the fact that many of the jobs that have been created for women over the years are really part-time jobs. It does not address the need for adequate child care to allow women to re-enter the workforce. There are a number of problems in the discussion paper.

However, since the matter is before the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare and since that committee is in the process of bringing a response forward to the discussion paper I do not feel that I am at liberty to talk about the actual proposals that we are discussing. I see that the chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is sitting in the House today. I think it is safe enough to say without relating any confidences that that is one area of the discussion paper that would have received the unanimous support of the members of the committee. That is what I would have said 10 minutes ago, but since I heard the remarks of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the Bill before the House I am not so sure whether or not it will be unanimous.

Quite frankly, I was surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East make the type of criticisms against Bill C-250 that she made. What she seemed to argue is that discrimination against a woman under the age of 35 is okay because we need existing dollars under the Canada Pension Plan to go toward improvements for only women in higher age brackets. I see that the Hon. Member is shaking her head in a negative fashion. She seems to be saying that that is not what she meant.

Ms. Copps: That is not what I said.

Mr. Young: What I thought the Hon. Member said was that only a certain amount of dollars is available dollars which exist in the Canada Pension Plan with which improvements can be made. She seemed to argue that with those available dollars we should be seriously directing those moneys towards improving benefits for those who are in the higher age brackets. That is what I thought she said.

However, the Hon. Member is now saying that that is not what she said. I am delighted to hear that. I have received correspondence from young women under the age of 35 who have been widowed. Many of these women are facing heavy financial responsibilities, especially where children are involved. First, there is the traumatic experience that they go through when their spouse dies, more often than not in a tragic way. They are then faced with the responsibility of bringing their children up without any kind of financial support in some cases, especially if they are not actively participating in the workforce at that time. This can make their lives extremely difficult.

The White Paper argues that if those amendments were not made to the Canada Pension Plan, it could be construed as being a violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms against younger women at age 35. I am hopeful that when the item is discussed in committee we will end up with a unanimous recommendation to put an end to this discrimination and to do the right thing by these younger people.

There are some other problems in the Canada Pension Plan which could have been addressed in the discussion paper but unfortunately were not. For example, many delays are being encountered between the time an individual lodges an appeal against a decision rendered by the pension board, the time the appeal has been filed, and the time that it is heard. Very often it takes in excess of 12 months.

When the Minister proposed amendments to the Canada Pension Plan in 1986—and they were passed in the House in July of the same year, roughly about six weeks after they were proposed and introduced—he assured us that a new appeal process would be set up very quickly.

Last week I had occasion to ask the Minister why appeals were still taking in excess of 12 months, very often 18 months between the time when the individual files an appeal and the time the appeal is heard. That is absolutely ridiculous. What did the Minister say when I asked him that question in the House? He said that the problem was that they had to be careful because they did not want to get caught up in workmen's compensation cases and so on.

It was an entirely different answer from the one that the Minister gave to Ms. Alexa McDonough, the leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia, when he wrote to her on December 10, 1987. He said that while he recognized the delays in appeals, he would also recognize that the new appeal process had not even been set up yet.

There has been a passage of time of some 18 months since the House passed the legislation and the amendments which gave the Minister authority to establish a new appeal tribunal, and it still has not been set up. People who are suffering real financial hardship because of some disability and who very often have no other income except what they could receive under the Canada Pension Plan cannot get at it, because the Minister has not set up the proper appeal procedure which he assured us would speed up the appeal process.

It is time the Government got on with these kinds of things. Today we could approve the Bill which the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has placed before the House. We could handle that one area very quickly without awaiting the report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, which would support this measure in any event. The Minister supports it. Why do we not go ahead with it rather than wait for months until the Department produces legislation? We should proceed with this piece of legislation today and do the right thing for those women under age 35 who are being discriminated against. Even the Minister recognizes that. Let us get on with it and remove the discrimination once and for all.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill. He did not have the wisdom to choose the right political Party, but he had the wisdom to choose parents who live in the riding of Scarborough West whom I am honoured to represent. I also congratulate him for being a good example of the opportunities afforded any Member of Parliament to initiate legislative debate and creative discussion as he has done with this Bill. I have known him to do it with others, such as the Bill on lobbying when it was my honour and pleasure to sit with him on the committee responsible for that legislation.

Again we see an example of a Member introducing a legislative proposal as far back as 1979 and reintroducing it as recently as this afternoon. I confidently believe that that seed sown and developed is about to come to fruition. He has made the suggestion that the Private Member's Bill number might be taken off and the Minister might reintroduce it as his recommendation. That gracious suggestion is one which I think may well prove to be the result of the debate this afternoon.

We will see the proposal contained in the Bill strengthened by the report and recommendations of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, with further consideration by the Government itself. We will bring back to the House proposals which will meet not only the needs of the people referred to this afternoon but will provide assistance for more Canadians facing difficulty and challenge in this day. As a result of this legislative and governmental process, we will probably see a much better program or better legislative proposal than we might embrace today, even as good as it is.

I would hope that all Hon. Members of the House would see the necessity for the kind of review which is approaching a conclusion that we trust will be a happy one. One reason is the enormity of the size of the program to which we are referring. The survivor's pension program is in itself of incredible and impressive size. Some 483,000 spouses are receiving benefits as a result of the program, as are 94,000 orphans, at a cost to the public of $1,245 million. This manifests the kind of effort which the country is ready to put forward as we endeavour through such programs to assist each other.

We are seeing a need for careful review of the program so that we provide as much assistance to those who need it as is possible for a Government to do, as is possible for a public to do. That is what we are aiming to do. The very size of the program in terms of the figures I have cited shows the need for the process in which we are now involved and will carry it to its happy conclusion.

We must be sure that when the Bill receives the benefit of major amendments—and they will be major—that we have presented to us by the Government a Bill which comprehends the social change that has been a feature of the country's development since the Canada Pension Plan was first initiated. Certainly the number of working spouses is much larger today, and it is but one example of the way in which the social environment has been profoundly altered. Therefore, the kind of program we as a Government will wish to introduce will be one which comprehends all dimensions.

It is vital that all Members of the House and all members of the public concerned about this matter, including the large number watching the debate, be aware that it is not possible for this House or this Parliament on its own to provide the kind of change we want to provide for people who need it most. We have a complex method for amending Canada Pension Plan legislation. It requires full consultation with the provinces, including the approval and support of two-thirds of the provincial Governments representing two-thirds of the population of Canada. It is necessary for us to carry forward the process which I have described, not only in terms of the committee and the House, but also in terms of further consultation with the provinces.

Therefore, I welcome the Bill which has been presented to us this afternoon. I see it in terms of a seed that will lead to full development and the fruition of a legislative proposal by the Government which will adequately meet the need in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MOTION TO ENDORSE THE MOTION OF MR. MULRONEY

The House resumed consideration of the motion by Mr. Lewis:

> That this House endorses the adoption of the motion, on Monday, March 7, 1988, of the Prime Minister for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-113, An Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In accordance with the order made on March 11, 1988, this House will now continue consideration of the motion of the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis).

[English]

At five o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had completed his speech. I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to question the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North or to comment on his speech. Otherwise we will resume the debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, during the speech by one of the Conservative Members from Manitoba, he asked why the New Democratic Party would be opposed to free trade with the United States when Manitoba Hydro was receiving billions of dollars in the export of its energy to the United States. Would the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) answer the question: Why would the NDP be opposed to something which the Conservative Member from Manitoba said was such a good thing?

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the one point made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) with which I could agree is that Manitoba Hydro has been successful in completing contracts for sales of hydroelectric power to the midwest United States of about $3.5 billion, and more to come.

The reason the Manitoba Government opposed the so-called free trade agreement is that it does not protect future sales against opposition, which could well be successful, by American interests. There is nothing in the agreement as it is drafted at the present time which would prevent the coal producers in the United States from claiming that hydroelectric power from Manitoba or Quebec or British Columbia is subsidized. For example, in the Manitoba situation the federal Government helped finance the transmission lines which carry the power from northern Manitoba to Winnipeg and then farther to the United States. There is nothing to prevent coal companies or oil companies, if oil is again in surplus supply, or natural gas companies from bringing anti-dumping charges against us and calling for countervail duties to be imposed on the sale of power.

In the agreement, the definition regarding electricity has been changed. Electricity has gone from being an intangible, which it was up until now, to being classified as goods. That will make it easier for the people and interests in the United States who want to stop the sale and export of power from Manitoba or from any of the other provinces and it will make it easier for the Americans to invoke their anti-dumping claims.

There is something else which should be of interest to the people of Saskatchewan and Ontario. Under the terms of this agreement, it would be within the ability of the provincial hydroelectric utility, whether Manitoba, British Columbia or Quebec, to sell power to neighboring provinces. In the case of Manitoba, it is to sell power to Saskatchewan or Ontario at a price lower than it could sell power to the United States. That is very important. We take the view, and I think most Canadians take the view, that the resources of Canada may, under our constitution, be the responsibility of the individual provinces, but they certainly would hope and expect that the resources would be used to the advantage of all people. To say that the Americans can buy power at the same price as we might want to sell power to another province seems to be something we ought to oppose.

Lastly, Manitoba, like other provinces, has been looking at the possibility of establishing an aluminum processing plant in Manitoba. We have huge amounts of potential power to be developed. This agreement with the United States disallows incentive arrangements to be made for energy intensive industries. We cannot give a special deal or a cheaper price to an aluminum company or any other energy intensive using industry at a price that we would not permit the Americans. For all these reasons and others, the Manitoba Government has opposed the free trade agreement.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) knows that the provisions for countervail will exist on both sides of the border after an agreement is made, as they have in the past.

What surprises me is the suggestion by the Hon. Member, if I understood him correctly, that the Manitoba Government may be guilty, to use his words, of dumping hydroelectricity in the United States. He seems to be signalling that to the United States. Does the Hon. Member believe that the Manitoba Government is dumping electricity in the United States and that it would be subject to countervail?

Mr. Orlikow: No, Madam Speaker, of course I do not believe that. It has not happened. The Manitoba Government sells surplus power from the new generating plants. If Manitoba can complete the negotiations, it proposes to develop another power plant which will produce a great deal of power and it will sell a substantial part of that power to the United States. Of course it is not subsidized except in some of the ways which I have mentioned.

Talking about countervail, I wish the Hon. Member would give some thought to the views expressed, not publicly yet or very often, but certainly expressed privately by many leaders of farm organizations. They are worried that despite this agreement, the American and farm interests will be able to apply countervail duties against farm products being exported to the United States whenever they feel markets are being challenged. Also, our system of supply management and marketing boards will mean that prices Canadian farm producers get for their product will not compete with inputs of processed foods from the United States where they do not have marketing boards and supply management. I wish the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), who represents so many farmers, would give some thought to that kind of problem.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on western diversification. Having listened to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on the subject of hydroelectricity, surely he does not expect me to believe that the Province of Manitoba has undertaken the massive hydroelectric projects it has undertaken without first having some pretty firm commitments of markets to the south of the 49th parallel. If that be the case, then in my view that would just add one more very valid reason why the NDP will probably be rejected in the next provincial election.

I would also like to comment on the absence of an understanding of the difference between consumer-oriented power and power for commercial reasons. Perhaps if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North were to review the trade agreement, he would gain enlightenment on the subject.

I would like to speak on behalf of the proponents of the very innovative, very timely western diversification program. One of the main features of this program is the fact that it will frequently accept under its terms of reference projects which would otherwise fall through the cracks. It will accept projects that do not quite meet the requirements of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, programs that do not quite fit the Department of Science and Technology or the subagreement in forestry or tourism with the Province of British Columbia or with any other province. The fact is that under western diversification, there will be an opportunity to assist that did not prevail before.

It is in that context that I wish to talk about the rather unique circumstance of a body of fresh water which is the longest navigable freshwater body in western North America. I am speaking of a stretch of water on the Columbia River from the Grand Coulee Dam in south central Washington State to Revelstoke, British Columbia, on the Trans-Canada Highway, a distance of some 350 miles.

The U.S. side of this body of water is now being enjoyed and will, I hope, be further enjoyed by the marine tourism sector. The American side has been totally surveyed for hydrographic charting, but the minute we hit the Canada-U.S. border, we discover that there is a blank space on the map. There is an outline of a lake and the towns and communities are identified, but there is no navigational chart available.

In order to prepare a navigational chart which would extend from the Canada-U.S. border to Revelstoke, one would be looking at an expenditure of about half a million dollars. It would be a very detailed study involving aerial photography and the depth of the lake measured in increments over a distance of a few metres, back and forth across the lake. It would take about five months. Then all that information would have to be correlated into charts. This is complicated by the fact that from Castlegar north, we are dealing with a body of water which is subject to substantial fluctuation by virtue of the Columbia River Treaty and the storage dams on that river.

That project really does not fit any other mould, but I am hopeful that under western diversification, we will see that project funded early. It may be that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans could be the provider of assistance. However, it also happens to have priorities of a navigational nature in the Beaufort Sea where we are continuing to look for new oil and gas discoveries. The Department has some emergency work to do in the Hecate Strait off northern Vancouver Island, so in order to get this project going, we find that there is a possibility that it will fit the western diversification fund.

There is another project going on in Kootenay West. A company called Kootenay Tractor will hopefully be in a position to purchase an entire product line from the United States to manufacture a log-forwarder. One might say that that is fine, we are glad to see a company from the United States go into production in Canada, but where is the diversification there. The diversification lies in the fact that the dealer of this particular log-forwarder has, on the basis of his own experience, upgraded and strengthened the equipment so that it will be a more valuable and practical asset in the steep-slope terrain of British Columbia. Again, I hope that this project will fit the western diversification fund.

When we are talking about western diversification, we must also look at other areas where assistance under the western diversification fund is possible. Forentek is a major research facility for the forest industry, paid for largely by industry but in part by Government. Feric is a like institute of research. One institute is researching the end products and by-products of the forest industry and one is researching the need for value-added forest products. After all, about 50 per cent of all wood we export from Canada into the United States is value added in the United States. Clearly, by improving our capacity to diversify by value adding, we are creating new opportunities for employment and we are creating new products for the world. That opportunity exists within the research facilities of these institutes on the UBC campus.

Much of the equipment and machinery used, including computerized turnkey sawmills, comes from Germany and some of it comes from Sweden. There was a recent conference in Edmonton which I had the privilege of attending with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and his Parliamentary Secretary. Canada's industry is now determined to move to a number one position in value-added commodities in the forest sector and in the production of world-class forestry equipment. That determination was made clear at that three-day conference.

Forentek and Feric are the kinds of institutes that will help us get an additional leg-up through western diversification, thus creating more and more jobs. That is the bottom line.

I must return to the concept that is so often touted by our socialist friends. They say that we have a Government which persists in keeping the people of the West drawers of water, hewers of wood and pumpers of oil and gas, and there is no diversification. Yet when we provide the opportunity for diversification, they decry it. They say things that are most uncomplimentary. There is an absence of fact and an absence of understanding.

I believe that this stems from the mind-set of the socialist. Socialists would rather wallow in misery than see success. I cannot understand why they cannot enjoy success and share the enjoyment, pride and pleasure of success. No, they would rather say that the people of British Columbia are still hewers of wood and drawers of water. That is where our Party philosophies are at opposite ends of the spectrum.

I sometimes think that socialists were weaned on pickles. I see the attitude of NDP Members in their voting record. They voted against the repeal of the National Energy Program. That certainly tells me that they supported it at its outset.

Mr. Hovdebo: So did the Conservatives.

Mr. Brisco: My colleague shouting from across the floor has not been seized by the facts.

The NDP marched lock-step down the road with Marc Lalonde on the National Energy Program. They voted against its repeal, knowing full well the economic disaster it had created in Saskatchewan, northern British Columbia, Alberta and even in the southern part of Manitoba. They also voted against the PGRT. They did not want to see the western energy accord succeed. They did not want to see the petroleum and natural gas industry take off. Why would they? That is success, and that is not cast in the mould of the NDP. They hate success. They want to be able to wallow in misery. Thank heaven that so many of us share a different attitude.

I have to support the comments of my colleague from Edmonton South who spoke so eloquently on this issue. However, having listened to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and his comments on agriculture and what this Conservative Government failed to do, we should look at the socialist record. The NDP voted against a $500,000 capital gains exemption for farmers. They did not want the farmer to smell success or have some measure of financial security after a lifetime of labour on and investment in his own land. The NDP voted against the expenditure of $92 million for drought relief for western farmers. Farmers on the Prairies will be reminded of that not just in the next federal election but in the ensuing weeks in Manitoba.

The NDP voted against providing the Canadian Wheat Board with $200 million to meet its deficit. Why? Where is the support they espouse for the prairie farmer? Did they vote against these measures because they wanted farmers to have more? Or, did they vote against them because they did not understand the purpose of the motion? Or, did they vote against them just on the principle that they could not possibly bring themselves to support the Government in power?

Their rhetoric is the rhetoric of failure, failure to recognize success. If that be their particular bag, then I say let them carry on with it. However, I have no hesitation, when I look at the western diversification program, in saying how fine it is that the essential requirement which will determine the acceptability of proposals will be the contribution each project or activity makes to the diversification of the western economy. What better aim or ambition could there be?

What about Kootenay West? How do I feel when I see the forest industry in a slump? They all have that slump. It is very much a creature of the market-place. How do I feel when the price of metals drops off the scale and miners are out of work? How do I feel when Cominco cuts back on its employees as it did in the massive lay-offs we experienced in my constituency in 1985 and 1986? No other alternative to turn to. There has been no diversification, but now it is starting to happen. It started even before this program came into being. It started with the support of this Government and my personal support.

We are seeing some examples of diversification which will help to take those students fresh out of high school or college and give them new skills in new technologies which will provide for them in the future.

Where is the future in tying the prairie provinces inextricably to agriculture? Where is the future in tying Alberta to the petroleum industry, or cattle, without adding value to the product? Where is the future? This Government had the foresight to address that issue because it came to office with one fundamental commitment to Canada: jobs, jobs, jobs. While the unemployment numbers in Kootenay West are far from satisfying to me, at least I know they are nowhere near the point they were in 1984. At least I know that western diversification is going to work for my constituency and is working, just as Community Futures is working, just as other programs of the Government of Canada are working.

When it comes to expenditures and federal involvement in Kootenay West from September of 1984 until today, I will stack our record against anything accomplished by any other Member over the last 30 years.

I have no hesitation in supporting this program. I am proud of the Government for introducing it. It is a match for the Atlantic Accord and will help generate new technologies and new kinds of employment opportunities for young Canadians. With that I thank you for the opportunity to address the House this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the downturn in the oil and gas industry in western Canada, cut-backs in exploration and everything else that happened. He described that situation in the early 1980s as being caused by the National Energy Program. What he did not say is that in the U.S., which did not have an NEP but which did have the most pro-business President it has had in the last 50 years, Exxon, which invested $4 billion in developing a plant to extract oil from shale in Colorado, shut down that plant because the price of oil had dropped so far.

The world price of oil right now is below $15 U.S. a barrel. That means exploration and development by the major companies is going to be cut back because there is a surplus for the foreseeable future. If that happens in Canada, as has already happened in the U.S., who will the Member and his Conservative Party blame for it since they did away with the NEP?

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for using that as an example. I cannot think of a more unfortunate example than oil extraction from shale. It is probably the most costly undertaking one could conceivably make in the oil and gas industry. I have to say that the extraction of that analogy from the precincts of the Hon. Member's thoughts is really begging the question and stretching credibility.

He talks about the difference between Canada and the U.S. and says that the NEP really was not that harmful. If his memory serves him well he will perhaps remember, or perhaps he has been told, that when the NEP was introduced, literally hundreds and hundreds of trucks containing oil rigs—and the Hon. Member might tell me if he knows approximately how many flatbeds it takes to move one standard rig—were lined up at the border as they headed south. An entire exploration industry moved out of the Province of Alberta and into the United States to get into the oil and gas discovery process. That was because of the National Energy Program.

I was in Alberta at the time that this was happening. I watched all the little service sectors which are so important to the industry fold. I saw small towns in which the economic base was the oil and gas service industry where one in ten houses was for sale. Twenty-two trucks of Canadian FracMaster in Red Deer for fracing in the oil sector sat idle, every one of them with $.5 million in high technology sitting on them. Only five were operating. People do drop things down drill holes, hence the need for tool retrieval companies, which were also idle. Commercial or industrial laundries which handled the oil-ridden clothes and cloths from the worksite were idle, jobs were gone.

I went into Fort St. John during that period and you could fire a cannon down the main street without hitting anything. Yet, before the National Energy Program was introduced you could not get a hotel room in Fort St. John to save your soul unless you had a reservation two weeks in advance. It was on that basis that one company of which I am aware decided that it would respond to that need in Fort St. John and build a hotel. It got built, and it went broke. It was a very unfortunate opening because it opened at about the time that Marc Lalonde, with his colleagues from the NDP, brought in the National Energy Program.

There is only one person whom I know in Alberta, whose name is known to Canadians, who has the courage today to stand up and say: "I supported the National Energy Program". I am darned if I know how he has avoided the lynch mob. That is Mel Hurtig. There is a man who really pushes his credibility and his luck. In spite of everything, he has been the beneficiary of a couple of million dollars from this Government for his excellent works on The Canadian Encyclopedia.

The fact is that Mr. Hurtig supported the National Energy Program in spite of the fact that he was well aware of the economic and social disaster which it created in the Province of Alberta, in northern British Columbia, in southern Saskatchewan, and even in the heavy oil of southern Manitoba.

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North wants to wax eloquent and use as an argument the fact that Exxon stopped work on oil extraction from shale on the basis of the oil price of $14, $15, $18, or $20 a barrel, that is not a very good basis for an argument.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the western diversification department which is being established. Before I get into that though I want to point out to the Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), who has just spoken, that he should look at the history of the National Energy Program.

If he looks back in Hansard he might find that his Party, in opposition, voted for the National Energy Program and that the New Democratic Party, also in opposition, voted against the National Energy Program. I suggest that before he commits himself in this House and in public he should look back in Hansard and find out who voted for and who voted against the National Energy Program. That does not mean that we did not support some parts of it, as did the Conservatives. I suggest that the Member, who is leaving the House, does not know what he is talking about when he says that the New Democratic Party supported the National Energy Program at its conception.

The Member also made a lot of noise about us voting against a number of programs. He indicates a certain ignorance of what has gone on in this House. We voted against $650,000 for the Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens). If the Government had gone along with us and taken that amount out of the Estimates, we would have supported them. It was quite possible for the Government to do that without affecting any of the other programs which we all supported. The Member should look before he talks. He should not make statements such as he has which are far from accurate.

We voted against $650,000 for that Member but we did not vote against those other things. It was quite possible for the Government to put those Estimates back on the table after removing the amounts about which he spoke.

We in the West have had a lot of experience with diversification and development. The Government changes the name but the hope and the effective help remains about the same, very small. We call the West next-year country and it is this kind of program which makes it next-year country because we have been getting this from Liberal and Conservative Governments for many years. Each time it has come to naught and that is why we are called next-year country, as well as the fact, of course, that we are always looking toward next year's crop. These are the kinds of programs which make us believe that we are indeed next-year country.

The previous Liberal Government launched the Western Development Fund in 1980. It was to be $4 billion over four years, $1 billion a year. It was to start immediately but the money never appeared. It never appeared in the Estimates or as cash on anyone's table in any way. It was diverted. Many of the projects which the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) indicated the Liberal Government had put before the House and the country already existed. The money was already in the Estimates and had been tagged for these projects but suddenly it became money for the Western Development Fund.

My home city of Prince Albert was in receipt of some of these funds through a program to develop the airport terminal. That terminal had been on the books of the Department of Transport for many years. Suddenly the money became available and was designated as funds from the Western Development Fund even though they were in the Estimates of Transport. We are used to such smoke and mirrors in the West as far as development is concerned. The Liberal and the Conservative versions are not very much different.

We do not really expect too much in the West. We support the idea and the objectives but are very reticent to say that this will happen because too often in the past it has not happened. In this particular case we are told that it is going to be $1.2 billion over each of four years compared with the Liberals' $4 billion over four years. There is quite a difference in the amount, which I do not think makes much difference in determining whether the Liberals had a better program because we never got any money from them either.

What is the source of the funds? According to the Minister, the office of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will be closed and its budget and personnel will go to the department of western economic diversification, at a cost of some $11 million. The legislation indicates that the personnel will come from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with total operating costs of some $19 million, according to the 1988-89 Estimates.

The $290 million of the $1.2 billion this year for all four provinces is not really new money. In 1985, economic and regional development funds amounted to $14.844 billion, which was reduced each year, to $11.792 billion by 1987, a drop of some $3 billion. Of that $3 billion, $1.2 billion is being restored to the West, some $200 million in the East and further funds for northern Ontario. Therefore, these funds do not necessarily represent new money, and do not even equal the $3 billion that was cut during those three years.

In 1987, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was operating across Canada with funds of $11.792 billion. That department has disappeared, to be replaced by the department of western economic diversification, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, FEDNOR for northern Ontario development as well as the Department of Science and Technology. The smoke and mirrors approach taken by the Government means that we are not sure how that $11 billion has been allocated.

It has been suggested that this is not new money in light of the fact that several programs will expire. These include IRDP which will expire this year and the IRDA program which will run out the year after. The Western Transport Industrial Development Fund will terminate after another year. Therefore, the federal Government will no longer have to fund these programs. Furthermore, the personnel for the department will come from the offices of DRIE and Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Minister responsible for western economic diversification will be the czar of development in western Canada. When one considers this legislation and the material which has been sent to us, it appears that the department of western economic diversification, although small, will be responsible for the co-ordination of the line departments, including such major departments as Agriculture and Transport.

The present definition of "Minister" reads:

> 'Minister' means such member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada as is designated by the Governor in Council as the Minister for the purposes of this Act'.

The definition in this legislation states:

> 'Minister', in relation to any class of matters to which this Act extends in any province or region of a province, means such member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada as is designated by the Governor in Council as the Minister for the purposes of this Act in relation to that class of matters in that province or region of a province;'

It means that this small department will become responsible for the co-ordination of line departments. Hon. Members will know that the Department of Transport is a major department in the West and has a lot of clout. It is very difficult to reverse a decision of the Department of Transport, but that is the responsibility of this department of western economic diversification.

While the concept of having such a department responsible for line departments is good, I doubt that the czar of Western Economic Diversification will have enough power. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion had the responsibility of co-ordinating line departments in regional development and got nowhere. We know, from experience in the West, that it is a very difficult task.

There is also a danger that the Minister can turn this $1.2 billion into a slush fund to be used as a weapon against governments such as the Manitoba Government or individuals and organizations that do not follow government direction.

I do not believe the Minister will be able to fulfil his responsibility with $60 million a year for each province. The trade deal will not allow him to do the many things the Minister says he wants to do in the booklet he passed out to the House last August. He suggests there are a number of things the trade deal will limit. One of the things the Alberta Government, the Saskatchewan Government, the Manitoba Government, and probably the Ontario Government, have done in the development of small industries and companies in Canada, is to give them breaks with respect to the cost of energy and other resources. That is no longer possible under the trade deal. Under the trade deal we cannot give someone in Canada a break, unless that break is given to his opposition in the United States as well.

A lot of the strength of Canadian development in the West has been in transportation. There are really two ways in which one can support regional development in the West. First is by helping out in the development of the industry or whatever one intends to develop in the West and, second, by developing the kind of transportation structure which makes it possible for western products to reach the market at a price that is competitive with other products from the United States or eastern Canada. We will no longer be able to subsidize transportation. The trade deal limits that. It limits it immediately on things like granola. We think that is one of the directions in which the trade program is going. It does not say so specifically in all areas but it indicates that that is what we can expect.

We cannot give tax breaks. We will be required to input substitution of Canadian products. There is a section in the trade deal which suggests that if the company is working in Canada, it must be treated as if it was local. Therefore, we cannot say that we have a product in Canada which will be used to manufacture something else in Canada more cheaply. The American company can come in and use that product. All of these things are in the trade deal.

Also the idea that we can establish a "buy Canada" or "buy provincial" is going to be left out as well. We might be able to keep our "buy provincial" policies because we do not really have too good a trade between provinces, but we will not again after this trade deal comes into effect be able to have a "buy Canada" policy because it suggests that any product coming into Canada must be treated as if it were produced in Canada.

We are told that 12,000 tonnes of grapes that are produced in British Columbia, the whole wine industry, will be wiped out because we will not be able to protect that industry from its competition in the United States. One of the things the Government has suggested it was going to do, and do well, is to allow supply and services to be divided among all the provinces of Canada. The West is 26 per cent of the population and has only 11 per cent of the procurement of the Government of Canada. The CF-18s, the rail line rehabilitation, the municipal infrastructure, even the so-called diversification fund, are so far all committed to Canada. These have now been committed to Eastern Goodrich and Japanese firms, not to firms which could and do give us a lot of jobs.

I have been critical of the Bill and what is going to happen because of the Bill, but I am not critical of the idea. What we need is development and diversification in the West. We have strong industries in the West. We have agriculture, mining, energy, forestry. These are industries which are very strong and on those industries can be built the kind of economic development which will make the West a prosperous area. I agree that we need this kind of development. I use the words "development" instead of "diversification" because diversification implies something different. But we have the strong industries from which we can develop other industries which would be important and would make us a strong and viable operation in the West. I have much more to say but the time does not allow.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in support of Bill C-113, which establishes the western economic diversification department. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the details of the western diversification initiative last August, he stressed the Government's belief that Canada's regions must have a more direct role in shaping the programs that affect them. In other words, sharing the major decision-making process with the regions.

This initiative builds on ongoing Government action to implement the 1984 Prince Albert Declaration which sets out the fundamental principles that should underlie western Canadian economic development policies, recognition of the importance of providing opportunities to allow young people to remain in the West, the importance of strong western representation in the Cabinet and the need for co-operation, consultation and understanding between the federal Government and the West.

Indeed, we must build on our strengths by providing technical, financial and market opening support to those westerners with a will to win. I might add that, in my view, such a will does exist in the West.

It is important to emphasize that the western diversification fund is not a substitute for spending programs operated by other departments, particularly those active in key resource and economic infrastructure sectors like agriculture, energy, fisheries and transport.

Western diversification investments are seeking to take best advantage of new national policies with respect to such matters as international trade and industrial innovation. This is just one more of our Government's initiatives to add to the overhaul of Canada's finances, the Meech Lake Accord and the free trade initiative.

We have moved on the economic front, the social front, in external affairs and in improving federal-provincial relations, not to mention the 1.2 million jobs created since September 1984 and the fact that there are .5 million fewer Canadians living below the poverty line today than there were in 1984.

The western diversification initiative is further proof that our Government has been sensitive to western needs from the first months we came into office. In my own Province of Alberta, 53,000 jobs have been created since the election and the unemployment rate has fallen from a record of 12.1 per cent in September 1984 to 9.5 per cent. In Calgary it has gone from 13.1 per cent to 8.5 per cent, with 16,000 jobs having been created in the past 12 months. Housing starts are up in Alberta. The value of building permits has increased. Retail sales have increased by 8 per cent in the past year. International tourism has improved in the past year without even taking into account the influx of tourists brought about by Calgary's magnificent Winter Olympic Games.

In rig activity, there were 328 rigs drilling in February this year compared to 141 at the same time last year. I am proud to say also that the Party which abolished the National Energy Program has come through with special payments to farmers to help overcome the subsidized competition from Common Market countries. With western diversification we are intent on backing up and diversifying the resource sectors of the western economy, but we can also move into developing manufacturing and high-technology fields.

When Prime Minister Trudeau made one of his trips to the West in 1973 Calgary hosted the Western Economic Opportunities Conference that resulted in piles and piles of learned papers. Finally, in the 1980 Budget of his Government the creation of a $4 billion western development fund was announced. To questions I placed on the Order Paper I learned that $345 million of this was assigned to native economic development; $82 million was assigned to an agri-food development program; and $60 million was assigned to a Vancouver rapid transit system. Amounts assigned to western grain transportation related initiatives included $1.7 million, plus increased future commitments under the Western Grain Transportation Act.

However, it was interesting to me to learn that the initiatives associated with the fund were to be financed out of general budgetary revenues, and that the funding was established partly in recognition of the increased revenues anticipated under that devastating Liberal National Energy Program, devastating to the West. In other words, the West was being bled for some narrow initiatives which would do nothing, nothing to diversify its economy, and left it largely dependent on its non-renewable natural resources.

The Western Diversification Program is an entirely new concept. It is one which will co-ordinate all federal economic development activities in the West. The establishment of the headquarters in Edmonton will mean that a significant part of the decision-making on development projects will be shifted west, increasing the understanding of the economic atmosphere in which we must function and eliminating the delays of a distant bureaucracy.

It is planned that the WDO's head office in Edmonton, together with its sub-offices in Vancouver, Saskatoon, and Winnipeg, will use its allocation to top up projects, contribute to important infrastructure projects and aid in the exploration of new ways to expand the potential of our western resource base. Western diversification staff will also assist businesses to find their way through the Ottawa bureaucracy, no mean task. It will help people in the front lines of Canadian economic development. Through these contacts it is hoped, in co-operation with the provinces and the business community, that strengths and weaknesses of local economies can be analysed sector by sector.

This program has been designed to serve as an active and aggressive voice which will ensure that national decision-making reflects western opportunities and western needs. Our Government has undertaken to continue to provide the environment in which business can flourish. For instance, new rules for financial institutions are encouraging vigour and competitiveness throughout the financial sector. Tax reform will reduce distortions, promote equity and reward productive investment. The new National Transportation Act will improve Canada's lifelines by removing freight rate discrimination.

With 10 western Members of Cabinet the structure is in place to support them and their policy initiatives. Western Canadians are knowledgeable and aware of how crucial a secured access to the lucrative United States' market is. My constituents have been solidly behind our free trade agreement with that country. At the same time westerners are conscious of the opportunities available in the Pacific Rim. I have noted with satisfaction their pursuit of those markets.

Our Government has shown that it has confidence in Canadians. Entrepreneurs in this country want access to markets and an opportunity to compete because we have the talent to compete with anyone in the world.

I believe the WDO's most significant contribution in the long run will be the strong influence it can bring to bear on behalf of western Canada in the formulation of federal economic development to prepare for the next decade and, indeed, the next century. My personal hope is that WDO will seek high returns in economic development and diversification, monitor the performance of its investments and cut its losses if expectations are not met.

The federal Government has increased dramatically its assistance to the energy and grain producers. This fund is in addition to those substantial amounts.

The energy sector is a vital component of the western economy. Western Canada accounts for approximately 99 per cent of Canada's crude oil and natural gas production. Alberta alone accounts for some 87 per cent of production. Western Canada remains highly dependent on the oil and gas sector as the engine of growth. It is my hope that through programs such as western diversification a broader economic base can be achieved.

When the price of oil declined in early 1986 the economy in the West, and in particular in Alberta and the City of Calgary, declined significantly in terms of jobs lost and serious reduction in investment and exploration activity. Spot prices fell to under $13 U.S. a barrel. In fact, they fell from almost $30 down to below $10 a barrel. With these rapid and unforeseen developments in the oil and gas markets the Governments of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Canada have taken measures to assist the industry and maintain employment.

Alberta announced royalty relief in support programs. Saskatchewan introduced three programs to promote industry activity or reduce royalty burdens. Among the federal Government's provision of tax relief measures and assistance were the elimination of the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the elimination of which the Opposition did not support, and the introduction of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program which, although it is to be phased out, has supported the industry through these very trying times.

At the federal-provincial-territorial conference of Ministers of Energy in January, 1987, the Ministers agreed to undertake a review of energy security which would include an assessment of the role of conservation, oil substitution, oil and gas transportation infrastructure, electricity and the means to accelerate the development of new energy projects.

The Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, of which I have the honour to be Chairman, undertook to do a study which we called "Oil: Scarcity or Security?" In particular, our committee's concern was the future availability of crude oil internationally and domestically and the future supply of conventional light crude oil.

Our report clearly indicated the potential for serious problems arising from the highly uneven distribution of the world's light petroleum resources. The committee recognizes that the federal Government must weigh other concerns as well in setting energy policy. The question of oil availability cannot be settled as a resource issue alone. The committee paid due attention to the need for the satisfactory resolution of environmental and native concerns. As Members will know, our committee is not empowered under Standing Orders to undertake studies in environmental or aboriginal issues. However, the committee did feel that it had a responsibility to indicate the implications of making policy which ignores the petroleum supply question.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), in the Government response to the report, did state that the Government is in general agreement with our observations that Canadian policy should be an intermediate one between the extremes of a laissez-faire approach and the massive intervention typified by the National Energy Program of the previous Government. The Minister went on to state that although the report suggested that strategic intervention should be directed at oil, because oil markets do not function in a normal economic fashion, the Government's approach has been to improve the functioning of domestic energy markets and internationally to co-operate with our trading partners in initiatives designed to improve the stability of international oil markets.

The initiatives already taken by the Government in the energy sector to date will help prevent a loss of technological leadership. Our oil and gas sector is among the most advanced anywhere, and it has benefited from exporting its technological expertise around the world. Substantial potential for the future growth exists in technology intensive areas within the energy sector, such as oilsands mining and heavy oil recovery and upgrading. While the current unstable world oil price situation may have reduced the immediate urgency to develop alternative energy techniques, energy research and development continue to be extremely essential.

A major contribution to the ongoing diversification of Alberta's economy was announced on December 22 last year. This was a joint federal-provincial financial commitment for the development and construction of an $18 million engineering research facility to the Centre for Frontier Engineering Research called CFER. The federal Government, under the WDO, is providing a $7.75 million capital contribution, with $1 million of this to be matched by CFER through its industry supporters. The Alberta Government is providing a total of $6.75 million, which includes a $4.5 million capital grant, $1.25 million toward operating funds through 1993, and $1 million maximum interest subsidy. The province will also provide a loan guarantee of up to $5 million.

The planned facility will feature two unique world class laboratories, a low temperature structural laboratory and a tubular products laboratory. Research undertaken in the new facility will be aimed at the development of technology to lower both the capital and operating costs of Canada's industry resources.

CFER was established in 1983 with funding from the Devonian Group of Charitable Foundations, the Government of Alberta, and the private sector. It is a non-profit research organization located in Edmonton. Industry support for the research centre has come from some 40 firms, including oil, steel, and engineering consulting companies across Canada.

It is fundamentally important that Canada maintain this technological edge and that the federal Government's actions continue to support the oil and gas sector and help us maintain this advantage. I trust that the WDO will be interested in projects consistent with Canada's international trade policy, which would help firms in the sector to broaden a commercially competitive capacity to apply their considerable expertise to other domestic sectors and to exports.

Support of propane and natural gas fuels development will, I am sure, continue. In the future, non-conventional sources of supply, such as oilsands, heavy oil, plus frontier supplies will become an increasingly large factor in Canada's energy equation. A number of major projects to develop these resources at present being evaluated or under way will have the potential to bring on stream large new oil supplies while increasing Canada's technological leadership.

The importance of Canadian energy security should be coupled with the value and benefit of Canada's energy exports. The goal of security of supply can best be achieved in an environment that encourages a free international flow of energy commodities.

Since announcing its intention to place a priority on western diversification in the October 1986 Throne Speech, our Government has held numerous informal meetings and discussions with provincial Governments concerning the federal initiative and has welcomed specific proposals from those provinces. The Premiers have established a western ministerial working group on diversification to design, with the Government of Canada, the imminent federal strategy. The federal Government has agreed, with the emphasis placed by the Premiers on the importance of long-term policies, to secure economic stability, growth, and diversification in western Canada.

In conclusion, in preparing the western diversification initiative, the federal Government has listened closely to the advice of western Canadians. A consensus has emerged on the objectives, and the implementation of the western economic diversification department is a major step towards realizing those objectives.

I wish to state my firm support for Bill C-113.

Mr. Schellenberger: It was an excellent speech given by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) which answered many of the questions raised here today about the value and worth of this western diversification program. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on a comment made by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) when he stated that there would be limitations because of the trade initiative between Canada and the United States.

Of the 262 odd offers for projects that WDO has made in the last five or six months, does the Hon. Member believe that most of those projects that are forthcoming in western Canada are not coming forward because of anticipated exports into that huge market into the United States? Many small businesses and new opportunities in the West seem to be very excited about the opportunities, not of a market of 2 million people or 25 million in Canada, but of the opportunity of moving south of the Alberta and Saskatchewan borders into states that have populations as great as all of Canada. The opportunity now is there because of the openness of the border and the loss of tariff inhibitions that have been there in the past. Even in the energy field workers can cross the border much more freely than they could in the past.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on whether she believes that a lot of the help that the federal Government can give to western firms will in fact result from the anticipation of a better trading arrangement with the United States?

Mrs. Sparrow: I wish to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), for his kind remarks and his questions. To start off I believe that there have already been 4,000 or 4,100 requests for assistance through the western diversification office.

• (1920)

The Hon. Member has suggested that 262 projects are being reviewed. Certainly this shows what western Canada has and that we are willing to work toward improving our areas in terms of natural resources and in the agricultural field.

However, in the area of free trade we are looking to a market of not only 25 million people, but of 250 million plus 25 million. We know that in the area of oil and gas it takes moneys invested in certain areas to bring on megaprojects. They are extremely expensive. Also, through high technology, we are working toward becoming more efficient in the production of the tar sands as well as the frontier areas.

In my previous remarks I mentioned CFER which will be built in Edmonton. It will do cold weather research with regard to tubular goods and will allow us to become far more efficient and productive.

I must say that the petrochemical industry is probably the main thrust under free trade. My hon. colleague is absolutely right that free trade will remove some of the tariffs, which go up as high as 18 per cent on some petrochemical products. They have really been a tremendous barrier to allowing us to improve export and production in that particular area.

First, certainly the petrochemical area will benefit a great deal. The second area must be investment. As we improve our efficiency and our ability to do enhanced oil recovery and improve pipeline transportation, I foresee that it will take a lot of investment. This is why I want to say that the Hon. Member is absolutely right. Free trade will allow western Canada to expand and will give us markets so that perhaps we will not be so reliant on a federal Government.

It is very interesting to note that for many years most major decisions have come out of central Canada. It is high time that the regional areas, be they the Atlantic provinces, the western provinces, or northern Ontario, had people with the expertise in their own areas to look at and approve the most beneficial projects in the areas with which they are concerned.

As far as regional assistance under free trade is concerned, of course it has been exempted and will be reviewed. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that will discourage the western diversification office that we are setting up or the $1.2 billion fund. This was clearly set out in the free trade agreement. Canada has so many regions which vary in population and in economics that it is only prudent to realize this and have it included in the free trade agreement.

I look forward to the future of this particular initiative which we have established out West, and I look forward to working with the Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, when the debate has to do with the West it has a special attraction to me. I would have been sorry to see no one from Quebec say at least a few words. However I do deplore the lateness of the hour—I always like the thruth—because I have to meet an important group at 7.45 p.m., and I would have liked to speak longer in the debate, but what matters is not how long one speaks, but the feelings one tries to convey as is now the case on this Bill called the Western Economic Diversification Act.

[English]

It is well known to all my colleagues that I have a lot of affinity with western Canada. I must have been to western Canada over 200 times, at least to speak, since becoming a Member of Parliament. If there is someone who should understand, it is certainly me. I am from Quebec but I am a federal Member in Ottawa, a Canadian, who understands the importance of western Canada to all Canada.

I just returned from three days in Winnipeg where I saw a very enthusiastic lady, as enthusiastic as the one who spoke before me, Mrs. Carstairs, the leader of the Liberal Party. As the House knows, she will be celebrating her birthday on the same day as she will become the Premier of Manitoba.

Mrs. Sparrow: What does this have to do with western diversification?

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member would be surprised. I have discovered that there is no polarization in Manitoba. Polarization was one of the great difficulties. If people all on one side, decide that they do not like it and go to the other side, there is no middle ground. However, I think that Mrs. Carstairs represents the middle ground and that polarization has been totally destroyed. It is a new ball game in Manitoba. I have a great deal of respect and affection for her. I spoke to a school in which Mrs. Carstairs was a teacher many years ago. She reminded me of that fact on the weekend. I did not remember it, but I was very delighted that she remembered the occasion.

I just wanted to say a few words in a non-aggressive way. It is a call to Canadians. I may not agree totally with the Bill, but it will go to committee. It will be reviewed. Every Government has its own approach to diversification.

Any part of my country is very important to me. Anything that can be done to make Canadians at large, not only western Canadians, understand that if a part of Canada is unhappy—and this is always my speech; people will say: "there he goes again"—the rest of Canada should feel unhappy. If western Canada does not feel that it is part of Canada, the rest of Canada should look into it and take the necessary steps to ensure that all parts of Canada are total parts of Canada and totally happy to be parts of Canada.

If I only have the time to say that—and probably that is all I will have time to say if I look at Madam Speaker—at least I have said it as a Quebec Member, un député du Québec à Ottawa, to underline the importance of what we are about to study in the parliamentary committee.

I may not be the greatest expert in law, but I should like to call upon Canadians to understand that when a part of Canada is unhappy, when a part of Canada is feeling frustrated, or when a part of Canada does not feel that it is getting as much from all of Canada, there will be difficulty. If the Bill, amended or otherwise, could help achieve that goal, I think we will have done a great thing for my country. I will thank the Hon. Member now because I have to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) wish to reply in the 30 seconds remaining?

Mrs. Sparrow: I could not let this opportunity go by, Madam Speaker, without making a quick 30-second statement with regard to the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party who talked about recognizing western Canada.

It is very interesting that he is a member of the Party which brought in the National Energy Program that sucked $60 billion out of Alberta to support central Canada. However, I was very pleased to hear him say that we must all work together because that is what the country is all about. It is high time that we all recognized that we are one big country and must support each other.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Some Hon. Members: Go.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will not go because I stand by what I say. I regret the tone of the Hon. Member in reply to a contribution that I wanted to be a very positive one. I regret that she made it so negative, but I thank her very much, indeed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1930)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, five Members are standing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I did not hear anybody say no, but obviously someone did.

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know whether there was a "no" but I do not think it is necessary in order to have a recorded vote called.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, while perhaps it is the desire of the House to have a recorded vote on this matter, I would ask that you review the Standing Orders as they relate to the mechanism used for calling such a vote. Perhaps when we reconvene at 11 a.m. tomorrow morning you will be able to advise us as to whether or not we have abided by the rules of the House in the calling of a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Standing Orders require the Speaker to ask for yeas and nays and then for a recorded vote to take place if there is dissension in the House.

I asked whether it was the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion. Everyone said yes. There is no reason in the world for the Speaker to go through the yeas and nays and there is nothing in the Standing Orders at this point that would require me to go through that procedure and ask for a recorded vote.

Members are the masters of the House. If there is a unanimous request from the House that there should be a recorded vote then, of course, I will abide by the Members' wishes.

Is there a unanimous request from the House that there should be a recorded vote on the subject tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne)): As we do not have unanimous consent, I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

It being 7.34 p.m. pursuant to Order made Friday, March 11, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.34 p.m.

DAY OF MOURNING FOR PERSONS KILLED OR INJURED IN THE WORKPLACE

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-286, an Act respecting a Day of Mourning for Persons Killed or Injured in the Workplace.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a Private Member's Bill asking that April 28 of every year be designated as a day of mourning in remembrance of persons killed or injured in the workplace.

If this Bill passes, every April 28 will become a day on which Canadians will give recognition to those workers who have been killed, disabled or injured in the workplace or inflicted with an industrial disease. In this way we will set an example of commitment to the issue of health and safety in the workplace.

Our most recent work injury statistics available from Labour Canada indicate that there were 23,213 accident claims made between April 1, 1986 and March 31, 1987. Of these, 12,711 required the worker to take injury leave. This is a staggering number of injuries and demonstrates a clear need for greater emphasis on health and safety in the workplace. It is my sincere hope that the passage of this Bill will assist, through a national day of mourning, to increase action on this matter of life and reduce the danger of death and illness at the workplace.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition today signed by many people from various centres across the country.

• (1110)

They state that whereas the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and whereas the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S., wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by many Canadians indicating that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade arrangement with the United States.

Whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and whereas—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Murphy: It appears as if some government Members would like to hear more about this matter, and I will comply. The trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has the floor, and I would ask Hon. Members to respect his right to make his presentation.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been very difficult to present petitions in the House lately with the Government's continuous interference.

Mr. Speaker: Brevity is the soul of wit.

Mr. Murphy: We will not make any remarks about the half-wits on the other side.

The proposed trade arrangement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade arrangement during a national General Election.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and the duty to table the attached petition which has been certified correct as to form and content. The petition is signed by a number of Canadians who reside in a number of different communities in the Province of British Columbia.

They are concerned about the agreement between Canada and the United States and they feel that the agreement as negotiated threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief and, as usual, not very witty.

Mr. Boudria: Non-provocative.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, non-provocative. I have a simple petition here from the City of Kingston where part of the Canadian nation was founded.

The petitioners worry about the trade deal, the inability to control foreign ownership, the inability to develop Canadian energy resources as a result of the deal and the inability to equalize opportunities between the regions, all the foundations of Canada, and these people are worried, as are I and my Party, about the trade deal and they petition against it. They demand, as do I, that the Government have an election very soon so that we can go to the people and discuss all the details of the trade deal. It is an honour to table the petition.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to table a petition today from a number of Canadians who say that the Conservative Government has no mandate to negotiate the free trade deal and that Canadian sovereignty is being affected. These honourable Canadians who should not be criticized also say that the Government now threatens the very fabric of Canadian cultural and political life and above all, they say, and I really concur, that the House should now be dissolved and there should be a general election campaign.

I am sure that members of the Liberal Party agree that if that happens, it will be the end of the Conservative Party of Canada because it will finish third.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present a petition from constituents of Thunder Bay—Nipigon who also express themselves on the trade deal with the United States which my colleagues have been presenting petitions on in the last minutes.

These petitioners too say that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude this agreement. They note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but they noted very early that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. Events in the last days have confirmed that as business leaders call for Canada's policies to be harmonized with the U.S.

With the proposed trade agreement not only denying Canadians secure access to the U.S. market but threatening the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, these petitioners call on Parliament to dissolve to give them the opportunity in a General Election to reject the deal and the Government that negotiated it.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 246, 247 and 262.

[Text]

MEASURES TO COMBAT COMPUTER CRIME

Question No. 246—Mr. Howie:

Did the government undertake, or initiate, in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, any studies relating to the effect of, or measures to combat computer crime and, if so (a) were the studies carried out by outside consultants and (b) in what time frame were the studies to be conducted (c) what amount was allocated to the studies?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): No studies were undertaken or initiated by the Ministry of the Solicitor General in the 1986/87 fiscal year. However, in April, 1987, the Ministry shared in the sponsorship of a conference for the police and prosecutorial communities to consider strategies to combat enterprise crime, including computer crime.

The RCMP has an ongoing program to combat computer crime, and in this connection works closely with other police agencies and industry.

STUDIES REGARDING CHILD ABUSE

Question No. 247—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1986, were studies regarding child abuse and neglect done for the Department of the Solicitor General by (a) departmental personnel (b) outside consultants and, if so, in each case, what were the names and dates of publications or completion of such studies?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Since January 1, 1986, the Ministry of the Solicitor General has not undertaken or initiated any studies dealing specifically with the issue of child abuse and neglect. However, it has supported the development of the Community Services Council for the Working Group on Child Sexual Abuse. The purpose of the project was to form a community-based multi-organizational committee to deal with the problem of child sexual abuse. The Ministry's contribution funded the initial work to be undertaken.

ASSESSMENT OF FISHERIES RESOURCES OF GEORGES BANK

Question No. 262—Mr. Henderson:

Has the Department of Fisheries and Oceans completed an assessment of the fisheries resources on the Georges Bank and surrounding area and, if not (a) when will the department complete a resource assessment (b) will the study include an assessment of the impact or potential risks associated with offshore exploration and development?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): (a) The Department of Fisheries and Oceans is involved in an active, ongoing program to monitor resources and conduct analyses of the status of major fisheries resources on Georges Bank. The work includes an annual groundfish survey in the spring, exploratory surveys of adult cod and haddock distributions during the commercial fishery season, exploratory surveys to monitor the resurgence of herring, experimental surveys to study the early life history of juvenile cod and haddock, and larval surveys of herring along the Maine-New Brunswick coast. Analysis includes formal assessments of cod and haddock, which are reviewed by the Canadian Atlantic Fisheries Scientific Advisory committee (CAFSAC), as well as the production of various other documents and publications, e.g. on the early life history of cod, haddock and herring, and the resurgence of the Georges Bank herring and its expected effect on the New Brunswick sardine industry.

(b) The Department has recently completed an assessment of the environmental impacts associated with offshore hydrocarbon development. This was in response to a 1987 request from the Gulf of Maine Advisory Committee (GOMAC) for a technical presentation on the impact of oil exploration activity on Georges Bank. The assessment of the possible environmental impacts of exploratory drilling on Georges Bank fisheries resources provides a general scientific evaluation of the likely environmental impacts of exploratory drilling on Georges Bank as perceived by the Science Sector of DFO's Scotia-Fundy Region at the present time. The assessment was considered by GOMAC at their meeting on February 11, 1988.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LEAK OF CONFIDENTIAL RESEARCH MATERIAL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wrote you earlier today in connection with articles appearing in The Toronto Star, in the Toronto Globe and Mail and, as I now find, in the Financial Post purporting to deal explicitly with confidential and private research material alleged to be a report of the House of Commons Finance Committee and very seriously making allegations about the contents of that report or draft work being done by the committee.

It is exceptionally difficult for committees to operate, and I have checked to make sure that the members of the committee have been most discreet in keeping issues within the committee and making sure that none of it was released. Nonetheless, it is clear from the articles in the press that somewhere in the course of events, Canadian Press reporters Eric Beauchesne and Gordon McIntosh have obtained a copy or what appears to be a copy of some of the preliminary work for report to the House of Commons.

The problem is that the release of the material in the form in which it was released seriously damages the work of the committee and brings disrepute to the members of the committee who must, if they are to act responsibly as Members of Parliament and work with the respect of the financial community and the financial service industry of Canada, responsibly handle matters with discretion. The banking industry has been very co-operative with the committee by supplying the committee material for its investigation. The headlines covering these articles clearly indicate that somehow the banks have refused to co-operate with the committee.

The unfairness of the matter is such that I believe it ought to be a matter of the privileges of the House. Surely we cannot allow the preliminary work of a committee, when the matter has not been resolved by the committee, to be spread around the countryside as if the committee had come to a decision when it clearly had not. This leaves an impression with the public that somewhere along the line, the members of the committee have made a decision that they have not made. That attacks the very ability of the committee to make a contribution to the people of Canada and to this House.

Sir, if somewhere along the line that practice is not discouraged, then our parliamentary committees will be severely damaged and the reputation of Members will be hurt. Therefore, I ask that if you find there is a prima facie case of privilege, that I be allowed to move the appropriate motion.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to support the point raised by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and express my great distress at what has happened and its implications for the working of committees of this House.

We have seen in the last couple of years some very far-reaching changes in the committee structure and these have depended to a large extent on the ability of Members on all sides of the House to put aside the possibility of partisan or individual gains and work together constructively for the common good. In that spirit the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has usually managed to come up with unanimous reports. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts, which I have the honour of chairing, also operates in the very same way with a remarkable degree of trust.

As you know, in times past committee members were not allowed to take research material or preliminary drafts away from the committee room. Because of the fear of preliminary leaks, all work had to be done right there in the committee room. We all know how this weakened the quality of the input. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has made a practice of doing what I do in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, that is, giving members research and confidential background materials as soon as they are available and relying on the discretion of the members and their staffs to handle these materials responsibly and not leak them piecemeal, and not interfere with the integrity of the committee coming to a decision.

I feel there are important principles here that go right to the heart of how Parliament works, how the committee reforms work, and I sincerely hope we will be able to find a solution that guarantees that this will not happen again.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to support the comments made by my friend, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and state the obvious. We have had a chance to check with the offices of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who are members of that committee. They assure me that they did not leak the reports or the information. They have checked with their staffs, and their staffs have not done it either. It is a very serious issue which has been raised by the committee chairman. I do not think anyone suspects any Member of Parliament or their staff, and we wish to do whatever we can to make sure it does not happen again.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is also the distinguished chairperson of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, has raised a matter which the chair takes very seriously.

It should be noted by Hon. Members, and also by the public who is watching and listening, that the complaint brought by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has been supported by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on behalf of the Official Opposition, and by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), on behalf of the NDP. All three Members are Members of long standing in this place and very well respected. The point simply is that if there cannot be some kind of trust and security in matters which ought to be confidential before they are made public, then the workings of this place become extremely difficult indeed.

I had occasion to comment on this matter only some days ago. However, I will take it under advisement, look very carefully at the interventions, and report to the House as soon as it is appropriate to do so.

I thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South for raising the matter, and I thank the Hon. Member for Trinity and the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville for putting this on a completely non-partisan basis.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada) moved that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first let me say that I am pleased to lead off the debate on second reading of this Bill. I might say that I am also very pleased that, since the introduction of this Bill on December 1, 1987, we have had throughout the country a very impressive response. I think it is fair to say there are very few Bills that come before this House, which are complex and sometimes contentious, that have had such a strong and positive response. The Bill has been well received indeed.

If I can indulge in a little immodesty to make a point, I would quote from the Montreal Gazette:

> . . . Mr. Crombie is right to aim high. It is easy to be cynical about such ideals as equality, bilingualism and multiculturalism, which are too often betrayed in everyday life. But without the ideals—and the urge to make them real—everyday life would be unlivable.

The Toronto Sun says:

> Crombie has a good solution. Instead of entrenching heritage language programs in the most radical way and enshrining divisions in other ways, he'd like to see our histories reflect the reality of how our country was built.

The Toronto Star says:

> It's precisely by avoiding the temptation to create a centralized multiculturalism department with huge powers that David Crombie does all Canadians a big favour. Rather than shove ethnic groups into permanent multicultural ghettos, he's content to have all Canadians treated the same when it comes to protecting their basic rights and freedoms.

Johnny Lombardi, Canadian Association of Ethnic Radio Broadcasters, says:

The proposed Act pleases me beyond measure . . . I look forward . . . with deep pleasure to shaking your hand in our mutual and personal celebration of the fruition of a dream which has finally come to pass.

Courier Canadienne says:

At long last a Government is making the effort to recognize the realities of an evolving Canada.

Lou Meloski, National Chairman of the Canadian Multicultural Council says:

It is my belief that Canadians across our country will welcome positively the benefits that accrue from this Act. It is an Act for all Canadians, it is an Act that will bring us social peace and harmony that Canadians strongly believe in.

Lucille Blanchette of the Société franco-manitobains says:

I support the proposed Bill, which will help the country's multicultural groups as the official languages policy helped anglophone and francophone minorities.

Art Miki, President of the National Association of Japanese Canadians says:

The NAJC greets with enthusiasm the new Canadian Multiculturalism Act . . . which attempts to recognize minority rights and to protect individuals of all ethnic backgrounds from the injustices experienced by (the Japanese) community in the past.

• (1130)

The Canadian Ukrainian Committee welcomes the Act as a long overdue attempt to recognize the contributions that different groups have made to the Canadian mosaic.

Edith Habzmanski of the Vancouver Multicultural Society says:

It's important for the multicultural community to be officially recognized in legislation in Canada; that there is an official piece of legislation that they can refer to.

George Corn of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council said:

We feel it will be a really good and workable act. We offer to work together with the government and both opposition parties to still improve the act.

Javed Hamid, President of the Canadian Federation of Multicultural Councils said:

We are pleased with the introduction of an Act and are committed to working with you through the stages of debate.

Khaki Aziz from the Committee for Racial Justice says:

The act is a welcome step and I am pleased it mentions the country's racial diversity and promotes racial understanding and tolerance.

I picked the best responses, Madam Speaker, because it is, of course, not a perfect Bill but it is a first-class first step. When this Bill goes to committee, as it will, committee members will have the opportunity to recommend those changes which they think are important. I hope they do their work well and quickly, because the Government and the people who have sent telegrams and letters and made public pronouncements want this Bill passed into law. Whatever differences parliamentarians may have among them should not stand in the way of ensuring that Canada's first multicultural Act is passed in the very near future after it gets out of committee.

I read all of those nice comments about the multicultural Bill because I was impressed with the range and depth of the positive response. Even though people have some differences with specific parts of the Bill, they overwhelmingly support the principles of the Bill. There is a good reason for that, Madam Speaker. It is that this Bill is based on the oldest and strongest ideas that the country has to offer. They may have a new application in a multicultural Bill, but they are very old and important ideas.

These are not ideas about Canada which come from an academic pen. They are ideas about Canada which come from the experience of this country, the experience of the people who live and have lived in this country. It is experience that comes from the history of this country. It is experience that comes from the geography of this country. It is experience that comes from immigration patterns in this country and, sure enough, it is experience that comes from the peculiar, particular, and unique approach to nation-building which Canadians have always been able to forge.

That can be seen when we look at how our leaders, over time, have tried to come to grips with a county diverse in its culture, diverse in its language, diverse in its history, and diverse in its life experiences. Some of the most elegant prose written in either English or French in this country been written by political leaders throughout the ages in this country to describe what they understood to be the basic and fundamental reality of Canada's diversity. Let me cite as an example what I think is one of the most beautiful and often repeated statements by then Prime Minister Wilfrid Laurier 85 years ago. He said:

I have visited in England one of those models of Gothic architecture which the hand of genius, guided by an unerring faith, has molded into a harmonious whole. This cathedral is made of marble, oak and granite.

It is the image of the nation I would like to see Canada become. For here, I want the marble to remain the marble; the granite to remain the granite; and the oak to remain the oak; and out of all of these elements I would build a nation great among the nations of the world.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, more than 25 years ago, John Diefenbaker, who was Prime Minister at the time, used equally striking images when he said that Canada is not "a melting pot where a number of ingredients are amalgamated, thus destroying their individuality, to produce a new and totally different product. This country is more like a flower garden to which the hardiest and most radiant blossoms from a host of different countries have been transplanted, each maintaining in its new environment the best qualities for which it was loved and cherished in its native country".

[English]

Indeed, most recently in a long line of Prime Ministers who have tried to define what Canadian diversity means, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said a year ago in Toronto:

> Multiculturalism is an affirmation of our commitment that Canadians of all ethnic and racial backgrounds have the right to equal recognition and equal opportunity in this country. Thus multiculturalism lies at the very heart of the idea of Canada, of our sense of country. As with our commitment to official languages, it reflects where we have come from and where we are going.

We also saw that sense of the importance of diversity coming from our own experience during the unity debates of the 1960s and 1970s. Some of us in this Chamber are old enough to remember those. I remember in particular a comment made by Dr. Charles Hobart who at that time was a professor of sociology at the University of Alberta, and an American. He said at that time something which cut through to a lot of us. He said that Canadians are almost "the" multicultural society of the world. He said to us in 1963:

> —this is your identity. It is the contribution you as Canadians have to make to the world. The system of multiculturalism has now worked for almost 100 years and you should be missionaries in this . . . cause.

I remember as well a speech to which I referred on one other occasion by Senator Paul Yuzyk. That Senator from Manitoba was probably the first parliamentarian to put on record the call for the understanding and declaration of a multicultural Canada. In his maiden speech 23 years ago in the Senate he said:

> The Indians and Eskimos have been with us throughout our history; the British group is mutlicultural—English, Scots, Irish, Welsh; and with the setting up of other ethnic groups, which now make up almost a third of the population, Canada has become mutlicultural in fact . . . In keeping with the ideals of democracy and the spirit of Confederation, Canada should accept and guarantee the principle of the partnership of all peoples who have contributed to her development and progress.

It continued, of course, in the early 1970s. In 1971, Prime Minister Trudeau proclaimed Canada to be officially multicultural with a policy directed toward, he said:

• (1140)

> Preserving human rights, developing Canadian identity, strengthening citizenship participation, reinforcing Canadian unity and encouraging cultural diversification within a bilingual framework.

Shortly after he made that speech in the House in 1971, he was joined by the then Leader of the Opposition, Robert Stanfield, who said:

> What we want is justice for all Canadians and recognition of the cultural diversity of this country.

It did not stop there. In 1972, the government of the day appointed for the first time a minister responsible for multiculturalism. A year later, in 1973, there was appointed an advisory body to the Minister for Multiculturalism.

In 1977, after a very heated debate with respect to multiculturalism, this country adopted the Canadian Human Rights legislation. In 1982, with the adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms not only the equality clause, Section 15(1), but Section 27 in particular terms were put in the Charter. Section 27 reads:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

In early 1984, the Liberal government of the day, through the parliamentary committee, brought forward the report Equality Now. It was supported by all three political parties and called for urgent action to fulfil the promise of multiculturalism in the Charter. Later in 1984, the Liberal government of the day introduced Bill C-48 but, because of the impending election, the Bill was not concluded. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that people on all sides felt more work was needed to be done.

When the new Government assumed office in 1984, the Prime Minister made a commitment through the Speech from the Throne to review the matter and bring forward a multicultural act. We began that process with the establishment of a parliamentary committee on multiculturalism.

In June, 1987 that Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, chaired by my hon. friend, the Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), brought forward its report entitled Building the Canadian Mosaic. It also made specific recommendations on the content of Canada's first multiculturalism Bill.

Finally, on December 1, 1987, Bill C-93 was introduced into the House.

I have gone through that long history because Canadians sometimes forget that ideas and events do not happen simply in one morning. They have a background to their development, and I want to ensure that it is clear that this Bill fulfils the promise of that long historic march toward a multicultural Canada. This Bill is true to the spirit and intent of Section 27 of the 1982 Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It provides a legislative base for the multicultural policies of the Government of Canada. It recognizes and declares that multiculturalism is a central feature of Canadian citizenship and of being Canadian. This Bill reinforces the historic right of every Canadian to choose to enjoy, enhance and share his or her heritage.

Finally, this Bill commits the federal Government to promote multiculturalism throughout its departments and agencies and in Canadian society as a whole.

If I asked Members of the House or average Canadians across Canada, indeed people outside Canada, what words they would use to describe Canada, they would have varying views about what Canada means to them. Certainly most of us who participate in public life and attend meetings where people concern themselves with these matters would respond with three words: freedom, stability and opportunity. Indeed, that would be the response of most people who know the reality behind those words.

That is what Canada means to Canadians, once the rhetoric is removed. That is what it means to people around the world who want to live in this country. The combination of freedom, stability and opportunity in a society is very rare in this world. Canada has been able to depend upon freedom, stability and opportunity for generations. While we have not always practised it well, and I have occasionally talked about periods when we have had a shortened sense of the values and traditions of this country, I think we can agree with the Canadian writer who said: "When you visit Canada you visit the peaceable kingdom, the peaceable kingdom of freedom and stability and opportunity".

Canada, certainly more than most other countries, has been able to practise a way of life that gives tangible opportunities to Canadians and those who come here to live. Why? How? I believe it is because we have always tried to practise three fundamental principles. Those principles are at the heart of this Bill and at the heart of Canadian citizenship. They are equality, diversity and community.

Some people are cynical about those principles. There are some people—perhaps it is the comfortable and secure—who take it for granted that those principles will produce the freedom, stability and opportunity that we enjoy.

As Secretary of State, I have the opportunity to judge Canada Day posters made by kids across Canada. When I read a cynical editorial or hear people express the view that these principles are silly, I look at those Canada Day posters in which eight, ten and twelve-year old kids describe what they think it means to be Canadian. In their primitive way they describe the principles of equality, diversity and community. We must never stop recognizing those principles because they give us that freedom, stability and opportunity.

Equality is not simply an idea. It is and always has been a burning struggle for people and communities in the desire to make sure that one is not diminished as a person or held back because of colour, race, creed or religion. Those qualities that add up to human dignity are daily struggles. Some of us forget that.

Those of us who have the opportunity to visit groups, either newly arrived or those who have historical traumas with which they have to deal, recognize that at the root, equality is an individual and group struggle which must be dealt with each and every generation. Equality is also a social glue. It keeps us together. It is an integrating force. It allows people in this country to say, "I will make a commitment to social harmony and to the stability of this country because it gives me equality of opportunity". Equality of opportunity gives people the willingness to ensure we keep it together.

One notices most, I suppose, in Citizenship Court ceremonies, that equality comes from Canadian citizenship. People who receive their citizenship understand that they now will have equality of opportunity. They know they have to struggle for it but their citizenship is their passport to do so. That is why equality is something we should not underestimate. It is a powerful principle, not only ideologically but it is clearly practical on the street.

People come to this country and stay to live here because they want to be Canadians. First and foremost they want to be Canadians. I might say that that is one of the reasons I rejected a recommendation of the standing committee with respect to a separate department for multiculturalism and a commissioner.

Some people have said I did not go far enough. They are wrong. I think a separate department and a commissioner is absolutely wrong and against the traditions of this country. I might say, Madam Speaker, that I am not alone. If you look at some of the testimony which has been given you will see that others agree.

The Toronto Star, I think, probably does more in the multicultural field, reaching a larger number of people, than any other news media in the country. I will quote it again:

> It's precisely by avoiding the temptation to create a centralized multiculturalism department that David Crombie does all Canadians a big favour. Rather than shove ethnic groups into permanent multicultural ghettos, he's content to have all Canadians the same when it comes to protecting their basic rights and freedoms.

It is not because I did not want to go far enough, it is because I reject the view that we should ghettoize people in this country, bureaucratically. Their rights are the same as Canadians. I rejected the commissioner for the same reason. Multiculturalism in this country, historically, and multiculturalism in this Act, is not the language of command control. It is the language of choice and opportunity. People's rights are going to be guaranteed in this Act not by some special commissioner for multiculturalism but by the commissioner who guarantees the rights and freedoms of all Canadians.

Some people regard diversity as a curse, as a problem with which we have to deal. I do not. Diversity, to me, has always been a blessing, an opportunity, and I would like to try to put some emphasis on that, not on how we have to cope with diversity, nor on how we have to solve a problem. I want to give an excellent example of this. The other night I was reading The Law Society Gazette. In it was an essay on The Scottish Enlightenment of the middle and latter part of the 18th Century. What attracted my eye is that it was written by the Hon. Bertha Wilson, eminent Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. She was asked to speak in Saskatoon on things which influenced her with respect to her thinking about literature and the law, and how her cultural upbringing affected her particular perspective. I will not read it all. It is a delightful essay on its own for those who have an interest in the relationship between literature and the law. What impressed me was the last paragraph. In preparation for her talk at the University of Saskatchewan she went back to Scotland to refresh her mind.

> I have amassed quite a small library as I attempted to update a Scottish education of some forty years ago and it has been a privilege to share this experience with you upon my return home again to Canada.

And this is the point:

> I have never quite been able to understand the emotional springs that give rise to the love and pride I hold for both the land of my birth and the country of my adoption, how easy it has been for me to become a Canadian and feel completely at home in both French and English Canada. Perhaps it is because there is a mysterious element of Scottishness in the Canadian psyche itself, as Lord Tweedsmuir . . .

A former Governor General.

> . . . declared at Winnipeg on St. Andrew's Day 1936: "Canada in one sense is simply Scotland writ large". Certainly it has had a magnetic attraction for the Scot and over the years many have come to build a new life here; and could echo the "je me souviens" of their French compatriots. For like them they also cherished memories of the land they had left behind—in the haunting lines of an anonymous poet of this Golden Age of Scottish culture—

And one can find this sign, by the way, in Cape Breton.

> From the lone sheiling of the misty island
> Mountains divide us, and the waste of seas—
> Yet still the blood is strong, the heart is Highland,
> And we in dreams behold the Hebrides.

I have a Scottish background so I am attracted to that poem. And I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that that sense is not unique to the Scottish community. You will find that sense with the Macedonian community that I was with on Saturday night. You will find that sense in the Chinese communities and in every multicultural community in the whole of this country. People have a need to be proud of their heritage. It tells them about themselves. They have a sense of belonging, a sense of roots that is important to them. They need to know that their background is as important as anyone elses, and equal to it, and brings with it a perspective on being Canadian that others may not have.

If you have a Chinese background, you have a different perspective on being Canadian. You share some things about being Canadian but you have a different perspective. I can well remember a poem by F.R. Scott with respect to E.J. Pratt's poem about the building of the CPR, extolling that great historic event. However, he forgot to mention the contribution of the Chinese community. F.R. Scott wrote in his opening lines: "Where are the Chinese in your poem, Ned? Where are the 30,000 who swung their picks at 40 below?" The same story with respect to the Chinese community could also be repeated about other communities.

It drives me nuts, Madam Speaker, when I hear people ask why they cannot just be Canadian. That shows two things. First, they are really saying, "Why can't they be like me?" Second, they would cut this country off from some of the richest cultural, linguistic and philosophical ore that we can mine.

• (1200)

That is why I would like to conclude by reminding us all that whatever our differences with respect to the Bill, and there will be some, we are involved in no small piece of work. Barbara Ward, a British economist, once said that Canada was the world's first international country. Indeed, this country has earned a reputation over the years through its participation in world affairs, the recently held Commonwealth Conference in Vancouver, the Sommet de la francophonie de Québec, the Economic Summit in Toronto this June, and the free trade agreement.

These items have been looked at by people around the world. They also watch us in terms of what we do with respect to human beings, in terms of what we do with respect to human rights and in terms of what we do with respect to multiculturalism. They know we practise it better than anyone else in the world. They know that the world is multicultural. They know that the world is multilingual. They know that the world is multiracial. This gives us a golden opportunity.

For the last Canada Day celebrations held on July 1, 1987, a teacher from Etobicoke, Ontario, wrote an essay. I do not think anyone in the House can say it any better than she said it. She said:

> All Canadians of whatever creed, background or colour have a destiny—a destiny to build a country . . . If we can live here in harmony and in peace, if we can all benefit from being Canadian, if we can prove our country to be not only a land of freedom, but a land of justice and hope for those who follow, then the rest of the world will come to ask us our secret. Perhaps that can be a contribution we Canadians can make to civilization and to global survival.

I think she has it right. I hope that when we conclude our discussions with respect to this Bill that we will have it right, too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that it is not customary, pursuant to our rules, to ask a question of the Minister at this time unless there is unanimous consent of the House to do so. However, because of a recent event which took place and because we have here the man whom I call the protector of multiculturalism, the spokesperson for that aspect of our country, I would like to ask a non-partisan question concerning a recent event dealing with the Sikhs, many of whom I had the honour to meet. I seek through you, Madam Speaker, the unanimous consent of the House to ask the Minister a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) to ask a question of the Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: I thank you, Madam Speaker, and in particular I thank the Minister. I will be participating in this debate, although it will not be today, since its subject matter is something in which I passionately believe. It is something that keeps me here in Ottawa.

As Chairman of the National Liberal Caucus I had an opportunity recently to meet representatives of the World Sikh Organization. I arrived in Winnipeg and I met some people, including taxi drivers. I must say that I found recent comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning Sikhs extremely disturbing. Maybe this is not political. Perhaps some of my colleagues may disagree with my taking this opportunity to ask the Minister as the protector of multiculturalism in Canada a question concerning this matter. The Minister was very sincere in his speech. I listened with interest to it. I hope that he can make a comment today since there is a disturbance that is growing in Canada.

The Minister knows very well that there are 250,000 Canadians of Sikh origin in Canada. If the Minister would like to comment today or perhaps later I would appreciate it. However, I would like him to understand the seriousness of the feelings at the moment in the Sikh community in Canada.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be given this opportunity to reply to the Hon. Member. I understand the seriousness of the question and the seriousness of the matter.

First, I do not need to speak with respect to the actions taken by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). His intention was clearly to ensure that people in the conduct of their affairs did not create such a condition whereby they would be giving aid and comfort to those engaged in activities which we would consider not to be appropriate. I think that was his intention. He has dealt with that matter himself.

My responsibilities relate to ensuring that I do what I can within the federal limits and, indeed, even beyond, to help with respect to communities that are being hurt. When I first became Secretary of State, and this is true of my predecessor when he first became Secretary of State, the relationship with the Sikh community had not been going well in official circles. Therefore I embarked on a series of building little bridges, perhaps minor in their way, to see if we could ensure that the Sikh community did not feel isolated, alienated or put into a corner and put down.

I have had experience with those feelings myself. I understand what they do to people. As a result I met with a number of groups over a number of months looking for a way to send a message to the Sikh community that clearly we wanted to make sure that they were not alienated from either this Government or this Parliament. The most important aspect in this respect was the establishment of the Chair of Sikh and Punjabi studies at the University of British Columbia. As you know, Madam Speaker, and as the Hon. Member knows, those Chairs are very important to the community and, indeed, to our knowledge of that particular community.

When I went to the University of British Columbia I participated in a ceremony. There were some good people there. However, there were some people who boycotted the meeting. I found that unfortunate. While there were some who boycotted the meeting there were others who did not. Clearly within this community there are some not looking for a bridge, but that is the nature of our world.

I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that whatever this Secretary of State can do to ensure that the community is in good shape and not isolated from the rest of Canada, the Government and I will do it.

Canadian Multiculturalism Act

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise this morning on behalf of the Liberal Party and the Liberal caucus in the House of Commons to respond to the statements made by the Minister with respect to second reading of Bill C-93. I also welcome the opportunity because I believe it offers Parliament the first opportunity, with some degree of detail, to venture into the policy area of multiculturalism.

• (1210)

At the outset I wish to commend the Minister, whom I consider to be a parliamentary friend, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), for expressing his thoughts with a significant degree of passion and sensitivity as he brought the House through the long journey that multiculturalism has taken in this country.

While it is valuable to understand how and why an official policy of multiculturalism came to be, and while it is a productive exercise to trace the evolution of different multicultural programs and initiatives through the years, as the Minister did moments ago, I believe that the centre-piece of our thoughts and deliberations must be clearly directed toward the future, to finding effective solutions to the fundamental questions posed by Canadians across the land, and to finding remedies to the undignified experiences faced by all too many Canadians.

I believe that multiculturalism has reached an important watershed in Canada. After having existed as an official policy statement of federal Governments for close to 20 years, and after having helped shaped this country unofficially long before that, it is in need of a thorough and refreshing review similar to the efforts now taking place with respect to our official languages legislation. Our policy of multiculturalism requires a rejuvenation of energy and thought, not merely for the sake of change, but for the sake of ensuring relevancy and effectiveness. If our multiculturalism programs are not adequately addressing the contemporary aspirations and dilemmas of citizens, they will rapidly become irrelevant, and irrelevance will only breed impotency.

[Translation]

If we want this policy to stand up to the test of time, and I know we all do, this Parliament must be the architect of the second phase of multiculturalism. It must provide a broader and more far-sighted vision that will draw its strength from the grass roots and be accepted by a new generation of Canadians, wherever they happen to be. It would be a demonstration of leadership that would reflect their conviction that a policy is never an end in itself but, by its very nature, a challenge that is constantly renewed and which demands unceasing effort and dedication.

[English]

For many the thought of reform can be threatening, while for others, change signals an admission that the ways of the past were wrong. However, for Liberals reform and change are the life-blood which invigorate the body and soul of any enterprise. We believe that the future does not belong to those who are content with today, to those who are apathetic toward common every day problems, to those who are timid in the face of new and bold ideas, and to those who are unwilling to take the necessary risks toward bettering people's lives. After all, Plato reminded us all that a life without criticism is not a life worth living.

I recognize a sense of comradeship with respect to the development of our multicultural policy and heritage. This spirit was certainly reached in the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. I congratulate and commend the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), who is presently taking the chair, for striking that non-partisan atmosphere and developing that rapport. We must compare that attitude to the record of the present administration. Despite having made 46 specific promises in relation to the federal multicultural policy during the last election, to a certain degree the Government has opted for the status quo and for inaction as opposed to action. Not only has it failed to act on its electoral commitments given to Canadians, but to a certain degree it has also been unable to recognize or define that second phase to which I alluded earlier.

In fact, beyond inheriting an infrastructure created and nurtured by former Governments, basically the Mulroney Government has done very little in the area of multiculturalism policy. There have been no new major—and I underline the word "major"—programs initiated; budgets have dwindled miserably; and the Government's over-reactionary refugee legislation has only served to set back race relations for some time. Indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is fond of utilizing the theme of multiculturalism. It is a favourite subject during the summer picnic circuit in cities across the nation. But what happens to that rhetoric when the Prime Minister returns to the corridors of power in Ottawa? Where does multiculturalism fit into the Government's agenda of priorities for this country and for Canadians?

During the past three and a half years the Government has strived to find someone within its ranks who understands and appreciates the demands and the aspirations of that portfolio. This is evidenced by the rotating door part-time multiculturalism Ministers who have come and gone. Moreover, it was not until December that the present Minister, for whom I have a great deal of respect, by introducing this Bill that we are now debating, moved on a matter of any innovative significance. However, the Minister did so, I believe, grudgingly. When he initially assumed the portfolio for multiculturalism, he was opposed to the concept of a separate multiculturalism Bill and preferred to incorporate the sense of that initiative into a Citizenship Act.

From my point of view, I believe that the Minister and the Government altered their course and that thinking, following protests from communities across the country with respect to incorporating the sense of a multiculturalism Bill into a more global citizenship Bill, and also because they came to realize that the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was about to table a unanimous committee report predicated on a separate comprehensive multiculturalism Act.

Therefore, if one takes it at face value, the impetus for that Bill was not an original or voluntary initiative designed to meet a real need. Instead, it was a Government that, to a certain degree, was embarrassed into a reactionary and reluctant policy response.

[Translation]

Do not misunderstand me. Creating a legislative framework for a policy on multiculturalism is indeed a welcome initiative. Nevertheless, I say the Bill must also be judged in terms of the quality and substance of the provisions it contains and the extent to which it genuinely promotes multiculturalism across this country.

Unfortunately, the Bill is unlikely to live up to its promises. It has been strongly criticized by many organizations across Canada. In fact, after reading the Bill, one is left with the uncomfortable feeling that it only contains some very general principles and objectives.

The authors of Bill C-93 have refused to get into any detail. They have carefully avoided using specific, definite terms, preferring to hide behind words like: should, may, facilitate, encourage, and so forth.

• (1220)

[English]

This is not only my conclusion. While I appreciate the process and the initiative of introducing a Bill, we also need to judge the Bill, not by the mere introduction, because that would make every piece of legislation in this House extremely perfect legislation, but also by the substance and the contents of it. When I made those remarks they were not only remarks of an opposition critic but remarks rooted in the comments made by a number of organizations and individuals.

The Minister, in his opening address, made reference to a number of comments made legitimately, quite rightly as is their right, by groups and individuals. I believe to a certain degree we can stand up and perhaps read each other's quotes. To a certain degree that might be valuable and it might not.

I would like to provide for the House other quotations, the other side that Canadians are drawing from this Bill. Mr. Lewis Chan from the Canadian Ethnocultural Council described the Bill as "a symbol without substance".

The Ottawa Citizen wrote:

> An empty promise on multiculturalism . . . it's a mish-mash of circle squaring ambiguity and clumsy opportunism.

The Globe and Mail wrote:

> —multiculturalism Bill gets cool welcome.

The Vancouver Sun wrote:

> Ethnic Bill called symbol over substance.

Dr. Ubali, Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission said:

> The proposed Multiculturalism Act changes nothing. It is not historic as the Minister calls it. It is purely symbolic. It is old wine in a new bottle.

Daniel Iannuzzi, President of Multilingual Television said:

> What we need is the recognition that multiculturalism is an integral part of Canadian society . . . the Bill does not allow for such an interpretation.

The Canadian Multiculturalism Press Federation said:

> By implementing only one of the major recommendations of the report, the Government is offering Canadians virtually nothing new from the policy established by Trudeau in 1971.

The Hellenic-Canadian Federation of Ontario said:

> We are profoundly disappointed by the Government's recent draft legislation on multiculturalism. We are displeased by this action of the federal Government, which undermined the work of the committee, and amounts to nothing more than window dressing. Indeed, it simply reiterates what exists in federal practices.
> Unfortunately, there is nothing in the recent draft legislation on multiculturalism of substance for the people of this country.

Therefore, the Bill is primarily satisfied in talking and in dreaming about ideal principles rather than establishing an Act through an enforcement mechanism which would make an honest attempt to ensure that these principles become reality.

Finally, the Government drafted this Bill in complete isolation, and stubbornly refused to draw strength and vision from the recent unanimous standing committee report. It cowardly ignored the all-Party recommendations and, as such, the presentation of this Bill is a missed opportunity, a missed opportunity because the Government neglected to take full advantage of the political green light offered by all three federal political Parties and of the growing consensus within the Canadian community which had advocated significant and comprehensive reform. Thus while the process of introducing a multiculturalism Bill is in itself valuable, the actual Bill in its specific is a mediocre attempt at the very best. The Bill merely confirms the status quo and legislates in 1988 goals and values that were born in the 1960s and 1970s.

For the Conservative Party, the future of multiculturalism is clearly in the past. We as a Parliament, as a country, have a choice. We can either choose to embrace the Tory recipe for multiculturalism or we can build and update a policy that will meet present day circumstances and challenges, and articulate and inspire a vision of things to come.

For the Liberal Party, the choice is clear and unmistakable. We believe that through such a Bill we, as a Parliament, should not have any hesitation in declaring the policy of multiculturalism is an important national building block, a cornerstone of our Canadian society. Therefore, we should pioneer programs and reforms that reflect their sincerity and the attitude of that belief. This Bill does not do that. This Bill does not accomplish or reflect the sincerity of that statement.

Why, Madam Speaker, why does the Bill tremble about confronting the issues? Why did it not address the matters of a full-time senior Minister for multiculturalism and create a separate line ministry which would do justice to the dreams articulated in all of our speeches as we go across the country?

In rejecting the committee's recommendation for a separate department, the Minister used, as he did today, the statement that he does not want to ghettoize people, that he does not want to ghettoize multiculturalism. If that separate line department is ghettoized, how would the Minister describe and characterize the directorate as it stands today? Why a ghetto when we tried to bring all the structures and programs of the federal Government under one more effective roof? Why a ghetto when we took some of the moneys already existing, not necessarily all new money, but existing moneys from departments and fused them together under this new ministry? Why a ghetto when we would be adding political muscle to the Minister of the day and to the Deputy Minister that would allow them to compete for resources and attention on an even level rather than as a poor, more insignificant sister of government? Why a ghetto when the fusion of these new forces would enable a far superior, a farther reaching and more effective outreach program and delivery to Canadians? Why a ghetto when it would have brought the Canada Council under this separate line ministry so as to avoid the present situation as it stands today?

For instance, if you are an author and wish to write about your roots and your country's heritage and your name happens to be Atwood, you go to Canada Council, get your funding and write your book. But if you happen to have a last name that is Diciccio or Defrancesco and you go to Canada Council, Canada Council will reroute you to the multiculturalism directorate. There the directorate will tell you that they do not have enough funding. If we try to stop that practice, and it exists, why are we calling that a ghetto?

Why a ghetto when this significant change in bureaucratic alignment would signal the federal Government's higher priority for multiculturalism to the Canadian public? Why a ghetto when this new alignment would not preclude this Minister or any other Minister from advocating a multiculturalism policy with all departments and all colleagues in Cabinet? Why a ghetto when this separate line ministry can be seen as a transitional step toward having one day in this country one department of culture, not a department of communications and culture, while at the same time having a department of muliculturalism, but one department that would reflect Canadian culture which is clearly multiculturalism?

That step is not politically simply, nor easy. Rhetoric alone will not achieve it, nor will giant leaps of faith that land nowhere. For me and my Party, a separate-line Ministry represents one significant, positive, sure step toward achieving that ultimate goal.

• (1230)

When the Minister calls that proposal one that would create a ghetto, Canadians ask themselves who really is advocating that ghetto. They ask who ghettoizes multiculturalism, those who do not do very much and want to leave it where it is or those who say let us have a greater breadth of vision, let us be a little bolder and let us change.

Again, that is not something I am saying for my own satisfaction. It is rooted in the words of organizations and individuals who spoke passionately and at great length about this concept of a separate-line ministry.

The Canadian Hellenic Congress said:

> We are disappointed however that the Honourable David Crombie has rejected the idea of a new Department of Multiculturalism . . . the current treatment of multiculturalism policies, within the Government of Canada is unfocused and underfunded.
> We doubt that the passing of the proposed Act in its present form will do much to focus or strengthen such policies.

The Ontario Advisory Council on Multiculturalism and Citizenship said:

> The decision not to establish a Ministry of Multiculturalism as it was recommended by your committee is unacceptable and it only demonstrates the lack of leadership commitment for multiculturalism as a fundamental goal for Canada.

Professor Michael Lanphier of York University said:

> It is recommended that a new department . . . become the lead ministry in negotiating an enhanced role for multiculturalism in every department.

Therefore, I must ask myself who is promoting the ghetto, who is actually pushing ideals that would build a higher wall around that ghetto, making it all the more difficult to tear it down.

The Bill was also silent about increasing the $1 per year per person budget. It did not talk about having a respectable and capable budget that would sustain the programs and contributions to organizations and activities across Canada. It was silent about increasing the personnel within the Ministry and about establishing a multiculturalism commissioner who would report to and monitor for Parliament the policy status within the Government, the federal civil service and Crown agencies.

Again, the Minister rejected a very key recommendation of the committee. As he mentioned only moments ago, he did this on the rationale that Canada already has a Canadian Human Rights Commission and a multiculturalism committee. The Minister himself said that we do not need a system that commands and controls. That is not what was advocated.

We were not asking for a second human rights commission which would be a reactionary body dealing one on one with individual cases of discrimination. We were after an office for a commissioner, very similar to the Official Languages Commissioner; an office that would in fact be free of political compromises and constraints. We wanted an office that would report on the status of the policies to Parliament, not to the Government and not to a Minister reporting to Parliament by saying that all is well. There are few Ministers of whatever political stripe who will fundamentally and productively criticize a colleague's department.

We should be able to have a report to Parliament that would give us an understanding of where the successes lie and where the warts lie and how we should go about eradicating them. We need an office that would promote the policy of multiculturalism across all Departments in the federal Government. We need an officer who would facilitate between the public and the federal bureaucracy the multiculturalism policy, one who would not be timid, if the Government is, about grappling with the issues.

We need an officer who would ask how the CBC is reflecting multiculturalism policy and if it is doing it well enough or if there is need for vast improvements. We need one who would ask if the Canada Council maintains those standards as well and if the Treasury Board's hiring practices are even and equal among all Canadians of whatever extraction.

That is the kind of commissioner we had envisioned, an instrument to effectively enforce and ensure, day in and day out, that the policies are being carried out, respected and lived up to. What is wrong with that? Surely that is not a kind of ghettoization. Surely that is a forward-looking, forward-thinking investment, not only in the words and principles we should all embrace but in the deeds and actions of the federal Government.

The Bill is silent about increasing the amount of government advertising from all departments in third-language media. It does not talk about recommendations for appointments to the Canadian Multiculturalism Council which advises the Government and the Minister of the day, recommendations which should be obtained from the community so that we would know that that council represents the real aspirations, needs and concerns of the people and percolates them throughout our elected and political institutions.

The Bill did not talk about approving a charitable tax number for national ethnocultural organizations to assist them in fund raising and to decrease their dependency on the Government's stick-and-carrot system. It did not talk about an appropriate number of appointees to boards and commissions or, more importantly, about the quality of appointments to these boards and commissions. The appointments must reflect the realistic composition of a Canada in 1988 and not a Canada in 1888.

These are some of the issues with which the committee grappled. The committee distilled that investment of time into this report. The Bill is deafening in its silence on these issues. It prefers to hide instead behind the generalities and non-committed language we see throughout the Bill.

As Canada prepares to enter the 1990s, the challenge facing multiculturalism is similar to the challenge that confronted bilingualism in the 1960s. Back then, it was a Liberal Prime Minister and a Liberal Government who invested the necessary political capital into transforming the dreams of a truly bilingual Canada into a reality. Pierre Trudeau did not only talk about official bilingualism, he and his Government moved to make it happen. Pierre Trudeau did not craft a Bill which was couched in colourful yet meaningless language. Instead, he and his Government provided the tools and the mechanisms needed to fulfil those policy objectives. They provided an Official Languages Act, a Commissioner for Official Languages, a permanent and joint official languages standing committee, a viable financial base for government-sponsored programs, a secure bureaucratic structure able to support the linguistic needs of our diverse regions and an understanding, above all, that the policy of official bilingualism was a national one for all Canadians in all regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Without the political will and determination that resulted in the creation of these structures, bilingualism today would be no more than an abstract concept. I agree, there was a political price to pay for this political investment. In the final analysis, however, the risk was worth taking.

The controversy aroused by bilingualism should remind us that success will not come easily. It takes hard work and dedication to succeed. Similarly, if we want multiculturalism to have a vital impact on the character and the affairs of this country, we will need the same political will and similar structures. Madam Speaker, if we want multiculturalism to provide an appropriate and dynamic response to the aspirations of future generations, our Party and this Parliament must be prepared to make the necessary political investment.

• (1240)

[English]

We should also find the courage to remind all Canadians that a more vibrant multiculturalism policy will in no way undermine our policy of official bilingualism. A stronger multiculturalism policy will not and should not result in a request for official language status for some third language. While Canada has two official languages, its cultural heritage derives from the multitude of cultures living within our borders. Therefore, we should be advocating a stronger multiculturalism policy which will serve to reinforce and strengthen official bilingualism and breathe new life into the concept that we call Canadianism.

For those reasons the Liberal Party will be demanding, through appropriate amendments in committee, that this Bill be reinforced with meaningful substance. It should not stop at symbolism. It should go beyond that to enhance the status of multiculturalism, not for the benefit of those in this Chamber but for the benefit of people on the streets of this country, whoever they are, from whatever background, regardless of when they came to this country. There is no reason, particularly when we consider the recent all-Party report, why this cannot be done. There is no excuse for missing the opportunity which presents itself to this Parliament and the Government.

For those reasons I am hopeful that the Conservative Government, and particularly the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, will rise to the occasion and join in the consensus in the community to boldly usher in this second phase of multiculturalism, rather than struggling desperately to embrace the past and expecting to be congratulated and commended for doing so.

Canadians deserve better. Those fighting in the multicultural constituencies of our country deserve better. Those young second and third generation Canadians who are of neither English nor French heritage deserve better. Their expectations and definitions of multiculturalism may be radically different from those of their parents. They expect this policy to answer new dilemmas, new questions which were not faced by previous generations in the struggle to build this great nation. Multiculturalism deserves more than simply window-dressing. We are talking about national pride, national sentiment, and the forces which came to be fused together in the building of Canada. We are talking about our national fabric, not necessarily about a policy only but a way of life which distinguishes us from any other country in the world.

To borrow an Olympic analogy, the Bill is merely content with the bronze when many Canadians are encouraging their Government to go for the gold. It is with that thought that I end my contribution at second reading of this Bill. The Minister and Government should not be willing to accept the bronze. They should go beyond that. To borrow a phrase from the Minister, the Bill should not allow this policy to be ghettoized into obscurity. That is the challenge at this stage in our evolution.

Multiculturalism, while it has been a general success story up until now, must change with the times. It must focus on and address new challenges and new problems which are surfacing. Many people, while living in a country of opportunity, do not see that opportunity as readily as some others. Some do not enjoy that level of stability. While we all rejoice in being Canadian, while we can compare ourselves with pride to other parts of the world, that should not prevent us from trying to improve our society so that all Canadians can enjoy the opportunity and stability that the Minister talked about moments ago.

While the Government did not embrace the political green light offered to it by the committee and adopt its recommendations, and it could have adopted many of them because they were the guts of a report which represented the sentiments of Canadians across the country, I am hopeful that at committee stage the Minister and Government will try to come at least half way. I hope they will realize that the definition of this Bill is that the future for multiculturalism is in the past, and we must reverse that. We must change the language and the intent. We must make sure there is a way to enforce the eloquent words of the Minister when we have to face the problems which come from a growing country. Canada will continue to need the passion of immigrants to build it bigger and stronger.

We must judge this legislation by its substance, and it is our intention to enhance that substance so that when it returns to this House, Members on all sides can take some pleasure in this Parliament having boldly and progressively moved multiculturalism into its second phase. I am hopeful that those sentiments will be shared by the Minister and the Government.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for my colleagues in the NDP caucus on Bill C-93, a Bill to preserve and enhance multiculturalism in Canada. This is a historic day for Canada. We are for the first time debating a Bill which speaks of preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada. In many ways it is rather a late point in our history to be doing that, since the policy of multiculturalism enunciated in 1971 has been in effect for 16 years. All Parties in Parliament committed themselves to that policy and gave firm support to the recognition of the diversity of peoples in this country. They supported the desire of the Government to change our policy in recognition of that fact. One need only look at the Estimates which successive governments have tabled to appreciate how very little was done about the policy statement of 1971. Only very gradually were funds set aside for various purposes of cultural enhancement, community integration, and development of institutions respecting mainstream institutions for the diversity of our country. Even more slowly were the institutional means found to support these efforts.

Even now we have a Minister for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) who carries those responsibilities as well as being Secretary of State. If he has to consult with the powerful Minister he can, presumably, do so within the quietness of his own mind and, as Minister of Multiculturalism, question the Secretary of State as to the advisability of action on multiculturalism.

It has been recognized by others that we spend even now about $25 million a year—less than $1 per Canadian man, woman, and child—in support of a policy which was designed to recognize fundamental realities of this country and change the way in which the federal Government operated and, in time, influence provinces, municipalities, non-governmental organizations and voluntary organizations across the country to respond to the diversity which exists in this country.

Why has there been such slow action? Why do we have in Bill C-93 such limited legislation? Why do we have what can, in the most damning of all phrases, be regarded as an institutionalization of the status quo? We have taken what was in existence and given it a legislative basis, and that is supposed to be adequate recognition.

My colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), has suggested that this is multiculturalism dealing with the past rather than the future. I think that in a certain sense he is right in making that particular observation.

The reason we have so little is because the policy of multiculturalism has still not taken true root in the minds of the Ministers, in the thinking of governments, and in the reality of the Canadian Government. The reason that has not occurred is that it is still not appreciated how powerful are the forces in this country which militate against the fulfilment of the policy of multiculturalism stated in 1971.

Those who have spoken before me, the Secretary of State in presenting the Bill as vigorously as he is always capable of doing, and my colleague, the Liberal critic and member of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, have spoken of various aspects of Canadian history. I think there is good reason, on this topic, to look back with discernment and to speak the truth about the history of this country. It is only when we do those things that we will appreciate how much needs to be done, and understand perhaps with some measure of charity why there has been such limited action toward the policy of multiculturalism.

I think back 100 years and more in Canadian history. I find myself thinking of that notable politician of Quebec, George Cartier. I say "George" advisedly because, of course, he was not "George" as is often thought by those who do not know the man in Canadian history. He was George, named after King George III. He was named after a British monarch because his parents thought that the protection of the French-speaking British subjects in Canada was best found in monarchy. They feared the pressures that might be imposed on them by their neighbours, by the Government of Lower Canada, the Province of Canada later and, of course, when he was himself active in politics he might have feared what could happen within the Dominion of Canada. They thought that to be a good subject of the King was possible. If one were Catholic, if one spoke French, if one led a good and useful life in the St. Lawrence Valley in Canada one was a good subject of the King, one could be distinctive and yet serve well.

We are all, of course, subjects still of the monarch. That view of things, carried over to our day, is what we attempt to encapsulate in the concept of citizenship which we all know is very important to the Secretary of State as his fundamental view of the country.

What happened in the 19th century? What was the reality of which George Cartier's parents were keenly aware? There were powerful forces in this country to Anglicize it. There were powerful forces to create one people which would speak English. One hundred years ago in this Chamber, and out of this Chamber an Ontario Member of Parliament named D'Alton McCarthy set forth to make this country English. In the province in which I was born and grew up, the Province of Manitoba, he had some of his greatest successes. He set out there to end the bilingualism which was constitutionally rooted, as the Supreme Court of Canada has told us not long ago.

In his first success he succeeded in persuading a Manitoba Government to betray promises given to a minority and to destroy a denominational educational system, to create a public school system with no respect for the minority, and to move toward making an English-speaking province. It was in fact in the midst of the Great War, a war still of empires at that point, which was only gradually becoming a war in defence of democracy and individual rights, that the Province of Manitoba chose to end bilingual education, which had continued not only English and French but English and German, English and Ukrainian, and so on, in 1916, and insist that education in Manitoba would be carried on only in the English language.

I expect that I, of Mennonite stock, am one of very few peoples which had members of their community leave this country as cultural and political exiles because they found themselves suppressed here. I have distant relatives living in Chihuahua State in Mexico who left Canada in protest because they had come here thinking they could live as conscientious objectors, practise their religion, and use the German language as well as English. When that was taken from them in 1916 many of them left, and I think that that particular aspect of Manitoban and Canadian history deserves to be remembered.

One of the cultural instruments which Canada used in the late 19th century against the aboriginal peoples was the Indian Act with its prohibition of the sun-dance and the potlatch. That Indian Act was designed to destroy a people. It was designed to tear out of the Canadian nation, to remove from Canadian soil, distinctive cultures. We lived with that for three-quarters of a century. Only in the 1950s and 1960s did we begin to turn around. It is that kind of heritage which we have. It is that from which, in the 1960s, we began to turn about.

I see that it is one o'clock. I shall break off at that point to continue the historical exploration and the political consequences of that after three o'clock.

THE PRESS

DEBUT OF MONTREAL DAILY NEWS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I rise with much enthusiasm to welcome the Montreal Daily News which today published its inaugural edition. I would like foremost, on this special occasion, to commend the initiative and courage of Pierre Peladeau and the Quebecor family.

Also, I would like to extend my best wishes to George MacLaren, the publisher, and to Don Foley, the Executive Editor, and Jim Duff, Managing Editor. I am certain that they will provide Montrealers and Canadians with responsible and insightful journalism.

In fact, as today's edition of the Montreal Daily News illustrates, it is quite capable of reporting concisely on matters pertaining to local, provincial, national and international events. It is quite constructive in our pluralistic society to have an additional vehicle, such as this tabloid, to reflect the vitality of Montrealers, Quebecers, and, in particular, the Anglophone community of Quebec.

Congratulations to the staff of this promising tabloid which should stimulate news reporting competitiveness to satiate our society's strong appetite for accurate and informative reporting and promote further public debate. Welcome to the Montreal Daily News!

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF BILL C-54

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, pornography is clearly something that most Canadians believe should not have any place in our society. The Government's pornography Bill, Bill C-54, has resulted in the most popular support that the Department of Justice has received since this government came to office.

The Opposition's continuing filibuster of Government Bills is eating up valuable legislative time that could be used in bringing forward progressive legislation such as Bill C-54. I ask the Opposition to exhibit more responsibility in their debates, and also urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to bring Bill C-54 to second reading and committee.

The Government should not be deterred by the vocal minority in the country. Clearly an overwhelming majority of Canadians applaud the Minister for this Bill.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—IMPENDING EXECUTIONS OF "THE SHARPEVILLE SIX"

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, only days before the anniversary of the Sharpeville riot, the South African Government has announced that "the Sharpeville Six" will be executed by hanging on Friday, March 18.

S. O. 21

Despite questionable evidence as to their guilt, it appears these six individuals will pay the supreme penalty for the mass violence which has gripped South Africa in the past few years.

I call on the Canadian Government again to urge clemency for "the Sharpeville Six" and to use its good offices to rally international support to that effect. Prime Minister Botha should grant clemency not simply in the interest of the six accused but in the interest of his country as a whole. Why should he push it toward increased violence and bloodshed? These actions show that the South African Government has rejected all standards of international jurisprudence and has clearly turned its back on world opinion.

I call on the Canadian Government to review its policy in regard to South Africa, to consider new measures, including the total economic sanctions the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to at the United Nations, to bring pressure on the Government of South Africa to institute meaningful changes in the society of that country.

MINING INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR MORE ASSISTANCE FROM MINISTER OF FINANCE OF CANADA AND FROM MINISTER OF FINANCE OF QUÉBEC

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since the use of flow-through shares to finance exploration activity, the mining industry in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, Quebec and across Canada has shown unparalleled new vigour.

Risk financing of exploration activities by means of flow-through shares has been an ideal mechanism for attracting investors to the natural resources sector, and as a result, the unemployed, prospectors, geologists, geophysicists and engineers have been able to work and contribute their many talents to building up our mining industry. In fact, there is some astonishment about the fact that so many people here are making a success of mining exploration. The answer is that people need a challenge. If you don't have a job, it's hard to show people what you can do.

Mr. Speaker, the mining industry is vital to the well-being of all Canadians, and we want some action by Canada and Quebec's Minister of Finance by the end of April 1988.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—DELAY IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, what is the cause of present delays in contract negotiations between the Public Service Alliance and the Government of Canada? Why is it so hard to negotiate new contracts before present contracts expire?

Many public servants are now working under contracts that expired almost a year ago. Many of my constituents are asking themselves these questions.

Since the Government came to power public servants have lost jobs, lost security, lost salaries, parking privileges, collective bargaining rights and more. It is high time the Tory Members of Parliament from the National Capital Region spoke up on behalf of their constituents. It is time to tell the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) to approach the negotiating table with responsible offers so that we can deal with collective bargaining in a prompt and appropriate manner.

The people of the National Capital area working for the federal Government do a very good job by and large. They have a right to work and to be treated decently by the Government.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON CIVIC AIRPORT—SURVEILLANCE OF AIRCRAFT FLIGHTS URGED

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to update the House on the continuing progress, and a couple of problems, at the Hamilton Civic Airport. In recent days I have talked individually with Hamilton-Wentworth Regional Chairman Bill Sears, Glanbrook Mayor Helen Bell, Ancaster Mayor Bob Wade, Hamilton Mayor Bob Morrow, along with Regional Councillor Ann Sloat, and a delegation of concerned constituents on the Mountain.

We all agreed on two things. First, we want to see the greatest possible development of Hamilton's airport. Indeed, Pan Am Express makes its official debut at Mount Hope on Thursday. Second, we agreed that we should be doing everything we can to minimize the disruption of the lifestyles of the people I have the honour to represent.

I, therefore, urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to institute a 24-hour monitoring surveillance, or a much higher security profile, because we need to know who and what is flying into Hamilton, when, and how low. We need an improved flight path to lessen the noise impact.

I want publicly to thank the Minister of Transport for his continuing interest and co-operation in promoting the viability of Hamilton's growing international airport.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—NEED FOR PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the Supreme Court ruling struck down the abortion law on January 28, 1988, there has been no protection under the law for the future citizens of Canada, the defenceless unborn. I have received letters from an overwhelming number of my constituents, as well as other Canadians, who are calling for full protection of the rights of the foetus.

My belief in the sanctity of human life compels me to share this same view. The protection of the unborn must be the basis for any just society. Without a law governing abortion in this country, lives are at stake. I urge the Government to introduce legislation that will protect the unborn without further delay. There can be no compromise on the protection of human life.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO PIROUETTES DE LAVAL

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to pay tribute to a figure skating team in my riding, and I am referring to the Canadian champions, now better known as the "Pirouettes de Laval", a team that was unfairly left out as a result of some very biased and personal choices made by a simple person who was responsible for the closing ceremonies committee in Calgary, a Mr. Brian Pockard, who insulted the Quebec figure skating community and amateur sport across this country, a dinosaur who does not understand our Canadian duality, and more specifically, Quebec.

Quebec has suffered more than its fair share of discrimination, Mr. Speaker. I told the skaters, their coaches, the volunteers and their families . . . and speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) and all my colleagues on both sides of the House, I want to express our admiration for their excellent work and urge them to keep on representing our youth and our country the way they have been doing.

Mr. Speaker, a salute to our Canadian champions, the "Pirouettes de Laval," who are with us in the House today. Bravo!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—AUTO DUTY REMISSION SYSTEMS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government keeps telling us it has won major gains in its U.S. trade deal. Unfortunately, reality keeps getting in the way. In the trade deal, Chapter 10 deals with the auto industry. It was supposed to have worked out all the problems between our two countries on auto issues, such as duty remission systems and the timetable for dealing with them.

Despite this chapter and despite the fact that the United States is supposed to follow what is in the deal, the Governor of Michigan, James Blanchard, is launching an unfair trade practices case against Canada. He is trying to cut out these duty remissions much faster than the agreement states. The result could be the loss of thousands of jobs in the Canadian auto industry.

Again the United States is trying to have its cake and eat it too. It has pushed Canada into an unfair deal and it is still going after us under unfair trade laws.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in the House about Canada's excellent performance as a result of policies introduced by this Government.

According to the latest figures released by Statistics Canada, the unemployment rate in this country has dropped to 7.8 per cent, its lowest level in six years. Canada's excellent record for job creation compares more than favourably with West Germany, Ireland, Sweden, Finland, France, Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands, all members of the OECD.

Since September 1984, 1,213,000 jobs were created, and 653,000 went to women. Women's unemployment dropped from 12 per cent to 8.4 per cent, illustrating our Government's determination to achieve employment equity. Youth unemployment dropped from 18.3 per cent to 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the difference between this Government and the previous one is significant. Under the Conservatives, Canadians are working instead of drawing unemployment insurance benefits!

S. O. 21

YOUTH

OPPOSITION TO CUT-BACKS IN SERVICES FOR POSTSECONDARY STUDENTS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the Director General, Operations, of Canada Employment Centres wrote the following in a memorandum: "Considering the resources allocated for 1988-89, I think it is inevitable that CEC management will question the continued presence of resources on-campus.

The message is clear. Two years ago, we saw a 30 per cent cut in on-campus resources, which severely affected the level of service offered to post-secondary students. Today it has been decided the service will be practically eliminated. Students are getting a raw deal, Mr. Speaker!

No consideration is being given to the needs of the student population, characterized by its homogeneous make-up, the age group to which it belongs and its lack of job experience. College graduates belong to the age group most affected by unemployment. However, instead of dealing with the problem, the Government now wants to eliminate the last vestiges of its placement service. This must be construed as a failure on the part of the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) and this Government to show any concern about the problems of our youth.

During the past four years, nothing was done for this group, but that was not enough for the Government. It now wants to make severe cuts in the resources of on-campus Canada Employment Centres.

Protests have been heard from the Fédération des CEGEP. I support their protests, and all Canadian students will do the same when they realize the extent of these cut-backs.

WAR MEASURES ACT

REQUEST THAT LEADER OF THE OFFICIAL OPPOSITION ENLIGHTEN HOUSE WITH HIS KNOWLEDGE OF ISSUE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this government is amending legislation that applies in times of crisis. Over 15 years ago, because of the War Measures Act, Quebecers were victimized by the Liberal Government in power at that time. It is now clear to everyone that the Liberals' extreme intolerance in the form of war measures was unfounded. That fear was visceral and emotional. Quebecers were happily sending other Quebecers to jail.

Because he was involved in that mass imprisonment, the present Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner) should share with this House his knowledge of the issue. The Liberals and their Leader now have the opportunity to apologize to Quebecers. Apologize!

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—FEES CHARGED FOR CUSTOMER SERVICES

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian chartered banks have been systematically evading a provision of the Bank Act which requires the express agreement of their customers to the service fees they charge. The chartered banks obtain a blanket acceptance of these from their customers and then charge whatever they think is necessary for their purposes.

For example, the Royal Bank charges $6 for a bank draft in U.S. funds and $8.50 for a cheque in the same U.S. funds. The Civil Service Co-operative Credit Society, in contrast, charges $1 for the bank draft—no charge at all if one is 55 or older—and 35 cents for a cheque.

[Translation]

The Caisses populaires in Quebec and in French Canada and credit unions all over Canada meet their clients' needs. They use their resources to lend to their community and offer that service without charging outrageous fees.

I would urge Canadians to consider a credit union when they become dissatisfied with their banks.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VIOLENT CRIMINALS—SEVERER SENTENCES ADVOCATED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last week the City of Toronto Council passed a motion calling for changes in the federal criminal justice system so that violent criminals receive more severe sentences and pay for their crimes in full without parole for early release to half-way houses.

During the debate a moderate Councillor with a reputation for common sense, June Rowlands, said:

> The Criminal Code has failed society. The pendulum has gone too far; too much concern for the criminal and not enough for the victims or the potential victims.

Councillor Kay Gardner, known for her social conscience, said:

> People feel betrayed by officials who allow offenders into our community with little or no supervision.

Them's my feelings exactly, Mr. Speaker. The Government has done great things, but it should take another look at the criminal justice system, and it should do it fast.

• (1415)

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Official Languages Bill is now in committee. I hope discussion there will reflect a true sense of language justice. As an Anglophone from Quebec I appreciate and support the need to encourage the French language, but should this happen at the expense of other linguistic and cultural expression? Presently we do not have full linguistic expression when bilingual signs are not permitted in Quebec.

Culturally, Quebec's revised Cinema Act is moving to curtail access to English films. Does being a French-speaking province mean that we cannot appreciate other languages? Is this what is meant by achieving social peace at the expense of minority language rights?

If all this makes sense, then opera, theatre, and literature should also be translated for Quebec audiences. While the world revels in the works of Shakespeare, Margaret Laurence, Andrew-Lloyd Webber, or Steven Sondheim, Quebecers are left to bask in our "distinct society".

Quebec will only earn its place in the cultural and democratic world by promoting all films, theatre, literature, and languages; then the French language in this so-called distinct society will be a respected distinction instead of a handicap, and we will demonstrate our respect for rights and freedoms fit for our democratic society, thus promoting social peace.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—IMPENDING EXECUTIONS OF "THE SHARPEVILLE SIX"

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Government of South Africa continued its barbaric policies by announcing the execution, this Friday, of "the Sharpeville Six", one black woman, and five black South African men, despite the pleas from all over the world that the sentence be commuted and despite the fact that none of those six participated directly in any murder.

Yesterday the lawyer for those six condemned individuals said that the only hope for them was a plea from Prime Minister Thatcher, from President Reagan, and from Chancellor Kohl.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, who places a very high priority on the problems in South Africa, if he will contact those three allies and ask them to make this "last hope", to send an appeal to the South African Government to save those six lives.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the deep outrage and profound dismay of my honourable friend in regard to the announced actions in South Africa. The Canadian Government has already conveyed its very strong views in this regard. We have spoken with allies as well, and would be happy to again.

On behalf of the Government, the Parliament, and the people of Canada, I have sent a personal message to the President of South Africa asking him to suspend the action contemplated by the Government of South Africa, and to reflect very humanely and seriously on the enormity of the action contemplated.

We deeply disapprove of this, and have conveyed our views in this regard directly to the President of South Africa.

REQUEST THAT THE GOVERNMENT SUPPORT CERTAIN RELIGIOUS LEADERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, considering that another 38 people are on death row in South Africa, all having been condemned in similar circumstances to capital punishment for their participation in a demonstration during which somebody was killed, is the Government prepared to support the request made by a number of religious leaders to the effect that the United Nations take immediate action to settle that terrible situation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we want to explore every possible means at our disposal that would bring about a change of attitude in the South African government. As the Hon. Member knows full well, the United Nations' Security Council considered taking action against the most recent legislation in South Africa. Unfortunately, the Security Council was unable to reach an agreement on that action. However, other means do exist. We are maintaining contact with church leaders in South Africa. We also keep in touch with South African civil opposition activists. Indeed, I just received a letter from Alan Boesak, expressing his thanks for the leadership role that Canada has played. We want to have direct talks with Mr. Boesak and other opposition leaders to the apartheid regime in South Africa. We intend to pursue all other available means to express Canada's attitude and to encourage the South African government in taking a humanitarian approach in cases such as "Sharpeville Six" and others.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE MANDATORY COMPREHENSIVE SANCTIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had this decision by the South African Government to proceed with the six executions. On the weekend the South African Government banned anti-apartheid protests by the church, and in February, very recently, it banned all black led opposition groups in South Africa. This South African Government is thumbing its nose at the whole world, continuing to suppress human rights and getting away with it.

This past weekend the Prime Minister stated, while addressing over 1,000 members of the black community:

> We shall not hesitate to take all action which is appropriate to send an unmistakable message to Pretoria, that the regime is unacceptable; must change and must go.

My question is for the Prime Minister. Isn't it now time for the Government to take action to introduce mandatory comprehensive sanctions and, at the very least, close the South African consulates in Toronto and Montreal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated to my hon. friend and to other Members of the House that we are actively considering the appropriateness of more steps, more action, pursuant to the leadership which this House and this Government have provided on this explosive issue in South Africa.

As I indicated at the Harry Jerome Awards dinner on Saturday night in Toronto, the Government is actively exploring new possibilities in this regard and we will not hesitate to take further action to be helpful to the emergence of a democratic Government in South Africa.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CHARTERED BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has yet to demonstrate to the Canadian people that he is attempting to champion the cause of Canadian consumers across the country.

The Minister said recently with regard to bank services charges:

> When banks raise the charges for certain services and debit your account and you don't know about it, that's wrong.

The Minister went on to say:

> I've changed banks personally because of that.

Will the Minister do something on behalf of and for Canadian consumers with regard to this particular situation, other than take personal measures to protect himself? Is he now going to stand in his place and do something for Canadian consumers?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have also indicated, I believe in this House, that discussions are under way with the Canadian Bankers' Association to see if it will not correct these practices.

There is a committee of this House looking at this issue right now and will be reporting with recommendations in that regard. I have no hesitation in repeating my personal feelings that if, in fact, the banks would correct this behaviour on their own, that is the preferable route rather than to bring in legislation.

Ms. Copps: That is what you said about the drug companies.

Mr. Andre: Certainly legislation or other measures are there, but not as a first resort. The first resort is to see if these practices cannot be corrected through voluntary measures.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, Canadian consumers have one word for this Minister. He is a wimp when it comes to Canadian consumers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member can put his question.

Mr. Dingwall: I am glad you concur, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER IMPOSE FREEZE ON BANK CHARGES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has stated:

> I've changed banks personally.

Does the Minister not realize that there are hundreds of communities with only one financial institution where Canadians do not have the opportunity to change banks?

I ask the Minister, on behalf of those Canadians, will he not impose a freeze on bank charges until this standing committee makes a full report to the House of Commons?

• (1425)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been called a lot of things—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: That is one of the milder ones. Frankly, I think a freeze at this point in time would likely keep certain charges at a level higher than might be necessary. In fact, what the Hon. Member is suggesting might not benefit consumers because the pressure that is being brought to bear as a result of the good work of the committee of this House and other statements is having a salutary effect. I predict those charges will come down. In any event, for sure consumers need to have the ability to make choices based on a full disclosure of the facts, and that I am certain will occur.

INCREASE IN BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Four months ago I asked the Minister to put a freeze on skyrocketing bank charges. The Minister fiddled while consumers paid. We now know that the five banks collected $4 billion in service charges in 1987 and they stand to collect a bonanza in 1988.

Why is the Minister allowing the banks to jack up service charges? Is it to pay off the Third World debt of Venezuela, Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, and the Liberal Party?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will have to ask someone else that question.

Four billion dollars sounds like a gross exaggeration, to put it mildly. The fact is that the question of service charges has been under active consideration by a committee of the House. The fact is that officials in my Department have been discussing the matter with the Canadian Bankers' Association. They are aware that some changes will have to be made. They are in the process of considering those changes.

There is no evidence to suggest that a freeze would not have done anything but to keep service charges at a high level. In fact, the ability of consumers to know what the charges are and to use their rights as consumers to use the services or not, is likely to have a more beneficial effect in lowering the cost than any action by the Government to freeze the charges currently in place.

[Translation]

HIGH CHARGES FOR BANKING SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. According to the Toronto Star, the minister said that competition does exist, but that it did not bring about any reduction in the cost of thoses services. For example, it costs $6.50 to freeze the payment of a cheque and $1.50 to withdraw money from the bank. These fees have doubled in five years. Is the Minister prepared to freeze the cost of bank services until an inquiry is made?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to answer the supplementary question because in essence the Hon. Member is ignorant of the Government's plans in the Blue Paper announced in December of 1986. As a result, we will have trust companies and insurance companies competing with the banks for consumer credit and for small business loans. That is the kind of competition that will not only drive down rates but will also drive down service charges. That is the answer that awaits the Hon. Member, not just regulations.

PROVISIONS OF BANK ACT—PROTECTION OF BANK CUSTOMERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Under Section 201 of the Bank Act, banks are not allowed to levy any charges without the "express agreement" of the consumer. In fact, a member of my staff opened an account at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce here this morning and this is the document he received. It in no way asks for a specific agreement to pay certain charges.

• (1430)

Is the Minister going just to stand there or is he at least prepared to enforce the Bank Act as it relates to bank charges to consumers?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government is going to enforce the Bank Act.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are not enforcing it!

Mr. Hockin: The Bank Act is perfectly clear. The Hon. Member shows us a document that one person picked up. If the banks do not get permission from the customer to charge certain rates, they cannot charge them. That has always been the case and it still is.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—COST OF REPLACEMENT WITH DOOR-TO-DOOR DELIVERY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post told Canadians on March 10 that replacing supermailboxes with door-to-door delivery would cost $1.3 billion. However, the government liaison manager with Canada Post says it would cost about $360 million, or about one-quarter of what the Minister claims.

Can he explain this rather large discrepancy in the figures?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the Hon. Member got that from an editorial in The Toronto Star.

Mr. Rossi: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Andre: There is no explaining The Toronto Star.

Mr. Nystrom: They like Joe.

Mr. Andre: The estimate of the cost of extending door-to-door delivery to every home in Canada which does not now get it is not precisely $1.3 billion over the next four years. It is $1,269,786,868 according to the estimate I have here. If the Hon. Member would like to look at the figures he is welcome to do so.

EQUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to have a penchant for exaggeration because on March 11, the next day, he described his front lawn and said:

> —in front of my house is a mailbox, an electric utility box and telephone poles.

What a front lawn. He has no mailbox, though. It is just wishful thinking. He wants his property taxes reduced.

Does the Minister not read his mail and listen to what ordinary Canadians are saying? They do not expect door-to-door delivery to every single home in Canada. They want equality of service in our cities and towns.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The Minister is quoting Cadillac figures when the people want a reliable Chevy.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering who that was skulking around our front yard last night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I can only imagine the terrible damage if he ever cuts his front lawn.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I do not have time for that. I am too busy answering mail complaining about the postal service.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, the management of the Post Office is well aware of the aspirations of Canadians, as is this Government. A sincere effort is being undertaken to improve the quality of the service, while at the same time keeping prices reasonable.

The point I was trying to make with respect to superboxes or any other service is that exaggeration by Members of Parliament, claims that it is just a matter of snapping fingers and one can institute door-to-door delivery everywhere in the country, even though that has never existed in the 120 years of this country, have to be balanced against the fact that this costs money. We can do what the Liberal and NDP Parties have asked for if we are prepared to ask Canadians to pay 60 cents to have a letter delivered. You cannot separate cost from service. It is irresponsible to try to do so.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INCREASED DISABILITY BENEFITS—EFFECT ON SIZE OF PENSIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have given him notice of it.

He will recall that on January 1 of last year the House passed legislation to increase disability benefits for recipients of the Canada Pension Plan. He also knows that many provincial Governments and employers deducted an equal amount of the increase from benefits they pay. Members on all sides of the House were outraged when that happened.

Is the Minister aware that the federal Government is doing exactly the same thing to those pensioners who are disabled and are superannuates and who rely on that increase to sustain a decent standard of living?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me and my officials notice of the question. The issue revolves around the Superannuation Act and whether or not recipients of the CPP who are disabled and superannuates are subject to a reduction. I have asked the Department to examine the question of whether there is a pass-through. I think Parliament was very clear that it wanted to see the pass-through take place.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Minister that the federal Government has reduced the pension of a constituent of mine in this situation by some $200 a month, and by a further $100 a month because it claims he was over-paid.

This is a very serious question. Members on all sides of the House have shown interest in it. The Government should act as speedily as possible to show this individual and others like him that there is a sense of fairness at play in this House.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Member was notified earlier today, I believe by my departmental officials, I am not in a position to comment on a particular case. I think he understands that. I am aware of the case, it has been brought to my attention. Obviously I have to check the matter with Treasury Board and the agreements with the superannuants, as well as the superannuation regulations. We started doing that this morning. I cannot give an answer, obviously, until that work is done.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION—REDUCTION IN UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Recent unemployment figures show that unemployment in London is 4.2 per cent, the third lowest in the country. Yet we hear from the Leader of the Socialist-Liberal coalition, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, that job creation has affected only those areas within 100 kilometres of Toronto. Can the Minister say whether there is any substance to this allegation or not?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister can, but it better be short.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to be as short as I am sure you would like but I can say that during the past three and a half years job creation has been spread right across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have seen a drop in the unemployment rate in Newfoundland of 5.9 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 2.9 per cent; in New Brunswick, 4.3 per cent; and 3.8 per cent in Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret that although all of that is very interesting there is an item in Routine Proceedings for that kind of a statement.

AIR CANADA

CORPORATE PLAN—REPORTED INTENTION TO REPLACE 727-TYPE AIRCRAFT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and concerns the Air Canada corporate plan, in particular its fleet replacement plan.

The oldest fleet in the Air Canada system is the DC-9. On average that aircraft is 19 years old. The third youngest system in the Air Canada fleet is the 727. On average that aircraft is nine years old.

Will the Minister explain to the House today why Air Canada's corporate plan contemplates replacing the 727, which is a relatively new aircraft in the fleet, and keeping for an additional 10 years the DC-9, which is already 19 years old? Can the Minister explain that to the people of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada is a Crown corporation which has had very capable management since it originally started. I am sure that any analysis it makes of which planes in its fleet need to be replaced will be a well-based analysis.

With regard to whether Air Canada should replace the 727 or the DC-9, I have seen an analysis which indicates that the fuel costs of the 727 are very high. I could go on with other reasons.

I can only say that Air Canada's board of directors and management will make a recommendation to the Government on what it should do. We will not be interfering to change that unless there are very grave reasons why that should be done. I would be very surprised if that were the case. We have faith in the management and board of directors of Air Canada.

CONTEMPLATED RETENTION OF DC-9 AIRCRAFT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Canadians should know that the oldest single aircraft by far in the Air Canada fleet is the DC-9 which is, on average, 19 years old, with some in their mid-twenties. That aircraft is passing its usable life. The youngest aircraft in the fleet is the 727 which is nine years old. Up until last July the President of Air Canada was talking about replacing that 19-year-old DC-9.

What has happened between last July and today to create a situation in which Air Canada is contemplating keeping an aircraft until it is well beyond 30 years old, which I suggest is unsafe, and replacing an aircraft which is only half way through its useful life? What kind of machinations are going on behind the scenes?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Hon. Member is making a charge against Air Canada's management with respect to its competency, honesty, or whatever.

Mr. Tobin: I am asking you the question. You're the Minister responsible.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member is insinuating, he is trying to set an innuendo as he did yesterday. He has been thoroughly unscrupulous in his approach to the whole question.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—COMPENSATION QUERY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is undoubtedly aware that a rally in Vancouver on Sunday called for the compensation of individual Japanese Canadians for the enormous losses they suffered during World War II.

The question is a very simple one. When does the Prime Minister expect to keep the promise that he made before the last election to compensate individual Japanese Canadians?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could help the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member is probably aware that I communicated last fall with the National Association of Japanese Canadians outlining the Government's position with regard to this matter which fully responds to the commitment made by the Prime Minister.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is again very simple. Is the Prime Minister ready to go down in the history books as someone who can preach to other countries but refuses to practise at home? Is he prepared to leave this blot on the Canadian record and not do the justice that he promised four years ago?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may be aware that that letter contains an apology and a recommendation to the National Association of Japanese Canadians that there be a recognition of the injustice. It also calls for the elimination of that fact with regard to the War Measures Act, which is currently being done.

Where we differ with the National Association of Japanese Canadians is that they want over $400 million for losses not sustained. That is the problem.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—SERVICE FEES CHARGED TO CUSTOMERS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, we have heard this afternoon from two cabinet Ministers on the issue of bank charges. My question is directed to the Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Various news reports indicate that the report which was done for the Finance Committee states that banks are not telling customers of specific charges but are getting consumers to sign a blanket statement. Is this report accurate?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. As I said earlier today on a question of privilege, some of the matters of the Finance Committee report and the work being done by the committee have improperly been allowed to get into the public hand.

Unfortunately, the work that is out is not accurate and not complete, nor does it properly reflect the views of members of the committee. The committee is working very hard on this whole issue to try to be fair, both to the banking and credit institutions, including trust companies, caisses populaires, and so on, and to the consumer, in coming to grips with an issue which is very difficult.

It is very wrong to have partial leaks of material which leave a wrong impression. This is a serious matter and I am glad the Member brought it to the attention of the House. That is the reason I stood this morning on a question of privilege.

LOBBYISTS

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION—REQUEST FOR BAN ON CONTINGENT FEES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the European Airbus issue and the registration of lobbyists.

The Prime Minister will know that a year ago a parliamentary committee recommended the following to this House:

> We recommend that lobbyists be prohibited from receiving compensation from clients which is contingent in any manner upon the outcome of the lobbying activity.

Will the Prime Minister commit here and now that the Government will entertain amendments to the new Bill which has been introduced to ensure that contingent fees are not permitted? Why can we not have a clause in that Bill to disallow pinball lobbying with a bonus for hitting the jackpot?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that Bill has just this week been referred to committee where questions like this can properly be raised in the proper format. It is in fact contrary to Beauchesne's to raise this kind of question in Question Period.

[Translation]

PARLIAMENTARY LOBBYISTS—LIMITATIONS OF BILL C-82—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

It is obvious that the Minister does not know what his bill is all about. I want him to tell me now why does Bill C-82 not prevent lobbyists from demanding fees that are contingent upon them being successful in their lobbying activity? Why allow such a situation to exist? Is it not a source of abuses?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at committee officials will provide the legal opinion that it is difficult, if not impossible, to implement that which the Hon. Member is suggesting. That was in fact disclosed at the press conference which the Hon. Member attended when this Bill was put forward. It will be discussed in detail when the Bill goes to committee. Why is the Hon.

Member wasting the time of Question Period with these silly questions?

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PEPINO REPORT ON TORONTO HALF-WAY HOUSES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has had in his hands for over a week now the Pepino Report in connection with half-way houses in Toronto. Will the Solicitor General advise the House if he intends to make changes as a result of that report? If he does, will he share that information with the House now rather than waiting till the press conference which is set for later this afternoon?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct, I do in fact have in my hands the Pepino Report on half-way houses. It is an excellent report, it is very frank and hard-hitting. I certainly want to commend the chairperson of that committee and the other members for an excellent job. I will be releasing the report at four o'clock today with a plan of action.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH SHOOTING RANGE IN SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT- JEAN—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL AID FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. On March 3, 1988, the Coalition against the proposed establishment of a shooting range for F-18s in the Lac-Saint-Jean area has requested financial aid for the people of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean to prepare public hearings.

When will the Government provide the necessary funds for such important hearings?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hearings are held pursuant to the authority of the Government of the Province of Quebec. We are willing to participate in the hearings and assist with any information they may want. However, those hearings are not under our authority whatsoever.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR HELP FOR POPULATION OF SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. The Minister knows full well, for example, that the populations affected by the Goose Bay military project in Labrador have received $350,000 from the federal Government for their public hearings.

Considering there are vital questions at stake, such as environmental matters, security and demilitarization of the economy, why the double standard? How is it that the Minister is unable to confirm today that he will help the population of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean as he has already helped the population of Labrador?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly have hoped the Hon. Member had done his homework and realized that the environmental study taking place in the case of Labrador happens to be going on under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, which is absolutely different from the case in Québec.

FINANCE

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—COMMISSION HEARINGS—POSSIBLE RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. I want to return to the issue of tax benefits for residents in northern and isolated communities.

An otherwise very excellent tax measure is creating havoc across the country because of some very wacky and irrelevant regulations that govern the benefit. Yesterday, the Minister signalled once more his intention of appointing a commission to study all aspects of this northern benefit's issue, but he did not answer a very specific question, that is, should the commission rule that some of the excluded communities do indeed qualify for the benefit, would the taxpayers in those communities be able to receive that benefit retroactively?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the commission will also be mandated to make a recommendation with regard to that. There are a number of recipients receiving benefits under the new scheme who never received them before. These include pensioners and the self-employed employees who are provided housing. It includes travel for native Canadians. There are many examples of how this program has been broadened and strengthened.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO REGULATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to my hon. friend, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. Will he carefully consider looking at this tax benefit package and making some quick recommendations to the Minister of Finance, particularly with respect to changes in the regulations so that all of the anxiety that taxpayers now have may be put at ease? I would ask him at the same time to consider having representatives appear before this committee from these excluded communities who want to speak on behalf of residents and who feel they are now left out in the cold from an otherwise very good tax measure.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the Member alludes was in the Income Tax Act of 1986. It is a matter that has caused a number of members of the committee some distress. However, it is a matter that is under consideration by the Ministry. The Ministry has promised to report to the committee on this issue, as it does from time to time on regular economic matters.

I understand the Member's concern and will take the matter up with the committee as we analyse the further work that the committee might do under Standing Order 96(2).

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. As the Minister knows, the National Association of Friendship Centres, which represents 99 centres and about 1,300 employees, is not funded on a permanent basis but during a five-year period. That funding will run out March 31, 1988. I understand that there has been stopgap measure funding to fund the centres until September, but this does not allow for adequate planning.

Will the Minister respond to this and assure us that the National Association of Friendship Centres will receive permanent as opposed to limited funding?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that I think we have the situation reasonably well in hand. I met with the Association a couple of times. They are trying to work within our needs and we are trying to work within theirs.

We have a permanent program in mind and I am hoping that will come out of the process in which we are now engaged.

Ms. McLaughlin: That is heartening news and I am sure the National Friendship Centres would like to hear it.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that there is a request to increase the present $17.5 million funding to $19.8 million. This really represents the bare bones bottom line for these groups that employ so many people and create many jobs.

Does the Minister support this increased level of funding to maintain this important service?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, of course I can assure the Hon. Member that I appreciate the budget they submitted. I also appreciate the resources I have available. They understand that. We are trying to reach an accommodation, one which I believe will commend itself to the Hon. Member.

HEALTH

LEGIONNAIRE'S DISEASE BACTERIA ON COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will know that three years ago he became aware that on certain commercial aircraft flying in Canada Legionnaire's disease bacteria was found which, in certain cases, can lead to illness and death. At that time regulations were ready to be implemented to ensure that the water systems in aircraft were flushed, yet the Minister chose not to go ahead with recommendations with respect to these regulations. Will the Minister explain why he put the health of Canadians at risk in this way?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that that was at all the case. In fact, if the details were examined, there was a case that dates back a number of years. Obviously I cannot nor would I want to release the name of the person, but that case was taken as the initial work of the LCDC within Health and Welfare. Studies were conducted.

I think the Hon. Member and all Members should keep in mind that there was not a sample found in respect of the water that the individual had consumed on the aircraft. The other point that should be kept in mind from a medical point of view is that, as a bacteria that is airborne, it would have to be ingested through the air rather than by drinking water.

FLUSHING OF AIRCRAFT WATER SYSTEMS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that in hospitals in Halifax, Prince Edward Island and Ontario, Legionnaire's disease has been isolated to showers and water pipes in the facilities. The Minister received the report three years ago and will also know that similar bacteria was found in the water pipes of commercial aircraft.

I am not asking the Minister to say whether or not an individual died as a result of this particular bacteria. I am asking him why, when he received information three years ago that Legionnaire's bacteria was present in water pipes in commercial aircraft, he did not move with regulations to ensure the flushing of the water systems to prevent any kind of bacteria from getting airborne and in fact leading to potential sickness or death of Canadian air passengers?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that Member is so irresponsible she plays with words in this House just to make political points. She uses the word "death". There was no death involved whatsoever. I simply say to her, if you want to be health critic then start getting some of your facts straight—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—AUTO DUTY REMISSION SYSTEMS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Earlier today I noted that the Wall Street Journal had reported—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: We do read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know what it reported but it does not sound unparliamentary. Would the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Langdon: The Wall Street Journal reported that Governor Blanchard of Michigan had launched an unfair trade practices attack on our automotive policy despite the fact that that policy is treated with respect to duty remissions within the trade agreement.

In view of this seeming contradiction of what is committed in the agreement, will the Minister tell us what he has done to communicate with the United States with respect to trying to overcome this particular attempt to bring our auto industry down?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I note the Hon. Member no longer reads Saturday Night and now has turned to the Wall Street Journal.

I can say to the Hon. Member that, first, it is interesting to listen to the New Democratic Party talk about the trade pact and that the Americans say that Canadians got the better deal. Now its members are standing up and defending it. Is it a new policy of the New Democratic Party to support the trade agreement? If so, we welcome it and thank the Hon. Member very much for saying so.

Second, there has been no 301 filed by anyone in the United States. We expect the spirit of the agreement to be carried out both here and in the United States as it was negotiated. The duty remissions schemes are in place as per our commitments to the foreign auto makers and will be there until 1996.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that in view of the time, that is the last question.

I have a point of order from the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), followed by a point of privilege from the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY—AN IDENTITY CRISIS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to your attention a very serious and urgent matter that I regard as going right to the fundamental privileges of any Member of Parliament.

Today's edition of The Toronto Star clearly carries what is obviously, I submit, a conspiracy between The Toronto Star and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) to target the Newfoundland vote amongst the Star's readership in an unscrupulous manner. I will tell you what happened, Mr. Speaker.

Today's edition of The Toronto Star carries a very serene and calm photograph of myself incorrectly identified as the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. The same edition carries a brooding and angry photograph of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, incorrectly identified as being myself.

I suggest this is a conspiracy, a deliberate mix up, designed to alter my reputation as a calm and dispassionate politician, and, of course, to apply the attributes of calmness and lack of emotion I possess to the Member for Simcoe North who is known as an angry and brooding politician.

This is also a further obvious attempt by The Toronto Star and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North to try to appeal to resettled Newfoundlanders to vote for the Member for Simcoe North in his own riding. I ask that the Chair give this very serious question of privilege all the attention it deserves.

Mr. Speaker: I notice the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) made reference to Newfoundlanders living in the other Hon. Member's riding where they would vote. Perhaps where the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe comes from, people who are not living in the Hon. Member's riding will vote for him in any event. I am not quite sure what point is being made. However, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) might want to reply.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I also saw the same article and I have to tell you that I am keeping track of the comments. The best comment made was by the individual who said "I look a lot better in person than I do in The Toronto Star".

If my hon. friend thinks he is maligned, how does he think I feel? This has been a bad seven or eight days for me. First, I was left off the CUPW list and I have to fight the election without the benefit of being maligned by CUPW. Now I am suffering the slings and arrows of The Toronto Star, which is very unusual for a Conservative, of course, especially when I used to deliver the darned paper.

In any event, I think the matter has now been sufficiently aired and I will be pleased to reintroduce myself to my constituents as the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. They will be pleased to know that I do not have that kind of moustache.

Mr. Speaker: I will give this point of privilege exactly the consideration it deserves.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) had the floor.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking just before we rose at one o'clock, I was commenting on the shortcomings of Bill C-93. It is a good first half to the whole Bill, but it is only half the Bill we should have. Even though the Government has given us the opportunity of historic debate on a Bill to enhance multiculturalism in Canada, which we are doing on second reading, we do not have the kind of Bill we want. I think the reason for that is to be found in Canadian history.

If we go back a quarter century to the events of the 1960s, we can see how Canadians began to grapple with the forces that had been at work for a century and more to create a nation of one language in which cultures were to be re-made and peoples were to be assimilated into one particular culture. It had taken more than half of this century before Canadians were brought to the position of recognizing that the diversity of this country makes such a policy impossible. It was only because of the explosive events of the 1960s, particularly the unrest that arose in the Province of Quebec, that Canadian Governments came to grips with that truth.

• (1510)

In the work of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism we had recognition of the fact that the Québecois required a recognition which would force the Government of Canada to change its policies. In 1969 that came in the form of the Official Languages Act. However, it proved to be inadequate.

Even in the work of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism there was a representative in the form of Dr. J. B. Rudnyckyj who spoke for Ukrainian Canadians, and by extension for all of those in the third reality of Canadian history.

In terms of what was happening in those years we might speak almost of the fourth reality because, after all, there were aboriginal peoples first, then the French and the British, along with the diversity of British peoples, and then all the others who came to Canada. It was at Dr. Rudnyckyj's insistence that it was inadequate for the Government of Canada to establish two official languages and to settle for a policy of biculturalism.

We find in the fourth book of the work of the Royal Commission a transition from biculturalism toward multiculturalism. The result was that famous policy statement in 1971 in which then Prime Minister Trudeau declared:

[Translation]

A policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework commends itself to the government as the most suitable means of assuring the cultural freedom of Canadians.

[English]

This policy of multiculturalism in a bilingual framework became the position that the Government of Canada supposedly took. All four Parties responded to that in appropriate style. The then Leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. David Lewis, after indicating his support, declared that this statement of principles would be a mockery and a betrayal of high ideals and objectives unless collectively we provided the funds to make the principles meaningful in the lives of the minorities in Canada and unless we developed programs in consultation with the minorities giving them every opportunity to participate in the development of programs rather than imposing such programs on them.

As I said at the outset, the funds that were dedicated to this policy proved to be sadly inadequate. This indicated to what a limited extent the Government actually acted on the policy.

In terms of underscoring the extent to which the policy on multiculturalism brought about a change in the understanding of Canada, in those very same years—1969, the year of the Official Languages Act, through 1971, the year of the multiculturalism policy—the Government was forced to do an about face on its policies regarding aboriginal peoples.

Canadians will remember the White Paper of 1969 which was designed to do away with reserves, to end the collectivities of Indian bands and to offer aboriginal peoples the blessings of individual Canadian citizenship. The outcry that that aroused still reverberates through the halls in which Canadians do politics. The failure of Canadian Governments to respond fully to the assertion of the aboriginal peoples, that they have the right to govern themselves, underscores in still another area the fact that the Government of Canada did not really enthusiastically throw itself into developing a policy of multiculturalism.

Thus we have very limited responses. We can appreciate how limited those responses actually were and how limited the actions of the Government on the multiculturalism statement of 1971 were if we look at the one area of culture and the other area of justice for individuals, of human rights in short, and recognize the failings of the Canadian Government in advancing multiculturalism in these areas.

What happened in the cultural area proved to be very revealing. A department of multiculturalism, which recognized that there was no longer, if there ever had been, an official culture in Canada, was not created. The Government's support for cultural activity had become quite large. If we think of broadcasting, support for scholarship and all the activities which the Department of the Secretary of State would support in these years, we see that the Government did a great deal for culture.

But the significant thing about that was that it remained as diverse, as unco-ordinated and as unrelated to the policy of multiculturalism as one could imagine. In looking at what Governments did in those years one would think that the policy of multiculturalism had never been enunciated and had never been agreed to by all the Parties in Parliament.

What happened in these years culturally, in particular, was that the Department of Communications was created and the Minister of Communications became the culture Minister of the federal Government in all those areas dealing with electronic media, and far beyond that as the years passed. As we now well know from looking at the way in which broadcasting developed in Canada through the 1970s and on into the 1980s, the Minister of Communications behaved as if a policy of multiculturalism had never been expounded. The Minister behaved as if it had never been declared that there was not an official culture in either the English or the French language which the Government of Canada was to support.

That is a failing on which the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) focused in terms of the Canada Council and the multiculturalism sector when it comes to support for writing, for example. The Canada Council will support those who appear to be working in certain mainstream traditions. These are presumably the official cultures of the country. However, when someone whose name is of another origin than British or French, someone who appears to be working in a different culture tradition, the Canada Council is not interested and fobs that person off on the multiculturalism directorate.

That is an indication of the kinds of ghettos of neglect which are the reality of Canada through 16 years and more of the multiculturalism policy. It is simply not acceptable for the Minister to speak of rejecting the recommendation from the committee, our unanimous recommendation from the members of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism of all three Parties. In fact, five out of seven members of that Committee from the Government caucus were in support of creating a department of multiculturalism. It is simply not acceptable for the Minister to declare that that would ghettoize multiculturalism.

What his comment reflects is all the inadequacy of the attitudes that continued through 1971 and beyond in which the Department of Communications would control within certain directions, and the CRTC would be forced, very slowly and grudgingly, toward recognizing the needs of ethnic broadcasting, and hardly act on them adequately in any kind of national sense, even 16 years after the policy was enunciated. The Canada Council would go about its way inadequately funded, barely able to support those it regards in its province, supporting high culture, supporting those companies which its funding has enabled to become professional but rejecting those it sees as practising the folk arts. It would reject those who are forced to be amateur because they have not been able to garner the support of national and provincial art councils. Those are left outside.

There we have a continuing situation of neglect in the cultural area. There we have the continuing reality of ghettos of neglect which the Minister is quite prepared on the face of the evidence of Bill C-93 to allow to continue. There, on the cultural side, is the refusal to create a department of multiculturalism which would ensure that all of the federal Government's cultural activities would be brought together into one area under one Minister and his deputy and co-ordinated in such a way that the Government was not handling cultures unfairly. There is one of the evidences of shortcomings still in this Bill and through years of policy.

On the other side we have the matter of human rights. As the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, pointed out, it was half a dozen years after the multiculturalism policy was enunciated that the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada passed the Canadian Human Rights Act establishing a commission to deal with matters of discrimination of all sorts.

Did the establishment of a commission to deal with discrimination on the basis of gender, of ethnic or racial origin produce genuine fairness for Canadians? The Standing Committee on Multiculturalism considered a report last spring which raised doubts about the affirmative answer to that question. The committee was told five years after the Canadian Human Rights Act had been passed that in the work of the Canadian Human Rights Commission there was a difference in the way in which different types of complaints were handled.

When complaints about discrimination on the basis of gender were brought before the Canadian Human Rights Commission there was a vigorous assault on the situation, if I may use as vigorous a verb as that. There was a careful consideration of the institution within which the person had been employed or against whom this person was complaining, paper was obtained, and systematic approaches were undertaken to decide what this person—presumably a woman, given what we usually expect in the way of gender discrimination—had suffered in relation to discrimination in the workplace or in other ways. The commission had a good deal of success in dealing with those matters.

However, if someone came forward with a complaint of discrimination on the basis of racial origin or ethnic background the commission did not use the same approach. There was not a systematic examination of the institution against which this person was complaining, or the superiors against whom the person was complaining. Instead, the investigators began looking for overt expressions of discrimination. The fact that people are usually sensible enough not to cast aspersions on individuals to their faces, or in the hearing of those who were prepared to testify, left those complainants without satisfaction.

I was compelled to ask the then Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission whether this difference did not represent, on the part of the Canadian Human Rights Commission itself, systemic discrimination against those who had complaints based on race or ethnic origin. Although the Chief Commissioner rejected that possibility, it was an indication of the extent to which the Canadian Human Rights Commission had failed Canadians on the basis of consideration of 100 and more files in the possession of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

In both of those areas there is evidence of grave shortcomings in the way in which federal Government institutions responded to the statement of 1971. We recognize that in the spring of 1984, in its last days in office, the Trudeau Government put forward a multiculturalism Bill. It was a very weak Bill. No one would say much for it except that it was an attempt to enunciate some of the principles.

Unfortunately, one cannot say much more than that in regard to the Bill presently before us, Bill C-93. It is the more or less good first half of the type of Bill that we really want. In considering what is not included in this Bill, I wish to consider some of the important questions which are before us.

After we rose at one o'clock, I chatted for a moment with the Minister outside the Chamber. He stated that he was tempted to call across the floor when I was talking about the aboriginal peoples. Of course, they had their Department. The Minister wished to make the argument that Indian Affairs demonstrated the type of ghettoizing that is his argument for not having a full-fledged department of multiculturalism. That has some truth to it. If one wants to look at how the Canadian Government could seek to destroy cultures and what it could do in the way of perpetrating cultural genocide, one need only go and look at Indian Affairs. I would suggest that that is not the only model that we can have.

The Minister stated that he did not want a department that could command and control. Neither do I. I do not think that anyone would want that. I am anxious about the proposition of more staff and more animateurs in the field to carry out the work of organizing groups and urging them on. That has to be done with care. I think that there are better ways of doing that than enlarging the field staff in the Department of Secretary of State. What is needed is money for organizations, far more than staff.

But the question remains, how can one ensure that the institutions of the federal Government respect the policy? In considering how a department of multiculturalism could ensure that the policy becomes what it should be, the first line of the federal Government's interaction with the communities and with the diversity of cultures would be if such a department were responsible for all the cultural activities of the federal Government. The standing committee looked in that direction with its recommendation that the department and the Minister should become responsible for the Canada Council. That was only a partial solution. It will inevitably arouse debate if the Government takes it up.

What we want is not necessarily for all those institutions to be put into a department. The reality is that those agencies, whether it is the Canada Council, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Radio-Canada, or other agencies, are at arm's length from the Government. What is wanted is a mechanism by which they can be brought into an acceptance of a policy of multiculturalism, and forced to act upon it. I would suggest that the committee's report goes only part way towards that.

Last spring in considering a minority report forced on me by the refusal of the committee to deal with issues of racism explicitly in a historical section of the report, I was forced into considering those questions with my colleagues and thinking of different ways of doing that. I would suggest to the Minister that what is wanted is a full-fledged Minister of multiculturalism who, because he or she has at least partial supervisory responsibility for all the cultural activities and human rights activities of the Canadian Government, will be recognized as having some real clout in the Government. Given that he or she is a full-fledged Minister with a deputy minister, there is the clout that Government requires in dealing with other departments and with agencies.

As the committee's own tentative suggestion does not, this would recognize, of course, that there are other departments involved. The Department of Communications in its general responsibility for electronic communications is sure to remain in the field. The New Democratic Party's response to multiculturalism issued at the end of June suggests that there should be a dual reporting relationship in which the Minister of multiculturalism has a joint responsibility with the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to receive reports and to pass suggestions on to the cultural agencies. In this manner it would ensure that in every area, whether it is support for native friendship centres, aboriginal programs, or in the areas of the English-speaking culture that CBC and the Canada Council support, or those supported by Radio-Canada and the Canada Council, all of those activities presently in the multiculturalism sector would be carried out in awareness of each other and under the direction of a Minister who has total responsibility. This would end a charade of political multiculturalism.

Because the Trudeau Government refused to follow through, in this holistic way, in changing the institutions of the federal Government, too many people still think in terms of ethnic politics; dinners, banquets, speeches, in which they crave some type of attention. In an election year they get quite a bit of it from the Government, but not much in between.

When the Canadian Ukrainian communities met in a triennial convention a couple of years ago in Winnipeg, and looked for the usual cabinet Minister to address them, they were forced to settle for a private Member. Unfortunately, they were not meeting during an election year, or they would certainly have had the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) there, as he was at the Jerome dinner last Saturday night in Toronto.

In an election year, all kinds of attention is paid to communities. But the reality of the changing institutions, ensuring that the policy of multiculturalism has all cultural and human rights activities related to it, is that this does not happen. It does not happen in this Bill in which the second half dealing with means is practically missing. There is a ministry re-established by a provision or two, the standard ones, and there is the advisory council which dates back to 1973 given a legislative framework. There is no substantial department, or a Minister with real influence, because of the voice that he or she would have, and responsibility for all of those activities.

We do not have a council that would have the kind of independence required in the matter of the status of women, for example. We have a council that does have independence with staff and research people who are producing reports that can be published and can advance the cause. What have we had for years under Liberal Governments and now for three and a half years under the Conservative Government and the advisory council is bodies that meet occasionally, not frequently enough, large ones, small ones, that meet behind closed doors. They may have a reception occasionally and issue a statement, sometimes not all that well advised, but these bodies are really private bodies for the Minister and are closed to others as far as their deliberations are concerned. That is not the kind of body we want. We need a strong Minister with a good department and we need a council that is a public body. We need a council that is responsive to the communities because it is selected from the communities.

The model developed in Manitoba is the Manitoba Intercultural Council. A council that is largely a chosen body selected by the communities is able to deliberate with all the freedom that that gives it. It is a council with significant funding for the support of multiculturalism and is a far better model than anything that federal Governments since 1973 to the present have come up with. That is the kind of route we should take.

If we had research capacity and a significant budget for that body, we could have funding made available to organizations with much less concern about the politics of the whole thing. It would put support for multicultural organizations and ethnocultural organizations at the same arm's length relationship from Government that now characterize the cultural agencies of the Government and the Canadian Human Rights Commission. That is the kind of model I suggest should be used.

The Minister has rejected a full-fledged department. He has been forced by the Government—he does not make these decisions by himself—to remain the kind of junior or part-time Minister he is now, being primarily occupied with his duties as Secretary of State. There has been debate among organizations and in the communities as to the best way to go. Not everyone is in support of a department. I think that has a good deal to do with the inadequacies of government action for almost a decade and a half now, in fact, back to the early 1970s. If we had had the proper policies, people would be much more prepared, I would suggest, for a department.

The refusal to create a commissionership represents a far more serious failing. There are people who are concerned about large departments and about what government can do. There are, among all of those concerned about advancing a policy, far fewer doubts about a commissioner. It is again one of those things that can arouse jealousies. God forbid that we should. It is the game of divide and conquer that has gone on for very long in this area and in other areas.

People look at the Commissioner of Official Languages, who has been at work since the Official Languages Act authorized the position back in 1969. They look at the Joint Standing Committee on Official Languages and the way in which the committee and the commissioner can work together, if you will. I have been privileged as a member of that joint standing committee to see how it operates and how effective it can be in bringing pressure to bear on the Government. People see that the Commissioner of Official Languages can make a real difference. In the refusal of a government to do the same thing for multiculturalism, they recognize the extent to which this is pre-Christmas tinsel. It is symbolism. A gift is supposed to be given, but there is nothing inside. There is no muscle, no power and no protection for people except what a Minister, who is obviously a Minister of the same Government, might actually be able to bring to bear.

If one has doubts about a department, surely one should be prepared to move in the area of the establishment of the position of commissioner who would be able to assist the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, the one real advance which this Parliament has made and for which this Government deserves thanks. In the establishment of that standing committee, we have some movement in the right direction. But we have the refusal to establish the position of commissioner who would have the means to review what is going on in government, who would have the means to receive complaints, who could comment on the failure of cultural agencies to respect multicultural policies, and who might have taken reports half a dozen years ago in the human rights area from people who thought they were not obtaining justice from the Canadian Human Rights Commission. A commissioner can do his work often behind the scenes, investigating, issuing reports that are confidential to departments initially. If one takes the procedures that are in the Official Languages Act which are now being proposed in Bill C-72, the commissioner could ensure that the Government really respected the words spoken in January, 1971 to which successive governments of Canada have given lip-service.

What is wanted, Madam Speaker, is real action, not just words. We have had a lot of rhetoric. We have in this Bill the first half of a good Bill. But we need much more than that. I see the failure of this Government to propose anything more. This morning's comments from the Secretary of State suggest that there is no readiness to take up the commissionership, which I know remains the key concern of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council which speaks for several dozen organizations across the country. A commissionership is required, and there is the real failure of the Government.

We are left then with the half loaf that we have had all too often from the Government. Maybe we expect it, but I think the Government in the politics of an election year, would not want to concede that anywhere in public. We have the same kind of half loaf we got with Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill, in the first session of this Parliament. The Government accepted some changes to that Bill. They were very minor. In fact, they were so minor that my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus were forced to vote against the Bill at third reading.

In the case of the multiculturalism Bill, that would be a sad fate for the principles that are there. Whatever rearrangements one might want to make in some cases, it is particularly necessary in Clause 3(2) where federal institutions, it is suggested, should do some things rather than following the shell that is common in legislation of this Parliament. There, particularly, are reasons for suspicion. We look to the Government—presumably the legislative committee, unless the standing committee gets the responsibility, but wherever it is, I expect to be there—to have some sensitivity to the criticisms issued by many people. I have the privilege as a Member of Parliament to articulate them, while others are forced to do so in press conferences elsewhere or statements of one sort or another, but there are lots of criticisms.

The Minister attempted to lay on us the fine words of various correspondents, editorial writers and so forth, but he knows perfectly well that the Bill is regarded as a half measure, a half loaf. If there is any real sensitivity to what is wanted across the country and what is asked for from so many groups—we heard it again in Toronto in public hearings at the beginning of December—I look to the Government to be prepared to do something in addition to the Bill that is being put before us in Bill C-93.

The ethnocultural communities, the multicultural organizations of the country, want a lot more than this, given that they have had to wait sixteen and a half years since the policy was enunciated. It is almost 20 years since the Official Languages Act was passed. These people have waited for a long time to get something. For them to be forced to settle for half measures as they are in this Bill is a tragedy and is an indication of what little progress we have made toward recognizing what the policy of multiculturalism really requires of the federal Government.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, I also have a few comments to make. I heard what my two colleagues had to say about the Bill before the House today, Bill C-93, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, a piece of legislation that is a historic landmark. The purpose of this Bill is to reflect Canada's multicultural and multiracial reality in every aspect of our life as a nation. It requires the Government of Canada to enhance and strengthen the principles of multiculturalism, and it contains a firm government-wide commitment to implement those principles.

Madam Speaker, I was checking my notes just now. This Bill was introduced for first reading on December 1, 1987, and after the question put by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), I said that to me it was a great day when Canada tabled its legislation on multiculturalism. I believe Canada was the first country in the world to table this kind of Bill. It was not only a great day for Canada and Canadians of ethnic origin like myself, it was also an historic moment for Canada. As a Canadian of ethnic origin who had the privilege of being here in Canada and becoming a Canadian citizen, I was very proud indeed.

Madam Speaker, I was listening earlier to my two colleagues, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp). I must say that what I heard really takes the cake! Their telephone numbers should be changed to read: 992-blahblah-blahblah. Incredible, what I heard here in the House today! We are just starting second reading, and I made a few notes. Unfortunately, I was not in the House to hear the speech by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) from start to finish but I caught bits of it here and there.

So I heard his speech, and I think we should not forget it was his Party that tabled a parody of a Bill on multiculturalism during the last days of the previous Government. Talk about meaningless promises! He criticized this Bill, but the Bill to which he was comparing it, Bill C-48, was vastly inferior. Why, Madam Speaker? First of all, they made a number of comments. In fact, I had the pleasure of sitting with them on the Multiculturalism Committee. The Bill referred to by the Hon. Member for York West, the official critic in the House, did not recognize multiculturalism as a characteristic of our society, while our Bill does. It did not reflect the essential link between multiculturalism and official languages, and ours does. It had no policy for federal institutions, and ours does. It did not provide for a government-wide commitment, and ours does. It is easy to talk but what we need is facts. Their Bill did not provide a mechanism for ministerial and parliamentary responsiblity but ours does. Madam Speaker, their Bill did not recommend creating a department or appointing a commissioner. So why should we bother comparing the two? No, Madam Speaker, Bill C-48 did not recommend creating a department or appointing a commissioner.

Why persist? Why rack one's brains with that, since, either it was no good then or it has been forgotten, and now it has become a priority. There would be a lot to say about that. Therefore, where was the previous Liberal commitment? Maybe the Hon. Member worked on Bill C-48, maybe he devised the whole system in Bill C-48, perhaps he gave some advice to his colleagues or former colleagues. It is a commitment to hollow promises made in the safety of opposition benches. Nothing more! It was quite simply rhetoric.

Earlier today, the Minister summed it up very well. He rose in this House, and I must congratulate my colleague, because he very well expressed what people, ethnic groups, those who built this country have suggested and what they want. They do not want to be ghettoized. They do not want to be caught up in a separate system.

Madam Speaker, we are not any better or worse for having immigrated to Canada. The Minister summed up what this country is all about when he said: This country of privilege . . . and I insist on that, Madam Speaker, because it was a privilege to be accepted in this country. And those who do not recognize that privilege are not good Canadian citizens.

People like myself, immigrants, chose this country for three reasons the Minister very aptly outlined this morning: freedom, stability and opportunity. We, more especially in my community, in my family, used those opportunities and those freedoms, and we are quite proud of that. We have been accepted in this country, and we now realize that it is a very great privilege indeed, and I would urge all those who are new Canadians to enjoy and to appreciate what they have.

Everytime I meet a new Canadian, I remind him that he is not here to claim the rights of his native country, he is here to accept the laws of this country, to enjoy all those privileges—stability and opportunity. Because if people start to claim conditions in their own countries, we will have no time left to deal with this country, the stability in this country.

The multiculturalism policy of Canada will be the responsibility of cabinet Ministers. This should answer many of the questions of my dear colleagues across the way. I know that there has been some suggestion that a separate department of multiculturalism be established. I strongly believe that such an isolated, separate department of multiculturalism would not be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Let me refer to an article from The Toronto Star, a newspaper which writes its own articles. I do not think the Government tells it what to write. The Toronto Star says:

> It's precisely by avoiding the temptation to create a centralized multicultural department with huge power that David Crombie does all Canadians a big favour.

I really stand behind this quote.

I know it is very important for my colleagues across the way to have this department separate, but it is not in the best interests of the Canadian people to do so. As I said at the beginning, and I do not want to repeat myself but it is very important that I say it in both official languages, as an immigrant, I do not feel that I am inferior or superior to anyone in Canada. I want to be equal.

I am so proud to have the privilege of staying in Canada that I do not ask for any special favours. Many, many people try to do that but I do not want any special favours. I want to be equal.

A separate department would, in my view, risk the development of a kind of a ghetto and would give encouragement to a view that multiculturalism is not an integral element of our whole society but rather some form of add-on or special program.

Madam Speaker, I recently attended a seminar in Montreal, and I would like to share that experience with the House, knowing that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is going to listen closely, as well as the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), because this involves my community. I attended a seminar and someone pointed out to me the need of developing special programs for the visible minorities. One visible minority put some kind of a proposal to me, suggesting: We want to have a special program for us blacks as a visible minority, because we want to have a chance as Italians had in Canada.

For example, would the condition of multiculturalism with respect to health matters or employment strategies or small business be more valuable for Canada? Multiculturalism should not be put in a corner. It must be reflected in every way the federal Government works. This commitment is a lot more than words. It reflects this Government's record and demonstrates our resolve.

The record is clear. First, we must tell the House about our good record. Our hon. friends never mention that. I do not blame them. They are in the opposition, they are not interested in the truth. They are not interested in saying something good about this Government. No one is perfect, but at least we have something good. This Government established a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. We promised it, we have it, and my two friends are on it. They can speak freely and put their views. It is good for all of us. No one did it before. We are the first.

Mr. Marchi: Thank you.

Mr. Della Noce: You are there. I know you are having a lot of fun. You work hard, but you must say that we did it. You did not do it.

We introduced the Employment Equity Act. We convened the first national conference on policy and urban municipalities. We increased significantly the number of appointments made to federal boards and commissions. I wish I could give all the names but I do not think we have the time.

Mr. Marchi: Table it.

Mr. Della Noce: We can table any names and we can say that we did a lot of things. I will give some names but I will not have time to give them all.

The other day we received a letter from the National Congress of Italian Canadians, an organization which I know well. The Congress congratulated the Government of Canada for introducing a Bill that will formally recognize the multicultural reality of Canada through the first national multiculturalism Act. I must say that I will not read the whole letter but there is another paragraph that criticizes something. It is not perfect. It looks as though my hon. friend from York West wrote the letter for them.

Mr. Marchi: No.

Mr. Della Noce: Yes. Let me read you another paragraph that you will like because it is negative. The Congress, while appreciating the value of the initiative, is concerned that some of the key elements proposed by the various cultural communities and recommended by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism have not been incorporated in the Bill.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Right on.

Mr. Della Noce: Of course. They did not come to us, they listened to you. You are preaching these words. If I go on I will see some phrases which my friend used a few moments ago in his speech. Maybe they listen to you but maybe they should listen to us, too, because we have something positive to say. Well, maybe my hon. colleague does not agree with us.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Minister quoted from many sources this morning to show that we had the support of all the newspapers, and rightly so. After the Bill on multiculturalism was tabled on December 1, the Toronto Star came out strongly in favour of the Bill. The Secretary of State has already told the House about the reasons given by the newspaper.

This newspaper was quoted many times this morning because, as you know, Madam Speaker, the Toronto Star is supposed to be the most neutral newspaper in Canada. To my knowledge, it is not a Conservative newspaper. Everyone says so, which means that no one can accuse us of partisanship.

I would like to quote another article published in the Toronto Star:

"It is precisely by avoiding the temptation to create a centralized multiculturalism department with huge powers that David Crombie does all Canadians a big favour. Rather than shove ethnic groups into permanent multicultural ghettos, he is content to have all Canadians treated the same when it comes to protecting their basic rights and freedoms".

I like this article, Madam Speaker, and I intend to keep it as it summarizes all the questions of the two Hon. Members opposite as well as the concerns of our national Congress, which I know quite well and for which I have a lot of respect, and of the Italian community throughout Canada. It is true that these people are concerned, but perhaps they should have consulted us more to know what we had in mind and why we did certain things. The Government always has reasons for acting as it does.

We are always willing to listen. We are always willing to hear what people have to say. When we travel around this country, Madam Speaker, it is surprising to find that every community has something to say. Every piece of the mosaic has its own views, and we have to respect them.

On several occasions, I heard people talking. We would never want to see a ghetto! We would never want to be separated from the others! We want to be together to build this country. That is what I always thought, Madam Speaker, even if when the committee started meeting some years ago, I was seriously considering this issue. But after having consulted and talked things over, although nobody told me to change my mind, I learned that there are realities in this country which must be respected.

Madam Speaker, I can only agree and I am sure that most Hon. Members support the way multiculturalism operates in this country.

The commitment to preserve and enhance multiculturalism in Canada cannot remain only a vague promise. It requires an effort to educate people and make them aware of the intercultural reality. It requires that we put to effective use the talents, trade skills and cultural understanding of Canadian citizens who have roots in other countries of the world. This commitment requires also that we strenghen Canadian unity and that we seek to increase communication and exchanges with other parts of the world.

While addressing the Canadian association of the multilingual press last October, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was right when he made the following statement:

> The Canadian Multiculturalism Act will help shape our country's vision and steer our future development as a unique and dynamic country which knows how to benefit from the experience and talents of Canadians who emigrated from the four corners of the world.

When I hear "from the four corners of the world", Madam Speaker, I see myself in the picture.

I am sure I am not the only one who feels that we must take advantage of these resources. I refer to the talents and experience of our very diversified multilingual and multiracial population, as well as the ability of our institutional resources, to make of multiculturalism a dynamic new force in the so-called "global village".

Famous Quebec sociologist Raymond Breton noted that as long as a group sees that some of its members are not integrated in its own government machinery it cannot feel it fully belongs to its new country. The participation of representatives from all cultural groups to the policy planning and decision making process of the federal Government is of utmost importance at a time when we are seeking to promote multiculturalism in Canada as a whole.

I am proud to say the Progressive Conservative Government has made significant progress in this field. There has been a considerable increase in the number of ethnic group members appointed to federal councils, commissions and organizations. Earlier my colleague was urging me to name a few. I will single out just a few, Mr. Speaker, because I do not have time to read the whole impressive list.

Our Government sought faithfully to reflect Canada's multicultural reality through these appointments: Joseph Picinninni to the Citizenship Court; Berverley Oda to the CRTC; Emerson Mascoll to the CN board of directors; Wally Majesky to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation board of directors; Cesar de Morias to the Immigration Appeal Board; Roman Senkiw to the board of the Canadian Commercial Corporation; Irène Chu to the Immigration Appeal Board; and Con Di Nino as President of the Harbourfront Corporation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I have been telling my fellow Canadians and my Multiculturalism Canada colleagues: Multiculturalism is not only for the Italians, it is not only for the Greeks, it is not only for the Chinese, multiculturalism is a sign of harmony, it holds this country together and united. This morning our Minister aptly summed it up in three words, and I want to conclude my remarks by repeating those three words: liberty, stability, and opportunity.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, although the Member who just spoke obviously brings passion and sincerity to the debate today as he did to his work before becoming a Member of Parliament, it is sad that in his capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism he has made, on a number of occasions, very loosey-goosey, offensive statements which I would like him to address.

However, before I ask him to do that, I would like to question him about his statements on the evolution of the mutliculturalism policy in this country. He asks why we had not done this and why we had not done that. One can follow that line of questioning to the ends of the earth. The Parliamentary Secretary fails to recognize that there has been an evolution of sorts in the Multiculturalism Directorate from 1971, when it was made an official policy of governments, to the present day.

The Member fails to see that when his Government assumed power in 1984, instead of propelling that policy into the future boldly and progressively it basically legislated in 1988 values and principles which were not new but were born and raised in the 1960s and 1970s. This indicates that the Conservative Party which forms the Government of today has failed miserably to be creative and define the second phase. In its failure to define the second phase it is left with an embracing of the principles and structures of the past. Therefore, for the Conservative Party the future of multiculturalism is in the past.

We say that, more important than debating what has happened until now, is to focus our energy, thoughts, and creativity on the present and the future. If the future policy lives in the past, it will become irrelevant. I am sure that no one in this House wants that to happen. I think the Parliamentary Secretary fails to grasp that. He prefers to dilly-dally in what happened in the sixties and seventies. Let us look at the nineties and beyond and ask ourselves as a collectivity in Parliament how to form a policy which will meet the aspirations of today and the future rather than simply deal with the past.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that people in this country do not recognize that it is a privilege to be here and that if they do not do so they are not decent and good Canadians. He also made reference to people in this country who want special favours. I believe those are very suggestive terms, to say the least. To whom was the Member referring when he said that people in this country do not recognize the greatness of this country? Who in this country is looking for special favours? I have found no one who is.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin with the very important question which the Member asked at the end of his remarks. My colleague misunderstood me. I am going to read the "blues" to see whether he is right or wrong, but I would like to clear up the error.

I said it was a privilege for me to be in this country as it is for many citizens who arrive here, and that I hope they recognize that. I did not make the suggestion which the Hon. Member says I did. I said that I hope they realize that and if they do not realize that it is time that they did. I said that if they do not realize that this country is the best country in the world, they are not good Canadians. However, I have never met anyone who has indicated to me that they do not realize that this is a beautiful country. That is what I meant, and I do not want the Member to change my words. I said as well that I thank Canada for giving me this privilege.

On December 1, when speaking on the multiculturalism Bill in this House, I said that it was a privilege, not only for ethnic groups, but for all Canadians. I still say that everyone should be involved in multiculturalism because when people look at their ancestry they realize that their ancestors all came from elsewhere. I am proud to be part of that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, let me make this perfectly clear. Anyone who cares to do a modicum of research will discover that the origin of all Canadians goes much further back. Everyone should say: Multiculturalism is not only for Quebecers or for Canadians born in this country, it is for everybody, for where do our ancestors come from? Even Adam and Eve . . .

[English]

My colleague says that he does not like me to speak about the past. I do not blame him because his Party did not do much in the past. I mentioned earlier that Bill C-48 did not recognize what this multiculturalism Bill recognizes. The Member says that I am in the sixties and seventies and that he wants to be in the nineties. This Bill goes to the year 2000 and I am proud of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are two minutes left in the period for quesions and comments. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is always good to have a minute or two saved for one. I will be brief. The Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) is as energetic a Parliamentary Secretary as we have. He is doing a good job here today. He is also an honest man.

In bringing forward the letter fom the National Congress of Italian Canadians he has done us a service. He read a sentence and then, under a little urging from us, provided an additional sentence. He suggested that the National Congress of Italian Canadians is critical of this Bill because they listened to a certain person. I think he meant it was the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), and I see political partisan jealousies there, unless he meant that they were listening to me as well.

I would worry if he thinks that the opposition critics, one or both, are convincing these organizations of what they should say. I assume he had something to do with the development of the Bill into the form in which it is before us now, this half loaf that we have been given.

Why was the Government not more responsive to the Canadian Ethnocultural Council and these national organizations, the majority of which wanted some sort of institutional development beyond the status quo we now have? If they did not want a department, many of them saw the validity of a commissioner. Why rejection of both?

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a time factor problem which would be very interesting . . . but still I want to congratulate my honourable colleague because I know that he is interested in the cause, and we had the pleasure to sit together on the Committee on Multiculturalism. The letter, a little earlier . . . Yes, he is right, I have it here. Quotations should always be avoided because as is often seen during Oral Question Period we tend to quote anything that supports our point of view while ignoring anything else that goes against it.

I would be glad to give him a copy. He is right to commend us on principle. And I believe that on principle everybody should commend us, even the groups that speak up. Because it still is a premiere, not only in Canada, but a world premiere and we should be proud of it. Since I don't have the time to read the whole letter, if my honourable colleague wants me to send him a copy, I will be glad to do so.

I also want to say that there certainly were many requests. Eight or nine I believe were addressed to the Committee. But it must be understood that there are not always convincing reasons to support all sorts of arguments. It is certain that we could have given some to explain why not everything has been done. But when there are convincing arguments, should we give in every time to the request? I referred to what my colleague's party which formed the previous Government had done with Bill C-48, where there was no recognition . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow another paesano to ask a question. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, to follow up on the question put by my colleague from York West to my colleague from Duvernay, because I know the latter to be a sincere, exuberant and dazzling individual . . . However, my colleague from Duvernay said that some groups have apparently asked him for special favours. Since the member from York West spoke in English, I am repeating it in good French Canadian.

The question was directed to him following his statement where he said: Some groups asked me for special favours in this country . . . There is no special favour. It is true. However, I should like to know from the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) what groups asked for special favours as you said in your speech.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I fully understood the question, and I said that one day we had invited ethnic groups to attend a Tory symposium and we dealt briefly with that Bill. Several made a report but unfortunately a group said: We want a special grant because we are a visible minority.

Mr. Rossi: Name that group!

Mr. Della Noce: It was not a group but the spokesman of a group. Just the same there were 200 persons.

I was startled when he added:" . . . just like the Italians". Then I said:"We have had no favour from this country. We did not enjoy any special opportunity. We worked to get that chance and you will do likewise. If you are given a special grant because you belong to a minority group, it will become pure racism and I am entirely against it."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is the end of questions and comments.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Grazie, signore presidente. Mr. Speaker, the fact that the debate has been carried for the last half hour so vigorously and forcefully among three members of the Italo-Canadian community, and that they were able to underline the differences in the way they feel about the Bill, I think is very significant.

While the Parliamentary Secretary has vigorously defended the Bill, I think what we are really witnessing in the promotion of this Bill is a kind of check-mark politic by the Government. It is true that this is the first Bill on multiculturalism which may proceed through all stages. A Bill was introduced by the former Government, but it did not carry when the election was called. If passed, this will be the first Bill on multiculturalism in our country and, according to the Parliamentary Secretary, the first Bill on multiculturalism in the world. However, that is nothing more than a check-mark because when the Bill itself is examined one sees that it offers very little in the way of substance.

Symbolism is an important aspect of public life in Canada. I will not deny that this is a symbolic achievement. It is a statute that recognizes multiculturalism. It is more deeply entrenched than a policy statement, for example, which was the way in which the multiculturalism policy was launched in 1971, when it was first enunciated by Prime Minister Trudeau.

A Bill is more entrenched than a statement of policy, but I think the right way to judge the Government's commitment to multiculturalism is by the opportunities it has had and the way it has responded to them. I have stated in the House and throughout the country that multiculturalism has been betrayed by the Government. In the course of my remarks I intend to illustrate that and urge the Government to at least put some real substance into this Bill.

We are in a different situation than we were in 1971, when a new concept was put forward and Canadians were being tested about their openness of spirit, their willingness to recognize their diversity. It is a diversity which was not created by the statement in 1971, but recognized as a positive way to look at one of the facts of our national life.

I remember when I was growing up in Canada, that being a foreigner implied a kind of second-class status. Kids whose parents had accents or who had accents themselves in the public school I attended were the butts of jokes. They felt somewhat insecure.

The positive attitude toward multiculturalism that was taken by the policy in 1971 has completely turned that around. I watch for that when I visit schools in my riding and I can see that people are not ashamed of their heritage. They do not feel that it is better to be born in Canada or to have parents who were born in Canada, or that it is better not to have an accent or speak a foreign language at home. The reverse is now true.

I believe we have demonstrated that, by supporting wise policies and selling them to the Canadian people, government and Parliament have been able to make a very positive and strong contribution to the national richness out of that original ideal that existed when most people in the House today were growing up. We have come a long way since 1971.

The multiculturalism Bill could have been an opportunity to move a step forward. It could have been an opportunity for the Government to enrich our policy. Now would have been the time to do so.

I cannot help but refer to the Meech Lake Accord during this debate, and remind the House that the Official Opposition and the Liberal Party of Canada wanted the Accord to recognize multiculturalism in exactly the same way and with the same weight as it recognizes the distinct society of Quebec, as it recognizes the contribution the aboriginal people have made to Canada, and as it recognizes a number of other important facts about our national identity. Putting that multiculturalism policy into the Constitution would have been an even stronger recognition than bringing forward a Bill.

During the Meech Lake Conference and the Langevin Conference the provinces talked about how they would like to see the Constitution reformed. I condemn the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for not saying: "Let us recognize these essential facts about the nature of Canada". Let us make it clear that multiculturalism is not for us a kind of transitional policy that we will use to romance politically the various communities in Canada while they are absorbed and integrated and lose their ties and contacts with their historic past and homeland. Putting it into the Constitution would have meant that it was a permanent fact of our life, as it is permanent that the country is officially bilingual, and as it is permanent that we recognize the distinct nature of the society in Quebec and the contributions of our aboriginal people. It is a terribly missed opportunity.

We in the Official Opposition have made a commitment that our agenda for reform will contain an addition to the Constitution of Canada that will entrench the recognition of multiculturalism as one of the fundamental characteristics of our nation, one which we hope will be permanent, and that there will be vigorous policies to enhance its permanence and impact on our country.

I turn to this wonderful Bill. I use that expression ironically because while it is a symbolic victory to have a multiculturalism Bill, how much better it would have been to have a Bill with something in it. The Government engaged in a long period of consultation. The Government is very good at consultation. The trouble is that the consultation does not animate the policies that follow. A parliamentary committee made recommendations. It recommended not only that there be an Act, but that the Act should contain a number of important features. None of the important features, which were unanimously recommended by Conservative, Liberal and New Democrat members of that committee, appear in the Bill.

There is no commissioner of multiculturalism with an independent mandate, as the committee recommended, to police the Government of Canada and every one of its departments, every one of the agencies under its control, and possibly the contractors who might do business with the Government, to ensure that multicultural policies enunciated by the Government and supported by Parliament were carried out. There is no separate ministry of multiculturalism established. One has to be concerned to see multiculturalism so close under the wing of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie). The Secretary of State has not been the spokesman for multiculturalism in the past. He has a lot of other duties which, while not inconsistent with multiculturalism, can mask over the multicultural fact in Canada. He can seek to subsume it under a number of other existing policies such as his responsibility for citizenship and for some other aspects of our culture.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that a separate ministry was a promise of the Conservatives in the last election campaign. Would you not have thought, Mr. Speaker, after promising that in the election campaign, after having the Conservative members of the committee unanimously recognize that this was something that was needed and something that would enhance multiculturalism, that this Bill would have contained the establishment of a separate ministry of multiculturalism? No, on the contrary. The fact that this Bill does not establish a ministry of multiculturalism means that as far as this Government is concerned, there will be no ministry of multiculturalism. It is not a matter of waiting to be considered.

It is not a matter of seeing if it can fit into our legislative agenda. It is not a matter of consultation, because the consultation recommended a Ministry. The answer is, no, and the multicultural communities, the millions of them in this country, have another broken promise from the Conservative Government.

A centre for multiculturalism was another of the unanimous recommendations of this all-Party committee. The centre itself is mostly important in the light of the additional recommendation that there should be a consistent financial base established for the centre and for the policy. That is also not contained in this Bill.

Whether the Bill and the policy will be animated by any funding at all, whether projects established by the Government will be sustained and continued, indeed, whether there will be projects, is something the Government can decide on a daily basis or on a fiscal year basis, depending on other priorities. In other words, although there is a Bill, there is nothing entrenched that ensures that there will be multicultural programs funded on a consistent basis such as the centre for multiculturalism. I submit that there should have been, and that if it were to be any more than a check-mark on a list of promises not kept, but answers that the Conservative Members will have in the next election campaign, this is it.

The Parliamentary Secretary referred to the achievement of the Employment Equity Act. I feel justified in dealing with it in this debate because, although it is not the multiculturalism Bill, it could have been one of the main muscles which would have enforced an equitable policy in the area of employment. This was the device—and again there was an election promise made about this—by which the Government would enforce fairness and equality in the market outside of the federal Public Service and the agencies, which are paid for by taxpayers in the whole of the Canadian society for which the federal Government can legislate, that there would be standards to ensure that for those coming from a multicultural community—whether it be a woman, a member of a visible minority, a member of the audible minorities, those who have foreign accents—there would be a positive affirmative action program with teeth in it. That was the point. That was promised by the Conservatives in the last election campaign and denied in the Employment Equity Act, which is nothing more than another check-mark on a list on the way to the next election campaign.

I have a multicultural riding. I can tell you the multicultural communities in my riding are not walking around saying, as the Parliamentary Secretary would want them to do: "Oh, let us have a standing committee on multiculturalism or a multiculturalism Act". What they want is results. They would like to see effective machinery which would produce the equality in the job market about which we are talking, which would produce the sense of security about their community whether they are Sikhs or Armenians, to take two groups which have been the subject of a number of attacks and criticisms by this Government. This multiculturalism Bill does not give them the kind of security they hoped and were promised would be provided by the Government if it were elected.

The Parliamentary Secretary was able to read some comments on the Bill and draw some comfort from them. That is not the general tenor of the observations that have been made. He indicated that the National Congress of Italian Canadians approved of a multicultural Act, as indeed they do, but the National Congress of Italian Canadians also states:

> The introduction of a multiculturalism Act in Parliament short-circuited the consultative process in which we thought we were engaged. This is unacceptable and to be deplored.
> The Act is also disappointing in that it does not represent a strengthening of the Government's commitment to multiculturalism. It will merely recognize and promote equality of opportunity for all Canadians without mandating that equality "shall" and "must" be attained.
> The lack of specific implementation and enforcement provisions is a serious deficiency in the Act.
> The Act does not represent any substantive move toward achieving equality which is the right of all Canadians.
> We believe a Commissioner of Multiculturalism will bring the important elements of visibility and a greater accountability to the implementation of multiculturalism policies.

• (1630)

That is what the community is saying. It is happy that there is a Bill, but it is very disappointed in the contents of the Bill. It is very disappointed that there are more broken promises in the area of multiculturalism.

I also want to quote Dr. Bhausaheb Ubale who is a Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and who was until recently the Human Rights Commissioner in the Province of Ontario. He makes a similar observation:

> The proposed Multiculturalism Act changes nothing. It is not historic as the Minister calls it. It is purely symbolic. It is old wine in a new bottle.

I know that if the Official Opposition delays or holds up this Bill, the Government will run across the country saying that we do not believe in multiculturalism. Well, we do. We would like to try, in the time that we have to deal with the Bill in committee, to make it into a real instrument to assist in the elimination of discrimination against members of the multicultural communities in Canada and in the promotion of their interests as individuals, as families and as communities. We want to do this in a way that will really mean something, so that people will know that there is a Bill that makes an honest effort to make a purely positive development out of the establishment of a multiculturalism Act in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who was a member of previous Governments. In fact, he was a Minister in some of the Trudeau Governments. He has suggested that members of the Conservative Party in the last federal election promised a ministry. I do not think that that is true as far as a full-fledged department is concerned. They did start this Parliament off with a Minister of State for Multiculturalism, the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta). He had a good year of trying to do the things that, as critic in the Conservative opposition in the previous Parliament, he had pursued.

The next Minister, the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), had the job, together with responsibilities for fitness and amateur sport. The two Ministries of State were combined, although they are in quite different areas. Being a critic for those areas I found that it was really rather terrifying to have all the multiplicity of amateur sports and all the ethnocultural communities and organizations. I can well imagine that he must have had a rough time of it in that one year.

The third Minister has the job as a junior responsibility together with being Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie). I notice that the Bill he tabled in the House he tabled, not as Minister responsible for multiculturalism, but as Secretary of State.

The fact remains that Bill C-93 is stronger than Bill C-48, which the Liberals put forward in the last days of the last Trudeau Government. That contrast, that is to say 13 years of policy and no Bill, leads me to ask the Hon. Member for York Centre a couple of questions. I am not asking him to violate his ministerial oath by any means. As a member of the Liberal caucus and aware of discussions going on at times in the dozen years of Liberal Governments after the policy was enunciated in 1971, I want to ask the Hon. Member this. Why did Liberal Governments through all those years never consider a legislative basis for the multiculturalism policy announced in 1971 and agreed to by all the Parties? Why did the Liberals never find a bottle into which to put the good wine of Canadian multiculturalism?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, why did the former Government not do it? Why did Sir John A. Macdonald not do it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: We can look at the past. We can look at the future. The distinctive thing about the present is that that is the only time frame in which we can act. The present is going by. The Conservatives have the responsibility of forming the Government today. Rather than review the kinds of discussions that took place in Cabinet, which I think the Hon. Member knows I am not at liberty to discuss, we should concentrate on our time in the present, on the time when the Conservatives have this great trust and responsibility of the Canadian people to do the right thing for the multicultural communities. This is far from it.

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). I noted that he had a great deal of criticism to levy at the Government and the Minister for introducing this Bill. What he failed to do is to bring forward the record of the Government of which he was a part, indeed, the Government in which he served as a Minister. References were made by the previous speaker to that record.

Might I remind the Hon. Member for York Centre that in 1984 when our Government took office members from various ethnocultural groups comprised and formed only 7.8 per cent of members on boards and commissions. Today, after three and a half years, that number has risen to 15 per cent. That is an increase in real terms of 100 per cent.

The Hon. Member did not make reference to the appointment of the special adviser on multiculturalism in the Prime Minister's Office. He did not make reference to the establishment of the historic House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. He did make a brief reference to the Employment Equity Act. He did not make reference to the first ever federal-provincial conference on multiculturalism in Winnipeg, and on and on.

My question to the Hon. Member is the following one. What in the world did he and his Government do for 13 years between 1971 and 1984 when the principle of multiculturalism was first announced? What did they do? What tangible evidence do we have that they did anything except pay lip-service to various groups? The Liberal Government only ghettoized multiculturalism into various groups across the country by paying lip-service to them and by completely ignoring concrete action and by cynically introducing a Bill in the last moments of the last Parliament only to allow it to die on the Order Paper.

I would be very interested to hear from the Hon. Member on precisely why it is that there is absolutely no evidence that for 13 years of the previous administration anything constructive was done to enhance multiculturalism in Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that time does not permit me to give the long list of achievements in the area of multiculturalism of the former Government. I think that they are pretty considerable. I also think that when we formed the Government we were creating a policy. We were exposing it to members of the Conservative opposition who had very little interest in it and very little understanding of it.

What is happening now and what I am so critical of is that having taken the responsibility of government the Government is sitting and ideas are being thrown to it. It does not have any ideas. All of the achievements that the Hon. Member has referred to, and some of them are considerable, have been a result of representations to the Government, of having things thrown to it, of pushing it and of criticizing it.

How has the Government responded in this important area that we are here to talk about today, the multiculturalism Bill? It is putting the policy in the refrigerator. Instead of generating something, developing, nurturing, and explaining it to the Canadian people, the Government is putting the reins on and holding it back. In a policy, which admittedly moves ahead from where the matter was left when our Party left office because there wasn't a Bill then and now there is, what is missing is leadership. Now the Government wants to deal with it as little as possible, forget the promises, but do just enough to get the check-mark on that list. This Government is not providing leadership in the area of multiculturalism, however much I am prepared to recognize that the list put forward by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) contains some significant developments, such as the increased number of appointments. I do recognize that, but I am very critical of the Government's failure to provide leadership in this area.

There was a full-time Minister of Multiculturalism. It was his obsession and his livelihood in public life to develop a program of multiculturalism. Here not only is it not a full-time responsibility, but it has been shuffled around through three Ministers, two of whom were replaced because of total inadequacy in dealing with this portfolio. I wonder if the Member for Parkdale—High Park would not agree with me on that matter. The present Minister who has taken over has achieved something through symbolism that the Government hopes to sell in the next election campaign, but the leadership is not there.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity of taking part in this important debate regarding Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada.

Before I get into my speech, I was intrigued by the debate that some Ministers in the past have had two portfolios, one for multiculturalism and the other for amateur sport. This gives the impression of how trying this position was. I have to say with honesty that back in 1979 we did have a very capable Minister who handled both portfolios in an excellent manner. I would like to refer to our present Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), who in my opinion carried that responsibility very well indeed. Certainly, if we had lasted any longer he might have been a full Minister.

As Chairman of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism in the House of Commons, I have been blessed with good Members from both sides of the House who have contributed very substantially to multiculturalism in Canada and who have worked hard and tirelessly in preparing reports, certainly in a very non-partisan manner. I would ask the public to forgive us for the way that we act here some of the time. We certainly do not act in that manner in committee. We are very non-partisan, and there is not the partisan feeling that is present in the House of Commons. I have to say we have achieved a lot in the multicultural committee.

I certainly would like to give accolades to all the Hon. Members, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer), the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick), the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez). They have all done yeoman's work. With the committee in force more yeoman's work will be done in that respect.

I fervently believe that when Bill C-93 is passed the Act will affirm in law the constitutional freedom of all Canadians of every origin, their opportunity to choose, to preserve, to enhance, and to share their multicultural heritage. I believe that the Act will recognize all Canadians as full and equal participants in Canadian society. The Act will contribute to the ever evolving Canadian identity of our society, and it will provide an excellent framework for dealing with today's issues and those of the next century.

I feel that Bill C-93 is a good Act. It is an opportunity for everyone to work together, not only to make it work, but to improve upon it as time goes on. I believe that the new Canadian Multiculturalism Act, along with the Official Languages Act will form a trinity of legislative initiatives which together cannot help but strengthen our national identity and culture.

The British parliamentary system started off by granting rights to individuals on a person by person basis. When the parliamentary system was transferred to Canada, two important changes were necessary to make it work in our particular circumstances. On the one hand, it was necessary to adopt a federal arrangement with divided jurisdiction to accommodate the provinces. On the other hand, it was necessary to create group rights, in order that English and French, Catholic and Protestant could be assured due and equal respect. Because of this development, Canada has been the pioneer in the development of the legal framework for social rights in a parliamentary system.

So far, however, only the Charter groups, the English and the French, have received specified guarantees of their group rights in the Canadian Constitution. Two other sets of group rights still need to be elaborated on and entrenched in the Canadian Constitution. Native peoples form one of those groups. Their particular status is recognized, but adequate specification and protection still awaits action from the federal and provincial Governments. I believe that we will eventually see movement and settlement of the native peoples' claims.

The other set of group rights applies to those the B and B Commission called "the other ethnic groups". Those of non-British, non-French, and non-native heritage, similarly have needs and concerns which only an entrenched set of rights can fully accommodate. Precisely what those rights will amount to, and how they will operate, remains to be worked out by all Canadians. But here, too, I believe that there will eventually be accommodation and entrenchment.

There is no question that all of us here today are proud of our racial origin and proud of our ancestral traditions and cultures. I believe we are very proud to be citizens of our great country which offers us full opportunity to pursue freely our ambitions and self-fulfilment. I am certain that we all agree that Canada is a wonderful country to live in, a land of personal liberty and opportunity, and a land which is still the best hope for free people everywhere.

I think you will agree with me as well, Mr. Speaker, when I say that we are making progress in Canada, more progress than ever before in achieving our ultimate goal in which all faiths, and all creeds will not only exist harmoniously with their differences, but will also thrive on them and learn from them.

Hopeful as that may sound, we still have a long way to go towards a better understanding of one another, in caring for one another, and in fulfilling the great promise begun in ancient Greece of liberty and justice for all. It has often been said that the finer qualities of a society are judged on the basis of what society upholds in its day to day practice.

With this in mind, there is no question that multiculturalism bequeaths a far-reaching responsibility on all our people. It is a responsibility for two closely woven aspirations, the cultivation of cultural diversity and the public acceptance of such a cultural diversity.

I have no hesitation in stating that a policy of multiculturalism is the most suitable way of assuring and guaranteeing cultural freedom and cultural diversity in our country. Lasting unity in Canada is contingent on an ever greater understanding and respect for each other, regardless of our ethnic backgrounds. A full recognition of multiculturalism in Canada assures that all ethnocultural groups, all Canadians, will be guaranteed their rights and desires to practice and keep their traditions, their languages, and their cultures. It will mean as well greater respect and understanding of each other, the disappearance of personal and institutional prejudices and the creation of a more friendly climate. Without the total eradication of the diseases of prejudice, discrimination and racism, no basic human rights will ever be a reality in Canada and we will never earn and live up to the title of a truly great nation.

I hope that the time is not far off when there will no longer be a need to have a multiculturalism policy in isolation, when there will no longer be a need for a department of multiculturalism, again in isolation, but that we will have, rather, a department of multiculturalism that will address itself to all Canadians and will benefit all Canadians equally. That will signify the time has at last come when Canadians will be treating other Canadians in the way that they would like to be treated themselves, with understanding, with compassion, with respect and tolerance and, above all, with equality. Bill C-93 is indeed one more positive step taken by the Government in furthering the cause of equality where every Canadian, regardless of his or her background, is to be treated with equality, understanding, compassion and tolerance.

Previous speakers on the whole did not delve into the policy itself. I would like to take this opportunity to explain just what is in the policy. The new multiculturalism policy will promote the understanding that multiculturalism reflects the cultural and racial diversity of Canadian society and acknowledges the freedom of all members of Canadian society to preserve and share their cultural heritage. It will promote the understanding that multiculturalism is a basic element of the Canadian heritage and identity and that it provides an invaluable resource in the shaping of Canada's future. It will further promote the full and equitable participation of individuals and communities of all origins in the continuing evolution and shaping of all aspects of Canadian society and assist them in the elimination of any barrier to such participation. It will recognize the existence of communities whose members share a common origin and their historic contribution to Canadian society and enhance their development. It will ensure that individuals receive equal treatment and equal protection under the law while respecting and valuing their diversity. It will encourage and assist the social, cultural, economic and political institutions of Canada to be both respectful and inclusive of Canada's multicultural character. It will promote the understanding and creativity that arise from the interaction between individuals and communities of different origins. It will foster the recognition and appreciation of diverse cultures of Canadian society and promote the reflection and the evolving expressions of those cultures. It will preserve and enhance the use of languages other than English and French while strengthening the status and use of the official languages of Canada, and it will advance multiculturalism throughout Canada in harmony with the national commitment to the Official Languages Act.

I could go on and on but there are other areas I would like to cover. There are duties for which the Minister has responsibility as well. The Minister of Multiculturalism will have the responsibility to encourage and promote a co-ordinated approach to the implementation of the multiculturalism policy of Canada. The Minister will provide advice and assistance in the development and implementation of programs and practices in support of the policy. It will be the duty of the Minister of multiculturalism to encourage and assist individuals, organizations and institutions to project the multicultural reality of Canada in their activities in Canada and abroad. The Minister will have the responsibility to undertake and assist research relating to Canadian multiculturalism and foster scholarships in the field. The Minister will also encourage and promote exchanges and co-operation among the diverse communities of Canada.

I could go on and on about the Minister's responsibilities but they are well tabulated in the Bill. I encourage people who would like to read more about that to have a look at the Bill.

I believe that the federal multiculturalism policy has indeed come a long way over the last 17 years since it was first implemented on October 8, 1971. With the new multiculturalism policy and the very first multiculturalism Act with Bill C-93, we have made a giant step forward, a giant step forward in a positive direction. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is the door opener for any future constructive changes and improvements that I am sure will evolve as time goes on for improving multiculturalism in Canada. The Bill seeks to provide a legislative base for what, until now, has simply been a discretionary commitment by successive federal governments. As it now stands, the multiculturalism program could be either drastically reduced or fundamentally redirected, a possibility which worries many ethnocultural Canadians.

A statute, on the other hand, would provide a specific vehicle for preserving and enhancing the multicultural heritage of Canadians as promised in the Constitution. By officially recognizing the historical and future contributions of multiculturalism to Canadian society, the Bill would strengthen the sense of national unity among all Canada's ethnocultural communities. I believe all of us would welcome this move.

The new multiculturalism Bill is the accumulation of three very important happenings that have taken place in a multicultural sphere that I believe played a major role in the ongoing progress of multiculturalism in Canada. I am referring to the committee report called Equality Now of 1984—a committee of which I was a member—and its 80 recommendations which, to a large degree, have been supported by the Government. I am referring as well to the creation of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism established by our Government on June 28, 1985. The committee's report Multiculturalism:Building the Canadian Mosaic was well received all across Canada. All of us on the committee worked long and hard on the report and it had great input from many multicultural groups and individuals throughout Canada. I believe we came out with a very good report and a lot of good recommendations. One of the main recommendations was to have established a multicultural policy, and this the Government has proceeded to do. As I said earlier, we have come a long way in recognizing Canada as a truly multicultural country and we are making continued progress.

I have been in the House long enough to understand that it is hardly ever possible to receive or to obtain at one time or at one sweep the adoption of all items that one proposes in the form of a Bill or otherwise. Patience is a virtue around this place and it has its own rewards. I have had ample evidence of that in my 16 years as a Member. I am optimistic that if we continue as Members of this House and as members of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to pursue the betterment of multiculturalism in a non-partisan way, we will continue to make positive progress.

I am not so naive as to think that because we have a Bill spelling out glowingly what is necessary to ensure equality for all Canadians, by some stroke of a pen it will be accomplished. There also has to be ample evidence, the will and the determination of those responsible to make sure that the Bill will be carried out to the letter. Action, Mr. Speaker, is essential for the production of results, and actions speak louder than words.

In conclusion, as I am an optimist, it is my hope, and I believe the hope of all well minded Canadians from coast to coast, that we will continue to make progress until every Canadian, regardless of his or her background, will feel with every fibre of his or her body that Canada is, indeed, the wonderful country that we all keep repeating it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think I better entertain questions. The Hon. Member will have 10 minutes left in his question and comment period when we commence this debate again.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

The House resumed from February 1, 1988, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reimer:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that it reads as follows:
> "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."
> and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the question now before the House is whether property rights should be entrenched in the Canadian Charter. I am here to join with my colleagues to say unequivocally, yes, they should be.

Very specifically in the words of the resolution put forward by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), Section 7 as we want to amend it would thereafter read:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

This thirty-third Parliament is dealing with property rights on three different fronts. We have had before us the patent legislation which is seeking to end the ambiguous property status of those who have developed through medical research new drugs and technology in that field to ensure that their property rights are respected and to end the period of uncertainty which has been a detrimental period for Canada in that respect.

• (1700)

On another front, the House has been dealing with copyright legislation, long overdue since the present Act is dated 1924 and fails abysmally in many ways to respect the intellectual property developed by writers, artists, musicians, composers and others. On that front as well, we have an important opportunity in this Parliament to set to right a long-standing need for protection of property rights.

Third and finally, we have before us this opportunity to add property rights to the Charter itself. There are three reasons why I as a Conservative and a democrat feel fundamentally that this is the way to go and the only way to go. The first of those has to do with the concept of a property-owning democracy.

I believe it is, pretty simply and straightforwardly that when a man or a woman has some interest in property in Canada, he or she takes on a stronger interest in and awareness of what is going on that might affect the country. It is a basic proposition that what one has, one cares for. That is reflected in turn in environmental questions, zoning questions and local, provincial, national and political questions that will affect the property. Therefore, a property-owning democracy is an important aspect of the health of Canada as a democratic society. Commensurate with that must be protection in the Constitution for property which is owned by Canadians.

Second, and again both as a Conservative and as a democrat, I believe that the best protection most Canadians have for their property rights will come from the Constitution. When I say "most Canadians", I am not saying that this is important because the wealthy and large corporations need it. Au contraire, Mr. Speaker. Those are the very ones which can afford the high-priced legal services and know where to speak, how to speak and when to speak to see that their property rights are not overridden. No, I am addressing this particularly to the interests of ordinary Canadians, the working people of Canada who own homes, cottages or other properties, and must see that large government does not arbitrarily deny them those property rights. That is the importance of constitutional protection.

The third and final reason I cite as a Conservative and as a democrat is that by entrenching and guaranteeing property rights, we thereby complete the circle that is necessary to give vigour, meaning and vitality to all the other rights that are in the Charter, the democratic rights, the freedom of assembly, the freedom of religion and the freedom of expression. All the other rights are made firmer and put on a stronger foundation when property rights of individuals are also entrenched.

I am not making a mistake here. I do not believe that property has rights, I believe that people have rights. However, a fundamental interdependence does exist between personal rights and liberties and the personal rights in property. Neither could have meaning without the other.

That the right to property is a basic civil right has long been recognized. After World War II, in 1948, Canada was a signatory to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. I hardly need remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Article 17 of that declaration contains two simple propositions: first, that everyone has the right to own property as well as in association with others, and second, that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Not only in the international councils of the nations but here in Canada our own distinguished former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, recognized this. If ever there was a fighter for the underdog in society, if ever there was someone who knew the importance of legal protection for the basic liberties of the individual, it was our former Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker, who saw to it in his Bill of Rights enacted through Parliament that provision was specifically made for property rights protection.

There have been many others who have addressed this subject. John Locke, for example, the philosopher and political theoretician, asserted that it is beyond the state's power to take away a man's property without his consent. In Locke's view, indeed the end of government itself is the preservation of property.

I am not resting my arguments on pure theory and abstract principles. This is something that affects Canadians in real and specific terms. It affects a Quebec farmer who looks out across his fields one morning to find workmen digging. They are employees of a power authority and they are on his property to build a transmission pylon. Seven years after an Ontario man purchased a lot, it is rendered useless without compensation. A conservation authority zones it as part of a flood plain. In Alberta, your home province, Mr. Speaker, nine cottage owners go to their properties to discover that a public utility has cut a 15-foot swath of trees from their land.

These are actual cases. These are activities by government that are affecting Canadians who own property. These Canadians stand without protection. The Charter of Rights, to which we look for the protection of our freedom to speak, our political rights and our freedom of religion, is silent on the protection of the basic property rights of individual Canadians.

At one time I might not have spoken so strongly on this. However, I have come to see that big government, of which we have a lot in Canada these days, is capable of making big mistakes. In my own Province of Ontario, I think of the valuable farmland that had been owned by generations of farmers in the Pickering area, farmland that was expropriated for an airport that ultimately was never built.

There are many questions we face with the Charter. This morning on Parliament Hill I chaired a seminar organized by the Canadian Study of Parliament Group. One of the panelists, David Lepofsky, was speaking of the limitations of the Charter. Of the nine he identified, one had to do with express provisions that were absent from the Charter. This is one of those lacunae, one of those absences, one of those vacuums that exist.

The Charter lacks many provisions that we believe should exist. In my book Political Rights, I identified 10 fundamental freedoms and political rights that are the foundation of our free elections. An examination of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms reveals that only five of those ten are actually contained in the Charter.

We must look at the work that was done by an earlier Parliament as an unfinished work. In 1981, a great deal was done to bring the Canadian Constitution, through an amending formula, to this country and to entrench in it a Charter of Rights. It now falls to those of us in the thirty-third Parliament to see that another step is taken to complete that work.

As a Conservative whose Party stands for this proposition and as a democrat who believes fundamentally that the strength of Canadian democracy will be enhanced by this provision, I stand in support of the entrenchment of property rights in the Canadian Constitution.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Not in Private Members' Hour, I am sorry.

Mr. Waddell: Not even with unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think you will get it in any event. I will ask for unanimous consent. If there is such unanimous consent, I will permit the question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has the floor.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a very democratic Chamber when some people get gagged, but of course rules are the very essence of democracy.

We are involved this afternoon in considering a particular proposition. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) has proposed the recognition of property rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This, of course, is a very political proposal put forward in this thoroughly political and very partisan Chamber. Nothing wrong with that, but it is also fair game for the political football we are involved in, particularly in Private Members' hour.

• (1710)

The Hon. Member for Kitchener spoke in support of this proposal for the first time in this session of Parliament on October 15. He made clear how very political this matter is. Fairly early in his comments he observed that there were two good reasons for putting a proposal of this sort forward. He alluded first to the National Energy Program, which allowed him to hang some things on the Liberal Party which formed the Government in the early 1980s. Then he went on to say that another obvious area of concern is the nationalization programs of the NDP which would allow the seizure of assets without necessarily providing full compensation. That makes quite clear how partisan this particular proposal is.

One of the things the Conservatives like to do, of course, is to suggest that New Democrats have no respect for property. When we speak critically of this particular proposal, as I intend to do this afternoon, it is open season on the socialists. Recognizing that particular penchant on the part of my Conservative friends, I always smile when I think of the observations of a young man who made a tremendous start in his political career in our caucus as finance critic before going to the provincial political scene. Bob Rae, now the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the Ontario legislature, said that of course New Democrats believe in private property. We believe in it so profoundly that we think everyone should have some. That quip very nicely underscores some of the realities of the situation that one should consider before one really takes off on philosophizing about the value of the principle of private property in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Rae's observations provide a bridge for me to another situation which I think is worth citing. I am thinking of the late 19th century in the United States when the Supreme Court made a momentous decision. This was about the same time that state legislatures were involved in some of the nastiest activities the North American continent has ever witnessed. The Supreme Court was given the opportunity in one particular legal matter to consider whether corporations were persons in the eyes of the law. The court decided they were.

Corporations are large, impersonal organizations, very often controlled by a few. One thinks of the rise of the Standard Oil Company and Johnny Rockefeller who, between Sunday school lessons, carried out the vicious practices that drove competitors in the petroleum industry off the scene. This allowed him to put together a complex which was so powerful that the Supreme Court was forced to break it up in 1911 and create Standard Oil Companies in various states including New Jersey, Indiana, and California.

At about the same time a variety of states were influenced by what was 19th century progressivism in the U.S. This was to have its influence in Canada. In fact, in the 1920s the Progressive Party of Canada drew some inspiration from it, although thank God not particularly in the direction I want to talk about. Those state legislatures erected structures of discrimination that made segregation on the basis of race, discrimination in law against black people, a reality in state after state. This was particularly so in the south, but not just in the south.

When I arrived in Baltimore as a graduate student at Johns Hopkins in 1964 I was told that a restaurant where I occasionally ate had been desegregated very recently. The Baltimore Symphony Orchestra had, within a handful of years, been open to attendance by Baltimore's blacks. Previously, only white persons could go to hear the symphony orchestra perform. That was the structure of racism in the U.S. which triumphed at about the same time that American corporations began to run truly amok and become triumphant in what can only be described as a corporate society with all of its ramifications.

When one thinks of those realities, one recognizes the context within which the principle of the sacredness of private property rights should be put. There are good reasons for considering it critically. I am sure the Hon. Member for Kitchener gets a certain amount of political credit for carrying on this battle in the House. Every Conservative who chimes in is of course doing the same thing.

There is little enough regard, when those discussions are held, for the extent to which common law undergirds private property, and the extent to which the statute law which previous Parliaments have passed established property rights for the Canadian people and those who come into the country.

We should recognize that the laudable old principle that an Englishman's home is his castle was based on these very principles of common law which exist pre-eminently to protect property. The legislation established to provide for corporations, which allows stock to be sold, is the means by which the Parliament of Canada allows private individuals to band together in an organization or corporation and carry on business. That is reality. Anyone who knows the philosophy of English common law, which became Canadian law appreciates how it operates and knows that perfectly well.

One might of course remember that one of the statute laws in a related area, that which provides for labour organization, was designed to break up, if you will, one of the other common law understandings, which is that employment is based on a master-servant relationship. The servant has essentially no rights. That is another common law principle which the Parliament of Canada decided more than 100 years ago to begin modifying by allowing organizations of workers to be legal combinations instead of illegal organizations involved in restraint of trade.

Putting these realities in common and statute law to one side, it seems to me that what is particularly missed by those who speak so enthusiastically in support of this proposition is the fact that when the common law based right of private property, or the statute establishment of corporate property, which I have also been describing, is challenged, whether it happens to be in an expropriation proceeding of the sort the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) was just citing or some other proceeding, very often what is taking place is the assertion of another ancient principle in English government, that of the assertion of the right of eminent domain of the Crown or the rights of the community.

We New Democrats think particularly of the rights of the community and think that there is more than adequate protection for property rights now and that it is terribly shortsighted and incredibly partisan for people to want to provide even more safeguards in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms against the right of the community, the right of eminent domain of the Crown, to assert a community interest in one place or another and challenge private ownership.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in supporting the motion of my colleague, the Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), to include property rights by amending the Constitution Act of 1982. The right to own property should be the cornerstone of our Constitution. A man's or a woman's home is their castle and means security and freedom to be oneself free from the judgmental and intrusive eyes of strangers.

One of the factors which brought early settlers to Canada and which brings the immigrants of today is the desire to own their own home. This is fundamental to Canadians, past, present, and future, and it ranks with freedom of religion, freedom of speech, and all the other freedoms which we as Canadians enjoy. The pioneers who settled in western Canada endured all kinds of privation and sacrifice to build their own homes on their own land and to enjoy, in security, the fruits of their own labour.

There are more than 30 countries in the world which have the right to own property included in their fundamental constitutional rights. While not attempting to have Canada take the lead from our southern neighbour, I would like to point out that the fifth amendment to the American Constitution states that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law", to which might have been added "nor shall private property be taken away for public use, without just compensation".

The French Charter of Human and Citizens' Rights of 1789 states that "the purpose of any political association is the conservation of natural and unwritten human rights. Those rights are freedom, ownership and resistance to oppression". The Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960 states that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and property". Property in its broadest sense can include intellectual and commercial property such as patents, trademarks and copyrights. If one does not have the right to ownership or the right to possession of property, things, and your own belongings, in my view there are no freedoms.

Early in this century the railroads of Canada and the Government advertised extensively in Europe encouraging people to come to Canada to take up homesteads, lands of their own. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, many people immigrated to Canada attracted by their right to own homes or indeed farms. Our forefathers learned that rights were very often related to property. It is only people born wealthy who do not understand that to own something not only makes it better for you but ensures that you are protected.

Poorer people in this country know the importance of the enjoyment of property and worry very much that it is not presently protected under our Constitution. Any constitution is the general directing plan for the common life of its people. Regardless of Party or regional affiliation, we are deciding something very important for the people of Canada over the next 100 years and we should, therefore, know a great deal about the set of rules which has been set.

A Constitution should be comfortable and reassuring and should build on rights already enjoyed by Canadian citizens such as property rights as contained in the late John Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights of 1960. Whether this right was excluded deliberately or inadvertently from the Charter, now is the time to put it right.

Canada's right to property was first asserted in the Magna Carta and had steadily been reasserted in the courts and statute law. In addition to the 1960 Bill of Rights, the right to property is also contained in the United Nations Charter of Human Rights.

Our Charter of Rights should ensure Canadians the right to the enjoyment of property as this has been of great importance to the building of our country. Due to geographic expanse, by definition many of the component parts of Canada differ greatly with respect to climate, topography, resource allocation, and living standards. People in different parts of Canada have very real and different problems to face as a result of their location and heritage.

However, one right to which all Canadians cling is their right to own and enjoy the property which they have gained through sacrifice and desire. The future of Canada will remain secure only if we allow Canadians in various parts of our country to have their regional identities, to maintain their traditions, and to live up to their own values in Canada. The right of ownershp was not confirmed in our Charter of Rights and, therefore, leaves a gap or a question in the minds of Canadians that that right is no longer theirs.

The Fathers of Confederation set a monumental task for themselves. They structured a nation from the wilderness and established two levels of government which were to act as partners in the building of a new nation. Their task was to form the union and it is our task to preserve that union.

The omission of property rights from the Charter has caused anxiety among all segments of our population and people feel that their ownership can be jeopardized and taken away from them in any number of ways. I find it hard to believe that the Government responsible for drafting the Charter of Rights failed to include the right to hold and enjoy property. That Government, which professed to be that of a free and democratic country, failed to protect the right of its citizens to own a piece of land or a home. It refused to accept a Conservative opposition amendment for those rights to be included.

During debate on patriation of the Constitution in 1981 the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) sought to amend Section 7 of the resolution by substituting the following: "Everyone has the right of life, liberty, security of the person and the enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with principles of natural justice", much along the lines of the current motion.

It is impossible to discount what the lack of protection of property has cost. Under the terms of the scurrilous National Energy Program, the Liberal Government reserved the right, at any time up to granting a production licence, to back in for up to 25 per cent interest in any Canada Lands development. Mr. Speaker, the Liberal offspring, Petro-Canada, benefited and the petroleum companies lost, not only money but trust in Government.

Based on history Canadians have believed that once they own property the Government will never attempt to confiscate that property. However, there is a provision within the Charter which makes all previous laws protecting property void. I have been given an opinion that property rights given under past laws which are not included in the Constitution would be overridden.

It may be that when the New Democratic Party stated its opposition to the entrenchment of property rights at the time of patriation it was because it feared it would stand in the way of its policy to nationalize everything in sight. The members of the NDP were saying at that time that it would be more difficult to nationalize resource industries if property rights were in the Charter. Conservatives were saying at that time that property rights should be in the Charter, and included the words, "In accordance with the principles of fundamental justice".

It has been said to me that the individual who does not have the right to own property becomes himself the property of the state. I reiterate my very strong support for this motion.

• (1730)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise to speak in favour of the motion before us in the name of my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), which would entrench in our Charter of Rights the fundamental right to the enjoyment of property.

I thank my colleague for continuing to push this motion forward. Fortunately, as a result of parliamentary reform it certainly must come to a vote. Members will have to stand and be counted within the next couple of hours of debate.

I also want to thank the Canadian Real Estate Association for its dedicated support of the principle behind the entrenchment of property rights. I am aware of the number of people from my riding who, as part of the Canadian Real Estate Association, have been coming to Ottawa at their own time and expense to push this important principle. We should also acknowledge that British Columbia, New Brunswick and Ontario have already passed resolutions in favour of entrenching property rights. This House should soon do the same.

Why must we do it now? Why were property rights not entrenched in 1981? It is a sad story and speaks to the values of the three political Parties, at least in 1981.

We all recall that the 1981 Charter resolution contained only three of the four historic fundamental rights that our ancestors fought and died for many years ago. It included only the right to life, liberty and security of the person.

The fourth right, property, was left out. In fact, that is probably the greatest right of all, because when people have economic freedom, political freedom and social justice follow very quickly after.

In actual fact, Canadians had property rights in the resolution for some 48 hours. I shall never forget January 21, 1981, when my Party introduced an amendment which would entrench property rights. I will not forget January 23, 1981, when the Liberal Party accepted that amendment. It was a joyous moment, and I must say that I made several calls to people in my riding expressing how beneficial we had been as Members in having the amendment accepted by the Liberal Party. Alas, the New Democratic Party was opposed.

The Liberal Party felt that it needed the NDP support, even though it had a solid majority in the House at that time. I shall always remember with great sadness and, indeed, with anger, listening to the leader of the New Democratic Party speak against the entrenchment of property rights.

I shall never forget the next week when the Liberal and the NDP Parties together rescinded the amendment to the resolution that would entrench the right to property. It was the most gross attack on Canadians' rights that ever occurred in the history of this nation. It is up to this Parliament to remedy that error.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am an optimist. I am asking members of the Liberal Party today to stand in favour of their classic rights, as Liberals have since the beginning of time—the entrenchment of individual rights, particularly property.

I know that the NDP will not do so, and I can hardly wait for the next election when I can bound up the front doorsteps throughout my riding and the country to tell people that their very home will be in jeopardy if the NDP get their vote.

Why are entrenched property rights important? Such a right protects individuals from the abuse of governments and the abuse of power which governments, however well-intentioned, ultimately bring about. It is simply the fact that the concentration of power in government, with the bureaucracy and standardization in an attempt to put everything in writing, leads to abuses.

What are the remedies when one is oppressed by a government? In the case of property, the remedies are very few and very expensive. However, with the entrenchment in the Charter comes the right to go to one place, our judicial system. There, one can convince a dispassionate, independent and very powerful court that the individual has been oppressed by the Government. The court has the power to remedy that injustice. That is absolutely critical, particularly in this modern age when we are becoming more imbued with rules and regulations set by governments, sometimes far away.

Let us not forget that it is a problem that affects ordinary Canadians. Earlier, my colleague gave an example of a Quebec farmer seeing workmen digging in his field. Let me give other examples.

Seven years after an Ontario man purchased a lot, it is rendered useless without compensation due to a conservation authority zoning.

Nine cottage owners in Alberta go to their properties to discover that a public utility has cut a 15-foot swath of trees from their land.

Many other Alberta property owners feel the heavy hand of public authority exercised through the provincial Government's 13 restricted development areas. The Government may, among many other infringements against private property, expropriate land in these areas without respecting the remedies that are available to individuals through the province's Expropriation Act.

In Montreal a delicatessen is fighting for its existence in an established location on land it has owned for 37 years. The city has a by-law that allows expropriation of land provided a developer owns two-thirds of a city block.

I could go on to give examples that have been sent to the Canadian Real Estate Association and which it documents for the House each year. It will not be long before the time in October, 1988, when they will be back to set out further examples of how our fellow citizens have lost their rights and privileges, not to mention financial compensation, because we have not entrenched the right to property in the Constitution. It was a gross oversight in 1981, and a tragedy for the nation. We have a chance in the next two hours of debate to remedy that wrong. I am convinced the House will do so. I certainly ask members of the Liberal Party to search their consciences deeply. If they oppose the entrenchment of property rights this time they will be gone forever as a Party in this country.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to support this important motion moved by the Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

As I was preparing a few notes to enter this debate, it struck me that most Canadians already assume that they have the property rights that this motion is addressing. They assume that they have a constitutional right to the ownership and enjoyment of property in accordance with fundamental justice.

If we went out on the street now to ask the first 25 people we met if they have a constitutional right to own and enjoy property, their answer would be yes. It is so fundamental that they would not even think twice about it. Their answer would be yes, that they have that right as a Canadian.

They would assume that no government would have the right to take away the protection that they believe they have concerning their own property. Everyone in this country has the right to be protected from others and the right to be protected from the state, if necessary.

I well remember the speech of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) in October when he reiterated once again the story of Mirabel and how the rights of those landowners had been trampled upon. I would like to quote from that speech because I think it is important how one person, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls, became so convinced that this amendment was necessary. I quote from page 10021 of Hansard:

> The people whose farms and homes were expropriated fought the issue for years, indeed decades, to do something about it. I became a believer in this resolution just on that issue alone because I always thought that if property rights had been enshrined in the Constitution, people would have had a legal access and would have been able to take a legal route to show and demonstrate to a court of law that their rights had been unnecessarily deprived.

Those are words to which we should all listen. I am grateful to my colleague for putting them on the record.

I remember also on that same day, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener talked about a Government that had confiscated lands from the oil companies. Those lands, presumably, did not count because they were north of the 60th parallel. Somehow Canadians forget all about that.

Canada is a signatory to the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights which protects property. We have our own 1960 Canadian Bill of Rights which recognizes property rights. Why, then, would we balk at including property rights in our Constitution? It is not as if we were really breaking new ground. We have heard today that many, many countries around the world have already recognized the necessity to enshrine property rights in their constitutions, countries such as Australia, the United States, West Germany, Italy, Finland and Sweden, to name just a few.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Kitchener would not be necessary if this House had accepted the resolution from the Progressive Conservative Party in 1981. The Prime Minister of the day did not follow through, presumably because the New Democratic Party withdrew its support, and it withdrew its support because then as now it is not really a Party devoted to the rights of the individual but rather to the rights of the community as opposed to the individual.

In the name of the public good—is that not a ringing phrase, Sir?—my colleagues in the New Democratic Party would happily take away from those individuals or corporations which have been successful. We are not supposed to be successful. But what that Party does not understand is that the successful can look after themselves. We need this amendment for the person of modest means, for the person of modest influence. Surely, it is the ordinary Canadian whom this amendment protects.

I listened today with great interest, as I always do, to my friend, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), who spent considerable time telling us that property rights were already protected by law, that all was well without any change, that common law was well established. It is true that common law precedents protect property to a significant extent, but the Constitution is supreme. If my colleague does not object to property being protected by common law, which he says is good enough, why would he object to those rights being written into the Constitution? "Curiouser and curiouser".

When this Bill was before this House in October of 1987, much was made of the fact that "property" would have to be defined. Of course it would have to be defined. On that same day in October when the Bill was debated, one of my colleagues to the left said he was really worried about corporations being included. A corporation is not allowed legal rights? Are corporations not to be protected from capricious actions taken by Governments? Because that is partly what this is about.

Let me finish this short intervention as I began. I believe that most Canadians already think they have these rights under the Constitution. They could not believe or they would not believe that we had not entrenched the right to own and enjoy property, a fundamental right in any democratic society. Let us correct a past mistake. Let us accept the motion of the Hon. Member for Kitchener. Let us show Canadians that what they believe is in fact true, that they have the rights they think they have only because this Parliament ensured that they have those rights. Let us get on with it. Let us move to this motion when this debate is over with a conviction that we can indeed have our property rights entrenched in our Constitution, and no one, no capricious action on the part of any government now or in the future, will be able to take those rights away from us. That is the kind of country I believe Canadians think they have.

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this debate this afternoon on the motion to amend the Constitution Act of 1982. This amendment is an amendment to the supreme law of Canada. I have mailed a copy to my constituents, many of whom are students. In many cases people who took the document framed it. It is something that is very important to them. It is something that is very readable. It deals with our basic laws.

• (1750)

Being the supreme law of Canada I believe that it outlines these laws in plain, ordinary language which most people can read and understand. The legal significance of various words and various terms are dealt with by our courts and are open for interpretation. However, in most ways, this is a very readable document. It is very simple in its construction. It has 12 headings which are: Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms; Fundamental Freedoms; Democratic Rights; Mobility Rights; Legal Rights; Equality Rights; Official Languages of Canada; Minority Language Educational Rights; Enforcement; General; Application of Charter; and Citation. In these sections various aspects of our law are dealt with.

Under the heading Mobility Rights it states:

> 6(1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada. (2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right (a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and (b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

These are accepted as very basic rights and principles. People accept them without thought. It is something that they have known they have had for years. Most constitutions of other countries entrench these rights and freedoms.

This document also protects the aboriginal people so that treaties that have been entered into prior to the entrenchment of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will be acknowledged and accepted.

I suppose the predecessors of this Charter go back to the Magna Carta of 1215 and, more recently, the Bill of Rights which Mr. Diefenbaker brought in in 1960. All of these documents have dealt with what people have felt were their basic rights and freedoms.

I know that when the settlers of Stormont—Dundas came over 200 years ago to establish themselves in that community as viable citizens they looked to the rights of property as being very definite and as being inherent with ownership. Today, there are people who have followed, farmers and business people who consider that they own property. They believe that they own property. They know that they own property. Yet here we are with our basic and supreme law which does not acknowledge the enjoyment of property as part of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The portion that the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) is asking to be amended is one that reads:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

As many previous speakers in this debate have indicated, the inclusion of "enjoyment of property" is very natural. It is something that most people believe should be part of this law. The exclusion of such makes this law very questionable since the ownership of property is inherent and as such a part of what Canadians have felt since the beginnings of our country. To buy, to sell, to retain and to hold for possession property is something that we all believe in. It is something with which we deal in our everyday lives. Not to include this in the Charter is to perhaps question if it is viable or not.

I recall a poster that the Canadian Real Estate Association sent to me a couple of years ago. It was a picture of a beautiful home in a beautiful setting on a hill. It was a very pretty scene, almost a dreamy type scene. I suppose it is something that many people hope they will be able to fulfil, that is, to own a beautiful dwelling such as that.

Earlier in debate there was some question of abuses which citizens have had to be subjected to in recent times. The concerns of Mirabel were discussed. In that case, quite obviously, more land was expropriated than was necessary for even the most grandiose of airports that could have been imagined in a development of many years. The rights of the citizens of that community have been acknowledged and land has been returned to them. Thus the proper enjoyment of property can be a part of their life as well.

Usage of property is very important. The privilege that Governments have to expropriate property has always been considered very seriously. It is something which I am sure provincial Governments and municipal Governments will acknowledge, especially as the provinces consider legislation such as the legislation which is before us. I assume that this Bill will be passed. Seven provinces and at least 50 per cent of the population are required to ratify a change to the Charter. I assume that all provinces will be giving this matter consideration and where there may be complications they will address these complications and the federal Government will acknowledge changes that will be necessary to implement this amendment.

In the Cornwall and Stormont—Dundas area much of our waterfront has been acquired by the Government through different agencies, either through the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, which manages a great deal of property for the province, or the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, which is a federal Crown corporation. These lands were acquired at the time of the Seaway's construction. They have been managed in a responsible way since then. Although from time to time we may disagree with certain positions of the bodies that are involved, generally, development has been progressive.

However, recently, it has been acknowledged that this all-Canadian seaway will not go forward for many years, and lands that are held now for some 30 years are being allowed to be developed. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is retaining ownership. Rights to develop the lands have been allowed to be extended to private developers. Long-term leases can now be negotiated. In fact, some very interesting residential development is now proceeding in the western part of Cornwall on lands that have been a virtual eyesore and which in any other community with waterfront property would have enjoyed beautiful development for many years. It has been one of the unfortunate complications the Seaway has presented for my community. Although the rights to the property remain with the federal Government in the City of Cornwall the lands are being more properly utilized and will continue to be more of a people place in the future, a place that will have mixed development such as commercial, residential and private property reserves for parks and other recreational uses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the Order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—GOODYEAR TIRE COMPANY—TAX REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, on March 7 I asked a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) about a remission order that had been granted to Goodyear Tire Company worth $50 million over four years. I asked whether the Minister was prepared to rescind that order in light of the fact that company officials had subsequently stated that they would have made some improvements that were carried out without the benefit of that remission order. If the Hon. Minister was not prepared to do that, I asked if he would at least tell us what guarantees were in place to assure the Canadian taxpayers that a benefit equal to the $50 million would be there for the Canadian people. Those two questions could have been answered either yes or no, with or without an explanation. In fact, the answer was that I was told that I was wrong. That to me, Mr. Speaker, was a non sequitur.

Was I wrong, Mr. Speaker, on March 4, 1987 when I went with the 1,574 Goodyear workers in my riding who lost their jobs at Goodyear and we demonstrated at the head office of Goodyear, and I made a commitment to them? I stated that if Goodyear would grant transfer rights to those workers to any new plant that would be built, then I would move heaven and earth to see that any form of federal financial assistance was there to ensure that that new world class tire plant was developed. On the other hand, if Goodyear would not grant those transfer rights I stated that I would equally move heaven and earth to ensure that not a single cent of federal tax money was ever spent on or for the benefit of Goodyear. Was I wrong to make that commitment? In the absence of Goodyear giving that, and it never did give that commitment for transfer rights, what we had was transition at taxpayers' cost and at the cost of those individual workers who lost their jobs and who were told that if anything ever happened again for Goodyear, they could go and line up like other workers for new jobs that might come along.

In that same year, on December 20, by Order in Council the Government that I seek to support made this benefit for Goodyear. At the time I called it a cruel joke. Was I wrong to call it that? An Order in Council is a secret approach to public business. In the course of things, it is not something that gets debated on the floor of the House of Commons. If it had not been for the assiduous work of Canadian Press reporter Gordon McIntosh, who went through a stack of Orders in Council and come out on January 8 with the evidence that, lo and behold, two days before Christmas the Government had given this undeserved Christmas present to Goodyear then, as the Member of Parliament most directly affected, I probably would not even have known about it.

The issue here is not the use of remission orders, it is the abuse of remission orders. If parliamentary reform is to mean anything, it must mean that Members of Parliament have an opportunity to be here in the House of Commons and bring to bear on the issues in this country their knowledge, experience, and the views of their constituents.

Before I entered this House on February 24, 1984, I wrote an article on Government and corporate bail-outs. I pointed out that corporate bail-outs were nothing new in Canada. Canadians had grown accustomed to private enterprise at public expense. I went on and talked about the need for a clear policy framework for this type of Government subvention to the private sector. I even concluded with the comment that failure to have a coherent bail-out policy can lead to some Alice in Wonderland like results. Little did I think that Alice in Wonderland would be visited on Etobicoke—Lakeshore, but most assuredly it was.

Was it wrong for me to write to the President of Goodyear about this remission order and point out unequivocally my views, and for him to respond on January 18 and state that he appreciated the frankness of my views? He added that the federal Government has recognized the need to revitalize Canada's tire industry by encouraging new investments. He said as he understands it, this is the purpose of duty remission. The letter was signed Scott H. Busby, President, Good Year Canada Inc.

If that was the purpose of the remission order, then why should it have applied to Goodyear? Goodyear has two tire plants left in this country, one at Medicine Hat, Alberta, with some 250 employees. There it makes bias ply tires. Goodyear has a little niche in the market that is shrinking. The success and the longevity will depend entirely upon market forces, and no amount of government bail-outs will add or subtract to the jobs or the production there. The second, and only other tire plant that Goodyear has in this country, is at Valleyfield, Quebec. It is a new and modern plant. It was built after General Motors put in its plant at Ste. Thérèse. It is tied selling. Goodyear has its market for radial tires at GM, Ste. Thérèse. Last year the Government gave a $210 million benefit to GM at Ste. Thérèse. There is little likelihood in my mind that there will be any jeopardy to the Goodyear production at Valleyfield. That is a given. That is secure.

What was the basis, what was the need for this benefit to be conferred on Goodyear? Bearing in mind that the Financial Administration Act provides for remission orders where there are anomalies and unjust results, corrective measures can be taken under Section 17 and remission orders provided. It is not the place to enact industrial policy for this country. Remission orders are hip pocket, ad hoc measures to deal with something and they are being used for industrial policy. If the Government believes that there should be something in this area, let it bring on to the floor of the House of Commons something called the tire industry manufacturers assistance act, 1988 and let Members of Parliament who have these plants in their ridings and know something about the issues deal with it.

When I dealt with the officials and tried to get some explanation about the abuse, Mr. Speaker, I felt that I was seeing an episode of Yes, Minister that had been jointly scripted by Franz Kafka and George Orwell.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to point out to the Hon. Member that the remission order granted to the Goodyear Tire Company is worth $25 million over a four-year period, and not $50 million as he has just stated. I should like also to emphasize that these $25 million are not a subsidy, but a remission on duties otherwise payable on this company's future imports.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the Canadian tire industry is making a major contribution to the economy of this country, with a production worth up to $1.7 billion in 1985. Tire manufacturing in Canada provide jobs to some 11,000 people, including 4,300 in Ontario, 4,000 in Nova Scotia, and 2,700 in Quebec. This industry has been exposed to strong restructuring pressures, to a series of takeovers, mergers and acquisitions which have resulted in a significant number of job lossses. Moreover, in anticipation of free trade with the United States, it is important, not to say essential, that the Canadian tire industry should become completely competitive on the North American market.

A remission is considered as a proper mechanism to encourage new investments in Canadian tire manufacturing firms and thus ensure the future of that industry in Canada. More specifically, the purpose of this remission of duty is to help tire makers streamline their facilities and rationalize their North American operations. Moreover, the tire duty remission program will avert future job losses and, as you know, will preserve existing jobs in this industry.

Clearly, if tire makers do not meet the expectations both of the Government and the industry, it will be the Government's responsibility to put an end to these benefits.

The Government is quite concerned about the effects of manpower upheaval and disruption from lay-offs. However, we should not loose sight of the jobs which will be secured as a result to the steps taken by the Government. I understand that only a few workers have been laid off and could still be recalled following the closing of the Goodyear plant in Toronto. I understand also that Goodyear has set up an employment priority program in Valleyfield and Medicine Hat. I know that the company has offered the same transfer rights to any new plant which could be built within the next five years, provided such employees meet the hiring requirements.

I have also been advised that Goodyear not only has met all of its legal commitments, but exceeded its obligations under the agreement it signed with its employees, when it ended its operations.

Mr. Speaker, our Government feels that the tire duty remission program will help tire manufacturers become more efficient. It is quite concerned about the long term profitability of Canadian tire manufacturers and we believe that the steps we have taken will open for them interesting opportunities in the future.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES—PRESENCE OF DIOXIN IN PAPER PRODUCTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last week was my birthday. In fact, it was on March 11, to be exact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: Thank you all very much for those kind acknowledgements and applause. But no, Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no need for you to sing Happy Birthday tonight. Do not worry about the cake because I was well looked after. I had a birthday cake here in Ottawa with which my staff very kindly provided me and I had a cake back home as well. Do not worry about that.

No, Mr. Speaker, I will not tell you how old I am. However, I will tell you that I am so old that when I was a kid, I used to get handkerchiefs as birthday presents. You remember what handkerchiefs are, do you not, Mr. Speaker? Those were the things we used to use before there were those paper tissues that we use now to wipe our noses with. Does that ring a bell?

I used to get handkerchiefs for every birthday and every Christmas. They came in all sorts of sizes and colours. Most of them, of course, were white, and the best kind were made of Irish linen. There were all sorts of other kinds as well and lots of pretty colours. I suppose they were supposed to be colour co-ordinated, but I did not understand that in those days.

Shortly after the Second World War, I got an awful lot of khaki handkerchiefs. I think they were probably war-surplus handkerchiefs. Then I used to get lovely handkerchiefs with my initials on them, the real fancy kind.

I have collected so many handkerchiefs over this period of time that I have a huge drawer full of them at home, and I never use one of them. The reason of course for that is that we do not use handkerchiefs any longer to any real extent, we use these paper tissues.

When I first started using paper tissues, we called them Kleenex. They were soft, strong and they popped up in the box. That was the only kind of paper tissue available, but now just about every paper company makes a paper tissue like that.

I am very seriously considering going back to using my old handkerchiefs again. This is because they have discovered small amounts of something called dioxin in these paper tissues and not only in paper tissues but in paper towels, coffee filters and paper plates. The levels of the dioxin appear to be small, but in fact they have been found to be higher in paper tissues and in paper towels than in some other things. Dioxin is an extremely toxic substance. Trace or small amounts have been known to cause birth defects, cancer and damage to the immune system.

The pulp and paper industry tells us that it suspects that these dioxins in paper tissues are formed by the chlorine-bleaching process that is used in the paper-making here in Canada and the United States. In Europe, they use an oxygen-bleaching process and they apparently do not have the same dioxin problem. Of course, the industry says that low levels of dioxin pose no real and immediate threat or health hazard to us, but you will recall that a toxicologist with the environmental defense fund in the U.S. said these are products from which we can assume there will be a transfer of dioxins into ourselves.

• (1815)

In January of this year dioxin was found in the waters near the MacMillan Bloedel Harmac pulp mill in Nanaimo, British Columbia. You know where that is, Mr. Speaker. It is not very far from Victoria, as you well know. A spokesman for the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans said at that time it should not come as any great surprise to anyone that there was dioxin found in the waters near that pulp mill. It may not be a great surprise but it is a matter of great concern. That is why I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary what in the heck we are going to do about it. What action is he and his Minister going to take to make sure this health hazard is eliminated?

Are we going to follow the European method and use an oxygen bleaching process to eliminate dioxin from paper products? Are we at least going to warn people that there is this problem with things like paper tissues? If we do not do something pretty soon, I am going to have to go back to putting handkerchiefs on my shopping list for Christmas and birthdays. What about it, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary? What are we going to do?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond with further details to the question raised by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) regarding the steps being taken by this Government to protect the health of Canadians from the effects of dioxins and furans in paper products.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has already informed the House that in early October, 1987, he commissioned an interdepartmental committee with representatives from Health and Welfare Canada, Environment Canada and Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada. This committee has met several times to co-ordinate the activities under way within the three departments and to ensure there is effective communication among the various groups working on this issue.

Within National Health and Welfare a task force of experts from the Health Protection Branch has met to review the preliminary data reported to the media in late September by the American Paper Institute, API, and by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, EPA. Although both American groups had hoped to have their final reports available for release in November, the necessity of ensuring these extremely complex analyses for dioxins and furans at such low levels are accurate and reproducible, resulted in an unavoidable delay.

The EPA has now released details of its kraft pulp paper mill study. The API has provided a descriptive report of its research work on the migration of dioxins and furans from paper products to contact foods and has issued its assessment of the health risk associated with human exposure in contact paper products such as diapers, tissues and bond papers. It should be emphasized that it has taken nearly three years to complete the arduous task of developing the capability to sample and analyse these products, pulps, sludges and waste waters.

Officials within the Health Protection Branch have been able to complete an assessment of available data and have concluded that the minute concentrations of dioxins and furans found in some bleached paper products are well below the level of concern for human health. A quantitative risk assessment will be carried out using data currently being developed by contractors to the API and by Health and Welfare Canada laboratories.

National Health and Welfare does not expect to complete in a few months what has taken others almost two years to carry out. This research is technically extremely difficult and costly. Nevertheless, Canada has earned a reputation as a world leader in dioxin and furan research, and is fully capable of assessing the need for further analytical data and providing the technical skill to obtain it. Assessment of the implications of such data is also complex. However, it will be completed promptly once the data under development are released.

Work is also under way in the Department of the Environment, which has the responsibility for developing appropriate control strategies for the pulp and paper industry. Department of Environment officials have set up a Canadian task force to investigate the levels of dioxin and furan releases from pulp and paper manufacturing and, as appropriate, to investigate control strategies for the industry. The task force, in connection with the provinces and industry, will implement a sampling program and make appropriate recommendations on control needs for the industry.

Officials in both departments are in direct contact with industry in Canada and the U.S. to ensure that research on this issue is properly focused and complementary. It is in the best interests of Canadians that we build on all available and reliable data rather than ignoring those studies carried out by non-governmental groups.

These are the steps being taken by the Government to ensure that paper products sold in Canada pose no adverse health risk to Canadians and to ensure that sources of dioxins and furans in Canada be identified and controlled. I think I can safely say to my hon. colleague that he can continue to use paper tissue products without fear.

Adjournment Debate

EL SALVADOR—UNION WORKERS FIRED UPON BY MILITARY/ BOMBING OF OSCAR ROMERO COMMITTEE OFFICE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on June 2, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a question about human rights violations in El Salvador in relation to Canada's support for the Government of El Salvador. In particular, I referred to a report which I had sent him the previous day that the United Workers of El Salvador, when demonstrating peacefully for the release of hundreds of political prisoners illegally held in Mariona Prison, were fired upon by the military which seriously wounded the Secretary-General of the union, Julio Portillo. I asked the Minister to request the Duarte Government to account for this violence and for the growing attacks during the last few months by the Duarte Government against trade unionists.

At the same time I asked the Minister to take up the matter of the bombing on the same day of the office of the Oscar Romero Committee of Mothers for the Detained and Disappeared. Two mothers were wounded and their files were all destroyed. The next day the Minister of National Defence threatened to break up their weekly peaceful marches if they continued to ask for news of their husbands, brothers, and sons who had disappeared. The Minister promised to answer. Nine and one-half months later he has not yet answered me.

The Canadian Government is renewing its bilateral aid to El Salvador although the Government ended that aid in 1984 on account of human rights violations which threatened basic civil and political society in that country. The present Government reinstituted bilateral aid on the explicit premise that the Duarte Government had both the will and the capacity to bring about peace and respect for basic human rights as well as judicial, economic, and social reform.

We should note that bilateral aid is not the only form in which aid can be given. It can also be given through Canadian non-governmental organizations and through multilateral institutions which can do it just as well as can the Canadian Government. Choosing to do it bilaterally sends a signal to the El Salvadoran Government and the rest of the world that our Government supports the Government of El Salvador and approves and accepts the Duarte regime as a regime worth working through. It in fact claims that the Duarte regime is improving and trying to continue to improve the human rights situation there.

The facts are the opposite. Since the time I spoke, political violence has remained at a very high level and, in fact, is increasing in El Salvador according to all independent observers. The total body count might be down, but that only reflects a decision on the part of the death squads to target the leadership of human rights organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, and other progressive groups.

The murder of Herbert Ernesto Anaya, the President of the Salvadoran Non-governmental Human Rights Commission on October 26 brought the whole question of human rights back into world attention. The Council on Hemispheric Affairs, in its Human Rights Review from 1987, once again named El Salvador as among the worst violators of human rights in the hemisphere.

• (1825)

The United Nations Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities reported on September 2, last year, that:

> . . . serious and massive violations of human rights are still occurring in El Salvador.

As I said, the body count is only one indication of the human rights situation in El Salvador. A better one is the number of military officers prosecuted for human rights violations. That number is zero.

The only part of the Esquipulas peace accord that appears to be honoured by the Salvadoran government was the amnesty they provided to the death squads who killed trade unionists and other critics of the status quo.

The U.S. based lawyers Committee for Human Rights in El Salvador testified last year that:

> The collapse of El Salvador's criminal justice system is general and pervasive. Indeed, as best as we can tell, that system has never functioned effectively in the criminal justice field.

Land reform, a key issue in El Salvador, as in most Central American countries, is failing. Duarte's land reform program has turned into a shallow farce, overseen exclusively by organizations supporting the Government. At least 19 legally recognized peasant organizations have been excluded from participation.

The most authoritative human rights non-governmental organization in Canada monitoring latin American concerns is the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America. It represents most of the major denominations in Canada and conducts both on-site visits and continual assessments of reports and documentation.

In their most recent report on El Salvador, they quote our Government's reply to the Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, in which our Government said:

> . . . the degree to which human rights are respected is a factor in determining eligibility for Canadian development assistance.

Well, to quote the Inter-Church Committee:

> In view of their careful assessment of the over-all human rights situation prevailing in El Salvador during 1987, the churches and church bodies which make up the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America believe, in accordance with the above stated policy of the Canadian Government, that there should be no new bilateral Canadian aid given the Government of El Salvador under present conditions.

I call on the Government to end bilateral aid to the murderous government of Duarte in El Salvador.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on June 2, 1987, the Hon. Member asked in the House whether the Government had any knowledge of the wounding of Julio Portillo, an official of the United Workers of El Salvador. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) replied that enquiries would be made into the case.

Our embassy has now confirmed that Mr. Portillo was shot on May 31, during a protest outside Mariona Prison. Fortunately, we understand he is recovering. There conflicting versions of what happened. One version is that he was shot by soldiers during a scuffle to remove protest placards. A second version is that he was shot by prison guards as the protesters were walking away from the site. A third version is that the protestors themselves fired the shot, accidentally wounding Mr. Portillo.

The Hon. Member also requested that inquiries be made into the bombing of the offices of the Oscar Romero Committee of Mothers for the Detained and Disappeared. Our embassy confirms that a bomb exploded in those offices on may 28 injuring two members. To date no one has claimed responsibility.

The Canadian Government deplores the incidents of violence that continue in El Salvador perpetrated by both sides in the conflict. As we have in the past, we will continue to urge further reform at every opportunity both bilaterally and multilaterally. Inquiries on specific cases such as these also serve to register official Canadian interest and concern.

The latest incident that has come to our attention concerning the United Workers of El Salvador is the arrest and beating of labour leader Umberto Centeno on March 10. Although he was subsequently released, our embassy in San Jose, Costa Rica, is investigating the incident.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.31 p.m.

FINANCE

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today, according to reports in the media, a committee of the House wants the Government to impose a tax on food. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that as far as the Liberal Party is concerned, there is not going to be a tax on bread and butter. That is our position. At the request of my Leader (Mr. Turner), my colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and I circulated petitions across Canada, and Canadians are entirely against the introduction of this new tax. However, I warn the Canadians who are listening that I would not be surprised if the Government, considering the way it and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deceived senior citizens in the matter of deindexing old age security pensions, I would not be surprised that if this Government is ever re-elected, the first thing it would do would be to put a tax on bread and butter. Don't trust them!

THE ECONOMY

CRITICISM OF CREDIT CARD MENTALITY

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the United Kingdom Government of Margaret Thatcher must be congratulated for reporting a budgetary surplus yesterday of some three billion pounds. This compares to Canada's $29-billion deficit. The burning question is why Canada spends so much more than it raises.

Not one day passes but we parliamentarians are lobbied to spend more, be it by industry, by commerce, or by special interest groups. Not surprisingly, no one lobbies us for higher taxes.

This credit card mentality must change. We as a society cannot afford to spend money we do not have. A continuation of our current policy can only lead to higher interest rates, a declining dollar, and monetary chaos. The choice is simple, prudence now or chaos later.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA THRONE SPEECH—AWARDING OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's British Columbia Throne Speech shows that Premier Bill Vander Zalm has changed his buddy-buddy relationship with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and is now trying to talk tough in order to get fair shares for British Columbia. It is true that British Columbia has not received its fair share of federal contracts.

Of the 30 largest contractors ranked in terms of the dollar value of contracts received, only one was a British Columbia firm. British Columbia has 11.4 per cent of the population but in 1986-87 B.C. suppliers got only 9.1 per cent of federal government contracts, down from 10.2 per cent in 1985-86. These were relatively small purchases amounting to only 4.1 per cent of total federal purchasing outlays, down from 5.3 per cent in 1985-86.

British Columbians do not want a Premier who is a sycophant, they do not want a Premier who attempts to be a bully, they do not want a Premier who is the cry-baby of Confederation. They want someone who will stand up, speak reasonably, and get a fair deal for British Columbia.

ABORTION

SUPPORT FOR RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, human life in whatever form is sacred. It is precious and must be protected by the full force and effect of the law from the very moment of conception to natural death. Just as it is wrong for the state to allow the taking of a life through capital punishment, it is equally wrong to take a life before birth.

Parliament, each and every one of us, will soon have to decide when life begins. There is only one logical and just answer. Life begins at conception. To conclude that life begins at any other stage is to demean the very essence of life.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms does not discriminate between human beings. Regardless of how tragic or miserable or physically or mentally impaired a life is, that life is protected by law. We all have the right to life. Why, then, should we discriminate prior to birth? It is morally wrong to do so.

To quote an individual who wrote to all of us: "Just as one cannot be a little bit pregnant or a little bit honourable or a little bit honest or a little bit faithful, a country cannot have a Constitution that holds that life is a little bit sacred. It is either protected or it is not protected."

The most important human right, the only absolute human right, is the right to life. I hope Parliament endorses this principle during the abortion debate.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SAVINGS ACHIEVED THROUGH GOVERNMENT'S CASH MANAGEMENT PRACTICES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, it was recently announced that, due to the Government's improvement in cash management practices, over $539 million has been saved since 1985. These savings are projected to reach $1.2 billion by 1991, illuminating the positive impact that modern business-like practices can have on government. It is interesting to note that this story made page 13 in The Ottawa Citizen last week.

The savings in taxpayers' dollars do not become apparent overnight. It took time for management to assess the situation and introduce new practices. Now the benefits of an increasingly efficient federal Government are starting to yield real savings. These savings represent the fact that Government does not have to continue down the path of increasing growth and waste.

The introduction of practices like prompt bank deposits and paying suppliers on time was the kind of common sense needed in the financial management of the country. I have worked for sound financial management in government on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and I know the Government will continue to do more to ensure better use of taxpayers' dollars.

SITUATION OF PALESTINIANS—CONDEMNATION OF ISRAEL BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for the courage he showed in openly and firmly condemning Israel.

We cannot support Israel when it violates the most basic human rights, as it has done in the case of the Palestinians.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that I deplore the lukewarm reaction of the Opposition Parties to this situation.

Will political considerations once again outweigh the need to defend the principles of justice and respect for human rights?

FREE TRADE SYMPOSIUM IN QUÉBEC—TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec-Est): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 I had the privilege of attending a workshop on free trade held at the Centre municipal des Congrès in Quebec City.

The workshop, which was organized jointly by the Metropolitan Quebec Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Department of Business Administration of Laval University, was attended by over 300 people.

All 300 participants, leaders in their respective fields, confirmed their support for free trade.

Minister Pierre MacDonald, a member of the Quebec Cabinet, agreed with us that Canadians believe the agreement is a good thing and that it is well accepted. He suggested that participants look for ways to get the most out of the advantages arising from the agreement.

This experience makes me wonder why, when all Canadians understand and support this historic agreement, the Liberal Party of Canada and the NDP cannot or will not understand.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the two main organizers of this event which was a success both in terms of attendance and organization, and I am referring to Messrs. H. Pierre Racine and Pierre Talbot.

Mr. Prime Minister, the people of the Quebec City area want to thank you for the historic agreement you have given us.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MEASURES URGED TO IMPROVE ROLE OF WOMEN MEMBERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was the Solicitor General in 1974 when the decision was made to admit women to the RCMP and, as a result, I was extremely disappointed today to read that their status in the force is not improving but worsening. This was the conclusion of a 215-page internal study made public yesterday through Access to Information.

At present there are 852 female constables in the RCMP constituting 6.5 per cent of all constables. When women were admitted to this male stronghold in 1974 it was recognized that special steps would have to be taken to facilitate their participation, as was done by many police forces in North America and Europe. Unfortunately, this has not been pursued properly.

Last week was Women's Week and on Wednesday we debated the adequacy of the Government's employment equity legislation. We said that that law was weak because it had no enforcement mechanism. Let the Government strengthen the legislation and take immediate steps to improve the role of women in the RCMP.

DISASTERS

LOSS OF NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN'S LIVES—DUTY TO ASSIST FAMILIES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, for generations the villagers of Sambro have sailed from their safe harbour to fish on the treacherous waters of the North Atlantic. The risks are immense and ever present, but fishing is not merely a vocation but a way of life for many Maritimers.

On March 8, 1988, the dangers of ocean fishing struck the crew of the Bonnie Lou II. A late winter storm attacked this small vessel causing damage that led to its destruction. The sea search that followed failed to find any trace of the five young crewmen. Skipper Lorne Gray, brothers Jimmie and Brian Gray, Denny Gilkie and Blair Gray were lost on the North Atlantic. Family and friends were forced to conclude that these brave young fishermen were victims of the raging ocean.

The fishermen of Sambro will continue to challenge the Atlantic Ocean despite the risks because fishing is their way of life. Parliamentarians and all Canadians moved by this tragedy will recognize a duty to ensure their families and children are helped and protected.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—DENUNCIATION OF DECISION TO EXECUTE "THE SHARPEVILLE SIX"

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today is one of those days when I regret the passing of the old Standing Order 43, because today is the kind of day on which all Members of this House might have been able to join, through that procedure, in unanimously urging the Government of South Africa to commute the hanging sentences of "the Sharpeville Six".

However, we do not have that procedure available to us so we must get up, time and again—the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and every one of us—to make it absolutely clear that we regard as abominable the decision of the South African Government to hang these six individuals, which decision contravenes every principle of liberal and democratic jurisprudence which we could imagine.

It sets a bad precedent that blacks in South Africa in particular can be sentenced to be hanged on the basis of their participation in a crowd rather than on the basis of that for which they can individually be held responsible. It certainly shows once again that the Government of South Africa intends to use every device at its disposal to combat anti-apartheid activity. That is something which all Canadians reject.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUSPENSION OF REVENUE CANADA EMPLOYEE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, on February 10, Brian Grant, an employee with Revenue Canada, was suspended for passing information to two government agencies. The information led Immigration Canada to apprehend 24 illegal aliens as well as providing the police with a vital piece of evidence which led to solving a murder.

Because of these acts Mr. Grant is now subject to an investigation for breach of confidentiality. This is a serious matter and one which must be addressed. A policy must be implemented whereby individuals in Departments can communicate information to their superiors which is detrimental to Canadians. In addition, a clear policy of inter-agency communications must be implemented. All government Departments and agencies must have one goal of ensuring that the safety and well-being of Canadians come first.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO MINISTER'S SPEECH APPLAUDED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Environment Minister, Mr. Jim Bradley, told the King of Sweden: "The polluters in the United States and the United Kingdom are waging environmental war on our countries", because Ontario and Sweden are both threatened by acid rain coming from neighbours upwind who refuse to cut pollution. Mr. Bradley pointed out: "This situation will continue and worsen unless we find the means to make a great change in the actions of our neighbours".

Mr. Bradley called upon the United States and Britain to join Canada and Sweden in the 30 Per Cent Club, a group of over 20 nations which have vowed to cut SO2 emissions by at least 30 per cent by 1994. It is refreshing to hear a Canadian speaking up on the international acid rain perspective. Unfortunately, it is a provincial environment Minister alone who has the vision to speak up.

The federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is silent on the international acid rain stage. Perhaps Mr. Bradley's remarks will give the federal Minister the courage to speak up now.

FREE TRADE

BENEFITS FOR CANADIANS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party and Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is taking a negative approach to free trade, although he is fully aware of the fact that the agreement will boost the Canadian economy and create jobs.

For 25 years now his riding has benefitted from the automotive agreement under which Ontario has recorded Canada's lowest unemployment rate—5.8 per cent—and created the highest number of jobs, while central Quebec had to cope with an unemployment level in excess of 10 per cent.

Quebecers in general and Drummondville residents in particular have every right to expect lower unemployment rates comparable with those of Ontario.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa cannot accept the fact that Quebec and my riding seek their fair share of the economic spinoffs from the agreement.

His protectionist attitude will not prevent Quebec from exporting hydro power to the United States and create 40,000 new jobs as a result of the agreement.

Our Government's balance sheet speaks for itself, and we will continue to introduce measures and programs to spur the economy, create jobs, and make life easier for Canadian men and women alike.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

SERVICE FEES CHARGED BY BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the Minister admitted there was a very serious problem with service charges of Canadian banks, but he refused to take any action.

Would the Minister explain to Canadians the fairness and appropriateness of the Royal Trust charging consumers a fee if their balance is too low? Would he explain why the Bank of Montreal charges a fee if one wants information on one's own account? And would he explain why the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Toronto Dominion Bank have retroactive service charge fees? In other words, one is informed in July of a service charge that took place in June.

Would the Minister explain to Canadians the fairness of these measures and why he continues to allow them to exist? Why does he do that?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, officials in my Department and in the Department of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, are watching this matter very carefully. The Hon. Member knows as well that the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs will be releasing a report shortly on this subject. I would remind the Hon. Member that his particular concern should be brought before the committee.

The Government is willing, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said yesterday, to act quickly after we receive the committee report. However, I remind the Hon. Member of two things. If he has evidence of any violation of the Bank Act, he should present it forthwith. Second, I remind him that our financial institution reforms, allowing trust companies greater consumer and commercial lending powers and opening up consumer and commercial lending powers to insurance companies, will add an increment of tremendous new competition which will drive down these rates and charges.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, that is the same sort of leadership Canadians saw when investors in the Principal group were going down the tube—no action by this Government until well after the fact.

PROFITS OF BANKS—MORTGAGE RENEWAL CHARGES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): The Minister will know that last year the net profit of the Royal Bank of Canada was in excess of $540 million. Yet that bank, as well as other banking institutions, is continuing to charge Canadian consumers $1.50 and upwards for the use of instant bank tellers, and institutions are charging Canadians as much as $85 for a mere signature for the renewal of a mortgage.

• (1420)

In good conscience, why does the Minister allow these practices to continue when he has a preponderance of evidence, knows that they exist, and knows that they are continuing?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my information with respect to the very examples raised by the Hon. Member is that he is totally wrong in each instance that he raises.

He is concerned about bank rate charges. He has a forum to present those concerns. I urge him to do that.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the best forum for Canadian consumers to voice their concerns on practices concerning anything, but, in particular, chartered banks, is the Parliament of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Principal Group the Minister pleaded that it was a jurisdictional problem and therefore he could not act. He now pleads that he wants Mr. McIntosh and the chartered banks to do their own policing.

I ask members of the Government when they will stand in their places and represent Canadian consumers who are being shafted by chartered banks, something which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs agreed to in comments he made in a scrum outside the House yesterday? When will the Government stand up for Canadian consumers and curtail these some 170 bank service charges?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has acted consistently on behalf of consumers, especially as regards banking practices. We have the financial institutions reform which is the most major new increment of competition for the banks that has been produced in 60 years.

The Hon. Member does not want to present his examples to the Standing Committee. Why does he not want to do that? It is a committee of this House. It is taking a long and careful look at this matter. That also is a forum as well as this House.

PETITION SUBMITTED BY CANADIAN WINE INDUSTRY—SUBSIDIZED EUROPEAN WINES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

On July 28, 1984, in the election campaign, the Prime Minister in St. Catharines promised the wine grape growers of Canada that his Government would "act to revitalize the industry and keep our farmers farming". We know that the Government has dealt a major body blow to that industry because of its proposed trade agreement with the United States.

We also know that the industry is facing another major threat from subsidized imports from European wine producers. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance this. Does the Government intend to accept and act upon the petition put forward by the wine industry of Canada today under Section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff Act and take proper action under GATT rules against subsidized imported European wines?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in at least one part of his preface in that there has been a representation made to my colleague and me by the Canadian Wine Institute as the law requires. It is a matter that has been raised with us on several occasions by the Member of Parliament for St. Catharines and by others. Naturally, we will be looking at that submission, the announcement of which was made today.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, just let me say to the Minister he does not have much time. We hope that we will get an answer soon.

CLOTHING INDUSTRY

DUTY REMISSION ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We know that the Canadian Government has promised the apparel industry of Canada a $200 million duty remission package in order to offset the devastating effect of the proposed trade agreement with the United States on that industry which it says itself threatens to lose 65,000 jobs in a very major Canadian industry.

Is the Government prepared to say now that it is prepared to go ahead and offer the full $200 million package to that industry or to give it an exemption from the trade agreement before we lose hundreds of thousands of jobs in a very viable industry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's rhetoric is getting the better of him again. There has been no offer of a $200 million duty remission scheme. That is a figment of the Hon. Member's imagination.

Mr. Axworthy: You better talk to the industry about that. You made the promise.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has said that I made the promise. I challenge him to show me where I made that promise.

• (1425)

We have had a number of discussions with the industry. We have been concerned about providing a regime whereby the competitiveness of the industry can be improved as a result of the free trade agreement. We see some great opportunities for the apparel industry in selling into that very large United States market.

It has been difficult to arrive at a consensus with the industry because of the different points of view represented by different sectors in the industry, but we are making some good headway there and we hope that we will have something to announce soon.

INCREASE IN DRUG PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. A few weeks ago a study done by the Government of Ontario showed that drug prices for over 1,000 drugs had gone up in excess of the changes in the consumer price index. That was supposed to be the highest they would increase, according to the commitments made by the Minister and the brand name drug companies.

Today another study has come out that has shown that prices of many major drugs needed by Canadians have increased—note this I say to the Minister—by more than 50 per cent.

I want to ask the Minister when is the consumer going to get the protection that he promised.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The study published in today's Toronto Star lists four drugs which supposedly increased by 50 per cent, 38 per cent, 29 per cent, and 20 per cent. Every one of those drugs is off patent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Patent Act and changes thereto would have absolutely nothing to do with, and have no effect whatsoever, on those drugs.

On the other hand, if it had not been for delays by the Opposition and the Senate, the Drug Prices Review Board would be in a position to examine those types of costs and to ensure that the companies justified them. As it is, they are not in a position to do that. But they have given the study a preliminary look and that study is seriously flawed. Anybody with any degree of self-respect would dissociate themselves from that study immediately.

POWERS OF DRUG PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1986, the Minister said: "The price of drugs will not increase by one cent, not those on the market, not those coming on the market, no drugs are going to go up". Those are the words of the Minister.

We know from the Ontario Government study that 1,000 drugs increased in price in excess of the consumer price index increase in January.

When will the Minister start putting some teeth into the board that was set up in December? Will he give it some authority now, and bring in a Bill that will at least amend it to give it the authority to roll back all unjustified price increases?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): If the Leader of the New Democratic Party had quoted me correctly he would have added to the end of that statement, "as a result of C-22", because he knows that even the most severe critics of Bill C-22 had the intellectual honesty to admit that there was nothing in Bill C-22 that could possibly have any upward effect on the prices of any drugs currently on the market.

The effect of Bill C-22 could be to determine at what point generic competition came on the market. It could have no effect on pushing prices upwards, and that is admitted by everybody who looked at the Bill in committee. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that, and he should accept that fact.

Mr. Broadbent: Dead wrong, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: The Drug Prices Review Board under the powers granted to it has ample power to ensure that there is downward pressure on the prices of drugs in Canada, once it gets into operation. The fact that it is not in operation today is as a result of delaying tactics by the opposition Parties. I cannot help that.

STUDY'S FINDINGS—REQUEST THAT BOARD HAVE POWER TO ROLLBACK PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the board that his Government has set up has no authority to roll back prices whatsoever, and it is not in an effective position to protect Canadian consumers.

I would like to ask the Minister the following question. An independent pharmacist stated today: "In 20 years of involvement with the industry we have never witnessed price increases of such magnitude by any companies as has occurred after the proclamation of Bill C-22".

• (1430)

Those are the comments of a man who is working out there. In the interest of the public, again I ask the Minister will he, for once, live up to his responsibility as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and put teeth in the board so that it can rollback all unjustified price increases?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that particular pharmacist is the person who participated in the study.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, yes.

Mr. Andre: Let me just explain one fault with the study, just one. It compares the prices in 1987 without federal sales tax versus the prices in 1988 with sales tax.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: And then says: "Oh, my goodness". That is only one of many, many faults in this study.

The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party should seek better expert advice if he wants to make some point on drug pricing.

Mr. Broadbent: That accounts for a 50 per cent increase, does it?

TARIFFS

DUTY REMISSION FOR CERTAIN IMPORTED TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Canada's apparel manufacturers are calling out for help. That is the message their representatives gave us this morning. The industry employs 110,000 people in Canada, of whom 65,000 work in Quebec. Industry representatives also told us again this morning that these jobs are at risk as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. They ask the Government, and that is once again the question I have for the Minister of Finance . . . The Minister said earlier, in his answer to the Hon. Member from Winnipeg—Fort Garry, that the Government had made no offer of a $200 million duty remission on imported textile products.

Mr. Speaker, the documents we were given by the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute reflect the opposite of what the Minister just said. I therefore want to ask the Minister whether the Goverment intends to meet its commitment to Canadian apparel manufacturers and their employees and make good its offer of a $200 million duty remission for the industry on imports of textile products from countries other than the United States.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be very careful in the positions he takes on this type of issue.

If he wants to propose a $200 million duty remission scheme, he had better also check with the textile industry to see how it feels about a duty remission scheme of that order of magnitude. I think he will find that the support he picks up in one segment of the industry, the apparel sector, he has probably lost, and then some, with other segments of the industry.

PRIME MINISTER'S ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I may be wrong in that suggestion, but a duty remission was a promise made by the Prime Minister of Canada in Sherbrooke during the 1984 election.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this offer to remit duty on imports of textile products was made by the Prime Minister of Canada during the election campaign in 1984. Once again, I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is going to meet this commitment. We have the quotes in the documents we were given by the people in the apparel industry. Could the Minister of Finance, in order to protect 65,000 jobs in the apparel industry which are being threatened by the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, meet the commitment his Leader, the present Prime Minister of Canada, made during the election campaign to remit duty on imports of textile products from countries other than the United States?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member pursues this thought he may find that he has some differences with his colleague from Shefford.

I indicated that there are different points of view between certain segments of the apparel industry and segments of the textile industry.

What we are trying to do here is to develop a package of support for the industry which can enhance its competitive position and help it adjust in the free trade environment. Those discussions are ongoing.

However, I say as strongly as I can that to characterize some of the quotes that he and his colleague from Winnipeg have as promises involving a few hundred million dollars—

Mr. Garneau: That was a promise made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —involving a $200 million duty remission scheme, is absolutely unfounded. There has not been a promise to that effect.

POSITION OF AMERICAN APPAREL MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the American Apparel Manufacturers Association which contains the following quote representing its policy:

> The American Apparel Manufacturers Association will oppose Congressional approval of the U.S.-Canadian Free Trade Agreement if the Canadian Government implements any plan to provide Canadian apparel manufacturers a subsidy—

Will the Government stand up and clearly reject this blackmail? Will it state today that it will proceed with the $200 million support for the garment industry, which was promised in the past by the Minister of Industry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the New Democrat Member is following the same faulty rhetoric as the previous two questioners have used. There has not been a promise of a $200 million duty remission scheme, and that is an absolute fact.

What I can say to the Hon. Member is that we have had ongoing negotiations since the free trade agreement with the textile and clothing industries in order to provide a basis of support which is consistent with the free trade agreement, as set out in the free trade agreement itself.

Those discussions have been difficult because, as Hon. Members will know, there are quite divergent points of view in the apparel sector and in the textile sector. It is difficult to get a package of measures which is acceptable within Canada, within the various industries in Canada.

That is what we are working on, and we will continue to work in that direction.

Mr. Langdon: The Minister knows that the Minister of Industry sent a letter with precisely that promise to the people of the industry right across the country.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SUPPORT CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, here is my supplementary: Is the Government prepared to acknowledge and live up to its promise of a $200 million support payment to the garment industry? Yes or no?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for the fourth time I repeat that there was no promise of a $200 million duty remission scheme. There was no promise, and the Hon. Member knows that. Now then, in response to the previous question I said we had negotiations with the textile and apparel industry, and it is difficult for the various sectors of the industry to reach a consensus. Still it is very important that the Government should offer the textile and garment industries a program designed to make them still more competitive.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MATERNITY BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS—RETENTION OF BABIES IN HOSPITALS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, I have had a continuing interest in making amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to allow a mother, when her child is born prematurely or has to remain in hospital because of health problems, to be able to postpone taking her maternity benefits until the child comes home from hospital.

As he also knows, I have a Private Member's Bill, but its path is long and tortuous.

• (1440)

I would ask the Minister, in fact I would plead with the Minister, that he on behalf of the Government be prepared to make those amendments now so that Melanie Williams and other women across Canada will know that this Government cares about them and their families during this difficult time in their lives.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Capilano for her question. I know and everyone in the House knows how much she is interested in this issue.

I will table this afternoon some amendments to the Immigration Act, and I am sure that the Hon. Member will be very happy with my answer this afternoon.

TELEFILM CANADA

CHAIRMAN'S SALARY AND EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Disclosure today of the details of the expense accounts of the outgoing part-time Chairman of Telefilm Canada gives rise to serious questions about the salaries and expenditures of government patronage appointees.

Jean Sirois, the part-time Chairman of Telefilm Canada, has run up expenses and salaries totalling more than $176,000 in his first 16 months on the job. The total is not in, but that is in addition to more than $400,000 in legal fees charged to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the same period of time.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister approve of these extravagant salary and expense account claims? Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether Mr. Sirois was running Telefilm Canada or casting himself for a role in Dynasty?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the travel and the expense accounts of the Chairman of Telefilm Canada are the responsibility of the board of directors of Telefilm Canada and of the Executive Director of Telefilm Canada who, up until October, was Mr. Pearson.

These accounts were approved by the board of directors and by the Executive Director of Telefilm Canada, and if the latter did not approve of them, he should never have signed them.

It is not the responsibility of the Government to approve or to restrict the travel plans of the President or the Chairman of Telefilm Canada any more than it is to approve or to restrict the travel plans of the Chairman or the President of the CBC, of the Canada Council or of any of the cultural agencies. These are independent agencies which have an arm's length relationship with the Government. As I have said before, if the Hon. Member has any proof of wrongdoing or impropriety, I have told him he should bring it forward and it will be investigated. I notice that he has not done so.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sirois is looking for a role in Dynasty and the Minister is obviously cut out for a role in Yes, Minister.

Ms. Copps: Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous.

Mr. Tobin: Acting as a part-time chairman and a part-time lawyer, Mr. Sirois has collected three-quarters of a million dollars from the taxpayers. Thank God the Prime Minister never gave him a full-time appointment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

CHAIRMAN'S EXPENDITURES—INSTALLATION OF NEW CASH FLOW SYSTEMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister approve of Mr. Sirois' extravagant spending? Does he agree with the words of the Minister of Communications who, a week ago, praised Mr. Sirois "for overseeing the installation of new financial and cash flow systems at Telefilm Canada"? Obviously the Minister's praise was flowing as freely as Mr. Sirois' cash flow. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think probably the best answer to the Hon. Member was found in an article in this morning's Ottawa Citizen written by the Vice President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. He writes as follows:

> Let's end the muckraking and intrigue about Telefilm Canada. What's at stake is too vital to Canadian independent film and television production, and domestic broadcasting, to be continually defamed . . .
> Rather than accuse others, we should pull together, building on Telefilm's legacy as a successful instrument of public policy.

He went on to list the number of films that have been made with the help of Telefilm Canada which are winning awards throughout the world.

The reason this Hon. Member and other Hon. Members of the Opposition continually attack and try to undermine Telefilm Canada is because they have no film policy of their own and they have nothing positive to put forward.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday in the House the Minister admitted that in fact a freeze on bank service charges would do nothing but keep service charges at a high level. Is the Minister prepared to accept his responsibility for the protection of consumers in the market-place by rolling back these high service charges which these ravenous and rapacious banks are charging Canadian consumers?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I answered yesterday and as my colleague answered yesterday and again today, the question of service charges is under active consideration by officials and by a committee of the House of Commons, as a matter of fact, which will be reporting in due course. If I thought that demagoguery, screeching, and yelling would help consumers, I would engage in it too, but I have a sore throat at the moment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER ROLLBACK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In light of the fact that this is the same Minister who surrendered consumers onto the altars of the multinational pharmaceutical companies a short while ago, and in light of the fact that in many small communities across Canada consumers do not have a choice of banks unlike the Minister and those in urban communities, instead of surrendering the consumers once again to these ravenous banks, is he prepared to do what any Minister who is worth his salt is prepared to do, and that is to order a rollback of the service charges?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all over the world, political leaders and different political systems are discovering that price control by the central authority carries with it costs that are more punitive than the benefits it is supposed to bring. If I believed in that 19th century principle that setting all prices at the centre would create a new nirvana for consumers, then I would be in that Hon. Member's Party. However, I believe the consumers have a right to know what they are being charged and that is why I am calling for disclosure. I believe that consumers have the intelligence to make good choices when they have the information.

I await with my colleague the report of the committee of the House for which the Hon. Member should have more respect, and when it reports we will be able to examine the situation and, if necessary, but only if necessary, take the kind of Draconian action the Hon. Member is calling for.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF FILIPINO DOMESTIC WORKERS TO CANADA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Immigration. Will the Minister advise the House if it is true that President Corey Aquino of the Philippines has imposed a freeze on Filipino domestics wanting to come to Canada? If that is so, why is it? Will the Minister also advise the House if Canada has been successful in attempting to obtain an exemption from that freeze?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for the question. I am aware that the Philippine Government is presently considering exempting Canada from the ban. The issue is presently before the Philippine Cabinet, to the best of my knowledge, and I will be reporting to the House as soon as more information becomes available.

• (1450)

I might add that in 1986 there were over 16,000 foreign domestics included in our immigration program and welcomed to Canada, and of those 6,553 came from the Philippines.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Yesterday he told MPs for the umpteenth time that the Government will establish an independent space agency. He will forgive Canadians for being confused and skeptical given the contradictory statements of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion.

Will the Minister confirm today that the Government will establish an independent space agency, that he has the full support of his Cabinet colleagues, and that this is indeed government policy?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, for the umpteenth time I will tell the Hon. Member that the creation of a space agency to manage the various aspects of our space program was in the Throne Speech. It is a government commitment. My colleague responded to one of those hypothetical questions that the Opposition likes to ask: If there were not a space program, would we have a space agency? We do not make it a habit of forming agencies and bureaucracy with nothing to do. If there were not a space program we would not have a space agency, for the umpteenth time.

Mr. Berger: If having nothing to do was the criterion, the Minister's Department would have to be disbanded.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is that Liberal policy?

[Translation]

DEMAND THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE BILL IMMEDIATELY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister make a commitment to table immediately the Bill to create the space agency, if only to show his good faith and at long last tell Canadians where the agency will be located?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, if my Department was disbanded we would not have anyone to manage a $100 million science and technology subagreement with the Province of Quebec which is paying dividends beyond anyone's imagination. I will table a Bill on the establishment of the agency and its location at the time the Government decides just what are the nature and scope of our space program. Those decisions will be made within the next few weeks.

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSURE OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT IN MANITOBA—PLIGHT OF LAID-OFF OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I will direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In the 1986 Budget the Government announced its intention to introduce an adjustment program for laid-off older workers. At the end of this month the Canada Packers plant in St. Boniface, Manitoba, will close and 400 of the most senior employees will lose their jobs. According to a study, fully 35 per cent of the employees who were laid off earlier are still unemployed.

Can the Minister tell this House when improvements to labour adjustment procedures will be in place in order to help those 400 workers?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this issue concerns the Minister of Labour, but I can tell the Hon. Member that the Minister is negotiating at present with all the provinces. I was told that the negotiations are going well and I believe the Minister could announce something pretty soon.

DELAY IN INTRODUCING ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we realize negotiations have been going on for a while but the promise was made two years ago. Will the Minister, or the Minister of Labour, make sure that the workers at Firestone in Hamilton, Massey Combines in Brantford, and Canada Packers in St. Boniface, will not be punished because of the Government's delay? Surely the workers are not at fault for the delay. Will he assure us that this program will be retroactive so that the people laid off now and who will be laid off at the end of this month will not suffer because of the government's delay of over two years?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I suggest my hon. friend is referring to individual cases and that while he is saying that a number of plants are closing, he should indicate that my Department, through the Industrial Assistance Service, has various contracts to look after not only all their older workers, but all their workers generally. I must remind my hon. friend also that only during the last year, between 1987 and 1988, unemployment among older workers went down from 7.6 per cent to 6.5 per cent, which is below the unemployment level for the whole country. When unemployment figures are going down, it obviously does not seem to please the Liberals.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, we will bring up Saint-Benoit again tomorrow!

AEROSPACE

QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE SITE OF NEW SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if I direct my question to the Minister of State (Science and Technology), Mr. Speaker, it is because he seems in total contradiction with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister of State responsible for Science and Technology concerning the establishment of a space agency. What we want to know is this: Is the Minister going to announce where this agency will be located? Will the Government make this announcement before the election, after the election or during the election? That is what we and Montrealers want to know.

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we carried out the widest possible consultation to discover all aspects of this procedure. In fact I consulted with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and he says the space agency would best be placed in Ottawa. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie says the agency would best be located in Montreal. My constituents say it would best be located in Prince George, British Columbia.

Mr. Gauthier: Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Axworthy: Winnipeg.

Mr. Oberle: We will announce that decision at the time I table the Bill.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR GREATER SHARE FOR QUÉBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister came and embraced Mayor Doré on the porch. He came and embraced Mr. Robert Bourassa at a cocktail. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion indicated to Montrealers that the space agency will be located in Montreal. You are the Governement. Are you going to make that announcement? Montrealers also want to know why, when contracts are awarded, we are limited to 35 per cent, while in the car manufacturing industry, this does not happen. In the matter of shipbuilding contracts, we were had with the frigates: Quebec got nothing. In the space industry, where we are the majority, will we be limited to 35 per cent? Why such discrimination?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, several days ago the same Hon. Member lamented the alleged fact that only 9 per cent of our science and technology expenditures are made in Québec. Today he says it is 35 per cent. Perhaps the Hon. Member could give me a percentage suitable to him and consistent with what other people are saying and I will try to accommodate him.

I said at the time we table a Bill on the space agency and we have established the necessity for it, we will at the same time announce its location.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

WESTERN CANADA—FREIGHT RATE REDUCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I put my question to the Minister of Transport. The Canadian National Railways are about to grant freight rate reductions for rough lumber transportation from British Columbia to eastern United States transfer facilities. My question is the following. Why are the Canadian National Railways encouraging the West to the detriment of the East?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, CN is of course attempting to be competitive within the new competitive pricing policies established by the National Transportation Agency. It is of course reducing rates wherever that is proper to do so or makes them more competitive in Canada.

Its competition in Québec is the trucking companies which have about 70 per cent of the market. The competition in the West comes from ships. If there are any Québec lumber companies which think that they are either not charging compensatory rates in the West, or that a rate is unjust or discriminatory, they can apply to the National Transportation Agency and request an investigation.

LE DROIT NEWSPAPER—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO MAINTAIN FRENCH LANGUAGE NEWSPAPER IN NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State who is responsible for bilingualism in Canada. In view of the Government's commitment with regard to Bill C-72 on official bilingualism, is it willing to intervene and use its influence to ensure the survival of the newspaper Le Droit, the only French language daily in the national capital of a bilingual country?

• (1500)

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern of the Member. I can advise him that we have had some consideration of the matter and I hope that we can assist. If we can, we will.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE DIRECT INTERVENTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact some members of the Government, including the Prime Minister, are very close to the Hollinger company, which owns Le Droit, and namely Mr. Conrad Black and Mr. Peter White, a former assistant to the Prime Minister, will the Government intervene directly to save this important newspaper, to rescue the 250 employees who suffer financially from the intransigence of the employer, and to ensure the continued publication of a newspaper in the other official language in the bilingual capital of a bilingual country?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we can take the Hon. Member's question as a representation. The matter is under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Egmont for a single question. This will be the last question.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture announced the 1985 Potato Stabilization Program for Prince Edward Island farmers he excluded or subtracted from the calculation of the provincial share of stabilization funds 104,703 metric tonnes of potatoes which were disposed of through the 1985 potato diversion program.

The Minister knows full well that by doing this he has cut stabilization payments to Prince Edward Island farmers by about $800,000. Why has the Minister short-changed the potato farmers of P.E.I. by this tricky arithmetic?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not short-changed any farmers. The Government has not short-changed potato farmers in any part of the country. The Government did not use any tricky mathematics to arrive at the method of payment.

The Hon. Member must recognize that it would be impossible for us to make two stabilization type payments to the same crop in the same crop year. At the request of the producers in P.E.I. and New Brunswick a year or so ago, we assisted them to enter into a cost-sharing program for diversion purposes. We also applied some financial assistance, at about that same time, in the Province of British Columbia.

In order to be fair and equitable we had to exclude the volume of potatoes which was covered under the diversion program in Prince Edward Island and in New Brunswick. We also had to exclude the volume of potatoes that qualified for the stabilization payment in the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Henderson: Will you allow a short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Question Period is over. Perhaps the Hon. Member will raise the matter again at another time.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED LEAK OF CONFIDENTIAL RESEARCH MATERIAL OF STANDING COMMITTEE—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise Hon. Members that we have a question of privilege to deal with. I call first on the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question of privilege in connection with reports which were under consideration by the Finance Committee which had, unfortunately, been allowed to get into the public hand improperly and without the permission of the committee. They were released in such a fashion as to cause some concern to the public.

As a result of a young man coming forward, that issue has now, I think, been resolved. We have received advice from the young man, who was an employee of a Member. I know the young man and I think he has learned his lesson. One of the problems with the operation here is the pressure which people are sometimes under to tell people things which they perhaps should not find out.

I think, Sir, that if you would outline as far as possible the views of the Chair on this matter, we would probably best handle it in that fashion and not proceed further by referring this specific matter to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, although it is clearly a matter of privilege because of the damage that the release of confidential material can cause, not only to the committee but to the House itself and to the integrity of Members.

I think this particular matter has been attended to and dealt with effectively, but if you could make a ruling on the issue, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appreciated by all Members of the House.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I want to express, in the strongest possible terms, my disapproval of what has happened. When a preliminary draft prepared by a staff person is misrepresented as a report by Members of Parliament, it is not only mischievous but a serious obstruction to the continuing work of the committee. The real report will not get the same media attention as the leaked draft and some Canadians will remain misinformed. This is particularly irresponsible, even cruel, in the matter of the sales tax on food.

All three Parties in this House have taken a position against imposing a sales tax on food. Yet, this morning's headlines screamed something different. My colleagues from Newfoundland tell me that there were radio shows in their areas beamed into very poor areas telling people that their food bills were about to go up by 10 per cent.

I can hardly find words to express my disapproval of the irresponsibility which would impose that kind of pain and distress on poor people who are finding it hard enough to live.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson: This morning a spokesperson for the National Anti-Poverty Organization was quoted, quite correctly, as expressing bewilderment at the idea that an all-Party committee of this House could reverse itself on commitments which had been made.

This is really quite shocking. It is unfair to the people of Canada. It is unfair to the Members of this House and members of committees who try to work with difficult and complex issues and produce recommendations which are sensible and fair.

A less important matter, although I still mention it, is that the same staff person who released this draft report on the committee's examination of the sales tax in New Zealand before the committee had expressed opinion on it, also released to the press a draft report on banking charges, again to which the committee had not yet bent its mind.

In that preliminary draft there were some errors. There is nothing wrong with a preliminary draft being less than accurate because obviously the staff keeps reviewing and checking for accuracy, with or without the input of members of the committee. But for someone to hand out a preliminary draft that Members had not looked at means that errors just go into the system and get fed around the country.

Although I would not be quite as kind as the Chairman about the young staff person involved, and I agree he is young and young people are entitled to make mistakes once—let us hope he has learned from it—I agree he should not be named or pilloried. However,he is not only an individual working for a Member of Parliament, he has also worked for our committee for six months. He is in a position to know very well the difference between a preliminary draft prepared by staff at which Members have not looked and a report that Members are in the process of adopting. For someone with that kind of inside information to hand out a draft to the media as a final draft is triply irresponsible and deserving of condemnation.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our Party, I also want to express disapproval over what has happened. What has happened is wrong. It is wrong for someone, be it a Member of Parliament or a staff member from an office of a Member of Parliament, to leak confidential information to the press. I think this is the time we should remind ourselves that this place runs because of trust. Yes, we have partisan politics and we differ on issues, but Parliament only runs because there is a certain amount of trust between the members of all political Parties.

I want to compliment the generous comments of the Chairman of the finance committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He says he knows the person in question and he thinks that person has learned his lesson. I too know the person in question and I do think this person has learned his lesson. However, that aside, I think this is a very important opportunity to remind all Members of Parliament and to remind the staff of Members of Parliament that when we are dealing with confidential work in the House of Commons, or in the committees of the House of Commons, that work should remain confidential. If it does not, it undermines the trust of this place and the integrity of all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have just heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and others. The effect of their interventions has been to inform this House that a member of the staff of a Member of Parliament has admitted leaking confidential and private research material from the finance committee to the print media.

As your Speaker, it is my humble opinion that it is in the best interests of the House that this matter now be set aside, given the fact that Members of Parliament from all three Parties who sit on the committee have made the remarks they have in this place.

However, this issue does warrant some comment from the Chair, and it is with caution that any presiding officer comments on such matters. First, let me express my personal gratitude to Members for the manner in which this was handled. Honour and trust, even in as difficult and sometimes as partisan an arena as this, is the foundation of our democratic system of government. The House of Commons can only be effective when the basic principles of honesty and trust guide its often heated debates.

I wish to remind those who work for Members that while they enjoy some of the privileges of the House, they also bear, in our more modern parliamentary system, the very heavy responsibilities of trust, honour and confidentiality. It is rare indeed that such matters have occupied the time of this House and, given all that goes on on Parliament Hill, it is a credit to all those people who serve us so well that such incidents are the extreme exception.

I must say to all Hon. Members, and to everyone who works in this place for Hon. Members, that if it had not been for the frank explanation and the way in which all three Members on this committee, representing all three Parties, have intervened, this breach of privilege could easily have been referred to the appropriate committee with all the consequences that would ensue.

However, there was another participant in this incident. The confidential report of the finance committee may well have been released without proper authorization as, in fact, of course, it was, but someone else also decided to print or report parts thereof. The new, reformed committees of the House have greater powers than ever before. They are now inquiring more often into areas of vital public interest. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), in what, I think, was an extremely lucid intervention, has pointed out exactly the harm to the public interest that flows from either the irresponsible leaking of material or the injudicious use of it once it is leaked.

To ensure that these committees are able to function in a climate of trust, Members are agreed that their work should not be impeded, delayed or obstructed or brought under undue suspicion by any premature publication of their in camera proceedings or draft reports. The good relations between the House and the media are also founded on principles of trust and honour. Those of us who have spent time in this place know that it is impossible to have a democratic community unless there is that relationship between those who are elected and those who report on us.

I can only hope that in the future, the media might reflect on the conventions that the House has imposed upon itself in matters of confidentiality of committee reports, and consider carefully how any decision it might make potentially to breach the privileges of the House impacts on the important principles of parliamentary government and can do great harm to the public interest.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in relation to the goods and service tax. This report deals specifically with the committee's visit to New Zealand between February 14, 1988, and February 23, 1988.

The committee held 22 meetings in New Zealand with the architect of the tax, the Minister of Finance for New Zealand, Roger Douglas, many of his colleagues, public officials, independent businessmen, legal and accounting people. In all we saw 37 witnesses. The report is a very comprehensive report.

Without going into the full recommendations, I might say for those who have leaked this report that the committee makes no recommendation with respect to the taxing of such necessities as food.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Is leave to introduce the bill granted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall that Bill be read for the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a correction to the answer I gave this afternoon to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). For obvious reasons, instead of saying "The Unemployment Insurance Act", I said "The Immigration Act". I would appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that that correction be made. I did mean the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-287, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act with regard to remission orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill that I am introducing for first reading today amends the Financial Administration Act pertaining to remission orders. It is certified consistent with Standing Order 108.

Very briefly, the Bill would provide an opportunity for this House to scrutinize and to approve remission orders that involve amounts in excess of $1 million. It would also require the Minister of Finance to assess, through a justification report, whether amounts remitted are compensated by a financial benefit for Canada.

In conclusion, I note that this is a matter the Auditor General has drawn attention to, the Public Accounts Committee has considered it, and I have personally raised it several times in the House in respect of the remission order granted to Goodyear Canada Inc.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL FOR STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you would find that there is unanimous consent to put the following motions immediately. The first reads:

> That, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to travel to eastern and southern Ontario from March 20 to 23, 1988 inclusive; to Europe from April 8 to 17, 1988 inclusive; and to Washington, D.C. and Boston from May 1 to 4, 1988 inclusive; and for the purpose of continuing its ongoing study of the economics of nuclear power in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

> That, the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to travel to Washington, D.C. from April 18 to April 21, 1988 inclusive to study Members' services in the U.S.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

PETITIONS

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS OVER GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada who are concerned about the low-level flight training of pilots of NATO countries at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador. This is disrupting many of the native people whose lives are based on hunting, fishing, tourism, and mining, and which they feel provides a more stable, healthy, and peaceful employment there.

The petitioners point out that this program to train pilots to fly under radar into eastern Europe is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action tending to endanger world peace. Therefore, the petitioners ask Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister will end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of residents of the constituency of Spadina. They point out that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed agreement between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, the Prime Minister having no mandate to negotiate such a deal with the United States. Furthermore, this deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan economic, social, and cultural programs that we need, and it would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

For those reasons, the undersigned ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on this trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement has been signed.

ARM'S CONTROL

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present today which has been signed by members of my constituency of Hamilton West and the neighbouring riding of Hamilton—Wentworth. The petitioners are members of the congregation of Westdale United Church in the City of Hamilton. Among other things they point out that, under successive Governments, Canada's weapons and weapon components industry has doubled in the past eight years.

They call upon Parliament to establish a review committee whose function would be to monitor Canada's policy in connection with this industry, and until such time halt further expansion of this industry in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by Canadians from across the country. The petitioners are residents of Ottawa, Toronto, Edmonton, and Calgary. The petitioners urge the Government of Canada, and particularly the Minister of Immigration, to amend the legislation, Bill C-55, dealing with the refugee determination system, in order that the prescreening stage and the implementation of a safe third country would be removed from the proposed legislation and thereby make the legislation more fair, just, and equally effective. I table the petitions for the consideration of the Government and of the House of Commons.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions both of which deal with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade agreement with President Reagan of the United States.

The petitioners object to the fact that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the United States. They object to the fact that the promise made in the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised has been forgotten.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present two petitions. One is signed by some 60 residents of the community of Fort Frances, Ontario to add to the more than 1,000 signatures that have come from that community on this same matter.

The second petition is signed by a vast majority of the adult residents of the community of Mine Centre, Ontario.

Both petitions complain of the unfair implementation of the northern residents' tax allowance which the petitioners believe to be discriminatory in granting such an allowance to some communities whereas other adjacent neighbouring communities are excluded from the beneficial operation of that northern residents' tax allowance.

The remedy that the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament for is that all communities in the remote and isolated constituencies in this country designated as Tier III constituencies under the Canada Elections Act should be designated as being eligible to receive the northern residents' tax allowance.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have been successful in getting an answer to my Question No. 209 some 147 days after the question was put on October 15. The Government finally gave me an answer on March 10. We all know that my request was in accordance with the regulations of Standing Order 64(3), and the Government did not obey the Standing Orders which state that there be a 45 day limit on the reply.

Nevertheless, I was so successful in convincing the Parliamentary Secretary, that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), has asked me to intervene in his name today and perhaps use my good offices to try to convince the Parliamentary Secretary to answer Question No. 205, which has been outstanding since October 8, 1987, although a reply was requested within 45 days.

I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary, in view of the good relations that we have established in the last few days, could not see fit to ask the appropriate authorities to answer that question today, or perhaps tomorrow at the latest.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would remind my hon. friend that Question No. 209 was answered. The difficulty with that question was that it was broad, it encompassed many government departments, and it was both time consuming and very expensive. Historically I have asked for a chance to cut the questions down to something more limited so that we can respond more quickly.

In connection with Question No. 205, it too cuts across two government departments. I understand that answers are available for both government departments. It is currently in translation and it should be available very shortly, in spite of the intervention by my hon. friend.

Mr. Gauthier: I wish to remind the Hon. Member that, in reforming the rules of the House, Members of the House cannot put more than four questions. The Parliamentary Secretary knows that, and we all know that. Indeed, if the question I put on October 15 was an extended question requiring some work and research, I do not apologize for that. I am only allowed to have four questions on the Order Paper. If the Parliamentary Secretary allows more, perhaps we will put more questions, and he will have to give shorter answers to shorter questions.

Mr. Hawkes: Perhaps I have not made the situation as clear as I might have, and I will try once again. If the Hon. Member had asked those questions in series he would have received 80 to 90 per cent of the answers within the required 45 days. When the Hon. Member asks such a broad question, I cannot come to the House and answer it until all parts of the question are answered. Therefore, if there is one particularly obscure or difficult piece of information to be obtained, or there is a slow Minister, then the Member is indeed cutting down the flow of information to himself. He would be well advised to follow my advice.

Mr. Murphy: The Parliamentary Secretary is well known for rising in this House and condemning others for not getting their petitions in on time, and complaining about all sorts of misdemeanours, in his mind. I find it very interesting because we on the opposition side have explained that quite often caucus members are in committee and they are not here to present the petitions on time, quite often they are travelling or doing other work, and that they have other priorities. Therefore, petitions cannot always come in in a very quick manner.

However, the Parliamentary Secretary did not accept that. Now we hear excuse after excuse; the Ministers are slow—and I am not sure if he is talking in terms of time or mentality—but he has excuse after excuse as to why the Government does not answer questions. Today he does not answer one question.

It seems to me that there are 40 cabinet Ministers, almost the equivalent number of Parliamentary Secretaries, goodness knows how many special assistants and senior advisers, and obviously those questions can be answered much more quickly than this. I would hope the Parliamentary Secretary takes this message back to the slow Ministers and to others.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, as of Monday of this week, we had responded to 87.4 per cent of the questions. There are 36 questions outstanding out of 285. The average length of time for response is going down. I continue to indicate to the House the complexity of questions, the number of departments they run across, and if there is one difficult situation, it slows down the whole answer.

• (1540)

Indeed questions more carefully targeted to reflect the original purpose for Order Paper questions would facilitate the work of the Government. Later, on a point of order, I will have something to say about petitions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

PETITIONS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, operating on the advice of the Chair last week, I should like to bring two situations regarding petitions to the attention of the House.

Today I was able to respond to 37 petitions which were laid upon the Table in the last two weeks. All petitions laid upon the Table in the last two weeks have already been responded to.

Some 18 of the 37 petitions were certified in late November or early December, 1987, and not brought to the House until the month of March, 1988.

As Hon. Members send the Government's answers to petitioners, I hope they will remind petitioners that the delay is not the fault of the Government but indeed the fault of Hon. Members for taking so long to bring petitions before the House after they are certified.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that he has answered the petitions which were brought forward in the last two weeks. Is he indicating that he has answered all petitions on the subject of free trade brought forward in the last two weeks?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, between March 2 and March 9, I think we have done that.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-79, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act and other Acts in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to open what we hope will be a very short debate at second reading stage of Bill C-79. We want to get the Bill to a legislative committee where it can be examined in detail and where witnesses can be heard.

We appreciate that there is a continuing need to review the existing Canada Elections Act as a result of a recent committee hearing. However, we feel that Bill C-79, which has had a great deal of discussion among the Parties prior to this point in time, should proceed to committee in order to get the committee work started.

We assumed office in September, 1984. In response to various reports of the Canada Elections Commissioner, the Government began to review the Act and to consider various proposals for improvement. As a result of this exercise, the then President of the Privy Council published a White Paper on election reform in June, 1986, which announced the Government's proposals for reform of the Act. The paper was an important initiative of the Government. It served as the basis upon which constructive discussions developed among representatives of the three Parties.

I say without any hesitation that we have made a great deal of progress in trying to understand the legislation. I will discuss in a moment some possible amendments.

The legislation improves one of the most important pieces of legislation of any truly democratic society, that is, legislation dealing with the electoral process. It is for that reason that we moved slowly and in close co-operation with my colleagues in both opposition Parties.

I would say that we are confident that the result of this legislative revision will be to create a more fair and more equitable Canada Elections Act which is in step with not only the modern electoral process but with the changing needs of the electorate. A clear priority in the legislation is our desire to facilitate and extend the right of Canadians to vote.

I would suggest that one of the shortcomings of the present legislation in this regard—and I say it as a candidate and as a former campaign manager—is the problem encountered by urban voters who find, when they come to the polling station, that they are not permitted to vote because their names are not on the voters' list.

In ridings such as Simcoe North we can fix that problem because people in rural areas are entitled to be sworn in at the poll. It is especially important when we have a summer election or an election in which the enumeration process took place during the summer. We find that people living in urban areas are, for some reason or other, not enumerated and therefore, if they do not catch it, not able to vote on voting day.

We think we have corrected that problem in the Bill. Often the problem is not a deliberate one; it is the result of an oversight or an error. After all, the point of the whole process is that Canadians should be allowed to vote, so we have included a solution in the Bill to correct present problems.

Let us move on to people who are absent from the electoral district on election day and inmates awaiting trial who are unable to get to their own polling station. We will make it easier, through the Bill, to vote in an advanced poll and easier to vote at the office of the returning officer whose office will be more accessible. We are also making it possible to vote in the office of the Deputy Assistant Returning Officer.

As well, we are giving federally-appointed judges the right to vote. There will be an enforcement commission to enforce the Act and to decide when prosecutions are necessary, and the trial will be held in a federal court as opposed to a provincial court.

There are other items in the Bill which I should like to highlight, for example proxy voting. It will be open to anyone absent from an electoral district on election day. However, we will not get into the business of wholesale proxy voting. It will be made an offence to solicit a proxy or be a proxy voter more than once.

[Translation]

From now on, in accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the mentally handicapped will be allowed to vote.

[English]

Seasonal residents will no longer lose their franchise through restrictions to having to vote at their principal residence. They can now vote in the district of their second residence. This is a matter of great interest to a riding such as mine. Simcoe North has a great many seasonal residents who may wish to cast their vote where they are spending the summer. I would also say the same of the riding of the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) in that several residents would be in the same position.

Mr. Darling: That's right.

Mr. Lewis: Actually I would say that I have more summer residents in my riding than he has in Parry Sound—Muskoka.

Mr. Darling: You have not.

Mr. Lewis: In any event, we are taking steps to accommodate the physically handicapped at all central polls, offices of returning officers, and advance polls. They will all be required to have level access. Other polls will have level access wherever possible, or an explanation from the returning officer will be required.

• (1550)

I would say on a personal note that there was some editorial comment on this item in The Toronto Star. I think it was well intentioned in that The Toronto Star was promoting access for the disabled everywhere. I would point out to those who are concerned about such access that the Bill does state that the returning office must have such access, but there are certain polling stations in rural or remote areas where there may be difficulties with access. I believe that that is taken care of in the enumeration. We have taken great strides to overcome the problem, and speaking on behalf of the Government, I would hope that this is something that would be addressed by witnesses at committee if they so desire. If there are any improvements we can make in this area, we are certainly open to them.

[Translation]

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the ban on the sale of alcohol on election day and on the solicitation of votes by non-residents of Canada has been repealed.

[English]

For some time there has been the feeling that to ban the sale of alcohol on election day hearkened back to a time when votes could be won with the use of alcohol. My friend, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka, and I come from tourist areas. We do not see that it is any problem to have alcohol sold on voting day and still respect the traditions of a free and democratic election.

There are other changes to the Act in which the House may be interested with respect to the returning officer and his ability to delegate his responsibilities. In an effort to involve young people in the election process and at the same time to provide employment for young people, one of the things we did was to allow the returning officer to appoint young people who are 16 and 17 years old as enumerators, as district returning officers or as poll clerks and allow them to go outside the official electoral districts to participate. We think this broadens the process and gets young people involved in the electoral process earlier. We feel that they can do the job. We have no hesitation in making that particular amendment.

We have made certain changes in the provision for the nomination of candidates. A candidate will need to have 100 electors sign nomination papers in order to file. Those of us in the House who have been through the electoral process realize that it is a very serious matter. We have no difficulty with what are often called fringe candidates, but we appreciate that running in an election is a serious business and we want to make sure that we have entirely serious candidates in the field.

We feel that these amendments constitute an important step forward for anyone who believes as we do that we must upgrade our legislation in order to meet the objectives and the aspirations of our times. There have been very extensive negotiations and discussions between the Parties on certain items with a view to improving the Act as printed. I point particularly to the question addressed in the Bill of the right of Canadians abroad to vote. We appreciate that because of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, this issue must be addressed. I can say without hesitation that my colleagues in the opposition Parties felt the need to address it as well.

I would suggest that we had trouble with the mechanics of how we could implement the system in fairness not only to Canadians living abroad but also to people trying to organize elections. We have had discussions with the Table Officers as to how the issue might be addressed. Originally I had thought that a reference could be made by the House to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. I was advised by the Table Officers that it might be easier, when this Bill goes to a legislative committee, and as I said we hope it might go this afternoon, to ask the Elections, Privileges and Procedure Committee at the same time, by letter,to specifically address itself to that part of the Act as a reference or as an undertaking of the committee. At the same time we would indicate at committee that we would amend the Bill to delete that part and let the committee come up with a workable way of addressing the problem. I suggest that that is one way that that might be dealt with in the spirit of co-operation.

We also looked at certain other items in the Bill and I would signal that we are looking at amendments to those. Specifically, we looked at the question of opinion polls. The Bill has certain provisions for the publication of questions asked, who paid for the poll, when it was done and the like. As a result of representations from the media and others, we found that certain parts of the media like the print media would be able to handle that easily, whereas the electronic media could not handle that information within the context of a broadcast. We are looking at some amendments to that, amendments which have been discussed with my colleagues.

As well, we looked at the difficulties of reporting cash flow and other items with local associations. We looked at what has been referred to as premature publication of results and the difficulties we face in a country as big as this where the polls are closed at eight o'clock in Newfoundland and some four and a half hours later in British Columbia. I think we will see some amendments to that provision at committee.

In an effort to facilitate the election, we dealt with agents at the poll. There has been a suggestion that there should be two rather than one, and we have no difficulty with that particular amendment.

We looked at the enforcement commission provision. I speak for my colleagues, I am sure, when I say that members of all Parties want to be sure that the enforcement commission is seen to be non-partisan and is made up of the best people possible. We are looking at wording which would take out any suggestion of partisanship in the process of appointments to that particular commission.

I do want to conclude shortly to allow my colleagues to address the Bill, but I want to say something, if I may, on the report which was tabled recently by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. Hon. Members will recall that we encouraged the committee to examine carefully the subject of election expenses.

[Translation]

To that end, Mr. Speaker, the Committee summoned some Elections Canada officials who, as expert witnesses, explained some of the Bill's difficult and complex aspects.

[English]

In its report, the committee recommended that the Act be amended as quickly as possible so that it defines precisely those election expenses which should be the subject of spending controls and rebates. I think it is fair to say that all of us who serve in this House share this objective. We are all seriously concerned about any ambiguities in the Act in this regard.

In addition, I think it is self-evident that this is a matter of great interest to the public and the media and there have been increased demands for clarity. It is because we share those objectives that we are committed to trying to find a way to clarify the issue of election expenses.

There have been discussions among officials of all Parties with a view to resolving this matter. The discussions have not been finalized yet, but once we are in a position to finalize them, we will look at the relevant legislation as quickly as possible.

We appreciate the positive comments that have been made by my colleagues in the opposition Parties with respect to this Bill. We sought the co-operation and support of the Opposition and it is our sincere intention to continue to proceed, in a non-partisan and constructive spirit, with a review of any remaining issues.

• (1600)

I can assure you that the Government is prepared to listen to all views, those of our friends opposite and witnesses in committee, with a view to improving the Elections Act. I urge the opposition Parties to expedite this matter to committee stage so that we can start hearing witnesses, and get a feel for the amendments which have been agreed upon so that they can be drafted and moved. It is in the best interests of all Canadians who vote and in the best interests of all candidates who run that the technical matters in the Bill which are not at issue be proceeded with so that the Chief Electoral Officer can make the required changes. Therefore, I urge my colleagues opposite to give a speedy passage to this Bill so that the committee can start to hear witnesses and do its clause-by-clause work.

I want to close by thanking my colleagues opposite for their co-operation at this point and I hope we can move the Bill into committee as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first of all that as far as the Liberal Party is concerned, we welcome Bill C-79 as a step in the right direction. For the most part, the Bill proposes a number of relatively ordinary and minor changes to the Canada Elections Act, although in many cases, the changes will prove very convenient for Canadian voters. We are not talking about any major change in philosophy or policy with respect to the legislation. What we have here is mainly a set of recommendations by the Chief Electoral Officer, set forth in a 160-page document about the size of a dictionary or telephone book.

I agree there has been a lot of discussion among the Parties about reaching a consensus on the content of the Bill and expediting this legislation with the unanimity that has become a tradition in the House of Commons when considering changes to the Canada Elections Act, which means refraining from all partisan debate.

There was a great deal of consultation, and I want to thank the Minister acting for the Government House Leader for inviting my colleague in the New Democratic Party and myself to his office, to review some of the more contentious and delicate aspects of the Bill. There are several, and I will get back to these later on.

I would say that on the whole, the Government has done a good job. However, I think it is unfortunate the Government neglected to propose amendments that would have had the effect of clarifying the definition of election expenses. I will get back to this. I mention this right at the beginning of my remarks because what will probably sink this Bill is the fact that the Government wants to have it passed quickly this afternoon. Indeed, not so long ago the Minister wrote to me suggesting that perhaps we might agree to put up only one speaker per Party. This could have been arranged had the Government made it clear it wanted to amend the Elections Act to clarify the definition of election expenses, and to establish the difference between what we call election expenses and campaign expenses. Unfortunately the Government does not seem to be inclined to do that, so perhaps the Minister will have to show more patience because, having brought the matter up with Party colleagues and in our caucus this morning I must regretfully tell the Minister that a few of my colleagues will want to speak to this Bill.

[English]

It would be my pleasure to agree with the Minister's suggestion that we deal with the Bill very quickly this afternoon, but the fact that the Government has not seen fit to bring in amendments to clarify the definition of election expenses has spurred some of my colleagues to action. Some of them will want to speak on this Bill and try to convince the Minister of the importance, if not the urgency, of amending the Elections Act to clarify the definition of an election expense.

Let us have a look at some of the issues in this Bill. Everyone agrees that there are some small housekeeping items which are not too contentious. There were in general six issues discussed among the Parties and we were able to come to an agreement and resolve our differences on all of these issues.

The Minister referred earlier to opinion polls. Bill C-79 wanted to impose on all media, whether electronic or print, the requirement that they provide all information related to polls, such as who commissioned it, the size of the sample, when it was taken, and so on. However, the electronic media told us that it is very difficult in the short time they have available, either on radio or television, to provide all this information. I would have preferred to have a standard for the print media and another one for the electronic media so as to make sure that both were at least obliged to provide some information. However, since the Government agreed to some of our representations, I agreed, with some reluctance, to drop this from the Bill. I think we can live with it because in good part we have to admit that the print media has been providing all the information for a number of years already.

With regard to local riding associations, there again our Party would have preferred, the proposal that donations over $100 to riding associations be divulged, receipted and so on to have been mandatory rather than voluntary. We think to propose a voluntary system is window-dressing. It does not solve the problem. It is an attempt to say we have dealt with the problem but it is not a real solution. However, you cannot win on all fronts.

We said we would have liked annual returns because if riding associations are to collect moneys subject to the rebate, it means the public at large has been contributing through taxes. In this case, not only do you want to know who gave money to the riding association in amounts exceeding $100, you want to know what the riding association is doing with the money. The Bill did not contain that requirement. There was no provision for mandatory annual returns by riding associations. We thought that if they were to benefit from rebates and so on, they would have to be on the same level as Parties and candidates during elections, all of whom have to provide a return and account for what they have done with the money. However, we agreed to the Minister's proposal that this could be removed from the Bill rather than have a proposal which is not perfect.

However, I would ask the Minister if he would not be agreeable to referring this subject to a committee. I think we could work on this, improve it, and come to a solution if it were.

I know the Minister is willing to refer the question of voting abroad. If this also were referred, and it is a smaller item, it could be done in the same package and it would take much less time than the other issue. Maybe we could hear witnesses, too. At the same time as they are dealing with voting abroad perhaps they can tell us what they think about local associations having to divulge their donors, having to provide annual returns, and so on.

• (1610)

The Government had originally decided that there would be only one agent representing a candidate at the polls. This became a problem in my province because we have traditionally had two. I have to give credit to the Government and the Minister who has expressed willingness to try to get back to two representatives per candidate. It has been suggested that we could restore partially what was in the Elections Act, that is, that one candidate could have two agents at the polls, but not at the counting. In my province it is mainly for the counting that we want to have two agents. I wonder whether it would not be possible through amendment at committee stage to try to restore what is in the Elections Act because that would suit a major province of the country which has 75 seats. Perhaps the Minister would like to reflect on that.

With regard to Canadians voting abroad, in principle we have welcomed the move by the Government to allow Canadians who happen to live abroad to exercise their right to vote. We differ in that we think that the proposal in Bill C-79 is too wide-ranging, too much subject to abuse, and has been put together too quickly. This is the reason that some of us have suggested to the Minister that this be stripped from the Bill by way of amendment and that we have a separate reference to the committee. The Minister has agreed to this and I would like to give him credit for that. I believe that if we take the time to think about it and ask Canadians to come before the committee to give us their views, we can devise a better system for allowing Canadians abroad to vote.

We are talking about a large number of people. Canadians abroad in the U.S. alone amount to about two million people. That figure is probably double world-wide. Some people have Canadian citizenship just because they were born in Canada. They may have moved when they were only a few months old and may have never lived in Canada since then. This Bill would give them the right to vote. I do not think it is fair for someone who is not really a Canadian, although he may have Canadian citizenship, to have the right to vote I would like to know what my fellow Canadians think about this. I would like to give them a chance to appear before the committee and tell us where to draw the line.

Obviously to give only Canadian Forces personnel and people working abroad for External Affairs the right to vote is not enough. That is clear in my mind. There are a number of people on contracts with various companies, for example people working for Bell Canada installing a telephone system in Saudi Arabia or some other part of the world. Why should they lose their right to vote because they happen to be working abroad when an election is called?

It is a matter of determining who has the right to vote, under what conditions, and how to facilitate that. I believe that to refer this to the committee is the proper route. The Government has decided to do that and the Minister should take credit for that.

With regard to the enforcement commission, I and my Party are quite satisfied that we are going to change the way the Act is enforced. Very recently we had hearings before the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. Elections Canada was called upon to appear, and the Elections Commissioner was questioned on the procedures he uses to police and enforce the Act. Bill C-79 is bringing forth a whole new concept. We will now have not an Elections Commissioner but an enforcement commission made up of representatives of all Parties. I think that is a great step forward.

We have been discussing this at length among the Parties. I understand that the last proposal of the Minister is that the chairman and the member of the enforcement commission representing the public be appointed by a resolution of the House of Commons. I think that is fair. I think we should have another resolution which would contain in whole the representatives of each political Party as they are agreed to.

In devising such a system we would need, first, maximum consultation among the Parties. The last thing we want is a commission staffed with people who are there only to protect the interests of their own Party. We want a level of quality of people sitting on that committee which goes beyond the mere protection of the interests of a political Party. We want people with vision.

There is a risk with such a system, that being that if only people protecting interests are sitting around the table the temptation may exist to say, "We will not lay charges against your guy in such a riding provided you do not suggest that this guy of our Party in another riding broke the law". I do not think this is the way in which this should be approached. We want the type of people who are going to be impartial as much as possible. I want maximum consultation among the Parties at the time of appointment in order that we have a crew of five very solid and competent people who will do a good job for us and who will police the Act in an impartial way. I believe that to present the appointments in two motions like this in the House of Commons could go a long way toward providing this enhanced consultation.

I would now like to come to the other part of the proposal, especially the latest proposal made by the Minister in letters to us and also in the speech he just made. This is the more difficult part. We on this side of the House are saddened that the Government would not seize the opportunity of making extensive amendments to the Elections Act without bringing forward those amendments which, in our opinion, are most urgently needed.

I would like to refer to the extensive hearings which have been held by the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure in the case of the election expenses of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse). We heard several witnesses and rapidly came to the determination that the Election Expenses Act is not clear enough when it tries, and I use the word "tries" advisedly, to define an election expense. I would like to quote some of the recommendations made in the eighth report of the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. It reads in part as follows:

> The difficulty with the limited scope of the definition of election expenses was alluded to in a document produced by Elections Canada on 9 July, 1984—

—just after the last election—

> —entitled Guidelines Respecting Election Expenses of Registered Political Parties. It was further amplified in a telex to all political parties on September 1, 1984—

That was only three days before the last election. Maybe it was too late to change the Elections Act then, but three years have elapsed since that time. The Government has been reminded time and time again that there is a problem with the definition of election expenses, but it has not moved to correct the situation.

First, I was surprised it would not be included in Bill C-79, but let us be honest, Bill C-79 was written almost a year ago. But after the hearings of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, I cannot understand why the Government would not realize that there is a gaping hole in the rules defining election expenses through which one could drive a truckload of unreported election expenses, making a mockery of what I thought was the principle that election expenses were to be limited to give an equal chance to all persons running for election whether they be rich or have a medium income and medium means to run their campaign. The committee report states:

> It was pointed out time and time again during the hearings that the present definition in the Act of those campaign expenses that are "election expenses" is vague and imprecise. Your committee is also concerned that the vagueness of wording and interpretation may lead to abuses during the next election.

That is clear enough. I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, in case you may have been busy doing something else and was not able to attend this committee, that this is a unanimous report. The majority of the committee was composed of members of the government side, and this is a unanimous report. We all came to the obvious conclusion that the Act is too vague.

[Translation]

And that being said, Mr. Speaker, the recommendation we finally made was again unanimous: Your Committee recommends that the Act be amended as quickly as possible in those sections dealing with expenses so that it precisely defines those election expenses which should be the subject of spending controls and rebates. That is crystal clear. I repeat that the Committee of which I was a member and with me, one of my NDP colleagues, nevertheless consisted of a majority of Conservative Members who in fact drafted the recommendation.

Furthermore, some Conservative Ministers commented on the Canada Elections Act, and I am thinking of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), who was glad the Committee decided not to condemn his actions following the hearings, possibly because the Committee failed to obtain all the information it needed, but in any case, although the Minister was vastly relieved, he did have some comments about the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker, I have here an article that appeared in Le Devoir on February 29, and I quote: Masse in favour of amending the Canada Elections Act which was used against him.

[English]

"Masse rails against election expenses law. Masse wants election rules simplified".

[Translation]

Upon reading these articles, we realize that here again, the problem is that the definition of election expenses is not sufficiently clear. I don't know what the newspapers will have to say tomorrow morning. I don't know what you will see on the TV News this evening, Mr. Speaker, or what we will hear on the radio. However, I am sure that all the information media will be amazed to hear the Government missed a golden opportunity to amend the Canada Elections Act by clarifying the definition of election expenses. Especially since an ad hoc committee consisting of Members of all three Parties, the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, has been sitting for some time and made recommendations that would provide for a more acurate definition of election expenses.

We want to prevent abuses, and the investigation carried out by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is quite clear on this matter. If the legislation is not amended, the door will be wide open for all sorts of abuses during the next election.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee hearings have demonstrated that it is now possible to have paid volunteers in an election campaign. A contradiction in terms, paid "volunteers"!. That is exactly the ruling which Elections Canada made in connection with certain election expenses of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who had paid representatives in the polling stations and other people working on his election a salary which was under the commercial value. The ruling of Elections Canada is to the effect "... that these election expenses are not subject to the limit. We now have a new term "campaign expenses".

From now on, therefore, we will have campaign expenses which are not subject to the election expense limit, and also election expenses.

Which means that anyone can exceed the imposed ceiling which is between $35,000 and $40,000, depending on the riding and the number of voters, by as much as $15,000 or $20,000 over the election expense limit. Which means that the spirit of the legislation is no longer respected and those who have lots of money can spend a great deal by using existing loopholes which the Government refuses to eliminate.

Mr. Speaker, I have just said that we now have "paid volunteers" people whose expenses on behalf of a candidate can be reimbursed such as car-renting, hotel and food costs; these are not election expenses, because the person whose expenses are being reimbursed is considered a "volunteer". Fancy that!

Again, this means that people in the know who take the trouble of learning about these loopholes can easily spend some $20,000, and even more over their election expense limit, without being subject to any kind of sanction by Elections Canada. This means that there is no longer equality among the candidates.

We are coming back to the old system where there were no expense limit and where those who had lots of money had a definite advantage over those who had lots of ideas but little money.

[English]

I realize that Bill C-79 was written before all these committee hearings. I admit that. But what surprises me is that the Minister does not appear to be willing to move amendments at the committee stage—

Mr. Lewis: It is not within the scope of the Act.
