Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The Minister says it is not within the scope of the Act. If the Government wants to close the loopholes, the Government can. It can get another royal recommendation. In this particular case, the Government is lucky because it happens to have the support of both the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party with respect to closing the loopholes. Therefore, it would not be a matter of the Government having to work very hard in trying to reach the objective of clarifying the definition of an election expense. The co-operation is offered. If the Minister does not do it, that is when the co-operation may not be forthcoming. I do not know what the media will be reporting tonight, but I am sure it will be quite surprised, after having followed very closely the committee hearings into the election expenses of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to see the Government is not moving to close these loopholes.

The people of Canada will be surprised because now everyone realizes. Very few people knew before these committee hearings that there were two types of election expenses, election expenses and campaign expenses. Now all Canadians know that. Now all Canadians believe that there should be proper definitions in the Act.

I would like to suggest something very precise and concrete. I do not just want to argue about the election expenses. I would like to propose a concept of what should be considered an election expense. The concept my Party would like to put forward is very simple. It is that everything should be an election expense unless it is specifically excluded, not the other way around. The principle should be that every dollar that is spent in a riding during an election, by someone involved in the election, is philosophically, as far as I am concerned, for the election.

There could be exclusions, and some of them are already there. I realize, for example, that the personal expenses of candidates have to be excluded. Transportation expenses of candidates have to be excluded. If they were not, as they have been all this time, then it means that candidates representing or running in large ridings, where sometimes the means of transportation is by airplane, helicopter, ship, or whatever else, would not be on the same footing as people running in a small urban riding such as mine where the size of the riding is more vertical than horizontal.

A number of other items which can be excluded include auditors' fees, candidates' deposits and legal fees. My philosophy is that any expense in a riding related to an election is actually done to promote a candidate. No one spends money just for fun during an election campaign. If something is to be excluded then let us have it in print, otherwise let us include everything.

There were discussions between Parties to try to come to some agreement as to what to include. For example, do we include the cost of polling? I do not mind. There are ways to do that. We can exclude the cost of polling. Polling itself does not promote a Party, it provides one with information. It is from that information that the Party can make moves to try to win the election. But certainly the mere fact of polling is not something that promotes a Party in itself. It is research. Either we exclude it or, as the Conservative Party has suggested, let us include it. But let us increase the limit that Parties are allowed to spend. I am easy one way or the other. We can agree on these things. I understand that the amount of money that can be spent by a political Party during a campaign at this time is about $7.5 million. If we were to increase the limit to include polling, then we are talking about an additional $1 million. Perhaps that is the way to go.

There were also discussions about fund raising expenses. Some say that if one is using what is called a home list of preferred donors, then one is probably not winning votes because these are people who have been on the home list for years. One is simply collecting money. I would be willing to agree that if a Party does that or if a candidate does that, then the cost of sending letters should not be an election expense. It could be out and not in.

However, if one Party or one candidate is prospecting by sending out thousands and thousands of letters across the country, then these are certainly election expenses. I refer especially to three-page letters in which some Parties talk in bad terms of other Parties with a single paragraph at the end stating, "We also need your financial support". There are ways to agree on what is in and what is out. The groundwork was done during discussions between Parties. All the Government has to do is to step down and to take its responsibilities.

The Government has brought in Budgets with which other Parties did not agree. They still brought these Budgets down. The Government has negotiated the free trade deal with the United States. Not everyone in the country agrees with this, but the Government has still done it. I do not see why the Government should hide behind an eventual unanimity of the definition of election expenses. I think that the discussions between the three Parties are advanced enough that all the Government has to do at this stage is to settle a couple of outstanding items and to come in with actual amendments.

I can make a couple of other suggestions. The Minister is listening. He is sitting across from me with a smile on his face. If I have the Minister listening to me, then I am going to make a couple of other concrete suggestions.

One of the obvious problems is with the definition of election expenses under the electoral terms. I think we have a problem with the words "for the purpose of promoting or opposing directly or during an election a particular registered Party or the election of a particular candidate". The minute we use the words "for the purpose of promoting or opposing" it is a matter of interpretation which is very difficult to make. This paragraph should be changed. The words "during the election" can be kept. I agree that if one spends money three months before an election or two days after voting day then one is not influencing the vote. I am saying that the philosophy of my Party is that if one is spending money during the writ, then one is spending money and one wants to win the election. It would be easy to clarify this paragraph.

Further down is paragraph 2.1(f) which is the paragraph that allowed the Minister of Energy to escape by paying people and still calling them volunteers. This paragraph states that an election expense is the cost of acquiring the services of any person, including remuneration and expenses paid to him or on his behalf as an official agent or registered agent or otherwise, except where such services are donated, something with which we all agree. If the person donates the service then one cannot say that it is an expense. It states further " provided at materially less than their commercial value". That is where the problem lies. Because of this particular section of the Act, one ends up being able to pay people and to claim that they are still volunteers, which does not make sense to me. It does not make sense to most Canadians. If people are paid, they are not volunteers. This can be corrected by removing some of the wording such as "except when services are provided at materially less than their commercial value".

The Minister certainly has a basis on which to move in and close these gaps. I am asking him to do that. If he does not do that, Canadians will be quite dissatisfied with the exercise in which we are now involved.

All the rest is housekeeping as far as I am concerned. It is small stuff compared to the definition of election expenses. I plead with the Minister to move in. We are ready to continue discussions. We have had discussions between the three Parties. I think that they have been cordial and constructive. I have been trying to offer in a quick fashion some suggestions to the Minister as to how we can better define election expenses. If the Minister has something else, something of his own, or if my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have suggestions, then we are willing to listen. We are willing to discuss and to sit down to try to plug these gaps. It would be regrettable if Parliament would miss such an occasion, and to use a euphemism, if Parliament missed a golden opportunity to close these loopholes and to prevent what the committee determined has to be possible abuse during the next election.

Unfortunately, our Party will have to line up other speakers to try to convince the Minister that this is the most important part of the Act. This is the part that needs to be cured most. I recommend for bedtime reading to the Minister a document which is not very long. It is entitled, "Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privilege and Procedure Respecting the Canada Elections Act", otherwise known as the eighth report of the committee. That was tabled in the House on March 3. If the Minister were to read this, he would come to the conclusion that the Government has to move in now to better define what is an election expense. If the Government does not do that, it will be proceeding at its own expense.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, during the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), the Deputy House Leader made some remarks. He was reacting to the fact that the Liberal Member who just spoke had suggested that perhaps we should be looking at amendments in committee in regard to defining the Canada Elections Act. I am not sure if the comments were recorded by Hansard, but the effect of the Minister's comments were that we could not amend this Bill in committee with regard to election expenses because it goes beyond the scope of Bill C-79. I believe that the Minister is correct. That is one of the major concerns that we have with this piece of legislation. It does not deal with what all of us in the House, the media, and many people in the country know to be a glaring error or a loophole in the present legislation.

There are many things that are good in this legislation. We have been lobbied quite reasonably by the Government and by other people to try to send this legislation to committee quickly. For example, I know that the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who has been active in handicapped and disabled issues for a number of years, has talked to people from those communities. They state that they want this legislation because it does help to improve their access to polling stations and other election offices during the process of a federal election. Today it is necessary to speak for that group in the House and state that we are in favour of that clause. We are in favour of many of the clauses contained in the 160 page Bill in front of us today.

During the last little while, some of the problem areas of Bill C-79 have been discussed among the Parties. We think that we have come to grips with some of the major errors or problems within Bill C-79. We have not finished with all of the problems of Bill C-79, and I will deal with that later on.

The fact that the Government has not moved on providing a definition of what is an election expense is so glaring that we cannot agree to the passage of this legislation at this time. Until the Government is willing to address the whole issue, we cannot accept the Bill. We believe that this may be our only opportunity prior to the next election to close the loophole made so public by the affair of the Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse). Without closing this loophole, the 1988 or 1989 election campaign will be a wide open affair with no effective limits placed on expenditures.

The revelations made by the former Commissioner of Canada Elections in front of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure last month indicated what a mess we have. It is essential that the Government agrees to the inclusion of all expenses inside the elections expenses limits. Exceptions can be made for auditors, deposits, and other similar expenses, but these have to be specified. Allowing for grey areas in those categories only makes the situation worse. Again, big money can play an issue in deciding the fate of Parties and individuals in the election. We propose a philosophy of "if it ain't out it's in". In other words, anything that is not specifically excluded from the limit must be listed and must be included under the election spending limits.

We recognize that that can create a problem because we are changing the rules. If it is necessary, we agree that the limits should be increased to ensure that most legitimate expenses can be covered, but still keep the philosophy of the 1972-1974 legislation which stated that there should be a limit on how much the Parties can spend, and that there should be a limit on how much each of the candidates can spend.

We are not alone in that opinion. The lawyers for Elections Canada who were asked to look at this issue issued their report on March 3, 1988. The law firm of Borden and Elliot in dealing with this issue stated:

> In our view, the easiest and simplest means of defining "election expenses" would be to deem all funds spent by a Candidate or a party in an election as "election expenses" and then proceed, in subparagraphs, to enumerate those items of expense which Parliament does not wish to limit. The Act is presently structured in such a manner that the broadest definition of election spending is found in section 62 in the words, "any expenses incurred on account of or in respect of the conduct or management of the election." Based on our suggestion wording such as that should constitute the definition of "election expenses" and the exceptions should follow setting forth those items of expense on which Parliament chooses not to place limitations . . .

That is the legal opinion received by Elections Canada earlier this month. We believe that in the legislation which presently exists in the various provinces, including the Province of Ontario, there are examples of what could be used in the federal Canada Elections Act. Our problem is the following. Over the next little while Bill C-79 will be studied. It deals with the Canada Elections Act, changes to the Canada Elections Act, and for some reason the Government is refusing to act on what might be the most important Section of the Canada Elections Act, which is the section dealing with election expenses.

We have been asked by the Government to have faith that it will do something prior to the next federal election. Although the Minister has been very forthright with us in the House, I must say that we have no reason to believe that there will be changes to the definitions of election expenses prior to the next election. We realize that agents for the Conservative Party were aware of the problem as early as the summer of 1985.

We are aware that the lawyer for the Member for Frontenac was aware of the situation. We are also aware that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources read his letter from Mr. Gorman to this same lawyer. We are aware that this same lawyer represents the Conservative Party at the ad hoc meetings of the three Parties. It is that committee which has been looking at election expenses since the summer of 1986. Yet nothing has happened. We are in a situation where the Government through legislation tabled in the summer of 1986 was aware of the problem. At that time it sent the issue of election expenses off to an all-Party committee, not the House committee but the ad hoc committee of officials of the various political Parties. Nothing happened. There were many meetings, but no agreement was reached.

It is almost two years later, and three years since Conservative lawyers were aware of the problem, and there is no legislation that indicates that the definition of election expenses will be changed. I do not wish a "Dodge City" type of election in 1988 or 1989. I believe that it is possible, if the Government has the will, to introduce legislation which allows us to deal with election expenses. I am very disappointed that the Government did not do so at the same time as it started debate on Bill C-79, the Bill we are presently debating. Bill C-79 was first tabled in the House on June 30, 1987, almost nine months ago. Until one and a half hours ago there was no debate on this piece of legislation whatsoever. That means that the Government had no parliamentary time invested in this legislation.

The Government had nothing to lose by holding off the introduction of this legislation for another week or two in order to allow its officials to make a proposal regarding election expenses and to reintroduce a piece of legislation incorporating Bill C-79 and a definition of election expenses. It could have done that. It would not have cost the Government any parliamentary time, but it would have meant that the committee had proposed legislation before it with regard to election expenses and that we in the committee would have been in a position to make whatever amendments were necessary. However, by starting the debate without any reference to the committee on election expenses, the Deputy House Leader for the Government has precluded any possibility of the committee making any legislative recommendations or amendments to Bill C-79 that deal with election expenses.

Once Bill C-79 gets to committee, it will be there for a fair length of time. It is a comprehensive Bill affecting many groups in society. Many individuals and others will want to make presentations to the committee. In addition, because it is a comprehensive piece of legislation, it will take time for the committee to study it in a clause by clause manner.

If the committee is doing that during the months of April and May, when will it start studying proposed legislation with regard to election expenses? It will not.

The Government has been unable to come up with a definition of election expenses, after the investigation of the Hon. Member for Frontenac after the various legal opinions of which people were aware in 1985, after the all-Party study throughout the summer of 1986. It did not do so in the fall of 1987, and if it does not do so in the spring of 1988, I do not believe it has a commitment to come up with a workable definition of election expenses. I am afraid that the Government may have some ulterior motives for not coming up with that definition.

As we are well aware, the Liberal Party is seriously in debt. The Conservative Party has a very good bankroll at the present time. It also believes that it has the ability to raise more money before the next election. The Government represents the Party which has the most to gain by being able to spend considerable amounts of money that are not covered by the limitations on election expenses.

One has only to look at the 1984 election to realize how close the Government came to going over the limits. One has only to look at the accounts of the Hon. Member for Frontenac to realize that much more was spent in that campaign than the election limits allowed because of a glaring loophole.

The Government can survive as a Party with the present very loose legislation. It may help the Tories save one or two seats, three or four seats, or five or six seats. It may help them to have a very expensive national campaign, but that is not democracy nor the intent of the present legislation.

In the mid-1970s all Parties agreed that there must be limitations on the expenses of Parties and candidates. They wrote legislation which they thought was very thorough. Most of us in all three Parties believed that it was thorough as we went through the 1979, 1980, and 1984 election campaigns. We believed that we had a good piece of legislation and that we had stopped most of the loopholes. When most of us campaigned we looked at our limits, whether it was $30,000 or $40,000 in our ridings. We looked to see what expenses we had to pay and tried to come in under the limits. We believed that it was just legislation which would be enforced. We now know, as a result of what happened to the Hon. Member for Frontenac and the committee study, that that was not the case.

We have a situation presently where, for example, I could hire volunteers whom I could be paying $40 or $50 per day. As long as it is below the minimum wage, we can get away with it. We can assume that such people would be working 16 hours or 18 hours per day. In some elections they work that long. They are called volunteers, but they could be earning $40 per day over a 50-day period of time for some $2,000 each. I could fly the volunteers in helicopters to each of my 63 communities. I could put them up in hotels, resorts, or whatever other accommodation is available. I could feed them and give them expense money. All that could be done and I would not have to declare one cent under the election expenses limitations.

Mr. Lewis: What about CUPW?

Mr. Murphy: The Government House Leader is joking or suggesting that perhaps CUPW does not have that money. I will tell him that we can raise a lot of money in my riding as we have in the past. However, despite the fact that we can afford to run a very expensive campaign in the Churchill riding, and despite the fact that many of our incumbents could do so elsewhere in the country, we do not believe that we should buy votes. We do not believe that the system should be so unfair that one Party can spend $150,000 while another Party or individual who follows the spirit of the law is limited to $35,000.

There are some people who say that that will not happen. As a result of the investigation involving the Minister of Energy, we believe that approximately $20,000 was spent and assumed to be campaign expenses which did not come under the limitations.

It does not take much work for a campaign manager or a party official to realize that if these items come under election expenses they will use up that money and come up to their election limit. However, there are many items which no longer constitute an expense under the limits with which they can do whatever they want.

It is not only the case in rural ridings such as my own where the spirit of the Act can be so abused. Let us look at an urban riding where it is close, where we know that any of the three Parties could win the seat. It is quite simple to move in a bunch of university students or others who would be quite happy to work for $2,000 over a 50-day period, to put them up in hotels in Regina East or Regina West, and to feed them so that there is a full-time army of people campaigning on behalf of a candidate. It is quite a legal situation.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: I hear some rantings by an Hon. Member.

Mr. Redway: Rational comment.

Mr. Murphy: If a person has a rational comment to make, he will make it from his seat. If he does not have a rational comment to make, he will continue to heckle. The point is that all three Parties in the standing committee said that we had to deal with the issue. Also the lawyers for Elections Canada said that it had to be dealt with.

Let me explain other things that were said by the lawyers for Elections Canada. They indicated that the definition of election expenses was so troublesome, cumbersome, and ambiguous as to make it virtually impossible for any candidate to know if an expense is an election expense and, conversely, for the commissioner to know whether the failure of a candidate to include certain types of expenses as election expenses in the return should warrant prosecution.

This was not political rantings. It was something that we all realized was a problem for any candidate who wanted to run an honest campaign or for any Party that wanted to run an honest campaign. It is even a problem for those involved in investigations and prosecutions afterwards to know what should have been done or what should not have been done during an election campaign. It is a major problem, and there has been no commitment from the Government that it will deal with this issue prior to the next election.

I believe I have made my point on that, but it is so important that we have a real definition of election expenses. As the Liberal spokesman who spoke previously indicated, right now a candidate could send out a fund-raising letter lambasting his opponent, talking about what he or she has done or should not have done, to every person in the riding. In the last paragraph there could be a little pitch for the incumbent, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), for example. That would not constitute an election expense. It could contain page after page of the most vicious partisan material and it could actually ask for money for a candidate, but it would not constitute an election expense.

The same is true of polling. While polling people, a candidate could ask most blatant partisan questions, basically playing a recorded message for a political Party, but that is polling and it does not count as an expense. Obviously we do not have legislation which protects the candidates, and it must be cleaned up. For us to go forward with Bill C-79 without dealing with that is for us to create election havoc.

When the Minister introduced Bill C-79, he did not give a firm commitment to deal with election expenses. There was no commitment from the Government that that would be dealt with in an acceptable manner prior to any upcoming election. There was an agreement that the issue be studied, but there was no commitment to bringing forward provisions which are acceptable to the Parties in time for the next election.

I know that I do not have very much time left in debate, so I will turn to other matters. One of the areas on which we have come to agreement is the reporting of financial accounts by local constituency associations. In the legislation, there was a proposal for voluntary reporting by local associations. We consider that to be neither fish nor fowl.

If the Government believes that the funds raised by local associations and how those funds are spent, funds quite often gained through election rebates or tax rebates, should be recorded, then it should not be a voluntary effort, it should be a compulsory effort. The Government has stated in Bill C-79 that it does believe that this should be reported. There are large amounts of money in local associations for which no one is accountable and there are no controls over that money. We do have a problem.

Obviously the Government believed that there should be some accountability, but for some reason, it has made the accountability voluntary. I know that the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is not only a lawyer, something which we do not hold against him all the time, but in addition to that he is an accountant. To have voluntary accountability is to have no accountability at all.

Those associations with clean records which are spending money in a manner that will not suffer from public scrutiny will be quite willing to report their accounts on an annual basis. Those associations like the one in the constituency of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with over $100,000 sitting in an account or accounts somewhere do not have to report, even though we do not know what they do with that money. We do not understand why the accountability is voluntary. We believe, and to be fair members of the Liberal Party also believe, that it should be compulsory.

Since we wanted compulsory accountability and the Government wanted voluntary accountability, the Government simply decided to take out the whole clause. That is the Government's way of coming to a compromise on this issue. We regret that because again, this is a chance to clean up the Elections Act and to ensure that money raised through election rebates, taxpayers' dollars, or tax rebates, is accountable. The Government was moving in that direction, but for some reason it decided not to move far enough. We do not like it but we accept the fact that this clause will be withdrawn in committee.

The issue of Canadians living abroad being allowed to vote is one which all of us regret cannot be dealt with at this time. It is unfortunate that we have not begun to deal with the Elections Act until almost the end of the fourth year of the Government's mandate. It is unfortunate that the proposal made in Bill C-79 is so wide open that it creates a problem for all three Parties.

As has been mentioned before, the proposal in Bill C-79 is to let anyone who has Canadian citizenship and who indicates that he or she may eventually return to Canada vote in an election. He or she could have been away not only five, 10 or 15 years but 30 or 40 years, most of his or her life. He or she would still be permitted to vote in a Canadian election, simply by saying that he or she will probably return to Canada at some point.

We believe that there are too many road-blocks preventing Canadians who are legitimately abroad from voting. We certainly believe that those who are working for Crown corporations, the federal Government, NGOs or the like should be able to vote. We would also suggest that those who are on vacation for a short length of time should be able to vote if they can get to a proper place like a Canadian consulate or embassy. However, to open it wide up without any clarification is unacceptable.

We proposed that we limit the categories of people who would be eligible for voting. We also suggested that those who had been away for five or ten years without ever returning to Canada should not be allowed to vote, but those who had been back or had only been away for four or five years should automatically be allowed to vote.

We went through the exercise of trying to find a reasonable compromise, but we could not find one. Now it appears that we will have to send this matter to committee for separate study, recognizing the fact that it will probably not be resolved before the next federal election.

I was asked by one of my colleagues why this should not be open, that there would not be that many voters from abroad who would vote. I was told that for every person who had never returned to Canada who voted, there would probably be six or seven living outside Canada and who should be able to vote who would vote. That might be true, but we are talking about massive numbers of people. On the American side, over two million Americans who live offshore have voted. With our population figures, Elections Canada assumes that there may be about 200,000 people who do not live in Canada voting in a general election.

The problem with the legislation is that a candidate who runs in Broadview—Greenwood, Regina or in Thunder Bay may find that there are 2,000 or 3,000 voters who will vote on election day who cannot be contacted. The candidate does not know where they live, he has no indication of who they are and he has no means of communicating with them. Yet they will make a difference when it comes to whether or not the candidate wins a seat.

We want to see Canadians who legitimately work or live elsewhere for a short period of time be able to vote. Unfortunately, the Government has been unable to make a proposal and unwilling to accept the amendments we have suggested to resolve this matter. Rather than having a complete screw-up in the next election, I believe we may be forced into taking this clause from the Bill and studying it separately, realizing that the net result will be that many Canadians who should legitimately be allowed to vote in the next election will not be able to do so.

This Bill contains 160 pages and I will not be able to deal with all the problems in it. Let me deal with some of the problems that will be important over the next little while.

• (1710)

When the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure dealt with the problems of the Hon. Member for Frontenac, we saw a need to tighten up the election enforcement commission. This Bill does that. It prevents premature publicity when investigations are taking place. It allows the commission to use investigators outside of the RCMP so that maybe things can be done a little faster. This also shows that investigators are more directly accountable to the commission so that you have some control over what they are doing or not doing. You are in a position to give them direction so that they are actually investigating what they are supposed to be as opposed to doing a wide open investigation.

One of the problems with the present system is that the commissioner calls for an investigation but it is the RCMP, acting almost completely separate and apart, which conducts the investigation. This is without, in many cases, reporting back to the commissioner for instructions or legal interpretations. This Act improves that situation. That is very important to a lot of people because reputations have been hurt in the past and investigations have not been as thorough as they should be. This is not because the RCMP is doing an inefficient job, but because the people who carry out the investigations are not in a position to know what the commissioner is really after or what has transpired in the meanwhile.

One of our main concerns is that we make sure the commission is secure from the taint of political patronage and that decisions on investigations or prosecution for alleged infractions is non-partisan. This is not in the legislation but we have been assured that amendments will be coming forward, and we accept the concept that the Chair and the Member representing the public be approved through a resolution of this House. The members representing the various political Parties should also be approved through a motion or some other means with the agreement of all Party Leaders. However, we have to know a bit more about that process to make sure it does not become open to abuse.

We are also concerned, and I hope the Minister is paying attention, with what happens when one member representing a Party resigns. How will he or she be replaced? In the initial step you get agreement of the three Party leaders for all three people. We are not sure what happens when one person resigns and we have to replace that person.

The Bill also called for one agent in each poll. All three Parties are used to the practice of two agents in a poll. Quite often someone is inside seeing who has voted and someone can come in to see who has voted so that when the various Parties are knocking on doors, encouraging people to get out and vote, you do not knock on the door of someone who voted three hours ago. For some reason the legislation is going to restrict us to one agent who, presumably, will have to sit inside all day and not give any information to the Parties. Obviously that would restrict the use of an agent. The Government has recognized the error of its ways and is willing to go back to two agents per Party. That is a good move.

With respect to opinion polls, at the time the Government was in real trouble it decided it did not want opinion polls too often during an election. It came out with a very strict definition of what must be done if you publish an opinion poll.

However, it became so cumbersome that it was obvious, while it was all right for the print media, it would make it impossible for a radio or television reporter to cover an election. You have to spend 10 minutes explaining what the poll was, the sample size, the questions asked, who paid for it and what-have- you. That could not be done in a 30-second clip. We encouraged the Government to make sure what would be required for the print media be fairly specific, because they have the space, and that there be a shorter form for the electronic media. The Government, for its own reasons, determined that rather than having a different requirement for the different types of media, it will pull the entire section dealing with opinion polls. In the long run that might be regrettable. I believe there is some advantage to having minimum requirements.

An Hon. Member has said something and I do not know what it was. It is government legislation which was going to require everyone to say everything. We are saying we think a minimum would be a good idea and in the best interests of the public. Since the Government has gone from an all to nothing position I do not see how the Conservative Member, who holds himself out as an Elections Act expert, can object when the NDP says there should be a minimum standard. The Government, in the legislation now before us, requires very detailed information on the publication of opinion polls. We are saying we need something but you are too strict with regard to the electronic media. However, we thought something could have been done which was acceptable, and I hope that in committee we will still find some middle ground.

The last area to be dealt with by negotiation among the Parties, and I always like to bring this forward so it is not done just in the back room and the public has some knowledge about it, concerns the broadcasting of results. The problem was this. We in the West, especially the far west, would be driving home from work when the polls closed in Atlantic Canada. Even before someone has gone home for supper, before they even think about getting dressed up to go and vote, they would know that in Atlantic Canada 30 Members of this Party were elected, 10 of that Party and two Conservatives. The same thing would happen when the polls closed in Quebec and Ontario. I am sure my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), will agree that western Canadians have often felt that decisions were made prior to the West being heard from.

Under the current legislation we have a rule that you cannot broadcast results until the polls close in that part of the country. We have a problem because the Broadcasting Act says that those companies which provide cable TV cannot edit the signals. The Elections Act says you cannot broadcast the results before the polls have closed, and the Broadcasting Act says you cannot edit the signals. If you are getting signals from Atlantic Canada or Hamilton, obviously they are going to cover the election. The legislation suggests that we just remove the ban on broadcasting the election results so that they can be given out as soon as they come in from various parts of the country.

Personally I believe that would be unacceptable to many people in the West. Depending on what happens in the next election, it could increase regional animosity. The Government decided it will live with the present system for another election. We will still prohibit the broadcasting of election results, but have not taken the further step of changing the Broadcasting Act to allow those companies providing cable TV service to edit out election coverage. I wish it had gone that step further.

That is possible because in this Bill we are not just amending the Elections Act. If you look through it you will discover there are about five or six other pieces of legislation being changed at the same time. The Government can change not only the Elections Act but the Broadcasting Act at this time in such a way that cable companies and others are not forced to break one Act or the other. We are putting those companies in a very awkward situation. We have the power to fix that up and I hope the Government will take that into consideration.

You have indicated that I have one more minute left to speak. There are two areas I want to cover quickly. The first is that despite the amendments to improve the ability of urban voters to be registered and vote, we still forbid urban voters who have not been put on the election list from voting on election day. We create all sorts of other situations. They can go to the returning officer's office and vote on election day if they are not registered. There are all sorts of ways and means that they can get on the election list between the date of the writ and election day, but they still cannot be sworn in at the polls.

I will give a very quick sample of the problem that creates. Just as the election was called in 1984, thousands of people who worked at International Nickel in my riding were laid off for the entire summer. Most of them went back to visit their families. Most of them come from other parts of the province or other parts of the country. Many of them returned to Thompson just when school started, which happened to be September 4. They were not on the list.

You may say that is an exceptional circumstance, but we have many summer elections and many shut-downs. We are having too many of them and this problem will increase. I believe that we in this country should be politically sophisticated enough to allow people with the proper documentation to prove that they are Canadian citizens and live in a particular riding to swear to their identity on election day and be allowed to vote because they are Canadian citizens living in Canada.

I find it ironic that the Act proposes allowing all sorts of people to vote who have never been in Canada for the last 20 or 30 years, but does nothing to allow people who, for reasons beyond their control, have been left off the voters' list. We are talking about many thousands of Canadians.

There is a proposal in the legislation to change the number of voters per poll from an average of 250 to a minimum of 250. That in itself does not sound like a problem but it is my understanding from some calls I received very recently that people who have been appointed as returning officers have been instructed to have a minimum of 400 or 450 people per poll. If that is the intent of this change to the Elections Act, it is certainly going much beyond the concept of a minimum of 250 voters per poll. I would prefer that the legislation specify what is meant in order that we do not have enormous polls.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it is a curious thing that this legislation should be taking so long to get through the House when every Member here considers himself or herself to be an expert on the subject because they all got here by complying with this law and have an intimate working knowledge with a lot of its provisions.

I would like to begin my comments this afternoon with the general observation that there are in fact a number of separate measures which, in the course of this thirty-third Parliament, are dealing in one way or another with the electoral procedure and the democratic process. We have heard criticisms this afternoon from Liberal and New Democratic spokesmen about the fact that more is not being done in Bill C-79 to address the definition of election and campaign expenses.

It is a fact that there have been and will be a number of separate statutes before this House addressing the election process. We have dealt already, for example, in this thirty-third Parliament with legislation to modify the rules for electoral boundaries. Section 51 of the Constitution and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act were amended as one step. Bill C-79, presently before us, is a second step. The indication by the Minister that there will be further examination of election expenses following the report tabled in recent days by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure will give rise to a further area of consideration.

There are two other Bills, one dealing with the registration of paid lobbyists and the other with conflict of interest legislation which pertains to Members of Parliament, which I think must be seen as part of the whole fabric dealing with this general area of the health, procedures and nature of our democratic process. Another which is being drafted which I intend to introduce as a Private Members' Bill is the national referendums and plebiscites Act, which would be a counterpart to the Elections Act and would provide for questions to be submitted directly to the people.

I make those general comments only to set in a broader and fairer context some of the narrow criticisms which have been coming from the two opposition Parties about the fact there are some things not being dealt with in Bill C-79.

Speaking frankly, I share the regret that we are dealing with this only at this stage. I was chairman of the caucus committee on election law and redistribution which in 1984 and 1985 made recommendations that would result in changes. This became the White Paper and then the legislation. The series of delays has put the Chief Electoral Officer in an invidious position. If we pass this legislation within the next month or so, and anticipating a reasonable date of June, 1989, for the next federal election, that would make it quite a time crunch for those who are shouldered, once this is passed, with the legal obligation of carrying out the election according to all these new procedures, rules and regulations.

I would like to turn to two or three specific sections that are included in Bill C-79 and stress their importance or significance. The first of those has to do with the position of disabled Canadians and their electoral process. Strides have been taken in previous amendments to this Act to, for example, facilitate voting by blind voters. The notch ballot in some jurisdictions and the template in other jurisdictions have been two of the technical methods used to facilitate blind voters to vote. There traditionally was also the way of being accompanied by a seeing voter in the ballot box area and marking the ballot that way.

In this Act we are considering amendments which will make further progress by ensuring level access to voting stations. When the Minister was speaking he pointed to the difficulties which exist in some of the rural areas. The provision which will be in this Act requiring enumerators to ascertain the level access requirement of voters will be helpful information, but more than that it will be necessary to ensure, in my view, level access for voters in every case.

I do appreciate that in some cases that may be an impossibility. I submit, and will in committee as well, that the answer to that is the mobile poll in the sense that the voting box and materials can actually be taken out and down the steps to facilitate voting by someone who is unable to enter the polling place.

Mobile polls are not a novelty. They were used in previous elections. Indeed, overseas, on those rare occasions when Canadian soldiers were voting during war time, ballot boxes were actually moved to where the soldiers were.

Another area which is significant in terms of Canadians with disabilities and voting is the extension of the franchise, under this Act, to Canadians with mental disabilities. The former prohibitions which existed in federal, and certainly a lot of the provincial statutes, were terrible provisions in the way in which they lumped people together and entirely disfranchised them on the basis of some mental affliction or disability.

• (1730)

When the equality rights committee of this Parliament met in New Brunswick, we heard submissions on the importance of extending the franchise to those with mental disabilities. Part of the rationale was that this in fact is a self-denying ordinance. Someone who is mentally incapable of getting to a ballot station and voting is not going to raise a problem, but there are many other individuals with some forms of mental illness from which they are recovering, which may create problems for them in their daily living, but do not in any way impair their ability to follow public events and come to a very sound decision as to who is the best candidate or Party, and they should not be denied that basic democratic right. Therefore, I am glad this Act will reflect that more modern and compassionate approach.

I would point out that the Province of Ontario has already enacted such a provision. A provincial general election was conducted with that provision in place and it was a benefit to many and a problem for no one.

What represents a very important reform here is the establishment of the Canadian elections enforcement commission. A number of Members elected to this Parliament found, in the wake of the September 4 results, that investigations were being undertaken pertaining to their election expenses. In some cases those investigations were being conducted by officers of the RCMP. I have heard of some cases where the officers involved had just come off a drug bust, with much of the mentality used in dealing with thugs and criminals who are trafficking in drugs, and with a very combative approach to the "criminals" they were investigating. That was matched by a very shallow understanding, to put it generously, of the intricate provisions of the Canada Elections Act. That meant that there would be a significant difference in the perhaps 30 or 40 investigations going on across the country with respect to the level, quality and nature of the investigation. Therefore, the new provision which will allow the commission to appoint its own investigators, and to have a standard and uniform approach from coast to coast to coast by people who are knowledgeable about the Elections Act and the workings of the elections financing provisions, is going to prove to be in everyone's interest, including the public.

The provision in the Act that deals with liquor causes me to pause and take a drink of water, knowing that in future elections people will be able to pause and drink a glass of something stronger, because of the removal of the prohibition of selling liquor while the voting is under way. That provision is found there because of practices from the late 19th century when a great many elections saw a candidate floated to power on a perfect sea of booze. I know that in the Parry Sound—Muskoka district, where I come from originally, it took the Conservative Party many years to live down the infamy of the frozen whisky election campaign. Everyone here would know that whisky does not freeze because alcohol does not freeze. But in that election it did because it had been so watered down. When the voters came out from the schoolhouse to dip the metal bucket down into the barrel on the back of the sleigh out behind the school, the bucket did not come up with whisky, it hit ice. The whisky had frozen because it had been so watered down. For about a decade after that, the Conservatives in that area could never get any credibility or any vote because they were known to have watered down the whisky.

Ms. Copps: The more it changes, the more it stays the same.

Mr. Boyer: I think that is another thing that speaks in favour of summertime elections. I am glad to see this Bill is going to committee with the full intention that a lot of these provisions will be thoroughly examined at that stage and further changes will be made. If we take, for example, the provisions which deal with the publication of opinion polls during a campaign, on the one hand, and the proposed removal from the Act of the ban on publication of election results in those areas where voting is still under way, we see something of a contradiction. First, dealing with opinion polls, I think the tendency in recent elections to have the publication of opinion poll results at different stages of the campaign has become, to some extent, a transforming factor in the way elections are viewed and understood. As much as there is concentration on the personalities, policies and programs, there is an emphasis on the polls, the reaction of the polls, and who is ahead and by how many lengths.

To see election campaigns transformed into horse races is not overly edifying, nor is it really that helpful to Canadians who want to see and hear about the candidates, policies and issues. That is why the recommendation was made that there be included in the Act something that I would really characterize as consumer protection legislation, that, yes, the major broadcasters and the major newspaper publishers do indicate who commissioned the poll, when it was conducted, how large the sample, the nature of the question and the percentage of error on a sample of that size.

We all know that there are other kinds of polls that are taken which may not be reliable. They may not be scientific in any sense. Yet they are reported on in the course of an election campaign, often with the effect of influencing or creating a lot of hype and getting a response to something that is as much a fiction of someone's imagination than it is an actual reflection of popular opinion.

Therefore, I think it is important to put within the Canada Elections Act this kind of consumer protection. If it is a difficulty for the broadcast media to do that in the course of a 30 second clip—the New Democratic Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) seemed almost beside himself in his concern about the broadcast media in this regard—perhaps it should not be trying to do it in a 30 second clip. Perhaps that is the answer.

We will look at that in committee and I would like to suggest that while looking at it, we should equally consider the proposal to delete the important section of the Canada Elections Act that prohibits disclosure of election results in an area where voting is still under way. The premature publication of election results can have an influence on the way others may vote. There are political scientists who argue for both sides saying that those who would jump on the bandwagon are counteracted by those who would opt for the underdog. However, we do not have to resolve that argument on a political scientific basis. I think we need to stick with the provision that was first enacted in 1938, primarily as a response to the practices of the Canadian Press. For years, the Canadian Press election report was Canada's only national compilation of the election results. Official reports available only weeks later did not name Parties, show Party standings or include Party vote compilations. The Canadian Press election reports became so systematized, thorough and fast as a tabulation of early accounts from individual constituencies that CP was able to flash the election or the defeat of federal Governments while voters in British Columbia were still casting ballots. Consequently, an Act was passed here in Parliament in 1938 to prevent publication of CP's results in either newspaper extras or on the air in any province while voting was still in progress. Something in the 1942 plebiscite on conscription contained the same provision.

In the 1960s and 1970s the broadcasting networks usurped this role CP had developed for itself, using their computers and nation-wide link-ups. However, the problem was still the same. This is why Section 105 of the Canada Elections Act, in a sense of preserving fairness, prohibits those publications in areas where voting is still under way. I think that is an important provision. I do not think it should be deleted. It is proposed that it be deleted, which is why I hope to speak to it in committee.

Generally, under this Act we are seeing a further opening up of the franchise. I have already mentioned the extension of the franchise to the disabled. The vote is now going to federal judges. There is also the proposal that Canadians living abroad be able to vote, much as Americans, Australians and residents of the United Kingdom are able to do.

We have also seen an extension of the franchise through the opportunities that are being increased under Bill C-79. It is worth pausing to record that Canada has the highest rate of eligible voters on its voters' list of any of the democracies. This is the reason we have the longest election campaigns, sort of a 58-60 day minimum. We are really the only country that starts about the whole process of compiling its voters' list after the election has begun. Yet that process ensures that some 97 per cent or 98 per cent of qualified voters find their names on the voters' lists. There is then a further period of revision, as well as courts of revision, which adds further opportunities for voters to find their names on the list.

In recent years we have taken additional steps to see that those who are thereby qualified to vote are not administratively disfranchised. It is one thing to be 18 or over, a Canadian resident and a Canadian citizen and therefore qualified. But, first, one has to have one's name on the voters' list. Second, one has to be able to actually get to vote at a time and place where the polls are open. That is why we have seen the provisions in this Act to expand proxy voting, to permit voting by people who have two residences. In the location of either one there is an option there to choose and so on. In other words, we are seeking to go the furthest route possible to ensure that every Canadian has the opportunity to fulfil their first duty as citizens which, of course, is to get themselves a government.

My final comment has to do with the concern being expressed by members of the two opposition Parties with respect to the definition of election expenses and campaign expenses. I share the concern expressed with respect to having this matter dealt with. I listened to the concern that was being expressed with two caveats in mind.

The first caveat is that the difficulties that they point out will, if unchanged in the present Act, continue to be difficulties that are shared equally by all Parties and all candidates seeking office and any effort therefore to parade these as giving some kind of particular advantage to one or another Party is to put on a partisan edge that really is inappropriate.

With respect to the second caveat, I listened to the concerns expressed with some sense of the history of Canadian elections when the way our great grandfathers and grandmothers conducted elections were wild in comparison to the almost genteel practices of today. The Minister from Newfoundland who is in the House knows that in his province, as in the Province of Quebec, there were election riots. In some of those election riots people were killed. Corruption was an absolute cornerstone of early Canadian elections. We have gone a long distance to bringing about changes, particularly in the 1974 legislation, to see that politics is not a rich person's game, that is it open, above board and fair to all.

With the reservations I have mentioned I think that Bill C-79 represents another important step forward.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member really believes that it is important to put everyone on an even footing and to establish very specific limits with respect to spending during election campaigns. Can the Hon. Member explain why his Government is not coming forward with specific amendments in relation to the definition of election and campaign expenses?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I said when the Hon. Member was not in the House when I addressed this matter earlier in my remarks. I talked about six or seven different pieces of legislation that are going through the Thirty-third Parliament which deal with the various aspects of the electoral procedure. I referred to redistribution, conflict of interest legislation, the registration of paid lobbyists, Bill C-79 and my proposed legislation on national referendums and plebiscites that will be tabled soon.

Earlier the Minister expressed the intention to examine this matter, but he also said he had received an indication from the Table concerning the difficulties of dealing in Bill C-79, which has been in the House for quite some time now, with the subject matter of a report from the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which was only tabled about 10 days ago. I think it is a problem of timing which has created an imperfect approach to this matter. However, I certainly join with the Hon. Member in wanting to see this other matter dealt with, if not in Bill C-79 then in other legislation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware of the fact that the all-Party committee that has been meeting on the issue of the definition of campaign expense, et cetera, has in fact as recently as this week, put some agreement as to the definitions in these areas? It is my contention that if the Government is prepared to wait for a week or two in order to obtain some thoughtful and unanimous concerns in this regard then it can move ahead with the Bill that will deal with the issue of election spending. If this Bill goes ahead as is without the amendments that were blatantly called for in relation to the report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, then obviously this Bill is a farce. If a situation exists in which, by statute, one can spend only, let us say for purposes of discussion, $38,000 on election expenses but one can go ahead and spend $60,000 or $70,000 on campaign expenses, then obviously de facto there is a free spending campaign which is in violation of the spirit of the Act. That is why I think the two have to go hand in hand. I think that they should be both brought together.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I guess it is here that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and I part company rather dramatically. I think it is unconscionable that it has taken so long to get this Bill this far in this Parliament. The Hon. Member says that we should now delay yet a few more weeks because there is some discussion going on behind the curtains among the representatives of the three Parties as to what they might agree to as a definition of election expenses and campaign expenses. She suggests that we wait even longer to get on with measures that will give to disabled Canadians fair and greater access to the democratic process, as well as deal with some of these anomalous situations and outdated provisions in the statute.

I refer to measures with respect to liquor on the day of voting, and some of the other measures that I characterized as consumer protection legislation with respect to public opinion polls, and all the things that I did mention in the course of my speech. I regret that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, who I know takes those things seriously, was not in the House during the course of my speech. She would have heard why I think it is truly unfortunate that at this late date we are going to be passing even this much and saddling the Chief Electoral Officer with the onerous task of gearing for an election on these changed procedures.

We must get on with this. Over nine months ago I proposed that this Bill be split in two and that the non-controversial parts be passed, and that those other areas dealing with broadcast and election expenses be delayed, if delay was necessary, to achieve a consensus in the House. I am no longer persuaded, on the basis of performance to date, that that type of consensus can or will be developed. I would resist strongly any effort to delay this Bill any further. There are many other good provisions in this Bill. I worked hard on it as chairman of the caucus committee since late 1984 and early 1985. The time to look for further causes for delay is passed, and the time for action is here.

Mr. Redway: I know the Hon. Member is one who had a great deal of input into the Bill before us. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for his comments with respect to four areas of the Bill.

First, one of the great areas of concern in the Bill certainly relates to having people enumerated and placed on the voters' list. Why is it that this Bill does not incorporate the provisions for a permanent voters' list?

Second, if there is not to be a permanent voters' list, in municipal elections one who is not on the voters' list can be sworn in at the polls on voting day at the time of voting. Why does the Bill not provide for that?

Third, traditionally judges have been considered to be entirely independent of the political process. Why does this Bill give, for the first time to my knowledge, the vote to judges?

Fourth, one of the penalties that has traditionally been imposed on those who are incarcerated is the temporary removal of one of the rights of citizenship, and that is the right to vote. Why is it that this Bill franchises people who are incarcerated? Having done so, if this legislation is passed, is it the intention of the Government, having franchised prisoners, to take away the right to vote from police officers?

Mr. Boyer: First, the permanent voters' list has two problems. One is the cost. The cost is somewhere around $90 million to prepare an enumeration of voters' list in an election campaign. The cost of maintaining a permanent voters' list is in excess of that amount. Under our present system of enumeration, 97 to 98 per cent of eligible voters are on our voters' list. That is higher than any other democracy and that is because of the approach that we have.

In connection with national plebiscites, one of the inhibiting factors may be the cost of those votes. It would involve compiling the same voters' list at a cost of approximately $90 million. As a country, if we come to be more democratic and over the course of a Parliament submit one, two, or three matters directly to the people for their consideration, so that there are nation-wide votes at more frequent intervals, then it makes good sense to bring the cost of all of those votes down by instituting a permanent voters' list. That could also shorten the time of election campaigns.

Under the Charter there was a strong argument that judges not be disfranchised, but rather than we as parliamentarians making that decision on their behalf, should solicit even if informally through the channels and through the judicial councils and so on, a clear indication from the Canadian judiciary as to whether they want the long-standing tradition in this country to have our judges separate, apart and distinct from the electoral and political process continued, or they want to be on an equal footing with others and have the ability to cast a vote. To my knowledge, that course was not followed.

The decision was taken, probably on advice of the Department of Justice, to extend the franchise to judges. Formerly the Liberal Party in Government amended the Canada Elections Act to give the vote to citizenship judges, but that was at a time when the appointment of those individuals was even more clearly identified with the Party affiliation and it was simply seen as a method of perhaps franchising a sure school of votes.

The question of the prisoners is one that was initially dealt with in the Province of Quebec where prisoners were given the right to vote in provincial general elections, and never in by-elections. The issue is one that I felt was not ever adequately addressed by judges in passing sentence. It should be at that level where the judge is making the main assessment that the person is going to be removed of their liberty, and that at that level prisoners should have the vote taken away from them as an additional penalty.

I would like to continue, but I see that my time is up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are three minutes left. On debate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, very briefly I would like to call attention to our concerns in relation to campaign and election expenses.

If this particular Bill goes through as is, and I respect the intentions of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), it will be the greatest travesty to election expense control that has ever been levied on the people of Canada. It is a farce to claim that this particular Bill as is puts limits on spending. It sets up a situation which we have seen and identified where the current Act, because of its vagueness in relation to campaign expenses, will permit Members or candidates to go out and spend $100,000 plus allegedly under the guise that they are living within the guidelines that are set by the Act. This giant loophole has to be plugged. If it is not plugged, I would suggest that any talk by the Government about controlling spending is merely blowing in the wind, because it really has no intention of controlling spending unless it brings forward specific amendments to define campaign expenses in relation to election expenses.

I see that my time is up momentarily.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Canada who are concerned that without any mandate from the Canadian people the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has negotiated a bilateral trade deal with the U.S. In spite of his promise that sovereignty would not be compromised, the proposed trade deal threatens the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty and our ability to establish economic programs to our own benefit. It also fails to secure access to the U.S. market, the stated goal of the negotiations.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table a petition, certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106, from a large number of British Columbians who are concerned that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade agreement with the U.S. Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, and since it is now clear that it has been; and since the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Government of Canada to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or equalize opportunities between the regions, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the Canadian people to determine the course of Canada in a general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by many residents of Canada in different provinces indicating their opposition to the Government on the free trade deal. They believe the Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade arrangement with the U.S. They believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They believe the actual agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of the people of Canada, and also prevents us from equalizing opportunities between the regions. They believe the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S. They also believe the Government did not succeed in acquiring secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key government objective.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement through a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-33—INDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which is in order pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners would like to present a common grievance. They say that indexed pensions for all Canadians are essential so that pensioners can protect the value of their pensions from the adverse effects of inflation. They say other employers and Governments recognize the need for indexation and are therefore negotiating and legislating inflation protection for pension benefits.

The petitioners say that Bill C-33 will remove the legislative provision of full inflation protection from all federal public service employees' pension benefits earned in future in spite of the fact that these employees have contributed and will continue to contribute 7.5 per cent of every dollar earned toward their pension benefits including full inflation protection. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain legislative full indexing of the federal Public Service, Canadian Armed Forces, and Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension benefits.

PLIGHT OF THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a grievance on behalf of residents of Barrie, Ontario; Whitehorse, Yukon; Edmonton, Alberta; Sarsfield, Ontario; Nelson, B.C.; and Toronto, Ontario.

These petitioners denounce the fact that more than 100,000 Canadians were homeless last year, that an increased number of young people, women, and entire families are without a roof over their heads, that the amount of affordable housing is constantly dwindling, and that the Government has not yet introduced any new measures to help the homeless.

For these reasons and many others the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act immediately and establish the necessary measures to ensure that Canadians live in adequate and healthy housing and also have access to rehabilitation programs in order to reintegrate our Canadian society in dignity.

FORT ALBANY FIRST NATION—SAFE SCHOOL ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. This petition was presented to me during a meeting of the Mushkegowuk Tribal Council in Attawapiskat just a week ago.

The petition is signed by 100 Indian people of the Fort Albany First Nation located on the western coast of James Bay. The band school, Ste. Anne's, has been closed because it is a fire trap. Therefore, the signatories call upon Canada to fulfil its fiduciary and treaty obligations and provide safe school accommodation on Sinclair Island.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present, for the attention of the House and the Government, three certified petitions. Two of them deal with the refugee legislation, Bill C-55. The petitioners come from the communities of Maple, Scarborough, Rexdale, Brampton, Mississauga, and Toronto. They are petitioning essentially for the elimination of the two stages in the refugee determination system, the first of which we call prescreening and the second, the safe third country concept.

Canadians who have signed these petitions are urging the Government to have a fair and expeditious refugee system, but certainly emphasize the word "fair". Therefore, they urge the Government to eliminate these two stages which essentially build a barrier for any individual who wants to access the refugee determination system in our country.

CLOSURE OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN ECUADOR

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the second petition comes from Canadians living in Brampton, Georgetown, Downsview, and Toronto. The petitioners complain about the Government's actions, and in particular those of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in closing the Canadian Embassy in Equador.

The closing has caused hardship in that people must wait six months to get an appointment at our Embassy in Bogota, Colombia, which is the closest embassy. The petitioners request the Government to reconsider its decision and to reopen an embassy which provides an important link to Canadian families living in Canada.

BILL C-72—EFFECT ON UNILINGUAL ANGLOPHONES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present today two petitions from residents of my constituency of Calgary South and from residents of the entire Province of Alberta. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that unilingual people have a chance for a position in government. The petitioners state that it sets a dangerous precedent to ban unilingual Anglophones and people of other cultures. They pray that Bill C-72 be disregarded for the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. Murphy: Who sent that out, Dan McKenzie? Did Dan McKenzie sign that?

Mr. Speaker: I point out to Hon. Members that Hon. Members are asked to present petitions on behalf of Canadians who send these petitions to this place. I do not think it is appropriate to remark on the motivation of those Canadian citizens who sign a petition and send it here.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO YESTERDAY'S STATEMENT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to correct the record of yesterday. Yesterday I laid upon the Table the Government's response to 37 petitions presented to the House between March 2 and March 9. Unfortunately, I misspoke myself and said that it was the responses to all petitions that had been presented in the month of March. That is not correct, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly a large majority of them but it is not all the petitions. I simply want the record to be correct.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. I wish, in the interests of the decent usage of the English language, that we would take the word "misspoke", put it aside, and never use it again. It is an Americanism, if I can put it that way, which has no place in this fair land.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

MILITARY ESCALATION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this morning I sent to Your Honour a request for an emergency debate based upon the very disturbing news which was registered this morning about the increasing military escalation in Central America.

Canadians on both government and opposition sides of the House have joined in very strong support of the peace process which was initiated over a year ago by President Arias of Costa Rica. We have watched, with some encouragement, the developments. The events of last night and today are major set-backs. Not only do they register a danger to the nationals of that area, but there are many Canadians involved in that zone. There is a real possibility that conflagration could occur.

I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to consider the opportunity for debate so that we would be able, not only to get a full rendering of what is going on from government sources but also to give Members of this House an opportunity to express their very deep concerns about the events which are taking place in that part of the world.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has raised a matter which I think all Members, regardless of political persuasion, would agree is serious.

As Hon. Members will know, and I think it is important for the public to understand this also, when the reform committee recommended reforms of Parliament it was suggested that in applications for an emergency debate the Chair not give reasons as to why it decides either for or against it. I think that that is probably sound advice because we otherwise get into the situation of setting up a sort of mini-jurisprudence as to when and under what circumstances an application should be accepted. Most applications for an emergency debate are serious, as is this one made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

I have given this very careful consideration and my decision not to proceed with an emergency debate at this time is no reflection upon the importance with which I think this House views the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

I will break from the recommendation of the reform committee somewhat and indicate that there is presently a committee of this House which has been formed to investigate and look into that very part of the world about which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is concerned in his application. That committee has been formed and, while it is not for the Chair to tell that committee what to do, it may very well be appropriate for that committee to address that, given the events.

There are some other opportunities open to the Hon. Member and his Party, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, to bring this matter before the House. At least for today, however, I must say to the Hon. Member that I am not persuaded that we should proceed with an emergency debate. Having said that, it does not take away anything from the importance of the matter the Hon. Member raises.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ABORIGINAL PEOPLE'S RIGHTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada, including:

(a) the right to self government

(b) the provision of adequate shelter, health care and educational facilities,

(c) basic water and sewage treatment facilities,

(d) adequate employment and training opportunities, and

(e) the financial resources to fully develop the economic and human resources of aboriginal communities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I presented this motion on behalf of the New Democratic Party today because I have found in travels around my riding and other parts of the country that we are creating an increased sense of frustration among our aboriginal Canadians. There has been an increased sense of frustration because many of our first people feel that they are being left out of the government process.

Part of their concern arises from the fact that the meetings that were held between native leaders and our First Ministers failed to include any explanation or definition of aboriginal rights and self-government within our Constitution. The decision in the Meech Lake Accord not to place any extra emphasis on the rights and concerns of our aboriginal people also increased the frustration that exists among them. There is also a concern that government priorities do not address the concerns of native people.

As our motion indicates, we talk not only in terms of housing and shelter, but in terms of education, basic water and sewage facilities, employment, training opportunities, as well as economic and human development.

The Government did all it could to prevent a UN study of the condition of aboriginal peoples. I believe it did so because it is ashamed of the situation that exists in many parts of our country. Unfortunately, unless someone dies in a fire or someone is beaten, raped or murdered, unless there is a tragedy that appeals to a certain sense within the media, the problems of our native people are not addressed on an ongoing basis.

Those of us with large native communities in our constituencies and those of us who have travelled with committees or on other House business into native communities know the dire straits in which those people live.

This is a very affluent country, but it has a large population that is denied even basic services. There are communities in my riding that have no water supply, no sewage treatment, a school that is condemned and 95 per cent unemployment. There is a basic feeling that the Government is ignoring their concerns.

We are not saying that all the problems are new and can be blamed on the present Government. Many of those problems existed for many years and continue to exist because we have a quickly growing native population.

It is also a situation where the traditional way of life, if not dying out, is certainly unable to sustain the increased population. Unfortunately, the Government and previous Governments, in spite of spending billions of dollars on native concerns, have not spent enough to meet the needs of these people.

It is no surprise to many people in this room that there is a backlog on schools for native people. The projections of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may deal with building a school on a particular reserve in five or ten years. However, they only take into consideration what the population may be in three years as opposed to what may be needed further in the future. That has been the philosophy of the department, not only under this Government, but with the previous Government as well. As a result, by the time the schools are built in these communities, they already need extra classrooms.

The treatment of young people in these communities is one of the most tragic elements of our dealings with native people. They grow up in dilapidated houses with neither water nor sewage. They go to inadequate schools because less money is spent per capita for the operational costs of the schools than would be the case if they were provincial schools.

In spite of all those disadvantages, these young people are told to compete in our society. Their culture is different from that of the majority of our society. While that may be a benefit in many ways, it makes it very difficult for them to compete in a basically white society. They are expected to live in dilapidated houses with no heat, get up in the morning when it may be 40 degrees below zero, and attend an overcrowded school. We expect them to be educated in a school system that has less money per capita even though the cost of living is higher because these are remote communities. We expect them to be educated in schools that do not have enough money to stock books in their libraries. They are then expected to go out and face the future.

I am not suggesting that no money is spent on native education, but that not enough money is committed to native education, native housing and its infrastructure for such things as water and sewage.

I brought this motion to the floor of the House today because I believe it is important that members of all Parties have a chance to address these problems. I do not believe we have instant solutions but I believe the House of Commons, and especially the Government, must put much more emphasis on ensuring that the youth in our native communities have a future.

It is not good enough to say that we have spent the entire budget and will only be able to give them a school five years down the road. Those children are growing up now. Each year we delay putting a school into one of these communities makes it that much more difficult for those native people to compete in the future. While it is difficult for us to deal with the problems that many native young people face today and while it is difficult for us to create jobs for a lot of the young adults in native communities, we are just creating a long-term problem for ourselves if we do not guarantee adequate educational facilities and resources for those people who are growing up at this time.

I am often ashamed to be a Canadian as I travel around the native communities in my constituency, not because the Government has not tried but because the commitment is not high enough. Some people will say that the native people can do more for themselves. That is probably true. However, we make it very difficult for them to do so. Anyone who has dealt with the Department of Indian Affairs and Treasury Board knows how hard it is to get something out of those Departments and knows that the process we have to use to have major projects approved is a very difficult and tedious process. A project can be in place two, three or four years before the Government finally gets around to approving it.

There is a great desire among our new native leadership to take control of their own destiny. They recognize that they have to contribute as much as they can to that future. They recognize they have an obligation to build their own future. But we must recognize that they cannot do it without financial resources and without a commitment from the Government.

I find, like many Members of Parliament, that dealing with the Government at the best of times is frustrating, but dealing with the Department of Indian Affairs is the most frustrating process of all. Dealing with the Department of Indian Affairs is an almost impossible task for Members of Parliament, so you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, how difficult it is for a young native leader of 22 to 24 years of age when he or she tries to deal with that bureaucracy. We all know of the political shenanigans that have taken place within the Department of Indian Affairs.

I have often met with Indian leaders who believe they had a commitment from a Minister of Indian Affairs to do something. The Minister of Indian Affairs flies into Winnipeg and meets with some of the native leadership, flies back to Ottawa, and the native leaders believe they have a commitment, only to be told that there is no money in the regional budget or that the programs really do not meet their goals or that some Treasury Board regulation would have to be changed or that this is not what the Minister really meant. We are building more and more frustration. We have made the process so difficult because we do not recognize that these needs have to be met at this time.

Members of all three Parties have spoken in this House in the past about the need to take the decision-making away from Treasury Board and from the Department of Indian Affairs and give it to the bands themselves, the tribal councils and those others who are involved with native economic development within the community. We have had the constitutional conferences on self-government and meetings between the native leadership and government officials in terms of passing over some of those responsibilities. However, the process is taking far too much time. After those First Ministers' meetings with the native leadership, there was still a feeling among native people that there is no commitment in our general society to entrenching aboriginal rights. They went to those meetings, first with former Prime Minister Trudeau chairing and, more recently, with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chairing, and each and every time those conferences broke down because the western Premiers refused to budge. These western Premiers had been saying for years that they did not know what Indian self-government and aboriginal rights were all about.

Those Premiers have been coming to conferences for many years. Obviously, they do not spend their time and resources looking at this problem until national television is focused on them. So we are in the situation where these Premiers are saying: "We do not know what it is all about", but how much energy have they really spent trying to resolve the issue of self-government and aboriginal rights? Not that much.

One of the most bitter things for native people is that after all those years of conferences on aboriginal rights, where people could not come to an agreement, especially the western Premiers, the Meech Lake Accord could be agreed to so quickly and that modifications to the Meech Lake Accord could be agreed to just a few weeks later. There are some very important concepts in the Meech Lake Accord. We have all welcomed the inclusion of Quebec into the constitutional family of this country. However, there was a political will at Meech Lake and at the Langevin Block to deal with the problem. Very difficult concepts were dealt with quickly, but aboriginal rights take years and years and have still not been resolved.

After the Meech Lake Accord was agreed to, many aboriginal people welcomed Quebec. They expressed their belief that that would also help their cause, as the Prime Minister himself has indicated. But look what happened when the native people asked for simple amendments to the Meech Lake Accord. They asked for a simple guarantee that they will be put on the agenda of the first meeting of the First Ministers', meetings that will now been entrenched in their Constitution to take place on an annual basis.

We have guaranteed in the Meech Lake Accord that fish will be discussed at that meeting. We have guaranteed that the Senate will be discussed. Why not at least show some commitment to the aboriginal people of this country? Why not show the commitment and ensure that at that meeting we will also commence our discussions on aboriginal rights? The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have risen in this House and said, "Yes, we will meet sometime on aboriginal rights", but there has been no commitment. I do not believe there is a Premier across this country, or the Prime Minister, for that matter, who would dare say no to the inclusion of the topic of aboriginal rights, along with those other topics of fish and the Senate reform in the next meeting on the Constitution. The failure of the Prime Minister to take the lead, as was suggested by my leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and at least canvass the Premiers to see if they would agree to have aboriginal rights included at the first conference is a signal that there is no political will involved.

If I can become partisan for a few seconds, I would say that they are also not impressed when they see that the Conservative leader in Manitoba, who was elected leader of that Party for a number of years, now says that he does not know what self-government is all about. Before he was leader of the Party he was a cabinet Minister in the Conservative Government of Manitoba. Yet he does not know what self-government is all about. The last thing the aboriginal people of the country need is another ally of Premier Vander Zalm, Premier Getty, and Premier Devine. Those three by themselves have effectively prevented aboriginal rights from being included in the Constitution.

We are told that if we accept Meech Lake we will have Quebec on side as an ally with respect to some improvements to the definition of aboriginal rights. We do not need a fourth western Premier saying, "No, I do not understand it. It is something that is too complex and I do not want to have it in the Constitution at this time". The failure of the Government to take the political lead when it was possible this spring, when there was a mood in the country to try to resolve a great many problems that existed with our Constitution, may haunt us through 1989 and in the future.

In the few seconds that I have remaining there is one area in the motion with which I would like to deal. I would like to see some commitment from the Government. I have already talked about the problems with general education. However, I have not seen an adequate program for the post-secondary training of native people. There is some training done at the present time, but it is not nearly as comprehensive as it has to be. The number of native people being trained in apprenticeship programs is almost nil. The amount of affirmative action training for native people so that they can enter trades training and apprenticeship training is simply inadequate. In areas in which the provinces try to develop these programs there is a resistance from the Department of Indian Affairs to help pay for them. There is a growing lack of interest on the part of the Department of Employment and Immigration to fund pre-trades training and upgrading training for native people.

I spoke earlier about the fact that the educational system guarantees failure for many young native people. Yet later on in their lives when they decide they want to go back to school or want to go to a community college in order to qualify to build their own homes, their own sewer systems, their own water facilities or their own construction programs in their own communities, they are told, "I am sorry, we do not have a program for you". It is time that in all these areas the Government put in place a real program for our native people.

Mr. Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He made reference in his motion to water and sewage problems. He talked very briefly about these matters and the need for programs in these areas. Can the Hon. Member comment on the federal Government's federal water policy, which also refers to guidelines regarding water quality? These are merely guidelines, they are not legislated. In the water policy it states that the federal Government will continue to consider legislation to ensure the safety of drinking water within areas of federal jurisdiction. Of course, areas of federal jurisdiction include Indian reserves.

Does the Hon. Member see this as a helpful way for Government to stop considering the question but actually proceed to legislation so that we would have some real pressure to clean this matter up?

Has the Hon. Member heard the rumours within the federal Government that the reason we have not proceeded to legislation is that the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) is afraid of being shown up? Knowing how bad water quality is on Indian reserves and how much money would be required to rectify the situation if there were real legislation with standards and not merely guidelines the federal Government would be required to act. Yet the Minister of Indian Affairs is holding up good legislation because he knows that the consequences would be very severe.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) brings up a very good point. I wish that I had more time when making my speech to deal with water and sewage, because they are real problems in our communities. Each spring as native people go out to get their water, quite often from the nearest lake, there is salmonella poisoning and other bacterial problems which they face.

The Hon. Member is correct when she says that if we were to apply the laws of the land with regard to common safety and with regard to construction codes concerning our reserves, then there would be court case after court case in which the federal Government would be found in contempt of its own laws.

That is why I suspect the Minister of Indian Affairs as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have always taken the attitude not to legislate what is required in terms of buildings, water and sewage on our reserves. It is not a matter of cruelty by the Government. It is not a matter of neglect. It is just that it does not know that the standards in which our native people are made to live are far beneath those that would be accepted in any other part of our population. It is amazing that the native population has stood it for so long.

If the same situation existed in our towns and cities one could bet that there would be a national outcry. The Journal would have a feature on it. One could bet that the appropriate Minister at the federal or provincial level would promise immediate legislation to solve the problems. However, there is the feeling that if this happens on a reserve then, well, it cannot be helped. It is true that it is very difficult to provide some of those facilities in remote communities. But some reserves are not that remote. Some are next door to white urban communities or right across the river from such communities and they are not receiving these services.

It is true that once provincial Governments are involved quite often services in terms of water, sewage, housing and protection of the law are in existence. There can be a Métis community under provincial jurisdiction, and not just in the Province of Manitoba, such as there is at Cross Lake, which has water and sewage and better housing, and across an imaginary line called the reserve line one finds that there are none of those things.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who of course has a great background of experience in this matter of the condition of the native people of Canada and the manner in which they are neglected. I would like to ask him if he would say a little bit more about the matter of housing.

A few weeks ago at a committee meeting I heard that there has been no increase in the amount of money budgeted for native housing for four years. I understand that the same dollar amount is all that is available now as was available four years ago. Further, mortgages often run for 25 years, whereas the house, because of construction faults under Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, often lasts only 15 years.

I was wondering if the Hon. Member could comment on the administration of the money provided or meant to be provided for housing as it falls between the Department of Indian Affairs and Canada Mortgage and Housing?

Mr. Murphy: I realize that I do not have time for a long reply on this answer, which is unfortunate. I would like to thank the Member who attended the Standing Committee on Government Operations to hear from the chiefs from Manitoba, including Patsy Turner, the head of the MKO, and also the Chief of the Grand Rapids Band.

At that meeting, the native leadership themselves spoke much more eloquently than I could about the problem. There is not enough money for native housing. There is also a strategy by the Government to take away responsibility for housing from the Department of Indian Affairs and to attempt to make CMHC pick up some of the backlog. This forces people on the reserves to throw up their hands with regard to the housing provided by the Department of Indian Affairs and state that they cannot live in those places because they are terrible. That forces those people, often who do not have an adequate income, to take housing from CMHC.

One of the major problems is that CMHC does not feel that it has a responsibility to provide reserve housing. Many of its rules, regulations, and rent requirements are designed for the cities of Toronto or Winnipeg and are quite appropriate in those communities. The 25-year mortgage is a good indication of this. A 25-year mortgage on a house that will last 40, 50, or 60 years in the City of Toronto is a fairly good investment for many people. But it is not a very good investment for someone who knows that, because of the other problems in the community, the nature of where the houses are built, and the lack of other infrastructure facilities, those houses will disappear or be run down in 10 or 15 years. There are no carpenters available, there are no federal government programs for maintenance, and as a result there is a built-in failure into the system that is in place.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, if I did not know better, I would almost think that, in bringing forward this motion today, the NDP is co-operating with the Liberal Party of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: That accusation has been made before.

Mr. Penner: I say that because this evening the Liberal Party opens a policy forum respecting aboriginal peoples and First Nations. I want to say to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that in bringing forward this motion the timing is perfect. It fits in very well with the forum which begins this evening. I begin my remarks by thanking the Hon. Member most heartily for using one of the NDP Opposition Days on this important motion.

I also wish to say, Sir, that we will want to have another Opposition Day on the same subject next week after we have heard from aboriginal leaders and groups respecting current concerns, problems, issues, and the agenda for future action.

To a very significant extent the issue of aboriginal rights, of aboriginal title, questions of justice and equity for Canada's indigenous peoples is a question of human rights. In fact, I would consider it to be the oldest yet unresolved question of human rights in the world today.

I always listen with interest and concern in the House of Commons when Hon. Members raise matters of human rights violations around the world, and I always sympathize with them. For example, violations of rights in the Soviet Union, the massive violations against a majority by a vicious white minority in South Africa, violations in Chile, East Timor, Sri Lanka, and those violations against the Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip of the Middle East. All of those are reprehensible and deserve our condemnation and our outrage. But right here on our very own doorstep is one of the major human rights issues in the world today. Yet we in Canada regularly in one way or another attempt to cover it up, disguise it, or gloss over it.

For example, not too long ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) circulated to all Canadian embassies around the world the document which tried to give the impression that all is well with the Lubicon Lake Indian people. Yet we know that a way of life there has been destroyed. Disease, poverty, despair, and alcoholism haunt the community. Why would we have the world believe it to be otherwise? The Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House that he is not responsible for everything that his officials write. But he refused to withdraw the document and he refused to issue an apology to the aboriginal people of Canada.

As well, when the northern Quebec Cree worked hard day and night to get through the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations certain resolutions that were important to the indigenous people of Canada and to the indigenous peoples of the world, Canadian officials were active in lobbying against those resolutions. I have information that they hinted to certain African nations that Canada's aid programs may be reduced; that they hinted to other African nations that our position on apartheid may be less firm if they supported the resolutions as they were drafted.

Here in the House of Commons the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have had us believe that what Canada wanted to do was to broaden and expand those resolutions. In fact, all of the evidence is to the contrary. What was attempted was to water down, postpone, and to soften the resolutions. Why? Because we fear that Canada's record regarding its native peoples may become revealed to the whole world.

When our aboriginal people needed strong support for the maintenance of the fur industry, the trapping of fur being a very important part of the subsistence economy for many aboriginal people, support from the Canadian Government was, at best, gentle. Embassies and high commissions did not want to get mixed up with the animal rights activists, and they feared facing this lunatic fringe in British and European society. The British Government and the British Parliament have insulted Canada and its indigenous peoples by the act of imposing a labelling regulation on all garments that have been made from furs from trapped animals.

When it comes to foreign aid, which I support of course, we accept the notion that a percentage of the gross national product is the way to go. We never quite reached the United Nations goal, but we always talk about striving for it and aiming to reach it. Yet in Canada the concept of an economic rent to aboriginal people and First Nations, a percentage of the gross national product for housing, education, economic development, community infrastructure, and health, with all of those matters and the policy formulation related to them and the control of those matters being in the hands of aboriginal peoples themselves, all of this is considered to be far out. It is considered to be unacceptable, unworkable, and unachievable.

We continue with the present system of not many changes from year to year. The backlog of Indian housing persists. The program for funding Indian young people in post-secondary institutions is capped. This year, at least 1,000 have been denied access to higher education. Poverty, disease, and a high suicide rate continue to be issues in Indian communities.

Here is the message which the Grand Council of the Cree of northern Quebec delivered to the United Nations Human Rights Commission:

> As a group of all the inhabitants of Canada the indigenous peoples are the poorest, have the worst health, the least education, the highest unemployment, the most insufficient and dilapidated housing, the highest infant mortality, the lowest expectation of life.

Of all cabinet portfolios of government, probably the one considered to be the least desirable is that of Indian Affairs. Even National Revenue is preferable. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, having to go home to your constituency and telling your supporters that the Government of the Prime Minister has just made you the nation's chief tax collector; I think that is one weekend you might want to stay here in Ottawa.

Indian Affairs is still at the bottom, and for very good reasons. Sam Rayburn, a past Speaker of the United States Congress, used to say to new Members of Congress: "If you want to get along here, you had better go along".

If a Minister of Indian Affairs wants to survive, he or she must go along, go along with departmental bureaucrats who basically dislike their clientele. He must go along with his cabinet colleagues who consider the Indian vote to be insignificant and, therefore, why bother putting money or new programs in that direction.

Occasionally in Canada we get a Minister who seems ready to listen, to learn, to understand. When the signal is given, the Indian people sigh another deep sigh and begin instructing the new Minister all over again. The patience of Canada's aboriginal peoples is simply enormous. When this Minister becomes sympathetic, or better still when he achieves a certain degree of empathy and wants to translate it into concrete action to produce positive results, he is quickly replaced.

The mandate of the most recent Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight), as a way of illustration, is to dampen down the expectations, to follow a policy of containment, to control the situation as much as possible, to introduce expenditure reductions wherever they can be done, and to implement the so-called Buffalo Jump report from the Nielsen task force.

The same Minister is given another assignment, as if being Minister of Indian Affairs were not enough in itself. At the same time he is given another assignment which clearly conflicts with his constitutional obligations as Minister of Indian Affairs, his trust responsibilities. He is made Minister of the Western Diversification Program, which, by the way, has within it no component for the assistance of Indian people. This is the Minister who hands out $9.5 million to a Japanese pulp company and, when asked about it in the House of Commons, expresses surprise that the timber to be cut by this pulp company is on land claimed by the Lubicon Indian people. He says he does not know anything about that. It seems to be a rather careless way to handle taxpayers' money.

To help the Minister in the House of Commons, the Government appoints a junior Minister of Indian Affairs. He has not been able to describe even what his duties are. However, I think it is quite obvious that he is expected to be a mouthpiece for the Indian Affairs bureaucracy which, as I said earlier, deeply dislikes its clientele. If one wants to go beyond dislike to outright hostility, then one might become a senior bureaucrat in that Department.

Recently I spoke with a young man who had worked briefly in the Department of Indian Affairs. He said to me, with some puzzlement on his face: "You know, the Indian people actually believe that the Government owes them something". Well, if someone were to come into my house and shove me out into the backyard where I would end up living somewhere between the doghouse and the garbage tins, I too might feel that there was a debt obligation to me.

I know of Indian communities which are located in swamps, where the people have to move from house to house on boardwalks, and if a child were to fall off a boardwalk in the spring of the year, he would disappear forever in the swamp. I know of Indian communities located on flood plains, on the most infertile land imaginable—barren, isolated camps on the fringes of Canadian society. Yet, when these people hunt, when they fish, when they shoot game for their own survival, they are harassed by police and provincial game wardens. Often these people are surrounded by hundreds of thousands of unoccupied square miles of land, yet their land base can never be expanded.

The present Government has a policy—no new bands, no new reserves, unless there is a clear obligation imposed upon us. No new bands and no new reserves if the spending of any money is involved. I have a letter before me at the moment concerning the Blackwater Indian Band in northern Ontario. It has been told in a letter signed by the Minister that under current policy for new bands and new reserves the Department can only consider requests for band status where it can be clearly demonstrated that such action will not result in additional funding requirements.

There are Indian people who dwell in very beautiful valleys like the Stein Valley of British Columbia. Even there the exploiters of timber cannot be kept at bay. They must have it all.

What we have today in Canada regarding our aboriginal peoples is a crying shame. They have rights on paper in the Constitution, but it is impossible to get those rights off the paper and into the lives of the people where they are needed, where they live.

Four First Ministers' conferences have failed to give the aboriginal people the rights they are seeking. However, on just one weekend we were able to accommodate the constitutional goals of Quebec. I can never judge a society by deals made among the powerbrokers, by the trade-offs between a monarch and his barons. The way we judge society is how we treat the least powerful elements. I think the whole world ought to realize that this benevolent, this welfare state of Canada, where words like justice, equity and fairness drip off our tongues like hot honey, is among the worst violators of any code of human rights in existence in the world today. The sooner we face up to it, the sooner we cease the cover-up, the excuses, and the better off this nation will be.

The aboriginal people of Canada must have a fair share of our resources, a reasonable percentage of the gross national product, an adequate land base and genuine control of their own lives, real self-determination and not that nonsense being advocated by the Department of Indian Affairs called community-based government, which is nothing more than passing over a few administrative responsibilities to these people with all kinds of strings attached, holding back funds and replacing the old colonial Indian agent with a new yuppie bureaucrat called a monitor.

I support wholeheartedly the motion before the House today. I support any others like it from any source. I would like to end on a note of hope or optimism, but I cannot. I feel nothing but depression, despair and dismay over the entire situation. I do have one brief message for the Government, for this House of Commons and for the nation, that is, until justice is achieved in Canada for aboriginal peoples, this nation cannot and will not be whole. We can never escape our own sorry past, and never would I defend one day of that sorry past. Surely we can all try to fashion a better future for the first citizens of this country.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). It is evident to all of us present in the House, and I am sure to everyone at home looking at television, that the Hon. Member spoke from his heart and from his head. I sometimes wonder how a person like this Member, so dedicated to the cause, can even sleep at night and stay to fight more and more. I can assure Members of this House that this fight is not only when the Member is in the House of Commons, but it goes on in caucus. He is heard loud and clear by all of us.

I want to congratulate him on behalf of the members of the Liberal Party and to thank him. I would like to give him some time to add more because I know he has a lot more to tell us.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, that is a marvellously open-ended question and I thank my colleague for it.

I would add one note which has to do with the concept of aboriginal title. My hon. friend, the Hon. Member from Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is in the House and deeply involved with the subject of aboriginal title. For the Government of Canada and for the Department of Justice to suggest that aboriginal title is no more than a lien, no more than encumbrance or a shadow on the Crown right, is not only insulting but downright stupid. Such a notion from my point of view is based on the outdated concept of the divine right of monarchs. If I read my history correctly, that concept was battled down during the so-called Liberal revolutions of 19th century Europe. It was swept aside then with utter disdain. For some reason, in Canada the concept lives on. It lives on here as a weapon that we continue to use against indigenous peoples to limit the extent of their claims.

In the Province of British Columbia they even consider that aboriginal title has been extinguished, and yet no one can say precisely when this happened or how, nor can they bring forward one single document that would indicate that at any point in history the extinguishment of that title took place. The Nisga people who are visiting Ottawa this week are even unable in that province to get a fishing agreement, although they have accepted, in general, terms proposed by the Government of Canada. The Government backed off on its own terms, because, as best I can conclude, it fears the powerful non-native fishing lobby in British Columbia.

When the Calder case was before the Supreme Court of Canada, the justices divided equally three for and three against whether extinguishment had taken place in British Columbia. All six of them admitted that aboriginal title under our understanding of British law had existed. Three said it was extinguished and three said it still exists today. I want to say that the Government of Canada and this House of Commons ought to insist that that matter go back to the Supreme Court for final decision. We cannot go on in this deadlocked situation and leave the aboriginal people of British Columbia bearing the consequences of that deadlock.

Mr. Speaker: At the disposition of the House, I would hear the Hon. Member for a few comments. We are a little bit over time. If the House is prepared to agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) on one of the finest speeches I have heard in this House in a long time. Too often we hear nothing but rhetoric and posturing. It is so nice to hear a speech that is meaningful, very much needed and, as my colleague before me said, the Member's comments came from both the heart and the head.

I was distressed by a great deal of what he had to say and unfortunately it is a sad commentary on the Government. I think the problem was exemplified when the Member spoke about the department not really appreciating its clientele and the Government not even being considerate enough to want the support of the native people, just purely writing them off. As Members of this House realize, the Government has again in its budget set up a slush fund this year as it did last year.

Does the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior have any idea of the utter urgency of the need that exists among the native people and the treatment they are getting in this country? They should expect so much more. This so-called emergency fund set up last year and again this year under the Budget, how much of that fund has been designated to the native people?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, as best we have been able to determine, that is those of us who sit on the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, the budget for Indian Affairs has remained constant, whereas government expenditures have gone up. Almost all departments have received increases in excess of the rate of inflation. The Indian Affairs portfolio has remained flat. It is my impression that the Government has determined that this is one area where effective expenditure control can be successful. I think they have come to this conclusion because we are dealing with a small minority. The cost of meeting the needs outlined in the speech by the Hon. Member for Churchill is enormous. It seems to me that this is an area where there ought to be increases. This is where we ought to be considering more expenditures.

I cannot help but be bothered when the Government talks about wanting to build nuclear-powered submarines to maintain our sovereignty in the North when that sovereignty has been well established by the Inuit people. Why would we want to spend billions on these war toys when we should be investing our money in the first citizens of this country, who delivered so much and made the present prosperity of Canada really possible, if you want to analyse the facts objectively and fairly?

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and comment on this motion. Before I begin, I cannot let the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior's (Mr. Penner) last words stand on the record. The facts are entirely the opposite. The budget for Indian and Inuit affairs this year has increased by some 9.7 per cent, almost double the average increase for other departments across the board. That amounts to $181 million more, and the federal budget is now over $2 billion in this field. I am not saying that it is totally adequate, but to say that it has remained the same is just not the way I read the Department's Estimates for the year.

The Hon. Member also said that employees of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs are not sympathetic to their clientele. I know that each of the Departments concerned can probably find some individuals who fit that category. However, by and large that is just not the case. I would use Mr. Dennis Wallace, the Regional Director in Alberta, as an example. Unfortunately, he just accepted a position in another department. The bands in that province are very unhappy about his leaving. They have called me in great numbers over the last couple of days quite concerned about his move. They came to know him well and realized that he has worked diligently and hard on their problems.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior and I go back a long way in our fight for better conditions for the aboriginal people of Canada. We have worked together for over 16 years on the Standing Committee on Indian and Northern Affairs as it was called, now the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. When we began, what he said in his speech today was certainly the case. However, to say that after all those years of hard work nothing has really changed surprises me a great deal.

As Chairman of the committee and as a member of the Liberal Government he had successes in making changes in policy and conditions. For example, when we noticed the manner in which European countries were dealing with our fur industry, particularly our aboriginal peoples, we worked together and produced a report that changed the attitude of the departments, the Government, and produced funding to allow the aboriginal people to go to Europe to defend their rights. As well, we have an excellent position in the British Museum, where people can see the manner in which our aboriginal people trap fur. There is much more to do. Hopefully this policy which resulted from the report we produced will continue.

I have made speeches in this House, in opposition and in government, with respect to the conditions of aboriginal people in Canada compared to ordinary Canadians. I can find examples similar to those brought forward by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior. I had intended to talk a little bit about that. However, because of the gloomy picture painted here today I want to take a different tack. It is important for us to show that Indian leaders in this country have not been sitting back anticipating that Government is going to solve all their problems. I know for a fact that I have not. By looking at the picture over the last 10 or even 20 years we can see substantial changes in the political and cultural direction in the native community as well as in Canadian society at large.

Canadians are now far more willing to open their hearts to the problems faced by aboriginal Canadians. Budgets have changed to the point that the fastest growing budget in the Government is the Indian and Northern Affairs budget. I will go through these case by case because I think it is important.

Dramatic changes have taken place in housing conditions, education, and in the manner in which the Indian culture is preserved. What I found a little disturbing in the previous two speeches is the lack of balance. I say that not because I am speaking on behalf of the Government but because I believe there is a more balanced picture that can be put before the Canadian people.

I do not believe that the Indian or aboriginal people of this country feel that Government is going to provide them with all their wants, needs and desires. We now have leaders who are going to tell us what they think is important for them in the next decade or into the next century. They do not believe they are totally dependent upon the federal Government. They do not believe the Government is going to provide their shelter and the manner in which it is built. They do not believe the Government is going to provide employment, develop the human and native communities and resources in this country, or provide them with self-government. Absolutely not.

That became very evident when we went through the four national conferences where Indian, Métis and Inuit people communicated directly with the federal and provincial Governments on what they think ought to be in the Constitution with respect to native self-government and native rights. Anyone who knows native people in this country knows that they are not sitting back and waiting for the Government to provide the answers. Indians, Inuit and Métis are more and more taking their future into their own hands. Indian political leaders and ordinary community members are building self-government. The right to self-government is every Canadian's birthright. Unfortunately, it is going to take a little longer for that to be put in place by the Indian people, but they are no exception. It will come and it will be satisfactory to the aboriginal people. I am convinced of that.

Indian entrepreneurs are building businesses and creating employment across this country. We all know that self-government has to have an economic base. You cannot be dependent upon others. That is happening now. Recently I spoke in Alberta as the federal Government assisted new native ventures in that province, contributing upwards of $9 million to the Indian Association of Alberta. They put before us that night numerous examples of successful ventures which have already taken place. They look forward to a great number more as this assistance is being made available. We see examples of this across the country from the Sumas Clay Products in Vancouver, which has just opened, to Econobois in Huron Village. We are also seeing native elders taking a larger role again in society as the youth look to them to rebuild the culture, pride and dignity which was so evident in so many communities. The loss of that has been the greatest problem for the youth, resulting in alcoholism, higher death rates, and so on.

Health is more than pills and hospitals. We talked about drinking water. I have not heard that in any way any of our Ministers are holding up legislation with regard to safe drinking water, but we all know that the problem will not be solved by legislation. The important part of health, as I see it, is sound lifestyles.

As an example, in Alkali Lake in British Columbia the chief, council, and elders, viewing a tremendous alcohol problem, took upon themselves the responsibility to solve the problem in their own community. It was not Government or a federal nurse that came in and solved the problem. The community itself said that it had a problem and took the decisions and had the courage to deal with the problem. The results are significant and have been shown to us by the CBC.

Let us not insult aboriginal Canadians by portraying them as passive wards of the state, because they are not. That era of total dependence is behind us. It has taken a long time and there is much more to be done, but I believe and am thankful that it is passing into history.

Nevertheless, the fact remains that Government does have an important role to play in native development. As I have said, the social indicators are still there as enunciated by the two previous speakers. Indians generally do face worse living conditions than other Canadians. As an example, life expectancy for male and female Indians is about 10 years shorter than the Canadian average. Death by suicide is about three times more common among Indians than it is in the general Canadian population. Death from injury and poisoning is four times more common. The employment rate of on-reserve Indians, that is, the percentage of the population 15 years and older which is employed, is around 50 per cent of that of other Canadians. Those facts are undeniable. They represent unfinished business, as all of us in this House acknowledge.

However, we cannot continue to put before the House a litany of negativism. We should take heart in the stunning progress that has occurred over the past generation, and particularly in the last 10 years. I have lived through and witnessed that. The historical perspective is there, as we all know. We have heard it in this House and it bears repeating. However, there has been progress.

Since 1960, Canadian society has opened up to Indian people politically, economically, and socially. Indian leaders have acted with initiative and determination. All Canadians saw that when they viewed the constitutional conferences.

Although they failed actually to write something into the Constitution, their greatest success was in showing all in Canada the capacity and capability of our aboriginal leaders.

Federal government programs and budgets which have benefited aboriginal people have been expanding rapidly and the result has been a generation of advance. The Member for Churchill said that it is frustrating to deal with the Department of Indian Affairs, and it is. As we all go through our ridings, particularly those in the northern parts of the country, we can see the need for change. We come to Ottawa and ask that the changes be made. However, we all recognize that Parliament only votes so much money. Even though the budget of the Department of Indian Affairs is the most rapidly increasing of all budgets, it is still not adequate for all the conditions which we can point out.

Even so, this year we opened six new schools in Manitoba at a construction cost of $55 million. There is a submission before the Treasury Board for $88 million to provide water and sewage programs for five northern flood bands in Manitoba. In 1986-87 the Department of Indian Affairs spent $300 million in actual expenditures in Manitoba. That will increase by $8.3 million this year.

Even with all of those expenditures we will not meet all the needs. However, that does not mean that no advances are taking place. Communities are in fact finally getting the schools and the sewers and water for which they have waited so long.

Until 1961 Indians in Canada did not even have the right to vote in federal elections. Today, only a little over 20 years later, they participate in Canadian political life at all levels. They have served in this House of Commons and in the Senate. They are appointed as our representatives and are, by and large, running their own programs. They have participated directly in four constitutional conferences, as we pointed out ought to be the case in our report on Indian self-government.

In 1960, most Indian communities were still directed by Indian agents. It is hard to believe that it was such a short time ago. These were officials appointed by the federal Government. Today those agents are long gone, they have disappeared. Today band councils chosen directly by their communities administer more than 64 per cent of the funding provided by the federal Government, and that percentage is increasing as rapidly as is possible, as rapidly as the chiefs and councils are willing to accept new responsibilities.

Some bands, including the Cree and Naskapi in northern Quebec and the Sechelt in British Columbia, have sustained their own self-government structures, they are outside the Indian Act. I hope that many others come forward with similar demands to the federal Government. Several more are in the final stages of negotiation.

In the 1960s, Indians had little role in their education. Many students were sent to church-run schools. They were taken away from their homes, and their language and culture were discouraged. They were cut off from their families and communities. Today there are 243 band-managed schools. The best examples of Indian people taking control of their education are in Manitoba.

There was criticism by the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) about Government not responding to the demands of Indian students. Although until recent times less than a few hundred made it to post-secondary schools, today some 13,000 Indian students are attending post-secondary schools. Many others are being assisted by training programs of the Government to go to the technical schools. Enrollment since 1981 has increased by over 225 per cent. We are now spending $110 million to assist, in non-returnable grants, Indian students wishing to go to post secondary school. Even with that amount of money some 500 have to wait a year before they can get assistance.

Some 30 per cent of the current housing stock has been built in the last five years alone, and some 35 per cent of that renovated.

The health conditions which we discussed earlier have improved. The situation is much better. I could go on and deal with economic development, but you are pointing out that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I just want to conclude by saying that while we can all make the kinds of speeches like those before mine, I believe there has been significant change on the part of Government, aboriginal leadership and Canadians as a whole. I look forward to this increasing in the future.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that the speeches which preceded him lacked balance. We did not lack balance in our speeches, we only shared the frustration of native constituents and others across the country.

An example of the cause of that frustration was the speech given by the Parliamentary Secretary. It is the same type of speech we heard from the Liberals and their Parliamentary Secretaries when they were in government.

I regret that with two Ministers responsible for Indian Affairs, neither could rearrange his schedule in such a way as to address this issue. I recognize that they have busy schedules, but this is an important matter. Opposition Members made arrangements to speak. The Government received proper notice, and I think an arrangement could have been made.

Today, the Parliamentary Secretary gave us the example of a water and sewage project for five communities in my riding that are affected by a flood agreement. I heard that same commitment in 1984 by the then Liberal Government. It is another example of the frustration that we experience. We are hearing the same promise for the same communities in 1988. They are tired of waiting and tired of hearing politicians make that same promise.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that natives want to control their own future and not just rely on Government. I think the speeches from the Opposition made it clear that we understand that.

One way for that to happen in Manitoba is for the federal Government to agree finally to sign the land entitlement treaty. It is an agreement to which the native chiefs have agreed, to which the Province of Manitoba has agreed, and one that the federal Government was negotiating and had agreed to until March, last year. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, after the tripartite negotiations had taken place and the parties had come to an agreement, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) raised many new questions. I have a copy of that letter from the Minister. It essentially scraps the whole agreement and challenges each and every premise of it.

Land entitlement is fundamental to economic development of the reserves in northern Manitoba. If they do not have that resource they cannot develop their communities as they want. For one year the bands in Manitoba have been trying to get the federal Government to sign this agreement. It has refused to do so. It has refused meetings. There has been no action by the federal Government, other than to say it might discuss it again.

It is that type of unacceptable behaviour which explains the frustration and the type of problem that native people in Manitoba are facing at this time. I want the Parliamentary Secretary to get up and tell me what change took place between January, 1986, and March, 1986, that resulted in the federal Government refusing to sign that land entitlement agreement.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Churchill knows that $18.9 million has already been advanced for system design construction of water systems in that area of this province. He is not correct in saying that there has been no action, because that money has already gone out. Let us make sure we have those facts straight.

The same is true for the Member who commented on the Lubicon situation. He said that the Government is basically not doing everything that is being asked by the Lubicon people. I should note that this is the first Government that has decided their claim is valid and has been trying to settle it. It has been negotiating in an attempt to have a reserve delineated in the province. The Government has taken action on long-standing problems.

The Hon. Member stated that the Ministers should be in the House. I know that they wanted to be here and they will be speaking in the debate. We heard of this motion last night at six o'clock. They must attend cabinet meetings that are also important for the aboriginal people of Canada. Today there are on the docket for Cabinet some very important decisions that will deal with aboriginal people. It was impossible for those Ministers to extract themselves from those important meetings, after waiting several weeks to get those items on the schedule. I do not think we should leave the impression that they feel this debate is not important enough for them to be here.

I know that I am supposed to be fully briefed on all subjects, but as far as land entitlement is concerned I do not feel adequately briefed about the reasons that there has not been movement in that area. I know that further negotiations have been requested, but it would not be fair to ask me for details at this time because I do not have the full information on that area.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that past administrations do not have much to be proud of when it comes to achievements towards aboriginal rights or solving problems for aboriginal people. I would only expand the list to include the Barrett administration in British Columbia and the Schreyer administration in Manitoba.

Let me return to the Parliamentary Secretary and ask him why he took time in his speech to erect this strawman of passive recipients. I do not remember anything that the Hon. Member for Churchill or I said that suggested that aboriginal people wanted to be passive recipients or wards of the Government. It is quite the contrary.

Does the Parliamentary Secretary not agree that the concept of economic rent and all that is entailed in that involves a direct transfer of payments to be controlled by First Nation Governments themselves, that they become the policy setters and become those who establish their own priorities?

Specifically, I have four questions I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary. First, does he believe that the capping on post-secondary education assistance will be dropped? Can he tell us that by the time this Parliament comes to an end the current housing backlog will be reduced by even one house? He made reference to the Lubicon Band. Is he convinced that the Lubicon Band will be granted additional land beyond the 25 square miles agreed to in the 1940s when the population was much smaller? Finally, does the Parliamentary Secretary believe that the freeze on the creation of new bands and reserves will be lifted?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, that is a long list of questions and I will deal with them one by one. I believe $110 million is now being spent for post-secondary education. Some 500 students who applied last year were unable to go to university directly in the year they applied. They will be added to the list this year as first in line. It would be nice in a budget, as I say, that is increasing at the most rapid rate of any budget in the Parliament of Canada, to add additional funds so that everyone can go to school on a grant, non-repayable. That would be nice. I know everyone here would like to see that. However, we have all these other demands which are being put forward by Members today. The Minister has to make decisions on how he will split the budget up.

There is no decision to make on some of these items, for example, welfare assistance for Indian people. While the amount of money will increase for post-secondary education this year, I do not believe at this time that the "cap", so called, will be removed. Many Canadians cannot go to university in exactly the same year they wish. Many must go out and work for a few years to get sufficient funds to go school. In this case, a very small number of aboriginal people were not able to get funding this year, but they are put first in line on the list for the following year.

With respect to the current housing backlog, we all know that the birth rate in reserves across this country is the highest in the land. Because of Section 31, there are people asking to go back on the reserves and are asking for houses as well, increasing even more the demand for housing. In fact, the budget for Section 31 will be increasing by 116 per cent this year in order to try to meet that need.

I cannot say to the Hon. Member that we will reduce the backlog. What I did point out in my speech is that since 1981, I believe, some 30 per cent of the housing on reserves is new housing, and some 35 per cent of the housing since 1981 has been reconditioned. Budgets have increased. I think two or three years ago we increased the budget by some $50 million. That has remained in the budget in the last number of years. Again, work has been done to attempt to deal with this very serious problem.

As far as the Lubicon band is concerned, the Member himself mentioned the difficulties we have with the Constitution and provincial lands being set aside. The Government, as I understand its process, is asking for, without prejudice, a reserve to be set aside. Then negotiations will take place for additional land, or services, depending on how the negotiations go. I think that is a reasonable position to put forward. The federal Government is taking the lead finally in this area.

While discussions do not always go in the manner we wish between the band, the province and the federal Government, at least progress is being made. People are talking and negotiating. In the last month or so an advancement has been put forward and it looks as though it might be a fruitful advance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent for one more minute to complete his answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Schellenberger: The policy of the Government will not change on new bands. I am not speaking for the Minister but on my own behalf. This question can be put to him as well. However, given the restraints of the Indian Affairs budget, a budget which is growing very rapidly, the Minister felt that a policy had to be put forward regarding the creation of new bands. It is not fair to aboriginal society and to Canada as a whole to say that these bands can be created without any financial basis. So the policy, as I understand it, will remain as it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is now three minutes to one o'clock. The Chair intends to recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), but the Chair would leave the option to the Hon. Member to start his speech after Question Period.

Mr. Fulton: I will begin, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) seconded by the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). I think it only appropriate to begin by reading Part II, Section 35(1) of Canada's Constitution with respect to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. It reads:

> The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

I think I can demonstrate in the moments provided to me that the Government of Canada is not living up to the Constitution of this country.

If one is to take the opportunity, as I have, to look at the budget of aboriginal affairs over the last 10 years, or even over the last four years, one can see the essential increase in the elements. The Parliamentary Secretary talked about an increase greater than that of other departments in the Government. The reason there is any increase at all is in relation to a ruling of the United Nations not by any sudden burst of interest by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or by his Cabinet. It was the Lovelace ruling on Section 12(1)(b) with respect to sexual discrimination that has brought about the essential increase in the budget.

One can go through the essential elements of the budget and demonstrate that, which I intend to do this afternoon. It is clear beyond reasonable doubt that the Government of Canada is intentionally implementing Buffalo Jump in the 1980s, the famous document by the former Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Erik Nielsen from the Yukon. He and Mr. Collison developed a document on how to bring about the forced assimilation of the aboriginal people of Canada. The constitutional route has been closed off. Funding has been closed off for resource development impact studies. Funding for litigation has been closed off, except at the appeal level.

I intend to demonstrate this afternoon when I carry on with my remarks why all the people of Canada should be concerned regardless of their political persuasion. I think we can demonstrate, as the Hon. Member for Churchill and the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) have done, and the Hon. Member for the Yukon will do this afternoon, and adequately and properly sustain an argument, that the Government of Canada is presently launched on a process of forced assimilation. Certainly, if one speaks to the aboriginal leaders, it can only be described as bare-faced cultural genocide. I intend, with your agreement, Mr. Speaker, to carry on the bulk of my remarks immediately following Question Period at three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ATTEMPT TO REMOVE SUBJECT FROM SCHOOL CURRICULUM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, while the Conservative Government is busy tarnishing the reputation of the Canadian Sikh community thanks to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister's Department is now extending this dangerous game to Canadians of Armenian descent.

An Assistant Deputy Minister from the Minister's Department has written to the Ottawa Board of Education requesting that the subject of the Armenian genocide not be part of the school curriculum because, in the Government's eyes, the genocide did not occur, and the course would impact negatively on the Government of Turkey. Not only did the Government break its campaign promise of July 23, 1984, of recognizing and condemning the Armenian genocide before the United Nations, but the Conservatives are attempting to rewrite history as well.

In addition, like the Sikh issue, the Government will go to the ends of the earth to please foreign Governments, even if that means hurting and demeaning Canadian citizens here at home.

I call upon the Minister and the Government to retract and immediately to recall this letter to the Ottawa Board of Education, to refrain from attempting to hide certain human rights violations while championing others, and immediately to stop being coerced into writing foreign policy which may please the world and foreign Governments but which is completely unacceptable for domestic consumption here at home.

This is no longer an isolated incident, it is a—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CONCERNS OF PERSONS AGED BETWEEN 40 AND 55 YEARS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with people in the 40-55-year age group who are very disappointed in the Conservative Government because they would have liked the Government to start thinking about their needs and concerns.

They would have liked the Government to introduce genuine pension reforms, provide for broader participation in private pension plans, establish a form of indexation for private pension plans, enable three million women working in the home in Canada to contribute to the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan, provide for increased portability of private pension plans, maintain early retirement programs, and eliminate the discrimination against early retirees that consists in cutting off their unemployment insurance benefits.

I have almost finished, Mr. Speaker. I want to give these people the assurance that on April 15 and 16, at the Liberal Party's convention in Quebec City, we intend to discuss these issues, and on March 26 as well, at the Montreal East Seminar.

ARCTIC WINTER GAMES

PARTICIPATION OF ATHLETES—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Biannual Arctic Winter Games this year are being successfully held in Fairbanks, Alaska. A thousand young athletes from the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, Alaska, and a contingent from northern Alberta are competing for the Golden Ulus. In the past northern Quebec has participated. We look forward to Greenland joining in to give the Games an even more international flavour.

This showcase of northern sport, culture, and international friendship touches on nearly everyone who lives in the North. It is a continuing success and fully worthy of the $250,000 contribution by the Government of Canada.

HIGHWAYS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—NEED FOR IMPROVED MAINTENANCE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to alert the House to a tragedy that may be taking place as we speak. This week there are several Conservative Members of Parliament in the Yukon trying to sell the trade deal. If that is not tragedy enough, I certainly hope that they are not travelling by car or we may hear that some of our esteemed colleagues are languishing in a three-foot pothole on the Alaska Highway.

The Alaska Highway, a federal highway, is the only transportation link to the south. Since 1982 there has been a 42 per cent cut in maintenance and operating expenditures. Staff has been cut by half.

The Minister of Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) said that the North must become more self-sufficient if we are to gain constitutional development. At the same time the Government is cutting back on major essential services such as this highway.

The pleas of the Yukon Government, local municipalities, local business, and hundreds of residents who live along this highway have gone unheeded by the Government.

I call on the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), the Minister of Transportation (Mr. Crosbie), and the Minister of Northern Development to restore funding now before new meaning is given to the term "spring breakup".

CRIMINAL CODE

WILFUL SPREAD OF AIDS DISEASE—CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my congratulations to the Ottawa Police Force on its decision to release the photograph of a man who donated AIDS contaminated blood.

AIDS is a terrible disease which must be dealt with by harsh measures, if we are to protect all Canadians. Any individual who would knowingly put others at risk loses the right to privacy.

Photographs should be released, nation-wide if necessary. Photographs will act as a warning to the public that these individuals are a health hazard.

I do not propose to invade the privacy of those carrying the AIDS antibody. Only those individuals who knowingly spread this disease, lacking thought for the innocent, should be subject to this kind of scrutiny.

In addition, I would like to urge the Government to amend the Criminal Code to deal with the wilful spread of AIDS. The common nuisance charge currently being used does not adequately address this issue.

ATTEMPT TO REMOVE SUBJECT FROM SCHOOL CURRICULUM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak out against the new policy of the Department of External Affairs of denying the Armenian genocide, and requesting the Ottawa Board of Education to deny it also. It is reported that the Board of Education is being asked to withdraw student course materials about the Armenian genocide. The reasons given by the Department of External Affairs are because of a request from Turkey that it gives Turkey a bad image, and because of millions of dollars of possible Canadian trade with Turkey.

This is a despicable Canadian policy which is beneath contempt in a free and democratic country like ours. The Armenian genocide is a tragic historical fact, whether or not the Governments of Turkey and Canada like it. Our Government should be protecting Canadians and Canadian institutions like the Ottawa Board of Education from the pressures of foreign Governments. Lately, our Government has made itself the enforcer of foreign Governments like Turkey, and India which wants to constrain the Sikh community groups and is getting help from the Department of External Affairs to do so.

I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to get a Secretary of State for External Affairs who values free speech in Canada and who respects multiculturalism.

SOCIAL CONSCIENCE

AWARENESS OF ACCESS FOR THE HANDICAPPED WEEK

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) is involved in preparations for the National Access Awareness Week for disabled persons, from May 29 to June 4, 1988, which is intended to draw the public's attention to the needs of the disabled.

The objective is to create "Five Star" communities where five basic services, namely, accommodation, employment, transportation, recreation and education will be accessible to everyone.

Each community will assess its ability to provide all members of the community with access to these services and will be encouraged to make improvements before next year's Week in order to get a better score.

During the same Week, the Secretary of State will sponsor a seminar on the concerns of disabled women.

Mr. Speaker, municipal authorities must be properly prepared for this event.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

IRRADIATION OF FOOD—PRACTICE BANNED BY UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that the Government rejected the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs to stop the irradiation of food in Canada. The committee feared abuse of this technology since there is no way of identifying whether or not food has or has not been irradiated, or to know the dosage.

Recently the United Kingdom decided it is necessary to ban irradiated foods. What stirred British politicians to action? Freshwater shrimp which had been imported to the United Kingdom and cold stored for two months was sent to the Netherlands to be irradiated to freshen it for reintroduction to the British market.

Such activities are illegal and against the guidelines established by WHO, FAO, and IAEA, but there is no way of monitoring or testing to see if the guidelines have been met or breached. Surely the safest route is to refrain from the use of irradiation for food processing until the questions raised by the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs are answered.

CORRECTIONS CANADA

PEPINO REPORT ON HALF-WAY HOUSES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, in light of the current controversy over half-way houses in this country, I wish to commend the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) for his response to the Pepino Report. The Minister has already taken action, and has also accepted the 32 recommendations made by the inquiry board, but still much has to be done to ensure the protection of society as well as proper transition for half-way house residents.

This type of leadership is what Canadians desire, especially in the area of corrections. The Solicitor General is acting with justice and compassion on an issue that is very sensitive today. I encourage the Minister to make sure that public safety will continue to be foremost in his actions.

As we continue to search for right answers and just solutions, we must pursue action that is beneficial to all Canadians. The Solicitor General has heard the pleas of Canadians and is responding.

THE LATE YVETTE ROUSSEAU

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it was with great sorrow that we learned of the decease of Senator Yvette Rousseau last night. I would like to recall, for the benefit of all Members, the considerable accomplishments of Mrs. Rousseau, not only as a Senator, but also in her family and professional life. She raised eight children. She focussed all her energies on defending women's rights, especially within the labour confederations. She chaired the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and published a book on the circumstances of women who worked the night shift in factories. She was dedicated to defending the status of women in Canada and to the emancipation of her sex.

Speaking on behalf of my colleagues in Quebec and of all Members of this House, I wish to extend our sincere condolences to Mrs. Rousseau's family, to her children.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL ACTIONS TO ASSIST BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual in Canada for provincial Governments to grumble about how much money or how many contracts they receive from the federal Government. It has become kind of a national sport and, as we have seen this week, British Columbia is no exception.

However, I would ask the people of British Columbia to consider that the good news this Government has brought for B.C. cannot be measured in grants or contracts alone, although those have been ample, but in actions such as keeping our West Coast ports open, eliminating the container clause, promoting an international banking centre, free trade, increased foreign investment, and record lumber and paper exports.

Perhaps upon reflection Premier Vander Zalm might like to reconfirm what he said to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last fall at the First Ministers' meeting: "You have shown a greater desire to strive for fairness and equality than any of your predecessors".

That is the hallmark of this Government—to treat all regions with fairness and all Canadians as first-class.

MERCHANT MARINE

DEEP-SEA FLEET PROPOSAL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, as another federal election draws near, the Bobbsey Twins of Bay Street can be seen at play again. Their latest game concerns encouragement of a Canadian deep-sea fleet.

This is actually a very old game. When successive Liberal Governments had failed to take action on a Canadian deep-sea fleet, the last Liberal Minister of Transport decided to appoint a task force to give it another kick. He took care, however, to load the task force with people concerned about cheap shipping rates.

The last Liberal Minister also appointed the task force in April, 1984, more than four years after the previous election. The task force, quite naturally, did not report until June, 1985.

The present Conservative Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has not waited quite as long. His Government is only 3.5 years old. He is excited about the possibility of tax exemptions for those owning and working Canadian-owned and crewed vessels. However, shipping is a service industry and he seeks the reaction of the shippers.

The Minister of Transport has called for a report from the industry and the government Department within six months. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that a general election will occur before the report is released? Truly, plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose!

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

AGRICULTURE—ACCEPTANCE OF CAIRNS GROUP FORMULA URGED

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to accompany Canada's Grains Minister to the recent meeting of the Cairns Group in Argentina.

Canada is a leader in this group of countries which has placed agriculture at the top of the agenda in the latest GATT round. It is crucial to maintain the momentum to end trade distorting behaviour in farming. The European Economic Community, the United States, and Japan must be persuaded to accept the Cairns Group formula for restoring order to agricultural trade.

Over the past seven years world-wide agricultural subsidies have increased from $100 billion to approximately $300 billion. As subsidies rise, more of Canada's farm families are placed in jeopardy.

The Government will continue to pursue the agricultural trade issue in the present multilateral trade negotiations. We believe that the future of prairie farmers is too important for us ever to stop pushing.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATIZATION OF POST OFFICE IN MORRIN, ALTA.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, today I should like to read to the House a letter which I received from a concerned citizen of Morrin, Alberta. It reads:

> At a recent public meeting held in the Morrin Community Hall on February 11, Canada Post officials advised us that our local post office is going to be privatized because of the upcoming retirement of our postmaster.
> We were led to believe from the Canada Post officials at our meeting that it costs more for door to door service in the city than it does—to have our rural post office.

Not only is Canada Post closing rural post offices but it is also not delivering the mail door to door. The people in rural Canada believed that it was closing the rural post offices because it was delivering mail in the cities, but it is not.

• (1415)

Why is Canada Post pitting Canadians against each other, rural Canadians against urban Canadians?

Canada Post is not living up to its mandate of delivering mail, giving good service. With labour management relations the way they are, how can Canada Post deliver the mail? Is the Minister going to do something once and for all?

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) made his calculations on the provincial share of stabilization payments for the 1985 potato crop for Prince Edward Islanders, he excluded the 104,703 metric tonnes of potatoes put through the diversion program for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick potatoes. This is wrong.

These calculations should have been made on the total amount of potato production from Prince Edward Island, which would have been 613,502 metric tonnes. The Minister, by using those figures, has shortchanged the farmers of Prince Edward Island $800,000. In other words, the per acre payment under the stabilization program for the 1985 crop year will now be paid out at $56.13 an acre. If the proper calculations had been made, Prince Edward Island farmers should receive something in the order of $70 an acre. I do not think the situation is fair, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will reconsider the stabilization program for 1985 and get on with the job of getting the cheques out and correcting the inequity.

CENTRAL AMERICA—HOSTILITIES ON NICARAGUA-HONDURAS BORDER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question today for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In recent days and weeks we have had news of trouble all over the world. We have had the senseless tragic slaying at the funeral in Belfast, the problem of the control of Panama, the conflict in the Middle East, and the oppression in South Africa.

I want to ask the Minister specifically today about the situation as he sees it in Central America. I know that the Minister met last evening with members of the special House committee who desire to advance, as they can, the peace process in Central America. Does the Minister have any further information that he feels he can share today with Members of the House? Would he give us the Government's current information about the state of hostilities on the Nicaragua-Honduras border? What action has the Government of Canada taken to help reduce the level of those hostilities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate particularly the very careful tone in which that question was put, and I will provide all of the information that is available to me.

I think it would be agreed by all in this House that developments recently in Central America are regrettable and are not at all helpful to the peace process that Canada supports and which an all-Party committee of the House will be visiting the region to help advance.

It is not clear what has happened on the border between Honduras and Nicaragua. It is not clear whether there were troop incursions of the kind that had first been reported or whether there had been the equally serious threat of significant shelling. What is clear is that those events and the response to them are moving us back into a military situation and away from the peace process.

Our very able Ambassador, Stan Gooch, was in Managua yesterday. He was in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, today. We are seeking information from him, and I will certainly report to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and to other interested Members of the House as soon as we have it.

REPORTED DEPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES TROOPS TO HONDURAS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for that answer, and I would like to pursue it a bit.

Has the Canadian Government been in touch with the Government of Nicaragua, the Government of Honduras and, indeed, the Government of the United States? What position does our Government take with respect to the deployment today of American troops to Honduras? Would the Minister advise us whether he or the Prime Minister have been in touch with President Arias of Costa Rica or any other of the leading advocates of the Central American peace plan? Would he advise us—he mentioned his Ambassador—what instructions he has given to his special Ambassador to Central America as to what action he should undertake?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the three Governments mentioned, those of Nicaragua, Honduras, and the U.S., seeking information on this matter. We do not have the kind of information that could lead us to make a representation at this stage or indeed give instructions to Ambassador Gorham, who has special responsibilities in Latin America. We are seeking that information and certainly intend to use again all of Canada's influence to encourage the peace process.

We have not been in touch recently with President Arias, although that is a very useful suggestion and may well be a contact that would be quite helpful to the process for Canada to make quickly.

ARRIVAL OF AMERICAN MILITARY FORCES IN HONDURAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not mention the reaction of the Canadian Government to the arrival of American troops in Honduras.

Does the Minister intend to raise the matter at the United Nations in a constructive attempt to support a reduction in military operations between Honduras and Nicaragua, and in Central America? Does the Minister agree that we would be well advised to ask for international monitoring, in no way related to the various charges and counter-charges with respect to the situation along the border between Honduras and Nicaragua, and could Canada play a leading and constructive role as member of the international monitoring team?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we need more accurate information on the current situation before I can respond to the specific questions of the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition. We might be well advised to raise the matter at the United Nations.

As to the reaction of the American Government, all I can say for the time being is that the situation in Central America is not encouraging. I think this is a step backward, a step towards military confrontation, something which might undermine the peace process. Right now I am not in a position to point a finger at anyone because we are not aware of the latest developments in the Honduras-Nicaragua border zone.

With respect to monitoring and a possible role for Canada, this is a suggestion we are entertaining. The potential problem is the strength of the Arias plan, and that is rooted in the region. It has been proposed by the five countries . . .

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If we are invited?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If we are invited Canada will be ready to respond. But under the circumstances I would suggest that the best thing we can do is refrain from taking any kind of action which might make the situation even more complicated than it is already.

ATTEMPT TO EXCLUDE SUBJECT FROM SCHOOL CURRICULUM

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A few weeks ago the Minister wrote a letter condemning Canadian Sikh organizations in order to preserve the Government's good relations with India. Yesterday a senior official in the Department of External Affairs stated in a letter to the Ottawa Board of Education that the Board is wrong to call the documented massacre of hundreds of thousands of Armenians by the Ottoman Empire genocide. The extraordinary reason given was that this would have "a negative impact on Canada-Turkish relations", and that it would "jeopardize millions of dollars" in trade contracts."

I ask the Minister on behalf of Canadians of Armenian origin, is it the policy of the Government to ignore the documented historical reality of the Armenian genocide in order to preserve good trading relations with Turkey?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short and direct answer to that question is no. The Hon. Member, inadvertently I am sure, misconstrued and misrepresented the letter which I sent to various Premiers with regard to the activities of three organizations representing a tiny minority of the Sikh population of Canada.

With regard to the letter to which he referred, I first saw this letter shortly after noon today after my attention had been drawn to news reports in The Ottawa Citizen. The letter should not have been sent. This is a world in which people make mistakes, and it was a mistake to send this letter.

If there are to be representations on behalf of an embassy in Canada regarding its particular interests to a Canadian body, those representations should be made directly by the embassy. The Department of External Affairs should not have been involved.

ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER'S GAFFE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to question the Minister's statement that he heard about the letter only a few moments ago.

However, I would like to ask the Minister, since we are not talking about some third secretary but about an assistant-deputy minister responsible for the Common Market, if I am not mistaken, is the Minister prepared to rise in his seat and apologize on behalf of the Government to the Armenian community in Canada for the kind of treatment it received from a senior official, especially when we realize that in 1985, Canada voted on and supported a resolution to recognize the Armenian genocide as such, and when we realized that the Conservative Party promised in its election platform to give public recognition of this fact—

Is the Minister prepared, here and now, to apologize to the Armenian community in Canada for the action taken by a senior official in his Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as the basic issue is concerned, the position of the Government of Canada is well known and it has been stated in this House.

As for the letter, I understand the concern of the Armenian community in Canada. I regret the letter was sent. It was a mistake. Now, officials and Members can make mistakes, but this is something I deeply regret.

CENTRAL AMERICA—NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR CONTRA FORCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which follows up on questions which the Minister was answering earlier.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs will know, Nobel Peace Prize winner President Arias said recently, with regard to American military support for the Contras, that this is "the main problem and not the solution" to the problems in the area.

Today an American politician said that recent action by the Reagan administration is "an irresponsible involvement of American troops in the conflict in Central America and an unwise escalation of tension in that region".

Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree with both of those opinions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, part of the strength of the Arias plan has been the very significant personal leadership that has been shown by President Arias and his determination to be even-handed and frank in his references to the activities not only of the United States but also the influence of the Soviet Union in that region.

It is the policy and the practice of the Government, and I believe this is a matter on which there is all-Party agreement, actively to encourage President Arias and his Government.

With regard to the American action, as I indicated earlier, we do not have available to us sufficient information as to what is happening along the border between Nicaragua and Honduras to be able to cast a judgment of the kind apparently made by a public figure in the United States.

ACTION TAKEN BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs in general for his approach to the problems which have emerged in the region. However, with respect, I would ask him to be a little more specific in the present circumstance.

Whatever the precise nature of the border problem, there have been attacks and violation of international law by Honduras from Contras coming into Nicaragua. There has, in turn, been reciprocal, if you like, chasing of Contra troops back over the border. There have been a number of incidents.

However, what we are now talking about is superpower involvement, whether by the Soviet Union in this region at times in the past, or elsewhere. Today we are talking about an escalation of superpower involvement by the United States.

Will the Minister be clear with the House about that? Does he think that this recent action by the United States is counterproductive and a step toward further military approaches to a solution rather than peaceful ones? If he does believe that, as I am inclined to think he does, will he say so publicly?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to be as clear as I can on the basis of information I have available to me now, what is and has been happening in recent days in Central America is highly counterproductive. It runs against the success of the Arias Plan which is the best possibility for peace in the region.

I cannot judge, on the basis of the information available to me at this stage, the nature or the motivation of the action by the United States Government. I do not think anyone in this country can do so on the basis of the information we have available now.

There has been a change in the information coming to us regarding what has been occurring on the border. If we have information which would lead us to be specifically critical of anyone, including the United States, I will certainly be specifically critical of any Government that is taking an unusual role in creating problems for the Arias Peace Plan in that region.

Mr. Broadbent: Regrettably, one has to say that the usual role of the Reagan administration, to make a distinction between that and the administrations of others in the region, has been to support military action. The whole world knows that President Reagan recently lost an important vote in the U.S. Congress where the American Congress made it clear that it does not favour military intervention.

NICARAGUA—CALL FOR ON-SITE INSPECTION OF EVENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was in contact with the Costa Rican Embassy and the Nicaraguan Embassy. The Nicaraguans have categorically denied the American description of what has taken place at the border. Furthermore, the President of Nicaragua today called for an on-site inspection under the auspices of the Secretary General of the United Nations and the President of the OAS. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs join with the President of Nicaragua in an appeal for this impartial, independent assessment of what is actually taking place there?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all I can say at this stage is that I will certainly seriously consider that.

CLOTHING INDUSTRY

DUTY REMISSION ASSISTANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, in response to a question I raised concerning the position taken by the clothing industry of Canada that they had been given an offer of a $200 million relief package to compensate for the damage that would be done by the proposed trade agreement with the United States, the Minister denied that any such discussions had taken place.

I have a copy of minutes which include as participants at the meeting, the Deputy Minister of Trade, senior officials from the Department of Finance and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and in which the industrial leaders point out that the industry would suffer job losses from 35,000 to 50,000 unless remedial action is taken.

The minutes go on to say that the duty remission program commitment from Ministers has been $100 million for the apparel industry, $50 million to the apparel industry for garments, and $50 million to the textile industry. I suggest that is fairly strong evidence that the Government has been making a specific offer to the industry to provide for compensation for the major losses it will suffer as a result of the trade agreement. Why is the Government reneging on this commitment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been no reneging on any commitment. What we have indicated to the industries, both the clothing and textile industries, is that we are prepared to discuss with them a package of initiatives that will help them adjust to the free trade environment. The Hon. Member should know that a substantial duty remission scheme for the clothing industry has the effect of bringing in low cost products to Canada which are competitive with the Canadian textile industry. It is for that reason that there has to be a balance between the various sectors of the apparel industry and the textile industry so that an action that might help one segment of the industry does not undermine the competitive position of another segment of the industry.

That is the balance we have been trying to find in the consultations that we have been having with the various segments of the industry. As I have indicated in the past, we are coming close to a resolution of this and I believe we should be able to make an announcement on it shortly.

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is the Government of Canada that has put both the textile and clothing industries in the dilemma they face by signing an agreement with the United States that puts them at a disadvantage. It is up to the Government to find a solution based upon a minimum commitment.

Yesterday two garment manufacturers in the city of Winnipeg, Gemini and Tan Jay, both said they would be forced to close their plants and move south to the United States because of the trade agreement unless they get the minimum assistance of the $200 million package that was originally offered, as these minutes clearly prove. Will the Government stick to its compensation package that will amount to a minimum of $200 million so that those plants in the city of Winnipeg will not have to close down and the workers be without jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, I think there are some great opportunities for both those companies as a result of the free trade agreement. I believe those two gentlemen would acknowledge that they have some very good opportunities to take advantage of as that market opens up into the United States.

They are businessmen and obviously are speaking from a certain degree of self interest because a very high duty remission scheme can help their as two companies. At the same time as we help them we do not want to undermine the textile industry which is represented by a number of colleagues in this House. There are textile manufacturers in Winnipeg as well. There are textile manufacturers in Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should be concerned about this.

We do not want to undermine the textile industry of this country.

Mr. Axworthy: You signed the agreement. You caused the problem.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says that I signed the agreement. I did sign the agreement. Not only did I not cause a problem, I created great opportunities. This Government has created great opportunities for that industry.

TRADE

SUBSIDIZATION OF AMERICAN WHEAT EXPORTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, we learned today that the United States Department of Agriculture forecasts that soon 60 per cent of American wheat exports will be subsidized and that the American share of the world market will have gone from 30 per cent to 41 per cent. Much of this will have been accomplished by big sales to the Soviet Union and China, traditional Canadian markets, through the use of the Export Enhancement Subsidy Program.

My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who told me and other Members of the House in October, 1987, that in his view the American use of this Export Enhancement Subsidy Program was inconsistent with the spirit of the free trade agreement. What is the Government prepared to do, given the increasingly effective use of this program by the Americans to undermine Canadian sales in traditional Canadian markets? What is it prepared to do about this for the sake of Canadian farmers?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, let me make two or three points in responding to the question. First, the figures to which the Hon. Member referred are a recommendation which was made by the subcommittee, not a decision by American officials. Second, the implications for Canada are very clear, and demonstrate the continuing importance of moving toward freer liberal trade agreements amongst all nations of the world, including Canada and the United States.

Third, and most important, the Hon. Member should recognize the tremendous success of the Canadian Wheat Board which, in the face of the Export Enhancement Program, has succeeded in increasing Canadian exports from 19 per cent to 23 per cent during the course of the last year.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs would see his way clear to respond on behalf of the Government of Canada. After all, it was he who said in this House that it was inconsistent with the trade agreement.

The Canadian Wheat Board may well be doing the good job the Member says it is, but the Canadian Wheat Board should not have to work in spite of efforts by Americans to do what they are doing with the Export Enhancement Subsidy Program. How long is the Canadian Government going to put up with this kind of action by the Americans? Are we just going to continue to roll over and play dead? Or is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to get up and say something on behalf of Canada and Canadian farmers?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I could not be more eloquent or more effective than my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris, who has put on the record the context in which these matters have to be seen.

The Member knows the complexity of the problem. He also knows, because we have discussed it, that senior Ministers in the United States administration are as unhappy about this program as we are. He will know that it was mounted in the context of a conflict between the European Community and the United States, in which Canada is a potential principal victim. He will also know that, as a result of representations made by this Government and others, most recently by the Prime Minister when he met with Jacques Delors, the President of the European Commission, there has at last been some movement back in some of the subsidy programs of the European Community.

That does not provide us with the immediate relief we need now, but, as my colleague, the Member for Brandon—Souris, (Mr. Clark), has just indicated, the actions and effectiveness of the Canadian Wheat Board mean that Canada is continuing to sell effectively and aggressively abroad while we are making progress in trying to lessen the consequences of the conflict between the European Community and the United States on agriculture.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER OF ADVANCED EDUCATION AND JOB TRAINING

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma.

Mr. Foster: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we could get better answers from the Minister of Agriculture of the United Kingdom than we are getting from this Government opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Bring him down.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I may advise the visiting right honourable gentleman that he will not be asked any questions. Will the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Foster: We are going to invite the gentleman to our committee on agriculture later this afternoon.

UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZED WHEAT EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The report out of Washington clearly says that the United States is going to use the Export Enhancement Program for 60 per cent of its sales to countries such as Russia, China, Algeria and other countries which are our traditional customers.

The most disturbing part of this whole report is that 40 per cent of all the export enhancement increase has taken place since last October, since the free trade deal was initialled.

Does the Minister believe that this action by the United States, and the plan for the upcoming year, are a clear violation of the free trade agreement, the standstill provision, and the provision which says that Canada's interests will be taken into account in using the enhancement program?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that is in effect the same question that was asked earlier. My answer to that question, replying to it as it was precisely put, is no. But we very much regret the use of the Export Enhancement Program. We share that regret with American officials and we believe that it is going to be important for us to make progress in the GATT, progress in bilateral negotiations and elsewhere to solve this problem.

I should take the opportunity to say, since his presence has been drawn to our attention, that among the people who have been most effective in trying to work for a more rational approach to these questions is the Right Hon. Secretary of State for Agriculture of the United Kingdom.

EFFECT ON CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I just wonder how the Minister expects Canadian farmers to survive. Last year our grain prices were reduced by 25 per cent and this crop year they are reduced by 19 per cent. We now see the United States breaking the agreement, providing massive subsidies. It increased its share of the world grain market by 10 per cent this year. How does the Minister believe Canadian farmers can survive with these continuous decreases in prices, with the United States pouring billions of dollars into subsidies for its exports and that kind of program not available to our farmers?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact in Canada that the which Canadian grain farmers, particularly western grain farmers, have faced these last two or three years is the worst since the 1930s. What is fortunate is that Canadian grain farmers have been governed at the same time they faced this crisis by a Government which has done more for Canadian agriculture than any other Government in Canadian history.

As the Hon. Member knows, even though he may shake his head to the contrary, our financial assistance to Canadian farmers increased by some 400 per cent during the four years we were in power. As a result of that, and because of some of the good things that are happening elsewhere in the world, I think we have a good future.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who is responsible for culture. The problems at the National Arts Centre and at Telefilm Canada indicate that there are at least two consequences of patronage in cultural agencies: first, the cultural agencies are not properly managed and, second, nobody springs to the defence of the artists. I want to ask the Minister what she intends to do to correct this situation.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): First, Mr. Speaker, I should tell the Hon. Member that I do not expect the cultural agencies to take an example from his appointment as critic for the New Democratic Party because, first he was in as a critic, then he was out as a critic; then he was in as a critic, and then he was out again as a critic.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Now he is back in again.

Mr. Broadbent: That is your Government, Flora. You were in and out and in, and you will be out again.

An Hon. Member: You will never be in.

Mr. Broadbent: What do you want to bet?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: At least it's better than Jean Sirois.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR ARTISTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): I want to ask the Minister a supplementary question and I would ask her to take the question seriously. I know she has been kissing the Blarney Stone a bit today but I want her to take my question seriously.

Will she not agree with me that the cultural agencies have to do two things, first to manage themselves well and, second, to act as an advocate for the Canadian artists vis-à-vis the Government of Canada? Would she agree with that? And would she say to Canadian artists that we are going to put an end to these outrageous patronage appointments to the cultural agencies in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I absolutely agree with the need for representation of artists and their interests in the cultural agencies. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to acknowledge that in the last number of months, there have been several such appointments. Fifty-four per cent of them have gone to women. They have included such people as Shirley Thompson, who is now the Director of the National Gallery of Canada, Mary Pratt from Newfoundland, Edith Butler from the Maritimes, Martha Henry to the Canada Council. I can give the Member any number of these examples and can also assure him that future appointments will be of that calibre.

TARIFFS

DUTY REMISSION—SEARCH FOR COMPROMISE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In connection with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, manufacturers in the textile and apparel industry and Government officials have been meeting and consulting regularly for over two months to find an acceptable solution for duty remission on imported fabrics.

Could the Minister find a reasonable compromise, especially since in on a trip in September 1985, a group consisting of Members from both sides of the House observed that nine manufacturers out of ten already exported very substantial amounts to the U.S.? Such a compromise would enable the industry to continue to prosper and not lose 1,500 jobs annually as it did under the Liberals.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, officials from my Department and I have had meetings with representatives of the textile and apparel industries to try and reach a compromise on the subject of duty remission and other aspects, as part of a package to strengthen the competitive position of both industries. I said it was very important to have a balance between the parties to the compromise, in order to encourage both the textile and the apparel industries and help them enter the new world of free trade with the United States.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would remind Hon. Members that there is not that much time left in Question Period. I would ask that questions and answers be shorter.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT HELP SOUTH-WEST AREA OF MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Montreal's economic situation has come to a standstill under this Conservative Goverment. After the Government's failure to act on the situation in Montreal East, its failure to set up a genuine banking centre as it promised, it failed to act on the space agency, the development of the Vieux-Port in Montreal, the Soligaz project and the shipyards, now Montreal's southwest area is in trouble.

My question to the Minister of State (Immigration) is as follows: The Emergency Committee for Southwest Montreal wants the federal Government to become financially and actively involved in a committee to revive the economy of Southwest Montreal. Is the Minister prepared to give a positive answer to this request, and when does he intend to make an announcement in this respect?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I see quite clearly that the renewal process has already started. When we look at the unemployment rate in Montreal in February 1988, it was 8.8 per cent, a drop of over 4 per cent. The number of jobs created in February 1988 in Montreal was 132,000.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a supplementary, but a very short one, please.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONTRACTS—REQUEST THAT CRITERIA BE MADE KNOWN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary concerns another issue: the space agency. Yesterday, Mayor Doré of Montreal said he would not budge and that he could not accept . . . if the Minister of State (Science and Technology) could sit down?

Yesterday, the Mayor of Montreal said he would not budge and that it was unacceptable that Montreal should be penalized on the issue of the space agency. The Mayor of Montreal would like to know what criteria the Minister decided to apply to the division of contracts connected with the space agency's programs, since he allocated only 35 per cent to the province of Quebec, when he knows perfectly well that 80 per cent of the research is done in Quebec? What were the criteria for making this decision?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, nothing is carved in stone. The industrial consortia that will be acting as the contractors for the space program has been given targets that are designed to develop some national distribution for some of the research and development work associated with the space program.

What we have taken is the traditional work that has gone to the various regions such as Ontario and Québec. We have asked that any incremental or new funding go to these regions in the same proportion, but that some new work be used to develop some critical mass in the Atlantic provinces and in western Canada as well.

ENERGY

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PRICE OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last month Maritime Electric included in its monthly electrical bills to customers from one end of P.E.I. to the other a notice advising them that because of proposed deregulation of the electrical energy industry the price of electricity to P.E.I. may go up substantially. As a result of this notice and the added convenience of a mail-in card to Members of Parliament, I have received thousands of cards informing me that Islanders do not want their electric rates to go up. I do not want electric rates to go up either.

My question to the Minister is this. What are the plans for deregulation? Can the Minister assure myself and all Islanders that deregulation will not unfairly affect electrical rates to Prince Edward Islanders?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's information is correct. The Government is reviewing its policy on electric power in Canada, and a few weeks from now, I will be in a position to submit a proposal to Cabinet.

The Government is well aware of the problems encountered by the people of Prince Edward Island, and my Government colleagues have kept me very well informed.

We are very sympathetic to their plight and are seeking solutions that would enable the people of Prince Edward Island to have rates comparable to those prevailing elsewhere.

I firmly believe that co-operation between the provinces and the people responsible for the various power systems would be very helpful to both the Government and the people of Prince Edward Island in their search for appropriate solutions.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN PACIFIC EMPLOYEES—APPLICATION OF BILL C-85

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that in August of last year we passed Bill C-85, an Act to order people back to work on the railways. In that legislation in order to ensure that people went back to work the Government incorporated very stiff fines for those people. Those people went back to work.

Now Canadian Pacific is saying that if the people honour any other picket lines with regard to other railway unions they will take the workers to court and use Bill C-85 as a bludgeon against them. These people are being doubly jeopardized by Bill C-85. They obeyed the law when it was passed and now Canadian Pacific is using it against them again. I would like the Minister to explain why they are put in this position.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Minister of Labour is consulting with provincial colleagues at this time. The question he puts forward is an important one, and I will take it as notice.

I also suggest to the Hon. Member that what Canadian Pacific says, as he is well aware, sometimes is not totally accurate when it comes to being enforced.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill on a short supplementary question, please.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the Minister's thoughts on Canadian Pacific. However, the Minister has been away all week and I want to ask this question.

The point is that at this time the workers are being threatened. I would like a definite government statement, and I would like to know when we can have it.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot give a specific statement at this time. The Minister of Labour has been away this week, as the Hon. Member is aware, consulting with provincial colleagues on a program for older worker adjustment, something which I know the Hon. Member and his Party support.

REQUEST THAT COMMUNITIES OF 2,000 OR MORE RECEIVE HOME MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in June 1985, the Government and Canada Post decided to stop home mail delivery to communities of 2,000 households or more. A group of 174 communities has been affected by this unfortunate decision which is costing $360 million not $1.3 billion as the Minister keeps repeating daily.

My question is directed to whomever would like to answer, since the Minister responsible for Canada Post is not in the House. Is the Government prepared to examine other prospects for increasing the revenue of Canada Post without increasing the price of stamps, so as to provide home mail delivery to communities of 2,000 households or more?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post has previously replied to the Hon. Member and other colleagues on that very same question. I do question the economics that the Hon. Member is using to come to this conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: I regret this but given the time I will stay with single questions. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

ABORTION

ALBERTA—RETENTION OF THERAPEUTIC ABORTION COMMITTEES IN RURAL HOSPITALS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health. The Alberta Minister of Health is allowing rural hospitals to retain therapeutic abortion committees, despite the Supreme Court ruling that these are unconstitutional. Since to continue federal funding under those circumstances is to share in the violation of the Charter, what does the Minister intend to do to require compliance?

Would he also look into the matter of preventive programs that Alberta has taken off the medicare plan, such as IUDs, tubal ligations, and vasectomies, and see what can be done about having those available in order to reduce the need for abortions?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have previously answered the second half of that question in the House. It goes back to the scope of the Canada Health Act and the function of the province to conduct and manage its health care system. That is the first point that I wish to make.

The second point is that the delivery of health care services is a provincial responsibility. The manner in which provinces will deliver abortion services in regard to the Supreme Court decision, I think all of us recognize is still evolving.

On the matter of the Supreme Court decision, as I have said on other issues, the Government of Canada obviously expects the provinces to obey the law. As has been stated before, I think that is only as far as I can go until the federal Government comes in with other legislation.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The Minister knows that the National Arts Centre has been seeking a new director unsuccessfully now for two years. With yesterday's resignation of the chairman of the board, Mr. Boutin, the problem has been compounded. It is important that the new director and the chairman of the board work effectively together.

I know the Minister shares this concern with myself and other Members of the House, and I wonder if the Minister can tell us the timeframe under which she is operating to put a new chairperson in place?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge publicly the work and the commitment of Pierre Boutin to the National Arts Centre and to the performing arts in general during his term as chairperson of the National Arts Centre.

I would like to assure the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members that the announcement of a new chairperson for the National Arts Centre will be made very shortly. The first priority of that person will be to see that an executive director is put in place. I am sure that the Member recognizes that, by law, that responsibility rests with the board itself. It is not a Governor in Council appointment.

Business of the House

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give the usual statement on government business.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be an allotted day, as will Monday, March 21. On Tuesday, March 22, we intend to call for second reading resumption of debate on Bill C-93. I am going to ask in an informal manner whether the other Parties would consider an extension of hours that evening to allow us to complete debate on that very important Bill. I am saying that because we have arranged Wednesday as a day in which we would consider certain legislation respecting Indian affairs. Thursday will be the last allotted day in this trimester. On Friday, there is assorted legislation that we would like to put through. If it is not possible to finish Bill C-93 on Tuesday, we would call it again on Friday.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard of the Government's offer of extended hours on Tuesday for consideration of Bill C-93. Obviously, I will have to consult with our critics to see what the status of the Bill is. I will get back to the Deputy Government House Leader.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will also have to take counsel with respect to the Government's proposal on Bill C-93, and I will get back to the Deputy Government House Leader.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ABORIGINAL PEOPLE'S RIGHTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Murphy:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada, including:

(a) the right to self-government,

(b) the provision of adequate shelter, health care and educational facilities,

(c) basic water and sewage treatment facilities,

(d) adequate employment and training opportunities, and

(e) the financial resources to fully develop the economic and human resources of aboriginal communities.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Skeena had the floor.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate in today's debate to have with us in the gallery a very notorious Canadian and British Columbian, Mr. Frank Calder, who served with distinction as the first Indian to be elected to a legislature in Canada. He was elected in 1949 and served with distinction for more than 30 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Many Canadians will know that Mr. Calder brought before the Supreme Court of Canada the first major landmark decision on aboriginal title, which resulted in a tie decision before the Supreme Court of Canada in 1972.

I wish to spend a moment talking about part of the history of British Columbia which brought about the remarkable Calder case and a reversal of federal government movement in terms of comprehensive claims.

As some Members of the House will know, the first contact between the Nisga people, most aboriginal people in British Columbia, and the non-native global population was when Captain Vancouver came with his expedition to Observatory Inlet and Salmon Cove and contacted the Nisga at that time.

In looking back, it is interesting to note that in 1858 the Hudson's Bay Company conducted for the colony of British Columbia what could be described as a census of some sort. They could very easily come up with the number of non-native people in British Columbia; there were 400 whites in Victoria at the time. They estimated that there were 63,000 Indians in British Columbia. Recently historians have pointed out that there may well have been in the neighbourhood of 400,000 Indian people living on the coast of British Columbia and in the Pacific northwest prior to contact. Many people who are here today will know that it was as a result of smallpox that more than 90 per cent of the aboriginal people in British Columbia were decimated during the 1860s and 1870s.

In British Columbia the aboriginal population enormously outnumbered the non-native population according to Hudson's Bay Company records, of 63,000 to 400 only one century ago, and we found that that was the case throughout most of Canada. It was through very important alliances that were formed that this country came into being and successfully fought the War of 1812 and other major sovereign battles in which this nation was involved over the last several centuries.

The shoe is now on the other foot. There are now 25 million Canadians. One need only look at the documents tabled by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to see how things have changed from an enormous native population and important military and economic alliances for the fur trade and for the forest and mining industries. We now find the non-native population enormously outnumbering the native population.

According to government records, as of December, 1986, there were 387,829 status Indian and Inuit in Canada. During 1986, 10,844 more were reinstated as a result of pressure brought on Canada by the United Nations via the Lovelace case to change Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, which had sexually discriminated against Indian women for a better part of the century. Between June, 1985 and May, 1987, 24,708 individuals were reinstated, but only $25 million was provided, about $1,000 per person, to assist those who were returning to their home communities. The Government estimated that some 56,000 would be reinstated, but we know that more than 100,000 have applied so far and only half have been properly reinstated.

Earlier today we heard the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary say that if one looks at the social indicators of the plight of the aboriginal people of Canada, every Canadian must shudder to realize that aboriginal people face the highest infant mortality rate in Canada; the lowest life expectancy in Canada, some 10 years less than any other minority; the highest rate of unemployment, the highest rate of suicide, and the lowest standard of living, to name but a few of the social indicators.

There are 592 bands in Canada ranging from populations as small as 2 to an excess of 11,000 members. There are 2,263 separate parcels of land with a burgeoning population of whom a full two-thirds are under the age of 25 years.

The Government of Canada has launched an attack which we have not seen since the White Paper of Jean Chrétien back in 1971. This Government has gone further, as we learned with the Buffalo Jump of the 1980s, the document prepared by Erik Nielsen in his task force study on how to assimilate and eliminate aboriginal people in Canada.

We have now seen the Prime Minister close off the constitutional route. In my view he intentionally failed. We can discover how far the Government is prepared to go in blocking constitutional evolution and devolution by simply looking at the Estimates which were tabled just a few weeks ago by the Minister. If one looks under policy and the Constitution, we find a cut of 30 per cent in funds under Section 2-31 of the Estimates. Staff has been cut in that area by two-thirds since 1986. On self-government negotiations there has been a cut of 25 per cent, and the staff has been cut by 50 per cent since last year.

These kinds of cuts are absolutely indefensible. When I started speaking just before one o'clock I tried to remind Hon. Members and Canadians generally what was in Canada's Constitution Act, 1982, a very recent document which indicated: "The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed". "Recognition" means that Parliament and legislatures must recognize what aboriginal rights are, whether they be aboriginal rights to land, to fish, to hunt, to trap, or to carry on cultural activities.

We have had a miserable track record for more than a century in banning the Potlatch, a traditional Parliament which I am honoured to attend often in my own constituency where enormously important legal and constitutional matters take place. "Affirmation" means that the comprehensive claims process, the specific claims process, must be accelerated to meet the constitutional objectives put before the people of Canada a short six years ago.

If one looks at some of the other cuts, one gets an idea of where the Government is going on what has been described by many, if not most, of the aboriginal leaders in Canada as a path leading to cultural genocide. Loans on comprehensive claims have been cut by over 20 per cent or by $10 million. One finds that in the Estimates under Section 2-36. Human resource development has been cut by over 50 per cent since 1986, according to Section 2-42 of the Estimates which were just tabled. There has been a cut of $24 million and a staff cut of 60 per cent. If we are not to be involved in the development of human resources, where is the Government intending to go? Renewable resource development was cut from $30 million in 1986 to $4 million. This is a cut of $26 million, as well as a cut from a staff of 28 to a staff of 4.

As I said earlier this morning, the only realizable increase in the budget of the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs is a result of the intervention of the United Nations on the Lovelace case. We find paltry sums attached to new housing, post-secondary education, and some additional medical costs.

Let us take a look at some of the other cuts—a cut to self-government from $13 million to $11 million; on comprehensive claims, from $78 million to $73 million; on economic development, from $82 million to $66 million; and on lands, reserves, and trusts, from $48 million to $41 million. In all key areas of development we find the Government cutting back enormously on the amount of funds available.

Let us take a look at the example of one part of a department, litigation funding and support for environmental protection, lands, funds, estates, and so on. We find that of the $41 million allocated—and I am quoting from the Minister's own Estimates—51.3 per cent relates to personnel costs. Over half is eaten up by the department itself. Some 22.9 per cent relates to other operating costs, so it is eaten up by the Department or by consultants to the department. Therefore, only 25.8 per cent is actually transferred on environmental protection, litigation support, specific claims, membership in band Governments, lands, funds, and estates. We find that only a quarter of the funds actually voted by Parliament reaches aboriginal peoples in their home communities.

I ask Hon. Members to reflect upon the following. While we found that the federal Budget has effectively tripled in the past decade, funding to aboriginal affairs in 1981 fixed dollars has remained effectively frozen. I asked the Parliamentary Library to go through all the documents—the Estimates, the actual expenditures, Treasury Board documents, and so on. Therefore, I realize that the funding to aboriginal people has effectively remained flat for a decade, whereas in almost all other areas of government expenditure it has doubled, tripled, or better.

We are finding aboriginal people frozen out of the constitutional process, frozen out of resource development impact funding, frozen out of litigation funding unless it is at the appeal level, frozen out of funding for housing, and frozen out of economic development. It is a very sad state. I do not think any Canadian who has taken a close look at the reality of what is happening to aboriginal Canadians could in any way support a Government which continues to pursue that.

Over the past few months I had an opportunity to attend a meeting with Miles Richardson, President of the Council of the Haida Nation along with the Minister responsible for Indian Affairs. After an hour Miles Richardson finally put perhaps the most poignant question that has ever been put to the Minister in his political career. He asked him point blank: "What is your responsibility as the Minister of Indian Affairs to the Haida people?" The Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs, with me present, said nothing. He did not speak, indicating that his responsibility to aboriginal people such as those of the Haida Nation was nothing. It does not exist, yet he has a $2 billion budget, a huge Department over which he governs, and he rides around in a limousine.

The Nisga are here. Frank Calder is here. He has attempted to meet with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and with the Minister responsible for aboriginal affairs for more than a year by letter, by telephone, and by telex. They have arrived here and have spent five days waiting for even five minutes to meet with either Minister. They were categorically refused meetings with the two Ministers who have the most direct responsibility to them.

In the area in which I live I represent the Haida, the Nisga, the Tsimshian, the Haisla, the Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en, the Tahltan, and the Tlingits, probably the most dense and most significant aboriginal populations south of the 60th parallel, amounting to well in excess of 25,000 aboriginal people in northwestern British Columbia.

I should like to spend a moment referring to the motion before the House. It condemns the Government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada on self-government, shelter, health care, educational facilities, and so on. One need only look at the remarks of the Minister of Indian Affairs a couple of weeks ago in the House when I put a question to the Prime Minister about comprehensive claims. I asked where the Government was going and why the Prime Minister had never taken the opportunity to come to British Columbia and say: "Yes, it is the constitutional and legal responsibility of the Government of Canada to negotiate treaty settlements in British Columbia". There is only Treaty 8 and the Governor Douglas treaties of which there are 14. The rest of British Columbia must be involved in comprehensive negotiations with the first citizens of the area.

We have records in my own area in northwestern British Columbia on the Skeena, written records going back 10,000 years regarding trade on the Skeena, the Nass, and other systems in that area. Too many Canadians are unaware of the enormous, refreshing, and beautiful cultural and individual histories of the aboriginal people of this continent.

We can look internationally and find Convention 107 of the International Labour Organization. The Government, under the direction of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is arguing for assimilation of aboriginal people rather than standing up for them as persons and individual identifiable indigenous groups within Canada. It prefers to talk about them as minority populations in Canada. Fighting against that is the largest coalition of aboriginal groups in Canadian history, the Indigenous Working Group, which has fought long and hard.

More recently, before the United Nations subcommittee on human rights we found the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his officials in Geneva arguing against a study to look into treaties in Canada and for other indigenous populations around the world, well known, well identified, as the people on this planet the most at risk. Why would Canada be on the forefront of fighting against a study of treaties? One need only look at Mr. Nielsen's Buffalo Jump of the 1980s, the budget cuts, the refusal to move on comprehensive and specific claims, to see why. On specific claims, Mr. Speaker, 32 have been dealt with so far out of 428. We see specific claims funding cut from $30 million to $1 million between 1986 and this year. No government Member can travel around this country and tell any aboriginal person that there will be movement under Brian Mulroney—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —on comprehensive or specific claims if one looks at the funds voted before this House.

Let us look at another example in which the Minister has been involved in Alberta with the Lubicon. The committee, composed of a majority of government Members, voted to have E. Davie Fulton brought before the committee, voted to have E. Davie Fulton attached to the Lubicon negotiations as a mediator. The Minister categorically refused even though it was a majority vote that reported to this House. The Minister has refused to take the views of all Members of this House into consideration in appointing who, I might add, was John Diefenbaker's Minister of Justice, a renowned and respected Supreme Court Justice of British Columbia who was appointed by the same Government to look into the Lubicon situation. Instead, what does the Minister do? He provides $9.5 million to the Daishowa Paper Corporation, and the Alberta Government gives over 11,000 square miles of Alberta untendered, without an initial environmental evaluation, contrary to the Cabinet's own order. The Cabinet required an initial environmental evaluation for a pulp mill that will be immediately outside of the Wood Buffalo National Park. This is a pulp mill that will affect federal lands, not only a national park, and that will affect the aboriginal people who live within Wood Buffalo National Park, to say nothing of the impact that it has had on the Lubicon people.

I could go on at even greater length but I think the figures and the facts that I have placed on the record today sustain the argument that this Government is hell-bent on the cultural genocide of the aboriginal Inuit and Métis people of Canada, and it should be ashamed of it.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to engage in this debate, especially in following the lead of our colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), and his contribution to the debate. He has distinguished himself over the years that he has been here with his knowledge of Indian affairs and the future of Canada's native people. It is a special pleasure to be following him in this debate.

My purpose this afternoon is to set the record straight on the question of the health of Canada's original people and to bring Members up to date on the services which the federal Government provides through the medical services branch in my Department, a purpose which is to improve and maintain the health of Inuit and Indian people.

May I say at the outset that the Indian and northern health services work closely with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and that consultation with Indian leaders and Indian communities on issues affecting their health and health services is fundamental to the process of program development and implementation. I want to remind the House that in 1979, the Conservative Government restructured the federal Indian health policy. That short period of time we were in office resulted in that work.

This document, which was drafted by the now Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) for this Government, cast aside what we thought at that time were the restrictive and penny-pinching policies which the former Liberal Government has pursued. The Indian health policy recognizes for the first time the traditional relationship of the native people to the federal Government. Anyone who has studied constitutional law and that relationship comes naturally and inexorably to that conclusion. It also recognizes that there is but one system of health care in Canada consisting of federal, provincial and community or local elements as well as acknowledging that the health services provided for a native people are inseparable from the development of the community. In discussions with the AFN as recently as the last seven to ten days ago, that point has been made very clear again. I have been pleased to see how those discussions have been taking place and how a transfer of health policy is very much being seen as a model by the leadership with respect to a further move toward taking control of their lives and self-government.

The Indian health policy establishes the absolute need for increased active participation of Indian and Inuit communities in issues and programs affecting their health and well-being.

As a sign of good faith, in 1979 the Conservative Government withdrew the restrictive 1978 guidelines which had governed the provision of non-insured health benefits and made medical transportation, prescription drugs, glasses, dental care and other items not covered by our national health insurance program available to all Indians and Inuits who required them. I find it, and I know this is not usually done in this House, passing strange that the Auditor General would have remarked in one of his reports that the expansion of those programs should be examined, namely, that expenditures are higher than normal expenditure increases in other departments. The reason was a large gap having to be filled, and that is what has been taking place. Perhaps the most important aspect of this policy is the Government's recognition of the special health needs of the native people. It is this recognition that has provided this Government with the incentive to increase funds for Indian and northern health services and to strengthen the programs needed to ensure that the health of our native people does not suffer unduly.

What about the health of the Inuit and Indian people? In the few moments I have I would like to quote statistics on the status of their health but before so doing, let me give you, Mr. Speaker, a few facts taken from Statistics Canada publication entitled Canada's Native People, published in 1979. I think it demonstrates how the Indian people suffered from years of Liberal neglect.

For example, at that time, when changes were made on those policies, over half of the status Indian population living on reserve had never gone to high school. Only about 42 per cent of Indian men and 22 per cent of Indian women living on reserve were employed. Almost one-quarter of on-reserve houses were in need of repair. Over 50 per cent did not have central heat, 32 per cent were overcrowded and 30 per cent lacked bathroom facilities.

All of us who represent native people and see what is happening on the reserves know that we still have a long distance to go, but I am pleased, at least in the 15 years I have been here, to see the changes that have taken place on some of those reserves. Local leadership has been taking control and by the use of government and private programs to my mind have made the progress that we see to date. We should commend those advances to other members of Canadian society rather than commending the stereotype we see so often which then colours, in my mind, a picture which is not true to the reality taking place. Data for the Inuit, I would think, would tell a similar story, so for lack of time I will not go into that at this stage.

The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin has already advised this place of the steps that are being taken by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs to improve conditions on reserves, improvements, may I say, that are long overdue. It is, however, this legacy which my Department must strive to provide or arrange for the provision of health to almost 600 Inuit reserves located in the 10 provinces and two territories as well as more than 50 Inuit communities across the land.

Let us look as a House what the status of health is of our native people. There are positive indications that health status is improving, but the Indian and Inuit people still—I have said this in the document Achieving Health for All—have a long way to catch up to the level of health enjoyed by the majority of Canadians. We could also relate this to economic status. I think Members who represent native people also understand that.

In the more than 40 years which the medical services branch of the Department has provided health services to the native people there has been a marked decline in the rate of many infectious diseases, improvement in maternal, infant and child mortality rates. Remote and isolated communities have better access to hospital and medical services and to arrange preventive health programs. I think as well it should be stated that many people who have served in those communities, often very isolated, have been performing services as members of those communities in a manner which all of us should commend. From time to time we forget about that. When I visit the health stations, especially seeing the nurses in those stations and the community health representatives, the CHRs, I am always impressed with their dedication. It should also be said to Members of the House that some CHRs and native people have had service to their community and the department extending well beyond 10 and 15 years. That service has been given at the local level as well.

However, to my mind, the health status of Inuit and Indians still remains unacceptably low when compared with that of other Canadians. For example, from 1982 to 1985 the post neo-natal mortality rate of Canadian Indians was 10.9 per cent per 1,000 live births. That compares very unfavourably with a rate of only three per thousand for non-Indian infants. Life expectancy for Indian males is 62.4 years compared to 71.9 years for the Canadian male population as a whole. Indian women have a life expectancy of 68.9 years compared to 78.9 years for the Canadian female population as a whole.

The leading causes of Inuit and Indian death are accidents, violence and poisonings. Deaths from injuries and poisonings are at least three times higher than the corresponding rate for the general Canadian population. Infant mortality, and I think all of us would be pleased at this, has declined, but from a rate of 39.6 per 1,000 live births in 1974 to about 17 per thousand today. While this is commendable, I would point out that the infant mortality rate for Indians and Inuit is still almost twice the national rate and, therefore, unacceptable.

Suicide in all circumstances is tragic, but for the Indian people of Canada it is catastrophic. In the 15 to 19 age group, the rate is almost seven and a half times higher than national rates for young people. Between the ages of 20 and 24 the rate is almost five and a half times higher. For the Inuit in 1985, of a total of 224 deaths from all causes, nine were suicides. They were all people under the age of 34. The causes of suicide are broken homes, lack of employment opportunities, alienation, and inability to achieve expectations. While never fully addressed, I believe people in the community, Canadians who are serving in various departments, are trying to address these most complex and difficult issues. However, it will take time to undo the years of suffering and neglect which have characterized the way of life of Canada's aboriginal people.

These major health problems are related to social and environmental conditions. Improvement in health status cannot be achieved by medical technology alone. In fact, sometimes the easiest thing to deliver is medical technology. However, it is the social, psychological and economic foundations that are so difficult to change. More emphasis must be placed on health promotion and disease prevention strategies which respond to the social, economic and environmental realities of Indian communities and which give those communities control over the planning and delivery of relevant health programs.

I think I have been very forthright in stating the issues. I have not tried to colour them in any way. However, the Government does recognize the disparities that exist between the health and well-being of the Inuit and Indian people with that of Canadians as a whole. I would like to take just a few minutes to inform my colleagues in this place of a few of the initiatives under way to ameliorate conditions and reduce these disparities.

The 1988-89 Estimates recently tabled in this House include almost $46 million for the National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program, or NNADAP. It supports Indian and Inuit community alcohol and drug prevention programs, including community awareness, alcohol and drug abuse counselling services, in-patient and out-patient facilities for detoxification, and rehabilitation. That includes monitoring and continuing treatment. Of course, NNADAP provides training for counsellors and others working in the field of alcohol and drug abuse.

I have a NNADAP facility on one of the reserves in my riding. I asked an elder in that community why are there so few people from the reserve attending the program. It is not that the program is not full, but it is not full of members of that community. I thought he put it in a very practical way, and we have a lesson to learn here. So often we like to bring in programs for Indian and Inuit people which are different from the norm in the rest of Canada. He said if you built an alcohol and drug rehabilitation centre on the main street of any one of your towns, would the local townspeople come to the front door for treatment? I think he pointed out in a very practical and succinct way the kinds of problems we face. I opened a NNADAP centre not long ago in Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan. They are trying to unite the very best techniques we know of in alcohol and drug abuse rehabilitation with native workers and the spiritual history of native people.

The NNADAP program has been working well, but I am concerned that some of the beds, for example, cost almost as much as hospital care and we are not getting enough rehabilitation. However, those are the administrative realities of these programs and something we have to be vigilant about. We have to bring it back to the goal of rehabilitation rather than looking at it, as some like to do, as economic development for a given region.

I spoke earlier of the Government's commitment to consultation with the native people. I should also bring to your attention some of the steps being taken to involve Indians and Inuit more thoroughly in the control and provision of their own health care. A modest but important program is the Indian-Inuit Professional Health Careers Development Program. This is part of a more comprehensive strategy designed to co-ordinate the education and training in health needs of the native people so that they can acquire the education and skills to become health providers to their own people. Over $2 million and 28 person-years have been allocated to that important thrust.

Through the Non-insured Health Benefits Program, qualified native people now receive prescription drugs, we think good dental care, and eyeglasses to correct visual defects. Transportation to medical care is also an important feature of the program and many Indian bands and Inuit settlements now run their own transportation programs to take their people to hospitals or medical clinics. Just to show you the scope of the program, in 1987-88 over $200 million was spent on these benefits. Native people living in isolation in northern parts of the provinces or territories are evacuated by air to hospitals in the larger cities or in the south. There is no question of their being denied access to the best of health services and care that Canada can provide.

I know there is criticism from time to time that the evacuation should not take place and we should have more health facilities in the regions. We are building a hospital at Yellowknife right now, for example. I see the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) here and she will probably want to talk about the Whitehorse General as well. Those are the kinds of initiatives taking place. However, we always have to keep distances and isolation in mind when we try to address some of these questions.

Where, in earlier days, mothers had their babies at home or at nursing stations, today over 95 per cent of native births occur in hospital. Maternity mortality has been virtually eliminated. Mortality in the one to four age group continues to decline and I am confident the rate will be no greater than the national rate within a short period of time. However, as you may have learned from my remarks, the health of Canada's aboriginal people is a major concern of the Government. We are attempting, with the co-operation and participation of native people and their leaders, to implement new initiatives for Indian and Inuit health. One area of the utmost priority to my department is the transfer of health services to Indian management and control. For example, responsibility for the delivery of health services in the Northwest Territories will be transferred from Health and Welfare to the territorial Government in April of this year.

Mr. Nickerson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We would also like to do this in the Yukon and are ready to do so any time the Yukon Government wants to enter into and finalize negotiations.

In North Battleford, The Battlefords Indian Health Centre runs the Indian Health Program for reserves in that district. The Nisga's Tribal Council in the Nass Valley of northern British Columbia has established a health board that will be responsible for providing for the health of all residents in that area. I hope we can move in some of those south of sixty as well.

These examples are merely the tip of the iceberg. In the 1988-89 fiscal year the federal Government expects to spend some $90 million on grants and contributions to Indian and Inuit communities and associations to provide for programs which they themselves will run.

Finally, we recently transferred the Baffin from the department to a local hospital board representing the entire region of the Baffin. We put forward a proposal to the people of the Baffin, centred in Iqaluit to demonstrate that this could work. I cannot put it in any better bureaucratise than that. It was my argument that it would work. As a former member of a local hospital board, I have always been a great believer that you deliver services best at the local level.

It did work, Mr. Speaker. People in the area were deeply concerned about their health care system. We have transferred the Baffin and are now going to transfer the entire Northwest Territories. In 1979 I thought that the Yukon would be first, but the NWT will be first. We are also negotiating south of sixty.

Why is health important? I am sure that my colleague who reports to this House for the Post Office might not like this, but all polling indicates that of all the services which Canadians receive from various levels of government health care rates nearest the top in every survey, even higher than services regarding the Post Office.

However, in all seriousness, in the 15 years that I have dealt with health care as a former Minister of Indian Affairs and now as Minister of Health, there has been tremendous progress made. We have some distance to go yet, and I fully recognize that, keeping in mind the isolation of Indian and Inuit communities.

However, let us celebrate the things that are working well. Let us work at changing those things about which none of us are happy. I still have not addressed, for instance, the matter of health with regard to status people off the reserve. That is an entire area for which I have not time today.

I believe sincerely that the progress which we have seen has been largely due to two things; one, local community leaders taking control of the health situation in their communities, cajoling government and others to move forward on agendas which they have put forward for so many years and, second, dedicated workers. I will stand on any platform and commend the people whom I have seen in these communities delivering health care, native people and non-native people. If the system is working, it is largely due to them.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the time you have given me in the House to put some of these matters on the record.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments and a question or two for the Minister. I would like to start by thanking him for joining the debate which I, on behalf of our caucus started earlier today. I agree with him in some of his concluding remarks. I believe that local leadership has made a vast difference in the last 10 to 15 years. I also believe that the facilities offered by the federal Government indicate a vast improvement over the last 10 to 15 years. I will credit both of the two previous Governments for that. I also agree with the Minister that there is a long way to go.

However, one area in which there has been a constant, chronic shortage is in the supply of nurses to the remote areas. The Minister himself has spoken about that in the past. The concern that I have raised in this House with the Government and previous Governments is that we never have a large enough pool of nurses available. That means that when there are one or two nurses in St. Theresa, or other parts of the Provencher riding which will soon be part of the Churchill riding, they are overworked. The stress and various other problems result in a high turnover. Many of those people are very dedicated and would love to stay in the North for a longer time. I spoke only a month ago with the last nurse who left. She just could not handle it anymore. She was not getting relief. She was not allowed to go out when she was scheduled to go out. She was on call on an almost continuous basis.

I hope that in replying to me the Minister will indicate that there will be some increase in the pool of nurses in order that the situation of the last eight years, in which there is always a shortage of nurses in northern Manitoba, and I am sure elsewhere across the country, will not continue.

I also hope that in the Minister's reply he will deal with the need for nursing homes. A number of the larger reserves would like to have nursing homes. There are no facilities for seniors in the communities. Oxford House is one community which is concerned about this. This is especially important because there are not proper water, sewage, and other facilities in these communities for individuals 75 or 80 years old. To live in houses heated by wood which have no other facilities is very difficult. I am also concerned about developing a better home care program for people who would like to stay in the communities.

As a final point, I believe that there should be some minimal legislation with regard to water and sewage in these communities. Any other municipality would fall under provincial or some other regulation and I believe it is necessary to have, not only guidelines but a legal requirement for the federal Government to maintain minimum standards.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Members of the House will be surprised that I agree with many of the things which the Hon. Member has raised. We have worked on some of them together. With regard to nurses, the Hon. Member is correct about the shortages. There is a turnover in all places but there does not seem to be as much turnover in the Northwest Territories as there is on some of the reserves south of sixty which, in some ways, are more difficult to get in and out of than are areas further north. That does not apply in all cases but does apply in some.

I was given a very good reception in Thompson not long ago. I talked to my staff there about the nursing shortage, the turnover, and relief help. I would like to build up a pool as well. We are advertising for nurses, not only in the Canadian context but abroad as well. Some people argue that that is not the best way, that we should be training more native nurses. I agree with that but, on the other hand, many areas have been served very faithfully by people who came to Canada, went into some of the remote communities, and became very valued members of those communities. Therefore, it is a balancing. I would indeed like to have a pool of nurses, as suggested by the Hon. Member, in order that we can administer the provision of services better than we are at the present time.

With regard to nursing homes, extended care, and home care, I mentioned in my speech that there are gaps and that we have some distance to go in order to catch up with the rest of Canadian society. We have done some of that work. Through CMHC we now have some housing for seniors on reserves. It is still a matter of how much personal care we can provide. The argument is that the elders of a community must leave their community and live their last years outside of the community of which they have been members all their lives.

With regard to water and sewer, I have a list of projects. I will not use the time of the House to discuss them other than to say that the Roseau River Reserve in my riding is now getting a water and sewer project which I am sure the Hon. Member and others would like to commend.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister outlined the education programs of his department as far as the consumption of alcoholic beverages is concerned. He probably knows what I am about to ask him.

What is his opinion of the daily television advertisements encouraging people to drink beer? For instance, there are sports advertisements suggesting that if one wants to become a race car driver one should drink a particular type of beer, and if one wants to become a great ski jumper, drink a Blue Light or something like that. The Minister knows that you do not learn any of these things by drinking beer. Of course, people, including children, are influenced by these outrageous commercials. Not only are they lies, they have an incredible impact upon people.

Two provinces in Canada have provincial legislation with respect to the advertisement of alcoholic beverages. One can see a beer commercial on one side of the border, while it is blacked out on the other side. When will the Minister take similar action with respect to those commercials as he is trying to take with regard to cigarettes? When will he take concrete action to ban the advertising of alcoholic beverages on television? That will do more than all the education programs he talked about.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I am sure he had it cleared through the Liberal caucus first, and that there is full agreement from the Liberal Party on the proposition he makes. But I do not want to be facetious in an area like this.

My position with respect to cigarette advertising is that cigarettes used exactly as directed create illness and death. The Hon. Member may be surprised at my comment, but in respect of alcoholic beverages that is not the case. When they are used in moderation and under proper conditions, there is not the same result as there is with cigarettes.

I, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, appeared before the CRTC when it was considering the removal of pre-clearance of ads. The Hon. Member is correct when he states, for example, that there are certain laws in respect of the advertising of beer products in certain jurisdictions. I asked at that time that the advertising be reduced and that the CRTC seriously consider that. Second, I asked that it retain its work of pre-clearance of ads and, third, that a certain amount of money be directed to alternative advertising.

I have been meeting with the beverage industry and, while one can always improve over what is happening, I want also to be fair. The industry has begun some alternative advertising. Let me give some examples to the House. I think the Labatt's advertisement about the taxi and the homing device is good. General Motors' advertisement concerning drinking and driving during the holiday period was good. The Distillers of Canada promotion in terms of moderation and responsible drinking has been a good response. I would like to see more, but I think it is the way to go.

Finally, we have a drug and alcohol program. We have changed the Criminal Code. Education must continue because the reality is that there will always be new drinkers. I believe the advancement of those programs is the better route to take than the one suggested by the Hon. Member.

ALLOTED DAY, S. O. 82—RIGHTS OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Murphy:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada, including:

(a) the right to self-government,

(b) the provision of adequate shelter, health care and educational facilities,

(c) basic water and sewage treatment facilities,

(d) adequate employment and training opportunities, and

(e) the financial resources to fully develop the economic and human resources of aboriginal communities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens).

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to deal with the opposition motion moved by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) condemning the Government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada. The subject which interests me most is item b) dealing with shelter and health care.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleague the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) for his tireless interest in the Indian Affair issue, the excellent speech he made in the House this morning, and especially for his dedication to the Liberal Party caucus. As a result of his efforts and interest, the future of our native poeple seems a little brighter.

In his wisdom, the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed 1987 as the International Year of the Homeless and an important conference was held here in Ottawa, from September 13 to 16 of that year. During this conference, we learned that in 1987, 100,000 people were homeless in Canada, many of them are natives and the majority come down to the cities of Winnipeg and Vancouver.

In 1988 the homeless are different from those of the 1930s. Their faces have changed. These are no longer older men. These are no longer tramps. These are young people, some of them women, and we can see entire families sleeping in parks, tents or trucks.

Last year, in 1987, the average age of homeless men and women was 34 and 33, respectively. Six months after the international conference the Government has yet to make arrangements to solve the problem. The consequences are serious, particularly among native people where cases of tubeculosis are increasing alarmingly, even among children. Most native people live in small overcrowded accommodations—sometimes four, five to a room—in unhealthy and cold tenements.

So what are the results, Mr. Speaker? The results are problems of mental health, alcoholism or drug abuse which, as we all know, lead to emotional, physical or sexual abuse. Young Indians living in such conditions become school dropouts, they grow careless and irresponsible, and they are a burden to society.

I recall that when I sat on the special committee on the handicapped we went up north to listen to testimony, and all chairs in the front rows were occupied by young people, most of them between the ages of 15 and 20. My curiosity was aroused and I asked for an explanation. The native spokesman explained that these young people took their skidoos, their radio-cassette players and large quantities of alcohol, and organized parties. As they were too drunk to drive their skidoos safely back, they often had accidents. What is even worse, is that, while the dog teams always brought them back home, skidoos are prone to mechanical problems and the young people do not have the knowledge or the means to repair them. They sometimes wake up the next morning with frozen hands and feet. Whose fault is it? I believe that the Canadian Government has a very large part of the responsibility in that.

The first solution would be to ensure that Canadian native people have decent and adequate housing. What does decent housing mean? To help Hon. Members understand better what I mean, I shall describe the house of a native family which I saw with my own eyes in Goose Bay, Labrador. The streets were winding and in bad repair. Garbage was stored on scaffolding to prevent the animals from getting at it. Shingles were missing from the roof. There was electricity, but no running water. There was a bed in the kitchen, which shows how cramped the living quarters were.

I was a member of the Committee on the Handicapped, and after this visit, we were driven over a bridge. We found ourselves in another world. The streets were clean and well maintained. There was no garbage and the whole atmosphere spoke of success. This is where the white people lived. Just imagine the child who comes back from school to a house like the one I have just described in Goose Bay, Labrador. This child has no chance in life. His whole environment is negative, without mentioning the emotional problems related to such an environment.

Mr. Speaker, to break out of this never-ending vicious circle we have to begin at square one, and that is to make sure that all our native people have a solid and decent roof over their heads. But what are the conditions? There are conditions, if we are to solve the problem. As housing critic for the Official Opposition I learned that 80 per cent of all housing units on Indian reserves have been built since 1961. Given the fact that Indian homes are not expected to last much more than 16 to 20 years, no wonder many of them have become woefully inadequate and in need of major repairs. Be that as it may, independent government surveys have shown that 73 per cent of all housing units on Indian reserves are inadequate. In addition, these units are rapidly deteriorating because of overcrowding: 7.5 per cent of all native single-family housing units are home to more than one family, whereas the corresponding figure for non-native families is 1.4 per cent.

It has been estimated that only 3 per cent of non-natives exceed the average of one person per room, while the comparable figure for Indian on reserves is 35 per cent, which means that slightly more than one third are over that average. The incidence of overcrowding is particularly acute among Western Canadian natives. To put it in a nutshell, I would say that native housing units are 21 times more likely to be overcrowded than non-native units.

[English]

Statistics from a study conducted during the International Year of the Shelter for the Homeless demonstrates further the poor living conditions in Indian housing. The proportion of dwellings on reserves requiring major repairs is 23 per cent, with 37 per cent having inadequate bathroom facilities and 37 per cent having no bathroom at all. The number of dwellings lacking central heating is estimated to be more than 50 per cent of all reserve dwellings.

About 34 per cent of Indian dwellings lack a piped waste disposal system or septic tank and 18 per cent have no kitchen sink. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, living in a house with no kitchen sink? If we were talking about non-Indian housing, we would be describing a slum.

We must also take into consideration the fact that the average personal income for Indians is only 50 per cent of the non-Indian population. Personal income among the young and elderly is below the Statistics Canada poverty line. One can imagine the situation for Indians with no income at all. Eighty-three per cent of the Indian population have an annual income which is less than $10,000 per year. Only 4 per cent of the Indian population earn more than $20,000.

I am especially saddened by the effect of this situation on Indians. The average death rate for Indians from infections and parasite diseases is higher per 100,000 than the Canadian average. Bad sanitary installations, when there are any, are partly responsible for this situation.

Bill C-31 adds to the overcrowding on reserves. Although this Bill is very positive and necessary, it has its drawbacks. More people are returning to the reserves, and funds needed to meet this influx are not sufficient. This adds to the already existing backlog in housing units. Ninety-five thousand people have filed claims to return to the reserves of Canada and most of these claims have come from women. Further, Indian women and their children who are trying to return to the reserves are having a lot of problems. They cannot have access to housing on reserves until the existing backlog of houses has been dealt with. Once again, the women of Canada are paying the price. Indians are among the very worst served and most needy of all Canadians.

[Translation]

At a recent meeting of the Committee on Government Operations dealing with Native housing, officials from the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs told us that funds earmarked for Native housing have not increased in four years. Indeed, taking inflation into account, there has been a reduction in the amounts allocated for the construction of houses on Indian reserves.

Natives who appeared before the Committee have confirmed their extremely serious situation. Management criteria for those programs and obligations imposed on Indian bands are too complex.

I should point out to Honourable Members of this House the nightmare lived by the Fairford Indian band. Beside all the money problems with various government authorities, they experienced right from the start humidity condensation problems in their "new" houses.

The chief of the Fairford band told us that the clothes of the children and grown-ups living in these houses smelled damp and that the smell was pervasive inside their homes, rain or shine.

This morning I heard the first Conservative speaker say that the aboriginal people were going ahead without waiting for the Government to act. What the Hon. Member fails to understand is that we have erected barriers that prevent aboriginal people from becoming full-fledged citizens. The most striking example as far as housing is concerned, is the fact that aboriginal people on the reserve do not have access to mortgages. This means they cannot own their own homes. The Crown owns the land on which their homes are built. This causes problems, not just for the aboriginal people but also for construction contractors, because if there are any money problems as a result of bureaucratic red-tape, they often do not get paid because the band does not have enough money or for any number of bureaucratic reasons.

I agree that the circumstances of aboriginal people have improved, but not enough to make them entirely satisfactory. I pointed out earlier that the aboriginal people are the neediest in our society, and much remains to be done before I could consider their situation a thing of the past.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of success stories, but these are the typical result of political will on the part of aboriginal and non-aboriginal governments.

In Quebec, for instance, we have examples of aboriginal companies such as Air Creebec, Cree Yamaha, the Wemindji hydro-electric dam, Cree Construction, the New-Quebec co-operatives, Air Inuit, and of course various businesses set up by the Mohawks of Kahnawake and the Hurons of Lorette-ville. Similar examples may be found in other parts of the country. However, this does not mean all problems have been solved. These groups still have to put up with conditional subsidies and with the complexities and delay caused by bureaucratic tape, and so forth.

The experiment initiated by the CEGEP in Sept-Îles which set up a curriculum adapted to the needs of Native people is unique. But how many of these programs do we have in this country? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there are far too many obstacles to be overcome before any more projects like the ones I just mentioned can be considered.

What seems to be lacking is the political will. There is also not enough co-operation between Ministers and the various departments involved in seeking solutions. I asked the parliamentary committee how many times a year the Ministers and senior officials of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, National Health and Welfare, CMHC, Employment and Immigration and Treasury Board actually met? There are problems with all these departments, which keep passing the buck, and meanwhile, the aboriginal people have to wait.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I want to say that I hope the Government will have the political will to take action very shortly.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and, indeed, an honour to take part in this debate today on the question of addressing the needs of native people in Canada. I speak as a Member of Parliament for a north and western Saskatchewan constituency which has 19 Indian reserves and many other so-called non-status Indian communities. The most recent census shows that over one in five of my constituents are identified as being of native ancestry.

The issue of native rights, native housing, economic development and the right of native people to pursue determination for themselves are some of the most compelling issues that face many western Canadian communities today. It is therefore a real pleasure for me to take part in this discussion this afternoon in the House of Commons and to address a few thoughts on the motion that has been put on this very important question of the status of the Indian person in Canada today.

I begin by cautioning not only the opposition critics who have spoken, but many of the viewers of this debate either in the gallery or at home through television, that we should examine the place of the native person in Canada today by way of a general overview. Every one of us who lives in a native community recognizes all too clearly the difficult plight facing Canada's native people. They have higher than the national average infant mortality rates, lower life expectancy than non-native Canadians and problems with alcohol, drugs and substance abuse that are indeed endemic in many native populations. These are all too clearly chronicled.

I wish to attempt in this debate to take a more constructive bent on the discussion by asking the following questions. Where are we moving? From where have we come in the past few years?

The problems facing many native communities have been present, at least in my area of the country, since the very day that many of the treaties were signed. In our area many of those treaties were signed in the period between 1875 and 1878. Thus we are not dealing with simply the modern urban contemporary problems, we are dealing with the problems of often dispossessed people that have vexed Canadian Governments for the past 110 years.

I have the sense that like all communities, the native population of Canada is in many respects in a time of transition. There are now native communities that are indeed far ahead of the planners, the developers and the bureaucrats and those in the Department of Indian Affairs and those so-called experts on native issues who examine the way that they would like to see native communities develop. Indeed, there are some of these communities that are as advanced in our area of Saskatchewan as many non-native communities. However, unfortunately, there are a greater number of communities that are still struggling with many of the basic questions of community organization.

I wish to say that it is not all as gloomy, as dark and as hopeless as certain people throughout the debate today have described the whole question of native life in Canada as being. In fact, I often invite critics from other Parties who perhaps do not live and work in native communities to come to a large area of western Canada in Saskatchewan, Alberta, or Manitoba to see those communities that are the success stories. We know as well that there are many communities which are indeed sad failures to date.

As fundamental to the development of a people as any desire or goal is the question of pursuing the ability, the right and determination to govern oneself. I wish to address my remarks this afternoon to the subject of native self-government. It is all too infrequent that we have the opportunity as Members of Parliament to address this important issue. I take considerable consolation that all three Parties in the House of Commons have agreed with the basic direction being taken by the Government on the policy of Indian self-government.

It was in 1983 that an all-Party committee of the House of Commons, well chaired by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), the Liberal Member of Parliament who spoke earlier today, highlighted self-government as an appropriate goal and a valid response to the political aspirations of the Indian people. Self-government was recognized as the element of a unique relationship between Indian people and the Government of Canada, a relationship that would enable Indian people to take charge of the decisions that affect their lives. It would also help break the cycle of dependency that has for too long characterized the relationship between Indian communities and the federal Government.

It has only been in the past 20 years that Governments have begun to abandon the old paternalistic policy which was used when they dealt with native people. It was during the 1970s that the Government's initial response was to transfer the administration of various programs and services directly to Indian bands. Unfortunately, there have been some unsuccessful efforts to enact comprehensive or framework legislation that would be related to self-government.

I should note that significant promising developments in structural change did not begin to happen until only three years ago when this Government established as a priority the changing way in which we should deal with the relationship between native people and the federal Government. Early on in the mandate it became very clear to our Government that the top down, single, monolithic approach does not work. Aboriginal communities are far too diversified to be squeezed into one model of self-government. Since the start of our mandate in 1984 we have taken significant measures to support the development of initiatives for self-government. Our policies recognize the vital role that Canada's aboriginal communities play in the development of this Canada. Our actions express our commitment to further developing a relationship with Indian people which is built on mutual trust and confidence.

I would like Hon. Members to consider for a moment the different routes that the Government has taken to support the development of self-government for Indian people. The federal Government remains committed to the objective of self-government for aboriginal people entrenched in the Constitution of Canada. This is the surest way that we can achieve permanent and fundamental change in the relationship between Indian people and the federal Government.

The federal proposal which was presented to the First Ministers in March, 1987 is still on the table. This amendment would recognize an explicit right to self-government to be implemented through a series of negotiated agreements. There has not been an agreement on this amendment, but as a Government we are not deterred by the failure of consensus. We are still open to the possibility of renewed constitutional talks when the chances of an agreement look reasonably promising. In the meantime, we are determined to support the development of self-government to the greatest extent possible within the existing constitutional framework.

This Government has established a process for negotiating self-government agreements with Indian communities which provide the chance for those communities to move beyond the present limits of the Indian Act. The response to this policy has been very encouraging. We have received 60 proposals from more than 225 Indian bands, and are actively working on approximately 40 proposals at the present time. These proposals represent a wide geographical, historical, social, and cultural set of economic circumstances. In addition, the Government has implemented some new financial relationships with a number of Indian bands under self-government legislation and under what are known as alternative funding arrangements.

At this point, I wish to relate a story that is moving and encouraging. It involves one tribal council in the area in which I live in Saskatchewan. It involves the Meadow Lake Tribal Council which is a group of 10 bands that work together in a tribal council area and are presently negotiating a self-government agreement with the Government of Canada. The Meadow Lake Tribal Council is a testament to what ingenuity, conviction and hard work will do for Indian communities. Some of the reserves in the Meadow Lake Tribal Council have suffered great economic difficulties and are still struggling to find their sense of identity and development.

Conversely, there are several bands in this tribal council area that are indeed the anchors to making this system work. For some time this tribal council has entirely managed its own education system. It is now moving into full health care administration. The entire infrastructure of local government is under control of the tribal council. This group, under the direction of its executive director, Ray Ahenakew, and Chief Percy Derocher, Chief Richard Gladue, Chief Fred Martell, and other chiefs within this vast area of northern Saskatchewan, is showing what working in a unified way can do to bring full development to native communities. I am exceedingly proud of the Meadow Lake Tribal Council and what it has done to work with the Government in planning a self-government agreement. I am confident that in the coming months we will be able to effect some type of workable long term solution to the question of self-government. It is only a matter of time for this tribal council, because it is an organization that is working to develop a very promising future for economic and political self-government.

Across Canada the path to self-government and self-sufficiency is not without some tough challenges. I believe that those challenges can be met. The cycle of poverty and dependence faced by many native communities can be broken. The federal Government, and where appropriate the provincial Governments, must work together with native communities at the local level. For Indian communities it means dedicating the energy, the ideas, and the initiatives to establish local institutions that reflect local circumstances. For Government, it means that our policies, legislation, and resources, should enable the Indian communities to develop the types of structures and economic base which satisfies the needs of the community, and we hope that ultimately it will fit in with the Canadian constitutional framework.

The self-government policy of this Government is guided by the following basic principles which I wish to enunciate at this point. The policy must substantially increase local control and decision-making capability. It must be flexible enough to recognize the diverse needs, culture, and tradition of Indian people. The policy must lead to greater accountability of Indian leadership to their own electors rather than to a federal bureaucracy.

The process that we are striving for and indeed succeeding with native communities must be community based and supported by native communities. Self-government must be conducted at a measured pace. It must have a practical focus. In all cases, it must be tailored to the specific circumstances of the Indian community involved. Thus far, our policy has responded to specific needs. It can take into account circumstances such as the geographic location of the community, the availability of services, and the strength of the resource base in the area.

For a moment, I wish to consider Bill C-93, the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act which this Parliament passed into law last year. Hon. Members will know that this Act is an enabling piece of legislation which has established the Sechelt community in British Columbia as the legal entity with a power to borrow money and hold property. The community received fee simple title to its land and it is now able to manage those lands according to the band's constitution. In short, the Sechelt people now have a Government which is accountable to the electors of the area and not to a remote bureaucracy in Ottawa.

If there is one part of the Mulroney Government's community self-government policy in which I can take particular pride, it is the consultative nature of the process. I recall well our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying during the 1984 election a very simple statement: "First you listen, then you act". That is a truism to most of us. Unfortunately, all too often in the process of government that does not become evident. I am pleased that our Government in this self-government policy believes that individual native Canadians know best and can define best what they need and indeed what they must have.

We did not sit down in Ottawa and draft our views on what natives should do next. We asked Indian people, and we did it by saying: "We are open to you. Come to us with your ideas of what you want to do". That is what we have done, that is what native people have done, and I submit, in a large part, it is now beginning to work.

I would like to emphasize that we are supporting the development of Indian Governments based on a relationship with native people. In our community self-government policies there is no intent to force any Indian community out of the federal jurisdiction for which we are responsible for Indian people under Section 91 of the Indian Act.

As Indian communities move toward self-government, they will remain in a special relationship with the Government of Canada representing its interests on behalf of the Crown. I should like to assure the House that we have no one model of Indian government in mind. The Sechelt, the Cree, and the Naskapi of northern Quebec can have justifiable pride in how they have worked with the Government of Canada. They always point out that what works well for them may not be the right path for others. We share this view and are willing to accommodate the diversity of local communities in all circumstances.

The second point I should like to make is that no one will be forced into the self-government process. We recognize that moving toward self-government raises some very serious issues for many Indian communities. We do not want to underestimate the difficulties which these communities may face along the way. I think of my area of northwestern Saskatchewan where I meet regularly with the 19 chiefs and band councils and hear regularly from what is called the Shellbrook Indian Agency.

It is a unique area carved out of two large districts and has four reserves which have often made clear that they want, at least for the time being, to work in a close trust relationship with the Government of Canada. They have expressed less than full enthusiasm for self-government models advanced by other bands and other tribal councils. I want to assure those bands that as long as they believe there should be a closer relationship with the Government of Canada, they have that assurance, at least from this Government.

I commend native communities which have made a commitment to self-government and have worked so hard to accomplish the task. The process requires careful and sometimes painful deliberations at every level of the community. They must provide themselves with answers to questions such as the following ones. Which powers should be exercised? How should the Government itself be structured? How can the local Government best reflect the aspirations, traditions, and needs of the community? These are not easy questions. I should like to salute communities like the Meadow Lake Tribal Council in my area which are addressing these questions head on.

Earlier today a Liberal Member spoke of the despair, depression, and dismay at which he views the question of the place of the native person in Canada. I do not want to cast aspersions on any Member of the House. However, sometimes when we get into this type of debate, while we all acknowledge the very real and very painful problems, there might be an overdose of hyperbole in the minds and mouths of some Members.

I want to look at native self-government as something by which I can be encouraged as a Member of Parliament for a large number of native communities and in fact be an integral part of the Government working toward a contemporary policy of self-government in coming years.

In conclusion, I want to touch briefly upon the evolving progress of self-government, not by itself but in terms of its linkage to economic development. We can deal with questions such as the comprehensive land claims policy on which the Government has been working for the past year and a half. Our policy, which was introduced in late 1986, replaces the policy of the former Government in respect of land claims that saw only three settlements in 10 years. Our new comprehensive land claims policy is designed to reflect the basic priorities of the Government, that is, that we must enhance self-government by economic development and by looking after land claims where necessary.

Our policy also outlines provisions aimed at enhancing native decision making over the resource and environmental management of Indian lands. Our Government is prepared to assign to aboriginal groups a percentage of Crown royalties derived from the extraction of resources in the entire settlement area, not just onshore resources, but also non-renewable resources extracted in offshore areas which are part of the over-all claims settlement. I want the type of arrangement with native people that enhances the process of self-government with due and proper regard to the need for a land base and with regard to the economic development of which native people are indeed deserving.

It is not responsible, nor is it particularly right-minded, within the native community to argue that a single issue can be dealt with as an isolated issue without regarding all others.

I had the opportunity as a new Member of Parliament to spend a great deal of time with my colleague from Saskatchewan whose riding borders the entire southern portion of my area, the Hon. Member for Kindersley—Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), who is also the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I want to salute the Minister, in closing, for the dedication, commitment, and open-mindedness which he exhibited in dealing with the multiple questions of self-government, economic development, and enhancement of a land base.

I remember well the first week that the Minister was in his new portfolio. He and I were in a hall at the Little Pine Indian Reserve just south of The Battlefords. He stood and said to the chiefs: "I want to assure you of two things. If I can't do it, I will say no. If I can do it, I will tell you it will be done". That sounds rather like a truism, but people were surprised to hear that from an Indian Affairs Minister who, unlike those of past Governments, is able to deal in a direct, open, and honest way with Indian people.

I salute the Minister for his untiring efforts and his dedication to ensuring for the families and children of Canadian native communities a potential future which will see them into the mainstream of Canadian society with all the rights, privileges, and ability to raise their families secure in the knowledge that a bright future awaits them.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the motion before us. It is certainly an extremely important matter in the Yukon and in other areas of the Northwest Territories and across Canada. It is an issue in which I have been very much involved for a number of years. I feel very strongly and passionately that it requires much more debate in the House of Commons.

We clearly have a sad history in terms of the treatment of our aboriginal people. Neither the Liberal Government nor the current Tory Government has addressed the issue in a way which fundamentally facilitates the self-sufficiency and independence of Canada's first nations. We have a responsibility as politicians to deal with the mistakes of the past and to plan for the future. I suggest that this issue of all issues in Canada stands out as a shameful failure on the part of Canadian politicians and Canadian people.

In my view, much of the problem stems from the fact that we have taken a very colonialist attitude in coming to Canada and taking over the lands of aboriginal people. Aboriginal people, as some Canadians may not remember, were not a conquered people. This is why there have been many treaties with our aboriginal people. We did not win a war with them. We came. Treaties were made, sometimes under rather dubious circumstances so that we could use their land.

The basis of many of today's discussions and of the discussion of the previous speaker on the issue of self-government—and I will expand on it later for a few minutes—is the principle of aboriginal rights. It is something that many Canadian citizens have some trouble understanding and, in some instances, accepting. I think it is important to begin this discussion by establishing that this is a right which has been accepted in Canada by all political Parties. It is an established right based on a claim of first priority, that aboriginal people were the first citizens here. They were not a conquered people. From that flow a number of rights to them which take the form of certain programs, perhaps the self government question and a number of other treaty rights.

The problem has been that no government, as I said earlier, has taken these rights seriously by honoring them in a way in which a government should. This is not, I suggest, a result of some malevolent plan. It is not a result of people being unfair or mean spirited. It is a result of fundamentally not understanding both the historical reality of aboriginal rights and the reality of a different culture. Certainly as the adage goes, whoever defines the problem defines the solution. We as non-aboriginal people have been defining solutions for far too many years. We see by the programs that they are very inadequate solutions.

There are a number of examples of how historically we have begun to look at the question of aboriginal issues in Canada. First, when we as colonists came to this country—and historians I am sure will agree with this—we thought the Indian and the aboriginal people would simply die out. But they did not. In fact, despite disease and many other factors, they have continued to flourish in our society and have a very high birth rate.

Then there was the hope that the aboriginal people would assimilate into the greater society. Then there was the traumatic establishment of residential schools where children, without parental permission, were taken where they would learn English and learn to be useful citizens, as it was defined at that time. They were punished for speaking their own language. Most of their schools were closed only in the late 1960s, but we still see the extremely traumatic results of attempting to eradicate a culture. That policy did not work.

From 1969 up to the famous Chrétien White Paper and the strong reaction of the aboriginal people to that, there began to be some funding of aboriginal organizations. They became much stronger and much more forceful advocates for their own distinct interests. Part of the policy that I referred to in changing views of aboriginal people, within the context of Canadian society, was how people could lose their status. It is hard for most tourists to imagine a situation where you could be one day an Indian and the next day, if you had gone to war to fight for this country or you had become a doctor, a lawyer or, if you were a woman and had married a non-Indian, you were not an Indian. Most of us would find that rather difficult to accept. Of course, it was patently unfair and we are now dealing with the results of that kind of policy.

Bill C-31 referred to by other speakers is an example of where we have tried to redress some of this discrimination by restoring status to Indian women and their children who married non-aboriginal people and lost their status. We have seen some of the problems emanating from that. Mopping up history, Mr. Speaker, is an expensive business. We have done it as a society with decided reluctance rather than with a sense of fairness and justice, as should have been the case in a democratic society.

I would like to give a few examples relating to the motion before us in the House today. Sections in the motion around the housing and education programs and so on are examples of the failure to take seriously the commitment of addressing historical realities. For instance, funding of aboriginal programs. If you look closely at the funding, you will see what we have done is predicate it on a welfare basis so that people, groups or organizations receive just enough to keep alive, but rarely enough on which to flourish and develop. I could give many, many examples.

There are very few programs that have permanent funding. Often it is annual funding, sometimes five year funding but rarely permanent funding so that a plan can be made and security for staff for a fundamental change. This is the point about the lack of serious commitment to aboriginal issues. You ask about examples of the kinds of programs of which I am speaking, Mr. Speaker. There are the friendship centres, about 99 across Canada, which offer many programs and employment for aboriginal people. They have just finished a five year funding cycle. We do not know what is going to happen. They do not know what is going to happen, yet they provide a useful service.

Communication societies across this country include native newspapers, broadcasting and so on. Native newspapers have not received any increase in funding in the last six years in order to hire staff and get the ordinary cost of living that all of us, including all of us in this House, expect every year. What about funding to band councils and band governments? Then there is education and training. My colleague from Skeena talked earlier today about the decrease in funding for land claims, economic development, housing and the devolving of programs.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) this afternoon spoke about the devolution of programs to native peoples. I believe this Minister sincerely has tried very hard to work on that issue. However, sincerity is not enough. The money has to go with it. What has happened, if you look closely at the record, Mr. Speaker, is that what the Government and the previous Government did was say:, "Fine, we will let you run the program. We will give you the rule book. It will be our rules, not your rules. We will not give you any administration money but we will give you the program dollars and you can run it". That is characteristic of the way we have dealt with aboriginal people. We have said: "You play by our rules, do it our way or else we will not help you in your community".

I think the issue of land claims is where we must clearly see the philosophies and attitudes prevailing. In my view, particularly in my own riding of the Yukon where there have been ongoing land claim negotiations for 15 years which have not been resolved, for a two year period from about 1984 to 1986 the Government withdrew from negotiations and said that we had to come up with policy. So we are working on the policy. We now have a policy with extremely narrow guidelines and negotiations are under way again. Everyone has heard of the Lubicon situation where in order to get justice the Lubicon Indians had to take advantage of an international event, the Olympics, in Calgary. This surely is not the way to give justice to aboriginal people.

As I mentioned, in the Yukon with the ongoing negotiations, we are beginning to see that less funding is available for research by native bands into land claims negotiations. This is not just in the Yukon, but elsewhere, and they cannot be expected to do the kind of research necessary in order to take their negotiating positions in a meaningful way with decreased funding. That is happening over and over again.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has not been actively involved in these negotiations. He has not taken the interest to see that they are settled. It is crucial that these claims be settled. It is detrimental to the aboriginal communities and to the non-aboriginal communities to see, as in the Yukon, land ownership tied up until we can settle what land quantum will be given to Indian peoples or will be negotiated by Indian peoples. I believe strongly, and we have some examples such as the Inuvialuit agreement, that with political will land claims can be settled. Negotiators need to have a mandate which means that they can negotiate at the local level, not run back to Ottawa every five minutes to get some agreement on it. A politician in the Yukon once said that much of governing in the North is like driving a team of horses with reins 3,000 miles long. It does not work and is not working in land claims, which is an extremely important example of a lack of commitment to seriously deal with aboriginal issues.

I would like to now talk about self-government to which the previous speaker referred. Self-government is an essential part of land claims. Land claims is not just about land, it is about economic development and control over one's life. The history of the treatment of aboriginal peoples has been one of someone else defining how things will be done. It has not worked.

It was interesting to hear the previous speaker talk about self-government and government policy. It was instructive to hear him outline how the Government had listened to aboriginal people and is interested in listening. I will tell you that probably no other people have been listened to as much as the aboriginal people. We have had numerous task forces, the Penner report on self-government, the Cooligan report, as well as many others with many recommendations which have never been implemented. Aboriginal people are probably the most over-listened-to people in Canada. They probably come next to the poor, I guess, with all the poverty studies. What has not happened is action resulting from all that listening.

The previous speaker referred to individual definitions of self-government and how the Government had listened to what aboriginal people had to say. Why have they not listened to aboriginal people who have said entrench self-government in the Constitution? That is what aboriginal people are asking for. We have First Ministers' Conferences that go on for four or five years and the issue cannot be resolved. Yet in one day or one night the First Ministers sit down and change the character of this country through the Meech Lake Accord.

What we have is not, as is often referred to, an Indian problem. We have a problem with non-aboriginal people who refuse to look at the situation in its cultural context. They refuse to give up a shred of power to Canada's first nations and implement the kind of fairness that should be a hallmark of this country.

In that same vein I would like to talk about the lack of recognition of the traditional life-styles of aboriginal people. Yes, we like moccasins and handicrafts and feel that is pretty neat when we come to define Canada. Look at our travel brochures. We show moccasins and Indian handicrafts. However, when it comes down to things like the Constitution, whether there will be low-level flights which disrupt the Inuit in northern Quebec or Labrador, or whether we will protect trapping, hunting and sealing areas, then we are not so cute. Then we say that is just tradition, not a real economy.

There is a real aboriginal economy that has never been recognized. That fact reflects the kind of disregard and lack of respect we have shown for aboriginal people. We are missing a tremendous resource of scientific knowledge on the part of aboriginal people, whether it be the Inuit in the high Arctic or Indian peoples across Canada. They have a knowledge of the land, of our renewable resources, of patterns of climate and environment which we disregard because somehow it is not seen as scientific. Again it is because we choose to look only at aboriginal people from our cultural bias. We have decided what is right and we will tell them what is right.

Arctic sovereignty is in the news a lot. What we need to do is get more submarines up there! Maybe we should have military bases. More troops. Sure, we will put a military base in Nanisivik and to the Inuit we say: You can be the janitors. That is not good enough. We have had a presence in the North for thousands of years. We have a legitimacy in the North through the occupation of the Inuit and aboriginal peoples.

Then we have native economic development programs. We have a four-year program involving $345 million, but just as it is nearly over, they can spend only 40 per cent of the funds. Yet look at the statistics on unemployment and training.

I would like to close with one other very important issue, that of justice and things like the Marshall case and the killing of J. J. Harper in Manitoba. Many of us have known for years the statistics concerning the over-representation of aboriginal populations in our jails. This really means we must address national problems with national solutions. In both economic development and justice we must have a national focus and an inquiry into these issues and why they remain.

Finally, many statistics have been given here today about high unemployment, mortality rates and so on. I will not repeat them but I will say there is a strength in the aboriginal community from which we can learn and which we have rejected by our cultural blindness through our rejection of Canada's first culture. We can do much better, and I strongly support this motion and say to the people of Canada and this House that with the political will we can have justice for aboriginal people on aboriginal terms that will work for aboriginal people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her comments on the life of the aboriginal people, particularly as she knows them in the Yukon. As she pointed out, it is a national question.

She made reference to several things that I would be interested in having her explain a little more fully. She referred to land claims and the policies and procedures worked out for handling them. I think she suggested they were too narrow and that she would like to see them widened.

She also referred to the transfer programs that were part of the move toward so-called self-government and the rules imposed upon the Indian bands. She implied that some of those rules may have been inappropriate.

I would like her to explain further about the land claims guidelines and the rules for the transfer programs.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from my colleague because it is a very complex matter. The question of land claims and transfer of programs relates to the whole question of self-government and control over one's life.

First, the narrow mandate of land claims. Certainly there are basic issues in land claims such as self-government, land quantum, and cash compensation in certain instances. Of course, it is a negotiating process, and I am not suggesting that it should not be, that the aboriginal people tell you what they want and you say that is fine. It is a negotiating process. However, why in 15 years, in the case of the Yukon and many other land claims across Canada, has there not been a resolution of the problem? We have for good or ill, most of us think for ill, a trade agreement with the U.S. That did not go on for 15 years. When there was a will to get a trade agreement, we got a trade agreement. We can do the same thing in land claims. It simply means widening the mandate to some degree to allow the negotiators to negotiate on specific items and simply give them more latitude.

These negotiations require the giving up of some power. Ottawa cannot continue to control Indian peoples. Everyone at every level is simply going to have to realize that. We will be a healthier and stronger country when aboriginal people have control over that.

With respect to the programs, I will just give an example because I referred to it in my speech to some extent. An example is the National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program. This is an extremely important program with a number of teaching, treatment, and counselling programs. In my area, and indeed nationally, native people have been negotiating with the federal Government to have control of this program. However, the Department of National Health and Welfare continues to run the program. It pulls the strings and says: "You will do it our way".

Well, "our way", and in that I include myself and my culture, has not worked. It concerns me that we continue to repeat the mistakes of history, whether in the transfer of child welfare services to aboriginal people or the transfer of other programs. We insist that doing it our way works. We have heard numerous statistics today that indicate that doing it our way does not work. We must begin to take a more realistic view and accept that there is a cultural dimension.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the motion before the House and perhaps highlight one of the issues raised in this debate, the problems associated with it, and why it is mentioned by the mover of the motion. If outlining the problem does not get too boring, I would like to give a solution to the people who read Hansard and are involved with the federal programs which are referred to in this motion.

First, this is a very fine motion. It involves not only aboriginal people of Canada but all people in Canada. When you point out that the Government has not done enough for the provision of adequate shelter, health and educational facilities, basic water and sewage treatment facilities, adequate employment and training opportunities, and the financial resources to develop fully economic and human resources, that would cover more than half of Canada. It would certainly cover the rural and poorer areas of a country.

I do not want to get into generalizations. I am not very good at the generalizations and philosophical arguments which some may put forward on this motion. I do not have time for philosophical arguments because there is so much to be done with regard to specifics. There are so many requests which come into an MP's office on specific problems.

I want to refer to subsection (c) which refers to basic water and sewage treatment facilities. Only today I read a letter from Chief Calvin Francis, the Chief of the northern part of Gander Bay, Newfoundland, in my riding. He was complaining about this particular aspect of life in his area. This rings true for a great many areas of Newfoundland and other parts of Canada.

The complexity of the problem depends upon which province you are in. In other words, there are provincial laws and federal laws, but the provincial laws differ in practically every province with regard to what you must do to try to solve the problem. I will deal only with the provision of basic water and sewage treatment facilities.

We are talking about Canada in 1988. In Canada today we have thousands of children who drink contaminated water. Whose responsibility is it to try to correct this problem? Whose responsibility is it to make such communities conform with Ottawa where you are able to drink water from a tap or flush a toilet? A great many areas of Canada do not have such privileges and it leads to an incredible number of problems.

The area of Gander Bay to which I referred a moment ago is similar to a great many other areas referred to by this motion. There are many problems involved with this. One is that you are confronted with various provincial guidelines. For example, you must have an engineering study done before you can tackle a water and sewage problem. Number one, who is going to pay for the engineering study? Number two, the engineering study must be passed by the provincial Department of the Environment. Number three, the Department of Health must inspect the water source. Number four, if in examining the engineering study the Department of the Environment and the Department of Health determines that you must have sewage treatment facilities along the water system which is to be installed, you have one big problem because for 15 or 20 homes in a rural area sewage treatment facilities cost perhaps a quarter of a million dollars, and that is a fairly cheap sewage system. The question arises as to who is going to pay for that.

Normally a town or city, through taxes, pays off a loan obtained through a municipal financing system of the provincial government or directly through a bank. That cannot happen in the areas about which we are speaking because there is either a band council, such as in the case of Mr. Calvin Francis, or you must become incorporated in one way or another.

You may be lucky enough to get a grant to pay for the engineering study. There is only one place which I know of that you can get the grant, and that is through some provincial agency. When you do that there is a condition on the grant. If you get a grant from a provincial financing agency in some provinces, you must sign a piece of paper saying that once the system is completed you will impose property taxes. That is the law in most provinces in Canada. If you receive taxpayers' money in the form of grants you must impose property taxes on the homes which will be served by that water and sewage system.

That applies to most provinces of Canada in which you must have an engineering study in order to undertake any sort of water works. In other words, you cannot simply connect 40 or 50 houses to a water system for which you have found the money from a source such as a federal works program. It cannot be done.

A group of people in a small rural area say that they would like to be able to turn on a water tap in their houses in the same way as people in the cities and large towns do. They say: "We want bathrooms in our houses just like those in the towns and cities". The first thing to do is apply for some money because it cannot be done without money. It cannot be done only with volunteers because money is needed to buy pipe, dynamite, other materials to put in the lines.

One used to be able to apply for a normal grant program of the federal or provincial government. There used to be a works program through which people would be put to work to start the water system. I am talking about these programs as they relate to people who live in communities with no water or sewage system as we know it, but a well for a group of two or three houses and septic tanks behind the houses.

A community like that which seeks to install a water system can apply for what is called the job development program of the federal Government. It is the largest works program of the federal Government, and involves millions of dollars. Advertisements state that communities wishing to make improvements should apply under that program.

The only problem is that the Government has converted it into a training program so that those hired under the program must be trained for a certain skill. How do you train someone to dig a ditch? I believe a person could be trained in one day to dig a ditch and install a water line. Therefore, the federal Government does not fund water and sewer system projects as they used to be funded years ago. It will no longer fund water and sewer systems to completion under its largest direct funding grant program because it stipulates that employees must have classroom experience every day on the job, which simply cannot be done in this case. Let us keep in mind that these communities consist of relatively poor people. Any rural doctor will say that today, children in many of these rural communities have to drink contaminated water every morning.

What is the second largest program under which these communities can apply for grants without having to pay them back? It is a program called Section 38, which provides grants to community groups to help toward useful community improvements. The material costs under that program are higher than the job development program and also have certain restrictions.

In order to get money to put in the water and sewer system under Section 38, only those drawing unemployment insurance can be hired. Some MPs just might be foolish enough to promote this program. The fact is that workers who have been hired under that program of the federal Government must be laid off when their unemployment insurance benefits have run out. The MP will have to explain that the reason his constituent did not get unemployment insurance benefits from all the work he did on this summer project is that it was uninsurable employment. As a result, the MP has intentionally put that man on welfare, since that is his only alternative.

I know of only one direct funding program that is fairly universal in Canada. It is a provincial program that is paid fifty-fifty through a recovery system with the federal Government. It is referred to by various names by provinces across Canada. It is usually called the community development program, but I have seen it referred to as the community action program in Ontario and other places. In my opinion and in the opinion of those who work under these programs, it should be called the welfare program.

We have already determined that we cannot do the project through the job development program because we are not allowed to train people to dig a ditch. We have the second largest program, Section 38, to install the water and sewer system, but those we hire will end up on welfare after receiving uninsurable employment.

Unfortunately, the welfare program is designed simply to take people off welfare and put them on unemployment insurance. In other words, when they qualify for unemployment insurance they lose their jobs under the welfare program, and there is no material cost. Talk about intentionally putting people on unemployment insurance.

Most of the communities covered under this motion deal with people who are what we call "repeaters" of unemployment insurance. If a private employer went out and took someone on social assistance, gave them exactly 10 weeks or 20 weeks, just enough to qualify for unemployment insurance, that employer would be brought into court and charged. It is against the law. Provincial Governments do it all the time. In every single provincial budget that I have ever seen there is always enough money to take 10,000 or 20,000 people off social assistance and put them on unemployment insurance. The grants run just long enough for someone to qualify for unemployment insurance and then they are laid off.

Here we have the only three grant programs, not loans, available to communities in Canada covered by this motion to put in a water and sewer system, for people drinking contaminated water, and the three programs are not useable for putting in those vital services. That is the bottom line with all these organizations since this Government took over. Previously we were able to do that under the largest program, the Canada Works Program.

The bottom line is that this motion deplores the Government for its failure to address the needs of the aboriginal people of Canada, including the provision of adequate shelter, health care, educational facilities, basic water and sewage treatment facilities and so on and so on. There is no way now they can get money through normal government programs to put in water and sewer systems. There is no possible way. However, if they wished to do something else in the community, they can do it. If they can take someone into a classroom and teach him or her a lesson every day before they go out on the job, they can get some money.

In conclusion, let me say, without going into detail, that the other programs operate in approximately the same way. We have rural and native housing programs. I could write a book on rural and native housing problems. We know inside out and upside down every regulation that has been changed over the years. The new program is called the RRAP program. It is not very well known in Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal, but mention it in any of the rural areas and everyone knows what you are talking about. Yet that program has been so restricted under this Government that it is practically non-existent.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the previous speaker for pointing out so adequately the bind so many aboriginal communities are in. I think he has delineated one program, the water and sewer program, and, as he said at the conclusion, it certainly affects many other programs. The obstacles that are set up are worthy of an Olympic hurdle race for the people who try to take advantage of them. Usually, if they could take advantage of any of the programs about which the Hon. Member spoke, they would never be completed because the program would end and they would have half a sewer and half a water system.

The speaker mentioned housing. Certainly those of us who have been involved with the issue of housing for aboriginal communities, especially the joint housing projects between CMHC and DIA, have found it an extremely frustrating process. The intent of the program may have been good initially but it is causing many problems in aboriginal communities. Under the guaranteed loans through CMHC, many of the aboriginal people are paying very exorbitant rents. In my own riding we recently had something like a 25 per cent increase in rents in one year under those jointly funded programs.

Would the Member tell us what his experience has been with the joint housing program of DIA and CMHC? How would he comment on that particular program and its success in dealing with the housing needs of aboriginal people?

Mr. Baker: The one thing that is really frustrating to the person who is in the House—and there are all kinds of problems in actually getting into the property in the beginning—is the amount of rent one has to pay is constantly under revision. It is constantly changing. The real problem, I believe, with all of the funding programs that are in existence for native peoples and non-native peoples, is that there are provincial inputs and federal inputs and there are local inputs. What one would have to do is remove the interference from outside and allow local authorities to change the regulations. A person who made $20,000 last year, living in a subsidized rental unit, but today is on unemployment insurance, is watching the rent double from last year. That is absolutely atrocious. The objections that were placed by Chief Calvin Francis today in his communications to me is that they only qualify for housing under the rural and native programs and the cut-down version of the RRAP program.

There are various elements in the RRAP program. One element is native, another element is handicapped and another is just your normal RRAP program. I still cannot figure it out. If one has a house, they will come in and fix up that house, but they will fix it up in such a way that the inspector says it must do for 15 years. In other words, even if you do not want it, you will get the side replaced or the chimney redone or the roof done. By the time it is all added up, under the new regulations brought in by the Conservative Government two years ago, you are left with receiving $5,000 free at the beginning but then having a mortgage of $10,000 which you could not possibly pay back. I must say I have cases before me, as I am sure do all Members of Parliament, where we have written to the Ministers responsible and asked for Ministerial intervention to get around certain regulations in the Act. I am hoping that the two Ministers in this House, to whom we have written regarding special cases under which the Minister has some discretion, will intervene in those particular cases. I am hoping they will intervene.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the motion of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). When I look at the motion, I see that he obviously wants to lay on the back of this Government the plight of native people across Canada. When one has listened to what has been said in the House regarding the situation of native people in Canada, one cannot but find it outrageous that some people would try to blame this Government for a situation that has developed over a long time. I do not know why they do this. Perhaps it is to get rid of their own sense of culpability.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) making his statements. He was outrageous. If I were a native listening to this debate, I would be insulted. I would be insulted because what has been set out here today regarding our native people is not a reflection of the reality. That is not what is happening to our native people. This condemnation of the Government that the socialists have brought forward does not take into account the real situation and what the Government has been doing.

I was listening to the alleged cuts in spending being outlined by Members opposite. Canadians must know what we are talking about here. When we talk about registered Indians under the Indian Act we are talking, in 1986, about 387,000 people living on and off reserves. We are talking about our Inuit population, which is about 30,000 people scattered over all of northern Quebec, Canada and the territories. That is what we are talking about.

When we talk about money and alleged cuts, it just does not hold. I do not know if Hon. Members opposite and I are looking at the same public account books or not. In the books that I have looked at, I saw that in 1983-84 aboriginal expenditures in Canada were $2,461,000,000. At that time that was 2.77 per cent of total government expenditures. Today, in 1987-88 aboriginal expenditures are $3,863,000,000, which is 4 per cent of total government expenditures.

One does not have to be a genius to understand that this is not a reduction, but an increase in expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of the House are well aware of the importance of economic development. Today, my Government colleagues, especially the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), have mentioned the efforts made by the Government to improve the situation of our native people through various programs.

I take this opportunity to point out that Hon. Members from both sides of the House are well aware of the importance of economic development in the case of aboriginal Canadians. Aboriginal people want to have more control over their daily activities, the type of control which other Canadians take for granted. That is why their economic development and self-government are really a priority for our Government, something the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) emphasized on several occasions.

Mr. Speaker, our Government believes that entrepreneurship must be the motor of long term economic growth and job creation. Our small businesses account for 80 per cent of all jobs created in Canada and within our Indian communities. Our best hope remains in the ambition and creativity demonstrated by Indian entrepreneurs. And this Government launched major initiatives in that area.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion have such programs. We offer concrete and tangible support to native entrepreneurs, in the form of training and financial assistance to help them establish new businesses and expand existing ones.

For instance, during this fiscal year alone, expenditures in the area of economic development of native businesses and economic institutions will be in the order of $150 million. According to our files, there are in Canada more than 4,000 businesses owned and operated by Indians. Most of them are reserve-based, and their numbers are increasing rapidly. For instance, during fiscal 1986 alone, we supported the start-up in Canada of more than 300 new Indian businesses. Most of them relied on upfront financial assistance from the Canadian Government, either to supply the capital needed or finance their loans, either directly or through the Indian Economic Development Fund, or again through departmental loan guarantees.

Hon. Members will know that the Indian Economic Development Fund is an important source of support for new businesses. It provides both training and advisory and support services to Indian entrepreneurs. The Fund was established in 1970 to support the development of viable Indian economic initiatives. Last year, the Fund helped some 900 Indian businesses get established and win a place in the market. Moreover, the $200 million invested over the last three years by the Native Economic Development Program and the special agreements on rural and farming development, and the subsidiary agreements on northern development, administered by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, have had a significant impact on the development and maintenance of a native private sector in native communities across Canada.

I would like to emphasize more specifically that the Government made significant progress in allowing natives to take control of their own economic development. We have provided more than $100 million of funds to Indian financial institutions from across the country. Those financial institutions will play an important role in the future to finance the growth of Indian businesses through loans or equity financing. Apart from the support provided to native business development corporations by the Indian Affairs Department, we help Native people to establish a system of consulting and financial services, managed by native people, independant and able to answer the needs and hopes of Indians.

[English]

Indian Affairs and Northern Development provides ongoing advice and financial assistance to Indian bands for the management of their natural resources. Resource development, forestry, fishing, agriculture and wildlife represent significant potential sources of income and employment for Indians. In forestry, for example, changes being developed to timber regulations and future increased federal investment in Indian forestry management will put Indian forestry back on a solid footing after decades of neglect, notwithstanding what the previous Member who spoke before me was talking about. The Government's strong relationship with the provinces has resulted in Indian management of provincial forest land adjacent to reserves.

Oil and gas is another important base for economic self-reliance in western Canada. Indian bands and government officials are currently reviewing together the existing management and regulatory regime relating to oil and gas. We are confident that ways will be found to improve the benefits accruing to Indians from their own oil and gas resource development.

In the meantime, an oil and gas branch has been formed within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The human resources dedicated to this activity alone have been expanded sixfold. Top-notch professionals are being recruited to ensure the best possible return now and over the long term to Indians.

Many Indian reserves have good potential for mineral development. These have been hampered by legal and structural barriers inherent in the Indian Act, but also by a lack of access to private sector capital and by disputes with some provinces regarding control over royalties and other financial benefits. These are being addressed for the first time and progress is being made.

As a matter of fact, the federal Government, in co-operation with native people and their economic organizations, is helping isolated native communities to benefit from economic development opportunities. For example, we support the creation of service industries in those communities due to the implementation of construction and infrastructure projects. These projects helped create 3,700 jobs for Indians. We also encourage local hiring in order to maximize the opportunities created at the local level through vesting of existing federal programs.

Mr. Speaker, we have in Canada a wrong idea about native businesses. I was extremely disappointed to hear NDP and Liberal Members speak in today's debate of natives as if all their endeavors always ended in failure, as if they were incapable of doing something right and as if they had never made any progress.

Contrary to what the NDP and the Liberals would have Canadians believe, many native businesses are successful. Native entrepreneurs are talented and ambitious and their success rate is high. For example, Econobois, a construction material retailer in the Huron village of Quebec, employs 25 people and has annual sales of more than $5.5 million.

• (1740)

Micmac Industries of Big Gove, in my home Province of New Brunswick, employs 14 persons and has sales of $1.6 million; Lasso Contracting Ltd. of Fort McMurray, Alberta, employs 15 people and has sales of $3 million; the Co-op Store in Fort Hope, Ontario, which is owned and managed by Indians, employs six people and has sales of $2 million; Antsanen Enterprises has sales of close to $800,000 and provides eight jobs in the small Northlands Band in northern Manitoba. I could go on and list successful native businesses in this country. That list will become much longer as we remove the legal and structural impediments to native economic development, as we help more native people to develop good management and occupational skills, as we work to increase funding from private sector sources, and as we improve education levels.

In speaking of removing impediments and barriers to economic development, for a few moments I wish to dwell on how the Government has responded to a call by 115 band councils to amend the Indian Act. Following a two year process of full consultation with Indian communities across Canada, on March 9, 1988, the Government introduced legislation to give bands taxing powers on conditionally surrendered reserve lands. The Bill would also make it possible for Indians to mortgage long term leases on designated reserve bands. This is important legislation, and it is Indian-led legislation. The credit goes to Chief Clarence Jules of the Kamloops Band who started the process, and who has dedicated himself to seeing it through. This Bill has widespread support. Yesterday at a meeting in Toronto the Confederacy of First Nations debated the Bill and passed a resolution in its support.

Not every band will want or need to take advantage of those changes, but for those that do, it will permit them to economically develop parts of their reserves for commercial, industrial, residential, or recreational purposes. Indians should be much better able to obtain loans and to recover their investment in infrastructure or services. They will also be able to govern developed land as an integral part of their reserve. This will expand the economic base of the reserve and the business and employment opportunities for band members.

It is practical changes like those that are as important as the direct financial investments that I spoke of earlier. I trust that Members on all sides of the House will facilitate the passage of this Indian inspired legislation in order that bands like the Kamloops Band can get on with their business.

The Government is criticized for not paying attention to the problem of unemployment among native people, particularly those who live on reserves. The facts tell a different story. All day we have heard the socialists and the Liberals tell us it is only a question of money. If it is only a question of money, surely when the Grits were in the process of bankrupting the country they would have solved the problems. It is not only a question of money.

Since 1985, the Government's expenditures on native adult training and labour force adjustment assistance have exceeded $600 million. The Canadian Jobs Strategy of the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission, the Indian community human resources strategy, and education programs of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are the main vehicles for helping individuals develop their skills, find jobs, and for assisting Indian leaders to establish and implement plans and strategies to address training and employment problems in their communities.

The Indian community human resources strategy alone has provided full-time academic upgrading and vocational training to 6,000 Indians since 1985. This is a key activity given the strong, proven relationship between academic attainment and employment. Training on the job and entrepreneurial development have been particularly effective. There have been 3,300 unemployed Indians who have benefited from training on the job, and presently most have ongoing jobs. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development's 1987 youth entrepreneurship training has graduated 169 persons, 71 of whom are already in business or shortly will be.

As native people achieve higher levels of education, they will be presented with more opportunities for private sector employment. Education has influenced the number and types of businesses established and operated by aboriginal people. Almost 80,000 Indian students are enrolled in elementary, secondary, and post-secondary education programs in Canada today. Each year, approximately 750 Indian people graduate from colleges and universities. Why do I quote that figure? Almost 11 years ago, in 1977, federal funding for Indian post-secondary education was less than $8 million. This year it is expected to reach $93.5 million. That is another clear reflection of the Government's commitment to Indian education.

Indian management skills have been recognized as national skill shortages within the Canadian Jobs Strategy, thus permitting more training in that area. This will not only help business managers, but also community and tribal Indian administrators of devolved government programs.

Government training and employment programs are progressively being devolved to local community control. This is the case with the Indian community human resources program, and increasingly so with respect to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. In the coming year we expect to make further advances with the introduction of initiatives focused on moving

Indian social assistance recipients into full-time employment, and providing more support to seasonal labour activities on reserves for housing, construction, and the like.

When we reflect on today's debate and on the question of native people, no one has pointed out the fact that unlike the previous Government, when this Government took office it listened to native people across Canada. As a priority we adopted the pursuance of self-government. As the previous Government tried to do, we have not attempted to impose anything upon our native people, upon Indians. They will develop at their own pace. They do not want any Government to come in and impose anything on them.

In terms of economic and social development we recognize as a Government that more work must be done. We must strive to do even better. However, I think we are on the right course. Very little credit goes to our native people if we try to make political hay of their plight. Therefore I encourage all Hon. Members of the House to vote against this NDP motion.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has certainly presented a very rosy picture. On one hand I agree with him when he says that the problems and issues which the Government is trying to address did not begin in 1984. They are of a very long standing history. The previous Liberal Government has no better record in that regard.

I should like to address a little more fully the issue of training and post-secondary education in general. It is an area in which I have been involved over the years. I think I know first-hand some of the problems and successes in this area. I know that there have been on the job training programs, but I would be very interested in knowing, if the Minister has the figure, how many of the 3,300 people trained on the job actually now have full-time employment.

I would also like to remind the Minister that many training and educational programs have not addressed the fundamental problems which exist. He mentioned the Canadian Jobs Strategy which is now cutting back significantly, as the Minister well knows, so that the upgrading needed by not only native Canadians but others is not available. Funds are being cut back from the community colleges which often offered those courses and they are being transferred to private industry. Literacy programs, again not just for aboriginal Canadians but for many others, receive very little funding. I think most of us who have had any experience with the educational system would agree that it has certainly failed aboriginal people.

There is a necessity for training and upgrading programs which unfortunately are expensive and almost provide a parallel system of education in one sense, because there is so much to be done in the area. I agree that some things have been done. We have had programs like the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College, the Blue Quills College in Alberta, and the Native Cultural Centre in British Columbia. There have been some good educational programs, but the fact remains that about 20 per cent of the Indian children growing up today will complete secondary school, whereas about 75 per cent of the general Canadian population will complete secondary school.

I have two questions for the Minister surrounding the real success in full-time employment of on the job training, which again is often short term, and the funding of post-secondary programs that are often uncertain and go from year to year rather than on a permanent basis.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is probably the only one on the other side of the House to have acknowledged today that some positive things have happened. That is the reality out there, but perhaps it has not been at the pace we would have liked. Perhaps we would have expected progress to occur much more rapidly.

In the last few moments of my address to the House, I indicated that at one point in time we were assisting only 3,700 Canadians at the post-secondary educational level and now we are assisting some 12,000. It is a big gain. Of course, when we look at the raw statistics we see the chances of a young Indian child graduating from school. It is the reality, but it is why we are committing so many resources to it.

For example, the Hon. Member alluded to the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College and others which have sprung up in western Canada. They are funded through our department and have accomplished many things. The Hon. Member also underlined the importance of training programs, and the speaker who preceded me was yelling and asking for the return of the Canada Works Project and LIP. Which Government threw hundreds of millions of dollars at the people in regions like Kent County? Which Government did that? Surely the NDP does not condemn us for that today.

Our native people need training. Instead of throwing money at the problem, we thought that we would use the money of taxpayers to the best advantage of the recipients, the people who can get something out of it like positive training. We recognize that training is important.

As initially developed perhaps the Canadian Jobs Strategy did not meet all the needs of our native people, but changes have been made. I am sure that as we experiment with the program we will hear from the native people who take advantage of it. They will make suggestions for further improvement, and the record will be there. Yes, we will improve them, but I think the way we must look at it is by determining whether or not there has been a sincere effort on the part of the Government to address the problem, and I submit to all Hon. Members that there has been.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Minister and he mentioned some positive elements in his speech. He even referred to a business in the Big Cove reserve in my riding which has provided employment for many people. I recognize that if we look at the few reserves we have in New Brunswick, we could certainly find some very positive achievements. In addition to the business he mentioned in Big Cove, there is in my riding, in Indian Island, a group which has organized a summer camp which seems to have had some success. There is also a trout farming business in the Bouctouche reserve. These projects certainly have very positive effects on the reserves. However, we should not paint too rosy a picture, because I certainly believe that people who live on reserves do not have the same opportunities as other Canadians.

In this regard, I would like the Minister to give us some information on unemployment in the New Brunswick reserves and elsewhere in Canada to show that there really is a serious problem and that we should deal with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall give the Minister 30 seconds to reply.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) that unemployment is much too high on New Brunswick reserves. However, there is some hope because, for the first time, since the unemployment problem did not start in 1984, the Native Economic Development Program, for which I am responsible, has committed funds for New Brunswick reserves. We are working very closely with all the bands in the province to encourage them to implement economic development projects and viable businesses such as those mentioned by the Hon. Member. Thanks to the Native Economic Development Program, we shall be able to help them lower the unemployment rate, which is admittedly much too high.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that the proceedings under Standing Order 82(12) have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—ACQUIRED RIGHTS OF SASKATCHEWAN FRANCOPHONES—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN TRANSLATING LAWS—TRANSLATION OF SASKATCHEWAN STATUTES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on February 25 last the Supreme Court of Canada came out with a historic ruling which might completely alter the Canadian political scenery.

As you may recall, I directed a question to the Government to know its reaction to this decision which I would qualify as being very important to us Canadians.

The Supreme Court ruled that the Province of Saskatchewan has been bilingual since 1905 with respect to its legislative assembly and its courts, which means that any elected Member in that province has the right to speak French or English in the legislative assembly and that all provincial legislation must be passed in both French and English to be valid.

The court also ruled that an individual is entitled to be tried in his or her own language before the courts of the Province of Saskatchewan. Understandably, Mr. Speaker, the decision makes quite a change to the political scene because apparently, in addition to Saskatchewan, the neighbouring Province of Alberta would be subject to the same ruling because it came into being pursuant to identical legislation.

Francophones see this as a major step towards full recognition of their rights which have been trampled on for 85 years. Francophone communities out west have been fighting for decades just to survive in French. The Supreme Court has just confirmed their rights and given them some hope. I say some hope because the court ruling acknowledges the fact that both provinces can legally pass a bilingual law whose effect would be to exempt them from complying with section 110 (Northwest Territories) and thus to deprive francophone minorities of their rights.

This greatly complicates the political scene when we realize that these two provinces have never been too generously disposed toward Francophones. They went along only after quite a lot of arm twisting.

That is why before the Supreme Court came down with its decision the recognition of these basic rights had required many long years of struggle before the courts. These legal battles are not only long, but expensive and exhausting, for they drain a lot of energy. In the case of Father Mercure who went to the Supreme Court of Canada, it took him five years from 1983 to 1988 before obtaining justice. It required a lot of dedication, because at every stage of the legal process, Francophones were told that they had no rights as Francophones in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker, they never gave up. They kept on fighting and appealing to higher courts; they took other steps and incurred other expenses. Faced with constant obstacles, others might have given up. I think that we should congratulate them for showing such determination in getting their basic rights recognized.

Now that they have won, they should not let the legislatures abdicate their responsibilities and deprive them of that right the Supreme Court has recognized. The Federal Government should show political leadership and offer these two provinces assistance to deal with this situation.

It would be totally useless to force them to translate all the legislation adopted since 1905, because it would not serve the public interest or the common good. It would be a waste of public funds, because there is probably a lot of obsolete statutes which do not need to be translated.

Of course, if the provinces choose to take the easy road, they will introduce and pass a legislation stating that the province is unilingual and strictly English-speaking, that is they would repeal section 110. In doing so, the francophones would loose their rights without any recourse. It would be legal, though very unfair, not to say cynical, on the part of both provinces which, it will be remembered, passed the constitutional resolution proceeding from the Meech Lake agreement.

• (1805)

By endorsing the Meech Lake agreement, both provinces firmly undertook before the rest of Canada to protect the linguistic rights of their minorities which is as you know a basic characteristic of our country.

They would be ill-advised to pass a legislation withdrawing the almost century-old rights of their francophones. It would probably be legal but it would not be fair.

We have to hurry, Mr. Speaker, because we know that Alberta is about to introduce legislation. Indeed, a dispatch from the Canadian Press confirmed on March 16 that the Government House Leader intends to table such a Bill. We are still waiting for the details of that legislation. But the worst is to be feared, Mr. Speaker, when one knows that in June last, that same legislature in Alberta passed a resolution to limit the use of French in its proceedings—the Piquette case—to such a point that permission is required to use one of the official languages of this country.

The solution would be to retain section 110, even to enshrine it in our Constitution, so that Francophones would feel protected and well treated in those provinces in the future. In exchange for an agreement on partial translation of the major provincial statutes, and not all of them, those two provinces should undertake to increase their services in French to their residents. We would thus save considerable amounts of time and money while making better use of federal grants to be allocated not only to protect, Mr. Speaker, but to promote the French culture in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will recall the fundamental decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada in Mercure vs. the Attorney General of Saskatchewan. The Supreme Court ruled that Section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act of 1891 was still valid in the Province of Saskatchewan. In doing so, the Court pointed out that the statutes of the Province were invalid but the principle of the rule of law would keep the existing laws temporarily in effect. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the Court stated that the language requirements could be modified. It was up to the Province to pass legislation to change the present legal situation as defined by the Court. Only the Province could determine which option it preferred.

We recognize and respect the Province's autonomy in this respect, and we are very much aware of the divergent interests involved in this decision. In fact, these interests deserve special attention, and we realize that the Province cannot reach a decision without proper reflection.

At the same time, the Government of Canada fully approves the equality of status and use of English and French across Canada. In this respect, the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) initiated certain measures last fall, well before the Mercure case, and some positive consultation has taken place. Since the Supreme Court's decision, there has been further discussion about integrating the implementation of the decision with the broader issues.

The implementation of the Court's decision is expected to require substantial amounts of human, technical and financial resources. Mr. Speaker, we wish to repeat here in the House that the Government of Canada is prepared to help the Province accomplish this task, using the means at its disposal. We are consulting closely with the Government of Saskatchewan to determine in what way we can be most useful, if the Province should request our assistance.

Mr. Speaker, in the days following the decision in the Mercure case, the Government of Canada reiterated to Canadians its position, announced when Bill C-72 was tabled, that it maintained its policy of co-operating with the provinces and the Territories to ensure that the most important provincial, territorial and municipal services would be available in English and in French. We still believe that one of the most urgent priorities for minority language communities across this country is full implementation of minority language educational rights as enshrined in Section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is the most important need of the Francophone community, including that of Saskatchewan, and indeed an area where we can be most useful. While we recognize the Province's jurisdiction over education and provincial services, we shall indeed continue to consult and co-operate with the provincial authorities for the very purpose reflected in Section 16 of the Charter, namely to promote the equality of status and use of French and English.

CANADA HEALTH ACT—EQUAL ACCESS— MINISTER'S POSITION/ADMINISTRATION OF ACT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it gave me great concern that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), in his reply to my question on March 8, did not seem to address the crux of the problem. Certainly I have great concern about what is happening, not just to the women of this country but to our health care system in general. In the 1986-87 Canada Health Act annual report, the Minister said that his department has been following carefully recent developments in provincial programs. Examples of these included the removal of insured coverage for some health services and charges to patients for services which may not necessarily be medically required. A number of issues related to possible non-compliance were identified and subsequently resolved, while some cases are currently under review.

We now know that the attempt to restrict certain services in the Province of British Columbia has not been allowed by the court. Therefore it seems to me that if we are going to have an effective Canada Health Act, the Minister must act on that ruling.

We are greatly concerned that the principles of the Canada Health Act are not being upheld. The principles of public administration, comprehensiveness, universality, portability and accessibility are the ones at which we are looking.

With regard to accessibility, it says insured health services on uniform terms and conditions and reasonable access by insured persons to insured health services unprecluded or unimpeded, either directly or indirectly, by charge or other means. Surely it is quite clear, after the Supreme Court decision, that there should be access to these services for women right across the country.

It seems to me that the Government is reluctant to implement the Canada Health Act. New Democrats have never said that abortion on demand should be the policy in place. We have said, though, that it should be equally accessible to women across the country and that we should not be discriminated against on the basis of geography or whether we are rich or poor. That is the issue on which we are trying to get an answer from the Minister. The Minister should take that responsibility as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). He is responsible for ensuring that the Canada Health Act is implemented.

The practice of de-insuring important health care services must be stopped. We have seen this happen in Alberta and know that it can be the beginning of the erosion of the whole medical health system in Canada. With something as clear as the Supreme Court decision it is very important that the Minister of National Health and Welfare exercise his responsibility to ensure that there is accessibility across the country.

If we conclude that debate, we can go on to the issue of services for women which would provide some prevention. We could talk about counselling and contraceptive information. I am concerned that the Minister is not fulfilling his responsibility of discovering where there is not accessibility. If this responsibility is fulfilled Canadian women can get the services which they need.

Under the Canada Health Act we could have pre-abortion and post-abortion counselling and contraceptive information. These things would be useful in reducing the number of abortions. However, that will not happen as long as the Minister is playing around with the fundamental principles of the Canada Health Act.

We have been getting answers like: "I do not want to give an opinion to the House now" and "We are going to have to look at it for a while". Surely with the Supreme Court decision which has been handed down the Minister has a responsibility. There have been two court decisions now and the time has come when we must look at the implications of non-accessibility and how they erode the Canada Health Act.

I ask that the Minister respond to us on this side of the House by telling us how he is going to implement the Canada Health Act in order that the principles which have been put in place, which are the true values of Canadian society, will be upheld.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, tonight is the night I reply to questions concerning the Supreme Court!

The minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), a minister responsible for the Canada Health Act, is most aware that the provinces, as is their right under the Constitution, are developing their policies on the delivery of abortion services.

This in neither completely unusual nor expected, since Canada consists of twelve provinces and territories which have different needs in relation to their economic, social, cultural and geographical requirements.

We have a national health care system because of federal-provincial co-operation, commitment and willingness to ensure that Canadians have reasonable access to insured health services without financial or other barriers. The system is based on a respect for the powers, rights, privileges or authorities vested in Canada or the provinces.

This reality has very specific implications for the application of the Canada Health Act and the principles it embodies. The provinces are responsible for the provision of health care services, and it is not within the powers of the federal Government to dictate to provinces what those health services must be, or how they should be delivered.

However, the provinces do have an obligation to satisfy the principles of the Canada Health Act before receiving federal cash contributions for the provision of insured health services. When questions do arise under the Act, experience has shown that both levels of government are willing to address the issue in a cooperative manner that will produce a satisfactory solution.

The Supreme Court decision has made it necessary for provincial and territorial governments to enter a difficult period of readjustment of their policies and procedures on abortion.

Access to the services on an insured basis is one key question in the debate. For some, access means that the service should be available everywhere to everyone without conditions or restrictions of any kind. Others view access to mean that the service should only be available for very limited and specific reasons.

The Canada Health Act requires there to be reasonable access to medically necessary health services if a province is to qualify for full federal cash contributions. The determination of reasonable access must take into consideration all aspects related to the provision and delivery of any insured health service by a province. This could include an examination and understanding of provincial health care delivery resources, facilities, personnel, as well as a recognition of factors, i.e. geography, that may set practical limits on what health services are provided where.

The federal Government is committed to upholding principles of the Canada Health Act, and ensuring that provinces respect the act's provisions for federal funding. Changing developments in the area of abortion services are being closely followed.

IMMIGRATION—IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD HEARINGS—FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA RULING/REQUEST THAT BILL C-55 BE AMENDED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, a week ago I asked a question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on a matter of urgency in the refugee determination system. I asked, as reported at page 13602 of Hansard, whether the Minister:

> —will now undertake to bring into Parliament an amendment to Bill C-55 which will assure members of the Immigration Appeal Board that they will have the normal rights and protection of tenure, that is, that they will not be dismissed during their term of office except for cause?

The Minister was so uninterested in the problem or the facts of the situation that he did not even know which Bill I was talking about. His answer was:

> Mr. Speaker, I won't bring in any amendment to Bill C-84—

The Bill that is causing the trouble is Bill C-55. It has caused the Immigration Appeal Board to totally stop hearing refugee redeterminations. It is slowly bringing the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to a halt for the same reason. The reason is described by Judge Reed in her judgment at the Federal Court at Winnipeg. As it is stated in this article:

> Mr. Matas argued before the court that the Government was opposing Mr. Sethi's application for refugee status at the same time as it was about to 'fire' all the existing board members and select some of them, but not all, to become members of the new board.

The judge wrote:

> This, it is argued, creates a reasonable apprehension of bias, an apprehension that the existing board members will tend to lean in favour of the Government's position.

• (1820)

That was caused by the Government's passage through this House of Bill C-55, particularly Clause 38(1) and (7) which states:

> Subject to this section, the members of the former Board and the members of the former Committee cease to hold office on the commencement day.
> No person appointed to hold office as a member of the former Board or of the former Committee has any right to claim or receive any compensation, damages, indemnity . . .

In other words, they have no right to continue. They have lost the tenure which is normally considered essential to enable a judge or a person doing judge-like work to give the independent decision the law expects him or her to give.

In other words, as the court found, the Immigration Appeal Board, and the same applies to the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, are no longer to be trusted to be independent and impartial no matter what their good intentions may be because of this law that the Minister drove through the House of Commons.

That has caused not only an injustice to the individuals concerned, the refugee claimants and members of the board, but it is also causing a worsening of a serious backlog and administrative problem, which is a nightmare already, because of that foolish law and the Minister's foolish answer to my request.

The fact is that if the Minister will stop and think, he can very simply today, or if he is not here today, tomorrow, end this problem very easily. He can do justice, that is to say, he can restore the understanding of normal tenure so these judge-like people will not be dismissed during their term of office unless they give some special cause. That is the normal practice. At the same time, he can set the Immigration Appeal Board and the Refugee Status Advisory Committee functioning again very simply, by making a public announcement that he will move to amend Bill C-55—not Bill C-84; that is another battle—in Clause 38 so as to restore the normal right of tenure.

I urge the Minister to get off his high horse and let this process, which has had so many difficulties, get moving again.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on March 10, 1988. The Member knows that there are several legal issues raised by the Federal Court decision. These issues warrant thorough study by legal experts and a careful consideration by the Government. Such study and consideration has been undertaken and the Government will render its decision in due course. Until then, it would not be appropriate to comment on the case to which the Hon. Member refers.

I would, nevertheless, want to offer some comments about Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, which are designed to revise and expedite the refugee determination system and to curve the flagrant abuse of our immigration controls. The Hon. Member knows that Canada's refugee determination system is strained to the breaking point.

We have a backlog of more than 40,000 claims pending. The backlog is growing by 2,500 claims or more every month. Thousands of recent claimants arrived with fraudulent documents or with no documents at all.

Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 are essential first steps in restoring integrity to the refugee determination system. The new refugee determination system will maintain the existing high standards of fairness in keeping with Canada's humanitarian tradition. It affords to refugees the protection guaranteed under the Convention and provides for efficient resolution of claims so that genuine refugees can get on with their lives in Canada.

The Immigration Act needs to be amended immediately. Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 are important parts of the solution to our backlog. These Bills, which are in the other place, cannot be allowed to languish there. I urge all Hon. Members to request all members of that other Chamber to accept their responsibilities and send the Bills forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ALLOTED DAY, S.O. 82—ECONOMIC FUTURE OF REGION OF GREATER MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act in matters of interest to the region of Greater Montreal, including the space agency, the development of the Vieux-Port, the planning and development of Montreal Harbour, the Soligaz project, the shipyards and the economic renewal of East Montreal as well as the economic deterioration of the southwestern part of the region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recall why today, we in the Liberal Party move this motion to condemn a Government that has been in power for three and half years, a motion that concerns matters of interest to Montreal, the main urban centre of Quebec and one of the major urban centres in this country. Why has the number of issues outstanding increased to the point that today, we moved a motion condemning the Government? We must remember that after the election in 1984, following the many promises made by this Government to the people of Montreal, the municipal authorities and Quebecers as a whole, that in 1985, despite strong representation consisting of fifty-six or fifty-seven Members, including eight Conservative Members on Montreal Island, the business community started to complain.

The business community was disappointed because they found there was no one, no Members with enough clout to defend the interests of the Montreal community. Right away, both employers and employees, sensing they had no one to defend their interests, turned to the Opposition. This started in Montreal East. When representatives of employees at Bombardier, Vickers and Gulf, where shutdowns were a very real threat, realized they were not getting satisfactory answers from Conservative Members, they went to see the Opposition Members in the Liberal Party, in their search for ways to make themselves heard, to defend their cause, save jobs and save the economy.

Right away, on November 15, we in the Liberal Party set up a survival committee. Considering the gravity of the situation in Montreal East at the time with eight companies that were about to close down, which would result in the direct loss of 2,400 jobs and the loss of 5,000 jobs indirectly at the request of my colleagues from Papineau and Laval-des-Rapides (Messrs. Ouellet and Garneau), I set up this survival committee for Montreal East, including as members all socio-economic and even political intervenors representing government at the provincial and municipal levels, in order to put pressure on the federal Government so that it would act and respond to expectations and needs and deal with the emergency situation facing these people who were about to lose their jobs.

Under this kind of pressure exerted as much by the Montreal business community as by federal, provincial and municipal political interests, not to mention the very strong Montreal East concertation group, at long last the Conservative Government—and the Prime Minister, of course—realizes it is in a very difficult situation and that nobody is adequately prepared to defend the interests of the Montreal region. And so, on December 5, the Prime Minister announces his decision to strike a Cabinet committee whose members will study and prepare the economic revival of Greater Montreal. Listen now, make a note of the people who were selected for the Cabinet committee, and I quote the article published in Le Devoir after the Prime Minister's Office issued its release:

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the then Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), the then Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette), and two Ministers from the Island of Montreal, Mrs. Suzanne Blais-Grenier, then Minister of State (Transport), and Mr. Robert Layton, Minister of State (Mines).

If you check the list you will see that four of them went their separate way, four of them simply took off: Mr. Layton, the former Minister of State (Mines), as he is referred to in the release, was downgraded: the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) who was Minister of State (Transport) was also given a pink slip; and of course we all know the whereabouts of the ex-Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonette). Consider all these people and you have a fair idea of the consequences.

The day after, the present Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) lifts the wrap off the new Consultative Committee on the Development of the Montreal Region headed by Mr. Picard. The committee is made up of people from different fields—management, labour unions, and spokesmen for the municipal, provincial and federal administrations—who will examine the file, because the Conservatives have just come down to earth and they simply do not know what Montreal needs. Bear in mind the many generous promises which had been made by the Prime Minister; he had said Montreal would become the international city. All at once he realizes what he had promised—he did not really know what he had been saying—so he comes up with a Cabinet committee and the Picard Committee.

To put matters in their proper context, I would like to remind the House of the issues which were urgent at the time and of the reasons why the Picard Committee was created. In addition, the Pichette Committee was created and examined many problems in Montreal East. All this occurred in 1985.

Let us look at all the problems one by one. In Montreal East, in November 1985, Bombardier was threatening to close down and we also witnessed the closing of Canadian Steel Wheel, Canadian Steel Foundries, Vickers, Daoust-Lalonde, La Parisette, SKD and the Gulf refinery. We also remember all that happened at the time, including the divisions within the Conservative Party, including a resignation, over the Gulf refinery issue. Each time, the Survival Committee organized meetings. People came to demonstrate on Parliament Hill. Representatives of Bombardier, Vickers, and Gulf employees met, in Ottawa and in Montreal, either the Minister whom I referred to earlier, who was responsible for the Ministerial Committee, or the then Secretary of State, who is now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), and each time, all they got were vague replies, but no concrete action from the federal Government.

Now, after three years of a hard-fought battle, the federal Government has decided to allow Ultramar to purchase the Gulf refinery and to close it down, even though Gaz Metropolitain and other companies were willing to purchase the refinery and to keep it in operation. Let us be honest: I already know what the Tory Members are going to say: when you were the Government, there were two other refineries which had to close down and how come the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie . . . There is a difference.

In the case of the SKD Company . . . I am not blaming the Tory Members for a company that moved its head office or plant from one province to another because for the time being we have no way to stop that. If the Gulf Company had said: Look, I am closing my refinery here because I would rather operate the one in Ontario, we would have said, as we all disagreed at the time . . . and I remember that the Hon. Member for Mercier at the time was against the closing down of refineries, but there is no legislation to prevent that now, and it is the same in Quebec, there is no mechanism to stop a corporation from closing its facilities in Montreal and transferring them to Quebec city to . . .

Often, in the textile industry, businesses close their plant in Montreal to move to the Eastern Townships. There is no legislation to prevent them from doing so, for it is a matter of internal economy. But then, in the case of the Gulf refinery it is different: first of all, the Federal Government asked Petro-Canada to buy everything, except in Quebec. That is serious. Moreover, there was a second opportunity to prevent the closing of the Gulf refinery, which did not exist in other areas before whereby, Ultramar being a foreign company—and the Government had changed what was called the FIRA and we now had Investment Canada—Ultramar, in fact is a British company which had to obtain the autorization of the Federal Government, the Cabinet, the Prime Minister, to complete this transaction. We know at that time, that other corporations were willing to buy . . . Therefore, if the Canadian Government had truly wanted to save the Gulf refinery, not only because of the loss of 450 jobs, but also for the refining capacity and the protection of consumers, they would have said no to this transaction and called on other prospective buyers or they could even have asked Petro-Canada to purchase and improve its refining system in Montreal East. No, we remember what happened. It was during the Christmas and New Year's recess.

The former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, Mr. Stevens, came to Montreal, and at the same time he announced what I must admit were good news about Pétromont, which you had reason to welcome, Mr. Speaker, he announced the demise of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East without any Cabinet representatives from Quebec being present. The Conservative Government thought nothing would happen since it caught Montrealers and Quebecers by surprise. No way! A coalition to save the Gulf refinery was organized in no time. Even though that occurred during the holiday season, activities were co-ordinated and today, thanks not to the Conservative Government but to the Government of Quebec, the facilities of the Gulf refinery remain in place, 250 workers have returned to their jobs and there is hope for the Montreal East refinery and the petro-chemical industry.

But in the meantime, unfortunately, a Minister resigned, whether that was the reason or she was on the verge of dismissal before that, but anyway a Minister said she was resigning because her government made an uninformed decision. A Conservative Member, the Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), switched parties on that issue. And internal conflicts divided Conservative members on the issue of the Gulf refinery.

The result, today: I owe thanks to the Minister of Energy of Quebec, John Caccia, and congratulations to people such as Serge Baril, Luc Chouinard and M. Tremblay who never stopped fighting to save those workers' jobs.

• (1020)

What about other corporations? Namely, Bombardier and Vickers. Those people in Bombardier . . . further to our initiatives at the consultation table, we succeeded in getting contracts for New York subway trains—this saved jobs. And recently, again under pressure, we got a contract for 50 locomotives.

As a result, people in Montreal East today can be proud, and they deserve to be congratulated for the way they acted together, the way they closed ranks by rising above political partisanship—,both city concillors and MLA's and labour leaders, because at that consultation table, on that survival committee there were people from the CNMTU, the QFL and people in so-called shop unions that are usually competing among themselves. But on that survival committee, people showed solidarity.

Today, there is reason to rejoice after 25 months of work, the efforts of five Liberal MPs who acted on that matter, in a daily, constant way, pushing on Ministers in this House. There were my colleagues for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), as well as my colleagues for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who lent us a hand and were regularly urging the Government, following up the matter, asking questions, doing research with Government departments.

With that stocktaking in Montreal East now, I say: Well done to the City of Montreal which announced $90 million over five years to modernize and develop the industrial base. I say: Well done to the Quebec Government which announced $105 million over three years, a large percentage of which is going not only toward corporate modernization but also toward the so-called workers' "employability".

The important thing to come out of Pichette Committee studies is that in Montreal East there were 22,000 unemployed, 12,000 welfare recipients. And if tomorrow a business were to be set up there, there is no certainty those people would get the jobs. Moreover, if circumstances changed the nature of a business so that it could no longer operate, there is no certainty that its employees could find jobs in another sector.

The Quebec Government provided financial support for manpower training and re-training programs, as employability of the workers is very important for Montreal East. As usual, we then were disappointed by the announcement of the federal Government. The sad thing is that, although they may try to fool the public, it just does not work.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion went to Montreal and met with the people involved to try to make them believe that he was announcing a subsidy of $210 million. However, it immediately became obvious that there was only $35 million in new money and that the rest would be spent over a five-year period.

It does no good to try to fool the people. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tried it with our senior citizens, but the Members opposite should now stop using this method since they have been found out.

Naturally, the Minister and the Conservative Members who attended the meeting got booed, because people expected more from the federal Government than a few crumbs and a measly $35 million. The Government and the Conservative Members from the Montreal region knew quite well that what was needed was the early retirement program.

This is what was needed in view of the fact the workers who demonstrated had been abandoned because of the lack of a purchasing policy for railway transport and the maritime industry.

I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is here. All this certainly happened because he had negotiated with the American Governement his famous so-called free trade agreement. The people of Montreal East are already footing the bill because there is no truly effective policy to ensure the survival of the industries. The people from Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel, Canadian La Forge are precisely those who demonstrated.

The result: last weekend, there was an article in La Presse entitled: "Les plaies majeures qui affectent l'est de Montréal" (The major ills plaguing Montreal East). In the end, Mr. Laurent Picard who was appointed to make a study, said the Conservative Government has written off not only Montreal East, but the whole city. The situation is very serious. I only have two minutes left, Mr. Speaker. I have all those other issues to deal with.

The shipyards: there again, promises from the Conservative Government, promises from the Minister responsible for the Quebec region to Minister Johnson. In exchange for deals with the shipyards, the Government promises to divide the frigates contract. More empty promises. The Government was fooled. Even the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) was quoted in a newspaper article as having said: "Not sharing the contract is unthinkable." The result is that we have been fooled on the frigates matter.

The Soligaz project is another one, which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is holding up, and the Government of Quebec, the people from the East and the industry are waiting to hear about.

There is another sector in Montreal East... also the southwest. There are shutdowns there also, Mr. Speaker. Five businesses closed down, 2,000 jobs are lost. People are waiting for replies to their request of only $130,000 for a study on the issues concerning the southwest area of Montreal.

In the port of Montreal also there is plenty of work to do, and space is lacking. That is also due to the Government's delay or inaction.

Another promise: The Government and the Prime Minister promised a real International Banking Centre that was going to be a revolution. All we have is a night deposit system to accommodate the person who just came from Mexico and spends the night in a Montreal hotel. Another masquerade!

Let us talk now about the Old Port of Montreal. The Liberal Government had acted on this issue. All the other cities in Quebec, in Canada, received money. We want $130 million. The delays in these matters are again due to the incompetence and inaction of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret). We want $130 million, Mr. Speaker, and once again we get nothing.

The scandal on the space agency is out of this world! It is worse than anything, ever. First, ministers are contradicting one another. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was contradicted by his Prime Minister, and you can see clearly in the newspapers reports, Mr. Speaker. I am running out of time. I could go on and on all afternoon, but my colleagues the Hon. Members for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will take over.

Michel Vastel has clearly shown in his article that this Government has totally abandoned Montreal, because of the low calibre of those who represent that area in the Conservative caucus and in Cabinet. He calls them lackeys. Mayor Doré is furious, Mr. Macdonald, the Minister, says he is fed up with those people who are wasting his time.

Mr. Speaker, where are we today after three years—and I see that my time is up—three Hon. Members, three ministers, have been thrown out of the ministerial committee, chaired by the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, for a variety of reasons—there is nothing left there, Mr. Speaker. Nothing is being done for Montreal. I know that the minister will be giving me numbers, statistics and the like. The jobs created were not of his doing. He is going to come and tell us stories ("tataouinage"). We know all about storytellers! Once again, he is going to pull the wool over our eyes. We have seen it before. People are tired of being taken for a ride, Mr. Speaker.

The best thing that the minister responsible for the Greater Montreal area could announce today is his resignation, considering how he has failed. The Government deserves to be blamed, but the minister responsible for the Montreal area, the minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, should resign on account of his failure over the past three years.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the speech made by the Hon. Member. He has made many criticisms but we also want to criticize certains points raised in his motion. I would like to put to him the following question: Had the Hon. Member been able to develop a strategy for Montreal East and for the economy of the south-western area, what would he have done? He referred at length to closures. He also dealt at length with the lack of government policy, but what is the policy of the Liberal party for Montreal East.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question. With respect to Montreal East, as a policy, contrary to the Tories, we did not try to mislead the people. And our leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) met the citizens of Montreal East, as well as representatives of industries and unions who are not necessarily Liberals. He was not booed, contrary to the Minister when he met those people, and the commitment of the Liberal Party to Montreal East is quite clear. It was first a commitment to inject $50 million of new money, with no tricks such as those played by the Minister. What is more important, the Leader of the Opposition announced what we call the Older Citizens' adjustment Program or what is currently known as pre-retirement.

However a still more important arrangement . . . The Hon. Member gives me an opportunity to say that during the next weekend, we will hold a symposium and I think that the Liberal members of Montreal East have shown that we could sit down with the people involved and find the necessary funds. This is what we did. We worked in co-operation with civic and provincial authorities. We should not forget that those people have different allegiances. With an elected Liberal Government, our caucus would have a very strong group of Liberal Members representing Montreal East. As a matter of fact, we are considering a resolution calling on a Liberal caucus to meet every month to examine the situation in Montreal East, and once a year, to meet with all social and economic interests, to follow up on that situation and engage in some action. But the problem with regional development policies is that they are not applicable to large urban centers. And that is why we would want some mechanism to have a whole range of economic regional development programs made available to large as well as smaller centers in case of a disaster such as the one that occured in Montreal East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a question or comment.

Mr. Prud'homme: First let me pay tribute to my colleague who constantly harasses the Government and rightly so, because of his great concern that we all share in Montreal, and because of his social awareness of the problems of Montreal East that he knows so well. He has experienced these problems and he knows what he is talking about. He is always welcome in Montreal East. He is concerned for the people over there, but probably due to the short period of time that he was allowed he could only give an overview of the problems that face Montreal East.

I know that he would have liked to detail further the main problems of Montreal and Montreal East. I wish to add a comment and ask him a question on a subject he is very well acquainted with. He did not mention, because of the little time available to him, the matter of the frigates, but I, and the other Members who will talk this afternoon, the NDP Members, would like to hear his views on that subject because, as they say in Montreal East he calls a spade, a spade. He is well known for that. He used the word tataouinage, and in Quebec we know exactly what it means . . . I do not know how it is going to be translated, I would like to know. Perhaps my colleague will tell me. He does not beat around the bush, and that is what people like about him. I would appreciate it, if he could give us some explanations, in a language so familiar to him and so readily understood by desperate people. If my colleague could comment on that, we would have a better understanding of the situation.

Mr. Malépart: I thank the Hon. Member for reminding me of the issue of shipyards where the failure to take concrete actions and to share jobs led to the closure of the refinery, the Vickers company in Montreal, the Sorel shipyard which is going down the tubes and the one in Lauzon. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) didn't do anything on that issue and people will remember. People will also remember the New Democratic Party's attitude on that issue. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) went to Quebec City—and I am warning Prime Minister Mulroney that we do not want more Charlie Browns—to try and delude Quebec City and Montreal residents into believing that if a New Democratic Government was elected tomorrow, they would split the frigate contract and give Quebec its share. If that were true, I would say "Fine, he has the right to do it". Unfortunately, it was not, and that shows the same disease Brian Mulroney has. It was false, since the next day the New Democratic Party leader said so, stating that that was not what they would do.

Mr. Cassidy: This is the Liberal position.

Mr. Malépart: The Liberal position is clear . . .

Mrs. Mailly: I think you are rude.

Mr. Malépart: The frigates went to New Brunswick whereas we would have shared the contract. Now, there are tenders regarding the destroyers and we believe that both must be awarded to the Province of Quebec. We would never lie to anyone. We told the whole truth to the people of Montreal East. When we set up the Survival Committee we said that we were going to help out this or that firm but we were not hypocritical. The six frigates will be built in St. John, and, Mr. Speaker, Quebec should get both TRUMP class destroyers. And I hope, contrary to the Hon. Member, that his leader will bring him back in line, since we have not seen him touch that issue again. Concerning the space agency, I find it strange that the New Democrats do not stand up. I would like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to tell us he wants the space agency in Montreal.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montréal—Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I must say that what I wish, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Sit down!

Mr. Prud'homme: I understand that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton is very excited, but I would ask him to calm down. From the beginning of this debate I hear him getting excited. It is not him I want to talk about. I only wish that our loyal and competent stenographers have not taken down the less than flattering comments of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: I can repeat them if you wish.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think, Mr. Speaker, that if she is ready to repeat them, then I will have to do something I usually don't, that is teach our colleagues common politeness, something I rarely do. But the remark she made about the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte- Marie (Mr. Malépart) who, it is true—

Mrs. Mailly: It's easy!

Mr. Prud'homme: —may fill the television screen more than others, I think he agrees on that, but the comments of the Hon. Member for Gatineau were certainly not acceptable in this House. And if they appear in Hansard, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that to call an Hon. Member a slob is certainly not a parliamentary remark but to add to that a physical connotation will certainly bring down the quality of debates we would like to see in this House. And I know that when the Hon. Member thinks about it, when she reads the blues, as they say, she will realize that this kind of remarks have no place when dealing with a very important subject. I understand she comes from Gatineau, but she should realize that Montreal, and I'll tell her . . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mally).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that I was born in the district represented by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). So, I could tell you a few things. I called him a big slob not because of his size but because of his colossal lack of courtesy. He called our Prime Minister by his first name. He called him Charlie Brown. I think that this kind of remark is far less parliamentary than calling him a slob, which only depicts his behaviour at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members not to use such words. I do not think they are acceptable in debate. I would ask the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) not to use the kind of words she just did concerning any Member of the House. I do not think statements of this kind contribute to the debate on either side.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret).

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the subject today is Montreal and I must say I was somewhat surprised by the remarks of the Hon.

Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on this Opposition day, particularly since this Government has done a lot more for Montreal than the previous administration ever did.

For starters, just what is Montreal? Montreal is more than a city. Montreal is more that a physical site. Montreal is a major geographic area. Montreal is an economic motor. Montreal is a cultural motor. Montreal is a place which is vital to Quebec and to the country as a whole. Montreal is an international, financial, high tech city where culture, the arts, tourism play an important part, a city where transportation not only played a significant role, but was at the very origin of its settlement. It is a manufacturing city, a design city. Although Greater Montreal is inhabited by three million people, it is a city which has retained the values of its roots, a city where the residents can enjoy a quality of life rarely found elsewhere in the world, a city where people talk to one another, communicate, converse honestly. It is a city which has suffered great hardships under the previous Government and I will go back to that later.

First of all, I should like to deal with Montreal as a whole. First, our accomplishments: the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie clearly indicated that I was going to quote statistics, and I would not want to disappoint him. Here are some statistics: in Montreal, the number of jobs increased by 114,000 between 1984 and 1987. By contrast, when we refer to the years 1980-1984, while the party of my honourable friend was in power, a net loss of 4,000 jobs was registered. The House will remember that the distinguished Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was a backbencher at the time. You would think that our friend was concerned then with the poor performance of his Government and that he was shouting angrily as he is doing now. Quite the contrary! During the three years from 1980 to 1983, while this economic and cultural heart of Quebec was experiencing such a significant slowing down, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie found the courage to deal with issues affecting Montreal's economy on three occasions only. Without being a mathematician, I can say that it was on an average of once a year. On the other hand, the remarks he was making were not likely to shake the very foundations of the House. But let us say no more!

Has the Government allowed the situation to deteriorate over the past few months? The answer is no! How could he explain the creation of 50,000 new jobs in Montreal over the past 12 months? Let us take my department for example. Through its various programs, it has granted the Montreal region as a whole a total of nearly $533 million in financial assistance between September 1984 and January 1988. It is estimated that these projects will involve investments of over $2 billion and will directly help to create 19,000 jobs. That is what my Department has done in Montreal East.

Since September 1984, DRIE, through its programs and subsidiary agreements, has injected $39 million in the following federal ridings: Montreal—Sainte-Marie, surprising as that may seem, and Gamelin, Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, Montreal—Mercier, Rosemont and Saint-Léonard—Anjou.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, despite the sporadic whining of the Opposition, things are really moving in Montreal. Projects are mushrooming.

Looking at my notes, I see that the federal Government helped to set up the departmental committee on the development of the region of Montreal, as well as the advisory committee on the development of the same region, and that many experts from my department were involved.

As far as financial commitments are concerned, perhaps I could name a few. Since 1984, Ottawa has allocated $61 million to the construction of the Biotechnology Research Institute and earmarked the modest sum of $104 million for the manufacture of F-18 aircraft.

Still in the aerospace industry, Pratt and Whitney was granted nearly $152 million. Spar Aerospace enjoyed financial support to the tune of $130 million and Canadair received $50 million.

These figures are certainly not neglible, and they reflect considerable effort and political will on the part of the Government to guarantee the economic survival of a region that is the motor of Quebec's economy and contributes very substantially to the economic development of the entire country. I almost forgot the $200 million that went to General Motors, in addition to the interest-free loan of $110 million for the same company. The announcement was made in March 1987, and as a result, the jobs of 3,500 workers on the assembly line in Boisbriand will be maintained over the long term.

I realize this is a lot of facts and figures, and that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) may find it difficult to accept the truth as such.

Mr. Speaker, I may say that the Opposition's charge is just as hard to swallow. Actually, I still find it hard to understand why this particular subject was chosen by our friends opposite for their Opposition day.

One wonders about their sense of timing, especially since on February 24, which is certainly not very long ago, we announced a new federal program for the industrial renewal of Montreal East. That program will bring about capital outlays of $275 million in Montreal East in the next five years. The Hon. Member was away. Nothing was said about that.

Mr. Speaker, where was the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie when, for instance, it was announced that the Dickson Street Bombardier plant, in Montreal East, was awarded a contract allowing it to provide more than 2,000 full-time jobs, because the federal Government had made $100 million available to the Government of Nigeria to help them purchase 50 locomotives?

Our Government arranged the signing of another deal with the Federal Republic of Germany and France for the production of a new reconnaissance system. That contract, Mr. Speaker, will generate for Canada more than $800 million in sales and will allow Canadair to create close to 300 jobs and their Canadian subcontractors 130 additional jobs. Where was the Hon. Member then?

Has he forgotten the $12 million contribution the Government of Canada made to the Montreal East Kemtec corporation?

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals abandoned to stagnation an industrial center that was vital to the economic life of Quebec. The Liberal Minister of Finance at that time made it his duty to shut down Petromont. The Liberals practically killed then the petro-chemical industry in the Montreal area. Where was the Hon. Member when companies such as BP, Esso, Texaco appealed to the Government then in office to assist in saving thousands of jobs? Where was he?

Mr. Cassidy: He did not speak up, he said nothing.

Mr. de Cotret: The $100 million the present Government granted Petromont of Varennes for modernization will allow the company to maintain 400 jobs.

Mr. Cassidy: Not one Liberal from Montreal spoke up: nothing came from them.

Mr. de Cotret: But since our voluble colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie accused us of doing nothing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind him of some of our most significant accomplishments in supporting Montreal's own role as a business metropolis. Those decisions were not indeed taken without reasons, and I will come back to that in a moment, with your permission. Those initiatives responded to the report of the Committee for Economic and Job Renewal in Montreal East, the so-called CREEM. I would also like to emphasize the role of Labour Canada, whose Senior Workers Adjustment Program will be of serious help to men and women in Montreal East who otherwise would have very little hope of reentering the job market. That three-year program will be funded at the tune of $125 million over that period.

To complement those employment efforts, Canada Employment and Immigration also did its part after CREEM's report was tabled. A special retraining committee was established to help former Montreal East workers retrain.

Finally, I would like to mention the Federal Development Bank's contribution: 480 loans, all in eastern Montreal, for a total of $125 million.

Speaking of banking, the Hon. Member earlier mentioned our position on banking centres. I would simply like to remind him, in order to bring him back to reality, of the Liberal position which was published in the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and I am quoting from the Liberal position:

• (1050)

[English]

"We do not favour the concept of banking centres since they are divisive and ineffectual".

"We do not favour the concept of banking centres since they are divisive and ineffectual."

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when they suggest we came short of what was needed and that party's position provides for this or that, I ask myself: Well, who speaks on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada?

If you think that Montreal East alone is facing economic difficulty, I am sorry, and the term is well chosen, I have to set the record straight. We can look at south-western Montreal for instance where the situation has been deteriorating since well before 1984. Again, this is a deep-rooted problem, a deep-set one, but we are actively dealing with it. And in order to actively deal with such a problem, we must have the participation, the commitment of people in the community. Mechanisms have been set up. The solutions will come out of the will of people in the community.

For the information of my sharp-tongued but short-memoried colleagues, Mr. Speaker, let me add that the committee is made up of representatives from employers, labour unions, community groups and the various levels of Government. If we want long-term solutions, it is essential that the Committee include proper representation from the community.

Such work involves a lot of hard thinking and its results are obviously difficult to discern in the short term. It is not as spectacular as announcing a $50 million subsidy which could extend the life of a company by a year or two. What we are trying to do is something structural and long-lasting which will be more beneficial to the community than the half-baked programs of the former Government.

I am certain that the work of the Southwest Montreal Recovery Comittee, for instance, will lead to results and solutions which will bring this underprivileged region out of its stagnation once and for all.

In its great wisdom, the Opposition has also accused us of being reluctant to implement the recommendations of the Picard Report, also known as the Report of the Advisory Committee on the Development of the Montreal Region. I wish to point out that there were 76 recommendations in that report and that we accepted 71 of them and have alreay taken action on 11. If we and our partners at the other Government levels are successful, this will bring about investments of between $200 and $250 million.

This is not rhetoric, Mr. Speaker. These are facts. Those figures are real. The Government has already acted on the Picard Report. Other developments in the Montreal region are also being discussed.

Let us talk about the Patent Bill, which will stimulate research, attract major investments to Canada and bring about development in a high technology industry. This will be of enormous benefit to the Montreal region since, as we all know, the Montreal region has the most potential as far as pharmaceutical research is concerned.

This Bill generated strong emotion and a lot of comments. Mr. Speaker, I would like someone to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie where he was when he should have been expressing his deep beliefs, or even better, his solidarity with his Liberal colleagues. My respected colleague certainly abstained from the five votes on Bill C-22. This man, who likes to denounce the lack of courage of the Government, was himself unable to stand up for or against this important piece of legislation.

I should add that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was certainly not alone in abstaining, as twice as many Quebec Liberal Members, who keep saying that they have the interests of their own province at heart, abstained than voted against Bill C-22. We may discover the explanation of their behaviour one day. However, for the moment, I must deal with much more pressing issues.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is now time to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister still has two minutes. Does the House allow the Minister to complete his speech in two minutes?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the Minister has only two minutes left but we are entitled after Question Period to a 10-minute period of questions and comments. If the Minister cannot remain in the House, it would be disastrous for us because we would like to ask him some questions. Then, why does he not take his two minutes now and it would be easier for him when the House resumes the debate at 12 or 12.05 to carry on, because we would like to ask him questions and we are not sure that he will be here.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is already 11 o'clock, there is no problem and I will be here to answer questions as long as my colleagues want to put some to me. I should like to have my two minutes to draw a short conclusion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No, he can carry on after resumption of government orders.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, at noon, some 700 Public Service language teachers will be demonstrating right here on Parliament Hill, to show their frustration with the Conservative Government that leaves its employees without a collective agreement for more than two years. That situation, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely unacceptable. So much so since the Conservative Government proposes to reduce working conditions of Public Service language teachers.

In fact, the Government wants to eliminate the preparation time that is absolutely necessary to all teachers, including Public Service language teachers. Besides, there is a precedent elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, and Public Service language teachers should keep their acquired rights. I am urging the responsible Minister, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski), to go out at noon and to address those militants, those workers, and to undertake to recognize the rights of Public Service language teachers.

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT—AMENDMENTS WELCOMED

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, two out of every three Canadians receive their drinking water from the Great Lakes. The Lakes also support economic activity that accounts for one half of the Gross National Product of our entire country. They are, in fact, one of the most important economic and environmental areas in North America.

Because of their importance, Canada and the United States signed the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in 1978 to help clean up pollution in the system. Thanks to the efforts of the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), amendments to that agreement have been made which will make the clean-up more effective.

Specific targets and goals for decreasing pollution in the Lakes have been set, and both countries will be involved in identifying toxics in the water and developing new techniques to remove them. The agreement will also be more effective in reducing the flow of dangerous pollutants into the water and in implementing new anti-pollution regulations.

The new Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, together with a new federal water policy, are giving Canadians the assurance they deserve that their environment is clean and safe.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN REFUGEES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER SUSPEND DEPORTATION ORDER

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, a most distressing situation is likely to occur in Montreal on Sunday, when 40 people who entered Canada in good faith and who took advantage of a bad publicity to settle in Montreal . . . but I do not want to deal with the substance of the issue. But when I see that Kathleen Verdon, a member of the Executive Committee of the City of Montreal, has sent a telegram to the Minister, and that Gérald LeBlanc, from La Presse, one of our most serious journalists, has stated that, unfortunately in its attempt to remedy a bad situation, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is about to create one which is even worse. Mr. Speaker, Canada is a country which welcomes immigrants and which—I will readily admit—is faced with a difficult situation because some people entered this country through different means, although now quite well integrated to the Quebec society, the Montreal society, and whose children as we saw yesterday are very well integrated to the French schools and who, together with their young friends with deeper Quebec roots, are already asking: Mr. Speaker, I beg of you, the law exists, it is true, but you are a compassionate man and you should use your powers, the powers you have to end this situation on compassionate grounds and to prevent that, on Sunday, Canada's image be injured.

I therefore ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to use his powers, as his predecessors have always done, to make an exception and to at least postpone the deportation of these people until a proper solution can be found.

SCARBOROUGH WEST

CONSTITUENCY'S GREATEST ASSET ITS PEOPLE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the federal constituency of Scarborough West extends from Victoria Park Avenue along Eglinton Avenue East south to Lake Ontario and back to Victoria Park. Although it contains Scarborough's famous Golden Mile of Industry, it is dominantly residential. Its most dominant geographical feature is the celebrated and beautiful Scarborough Bluffs but its greatest asset is its people, represented today on Parliament Hill by almost 50 members of the Scarborough West Progressive Conservative Association.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OPPOSITION TO FOOD IRRADIATION—ABSENCE OF DETECTION TESTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as in the United Kingdom, the people of the United States are taking another look at the irradiation of food.

Leading educators, scientists, doctors, church leaders and environmentalists held a national news conference in Washington March 15. I am happy to remark that Canadians, through Food Chain and the Canadian Coalition to Stop Food Irradiation, were co-sponsors. The groups made several demands: stop the irradiation of grains, fruits, vegetables, pork and spices, and halt the pending approval in poultry; make full environmental impact statements before new construction of facilities, and redirect the $5 million from promotion and construction to safety.

I understand that soon to be irradiated Washington State apples could find their way into British Columbia. Since there are no detection tests or labelling requirements, how are Canadians to know if their apples are irradiated? Canadians have a right to know.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY IN SCARBOROUGH—OPPOSITION TO SUBDIVISION DEVELOPMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the last remaining wilderness area in Metropolitan Toronto could be ruined by the Ontario Government. The Rouge River Valley in Scarborough contains over 5,000 acres of natural beauty.

Despite its natural beauty and historical significance, despite the enjoyment thousands of people get from the area, the Government of Ontario is determined to develop the Rouge River into a subdivision.

Scarborough is one of the few cities in North America to combine economic development with environmental conservation successfully. That balance must not be upset.

I am proud to join with Scarborough City Council, the Save the Rouge Valley Organization, and thousands of concerned people all across Scarborough in urging the province not to develop the Rouge River Valley. A federal task force on national parks has made a number of proposals for new park ideas. I urge the Ontario Minister of the Environment to work with the federal Minister and help save the Rouge for future generations of Canadians.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON ANGLERS—LIMIT ON CATCHES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, according to the Government's own documents, saltwater sport fishing in British Columbia contributes over $600 million annually to the province's economy. More than 300,000 anglers fish in the tidal basins every year, and over half of those people fish for salmon.

I met earlier this week in Nanaimo with men and women from the South Georgia Strait whose livelihood comes from sport fishing. They are deeply disturbed that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) who is, after all, a British Columbia Member of Parliament, cut back the annual limit for salmon for sport fishermen from 20 to 8 without adequate consultation. These British Columbians tell me that they have had difficulty getting the ear of the Minister and that the idea of spot closures without notice is completely unfair to them since they cannot operate their businesses if their businesses can be shut down at any time.

I have more than 100 representations that I will be forwarding to the Minister from people who know the importance of conservation, who know the importance of protecting our fish stocks because they make their living from them and who only expect to be treated in a fair manner, be given a fair hearing, and be able to operate from month to month and from year to year with some certainty.

I urge the Minister to listen to his fellow British Columbians.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

THE LEADER

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Socialist Leader is always saying that his party has 250 possible candidates in Quebec. It's very strange. The biggest crowd he attracted during his trip to Central Quebec last week was 100 people in the constituency of Saint-Maurice, and the Leader maintains that it is a benchmark constituency. If this is the case, good for Canada!

There was only one candidate for the Socialist nomination in Saint-Maurice. There is only one candidate for the nomination in Champlain. There is no candidate for the nomination in Trois-Rivières.

The only message relayed by the Socialist Leader was: We are against the free trade deal but, if we are elected, we will negotiate it. On that issue as on the others, they have no position.

According to polls, Canadians like the Socialist Leader less. That's good and the more they get to know him, the less they will like him. That's good for everybody.

THE LATE SENATOR YVETTE ROUSSEAU

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Canadian political life has lost a strong, principled voice in the passing of Senator Yvette Rousseau.

Madam Rousseau was a beautiful woman, not just in her charming and striking person, but her inner strength and conviction enhanced this natural beauty. Her keen interest in the advancement of fairness and equity for women, the working poor, the families and the elderly, in Canada, as well internationally, marked her active participation in the decision-making of Canada, as a volunteer, as a working woman, and as a Senator. Her contribution in these fields has improved the lives, not only of people in her favourite home territory of Sherbrooke, Quebec but, of people across this wonderful land.

I knew, admired, and loved this fine woman as a proud, strong mother, a loving and caring grandmother, and an open-minded and dignified Canadian nationalist with pride in her French roots. She was a true role model to me and she shall be sorely missed by all.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I knew Senator Rousseau also and I would like to express my sadness as well.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION DECISION REJECTING BELL CANADA RATE APPLICATION APPLAUDED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to applaud the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission's decision to deny Bell Canada's so-called rate rebalancing application. I was pleased that NDP Members of Parliament, including my friends from Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr.

Angus), with the help of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and myself in Vancouver, were able to appear before the CRTC hearings.

The rejection of a local phone rate increase and the reduction in B.C. Tel and Bell long distance rates is a victory for Canadian consumers, at least for this year. However, I sharply disagree with some of the remarks made in the CRTC decision supporting rate rebalancing in principle. This is a very strong signal that Canadian consumers will not be so lucky the next time Bell applies for an increase in local phone rates.

Rate rebalancing is a bad deal for Canadian consumers. It involves a shift in costs from wealthier Canadians who make long distance calls to poorer Canadians who mainly make local calls, from larger to smaller businesses, and from businesses to consumers. I am proud that we in the NDP stood up for the average consumer in this matter and we certainly do not intend to be silent in the future.

CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

FINANCIAL POSITION—DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I, who along with 48 of my caucus colleagues have been targeted by the postal union CUPW and the Canadian Labour Congress as the object of their hit squads, was deeply distressed by a recent report on the financial status of the CLC.

I turned on my TV the other day and there was NDP Vice President and Canadian Labour Congress Director Bob White advising the nation that CLC members should be more heartily taxed in order to help straighten out the financial conundrum they are in. Apparently, the Bob, Ed and Shirley team have determined that some of their activities have been a bit exorbitant lately and the old treasury has been taking a hammering.

Much to my horror, I find that I am one of the culprits responsible for this upsetting revelation, as this program to wipe out 49 MPs will prove to be a very costly venture. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, your reaction at having been invited to the circus only to find there was no money left for the popcorn?

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM OVER POLAR ROUTE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on plutonium overflights there was last week both good and bad news. First, the good news. We were told that the U.S. will not transport plutonium over Canada. This is even better news for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who managed to waffle his way through this issue without taking a stand on the protection of the health of Canadians. For this, the Minister owes one to Secretary of State Shultz.

Now the bad news. The U.S. Government still intends to transport plutonium from Europe to Japan via a polar route north of Canadian territory. Plutonium released because of an accident could be dispersed over great distances, without respect for political boundaries. Therefore, the population is still at risk. It is thus absolutely essential that the Government of Canada urge Washington to drop the idea of transporting plutonium by air anywhere in the world.

The question now is, will the Minister of Transport take to heart this issue and at last make representations to the U.S. administration on behalf of the world community?

NANAIMO'S WORLD FAMOUS BATHTUB RACE

NAVY THREATENS TO PULL THE PLUG

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, Nanaimo is known world-wide for having the cleanest politicians around. This is not only because of our outstanding moral fibre. Nanaimo is also the home of the famous bathtub race to Vancouver. Each July, hundreds of hearty souls climb into leaky "ships of fate" to win the Golden Plug, and each year the Canadian navy provides logistical support.

This year, however, the participation of the navy in the bathtub race is in doubt. The citizens of Nanaimo call upon the Department of National Defence to take part once again in tubbing, and to sail with those who bail. We would not want years of excellent public relations in the Nanaimo to Vancouver Bathtub Race to go down the drain for Canada's navy!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ORGANIZATION'S POLICIES—OBSTACLES TO WOMEN'S CAREERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a report recently made public assesses the status of female RCMP members. That survey of male and female officers in British Columbia concludes that some policies of the police force are instrumental in creating obstacles to women's careers. In addition, the report emphasizes that male members still harbour very negative attitudes toward their female colleagues.

[English]

The RCMP Commissioner, however, when asked about this internal report, claimed that the problems women now face in the force are no different from the ones men must confront. This statement ignores the reality of women working in non-traditional occupations and in fact confirms one of the conclusions of the report, which is that traditional social norms and values and deeply ingrained sex-role images which predetermine many attitudes of male members, the public, and the female members themselves, are at the root of the unique difficulties women often experience.

When women are earning only 66 per cent of what men earn, when women are facing systemic discrimination in hiring and promotions, when women are dealing with sexual harassment and sexist attitudes on the job, it is irresponsible for the Commissioner to dismiss the concerns of women as employees, especially in light of the findings of this internal RCMP report.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SELF GOVERNMENT—FEDERAL POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I would like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Provincial Conservative leaders, especially Gary Filmon of Manitoba, continue to reject the concept of aboriginal self government.

When will the federal Government tell provincial leaders that this right is a right not contingent upon words, phrases, deals or financial obligations? Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the Conservative leader in Manitoba, or will he tell the Conservative leader of that province that aboriginal rights are rights that are recognized under our Constitution?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the issue of aboriginal rights is clearly recognized in the Constitution of Canada. I do not think that the rights of aboriginal people are put into question.

The Government has already adopted a comprehensive claims policy which has been made public. We have made progress in that regard. The provinces know that this is a priority of the federal Government and we trust that we can make progress in the future with the provinces, knowing that these rights are indeed recognized in the Constitution of Canada.

RESPECT FOR TREATIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that case, how does the Minister explain the fact that the Government refused to recognize before the United Nations in Geneva that the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreements were a treaty?

Do the Minister and the Government not realize that Section 35(3) of the Canadian Constitution says that all agreements, past and present, arising from land claims are treaties?

Furthermore, does the Minister realize that the right to political autonomy is included in Section 35 of the Canadian Constitution?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition failed to do justice to the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to Canada's position.

Canada has never denied the existence of treaties with the aboriginal people of this country. In fact, the Secretary of State wanted to make it quite clear that Canada recognizes these as national treaties. The only difference, we said, is that these are not international treaties.

As for the recognition of these rights, the rights of aboriginal people are recognized in the amendment to the Constitution. I do not see what more could be added.

However, we must realize what the Government is trying to do. It is trying to deal with the issue of aboriginal rights with the co-operation of all parties concerned, and we believe that any progress which, I am sure, we all want, can only be achieved through collaboration and co-operation.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, despite what the Minister says, the Government denied, before the United Nations Human Rights Commission, that the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreements were a treaty. That is a fact.

The Government continues to take the position that it is entirely in favour of aboriginal self government provided every detail can be worked out in advance with the provinces. However, Section 35 of the Canadian Constitution says that the aboriginal rights to self government are a constitutional right.

How can the Minister justify, on behalf of his colleague, the capping of the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program? How can he possibly justify cutting off legitimate aid to young aboriginal people who want to improve the leadership, the status, and the livelihood of their people through college and university education? Let us get right home on that issue. How can he possibly justify that?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has made it clear many times that there is no truth at all to the allegation that funds are being cut for post-secondary education. In fact, if the Right Hon. Member looks at the facts he will find that in this year, for example, including Bill C-31 funding, post-secondary education funding will go up to $130 million. That is an increase.

With regard to a cap, we have to live within a budget allocation. If we have $131 million for this fiscal year that is the amount of money we will spend.

In consultation with native leaders and band chiefs across Canada we are trying to find a formula which will meet the requirements of young Indians in Canada. The Right Hon. Member will acknowledge that we have made enormous progress in that field. I do not mean to say that everything is perfect. We are striving to do better with, I think, success.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD—REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF 15 PER CENT TAX

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, if I may have her attention. Yesterday, the Association des producteurs de bois de sciage du Québec voiced its impatience at the slow pace of ongoing negotiations with the United States. Hon. Members will recall that some months ago, the Conservative Government decided not to appeal to the GATT tribunal the decision to impose a 15 per cent tax on lumber exports to the United States and that finally the Government itself imposed a tax on sawmills and embarked upon discussions with the Americans. I would like to ask the Minister when will the Government of Canada conclude the agreement which would do away with the 15 per cent tax, specially since the Quebec Government has increased stumpage fees. After having forced companies to upgrade their woodlots, the Government of Canada now seems to be letting the Americans once again dictate the policy which a provincial governement should follow in the area of natural resources.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member has the facts backwards. Quebec wanted to have the 15 per cent softwood tax imposed so that it would be able to adjust its stumpage and, therefore, manage its own resources. Negotiations with Québec on replacing the export tax are continuing. I will report further to the House when I have the results of those negotiations.

INSISTENCE THAT MINISTER ACT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concerns of the Association des producteurs de bois de sciage as expressed in yesterday's press release. It says that the Canadian Government is dragging its feet and has not been able to finalize the negotiations. Quebec has raised the stumpage fees and forced the lumber companies to do forest improvement work but, despite all that, the 15 per cent tax remains in force and it seems that the Minister has finalized the process in British Columbia because it is her home province, but does not care for Quebec.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that this issue has been settled in five provinces where the softwood lumber tax has been replaced with provincial measures as the provinces wished. Again, we are continuing discussions with the Government of Québec. The mood of the discussions is very co-operative and when we are able to conclude those negotiations I will so report to the House.

DISPATCH OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS TO HONDURAS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INFORM UNITED STATES OF ITS POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday President Reagan of the United States sent troops to Honduras. That action was contrary to the Canadian Government's official policy as expressed by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

In Vancouver, for example, the Prime Minister said at a conference of the Inter-American Press Association:

> We do not approve of third party intervention anywhere in Central America whoever the third party may be and regardless of its legitimate interest in the area.

[Translation]

Given that policy, did the Canadian Government clearly inform the U.S. Government of its opposition to this intervention in Honduras?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the House yesterday that we would update the House on developments as we were so informed. Therefore, I will take this opportunity to say that our Ambassador is in Honduras and, although the situation is still very murky, there is a growing consensus that Nicaraguan forces did enter Honduras in force.

Whatever the case, there is a clear indication from our sources that there is a major Nicaraguan Government offensive against the Contra resistance. Our concern is that this is happening on the eve of cease-fire discussions which were due to take place on Monday.

Consequently, today we are calling in the American Ambassador and the Nicaraguan Ambassador to say that Canada has grave concerns that the actions which are taking place could undermine the peace effort which has involved so much commitment from so many people.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister said was interesting and even factual in some respects, I suspect. However, it had absolutely nothing to do with the question. I hope the Minister who is filling in for the Secretary of State for External Affairs will listen to the question this time.

THIRD PARTY INTERVENTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Prime Minister of Canada, her boss, said the following:

> We do not approve of third party intervention anywhere in Central America whoever the third party may be and regardless of its legitimate interest in the area.

The Prime Minister was clearly talking about the United States and the Soviet Union. We have a clear intervention in the affairs of Honduras or Nicaragua, whatever is going on in the border area between those two states, by one of the superpowers, namely, the United States.

• (1130)

Since it is her Government's policy that is being challenged by this action by President Reagan, will she please defend that policy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that the presence of the Americans in Honduras comes under the Rio Treaty, a bilateral arrangement. We are advised that the Government of Honduras asked for the presence of American support. That is the information we have been given.

Our concern is with the efforts to establish a peace plan for the area. That is where Canadian policy is centred. Our concern at present is that these events, whoever is responsible, will undermine a very important initiative which this Government fully supports.

CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I find the Minister's answer deeply disturbing. What is being asked today does not concern the details of incursions or alleged incursions on either side of the Honduras-Nicaragua border. These are very important matters and all of us agree on the factual determination of that. An emergency debate is going to take place in the UN's Security Council which will address that. The question I am asking is about official Canadian policy.

Are we now to infer that the Government of Canada has changed its policy from what the Prime Minister said and, from our point of view, it is quite acceptable for the U.S. to escalate in a very significant way its military role in that region? Is the Minister now saying as well that if the Nicaraguan Government, and there is no evidence to indicate this, should invite the Soviet Union to send troops on their side, that super- power involvement is totally appropriate? If so, would she justify this abominable position?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have explained that the Canadian position is to support the peace plan for the area. If the NDP thinks that it is an abominable position, that is their problem, not ours.

CONSTITUTIONAL JURISDICTION—MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Premier Peckford stated yesterday in the Newfoundland House of Assembly that a clause in the Meech Lake Accord will lead to greater provincial jurisdiction, specifically Newfoundland and Labrador jurisdiction, over the fishery. The Minister knows that Canada's fish stocks are currently managed by the Government of Canada.

Does the Minister share Premier Peckford's interpretation of the Meech Lake agenda clause on the fishery? Specifically, is he ready to say to the House today that Ottawa is prepared to cede part of its constitutional jurisdiction in the fishery to the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, or, for that matter, to any other provincial Government?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very important question indeed. The spirit of the Meech Lake Accord is that the respective provincial and federal Governments should be willing to sit down from time to time and talk about matters of mutual interest and concern. In that spirit a clause was inserted in the Accord to the effect that, on a regular basis, First Ministers would review the roles and responsibilities of the federal and provincial Governments regarding the management and allocation of our fish stocks.

It is clearly understood by all provincial Governments that the Constitution of Canada recognizes the responsibility of the federal Government under the Fisheries Act for the management of the fishery. I see nothing wrong with sitting down from time to time, as I do regularly, with my provincial colleagues to talk about the extent to which they offer advice and input on the management process. We have met over a dozen times in the past year and a half, and that kind of dialogue should continue. However, it is not my intention to suggest any ceding of ultimate responsibility by the federal Government for the fishery in this context.

INTERPRETATION OF ACCORD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his response. He will know this issue is causing a great deal of consternation and concern in Atlantic Canada and, I suggest, British Columbia as well. On the one hand we have Premier Peckford claiming publicly that the clause will lead to Ottawa ceding jurisdiction over the fishery to provincial Governments, specifically Newfoundland. On the other hand, Premier Buchanan claims the clause is there merely to provide a mechanism for discussion at First Ministers' conferences once a year.

Will the Minister say clearly for the benefit of all Atlantic Canadians and all provinces what the intent is of the clause? Can he say clearly whether or not Premier Peckford's interpretation is correct?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first, if I read the story in the press this morning, I would read that Mr. Peckford's position is that only Newfoundlanders should be able to fish off their coast. I should point out that is not a quotation of Mr. Peckford or any representative of his Government because that is not his position or that of his Government. For example, fishing vessels from Nova Scotia have for a long time fished on the Grand Banks, as have many foreign vessels which we are now eliminating from that fishery as a matter of government policy.

We are quite content to sit down and discuss these arrangements as reflected in the Meech Lake Accord, but I can tell the Hon. Member that the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries has at no time indicated to me any suggestion that management responsibility be taken from the federal Government. That is not the objective of the Province of Newfoundland. It is that we continue to discuss jointly and determine what is in the best interests of all Atlantic Canadians in the way in which the fishery is managed.

NICARAGUA—ATTACKS ON CANADIAN FUNDED FARMERS FOR PEACE PROJECT BY CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Farmers for Peace project at Mancotel, Nicaragua, received $180,000 in CIDA funding as well as substantial funding from the Alberta Government and Canadian farmers themselves. Several times, most recently on March 1, this Canadian funded project has been attacked by U.S. funded Contras. Over time, 25 people have been killed, 40 wounded, others kidnapped, and $165,000 in damage has been done.

On Wednesday, Victor Julyan, treasurer of the Alberta based Farmers for Peace, was told by the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that a note of protest had been sent to Washington. Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to confirm that at this time, but I will look into the matter and respond as soon as possible to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplementary.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT OPPOSE UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR CONTRA FORCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, considering the destabilizing action of the U.S. Government in sending troops to Honduras, and considering the action of the Contras against Canadian funded projects, does the Minister not think it is time the Canadian Government stood up for Canadian funded development and opposed continued U.S. support for the Contras and continued U.S. efforts to destabilize that region?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that we consider the actions taking place in the region to be very unhelpful and destabilizing to the peace efforts. I have already told the House that Canada deeply regrets these activities and is worried that the negotiations scheduled between the Contras and the Nicaragua Government will be imperilled. I think that is—

Mr. Waddell: It is part of your trade deal, Pat. You are so frightened of the U.S.

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has been asked, not just once but several times, serious questions on what is obviously, in view of the reaction of most Hon. Members in this place, a matter of great importance to us all. The Hon. Minister should be entitled to answer.

Mr. Heap: She doesn't.

An Hon. Member: Then don't ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members should let the Hon. Minister at least complete her answer. If they do not think it is satisfactory, they can argue about it somewhere else.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered the question in numerous forms and in various ways. I think it would not be useful to pursue it. As I told the House, we are calling in the ambassadors. We are expressing our concern. Our policy is to support the peace efforts in the region and I think all Canadians would back us in that policy.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL—REPAIRS TO LOCK IN ST. CATHARINES

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. The Welland Canal will be opening for the 1988 shipping season in a short 13 days. The Parliamentary Secretary will know, of course, that there is an ongoing major rehabilitation program for the locks on the canal. However, a few short days ago there was an unexpected collapse of an 85-foot section of an approach wall to Lock 1 in St. Catharines. This brings back memories of the problems we had two years ago with the blowout of Lock 7 which created an international shipping incident.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us if the repairs will be completed in time for the shipping season to begin on March 31 and that the shipping people can be assured of a successful canal this year?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the sudden collapse some weeks ago of the approach to Lock No. 1 certainly sent shivers through all shippers and carriers, as well as the Hon. Member for Welland. I am happy to say that the superintendent informed me this morning that the approach wall collapse has been corrected and all systems are go for the official opening on March 30 or March 31.

Hon. Members will recall as well the spring 1987 announcement of the seven-year $175 million modernization program, and 10 contracts this winter worth some $20 million. All systems are go.

REQUEST THAT SOVIET CITIZENS BE GRANTED RESIDENT STATUS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Immigration). We know that all Canadians warmly welcomed the lady who came from the Soviet Union, Tanya Sederova, a few months ago. We also know that a few days after her arrival her sponsorship was called off in a rather difficult manner. She is now living on welfare in Canada and she was asked to file a new application concerning her immigrant status. Yesterday I learned from the Minister's office that it could take up to a year before Mrs. Sederova is given her resident status in Canada. Considering that some 30 Members of Parliament wrote to Mr. Gorbatchev asking him to allow her to come to Canada, would the Minister be ready to consider that case so that she does not have to wait a year before being granted resident status?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her question. I will ask for a briefing on this matter. I did not have the opportunity to consider it in the past few days, but I can assure her that I will look at the options and see if we could speed up the process.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW CASE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. He should be aware that, because of the breakdown in the sponsorship, Madam Sidorova has been told she could wait up to a year. She is on welfare. She cannot now collect the baby bonus for her Canadian child. Obviously, she would like to have the matter settled because she is hoping to attend university and try to get her life back in order. In order to do that, she has to have her approval by May. I would ask the Minister if he would at the earliest opportunity today review her case and ensure she is given the kind of humanitarian consideration she deserves after three years of waiting for Canadian status?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my other language, I will ask that my officials and my staff do a review of where the process might be. I have indicated clearly in this House on many occasions that I am deeply appreciative of the information brought forward by all Members of Parliament, and by other Canadians, and where there are opportunities available within the law we will see that we act in a most humane and compassionate fashion.

PROPOSED LARGE-SCALE ADOPTION OF CHILDREN FROM OVERSEAS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. A federal report has drawn attention to the irony that, on the one hand, large numbers of Canadian families seeking to adopt children must wait years for the opportunity, while in other parts of the world extraordinary numbers of helpless and homeless children would welcome the great privilege of being taken into a Canadian family. In view of the report, will the Minister indicate what response the Government may make to the proposal that larger numbers of children from overseas be admitted for adoption? This proposal is obviously humanitarian in nature and potentially advantageous to Canada.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government does not become directly involved in the adoption process. Adoptions and the welfare of children are the constitutional responsibility of the provinces. The Government's role in international adoptions is confined to facilitating the child's admission to Canada while ensuring that the province in which he or she is to reside has no objection to the proposed arrangements for the reception of the child. We will continue to work actively with the provinces on this very important matter.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

BENEFITS RECEIVED BY JEAN SIROIS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Prime Minister's close friend, Jean Sirois. Two days ago my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, revealed to the House that the Prime Minister's friend Jean Sirois had received no less than $750,000 worth of salaries, benefits, legal contracts and so on.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm today that in addition to those fees, that gravy train of benefits, a company known as Datagram, having Maître Jean Sirois as a director, received no less than $945,046 from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion? If so, will the Deputy Prime Minister now do what I asked him to do a few days ago and table a list of all the benefits that Maître Jean Sirois has received since September 17, 1984?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the allegation referred to by the Hon. Member. I will certainly make inquiries and report back to him.

Mr. Boudria: All these allegations are in a press release issued by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion of this Government.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LIST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he prepared to do that, yes or no?

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the fact that for the first time in four years the Canadian dollar has risen to over 80 cents U.S., an increase of over three cents since the trade deal was signed. Also, yesterday, Bank of Canada interest rates rose once again.

Is the Minister aware that the combination of high interest rates and a high Canadian dollar will hurt investors, hurt consumers, and hurt exports, therefore having a negative impact on jobs? Is the Government prepared to intervene with the Bank of Canada to ease up on its high interest rate policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member asks that question he should also reflect on the strength of the economy and what is causing the increase in the dollar and the increase in interest rates.

We saw in the last quarter of 1987 the strongest quarter of growth that we experienced during 1987. We have seen job creation continue into 1988 at a very strong level—95,000 jobs have been created. Investment intentions for 1988 are up 17.3 per cent.

This activity, this strength in the economy, is being felt in many parts of Canada. This is what is being reflected in the strength of the Canadian dollar and the pressures that are there on interest rates.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—JOB CREATION PROJECTIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that any advantages gained by a 3 per cent to a 4 per cent reduction in tariffs will be more than offset by the full 5 per cent increase in the value of the Canadian dollar in the past year. Will the Minister acknowledge that government predictions on job growth through the trade deal are based on a 75-cent Canadian dollar? Will the Minister tell Canadians what the impact of an 80-cent dollar will do to those projections?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the Hon. Member that the strength in the Canadian dollar will be a reflection of the strength of the Canadian economy. As the Canadian economy improves its competitive position, as we expect will be the case during the trade agreement, this will be reflected in improvements in job creation, investment action, and all those things which come from a stronger economy.

We have introduced a number of measures over the last three and a half years that are improving that competitive position. It is one of the key reasons why we have seen the strength in the Canadian dollar. It is also one of the key reasons why we have seen 1,200,000 jobs created during that same period of time.

Mr. Speaker: I think that we may have inadvertently gotten a little out of order. I will try to correct that. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. I will come to the Hon. Member for Davenport in a moment.

CLOTHING AND PLYWOOD—CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. U.S. Secretary Baker is quoted in news reports as telling the Senate Finance Committee yesterday that he had been told by the Canadian Government that the Government would take another look at its plywood standards and would substantially reduce planned help to the clothing industry.

Will the Minister confirm that U.S. meetings did take place on Wednesday with Canadian representatives and that in fact these promises were made?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that meetings take place between the Canadian and the U.S. administration on trade matters quite often. So there would be meetings on Monday. There may have been meetings on Wednesday as the Hon. Member suggests.

I can deal with the plywood issue by pointing out that under the free trade agreement Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation was to rule on the technical assessment of grade C and D United States plywood to see whether they met Canadian standards in our building codes. Canada Mortgage and Housing did such a review and decided that the U.S. C and D grade levels do not meet the requirements set out in our building codes.

Under the free trade agreement should this decision be taken, as it has, there is provision for setting up a panel to review this technical evaluation. We have informed the Americans that under the terms of the FTA we are ready and willing to establish such a panel at this time.

TESTIMONY GIVEN BEFORE UNITED STATES SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister if in fact she is saying that when Secretary Baker testified before the Senate Finance Committee yesterday about these commitments from the Canadian Government to retreat from positions which had been taken, those statements were incorrect and that they were some kind of mistruth?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statements to which the Hon. Member refers. I cannot make a judgment about them.

I can report to the House, as the Minister of Finance has reported, that there has been no final decision taken on the issue of the duty remission. We have provision to do that in the free trade agreement. We will be announcing that at the appropriate time, as the Minister of Finance has indicated.

I have explained, at more length than you, Mr. Speaker, may care to entertain, the technical provisions in the free trade agreement which allow us to deal with the plywood issue. I can repeat it for the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Miss Carney: They say "No, no!" They ask the question, but when I give the answer they say "No, no!"

The point is that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation did not accept the U.S. plywood standards with respect to grades C and D. Under the free trade agreement there is provision for a panel to review that. We have informed the Americans that we are willing to set up a panel. That is the answer to the question.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANSBOUNDARY ACID RAIN POLLUTION—QUERY ON BILL FOR DAMAGES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It is a follow-up to a question I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs made a commitment to look at the possibility of preparing a bill for the damages we are suffering as a result of transboundary acid rain pollution coming into Canada and in anticipation of next month's meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada and President Reagan in Washington. Has the Government made a decision on the question of preparing a bill for Canada's damages suffered as a result of American acid rain pollution?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, no, there has not been a decision to my knowledge. However, I will make inquiries and get back to the Hon. Member as to where that particular issue stands.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member with a short supplementary, please.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSULT AFFECTED PARTIES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Government will not dilly-dally on this important matter. In making a decision will the Government consult the maple sugar producers of Quebec, the cottage, motel and resort owners in Muskoka, and all parties that are affected in industry, forests and farming, as well as provincial and municipal Governments downwind to American acid rain pollution? Will that consultation take place?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I find it very ironic that the Hon. Member is suggesting that we consult because so often we are criticized by other Hon. Members across the way for doing just that. Of course there will be consultation. Of course I would not want to leave the impression that nothing has been done with respect to this very important issue of the transborder control of acid rain and other pollution aspects that affect our environment.

The Government, through the Minister of the Environment, has provided strong leadership. There has been strong leadership by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and very strong leadership by our Prime Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—INTERVENTION BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade who is answering for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It pertains to a clarification that she made just a few moments ago when I was asking if she was announcing a change in Canadian foreign policy. I want to ask her very specifically this.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House on December 2 the following:

> We oppose third party intervention in Central America, whatever the source, and have made that position clear to both superpowers.

Is the Minister now saying that the United States is justified in intervening in the region because it signed the Rio treaty? Could we get clarification of that? Has the Government changed its policy? That is the question.

• (1200)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add to what I have already said on this matter, and that is that it is within the right of Honduras to call in the U.S. assistance. Under the Rio Treaty it is legal for the U.S. to provide such support if an incursion has occurred, and we are informed that such an incursion did occur, which is the advice we received from our Ambassador.

I have also pointed out that our position is that we deeply regret these incidents because it is destabilizing to the region. We are calling in the American and Nicaraguan Ambassadors to express our grave concern and to indicate our continued support for the peace negotiations which are scheduled to take place on Monday.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PAY INTEREST ON INCOME TAX COLLECTED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On February 12 I raised in the House the fact that the Government has given itself a six-month interest free loan of over $1 billion in that, although some income taxes have been reduced as of January of this year, payroll deductions do not take effect until July.

Now that the Conservative Chairman of the Finance Committee has called this situation a "rip-off", will the Government do the right thing and agree to pay Canadian taxpayers the interest due to them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is quite aware of the difficulty of introducing the change in tax reform, moving from exemptions to credits, to come half way through the year.

Mr. Tobin: Justice delayed is justice denied.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have made that provision applicable to the first part of the year to avoid complexity in the Income Tax Act, as I am sure the Hon. Member would support. For fiscal reasons we are only bringing in the change in the withholding payments, the payroll deductions, as of July 1. Again, for fiscal reasons, the deductions that are made in the first part of the year will only be repaid to taxpayers when they receive their refunds in 1989.

LANGUAGE TEACHERS' DISPUTE—NEGOTIATION OF SETTLEMENT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. This week I met with constituents of mine who are federal government language trainers and teachers who are concerned that their long-standing dispute with the Treasury Board remains unresolved.

In light of the important service provided by those dedicated public servants to the Government and to Canada, can the Minister report any progress towards reaching an amicable settlement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his continuing interest in this very important issue. Of course I share with the Hon. Member the view that those people do provide a very important service to Canada.

I would like to tell the House that a settlement had been reached on September 10 which was subsequently rejected by the membership. On January 21 the majority conciliation report was issued which recommended that the September agreement be adopted as provided for in the original negotiating agreement.

Treasury Board has informed the group that we are prepared to sign an agreement on the basis of the majority conciliation report, and that we are prepared, willing, and able to sit down and proceed with the negotiations. I would hope that all Members would encourage that to take place, because that in effect is respecting the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Speaker: On a supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton.

QUERY WHETHER TREASURY BOARD WILL RENEGOTIATE CONTRACT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister on the same issue.

The language teachers are very frustrated. In fact there is a demonstration outside the House today. Is the Treasury Board prepared to renegotiate the contract that the teachers have rejected?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, to engage in renegotiations they would have to come back to the bargaining table, and that is what we have invited them to do.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, a single question, please.

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESUME NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the President of the Treasury Board aware of the fact that language teachers rejected the September agreement and the majority report of the Conciliation Board, given the fact that this agreement would increase by 87 percent the number of teaching hours?

Can the Minister explain why he states, in his letter to the President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, bearing today's date that it is not the policy of the Government to negotiate publicly and that he would rather let the negotiation process take its course although the negotiations have not resumed?

Is the Minister prepared now to go back to the bargaining table in order to arrive at a fair agreement with the language teachers of the Public Service of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again we are seeing the double standard of the New Democratic Party. On the one hand, it respects and supports the collective bargaining process. On the other hand, the Hon. Member wants me to become involved in the negotiations in public.

Earlier I stated that we are prepared to sit down. We have invited the group to recommence negotiations on the basis of the majority conciliation report—

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, that's the condition?

Mr. Mazankowski: I challenge the Hon. Member, rather than trying to make a political issue, to encourage the union to come back to the bargaining table.

Mr. Cassidy: What a hypocrite you are.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not fair at all.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has directly impugned the honour of another Hon. Member. I would ask that he withdraw.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I do withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Cassidy: You will understand my strong feelings on that, Mr. Speaker, although I withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has withdrawn, and that is an end to the issue.

I call upon the Hon. Minister of Communications who, I think, has something to say to this House on a matter that has been raised earlier, and I think that Hon. Members would allow me to bend the rules a little to hear her.

THE LATE YVETTE ROUSSEAU

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women have lost a great friend. Yvette Rousseau has devoted most of her career in the trade-union movement and in politics to the enhancement of the status of women in Canada.

I remember well the period in the 1970s when she was vice-president and, later, president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women in Canada. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I was a new Member here in Ottawa, and one of the few women sitting in this House of Commons. I have good memories of my contacts with Mrs. Rousseau during her tenure at the Council and after, at the time of her appointment to the Senate, in 1979.

I was very glad to see that she kept on with her work and efforts for Canadian women in the Senate.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, along with the tremendous work that was carried out by the late, great Therese Casgrain, the Province of Quebec has provided much leadership, indeed tremendous leadership. There have been many pioneers in the work of advancing the women's movement throughout the country, but particularly in the Province of Quebec there have been pioneers who have provided examples for the rest of us. Yvette Rousseau was one of those pioneers. She provided guidance, counsel, and support to the many women who are now involved in improving the political, social, and economic standing of women across this country. But more than providing that support, guidance, and counsel she provided an example that we would all do well to emulate.

I am very saddened by her death.

[Translation]

Her death is a loss for Parliament and for Canadian women.

I would like to extend the Government's deepest sympathy and mine to her family.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I rose pursuant to Standing Order 21 to make a statement and deal briefly with the great loss Canada has suffered when Mrs. Rousseau passed away. On behalf of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), I should like to join the Minister of Communications and pay tribute to Mrs. Rousseau.

The Leader of our party has conveyed to Mrs. Rousseau's family not only the expression of our condolences, but also of our appreciation for the tremendous contribution Mrs. Rousseau has made to Canadian men and women generally.

All those who had an opportunity to know Senator Rousseau very well and to work with her can bear witness to the fact that she was a woman with a clear head, a strong will tempered with a kind heart. Between 1940 and 1945, long before the mass demonstrations of the last few years for women emancipation, Senator Rousseau was already fighting in the front lines for the emancipation of women's in the labour force. As a young woman, she had already contributed to obtain the right to vote for Quebec women. She was one of the first women to become union leaders. She had thought and written a great deal, and on top of that, she had found the time to raise a family of eight children who were for her a source of great satisfaction.

I should also like to mention her kindness for her fellow workers, her friends, as well as her generosity and understanding of people's problems. Yet, in all discussions, she always demonstrated a lot of willpower and a strong determination to achieve her objectives.

On behalf of the Leader of the Liberal Party, of all my colleagues and on my own behalf, I should like to offer Mrs. Rousseau's family our most sincere condolences in their great loss and remind all Canadians, women especially, that they have just lost a great ally.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Senator Rousseau.

Mrs. Rousseau devoted her entire life to Canadian workers, men and women alike. She began as a simple worker in the textile industry.

• (1210)

[English]

She was a leader in the women's movement in Canada, founding member and President of the Fédération des femmes du Québec and co-founder, with the Government of Quebec, of the Quebec Council on the Status of Women.

As the Hon. Minister has said, we have lost a great friend, and to her family we extend our sympathies. In all her work, Ms. Rousseau insisted that the significant contributions made by women in our society as home makers, as economic partners in the labour force, and as a powerful political lobby, be recognized.

"Government would be well advised", she warned, "not to underestimate the vital strength of Canadian women".

One thing which Yvette Rousseau has taught us as female parliamentarians is that when it came to women's issues she never took a partisan line. She thought it was very important to raise equity for women in our society.

In her maiden speech to the Senate Ms. Rousseau stated her intention to work for the betterment of Canada and to promote the rights, both social and political, of every individual in our regions and minority groups. The dedication with which she pursued this goal provides an inspiration to all parliamentarians now assembled and to Canadian people everywhere.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party I should like to extend our sympathy to the family of Ms. Rousseau and to say on behalf of all Canadians that I know that we are better off because she walked among us. May she rest in peace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

SINCERITY OF MEMBER'S APOLOGY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is particularly appropriate that this question of privilege should be raised, given the comments just made in the House about an incredible woman who really did much to speak to the issue of equality for women. Unfortunately it seems that plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.

You will remember last fall, Mr. Speaker, when in a committee of the House I was referred to as a "goddamned ignorant bitch". Subsequent to that statement, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who made it stood up on Friday, October 30, and said that he wished to withdraw that remark completely.

At that time I took the Hon. Member for Burlington at his word, that he intended to withdraw that remark completely, so you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, how shocked and surprised I was to receive some correspondence which in fact indicates that his apology in the House was not believed by himself.

I should like to spend a moment reading a couple of paragraphs from the correspondence which made me seek to raise this question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the Hon. Member could give the Chair the date of the letter to which she refers. I take it that it is a letter from the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) to somebody.

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister made a statement in the House unequivocally withdrawing his remarks on Friday, October 30.

On November 2, a letter went to the Member from a person not known to me who was responding in a tongue-in-cheek way to try to suggest to the Member that his remarks were inappropriate.

I do not want to read the whole letter, but I will read a couple of paragraphs which I think illustrate my point. It reads:

> Dear Bill:
> Just wanted to touch bases with you on this Copps business. Nasty stuff, what? I think a fitting response from you would be to sponsor a Bill in the House banishing women back to the kitchen: you know the old saw, keep them pregnant in the summer and barefoot in the winter.
> Bill, can you imagine young Canadian women aspiring to be MPs? Mind you, now, I don't see anything wrong with elected old broads serving coffee—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. I just want to know that the Chair has the facts here. Apparently that is a letter written by somebody to the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Right.

Mr. Speaker: Of course that in itself is not a question of privilege.

Ms. Copps: No.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member come right to the point now.

Ms. Copps: That gives the tone of that letter which was written tongue in cheek.

Subsequently the Hon. Member for Burlington wrote a letter, dated February 11, 1988 to a Mr. Moses C. Sheppard of Timmins, Ontario, in which he stated:

> Dear Moses:
> Thank you very much for your letter of November 2 about "you know who". My staff and I had a real good laugh at the various comments you made.
> I am reluctant to circulate it in the House of Commons in case it may receive unanimous consent.
> Many thanks for your good wishes.

It is signed by the Hon. Member for Burlington.

If we look at the contents of the letter written tongue in cheek and the response of the Member, who is basically saying that women should not be allowed to run as MPs, women should be barefoot and pregnant in the kitchen, and women should be allowed to serve coffee, I believe that when the Member stood up and unequivocally withdrew his remarks he in fact had no intention of doing so. That is clearly in evidence by his response to this particular individual.

I received the correspondence from the gentleman in Timmins, who was so irate that he actually wrote another letter to the Member in which he stated that his apology was a fraud, that he should apologize to the House and follow up on it, and that is why I am raising it.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think what the gentleman wrote to the Member is apposite to the point the Hon. Member is making. I take very carefully the point the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is making.

The question is whether or not the Hon. Member for Burlington was sincere in his withdrawal. The Hon. Member is not here because he is in his riding attending to other duties. When he returns I will ask him to address the matter.

If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East would keep in touch with the Chair, perhaps we could arrange a time when the Hon. Member for Burlington is here, as well as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, and I will hear the matter further.

• (1220)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the issue was an apology and the apology was made. We are now dealing with an alleged question of privilege which does not in any way involve the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: It certainly does.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member from Hamilton East chose to raise this on a Friday so that it would sit over the weekend.

Ms. Copps: No.

Mr. Lewis: I do not care if she wants to set up some other Member and practise politics that way, but I think this is an abuse of the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). I am not going to hear any further Members on this matter at this time. I will discuss with Hon. Members how and under what circumstances the issue might be resumed. Certainly the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) ought to have a chance to have his say.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps before I start my question of privilege, could I indicate that we would like to know when this matter will return to the House so we may add any interventions that we may have.

Mr. Speaker: Let me assure Hon. Members that when the matter comes back, the Government and both opposition Parties will, of course, be notified.

I also want it clearly understood that I will deal with the point, which point is now on the record. I do not think it is in the interests of this place or of that particular Hon. Member who is complained of to turn this issue into a debate in which every Member who, for whatever reason, thinks that he or she has something to say, can do so. I just point that out as a matter of caution. Primarily, I want to hear from the Hon. Member for Burlington. Unless there is something of very great importance to be said by others, let me indicate that the Chair will exercise a certain degree of restraint in opening this matter into a full-blown debate.

However the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) I believe has another point. I recognize the Hon. Member.

ATTENDANCE OF CABINET MINISTERS IN HOUSE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly not my intent in my previous remarks to encourage a full-blown debate, but since you had given notice that the matter would be dealt with later I just wanted assurances that we would be forewarned as much as possible.

The issue on which I stand is the attendance of cabinet Ministers in the House. I want to state at the beginning that I understand they have other duties and other obligations, and we in the Opposition appreciate that. But we are in a situation today—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could help from a point of view of procedure. I think what the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is raising is really a point of order. I appreciate that the Hon. Member is not taking a position that cabinet Ministers are not here because they are idle or not very busily engaged in other things. I think the point of order which the Hon. Member is trying to make, and he is speaking on behalf of his Party, has to do with the number of Ministers who may be available at any given time to receive questions in Question Period. If that is the point, I certainly will hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Murphy: That is the point, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my note to you I will not draw this matter out at any length. We had 10 cabinet Ministers here today out of a Cabinet of approximately 40. This has been a problem all week and it is a situation which affects our privileges and our ability in the Opposition to act. We have a Minister away and the Parliamentary Secretary away. In my particular case, a Minister who answered on behalf of another Minister yesterday is not here today. We have matters that are important to opposition Members and it becomes very difficult and, indeed, impossible to raise issues and to get any type of answers by anybody who is even remotely related to the topic.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) could reply.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): First, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the ministry which answers questions. We have made every effort to supply acting Ministers who can stand in for other Ministers. I think you will find today that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) did an excellent job of standing in for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

The business of government involves being in the House for Question Period, that is true. It also involves being in other meetings and in other areas of the country. I think we do as good a job as any Government in the past has in answering questions. If there is any inconvenience, I will be glad to take it up with my hon. friend with respect to any particular Minister or ministry.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, if you want to open up this inquiry, as my friend seems to, that there is difficulty in trying to hold committee meetings. Certain members of the Opposition are not present. I am prepared to debate that topic at any time but I do not think it is helpful today.

We supply acting Ministers. Today a question was answered on the Welland Canal by a Parliamentary Secretary. We are always in a position to answer any questions which the Opposition in its meagre numbers may wish to pose.

Mr. Speaker: However meagre the numbers may be, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is here and wishes to rise again. I recognize the Hon. Member on a short intervention.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that each of the opposition Parties has fewer Members in it in the House than the Cabinet, you will have noted today that each of us had more Members in the House than the number of cabinet Ministers.

It is not a matter of just the ministry that answers the questions. The problem is that you get notice one day and the Minister who gave notice is not here. It seems there is no one on the government side who is capable of answering these questions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill who is speaking on this matter, not on a personal basis but, I take it, as a representative of his Party, has brought a matter to the attention of the Government. The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has replied, and I think absolutely correctly, that it is the obligation of the Government to answer questions. However, having said that, all Hon. Members will know that there are times, because of the press of other duties, when Ministers, who might very well prefer to be here sometimes, have to be elsewhere. On balance it is the obligation of the Government to have as many Ministers as is appropriate here at Question Period. I think the Hon. Minister of State's response was civil and reflective. He has indicated that he is prepared to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member for Churchill, and I would expect other Members if that is appropriate.

As I say, it is a point of order. Perhaps the Hon. Minister of State and the Hon. Member for Churchill can have a further discussion.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of many residents of the City of Scarborough in the Province of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to these petitioners in the certain assurance that Hon. Members will, therefore, provide a remedy, I am honoured to present this petition regarding the Supreme Court of Canada's decision to strike down the Canadian abortion law. They strongly urge us as a House of Commons to recognize the rights of the unborn and the Canadian Charter of Rights and to proclaim a new law which will protect these rights from wanton aggression throughout all ages in the development of the fetus beginning at conception.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a fairly lengthy petition from my constituency which deals with the question of the U.S. trade deal. The people who have signed the petition indicate that they feel that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, and they therefore ask very strongly that this Government dissolve Parliament and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all question be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would confirm to the House that this is the third day in a row that the Government has been unable to answer any questions on the Order Paper, and perhaps he could explain to the House at the same time if he is suffering because there are no cabinet Ministers in Ottawa to answer these questions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with our record of answering questions on the Order Paper, and I think our record is about 87 per cent, if my hon. friend has any particular question that he is very much interested in, I would be pleased to check with officials and get back to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTED DAY, S. O. 82—ECONOMIC FUTURE OF REGION OF GREATER MONTREAL

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Malépart:

—That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act in matters of interest to the region of Greater Montreal, including the space agency, the development of the Vieux-Port, the planning and development of Montreal Harbour, the Soligaz project, the shipyards and the economic renewal of Montreal East as well as the economic deterioration of the southwestern part of the region.—

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left I should like to cover a number of subjects, but I will mention just a few. I want to say something about Montreal's Vieux-Port about which the Opposition keeps saying we are not moving fast enough. I get the clear impression that the Opposition is unaware of the new developments and cannot keep track of the Vieux-Port evolution.

Last December I announced that the federal Government had endorsed the entire master plan for the Vieux-Port, a project which might trigger over-all investments ranging from $350 million to $500 million. Not only did the Government endorse the project, the Vieux-Port master plan, but it took action as well.

We have already invested $104 million in the Vieux-Port over the past few years, but the thing to note is that, unlike the previous Government which invariably acted unilaterally, it is imperative in the development of an undertaking of such significance to Montreal to seek the agreement, participation and approval of the other two Government levels. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House and all my colleagues that it is the approach we have taken, and so far the results have been very promising. So much so that in the near future we may be in a position to unveil the over-all plan which will make it possible to complete the Vieux-Port project in time for Montreal's 350th anniversary in 1992.

I could also say something about the Montreal harbour, an important issue because, as it happened, transportation was the driving force behind the development of Montreal. We are monitoring the situation very closely because the Government intends to see this project through, and again the matter will be settled in full consultation with the various local interests.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, Montreal is the economic motor. Montreal is Quebec's cultural motor, one of the most important elements of our collective life in Canada.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, it is an international city, a city of high technology, a financial centre, a cultural city, a city of arts, a city for tourism, a transport centre, a manufacturing centre, a design centre.

Since 1984, we have done much more than any other previous Government for Montreal, and much more than my Hon. colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) with his three interventions, which makes one a year. What we have given Montreal is an opportunity to have its place in the sun as a great metropolis, a major Canadian centre and a great international centre, and I am proud of what our Government has been able to accomplish in the Montreal region these last three and a half years.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister called Montreal the motor. He can no longer say that Montreal is the engine as he has brought about the closing of Bombardier as a manufacturer of railway engines. He wants Montreal to shine like the sun, but to shoot for the stars, Montreal has to become space oriented, which the Minister forgot to say. I have here newspaper articles which the Minister has certainly seen and which say things such as "Mayor Doré furious about the space agency" and "Allocation of the space program—Minister MacDonald fed up with being taken for an idiot". This same Mr. Picard, who was responsible for this issue, states that he does not understand the Government. I am not talking about the past or about what happened in such or such a case. We want clear and specific answers. Montrealers want to know.

Now that the Prime Minister has said something quite different about the space agency, now that he has said that there will be a space agency, if he did tell the truth, can the Minister tell us immediately that this agency will be in Montreal and when it will be established?

As concerns the Vieux-Port, the Government has been saying yes for three years, but it has failed to deliver. Can the Minister tell us today that there will be $130 million in new money, not in recycled funds as in the case of Montreal East, and that he will not try to make people believe, as in the case of Montreal East, that the provincial Government is to blame if the federal Government fails to deliver? You were caught short in the case of Montreal East because the provincial Government made its announcement before you did.

On the matter of the Soligaz project for Montreal East, will you now be in a position to answer: Yes, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) will deal with that, and within a month that will be solved, that will be in operation?

Concerning shipyards,—note all of that down, you will have a number of things to answer on—will the contracts that Layton is supposed to be awarding for the two destroyers in the TRUMP Program next week, will both of them be going to Quebec shipyards? Yes or no? That is the point.

Concerning early retirement that people have been requesting for workers in Vickers, in Montreal East, and also for South West Montreal, is it yes? Are you going to announce early retirement, again not the one that was negotiated with Quebec, but the program you have under Unemployment Insurance? Yes or no? And lastly, concerning Southwestern Montreal, because they also have difficulty there, and they are asking for an economic renewal committee, will you be answering yes to that? This is what we want to know.

Mr. de Cotret: First, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the Hon. Member's usual talent in contradictions. Of course that is a daily situation in his own Party. So I recognize he has all the talent in the world for contradictions. Let me state that concerning the space agency, there is absolutely no contradiction. And I can tell you there will be a space agency, and I could simply repeat again what I said in this House, as recorded in Hansard. I am taking for granted my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) can read.

Mr. Malépart: Montreal or Ottawa?

Mr. de Cotret: So I will let him do his own reading. But there will be a space agency that will be announced when we have determined exactly what the nature of the program will be.

Mr. Malépart: Where?

Mr. de Cotret: My colleague the Minister of State and the Prime Minister have been saying the same thing exactly. There will be a space agency, and the space agency will be announced as soon as the space program can be announced— it is before Cabinet now.

You are raising a lot of other matters, all pertinent of course but matters that are evolving, matters we deal with on a daily basis and that mesh in with any announcements we made, as I have listed in this House today, over these last few years, these last few months, announcements that succeeded in making Montreal a city on the go, while Montreal under the previous Government was a declining city, a city that was losing its role, not only as an international city, but as a national and a Quebec city because of the previous Government's inaction we inherited.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have an interesting document which states the following: "De Cotret promises action in Montreal this autumn." This document is dated July 8, 1986. Now, after almost two years, we have seen a report from the Comité pour la relance de l'économie et de l'emploi de l'est de Montréal which says that all those problems remain. I would like to ask the Minister whether he is ready today to provide particulars about all those problems and the suggestions made in the committee report. For example, I would like to put to him the following question: The committee has suggested that in order to preserve existing jobs in Montreal East it is necessary to maintain for a 3-year period a policy of preferential purchases in depressed regions as far as transportation, metallic products, primary metallurgy and petrochemistry are concerned. Is it now possible for the Minister to accede to that suggestion?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to my honourable colleague that he should follow more closely what is going on. Two committees have been set up and a third is dealing with the southwestern part of Montreal. The first, for the Greater Montreal, was the Comité consultatif sur Montréal or the Picard Commitee; the second one, was CREEM or the so-called Pichette Committee. We have given our answer to the Picard Committee and its members are quite pleased with it because we accepted most of its recommendations and, as I said earlier, several among them have already been implemented while others are being carried out.

We have also given our answer to the Pichette committee and Mr. Pichette has said that he is quite pleased with the response of the federal Government and with that of other levels of government. We will see what will come out of the consultations going on for the other region.

So when I am asked what we intend to do, I wonder, because we said months ago what we were going to do. We said it clearly and I will be pleased to send the response documents to my hon. colleague who, unfortunately, must have lost them under huge piles of mail. But I will be happy to send him these responses which were given months ago. And we are now beginning to see the results. That is why we can talk about 114,000 new jobs since 1984. That is why we can talk about 50 000 new jobs in Greater Montreal in the last 12 months. There is action in that region. Why? Because we are implementing recommendations made by people from the area, in consultation with them, and accepted by the Government. These are positive measures, unlike the shameful inaction of the previous Government who managed to lose 4,000 jobs, in Montreal, between 1980 and 1984.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, considering the Minister's special interest for the Montreal economy, I have a question for him.

We know that at the beginning of 1976, the Leader of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (M. Malépart) left politics to join the McMillan-Binch law firm in Toronto. The present Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra and leader of the official Opposition (M. Turner) then undertook to publish a newsletter, to the cost of $15,000, aimed at a specific group of people. One issue of the newsletter dealt with the Montreal problem. He wrote that there had been long years of neglect and he predicted in very simple terms the decline of Montreal. He said that the federal Government of the time, a Liberal Government, didn't do much for the city. He also said that it was Montreal's fault and that we would have to wait till year 2000 to see things turn around.

I would like to know if the Minister shares the view expressed in 1978 by the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, this question is quite relevant since on July 14, 1978, the present Leader of the Liberal Party stated, and rightly so, that Montreal was a city on the decline and in transition. He added that its national role had diminished. That was right too, although this trend was more obvious in the last four years. He said also that Montreal had lost its financial power, that its service industries were losing ground, its harbour was not longer prosperous and the most active, its manufacturing sector was struggling for survival. Then he said that after years and years of negligence and foreign competition, its airports were no longer the main gateway to the country for international travellers and that its reputation as a congenial city was tarnished. And so on and so on. In conclusion he said that problems in Montreal did not happen overnight and that most of them were its own fault.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the conclusion of the Leader of the Official Opposition. Montreal is not really responsible for what happened. We never accepted that. The problem is that the former Government did not play its role, although Members from the Hon. Member's Party were well aware of the situation. What action did they take? My hon. colleague for Montreal—Sainte-Marie made three speeches in three years. That is it. And 4,000 jobs were lost.

When we came to power in 1984, we sat down with people at the regional level. We met with all concerned people in the cultural, industrial, artistic community or in the labour movement. We made recommendations and three and a half years later, we have managed to create 114,000 new jobs. We have a booming and striving economy. We now have a base to build on. If I were a Liberal, I would be ashamed today. How dare Liberals claim that Montreal is a victim of its own mistakes, when the city was driven to its ruin by the mistakes of the previous Government. But, the actions of the present Government are rebuilding Montreal, and making it an international capital again.

Mr. Malépart: Montreal is spatial!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to justify the rage of the Minister. It might be very interesting, but it does not tell much.

I believe that if we look at this motion and the very serious problems which led to its introduction . . . It is very important to see that what we have here today is not something which results from the Conservative Government's policies. It does result from that government to some degree, but also from the Liberal Government which did not pay sufficient attention to that area of the country.

I believe that if we took an honest look, if we analysed the problem with some measure of reason, there is something we would have to say. We would have to say, as Gérard LeBlanc has said in the press, that one must not, as Jean-Claude Malépart has so often done, link plant shutdowns in the East directly with poverty in that area and that the entire metropolitan area is affected by the industrial crisis in Montreal East. And it is true, Mr. Speaker. It is true that what we have here is an industrial crisis which affects the entire Montreal area and in fact, Mr. Speaker, the whole country. The crisis is visible in my own riding of Essex—Windsor, where there are a lot of closures—and the same can be said of Hamilton, where shutdowns abound, and also of many regions in the province of Quebec, where a great number of plants have closed down and all this is the result of the policy void which exists with regard to industrialization in our country.

It can truly be said, Mr. Speaker, that what we have here, which is similar to what many analysts have encountered in parts of the United States, is a situation of disindustrialization, one where our manufacturing sector is in a lot of trouble. And these problems are not getting the full attention of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I really believe that the trade agreement with the United States is a step which will result in a worsening of the situation for our industrial sector, throughout the country as well as in Montreal East. I must say, however, Mr. Speaker, although we recognize that this is not only a problem which concerns Montreal East, that there are many things which people who work in Montreal West did, very important things to support this part of the city which is very significant in the history of all countries, the City of Montreal.

If we take the example of Montreal East, we must say first that some figures really give an idea of the size of the problem, such as: about 22,000 unemployed in this part of the city, about 9,400 welfare recipients and close to 7,500 group dismissals over five years. Those figures can be found in a document released by the Comittee for the Economic Renewal of Montreal East. The situation on the Montreal East is due to the inaction of the federal Government, which is unacceptable to our Party. Montreal East wants clear answers and effective and quick action. The Committee for the Economic Renewal of Montreal East made important recommendations, and we give our support to those recommendations, particularly: 1. We agree to the participation of the federal Government to the establishment of a $50 Million fund to assist businesses in the East, which must modernize in order to diversify. 2. We agree to the participation of the federal Government to a training or retraining fund to help workers, men and women, from the East which are affected by technological change in the plants. 3. We agree that Montreal East should be declared designated area to enable older workers to benefit from an adjustment program which would provide them with a guaranteed income.

The importance and the seriousness of the challenges to be met in the East require consultation and input from various levels of Government. It is necessary to establish a coordinating structure to rally forces and take action rapidly.

The Conservatives had promised that this government would bring about changes. Yet, anybody can see that when the Minister spoke today, he talked about jobs that were created not by this government but by the market itself, through Canadian exports and our economic growth. This is perfectly true. This government did not do anything to sustain growth, indeed, it only replaced the old patronage by Tory patronage. This is not the kind of future Canadian men and women wish for their country. This is not what our fellow citizens are demanding. We want something different.

[English]

I think if we look at East Montreal and at the problems which have developed there, the tremendous number of shutdowns which have taken place, we can see above all the failure of this Government to put in place an industrial policy which will show some direction in the auto sector, in petrochemicals and in metallurgy, parts of the economy which have traditionally supplied the jobs of eastern Montreal and the southeastern region associated with it.

The Government has not taken that direction. It refuses to provide that leadership. It says instead the answer is somehow to be found lying over the rainbow in a flawed free trade deal with the United States. That kind of approach has simply told the people of East Montreal that this Government is not interested and is not prepared to provide direction, that it is not prepared to lead.

We believe, in our party, that the survival committee put in place for Montreal East is very important. On behalf of our party, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) gave this committee the widest participation possible, thus indicating that there are true answers to the issues involved, and not only the type of answers that consist of washing one's hands off the problem and saying: "There are already many jobs and we do not need to do anything for that part of the city".

Personally, I do not think it will be possible to carry on with this kind of Government. It is necessary to replace this Government, its policies and to develop an industrial strategy which will address the issue of jobs as well as the industrial vocation of Canada generally and Montreal East in particular. To achieve this, Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary to get rid of the trade deal with the United States, failing which we would be fighting with one hand tied behing our back in the area of industrial policies. There are so many things that we will not be able to do with this agreement namely to make our energy industry work for our industrial industry. It will not be possible with the trade deal with the United States to give many industries the necessary support to ensure the recovery of Montreal East. It is just not possible!

The Parliamentary Secretary is aware of it, because the Deputy Minister of Finance stated before a committee that we will have to change our regional development policy entirely. It is also impossible for us with the trade deal to do things in the car manufacturing industry to ensure that a company such as Hyundai buy parts here in Canada and creates jobs too.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we certainly support this motion. It is a motion which tells the truth, but not the whole truth, because this Government is faced with many problems, including major ones in Montreal East which it has inherited from past Liberal Governments. As for us, we have to work as hard as possible to establish with the City of Montreal and with Montreal East a most important and profitable industry for our future economy. To do so, I hope the Government will accept this report and all the recommendations made by the Committee for the recovery of Montreal East.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. When we deal with such an important issue as the economic development of Montreal and we hear the fine speeches uttered by the NDP Socialists. I feel that Montrealers, Quebecers, and Canadians generally should have at least an inkling of the NDP position.

I have a question for the Hon. Member who is always criticizing the Free Trade Agreement. In Montreal, for instance, I met with the Young Chamber of Commerce and I also met many of the people involved, and so did the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret). These people, in the petrochemical industry, for instance, sell their products on the American market, which is subject to tariffs. They want access to that market and they support the Free Trade Agreement because it will give them access to that market and increase their competitivity.

The New Democratic Party reminds me of a mother looking at soldiers on parade and thinking that the only one in step is her son. The New Democrats believe that they are the only ones in step as far as economic development is concerned. Everyone else marches to a certain step, but they want to be different.

How credible is their position? After the Budget and the recovery and economic renewal plan of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and after the tabling of the Estimates, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) predicted the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs in Canada.

In fact, over 1.2 million jobs have been created in this country! How can the New Democratic Party honestly and logically stand before the House and say that it has the solution to economic development in Montreal when all its economic statements are rejected by the business sector and experience shows that its pessimistic predictions of 300,000 jobs lost because of the economic policies of this country did not come true? What is the credibility of that party?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is very important that a group got together in Montreal East and decided to work very hard to find a solution. It is very important for the community to find practical economic solutions, and this is why we supported the report of the committee for renewal in Montreal East. The Government might not agree, but it should be taking the initiative.

However, if we want to be honest, we have to say that it will not be possible to do everything that this committee would like in Montreal East. It will not be possible if we have the trade agreement with the United States because this agreement includes too many things which jeopardize our future economic freedom.

We are not alone in saying so. Many people throughout Canada and in Quebec say so. For instance, there is a coalition against free trade in Quebec, and it includes more people than any such group in other Canadian provinces. This coalition includes the Association des fermières, workers, women, and many other groups. I think we have to say that.

The second point I want to make concerns what the Minister said about job forecasts made after the Government brought down its first Budget. Mr. Speaker, these forecasts were not made by us but by people working for the Department of Finance. That is the truth, although the Minister chooses not to interpret it that way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau, for questions or comments.

• (1310)

[English]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member this question. If there were a choice to be made between his riding and Montreal for the space agency, would he encourage the Government to place it in East End Montreal in order to create jobs there?

[Translation]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting question. We have a Leader in our Party, and when the Leader says that certain things are important to the Party, as far as I am concerned, I trust the Leader of my Party. That may not be the case for the Hon. Member as far as her Leader is concerned. I do happen to trust my Leader, and I must say that Mr. Broadbent's answer that it was better to have the space agency in Montreal's aerospace sector, is an answer I can accept.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for taking the initiative to present this motion today, condemning the Conservative Government with respect to the economic situation in Montreal East and the south western region of that city.

Mr. Speaker, usually the resolutions or motions we present in the House concern regions other than the Montreal area. Until today, motions condemning the Government tended to focus on the economic situation in the Gaspé or the Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean area or, as in the case of the Domtar Plant in early 1985 . . .

We have now reached the point where such motions concern regions that would not normally be the focus of this kind of attention on the part of parliamentarians in their concern for regional development.

Mr. Speaker, in the Montreal area the situation has become serious enough to make the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie decide to propose this debate, in order to draw the attention of the Government and to focus public opinion.

We know that Montreal East—and we have been discussing the subject for quite sometime—has 22,000 unemployed and 12,000 people on welfare, and this within a territory covering only five or six ridings.

In the south west region, unemployment is mainly due to plant shutdowns. The list is a familiar one, but I would like to recall the closing of the Gulf Refinery, La Parisette, certain sectors of Bombardier, especially those related to the railways, Vickers, and the list goes on. We are talking about plant shutdowns where men and women who have been employed by these plants for years suddenly found themselves out of a job. This AIDS virus, in the form of plant closures, has spread from Montreal East to the southwest of the city. That was pointed out last Thursday March 17, in La Presse, a Montreal newspaper, that also gave a list of businesses that have shut down: Siemens, 163 jobs lost; Coleco, 730 jobs lost; Sherwin-William, 300 jobs lost; Building Coticelli, 225 jobs lost; Redpath Sugar, 600 jobs lost; and Northern Electric, 60 jobs lost. That list is not complete since there were other closures coupled now with that great concern about a possible closure or possible contract losses at the CN Workshops of Pointe-Saint-Charles.

Mr. Speaker, the southwestern part of Montreal is now crying for help because of plant closures and because people with 20 or 25 years of service are faced with unemployment since the skills they acquired after all those years are not easily usable in other industries.

Mr. Speaker, while rumors spread about possible closures in Montreal East, we know that a Damocles sword threatens textile workers in the southwestern part of the city. This is possibly the most serious issue that faces Montreal or, I should say, the whole Canadian garment industry.

Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement with the United States will have a double-edged sequel: first it will eliminate custom duties, but then companies which produce and market high fashion clothing will find the going even rougher because most of the fabrics they use to make garments—an industry which employs tens of thousands of workers—are imported from abroad, and in most cases these fabrics are not even made in Canada because these are sought-after specialty fabrics used by a fashion-conscious industry. Canadian companies must travel the world over to find them, but under the trade agreement signed with the Americans these imported fabrics will not be allowed on the U.S. market. The point is that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), who claims that the free trade agreement with the United States will solve all our economic woes, has endorsed an agreement which does not recognize the country of origin where these products are made and which even excludes any textile product whose basic material is imported from a third country. The ultimate result is that Canadian companies, particularly those which are related to high fashion clothing—most of them in Montreal—will no longer have access to the American market. That is what we will get from the agreement which the Prime Minister of Canada has been boosting as the key to freer trade, the deal with which Canadian firms will open the doors to a market of 250 million consumers.

Among all businesses which will be affected by the free trade deal with the Americans, the clothing industry—it directly employs 110,000 people in Canada, roughly 60,000 in Quebec—will be hardest hit because as an industry it is involved in the so-called free trade agreement, yet in this particular instance it will be denied access to the U.S. market.

To make the situation somewhat less aggravating it has been decided to set a limit in the form of import quotas on these fabrics used to make clothes.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk of liberalizing trade, when we talk of an agreement that will open the U.S. market to Canadian manufacturers and when we limit the sales capacity of those businesses by restricting their ability to buy raw materials, I am wondering what kind of a trade agreement this is. We were right to say from the very beginning that if we do not have any problem with the concept of free-trade, we have considerable difficulties with the type of agreement that was signed, which is unacceptable for the Montreal region, and particularly for the garment industry.

Mr. Speaker, this Government, this Conservative Party made promises to the Canadian people during the election campaign, particularly to the textile and garment manufacturers who employ so many workers.

Mr. Speaker, during a meeting in Sherbrooke in July of 1984, right in the middle of the campaign—I have here the press releases which were then published by the Conservative Party—they talked, as can be seen on page 2, item 5 of the press relase, of rationalizing Canadian production through the use of mechanisms and remission of duties to allow Canadian manufacturers to deal with foreign manufacturers of inexpensive goods while promoting Canadian expertise in sectors like fashion, marketing, and financing of foreign-made products distributed elsewhere in the world.

Mr. Speaker, the French translation that I just read is not very good and one must read the English version to understand what it is all about since it was probably written in English in the first place. But what does that mean? The Conservative Party made a commitment with the Canadian companies importing quality textile from countries other than the United States. It would grant duty remission to reduce production costs and thus insure greater access and competitiveness on new markets. They were to benefit from Canadian duty remission not only for textile but also for clothes. That was a commitment made by the Conservative Party.

Yesterday or the day before, the Minister of Finance stated in his answers to questions by me and my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (M. Axworthy): Show us a single statement whereby the Conservative Party or the Conservative Government offered a duty remission like the one the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute is asking for today, arguing that the industry needs help because if the Free Trade Agreement signed with the United States becomes effective, there will be 65,000 jobs lost in Quebec only, of which 25,000 in the Montreal region. We cannot afford to loose 25,000 jobs in an industry employing so many women who acquired skills over the years. Surely, we cannot afford to loose those jobs. People in that industry, in that private sector which is supposed to like the Conservatives, said that they will simply close their plants in Montreal to move to the United States from where, thanks the trade deal, they will be in a position so sell in Canada anyway without having to cope with all sorts of restrictions on their textile imports which are essential to produce top quality clothes.

Mr. Speaker, if we cannot believe employers crying for help to protect Canadian men and women, I wonder exactly where we can find that knowledge of the issues and where we can find the truth.

Mr. Speaker, in a letter dated November 16, 1987, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) said to the Canadian garment industry, and I quote:

[English]

"With regard to duty remission programs the Government has long been on record as favouring these for both the apparel and the textile industry".

• (1330)

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance was saying yesterday: Give me a quote. That reminds me of the time Mr. Bourassa asked for evidence in the National Assembly in Quebec. His own colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret), said the Government had committed itself to duty remission. The $200 million a year that are involved will make the apparel industry of Canada able to compete with the Americans. But we now find ourselves in what I would call a Catch-22 situation, where the Government put us. The Americans will reject as unacceptable any duty remission our Government will grant. They will come and dictate policy to the Canadian Government and force it to maintain duties on products coming from third countries. Is that what is called political sovereignty of a country? Imagine having Washington dictate to us, Canadians who have elected our own government, the level of duties we should or could impose on products from abroad!

So, Mr. Speaker, the prospect I raised on previous occasions about the agreement the Prime Minister of Canada signed with his friend Ronald Reagan leading to a customs union sooner or later, and rather sooner than later, is exactly what we see happening in the textile and apparel sector. We are forced, under the threat of possible countervailing duties our apparel industry could be hit with by the Americans, to set our customs duties at the same level as theirs and often higher than theirs are now.

Mr. Speaker, the country of origin rule in the trade agreement normally requires, according to specific industries, between 50, 60 per cent of Canadian content to be granted access to the American market, or 30 per cent in other types; in the case of the textile industry, the percentage is null. And this is why we had to use import quotas on products, raw materials used in garments.

The Minister in charge of the Montreal area should take that situation extremely seriously because 25,000 jobs are at stake, and not only this is 25,000 jobs involving a lot of women, but this is an industry that has been for some years experiencing significant growth, thanks to programs established in the mid-70s. I think they started in 1972-73, when successive Governments in Quebec helped the industry by organizing fashion shows, so that little by little Canadian designers based in Montreal succeeded in getting a degree of international recognition that is some matter of pride for the Canadian garment industry.

Now, because of this trade agreement and the inability or impossibility of the Minister of Finance to respect his own commitments, thousands of jobs will be lost, women will become unemployed and a thriving industry will be forced to move down South to the United States.

I referred to the garment industry because it is important. We could talk about lumber because, even though the mills are obviously in the regions, the companies have their headquarters in Montreal which is the center of operations, because of its financial and commercial activities. There is presently a 15 per cent tax that the Americans have forced upon us—this Government seems to be the puppet of the White House which made us to tax ourselves. That is the big discovery of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). We are flogging ourselves. We imposed a 15 per cent tax. The Americans told us: "If you increase stumpage fees, we will allow you to lower the tax". Big deal! That was orchestrated by the Americans. In British Columbia, by increasing stumpage fees enough, they managed . . .

Mr. Valcourt: Did Quebec object to it?

Mr. Garneau: I am coming to that. Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government, the provincial Governments, had no choice, this Government had already buckled under, and not only on the principles, it had agreed. I talked about it with several provinces—we had talks with the President of the lumber industry association. Go and ask Mr. Zimmerman, you will see what he says.

Mr. Speaker, be that as it may, I do not want to rewrite history, but I think that the Conservatives will be severely blamed for that.

But let us take the example we have today. The Quebec government, under pressure from the federal Government, which in turn reacts to pressure from the White House, has raised its stumpage duties and has changed its legislation on forestry operations to force logging companies to reforest. And then, everybody goes down to Washington to ask for its blessing, because that is where evrything is settled nowadays.

There was probably a series of discussions with delegates of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) or with delegates of the Minister for International Trade who travelled to Washington, where they look at all the figures. How much does it cost to plant a spruce seedling? Nine cents, 14 cents or 15 cents? Washington insists on knowing that, because only then will they be able to decide whether to accept that the federal Government reduces the 15 per cent tax it imposed on our lumber exports.

There are limits, Mr. Speaker. Our political sovereignty in matters of provincial jurisdiction is so jeopardized that, in order to decide what to do with this tax, the Quebec government will have to produce affidavits saying that it costs 14 cents and not 9 cents to plant a small tree, a spruce seedling. The only problem is that several co-ops which started reforestation programs had financial problems because they made too low a bid. And now, Washington starts telling us that according to experiences in the US, it only costs 9 cents!

We should also keep in mind that the existing tax is compounded by the strength of the Canadian dollar and instead of being a 15 per cent tax, it is really a 23 per cent tax. Meanwhile, Washington is checking to see if it costs 9 or 14 cents to plant a spruce seedling in Canadian forests.

That is the crux of the matter, Mr. Speaker. I have spoken with people who took part in the discussions, who represent the corporate sector, and that is what they told me. I do not think that they are all liars!

But the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that in key sectors such as this one, this Government has placed Canadian businesses as well as canadian and provincial jurisdictions under U. S. rule. This is because at one point some were afraid to do the right thing and bring the matter of the 15 per cent tax on lumber before the international GATT tribunal.

Mr. Speaker, the eastern and southwestern parts of Montreal were affected by the attitude of the Federal Government. I listened to the Minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce talk to us about job increases.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening to Le Point on the CBC French language network when a university professor pointed out that the economic recovery had started before the Conservatives came to power and that all this was not the result of initiatives taken by the Government.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Three and a half years . . .

Mr. Garneau: Just wait, I can give you the date and the time of the program and you can have it out with the university professor who said that . . .

But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself stated right there in his Budget speech that the economic recovery had begun long before this Government took office.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that some Members are starting to wake up. We probably touched the right chord! Talking about how Washington humiliated them did not bring a move, but when the question is whether the economy started to grow in 1984, early in the morning of September 5, or towards the end of 1983, they get nervous!

Mr. Speaker, one fact remains: the government has a role to play. Of course, government Members can very well boast. But if they want to boast about the jobs that were created, taking all the credit to themselves, they also have to take responsibility for the negative aspects. Plants are indeed closing down, workers are losing their jobs and some Canadian men and women are experiencing a real tragedy. The government has a role to play in an economy where free enterprise is not the sole and only golden rule but where some think that the government must also offer some balance between a free and unrestrained competition and greater social justice. Government has some responsibility as well towards older employees who lose their jobs and cannot find work elsewhere. It has some responsibility towards industries like the lumber industry and, above all, the textile industry which is highly endangered because of the trade deal and because of the inability of this government to stand up in front of the Prime Minister's friend, President Reagan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) (Mr. Valcourt).

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to make a comment for the benefit of the Hon. Member who dealt with the free-trade agreement.

When we talk of free-trade, the Liberal Party says that we will lose our sovereignty. I think that Canadians and Quebecers as well as the members of this House are intelligent enough to know that when one asserts that Canada is giving up its sovereignty, one has to be logical. If we give up our sovereignty, it means that we cannot make any decision. The Leader of the Liberal Party travels throughout the country saying that we have given up the political and cultural sovereignty of our country and the irony of it all, Mr. Speaker, is that he adds: "If I am elected, I will tear up that agreement." Surely if we have lost our sovereignty, he could not tear up the agreement. Therefore his argument clearly does not make any sense and is a lot of rubbish.

The Hon. Member has tried to criticize the Free-Trade Agreement while discussing the economic future of Montreal and its impacts on the Quebec economy. As a member of the Quebec legislature he was in a position to get acquainted with the Quebec economy. I would like to put a question to him. I know that the federal Liberal party thinks that providence has conferred upon it every single quality as well as truth and a sacred right. It is difficult for them to sit in the Opposition.

Could the Hon. Member explain how come the Quebec Government, under the guidance of Premier Robert Bourassa, a good Liberal but someone who knows the Quebec economy and its strengths with his caucus and his Cabinet, how come the Quebec Liberal Party led by Mr. Bourassa supports the Free Trade Agreement contrary to the federal Liberal Party's position?

And could he also explain—since he talked a lot about textiles—the position of Jean-Guy Dionne or Eric Barry from the Canadian Textile Institute? Mr. Dionne has companies in the Beauce area and in Drummondville. Those people know the industry and support the Free Trade Agreement.

Is the federal Liberal Party saying to the Quebec Government: "Bourassa, you and Dionne are both wrong"?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's question because it will give me the opportunity to raise two others aspects that I had not touched upon in my speech.

Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Bourassa has laid down conditions which have not yet been satisfied for him to give his final agreement to free trade.

One of the first conditions laid down by Mr. Bourassa, and my colleague will remember the press releases of the Quebec Government, is that the American bill, the Omnibus Trade Bill as it is called, do exempt Canada from its protectionist measures.

Mr. Speaker, it is when the bill finally becomes law, after being passed by the U. S. House of Representatives and Senate, that we will know whether this condition will actually be met.

The second condition has to do with major retraining programs for the workers who will be affected by the trade agreement. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has already told the House that his government and his Department would not propose any special programs or additional funds to assist in the retraining of workers.

Therefore, about that aspect you mentioned, I recognize that, from the point of view of a province that wishes to export electricity, this might prove a positive thing. I do understand the arguments of the Hon. Member who is trying to show that I am contradicting the provincial government. One thing is certain Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bourassa is entitled to his opinion. I do recognize it. I have also accepted his conditions for Quebec's final acceptance of this agreement and we will see whether these conditions will actually be met by the friends of the Minister who just asked me the question. As far as I am concerned, I think the U.S. Government will never accept to make an exception for Canada in its Omnibus Trade Bill.

As for textiles, Mr. Speaker, this is a completely different matter, and the Hon. Minister's question makes me laugh, because it is not the Liberal party which proposed during its electoral campaign to offer a remission of customs duties paid not only by Canadian textile companies but also by Canadian clothing companies. We did not make that proposal. It is the present Prime Minister, the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, who promised a remission of customs duties during his campaign. That promise, Mr. Speaker, has been reiterated by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) in a letter sent to the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute to tell them that customs duties would be remitted.

Mr. Speaker, it is the Tory Government, the Progressive Conservative party that are in hot water. The Minister can ask me about Mr. Dionne or about the textile industry, that's all right. But I will reply: What is your answer to garment manufacturers? What is your answer as a Cabinet Minister to the allegations made by the industry representatives? Fifteen of them came to see us yesterday or the day before, and they told us about a potention loss of 65,000 jobs in Canada, including 25,000 in Quebec. You can refer to Mr. Dionne or some other people, but what do you answer to Mr. Dionne when you say, for example, that you will offer a remission of all the customs duties and when he asks whether it is for textile or clothing? You are stuck with your promise. It is this Government which promised the garment industry for a $200 million remission in customs duties. We on this side of the House did not make such a promise.

Then, if you have answers to give to Mr. Dionne, if you have answers to give to the garment industry, you could ask the question to your Prime Minister, to your Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to your Minister of Industry and Trade, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) because they made commitments and they run the risk of closing garment factories in Canada, by not living up to them. I could also talk about furniture manufacturing, as we talk about free trade.

Mr. Speaker, some people come and tell us that they are for free trade, for a Trade Agreement, because now they understand better that you cannot call that free trade.

We, in the Quebec caucus, had the visit of members of the Conseil du Patronat. They came to say that they are for the Trade Agreement, with some reservations. Big deal, Mr. Speaker! If I sit and you get up and ask that those who are in favour of the Bill please rise, when I am sitting, Mr. Speaker, I have a choice. I remain seated or I rise. I do not want to rise halfway up, because you will not count my vote. So this is what it is like when you are for something with reservations; I cannot understand such a position.

Once the general statement delivered, that question was put to every furniture industry representative, mostly household, and not business, and what was the answer of the household furniture industry representative? That he would close the plant to move to Virginia. So I asked him: "Why move to Virginia"? He said that it was simply because "In Virginia, I get the building free for five years and they meet 50 p. 100 of my payroll for the first year, and they also lend me the money at prime less three". He also added: "If I go to Virginia, with the free trade deal, it will cost me $6.50 an hour for labour, and with the exchange rate right now, here, it is costing me $10.50. Since Canada is going to remove its tariffs because of the Prime Minister's Free Trade Agreement, I will be able to supply the Canadian market with the furniture I make down in the states". Then I asked him: "What will happen to your workers, then?" He said: "Well, it is either moving or going bankrupt because I would no longer be able to stand competition." That is the kind of help or the kind of agreement that is supposed to create jobs, jobs and jobs all over the country.

Mr. Speaker, since this debate began, I must confess that I was quite concerned about the agreement. But the more I look at it and discuss it with people from various sectors, the more I am convinced that my leader did the right thing.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to two Liberal Members today with great interest. We have heard today what they are against, not what they are for. Both stood up and both ran off a string of what they perceive to be problems, but they offered no solutions. The Hon. Member who just spoke is a former provincial cabinet Minister. He did not speak the way he is speaking today when he was in the provincial Government.

I want to cover a couple of items about which he spoke. First, the tax on softwood lumber. The agreement was reached between the provinces and the federal Government on how to best approach this problem. There was a choice. Either the 15 per cent tax would be imposed in the United States and the Americans would collect it to pay off their deficit from our provincial resources or the provinces would receive the money for their coffers.

The Hon. Member is complaining about the tax. That tax money is going back to the provincial Government to be used in the many ways the province can use it. Five provinces have now settled the adjustment procedure on that particular tax. We are close to an agreement with the Province of Quebec.

The Hon. Member fails to mention that we solved the problem of U.S. logs coming into Canada and being processed by Quebec mills which no longer have a source of timber close to them. To keep them alive, they import logs from the United States, dress them here and send the finished lumber back. We have made arrangements that the tax is not on that lumber. He has failed to mention all these things.

The Hon. Member then talked about the furniture dealer who will move to the United States because of the free trade agreement. He failed to ask this fellow about the benefits his workers receive from the Canadian and provincial Governments and whether they will receive those in the United States. When he goes to the United States, he will find that he has to start paying the full cost for a health plan for the workers and he will have to pay the full cost of pension plans. He will have to look at the productivity he gets from those people as compared to the workers in Canada. He will then find that he has a hell of a good deal here in Canada. That same furniture dealer will be able to penetrate a much bigger market in the United States with those tariffs gone. That is the challenge for him, and I believe that he can accept that challenge.

I would be willing to wager that I travel around the country on the free trade agreement a lot more than the Hon. Member does. I find that the more people understand what the free trade agreement says, the more acceptance there is.

It is the same thing in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much time I have left to respond to the allegations of the Minister.

[English]

When I was Minister of Finance in Quebec, I had in my office one day all the presidents of the pulp and paper companies asking for government intervention to help them in a very difficult situation. The Canadian dollar was trading at $1.04 U.S. We managed—

Mrs. Mailly: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Garneau: The fact was that the Canadian dollar was not only at par but was worth more than the U.S. dollar. The U.S. market was in great difficulty.

Mr. McDermid: You don't look that old.

Mr. Garneau: It was in 1973-74. It is very good for the Government to talk about the capacity of the Canadian industry to compete with the United States when the dollar is at 70 cents or 72 cents. If and when the Canadian dollar is at par with the American dollar, all those companies that are kneeling and praying before the Government, saying that the free market should rule, will be lined up saying that the Government should do something about that. The Government will not be able to do anything because of the trade agreement it has signed. Every action of the Government will open the door to a countervailing duty.

• (1400)

Mr. McDermid: That is not true!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, those who say that it is not true . . . I may not be that old, but I am old enough to have seen both sides of the coin, which may not be the case for the Hon. Member although we may be about the same age.

What I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is that in the case of softwood lumber—because this was the Hon. Member's main question—the Canadian Government bowed to pressure, it went down on its knees before the Americans, saying: Yes, Mr. Reagan, yes, Mr. President, go ahead and tax us. And then they went down to see him, suggesting: Look now, if we levied that tax ourselves, if we went into that self-flogging exercise, would you be satisfied? And the Americans answered: Yes, you are good boys. And Mr. Reagan added: "We had a drink together in Quebec, we sang at the Grand Theatre; didn't we?" Yes, Mr. President, wildo. And they slapped that tax, and now provinces are stuck with it. They are compelled, forced to go and negotiate their stumpage fees down in the States. The Minister, I am not quite sure how deeply he is involved in that, but if he could find a solution so that our lumber industry in Quebec can stop paying that tax, to whomever they may have to pay it, and be in a position at least to compete because now with the rise in the exchange rate, the value of the tax is 23 per cent! It is partly rebated if stumpage fees increase, and the requirement to do forestry work increases. Do you know who is going to rule on that, Mr. Speaker? The White House. Now Washington will be telling Quebec: "Look boys over there, Mr. Bourassa and company, your stumpage fees are too low. That does not make sense, you are hurting us. Raise them some more." And they will come back and raise them somewhat, and then they will ask the gentlemen in Washington: "under forestry work, 9 cents, 10 cents per small tree planted, is that acceptable to you?

If the answer is no, they will have to start over again. And finally, even at 14 cents per small tree, there will still be 3 per cent left on the Brian Mulroney tax.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). It makes me laugh when I hear those Liberals who are responsible for everything that ails our country. You know, we could talk indefinitely about Montreal East. I was born there. Our family of 15 children lived in Montreal East, in my riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. I could talk about that area for a long time, Mr. Speaker. Conditions have been deteriorating for twenty years in Montreal East. All plants in that area were put out of business, but that happened under the Liberal federal Government. Of course, one of those most responsible is the Member who represents the eastern part of Montreal, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie who moved today's motion. He was there and he is one of those most responsible for the terrible mess Montreal East is in. Today, he moved a motion condemning the Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, I can prove it, and I hope Canadians will realize what I mean: In four years, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie rose in his seat three times. Three times in four years!

Mr. Valcourt: From when until when?

Mr. Desrosiers: And, Mr. Speaker, believe it or not, when he did rise he talked about housing. He never mentioned the closing of three refineries in Montreal East, where hundreds of thousands of jobs where lost. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie never rose in the House to tell his colleagues, other Members and Ministers: "There is a problem in Montreal East. We are losing our jobs. Men with families don't know where to turn. We have had all kinds of problems. Plants are moving away from Montreal East to Ontario." The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie never rose in his seat. He never had the courage to tell his Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Prime Minister, you are destroying Montreal East. What are you going to do for men with as many as 10, 12 or 15 children to support?

Mr. Speaker, the population of Montreal East, as you know, is mainly made up of low income earners, people who need support and help from the Government. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) never stood up for them. No! He kept silent, submissively following his Prime Minister. Besides, he always got elected because he rode on his Prime Minister's coat-tails.

Mr. Speaker, you know that hearing those people who are responsible for the present situation makes me laugh. You read yourself in the CREEM report, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Pichette and all the unions, the employers and all the people concerned suggested that things have been deteriorating for 20 years in Montreal East.

This appears clearly in the report and you read it, Mr. Speaker.

We were elected because the Canadian citizens were fed up. It was the same thing in my area, Mr. Speaker. My fellow citizens in Montreal East saw the light and realized they had enough of those absentee Members of Parliament and Ministers. They never listened . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of Order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I knew how little inclined to openness the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was but what about the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve . . . I would like to know to which page of the Pichette report he was referring when he said "20 years". Because you are never in the House I must remind you that we must speak the truth here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! This is more a question of debate than a point of order. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: You know, Mr. Speaker, these people hate to be disturbed and they try to interrupt just to play for time. We know that the House of Commons costs a lot of money. Despite of that they are loafing around all day long. It costs a fortune to run the House and I do not see why we should lose its valuable time.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, in Montreal East and elsewhere people realized that radical change was needed. They voted for a change and I can understand why the Liberals are hurt. It is terribly painful.

But things change in this country. Canada never did so well since we came to power.

I represent the riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, Mr. Speaker, and I am very pleased that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) lived there for a while.

My Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, is the greatest Prime Minister ever and he will go down in history as such.

As a former resident in my riding, the Prime Minister is well aware of the situation and I can assure you that we spared no effort.

Easter time reminds me, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that just like Jesus who chased the money changers out of the temple, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) are chasing out much evil across the country. Canadian skies are getting brighter and we will know better days. We have always been left in the shade.

As you know, being a Liberal is like embracing a religion or living in a religious sect. In their mind, no one but a Liberal can lead the Government, it is almost like a dogma. But let me tell you that there are good Liberals and bad ones. Some of them can be good. But a Liberal, Mr. Speaker, is in a sense a different human being. They are different. They act somewhat strangely, they tend to be liars and are wicked people. They showed their wickedness again today, considering how much we have done for Montreal East since 1984. What they say makes no sense at all.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a few examples of our involvement. First of all, there was a company, Daoust, a skate manufacturer on Hochelaga Street in my riding, which had hardly some 40 employees left. If I am not mistaken, it went bankrupt. Mr. Speaker, a high-technology company was immediately set up in the riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, in Montreal East, Entreprises Fournel. This company created hundreds of jobs and it just started. It invested hundreds of millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, and the Government of Canada also supported this business with some grants.

I hear the Liberals talk about Vickers, Mr. Speaker, and all the journalists ... There are bad journalists, and there are good ones, as you know some yourself. Some are good, some are not as good, some say the truth and others say nothing at all. Some of them never talk about the Conservative Party. If they were to say that we do good things, they would recoil in embarrassment! There is a red tinge to their reporting, Mr. Speaker. I was listening earlier on to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, for whom I have a great deal of respect. He is not a bad fellow, and he has a certain amount of talent but he is simply with the wrong people. He does have quite a lot going for him.

What he said earlier, Mr. Speaker, is that someone had said this or that on Le Point. But Le Point, Mr. Speaker, and the CBC to my knowledge, are still managed by a bunch of Grits. I have not heard of Tories being put in there. The Grits had long term mandates and we still have to bear with them. So not always hearing good news about the Conservative Party is something to be expected. The truth can be scary for some people.

In Montreal East, Mr. Speaker, Bombardier was put back on track. In April, the 2,000 employees will be back to work for several years. This is a corporation which the Liberal Party had completely neglected. There were hardly a few hundreds employees left. Now the 2,000 employees are going to work for Bombardier which is located in Montreal East. I hope that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie knows at least that Bombardier is located in Montreal East and that the Canadian Government has just invested $100 million to have those 2,000 employees work in that company.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) had just announced that $275 million would be granted to Montreal East. The Liberals have never done that. When have they done anything for Montreal East? Never! And we are talking about $275 million. But now, they try to make us believe that there is not much new money in these $275 million. They are such liars, Mr. Speaker, that they are liable to say anything. Those $275 million, Mr. Speaker, are invested in projects which are part of scheduled programs. It's true. Those millions could also be earmarked for the whole region, but the Minister gave an order and said: No, you are going to take that money and set it aside for Montreal East. That's what he did. Therefore it is new money, Mr. Speaker. They say that the money was already there, but it wasn't there for Montreal East, it was there for the whole Quebec region. But they are afraid to say it.

We are told that the Minister has just announced the allocation of $5 million in totally new money. I hope the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie is aware of that fact. There are $35 million in new money for Montreal East.

Mr. Speaker, talking about Vickers, I would like to explain something that Canadians may not understand because they don't know. We hear time and again on television, on the radio, everywhere, that Vickers is going to shut down, that Vickers has shut down, that Vickers is closing shop. It is a pack of lies, Mr. Speaker. Vickers operates at 85 per cent, that is its whole industrial part. But reporters dare not say it, because they are too embarrassed, and the Liberals even less. There is a small portion of Vickers, known as the marine section, Marine Industries, that is now owner of the three dockyards, Davie-Lauzon near Quebec City, Marine Industries in Sorel, and Vickers in Montreal. It decided that shipbuilding would be carried out in Quebec City, and, although it is not cut and dried yet, it will be sharing out the work. But the Vickers plant in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, works at full capacity. We make all the submarines for the U.S., Mr. Speaker. We do that in Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, at the Vickers plant. The National Defence Department just announced the allocation of a contract for millions of dollars for the production of armoured vehicles. Again, this is not in Montreal West, but in Montreal East, at the Vickers plant, Mr. Speaker. We will make armoured vehicles for National Defence. We just gave millions again!

Mr. Speaker, from 1984 to 1987, under the Conservative Government, 104,000 new permanent jobs were created in Montreal. Under the Liberals, from 1980 to 1984, 4,000 jobs were lost in Montreal East only. From 1984 to 1987 ...

An Hon. Member: Yes, that's true.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, more jobs have been created ... Listen to that, Mr. Speaker, it is important that you should know that in case someone would ask you. From 1984 to 1987, more jobs have been created in Montreal than in Sweden, Austria, Belgium, Portugal, Ireland, Finland. Isn't that great!

An Hon. Member: Just in Montreal!

Mr. Desrosiers: In Montreal only.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we hear the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, the self-appointed champion of all the causes . . . I don't know if you have noticed, but as of the moment he sat in the Opposition, he discovered he had a special skill; he rises on any issue. Just about everybody and everything. Women. Orphans. He is involved in almost every fight, but he achieves nothing because he sits in the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, when you are in Opposition, you are not in power. I know that at some point he had created a sort of Committee for the survival of Montreal East. The idea was great, but I thought it was somewhat daring on the part of a man who was responsible for the mess created in Montreal East in the first place and who can find both the time and means—it takes someone with some kind of gall to create a Committee for the survival of Montreal East when you are totally responsible for Montreal East to go to pot. It is frightening! It is unbelievable!

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have a Government which listens to Canadians, and I do not mean only those from the Montreal area. I am talking about the Montreal area because my riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve is situated in Montreal East. If I have a little more to say about the situation there, it is because it is close to my heart. The constituents I happen to meet are well aware of what the Conservative Government is doing for them. They were having hardship. They had been completely abandoned for 20 years by various Liberal Governments. Completely abandoned. Mr. Speaker, people in my riding tell me: I could never get to see my Member of Parliament. It took me six years before I could meet him and it in a passage way. He was never available, always too busy. He had too many deals to take care of, beside looking after his riding and Montreal East.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to show you a little table to demonstrate to you and our fellow Canadians . . . A picture, they say, is worth a thousand words. So is a table. In the area of job creations, Mr. Speaker, between 1980 and 1984, under a Liberal Government . . . I hope that the camera will make a close-up of this. I will not bother you too long, gentlemen, and I know that you can make a nice close-up of my little table, so that all Canadians can see. Here, under a Liberal Government, from 1980 to 1984, job creation. Zero in on this, a little black line which exceeds a little the normal line. From 1984 to 1987, see the beautiful and fine square. It is a pity it is not blue; they used black, I do not know why. Maybe because it will show better on T.V.

Mr. Speaker, we have to tell the facts to Canadians, and these are the facts. You have the Conservative Government on one side and the Liberal, the red Government on the other.

Today, Mr. Speaker, Canadians must know the truth and I thank the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for introducing such a motion. It is a pleasure for us because it gives us the opportunity to inform Canadians, to tell them the truth, to show them what our extraordinary ministers have done. We have a government like no government has ever been in Canada and the economy has never been so vibrant. When I visit my riding, Mr. Speaker, everybody tells me: "Mr. Desrosiers, the election of the Conservatives has been a boon. It is wonderful! Things never looked so good". Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that I should conclude my remarks. I will yield the floor to other speakers. Before I sit down, I simply want to tell you how proud I am to be a Conservative, how proud I am to have as Prime Minister the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney and to have this extraordinary group of competent Ministers who are so generous for Canadians. I am proud to belong to this Parliament and you can be sure I will be back after the next elections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will begin questions and comments with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You just saw why everybody in Montreal is dissatisfied. You just saw why after three and a half years of Conservative Government, the Official Opposition must put a motion forward to force the Government to deal with matters of interest to Montreal. You just saw a vivid illustration of Michel Vastel's editorial on the Lackeys. Now, you can understand why the Government didn't choose that kind of people as ministers or as parliamentary secretaries. You just saw nobody speaks for Montreal. You have just seen why Mayor Doré is furious at the federal Government's attitude, why Laurent Picard, who is not a Liberal and who has been commissioned by this Government to study matters related to Montreal, said that the Conservative Government has abandoned not only Montreal East, but all of Montreal. You have just seen the incompetence and inaction of a Member who does not even know his own riding. How can he talk about Vickers? He knows very well that Jean-Guy Beaubien, president of the union at Vickers, calls him the "Parc Lafontaine pee-wee". He has no contact with the grass-root people, he prefers to stay in Laval. You can see why Mr. MacDonald, a competent man, a Minister in Quebec, said he was tired of being taken for a fool, tired of that crazy talk from the Conservative Government? When the Hon. Member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desrosiers)—and I could say the former Member for Hochelaga because I can tell you that he is finished as a member and he is not in the House very often anyway— when he says that, according to the the Pichette Report, his Government gave $35.210 million, I wonder why he did not fight if he had really talked to his voters and knew their needs because the major problems are in Hochelaga and Montreal East. I am not asking him to fight here because when you are in power you fight from within your caucus if you are strong enough. That is the reason why I only made three speeches as he said earlier. When you are in power you fight in your caucus. Why fight? The Member did not raise his finger to make sure that workers at Vickers in Montreal East get a pre-retirement package.

And if the Member knew his voters and had followed the recommendations made by the survival Committee, if he had talked to people at Bombardier, he would know that they unanimously wanted the Government to make arrangements for a pre-retirement package and these funds should mainly have gone to people in Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. I would also like to know where he was when the fight was going on, when the people at Bombardier wanted to see the orders for locomotives the former member Serge Joyal was able to get without having to organize demonstrations on Parliament Hill. Was he spending too much time in Laval, where he lives, instead of taking care of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve?

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, you can see how nasty those Liberals can be! First of all, I do not live in Laval but in Montreal East. Secondly, to answer the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who asked me whether I had fought for Bombardier workers, I did nothing else. That is all I did and I can tell him that any action was the result of my intervention and that of Conservative Members from Montreal East. There are four of us. That is why our Prime Minister, our Minister and all other members of the Cabinet replied. We did not bail out Bombardier just for the fun of it!

I want to tell the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, first of all, that I find him very arrogant when he says I was not given an appointment as minister or parliamentary secretary, and I should explain why. Mr. Speaker, for the first time ever, the Conservative Government represents people from all walks of life. This is a first in Canadian history. Within the Government, all disciplines, even the performing arts, are represented. That has never happened before. In the House of Commons we now have two members of the Artists' Union, Madam Deputy Speaker and myself. There are accountants, lawyers, architects, veterinarians . . . For the first time in our history, the Conservative Government truly represents our society. I have nothing against lawyers, but I can tell you that, formerly, almost all Members were lawyers. Until a few years ago, there were only lawyers, and perhaps they did not always realize what it meant to be poor. Luckily, today this Conservative Government is represented by a lot of people from every discipline, and this is for the better for our Canadian citizens.

As you know, the petty attacks by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, Mr. Speaker, do not change the truth. I realize it is hurting them. But the truth is we were not responsible for destroying Montreal East, they were. The Liberal Party caused Montreal East to have horrendous problems. This is like a jigsaw puzzle. And our Conservative Government is now picking up the pieces one by one, putting the puzzle back together. But that puzzle they destroyed, and this is my point to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. He should be ashamed of putting forward that motions that suggest the Conservative Government did nothing for the Montreal area. Mr. Speaker, this is tremendous cause for shame. I hope he will go to confession—the time is right, since Easter is coming.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, our colleague has just mentioned that the Union des artistes is represented in the House, and he is a member, I believe. In that case I would like to know what representations this Hon. Member has made in his own caucus with regard to matters which concern artists very closely. Some Members in his own caucus have argued for granting artists recognition under the Income Tax Act. There has been talk of maintaining . . .

—capital cost allowance that would allow for the financing of films. I would like to know what he did with respect to the film distribution Bill, as a Member and an artist in Quebec and, particularly in Montreal, where the major film industry is, where the Le Déclin de l'Empire américain saw the light of day, and was so wonderful, and Un Zoo La Nuit, and all the other films that are produced through incentive measures and risk capital. What did he say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to promote a film industry in Quebec and in Canada?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), I should say that that I do not recall the Hon. Member raising that matter in his speech. However, I will grant him 30 seconds, if he wants . . .

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to say that I discharged my duties as a member and I sat with the Hon. Member on the Communications and Culture Committee. I think that we have done interesting work with regard to copyright and many other issues. However, this is not the subject matter under consideration today since we are dealing with the motion of the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart). I think I will stick to that.

However I will be pleased to answer the points she raised in other circumstances. Today, I think that we should consider the motion of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mrs. Dewar).

[English]

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to wonder this afternoon whether there is a little bit of the spirit of Friday or is it some sense of theatre in this House? Certainly, some of the debate has not been entirely on the issues of the motion. I think we all at times like to hear great praise of friends and people we know, but I think what we would really like to address this afternoon is an economic question.

I guess some of the concerns we have are in terms of the economy, particularly. I think it is interesting that the opposition motion should be brought forward at this time because it is symbolic that we are celebrating the anniversary of what has been known as the Shamrock Summit in Quebec City. To the dismay of many Irish people in this country, St. Patrick's Day is not just the celebration of Ireland and St. Patrick any longer but the planting of the seeds of an agreement that is really going to undermine our country in the future. I guess that is something about which we are really concerned.

When we look at the economic policies of the Government, and watch what has happened, the erosion that has taken place, and when we talk about the industrial complex in Canada, we are concerned. We have seen time and time again in study after study the need for readjustment programs. If the Government is serious about implementing this dreadful trade agreement, then we should be looking at readjustment programs. We have a Government which two years ago promised adjustment programs for older workers, but we still have not seen anything like it. Every time we ask a question in the House, we are told: "It is coming, it is coming". Two years later it is still coming. I am concerned about that because I represent a community that has been deeply hurt by many of these things.

Lapp Insulators was bought by an American company. The employees of that company begged the Government to look at their financial plan and their business plan. They said they could continue to operate but, if a foreign company came in, they predicted that in two years the company would be closed. What has happened is that the company is closed. The Government had its American friends come in and buy the company, then two years later it was closed. The Americans eliminated their competition, and now they are back in the United States filling under-utilized space in the United States. I think that kind of thing is very serious. I hear the Government say it has confidence in Canadian workers. I certainly have not seen it demonstrate any confidence in Canadian workers when it will not even allow them to to put in a fair bid and have it recognized as such. That is exactly what happened in Hamilton.

I have also been looking at what has happened in the Firestone plant. We had exactly what the Hon. Member said earlier, the most efficient workers and the cost of unit labour less than the United States, but the decision was made to fill an under capacity factory in the United States. These are the kinds of things that really do—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have a lot of sympathy for the Hon. Member who is new among us, but, she started by complaining about the lack of relevancy. However, from the start, she has been talking about Hamilton when I believe the issue before us is Montreal East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a question of privilege, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: The Hon. Member wanted to correct her colleague, but we are not talking about Montreal East. The motion is about the whole Montreal area. Had she been following the debate, she would know better.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

[Translation]

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, yes I am talking about Hamilton, but it is because the situation in Hamilton is quite similar to the one in Montreal East. It is very important to know that.

[English]

It concerns me somewhat when we look at our cities and we see the bankruptcy of ideas and vision of the Government when it does not see the ability to put an economic strategy in place in order to have all our cities healthy. It is important that we look at what has caused some of these decisions. Many of the causes have been the result of government policy.

We have a Government that looks only at what the markets will be and at what the bottom line will be. It is using workers, people and communities as commodities that can be moved around. This is not the kind of vision that we have for the country or for the cities of our country.

When I talk of Hamilton today, I talk of Hamilton from the point of view of what has happened to workers in that community. I talk of Montreal East and the Montreal region when I visit my relatives and friends. It is the city of my birth. I understand the great transition that has gone on in Montreal and the terrible things that have happened to it. They have happened because this is an industrialized sector of our economy. This is true whether we talk of Vancouver, Halifax, Montreal, Quebec City, Toronto or Hamilton. This is an industrialized sector of our economy that is being totally eroded. We are entering a trade agreement that guarantees there will be more erosion. This is of great concern to all Canadians.

When we look at this we must recognize what has happened in Quebec. I was interested to hear the comments of the Hon. Member who spoke before me when he referred to the paper industry. I am old enough to remember when the dollar was a dollar and the pulp and paper industry was in very deep trouble. I remember when the American markets became very delicate. We know that there is now research going on in the pulp and paper industry that will make it possible for the deep south to be able to manufacture a lot of its paper if the market is such and as our dollar is going up. The present Government refuses to lower the interest rates. We know that another Canadian market is in jeopardy.

When we talk about the trade agreement that is supposed to be so good for the East End of Montreal and for the manufacturing parts of our country, what we really need to talk about is what are the implications of the trade agreement. The implications of the trade agreement seem to get lost when the Government debates that subject. The Government attempts to defend it by saying that we will have access to the American market. It goes both ways. We have very little access to that market and there are heavy transportation costs involved. The Americans wish to be treated by national standards in our financial institutions. It is not reciprocal. It will put the whole industrialized part of our economy in jeopardy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this motion is very difficult. It is not really the motion which is difficult, but the situation. The economic problems in Montreal East are not new; they go back ten years.

Mr. Fontaine: Twenty years!

Ms. Dewar: We have been going through a major crisis in the last ten years. In my opinion, both the Liberal Government and the Conservative Government are to blame for this situation.

Indeed, the energy policy of Trudeau Government is largely to blame for the disappearance of our petrochemical industry. The Liberal Members were silent at that time, including the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

In 1984, the Conservatives took over and disaster struck, beginning with the disappearance of the Gulf refinery. In Montreal East, there are now 22,000 unemployed and 9,400 welfare recipients, and there have been 7,500 lay-offs in five years. Many committees were created. The Prime Minister appointed a Minister responsible for Montreal. The province, the city of Montreal, the employers and the unions all worked together to find solutions to the employment problem. The city of Montreal delivered by contributing $90 million, and so did the province of Quebec by promising $106 million, but, disappointingly, the federal Government only allocated $35 million dollars in new money. However, the Government is generous in its hesitations. For instance, the Government promised a space agency in the throne speech. On February 23, the Minister responsible said that the agency would be set up in 1988. On March 10, Mr. de Cotret stated that there would be no agency. On March 16, the Prime Minister announced in Baie-Comeau that there would indeed be one.

I gave this example in order to illustrate the lack of courage of the Government and its inability to make decisions. The same thing happens practically with every issue: banking centres, railways, etc.

The 31,400 unemployed in Montreal East are waiting for some action from the Government, and not for more pussyfooting. Montrealers want the prosperity back in their area and they do not want to be mesmerized by election promises. This indecisiveness on the part of the Government is bad for private investments. The Government has to make decisions, announce them and carry them out. The Prime Minister said that the development of Montreal is a priority. We ask him today, on behalf of the 31,400 unemployed, to prove it by making the necessary decisions.

It is not difficult to understand how depressed the unemployed are.

[English]

It is the type of thing that takes the spirit of a community. It says to people: "You really do not count. I will talk to my friends. I will make my deals with the business community but I am not going to worry about what is happening. I will make speeches so that they will elect me, but I really do not have any sense of commitment to say that these people count and are valuable".

This type of thing is happening right across the country. Millions of dollars are being spent on a sales pitch to say that we are getting into a good trade agreement with the United States. When we have set up panels and have asked for government Members to participate, they refuse to show up. During International Women's Week we had such a panel. We could not get one Conservative Member to appear on the panel. I say "we" collectively as Canadians. I am not speaking as a politician now, I am speaking as a member of the community of Canada.

The Government is allowing one of the greatest cities in the country to be undermined because it has no economic strategy. When we consider the type of programs that have gone on as well as the recommendations of a certain committee's report, we see that the recommendations are strong and valid. The recommendations in the report were formed as a result of listening to a cross-section of the community of Montreal East. When we look at those recommendations, we see that they are a valid strategy for economic development. They look at the skills that are in that community, and at how the future of that community can develop. They take the resources that are there and can be implemented. But there has to be some government help and commitment.

One sees the type of commitment that has been given by the City of Montreal. Certainly the Mayor of Montreal has made it a priority. He recognized the high level of unemployment and how important it is to get those people to work. He asked for readjustment programs for older workers which the Government kept saying that it was going to do, but it has refused to do. When one looks at the commitment given by the Government of Quebec and then one sees a measly $35 million from the federal Government for an area that is in dire need, it is a disgrace. When people say that they have a commitment to the future of this country, we certainly have to look at the consequences of their policies.

When one hears Mr. Parizeau and other people talk about how good the free trade agreement is for the Province of Quebec, it is very important for those of us who feel strongly about having a country that is total to recognize the great danger of that trade agreement the Province of Quebec, as far as tying its economy into the American economy and ignoring the western part of Canada. It is important that we look at the long term effects.

I am not sure the present Government has the capacity of being able to look at the long term. It always seems to be looking at short term ad hoc decisions. For example, today there is a space agency, tomorrow there is not; the next day perhaps we do, but we are not quite sure where we are going to have it. If we take those things seriously and look at the long term for the building of this nation, and building it with a strong economy, we must look at what is happening in the east end of Montreal and recognize that the erosion taking place there will be even greater if there is not some built-in infrastructure to protect that economy now. It is very serious.

I know there has been a lot of hilarity in the Chamber this afternoon. If we were one of the 31,000 who are unemployed, we would not be laughing quite as hard and making such fun and jokes at each other. It is very serious. This part of the city had good manufacturing, textile workers, refineries, and massive employment. Now there is a whole readjustment that has to take place.

If this is the manner in which this Government is addressing readjustment, then goodness help us all when we get into a program with 500,000 jobs going down the drain. We have to look seriously at what is happening. This is a good motion to have before us. It a microcosm of what we will be looking at across the country in the future. If we are not willing to put adjustment programs in place, if we are not willing to look at the communities and what the grass roots skills are, and what their development is, then we will not be willing to look at any future economic strategy.

One can talk about getting "this in my riding, or this in the next riding", but I hope that some day we will get a New Democratic Government that understands what economic strategy and planning is to put some priorities on where people can work; to put some priorities on what is possible for people to have dignity and equality of life; to recognize the heritage and the legacy that we have in the City of Montreal, where the east end of that city is going down the drain and the Government is blinking its eyes and saying that it is not sure and it is changing its mind every day.

It seems to me that we must look at an economic strategy, and listen to committees which have made some very sensible recommendations, which have come from the grass roots, whereby people would have the ownership of their own future. If the Government were willing to implement some of those recommendations, we would all live better, be healthier, and see the east end of Montreal come back with the old vitality that it had in days of yore.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Levis (Mr. Fontaine) on a question or comment.

Mr. Fontaine: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to thank the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who anticipates that my comments will be interesting. That probably shows his good taste. I would like to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar) who, in passing, took a long time before actually getting to talk about Montreal and Montreal East.

The Hon. Member told us that it would take a strategy, a sensible strategy, a strategy for the future. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that these Members are constantly using rhetorics about everything, and are always suggesting theories and strategies, and speaking about the future and sensible things to do. But from a practical point of view, where were these members of the Socialist Party when we passed Bill C-22 which created 1,300 jobs in Montreal?

That legislation concerns Montreal and also Montreal East. It deals with practical matters, because it provides for a capital investment of $700 millions that will create 1 300 jobs. And you did not support the Government position on that issue. I am also wondering about your stand today on the Free trade issue. How can you argue ... I wish you would take some advise from your colleague, Madam. How can you claim to be a spokeperson for Quebec while the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, the Opposition leader, the leader of the Parti Québécois, big guns such as Government Ministers in Quebec and also big guns from the Opposition party in the Province, not to mention the 57 conservative members of Parliament from Quebec who know that Quebec entrepreneurs sell currently for 20 billion dollars a year to the United States ... We want to secure a market for those entrepreneurs, and you have the gall to oppose Free trade, and even more the gall to tell Quebecers:

Well, are you going to lose markets worth $20 billion by refusing access to the U.S. market? That is what you are doing with free trade. You are telling petro-chemical industries in Montreal that you do not care about the 15,000 jobs that exist right now and could be increased if we increase our exports to the United States. You fail to recognize that refineries will considerably increase their turnover. Right now, these refineries spend perhaps $2 a barrel to refine the crude oil that they import. Then, they must spend 80 cents a barrel to export their product to the U.S. Are you aware that the Free Trade Agreement will lower their production costs by practically one hundred per cent? Are you serious when opposing free trade? Because, in fact, you are against our refineries selling their value added products to the Americans. Is that how serious you are? Then you should be a little more practical.

Are you also serious when you ignore the major engineering consulting firms located in the city of Montreal? Don't you know that Montreal has three of the five largest engineering consulting firms in the world? And you want to deny them access to the U. S. market in the future? Do you want the red tape to go on at the American border to prevent Canadian professionals from working in that country? Is that what you want? Canadians have to know that this is what you want.

And I will now ask you: You said that our Government only had short term solutions. It shows a lack of seriousness on your part and that of your Party and, particularly in your case, an obvious lack of knowledge of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret having to interrupt the Hon. Member, but there are three other Hon. Members who wish to speak.

[English]

I will give the floor to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) who may wish to comment on the comments of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Ms. Dewar: The Hon. Member has put many statements and not very many questions, but I will attempt to respond to the statements. One thing is really important to look at. When looking at the economic development strategy, and looking practically, the Hon. Member obviously does not know that in relation to the infrastructure of cities across this country, particularly in Montreal, a study has been done that shows with investment from three levels of government, 64,000 jobs can be created. Those jobs certainly would help.

Sometimes I feel that the free trade agreement has not been read by members of the Government, because the Hon. Member does not seem to understand that in the free trade agreement there is nothing to prevent countervail against Canadian exports. I wish the government Members would understand that there is no protection against countervail.

When the Opposition asked for an amendment to Bill C-22 to guarantee research jobs in Quebec, the Government said: "No, just trust us". We all know where the synergy or the critical mass of research by pharmaceutical companies is done. It will not happen because the Government did not have the strength to demand it in the agreement.

Perhaps the Hon. Member should take a quiet moment some time, when he is not making statements in the House, and read a little about the agreement. He would find some interesting information.

Mr. Fontaine: You don't like my statements.

Ms. Dewar: I love your statements. What we really need to do is inform ourselves a little more. If he did so, he would find out that maybe the province of Quebec will suffer very seriously.

I feel that our role is to try to protect the future of the country before the present Government gives it all away.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I must say to the Hon. Member that her speech about Montreal was very weak and that her colleague who is responsible for Quebec, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), must have misinformed her on the subject. It is clear that the NDP does not defend the interests of Montreal.

Since we are talking about Montreal, I will ask the same question: If an NDP Government were elected tomorrow, would it give the space agency to Montreal?

Mrs. Mailly: Half in Montreal and half in Ottawa.

Mr. Malépart: Secondly, would an NDP Government do as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said concerning the frigate contract that has been entirely awarded to New-Brunswick? Would it reopen the contract and give two frigates to Quebec? What would it do? These are two important issues on which the NDP must take a clear-cut position because there is already a contradiction. The questions therefore are the following: Would you support Montreal for the space agency? Secondly, would you reopen the frigate contract?

[English]

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I think that our leader has been very clear on where a space agency would go. Certainly there has been no upset in our caucus on the discussion. He has been very clear that he thought the space agency should go to Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Dewar: I listened to him. I have confidence in my leader.

I guess what concerns me very much is that when we are making economic decisions, how do we make them? Do we make them on who has the loudest voice in their riding or on what is best for the country in total? I think it is important that we start to look at that.

Mr. Valcourt: What about Cassidy?

Ms. Dewar: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has clearly and publicly apologized. He said that he made a very bad mistake. When he announced it, it was certainly not a party policy that the New Brunswick frigates would be moved from New Brunswick to Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Dewar: It is not a surprise. Obviously people do not read the newspapers if they have not heard that.

Mrs. Mailly: Quit while you are ahead.

Ms. Dewar: It was quite evident, and he said it 24 hours later.

I think it is really important for us to be looking at where our strengths are in economic development. I think there is a lot of hope for the east end of Montreal. However, the way in which present policies are going, it is being eroded.

Let us look at the amount of unemployment and the people who are on social services. It is all very well for us to make cracks at each other, but in that process the lives of people are brought into question. Montreal East was a very vital community over the years. It was seen as the heaviest, most intense labour and employment sector.

If we cannot bring about a restructuring of that economy, we might as well give up on any kind of economic planning and development. I say that to the Government because it has been very unsuccessful in being able to put anything in place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate will continue with the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, how can we possibly give an overview of such an important question in just a few minutes. First of all, I want to repeat what I have always maintained: it is as a result of the great social conscience of our colleague from Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that we could have this debate today. I remember meeting him when he became a Member of Parliament here in Ottawa, although I knew him before. But as of 1979, with the whole team of the Members from Montreal East, in the company and under the leaderchip of Monique Bégin, to whom I want to pay special homage here, meetings were held every week, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the economy of Montreal East, and this for many years. They even signed letters to the Prime Minister of Canada, and I can assure you it is very unusual for ministers to sign a letter asking for certain things to be done, although we all know the problems we were facing at the time.

So I think the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie does not have to be told by anyone in this House what to do, not by our new-found saviours in the New Democratic Party and not by those who want to attack us. I know and can testify to his record and his concerns.

What troubles me as a Montrealer is a short sentence in an outstanding article by Miville Tremblay, where he says, and I am sorry, but this is the quote: "We certainly no longer expect anything from the federal Government". Another quote: "The Conservatives have not only given up on Montreal East but on the entire city ".That was a quote from Mr. Picard.

I would like to ask the House to think about this statement, because under Mr. Trudeau's Government, we had Members who were the envy of practically the entire caucus. No one can deny the determination of a Marc Lalonde, a Monique Bégin, a Gérard Pelletier, a Serge Joyal and an André Ouellet, and I refer to their determination to take care of the needs of Montreal. This was going on every week at the meetings of the Quebec Caucus. I was there regularly since I was chairman of the caucus, and I know it was one of our major concerns.

What saddens me is that Members of the House do not understand that there are differences in Canada. Jean Marchand, one of the most dynamic Quebecers, and nobody can deny that, sat in this House and always said that Montreal was the economic heart of the Province of Quebec. It is so different from the other provinces! But in Quebec we know very well that when Montreal is in the doldrums the whole province experiences difficulties.

So that is the purpose of the motion introduced by my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie, this is how we try to draw the Government's attention to make decisions.

I know that the world of politics is not for the weak-hearted. There is always some rivalry among the various regions. Only the NDP Members cannot understand that. They are centralizers. With them, everything has to come from Ottawa. This is why their Party will never respond to the aspirations of Quebecers here in Ottawa, because it is a centralizing Party.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the situation is getting serious, and I suggest the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) ought to listen to what I am saying. I am saying that the situation is getting serious when Quebec, the Province of Quebec, the Government of Quebec has to hire a lobbyist to get its fair share of federal contracts. One thing I can tell you is that we did have difficulties during the 1980-84 period, and the economic situation was not all that promising. Yet, in spite of that we never had as many complaints as we have now from people in Montreal. We never did get as many complaints as we are now receiving from people in Montreal East. However, Mr. Speaker, when a provincial government is hiring lobbyists as the Quebec government is doing because it cannot find anyone to uphold the vital interests of Montreal, the problem is indeed very serious.

I would have liked to speak at length of this issue, because I made lengthy preparations and I take my work seriously . . . However, my colleagues from Montreal—Sainte-Marie, and Laval-des-Rapides discussed that issue extensively. I merely wanted to add that the situation is urgent and that we have to understand what Montreal represents for Quebec. Conditions are not similar in other provinces.

So, I thank you, but we will certainly have more to say on the subject later on, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I would like to mention that some people have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, including friends of the Government, Mr. Péladeau, everybody's friend, a good friend of mine, who went as far as staging a publicity campaign that cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to make the single point about the spatial character of Montreal with the slogan "Montréal, c'est spatial". When will that be understood? Montreal is a space industry center as other regions are automobile industry centers. The space agency should belong to Montreal. Thanks for being so patient, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 3.01 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 21, 1988

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

THE LATE HONOURABLE RICHARD BELL, P.C., Q.C.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State (Seniors): Mr. Speaker, it is with both sadness and great sorrow that I learned early this morning of the death last evening of a former Member of this House and Cabinet colleague, the Honourable Richard Bell.

My personal friendship with Dick Bell was firmly established over 40 years ago and continued to grow in strength year after year.

He served with distinction in the Cabinet of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

As Hon. Members know, Dick Bell was a totally dedicated parliamentarian who served Canada with compassion, honesty, and indeed with a great deal of vigour.

He will be sorely missed as a friend and confidant, and on behalf of the Government of Canada and myself I extend to his wife Ruth and daughter Judith heartfelt condolences.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I would like to express words of sorrow on the passing of the Honourable Dick Bell. He had a very distinguished career, beginning as a secretary to the Minister of National Revenue in the Conservative Government of the 1930s. He continued as a private secretary to the Leader of the Opposition, also in the late 1930s and 1940s.

He went on to serve with distinction as a member of this House and as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

I remember him as a person of good humour and goodwill, who never let his very strong commitment to the Conservative Party interfere with his very good relationships that he had with people on all sides of the House.

He was also a very distinguished citizen of Ottawa, serving in many charitable endeavours. He will be sorely missed, not only by his friends and colleagues in the Conservative Party, but by his many friends who remember him in the House of Commons and in the city of Ottawa.

I am pleased to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs and Minister of State for Seniors (Mr. Hees) in expressing sincere sympathy and condolences to the family of the late Mr. Bell. He will be sorely missed in this city and this country.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it was with sadness that this morning we learned of the death of Dick Bell. He served this House and Canadians well for many years. He was a crucial player in the development of the Conservative Party of Canada, and had a distinguished career in the House of Commons, serving the Government of Canada and Canadians for so many years.

It was with great sadness that we learned of his passing. On behalf of my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), and other colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I extend condolences to his wife and daughter.

PANEL DECISIONS—GOVERNMENT'S APPROVAL

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canada is currently involved in three disputes under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT. Two of the cases involve decisions by GATT panels against Canada. One relates to Canada's export restrictions on Pacific salmon and herring. The other deals with the practices of provincial Governments affecting the import of alcoholic beverages.

A third case involves a request which we will be making for a GATT panel on Japanese lumber tariffs. All of these cases will be addressed at the GATT Council tomorrow, March 22.

I want to take this opportunity to inform Members of the House of the Government's approach to these issues. We are all aware of how vital the GATT and international trading system are to Canada. International trade means jobs for Canadians.

More precisely, three million jobs in this country and one-third of all we produce depend on export markets. The GATT rules are the best protection for keeping channels of world trade open and protecting Canadian jobs. Without these rules, Canadian industries and Canadian workers would be exposed to indiscriminate action by trading partners. The law of the jungle would prevail in international trade. An export dependent country like Canada would be highly vulnerable.

Members of the House from all Parties recognize this reality. We all agree that the GATT system works in the interest of all Canadians and protects their employment and economic well-being. But the system is only as strong as the will of Governments to respect it. To enjoy the benefits of membership in the GATT, Canada must also be prepared to fulfil its obligations.

Let me turn first to the GATT panel report on salmon and herring. This emerged from an investigation under Section 301 of the U.S. Trade Act. This section allows U.S. industry to file complaints about alleged unfair trading practices. What the U.S. industry alleged was unfair, in this case, was that Canadian processors were buying up substantial quantities of Alaskan salmon and herring while U.S. processors were prohibited from access to unprocessed salmon and herring from Canada. Therefore, the U.S. took the issue to GATT, where a panel made a clear finding that Canada's export restrictions violated international trade rules.

We have made it clear from the outset, including statements in the House, that we would be seeking a solution that would be consistent with the GATT and would also protect the long-term interests of the fishing industry. We have consulted closely with all interested parties, the processors, the unions, the fishermen, the B.C. Government and, as promised, we have pursued a three-pronged strategy; first, raising our concerns in the GATT; second, exploring a possible bilateral solution with the United States and, third, considering alternative measures to ensure the integrity of Canada's West Coast fisheries conservation and management regime.

In raising our concerns in the GATT, we have not received support from other members who clearly consider the panel's findings to be valid. While discussions with the U.S. have been useful in airing the issues, we have made little progress in reaching a bilateral solution. Therefore, we will now be pursuing a Canadian solution, one which reflects Canada's GATT obligations but which also addresses fisheries management and conservation needs and protects the future viability of the industry. It is the Government's intention to allow adoption of the GATT panel report and to dismantle the GATT inconsistent export restrictions by January 1, 1989.

At the same time, we intend to enact new regulations which will require that salmon and herring caught off the Pacific coast will be landed in Canada in order to ensure accurate catch reporting, inspection, grading, and quality control. While Americans will have access to unprocessed fish landed on shore at designated landing stations along the coast, they will not be allowed to buy fish directly from Canadian fishermen "over the side". Over-all, the landing requirement will improve management of the fisheries while preserving the livelihood of the coastal communities. Of course, Canadians will continue to be able to buy unprocessed American fish from Alaska.

My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), will be consulting closely with all interested parties to develop the details of this landing requirement. It will be consistent with the GATT as well as with the Law of the Sea which specifically provides for such measures. In developing the new regime we will, of course, be examining carefully the principles and practices which the U.S. itself employs in the fisheries area through such legislation as the Magnuson Act. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is also announcing today his intent to bring forward a national plan for a landing requirement, including provisions for inspection and quality control, to be applied for all species on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

There have been calls that Canada should simply block adoption of the GATT panel report and maintain the status quo. Frankly, this is not a viable option. It would expose Canadian workers to the threat of U.S. trade retaliation which the GATT provides. This could hit East Coast fish processors, fishermen on both coasts, or any other number of Canadian industries. Of all sectors, the fisheries industry is particularly conscious of the need for fair international trading rules to be respected. More than 80 per cent of Canadian fisheries production is dependent on export markets. If we are not prepared to play by the rules ourselves, we can hardly expect to use them to protect Canadian export interests.

I would like to point out that since the GATT began in 1947 there have been 58 panel reports submitted. Only three have not either been adopted or resolved, and two of them are the Canadian cases about which I am talking today. The third is a panel report on the U.S. trade embargo against Nicaragua. So I think you can see, Mr. Speaker, that adopting the panel report is thoroughly consistent with international practices. I repeat, the solution we have chosen on salmon and herring will respond to Canada's GATT obligations and will also safeguard the essential interests of Canada's fishing industry and the people who work in it.

Let me turn next to the panel report on liquor boards. Three years ago the European Community took Canada to the GATT alleging that Canadian liquor board practices are unfair. The measures in question here are provincial practices. The panel found that these provincial practices on pricing, listing, and distribution discriminate against imports of alcoholic beverages and are inconsistent with GATT rules. Canada has been asked to have the provinces bring their practices into line with international trade rules and to report back to the GATT before the end of this year.

Canada will not stand in the way of adoption of this report at the GATT Council meeting tomorrow. However, we recognize that the panel's recommendations, while not posing problems for the distilling industry, do cause severe difficulties for the Canadian wine industry. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the free trade agreement with the United States has provisions covering imports of wine from the United States which provide for a seven year phase-out of differential markups. In 1986 exports of wine from the U.S. to Canada amounted to about $10 million. By comparison, European exports to Canada are 24 times as large. They are in the order of $240 million a year. So, of course, they pose a very serious threat to the Canadian wine industry.

For this reason we attempted, in consultation with all the provinces and the industry, to negotiate a bilateral understanding with the European Community. These negotiations were unsuccessful because the Europeans set conditions which we could not accept. We will now be working with the provinces to find ways to respond to the panel's recommendations while addressing the adjustment concerns of the industry.

The Government will also be reviewing the petition submitted by the Canadian wine industry regarding European subsidy practices on grapes and wines and their impact on the Canadian market.

Our dispute with the European Community on liquor board practices has centred on wine and spirits. The European exports of beer, which account for less than .5 of 1 per cent of the Canadian market, do not figure prominently in the complaint. In view of this, and given that discussions are now under way with the provinces to address interprovincial barriers to trade, the Government is not prepared to implement any changes with respect to beer marketing practices in the foreseeable future.

Finally, I want to advise the House that tomorrow Canada will be requesting that the GATT Council establish a panel to consider a Canadian complaint against Japan. This relates to the Japanese tariff which discriminates against Canadian lumber in favour of lumber from the U.S.A. The tariff restricts Canadian access to a rapidly expanding market which we pioneered. This is a long-standing issue which we have raised with Japan at the highest levels for many years. Specifically our exports to Japan of spruce-pine-fir dimension lumber are assessed at 8 per cent tariff while exports of competing species, mostly from the United States, are allowed to enter duty free. We do not feel this is consistent with the GATT requirement to give the same tariff treatment to "like products".

We have tried to settle this issue on many occasions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), my colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), and I have all raised this issue with our Japanese counterparts. Japan has offered us limited tariff reductions but would not agree to provide Canada with the same access provided to the U.S. Therefore, we are taking this issue to the GATT.

As we have done in the past, we will be using the GATT to defend Canadian export interests and Canadian jobs. Clearly, Canada expects other countries to live by GATT rules, but we cannot do so unless we are prepared to respect these rules ourselves. The decisions I have announced today reflect this basic principle and protect Canadian jobs.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Minister's statement I would like to underline and reinforce the strong and important commitment that this country has to the international trading system and, in particular, to GATT, and to endorse the spirit that the development and enhancement of the international trading system are essential to our own economic and international progress.

By way of example, of the nine cases that Canada has initiated under the GATT we have been successful in gaining favourable judgments in eight of them. This shows that, generally, not only have we been a beneficiary of having an international system of settling disputes but that we also have been a close and honest adherent to that system. That was the case until the Government got its wires crossed, and began to pursue obsessively a trade strategy that ran counter to that basic support of the GATT. It tried to negotiate a special deal. It tried to gain exemptions. It tried to follow a so-called two-track theory. That is when we began to go wrong. That is when we began to find that our ability to pursue successfully negotiations through the GATT system caused us to take a wrong turn.

Certainly no more serious mistakes have ever been made in the history of trade relations in this country than the refusal by the present Government not to pursue the softwood lumber issue in front of the GATT. Not only did we have a very clear case but we had the right to challenge a law that will come back to haunt us. It is this very principle that the Americans are now incorporating in their omnibus Trade Bill. It is something we could have challenged successfully, ensuring that it never applied to further Canadian softwood lumber exports.

However, the Government, for pure and simple political reasons, not wanting to disrupt its relationship with the United States during the time of negotiations, refused to pursue that matter. It has been seen clearly as not a major player in the GATT system in the last three or four years. It is evident that its mind, its interest and its energies have been elsewhere. We are now paying the price.

We have in front of us decisions which will have devastating effects on a number of Canadian industries. I refer in particular to the fishing industry on the West Coast. It has been seized with an incredible sense of fear because of a ruling initiated by the United States using the GATT system which, from the point of view of U.S. injury might have amounted to $2 million or $3 million, but which will impact on the West Coast industry to the tune of $150 million or more.

Why did the Government take the actions it did? Why did it sacrifice the West Coast fishing industry? How has it done that?

First, is it not strange that the Americans were able to gain from Canada a concession to grandfather the softwood lumber decision and have it written into the agreement but Canada was not able to negotiate successfully an American withdrawal of its application against the West Coast fishery? In light of the reasonably small impact that this had upon American fishing interests one would have thought that the great negotiator might have been able to succeed in having his American counterparts withdraw that application under the Canada-U.S. proposal. All the protests and promises we have heard that the Canada-U.S. agreement will protect Canadian interests fall hollow when we see the lack of success the Government has had in gaining the slightest concession from its American partners. That failure pales in comparison when one considers what the Government has surrendered.

Under the Canada-U.S. agreement we have abandoned our right to employ an export tax. The fact of the matter is that under GATT we could have taken the type of regulations which are presently applied to the processing of fish and replaced them with an export tax. That would be perfectly acceptable and allowable under GATT rules. But the Government negotiated away the right to impose an export tax in its relationship with the United States. Thus it took away one of the alternative means that could be used to protect Canadian industries successfully, in this case the fish processing industry. The Government negotiated away, gave away, conceded away, one of the most important defensive instruments this country has that would be essential to protect the West Coast fisheries in this case.

What has the Government replaced this with? It has been replaced by a new kind of landing requirement that will now have to be applied to the East Coast fisheries as well. There goes all the protestations that we have heard from Members opposite that in no way will the East Coast fisheries be affected.

We now have the Government recognizing that by accepting this decision it will be setting a precedent. Under the free trade agreement Americans could use this precedent to go after the East Coast fishery. It is now attempting to wriggle its way out by applying a measure that will impose new standards and new restrictions upon the East Coast fishery. Not only have the West Coast fishermen been put in jeopardy but the Government has now taken a measure that will have a major impact on the East Coast fishery, in fact on the entire fishery of Canada.

Putting itself in a box in the first place as a result of the Canada-U.S. agreement the Government is now trying to find a way to work its way out. But by working its way out it is putting itself in new boxes. It is like a maze. It is like the weird garden in Alice in Wonderland where Alice kept running from the Queen of Hearts only to find herself trapped.

The Government has trapped itself not only in the West Coast fisheries but in the East Coast fisheries as well. It is an incredible state of affairs into which the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has put the fishing industry of Canada. It is quite incredible that there would be such incompetence and such tomfoolery with such a vital industry. It is really quite astounding that the Government would put itself in this type of position.

Because the agreement is not yet in place the Government could be using its leverage to say, "We will use an export tax to protect the Canadian fish processing industry," and not get itself caught in the type of trap that it has put itself into in this case. It is not a matter of simply accepting a GATT ruling, it is a matter of being able to use what is available under the GATT and putting it to work for the Canadian interest. But the Government is afraid of doing so. It is scared of doing so because it does not want to jeopardize what has become the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) great salvation for Canadian interests. This is the type of salvation which continually puts Canadian industry in jeopardy.

In saying what I have just said I must now ask what happened to the brave words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). Last November when the Americans imposed an embargo on certain sizes of Canadian fish he said, "We are going to take them to the GATT". The Minister on behalf of the Government said that it would use bargaining power and trading power.

Has the Minister made a statement that the Government will utilize an application to GATT against U.S. actions? On November 26 the Minister of Transport who, I presume, speaks for the Government, was quoted as saying, "We are going to challenge U.S. actions in front of GATT, dealing with a new embargo on smaller sized fish".

Once again it has backed off. We know why it has backed off. It is absolutely paralyzed when it comes to taking any kind of trade action against the United States. It realizes that in terms of the type of sellout it has negotiated with the Canada-U.S. agreement it cannot defend and protect Canadian industries legitimately for fear of having that unravelled.

On the second issue that we have had brought forward, dealing with the protection practices of the provincial liquor boards, once again there is a curious circumstance. In its "negotiations" the Government put itself in a box. The Americans were quite happy to leave some of those things alone because they knew there was a GATT ruling being considered. Now this opens up even further access for U.S. wines and spirits than they had before, and they did not have to give anything away in the negotiations to get it. Nothing is exempt on this issue.

Once again we are putting ourselves in the position on wine and beer where, rather than taking action, the Government states that it will review the petition from the wine industry. Why does the Minister not simply accept it and go to work on it? There is a decision due tomorrow. Have the officials put their petition down? Let us get tough on bargaining for Canadians. Let us use the GATT rules the way they are supposed to be used, not in some tippy-toe, passive, piecemeal fashion, but do so under a coherent, effective, strengthening of the rules.

The fact of the matter is that once again we have put ourselves in a bind because of the Canada-U.S. agreement, which points out the fallacy of the so-called two-track theory. The tracks keep getting crossed and the train is derailed. That is the problem with this trade strategy followed by the Government. The trains keep bumping into each other because the tracks do not run parallel but cross each other.

The final issue I wish to comment on, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to give you some notice that this will not be the last comment we have to make as we look forward with interest to Question Period, is on the application against the Japanese on dimension lumber. There is no quarrel with that; it is a useful initiative. But I wish to point out the interesting contrast as to why the Government was not prepared to do the same on the softwood lumber issue with the Americans. Is it not an interesting contrast between the two?

In fact, accepting the U.S. export tax and replacing it, as is now being done in B.C., with a new tax on the wood itself, by the new stumpage fees, our own exports to Japan are increasing in cost. The stumpage fee will apply to all exports. We are beginning to price ourselves out of the market in any event in this respect, simply because we accepted a bad decision. If we were prepared, as we should be, to challenge Japanese rules, we had equal right to challenge American rules, except for the fact that this Government was not going to to anything to get off its knees when it came to dealing with the Americans on trade.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank the Minister for her early circulation of the document which we are looking at this morning. Second, I would like to make the point, on behalf of our Party, that presently a GATT negotiation is taking place which is looking at the entire range of GATT issues, both questions which had to do with what is a subsidy, questions which had to do with fair trading practices, and so forth. Especially with this GATT negotiation that is taking place, with our strong support for Canada's participation in that negotiating process, we feel that the Minister is making a serious mistake by rushing into acceptance of these two panel decisions.

In many respects I think that the set of statements made by the Minister this morning reflects the approach of this Government. It pretends to take the high road, and at the same time it applies restrictions and undercuts what it is pretending to do. It attempts, in short, to have its cake and to eat it too.

In the West Coast case it adopts the report of GATT, thereby showing itself to be the good boy scout that Canada is supposed to be. At the same time it puts into effect restrictions which will have the effect of undercutting much of what that GATT panel report aims to achieve.

The same thing is true with respect to the liquor case. It accepts the report and states, "We will not stand against the adoption of this report". In that sense it pleads guilty to the points which have been made by the Europeans with respect to our practices in this industry. At the same time the Government states, with respect to the politically powerful brewing industry, and I quote from the Minister's statement, "the Government is not prepared to implement any changes in respect of beer marketing practices in the foreseeable future".

On the one hand the Government says, "Yes, we are for what GATT has said", yet it turns around and at the same time it states, "We will not implement what GATT has told us to implement". Frankly, Mr. Speaker, that seems to me to represent what this Government has far too often done in the past, refusing to be frank and open with the Canadian people. In addition we receive a little spoonful of honey to make the medicine go down. We get the announcement that is strategically timed for today to make things somehow look a little better for the Minister's West Coast constituents, that there will be action taken with respect to dimension lumber, an area which on every trip to Japan we were told the Government had solved.

I think, and we think as a Party, that Canada should have been honest, and open, and stated that we think the vote should be postponed with respect to each of those panel decisions. For instance, the European Community postponed vote after vote with respect to pasta subsidies. In the 1970s the United States postponed vote after vote with respect to its DISC program. Canada itself has postponed votes with respect to the cattlemen's countervail which the Government has been very anxious to put off. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, an honest, up front approach saying, "Yes, we intend to postpone this vote", is what the people of this country would much more clearly have appreciated.

First, it would have saved far more jobs in the salmon and herring industry on the West Coast. That particular case dealt with a narrow dispute with Alaska, a narrow dispute that perhaps involved a total value of $3 million to $4 million. As a consequence, a fishing industry of $150 million to $160 million has been put at risk.

In respect of the decision which the Minister has taken, she could have, if she wished, tried to wriggle out of what she said a few minutes before she accepted the panel report. She could have used an export tax. There is nothing within GATT and, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said, it is quite possible for us at this stage to take action and put an export tax into effect. The Government should have done so.

I must say that the liquor distribution issue is even more surprising. Here we have the extra complexity of the Canadian Government being faced with an application from the wine industry for moves against the Europeans in respect of their subsidies. Surely it is a perfect reason to say that we will postpone adoption of this report until such time as these issues can be sorted out as they should be sorted out together.

I think that the Minister, with her statement that the Government will not take action in respect of the beer market, has left the country open to the very retaliation about which she complains she is concerned in following GATT by adopting reports.

In conclusion, I think that honesty and jobs are the issues facing us in this case. There are 20,000 jobs which are at stake. We should have been honest and straightforward and said that we wished the vote to be postponed as we wished the vote with regard to the countervail on cattle to be postponed. If we had done that, we would have proved to people across the country that at least the Government was prepared for once to stand and protect the interests of the country, instead of giving in, and giving in, and giving in.

That kind of direct, open, and up front position taken by a Government would have permitted further negotiation and would have led to a solution to these problems instead of the cop-out the Minister has given us.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, on behalf of a number of constituents who are concerned that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that the negotiated trade deal threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty and therefore ask Parliament to dissolve to give the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of the same Standing Order, to present a petition from several persons in my riding, mainly in the city of Brantford, who are totally opposed to the Government's trade deal with the United States.

They call upon the Government to call an election immediately to have the matter settled once and for all. They fear that the trade deal will reduce and in the long term eliminate our sovereignty.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 256 and 264.

RESEARCH INTO FRESHWATER RESOURCES

Question No. 256—Mr. Caccia:

1. At the present time, is the government conducting research on or about freshwater resources and, if so, under what programs and, in each case involving (a) what expenditures (b) how many persons?

2. In 1987, was the water resources program cancelled and, if so, (a) for what reason (b) has it been replaced by other programs?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and Fisheries and Oceans as follows:

In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned:

1. Yes. Research on freshwater resources is carried out under the following programs:

Canada-United States and Interjurisdictional Water Management; Water Quality Management Data; Water Quantity Management Data; Water Management Research;

Toxic Chemicals; Long Range Transport of Airborne Pollutants; and Industrial Emissions/Discharges.

The bulk of this research is carried out at three centres of research:

	(a) '000$	(b) Person-Years
National Water Research Institute	18,196	262
National Hydrology Research Institute	6,989	79
Wastewater Technology Centre	4,058	49.5

2. No.

In so far as the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is concerned:

1. Research on freshwater resources is conducted mostly in the central and Arctic region. Such research falls into four categories, plus management/support, as follows:

	(a) '000$	(b) Person-Years
Resource assessment and related research in N.W.T.	285.5	4.5
Aquaculture and enhancement science	1,347.2	25.0
Habitat assessment and related research	4,290.1	63.4
Contaminants research	4,606.3	72.0
Program management and technical support	453.3	3.0
Total	10,982.4	167.9

The above excludes work on the freshwater life stages of anadromous species. The dollar resources are expenditure ceilings for 1987/88 and include salaries (without employee benefits), operations and maintenance, and regular capital (there were no resources allocated under grants and contributions).

2. There were no water resources programs cancelled in 1987.

FUNDS ALLOCATED TO BEDFORD INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY

Question No. 264—Mr. Henderson:

In (a) 1982 (b) 1983 (c) 1984 (d) 1985 (e) 1986 (f) 1987 did the government allocate funds to the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia and, if so, through what departments and, in each case, in what amounts?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): In so far as the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is concerned:

Listed below are the funds allocated to the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia.

1982-83	$32.9 million
1984-85	$44.7 million
1985-86	$41.0 million
1986-87	$38.9 million

For 1987-88, as a result of the Department's reorganization, funds are no longer allocated to the Bedford Institute specifically, but to the entire region of Scotia Fundy.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, the period set aside for Government Orders will be extended for thirty-five minutes, starting at one o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act on urgent environmental issues, especially its failure to negotiate a treaty with the United States to reduce acid rain emissions; its failure to incorporate environmental matters in major economic decisions, despite endorsing the Brundtland Report and the report of the National Task Force on Environment and the Economy; and its failure to effect a clean-up of the toxic wastes contaminating the Great Lakes Basin and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is my unhappy duty today as the environment critic for the NDP caucus to move a motion which condemns the Government in no uncertain terms for three major failures.

There could have been others on the list. However, in the interest of focusing on what is of highest concern for Canadians, I specified acid rain, which is a problem across the country where we do not have a treaty and do not seem to be getting closer to one; the case of toxic wastes in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway where we have agreements on water quality but in fact are not seeing any clean-up actually happening; and the case of the World Commission on Environment and Development, the Brundtland Report, where we have an excellent report with dynamic recommendations and a hopeful vision of the future. We have a Government which has endorsed it in principle but is not yet acting it out and, indeed, is violating its major premises in its own economic decision making.

As an Ontario Member I will deal particularly with eastern questions. Later today my colleagues from the West will be dealing with environmental issues in their areas. Certainly the environment is a prime consideration for all Canadians.

All Canadians, even in Western Canada, see acid rain as an urgent issue. To Quebecers, however, the issue of acid rain is particularly pressing. It is environmental problem number one, because of its impact: dying lakes and forests, soil acidification, and also diseases such as cancer and respiratory ailments. In the southern part of Quebec on the American border, there are maple stands where one-third of the trees have died as a result of acid rain.

The federal Government's failure to act is very sad. One must not be too cynical, but I have some doubts about the Government's good will, because while the federal Government was negotiating an agreement on acid rain with the United States, it was also negotiating a trade agreement. It could not insist too much on a strong agreement on emissions that cause acid rain because it was also anxious to sign a trade agreement. The price we pay for this trade agreement is the lack of an agreement on acid rain.

There are other costs involved with this free trade agreement, and I am thinking of jobs, our control over investment and basically, the sovereignty of this country. What is also discouraging about the free trade agreement is the fact that it will have a disastrous impact on the environment if it is implemented. According to the federal Government, the agreement is our most important economic decision in this century. However, the decision was made by the federal Government without any studies of the negative consequences for the environment, and it was taken despite the recommendations of the Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development. The federal Government and the provinces approved the Commission's recommendations that environmental matters be incorporated in economic decisions. However, the first economic decision made by the federal Government and supported by the provincial Government of Quebec was to pursue this trade agreement with the United States without considering possible negative effects on the environment and on our future economic potential.

Quebecers are worried about the quality of their water. In rural areas, we see a degradation of water quality by pesticides. The waters around Montreal are contaminated by run-off from chemical industries in New York state. In some cases, concentrations of toxic substances are higher in Montreal than they are further upstream in the Great Lakes. However, the federal Government refuses to contribute one cent to cleaning up the waters of the St. Lawrence River. Last year, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) stated that cleaning up the St. Lawrence was the federal Government's first environmental priority for Quebec. Since then, the problem has not diminished but the federal Government's priority no longer exists. Instead of taking action, the federal Minister is giving advice to his provincial counterparts. It is excellent advice: raise water taxes to encourage people to stop wasting water!

I agree that the Province, the City of Montreal, and other Quebec municipalities have a responsibility to waste less and to treat waste, but the federal Government also has a role to play. In fact, this is both a national and international issue. Toxic substances originate partly in the region itself, partly in Ontario and the United States.

It is unfair to exclude Quebec from the Great Lakes water quality agreements. Ontario has received $200 million from the federal Government to fight pollution. Quebec should not be left out. The urgency of this question is demonstrated by the fact that the belugas in the St. Lawrence are dying. They are dying because they eat minute organisms which absorb toxic substances, including dioxins. The death of the whales is a danger signal to us all. Some studies have shown that the rate of cancer and birth defects among the human population of the St. Lawrence North Shore is higher than the Canadian average.

Canada has made some progress in reducing the emissions that cause acid rain, particularly sulphur dioxide, and especially in Québec and Ontario, the worst offending provinces. The federal Government has not done nearly so well with regard to nitrogen oxide, another important cause of acid rain. At meetings in Geneva attempting to get an international accord on this subject, Canada's role was absolutely shameful. Canada stalled and mimicked the Americans regarding acid rain pollution in Canada, denying the importance of the pollution, wanting more research, and not standing with other more environmentally concerned countries for tough standards and real cut-backs in emissions.

The case of toxic wastes is quite different structurally from the question of acid rain. We have not even begun to get into negotiations with the Americans. In the case of toxic wastes in the Great Lakes there are treaties already. We have had the International Joint Commission, and water quality agreements and studies have accumulated over the decades. The question is not to negotiate any kind of a treaty but a failure to get the existing agreements, which have been amended on the basis of recent research, put into practice. The Great Lakes United's Water Quality Task Force I think puts it very well in looking at this question. It reported:

> We were shocked to see many blatant violations of those promises on our tour of the Lakes . . . in 1986. Plumes of black contaminants still reach out into the Lakes. Large cities still dump sewage that has only received primary treatment. Industrial smoke stacks still belch contaminants into the air. Old dump sites continue to leak dioxins, PCBs and numerous other insidiously destructive chemicals into rivers and lakes. Agricultural run-off continues to release massive quantities of pesticides and phosphorus-laden fertilizers. Dredging operations still pour toxic sediments into open waters. Every day hundreds of trucks still dump contaminated fill into the lakes.

Citizens are still calling for government to be much more active. It is clear to the Great Lakes citizenry that zero discharge of persistent toxic substances is the only hope for our future.

Great Lakes United is quite clear about the problems, and I not think any expert would doubt it. It also points out that the International Joint Commission, to which we name half the members, has all the powers it needs. We do not need new laws or treaties. We need some real force in actual enforcement.

A total of 4.5 million Canadians get their drinking water from the Great Lakes system, specifically Lake Ontario. Only one-quarter of a million Americans do. The problem has not been the priority for the Americans that it has been for us, but it is estimated that 90 per cent of the toxic substances in that water come from American sources. The Niagara River brings in contaminated material and 85 per cent of it flows into Lake Ontario. The Niagara River picks up PCBs, dioxins, metals, and carries those substances into Lake Ontario, and because it is a continuous system, they are carried into the St. Lawrence hitting Montreal and affecting Québec as well.

Niagara Falls is the world's most spectacular toxic waste tourist attraction and it is sad that we have to look at it that way. Even the spray that greets tourists is contaminated. The contamination is thorough. The water, the sediment, the spray, the fish, the mollusks and algae are affected throughout the system. Two hundred and sixty-one artificial chemicals have been identified. Some cause birth defects and some are carcinogens. These include sewage, DDTs, pesticides, metals, PCBs, and the most deadly toxic substances yet known, dioxins.

In 1985 it was estimated by Environment Canada that nine tonnes of toxic chemicals enter the Niagara River every day. The Niagara River Toxic Committee, which has underestimated the toxic discharge in the past, reports 66 hazardous waste dump sites within three miles of the river, 61 of which are in New York State. As well there are 46 so-called inactive sites, but many of these are leaking. Hyde Park is the most dramatic example.

An estimated nine kilograms of dioxins have been detected seeping out from the Hyde Park site which get into our Great Lakes system and into the food chain. The result, Mr. Speaker? Fish consumption is restricted, obviously a necessary measure but hardly any kind of solution to the problem. This is a chemical time bomb. There are six hectares close to the Niagara River and 70,000 tonnes of chemical waste have been put into it in a 20-year period. Clearly the release of all these toxic substances is a violation of the Boundary Water Treaty.

We have an international Water Quality Agreement which should mean that we move very swiftly to zero discharge of toxic substances. These agreements to reduce discharge are not respected. Federal government action is essential for clean up. Litigation has been tried. Pollution Probe, for example, has tried litigation but it has not been successful. The Americans have a superfund but litigation manages to sidetrack it. The very pathetic progress that has been made so far is just not nearly enough.

The United States Environmental Protection Agency reported only in January of this year on the six tons a day leaking into the Niagara River. That may yet be an underestimation of the harm that is being caused. I cannot stress that too vigorously. I would hope that the subject of toxic wastes and the necessity for clean-up would be on the agenda for the summit meeting with President Reagan in April. It is an absolutely essential item.

I want to turn to the last part of my motion dealing with the Brundtland Commission report, this absolutely vital, important, encouraging and hopeful document in which Canada took a very important part. Canadians formed a part of the public response to it. Its recommendations are superb.

The introduction of the report deals with the nature of the problem of environmental contamination and the disastrous situation we are in right now because of our developmental practices. It reads:

> They may show profits on the balance sheets of our generation, but our children will inherit the losses. We borrow environmentalist capital from future generations with no intention or prospect of repaying. They may damn us for our spendthrift ways, but they can never collect on our debt to them. We act as we do because we can get away with it: future generations do not vote; they have no political or financial power; they cannot challenge our decisions.

That has been the shame of it.

While the federal Government has endorsed the Brundtland Commission recommendations, it immediately violated the most basic premise and recommendation of it in the free trade agreement, and that is to incorporate the environment into economic decision-making. With the trade agreement, we have a continental energy proposal, a requirement to continue to sell energy and other natural products to the Americans, regardless of concerns for conservation. It is a deal that will discourage conservation. It is a deal that will discourage the development of alternatives, the soft energy path. It is a deal that will discourage the development of jobs in areas other than the resource sector, and indeed the Government has bragged about how the resource sector will be more important under this deal.

We are, however, talking about non-renewable resources. The proposal is that we will depend more on resources to which, once they are gone, future generations will have no access whatsoever. The possibility of using those resources by having lower energy prices in Canada to stimulate certain industries that would create more jobs has been lost under the trade agreement.

There is the question of harmonization under the trade agreement in the case of pesticides. What does harmonization mean? The Americans take a different approach to pesticides than we do. Our approach needs improving as well, but theirs is based on a different premise. They allow for a cost benefit trade-off: "We will accept a certain number of deaths from pesticides if there are economic benefits". Our approach talks about unacceptable risks and puts health consequences as something not to be traded away for dollars. Yet we have abandoned that in the trade agreement.

The Government is still spending more money subsidizing the destruction of the environment than it is repairing and caring for it. In the case of the trade agreement, that trend will continue. The Government has paid lip-service, but it is simply not acting to incorporate the environment into economic decisions, to ensure that we do not simply look at the money made by our forests but at the cost of reforestation as well. When a resource disappears, we must look at the costs involved in revising it.

There is not very much time left. Let me quote briefly from the Brundtland report. It reads:

> Industrialized countries must recognize that their energy consumption is polluting the biosphere and eating into scarce fossil fuel supplies . . . But the process must be accelerated to reduce per capita consumption and encourage a shift to non-polluting sources and technologies.

Yet the trade agreement wants more of the same. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) would have us sell our easily accessible oil and gas in order to get money to so-called develop or extract and sell off our more inaccessible and costly oil and gas. This is a scandalous misunderstanding of the situation.

I simply want to say, as the Brundtland Commission said, that the time to act is now. I think Canadians are fundamentally fair and reasonable. They do not want to deprive future generations, the children whom they educate and look after, of their environment and the possibility of having livelihoods in the future. I think Canadians are reasonable and want to see action.

I would hope that the Government would stop being so cosmetic in its approach and start looking at the cosmos, become cosmological, not "cosmeticological". I would hope that it would stop taking the public relations approach and would genuinely respond to the public which places a very high priority on the environment.

The Brundtland report does give us cause for hope because it says that it can be done. We do not have to accept poverty along with saving the environment. We can have economic growth and development by incorporating economic decision-making into an environmentalist perspective. That is what we must do, but many changes would be required by the Government, including changes in its dealings with the Americans. It must have the political will to serve Canadians and to serve the interests of future generations of Canadians.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, in her remarks on the NDP motion today, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) said that the Government of Canada has endorsed the Brundtland Commission report, the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, but has paid only lip-service to the report itself through its day-to-day actions. Yet, during a visit to the United Nations in New York on the occasion of the big debate on the Brundtland Commission report, Madam Brundtland, the Prime Minister of Norway, who headed that international commission, singled out Canada for its world leadership in implementing the recommendations of her commission's report.

I ask the Hon. Member, who are the people of Canada to believe on this subject, the NDP or Madam Brundtland?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that Madam Brundtland is a very diplomatic person, and it is well known that in diplomacy, one gets further by buttering up the people one is trying to get something from than by condemning them. She is being very diplomatic.

Madam Brundtland should not be treated as being quite separate from the New Democratic Party. She herself is a social democrat and is head of the Labour Party of Norway. I am pleased to see a woman, feminist, socialist and environmentalist in that high office.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating. I hope the Minister will explain to the Canadian people why, under the trade deal, there was not one study, not one SAGIT which looked at this matter. I quoted the Brundtland report directly where it said that we must move to different uses of energy. Yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister's colleague, is adamant that using fossil fuels, oil and gas, the non-renewable energy sources, is the path the Government is directed to. That is an absolute contradiction and I am surprised that the Minister cannot see that.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in congratulating the Hon. Member on her fine speech, I would like to ask her if she would expand and elaborate on the question of energy and the trade agreement. She did already touch on it, but I am curious about her thoughts on what the long-term environmental implications are of the trade agreement as it affects energy export. I would like to know of other thoughts she might have on this subject.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question because it is the energy aspects of the trade deal which are so attractive to the Americans. They have a desire to have access to our non-renewable energy sources, and this deal gives them that unfettered access. If we need to cut back because of some kind of crisis like an oil crisis, which has happened in the past, we will still have to continue supplying the American markets proportionately.

The American market is an enormous market. Americans are very high energy users, as are Canadians. We use 80 times the energy per capita of people in Third World countries, for example. There is no incentive in this deal for us to explore other energy options, to make better use of our energy, to get more out of less, a very, very important aspect of the Brundtland report. That is something we are trying to do in manufacturing, for example, producing more with less use of natural resources.

The continental energy approach is absolutely foolish and suicidal. It goes completely against the thrust of the Brundtland Commission report, which is that we have obligations to future generations. In the case of non-renewable resources, there is simply no opportunity for that undertaking to be respected. The material will be gone and we will even have given up the opportunity of obtaining the spin-off jobs in manufacturing. We have documents given to Ministers which show that non-renewable energy resources are still treated as a surplus in the mistaken mentality of the Government. We have too much of a supply so we have to get access.

I did not mention uranium in my speech, but certainly that is another very important area where the Government wants to ensure Canadian access to the American market. Yet we have no means for disposal of high level radioactive wastes. We have no adequate means of disposal of low level mine tailings. The Minister's department is aware of the concerns, yet there is no action on these wastes, and the prospect is for increased mining of uranium. We are already the world's largest producer and exporter. We even export to France, which is still conducting atmospheric testing of nuclear bombs. It is absolutely unconscionable that we should be involved in that.

The Government's concern is that we have to keep selling more. It welcomes the trade agreement with the U.S. as an opportunity to ensure access to that market. It approaches this issue strictly as a market matter. Yet what will it cost to clean up? If the Government looked at the Brundtland Commission report it would not say, "We can make some money selling uranium to the Americans and French". It would look at the cost of clean-up. Who is going to pay those costs through cancer deaths and birth defects and so on? It is the young people and their children who are going to have to pay the penalty for this very mistaken policy of our present Government.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, all too often Parliament descends to exaggerated rhetoric and intemperate partisanship. The environment is a field in which neither tone is appropriate. The stakes are simply too high given the extent to which the human race is trashing the planet's life support systems, the air we breathe, the water we drink, the soil that produces our food. What is at issue here for all of us is nothing less than survival. We owe our children and future generations not rhetoric or partisanship but the healthiest possible environment in which to live. Yet this NDP motion is not designed to shed light on the subject. It is designed to discredit genuine efforts to improve the environment.

Nevertheless, Sir, I welcome this occasion to detail the record of the current federal Government in the environmental field. I do so not to score cheap political points but to celebrate a genuine partnership that the federal Government is forging with the provinces, industry, environmental groups, labour, and others committed to environmental protection. Much remains to be done and this Government is committed to doing it in concert with our partners.

I think nothing is achieved by denying credit where credit is due. Yet that is what the NDP motion before us does as a substitute for its Party policy. Any non-partisan observer would concede that more has been done to protect the natural environment at the national level over the last three and a half years than during any previous comparable period. The record, unadorned by rhetoric and unembellished by partisanship, speaks for itself. Allow me to put the Government's achievements on the record.

When appointed Minister of the Environment in August, 1985, I said that acid rain was this country's most serious environmental problem. No one can deny that our Government has delivered on its commitment to reduce acid rain-causing emissions from Canadian sources. Last month in Halifax I signed, on behalf of the Government and people of Canada, the last of seven legally binding federal-provincial accords. Together, the accords constitute the most ambitious joint government pollution control program ever launched in Canada. By 1994, the eight-Government pact will slash industry and utility sulphur dioxide emissions by 50 per cent, a remarkable demonstration of national will. The federal Government has committed $150 million to abate acid rain emissions at source, and a further $150 million to advance the technology and research required for the task.

At the same time, we have introduced the toughest national measures in the world to control nitrogen oxide emissions from motor vehicles. Last September, allowable emissions from cars and light-duty trucks were cut by over 60 per cent. In December of this year, allowable emissions from heavy-duty vehicles will be cut by 50 per cent. We are the first country in the world to introduce such tough NOx controls. Our vehicles will now be up to six times cleaner than those of Europe.

Sir, not content to put only our house in order, we have been eager to provide world leadership on the issue. It was, after all, this Government that signed the Helsinki Agreement which committed each signatory country to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions by 30 per cent, a subject in which my friend, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), has such a keen interest.

Opposition Parties can rail against our Government for not yet achieving an agreement with the U.S. to cut the flow of acid rain across the borders of our two countries, but they ignore several facts. First, no previous Canadian Government was able to achieve an acid rain accord with the U.S., either. Success continues to elude acid rain control champions within the U.S. itself.

Second, no previous Canadian Government has given the issue a higher priority than we have. Unlike the Trudeau Government, we have not merely moralized about the issue. We have acted. Witness the strong domestic control program mentioned earlier.

Third, we intend to accelerate our efforts to achieve an acid rain agreement with the U.S. Whether or not we succeed, the Government of Canada cannot be held accountable for the record of another sovereign country in this or any other area of public policy, however much our own environment may be affected. By attacking the Canadian Government on this score, the NDP's motion is as naive as it is unfair.

If acid rain is this country's top environmental problem, and I think it is, toxic chemicals vie for that distinction. Accordingly, our Government has acted to stem the flow of toxics into our environment. A major instrument for doing so is the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, now awaiting action by Parliament at the last stages of debate. The law will consolidate much of the legislative authority of the Minister of the Environment. It will provide a framework to co-ordinate federal and provincial environmental laws. It will manage toxic chemicals through their full life cycle, from research and development to production and entry into the market-place, from transport right through to final disposal as waste. It will also create mechanisms to regulate pollution from the federal Government itself.

The Bill contains the toughest sanctions against polluters ever enshrined in Canadian environmental law, including $1-million-a-day fines and jail terms for corporate offenders.

A panel of top flight environmentalists is already working on a list of priority chemicals so that the law will be ready to be acted upon and enforced immediately upon royal assent.

Toward the same goal, a tough enforcement and compliance program has been devised, and the Government has approved $37 million in new money to apply the law.

While awaiting passage of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the Government is using existing instruments to act on specific pollution problems across the country, focusing in particular on toxic chemical hot spots. A case in point is the $34 million Sydney tar ponds excavation, the biggest of its kind in the history of Canada and the second biggest ever undertaken anywhere in the world.

The clean-up of the Windermere Basin in Hamilton harbour is another example. Such pollution measures are not being taken in a vacuum, but rather in the context of the federal water policy which we released just before Christmas. The policy covers everything from large scale water exports and major water diversion projects, which we have banned, to realistic water pricing, which we have championed.

In the same context, we have updated and fortified the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in concert with the U.S. Government. Such environmental watchdogs as Great Lakes United, referred to already in this debate, have helped ensure that the new agreement is as comprehensive as it is tough. For the first time, the agreement now covers all sources of Great Lakes pollution and establishes accountability mechanisms to make sure that specific reduction targets and schedules are actually met.

None of our Great Lakes targets and schedules is more pressing than those written right into the landmark accord signed last year by the Government of Canada with the Governments of the United States, New York State and Ontario. It will reduce toxic loadings into the Niagara by 50 per cent by 1996, the first time the four jurisdictions have ever been able to agree on a specific pollution abatement program for a river that provides drinking water for 4.5 million Canadians.

The Government of Canada is taking the same approach to pollution that threatens the other half of the Great Lakes Basin, the St. Lawrence River. I have been negotiating with my opposite number, Clifford Lincoln, Quebec's Minister of Environment, on a plan to mobilize resources from both Governments. The plan has not yet been completed because it takes time to correct years of neglect and indifference under previous Governments.

However, the St. Lawrence River is a priority of the federal Government, a priority of mine and of my department. If it is a priority of the NDP, as the motion suggests, it is news to everyone in this House and probably to everyone else in Canada, from one coast to the other. To my knowledge, the NDP has never before raised this issue in the House. Certainly, it has never asked me a single question in Oral Question Period on the clean-up of the St. Lawrence River.

Strong as the Government's pollution control program is, I believe future generations will remember the current Government's first mandate, in the environmental sphere, for the leadership it has provided on national parks. From 1972, when the Liberals were in power, until the time we were elected in September, 1984, not a single new national park was established. It was "the dark age" as far as parks were concerned, in the words of one large national environmental group.

Since then the Government has established four new national parks, including Pacific Rim in British Columbia, which we completed only this past week by paying off the $28 million debt for forest lands owed to the Province of British Columbia by the previous Government for 17 years.

The other three new parks are South Moresby, also in British Columbia, at Ellesmere Island in the high Arctic, and at the Bruce Peninsula in Ontario, the country's first ever national marine park under our recently released national marine park policy.

I hope that in the next year national parks will be created in the Saguenay in Quebec, in the prairie grasslands of Saskatchewan, and at Banks Island in the far North. I will be proposing such parks to my cabinet colleagues.

The amendments Cabinet has already approved to the National Parks Act constitute the first overhaul of that law since it was passed more than a half century ago. Those amendments will ensure that all parks, existing parks and ones yet to be established, will be managed by standards that can better conserve rich ecological features while enhancing opportunities for people to appreciate and enjoy them.

Our stress on conservation includes the built heritage, an area almost totally neglected by previous Canadian Governments. The federal-provincial cost sharing agreement to restore historic sites and properties of national significance received a major infusion of new money. By the end of March we will have signed agreements to restore three major landmarks this year alone. They are George Brown House in Toronto, City Market in Saint John, and St. Paul's Anglican Church in Halifax. This is not to mention our cash contribution to the new Marconi Exhibition Centre in Glace Bay, to which the Italian community has also contributed generously.

To prevent the federal Government itself from destroying the country's precious built heritage, new internal mechanisms have been engineered. The approach involves a national registry and tough Treasury Board requirements.

There is another form of heritage that is vital to our country—it is wildlife. Our major priority in this area is the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, a $1.5 billion-15-year program to reverse declining populations in Canada and the United States. The combined contribution within Canada from all sources, including the federal Government, will be $250 million over the course of the program.

I was honoured to sign the plan with the United States Secretary of the Interior, Donald Hodel, in May, 1986. Mr. Hodel and I signed another important bi-national wildlife management plan last summer to protect the 180,000-head porcupine caribou herd in the Yukon-Alaska Range.

As well, this past year Canada established two new national wildlife areas, Polar Bear Pass on Bathurst Island in Northwest Territories and Last Mountain Lake in Saskatchewan.

Equally significant, 11 new RAMSAR sites were designated for wetland protection, bringing Canada's total to 17. That is more than any other country in the world.

With the World Wildlife Fund, Canada has launched two important initiatives. One is the endangered species recovery fund, to which we committed $1 million. The second is the wildlife toxicology Fund, now completing its third successful year after receiving to date $3 million of federal funding. Wildlife will also gain from the money that Cabinet has added to my Department's budget for pesticides management, $16 million over the next five years.

This Government has been among the strongest supporters of the United Nations' World Commission on Environment and Development, the Brundtland Commission, which was referred to earlier in the debate. What is more, we are practising the Brundtland ethic, the sustainable development ethic, by integrating economic and environmental decisions through both programs and funding arrangements.

Prime Minister Brundtland herself, as I pointed out earlier in my question to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), has singled out Canada as a world leader in implementing the report's recommendations. One of our key responses has been to launch a reform of the federal environment assessment and review process. In the same spirit, we hosted the international conference on ozone depletion, which produced the historic Montreal Protocol last September. That protocol, which constitutes the first-ever global treaty on the atmosphere, will reduce ozone-depleting chemicals by at least 50 per cent by 1999.

We are not simply preaching the Brundtland ethic. We are putting it into practice. We are weaving the Brundtland ethic into the very fabric of our decision-making and our funding.

We will also be hosting the most important international conference ever held on global atmospheric pollution problems at Toronto in late June. The Montreal conference on ozone depletion, and now a broader conference in Toronto at the end of June, dealing with the whole range of atmospheric pollution problems from Arctic haze to the greenhouse effect, to acid rain, to ozone depletion itself, reflect our Government's leadership towards an international law of the air.

Canada is providing leadership right around the globe, bringing nations together at major conferences, mobilizing policy-makers, experts and others, to see whether we can deal with all of these individual problems in a broader context in the form of what I have called an international law of the air, and we are making real progress towards that end.

My speaking time is running out so I cannot put on the record the many other significant accomplishments of the Government. Other government speakers throughout the debate will have to deal with such measures as our anti-leaded gasoline campaign, which will outlaw lead in gasoline by the end of December, 1992. By 1990, about 90 per cent of lead in gasoline will be removed. We have eliminated altogether the disparity in excise taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline which favoured the more polluting form.

We have undertaken a public information and awareness campaign to sensitize people to the dangers to their own health and to the natural environment posed by misfueling and by tampering with anti-pollution devices. All of these things and others could be mentioned, such as the pivotal role the federal Government played on the National Task Force on the Environment and Economy. These are a credit to this Government and to the country as a whole in the environmental field. I know the speakers who follow me will be detailing them.

For my part, permit me to conclude on this one note. The Government, of which I am proud to be a member, has spent more money on the environment than any previous Canadian Governments. When all the Supplementary Estimates are in for the current fiscal year, those for my own Department and for other departments of the federal Government which are investing heavily in environmental areas under the direction of my Department, the record will speak for itself. But we are neither complacent nor finished with the job. I urge the New Democratic Party, instead of coming into the House with motions that shroud its own lack of policy, to join us, and I urge other opposition Members to join us in meeting the challenges that remain ahead.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I do have some questions to put to the Minister. I know he had to pad out his address today with a whole lot of subjects that were not in my motion. certainly, I welcome the agreement on the caribou herd in the Porcupine area and the historical sites and things of that sort. However, it is because the Minister did not have enough good things to say about concrete action to get rid of toxic wastes that he went on to these other subjects.

My questions very specifically are, first, this Minister in the area of acid rain is on record as saying that an acid rain agreement with the States would be the litmus test of this Government's ability to negotiate with the Americans. Would he agree that so far his Government has failed the litmus test?

The Minister referred to water policy in his remarks. It is not a statute, it is only a policy. Will he be bringing in legislation? Specifically, will he bring in federal legislation to have drinking water standards, not mere guidelines, but standards for federal lands, including Indian reserves? Is it indeed true that the federal Government does not want to do this because it knows that the quality of the drinking water on so many Indian reserves is abominable and would fail any reasonable standards?

The Minister mentioned a number of bits and pieces of a strategic plan in his own Department. Is it not true that his own Department has abandoned having a strategic plan on the environment? Something I raised in my remarks that the Minister did not address was the subject of toxic wastes. Will the serious subject of removal of toxic wastes, actual excavation and containment in the Hyde Park site, be on the agenda for the summit meeting with President Reagan, or will any of the other toxic waste sites be on the agenda?

I would really like the Minister to address the question of a very important matter in the Brundtland Commission report, that is, the greenhouse effect, the possibility of really major climate changes from many sources, but particularly from the burning of fossil fuels. Has his Department really looked seriously at this problem and does it have any idea as to what the long-term consequences will be of this continued policy of focusing on fossil fuels for our energy?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I have just spoken on the Hon. Member's motion for the past 20 minutes. I would probably need an hour to respond to the half a dozen questions she has put to me, any one of which would probably take longer than the time we have for the entire question period associated with my speech.

The Hon. Member says I padded my speech with references to the Government's record in areas outside her motion. Her motion reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act on urgent environmental issues, especially its failure to—

It then cites a few issues, by way of example. Does that imply that the very items to which she referred in her question, and which she has lambasted me for including in my speech, are not priorities of the New Democratic Party? Are such things as the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, the declining populations of waterfowl, especially in western Canada, not a priority of the NDP? Does she imply that the NDP is not interested in the built heritage? I thought the Hon. Member was a spokesperson for the NDP on cultural matters a while ago. What could be more important to the culture of the country than the built environment in which we live and work, the physical expressions of the heart and soul of this country as reflected in our buildings and other cultural sites for which I, as Minister, am responsible? I think I can refer with some pride, on behalf of the Government as a whole, to the things we have done with the provinces and with heritage groups across the land, in this field.

The Hon. Member lambastes me for including a reference to national parks in my speech. I can see why the Opposition would not want a Minister of the Crown to refer to the federal Government's record in this field. It is exemplary. But we are not self-satisfied. We are not content. Over the course of many years we have managed, as a country, to complete only half of the total national park system. As I said earlier, during the 14 years prior to our coming into power, not a single new national park was established. How can Canada complete the national park system if, for a decade and a half of Liberal administration, not a single new national park was created? Someone will have to redress that imbalance. If we do not do it as a genuine Conservative Government, as a conservation Government, then no one will do it, at least not with the priority we attach to it.

The Hon. Member asks me about our water policy, the national water policy, the first-ever water policy brought down by the Government of Canada. It includes the full range of issues such as water exports, interbasin diversions, pesticides, toxic chemical controls and all such issues. She went on to ask me whether we will back it up with legislation. We already have the legislative authority. What has been lacking under previous Governments has been the will to take those legal instruments and use them. We are exercising that political will, and we are using the available instruments.

The Hon. Member refers to the excavation of the Great Lakes sites, the so-called hot spots such as Love Canal, Hyde Park, S Site, 102nd Street, and so on. Those hot spots, those industrial waste sites, are included now in the agreement itself, thanks to the broadening of the Canada Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. We are taking an ecosystem approach. We are not concentrating only on this site, that problem or this hot spot or another. We are saying that any assault on the Great Lakes system is a candidate for action by the Government of Canada with our partners, including the Government of Ontario. All sources, among them the sites to which she has made reference, are now included in the agreement.

With respect to acid rain, no previous Government has attached the kind of importance that we have to solving this issue, both domestically and with the United States. In previous years, the policy of the Party of the Hon. Member and that of the Party of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was simply to go down to Washington, lambaste the Americans, bang one's head on the desk, moralize, fingerpoint and all the rest of it. But we did not have the clean hands that brought to the negotiating table the kind of credibility and moral authority that made us effective. We now have those clean hands.

We are saying to the Americans, "Look, we have cleaned up our act. We are reducing by 50 per cent by 1994, based on 1980 figures, acid rain-causing emissions from industry and from utilities. We are spending half a billion dollars a year, and we will be doing so for every year up until 1994 when our progress will have been made".

In fact, by fortifying our case in that fashion we can hold our head high. We can point the finger and say to our American counterparts, "You do the same. You follow suit. Fifty per cent of our acid rain is from your country". In areas such as the Haliburton area of Ontario and Parry Sound—Muskoka, the percentage is closer to 75 per cent.

We can go to the Americans. We can point a finger. We can lecture them on their problems. We can call for a targeted and scheduled approach to acid rain because we have taken exactly that approach within our own country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Davenport on a short question or comment.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a brief question which goes back to the exchange in the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry within the context of the Brundtland report and the report on the economy and the environment. I asked the Minister whether on free trade he would have any study that would be launched that would be relevant to the negotiations that were taking place at that time. At that time the Minister replied stating that the free trade negotiations and environmental questions are separate and that they should not be linked.

Would the Minister like to elaborate on the answer that he gave in light of the experience he has had since November, 1986?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, one of the myths associated with the free trade debate, perpetuated on the floor today by some of the earlier comments of opposition Members, is that Canadians will lose their environment and their capacity to take steps to protect the environment on the high altar of free trade. Nothing could be further from the truth. Implied in the myth is that American environmental standards are much lower than those in Canada and that the free trade agreement will harmonize the environmental regimes of the two countries in favour of the lower standard, which is American.

First, there will not be any such harmonization. We could not do it even if we wanted to, and we do not. Laws in both countries, in states and in provinces and at the national level on both sides of the border, have developed in response to particular problems on either side of the border that are indigenous to the area in which the laws are being enforced. We could not have continent-wide environmental standards any more than we could have continent-wide laws. They have to be born of the culture, the geography, the climate and the other circumstances of the jurisdiction in question.

Even if there were to be such a harmonization, and there will not be under free trade or under anything else, the fact remains that it is not true that American standards in every case, or even in most cases, are weaker than those in Canada. For example, when our Government was elected in September of 1984, NOx emissions, about which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood waxed so eloquent, were three times more stringent in the United States than in Canada. But, because of action by this Government, the NOx emission standards for heavy-duty motor vehicles are currently the strongest in the world. That was accomplished at a time when the same Government of Canada was negotiating an acid rain agreement with the United States.

Given the federal Government's record that I have detailed on the floor of the House of Commons in the environmental field over the past three and a half years, where is the evidence that our efforts toward free trade have in any way circumvented our capacity to act on environmental matters? It has not. We have acted.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the mover of this motion, for it is very well drafted and timely. We are also very glad to take part in this debate.

At the same time, I should like to emphasize the fact that, on behalf of our party, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) will participate in this debate and deal quite eloquently with the environmental issues concerning the St. Lawrence River and the Province of Quebec, focusing on the situation of the St. Lawrence River.

Later this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) will present the views of our party on the environmental vision of Western Canada.

The motion is well drafted, and as I said, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mrs. McDonald).

[English]

The debate is very timely. It lends itself to a variety of inputs. Half an hour ago the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) chastised the NDP for having written such a motion. He claimed that in Parliament we were descending to excessive rhetoric and partisanship. To my astonishment he then launched himself indulgently into an orgy of rhetoric and a very amusing display of selective memory bouts, which must be excused considering the partisan nature of this place. But they were amusing in contrast with the warnings on the part of the Minister that we should not have excesses of rhetoric in this place. I wonder if we have here an example of preaching in one way and practising in another.

I will give the House an example of this type of selective memory bout of the Minister a few moments ago. The 1985 Helsinki Protocol, of course, was signed in 1985. It was made possible by actions taken by the Government of Canada long before the Minister was appointed to Cabinet, and long before the Government was elected.

I will refer to the notion of national parks by refreshing the Minister's memory as to the fact that the vast majority of national parks in Canada were created by successive Liberal Governments. I would also refresh the Minister's memory as to the fact that NOx, on which he waxed eloquently a few moments ago, the public consultations and those measures were launched in 1984. The reality of political life being what it is, it allows the Progressive Conservative Party to reap the political benefits, and that is only fair game. It is only this indulging that is rather peculiar.

Whenever the Conservative Government brought to a conclusion Liberal initiatives that were launched before it was elected, it did reasonably well, and when it departed, it did badly. There is the classic example of abandoning Canada's global role on acid rain. The Conservative Government found enough energy to drag itself to Helsinki and sign the protocol, but in all fairness, since that time there has not been leadership given by the Government on acid rain, on SO2 cuts, or on NOx. We learned from Geneva last month on the cutting of car emissions and pursuit of an international protocol that would serve Canada well that the Government is taking its cues from the United States, which is not a sign of great leadership, at least these days.

We have to move ahead in this debate and abandon an approach of exchanges of this nature, but I think it adds to the cut and thrust of the debate for the moment, and I am sure that nobody minds that. Actually, it is good to weave notions that are raised in the course of the debate rather than to start from a prepared text which has little relevance to what has been said before.

I was struck by the intervention of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and by the motion. It seems to me that it hits on the major points with which the Canadian public is presently preoccupied, and with which the Government ought to be preoccupied.

The fact of the matter is, and I wish to tackle the first item in the motion, that on acid rain, that after three summits, and three and a half years later, we have nothing to point at. The Government made some serious tactical mistakes in embracing the envoy's report. At that time, the answer of the Government should have been to say that, if the United States wished to conduct its clean-coal technology programs, that is fine. It was announced as a $5 billion program. But we Canadians want the United States to sign an agreement. That is what we want. That message was lost. It was not registered. I know that in January, 1987, for the first time the Minister spoke of a specific negotiation identifying the 4 million tonnes of pollution that crosses the border, but he was alone in that. He was not supported by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister got lost in the summits. Three have been held, we are at the eve of a fourth, and somehow we have been sidetracked by the novelty of the clean-coal technology program. What has been spent so far under the auspices of that particular program is $50 million in 1988. That is the extent of the money that has been invested under that particular heading, which raised enormous expectations among Canadians, and which in 1986 was heralded as a substantial breakthrough.

In a few weeks there will be the fourth summit in Washington. Inevitably, the words expressed in this Chamber by President Reagan that he will consider acid rain must be followed up by the Prime Minister. On that score, I once again urge the Minister of the Environment and the Cabinet to prepare the elements for a bill for damage suffered in Canada from acid rain emissions and pollution that comes across the border. Every year this sum is a substantial one to cover damage to monuments, structures, fisheries, forestry, agriculture, and even to human health. We have now reached a point, without having to be strident, without losing our patience, when we must talk the language that is well understood in Washington, which is the language of damage.

As I have pointed out to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)—but not to the Minister, unfortunately, because when I asked my questions we have not been in the House at the same time, not because of neglect on his part, of course, but because of the day of the week—this matter has to be pursued in economic and monetary terms. We are being damaged. We are downwind from that damage. We have launched a program with a very important set of signatures between the Government of Canada and seven provinces, to which the Minister alluded. Again, this initiative goes back to the time long before this Government was elected. Now we are launching something that will benefit the American economy. It is only fair, if Washington does not reciprocate with a similar parallel program that will provide relief to our natural resources and to our economy, that it should compensate Canada for the yearly damage suffered as a result of transboundary pollution of sulphur dioxide.

In pursuing the question of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes, there have been many good statements made by the Government and by the Minister, in particular, but little action. The problem is that the Government mercilessly cut the budget of the Canadian Wildlife Service with the Wilson statement of November, 1984. The Canadian Wildlife Service is engaged in a very delicate and important role in establishing toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes. Despite the fine statements, the Government eliminated from the plans and the programs of Ottawa the creation of a Toxicology Centre in Ontario. Those two factors alone are bad enough, but they are made worse by the performance of the Government in relation to the budget of Environment Canada. The performance of the Government in relation to that budget is, to borrow a phrase used earlier, the litmus test of the real intent of the Government in the environment.

No matter how many letters the Minister of the Environment writes to the Toronto Star outlining the $106 million that may be spent over the next eight years on South Moresby to create a park, no matter whether the Minister makes reference to the $150 million—in 1982 dollars, which should tell one when that decision was made—that will be spent over the next 10 years on acid rain abatement technology, as the Minister mentioned a moment ago in the debate, the fact remains that this year that Department is the loser in the budget allocation. It does not even keep pace with the rate of inflation.

If we total, as I have on several occasions in committee for the benefit of the Minister, the losses due to inflation year after year since 1984 when the Government came into power, we find a substantial loss of over 17 per cent or an amount in the neighbourhood of $70 million over the last 3.5 years to 4 years. This has resulted in losses in personnel to the tune of some 336 individuals, be they scientists, technicians, or support people. This 17 per cent loss has resulted in a reduction in the capacity of Environment Canada to pursue programs, to amplify its programs, to amplify its research, and to do the very things which the Government claims that it wants to do.

This is why the accusation is made, quite rightly, that there has been a lot of cosmetics. Public relations on the part of the Government have been pretty good. They have tended to create an impression of action but they have not been substantiated or supported by fact, and the budget of Environment Canada is proof of it.

For the Minister to claim the $150 million which will be spent over 10 years by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, or the $106 million on South Moresby, is another exercise in smoke and mirrors. Canadians will see through it, if they have not already done so, and will give a message to the Minister. They are enormously frustrated by the silence of the Government in relation to the call which has been made many times by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, asking for help in the construction of badly needed infrastructure related mostly to water. There is a phenomenal backlog, and the Government has been saying "no" to the municipalities. At the same time as the Minister points his finger to problems in the St. Lawrence and in some cities, the federal Government disappears into a beautiful cosmetic cloud. As I said, this creates impressions.

The Minister made a reference to CEPA, a piece of legislation that has been in the works for some time. It is a good step in the right direction. The problem with the Bill is the Minister himself. It is the classical case of the mouse that roared. An enormous smoke-screen was created, indicating that the Bill would clean up the St. Clair River and the Niagara River, that it would deliver miracles. The fact of the matter is that the content of the Bill, as approved by the Conservative majority on the committee, is weaker than originally promised. All the things the Bill would not do would be the subject of another 20-minute speech. The money allocation behind CEPA—and here we have another Achilles heel—amounts to $37 million over five years, divided by three departments. Once we analyse it we see that the allocation of funds behind the Bill is pretty weak.

The Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement was re-signed, and no doubt the wording was improved. However, where is the political will to implement it? Again I make reference to the fact that the Minister has not been able to command the funds needed to do the job which he promised that he wanted to do. We have not seen, up until now, an indication by the Government that it will implement the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Not one specific step has been funded since the signing of the new agreement.

The much heralded Niagara work plan is already behind schedule. One reason given is that the Government of Canada is one of the primary culprits in not providing adequate resources or the people needed to do the job. Again, action is missing, but there is much rhetoric, and the gap is becoming greater and greater.

The Quebec Government has announced a $3 billion clean-up scheme along the St. Lawrence River and has been knocking at the door of the Government for some help, for it to match that sum or at least come up with some funds. So far the answer has been "no". We have Quebec at $3 billion and the Government of Canada at zero.

In addition to the budgetary deficiencies of the Government and the losses due to inflation, other very important considerations must be made, namely, the fact—and this was proven in the exchange a few minutes ago—that the Government has completely missed the importance of the impact in the long term on the environment of the free trade negotiations and agreement.

During the negotiations we asked in the House whether or not studies were being conducted on the environmental impact of the free trade agreement, and the answers were negative. I raised the matter in committee and received the answer that I quoted in the exchange with the Minister a few minutes ago. It is astonishing that conceptually the Government would not be capable of putting two and two together. In committee on November 25, 1986—and I quote from the committee proceedings—the Minister said: "Freer trade negotiations and environmental questions are separate and they should not be linked". My goodness. Has the Minister read the chapter on pesticides in the free trade agreement? They are linked. Has the Minister read the section dealing with the energy agreement? The linkage is there, and unfortunately it is massive. Therefore, the depth of commitment of the Government to the environment is shallow and superficial when we match it with the policy that it is implementing.

One must register in a debate like this one the necessity for the Government to come to its senses and see that the trade agreement will also impinge on the ability of the Government and future Governments to pass and enforce regulations protecting the environment which may be stronger than those south of the border. In future there could be Canadian industries making representations to the Canadian Government of the day asking to be relieved or asking for weaker regulations. They could claim that they need weaker legislation in order to compete with the same industries south of the border which may not be under environmental regimes at all or may be under weaker ones.

I catch your signal, Mr. Speaker, and therefore I reluctantly relinquish the floor. I thank you for your patience.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments I will recognize the Hon. Minister first, followed by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, when all is said and done, the three Parties in the House of Commons probably see eye to eye on what are the major problems in the environmental field in Canada. If the truth be known, I doubt that much separates us on how we approach the different problems on which we are agreed.

What counts is whether a Government acts when it has an opportunity to act. In my speech I detailed, with some substantial documentation, how in a very short time we have acted in the environmental field, without implying that all the problems are resolved or that there was any cause for complacency. There is not.

One of the most important issues with which the three Parties must wrestle is the call of the Brundtland Commission to integrate economic and environmental decision making.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who was the former Minister of the Environment. How does he reconcile what seems to be an inherent contradiction in the position of his Party on the subject? On the one hand, the Member embraces the Brundtland ethic that we should integrate environmental and economic decision-making and weave such an integration into the very fabric of everything we do. You cannot just embrace an ideology or a doctrine or a theology. In government, your position has to be reflected in mechanisms and budgetary figures. On the other hand, the Member lambastes the Government because many of our environmental expenditures are in the name of the Brundtland ethic outside the Department of the Environment but within the federal system under the leadership of the Department of the Environment. The Sydney Tar Ponds is a $37 million clean up, of which 70 per cent is from the federal Treasury through the budget of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. In this case the figures did get reflected in my Department's budget, but in other cases, they did not. Fifty per cent of the $106 million that will be spent by the federal Government on South Moresby does not come from my Department. It will not be reflected in my Estimates but will appear instead in the Estimates of the Minister responsible for western diversification.

The same is true of the acid rain program. There is $150 million for abatement and $150 million for clean-coal technology and for other research and development projects for acid rain. Those are environmental expenditures. They are no less so because they are recorded in the budgets of other departments. When the Member from Davenport totals what our Government has spent in the environmental field, he ignores literally tens of millions of dollars merely because they are outside the Main or Supplementary Estimates of the Department of the Environment. How does the Member reconcile that contradiction, Mr. Speaker? If we are going to integrate the economy and the environment, it has to be reflected in our budgeting. Yet when we do reflect it, the Member dismisses out of hand the importance of such expenditures. There is an inherent contradiction there. Would he rise in the House today and reconcile the irreconcilable?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a desperate attempt on the part of the Minister to turn a disgrace into a virtue. He keeps trotting out the same two tired horses. One is the South Moresby $106 million expenditure over eight years, and the other one is the $150 million over 10 years, a technological item which is in another department. Beyond that the Minister is short of breath and has to rely heavily on rhetoric.

Here we have a Department that has lost 17 per cent to inflation since 1984.

Mr. McMillan: That is not true.

Mr. Caccia: We have checked it several times and I urge the Minister to use his arithmetic, which is probably as good as mine, and he will have to come to that conclusion if his Department is frank with him. Having lost 17 per cent, he has also lost, over the years, 336 employees, so-called person-years. That is quite an important loss, I submit. Unless the Minister can tell us whether these 336 technicians, scientists and support people have emerged in other departments, we have to conclude that the 336 have been lost. At the same time—and this is something on which the Minister may want to reflect—Environment Canada is receiving a budget increase of 3.6 per cent, but the average government increases have gone up across the board by 8 per cent. What about this one? The budget for National Defence is going up by 8.3 per cent. If you look at the National Defence's basic budget, an increase of 8.3 per cent means an increase of $800 million, which is more than the present budget of Environment Canada. The increase to one department this year entails a sum which is greater than what Environment Canada will receive this year. Maybe there are environmental measures in the Department of National Defence. I would like to hear the Minister give us some examples.

I will give him another example. The Department of Communications' budget went up by 11 per cent. Maybe there are environmental measures in there. Perhaps the Minister could let us know. What about the Department of Finance? Its budget went up by 13.5 per cent this year. Could the Minister tell us more about environmentalists in the Department of Finance who are carrying out environmental projects as a result of this increase?

The budget of the Department of Transport, even that old horse called the Department of Transport, is going up 7.5 per cent. Would the Minister tell us where the environmental initiatives and programs are that will be made possible by the increase of 7.5 per cent in the Department of Transport? Perhaps I will give the Minister a hint and thus be helpful. He should look perhaps at the Department of Agriculture. There the budget has gone up by 24 per cent. That isn't bad, is it? Maybe there are some environmental projects which the Minister can find, and I will be glad to hear from him. If the Minister is implementing the spirit of Brundtland, let the Minister make a statement in the House of Commons one of these days and tell us where in the Department of Agriculture the 24 per cent increase includes environmental measures.

I have another hint for the Minister. The budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has gone up by 23 per cent. Maybe there is something there to help shore up the Minister's fragile political argument today here in the House. The fact remains that until the Minister comes up with the facts, his Department is at the bottom of the list, with an increase of 3.6 per cent, which is less than the inflation rate. Every pensioner in Canada knows what happens to you when you lose ground to inflation.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the intervention by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Certainly his correcting the record on the budget is helpful. It is important to look at cost of living increases and what is happening in other government departments as well.

I have a couple of questions for the Member. He, of course, is a former environment Minister, and the present Minister was quite within his right to point out some of the failures of the previous Liberal Government.

I would like particularly to ask the Hon. Member to address the Brundtland report in the area of energy. Would he not consider that our reliance on fossil fuels does pose some problems? Is it not time to rethink that? His own Government was pretty lax when it came to looking at soft energy alternatives, renewable energy alternatives. There was some rhetoric, but in terms of firm commitments, budgets and action, it was really not very good. Would he consider himself challenged by the Brundtland report, effects on climate change, the greenhouse effect, reliance on fossil fuels?

Another major energy question I would like the Member to look at is that of uranium. His Government was very much involved in the development of uranium. That is an area in which we cannot do what the Brundtland Commission says and incorporate the full environmental costs into economic decision-making because we do not know what the costs are. We know they would be horrendously high.

Would the Hon. Member look at the question of uranium? How do we have sustainable development with a non-renewable resource and with an energy use, uranium, which has such an enormously long period of disposal time which has to be costed and paid for in the future? How does he respond to the Brundtland report in those areas?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has a consistent habit of raising difficult questions. I do not know whether I can do justice to them in a short time.

Of course there have been failures by previous Liberal Governments. We are all capable of that, even Liberals. I would like to stress something that clearly sticks in my mind because I happened to be in the House at the time. Maybe this precedes the time of the Hon. Member. The then Minister of Energy, the Hon. Alistair Gillespie, announced in 1978 a five-year program on renewable energy incentives, stimulants and you name it, of $400 million. It was to promote all forms of what at that time was termed solar and biomass technology and it was a substantial breakthrough, or so we thought at that time. When the five years were up, it was pretty close to election time and we were looking forward to having that torch carried by the present Government.

Unfortunately, the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of November of 1984 dashed our hopes. We have not seen any effort made on renewable energy through the NRC or other agencies ever since. As a matter of fact, two programs which were intended to conserve energy, CHIP and COSP, were eliminated in 1985.

The soft energy path and its objectives is a very relevant issue. Perhaps we should have done more, but certainly we did not neglect it. At that time, we did not know the name Brundtland. The theology had not yet emerged as clearly as it has now, but certainly anyone who links energy with environmental issues, as the Hon. Member frequently does, is putting the finger on the very core of what environmental safety for the globe is all about. That is where the major impact is made. It comes from energy, and we must watch those policies like hawks in addition to watching the policies of transport, agriculture and the like.

I do not want to say something that the Hon. Member knows already, but she may not know about the $400 million that was approved for the soft energy path in 1978 by the then Minister of Energy.

The other big question the Hon. Member raised on uranium as a source of energy and sustainable development is one that we have not been able to finalize in our thinking. We know that our dependence on nuclear electricity is actually increasing. We are faced here with an interesting dilemma because we know that in the short term electricity produced by nuclear energy is non-SO2 polluting. It does not contribute to acid rain.

It is actually a source of dismay to us when we learn that a nuclear station must be shut down for repairs and a coal-powered station must be activated in its place. We all know that that means additional SO2 pollution, at least in Ontario, by Ontario Hydro, as we have learned in recent weeks. But we know also that in the long term the uncertainty and the cost of disposal involved with uranium waste are enormous and are not properly taken into account by long-term decision-makers.

On that issue, we are ambivalent, or at least ambiguous. I do not have a final answer for that question because of this dichotomy and the conflict between the short and the long term. I would hope that we could accelerate as an alternative our research on fusion and come up sooner than predicted with the production of alternative energy that may be environmentally friendly though not nuclear for the benefit of generations to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members would give the choice to the Hon. Member to either begin his speech now or to begin it after Question Period. It is up to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) to decide.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to begin after Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent, therefore, to call it 1.25?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.25 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.25 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

WINDSOR RESIDENTS' OPPOSITION TO PROPOSAL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the people of the west side of Windsor, Ontario, are very concerned about a proposal by a company called BTI to move hazardous goods by trucks, some 30 an hour, through their community, over ordinary city streets, near their homes, apartments, schools and businesses, to a site on federal harbour land on the shore of the Detroit River where the trucks will be carried by barge to Detroit, Michigan.

The people of the west side of Windsor strongly oppose the proposal, as do I, because of the risks to their health and safety and the quality of life in their neighbourhood. Some 3,000 of them have signed a petition addressed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) opposing this proposal. Unfortunately, this petition cannot be tabled in the House because it does not meet technical requirements. I am therefore informing the House about this petition and presenting it directly to the Minister.

I urge the Government to respond to this petition within 45 days, as though it had been formally tabled here, and further, I urge that in its response the Government accept and agree with the well founded concern of the people of my community about this unfortunate truck-barge proposal.

THE LATE HONOURABLE RICHARD A. BELL, P.C., Q.C.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in sadness to record the passing over the weekend of a distinguished former Member of Parliament for Ottawa West, the Hon. Richard A. Bell, P.C., Q.C. Dick Bell gave over 50 years of devoted service to the Conservative Party and to Canada, beginning as Assistant Private Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue in the R. B. Bennett Government in June of 1934. He was for many years National Director of our Party, and perhaps as much as any one individual was responsible for keeping the party organization together during many years in opposition.

First elected to the House of Commons in 1957 in the old riding of Carleton, he became Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in the Diefenbaker Government.

A Bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada and long-time member of the Ontario Law Reform Commission, Mr. Bell practised law in Ottawa, until his death, with the firm of Bell, Baker. The Baker in that firm was another outstanding member of this place, the late Walter Baker, former Deputy Prime Minister of Canada.

My condolences go to Mr. Bell's widow, Ruth, a distinguished Canadian in her own right, and to his daughter, Madam Justice Judith Oyen of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

FISHERIES

LANDING OF FISH IN CANADA—CONSULTATION SOUGHT ON NEW REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the fish processing industry must deplore the Conservative Government's decision meekly to accept the GATT panel ruling against Canadian regulations on the export of unprocessed fish. Even though the Government promised new regulations requiring that fish be landed and graded in Canada, this will not protect thousands of jobs in canning, freezing or salting the fish. At most, the Government has made it a little more difficult for Americans to take over our industry.

Why has it set January 1, 1989, as the date it will dismantle the present regulations? Why the rush when it does not yet have the alternative regulations in place? Before putting them in place there must be full consultation with the industry to minimize the damage.

For Canadian consumers an important and negative side effect of the regulations could be to prohibit direct sales from the fishing boat to the consumer. The companies will be more in control than ever. Working people and consumers will suffer.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS—PAYMENT OF TAX BY SECONDARY MANUFACTURERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, federal cabinet Ministers from British Columbia, for reasons known only to themselves, continue to take actions which harm the interests of that province. On Friday I pointed out how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), who is from British Columbia, mistreated the B.C. sports fishing industry. Today I want to describe how the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), also from British Columbia, has harmed secondary softwood lumber manufacturers.

We all remember the foolish decision of the Minister to impose a 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exported to the United States instead of fighting the decision through GATT or before the U.S. Interstate Commerce Commission. That 15 per cent tax has now been incorporated as a permanent part of the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement.

As if that were not bad enough, the Minister has forced 25 independent secondary softwood lumber manufacturers to pay the tax, while 20 other producers do not because they were certified for exemption. This blatant economic discrimination provoked by the Minister has cost those 25 Canadian firms millions of dollars. After more than a year of negotiations with the federal Government, those producers, known as the Coalition of Secondary Softwood Lumber Manufacturers, have been forced to take their own Government to the Federal Court of Canada.

If the Minister has any sense of fairness at all she will settle this case out of court and award compensation to those 25 Canadian producers who have been unfairly discriminated against as a result of the Minister's sheer incompetence.

THE LATE HONOURABLE RICHARD A. BELL, P.C., Q.C.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Richard Albert Bell, Privy Councillor, Queen's Counsel, Bachelor of Arts, LLD, quietly passed away at his home on Sunday.

He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1957 as the Member for Carleton, and re-elected in 1958, 1962 and 1965.

He was appointed Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance on August 20, 1957, and Parliamentary Secretary to the same Minister on November 19, 1959. He was sworn to the Privy Council and appointed Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on August 9, 1962.

During his lifetime Mr. Bell was a Bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada, President of the County of Carleton Law Association, member of the Ontario Law Reform Commission, member of the Board of Governors of Carleton University, trustee of Queensway-Carleton Hospital, National Campaign Chairman of the Canadian Cancer Society, member of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation, and a member of the law firm of Bell, Baker, Oyen and Webber.

Richard Bell was a warm and generous person, a great lawyer, a great parliamentarian, a great Canadian, and a personal friend of Mrs. Tupper and myself. He reached out and touched many people during his life. He is survived by his wife Ruth and daughter Judith. I ask all parliamentarians to join with me this afternoon in extending our sympathy to Mrs. Bell and Judy. Canada has lost a great Canadian.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF CRISIS INTERVENTION PROGRAMS—INCIDENCE OF SUICIDES ON RESERVES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, for the past year the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been boasting about his so-called new initiatives on family violence, child sexual abuse and, recently, alcohol and drug research. He also released a report on suicides in Canada which identifies native people as a high risk group. Behind the glossy cover, however, he is refusing continued funding for crisis intervention programs delivered by four Indian bands in my riding. Two of these communities, Grassy Narrows and Whitedog Falls, were devastated socially, economically and spiritually following mercury pollution of the English-Wabigoon River system.

The communities of Grassy Narrows, Whitedog, Whitefish Bay and Osnaburgh House have been told that the Department cannot afford to fund this award winning program which has dramatically reduced violent deaths and suicide on these reserves. Instead, they are being forced to accept the elimination of proven social programs so they can become eligible for a native alcohol treatment facility.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare must fulfil his responsibility to Canada's native people. I urge that he and the Conservative Government immediately identify the necessary resources for treating suicide, violent death, and alcohol abuse in those reserve communities that so desperately require these services.

SENIOR CITIZENS

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION'S PUBLICATION HOUSING CHOICES FOR OLDER CANADIANS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, as the Canadian population ages, the relative importance of issues of special importance to the elderly will be heightened. Housing is one of these, and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is to be complimented on its timely publication Housing Choices for Older Canadians.

Many older people have as their major asset a paid-for home. Rather than live poor to die rich, CMHC points out the several types of home equity conversion plans which are becoming available. I would encourage our financial institutions to develop this new product line fully and our regulators to develop a workable set of rules to govern same.

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY—CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this year is the 40th anniversary of Canadian citizenship and the Government has organized an impressive celebration of that event to increase Canadians' understanding of and pride in their citizenship.

It is interesting to remember that the Conservative Party was violently opposed to Canadian citizenship 40 years ago when it was introduced. It conducted an extensive lobby across the country to try to defeat the Liberal suggestion that Canada deserved to have a citizenship of its own. It is a wonderful thing to see conversion of a political Party from a strong position of opposition to a true appreciation of Canadian citizenship. At the time Conservatives felt this would lead to our integration with the U.S.

Issues recur and one hopes, given time, the Conservative Party will begin to see the lack of wisdom in some of the policies it is promoting today which really can lead to integration with the U.S.

IMMIGRATION

DEFIANCE OF DEPORTATION ORDERS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, law and order are the cornerstones of all democratic societies. However, once again Canadians are witnessing another instance of individuals abusing Canada's immigration system. What is ironic is that the Turkish nationals lied about their refugee status in order to enter Canada, availed themselves of the full protection of Canada's laws, and are now indicating that they will defy the order to leave.

If these individuals are allowed to stay, Canada will send out the message that Canadian laws are made to be circumvented and that, if you lie and cheat, you will be accepted.

• (1410)

The Minister has passed good legislation to prevent abuse of our immigration system. However, the other House, by dithering and playing cheap partisan politics and delaying the implementation of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, is responsible for creating chaos and uncertainty in our immigration system. Let us pass Bill C-84 and Bill C-55.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—ANNIVERSARY OF THE SHARPEVILLE MASSACRE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, today marks the 28th anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre in South Africa.

In March, 1960, the Pan Afrikanist Congress launched a peaceful campaign to demonstrate against a law requiring blacks to carry passbooks.

A group of several thousand gathered on March 21 in Sharpeville to stage a peaceful protest. Without warning, the South African police opened fire on the crowd, killing 69 and wounding 200. Among them were men, women, and children.

The brutality of this event sent a shockwave through the international community, catapulting the South African question onto the international stage and drawing the world's attention to the racist practices in that country.

The South African Government responded to the criticism, not with reform, but with further suppression. A state of emergency was declared and the African National Congress and the Pan Afrikanist Congress were banned.

Twenty-eight years have passed, but, sadly, not much has changed.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—CONFISCATION OF INACTIVE ACCOUNTS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, people used to believe an old saying: "As good as money in the bank". However, that can mean today no money at all because it is possible for a bank to confiscate an inactive account if it is below a certain balance and after a certain period of time.

That is not all. An inactive account can suffer deductions due to service charges even though an inactive account seems to receive no obvious service whatsoever.

My purpose in making this statement is to give the advice that anyone with a small account that has not had much activity lately should check to see if he has anything in the bank at all. He may have less than what he started with.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES TO EASTERN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Special Canadian Grains Program of the Department of Agriculture is designed to compensate Canadian farmers for losses they have suffered as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill which has had a devastating impact on Canadian farmers' income.

Eastern Canadian farmers who grow corn and soybeans are especially upset that this year the program is being run on a basis where cheques that are mailed to western farmers during February are not being sent to farmers in eastern Canada until the end of April.

For example, I heard about one farmer who was expecting a cheque for over $17,000 in February but will not receive it until the end of April. This has a special hardship on corn and soybean producers who will have to miss special discounts that are available during the month of March for such things as cash purchases of seed and fertilizers.

I call on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to end this discrimination and make arrangements to have all farmers receive these benefits from this program on a fair and equitable basis.

SPRING HAS SPRUNG

BRITISH COLUMBIA SAYS IT WITH DAFFODILS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the first day of spring has arrived. Once again, CKNW Radio in Vancouver is providing daffodils to Members of Parliament today.

As we all know, spring arrived many weeks ago in supernatural British Columbia, and these daffodils symbolize the reason why so many Canadians prefer to live on our evergreen West Coast.

It is sunny and 15 degrees above in lotus land today. Here in Ottawa it is minus 15 degrees, with a windchill factor to minus 25 degrees, and more snow on the way.

As we celebrate the vernal equinox today, we put our ear to the West and hear the sound of lawnmowers, bicycles, and beach parties. And we wonder why, oh why, Queen Victoria didn't place our nation's capital a few thousand kilometres to the west!

PESTICIDES

HARMONIZATION OF CANADA AND UNITED STATES LAWS AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and others who have not had time to read the trade agreement, I suggest they look at Schedule 7 which refers to pesticides.

This schedule tells us that the two countries will work toward the same standards and test methods, the same residue monitoring programs, the same technical regulations, standards or certifications, and the same risk-benefit assessments and cancer policies.

The question is: Do we really want to harmonize ourselves with a system that uses more than one billion pounds of pesticides each year, 60 per cent of which leave residues on food that cannot be detected? Do we want to go with a system that samples less than two-tenths of one per cent of domestic foods for pesticide contamination?

The Minister of the Environment is mistaken in believing that free trade has nothing to do with the environment. Harmonization of pesticide laws and regulations is but one example.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

THE YUKON—SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIMS URGED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend six Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament, including myself, visited the Yukon to provide Yukoners with the facts in connection with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, and, at the same time, to learn their problems and their concerns. We visited 14 communities in all. I personally visited Whitehorse, Watson Lake, and Teslin.

Above all else I found the major concern of both native and non-native Yukoners with whom I met to be native land claim settlements. Clearly there is a pressing need for the Government to deal with this issue in a speedy but at the same time fair and equitable way.

The cloud created by the uncertainty of land claims is holding up badly needed housing construction, delaying hydroelectric projects which will reduce energy costs, restricting business and job creation, and depriving natives of the opportunity to share fully in the economic development of the Yukon.

Let us get on with a fair and equitable Yukon land claims settlement.

RULING AFFECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA FISH PROCESSING INDUSTRY—PROVISIONS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first I want to extend warm birthday greetings to the Member for Oshawa, and belated greetings to the Prime Minister who celebrated his birthday yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I say to both of them that it is likely the last nice thing I will have to say about either of them for some time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who acknowledged this morning that the British Columbia fish processing industry was indeed part of the price Canada has paid in its trade agreement with the United States, in that it leaves us open to U.S. trade action, open to negative rulings from the GATT, and leaves us powerless to use the remedies we once had under the GATT to respond.

In her response to tomorrow's decision by GATT to rule against the B.C. fish processing industry in favour of American petitioners, the Minister ran up the white flag of surrender. Is the Minister now prepared to admit that in giving up our rights to impose export taxes under our trade agreement with the United States we have in effect been left powerless to respond to American action under the procedures that were hitherto available to us under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that I said no such thing today in terms of the Right Hon. Member's preamble. He is inventing excuses to attack a decision which meets our international obligations.

The Opposition suggest that we should impose export taxes. I can point out that they do not understand the whole basis of the free trade agreement and of the need for export taxes. Export taxes are usually applied only where tariffs are escalating. They are applied when tariffs are low on unprocessed materials and higher on processed materials. Under the free trade agreement, we are eliminating tariffs with the U.S. over 10 years. Therefore it is not appropriate to use export taxes.

REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT BE SCRAPPED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are supporting the GATT process. We are complaining about throwing away the rights we had under the GATT, rights which were conceded to the United States under the trade agreement that would have allowed us to protect the British Columbia fish processing industry. That is why we on this side of the House oppose the trade deal. There is nothing "free" about it. We are continuing to pay the price every day for the Minister's actions.

• (1420)

Why does the Minister not just admit that unless this deal with the United States is scrapped, Canada is handcuffed and unable to exercise its legitimate remedies—which it had before under the GATT—to protect the British Columbia fish processing industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I have pointed out to you on many occasions in this House, the free trade agreement with the United States, in Part I, Chapter 1, Article 101 reads:

> The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America, consistent with Article XXIV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, hereby establish a free-trade area.

I keep pointing out in this House, but the Opposition does not hear me, that the free trade agreement is negotiated under the umbrella of the GATT and is consistent with the GATT. Therefore, the Opposition's continuous insistence that with the free trade agreement we have somehow abandoned the GATT is simply false. I would like the Opposition to state where it is on this issue.

We are bringing in landing requirements that will increase the management and the conservation of the fisheries. We are going to be doing it on a national basis. This will safeguard jobs and it will allow Canadian processors access to American fish in Alaska, as they now enjoy. If the Opposition is against that position, I want to hear it say so.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the Minister that under Article 408 of the proposed trade agreement between Canada and the United States, she has surrendered our rights, available formerly under the GATT, to respond to the American initiative against our fish processing industry on the West Coast.

NEW REGULATIONS ON FISH LANDINGS—NATIONAL POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans I would like to direct a further question to the Minister for International Trade. She said this morning that Canada will deal with the GATT ruling on British Columbia fish by imposing new regulations requiring fish on the B.C. and Atlantic coasts to be landed first before export into the American market. Is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announcing a national landing policy today because that Minister knows, as well as this Minister, that the Atlantic fishery is now vulnerable under the GATT as a result of the success of the Americans on the West Coast?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will be announcing a national policy of bringing in landing requirements to increase the conservation and improve the management of our fisheries resource. He will be doing that because the Fisheries Ministers of the provinces have asked for it and the First Ministers have endorsed it. That is why he is bringing it in.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of International Trade are also announcing is the acceptance of a precedent that will now apply not only to the West Coast fisheries in terms of devastating its markets, but to the East Coast fisheries as well, and will have enormous impact on that major fishery market for Canada.

Considering that the fishing industry, the wine industry, the beer industry and the spirits industry have all specifically requested the Minister to postpone a decision in order to continue finding points of leverage and bargaining before final acceptance, why did the Government announce today that it was adopting those measures without responding to those kinds of concerns? Why are we surrendering before the battle is over?

Why are we not going ahead and using a petition against European wine subsidies? Why are we not using the leverage of an export tax against the American incursion? Why have we abandoned the instruments we have and surrendered the battle? Why are the Minister and the Government undertaking that kind of cavalier abandonment of Canadian interests?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the only thing devastating about today's announcement is the devastating ignorance of the Official Opposition about the West Coast fishery.

May I point out that not only do Fisheries Ministers and First Ministers endorse the landing requirements, but the Fisheries Council of British Columbia, with whom we have been working on this issue, is positive about the announcement we made today. So I can assure the Hon. Member that the measures we have taken today will be improving the fishery and will be safeguarding the jobs in the fishery.

UNITED STATES BAN ON CERTAIN SIZES OF FISH

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, just as a supplementary in terms of the devastating ignorance about which the Minister talks, I would ask her a question about the position taken by the Minister of Transport on behalf of the Government last November. He stated publicly that the Government of Canada was going to initiate a challenge to the GATT on the U.S. embargo on East Coast fisheries of certain sizes and qualities. The Minister today announced certain measures that were taken to the GATT, but somehow forgot that bold and courageous statement made by the Minister of Transport.

Why has the Government forgotten that statement? Why is it not pursuing the actions promised by the Minister of Transport to protect the East Coast fisheries further in this matter? Is that not an example of how the Government has just abandoned the entire fishing industry of this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the House will acknowledge that all statements made by the Minister of Transport are bold and courageous.

May I respond to the issue the Hon. Member raises about postponing our reply to the GATT and remind him of what he should already know, that on the fisheries issues we have already postponed it in the past two meetings of the council? May I remind him that with respect to the liquor board practices, that dispute, which is a rancorous dispute, has already lasted for three years? May I point out to the Hon. Member that there is nothing to be gained by being a spoilsport and deciding that we will only accept those cases where we win and will reject those cases where we lose? That is the position of the opposition Parties.

MAINTENANCE OF STATUS QUO—VOTE POSTPONEMENT QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is is also directed to the Minister and I will tell her that the people involved in the fishing industry, both on the east and west coasts, will be interested to hear the spoilsport of a Minister's answer on this serious matter.

Since the Minister has just indicated that the fishing industry is supporting her initiative, will the Minister concede that it vastly prefers maintaining the present arrangement it now has, and that it is under the gun from the Minister, and that is why it has given some kind of token support to what the Government is doing, as being better than nothing?

Since clearly the East Coast and West Coast fisheries are now going to be seriously affected, why in heaven's name did the Government not request a postponement of the decision at the GATT, a course of action taken in the past by the United States, and a course of action taken in the past by the European Economic Community? If it was good enough for them to protect jobs, why is it not good enough for Canada to protect its jobs now?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the fishing industry is not under the gun from the Minister, it is under the gun from the GATT. The fishing industry in British Columbia wants to preserve access to American unprocessed fish. It does not want a situation where the Prince Rupert Co-op and the north coast plants cannot access American fish. It is the abysmal ignorance of the Hon. Member's knowledge of the British Columbia industry that leads him to make these pathetic statements.

In terms of the East Coast and the West Coast, a national landing requirement is good conservation and good management and is supported by the provinces, as it is supported by the First Ministers. In terms of postponing, what is the point of postponing yet again? This decision will enhance the fisheries, safeguard the jobs, and improve the coastal communities.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SEEK POSTPONEMENT OF DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well the kind of new proposals about which she is talking do not guarantee jobs at all. All they do is make provisions for the fish to pass through Canadian ports, which is quite a different thing. She also knows that the Canadian fishing industry is not insisting on keeping guaranteed access to American fish if it means that they have to get access to ours. She knows that very well.

Will the Minister answer this serious question? Since the European Economic Community has put off, as requested, indefinite postponement over a number of years, decisions it thought were disadvantageous to it, and the Americans did it for many years in the DISC programs on decisions that were disadvantageous to the United States, why in heaven's name does the Government of Canada not stand up for the Canadian fishing industry and do the same thing here at home?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the Hon. Member is strange, to say the least. We are meeting our international obligations. That is what we have done in the past and that is what we are doing now. May I point out that in the 58 decisions in the GATT, there are only three that have been unresolved. There are only three which have not either been adopted or bilaterally negotiated. Those three are the two Canadian issues that we dealt with today. The third is the U.S. embargo on trade with Nicaragua.

We see where the Opposition would rather be on this issue, following that kind of a tactic, rather than meeting our obligations.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is just super. She still has not answered the question. Of course, there are a few unresolved issues. Many have been resolved. They have been resolved through negotiations, often prolonged negotiations spread over a number of years, with the European Economic Community and with the United States, until something was worked out to the satisfaction of the states involved. It is only this Government that is prepared to capitulate Canadian interests in order to get compliance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since it is clear in all aspects of the decisions that she is talking about today that Canadian interests would be furthered by requesting a postponement rather than by capitulating, why has the Minister capitulated? That is the issue.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Hon. Member argues that Canada has capitulated by accepting the ruling of the international trading system. Apparently the Hon. Member is in that category, along with others in the NDP, of liking to be winners only but not wanting to meet one's obligations when one loses a panel decision.

I point out that the measures that we have announced today with respect to the export of salmon and herring have the preliminary approval of the Fisheries Council of British Columbia. They are very much in the interests of the shore workers and the fishermen of B.C. who have suffered because of NDP attempts up and down the coast the last few weeks to terrify them by suggesting that they would lose their jobs if we comply with the international trading system. That is what members of the NDP have been doing. We have answered that today with a responsible system that will include the fishery.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NATIONAL LANDING POLICY FOR FISH

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the only thing terrifying the fishermen of British Columbia and, indeed, the fishermen of Atlantic Canada is the lack of this Minister's grip on reality. She has lost a major battle on the GATT which has devastating implications for British Columbia and potentially devastating implications for Atlantic Canada. She has the audacity to try to celebrate it as a victory in the House—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his preamble in terms of what is necessary for the question, and then put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister a simple question. Why is the Minister of Fisheries today announcing a national landing policy for fish, both in British Columbia and Atlantic Canada? Why today, if not because the Government recognizes what it cares not to admit so far this day, that is that the reality of the B.C. GATT ruling is that Atlantic Canada can no longer count on any exemption from American trade action with respect to unprocessed fish? Is that not the reality? Has she not the courage to admit it? We are tired of insults. We want answers.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Minister of Fisheries is announcing today that he intends to bring in a national landing requirement because it has been requested by the provinces concerned and because it has been endorsed by First Ministers as a great step toward the improvement of the fishery and the conservation of the fishery.

I want the Hon. Member to answer this question. Is he against a landing requirement for Atlantic Canada which will ensure that fish are landed in Canadian ports, and inspected and graded for quality control before export? If he is against this measure he should say so.

PROCESSING OF LANDED FISH

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's simplemindedness about the fishery is incredible. She would not know a sculpin from a flat-fish. She would not know landing from processing.

The reality is—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put a preamble that is necessary for the question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister for International Trade, a self-proclaimed fish expert, answer the following question. Is she suggesting to the people of British Columbia and to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada that just because a fish is landed on the coastline it can no longer be exported to the United States? Is the commitment she has given the House today to the effect that any fish landed in British Columbia or in Atlantic Canada automatically can never be exported unprocessed to the United States? Is that her commitment?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is clear I know a lot more about the British Columbia fishery than does the Hon. Member.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Miss Carney: Thank God for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would urge the Minister, as I urged the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, to stick to a proper preamble. I urge the Minister to answer the question.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am waiting for the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

BEER MARKETING PRACTICES—GATT RULING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister about some of the contradictions in her position. This morning she stated in her statement to the House that the Government is not prepared to implement any changes in respect of beer marketing practices in the foreseeable future. At her press conference she turned around and said that beer will be discussed with the provinces over the next nine months.

What is the Minister actually planning to do? Has she accepted the GATT ruling or has she in fact picked and chosen and in the process made herself a laughing-stock as far as guaranteeing us a future for those 19,000 workers in the beer industry across Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already made it very clear that we have accepted the GATT ruling. That is what I announced today. That is what is consistent with our practices.

In the statement I made today I announced that beer was a very small part of the complaint with the Europeans. It has been under discussion with the provinces in terms of breaking down interprovincial barriers. We will not be dealing with that in the foreseeable future. That is as clear as I can be.

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN BEER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not admit, as her officials admitted in the news conference, that anything which is applied to the European Community such as accepting that we have to permit their beer to come freely into the country will apply automatically to the United States and that that threatens thousands of jobs of beer workers right across the country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I admitted no such thing. I told the news conference and I told the Hon. Member that in discussions with the European community beer is very small beer, if I could put it that way, and that the people who would benefit the most from our acceptance of that ruling at this time would be the Americans. We did not see any reason to give the Americans a free ride on this issue at this time.

TURKISH REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the issue of Turkish refugee claimants who have been asked to leave the country.

I want the Minister to know that I am not requesting or advocating that they be given and provided with refugee status. Since it appears that they are not Convention refugees, to do so would only undermine and hurt the integrity of the refugee system. I have no inclination to do that.

Given that last year the Minister provided 16,000 ministerial permits and landed another 27,000 individuals under the Government's humanitarian program, will the Minister today at the very least undertake to consider these Turkish claimants under the criteria of the Government's humanitarian program as a possible measure that would address and hopefully resolve the Catch-22 and human dilemma that these people find themselves in?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the question reflects an extremely serious problem and I accept the argument put forward by my honourable colleague.

The problem with the Turks who are now in Montreal, however, is that these poeple went through the whole refugee determination process, contrary to those you referred to and on whom we are making decisions in a very particular way.

When these people arrived last year, Mr. Speaker, they were advised at each of the four stages of the process, that they would probably have to return to Turkey. Each time, we took into account the assessment system, including the Immigration Appeal Board where the various cases were considered on compassionate grounds. Their applications were turned down, especially in the case of the man who received notification, and there is no way the legislation could not be applied in their case, and that is essential, I think, if we grant these people a special status.

In other words, if, in spite of their failure every step of the way, we still grant them immigrant status—we could not grant them refugee status, because they do not meet the requirements—I ask my honourable friend this: Does he feel that we should grant the same consideration to the 45,000 other people whose decisions are pending?

REQUEST THAT HUMANITARIAN PROGRAM CRITERIA BE APPLIED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who also has to take into account that unscrupulous travel agents and legal counsels, operating in Turkey, have triggered off this latest Turkish immigration influx.

Here is my question to the Minister: Since these people have been encouraged by racketeers like those operating in Portugal and in Brazil and against whom the Government did nothing, and since these people managed to settle in this country, why could not the Minister at least consider, not guarantee, but consider applying the standards of the humanitarian program which have been applied 25,000 times last year to resolve this tragic and very emotional human problem?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my friends that among the 45,000 people who at the present time requested the status of refugees, in other words all those who are in the backlog, 30,000 on average have to be considered likely not to be refugees. All those people arrive with false documents or no documents. Among those, it is likely that almost all of those people were misled, and all those people were brought into Canada by different ways. My friend knows this very well, every time we discuss this, all those people were almost in the same situation as are the Turks in Montreal today.

I call for the Hon. Member's understanding for all those immigrants—and this is the bottom line—who come to Canada by the regular way, all those who are waiting for years and years to bring their relatives into this country, all those people will see those queue jumping—

An Hon. Member: What about the Turks?

Mr. Bouchard: Please, may I say what I wish to say? It is very serious, Sir. I wish to explain to Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West has asked the Hon. Minister to give consideration, on humanitarian grounds, to what I think Hon. Members will agree is a very difficult matter. The Hon. Minister is trying to explain a difficult but nonetheless very serious question that has been asked. I think the Hon. Minister should be given a few more seconds to complete his answer.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that all those people would not understand that we could allow not 40 Turks in Montreal, but many thousands of people in Quebec, and 30,000 across the country, to stay here without being refugees. Even the lawyer admitted that they are not refugees.

How can I give permission to 40 people when 20,000 will ask me, "Why those people and not ourselves?" That is the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—DEPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES TROOPS IN HONDURAS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it has to do with the deployment of U.S. troops in Honduras, which the Minister is well aware of, as are we all.

Does the Minister today stand by the oft repeated policy of both himself and the Prime Minister with respect to non-intervention by the superpowers in Central American, or was the Minister for International Trade on Friday speaking for the Government when she appeared to argue that the United States could do what it wanted in Central America, as long as it alleged it was doing it pursuant to a bilateral treaty, in this case the Rio Treaty between the United States and Honduras? What is the government policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not in Question Period, but I had the opportunity to see it on television on Friday. That is not what the Minister for International Trade said. What the Minister for International Trade indicated was what the Prime Minister had indicated in the speech that the Hon. Member quotes. That is the policy of this Government.

THREAT TO PEACE PROCESS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that on Friday the Minister for International Trade did mention the Rio Treaty, and did talk about the United States acting in the context of the bilateral arrangement. We all know, anyone who has been an observer of events, that it is often those types of bilateral treaties that are used to justify superpower intervention. The Soviets were allegedly invited into Afghanistan, the Americans into South Vietnam, and now the Americans into Honduras. This is the type of excuse that all right thinking Governments should criticize whenever any superpower uses it to justify intervention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: There are Americans, for example, former President Jimmy Carter and others, and a great many people criticizing American action—

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Blaikie: When is the Canadian Government going to have the guts to speak up and criticize something which obviously threatens the peace process in Central America?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would do Canadian students of Central American and other politics in this country a great deal of good to review the question that was put by the Hon. Member. He talked about what the Minister had appeared to have said. He talked about what is often the case. In so doing he is misrepresenting both the position taken by my colleague and the position of the Government.

Surely what is at issue here is that there have been developments in Central America on the border between Nicaragua and Honduras that all of us regret. Whether it was the Nicaraguan offensive, whether it was the American response, we believe neither was helpful. That was made clear by my colleague, and that has been made clear here. What is important is that there has now been some calm brought back to the situation. The United Nations—

Mr. Broadbent: With 3,000 U.S. troops there?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Leader of the New Democratic Party is ridiculing this process toward peace in Central America.

There is a choice, Mr. Speaker. If you are interested in peace in Central America, we can work towards peace. If you are interested in simply attacking the United States on every opportunity, you can do that too, but that will not move peace forward.

IMMIGRATION

QUERY WHETHER TURKISH NATIONALS WILL BE ABLE TO MAKE IMMIGRATION APPLICATIONS FROM WITHIN CANADA

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning the matter of Turkish nationals. The Minister is talking about a backlog of 45,000 cases. I would remind him that American jurist Oliver Wendell Holmes once said that statute books are not mathematical reference handbooks. I do not have a mathematical formula to respond to his questions, but I stress the fact that each of these 45,000 individuals is entitled to a fair and equitable hearing.

Mr. Speaker: The question, please.

Mr. Berger: Here is my question, Mr. Speaker. We are not asking that they all be accepted as a whole, but will he allow the Turkish nationals to apply for immigrant status here in Canada? He is empowered to do so under Immigration Act Section 115(2). For reasons well known to the public, will he allow these Turkish nationals to apply here in Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the same question I answered earlier. First of all, I am surprised the Hon. Member for Laurier says that laws are not necessarily there to be applied. Glad to hear it! Delighted!

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, and I answered this question earlier, if we let Turkish nationals apply for immigrant status in Canada, we are automatically giving the same right, and I don't see how we could do otherwise, to everybody else who wants to do the same, and in that case we no longer have a workable system for determining refugee status.

TURKISH NATIONALS—MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the application of laws should be fair and universal, and that is what we want. The Minister knows perfectly well that these people were victims. They were acting in good faith. The Minister also knows he did nothing in the fall of 1986 to protect them. In fact, he let 2,000 of these people come to Canada over a period of five months before taking any action. My question therefore is this: Doesn't he admit he has some responsibility, maybe even personally but at least as a member of the Government or as Minister, for the nightmare these people are going through today?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, speaking of responsibility, we have a political party that for eight months—I said it before and I say it again—has been obstructing a Bill, and as a result, 10,000 more people have been able to enter this country—again, I am referring to people who may be phony refugees—and meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, they continue to obstruct the Bill that is before the Senate.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

EARLY RELEASE OF PRISONERS WHO ARE CONNECTED WITH ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. He is well aware of the growing rift between police departments and the National Parole Board as a result of the early release of prisoners who are connected with organized crime.

Will the Solicitor General assure the House that he intends to take immediate action to resolve this rift? Will he spell out specifically what he intends to do in order to help restore public confidence in our parole system?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, I made public the recommendations contained in the Pepino Report. Recommendations 26 and 27 of that report which I have accepted recommend closer co-operation among the Correctional Services, the National Parole Board, and the police of every major community. They urge the setting up of a common parole unit so that there can be a proper exchange of information among them. This is presently being done.

BANK OF CANADA

GOVERNOR'S POSITION ON INFLATION RATE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Over the past year the Governor of the Bank of Canada has repeatedly made reference to his objective of bringing Canada's inflation rate to zero.

Could the Minister explain why there is no reference to a zero inflation rate in the annual report of the Bank of Canada which the Governor submitted to Parliament today? Does this mean that the Governor now expects that his policy of zero inflation was unrealistic and, if so, when will Canadians see action by the Government to reduce interest rates from their current unduly high levels?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Governor will be appearing before the Finance Committee at some time to talk on his annual report. However, if the Hon. Member looks at the report itself I think he will see that the Governor makes reference to his concerns about price pressures and the importance of dealing with price pressures early in the cycle, rather than allowing them to build up a head of steam and thereby run into the same problems which we ran into in the early 1970s prior to the oil price shocks and the final blow offs of these in the early 1980s.

I think the Governor has stated his position quite clearly, and I think that it is a very realistic position.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Governor's decision ignores the fact that in vast regions of our country, the unemployment rate is still excessive and people are living in recession conditions, despite the situation in Southern Ontario.

REQUEST THAT BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR ACT TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadian interest rates have increased, and our bank rate is now 2.7 per cent higher than in the United States, despite the fact that the inflation rate in both countries is comparable. Since high interest rates are responsible for the rise in the Canadian dollar and have had a negative impact on Canada's exports and jobs, could the Minister give the House the assurance that the Governor of the Bank of Canada will follow this apparent change in policy and take steps to reduce interest rates in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated any "apparent change in policy", to use the words of the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member should understand that it is inflation which leads to higher interest rates and that expectations of inflation will lead to high interest rates.

We saw a very good example of that in the first nine months of last year when we saw a significant increase in long-term interest rates in both Canada and the United States. This was a clear reflection of the concerns of investors in both countries about what might happen to the levels of inflation.

This is what causes high interest rates. It causes high interest rates on a permanent basis. What the Governor is trying to do, in monetary policy in Canada, is head off these problems earlier rather than later.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—ISSUANCE OF OFFSHORE LOBSTER LICENCES—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Lobster Advisory Board of the Minister of Fisheries in southwestern Nova Scotia last year advised the Minister of Fisheries not to proceed with offshore lobster licences. Yet last December the Minister of Fisheries did just that, and the Advisory Board now feels betrayed. It has called for his resignation, and 14 out of 15 of its members have resigned. The wrong people have resigned. It should be the Minister of Fisheries.

When will the Government cancel these harmful licences, and when will the Government replace the present Minister of Fisheries with a Minister who has the confidence of fishermen in the fishing industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the present Minister of Fisheries is one of the greatest incumbents of that office, certainly of this century if not including the 19th century.

It is regrettable if the inshore lobster advisory committee or some of its members resigned. However, it is an advisory committee. It is the Minister of Fisheries who has the responsibility for fisheries policy in Canada.

He made a decision to issue new licences with a view to opening up new grounds for underutilized lobster and red crab resources in NAFO Division 4W. To protect the resource there was no increase in the total allowable catch of 720 tonnes in the existing offshore lobster fishery.

Therefore, this is a decision made in the best interest of the fishery and of fishermen. Perhaps everybody does not agree. I am afraid it is very difficult in Canada to get 100 per cent agreement on any particular fishery policy.

POSITION OF FISHERMEN

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government is thumbing its nose at inshore fishermen in Atlantic Canada. They have to fight the weather, the quotas, and the declining stocks. Why do they now have to fight their own federal Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman would be up protesting if nobody got a licence, and he gets up and protests when somebody gets a licence. There isn't any way of satisfying the hon. gentleman opposite in fishery matters or in any other matter. What constructive suggestion has any member of the Opposition made in this session of Parliament?

FINANCE

CORPORATE TAXES OWED BY COMPANIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He might be aware that government figures released last week to my office indicate that over 100,000 corporations owe some $1.1 billion to the Government in undisputed taxes. A major deficit reduction could occur if the Government would only collect those taxes.

Therefore, my question to the Minister is a very simple one. What is the Government doing to collect the taxes which are owed to it?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question is more properly put to my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, but in his absence I will respond to the question.

We have done things. We have increased the interest cost for people who delay paying their taxes. These taxes are due and owing to the Government and we want to get those taxes in. I believe the Minister has asked his officials to improve the collection efforts on behalf of the Government to ensure that those taxes do come in. I would certainly encourage some support from the New Democratic Party in that direction.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East, a short supplementary.

COLLECTION OF TAXES—REQUEST FOR NEW MEASURES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I have a very short question, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to point out that the amount of taxes owing has increased this year over last year. Therefore, the measures the Government has taken certainly have not worked. In fact, they have done the opposite.

Very simply, is the Government prepared to look at the measures it has undertaken, which have not worked, to make certain that new measures are introduced so that the $3.3 billion in undisputed taxes can be collected and we can see either new programs or the deficit reduced?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member relates the amount which the uncollected tax has gone up but he will see that that is partly a function of the fact that over-all corporate tax revenues have gone up as a result of two things, one, the improvement in the health of the economy; second, the changes in tax policy that have resulted in a number of the corporate tax loopholes being closed so that companies are paying more tax.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate on a single question to be followed by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni, and that will close off Question Period.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, demonstrations took place today throughout Newfoundland and the Maritimes by public servants who are protesting the unwillingness of the Government to negotiate collective agreements with 31 bargaining units. Under this Government a public servant has about as much job security as a Tory Cabinet Minister.

Will the President of the Treasury Board order Treasury Board to resume negotiations with these 31 bargaining units to reduce the number of bargaining tables from 31 to 7 as the union has requested, and to stop playing musical chairs with the public servants of this country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is usually well informed but I have to advise him in this particular case his information is incorrect. Treasury Board has now scheduled with the Public Service Alliance the bargaining process for some 23 groups. That is contrary to the assertion the Member made.

The Hon. Member is aware, I am sure, that my predecessor established a two-tier bargaining system. The first tier involved the non-monetary issues which were settled by binding conciliation. The second tier, which was negotiated at 31 tables, was to be negotiated and would involve items such as rates of pay, vacation, holiday time, et cetera. Those particular issues were subject to a strike. The Public Service Alliance has chosen to eliminate this master agreement of the binding conciliation approach, and wants to go back to bargaining at 7 different tables with the right to strike right across the board. That is something Treasury Board has refused to acknowledge. Notwithstanding that, as I said in my original response, the schedule has now been set for some 23 units to proceed with bargaining, and we are prepared to sit down and go through that process.

PIPELINES

VANCOUVER ISLAND NATURAL GAS PIPELINE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR PARTIAL FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Recently the Province of British Columbia selected a new route for the natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. It presented a request to our Government for partial funding of the project in the amount of some $150 million. In view of the fact that a previous federal Government was quick to provide hundreds of millions of dollars for a similar pipeline project in Quebec earlier this decade, is our Government prepared to consider this request from the Province of B.C. seriously?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government of British Columbia, through its Energy Minister, advised us of its interest in this energy project.

Subsequently, the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and its officials had discussions with their British Columbia counterparts, and I shall be meeting with my provincial colleague in a matter of weeks.

We are very interested in this project, and I can assure the Minister that the Government's decision will be made in the interests of the people of British Columbia and Canada.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act on urgent environmental issues, especially its failure to negotiate a treaty with the United States to reduce acid rain emissions; its failure to incorporate environmental matters in major economic decisions, despite endorsing the Brundtland Report and the Report of the National Task Force on Environment and the Economy; and its failure to effect a clean-up of toxic wastes contaminating the Great Lakes Basin and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in this very important debate and want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for bringing it forward.

The debate today has to go beyond simply condemning the Government for its inaction in the area of the environment. While we can condemn the Government for its failures, and those failures are real and serious, we need to move beyond that and look at the entire system. Twenty years from now people who read this debate will probably remark on how timid on all sides of the issue we were, how slow we were to state the truth about what is happening in our environment and how blind we were to the reality of the environment. In many ways we, on all sides of the House, are children of our times. Operating within this present system we can have better or worse governments. The record of this present Government we have to admit is abominable.

We can begin back in 1984 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed his first Minister of the Environment, a Minister who admitted she knew nothing about the environment and her attitude showed that she could not care less. The fact that she was appointed indicates very clearly that the Prime Minister himself knew little about the environment and cared less. Since that time we have had a series of cut-backs. We now have 336 fewer employees in the Department of the Environment than we had in 1984 and $71 million less is available to the Department of the Environment, important as that is supposed to be in Canadian policy. We can admit though that the present Minister is both knowledgeable about the environment and committed to it, but he is playing catch-up. He is behind the ball all the time. He is not getting the kind of support from his cabinet colleagues that he should get.

Perhaps the most obvious example has been illustrated here by previous speakers, namely, the failure of the Prime Minister to stand up for Canadian interests on acid rain. Instead he is trying to reach some cosy arrangement with President Reagan, something to satisfy the President and to reinforce the buddy-buddy system which the Prime Minister has with the American President. This is not satisfactory as far as Canadian interests in the whole area of acid rain are concerned.

What about our fisheries policy? Here the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has brought in a policy of trading off one part of the environment for enhancement in another. He calls it "the no net loss policy" "or the enhancement policy". It involves selling off part of our environment with the idea that it can be compensated for by enhancement in some other part. It is a fallacious policy. We have seen the slow response of the Minister of Fisheries and of the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) to the presence of dioxins near pulp mill outflows.

We had the use of an experimental driftnet fishery, which was only stopped by the Minister last year after there had been a continued loud outcry because of the very clear evidence that driftnets were responsible for the death of whales and other sea mammals. Right now the Government has before it the question of whether or not there will be drilling for oil off Georges Bank, a very important area in fisheries resource. What is going to take precedence, oil drilling or fish? We want to wait and see what happens.

In 1984, the Senate committee brought out a report called Soil at Risk. Let me quote as follows from its fourth conclusion:

• (1510)

> Canada risks permanently losing a large portion of its agricultural capability if a major commitment to conserving the soil is not made immediately by all levels of Government and by all Canadians.

That was a very important study which just seems to have disappeared. Absolutely nothing has happened to it.

The complexity of the issue of soil is shown by a letter I received, a copy of which the Hon. Minister received last fall. It is from a young Vancouver Island woman who is involved in organic gardening. She has tried to maintain a complete cycle by using organic manure and the like to ensure that the food she produces is healthy and wholesome. What she did not realize was that the manure she was using, which she got from a nearby farm, was mixed with bedding which was made from wood shavings, and the wood shavings contained PCPs and TCPs. She took her food to be tested and found that the food she thought was being grown in an organic way, food that would be pure and wholesome, was itself toxic.

We live in a society and economy in which environmental degradation is often linked with short-term prosperity and with the demand for jobs. When there are still large areas of Canada with unacceptably high rates of unemployment, the pressure to accept environmentally unacceptable procedures is very great.

In British Columbia particularly, we have seen unacceptable logging methods and unacceptable mining methods. There are a number of controversies in British Columbia. Environmentalists and aboriginal people concerned with protecting their historic heritage are in conflict with resource users and resource abusers, in many cases. For example, the Lyton and Mount Currie people are involved in an attempt to protect their historic interest in the Stein River Valley. This is one of the last unspoiled areas of British Columbia.

In April of 1987 at the New Democratic Party provincial convention in British Columbia, we passed the resolution that no logging be allowed in the Stein Valley and that an immediate moratorium be called regarding the area until we have resolved the problems with the native Indians concerned. Since that time, our leader in British Columbia, Mike Harcourt, and our environmental critic, Joan Smallwood, have convened meetings in an attempt to find a rational solution to this, but unfortunately, in British Columbia there is a Government that does not know what a rational solution is. Its approach is confrontation, confrontation.

There is a similar situation with Strathcona Park, British Columbia's oldest park. Here a mining company is moving into a park. This is the new Vander Zalm approach to parks: call them recreational areas, which means that they can be mined or logged. The tailings from these operations threaten water supplies and the aesthetic value of the parks. Yet that is the policy of the provincial Government.

We have concerns about the Khutzematteen Valley in northern British Columbia, one of the last refuges of the grizzly bear in British Columbia. The logging value of the valley is negative because it will cost more to log it than the logs are worth. Unless something is done to preserve the valley, we will be pushing grizzly bears that much closer to extinction, certainly in British Columbia.

The provincial and federal Governments have failed to insist on air and water-pollution controls for mills and factories. There is a problem with dioxins, the most dangerous substances known to humanity. In the last several months, there has been increased evidence of dioxin presence near pulpmill outflows. Greenpeace has been working very hard on this issue, trying to get some provincial and federal government action on it.

Greenpeace points out that there are three major methods used in Sweden, West Germany and Japan to reduce dioxin contamination by some 80 per cent. First, oxygen rather than chlorine is used in the first stage of the bleaching process. Second, there is prolonged cooking of the pulp which separates the fibre from the lignin. This means that less bleaching is required. Third, chlorine gas is replaced with chlorine dioxide. The use of these three methods together means that the presence of dioxins can be cut by 80 per cent.

Greenpeace is calling on the pulp and paper industry to reduce its chlorinated emissions by 80 per cent within the next few years. It is also calling on the federal and provincial Governments to introduce new legislation that effectively regulates the discharge of chlorinated compounds, and is calling on the Canadian pulp and paper industry to supply the market with paper products that have not been bleached with any chlorine gas at all. Such paper will be slightly less bright than conventionally bleached paper, but tissue, writing pads and letterheads can fully serve their purposes without being fully bleached. Greenpeace is calling on the consumer to buy this new paper as soon as it becomes available. Further, as much paper as possible should be recycled and reused. It seems as though the paper from which I am reading from Greenpeace has been fairly highly bleached. This shows how involved all of us, even Greenpeace, are in the contradictions of this situation.

The logging, mining and mills policies are very shortsighted. When the resource is depleted, the industries move. Companies go elsewhere in North America or in the Third World, and all that is left is pollution, poverty and poor people.

In Canada today, there is the tragedy of a great many single-industry towns falling victim to poor resource management. Poor resource management and environmental degradation go hand in hand. They are the same thing.

The author M. T. Kelly has written a book that just won the Governor General's Award called A Dream Like Mine. The book tells of the kidnapping and mutilation of the manager of a pulp mill in northern Ontario. At the end of the story, which is very easy to read, the manager is promoted, the Indian who was involved in the kidnapping commits suicide, the person who tells the story, a reporter with one of Canada's national papers, is fired from his job, and there is a cash settlement for the pollution that has taken place in the river system of the Indian people living in northern Ontario. They receive a cash settlement but the pollution continues. In other words, nothing has really changed. There are similar problems on a larger scale in the developing world.

Smokey Bruyere, the leader of the Native Council of Canada, appeared before the Brundtland Commission when it was holding hearings in Canada and said:

> 'Indigenous peoples are the base of what I guess could be called the environmental security system. We are the gate-keepers of success or failure to husband our resources. For many of us, however, the last few centuries have meant a major loss of control over our lands and waters. We are still the first to know about changes in the environment, but we are now the last to be asked or consulted.
> We are the first to detect when the forests are being threatened, as they are under the slash and grab economics of this country. And we are the last to be asked about the future of our forests. We are the first to feel the pollution of our waters, as the Ojibway peoples of my own homelands in northern Ontario will attest. And, of course, we are the last to be consulted about how, when, and where developments should take place in order to assure continuing harmony for the seventh generation.
> The most we have learned to expect is to be compensated, always too late and too little. We are seldom asked to help avoid the need for compensation by lending our expertise and our consent to development.'

The kinds of problems we find in Canada are found in a magnified way in the developing world where, in the attempt to pay their debts and meet the requirements of the international monetary system, they are forced into a plantation economy. To make way for agro-industry the poor are forced off their subsistence plots of land into marginal areas. This puts ever greater pressure on the environment.

When poor people look at this situation and understand what is happening, they demand a bigger slice of the pie. There are a number of different responses to that. First, there can be a better division of the pie to reflect fairness. Most of us, when we were kids, if we grew up in a family with more than one or two children, were aware of how you have to be very careful when dividing a pie. We used to have a method where one person would divide and the other person would get first choice. We do not do that in the international system, we divide and we get first choice.

However, if we did have fairer shares, then the problem, a lot of people say, is that no one would have enough. With five billion people in our world it would simply mean that everyone would have a standard of poverty. As a result, for a long time people have been talking about a bigger pie. The idea is that we will both get more pie, but my share will always be bigger than your share even if I cannot eat all of my share. The problem with that, of course, is that if we keep making bigger and bigger pies we will very soon run out of ingredients. The side effect of my keeping a larger and larger share for myself is that I will soon have so much uneaten pie kicking around that it is going to start going bad, attracting flies and rats, and we will be buried under the pollution of our share of affluence, which is now happening to a large extent in North American and western Europe.

The third alternative is that we can have a different kind of pie and with that we could have fairer shares and we could also have a larger pie as well. Basically it is that different kind of pie with different ingredients and processes that the Brundtland report is talking about. It uses the concept of sustainable development. The problem here is, do we have the wisdom and the commitment to make the needed changes? Certainly we have heard a lot in this debate today about sustainable development. It has become the latest buzz-word. There is a tendency and a danger that the words "sustainable development" will become a rhetorical overlay. Everything will continue as before but we will call it sustainable development.

There is a need instead to integrate environmental concerns into every decision taken by Government. Perhaps we could use financial decisions as an analogy. Whenever a project is going to be approved by Government there has to be a financial costing. It has to be approved on that basis, and then it goes to Treasury Board for a final decision. The Auditor General looks at the whole question of how our Government spends money. Our yearly Estimates are studied by committee. We need the kind of revolution in our thinking which would demand that environmental considerations be just as important as financial considerations. We need the kind of revolution in our thinking where the Minister of the Environment would be seen to be as important in the councils of Government as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We need a new way of auditing that will take account of environmental concerns. There have to be similar kinds of costing for private enterprise projects.

We can look at overseas development assistance because when we talk about the environment we have to realize that we do not live in a fortress North America. We live in one world. What happens in Africa, what happens in South America, what happens in Southeast Asia affects our lives and will affect even more of the lives and environments of our children and our grandchildren.

I am pleased to see that some progress is being made in this area by CIDA. Environmental assessment is being written into government programs. We are making progress in recognizing the problem. We are moving away from large infrastructural projects to human resource development, to emphasis on education and primary health care, but we are far behind. Even there it is too often just a rhetorical recognition, sometimes not even that.

Last October the Minister responsible for CIDA spoke to the Canadian Exporters Association about new strategies for development assistance, but she did not mention the environment. We all know that the official development assistance of the Government is very small in comparison to the total problem of debt and commodity prices which push the Third World into the wrong kinds of development. For example, we have the loss of rain forest. Every year an area of forest the size of Newfoundland disappears through logging, overgrazing, firewood use, and slash and burn agriculture. Because of that we are losing genetic diversity in our world. We will lose some three-quarters of a million species by the year 2000. In the next century we will lose perhaps one species in three. The effect that all this has on climate is frightening.

Many World Bank projects are involved in this kind of exploitation. Many of us in the House of Commons, certainly in our Party right now, are involved in an attempt to make the World Bank more sensitive to the environment and to ensure that sustainable development is one of the criteria for loans. We want Canadian votes on World Bank projects to take that into account.

We need changes in our thinking much more quickly, however. At the turn of the century Gerard Manley Hopkins wrote a poem in which he talked about how people degrade the environment, but then, he said, for all this nature is never spent. "There lives the dearest freshness deep down things".

I see my time is coming to an end. I just want to say that what Hopkins recognized at the turn of the century, that there lived the dearest freshness deep down things, is true only to a limited extent. When we have nuclear waste, when we have dioxins poisoning the environment, when we have the stripping of forests and the desertification of huge areas, perhaps we will reach a point where nature will not have the ability to regenerate itself. We need a change in our thinking, and we condemn this Government for its specific failure to deal with the environment. Even more than that, we need to change the system. Unless we do, I think we need to recognize that our democracy is in crisis.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have sat in this House on both sides and come to the conclusion that Opposition Days are an opportunity to rise to the heights of hyperbole, regardless of which side you are on. One side condemns the Government, the other side praises the Government. One side says we are facing a crisis, the other side says we do not have a problem at all. One side says you have done nothing, the other side says we have done everything. We have certainly had enough of that today. However, I hope that over the rest of the day we may reason together, we may focus on, not simply the problem, not simply the facile solution, but try to see the possibilities before us in the foreseeable future.

I commend the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who has brought this motion to the floor. It is right that this House and this country focus its attention on the challenge to our environment and focus its attention on the imperative need for a solution. I welcome this debate and hope that there may come out of it not something as silly as condemning the Government or as facile as to say there is nothing wrong, but that we can think together both for today and the future about the possibilities we have as Members of Parliament.

First, we must recognize that we are not only the victims, but part of the problem as a human race. As the Brundtland report makes abundantly clear, one of the fundamental causes for the environmental crisis facing humanity is simply the growth of the human race at such a rapid rate in the past few years and the urbanization of the vast majority of humanity, particularly in developed areas. For instance, three out of every four persons live in an urban community which is no longer rightly described in the term "city".

I grew up in the City of Toronto when it was a city of some 700,000 people, with clearly defined borders. One could leave it very quickly to get into the rural countryside. Today, the City of Toronto is surrounded by cities such as my own Scarborough, Mississauga, and other cities in their own right which stretch for 100 miles, from Oshawa around the west end of Lake Ontario to Niagara Falls. It stretches up into Cambridge, Kitchener and ultimately to the City of London.

This is a Canadian example of a world-wide phenomenon, namely the replacement of the city by conurbation, which is the congregating of urban municipalities which often stretch for hundreds of miles. An example of this would be the area from north of Boston to south of Washington or, in the instance of the Great Lakes, from west and north of Chicago to the east end of Lake Ontario. The result of that all over the world is a threat to the purity of the environment and the survivability of the atmosphere.

The first lesson we should learn from this is that it is not a local or regional problem, the fault for which can be linked to this person, that party or that group. It is not an ideological problem. When we consider the world situation, we find that this prevalence of conurbations and the accompaniment of pollution exists regardless of whether it is a private enterprise system, a socialist system, democracy or communism. It exists regardless of the factors to which we often look for reasons.

The fact is that there are two reasons for these conurbations. One is the rapid growth of humanity in the past 40 years and the second is the equally rapid escalation of technology as a way of meeting the human needs of the world's growing population, without which the human race cannot survive.

One does not hear quarrels about development in Third World countries. They want the development and will make every effort to achieve it because they know it is absolutely essential to their survival. The cost in terms of the threat of that development to the environment is not always taken into account.

It would seem that the human race is prepared to go through three stages. Hopefully we may be at the third stage. The first stage is predevelopment, which was enough to maintain a small, slowly growing population. The second, to which I have referred, is the escalation of development along with the escalation of pollution. The third stage is one to which reference has been made by other Members, and which is found not only in the Brundtland report but in the report of the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy. It is sustained economic development, a way in which we will attempt to balance development and environmental concerns. We will attempt to balance technology and all that it provides for the human race along with safeguards against the threat which technology proposes for the human race. That is sustained economic development.

We cannot look to any simple panacea in order to provide the solution. For example, in the report of the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy, the writers include among their recommendations this paragraph:

> More research is needed on the concept of sustainable economic development and the linkages between economic development and the environment so that we can better understand those linkages and apply data and information to make better decisions.

I quote that paragraph for one simple reason. It shows how counterproductive it is for any of us to stand in this House and treat this problem as a simple one which could be solved simply by changing government from one party to another, changing from one ideology to another, changing from one agenda to another.

We have before us a crisis that has been years, decades and generations in the making. It is the result not of the simplification but of the complexity of modern society. It is a problem that will not flee from us simply by saying we should go back to the good old days, that we should establish more bureaucracies to monitor what is happening.

I believe we must work out the crisis step by step. I believe that to be the intent of the Government, with the support of the majority of Members in the House. I illustrate that by particular reference to the Great Lakes region, one that should be of concern to all Canadians and certainly of concern to everyone in this House who represents a constituency within its orbit.

Almost one out of every three Canadians live in the Great Lakes Basin. Nearly 50 per cent of Canadian industrial activity and 25 per cent of agriculture production is located in the basin. If we are to do something about the environment in Canada, we have to focus on this region.

If we are to have an adequate future as a country, it must be by addressing the problems that confront us in the Great Lakes region. Indeed, the enormity of this region is limited not only to Canadian considerations. Approximately 18 per cent of the fresh surface water on earth is to be found in the basin of the Great Lakes. Surrounding those great bodies of water are millions and millions of Canadians and Americans, living in this extraordinary, dynamic, affluent conurbation that has been formed on both sides of the border because of the technology that has brought them there and the productivity that has enabled them not only to develop a life for themselves but to provide a life for others throughout the continent and overseas.

But at what price? We are informed that there is in the Great Lakes a plethora of man-made substances. About 60,000 chemicals are produced or used in the United States and Canada, and many of those substances are deposited in the Great Lakes themselves. The result of the increased commercial production and widespread use of synthetic and organic chemicals and metals since the 1940s has been the polluting of the Great Lakes.

What is the solution? It is certainly not a magic wand solution, any more than it would be an attempt to be indifferent to the threat to all of us. I submit that it must be a progressive, steadfast, reasonable, consistent development of solutions, agreements, experiments and achievements toward finding a cure for one problem and a solution for another to build up over the years a greater cleansing of the Great Lakes and the atmosphere above and around them.

The kind of thing to which I refer includes such agreements and actions as provisions to deal with contaminated sediments which research over the past five years has shown to be a continuing source of pollution to overlying waters. Second, initiatives on airborne pollutants involving research, monitoring and control measures on pollutants reaching the lakes via the atmosphere. Third, provisions to designate severely polluted areas around the lakes as an area of concern and stipulate the development and implementation of remedial action plans for each area.

At present there are 42 such areas identified around the lakes, 12 of which are wholly within Canada, and five are interconnecting channels between the lakes which are shared with the United States. Fourth , specification of necessary research which underpins the identification of specific pollution problems around the lakes and the development and implementation of remedies. Fifth, provisions for the control of non-point sources of pollution, calling for specific plans to abate pollution from a variety of urban and rural land-drainage areas. Sixth, new measures for the identification and control of sources of contaminated ground water to the lakes.

We should take a moment to focus on the great problem in the Niagara River itself, a great and thundering body of water which is shared by two countries. The Niagara River Toxics Committee, which was established to examine at least a dimension of this problem, has established a list of 261 man-made chemicals present in the river, its tributaries and the western end of Lake Ontario. Of these it determined that 57 chemicals require immediate attention. That is the kind of crisis, the kind of threat, which the people of Ontario, New York State and other communities face. Lake Ontario is generally acknowledged as the most contaminated of the Great Lakes in terms of diversity and levels of toxic substance. Initiatives to meet that crisis have been taken. Progress has been made.

A draft Lake Ontario toxics management plan has been prepared. At this point it is going through public consultation before the agencies intention to finalize it by July of this year. That will not be a magic wand but it is an example of positive and constructive action which built on previous initiatives, laying the ground work for future projects, which will lead us to a time when we can foresee the cleaning up of Lake Ontario and making it the place that it once was.

Toxic chemical problems have also been evident in other Great Lakes interconnecting channels consisting of the St. Mary's River, the St. Clair River and the Detroit River. Since 1984, scientists from Ontario, Canada, and Michigan in the United States have been conducting field investigations under what is called the Upper Great Lakes Connecting Channel Study. The purpose of this study is to determine the present environmental status, the sources of contaminates, the fate and effects of these contaminates, existing control programs and their adequacy and to make recommendations for remedial actions.

It is clear from such examples as I have drawn that there is no easy one-shot solution anymore than this problem came about overnight. It is equally clear that action is taking place, one initiative building upon another. We have to recognize that the building of those initiatives, one upon the other, faces certain difficulties which should not give us an excuse to slow down, but rather should stimulate us to speed up with a determination which I find in this Government and which I find throughout this House. First, we face this kind of difficulty given the Constitution of Canada and the Constitution of the United States. Neither is a unitary country. Each involves two levels of Government, each with its own jurisdiction and authority. For almost every action that is open to us, there is a provincial authority with which we must have discussions. There are municipalities which are involved which must be consulted. So the process cannot be accelerated as much as the Government or the Opposition might wish.

The process in Canada cannot avoid the kind of protracted discussions and negotiations that are demanded. It is similar in the United States. Just about two years ago I had a meeting with a United States Congressmen during which we discussed the kind of concern we are discussing today. I chided him on the slowness of the United States Congress in recognizing this problem and co-operating with Canada in bringing about its solution. He said to me: "You may think we have done very little but where I live in the soft coal producing congressional district, the recent agreement seems like light years of action". Sometimes we have to be reminded of that.

In the United States Congress there is representation by 110 members of all the soft coal producing states in the north and the east of that country. They cannot be ignored. Political realism should tell us that. So when we are chided as a Government because we have not forced the United States to do this or do that, and when we are rebuked because we have not done it with the speed of the snap of one's fingers, let us recognize the realities that face not just this Government, but any government that would purport to lead this country.

We are confronted by the need for agreements within our own borders, by the need for agreement with other sovereignties, which cannot easily be achieved. We have to work at it with determination and with steadfastness.

In the last few minutes remaining, may I point out the obvious, namely, if we have a problem which is enormous and gargantuan in its measurements, we have it because of the simple fact that the population growth has speeded up and with it the development of industry and commerce have speeded up and we are, as it were, barreling down the road. We cannot just jump in front of it and stop it all. How does one provide a livelihood for the millions who call North America their home unless we maintain enough technological development to satisfy the needs of those people?

I submit this point to you, Mr. Speaker, which I hope will appeal to the reason of the House. Yes, it is good to prod governments and say, get on with the job. Getting on with the job is so important and crucial to the future of humanity that we must not slow down. Equally, it is vital that we in this House, and in the Parliaments that follow after us, show the divine gift of common sense that if we can achieve something this year, we will achieve more next year and more the year after that, and more a decade hence, and when we have put it all together, once more we will have a Canada and a North America our forefathers knew and which we will prize when we hold it again.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate. The motion is in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). In the motion which is before the House the Hon. Member has drawn attention, and quite correctly in my view, to the fact that in Canada major economic decisions continue to be taken without incorporating into them the necessary and vital environmental safeguards that are required.

As well, the motion reminds us that the so-called Brundtland Report, to which Canada supposedly subscribes, urges the very opposite, urges otherwise. The World Commission on Environment and Development which produced the Brundtland report bears the official title Our Common Future. Incidentally, the Brundtland report is named after the commission's chairperson, Gro Harlem Brundtland of Norway. Interestingly enough, this report did not in any way predict ever-increasing environmental decay, poverty and hardship in an ever-polluted world among ever-decreasing resources. Not at all.

The commission does not see the world situation regarding development and the environment as being hopeless at all. That is to say it is not hopeless if there is decisive political action now, action to begin managing environmental resources to ensure both sustainable human progress on the one hand and human survival on the other.

Rather than pointing to a dark and gloomy future the commission, on the contrary, is really rather hopeful in its tone. It sees the possibility for a new era of economic growth. However, it is one that must be based on policies that, first, sustain and, second, expand the environmental resource base.

Thus I point out to the House that the Brundtland report is not at all anti-development, not at all. Rather, it believes that growth in the world economy is absolutely essential in order to relieve the great amount of poverty that is deepening in much of the developing world, sometimes referred to as the Third World.

One of the themes of the Brundtland report which is of particular or special interest to me has to do with the process of development and its effect upon indigenous or aboriginal peoples for whom the preservation of a traditional way of life in close harmony with the natural environment is essential. Brundtland points out that the gradual advance of organized development into the more remote and isolated regions of the world where many aboriginal peoples live, regions which are often rich in valuable natural resources, has the effect of disrupting the local environment and endangering the traditional ways of life of these people.

A case in point, one rather close at hand, one that has been referred to frequently in the House of Commons, is that of the Lubicon Indian Band in the Peace River district of northern Alberta. Once a self-sufficient and proud people living in an undisturbed traditional economy they now, because of extensive resource development of oil and gas, and latterly pulp development, have been pushed aside. They have been generally excluded from any of the benefits of resource development. Consequently, they have had destroyed for them the basis of their traditional pursuits: fishing, hunting and trapping.

As a result, the Lubicon people have been reduced to a state of abject poverty. They have become welfare recipients, shack dwellers and sick. They have been stricken by an epidemic of tuberculosis which is almost unheard of anywhere else in Canada. They are depressed and hopeless.

Brundtland speaks of the increasing vulnerability of such groups left out of the processes of economic development. I quote briefly from the Commission's report which states:

> Social discrimination, cultural barriers, and the exclusion of these people from national political processes makes these groups [indigenous and aboriginal people] vulnerable and subject to exploitation. Many groups become dispossessed and marginalized and their traditional practices disappear. They become the victims of what could be described as cultural extinction.

The commission goes on to describe the situation as being one of great pity, a tragedy. It is a great pity and a tragedy because these indigenous or aboriginal peoples and communities are the repositories of traditional knowledge and experience that links our humanity with its ancient origins. That is not something to which most developers ever give a passing thought. After all, resource development is a procedure engaged in primarily for profit. But Brundtland reminds us that in pursuing economic development and destroying these people there is a loss that is suffered by all of us.

Again, I quote:

> Their disappearance is a loss for the larger society which could learn a great deal from their traditional skills in sustainably managing very complex ecological systems.

If we could learn that, would that not be a great step forward for humanity?

What sort of an approach or policy is needed in a nation to prevent these disasters to aboriginal and indigenous peoples from occurring? These are disasters which are directly related to the processes of resource development which no one wants to stop. I repeat again, Brundtland is not antidevelopment in its major over-all themes. What the Brundtland report calls for, interestingly enough, is a policy of self-government or self-determination for aboriginal peoples. Again, I quote from the report which states:

> The starting point—is the recognition and protection of their traditional rights to land and other resources that sustain their way of life.
> These groups [must have] their own institutions to regulate rights and obligations that are crucial for maintaining the harmony with nature and the environmental awareness characteristic of the traditional way of life.

● (1600)

Hence, the report goes on to say, that the "recognition of traditional rights must go hand in hand with measures to protect the local institutions that enforce responsibility in resource use. This recognition must also give local communities a decisive voice in (all matters related to) resource in the area". That is exactly, precisely what the Lubicon people in northern Alberta are asking for; it is exactly what the Nishga people in British Columbia are demanding, and there are many other instances of that kind.

By way of illustration, let me refer to the Nishga people of the northwest part of British Columbia. These people have, since time immemorial, responsibly defended, governed, managed and shared the land and the resources of the Nass River watershed.

In July, 1983, a pamphlet was published by the Nishga Tribal Council. The question was asked: "Are the Nishga people opposed to development?" They give the following answer, which I quote from the pamphlet:

> We are for development. We have always seen the development of our resources as a way of enhancing our culture and traditional values. Like most concerned Canadians, we do not support the kind of development which imposes tremendous negative impacts while offering few benefits. We are for orderly, rational development which is in tune with our culture, economic interests, and long-term survival.

A period of time before this pamphlet was written the same Nishga Tribal Council did a study within the Nass River Valley on forest resources. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking now about their traditional lands, lands to which they make a very legitimate claim, lands to which they state that they have aboriginal title. This study that they undertook carefully looked at current management resources. Here is what they found.

Up to 36,000 acres of the area logged and said to be reforested is not satisfactorily reforested; 73 per cent of the best quality logged area is choked with brush; 25 per cent of the soil in logged areas has been severely damaged; high-grading has occurred, that is, the accelerated removal of the best forests; requirements for reforestation, timber utilization, forest management, planning, and protection of the environment, all of those requirements have, in many instances, been relaxed.

The answer to this type of problem, this situation, is clear. The answer is in keeping with the ethics of the Brundtland Commission, that is, a recognition of the aboriginal rights of those people, and the aboriginal title of the Nishga people. This recognition by Canada and by the Government of British Columbia ought to lead to negotiation and a satisfactory settlement of this outstanding claim.

Finally, Brundtland suggests that earnings from traditional activities can be increased through the introduction of marketing arrangements that ensure there is a fair price for the produce from aboriginal communities. Apropos to this point, I believe a few comments would be in order concerning Canada's oldest industry, that of fur trapping. For many native people today trapping remains an essential part of life. This traditional pursuit is consistently conducted with a clear eye to conservation. Yet, trapping is coming under increasing attack from the animal rights movement which is opposed to any kind of animal use.

In the 1970s the seal industry was challenged and it was all but destroyed. The result of that was to deprive many northern Inuit communities of the main basis of their livelihood. Now the fur industry faces exactly the same threat. Recently, the British Minister of Trade indicated to the United Kingdom House of Commons that he was preparing a measure to force retailers to label some wild fur products indicating that they are derived from trapped animals. The Grand Council of the Cree said to the British Government, regarding this proposed legislation, that unlike the seal ban, not only the Inuit communities are targeted now, but aboriginal people throughout and across Canada.

Georges Erasmus, the Canadian Co-chairman of Indigenous Survival International, recently stated before a parliamentary committee that studied the fur issue that aboriginal peoples have always seen that it is possible to play a responsible productive role in nature, and it is possible for human societies to be a part of the balanced ecosystem. The animal rights group cannot accept that as a premise.

I conclude by referring again to a very important point made by the Brundtland Commission, namely, that larger societies can learn a great deal from those who practise traditional skills in sustainably managing very complex ecological systems.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate on the consideration of an opposition motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald):

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act on urgent environmental issues, especially its failure to negotiate a treaty with the United States to reduce acid rain emissions; its failure to incorporate environmental matters in major economic decisions, despite endorsing the Brundtland Report and the report of the National Task Force on Environment and the Economy; and its failure to effect a clean-up of the toxic wastes contaminating the Great Lakes Basin and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

That is the motion we are debating, Mr. Speaker, and there are a great many things that could be said, beginning with acid rain. I see that the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) is present. He and I had the opportunity to serve together for some three years on the Special Committee on Acid Rain which he chaired, and as far as I know he stills chairs. It was a matter of great concern to the committee then, as I am sure it is now, that there has been no treaty on acid rain with the United States.

After all is said and done, after the summits and the Envoy's reports, and the mention of the possible negotiation of a treaty by President Reagan when he was here last year, at the end of the day we are really no further ahead with respect to actual reductions in American emissions that affect the Canadian environment.

In fact, some of us would argue that we are actually worse off because of some of the actions taken by the Conservative Government. Why are we worse off? One of the things that became clear to all committee members, whether or not they are willing to admit it, is that the Canadian Government, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by accepting the clean-coal technology approach of President Reagan, accepted a view of the acid rain problem which played into the hands of those on the American side who do not wish to see immediate action on acid rain.

I believe it was last June that the special committee on acid rain went to Washington. The following points were made to us over and over again by people who were our friends and allies in the States, that is to say, the people who were trying to get legislation that would actually mandate specific reductions. They said that our Prime Minister wittingly or unwittingly—that is not the point—had actually played into the hands of the very people they were fighting against, that is, the coal lobby in the United States; that it was the coal lobby that was behind the kind of approach to which the Prime Minister and the President agreed; and that we were actually making life more difficult, not less, for those whom we perceived as our allies in Congress and elsewhere in various environmental groups in the United States.

I think that is as true today as it was in June, 1987 when we were there. Nothing has come of President Reagan's last minute add-on to his speech in the House of Commons in respect of an acid rain treaty. We all know—those of us who know anything at all—that it was added as kind of a face-saving gesture so that the Prime Minister would have something to point to. I suppose that is understandable in the larger world of political images and whatnot.

However, the fact remains that if our bottom line concern, to use a phrase which I do not actually like, is whether or not there is any less acid rain falling down on Canada as a result of the policies of the Government, the conclusion must be that that is simply not the case. Maple trees continue to die in Quebec. Lakes in Ontario continue to get worse, many thousands of them to the point of being dead lakes. I would say in respect of acid rain that government policy has been a perfect failure.

As some Hon. Members will know, I was the NDP environment critic for three years. Now I am the external affairs critic and deal with things such as arms control, disarmament, regional conflicts in the Middle East and Central America, and all kinds of such things. Despite the obvious difficulty and threat to human life and to peace in the world that these situations present, they produce much less despair in one than trying to deal with environmental issues. One thing overtook me in three years as one of the people responsible in this place for trying to bring about and to keep environmental issues on the environmental agenda when they were there. It was the fact that most of the problems about which we are talking are incremental, cumulative, and keep on doing damage to the environment every minute of every day of every week of every month that we sit here and concern ourselves with other things that I would contend are often much less important than the fact that we are persistently poisoning ourselves and the environment and putting at risk the future health of creation and of future generations. It just keeps happening. It makes one want to cry out: "Why, why can't we muster the same kind of concern about these things as can be mustered around other issues?"

A good example, as far as I am concerned, is the one on which I spoke in the House the other day in the context of a Private Member's Bill, the question of the ozone layer. We know that when styrofoam breaks down it produces or releases chlorofluorocarbons that eventually gather at a certain level in the atmosphere and break down the ozone layer. This increases the possibility of skin cancer and does other damage to the environment. Yet in one's daily life one is constantly confronted with the use of these substances, not for essential purposes. It is not as if we are talking about having to use this substance for purposes for which no other substitute can be found.

Just this morning on my way here on an Air Canada flight from Winnipeg, I noticed that all the place-mats on the plane were styrofoam. Here in the lobby of the House of Commons all the coffee cups are styrofoam. It is not just the case with Air Canada and the House of Commons. If one goes to almost any church in the country, one will be served a cup of coffee in a styrofoam cup. We are not talking about something that is essential. We are talking about something that could be easily done with something else. I flew on aircraft from Winnipeg to Ottawa for seven years without styrofoam place-mats. I never knew I missed them. There are so many things like that. We cannot even muster the collective moral will to eliminate the very small ways in which we contribute to a serious environmental problem like the erosion of the ozone layer. It seems to me that that is cause for wailing, lamenting, and gnashing of teeth. If we cannot even do those small things, how will we ever do the big things that are required and will be required whether or not we like it? It is only a question of whether we are going to wait until we are up to our necks in garbage before we do something or whether we will decide to do something today, yesterday preferably.

There was a program last night on television—and in fact there was one a couple of weeks ago—about the problem of land fill. We are running out of places to put all this stuff. It is not as if no one was saying these things 10, 15, or 20 years ago. People who complained at that time about the fact that we would have to find alternatives to constantly producing non-recyclable materials and things that go straight into the garbage were considered to be just a bunch of counter-cultural hippie nuts to which nobody should pay any attention; they were against progress. I know because I was one of those counter-cultural hippie guys who were against so-called progress. The fact remains that we were right. If many of the problems to which we pointed then had been dealt with, it would have been a whole lot easier than dealing with them now when we are at the point when we must deal with things in an emergency situation.

The City of Toronto is sitting there, not knowing what it will do next year with its garbage. It is not a very good situation. Certainly it is something that could have been prevented had there been the political will and, for that matter, the political intelligence to do so. The fact remains that there are all kinds of things that are packaged for no reason other than marketing strategies. For the sake of marketing strategies we have polluted the planet. It is because these things sell better when they are individually packaged and have a plastic this and a plastic that.

I am talking about a lot of unnecessary things that we do. It does not involve any moral dilemma; it is just the question of one generation, our generation, placing our personal, economic, material convenience higher than the well-being of future generations and higher than the well-being of creation itself.

The story the other night dealt with plastic in the oceans, with fish, marine mammals and birds literally choking to death on all the plastic that we have dumped in the oceans because it would cost too much to do something about it. Individual companies and governments, be they socialist or capitalist, it does not matter, have been guilty because they could not be bothered. It is short term efficiency. But this kind of short term efficiency has dragged us down into what will turn out to be the most inefficient thing that we ever did as a human community. Literally, in the name of these short term efficiencies, we will wipe out, if we do not smarten up, the very things which sustain us environmentally and economically. It is impossible to talk about a healthy economy without talking and acting at the same time about having a sustainable environment. That was one of the points made over and over again by the Brundtland report.

Over the years we have externalized environmental costs or they have not been paid at all, they have just been lying there waiting to be paid. Things like clean air, clean water, fertile soil and naturally occurring forests and everything else have not been figured into the cost of doing business, into the cost of our economic way of life. So whoever happened to get there first, whoever happened to get to the clean air, the clean water or the naturally occurring forest first and got the rights from the Crown or whatever the case may be would do just whatever liked. That may have worked for 50, 60 or 70 years, the very short time that we have just done what we pleased with our air, soil, water and forests. It will turn out to be historically a very short period of time but a very historically significant time if we do not change our ways. The people of the future will look back and say: "Would you believe those guys in the 20th century?" Would you believe what they did between 1910 and 1990?" Or whatever the period may be. "Would you believe the incredible lack of foresight or the incredible moral responsibility of what they did in a period of 80 to 90 years to that which took thousands and thousands of years to build up?" Woe I say to the generation that is able to be accused of that. Yet that is exactly the kind of accusation which can be made against the people of the 20th century. We can only hope that in the latter days of this century we will smarten up and do everything that is in our power to do in order to rectify the very terrible situation in which we have got ourselves.

There have been a few victories, I suppose, Mr. Speaker. They should not go unmentioned. The resolution of the problem with respect to South Moresby is the one little victory and a significant one that comes to mind. But people are still camped out at Strathcona Park on Vancouver Island trying to protect one of the oldest provincial parks in British Columbia from the kind of mining exploration which the provincial Government has decided to permit. The battle goes on.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) mentioned something on which I hope I still have some time to comment, namely, the whole question of the fur lobby and that in the past a very successful campaign was waged against the seal hunt. That campaign has now been extended by animal rights groups and others to all fur products, and the appropriate cabinet Minister in the British Government is considering some kind of action which would discourage people from purchasing Canadian fur products.

I want to put on the record my opposition to this kind of action by the animal rights groups and by the British Government, if it chooses to take this kind of action.

To the extent that the environmental movement has been involved in this, although some groups like Greenpeace appear to be pulling back from their activity and participation in the anti-fur lobby, they have participated in something which has undermined the economic viability and the traditional lifestyles of people who are their natural allies. It seems to me that the native people and environmentalists are in many ways natural allies. I have always regretted the extent to which some in the environmental community have participated in the anti-fur lobby. I am glad to see that many in the environmental movement are coming to perceive that this is an inappropriate course of action for them. One of the things I think is important to the over-all sustainability of the environment is the sustainability of native lifestyles and native communities.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you were signalling that I have little time left, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is nodding in agreement. With that, I will bring my remarks to a close.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for his contribution to this debate. In particular I paid attention to the part where he referred to his plane trip this morning and the styrofoam cups that we use here in the House. I decided to make a quick inquiry about his comment on the cups to see whether the Member was right, but I do not know the answer. This is the kind of problem consumers have. Members of Parliament are supposed to be particularly well informed about issues of this nature. As I said, I made some quick inquiries and was told that styrofoam cups are okay, that CFCs are not used as an agent for blowing in making these cups. Instead they use hydrocarbons such as propane or butane. While I asked my interlocutor how can one identify what cups have CFCs and which do not, I was told that cups which break up into little chunks and bubbles when you pick away at them are okay, that CFCs are not involved in them. Apparently the ones that use CFCs are smooth. I have part of a cup here that we use in the lobby. I started to rip it apart. If they rip like paper, apparently they are supposed to contain CFCs. I suppose you can guess, Mr. Speaker, that I am somewhat confused in that it is difficult to determine what kind of cups contain CFCs and what kind of cups do not.

This reminds me of a point I made when speaking in a debate on the environment several weeks ago. I said that one of the things the Government could do, even if it did not want to ban outright the use of CFCs, would be to require that products containing CFCs be labelled as such, allowing consumers to make intelligent decisions about whether they want to purchase such products or not. It is a point I felt that I would like to raise in this debate, and I invite the Hon. Member to respond if he would care to.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, there are kinds of foam that do not contain CFCs, and part of the problem, as the Hon. Member has said so well, is that one is not always aware what foam is which. The idea of labelling is certainly a good half measure but the best thing would be not to permit these products to be made in the first place, particularly if there are alternatives, and there are. However, even if hydrocarbon or something else is used as a blowing agent rather than CFCs, there is still the secondary environmental problem which is that these are non-biodegradable substances. In fairness, though, that is not what I was talking about when I was speaking.

The Hon. Member made a good point. Just recently in my home province, the Government announced an aid package for a company that was making styrofoam egg cartons. If those styrofoam egg cartons are being made with the kind of foam that contains CFCs, then this is hardly an instance of integrating environmental and economic decisions. I cannot say for sure exactly what process will be used—

Ms. McDonald: They're going to use the good stuff.

Mr. Blaikie: I am told by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that it was the good stuff, not the stuff with CFCs.

Ms. McDonald: But it wasn't cardboard either.

Mr. Blaikie: In any event, at least it was not CFCs. Had it been, that would have been a classic example of economic and environmental decisions being at odds with each other. The fact that the process does not use CFCs is certainly something I am glad to hear. I see that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood checked that out.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add some input into what I think is an extremely timely and very important motion which is before the House today. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and members of her Party have been constantly supporting issues that relate to the environment.

Someone said to me the other weekend that we should start treating Canada as if we planned to stay here for a while. Indeed, we do. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) just mentioned, those who come after us will look back and ask why we did this, why we did that and why we were so concerned about resource exploitation. They will ask why the Government of the day was not focusing more aggressively on issues of immediate impact on the environment.

The environment knows no partisan politics. I invite all Hon. Members to bone up on environmental issues because I think it will be a major point of confrontation during the next election campaign. If Members or candidates are not conscious of the environment in their own neighbourhoods, provinces and country, they will be facing pretty tough questions from their constituents or their potential constituents.

I want to speak briefly today on securing sustainable development in Canada with the following points of view. I want to talk about the Government's record on implementing the principles of sustaining development as described in the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development and Canada's national task force on environment and the economy.

Almost a year ago, the world commission, commonly known as the Brundtland Commission, released its landmark document entitled Our Common Future. Canada called for this commission and Canada generously supported and funded it throughout all of its work. We commend those who produced the final report.

In the broad sense, the Brundtland report is not one of despair. Rather, it is a message of hope. Simply stated, the commission argued that every nation must integrate environmental considerations into economic decisions. Our Common Future envisions a new era of growth through sustainable development.

In his speech to the United Nations last fall, our Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said the following to the assembly:

> The environment and economy cannot be addressed as two separate global problems; only by viewing the two as one can either be resolved.

The federal Minister of the Environment went on to say at the assembly in his recommendations that the concept of sustainable development should be supported and that UN agencies and affiliates should ensure that their programs reflect that concept.

Canada worked very hard within the assembly to ensure unanimous support for a resolution passed last December calling upon all Governments, the United Nations and multilateral and development institutions to review and ensure that their policies and programs contribute directly to sustainable development. Canada has already been successful in having the food and agricultural organization and the UN industrial development organization adopt a resolution on the concept of sustainable development.

As Hon. Members know, at the Commonwealth heads of Government meeting in Vancouver last year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), along with all of the other Commonwealth leaders, agreed that the goal of environmentally sustainable development should be central to national and international economic policy. As we have seen recently, an announcement was made a few weeks ago indicating that CIDA, our Canadian aid program, will try to do everything it can to concentrate aid on projects that would ensure that sustainable development is realized in countries throughout the world to which we give assistance.

Hon. Members might recall that years ago, I lived and worked in eastern, central and southern Africa in the areas of national parks, wildlife and tourism. Aside from having a remarkable learning experience, I was impressed by the fact that the Tanzanians, Kenyans, Zimbabweans and Malawians recognize that within the context of their own environmental development, their wildlife resources and national parks play a very important part in sustaining the future of their countries.

I recently returned there, just three months ago, after being away for 11 years. Although these countries face great hardships, their leaders, Ministers and Members of Parliament with whom I met continue to underline the value of the land and the value of their natural resources to the sustainable growth within their own countries. Let us recall that these are very, very poor countries. It would be easy for them to just brush that aside and develop the land, cut down all the trees and kill all the wildlife. These people live from day to day and from week to week, but they have recognized the importance of maintaining sustainable growth in their own countries.

Last September, Canada hosted a diplomatic conference at which 22 countries signed what is now called the Montreal Protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. Canada's effort will continue to focus on the management of the global commons in the atmospheric sector, mainly through support for the development of a law of the air. Canadians are also deeply concerned about global climate change, and Canada will host an international conference in June in Toronto that will address the issue among other atmospheric issues. The conference is called "The Changing Atmosphere: Implications for Global Security" and is another example of Canada's commitment to the Brundtland Commission's call for prudent management of the global commons.

I want to talk a bit about something that has been very important to the over-all context of the environment and important to me and to the people of Ottawa—Carleton. The international co-operation to secure an abundance of wildlife as recommended by the Brundtland Commission is already evident through co-operation between Canada and its neighbour, the United States. In 1986, Canada and the U.S. signed a $1.5-billion North American waterfowl management plan to restore and enhance waterfowl populations.

The plan, which is a milestone in multilevel government and private-sector co-operation, aims principally at conserving habitat beneficial to both wildlife and agricultural interests. I underline that it is of benefit to both wildlife and agricultural interests. It will be of extreme importance in western Canada, the breeding grounds of the North American waterfowl. Once this plan is fully implemented, enhanced water-fowl populations will make a valuable economic contribution to all regions of North America.

We have heard reference to acid rain here today. We all know how serious that problem is. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) has been leading the charge for many years to get not only his Government and our country to recognize the importance of this transboundary problem, but to get the Americans to recognize its importance as well. Last year at a conference in Quebec City a report was released by a man named Paul Hansen from the Izaak Walton League of America. It is called Acid Rain and Water-Fowl: The Case for Concern in North America. In the forward to the report he refers to this devastating problem and I quote:

> Now comes this report from Paul W. Hansen of the Izaak Walton League of America, pointing to the involvement of acid rain in the welfare of breeding ducks. Based upon preliminary research by Canadian and U.S. biologists, this report presents sobering information on the adverse effects of acid rain on Black Duck and other duck populations.

In North America, particularly eastern North America, since 1955 the Black Duck population has declined by 60 per cent. This beautiful bird used to be called the Crown Prince of the Atlantic Flyway. It has been conclusively proven by these researchers that acid rain is having a very negative impact on the breeding habits and habitats of the Black Duck. That is a barometer which says we have to act and act quickly. When you see that kind of a reduction in the number of water-fowl, you know we have a serious environmental problem.

World Wildlife Fund Canada has been working aggressively in co-operation with the federal Government, provincial Governments and the private sector in many important areas of wildlife habitat and restoration. In fact, they are working on what is called the Canadian Endangered Species Program. Last year the federal Government announced a new program within the context of the Endangered Species Recovery Fund involving $1 million over the next four years. Let me just quote a word or two from the last annual report of the fund concerning this work:

> In 1986, a rather sad Canadian milestone was reached. The national list compiled by the Committee on the Status of Endangered Wildlife in Canada officially exceeded 100 species.

That should not be happening. For whatever reason, 86 per cent of all Canadians have expressed the view that saving endangered species is important to them. The federal Government made a commitment to spend $1 million to assist with these programs. Whether it be the Bald Eagle, the bison in Wood Buffalo National Park, or other endangered species, many projects are being pursued and we are going to continue to co-operate in an effort to enhance the potential of our wildlife resources throughout the country.

The World Wildlife Fund Canada is also involved in administering the Wildlife Toxicology Fund which is fully funded by the federal Government. They submitted a report to the Minister of the Environment last April. Monte Hummel, the Executive Co-ordinator of the fund, concludes, based on this federal support, and I quote again:

> The first 19 months of operation of the Wildlife Toxicology Fund have been immensely successful by any measurement. The quality and diversity of work supported is second to none, and we have achieved the desired leverage effect of using Environment Canada funding to secure financial support from others.

An excellent example of co-operation between federal funds and the private sector administered through a third party organization, the very well-known and successful World Wildlife Fund for Canada. I congratulate Mr. Hummel and all of his colleagues for their efforts and we look forward to expanding those efforts.

The Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers put together a national task force on the environment in the economy. The Prime Minister and all provincial Premiers discussed and endorsed the report of that task force at the conference of First Ministers last November. The Prime Minister stated that we must encourage economic growth in harmony with our environment. That addresses very clearly and concisely the concerns brought forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood in her motion which we are now debating.

As was recently referred to by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill we had a significant achievement last year with the magnificent archipelago off the West Coast of British Columbia known as South Moresby. The islands contain some of the last virgin rain forest in Canada. It contains many unique plant and animal species. These islands are also home of the Haida Nation, a nation rich in cultural heritage. The economic value of the timber contained in the rain forest on the islands created for Governments and the forest industry a difficult trade-off between short-term and long-term interests, and between regional and national values.

Through co-operative efforts of Government, industry and the people of South Moresby, environmental and economic goals were finally reconciled and a national park will soon be created there as part of a multimillion dollar economic development strategy for the area. This is based on the sustainable development concept which ties directly into the discussion we are having today in reference to the Brundtland Commission report. The Haida's role in the strategy will be central. Canada will be working to develop similar demonstrations of how environmental and economic considerations can be successfully integrated through this kind of partnership and co-operation.

Reference has also been made to energy and how it relates to not only Canada's use, needs, future and present, but also within the context of the free trade agreement. The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) should be congratulated for his success in applying the Brundtland message in his area of responsibility. The department has an impressive action plan to integrate environment and economy which addresses the inclusion of environmental considerations in cabinet documents and the rigorous application of environmental assessment. This approach can be considered as a progressive model for government departments at all levels. Indeed, the federal agenda calls for the integration of environmental considerations into the policies of all federal departments.

Within the context of sustainable development, to meet this challenge as well in the agriculture sector, for example, federal and provincial Governments have collaborated in developing a national agriculture strategy. This strategy acknowledges that soil and water resources must be protected and improved through conservation and development programs, thereby guaranteeing agricultural productivity for future generations.

We have also seen a national policy for managing fish habitat instituted pursuant to the federal Fisheries Act. Its long-term objective is an over-all net increase in the productive capacity of fish habitat, to be achieved through conservation, restoration, and the development of habitat for aquatic plants, fish, shellfish, crustaceans, and marine animals in general.

Recently, the federal Government announced a new national water policy. I am pleased that it has done so, as I am sure you are, Mr. Speaker, The water in the Hamilton area is not exactly drinkable.

Witnesses recently appeared before the legislative committee studying the environmental protection legislation. They were extremely concerned about the pollutants, chemicals, waste and toxins that are not only killing the Niagara River but the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence. Canada used to be known as a country with beautiful lakes, rivers and wildlife. These are finite resources and can only withstand a certain amount of punishment. They have been punished for decades.

We must recognize that in order to achieve sustainable economic growth there must be an environmental component to every project we undertake, whether it is a housing project, a mining project, a forestry project, the creation of a national park or the utilization of our rivers for hydroelectricity.

We must never lose sight of the importance of the environment. The national water policy is very timely. The Rideau River flows through the City of Ottawa and empties into the Ottawa River. When I was young, I used to swim in the Rideau River at an area known as Mooney's Bay.

Today, at best there are 40 days during the summer when one can go in the water. I will be asking the federal Government to work closely with the Province of Ontario, the Regional Municipality of Ottawa—Carleton and the Cities of Ottawa and Nepean to clean up Mooney's Bay under its national water policy. They will spend a lot of money this year through Parks Canada, the National Capital Commission and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa Carleton to develop a marina at Mooney's Bay which is sorely needed. Today, anyone who falls into Mooney's Bay may have to be rushed to the Riverside Hospital for a tetanus shot. We need to enhance the tertiary treatment to our storm sewage drainage system. In that context the Brundtland Report even touches the Rideau River.

The Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka is well aware of the importance of the tourism industry in his riding. It is absolutely essential. Tourism is vital in all of Canada. It is the second largest employer in the National Capital Region.

If we do not enhance the quality of our lakes and rivers, we will face serious consequences in the future. Last spring I had the privilege of visiting for the first time a northern part of Canada. I spent a week at Tuktoyaktuk and had an opportunity to visit Holman and Victoria Islands. Although the North is magnificent and quite beautiful, where I experienced 24 hours of daylight for the first time, what I saw were barrels, drums, oil spills, garbage, boards, piles of steel and used fencing lying everywhere. That was not my vision of the North.

I spoke to the Minister responsible for natural resources in the North and talked to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and to the Minister of the Environment. I said it is necessary to work together because places like Tuktoyaktuk will not sustain themselves if we do not protect the fragile environment.

This is a very important motion before the House today and all Members should take heed. If our environment dies, we will die with it.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to act on urgent environmental issues, especially its failure to negotiate a treaty with the United States to reduce acid rain emissions; its failure to incorporate environmental matters in major economic decisions, despite endorsing the Brundtland Report and the Report of the National Task Force on Environment and the Economy; and its failure to effect a clean-up of toxic wastes contaminating the Great Lakes Basin and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, take a few moments to speak in this debate on the environment, the subject raised in an Opposition motion presented here in the House.

It is perfectly true that the people of my province, that Quebecers are very concerned about the quality of the environment, and I would say that concern is increasing.

I realize that Canadians on the whole are becoming increasingly concerned about the environment, but last month, the results of a public opinion poll conducted by the firm Léger et Léger in Quebec, showed that Quebecers are even more concerned about the environment then we thought. I will mention some of the facts discovered by this well-known polling firm which published the results of the survey in the Journal de Montréal of February 10. People are now very much concerned about the quality of the environment in Quebec, as much as 83 per cent. We can say this has now become a major political issue.

People were asked: Generally speaking, what kind of pollution do you think is most harmful? Of the persons surveyed, 33 per cent mentioned acid rain; 28.8 per cent thought all forms of pollution were harmful, and I think they are right; 19.5 per cent thought air pollution was most harmful, while 13 per cent mentioned water pollution. When people were asked what they thought was mainly responsible for pollution, 70 per cent put industry first. One of the most important and surprising discoveries was how people answered the following question: Would you be in favour of separating your garbage into waste paper, plastic and glass, for recycling purposes? Seventy-seven per cent of respondents said yes.

This demonstrates that people are not only concerned about the environment but are also prepared to make an effort to clean up their surroundings. They are prepared to go even further, as we see in the answer to the following question: Would you be willing to pay a special anti-pollution tax to improve the quality of the environment? Usually when taxpayers are asked whether they want to pay an additional tax, the answer is no. In this case, 59.3 per cent said yes, they were willing to pay a special tax to fight pollution.

Finally, I think the House would also be interested in the answer to another question. People were asked: Do you think environmental regulations in Quebec are strict enough or not strict enough? Not strict enough, said 83 per cent.

That is how important the quality of the environment and cleaning up the environment has become to our Quebec constituents. It is not surprising, because the headlines in the media are increasingly bringing major problems to our attention. For instance, here is one headline, and I have several that go back one or two years.

In La Presse of February 26, 1987: Le Québec est devenu la fosse septique des Grands Lacs (Quebec, the Great Lakes' Septic Tank). No wonder people were getting concerned when more recently, in November 1987, Le Devoir mentioned the renewal of the Great Lakes water quality agreement between Canada and the United States, it pointed out that the St. Lawrence was not included. The St. Lawrence was not included as part of the Great Lakes system, although all environmental experts had recommended this long ago.

Here is a headline from March 5, 1987. That was a year ago, but I will get back to this one because "a year later, we still have the same situation". Here we have a headline showing a photograph of the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan), who said on the subject of cleaning up Quebec's waterways that: "Ottawa won't spend a cent".

According to one study, Quebec is the province most severely threatened by acid rain. No wonder Quebecers are becoming increasingly concerned about environmental issues. This study was released and discussed at the end of an international forum on acid rain held in Montreal. This was in February, which means last month. "The federal Minister of the Environment", said the article, "refused to take part in this seminar organized by l'Union des producteurs agricoles (UPA). Officially, the Minister had declined", the article read, "because he had to accept an award from the Governor General in Toronto. However, it was rumoured in UPA circles that the Union's opposition to free trade had caused a breakdown in relations between the UPA and the Minister of the Environment". The result was, of course, that the Minister failed to participate in an important conference on acid rain.

Meanwhile, the Quebec Minister of the Environment was doing his best to go it alone.

Here we read: "Lincoln will set up an action committee to clean up the St. Lawrence". Lincoln was of course prepared to spend a lot of money, but he expected the federal Government to do its share. A year ago in June 1987, we read: "Lincoln is sure Quebec will get $100 million from Ottawa to clean up the St. Lawrence River."

In a few minutes I will tell you what Lincoln said on a television broadcast exactly six days ago. He was still negotiating to get his $100 million.

I have here a cartoon that appeared in Le Devoir on February 19, 1988. We are not supposed to show pictures here in the House so I will describe it. It shows a huge grey cloud drawn to represent the American flag, with stars and stripes in dark and light grey. We see drops falling on a forest which are actually miniature missiles, piercing maple leaves. This picture reflects the message Quebec's farmers, through their union, l'Union des producteurs agricoles, have tried to get through to the federal Government several times. In January 1987, the UPA wrote to the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) at the House of Commons, commenting on the report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry.

Quoting statistics, the UPA said that if we compared the number of maple taps in 1986 to the number of taps in the eight, previous years, already 2 million taps had been lost during that time, largely due to acid rain. This is important when we realize that, in Quebec, usually 14 million trees are tapped annually. This means one-seventh has already been lost.

The UPA, very direct in its strategy unlike any other movement in this country, presented the federal Government with a bill for the loss in revenue suffered by farmers. It did so because the federal Government had so far failed to do enough, especially in the area of research. If we compare the work done in this area to what the federal Government has done, says the UPA, the Government's efforts are not only insufficient but laughable, unless we consider that a total of $30,000 spent in 1986 on research on the impact of acid rain on maple trees is worth mentioning.

According to the UPA, the Government of Quebec was practically bearing the total cost of research on the decline of maple stands and deciduous forests, a forecast $1 million for that year.

It was then the UPA decided to take the unusual step of sending a bill to the federal Government. However, six months later the Minister of the Environment said before a Committee of the House that he never heard about it. At this point I would like to quote from a letter that Bernard Duval, first vice-president of the UPA, wrote to the Minister of the Environment, in which he said: "We were astonished at what you said". In answer to a question from Mr. Penner, a Liberal Member who was on the Committee during the hearings of the Special Committee on Acid Rain, the Minister said on December 2: "Mr. Chairman, I must confess I am not aware of any overture made by the industry directly to the Government for assistance. I am unaware of the application from the industry for assistance from the federal Government to compensate, or to make up for the decrease of productivity." However, six months before, in a letter to the Prime Minister and to Mr. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)), the UPA wrote, and I quote: "—sent a bill for $87 million, for losses incurred by maple producers." This goes to show what the UPA is up against when it tries to deal with the very serious problems they are facing in Quebec.

Nevertheless, I must give the Minister of the Environment some credit on acid rain. Granted, the Minister was unable to make the United States realize that we must be prepared to spend money on fighting acid rain, but he may have been able to make the U.S. acknowledge the fact that acid rain can cause damage. The Minister has managed to conclude agreements between the federal Government and the provinces under which, here in Canada, we are committed to reducing SO_2 by 50 per cent between now and 1994. However, the Minister is having trouble convincing the Americans to set similar standards for emission reduction. If the Minister is to be credited for concluding certain agreements with the provinces, I think we should also give credit to the previous Minister, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who started negotiations with the provinces in 1984 before the present Government came to power.

I am willing, therefore, to give some credit to the current Minister, but I suggest I should also give some credit to the previous Minister who had initiated the process of nitrogen oxyde reductions by adopting regulations which were finally implemented in late 1984. These regulations make it compulsory to use catalytic converters to reduce the level of nitrogen oxydes in the atmosphere. These devices are standard equipment on all 1988 new car models sold in Canada.

In 1983, the Hon. Member for Davenport was already doing his share by starting the progressive removal of leaded gas. This type of gas is still sold, but less and less, and modern vehicules now use unleaded gas, which is advantageous.

I would like to remind the House that the last two provinces—New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—have just signed these emission limitation agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the cleaning of the St. Lawrence river, a river which is very important not only for navigation, but also because a very large portion of the Quebec population lives on its shores. Metropolitain Montreal, with nearly one third of the Quebec population, is surrounded by the St. Lawrence River. I remember with melancoly the time when, as a young boy, I used to swim in the St. Lawrence when it was still possible to do so. Needless to say, Montrealers have been deprived of this pleasure for many years, but we hope, because of the efforts made by the Hon. Clifford Lincoln, our own Quebec Minister of the Environment, to see the day when it will be possible again to go for a swim in the St. Lawrence River.

Minister Lincoln has announced a $3 billion investment project over a 10 year period which could clean up the St. Lawrence river by 80 per cent. At the same time, it is seeking from Ottawa a meagre contribution of $100 million over the next five years which he has not been able to obtain so far, unless, unknown to me, he obtained it in an agreement signed last night.

I have here a written transcript of the Mid-day program of March 15, 1988—six days ago—during which the Hon. Cliff Lincoln explained his $3 billion clean-up and investment project. He was asked:

[English]

"How much are you getting from Ottawa?" Was is the question. The answer was, "Well, we are not yet getting money. We are just talking to Ottawa right now. We are talking to Ottawa for a $100 million contribution over five years".

So that is what Minister Lincoln was doing or had begun doing a year ago. There is no reason to say that the Minister of the Environment has been overzealous when it comes to cleaning up the St. Lawrence River.

And what most irks Montrealers, Mr. Speaker, is that when this Minister of the Environment comes to Montreal he does so to brag about his accomplishments. I recall that during one such visit about a year ago he practically insulted Montrealers by telling them that, as he saw it, the St. Lawrence River was so polluted that it looked like an open sewer. I agree with the Minister that the St. Lawrewnce is like an open sewer in the Montreal region. But as Montrealers, what is the percentage in listening to the Minister telling us that our river is dirty if he has to be coaxed to make a much smaller contribution than the amount the Government of Quebec is prepared to put up. In fact, if the Quebec Government is ready to put up $3 billion over ten years, this works out to $300 milion a year. They are asking Ottawa for $100 million over five years, or $20 million a year.

That is much less, like fifteen times less. So I would suggest to the Minister of the Environment that if he should come back to Montreal he might indeed make resounding pronouncements if he is so inclined, but I wish he would also bring his wallet and tell us how much money he is prepared to spend to clean up our river—the wish of all Montrealers—instead of always cutting the funds earmarked for the environment, down 17 per cent as they are now when compared with what was available in 1984 when the Conservatives took over.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because it is a subject about which I have always felt very strongly. I grew up in the Prairies of western Canada and spent a great deal of time in British Columbia and Central Canada. I have watched and was one like all the rest of us who was guilty of the ruining of our environment, the polluting of our air and water, and the degradation of our lands and forests.

I am not rising to point a finger of blame at any one person, any one Party or any one Government concerning the state of our environment and our ecology. I point a finger of blame at all Governments at all levels for failing to act. That includes Governments of all Parties. I point a finger of blame at these Governments for failing to act sufficiently.

"By their deeds shall you know them". The deeds of us all as individuals, of Governments at all levels as well as corporations, farm organizations and unions are all guilty of failure. The point is that from this day on what will we do about it?

It will cost money. It will cost a great deal of money. It will cost profits. It will cost a great deal of profits. However, if we really mean what we say, and I have listened to Members from all sides of the House today, then we must be prepared to pay those costs.

I said that I would not point fingers. I do not cite the following figures just at the Conservative Government of today. I cite them only as an example of what previous Governments have done in Ottawa, as well as what previous Governments have done in the provinces. They are only meant as an example. I hope the Government and all other Governments of all other Parties at all other levels have learned some lessons from these figures.

I believe that all political Parties have made excellent policy statements on the environment. I believe that they mean what they say in those statements. Let us learn a lesson from what the Government did by, let us say, inadvertence, because the concern over the deficit took priority over the concern of the welfare and the priorities of the environment.

In the fall of 1984 when the ink was hardly dry on the ballots, $33.6 million was cut from the Department of the Environment, which wiped out 416 positions. Many of those positions were held by internationally known and recognized researchers. The Canadian Wildlife Service was cut by 23 per cent. A research program monitoring toxic pollution of the Great Lakes, which led to the initial identification of dioxin contamination, was eliminated. I have listened to several speakers today complain about the toxin levels in the Great Lakes. The darn program was eliminated in the fall of 1984.

The Wildlife Interpretation Centres were closed. National park expansion and improvement programs were slashed by just about $20 million. Support for the Toxicology Research Centre in Ontario was withdrawn. In a related move, the environmental secretariat at the National Research Council was closed. The centre employed 17 scientists and support staff. It was conducting important studies, including the effect of lead poisoning on young children. If something is going to be done about lead poisoning, there must be research. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was closed.

I started off by saying that this is going to cost money. Anyone who does not recognize that fact does not intend to do anything about it. It is going to cost money even if it means an increase in the deficit. It is the type of increase that is not an expense but an investment in the future of this nation and in the future of our environment.

I put the question to my colleagues in this House, I put it to every citizen in Canada of this present generation, my generation, the generation of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who is a generation after me, and to the generation of my hon. friend from Bow River, who is the generation ahead of me—actually he looks younger than I am. There are three generations of Members in this Chamber and I put the question to all of us: Who do we think we are? We have no right, not even a privilege to leave the type of mess that our children will inherit a lot of already, and our grandchildren and great grandchildren will inherit. We have no right to leave that. We have no right to pass on all of those costs of cleaning up our environment to those generations. We must put hundreds of millions of dollars a year starting this year, now, into cleaning up the mess that we have left.

It seems to me that Governments of all political stripes have been influenced too much by what I call the industrial and economic development syndrome which, if there is a buck to be made, that takes priority. The evidence is there for anyone to peruse; "anything to make a buck". It means misusing our forests, our water, and our air, but if we can get another plant, another industry, some more jobs, we will do it. Any one of us can throw out facts and figures in the House of Commons about how many more jobs have been created without looking at what has been done to our air, our water, our land, and our forests in the meantime.

It seems to me that those who would put development ahead of anything else are the ones, in my opinion, who would dig a mine over their mother's grave, if they thought they could make a buck. They are the ones who would deplete our forests, ruin our air or ruin our water if it made for a good bottom line on the annual report and the dividends to the shareholders, no matter what harm they had caused for succeeding generations and the costs that succeeding generations would have to pay.

In my opinion, the person who is operating a mine, or operating a forest industry, should be required by law to put as much or more back into the environment as they took out. They have to be required to do so by law, otherwise they should not be allowed to operate. There are a number of countries in western Europe where that has been done for years, and they are of various political stripes. I know that that flies in the face of the U.S.A. version of what North America should be, that it should be wide open for the entrepreneur, and the bottom line profit syndrome. But I do not think, in fact I am convinced, that the overwhelming majority of Canadians do not want that type of attitude in this country. Of course, it is an international problem. That is no excuse for us not doing what we should and can do in cleaning up our own mess within the territorial boundaries of Canada.

What about our water, for example all the very modest programs that we used to have on sewage treatment, and for the last number of years it has been impossible to receive any type of federal assistance for the treatment of sewage. Yet, there are still metropolitan areas in Canada that pour raw sewage into the rivers. Under the Constitution that is a violation of what is in the best interest of the nation as a whole. Ottawa could say to the municipalities, the metropolitan areas, and the provinces that are allowing this to happen, "If you do not stop it, we will step in and stop it for you and you will pay your share". That has to do with what I believe the Constitution calls the good order and the good works for the benefit of Canada. What is done that is deleterious and deteriorating to the people along the St. Lawrence River or the Great Lakes harms not only those people, but harms the whole nation.

I would say to those who are harvesting our forests that it must be treated like a harvest and in no other way. For every tree they cut, they must plant two or three more, because some of them will not survive. That has to be a cost of their doing business. It should not be necessary to give them some kind of a tax benefit for reforestation. If they cut the tree down, they must plant at least two in its place. If they are not prepared to do that, they should then be asked to leave and we will let someone in who will do that. No one should have to receive a tax benefit for leaving the environment the way they found it, no matter what enterprise they are involved in.

I would say the same thing about land use on the Prairies, where I come from. We keep misusing land and farming land that should never have been farmed. Some of it should be returned to grass and prairie. Some of it should be replanted to trees that were cut down by our fathers and grandfathers.

We should be required to use good tillage practices so that the top few inches of prairie soil is not turned into something that looks like flour which, when the wind blows and it does not rain, moves about in the air and drifts into the ditches.

A moment ago I talked about water. Technology has been in place for years, a tertiary sewage treatment system, whereby we can convert common, ordinary sewage into water which is almost drinkable. I see my good friend opposite smiling, but he knows that I am right; it is almost drinkable. However, we can return it to the environment at a point where it will not cause any further harm to the waters which receive that treated sewage. Technology is also in place to use semi-treated sewage as a fertilizer or left where it is. I know that that does not make fertilizer or chemical companies very happy, but that is too bad.

I do not think there is any point in the Government continuing to consider the Department of the Environment as a minor or junior department. The fact of the matter is that it is a major department which needs to be treated as such. It needs the funding which it deserves. Whether the Conservatives, the Liberals, or the New Democrats are in power, any one of the three Parties that does not do so deserves the condemnation of the entire population of Canada. We need the political will to do it.

I close by repeating what I said earlier. Who do we think we are that we can leave the kind of mess that the present generation is creating to future generations to pay for? We caused it. We should pay for it. We should clean it up.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to enter into the debate today. I commend the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for bringing this matter forth on an opposition day.

Needless to say, I feel that the Government has achieved a great deal. However, I am also well aware that there is more we can achieve and more we must do.

Let me begin by agreeing that indeed acid rain is a very serious threat to the environment, especially to the economy of the country including the economy of Ontario, the industrial heartland. Quite literally the facts speak for themselves.

More than 350,000 lakes in eastern Canada are vulnerable. Tens of thousands of them have lost 60 per cent to 80 per cent of their neutralizing capacity. Approximately 150,000 lakes have a PH level of less than 6.0, the acidity level at which detrimental effects begin to occur. Some 14,000 lakes have already been acidified. This means that they have a PH level of less than 5.0 and are essentially devoid of normal aquatic life.

I am well aware that the figures are pretty large when it comes to lakes. However, Ontario and Quebec are indeed very fortunate. It is estimated that Ontario has 800,000 lakes, more or less, and that Quebec has in excess of one million. More than 50 per cent of eastern Canada's forests grow in areas where rainfall is acidic. More than 80 per cent of all Canadians live in areas where acidic deposits exceed acceptable levels.

As if this litany of environmental concerns were not enough, economically acid rain is endangering the natural resource base in an area of eastern Canada which measures about 2.6 million square kilometres. This resource base sustains approximately 8 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product and some 255,000 jobs.

I am proud to remind the House that the Government has tackled this threat to the Canadian environment and economy head on. In March, 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the implementation of a comprehensive national acid rain abatement program which will slash Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions by 50 per cent of 1980 allowable levels by 1994 at the latest.

Essentially the Canadian abatement program was designed to address three objectives. First, Canadian emission reductions will reduce the damage we are causing to ourselves. Second, the Prime Minister recognized that Canada must have clean hands if we expect the United States to take action. Third, Canada has a responsibility to reduce the damage to which it is contributing in the northeastern United States.

The federal Government has set a clear and straightforward yardstick against which to measure progress on the acid rain issue. We have determined that acid fall-out must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare in all vulnerable areas. Our scientists have found that damage occurs when acid rain fall-out is above this amount. I am pleased to say that they have also found evidence that when acid fall-out drops below this threshold number, recovery of the environment starts to take place.

Calculations have been done which tell us how many tonnes and where sulphur dioxide emissions must be cut to achieve the 20 kilograms per hectare per year objective. We have concluded that total annual sulphur dioxide emissions from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border eastward must be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes, and that the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide into eastern Canada must be reduced to about 2 million tonnes.

The federal Government has shown great leadership in developing Canada's part of the bargain. As a measure of the Government's ability to work constructively with provincial counterparts, all seven federal-provincial agreements required to implement the Canadian acid rain abatement program have been signed.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is certainly to be commended in this regard. Some of them had to be hauled in, almost kicking and screaming, before we got their signatures on the line. All these agreements specified that the required reductions will be achieved by 1994 at the latest.

Current sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada are about 2.8 million tonnes, 35 per cent less than they were in 1980. This illustrates that Canada is well on its way to achieving the necessary reductions in its sulphur dioxide emissions. We can all be proud of our abatement program. We will all benefit from the results.

The federal Government has also put into place strong nitrogen oxide emission controls. Cars and trucks account for about 40 per cent of total Canadian NOx emissions. As of September 1, 1987, all new cars and light trucks sold in Canada were required to meet the most stringent emission standards, requiring the use of the state of the art control technology. The standards for heavy duty trucks take effect

December 1, 1988 which is, in fact, nine months sooner than in the United States. These will reduce NOx emissions from mobile sources in Canada by up to 45 per cent by the year 2000. I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that I was one of those who was pushing the Government very hard in 1985 to see if at all possible those controls could be applied on the 1987 model cars, but I was not successful. However, in 1988 we will. As the Minister remarked in his comments this morning, leaded gasoline will be outlawed by 1992. That will also certainly help the NOx emissions.

Once fully implemented, the Canadian Acid Rain Abatement Program is estimated to cost the private sector and provincial utilities about $500 million annually. This comes on top of our comprehensive local ambient air quality program. I believe a similar figure for the United States is about $5 billion a year. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), said pollution control is pretty expensive. It certainly does not come easy. Canada will achieve its clean air objective in ways that are appropriate to the Canadian situation and way of doing business. Some of our detractors in the United States say that we have not done it in the American way and question our good faith. To them and to all Members I say, look at the bottom line. Look at the results. Canada has achieved clean air with respect to sulphur dioxide. Now we are taking the action necessary to clean up acid rain.

The transboundary aspects of the acid rain problem can only be solved through the negotiation of a bilateral accord. However, to be effective, to be useful, the accord must call for more than further problem definition and further study. I think most of us are aware that the acid rain problem has been studied to death in the United States. Now is the time for action and control legislation.

The nature, the cause and the solutions to the acid rain problem are already abundantly clear. Unless Canada and the United States can talk about emission control targets and schedules, then we are not talking about a solution, only that the problem exists. One need only open the history books on transboundary environmental issues to see the utility of pollution control targets and schedules. The first Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement signed in 1972 contained targets and schedules to reduce phosphorous loading in the lakes. These important waters are healthier today than they were 15 years ago, and improvements continue to be made because of additional targets and schedules in subsequent agreements.

To be acceptable to Canada, a Canada-U.S. acid rain accord must have definite targets and schedules for acid rain reduction. Specifically, the flow of U.S. sulphur dioxide to eastern Canada must be reduced to 2 million tonnes by 1994, a time frame compatible with our own program. I believe that would be about a 50 per cent reduction.

Canada's objective is based on sound scientific information and existing principles and obligations under international law which both Canada and the United States support. Under international law, states must ensure that activities within their jurisdictions do not cause damage to the environment of other states. This principle was applied in the development of Canada's abatement program, which will reduce the amount of sulphur dioxide that Canada exports to the United States from about 1.5 million tonnes, the 1980 level, to about 800,000 tonnes by 1994.

The United States currently dumps about 3.2 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide on eastern Canada every year, less than the 1980 level of four million tonnes. At least the level is down a bit. As a result of actions taken in the United States, principally to control local air quality, it is already 40 per cent along the course Canada wants it to travel. The federal Government acknowledges that how the United States goes about reducing its transboundary pollution flow to 2 million tonnes is its own business. Canada's interest is in the extent to which transboundary pollution flows are and will be reduced. The federal Government will judge all U.S. initiatives against this yardstick.

The federal Government also acknowledges the realities of the U.S. situation on acid rain. Its regional divisiveness, its potential impact on the high sulphur coal industry, just to mention a couple. We also know that the power to take the necessary action is divided between the executive and the legislative and that these two branches do not always see eye to eye. Indeed, even factions within either branch may not see eye to eye. However, it is up to the United States. It is its obligation to solve them, not Canada's, and to bring the reductions in by 1994.

As a Canadian Member of Parliament with some experience on the acid rain issue, I am forever impressed with the Americans' ability to generate misinformation. The U.S. National Acid Precipitation Assessment Program, commonly known as NAPAP, interim assessment on the causes and effects of acidic deposition is a classic example.

The federal Government has soundly criticized the conclusions of the NAPAP report which can only be described as bizarre in the face of a wealth of conclusive and compelling evidence that has been accumulated on the nature, causes and solutions to the acid rain problem. The executive summary portrays the problem of acid rain as neither serious nor in need of any intervention. It minimizes what is known about the matter, over-complicates what is uncertain and describes a market driven future in unreasonably optimistic terms.

The Minister of the Environment on several occasions has pointed out the flawed, misleading and incomplete nature of the NAPAP report to its U.S. counterpart, to other members of the U.S. administration, the members of the U.S. Congress and to the American people. The Minister has told American decision-makers that scientific information can only assist in public policy making. Science cannot and should not be the sole determinant of public policy. To think so is to put scientific investigation in a role for which it is neither designed nor equipped to do.

The international protocol on the stratospheric ozone depletion, signed in Montreal last September, is an excellent example of the role of science in public policy making. Science gave us the evidence that we had a serious problem with the ozone layer and indications of what is causing the problem, namely, releases of CFCs, chlorofluorocarbons, into the atmosphere. To say we know far more about the science of acid rain than we do about the science of stratospheric ozone depletion is an understatement. Yet the international community, including the United States, was able to band together to slash world-wide releases of CFCs, and Canada played a leadership role in this example of international co-operation to protect the environment.

U.S. decision-makers supported actions to protect the ozone layer. I assure Hon. Members that the Government will continue to make every possible effort to get our American neighbours to accept the need for similar action on acid rain.

The federal Government has a reasoned and reasonable three-pronged strategy for getting U.S. action on acid rain. First, it will continue to work with the U.S. administration. Some Members opposite might ask why we should continue to do so when, despite our best efforts, we have not been very successful to date. The reason is simple and straightforward. If we cannot negotiate with the U.S. Congress, with the American public or with any other American institution, what are we to do?

Second, we will continue to ensure that Congress is fully apprised of the Canadian position. Full and accurate information will be crucial to congressional action on any eventual agreement we conclude with the administration. Members of Congress should have the benefit of our knowledge, research and experience. They should know where we stand and know how important their efforts to reduce U.S. pollution are to the quality of our air and to the acid rain problem.

Third, the federal and provincial Governments and private individuals alike must work with interested Americans in an effort to broadcast the understanding in the United States that acid rain is a serious international problem which must be addressed now. The key to action against acid rain in the United States and in Canada is public opinion.

The Minister of the Environment has personally made contact on more than 45 occasions with Americans to press Canada's case on acid rain, and he plans to do more. Our special committee on acid rain went to Washington last year. We hope to make a further trip this year, and we will certainly be trying to get the message across.

As most Hon. Members know, the Prime Minister and, I assume, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), are going to Washington on April 27. I would hope that the acid rain problem would be very high on their agenda. I know that free trade is important, but in my view, acid rain is certainly very important.

I might as well tell Hon. Members that I wrote a personal letter to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs emphasizing the importance of the acid rain problem. I wrote that we have been nice guys long enough, we must lay it on the line and say that something must be done.

On April 6 of last year, I believe, in this very Chamber, the President of the United States made some comments and gave a half promise that something would be done on acid rain controls. Nothing has been done as yet. Therefore, as I pointed out in my letter to the Prime Minister, on this problem he is on the side of the angels and I would hope that he will certainly lay it on the line.

As I mentioned, the committee will be going there in June, we hope. Arrangements are being made with the embassy. We hope to get the message across so that something will be done.

I understand that there is only a 25 per cent chance, according to experts in Washington, that there will be acid rain legislation this year. I had hoped that the President would go out on a high note by trying to bring in some meaningful legislation on acid rain.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I was recently in the Province of Nova Scotia in the vicinity of a thermal-generating station owned by the province which is producing electricity from high sulphur content coal, contributing in our own country to acid rain. It is all very well to say that we all want to see something done on acid rain, but when will the Government take decisive and definitive action, not only to prevent our own industries from contributing to acid rain but to insist that our American counterparts also do their share?

We have put up with an awful lot of nonsense and we have cut back our own commitments. There are no scrubbers on some of our own machinery. When will the Government insist that this be done?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member. I am well aware that Nova Scotia produces a great deal of its energy through coal-fired utilities, and I am also well aware that high sulphur content coal is used.

As the Hon. Member may be aware, Nova Scotia was the last province to sign the agreement on pollution. The Hon. Member is also well aware that pollution controls to be put on industry, and this one happens to be a Crown-owned industry, falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial Government. Therefore, it is up to the Province of Nova Scotia to do something. We now have a commitment from the Nova Scotia Government that it will reduce emissions across the board in order to conform and so that Canada will have its emission levels down to 50 per cent of the 1980 level by 1994.

I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. There is no question about it, I would like to see that particular utility install scrubbers. I have been a member of acid rain committees for the past seven or eight years, and this fact was thrown in our faces when we went to Washington. We were told: "What are you doing preaching to us when we have scrubbers installed on many of our utilities and you do not have one, and your automobile-emission levels are three times more lenient?"

Now we have rectified that. I am aware that there are no scrubbers and that the only one that may be coming on stream, I believe, is in Ontario. The problem in Canada has been not with our utilities so much as with our smelters. They have been the real cause of the pollution.

A great many of the provinces, Ontario in particular, are moving toward nuclear power which is pollution free, even though it may have certain other dangers. That was one of the reasons why Ontario did not go along with installing scrubbers, even though it had half promised to do so a few years ago.

In Nova Scotia, certainly the great majority of power is produced by means of coal, and I would hope that something will be done on that. The Nova Scotia Government must have some plans since it signed the agreement to make these reductions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. James): It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S ANNOUNCEMENT/REQUEST FOR SIGNING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the reason for this intervention goes back to an exchange in the House during Question Period. It was an exchange on acid rain and it dealt with the clean-coal technology program which was proclaimed by the Government as being the greatest invention since sliced bread, resulting from the acid-rain envoys' report and endorsed both by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan. You are probably aware of the fact that three and a half years after the last election, and after three Summits, we have nothing to point to by way of achievement in reducing acid rain pollution coming across the border into Canada from the U.S.

• (1800)

To give you more background on this question, I submit the fact that the Government made a serious tactical mistake when it received the acid rain envoys' report. It created the impression with the Americans that we wanted the clean coal technology program to go ahead as the answer to our problems. As you know, that program is a $5 billion initiative which depends very much on private industry asking Washington to match their expenditures dollars for dollar in this particular scheme. It was almost two years ago that Canada made the tactical mistake of not indicating to the U.S. State Department and the President that, for us, the clean coal technology program was something that the Americans might well launch but it was not the answer to what we wanted from them, which was and still is a treaty, and that this clean coal technology could become a delaying tactic, as it has.

We now find ourselves in 1988 and, in looking over the amounts that have been put into this innovative clean coal technology scheme, what do we find? We find $50 million invested so far. Therefore, you can see that the impatience and dismay on the part of Canadians, including those in the opposition, is well-founded. Hence the question today to the Parliamentary Secretary requesting that he indicate to us what on earth is happening to this great promised front where a miracle was going to happen.

The miracle has not materialized, and perhaps we should ask in addition whether his Government is seriously examining the proposal we made from this side of the House several times in recent weeks, namely to prepare a bill for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to present at the next Summit in Washington for damage caused by transboundary pollution from the U.S. This pollution affects our monuments, our structures, our fishery, our maple trees and producers of maple sugar, our agriculture, and even human health as indicated by the respiratory diseases caused by air pollution produced by the burning of coal.

I am looking forward to a comprehensive and inspiring answer from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in their report the special envoys on acid rain recommended implementation of a $5 billion clean coal technology demonstration program in the U.S., with one-half the funding to be provided by the U.S. Government. The program was intended to expand the options for controlling acid rain causing emissions and provide some near-term relief for the Canadian environment. The special envoys did not recommend whether an equal amount of money be spent each year of the program.

In March, 1987, President Reagan asked Congress for $500 million per year for each of the next five fiscal years. Congress voted $50 million for fiscal year 1988, and $525 million for fiscal year 1989. Congress had previously voted $150 million for clean coal projects.

There are two reasons for the relatively low level of expenditures for 1988.

First, the process for selecting projects to be funded is a long one and second, funds can only be provided after contracts have been negotiated with the successful bidders.

• (1805)

In his 1988 budget statement, President Reagan requested advance appropriation of $575 million for 1990 and $600 million in each of 1991 and 1992. This request, in conjunction with $725 million in the previous appropriations, would bring total U.S. government expenditures to $2.5 billion.

While the federal Government supports U.S. clean coal initiatives, it has never even suggested that they are a solution to the acid rain problem in their own right. Canadian experience has proven that technology demonstration combined with scheduled emission reductions can produce a cost effective acid rain abatement program.

In this vein, the federal Government will continue to press the United States for a bilateral accord with emission control targets and schedules to reduce the transboundary flow of acid rain pollution to levels that will prevent damage to the Canadian environment.

Achieving such an agreement necessitates working with the U.S. administration, the U.S. Congress and with the American people. They all have a role to play and we cannot succeed if we leave any stone unturned.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—MINISTER'S POSITION/TORONTO CITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the City Council of Toronto passed a resolution on January 11, 1988, condemning the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and two other Toronto Ministers for excluding Toronto from legislation creating international banking centres last year.

Subsequently, the City of Toronto has voted to commence legal action against the Government of Canada. The Minister of Finance chose to see my raising this matter in the House on February 29 as a pro Toronto and anti Montreal and Vancouver position. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Government decided to use a tax measure, national legislation which should be designed in the broad national interest, in an unusual way, as a regional development measure. In fact, however, it is a measure which will not bring jobs or financial activity to Montreal or Vancouver. It is unlikely to take anything materially away from Toronto, but it is causing problems of confusion and perception.

The Government amended the Income Tax Act with a measure that has pitted region against region and will not serve anyone. This change received Royal Assent on December 17, 1987, and was pushed through by the Conservative majority in spite of the weight of evidence that it made no economic sense.

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, on April 30, 1987, expressed its reservations about whether the then international banking centre proposal would substantially meet the objectives of both increasing international banking activity in Canada and regional economic development.

The federal Government signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Government of British Columbia on December 16, 1986, in which it undertook to establish an international banking centre at Vancouver. This was part of a regional development package. This measure was undertaken without any consultation with the chartered banks. The president of the Canadian Bankers Association said before the committee: "It should be stated at the outset that the chartered banks have never asked for legislation to create international banking centres". So we have a measure which is supposed to be a regional development measure, which it is not. It is not going to assist the two regions concerned. It is supposed to be a measure that will enhance banking in Canada, which it will not. It is a poorly thought out measure in order to carry out two election promises. It was undertaken without thought and without care.

For the Minister to say that anyone who says this was an ill-thought-out measure is simply trying to protect regional interests, is particularly foolish because, unhappily, this measure serves no region.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it saddens me that the Hon. Member, on behalf of the Liberal Party, should speak of the International Banking Centre Bill as though it were designed to create dissension between the various regions of Canada.

You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that nothing could be further from the truth. Unfortunately, all that the Hon. Member accomplishes with her inaccurate portrayal of this measure is to highlight her negative attitude towards the cities of Montreal and Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member attempts to pick up some votes on Bay Street, which I can understand, as Toronto was not designated as an international banking centre for the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the city of Toronto requires no such designation to recognize its status as Canada's foremost banking centre, and providing Montreal and Vancouver with an opportunity to develop their roles as international banking locations will have no negative effect upon Toronto's position, but can only help these two cities.

The Hon. Member seems to believe that Toronto has been the subject of discrimination. In fact, Mr. Speaker, Toronto has drawn more benefits than any other city or region from the financial institution reform undertaken by the Government, with the result that, to date, Goldman Sachs and S.G. Warburg, two world class investment firms, are establishing themselves in Toronto, and seven foreign firms, including the four largest Japanese security dealers, Nomura Securities, Daiwa Securities, Yamaichi International and Nikko Securities, have purchased seats on the Toronto stock exchange.

Many other foreign firms are also planning to focus their activities in Toronto and these actions, when combined with the expanded activity of domestic institutions as they take advantage of the broader range of powers which we are providing, can only strengthen Toronto's position as Canada's leading financial centre.

The international banking centre initiative raises no question of one region being pitted against another, for every region stands to gain from it. The relevant question, and that on which the Liberal Party has yet to take a stand, is whether one wishes to attract more business to Canada, whether one wishes to improve the stature of Montreal and Vancouver as international banking locations, and whether one wishes to provide the opportunity to recoup some of the activity which Canada has lost because of the more favourable tax systems in a number of other countries.

The obvious answer to this question is yes, and it follows that the international banking centre legislation deserves the full support of all Members of Parliament.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—MATERNITY BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS—RETENTION OF BABIES IN HOSPITALS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this evening to have a chance to speak briefly about the issue I raised in the House last Wednesday, on March 16. I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) if he would consider amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to allow a mother whose child had been born either prematurely or who was in ill health at birth and had to remain in hospital, to be able to postpone taking her maternity beneifts under the Unemployment Insurance Act until the baby actually came home.

I was, of course, delighted with the Minister's response. Later that day he introduced those amendments which I know have resulted in a lot of acclaim and support. I want to thank the Minister for his consideration.

This is an issue about which I have been concerned for some considerable period of time. It was originally brought to my attention by a constituent who found herself in these particular circumstances. Although she realized it would not be possible for any changes in the law to help her, she thought that other women should not have to go through the same kind of difficulty.

When I originally took it up with representatives of the Government, they said that there were several committees that were looking at the issue of unemployment insurance and at child care and that we should await their recommendations. Indeed, I would like to thank the chairman and the members of the parliamentary committee on child care because they made such a recommendation in their report.

As time passed, other cases came forward. It was obvious that this was not just an isolated incident. Recently, in Vancouver, a considerable amount of publicity was given to the case of Melanie Williams and her baby Drew who was born very prematurely. He has had to remain in hospital for a considerable period of time. In fact, Melanie will just now be starting her maternity leave and the baby is coming home from the hospital next week. I wish to thank Melanie because she brought this issue to the public, which is not an easy thing to do. It is a very personal issue. She has certainly conducted herself with a great deal of dignity.

I also wish to thank Anne Mullens, a reporter for The Vancouver Sun, who took up this issue and, as a result of her articles it received some attention in the national media. That certainly assisted me in my endeavours to get support for the issue.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a Private Members' Bill recently on this subject. I know that that is a difficult way to make a change to a law. It was at the whim of a lottery and it is a long process. I had to keep the pressure on the Minister. He and his assistants were extremely helpful, and a change has now been introduced.

I understand it is to be debated later this week and that the Opposition Parties have agreed that it can be passed quickly. It will be retroactive for one year. Thus women such as Melanie and others will be able to pick up their benefits under UI as a result of these special circumstances.

It is a special circumstance. It is an extraordinary circumstance. We can all share the feeling that a mother and father go through when such a circumstance occurs. There is a great deal of trauma and difficulty. Quite often, when the child does come home it still requires a great deal of health care. I know that in many cases the baby still has to be on a respirator. That is a time when the mother should know that she has the freedom to take her maternity leave and have the financial security available to her as well.

In the last week since I raised the question in the House, I found that some other changes may be required as well to implement the spirit of this new legislation. It appears that in some labour agreements there are conditions which require a woman to take her maternity leave within a specific period of time. In fact, I understand that even within the Public Service of Canada leave has to be taken within a 26-week period. Under some of the special circumstances that may not be adequate.

What I hope is that the labour unions and management will review agreements in light of the spirit of this amendment and make the necessary changes so that women, no matter where they are working when they are eligible for maternity leave, can be assured that if such an untoward circumstance occurs, they will be able to take their maternity leave and have that benefit when the child comes home from hospital.

I wish to compliment the Government. It shows not only its sense of caring and compassion, something which I know the Minister has, but it also shows to me that it is possible for a private Member, a lowly back-bencher as we are sometimes known, to bring forward an issue and to have it acted upon with the support of the Government. We can actually change a law. This has been a very exciting experience for me. I know that it will be appreciated by many women and by many families across the country.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) for representing the interests of Melanie Williams. The Government recognized the inequity of this situation and responded in a positive manner.

Bill C-116, which was tabled in the House last Wednesday includes a clause to cover the situation in which a new-born child requires hospitalization after the mother returns home. The new Section 32.3 of the Act permits the extension of the period during which maternity benefits can be paid for up to a year after the child is born. This will permit the flexibility needed to pay Melanie Willians and other women in similar circumstances.

If Bill C-116 is swiftly passed, Melanie Williams will receive unemployment insurance payments in short order. Bill C-116 is and can be a fine example of what can be accomplished on short notice. We all agree that the cases of John McInnis and Melanie Williams identified inequities in the existing law. Let us work together to resolve this matter as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. James): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3 (1).

The House adjourned at 6.22 p.m.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour, indeed, it is a pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from petitioners who are concerned that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade deal with the United States.

They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians. It certainly does not equalize the opportunities between the regions of the country.

For a whole set of other reasons they are calling upon Parliament to dissolve now to give the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

OPPPOSITION TO THE EXPULSION OF TURKISH NATIONALS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to table a number of petitions in accordance with Standing Order 106. The petitions of the undersigned residents of Canada read as follows: Your petitioners humbly state that considering the decision of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to proceed as of March 20, 1988, with the deportation of 2,000 Turkish nationals, men, women and children; considering the particular circumstances that led these people to come to Canada and the dramatic consequences their return to Turkey would have for these people; considering the legitimacy of granting them, on compassionate grounds, the right to settle in Canada; wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider his decision.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty of presenting a petition from constituents of mine. It is an honour to do this on behalf of persons resident in northern communities in my riding along the Canadian National Railway line through Armstrong and, particularly, in Mud River.

These constituents protest, along with so many other of my constituents, that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. In fact, the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S.

The agreement denies just that, secure access to the U.S. market which the Government promised. It threatens hundreds of thousands of Canadians and their jobs.

These Canadians protest and ask the Parliament of Canada take note of these realities and dangers, that it dissolve and give the people of Canada an opportunity to decide what they think of this trade deal with the United States.

Order Paper Questions

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST THAT THE TURKS BE ALLOWED TO REMAIN ON HUMANITARIAN GROUNDS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for many of my constituents and other Montrealers who are extremely fair-minded and who wish to speak to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to ask him to prevent and not to expel the 2,000 Turkish men, women and children who are here because they were unaware of Canadian law. They were misled and given inaccurate information by unscrupulous travel agents and advertisements in their papers in their own areas.

These people are innocent victims. The error is on the part of the Government which knew in the fall of 1986 what the situation was and took no action to stem the tide.

Because of the particular circumstances, they ask that these people be allowed to stay on humanitarian grounds.

I deposit a petition with 25 names on it coming from Plamondon, Mountain Sights, Barclay, Letourneux, and the area of Marquette and Desrosiers Streets, in Montreal.

I have an additional petition with 18 names on it. These people feel the same way. They live on Côte-des-Neiges, Hudson, Queen Mary, in Laval, in the Town of Mount Royal, on Saint-Denis—in fact, across the spectrum of the large City of Montreal.

The last petition I would like to deposit—

—reads as follows:

That considering the decision of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to proceed as of March 10, 1988, with the deportation of 2,000 Turkish nationals, men, women and children; considering the particular circumstances that led these people to come to Canada and the dramatic consequences their return to Turkey would have for these people; considering the legitimacy of granting them, on compassionate grounds, the right to settle in Canada; wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider his decision.

These petitions come from Jean-Rivard, Chabot, Laval, Garneau, Berri and other streets.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions signed by residents of the Montreal area which concern the 2,000 Turkish men, women and children whom the Minister of Employment and Immigration is threatening with deportation.

Mr. Speaker, the undersigned refer to the innocence of these people. They were victims of misleading advertising. They were not aware that their arrival in Canada was not in accordance with Canadian procedures. These are people in need who sold everything they had to pay for their ticket to Canada.

The undersigned also stress the responsibility of the Government, since it became aware of the situation in the fall of 1986 but took five or six months to react.

Therefore, your petitioners ask Parliament to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider his decision. The law must be interpreted justly and fairly, and that is what your petitioners are asking.

I have two petitions, each signed by forty-four people from Sherbrooke Street in Montreal, from Mountain Sights Street, Boulevard l'Acadie, Côte-des-Neiges, Fullum Street in Montreal East, Pointe-aux-Trembles, Henri-Bourassa Street, by people from Stanstead who signed these petitions, from Bourbonnière Street in Montreal and Côte-Saint-Luc.

Today we tabled petitions with about 400 signatures. More petitions are being signed in Montreal, and these will be tabled as we receive them over the next few days.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, I had finished my time for debate. I believe there is now a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

• (1120)

Mrs. Finestone: The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism is to be complimented for the very careful exercise and leadership which he demonstrated as chairman of that committee. He proposed a very comprehensive list of recommendations which I read with a great deal of interest over the weekend. I would like to ask the chairman how he now feels about press clippings which indicate that the multiculturalism Bill received a cool welcome, that it is an empty promise on multiculturalism, it will not stem the rivalries, it is strictly une loi plus déclaratoire qu'exécutoire.

The chairman called for at least the creation of a Minister and a commissioner of multiculturalism to watch over the application of the law. With the present structure the Minister watches himself and answers to himself. There is a less than enthusiastic response from the one-third of Canadians whom this Bill is supposed to enable to realize their full equality in our society. How does the Hon. Member respond to that? How can the Hon. Member stand in his place and compliment the Minister and be satisfied with the present Bill? Is the Hon. Member not hoping for changes when it goes to legislative committee, and does the Hon. Member plan to be at the legislative committee?

Mr. Mitges: In answer to the questions asked by my hon. friend, the response to the multiculturalism Bill, building the Canadian mosaic, was very positive. We had a very good response.

The Hon. Member asked the question about why we have not appointed a Minister or a commissioner of multiculturalism. I grant that those are two areas in which we as a committee were in agreement. As I stated in my speech, I have been around this place long enough to know that one does not get everything one wants at the start. We have our foot in the door, and a very substantive foot in the door of the department of multiculturalism. Hopefully, it will open the door in the future for a commissioner and also a full Minister. I am still hopeful that many of our recommendations will be accepted over a period of time. But, as I say, I have been here long enough to know that we will not get everything we want the first time, but I am hoping.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): One week ago I listened with interest when the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) spoke on Bill C-93, a very important piece of legislation. He said some very interesting things. I wish to commend him for raising the issue of group rights in his speech, and ask if he would be able to say something more on that subject. I ask that particularly in the context of what the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) suggests, for all the good things that one can say about Bill C-93, it is half of a good Bill. There is no machinery here. The provision for a commissioner, and provision for strong action by the Government has not been provided. It institutionalizes the status quo. We all recognize that the Canadian status quo involves very little respect for group rights.

The most massive failure to deal humanely and imaginatively with group rights is to be found in the failure of First Ministers' conferences to place the aboriginal right of self-government into the Constitution, and the failure of the Department of Indian Affairs to lead or to work energetically with aboriginal peoples in establishing how they will govern themselves and how they will develop their group rights in Canada.

Together with my colleagues on the committee, I appreciate the careful leadership given by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe. I appreciate the optimism that he still feels after all these years in Parliament. I particularly appreciated his expression of optimism that the Bill would be amended.

I would ask him to say a little on the establishment of group rights, recognition of those rights in a society that is all too attuned to individual rights and all too rarely aware of the importance of recognizing groups in Canada and providing for them. I particularly ask him in what way we might establish institutions, and I encourage him to suggest what he would like to see added to the second half of the Bill. The problem is that we in opposition cannot amend the Bill. We can amend it in the detail that is there, but we can hardly add substantive sections.

It is necessary for the Hon. Member to respond to what I know is the pressure from the ethnocultural communities across Canada and from the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, for the Government to recognize the lacuna that is represented by the second half of the Bill, or what simply is not there, and to fill that with substantial legislation.

The original Official Languages Act established a Commissioner of Official Languages. The revised Bill which the legislative committee begins considering this afternoon does not need to add to it. The Official Languages Act of 1969 established that commissioner's office, and now the multiculturalism Bill does not do that.

Would the Hon. Member offer us some more insight into group rights, and his thoughts on the Government taking up the challenge and giving us the second half of what could be a really good Bill, if only the Government acted on that.

Mr. Mitges: I thank my hon. friend and committee member for the question. As far as I am concerned, we are officially a bilingual and multicultural country, and to me that means that everyone in Canada should be treated equally under every circumstance whatever his or her background, whether it is European or Asiatic. Everyone in Canada should treat everyone else the way they expect to be treated themselves.

I look forward to the day when we will not require a multiculturalism committee or multiculturalism department because everyone will be tuned into the multiculturalism aspect of Canada. This will affect all the groups in Canada. There are something like 102 different ethnocultural groups in Canada today.

As far as the Bill is concerned, I would certainly like to see amendments. If I am chosen to sit on that legislative committee, I will be proposing legislation to change any aspect of the Bill that would actually further the cause of multiculturalism. I am looking forward to working with my hon. friend on that committee, together with the rest of the members of the committee, and see what we come up with.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to address this very important Canadian policy of multiculturalism and to speak on Bill C-93. All Canadians are very proud of our particular unique tradition of multiculturalism. In Canada we often refer to the fact that we are not a melting pot as in the United States. We have so many people who come from different lands who have brought such rich culture and experience with them. We recognize this and have made it a part of our own Canadian mosaic.

It is important that we have a multiculturalism Bill. This is the second such Bill. It is a little stronger than the one presented by the Liberals, but it still needs to be strengthened in many ways. I will speak to that in a moment.

The first part of the Bill recognizes the main principles based on many statutes, the Charter of Rights, and our international covenants which commit us to recognizing the rights of all people and all cultural groups. Interestingly, the Bill also refers to aboriginal people who have constitutional rights. I wonder how those same aboriginal people and their leaders will feel. I think that they may have some reservations about being grouped under multiculturalism. Certainly, most native people whom I talk to, and I agree, feel that they have very unique rights and must be dealt with separately. They have much to contribute to Canada and are contributing much from their unique cultures.

The Bill is based upon the premise that we are a bilingual country and that the larger community of Canada is comprised of many cultural communities. I note that the principles are not spelled out in the same way as they were recommended by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. Perhaps in themselves they need to be strengthened, but unfortunately this is not something we can do at this stage.

For the purpose of comparison I should like to refer to the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism dated June, 1987. Its first recommendation was that the new multiculturalism policy should embody the following eight principles: multiculturalism for all Canadians, advancement of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework, equality of opportunity, preservation and enhancement of cultural diversity, elimination of discrimination, establishment of affirmative measures, enhancement of heritage languages, and support for immigrant integration. I am sorry that these particular principles were not repeated in this very important Bill.

It is important that we start with basic principles. However, principles are just lip service and window dressing unless we provide the mechanisms to achieve the goals. This is the area in which the Bill is weak. Critics from a whole range of ethnic organizations have expressed concern in this regard as well.

As our spokesperson in this area has said, there is no new means of achieving a genuine multicultural Canada as recommended by the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. In effect the Bill is a symbolic gesture, and we need something more than that.

The Bill should have provided for a department of multiculturalism. It should have provided for a commissioner of multiculturalism. Also, there should have been provision for a research centre on multiculturalism and, I would say, on multiculturalism and racism. The Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and a number of other groups have criticized the Bill for these reasons.

At this point I should like to commend particularly the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) for his very outstanding work in the field of multiculturalism. I was very impressed with the document he prepared in June, 1987 entitled "A Living Diversity, Multiculturalism for All". It was a very excellent document on the aspects of multiculturalism which we feel are very important and which we stress very strongly. For example, too often the whole aspect of racism is left out when we talk about multiculturalism.

Manitoba has established a structure which deals with some of the problems. Its Government established the Manitoba Intercultural Council to meet with Ministers to press for action. That is what we do not have here. We do not have a structure, a commissioner, or representatives from the multicultural community who really have a recognized official role in advocating and pressing for changes.

Just to compare the kinds of structures with which I am familiar, the only multicultural representative in British Columbia is one person who acts as a multicultural goodwill ambassador and attends multicultural events. Well, it is very nice, in a pleasant way, to attend events, but we need something to deal with problems and issues. We have that in the City of Vancouver. It is known as the Race Relations Committee and is very involved. These kinds of structures are very important.

It is too bad the Bill does not provide the teeth to allow for major criticism of government policies and to look at the problems of multicultural communities.

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council has put out a very excellent document making several recommendations for improvement. I should just like to refer to it very quickly. It suggests that Bill C-93 should have included a commissioner to monitor the implementation of the Act, that there should have been various amendments to the wording of the Act, toughening it up with words like "shall" rather than "should" to express the Government's commitment to multiculturalism, and that federal-provincial co-operation should be spelled out, along with official involvement of the provinces.

The Minister's advisory committee should be appointed on the recommendation of the multicultural communities. Similarly, there should be more equitable participation of minority individuals in the form of increased appointments from the grass roots communities, not just from the elite here in Ottawa.

The council also mentioned three very important areas which were unfortunately omitted from the Bill; the multicultural department, the need for increased multicultural funding, and the need for charitable tax status for ethnocultural organizations to allow them to increase their own fund raising abilities. I think these matters are extremely important.

I should like to very quickly mention two statements in the "Social Infopac", a document prepared by the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto. It indicates that multicultural policies at the federal and provincial levels have been in place for decades but that the rhetoric of multiculturalism seems to have outstripped the achievements of policies. The Bill tends to be heavy on rhetoric and weak on ways of implementing that rhetoric. It goes on to indicate that multiculturalism is a commitment to a pluralistic society. It proposes that we not only tolerate and respect differences but acknowledge the need to reduce disparities and barriers which prohibit diverse cultural and racial groups from participating effectively as citizens.

Particularly, I should like to concentrate on the fact that too often we think of multiculturalism as a collage of very colourful events. I am sure that we all enjoy many ethnic events in our ridings. My riding of Vancouver East is a wonderful place. I think it is the outstanding multicultural community of Canada. There are constant events to celebrate the Chinese New Year, Italian carnivals, and the Japanese Summer Festival in the heartland of the Japanese community. We visit Sikh temples where we experience their events, food, and so on. Of course there are many events in the native communities such as those in the longhouse. July 1 is a mosaic of many different kinds of events in our community. I think particularly of the events at Britannia Centre in my riding, a multicultural service centre of schools, recreational facilities, and a library. Such events are wonderful. They are the joy of multiculturalism. However, they are not enough.

Our government policies and programs must take positive steps to ensure that persons of all ethnic backgrounds have equal rights and equal opportunities and that they do not experience racism. We must face up to the fact that racism and lack of opportunities are very prevalent, particularly with people of colour in society today. I attended a number of meetings of the Immigrant and Visible Women's Council which was formed in a conference last year. We heard over and over again the kind of double discrimination that women of colour face. I am sure men feel the same way.

Government policy must open jobs to visible minorities in a much more direct way with stronger affirmative action programs. I have heard many people comment recently that on TV news broadcasts we have many more visible minority commentators, guests and so on. Soon this situation will be taken for granted and we will not have to speak about it. But are persons of colour, visible minorities if you like, moving up in the public service and in other kinds of jobs? Perhaps they are getting in the door through employment equity but we have yet to find out. This is the first year we will be getting reports about it. Are persons of colour moving up into all levels of our public service? I suspect not, according to what I was told by the women's conference.

We must take tangible steps to protest racism and to uphold our Charter by acknowledging past injustices. This is why redress of the injustices that Canadians of Japanese origin experienced must be made. Chinese immigrants who came here at the turn of the century experienced injustice, but in a different way. They were not yet citizens of Canada. The Chinese and Japanese cultural groups and their wide group of supporters now say that we must wipe out these injustices from our history and our consciences. It is appalling that, after election promises to do something, there have been only two or three series of negotiations with Canadians of Japanese origin who lost their properties, were displaced, lost their communities and dignity as a result of injustices during World War II. It is appalling that the Government will not compensate them.

There was a big meeting recently in my riding on this matter. Not just one ethnic group is concerned about the matter. There are coalitions building and Canadians from all backgrounds want us to take a stand. Individuals who are now elderly must have fair redress for their losses. Why shouldn't they? The Americans have done something in the U.S.A.. It is a shame that our Government refuses to do anything, to negotiate fairly with the organizations who represent the Japanese Canadians. We want the issue settled once and for all; wiped from our consciences and our history books. We want our children to be proud that we have recognized these people.

Similarly, I have spoken many times in this House about the Chinese head tax. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to meet with Canadians of Chinese origin to acknowledge the imposed injustice, not only by the head tax laws early in the century but as well by the Chinese Exclusion Act which for many years prohibited Canadian citizens of Chinese origin from bringing their wives and families over from China. Here again the Prime Minister promised that his Government would meet with people and settle this issue. Now the Cabinet has instructed the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism that he cannot even meet with the Chinese Canadian National Council. How can you begin to discuss issues if you are not able to meet with the people concerned? I am honoured to be on an all-Party committee that has met once with the Chinese Canadian National Council. We are hamstrung unless the Government is prepared to act.

What about the many injustices and the stigma which is being stirred up by recent events, and I am thinking of the Sikh community. There were incidents last summer involving Sikhs who were refugee claimants at the time. We heard inflammatory language and the policies of the Government stimulated racism. In my riding, and in many others, we had numerous calls from people who expressed overt racism toward this group. Although no one condones terrorism, I do not think the statements by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have helped multicultural relations in recent days through his boycott of certain Sikh organizations. This is overt discrimination, but there are subtle discriminations as well.

I want to mention StatsCanada. I get so irritated when I look at the format for collecting information, which has for years focused primarily on groups from Europe. It is as if Asia and the people who came to Canada from there did not exist. Only recently have a few countries been noted as countries of origin. So we do not have recognition in the data on people who for many years have come from Asian countries to provide leadership in Canada.

I mentioned double discrimination faced by immigrant women, but there is triple discrimination as well. Not only are they faced with discrimination because they are immigrants and women, but also because many of them are coloured. We must have many more positive programs to assist women and to open opportunities; for instance, English as a second language, many community support programs, more relevant employment training and child care in relation to all programs. We must entrench our multicultural heritage in the Constitution; that is what we heard from multicultural and ethnic groups when debating the Meech Lake Accord. There was concern that the rights of the minorities were not made specific at that time.

On September 3 last year I raised this problem in the House through a petition from Mosaic which is a multicultural group in my riding. The Canadian Ethnic Cultural Council also states that Section 15 of the Charter should define freedom from discrimination based on multicultural factors by adding "race, national or ethnic origin, colour (or) religion".

There are many things we must do. There are many omissions from the Bill. Basically it is a good start. I am sure that in committee there will be many amendments to the Bill. I was pleased to hear the previous speaker say that he will be assisting in this regard. Let us make it a very effective Bill and let us make sure that we remove racism from Canada.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have listened again with interest to the words of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). She spoke from her own experience in her constituency and her experience of life on the West Coast, a part of Canada where Asian migration to Canada is important. There is the establishment of communities of people from Japan, China and other parts of Asia as well as from the dominion of India in its day and from neighbouring countries. People have come to Canada from various places to find homes here. I appreciate her emphasis on the importance of legislation that will ensure respect for the rights of all communities in Canada to be enhanced by the Canadian Government.

I want to explore a related aspect in the Government's interaction with communities and representatives from the communities. I have a question of her about the possibility of a model. In fact, something like the Advisory Council on the Status of Women might be taken up by the Government to advance the cause of multiculturalism. Let me explain what I am thinking of here by picking up on the Hon. Member's observations about the Manitoba Intercultural Council. It is a very important body, as she suggested.

During a western multicultural tour almost exactly a year ago, I had the privilege of being in Winnipeg and being able to sit in on a joint meeting of the executive of the Manitoba Intercultural Council and a good part of the provincial Cabinet. I was impressed first by the fact that the premier, the Minister of Finance who had previously been the Minister responsible for multicultural matters and the Minister of Education of the Province of Manitoba were there, quite a diversity of Ministers over and above the Minister for Culture, Heritage and Recreation, who of course is primarily responsible. They were all gathered at the table to consider an agenda of important concerns which the Manitoba Intercultural Council had put forward.

This is a council formed largely of representatives chosen by the communities under legislation which the New Democratic Government put forward to ensure that the council would be genuinely representative and would articulate the concerns of the communities. We have not had anything remotely resembling that in multiculturalism federally. We have had behind closed doors advisory councils to a succession of Ministers. The Bill intends to perpetuate that particular model. It is greatly to be regretted that that is the model the Government plans to continue with, since it is not prepared to do anything on the matter of the commissioner or on a strong ministry.

I wonder if the Hon. Member, from her intense involvement in the women's cause and her advancement of that cause on the federal scene, would have any thoughts about how the model provided by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women might conceivably provide a federal example of a multicultural body. Such a body would be publicly established, speaking publicly, doing research and able to press the Government openly and gather support for the endeavours of others outside Government. What possibilities are there for drawing on one model and applying it to the multicultural area?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think that was the expert speaking, but he has raised a very interesting point. There are some great advantages in having advisory councils, but if there were to be something outside Government, I would hope that it would use a different way of appointing people than is used in the traditional government bodies we have now, like the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, although it is doing very good work and has an excellent director. I have always advocated that there should be some way for women's communities across Canada to nominate people for that body and that they not just be political appointees. I do not think we need that kind of tokenism in a new body.

We should also keep in mind that when it comes to women's issues, there is a government Department, Status of Women Canada, although there is not a commissioner. Perhaps it would be a very good idea to have one. There needs to be a mechanism both within Government and without to press for the policies.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks I alluded to the matter of racism in Canada and to the need for action along those lines. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Vancouver East could say something about the matter of the strong action that is required from her experience in the Province of British Columbia and, of course, in national politics.

The New Democratic commitment to equality, the necessity for doing more than just talking about fine principles and actually advancing those appeared in the debate on Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill. There we had a situation that is all too similar to this one. It was a Bill that enunciated some fine principles and did provide for some reporting, but it was only under extreme pressure that the Government responded in any way at all to the need for something more than the gathering of information, something more than a vague setting of goals for advancement.

I have been profoundly distressed by the resemblance of Bill C-93 to Bill C-62. It states the principles and puts up the window-dressing but does not provide the kind of machinery that is required. We have a Bill that relates to the concerns of various groups, including the concerns of women of all colours and of all backgrounds, recognizing that women of colour, immigrant and visible-minority women particularly face great impediments to their advancement in Canadian society.

The similarity of Bill C-93 to Bill C-62 concerns me a great deal, and I wonder whether the Hon. Member could expand on the importance of having strong legislation. Perhaps she could express her thoughts about the possibility of the Government providing such legislation.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think I said in my remarks that to deal with racism is probably the most important area for policy and action on the part of the Government. Groups are quite capable of dealing with community events and multiculturalism as it exists now, but we must face the question of racism head on.

The Hon. Member is more of an expert on the Bill itself than am I, but as we deal with amendments to it we will look at how to strengthen it. Certainly there does not appear to be the kind of mechanism in it to deal with that issue.

I think it is also very important that we as a society look at the prevention of racism. I know that some committees at the community level are looking at how to do more in schools with language and with books to show that we have a multicultural society and to discuss these issues. As I mentioned, children should know about incidents of discrimination in our history, and they should know that under our Charter those kinds of incidents would no longer be tolerated.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for a portion of a city which can justly claim to be the birthplace of multiculturalism in Canada, I take great pride in the privilege of being able to intervene in today's debate.

Before dwelling on the merits of the Bill before us, I think I should say something about an honour which on May 6 will be conveyed to three residents of my constituency to be made Members of the Order of Canada on that date at a ceremony in Rideau Hall. What is remarkable is that no one has referred to the fact that each of the three of them represents what we celebrate here today, our multicultural heritage.

Mr. Krishan Joshee, who has lived in this country for approximately 30 years, was a distinguished educator and is now a public administrator. He was born in India, taught in Ethiopia, latterly in remote northern Alberta and most recently in the City of Edmonton, rising to the position of vice principal of one of Edmonton's Catholic schools, a remarkable achievement for a man of the Hindu religion. He was the founder of Edmonton's Heritage Festival which annually attracts some 400,000 participants to Hawrelak Park in Edmonton South, a park which indeed was named after Edmonton's first mayor of Ukrainian origin.

The second individual who will become a Member of the Order of Canada is Mrs. Mary Lobay, descendant of one of the first pioneer Ukrainian families to settle in rural agricultural Alberta. Mrs. Lobay is indeed the surviving sister of the distinguished late Mayor of Edmonton, William Hawrelak, after whom the aforementioned park was named.

The third individual, Dr. Henry Kreisel, will be made an Officer of the Order of Canada on May 6. Dr. Kreisel is a distinguished Canadian author, novelist and most recently has delivered to the Minister responsible for multiculturalism a very interesting, creative and imaginative plan for the cultivation of heritage languages in our country. What is remarkable is that no one is even taking notice of their multiculturalism symbol because, at least in my city, multiculturalism is a fact of life in which we glory.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) has made the point that sometimes we do not recognize when we are walking through history. That is exactly what is happening right now. Giving legislative expression to Canada's multicultural and multiracial reality is a landmark event. It is an event for the history books, rooted in the everyday life of the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Bill C-93 represents a landmark in the evolution of our society. This legislation, while reminding us that multiculturalism is as old as Canadian society itself, at the same time emphasizes that it is also one of our most innovative enterprises. Furthermore, it bears witness to the determination and strength of those men and women who helped to build this great country we have become.

[English]

Our aboriginal peoples were the first citizens of this nation. They survived in a harsh and unpredictable natural environment by creating a strong spiritual life, and a mythology which is part of our collective sense of being Canadian. No doubt, many Hon. Members are aware that an outstanding exhibition of native arts and artifacts called "The Spirit Sings: Artistic Traditions of Canada's First Peoples" was assembled at the Glenbow Museum at Calgary as a showpiece of the Calgary Winter Olympics. It unveiled for the world the richness and diversity of aboriginal culture in Canada.

When the French and the British first arrived in this country they made contact with an aboriginal society which was both multicultural and multilingual. That essential reality of Canadian identity was intensified by pioneers of many different origins who came to forge a new future for themselves in this land of promise and opportunity.

As the Prairies were settled and our transportation centres grew into cities, we sought our farmers and labourers wherever we could find them. The list of their homelands, languages and cultural traditions is almost limitless. Their courage, endurance and dreams for a better life left a permanent legacy in every community across Canada; not the least of those legacies was tolerance.

A historic attachment to the land is part of the cultural heritage of all Canadians. It is shared by our aboriginal peoples, by courageous European pioneers, Sifton's men in sheepskin coats, Ukrainians, Poles, Germans and many others who dug deep into Canadian soil to create fertile fields, strong communities and their own special experience of being Canadian.

That experience is shared by those who helped open up this land from sea to sea. As we are all aware, the incredible task of building the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Canadian Shield, over the Prairies, down the treacherous Fraser Canyon could never have been done without the backbreaking effort of labourers from all corners of the globe, especially Chinese Canadians.

[Translation]

Canada did not become a multicultural nation overnight. Multiculturalism is a factor that has always been present in the course of our history. It is a factor that has greatly influenced our concept of human rights and equality among citizens. In Canada, we cannot tolerate any form of racism. Both socially and legally, discrimination and intolerance are attitudes that to us are unacceptable. It is ideals such as these which over the years have attracted and still attract people from all over the world to this country.

[English]

In the late eighteenth century roughly 50,000 American residents moved to what is now Canada during the revolutionary war, becoming known as United Empire Loyalists. In the nineteenth century, prior to Abraham Lincoln's emancipation proclamation, thousands of black Americans travelled north on the famous underground railroad to seek their freedom in Canada. In this century Canada has continued to provide refuge and a fresh start to hundreds of thousands of people fleeing oppression.

Multiculturalism is a working reality in our society, a welcome fact of our daily life. However, there was a time when severe doubts were expressed about the possibility of turning what some called a "motley crowd of immigrants" into a nation of Canadians. A young Methodist minister named J.S. Woodsworth, later the founder of the CCF Party, ran his All People's Mission in Winnipeg in the early 1900s. Surveying the scene around him with a mixture of pride and apprehension, he wrote in 1909:

> English and Russians, French and Germans, Austrians and Italians, Japanese and Hindus—a mixed multitude, they are dumped into Canada by a kind of endless chain. They sort themselves out after a fashion, and each seeks to find a corner somewhere. But how shall we weld this heterogeneous mass into one people? That is our problem.

As we approach the twenty-first century, the people and the Government of Canada have found ways to address that problem with caring and with imagination. One of them is the Bill that we are debating today.

We have come to understand that being largely a nation of immigrants, or descendants of immigrants, gives us a unique perspective on the world, and it gives us an appreciation of the strength and vitality generated by our cultural and racial diversity.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said so well when he addressed the Canadian Multilingual Press Association last October:

> The magnificence of our citizenship has been powerfully enriched by our multicultural reality. This reality is part of our life, of who we are, of what we can become.

Bill C-93 gives legal substance to this Government's conviction that multiculturalism lies at the heart of our Canadian identity. This conviction was definitely lacking in the Liberal Bill C-48, as was much else of any substance. What that Bill proposed was a loose amalgam, a celebration of differences. Our Bill enables a catalyst which will aid in the creation of the new Canadian alloy, a sum much stronger than the aggregation of its parts.

When passed, our Canadian Multiculturalism Act will affirm in law that every Canadian can determine the extent to which he or she wishes to identify with, enjoy, enhance and share their previous heritage of birth and ancestry. It will promote multiculturalism as a central feature of our Canadian society and it will reflect our conviction that, regardless of origin, every Canadian citizen has an equal chance to participate in and contribute to the social economic, cultural and political life of this nation.

We as a nation are committed to the idea that all Canadians, wherever they are born, whatever their roots, are entitled to an equal chance. They have a right to be educated, trained, to choose their life's work and to be able to benefit from its rewards. There must be no barriers to ensuring that these things hold true to all Canadians of every origin.

It has been asked why there is no ministry in this Bill and no commissioner of multiculturalism. I submit that if we were doing it again and were not operating in the milieu of paternalism, which perhaps necessarily prevailed in the nineteenth century, we would not recreate a Department of Indian Affairs. Let us not be patronizing with multiculturalism today. Let us inculcate everything we do with the spirit that whatever minister takes the oath office, whatever officer or head of a Crown agency or corporation takes office, whatever member of a board of directors takes an oath of office, he or she subscribes to the multicultural reality and multicultural glory of Canada. Only then can we ensure that we have more Cabinet ministers with names like those of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski), and more lieutenant governors like Lincoln Alexander and more premiers whose origins we celebrate, if not their policies, like Joe Ghiz and Bill Vander Zalm. We can ensure that all future athletes of all racial or cultural origins, such as sprinter Ben Johnson, diver Sylvie Bernier or equestrian Ian Miller will be able to realize their full potential.

I am sure Hon. Members will agree, however, that the vitality and richness of our multicultural diversity in action is not found only in our sports or political arenas. It is found in all the activities of our neighbourhoods, large centres and small communities all across Canada. The shops, restaurants, and small businesses run by members of our ethnocultural groups contribute in large part to this country's economic prosperity. According to census data for 1981, half of the small businesses in Canada are owned and operated by members of our cultural or racial minority groups. However, economics aside, it is evident that multicultural enterprises add the kind of variety, vitality, and interest to our downtown cores which help to animate our cities.

[Translation]

Formerly, multiculturalism was associated with folk dancing, national costumes or international cuisine. Celebrations and ceremonies held by a cultural community were basically the business of the people of that community. The situation has changed somewhat today, when we see a kind of symbiosis, where sharing and mutual appreciation are becoming increasingly important.

[English]

I recall a remarkable event which could have happened only in Canada at the celebration of India Day last year when a Ukrainian dance troupe performed a Punjabi harvest dance. That is more than symbiosis. Summer gatherings such as the Ukrainian Pysanka Festival in Vegreville, Edmonton's magnificent Heritage Days, Saskatoon's Folkfest and Winnipeg's Folklorama, or Toronto's Caribana and the country-wide Chinese New Year's celebrations are now part of the Canadian calendar of special events. Each year they attract more and more Canadians of all backgrounds and races as well as increasing numbers of visitors, visitors who recognize that this is what is uniquely Canadian.

I had the privilege in 1986 of being called upon on very short notice, in fact 30 seconds, to give a 15-minute talk on Canada and what it means to be Canadian. This talk was to be delivered half way around the world as I was visiting the province of Negros Occidental in the Philippines at the time. I had the advantage of having to wait for the simultaneous into the Ilongo language to finish, giving me an opportunity to gather my thoughts.

I chose to talk not about the stereotypes of Canada, the northern nation, the vast nation which is not quite the United States. I chose to talk about multiculturalism and celebrated the fact that while many countries in our world are multicultural through forces of invasion or history, Canada is the only country, certainly the first country on the globe, to have chosen by active political will to become a multicultural society and to glory in it.

Earlier in this debate the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) implied that the Canada Council turns away applications from some Canadians because of their origins. I cannot understand where the Hon. Member got this idea. He should know better. Let me cite some evidence to the contrary. The Council has funded Punjabi and Chinese literacy projects, documentary films made by Inuit artists, and the publication of short stories written by Greek immigrants. The Council has funded a biography of pioneer black Canadian community leaders and the performances of black musicians in Nova Scotia.

I do not intend to dwell on long lists. My point is to emphasize the work that the Canada Council has already done. More will be done. The multicultural policy of Canada will apply to the Canada Council as a federal institution and I am certain that the Council will join all other federal institutions in celebrating and promoting the cultural and racial diversity of Canada.

I would like to emphasize that Bill C-93 is perfectly clear, not only about maintaining our commitment to the official languages of Canada, but also about preserving our heritage languages. The Bill states that the Government of Canada will "facilitate the acquisition, retention and use of all languages that contribute to the multicultural heritage of Canada".

As part of that commitment the multiculturalism sector of the Department of the Secretary of State recently sponsored a national heritage language teaching training conference in Toronto. The Government is currently considering new initiatives in the area of heritage languages. We are considering how a heritage language institute in Edmonton can best be established, based on the recommendations of the distinguished Dr. Henry Kreisel, and what its mandates and priorities should be.

We are examining the possibility of creating a national network which would link an Edmonton institute with the Language Resource Unit at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education in Toronto and eventually to a complementary operation in Quebec.

Finally, we are asking the Assembly of First Nations to submit recommendations to the Government on the possible creation of an aboriginal languages institute.

All of this activity underlines the Government's belief that heritage languages are a vital element of communications and understanding in our multicultural society. Language is important to this country, not only in terms of social harmony but also in an economic way for trade, for diplomacy, and for tourism.

A few years ago a government study analysed our tourism industry, particularly the question of why Americans come to Canada. We all assumed it was the snow-capped mountains, the rushing rivers, or the CN Tower, but that was not really the case. They said that they came because they appreciate the linguistic and cultural diversity of Canada. That was the number one reason given.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is being confirmed daily. Canada's distinctive character as a multicultural nation has made it a country that is enjoying healthy and dynamic growth both socially, culturally and economically. By putting to good use the knowledge, experience and talents of all these people who have come to this country from the four corners of the earth, we can greatly enhance Canada's potential in the areas of international trade and diplomacy and in the field of cultural and scientific exchange.

[English]

The Government believes wholeheartedly that a strengthened commitment to multiculturalism through Bill C-93 will add to our international stature. Multiculturalism is not only one of our most valuable natural resources, it is our gateway to the world.

I would like to extend personal congratulations to my hon. colleague, the Secretary of State, for bringing forth this historic legislation. I urge all Members of the House to respond quickly to the vision of the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act by giving it their full and unqualified support. This Bill is proactive. In fact, it has become a veritable Christmas tree, or Hanukkah bush, which offers choice and opportunity, not command and control.

In fact, only two weeks ago I was lobbied by the Canadian Conference for the Deaf and the Western Institute for Research into Deafness who put forth, with some vigour and some persuasiveness, the argument that the deaf ought to be embraced within the Multiculturalism Act. It is that attractive an Act. It is a joyful Act, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marchi: I commend the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Edwards) for bringing a degree of sincerity and passion to the debate. Nonetheless, I think that this individual, who is part of the Conservative Party, is prepared to put multiculturalism into deep freeze, is prepared, by embracing this Bill, to say that the future of multiculturalism is in the past.

The Member was very articulate in a number of his analogies. If he wants to use Christmas as an analogy, I suggest that this Bill is a beautifully gift-wrapped box, but when opened up there is very little inside. If you want to use the Olympic analogy, this legislation is pleased with a bronze rather than striving for gold.

The Member began by addressing a number of different points. He said first that to talk of a separate ministry was to ghettoize multiculturalism. Why is he so quick to label a ministry as ghettoization? Why is it patronizing to develop bigger and more effective program delivery by bringing various programs, which are now spread throughout the federal civil service, under one roof? Why is it ghettoizing to have a larger budget under one roof than now exists in various departments? Why would it be ghettoization to have a full time Minister and a Deputy Minister which would obviously give additional political power and why if we cannot see this as one step towards one day having one ministry of culture, not communications and culture, but one department of culture whose message is that our culture is multiculturalism?

We cannot necessarily attain that goal with just a leap of faith that lands nowhere. If one subscribes to that more progressive longer-term vision, one can see this as one stepping-stone towards that eventual day. Why is that too seen as ghettoization?

Finally, Bill C-48 was not the answer. I am prepared to say that today. One of the first things the former Minister responsible for multiculturalism under the Tory administration did was to send a copy of Bill C-48 to all the groups across the country in order to get a consultative process under way. He asked how he could improve the Bill, how to take it one step further? In the interim, there was a standing committee that had as its basic premise, I suggest, a very strong and comprehensive multiculturalism Act. Unfortunately, today we have a multiculturalism bill that is no better than bill c-48, despite the intervening four years of consultations and a unanimous report from a committee. I want to know why the Tories' definition of a future is clearly in the past? If Bill C-48 was not good enough, why did we not make it better?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Liberal critic has entered into this debate, because it gives me an opportunity to tell him that history and events have not only undertaken the Government, but have more than overtaken the Liberal Party. The fact is that Canadians, however they describe themselves beyond their Canadianism, today recognize that Canada is a multicultural nation and that that reality does not need to have the ghettoization of a particular ministry.

Rather than just leave it at that, I think it is appropriate to indicate what can happen. The Hon. Member has been around government for some time. I know he advised a previous Minister and I think he may have had some considerable part in the drafting of Bill C-48. However, the fact is that events have evolved very rapidly. Today the very idea of shunting off responsibility for multiculturalism to a particular Minister is not enough.

The Hon. Member says he could be the advocate. The fact is that each and every one of us, through every hour of every day, should be the advocate and the celebrator of multiculturalism. We do not need some kind of a side ministry with, let us be honest, a history of turnover of Ministers for multiculturalism, being a training ground for junior Ministers who either disappear or go on to greater things. We need to have a commitment by all members of Government, by all Members of Parliament, to the multiculturalism reality.

The Hon. Member talked about the consultative process, and why did we not embrace the recommendations of the standing committee. The chairman of the standing committee intervened in the debate. He made a very forceful and lucid intervention. However, he recognized that not always are all the recommendations of a standing committee embraced by Government. There is always the opportunity for Government to take those recommendations and hold them up against the light of present day reality.

I think, with all respect to the excellent work of the standing committee, it was the standing committee that was looking to the past rather than to the future, not the Government. This Bill, which the Hon. Member has likened to a bronze medal or an empty gift-wrapped box, is holding itself up as the kind of Bill towards which other groups and other interests are attracted. It is the kind of forceful advocacy that, for example, certain members of the disabled community are looking forward to and they are looking forward to the work of my friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), and his colleagues. They are looking forward to a similar kind of Bill coming forward in due time for the deaf, and the physically and mentally handicapped of this nation.

With all respect to the diligent labours of the Liberal critic, it is he who is looking to the past. The Government is recognizing the present and anticipating the future.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the words of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) as he celebrated the cultural diversity of the City of Edmonton. It reminded me, of course, of the cultural diversity of the City of Thunder Bay, and I suppose so many of us know of our cultural diversity and want to say good things about it. However, we need more than just words.

I want to focus more particularly on what the Hon. Member said in speaking of the way in which Bill C-93 gives legal substance to the Government's convictions regarding multiculturalism. The Member speaks of the way in which it might provide a catalyst to achieve a Canadian alloy. That is an image I am not so sure about. Too many people have been merged and assimilated in the alloying process. What we want in a policy on multiculturalism is to step back somewhat and allow the kind of freedom the Member noted the Bill provides for, giving people the opportunity to maintain cultures while being good Canadians.

The Member says the Liberals are looking to the past, implying there is a future to be grasped. He talks about the need for legislation to do that, but how can he find any satisfaction in Bill C-93, which does nothing to develop the machinery? Surely we cannot be content with the present situation where we have a very junior Minister who is in fact a person engrossed in the larger responsibilities of Secretary of State. We surely cannot be content with an advisory body that meets behind closed doors. We cannot be content with a budget that provides less than one dollar per Canadian, man, woman and child.

The Bill is inadequate. The worst judgment to render on this Bill is to say it institutionalizes the status quo. If we want to seize the future, if we want to have a real gold medal future, as the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) suggested, surely we have to provide the means. We have to empower communities and organizations to build the kind of Canada we want. We want them to foster their culture, to achieve their individual rights in Canada which have been trampled on all too often and still are not protected. We want that from a department which is aware of building, but not on the model of Indian Affairs where we had a suppression of the rights of a people from coast to coast.

Surely there is a need for action, but we cannot expect that from Conservatives. Conservatives just do not want to do anything in the way of strengthening multiculturalism organizations. They will state principles but will not provide the means and that is a judgment the Hon. Member for Edmonton South could say something about in trying to defend his own Party in its presentation of an inadequate Bill.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, my good friend from Thunder Bay—Nipigon, whom I respect immensely, may be sorry that he used those last couple of ideas. Sir, it was a great Conservative Prime Minister of Canada who opened my Party to the multicultural reality of Canada. The Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker is the man who spoke for all Canadians and who saw that their position in Canadian society had been overlooked, not only by my Party but by Canadian society in general. It was he who paved the way for the inclusion of the kind of people who my hon. friend and I celebrate and respect and who make up the new majority.

That is what I meant by the alloy analogy, in the sense that there are no majorities left in our country and that this Bill can be the catalyst which brings together a new Canadianism which is still in the process of defining itself. It was the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker who first articulated and inspired Canadians to embrace that reality.

Indeed, it was the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who carried forward that idea when he served as Leader of our Party. He stressed that Canada is, indeed, a community of communities.

It is to the eternal credit of the present Prime Minister that he threw his acts, his deeds and his warm endorsement behind this piece of legislation which has seen to it that this Bill will become an important pillar of the new Canadian consciousness.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my voice to those who have addressed the issue of multiculturalism in our society. We have heard some very warm, concerned and considered remarks from our colleagues from all sides of the House. That speaks well for the vision of tomorrow which is building through the ongoing steps involved in multiculturalism.

I see in the House my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) with whom I had the pleasure of studying Section 15 of the Canadian Constitution, and the Charter of Rights. At that time we were looking at equality for all, which was just another step, another building block in our concern for non-discrimination and integration for all people on a fair and equitable basis as part of the Canadian ethos.

In retrospect, what we have been doing over the past number of years has been building. I had hoped that when we finally took the important step to enact our nation's historic commitment to multiculturalism that we would be looking at a Bill, such as Bill C-93 which is before us, and judge that Bill on the basis of its quality, its substance and the extent to which it enhances multiculturalism across Canada. That is a goal which all Members of the House hold dear. It is what they represent when they stand to speak as the elected representatives of their ridings. I know of very few ridings in the country that are not a reflection of the true multicultural and bilingual qualities that make up the Canada of today.

Creating a legislated framework for Canada's multicultural policy is therefore in itself a positive and valuable initiative. We have travelled a long road to arrive at this point. My colleague pointed out the role played by the late Prime Minister Diefenbaker. He also pointed out the role played by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Add those names to the names of Liberal Prime Ministers and one sees that this has been an ongoing and growing concern for many, many years.

We cannot argue with the developments that we have made as a society that understands and respects our many diverse peoples. But moving forward and building on past initiatives in this vital area of national policy is the duty not only of the Government but of Members on all sides of the House.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that despite the problems that exist with Bill C-93 and the newspaper coverage and the remarks of editorialists which indicate serious concern about the content of the Bill, that is not the view with respect to the thrust of the Bill. I do not think we can miss the chance to protect our multicultural tradition through legislative action, for this is an ideal that has been pursued by many modern societies. I think that Canada with this as a legislated direction may be the first to put it into legalistic form.

It represents a commitment to the recognition of the many ethnic groups that make up our nation's diverse population. For example, Canada is a nation with a rich history of accepting peoples from many and varied ethnic origins and, hopefully, having them become part and parcel of what we call or perceive as mainstream Canada.

We are supposed to be establishing a framework in law for Canada's strong and long-standing multicultural policy, a policy that states that we accept differences based on race, religion, language, modes of livelihood and regions of origin or habitat. Since we are all differentiated from one another on the basis of some of those factors, we all may be described as ethnics. Therefore cultural diversity, like individual differences, must be accommodated within the framework of political freedom.

Our democratic ideal supports this idea of accommodation. Our pluralistic society requires it. The 1982 Canadian Constitution mandates recognition of our multicultural heritage.

One root of Canada's multiculturalism policy was the 1963 Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism which was originally aimed at reviewing the status of the two founding peoples of Canada. An additional facet was added to the commission's task to examine the contribution made by other ethnic groups for which the cultural enrichment of Canada can be thanked, and the measures which could be taken to safeguard that contribution. This additional directive which came as an afterthought has in retrospect proven to be valuable for getting the ball rolling on Canada's multiculturalism policy.

By 1971 the Liberal Government committed Canada to a multicultural policy, but within a bilingual framework. In his statement Prime Minister Trudeau noted that although there are two official languages there is no official culture, nor does any ethnic group take precedence over any other. This was really the first formal recognition of the fact that every Canadian is an ethnic of some variety and each of our cultures deserves respect.

With these statements, multiculturalism emerged from its status as a mere fact of Canadian life to become an issue for full and active discussion on the nation's public policy agenda. We must now look at how these very heterogeneous social groupings, which are a reality in our society, can be recognized as part of the basic strands that form the warp and woof of the tapestry that is found by the weaving of the fabric that is Canada.

The reality of multiculturalism's new place on the agenda of national debate and action was confirmed by the then Prime Minister's comments on the need for official support from Government that would contribute to a richer life for us all. We all start with small things and grow. Now is the time to consolidate a dispersed growth into one concrete area so that we can look at what is happening and move the whole issue forward.

Fortunately, along with the words of the Prime Minister, about official support at that time, action did follow. The Government's actions included the establishment of a multiculturalism directorate within Secretary of State in 1971 and the appointment of a Minister of State for Multiculturalism in 1972. That was solid action, the kind of action that is missing in Bill C-93.

In 1977 Parliament passed the Canadian Human Rights Act which established the Human Rights Commission that could receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and develop programs that would combat discriminatory practices. Again, that was solid action, something more than the dreamy promises that we have in this Bill.

In 1982 the Canadian Constitution included multiculturalism, as well as Section 15, the equality and non-discriminatory clause, within our constitutional framework. There was a commission report, "Equality Now", and then a Bill, the beginning of a legislative framework.

In 1985 the House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was established to act as a forum for ethnic community representations and to review the Government's progress in implementing multiculturalism policy, again, continuing a tradition of active not passive public policy with regard to multiculturalism.

This is not the first time that we have seen legislation in the House to support multiculturalism. As I previously stated, on June 21, 1984 the Government of the day, through its Minister, David Collenette, introduced Bill C-48, the Multiculturalism Act. Unfortunately, it died on the Order Paper when a federal election was called in the fall of that year.

The last action by Members of Parliament prior to the introduction of Bill C-93 was the report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism in June, 1987. This was the product of many hours of careful thought and consultation by our colleagues on that committee. I wish to pay particular respect to and congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), for his leadership and his open and active participation.

A creative and open-minded report flowed from the deliberations of this committee. It urged the enactment of a multiculturalism Bill, the creation of a new line department with a full-time senior cabinet Minister, the establishment of a commissioner, and the increase of budgets for related programs, much like that found under the Official Languages Bill. If we wish the bilingual character of Canada and its distinctiveness throughout this land to become a reality, then we have to put some action and some concrete policies into place. The same is true with respect to multiculturalism; it is the other side of the coin that makes up this wonderful Canada of ours.

The Government's official response accepted the basic tenets of the committee's report, but concluded that a new department and Minister were not needed. On the contrary, it seems to me that few ethnocultural groups would reject the appointment of a full-time Minister who could respond to their needs and assure them of due respect and attention at the Cabinet table. This Minister could not handle this whole task by himself. He needs the collaborative efforts at the Cabinet table of all the different Ministers who have roles and responsibilities to ensure multiculturalism together with the bilingual nature of Canada.

Nor would a commissioner be the wrong approach. It is vital that we have a commissioner who would report to Parliament on the progress we are making in this new and very vital area of our Canadian social reality. We need to find ways to harmonize our varying societies, develop mutual respect, and reduce social tensions through active progressive programs. We need to educate our society from childhood through adulthood. We need to remove discrimination due to ignorance and misunderstanding. We need to move into a pluralistic Canadian society on the basis of equality of opportunity for all, and have access to jobs based on skills and competence, irrespective of race or creed. That is one of the thrusts that is needed and is missing in terms of action guidelines.

That brings me to the legislation that we are now considering. If we are to achieve the true spirit envisaged in this Bill, we must find concrete ways for many ethnic communities to participate fully in Canadian society, rather than remaining on the fringes as is so often the complaint. Song and dance as part of the over-all practice is only one aspect of a full multicultural philosophy which is the reality of the Canada in which we live. Private and public institutions should reflect the true make-up of the population.

This is not reflected on the screens of this land, either on television screens, at the boards of directors, and certainly not in the films that we see in the theatre. Unfortunately Bill C-93 does not go far enough to actively strengthen and ensure the visibility of all ethnic groups in Canada.

This is not only the view of those of us in the Official Opposition. Mr. Lewis Chan of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council has called Bill C-93 "a shining symbol, and certainly a step forward, but it is a symbol without substance". How can it be otherwise for its goals are couched in general principles and objectives in cautious language terms. We see words like "should", "may", "facilitate", "encourage", but there is no enforcement mechanism, much like Bill C-62 which includes all the correct words around employment equity, but has no action, no mandatory or obligatory forward movement in the Bill.

There are more complaints. The Ontario Advisory Council on Multiculturalism and Citizenship has criticized the Government's decision not to establish a full-time ministry of multiculturalism. They find it "unacceptable and it demonstrates the lack of leadership commitment for multiculturalism as a fundamental goal for Canada".

One of the biggest problems in this Bill is its lack of true enforceability. As I stated, my Party is only one of the many voices expressing this concern. We support the steps this legislation suggests "should" be taken by the Government to enhance Canada's multicultural life, but we believe it should state "shall" take those steps. It lacks specific implementation and enforcement provisions. That is the serious deficiency of this proposed Act.

I return to make the point I made at the beginning of my comments today. This Bill will be judged on the extent to which it actually enhances multiculturalism across the country. That is what Canadians are looking for—action and not promises. It does not take the bold step forward that we need. It does not require government action to implement the very policies it seeks to provide in this legislative framework. In the Bill the gap between policy and implementation is evident. I hope it is not a lack of good faith and goodwill. I hope we see the mechanisms to improve this Bill when it goes to committee.

There is no designated full-time cabinet Minister. There is a failure to do so, which will do little to open the doors of the federal Government to Canada's ethnocultural communities. This change would have gone a long way to improving dialogue between government and Canada's ethnic communities, giving them the attention that they deserve. Right now we are living in a time of great stress. It is very important that we reduce racial tensions, as we look at what is going on in society, and improve the general atmosphere. It is a very important concern.

As a nation, if we are going to take that large step forward that we require, which means encouraging all our ethnic groups to take pride in their Canadianism, which we would hope they would do while still retaining their attachment and pride in their own roots, this is absolutely key and fundamental. It is important that we encourage peoples of a variety of cultures to grow and retain their own identity while joining and enjoying celebrations with Canadians of different ethnic origins. Canada's collective identity would be enriched and reinforced.

While Canada is officially bilingual, that is, it has two languages, its cultural is multicultural. In Montreal this past Sunday I was struck at the time of the St. Patrick's parade that the crowd was very mixed. It reminded me of a festival parade last summer organized by the city's Caribbean black community in which I was actively involved. The crowd was also very varied. These celebrations by the very diverse ethnic cultural minority communities have become part of the pluralistic community celebrations of the Canadian mosaic. People of all ethnic minorities gathered around, joined in, showed tolerance, understanding, and appreciation of Canada. They thought of this as a normal relationship in the pluralistic society that is the reality of Canada today.

Because of the growing racial tensions that we are also feeling, there needs to be the legislative cadre in order that we can truly move forward. Bill C-93 is a fairly short piece of legislation. Clause 3 is a statement of the proposed multicultural policy, but it is largely a reiteration of the types of policies which were enunciated by successive federal Governments. It represents no dramatic breakthrough.

Another difficulty is that Clause 3 contains a number of intentions with regard to multicultural policy, but the good intentions are in no way followed through by commitments to actions. In effect we have a Bill which represents a statutory declaration of policy. It does not legislate any call to action by the Government.

As was indicated by the largest coalition of ethnic organizations, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the word "should" is one of the weakest aspects of the whole Bill. A commitment would be indicated by "shall" or even by "must". The word "should" leaves it totally optional with regard to whether various federal institutions will do what they are called upon to do.

The Bill respecting the Official Languages Act is an example of the way in which the multiculturalism Bill could have been drafted to ensure action by the federal Government. In so doing it would have given much more hope to Canada's many ethnocultural organizations. Instead, the Bill simply places into law mere suggestions of what Governments could do to build and strengthen the multicultural fabric which is our reality.

In conclusion, while we all applaud the initiative of the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and favour the principles of multicultural equality which the Bill embodies in spirit, the fact is that many members of the Canadian ethnocultural community find, as do we in the Official Opposition, that the Bill does not meet the test. We want to ensure that our multicultural society is just a normal fact of life. We need the kinds of actions which will build a strong and meaningful multicultural Act and will provide the kind of tolerance to move our multicultural society and its communities into mainstream Canadian life.

I suggest that we do not just want promises to be legislated, we want the eventual goal of true equality for all. Let us not promote another Bill of missed opportunities. The employment equity Bill, which was to address discriminatory practices but had no teeth, was a lesson. Let us learn from that mistake and demand that Bill C-93 become a proactive Bill so that it will give substance to and enhance the basic fabric of our society—multiculturalism.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I rose in my seat earlier to comment on the speech by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). Unfortunately, I think you do not see me.

First of all, I would like to congratulate my colleague and also the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) for a very interesting speech, and I may add I was most interested in what he had to say about multiculturalism and the aboriginal people especially, because I had the pleasure of spending part of last week in that beautiful part of Canada we call the Yukon.

Mr. Speaker, if you have no objection, I would also like to correct and in fact respond to a false impression given by my socialist colleague of the New Democratic Party from Vancouver East, and I quote: "That aboriginal people are considered as ethnic groups." Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to correct this statement for the benefit of the House.

[English]

I agree that the culture and languages of the Canadian aboriginal peoples are rooted in this land. They are a living expression of an age old tradition. However, she seemed to feel that the new legislation could be interpreted as relegating Canada's aboriginal peoples to the status of just another ethnic group. Nothing could be further from what we intended.

The preamble to the Bill refers to the constitutional recognition of the rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples. It is our belief that the cultural and racial diversity of Canada is our greatest national strength. We did not want to make it appear—

Mrs. Finestone: Is this question for me?

Mr. Della Noce: I will get to it. I just wanted to make some points for clarification.

This is why the reference is therefore intended to send a message on the unique position of the aboriginal peoples of Canada in the context of diversity.

I visited the Yukon this past weekend. I want to ask my colleague whether she agrees with the Hon. Member on the following issue, and I will quote her again:

[Translation]

. . . "aboriginal people are considered as ethnic groups". So I want to ask the Hon. Member whether or not she thinks there is a difference between ethnic groups and aboriginal people. I want to ask the Hon. Member whether we were right to correct her.

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member finally got to me. I was wondering whether he would address some of the issues which concern me. Nevertheless, I will address the issue that seems to be concerning him.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, the fabric and tissue of Canada is the warp and the woof which form Canada today—its multicultural constituencies.

I would say that there are no majority groups left in Canada, not the Wasps, the Anglophones, the Francophones, the Québeçois, the Indian peoples, the aboriginal peoples, or the Eskimos, as we used to call them, or the Inuit, and I would say this of the Ukrainians in the West and the Italians in the East. No matter what group the Hon. Member would care to identify, we are all minorities within the majoritarian society that is the Canada in which we are building toward a tolerant, wonderful, and understanding society.

It is not a matter of isolating the aboriginal peoples who were among the founding nations of the land, nor is it a matter of isolating the English and the French who came here to share this beautiful place; I would say that all those who came, whether it was the Hon. Member's Italian ancestors or my Jewish ancestors, are all the same. We are building toward a fine future together.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, let me just observe, partly in defence of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), that the Parliamentary Secretary has made a vital mistake in being critical of labelling any group as "ethnic". The point he misses is that multiculturalism recognizes diversity in the country including the aboriginal peoples. Respect for their rights and their desire to maintain communities on reserves, in bands, and through self-government can easily be seen as part of the advance of a multicultural society in Canada. I wish that he and his colleagues in government would recognize that.

Referring to the fine speech made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), I should like to deal with something that should involve us these days. Let me break the silence in the House on the shooting of a young black man in Montreal, something about which we should have spoken earlier. I want to do that now and ask her, in the moment before we rise, whether she would have any thoughts about how the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada could be involved in a particular matter which strikes so many people. Despite the findings of an inquiry, or perhaps a jury trial, it strikes one that there are still dimensions of race to the issue.

What could we in the Parliament of Canada do to try to transcend these feelings in our country, particularly about this tragic situation in the City of Montreal?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, this was a tragedy for the family. The loss of a child or any member of a family, irrespective of circumstances, always causes heartache. In this instance, where we had what was perceived to be racial discrimination, the situation was even more difficult. The police officer in question was found not guilty.

To be in a position where one is perceived as dominant and uncaring as a result of whether an act was pre-thought or not is not the issue. We are living in a society with racial tension, not just in Montreal but right across the land. Visible minority groups are subject to discrimination in a much much more overt way. That is why I spoke to education in my remarks about the need for tolerance in our society. We have not had the degree, number or right mix.

Thirty different ethnic minority groups live in my riding, from five or six very distinct visible minority differences. Policemen on duty, the Armed Forces, everyone has to learn how to live in a far more sensitive way in this environment. We have not learned that sensitivity to the same degree. We have not changed our approaches in the kinds of ways that we must. Even to the way we recruit recruits we use the wrong kind of criteria. We need to see all these minorities reflected in our society at every level. If people do not see them reflected, and if people do not become role models and others have no one to identify with then they feel oppressed. That is what is happening in Montreal. There is a feeling of oppression because people do not see themselves reflected at all levels of society. It is sad and we must do something about it. This Bill does not move constructively enough in that direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LACK OF SUPPORT FOR SOCIAL AND COMMUNITY NEEDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Allan Taylor, Chairman of the Board of the Royal Bank of Canada, has provided a most remarkable and convincing rationale for a significant increase in corporate income taxes. Mr. Taylor, in a forceful speech to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, noted that when it comes to financial support to meet social and community needs, Canadian companies are falling down.

He said that Canadian companies give less as a percentage of pre-tax earnings than they did 20 years ago, and that 90 per cent of them give nothing at all. In 1969, corporate donations as a percentage of pretax profits were just under 0.8 per cent. In 1985, the figure had slipped to 0.5 per cent. Yet the need for corporate giving has increased because of spending restraints by Governments, he said.

The result, according to Mr. Taylor, is a situation that no Canadian can possibly accept: decreased social services, decreased health care, decreased social opportunities, more homeless and more hungry.

Surely the answer to the problem is not to try to soften corporate hearts but to treat corporations just as the Government treats individual taxpayers. Make them pay their fair share.

TRANSPORTATION

DEREGULATION—GREATER APPLICATION SUGGESTED FOR NORTH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the new air transportation policy of the Government of Canada, embodied in the National Transportation Act, appears to be an unqualified success. Deregulation has resulted in more convenient services at reduced prices. The air traveller has been the big winner.

However, in the North of Canada, regulation, albeit reduced, still applies. Why can northerners not reap the same benefits as southern Canadians? It is time deregulation and freedom to move applied equally across the whole nation.

INTERNATIONAL DAY FOR THE ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

PROTEST DEMONSTRATION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I offered a few words in commemoration of the Sharpeville massacre of 28 years ago. I did not mention that the anniversary of that event had been declared by the United Nations as International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

Although Canada, in observing that event, can be proud of the progress it has made in this respect, we still have much to accomplish. This was dramatized by the protest demonstration in Montreal last Saturday where 1,000 Canadians marched in memory of Anthony Griffin and demanded that the Province of Québec act with dispatch to end discrimination and to ensure equality of treatment for all racial minority groups.

It is important that no province be allowed to override the Charter provisions ensuring racial equality, and it is important too to insist that no province, however distinct, fail to implement the guarantee that Canada provides only one kind of citizenship, and that must be first class.

WORLD JUNIOR CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY CANADIAN RINK

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, Jim Sullivan, Charlie Sullivan, Craig Burgess, and Dan Alderman are four of the greatest ambassadors Canada has ever had. Highly respected young men of great ability, they worked hard and prepared themselves for the task of competing with the best in the world.

On Saturday, March 19, 1988, these four young Canadians won the World Junior Curling Championship for Canada. These young men are worthy champions and great ambassadors for Canada. They brought great distinction to themselves and to their country. They come from Fredericton, New Brunswick, the city that is fast becoming recognized as the centre of excellence in curling and in good sportsmanship.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ESTABLISH ADAPTATION PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning I had the pleasure of meeting with several senior citizens clubs from the riding of Montreal—Sainte-Marie, and also with a group of workers between the ages of 40 and 65. These people are disappointed and find it unacceptable that the Conservative Government has abolished the Program for Older Worker Adjustment, under which workers in the textile, footwear and apparel industries between the ages of 55 and 64 were entitled to take early retirement.

Unfortunately, in November 1986 this Government abolished the program in favour of a new program, but so far, nothing has been settled.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore urge all Conservative Members to do their duty and put pressure on the Minister of Labour to reinstate the Program for Older Worker Adjustment as soon as possible so that all older workers in Canada will get a fair deal.

CHEMICAL WEAPONS

CONDEMNATION OF USE IN IRAQ-IRAN WAR

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, there has been a dangerous escalation in the Iraq-Iran war. Strong evidence has emerged that confirms the use of chemical weapons. Such an escalation will lead to heavier casualties as well as increased terror among the innocent civilian population.

Chemical weapons were internationally banned in 1925 after their initial use in the First World War, due to the horrible effects these agents had on their victims. In addition, today's chemical weapons are complex chemical derivatives.

The use of these chemical agents raises the possibility of a future biological catastrophe for the region and perhaps for other nations which are not involved in this conflict. We in this House must use all the means at our disposal to prevent any more chemical weapons from being used and to see to a speedy end to this tragic conflict.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION AND EXPRESSION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, just after the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, I want to take up questions I asked three weeks ago regarding the actions of the External Affairs Department.

• (1405)

The Minister (Mr. Clark) and the Department of External Affairs have been interfering with the freedom of association and expression of Canadians. They have done this recently with regard to communities of Asian and Middle Eastern origin which are intensely concerned about the human rights of their compatriots in other countries.

It would appear that the Department of External Affairs has little regard for the freedom of association and of expression in our country when it comes under pressure from foreign Governments. Its preoccupation with trade opportunities leaves the Department dangerously open to pressure from these Governments to ostracize organizations and silence critics.

Canadians expect the Department of External Affairs to defend our interests. The protection of our ethnocultural communities and the advance of human rights everywhere are among our most vital national interests.

I call on the Minister to recognize these realities and to reform the way the Department of External Affairs responds to pressure from foreign Governments.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, in recent months we heard the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party of Canada saying that if they were running this country, they would be able to guarantee Canadians a full employment policy. We must remember it was because of the socialist and nationalist policies and the disincentives promoted by the New Democratic Party of Canada and implemented by the Liberal Party that this country experienced record unemployment levels in the seventies and the beginning of the eighties.

The people of the Quebec City area, especially those in the riding of Québec East, are more than capable of implementing the proposals of the Conservative Party for dealing with this legacy of instability from the previous Liberal Government.

Employment is a priority for the Conservative Party, but we must also stress the creation of more stable and more gainful employment.

A return to greater reliance on the public sector as urged by the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party of Canada would mean accepting unemployment as a necessary evil and leading this country into an era of social indifference, something Canadian men and women do not want.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRE-RETIREMENT LEAVE—PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring up once again the issue of pre-retirement leave at Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Devco PRL plan was designed to lay off workers before their normal retirement age of 65 so that some type of continuing remuneration could be offered to displaced workers. This meant, in effect, that these workers were still engaged under a contract of service to Devco and could therefore continue to earn entitlement to Canada Pension Plan benefits.

Since the PRL plan of 1971, many miners have now gone for a compassionate disability pension and programs under the Labour Adjustment Program. Under these programs, individuals were not being requested to pay unemployment insurance premiums. I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to change this unfair and discriminatory deduction. A change would result in substantial savings for the workers involved.

S. O. 21

On March 15, I received a response from the Minister. In it he states that this ruling will remain in effect until such time as Devco chooses to amend its plan. He then warns against Devco amending this plan because an amendment might jeopardize their continued entitlement to Canada Pension Plan benefits. Thus, the situation will remain as it is. The Minister and the Government have once again decided to do nothing, to the detriment of all the workers eligible for this plan at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

TOURISM

SARNIA—LAMBTON "BLUE WATER LAND"—DEVELOPMENT OF POTENTIAL

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton is located on the shores of beautiful Lake Huron and the St. Clair River. We boast miles and miles of sandy beaches and are known throughout the area as "Blue Water Land".

We have acres of parkland and conservation areas, and are joined with our American neighbours by the Blue Water Bridge and the railway tunnel. For these, and a multitude of other reasons, my constituents and I are working hard and tirelessly to develop the tourism potential of our community.

As Sarnia—Lambton is within a day's travel of more than half of the U.S. population, much of our efforts have been directed toward the attraction of this tourist market. Similarly, the Government of Canada has recognized this huge potential market and is directing much of its tourism advertising budget to the United States.

Consequently, it was with great dismay that I discovered from the President of VIA Rail that the company has a policy of limiting the number of seats available for sale to American wholesalers.

I wonder whether the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) is aware that, while we are expending tremendous effort to attract American visitors to Canada, VIA does not have enough equipment to carry all who wish to travel by rail at the times they wish to travel.

ADMISSION OF FAMILY CLASS IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, for years many Canadians have asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to permit their sons and daughters to enter Canada as family class immigrants even after age 21 because family ties are very important in our culture.

• (1410)

At last the Minister agreed, on August 11, 1987. Further, on October 31 the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) promised to admit unmarried sons and daughters of any age as family class and to give five extra points to married children and brothers and sisters applying as assisted relatives. Yet, to this day, the Minister has neither kept his promise nor told us when he will.

In the same way, the former Minister of Justice promised two years ago to eliminate the unfair difference between citizens and permanent residents so that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age. Yet to date the Government has not kept this promise.

I call on the Government to stop playing on the family loyalties of immigrant Canadians and bring these two promises into law.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING COMMITTEES' RECOMMENDATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, 1981 was designated the International Year of Disabled Persons to focus attention on the needs, hopes, and talents of disabled people. A committee of Parliament produced a report entitled "Obstacles" with over 100 recommendations. That year also saw physical and mental disability prohibited as grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The 1984 report of the Commission on Equality and Employment and the 1985 report of the parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights were followed in March, 1987, by another parliamentary committee report called "Challenge—Putting Our House in Order".

Many recommendations of all these reports, going right back to the "Obstacles" report, have yet to be implemented and a great deal of work remains to be done in integrating disabled people into the community. The Government should make this issue a priority and encourage all groups in society to take similar action.

MULTICULTURALISM

TIMMINS-CHAPLEAU—EXAMPLE OF TOLERANCE AND CO-OPERATION

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to take this opportunity to speak on the contribution of the various ethnic groups in the development of Canada while Bill C-93 is being debated.

I would like to inform the House that my riding of Timmins—Chapleau has 14 ethnic groups living in it and they all get along well. In fact I believe the various communities within the riding serve as an example for all of Canada when it comes to tolerance, co-operation, and contribution by all toward an improved quality of life. These 14 groups have created a social fabric which is a role model for the nation.

Just as Bill C-93 recognizes in an official way the multicultural society in which we live, the communities in my riding have recognized and honoured those groups which have made such significant contributions toward their development. We are happy that Bill C-93 recognizes, preserves, and enhances the cultural and racial diversity of our great nation.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—PRIME MINISTER'S 1984 SPEECH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, today is the fourth anniversary to the day of a speech by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), who was then the Leader of the Opposition, to the Chamber of Commerce in Montreal. On March 22, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "We are going to double our collective national commitment to research and development within the life of our first government mandate".

Not only has the Prime Minister not doubled our commitment, but research and development spending has gone down as a percentage of gross national product. The Prime Minister of Canada should explain why he has failed so miserably to make progress toward that important goal which affects our ability to compete in world markets.

Not only has R and D spending gone down, but the Government has abandoned the goal about which the Prime Minister so eloquently spoke in 1984. The Prime Minister should explain why the Government has refused to commit itself to a target and a timetable for increasing research and development spending which means so much for jobs, for the competitiveness of the Canadian economy, and for the health of our whole country.

CANADA

THE YUKON

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the pleasure of visiting a great region of Canada, the Yukon, along with five of my Conservative MP's for constituencies from Quebec to British Columbia. We toured more than 26 communities in the Territory, from North to South, from East to West. We were privilegied to meet Yukoners, with whom we talked and consulted. We listened to them, we found points in common with our beautiful Quebec. To sum it up in one word, it was love at first sight on that first visit—proud people, progressive people, people who take risks, people who are developing the Territory.

Yukoners are urging for a settlement of the land claims issue. Yukoners are urging free trade, with its mining and territorial benefits. Why is the Territorial Government pussyfooting on that matter?

Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed at the lack of leadership from the Territorial Government, and the lack of clarity and the truthfulness in the news coming from the CBC, better known in the Territory as NDP North. We were sad to leave that beautiful area, but we intend to go back in order to better know their concerns.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SOVEREIGNTY

THE NORTH—CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS STUDY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that yesterday a working group of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs released an extremely important study on the future of Canada's North. The group comprises a very distinguished number of first-rate Canadians.

The Prime Minister will also know that we on this side of the House took exception to the deal his Government signed with the United States permitting passage of American vessels through Canadian Arctic waters. We felt it was a weakening of Canadian sovereignty and our claims to Canadian sovereignty over those waters.

How does the Prime Minister respond to a conclusion on page 44 of the study of this working group which says: "the working Group is unable to agree with the opinion of the Prime Minister . . . " that 'What we have now significantly advances Canadian interests'". How does the Prime Minister respond to this group of eminent Canadians who contradict him on the effect on Canadian sovereignty of the recent agreement signed with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are free to disagree with the position of the Government. I do not have to tell the Leader of the Opposition about freedom to disagree. He is acquainted with it every day in his own Party and in his own caucus.

With respect to this very serious question, I have received, and I am considering, the report to which the Right Hon. Member refers, which was indeed made by eminent Canadians, some of them with a long interest in the Canadian North. The Right Hon. Leader will know that their view continues that: "—if a prior consent is required on a case by case basis—", and that is the case, "—there will be no damage to the Canadian position. Indeed, it should be normally affirmed by practice".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Needless to say, in responding to the right hon. gentleman's personal remarks, I am not taking him as a role model.

THE GREAT NORTH—CREATION OF INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, through his own Secretary of State for External Affairs, did not respond to my suggestion that a new international régime be created for the Arctic, and the Minister of National Defence did not react constructively to the proposition made by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbatchev.

What is the response of the Prime Minister—or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if you will—to the recommendation made by this Canadian private sector group of experts that Canada should take the initiative of convening all countries interested in the Arctic with a view to creating an international council to settle questions related to the nordic regions? Would he admit that his Government is taking the wrong approach by always refusing to endorse such an international régime in an attempt to reconcile our world-wide interests, towards the North, on this planet?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an interesting, serious and important recommendation concerning co-operation in the North, co-operation with other Arctic countries. Indeed our Government took a number of initiatives and, for the first time we took the position that we ought to establish Canadian sovereignty in the North. We as a Government are prepared, for the first time—I cannot make the same comment about the administration of the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition—to recognize the jurisdiction of a world tribunal with respect to our sovereignty in the North. He is talking about co-operation with other countries involved in the Arctic. As he would know, last November I attended a meeting in Tromso, in Norway, to discuss and take the very kind of initiatives that have just been suggested.

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker, for a long time the North was ignored by Liberal Governments. This Government has established a strong sovereign Canadian interest in our North.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL CO-ORDINATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to do anything more than recite the gentlemen who contributed to this particular report in rebutting the statement just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On this side of the House we have always stressed the need for a co-ordinated federal approach, that is to say, a closer co-ordination of federal Departments in dealing with the North and with the people of our North.

The Prime Minister, despite our pleas, has always argued that there has been sufficient co-ordination to that purpose under his Government. Would the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs be willing to comment on a statement found in the Canadian Institute of International Affairs Working Group's report found on page 66 which states:

> —developments in recent years have been and continue to be in the reverse direction, with a weakening and loss of mechanisms to ensure a comprehensive information base for northern policy and for its implementation. The Working Group strongly urges that immediate attention be given to establish effective interdepartmental co-ordination without which a coherent total policy for the Arctic will not be possible.

Those words are clear enough for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to respond in explaining why it is that his Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has failed to develop a co-ordinated approach to our northern problems and to our Arctic.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government under the leadership of the Prime Minister has shown a more active and constructive interest not only in the problems of northern Canadians but also in Canada's sovereign claims than was the case with former Governments.

We do that in a variety of fields. We do that in defence policy. We do that in northern affairs policy.

A moment ago the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was talking about a proposal put forward by Mr. Gorbachev. It is an interesting proposal. We are looking at it. But we have noted that proposal which seeks nuclear-free regimes in some parts of the Arctic is a proposal that excludes that part of the North where the Soviet Union itself has its major concentrations not only of nuclear power but of nuclear-armed submarines and other weapons. We think that if there is to be an agreement in the North it has to be an agreement that applies with equal vigour to the Soviet Union as well as to others.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANK OF CANADA

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the interest rate policy of the Government.

Confused signals are coming from the Government as to the conduct of this country's monetary policy and, more specifically, the future direction of interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar.

This morning in an article on the Bank of Canada's report tabled yesterday The Gazette printed a headline which states: "No relief from high interest rates". The Ottawa Citizen in a headline stated: "Crow softens stand on interest rates". These are contradictory statements.

I ask the Minister of Finance to clarify the policy of the Government concerning the conduct of its monetary policy, the level of interest rates, and the level of the Canadian dollar. Can he send out a clear signal once and for all to Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be the last person to try to interpret headlines for opposition Members. I think that in Mr. Crow's press conference after the release of the Bank of Canada report yesterday he made it quite clear what the policy of the Bank of Canada is, a policy which is supported by the Government of Canada.

If the Hon. Member has any specific questions that he wishes to put to me, I would be very glad to respond to those.

MONETARY POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is quite simple. Since the Minister is claiming that the signal is quite clear, my question is this: Which of the two newspaper articles reflects the policy of the Government? Should we expect the Canadian Government monetary policy to endorse lower interest rates and a Canadian dollar value more consistent with the needs of our exporters, or should we expect a high interest rate policy?

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that on March the 3rd the Minister of Finance himself announced to our exporters that as soon as inflation would reach 4 per cent, interest rates would come down. My question to the Minister is this: Which of the two newspaper headlines is right, and now that inflation has reached 4 per cent, are interest rates going to come down and reflect a slightly devalued Canadian dollar?

• (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear, and the Governor of the Bank of Canada has made it quite clear that there are some signs of inflationary pressures in the economy today. He and I have both said that we believe it is important that we address those pressures before they become too strong and lead us into the problems that we experienced in the 1970s and early 1980s.

I have made the comment that it is a case of some preventive medicine now to avoid those problems. We have a strong economy. We have an economy that, in the last quarter of 1987, experienced the strongest growth of the year. We have seen investment intentions up over 17 per cent for 1988. We have seen job creation continue strong into 1988.

In the context of the strength in the economy and those inflationary pressures, it is important for us to address those pressures in the context of monetary policy.

RATE OF INFLATION—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. I would like to pick up where he left off. Yesterday he stated in the House that he gave strong support to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. He thought that his virtual exclusive preoccupation, in my judgment, with the problem of inflation was, in the Minister's words, "very realistic".

In the United States today inflation is about the same level as it is in Canada. Since a year ago the difference between the spread in interest rates in the United States and Canada was about half of what it is today, could the Minister tell us why we continue to have this almost virtually exclusive economic focus on the problem of inflation? Why is it that Canadians are paying unnecessarily high interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member had read the annual report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada he would have seen it very clearly stated in that report that the preoccupation of the Governor of the Bank of Canada is with the over-all health of the Canadian economy. He states that at the start of the preamble to the report in the first five pages, and he states it at the end of that preamble. That is very clear.

The Hon. Member states that the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States is too wide. The normal spread over the past four or five years has been about 1.5 per cent. The spread now is 1.75 per cent. I think that those numbers speak for themselves.

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance knows with that type of comparison one can make all kinds of arguments, many of which are misleading.

A minute ago the Minister stated in reply to an earlier question about the concern with over-all economic development and performance and so on that that is his focus.

The point of my question is that the rate of inflation in Canada today is exactly the same as it is in the United States. However, the spread between interest rates in Canada today compared to one year ago has gone way up. When we have made this progress with inflation, why do we continue to focus on that at the explicit cost of jobs in western Canada and Atlantic Canada? Why does the Minister not have some over-all economic commitment to growth in jobs and not only a concern with the question of inflation? That is the issue.

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am having a hard time following the logic of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Broadbent: That was evident from your answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think that the policies of the Government of Canada over the last three and a half years speak for themselves. The bottom line has been that we have had the best growth record for that period of time of all seven major industrialized countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have had the best job creation record of those same countries. We have also had one of the best performances in productivity.

While the Hon. Member can poke away at this or that little indicator, I think it is quite clear that what Canadians will be most concerned about is the over-all success we have had, and that success is undeniable.

POSITION OF QUEBEC PREMIER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, over-all success does not please those who are looking for jobs in western Canada or in Atlantic Canada.

Will the Minister look at the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, because it is in that report that the Governor points out that there have been continuing disparities in job growth among the regions of Canada? For example, it indicates that British Columbia has almost 5 per cent higher levels of unemployment today than it had at the pre-recession level of 1981, and that Newfoundland has 5 per cent higher levels of unemployment today than it had at the pre-recession level of 1981.

I say to the Minister that there are real problems in the region.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, Mr. Bourassa, the Quebec Premier, stated openly in no incertain terms that his Government was against this interest rates policy . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member will ask his question immediately, please?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister reply to this criticism from the Quebec Premier?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question went on for such a long time maybe the Hon. Member would like to put down an opposition day motion and I would be quite happy—

Mr. Broadbent: I would love to. Just answer it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member talked about job creation in various regions, during the preamble to his question. In each province of Canada the unemployment rate went down last year. That is a—

Mr. Broadbent: Big deal.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says: "Big deal".

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, I said: "Big deal".

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is. It is a very important element of economic policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It seems to me that the last time we had an exchange on this, the Hon. Member said: "If you go and do that, the unemployment rate is going to go up and 100,000 jobs will be lost", and—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the Hon. Member knows full well that that did not happen.

CLOTHING AND TEXTILE INDUSTRIES

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT MEASURES—UNITED STATES LOBBYING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance about the measures he announced today to provide some relief to the apparel industry of Canada for the disadvantages caused by the Canada-U.S. trade agreement.

The Government promised a mountain, and the Minister has come forward with a mouse.

Mr. Crosbie: Author, author!

Mr. Axworthy: In fact what we have before us is a 30 per cent solution, 30 per cent of what is needed by the industry to meet the kinds of major inequities caused by the Canada-U.S. agreement, with some industries like the woollen industry totally neglected in the package.

Why did the Government cave in to a U.S. lobby interest and not provide the Canadian apparel industry with proper measures?

Is this the way that we are to provide support for Canadian industry in future, by the pressure of U.S. lobby interests in Washington? Is that the sign of the future that we see in these measures?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certainly not. We have provided in this package, which is a good, balanced package of support for the industry, some duty remission. I think there are five programs of duty remission; some immediate tariff reduction, which will help the competitive position of the clothing industry; and, third, a reference to the new trade tribunal which will address the question of further declines in tariffs. It will help the industries about which he is most concerned.

An industry about which he is not concerned is the textile industry. The Hon. Member would like to have us do all sorts of things in favour of the apparel sector and ignore the impact of all the new, low-cost imports that would come in as a result, on the textile sector.

The Hon. Member should realize that many, many jobs are represented by the textile industry in Canada. This is why we have had a balanced approach to the whole question of support for these two industries.

Mr. Axworthy: The Government has not provided a balanced approach. It has provided major tariff reductions and duty remission schemes for both fabrics and garments from the United States, not from other countries.

TREATMENT OF OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Why has the Government abandoned the basic fundamental principle of universal treatment for all countries, the most favoured nation treatment that has been the basis of our trade policy for 40 years, in favour of a program that discriminates in favour of the United States and discriminates against Third World countries which need the help a hell of a lot more than does the United States?

Mr. Speaker: I hope that Hon. Members will refrain from using that kind of language.

Mr. Axworthy: A heck of a lot more, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anybody is going to be impressed by the type of language the Hon. Member is using in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Poor, little Michael.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we will all be impressed by the answer which the Hon. Minister will give.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We will send a bar of soap across the aisle for him, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member used the word "balanced" in the preamble to his question. Let me just make one comment in response to that.

I spoke with the President of the Apparel Manufacturers Council of Canada just before I came to Question Period today. He said that this was a balanced and equitable program, that it was fair and substantial and covered a broad cross-section of the industry. I think those words speak for themselves.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. He will realize that Canadians listen very carefully to his words in terms of understanding government policy.

On March 3, at a meeting which he had with the Canadian Export Association, the Minister suggested that once Canada's inflation rate hit 4 per cent interest rates ought to be lowered.

The Minister now knows that inflation has in fact hit 4 per cent. Does he now plan to live up to the commitment which he made on March 3 and take steps to lower interest rates?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I would suggest that the Hon. Member contact the person who said that I made that commitment, and I think he will find that he was misinterpreted by the media.

The point which I think the media were drawing from that comment was probably too precise. The statement that I made just now on monetary policy, in the context of the economic strength which we are enjoying in Canada today, still stands. I do not have anything to add to that.

We are carefully watching inflationary pressures. In those sectors of the economy outside food and energy there is still an upward movement in inflationary pressures. Those are things of which we must be mindful in the conduct of monetary policy.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. He will know that lower interest rates would assist farmers who qualify today for operating funds for spring seeding and would result in savings of hundreds of dollars to mortgage holders across the country. They would assist small businesses and put them on an equal footing with those in the United States, if our interest rates approximated those in the U.S. Could the Minister of Finance explain why he feels it is necessary to keep a policy that maintains our interest rates in Canada above those in the United States, month after month?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very mindful of the effects of lower interest rates on an economy. We have managed to get interest rates down in this country by 3 to 3.5 percentage points in the last three years and that is one of the key reasons that we have had the economic performance we have had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I will say to the Hon. Member is that if we have some upward movement in inflation, that that will lead to higher interest rates. Those interest rates will be there on a longer term basis and they will also, with the increase in inflation, have the long term impact of undermining the competitive position of the Canadian economy. That would cost us jobs and that is what we are trying to avoid by the monetary policy that we are following.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT EQUITY IN TEXTBOOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government has offered $4.5 million to acquire 51 per cent equity in Ginn, a school textbook publishing company, from the American conglomerate, Gulf and Western, which set as a condition of sale the right to maintain 50 per cent control on the board of directors.

Is this how the Government safeguards control of the Canadian book publishing industry? Could the Prime Minister explain what business will buy such a deadlock or a stalemate? Is this what the Conservative Government calls a good business deal? Or is the Government satisfied with just 50 per cent membership on the board of directors?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure which of the half a dozen questions I should answer first.

When Gulf and Western acquired Ginn it had an undertaking to divest itself of 51 per cent of its interest in Ginn Canada to Canadians over a two-year period. The Government of Canada undertook to make sure that Gulf and Western would respect that specific undertaking. We advised Gulf and Western accordingly. The deadline was March 12. Gulf and Western was advised accordingly that the Government of Canada would act in the interests of Canada to make sure that 51 per cent of the shares of Ginn would be held by Canadians by the agreement date of March 12.

TIMEFRAME FOR COMPANY TO RESPOND TO OFFER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to know what kind of control, having spent more for equity and not having representation on the board, is in the view of this Government a good deal?

What is the time frame actually for the decision by Gulf and Western to respond yes or no to the Government's offer?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can be very, very clear on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: They are applauding, Mr. Speaker. More.

Under the agreement that was signed, Gulf and Western had until March 12 to divest itself of 51 per cent of the shares of Ginn to Canadian investors. We indicated that as the company apparently had not done so in the week before March 12 we would exercise the option to have the CDIC take over 51 per cent of the shares to be resold to Canadian interests. That process is ongoing.

I think it is premature right now to disclose any of the conversations that are taking place. It is a due diligence type of process. Our intention was indicated very clearly before the deadline was reached.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—PAYMENT OF TAXES BY INVESTORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue.

The Principal Group fiasco continues. People who have lost their entire life savings are now being made to pay taxes on interest which they have never received. How can the Government in all good conscience ask these Canadians, many of whom are retired and living on fixed incomes and have lost their entire life savings, to pay taxes on money which they have never received?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it will depend to some extent on whether these tax filers are on the cash or the accrual method. If they are on a cash method and receive no interest they will not have to pay taxes because they will have received no cash.

If they are deemed to have received income then the Income Tax Act makes provision for them to deduct it in subsequent taxation years.

REQUEST THAT DEMANDS FOR PAYMENT OF TAXES BE STOPPED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, contact with the trustee informed us that thousands of T5 forms have already been sent out.

My supplementary question is for the same Minister. Last week the Minister of Finance indicated that the Government will not be paying interest to most Canadians who are overpaying on their deductions for the first part of this year as we move to tax reform, yet the Minister of National Revenue is prepared to collect taxes on interest from those Canadians who have lost their life savings in the Principal Group.

Is the Minister prepared to put a stop to these outrageous demands on people who have already suffered so much?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lot of rhetoric in that question.

I have already explained to the Hon. Member, and I appreciate his concern, that no one will be penalized because of the situation that he has described.

If he is mixing apples and oranges and talking about the issues raised in committee with regard to the matters on which my colleague, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, was quoted, he knows it is because of administrative complications that we cannot make the necessary adjustments for the first part of this year.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM—PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

A week or so ago it was announced that stabilization would be paid to potato producers across Canada. At that time we were advised that all the acreage on PEI would be covered, including the diverted acres.

When can we expect the cheques to be in the mail?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank and compliment the Hon. Member for his continuing interest on behalf of the potato growers in Prince Edward Island. It is obvious by the way he has framed his question that his understanding and knowledge of the industry is far—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The question was "when".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Perhaps I should take that as a warning and respond directly to the Hon. Member by saying that the cheques will be in the hands of producers before Easter, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVESTMENT CANADA

BOW VALLEY INDUSTRIES—BRITISH GAS PURCHASE OF SHARES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Government allowed British Gas to purchase 33 per cent of Bow Valley Industries. What the Government refuses to understand is that British Gas also has a majority of the seats on the board of directors thereby giving British Gas effective control over Bow Valley Industries and, by the Government's own Investment Canada Act, making Bow Valley Industries a non-Canadian company.

Why is the Government plotting with foreign corporations for the take-over of Canadian companies which its own watered-down legislation will not allow?

An Hon. Member: A very clear answer.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, a very clear answer, Mr. Speaker. I have two comments. First, there is no applauding. Second, it was done according to the Act. There was nothing contrary to the Act under that decision.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, a short supplemental.

CANADIAN CONTENT—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Section 26 makes Bow Valley Industries a non-Canadian company. Legislation that was brought forward to protect Canadian ownership in the very valuable energy sector is being circumvented by the Government that brought in the legislation.

Why is the Government ignoring all of the guidelines put in to safeguard Canadian content in the energy sector?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are not ignorning any, any, of the elements of the Investment Canada Act. All of them are being respected. They are being respected in the best interests of Canadians to attract more and more investment in Canada.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that investment in this country since the Investment Canada Act was brought in not only developed our industry and economy but created hundreds of thousands of new jobs.

SOVEREIGNTY

THE ARCTIC—PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT AND WILDLIFE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs is in relation to the International Affairs Working Group Report tabled yesterday.

The group concluded that renewed efforts to reach agreement with the United States on Canadian sovereignty over the waters of the Arctic archipelago are essential to the effective protection of the national interest and of the Arctic environment and marine wildlife. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs yet undertaken or on what date does he plan to undertake such negotiations and discussions with the United States?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only are we involved in discussions with the United States, but the discussions that have been undertaken by this Government have been far more productive with regard to the assertion of Canadian sovereignty than those of preceding Governments. The Hon. Member will know that prior to the election of this Government and prior to the actions we have just taken, there was question about our ability, as a practical matter, to assert our sovereignty with regard, for example, to the passage of ice-breakers. We have resolved that question and we have resolved other questions. We are continuing discussions with the United States to continue to assert Canadian sovereignty in our North.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the group conclude that it is necessary to have further negotiations with the United States in order to protect the national interest. I hope the Minister is indicating that that is what he is pursuing.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ARCTIC BASIN COUNCIL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is in relation to another conclusion released by the group, its endorsation of the Brundtland Report, Our Common Future, and the task force report, Canada and Polar Science, on the possibility of establishing an Arctic Basin Council. Since Canada is one of the few nations in the world, and certainly the only one lying between the two superpowers, that could perhaps lay the groundwork successfully to put together an Arctic Basin Council to deal with questions such as the greenhouse effect and other major international matters, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertake to lay some of that groundwork that would bring the Soviet Union, the United States, and others into such an important council?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is yes, we will continue to do that. It may well be more productive for us to start with what the Hon. Member calls the others. There is a very real interest on the part of Arctic nations that are not superpowers, a much more common interest that can be approached more directly than might be achieved by proceeding through the superpowers. That is a matter that has been discussed by my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and by myself.

The Prime Minister had an opportunity in Brussels, not long ago, to meet directly with Prime Minister Brundtland. We will be continuing those kinds of discussions. The commitment of the Government to the assertion and extension of our control over our Arctic is clear, and we intend to continue to pursue it vigorously.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA LOBSTER LICENCES—RESIGNATIONS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Developing sound public policy with regard to the fisheries requires that the federal Government be sensitive and demonstrate a capacity to respond to one of the most important elements in the process of fisheries policies namely, the representatives of fishermen. The Minister will know that not one, not two and not six, but 14 out of 15 representatives on the Minister's own lobster advisory board have resigned over the granting of new lobster licences.

I wish to ask the Minister to explain the rationale for even having a lobster advisory board if the Department will not abide by its advice, particularly in view of the fact that overwhelmingly these individuals have gone against the Minister and have now placed their resignations before him?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries is not here today, as the hon. gentleman must know. Therefore, I have to do my poor best to answer that question.

The Minister of Fisheries, based on advice received from the experts in his Department and from the people who advise the East Coast on the lobster fishery, issued four new offshore lobster licences in Nova Scotia. An advisory committee is exactly that, an advisory committee, but the Minister must make a decision in the best interests of the fishery from all the advice he receives. He chose to follow the advice of his experts in the Department and he issued these four licences.

Current scientific information indicates that it is unlikely that there is any interaction between inshore and offshore lobster in these areas, and the decision appears to be a sound one. However, I will carry the representations of the hon. gentleman to the Minister when he returns.

MINISTER'S DECISION ON GRANTING LICENCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I think the only expert advice the Minister has acted on is that of the Tory fundraisers in the Province of Nova Scotia. In view of the fact that this group overwhelmingly objects to the Minister's decision, that the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia objects to these new lobster licences, and that the Minister of Fisheries in the Province of Nova Scotia objects to the granting of these new lobster licences, pray tell, would the Minister explain to the Canadian people and the fishermen of Atlantic Canada why he granted these lobster licences and continues trying to portray Canadian policies on them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as usual the hon. gentleman demonstrates the irrationality of his thought processes. In the introduction to his question he said first that this has something to do with Tory fundraisers, which of course it has nothing to do with. Then he went on to say that the Tory Government of Nova Scotia opposes it and the Tory Minister of Fisheries of Nova Scotia opposes it. He cannot have it both ways. This was an impartial decision made in the best interests of the fishery and has nothing to do with Tories in their glories.

CHEMICAL WEAPONS

USE IN IRAQ-IRAN WAR

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There has been a very dangerous escalation in the Middle East Iraq-Iran war with the use of chemical weapons. Will the Minister investigate this very tragic turn of events, and if it is true will he communicate Canada's objection and concerns to the warring parties concerned?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the war between Iran and Iraq is of great concern to all Members of the House. The recent reports only deepen our concern.

It is hard to secure detailed information, but I agree with the Hon. Member that we have to do our best to try. It is our view that there should be an expert investigation. We believe that it would best be conducted under the United Nations, and we would recommend to the Secretary General of the United Nations that he put in place such an expert investigation.

IRANIAN REQUEST FOR CANADIAN MEDICAL HELP

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that just recently in this war 5,000 people were killed and 4,000 injured by chemicals, my understanding is that the Chargé d'Affaires of Iran has asked Canada for medical help. Could the Secretary of State indicate whether such help is forthcoming, and can he assure the House that there is no Canadian content in this chemical warfare?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, there is no Canadian content in that chemical warfare. I use that phrase simply out of normal prudence. I think there is no reason to believe that there is any Canadian content in that chemical warfare.

The question asked by the Hon. Member relates to representations made by the Chargé d'Affaires of Iran regarding the treatment of foreign nationals in Canada. That is a complex problem that requires co-operation between federal and provincial Governments. We are looking to see if there is a way in which Canada can respond positively.

MARINE TRANSPORT

OIL TANKERS—POLLUTION OF PLACENTIA BAY

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the beginning of this year there were three serious incidents involving oil tankers in Placentia Bay. Five hundred barrels of oil were spilled from a tanker earlier this month, and last week another tanker ran aground on the way to the Come-By-Chance oil refinery because of inadequate pilotage regulation.

Is the Minister aware of the most serious of all incidents which occurred when the tanker Rosario Del Mar was in danger of breaking up on the way to Placentia Bay in early January with nearly 100,000 tonnes of crude oil aboard, all of which had to be removed for the sake of safety? What special measures is the Minister prepared to undertake to ensure that this serious pollution threat is eliminated?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as usual, I am well ahead of the hon. gentleman. These matters which the hon. gentleman is trying to put a very alarmist feature on are naturally being looked into and I have—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Are members of the NDP interested in the answer or are they just interested in making noise?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The answer, not blarney.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister is ready to answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: I can hardly carry on if I am to be accused of blarney, Mr. Speaker.

As a result of several incidents including the one involving the motor tanker South Angela in which there was an oil spill of about 500 barrels, cleaned up, I might say, by the Coast Guard with great efficiency, and the vessel, by the way, has had to put up heavy bonds and charges have been laid under the relevant legislation, and the motor tanker Filiastar, I have taken the following action. I have requested the Atlantic Pilotage Authority to conduct an immediate review of existing pilotage regulations including the compulsory pilotage zones. I have instructed departmental officials to conduct an immediate review of the navigation safety regulations and procedures applicable to this area including a review of the traffic separation scheme, the adequacy of vessel traffic services, the adequacy of soliciting aids to navigation, and the adequacy of current regulations governing tanker traffic in Placentia Bay.

• (1500)

A safety notice has been sent out reminding all mariners and ships' agents of the procedures and regulations that apply in the bay.

Mr. Harris: A fleet of aging tankers is sailing around the oceans. In January the Coast Guard was advised that this particular ship was within two hours of foundering.

ABILITY TO RESPOND TO EMERGENCIES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether the ability of the industry and the Government to clean up any spill or respond to an emergency will be upgraded? That is the question to which I want the Minister to respond.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the preamble to that question is totally wrong. It is a 132,000 DWT Spanish registered tanker. That means dead weight tonnage. The hon. gentleman would not understand that.

She approached Come-By-Chance on January 2. She reported that she had a crack in her No. 2 port wing ballast tank, just as the hon. gentlemen opposite do.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the remainder of the question could be answered by way of Order Paper questions.

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH NATIONALS IN MONTREAL—POSITION OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the issue of the Turkish claimants in Canada. There are an increasing number of reports today that the provincial government of Québec is perhaps willing to accept these claimants under the Québec-Canada immigration agreement.

Given that the Québec Minister of Immigration will momentarily make a statement on this issue in the Québec Assembly, will the Minister provide a full update on this issue for the benefit of the House? Has the Province of Québec made a request to accept these claimants in Quebéc? Is the Minister prepared to accept a humanitarian compromise in order to settle a very emotional human dilemma?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is right: the Quebec Minister for Cultural Communities and Immigration is expected to make a statement in the National Assembly today at 3 p.m.

I think we should wait for her statement to know exactly what is Quebec position which, according to the Cullen-Couture Agreement signed under the previous Government, has the power to issue permits. I suggest again that any reaction on my part, before knowing exactly what is the Quebec Government's position, would be premature.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, that is the last question. I know that the Hon. Member is very serious about this matter, but I must end Question Period.

PRIVILEGE

MULTICULTURALISM—ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ALLOW COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL EXTENSIVELY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the pursuit of my responsibilities as New Democratic Party Caucus critic for multiculturalism. Citation 16 of Beauchesne states:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions . . .

It goes on:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are 'absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers'. They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members;

My abilities to carry out my services to the House have been impeded by the refusal of the Government to allow the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to travel to other parts of Canada to hear witnesses and consider their reactions to the committee report that was tabled in the House at the end of June. We are unable to be properly informed as to what the people of Canada think of the report and of the proposals made by the committee for the advancement of multiculturalism and those concerns provided for in Section 26 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

These responsibilities are not simply those of ordinary Members, but responsibilities of a critic who must watch what a particular Minister of the Government does and deal critically with the proposals of the Government to ensure that what it does is genuinely responsive to the needs of the Canadian people.

The committee's report was tabled in the House and presented to the media, particularly in Toronto, in early June. The committee fully expected that ethnocultural communities and multicultural organizations throughout the country would have an opportunity to respond to that report and indicate which aspects of the report were well advised and which aspects deserved particular emphasis. Members of the committee fully expected to be able to obtain the informed advice of members of communities and organizations across the country in order to advance multiculturalism in this country.

The committee held hearings in Toronto on December 7 and December 8. They were two good, long days in which there was support for various recommendations and critical reaction from some of those appearing before the committee. They were two days that underscored the importance for the standing committee to travel to various parts of Canada to consult with Canadians about the advisability of various policies.

As a member of the committee, I expected that it would travel to Montreal and would visit one or more centres in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Let me advise the Hon. Member that the Chair has the point. The Hon. Member says that the committee would have expected to be travelling more than it has and that permission has not been given by the Government, which, according to the rules, the Government has the right to withhold.

There may be other Hon. Members who could assist the Chair in this matter. I would hear from any other Hon. Member who might want to rise.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I may be a little more confused by your comments than those by the Hon. Member, but I have searched the rules of the House and cannot find anything that would give the Government the power to stop a committee from conducting its investigations in whatever manner it chooses.

Committees have the power to call witnesses and bring people to Ottawa. There are provisions in the Standing Orders for payments to reimburse people who come before committee hearings. It has been a long established practice of the House that from time to time committees seek permission from the House—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I have inadvertently incorrectly stated the situation. It is the House that has that power to grant or withhold authority to travel, not the Government. I want that corrected.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I originally intend to rise because the Member opposite was accusing the Government of muzzling a committee. That was the net effect of what he was saying when he rose on a question of privilege. The Government is not attempting to muzzle the committee by stopping it from travelling or anything else.

The Government is very interested in the debate which is occurring today. We are very hopeful that the Bill will go to committee. Many Members who sit on the standing committee will sit on the legislative committee where we hope the Bill will be thoroughly examined, quickly, and reported back to the House so that we can move it through report and third reading stage and to the Senate, following which the Bill will become the law of the land.

There may be some predisposition on the part of Members throughout the House to say that that is a priority activity. I would not want to prejudge the decision of the House if the committee comes forward in some way and asks the House for its wisdom as to whether it should be travelling in dealing with the multicultural Bill.

However, I want to make it very clear to the House that the Government has no power and no wish to have the power to determine how a committee conducts its mandate. The Standing Orders are very clear, that the committee can investigate anything within its mandate in any way it chooses and can bring before it any witnesses it chooses. When it seeks to take Members away from the House it must seek the advice of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon could help the Chair. Has there been a request to travel made to the House by the committee of which he spoke?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Subject to further comment by the chairperson of the committee who is present, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), I know that the committee planned to travel and sought permission to do so, and that that permission was not achieved in December or in the new year. The explanation which I, as a member of the standing committee, was given was that the government Whip was opposed to the committee travelling.

In that context I want to note that a variety of committees have travelled. The Finance Committee has returned from New Zealand. The Transport Committee has visited Europe. The Fisheries Committee has been in Norway. The Agriculture Committee is travelling. The Justice Committee is visiting various penitentiaries. There is no shortage of committees which are travelling but this was denied to us.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a matter which is indeed probably more along the lines of a complaint. However, I will consider very carefully the Hon. Member's representations. I must look to whether or not the committee has in fact put a request before the House.

As I said before, although I made an error and have corrected it for the record, it is not a government decision but a House decision. The House decision cannot be made unless there is a formal request from the committee. I will look into this matter and come back to the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO OFFICIAL REPORT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had to leave the House but asked me to make a correction on his behalf to page 13960 of Hansard. In his response made on March 21 the words "16 different tables" appear. It should read "seven different tables".

Mr. Speaker: This time I have no comment.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, in the course of this debate we have heard Members of the Opposition relate certain facts about the history of multiculturalism. However, since their interpretation was a very personal one, it may be misleading for some of our colleagues. That is why I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, to summarize the main points of this history on a strictly factual basis, remaining as objective as I possibly can.

As we all know, the policy on multiculturalism was adopted in 1971 by a unanimous resolution of Parliament. The following year, the Government created the position of Minister of State (Multiculturalism), and in 1973, the Department of the Secretary of State implemented its first multicultural grants program.

During the next ten years, the policy on multiculturalism remained practically unchanged, although the concept has changed considerably, especially in recent years. At the time, the policy was seen as a set of programs that were specifically and exclusively concerned with what was called, with some condescension, the "ethnic minorities", and their purpose was to help these minorities integrate harmoniously with Canadian society, while preserving their heritage.

Fortunately, this perception has gradually faded, and I think there are two reasons for this. We have had two major constitutional accords since then, and furthermore as we shall see, the Government in recent years has clearly shown its firm political will in this regard.

In 1982, the Parliament of Canada adopted the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which provides: "This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians." Thus, multiculturalism was incorporated in the Constitution of Canada.

Last June, the First Ministers signed the now famous Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. Essentially, the Accord, which as you know, was approved by the Leader of the Official Opposition, recognizes that Quebec constitutes a distinct society within Canada, considering the French-speaking majority in this province.

The First Ministers insisted on reaffirming, in the same Accord the concept of multiculturalism set down in the Charter.

As the Prime Minister indicated last fall when speaking to the Canadian Ethnic Press Federation: "Nothing in the distinct society clause reduces or diminishes in any way the already recognized and established multicultural nature of the Canadian nation."

If our perception of multiculturalism has come a long way, it is also in large part due to this Government's efforts and, more precisely, to the Multiculturalism Program of the Secretary of State. As a matter of fact, when the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), the present Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, was appointed Minister of State for Multiculturalism in 1984, he set himself the goal of putting multiculturalism in the maimstream of Canadian society.

The Minister decided to give a new direction and a new perspective to our multiculturalism policy when he recognized a very simple fact, which is that all Canadians are immigrants or descend from immigrants. We are all proud to be Canadians but we are also proud of our roots and of the language, culture and traditions of our ancestors. From that perspective, we can all see that multiculturalism is everybody's concern and not only that of so-called "ethnic minorities".

In July 1986, when the Prime Minister appointed our colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) to his present position, he decided at the same time to merge the Secretary of State's responsabilities, which include Canadian citizenship, with those of the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism, in order to replace multiculturalism in the mainstream, at the heart of Canadian citizenship.

This extension of his mandate led the Minister to rethink our multiculturalism policy and to bring forward this Bill. Thus, for the Minister—and this is one of the basic ideas behind Bill C-93—multiculturalism is a distinctive feature of our identity as Canadians and as a unique nation.

There are in fact, from the Minister's point of view, if I may be allowed to summarize his thoughts, three great pillars which shore up our originality and our identity as a nation. They are the following: multiculturalism, for the reasons which I have just outlined; also, our two official languages, French and English, which are among the most prestigious in the world today and which distinguish us clearly from other nations, and particularily from our neighbours to the South; and finally, canadian citizenship, so admired and envied abroad, and which opens wide the doors of hospitality to Canadians who travel in other parts of the world.

For the government, this vision of Canadian identity is much more than theory. It is far more than rhetoric. In fact, each of these three components of our national identity is presently the object of legislation before Parliament.

On June 25 last, as you know, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) announced a renewed committment to official languages policy by presenting a Bill to amend and reinforce the Official Languages Act. Up to now, this Act had not been amended since it was adopted in 1969.

Also, the Secretary of State will soon present a bill to update the Canadian Citizenship Act. You will recall that last year the Minister issued a dicussion paper on the various aspects of the subject and invited Canadian citizens to share their opinions and comments with him.

Finally, of course, we have the Bill on multiculturalism which was introduced last December 1st by the minister responsible and which we are discussing today.

In essence, what the Government is trying to do is create a legal framework which would serve as a foundation for a much too fluid Canadian identity, which would solidify the constitutional guarantees related to official languages and which would also enhance our cultural heritage and equality of rights among all citizens.

I urge all Members as well as my colleagues to consider this Bill outside of political partisanship, I call upon their sense of pride as Canadians, to allow our country to take another step forward and turn a new page in our Canadian history.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly honoured to rise today to support the Secretary of State and his Bill C-93, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me because I represent the splendid riding of LaSalle where there are people of many races, religions and ethnic origins. I am very proud to participate today in this debate because I am very proud of our Canadian identity and of the great future prospects Bill C-93 opens for us. I repeat this Bill is on Canadian multiculturalism.

The multiculturalism policy of the last sixteen years was not based on any legislation, only on a simple agreement which the then minister could have written off with a stroke of the pen whenever he felt like it. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian multiculturalism policy stated in clause 3 of this Bill will become the law of our land, Canada. It expresses the collective will of Parliament, and therefore, of the Canadian people. It also translates in legislation the constitutional guarantee included in Section 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which provides, and I quote: «This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.»

Mr. Speaker, it should have been obvious to Hon. Members who preceded us in office, between 1971 to 1984, that multiculturalism could not and should not come under one department or one vague government program.

Multiculturalism is a reality that embraces every walk of the Canadian life and therefore represents an essential element of everything we do as a government.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we introduced Bill C-93, in the Canadian Multiculralism Act, the fundamental notion of a government-wide commitment. That is why we provided in this Bill a sound system of ministerial accountability to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. Our gloomy colleagues from the Opposition are looking for a Multiculturalism police superintendent. We do not believe in that kind of a solution. We think that in a Parliamentary democracy, the ultimate responsibility belongs to the House of Commons rather than to a commissioner who would have delegated powers and thus be a public officer.

Not only is this Bill an expression of the commitment of the government as a whole, but it reaffirms as well the very direct role the federal government plays in promoting multiculturalism within every part of the Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, allow me for a few moments to bring to the attention of this distinguished Chamber a number of direct action measures initiated by the Secretary of State's Multiculturalism sector. Furthermore, I wish to remind the House today about some of the initiatives that other departments and agencies of the federal government are presently taking.

Mr. Speaker, the government-wide commitment provided in this Bill does work, indeed. As it already works without statutory authority, it can only work even better when it is based on a statutory provision.

For some time now, the Multiculturalism Sector of the Secretary of State, along with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, has started to devise a national strategy on the relations between police and minorities. Now, according to that initiative, police forces across Canada are implementing new recruiting methods and intercultural training programs to help their members to better understand the effects of multiculturalism as well as interracial relations.

Mr. Speaker, those initiatives of the Multiculturalism Sector with our police forces have already paved the way to implementing similar measures within the RCMP. In fact, the RCMP has created a working group on recruitment to examine hiring methods and to carry on recruitment campaigns specially targeted for visible minorities. The RCMP has also established an intercultural training program and has involved some of its senior members in efforts aimed at gaining a better understanding of ethnocultural as well as aboriginal communities.

It remains to be seen what effects those measures will have. Certainly, other initiatives have already produced very convincing results. As Hon. Members know or should know, small business is the cornerstone of Canadian economy and the major creator of new jobs since 1984. Our multicultural communities are driven by a strong entrepreneurial spirit and we can certainly say that entrepreneurs in these communities are among the most progressive, indeed the most dynamic in Canada.

In order to recognize that fact our government organized, in April 1986, a conference called Multiculturalism Means Business which was successful. It was the product of the joint efforts of the Secretariate of State, the Federal Business Development Bank, private sector business groups and community organizations.

Following that conference, the Ontario Office of the Federal Business Development Bank even established an ethnocultural advisory committee responsable for maintaining liaison between the various branches of the Federal Business Development Bank and the ethnic community small entrepreneurs.

Because of the direct action program of the Federal Business Development Bank, we can see today a large increase in the loans made by the Bank to members of cultural and racial communities other than those of our two founding nations. Other major centres have followed the example set by Toronto and I am convinced that their initiatives will have the same success.

Mr. Speaker, this first conference, which emphasized the contribution of multiculturalism, and the new Canadian Multiculturalism Act, which we have introduced, have something in common. Both recognize multiculturalism as one of the underpinnings of our Canadian society and believe in its major contribution to the prosperity of Canada. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, are a product of this multiculturalism, which is not only tolerated, but also encouraged in Canada as it brings to all of us a new cultural dimension, and is even financially profitable.

As the Hon. Members are certainly aware, federal efforts to revitalize and strengthen multiculturalism in Canada have been extremely successful. Indeed, our Government has already begun to apply the principles contained in this Bill and to keep the promises made in 1984. The adoption of Bill C-93 can only strengthen the commitment made by all our Departments.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a few of the profitable initiatives undertaken jointly by various Departments in compliance with the open-door multiculturalism policy of the federal Government.

Hon. Members will recall that, early in 1986, the Ministers responsible for Tourism, Communications and Multiculturalism decided to co-operate more closely by looking for means to harmonize their respective activities in their effort to reach a common goal. Next April, these three Departments will sponsor a conference on tourism, culture and multiculturalism, a first in Canada. This conference will examine the active role which our multicultural heritage can play in promoting Canadian tourism.

In addition, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Senior Citizens (Mr. Hees) are now organizing a major national conference on ethnic groups and their impact on our aging Canadian population.

Mr. Speaker, other federal departments have recognized the need for cultural diversity in our Canadian nation. For example, Parks Canada published information material and to make guided tours and diaporamas available in foreign languages; for example, in the Lachine Park, near Lasalle, Italian shows are available throughout the Summer.

Mr. Speaker, Parks Canada even conceived a very efficient marketing strategy by producing pamphlets in several language which were distributed during the 1988 Olympic Games in Calgary, where whe could welcome about all the cultures represented in the world.

In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, several initiatives focussing on the exchange of information are already bearing fruit. Just as an example, Elections Canada's booklet, Voting in Canada/Le vote au Canada, published in 16 languages, is now distributed across the country during citizenship swear-in ceremonies , which we had the opportunity to attend recently in Montreal and one of which was in LaSalle, for the 75th anniversary celebrations of our town.

I would also like to draw the attention of this House to the Fall 1987 issue of Reportage Canada, a quarterly published by the External Communications division of the External Affairs Department. As a matter of fact, this special issue on multiculturalism in Canada was distributed to some 60,000 opinion leaders across the world namely in the private sector, in the media, in educational establishments and to various Governments.

Mr. Speaker, these are only a few of our current initiatives. I could single out others concerning multiculturalism, education, the preservation of ancestral languages, the growing awareness of medical and social services to the multicultural reality, and the establishment of guidelines on the image of minorities conveyed in federal communications.

Image, information and commitment are undoubtedly the key words of the new concept of multiculturalism and its contribution to the social, economic and cultural life of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, as I said even before Bill C-93 on multiculturalism was first introduced, we had made considerable progress in our attempts to tailor Government programs to the requirements of the private sector, and these efforts also involved the federal public service.

In June 1986 our Government launched an affirmative action program designed to increase the representation of visible minority group members in the public service. More recently the Ministers involved with Treasury Board approved the establishment of quantitative goals in this respect so as to implement a real program, more than draft or theoretical projects shrouded by proposed legislation or pious wishes.

Still I should like to point out to Hon. Members that our Government did not saddle itself with a quota system, as some people had recommended. The quantitative goals set by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Mazankowski) are based on accurate Public Service Commission calculations. The Government is intent on reaching these goals through a recruiting and selection process whose only standard is the merit principle. Mr. Speaker, the idea is not to offer handouts to ethno-cultural communities, but to recognize their true value, both quantity-wise and quality-wise.

I believe that we all agree the best ways, respecting our Canadian ideal, to develop the wealth of our cultural and racial diversity are persuasion and representation rather than constraint and coercion, as was the case under the previous governments. This Bill on Multiculturalism is based on partnership and co-operation between the federal and provincial administrations on the one hand, and between the Government and the private sector on the other. It emphasizes participation, a participation of all individuals and cultural groups in our great country.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act now before you is directed at the whole Canadian society, without consideration of racial or cultural origin. It involves, therefore, all federal Departments, Ministers, business entities, community organizations and all Canadians. It enshrines the basic objectives of the Government's multicultural policy and ensures a solid legislative base for the programs aimed at implementing it.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation on multiculturalism describes the duties of the line minister and makes sure that Federal Departments as a whole meet their commitments and report to Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, it is for me a real privilege to be able to make these few remarks, as a representative of a riding where the majority is the sum of all minorities. In my riding there are Italians and Greeks. There is also a significant Portuguese community. We have Irish people who did put on a great show last week. There are French Canadians. There are people of British origin. There are Chinese. Recently, I had an opportunity to attend an ethno-cultural show presented by all the Francophone groups from Asia. I was quite surprised to hear the great many people from Vietnam, especially among the older generation, talking about Indochina.

Mr. Speaker, multiculturalism is here. We must live it and stop thinking that it is an act of Government generosity. Our Government is involved. We accept the principle of Canadian multiculturalism by enshrining it in a legislation.

Ms. Mitchell: I note the Hon. Member has left.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I made my exit too hastily. I did not expect any question. Could the Hon. Member repeat her question? I rushed back.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: I have a question for the Hon. Member who spoke at some length in praise of this Bill. We certainly agree with the whole principle of multiculturalism. As the Hon. member probably knows, the criticism made by many groups, and which we would make, is that it is one thing to talk about principles and another thing to have ways of implementing those principles in solid programs with some real substance to assist multicultural groups in their efforts and also to effect government programs that are needed.

I wondered what the personal views are of the Hon. Member on the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to have a department of multiculturalism with a full-time Minister, Deputy Minister, and a commissioner of multiculturalism to advocate programs that are needed and put some teeth into this in order that we could have much more substance to multiculturalism in Canada. What are the views of the Hon. Member on the question of having a department of multiculturalism with a commissioner, with research, and with all the things needed to really do a job in this field?

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that in the main part of my speech. What we want is to go beyond lip service, statements of intent, by drafting legislation on which all Canadians will be able to rely to establish regulations or have solidly based recourse.

Secondly, we do not want any police. Why should we now consider the faults of multiculturalism? We should rather be promoting it.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is an old way of thinking. It was the same in the business world. Capital investment was limited instead of being encouraged. We plan to invite co-operation between people, not to police that co-operation through enforcement to coerce people to accept multiculturalism. Instead, we will help Canadians think it can be profitable, that there are business as well as cultural enrichments in multiculturalism.

So I think the legislation as proposed only sanctions what exists now, and I believe the Minister for Multiculturalism, who is accountable to this House, already has a monitoring role and will be quite free, about his department, to report to Parliament which remains the final enforcement authority in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Mitges): Before we return to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), I would like to give the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) an opportunity to ask his question. We will then return to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Marchi: The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) talks about the key word "enforcement" and translates that into what he would classify as policing. I wish to clarify that word, because it seems to be working itself into the Conservative vocabulary with increasing frequency.

The Member comes from a province that is obviously very sensitive to our official bilingualism policy. This Parliament is now engaged in updating official language legislation. Back in the 1960s when it was started by the then Prime Minister Trudeau, the centre-piece of official bilingualism did not only talk about bilingualism, did not only give us a beautiful, colourful, meaningful language that talked about this abstract notion, but he and his Government did something very profound about it. One of the things they did was to provide Parliament and the country with the very tools and mechanisms that would not only talk about bilingualism but that would deliver bilingualism.

Therefore, we did receive the bureaucratic structure that was able to meet the linguistic needs of our country. We did receive the appropriate Minister and Cabinet to talk with force. We established the proper enforcement mechanism, which consisted of the Commissioner for Official Languages, who made sure, without political constraint, that the commissioner would go through the federal bureaucracy and ensure that bilingualism was lived up to. If it was not, it was the duty of the commissioner to report to Parliament, not to the Government of the day, or to the Minister of the day who comes and goes, but to Parliament in order that all Canadians may see both the success stories and the warts within the system, and particularly, with regard to the latter, to encourage Governments and Parliaments to do something about it. If the Member supports the mechanisms that guaranteed official bilingualism in this country, such as a Commissioner for Official Languages, why is he so vividly opposed to trying to put in place similar mechanisms such as a commissioner in order that multiculturalism will not only be talked about but in fact lived up to and respected by Governments and institutions across the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, these are two completely different problems. The problem of multiculturalism is not the same thing as the legislation on bilingualism. The latter was so drafted as to include a Commissioner of Official Languages, the system has been tried and tested, and it fully meets the expectations of Canadians. Multiculturalism is an altogether different proposition. We had some difficulty trying to make people understand that the basic Canadian biculturalism and multiculturalism, or the enrichment we derive from ethnocultural circles, represent two systems or two entirely different notions. This is why we have two solutions to these two problems. Biculturalism as a solution does not apply to multiculturalism. First of all, they are two separate problems.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, again I stress that the basis of this Bill—and of all Bills introduced in the House, for that matter—is that people are expected to co-operate, they are invited, they are encouraged, and that is a far cry from the hard-line coercion and confrontation approach of the previous Government. And we all saw the ensuing mess. Mr. Speaker, our Government would rather urge Canadians to respect the law, we do not want the kind of negative legislation which tell them: Listen now, we are appointing a police force with which you will have to deal if you fail to do as we say. On the contrary, we will have people to urge Canadians to get involved and share in the wealth of multiculturalism. We in this Government are now determined to stress the positive rather than the negative aspects of legislation.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Mitges): I regret to inform Members that the time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity today to speak on Bill C-93, a long awaited Bill on multiculturalism. I suspect that this policy is something that all Canadians now approve of very heartily. Increasingly Canadians see that it is important to enshrine in legislation the policy we have had with us for a long time, the promotion of the cultural identity of people from all origins who make up Canada.

We think of the comparison with the United States where it has been said to be a melting pot. In Canada the late John Porter identified Canadian society as the vertical mosaic, that the different ethnic groups were part of Canada, they did not melt away in the melting pot as they did in the United States, but they were ranked, and some were more equal than others. Of course, that is unacceptable. What this Bill attempts to do, and what we all want to see done is to say that neither is right; we do not want a melting pot nor do we want the disappearance of the ethnic groups. We want the strength and richness in Canadian society of the contribution of different ethnic groups. However, we do not want ethnic groups to be ranked so that some people are below others or people from some groups do not have the same chances as those from other groups. We want all Canadians to have equal rights. We want to see equality rights enshrined in the Bill.

• (1550)

I think the Bill addresses equality rights. All Canadians are equal and there ought not to be discrimination. We have non-discrimination measures in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which are referred to in the Bill. Indeed we see that there are measures to strengthen them.

On the positive side we need to protect individual rights but also to promote the collective right, the survival of cultures. We need to do so because as it happens it makes us a better country and a better part of the world. It gives us links with other parts of the world if we maintain the different cultures.

My riding of Broadview—Greenwood is a well-known area. It is the heart of the Greek community of Toronto. It is a very desirable place in which to live. It is a very lively part of Toronto. We enjoy the opportunities to celebrate religious and national festivals. Indeed people who are not Greek Canadians join in these celebrations and find them to be a very attractive and important part of life in Toronto. We have a growing Chinese Canadian community. It is now attracting people of all communities to come there to shop, to enjoy restaurants, and so forth. It is developing in a very positive and desirable way as a part of Toronto.

We share the concerns of people who want to preserve the cultures which they bring with them to Canada. However, I must say that not everything is quite as rosy as we would like it to be. Discrimination still exists. There is discrimination on the basis of race against ethnic minorities who are visibly different. They experience more difficulties in obtaining jobs, keeping jobs, and getting promotions. We know about difficulties in policing and all kinds of difficulties which members of these groups experience.

The Bill does not go very far in this respect. There are other measures which try to deal with racism, but I should like to refer to a measure which is in Clause 5(g). It indicates that the Minister shall take such measures as he or she considers appropriate to implement the multiculturalism policy of Canada, specifically to "assist racial minority communities to conduct activities with a view to overcoming any discriminatory barrier". I note that it is not very high on the list and that it is fairly vague. It indicates that the Minister will help groups to overcome these barriers. It is a very modest step, but it is in the right direction. I welcome it, but I regret to say that much more is needed. We need to rely on the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the human rights commissions of the various provinces to defend victims of discrimination. In many cases they do not even get to the human rights commissions, because people must complain on an individual basis and they are afraid of retaliation. We still have a long way to go to make for improvements in this regard.

I should like to refer to an area in which I think some progress has been made. I am sure that anyone who supports Bill C-93 would be very glad about it. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, in its sixth report, contained proposals for a new Broadcasting Act and was very specific in recognizing multiculturalism. For example, recommendation No. 24 indicates what should be in the objectives part of the new Broadcasting Act. It says that the programming carried by the system should provide a balanced representation of Canadian society, reflecting its multicultural and bilingual realities, its aboriginal peoples, and the composition of its population in respect of sex, age, race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, and mental or physical handicap.

The message it gives is absolutely consistent with Bill C-93. It says that Canada is comprised of many different kinds of people and because broadcasting uses the public air waves it must reflect this diversity. It would be wrong for only one or two groups to dominate, to exclude, or to minimize the reflection of other groups by ethnicity and other criteria.

I think it is important. I hope the Government acts on it. If so, it will be for the first time that such a provision would actually be in the Broadcasting Act, and I think that the Broadcasting Act needs it.

There has been some improvement. CBC is showing greater diversity by using people of ethnic origin to do reporting and so forth. This is very healthy. It is realistic and it reflects Canada much more accurately. I welcome the steps which the CBC has taken. We have seen it as well in private stations.

Also the report on broadcasting recommended that appointments to the boards of the CRTC and the CBC should reflect ethnic diversity, going away from the vertical mosaic with British and French groups at the top and other groups underneath. Roughly a third of Canadians who come from groups other than the English and French ones ought to be well represented in official appointments. It is important that they be so represented in terms of broadcasting, and I think that it should be the case for all kinds of official appointments.

I hope the Government gives up its practice of patronage appointments and appointments on the basis of association with the Party in power and instead uses other criteria of merit.

Mr. Friesen: Like Stephen Lewis.

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, like Stephen Lewis?

Mr. Friesen: What about Dennis McDermott.

Mr. Della Noce: What about Ian Deans?

Ms. McDonald: My hecklers are pointing to very good appointments, but they are one in a thousand. One swallow does not make a spring, and I am afraid that one Stephen Lewis does not destroy the charge of patronage. It is a sporting try, but I am afraid that I remain unconvinced.

Much more could be done. Multicultural groups have recommended—and the New Democratic Party has very actively supported them—a couple of specific measures which we think would be more effective than some of the measures in Bill C-93. One would be the proposal that the multicultural bureaucracy report to a full minister and deputy minister. In short, it is asking for a department of multiculturalism, not just a sub-department of some other ministry. This would give it higher status. Bureaucracies, ministers, and deputy ministers acquire their status through how much authority they have. It need not be a large department, but a separate department would say that we consider the matter important enough to have its own minister and deputy minister. I think that that would be a good move.

Another area in which I think there could be improvement would be to have a parliamentary commission on multiculturalism and a commissioner in charge who would report to Parliament. In short, the commissioner would report to all Parties and have some independence. The department or the sub-department, as the case may be, will of course report through its minister, through a political channel. If things do not go too well, they can be covered up through that kind of process. However, if we have an independent person, such as we have for official bilingualism, we would have a commissioner who would be in charge and would be a servant of Parliament. It would be a better and fairer structure. It would ensure that the watch-dog function is carried out properly. If the Government has nothing to hide, it ought to welcome this approach. We would ensure that its functions were properly carried out by ensuring that Parliament's own appointee is there.

Bill C-93 largely reflects policy that is already in existence. It begins with a very long preamble. This may or may not be a good thing. In fact, the preamble is practically longer than the Bill itself. It asserts very high-minded principles and refers to the Charter of Canada, the Constitution, the Official Languages Act, the Citizenship Act and all of these sorts of things. Of course, a preamble does not have any force of law and so much of this has to be reworded into the principles within the Bill itself. This Bill largely puts down on paper decisions that have been worked out over the last couple of decades which have very broad agreement across Canada and across all three political Parties.

• (1600)

Clause 3 declares it to be the policy of the Government of Canada to:

> (a) promote the understanding that multiculturalism reflects the cultural and racial diversity of Canadian society and acknowledges the freedom of all members of Canadian society to preserve and share their cultural heritage;

No one would disagree with that but it had not been stated in so many words before. We have just the beginning of recognition in the Constitution. This Bill flushes it out somewhat more when it states:

> (b) promote the understanding that multiculturalism is a basic element of the Canadian heritage . . .
> (c) promote the full and equitable participation of individuals and communities of all origins in the continuing evolution and shaping of all aspects of Canadian society and assist them in the elimination of any barrier to such participation.

This is fairly vague language. They are high sounding principles which perhaps do not reflect the urgency that there is not this equality yet and that discrimination still exists. It is important that we reflect our concern with that ongoing discrimination and barriers which are not right. They are not what we want in our country. We want access for all people to find their own place in society and to make their own contribution. Clause 3(d) reads:

> recognize the existence of communities whose members share a common origin and their historic contribution to Canadian society, and enhance their development;

I like this aspect of the Bill and this recognition that our concerns are not just with individual rights. Yes, there is a concern for individual rights and we must be vigilant and protect and enhance individual rights, but we must also ensure that communities be part of Canada. We are not a bunch of isolated atoms. We live in communities, and distinctive communities have their own contribution to make. I very much welcome this aspect of the Bill. I think it is important to our understanding of Canada as a community of communities.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: And then, showing this balance from communities to individuals, subparagraph (e) reads:

> Ensure that all individuals receive equal treatment and equal protection under the law, while respecting and valuing their diversity.

There is a balancing act to be performed. Clause 3 has subparagraphs (a) through (j). Quite a number of these generalities reflect what is either existing practice or the policy and desire of Canadians to see that these matters be part of our Canadian society.

We might be a little critical at this stage and point out that these are vague and high sounding principles. So far there is nothing requiring action. The Minister is supposed to support these various things in some fashion or other. I think the criticisms which have been given by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, for example, are quite germane. The Minister is not required to act. The Government is not required to do anything in particular to ensure that these objectives are actually put into practice. We get into another section of the Bill. Subclause (2) reads:

> It is further declared to be the policy of the Government of Canada that all federal institutions should—

We go from the general policy to actual institutions, government boards, commissions, agencies and so forth. Again the paragraph talks about equal opportunity:

> —to obtain employment and advancement in those institutions;

(b) promote policies, programs and practices that enhance the ability of individuals and communities of all origins to contribute to the continuing evolution of Canada.

We have the need, however, not just to talk about this in some vague fashion, but there are areas where we need to encourage it very specifically in hiring practices and training practices to see that the old barriers are changed. This is true for members of visible minorities, women, native people and the handicapped. We need particular programs to overcome the prejudice and discrimination of the past and the lack of experience because of that discrimination to see that those barriers really do go down and people have a chance to make their way and get some assistance in moving past those barriers that were erected and still exist. The wording of this statement is very vague. Unless there is government action by way of employment equity programs, of positive hiring practices to ensure that people in different groups hear about opportunities and have a chance to reply, to have their merits taken seriously, and unless there are particular ways of achieving it, it will just remain a high sounding principle and will not help anyone to overcome the barriers of the past. Subparagraph (c) reads:

Promote policies, programs and practices that enhance the understanding of and respect for the diversity of the members of Canadian society.

The broadcasting example I gave a few minutes ago is a practical example of what another committee is already doing with respect to the same principles. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture is dealing with the broadcasting aspect. We are looking at advice to give to the Government for a new Broadcasting Act which we have not yet seen. We have been promised it for a long time and we rather expected it would be here. I hope we will see the Minister bring in a Bill that will enshrine that important symbolic area of broadcasting.

People spend a lot of time watching television and listening to radio. The images people see on the screen help to give them an idea of what Canada is all about. It is important that those institutions of broadcasting be honest and realistic in their reflection of Canadian reality, avoid negative stereotypes, show opportunities for people and show positive models for people to follow.

This will not just be words on paper that look great but do not mean anything in reality. It will require many institutions, if not all under a federal regulation, to act in their own particular way to see that multiculturalism is actually respected within their own framework.

In subparagraph (d) we read:

collect statistical data in order to enable the development of policies, programs and practices that are sensitive and responsive to the multicultural reality of Canada;

If we do not have the statistics, we do not know if we are making any progress. For people who have been discriminated against we need to see where they are in the system, at what level and what income gaps there are. We would like to see clearly over time that those differences in income, salary, wages and so forth, percentages in different levels of our different federal agencies in the different jobs, are reduced over time. We know that talent exists in all these different groups. If people are not well distributed through the system, we have to suspect it is not lack of talent on the part of any particular group but perhaps lack of opportunity or some kind of either deliberate or inadvertent barrier. Clearly collecting appropriate statistics is important to see if we are actually making progress in being fairer to people.

The next subparagraph reads:

(e) make use, as appropriate, of the language skills and cultural understanding of individuals of all origins;

Let me briefly refer to this as I know I have to wind up. The language skills that people from many different cultural groups bring to Canada are important for Canada. We belong to the United Nations and to an international trading community. It is important that language skills be retained and developed so that Canada can play its part in the developing and in the trading world. These are assets which people bring to us from their own culture. We should be glad we have them and we should work actively to promote them.

Since my time is up, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am pleased to take part in this debate to support the measures that are here already. The work is not over. We still need some other measures. I can assure you that my Party will be working to make these practicable, to see that they are realized and to see that we take the next steps the next time we work to improve and to ensure that we have a good statute on multiculturalism for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Mitges): This is the 10 minute question and answer period. If there are no questions or comments, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer).

• (1610)

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in rising in this House to add my voice in support of Bill C-93. I applaud the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all those who have worked with such diligence and devotion to prepare this legislation.

The message of this Bill is strong and clear. It affirms the multicultural and multiracial reality of our society. It affirms that cultural diversity enriches all Canadians. It affirms that our multicultural reality makes us more open and compassionate people while providing opportunities for our future prosperity in a global economy.

However, multiculturalism is more than a recognition of contemporary social realities. It is more than the retention of heritage, culture and languages, and it is more than freedom of cultural expression and a fostering of equality. Multiculturalism is a dynamic force in our society which will not only propel us into the future but will also define what our future will be.

Multiculturalism is such a force because we recognize that it lies at the heart of our national identity, of our sense of being Canadian. Multiculturalism has meaning both for individuals and for the country as a whole. It is a way of creating a dynamic composite out of the many different elements which make up the Canadian way of life.

One of Canada's unique qualities has been an ability to build from diverse linguistic and cultural origins. Being Canadian means belonging to a united, bilingual, multicultural country. Being Canadian also means that 25 million people live in a free society which seeks constantly to adapt to changing social, economic and political realities, both at home and in the international sphere.

Bill C-93 is a vital part of that process, of the evolution of our nation. This Bill recognizes the strengths and benefits inherent in our pluralistic society. It recognizes our unique resources of skills, linguistic abilities and cultural knowledge which enrich our country at home and increase its international stature.

As Hon. Members are aware, the multiculturalism sector of the Department of Secretary of State administers a number of world-class programs designed to help retain the cultural richness inherent in our multicultural reality. These programs assist with research into cultural histories and fund theatre and the visual arts. They provide chairs of ethnic studies at many of our universities, and they generally help people give expression to their cultural values and ways of interpreting them. In so doing, of course, they also help to create a feeling of pride and self-worth.

Cultural retention, cultural pride and cultural communications are all essential ingredients if all Canadians are to achieve an active citizenship and a full involvement in this country. Fostering this spirit of active, involved citizenship is a major priority of this Government. It involves strengthening the sense of community that binds us together as a nation and it involves making our multicultural character understood and appreciated throughout Canada and the world.

Our record still needs improvement. We must continue to reduce the barriers to the full economic, social and political participation of all groups in our society. We want to educate Canadians on their own terms as to how a multicultural society contributes to a better life for us all.

It has been said that the best antidote to prejudice is education. That is why the Department of Secretary of State is promoting human rights education in the schools and the teaching of concepts of citizenship which include the recognition of multiculturalism in Canada. The need for this kind of education also produced the court challenges program administered by the Canadian Council for Social Development.

As Hon. Members are aware, this program supports challenges to the courts based on the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The aim is to help define how those freedoms apply in practice and to educate people about the nature of their rights.

Another government priority is a more complex and sensitive one. It involves changing attitudes to make people and institutions more sensitive to our multicultural reality and more responsive to its requirements.

Changing immigration patterns have greatly altered the demographic make-up of Canada. Census data from 1981 and 1986 show that the proportion of non-British and non-French groups has increased to the point where people with origins other than French or British represent over 37.5 per cent of the Canadian population. Collectively, these groups form the majority in Toronto and Vancouver and account for a significant proportion of Montreal's population.

More than one million Canadians are members of visible minority communities. Studies show that by the turn of the century, visible minorities will approach 10 per cent of the Canadian population. This trend presents new challenges for a society and its institutions. The challenge will be how to accept and interact with all cultural and racial groups so as to encourage their full participation as productive citizens.

The legislation proposed in Bill C-93 speaks to all Canadians, their communities and their institutions. It will give full legislative recognition to our cultural and racial diversity. However, because the Canadian Multiculturalism Act will accommodate the realities of tomorrow as well as today, it provides the basic elements of a race-relations strategy designed to encourage tolerance and understanding among all members of our society, now and in the future. This strategy will stress the need to promote public awareness, it will help combat racism and it will encourage institutions to adapt their policies and practices to ensure equality and accommodate racial and cultural differences.

As the custodian of many institutions, the federal Government will be challenged to provide leadership to ensure that discriminatory action or ways of thinking are discontinued and that federal institutions protect a vibrant image of Canada's cultural and racial diversity.

Bill C-93 will enhance Canadian citizenship. It will broaden the reach of Canada's two official languages and it will establish in law an affirmation of Canada's multicultural character. The Bill seeks to provide a legislative base, a statutory declaration of policy for what up until now has simply been a discretionary commitment by successive federal Governments.

As it now stands, the multicultural program could be either drastically reduced or fundamentally redirected, possibilities which worry many ethnocultural groups. A statute, on the other hand, will provide a specific vehicle for preserving and enhancing the multicultural heritage of Canadians as promised in the Constitution. By officially recognizing the historic and future contributions of multiculturalism to Canadian society, the Bill will strengthen the sense of national unity among all Canadians and ethnocultural communities.

Perhaps an even greater asset of Bill C-93 is its determination in the pursuit of social justice. We as a nation have a long parliamentary commitment to social justice and human rights. Even before Confederation, Sir Hector Langevin declared that the Government should ensure justice to all races, to all religions, to all nationalities and to all interests. That was written in 1865. The far-sighted Sir Hector went on to become Canada's first Secretary of State.

Our approach to human rights and to a multiculturalism policy for Canada reinforce each other. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the 1982 constitutional Act is one of the strongest declarations of human rights anywhere in the world. These legal commitments are backed up by a strong judiciary, an active citizenship and a sensitive and responsive Government.

I believe that the multicultural nature of our society helped shape the kind of collective will which led to such a strong declaration of rights in our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That document guarantees rights for our aboriginal peoples, rights for the disabled, rights for women, rights for people of all races, colours and creeds in this country.

• (1620)

Multiculturalism is also a key element in Canada's profile abroad. Our determination to ensure cultural and racial equality provides a strong model for other plural societies, a model that has received international accolades.

I was pleased to learn that Sweden has indicated an interest to come to Canada to study and evaluate how our multicultural policy is working, with the hope of adapting a similar model in Sweden.

The image of Canada as a country that believes in cultural equality and human rights, and acts on what it believes, bolsters our credibility when we take a stand on international issues. It gives us a unique advantage in international diplomacy, especially on human rights issues.

Our commitment to multiculturalism as a force for change and growth within our society can have an impact on improved international relations. We have expertise and language abilities to tap in our culturally diverse society which can give us a unique advantage in world trade opportunities.

International trade is one means of binding together the world community. We become mutually dependent on each other and good social and political relations are almost inevitable outcomes of good economic relations.

Quite apart from using our multicultural expertise in the world community, we must nurture and safeguard the vast potential of multiculturalism within our own borders. This is an increasing realization that the future building of our nation will be dynamic and harmonious only to the extent to which it fully recognizes and includes all Canadians from every origin.

Bill C-93 acknowledges our respect for this country's racial and cultural diversity, and establishes our commitment to equality of access for every member of the Canadian family.

Our diversity is one of our greatest national assets. It has brought us enormous economic benefits and increasing international respect. It has attracted people to this country like a magnet from all corners of the globe.

Rather than diminishing our sense of a common identity, this collective diversity has enhanced our definition of being Canadian and has created an image of Canada as the world's first international nation.

This Government has clearly defined its vision of our Canadian identity as rooted in our citizenship values, our two official languages and our multicultural reality. Multiculturalism is a policy that promotes national unity and cultural harmony. It improves the quality of our daily life and offers important opportunities for the country's future prosperity.

Bill C-93 is based on these beliefs and on the conviction that all Canadians must have an equal chance to contribute to the dynamic multicultural evolution of our nation. By respecting the traditional diversity of our society and by looking to the future with a sure sense of the past, we have a stronger sense of ourselves. We know who we are and therefore we can better determine where we will go.

Bill C-93 is an affirmation of our Government's forward-looking strategy. The passage into law of Bill C-93 will mark the start of a new era. Our children and grandchildren will look back on it as a symbol of our new maturity as a nation, a nation committed to fairness, equality and partnership among all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lanthier): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received from the Senate to the effect that it passed without amendment Bill C-109, An Act to provide borrowing authority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lanthier): Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Canadian Multiculturalism Act

March 22, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Eric Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 22nd day of March, 1988, at 4:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions for my colleague for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer), who stated he was very proud of the multiculturalism program in this country. He worked hard on the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, which recommended that the Government introduce a multiculturalism Bill to strengthen multiculturalism as a national program.

The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park, as a Government member, took part in the committee's work and added his name to the unanimous report.

I would therefore like to ask my colleague for Toronto, when he considers the reaction to our committee report, how does he feel about the many recommendations that were not accepted by the Government? And I know, Mr. Speaker, I did not expect that the Government would accept all recommendations. But it certainly was my hope that the Government would accept the two or three most significant recommendations in the report, the one about the Department of multiculturalism and the two recommendations by the co-sponsor. Mr. Speaker, they are really significant in that they ensure the success of this policy on multiculturalism.

I respect the Hon. Member's word and I know he worked a lot on that committee. However, I would like him to answer this question and give this House his own view.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lanthier): Congratulations to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for his magnificent French. This is a commendable effort.

The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) may now answer.

[English]

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that we are now debating the principle of the Bill. I hope members of the standing committee will have an opportunity to examine this Bill carefully at committee stage and come back with recommendations to the House. The Hon. Member will know, as someone who has been close to this subject since as far back as the mid 1970s, that the progress we have seen in multiculturalism in this country has come in small steps. In multiculturalism, as in other areas of government, we do not achieve and accomplish everything we want in one day or one week.

• (1630)

The Member was present in Toronto at the hearings of the Committee on Multiculturalism and will know that the report to which he refers received a wide variety of reaction and opinion. There were those who thought that the report was right on. There were those who thought that the report went too far in making its recommendations. Of course, there were those who thought that it did not go far enough. Therefore, to suggest that there is unanimity in support among the ethnocultural communities on either the Bill before us or the report tabled by the standing committee would be inaccurate.

I hope that during the committee stage we will have the appropriate time to examine the existing legislation and perhaps improve it where required. However, and this is important to note, I have not heard anyone during this debate indicate that the introduction of this Bill is not a significant step in taking multiculturalism forward in Canada. It is to that aspect that I address my remarks today.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my Hon. colleague's feeling. I agree that the multiculturalism program, in the history of this Parliament, had a degree of success in furthering a just society.

[English]

I realize that while the report was unanimous among the committee members of all three political Parties, there was not unanimity of feeling throughout the country with regard to all of the recommendations. I did not expect that there would be.

However, surely one of the recommendations ought to have found its way into the text of this Bill. I agree with the Member that no one is arguing that the presentation of the multiculturalism Bill, which would offer a legislative framework to any program or policy, is negative. We all concur with that.

However, we cannot allow ourselves to applaud simply because a Bill was introduced in the House. Rather, we must scrutinize the Bill to see how the legislation advances the cause. I was somewhat disillusioned by the fact that this Bill does not reflect the hopes of those in the community that, while this would not solve the world's ills at one swoop, it would be an opportunity to push a few more things through the window.

I hope that the Member will agree with me that from that vantage point the Bill is in need of amendment. One recommendation which received unanimous consent in the community and at the hearings was the one regarding the commissioner position. It is felt that a commissioner would try to resolve the dilemma by talking about the realization of a certain objective and then actually realizing it. The establishment of a commissioner's position would be one step toward, not by command and control, but by enforcement throughout the civil service. This would not be done in a coercive manner, as some Members have suggested but, similarly to the responsibilities of the Commission for Official Languages would ensure that that to which we subscribe as a firm policy and tenet of the country in this Chamber is not ignored once the lights are out and the debate is over but that every day of the working week the Government of Canada starts with its own house and ensures that, through its departments, agencies, and crown corporations, multiculturalism becomes the rule rather than the exception.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lanthier): I am sorry to advise the Member that the answer must be much shorter than the question. He will have two minutes to answer.

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, I will try to confine myself to two minutes, albeit with some difficulty.

My colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), asked an important question. He referred to two specific issues which are critical in any Bill. First, he said that the mere introduction of a Bill is not that significant. The important thing about this Bill is that it puts into law something which to date has been at the whim of the government in office. That is an important distinction.

Second, the Member leaves the impression that there is no monitoring function. That is not the case. The Bill provides for the Minister to report to Parliament, on the fifth sitting day after January 31 of each year, his progress on the implementation of this Bill and, second, provides for the review of that progress by the House of Commons Committee on Multiculturalism.

Therefore, although the Bill may not have all of the requirements to which the Hon. Member referred, it would be inaccurate to leave the impression that it contains no monitoring facilities.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is only a short time before we receive Royal Assent, but I would like to say a few words on this very important Bill dealing with a very important subject.

I would ask the House to indulge me for a moment while I wallow a little bit in nostalgia. I grew up in the north end of Winnipeg, the society of which is a source of perhaps the majority of gag writers in Hollywood and senior bureaucrats in Ottawa, which is a rare combination. It is certainly one of the parts of the country which combines the most interesting mixture of cultural groups; Ukrainians, Jews, Germans, Poles, even the odd Welsh Canadians, such as my family, which are in some ways the most ignored cultural minority in the country, aside from Liberals in western Canada.

I recall very vividly that one day in high school a good friend of mine by the name of Sawchuk came to school and announced that his name was no longer Sawchuk but was now Saunders. When we inquired as to why that was, he said that his father, who worked for one of Canada's largest department stores, had reached the point where he was looking for a promotion but that the condition of his promotion was that his name be changed.

At that age perhaps we did not have quite the same understanding of what that meant in terms of the indignity that was being imposed upon my friend and his family of having to deny their roots, their culture, their language, their heritage, and their history for the sake of getting a small promotion in one of Canada's largest companies.

I mention that, Mr. Speaker, because to me that is what the multicultural policy is all about. It is an attempt to respond to the second class citizenship which has been imposed on far too many Canadians. Simply because of what they are, not who they are, they are labelled, and because of name, language, or culture are stereotyped or type-cast and not given the same rights or recognition as are those who have had a longer history in this country or have the name of a French or English antecedent.

There is no doubt that we have made a lot of progress since then. There has been a lot of accomplishment, and even in this Chamber today we can see examples of Canadians who have come from non-French or English backgrounds who now exercise prominent roles of leadership in politics. The same is true in business, the arts, culture and professions throughout the country.

However, it would be wrong to say that we have reached a satisfactory state. I think we are a long way from that. We are, to my mind, as I understand it from my own community of Winnipeg, at a very important juncture. The sense of accomplishment and aspiration of a large majority of Canadians, about whom the Hon. Member from High Park was talking, is still restrained, still circumscribed by sometimes real discriminatory actions. I still think that is at the forefront of the multicultural issue.

There is the example of a young Vietnamese couple who came to this country when I was Minister of Immigration. Their children are about ready to enter university but do not have the money to go. It is simply an economic fact of life that they are not able to acquire the means to send their very bright and able kids to university. That is a form of discrimination.

The same thing we faced back in the 1940s and 1950s is there for that newer group.

I spoke to a Ukrainian business and professional group a few weeks ago. They have a great sense of still trying to search out their roots and language back in the Ukraine. They have a sense of denial. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who is sitting opposite, knows of the problem of Ukrainians in the Soviet Union feeling that as a Government we must do more. I do not in any way take away from the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs because he has made great efforts. But there is still a feeling of uncertainty, of a tentative acceptance. There is a feeling that they are still not fully, 100 per cent, guaranteed all their rights.

That is why, I think, my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has argued the need for a strengthened structure in this country, a more effective commissioner of multiculturalism, for example, to give strong, effective leadership in weaving that fabric together in a more effective way, of having in the federal apparatus individuals who, by way of their office, can provide further leadership.

A very important victory was won with Article 27 of the Charter which recognized the multicultural fact of Canada. It is important to note that recently a group of legal experts gathered together to determine the meaning of that article and said it is still an open question as to how it can be incorporated into the fabric of the rights of Canadians. We need someone to give initiative to this particular Bill to ensure that the right challenges are made in the courts and to ensure that Article 27 is given life and meaning.

Without that apparatus, without that ongoing watch-dog role, initiative role, I am afraid it will not happen. That is why the argument we are making is not against the principle of the Bill and not against the philosophy of the Bill. We are simply saying that it could be a lot more. The time and age calls for it. There is a certain kind of mustiness about the Bill. We are not going back to the time when one had to change one's name, but it is not the kind of Bill that will deal with the realities of today and, certainly, tomorrow.

The role of the federal Government, I believe, in this area, as in all areas of human rights, is to provide leadership, to show the way, not simply to follow. That is why the argument that we are making is that this Bill, as strong as it may be in philosophy, is weak in implementation and structure. It is weak in the real hard-nosed organizational ability which is required to make any bureaucracy or large organization work.

I will conclude my remarks because I know the royal presence is near and I do not want to frustrate that. We argue strongly that the Bill should be amended to take into account that leadership role in making the multicultural fact not just a philosophy but to bring it to its full fruition as a reality. That is why we hope government Members will be prepared to consider the kinds of amendments my colleague will bring forward.

Mr. Marchi: Can the Chair clarify the procedure? Some Members are saying that I can ask a question of my colleague, although he has only completed five minutes of his 20-minute speech. Can we have a clarification on what is happening?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked for clarification. The Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod has not arrived. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) still has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, this is called "ragging the puck", is it?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is the only time we would encourage you to speak, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: I thank the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs for that warm endorsement.

As I was saying, one of the reasons for this kind of Bill is to give that leadership. Let me point to another example that triggered my interest when the Member from High Park was speaking. I believe he touched upon a very important aspect of multiculturalism, one that has not been properly developed, that is, the utilization of part of its characteristics, as a way of extending ourselves to the rest of the world. I do not think there is any argument that we live in a time when all of us must realize we are going to have to be much more competitive and effective in terms of our international economic and political relations.

I was struck again by that thought three or four months ago when I was at a hearing in Edmonton. A coalition of ethnic leaders appeared before our trade task force and pointed out that very limited development takes place in terms of the use of our cultural heritage for trade promotion or development in terms of learning other languages, learning about other cultures and using the strengths so many of these groups bring to our country. We are not properly exploiting them. I address this point to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He knows I have other grievances about the cut-backs on promotion and development work.

It would seem to me that a very major role would be to utilize, through our universities, colleges and schools, the kind of strength that can arise out of this emergence of multiculturalism. Let us talk about the Pacific Rim, for instance. There is an incredible richness of the Indo-Chinese population in Canada in terms of opening up avenues of understanding for the rest of Canadians.

We can also use that as a ways of developing our opportunities abroad. That seems to me one of the aspects of multiculturalism I have talked about, the new fabric or new reality. These people are saying: "We are here. We have skills. We have now reached a point in our own maturity. Use us. Put us to work". But we need some support in doing that. I do not have a perfectly calculated formula but, I think the objective is worthy. I think what should be looked at is how the federal Government can work out the proper means and mechanisms.

That comes back to the basic thesis we have followed in this debate.

We do not believe this Bill enables us to do that. We do not believe there is sufficient presence of the multicultural fact in the federal Government, either at the ministerial or departmental level or at the commissioner level, to give us the capacity to wield our influence and to bring about those kinds of judgment calls that are required.

There are two very different areas, one is the case of the prosecution of Article 27 of the Charter, extending it over to basic economic fact in the area of trade. There are two ways in which we could substantially exploit and develop the new reality of Canada, something we have not done. We ask, why not? Part of the reason has been the way the multicultural issue has got stuck in a time warp at the federal level. I think this legislation is partly a reflection of that. We have become perhaps too used to the conventional ways of doing things and we have not attempted to go beyond those things. We have not opened up our opportunity for further development in this area.

Let me point to yet another area where I think we must develop the multicultural fact where federal leadership will be required, that is, on the side of immigration that does not deal with people coming to this country. It is what happens when people get here. There has been a long-standing argument and debate between federal bureaucracies, between the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Employment and Immigration, about their role in the settlement and development of immigrants once they arrive, to say nothing about the debate between the provinces and the federal Government. That is still a debate that is unresolved. It has still not been given the kind of clear direction it requires. Yet we see all kinds of examples, whether it is in the area of the development of language skills for immigrant women or whether it is with respect to training skills for people who are in the refugee stream. In these areas it is still somewhat of a patchwork arrangement.

Once again, it seems to me that if there were somebody, both in terms of a department with a clear interest or even a commissioner of multiculturalism, then that would be a cause that they could take up. They could provide the focal point within this type of vast apparatus around Ottawa to try to bring it all together and to get the factions and the departments which are each fighting for their turf to say, "Wait a minute. There is a very important issue happening here".

Once again, I do not see it happening. Part of the reason is the vacuum. That role is not being exercised as it effectively should be exercised.

I offer that comment as a demonstration of the case made by my colleague about the need not only to think forward but to have the means and organizational strength at the federal level to do so.

I also bring up this point concerning the area in which we relate to other jurisdictions, particularly to the provinces but to the municipalities as well. I do not have the latest account, but I have been intrigued by the number of cities which have had to set up race relations commissions. In Toronto and in my own city of Winnipeg this has been done. These commissions play very important roles because they are dealing right at the ground level with problems of discrimination in hiring practices. In some cases they are dealing with actual conflicts between different cultural or racial groups.

There was an example just recently in the case of police relations with cultural groups. This is something which is becoming far too common, unfortunately so, in our cities. The question I asked and one which I pose again to members of the Cabinet is this one. Who is responsible at the federal level for relating to that real issue that is taking place in Vancouver, Toronto and Winnipeg? Who is working with those very important grass-root racial commissions to see what might be done to try to co-ordinate, whether it is employment programs or the immigrant development programs about which I spoke?

There may be individual Members of Parliament doing it. But they do it in a piecemeal fashion. Some may go to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). As I recall, the commission in Toronto came to me when I held that post to say that there was an emergence up in the York area of some real gang problems with young visible minorities. Kids were running into real problems and conflict on the streets. I was asked if I could help with a couple of employment programs in that area.

That was but one piece of the puzzle. The problem is, who do we go to at the federal level to organize the entire issue for us all? I do not think there is that person there right now.

I use those examples simply by way of argument to show why it is important that this Bill be strengthened substantially and that the proper and useful principle that it espouses be given a much more effective form or structure by the time we debate this Bill at third reading.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I was genuinely interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I know that he is speaking not only from his experience as a Minister and a parliamentarian but also as a citizen of a very multicultural city—

PARLIAMENT HILL

PROPOSED ERECTION OF STATUE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

The House resumed from Thursday, February 4, 1988, consideration of the motion of Mr. Tupper:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of commissioning the structure of a statue of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to be placed on Parliament Hill in commemoration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of Her ascension to the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: When the motion was last before the House the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) had the floor. On debate, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to add a few remarks today to the remarks of many of my colleagues in the House from all three Parties concerning the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) that a statue be erected to commemorate the contribution of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to Canadian society.

The suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that a commission be established to look into the number and nature of statues to be erected on Parliament Hill is a good one and worth following.

Most of us in the House have lived most of our lives in the reign of Queen Elizabeth II. The contributions of this monarch have been very considerable to Canadian society, to the society of the Commonwealth, and to the society of Great Britain where she customarily has her residence. The parallel has been drawn between Queen Elizabeth II and Queen Victoria. Those two monarchs have reigned in Canada for 100 of the last 161 years. That reflects the contribution of two great women, according to the lights of their own belief and the values of their own time, to the development of Canadian society and indeed to the development of the Commonwealth as a whole.

The ascension of Queen Elizabeth II to the Throne is a day that is very fresh in my memory. Her father, the late King George VI, died on my sixth birthday. Thus, since my sixth birthday, both in Great Britain and here in Canada, I have only known Queen Elizabeth II as the reigning monarch. Therefore, I think it fair to say that my formative years, my maturing years, and the years of my adulthood and political career have been spent under the reign of Queen Elizabeth II.

She has surely seen some changes in those 36 years. After all, in 1952 when she acceded to the Throne, the Commonwealth was by and large made up of colonies which were in some form of tutelage or subordinate relationship to Great Britain under the British Crown.

Now I believe that we can truly say that the Commonwealth is a commonwealth of nations where all, despite differences in size, prosperity, and influence within world society, are rightly and correctly treated as being equal within the framework of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth has not been an institution merely for the preservation, the spread, or even the development of British culture. It has become a forum where nations that share a common heritage, particularly in terms of their institutions as well as the English language, can discuss matters of world affairs and can, when the spirit moves them, exercise collective influence on those world affairs.

Having set the historical context, and turning to the matter of the statue, it seems to me that one of the practicalities in such an initiative would be to ask Her Majesty if she would like to see a statue erected on Parliament Hill within her lifetime. It has not been the practice in Britain, although it is in some countries, to erect statues during the lifetime of the person commemorated or represented by the statue. It is still not something about which many of us who have British heritage feel particularly comfortable.

Many excellent suggestions have been made in this debate concerning other people who might be commemorated. I do not feel it demeans or derogates in any way from Her Majesty the Queen and Her achievements to discuss that in the context of this motion. After all, the opportunity to discuss such a topic, important and interesting as it is, does not come regularly or frequently to us by way of any other opportunity. This is not to establish any form of comparison between Her Majesty and other people who might be commemorated, but to suggest that not only the political history, political traditions, and political life of Canada should be commemorated by way of statues on Parliament Hill, but many other integral and fundamental Canadian values, Canadian activities, and Canadian achievements should also be considered in the erection of statues.

Because we are an extremely far-flung federal nation, we should consider whether we should concentrate our efforts, energies, and attention on the statues which should be erected on Parliament Hill or whether we should set our scopes wider and look at other strategic or historic locations where statues might be erected.

Of course the matter of partisanship must always be avoided in the consideration of the erection of statues. It does not come into the consideration of the present motion since the Queen and the institution of the monarchy historically, and certainly today, have been above the level of political partisanship and political fray.

WILDLIFE

DESTRUCTION OF FOREST HABITAT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canada's extensive forests are the home of a rich and varied wildlife. Unfortunately, all too often harvesting the forests destroys the habitat upon which wildlife depends.

This does not have to be. An effort must be made to integrate wildlife and forestry management policies and practices. Therefore we urge the Government to incorporate wildlife conservation goals in federal and provincial forestry agreements when they are renegotiated this fall.

On April 14 a full day on Parliament Hill will be devoted to wildlife. On that day parliamentarians will have an opportunity to hear organizations and groups speak about wildlife, this priceless Canadian heritage which we too often take for granted and which needs political support very badly.

PAKISTAN—ANNIVERSARY OF REPUBLIC

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize Pakistan's National Day. This young nation was proclaimed a republic on this day in 1956. This special day marks the beginning of its nationhood which allowed Pakistan to help to determine the destiny of its people. Pakistan is striving to achieve a better democratic system and an improved standard of living for its people.

Canada is well recognized for the contributions it has made to this country through various CIDA development efforts over the years in areas such as agriculture, immunization, and transmission of hydroelectricity.

Canada has been made richer by having among its cultural mosaic Canadian citizens of Pakistan origin. I for one would vouch that they have made a tremendous contribution to our country and to Canadian society as a whole.

I am proud to have citizens of all cultural origins in my riding of Etobicoke North. I am pleased to be able today to pay tribute to those of Pakistan origin.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

DELAY IN RESPONDING TO ACCIDENT ON TRAWLER

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House saw the Minister of Transport's (Mr. Crosbie) cavalier attitude and joking response to an occurrence which could have seen a tanker break in half and result in the worst oil spill in Newfoundland's history. It is clear that this Government is waiting for a disaster to happen. We hope that it will not involve danger to life, because we fear that the search and rescue facilities of the Coast Guard would not be able to respond.

Last Wednesday a crewman aboard the trawler Osprey lost his leg in an accident at sea. Search and rescue at Gander could not help because the only helicopters they have are not equipped with any de-icing capability and could not take off. The trawler took almost eight hours to reach St. John's with the injured crewman and no medical help. This is unacceptable.

On any given day as many as 60 trawlers can be operating off the coast of Newfoundland alone with more than 1,000 crewmen aboard. If the weather is bad they are on their own in case of serious accidents or other marine emergencies.

When will the Government realize that helicopters that cannot fly in bad weather are useless in an emergency?

I call upon the Government, especially the Minister of Transport, to update the search and rescue helicopter fleet and establish a station in St. John's, or at sea on a Coast Guard vessel. Our fishermen, marine workers, and oil workers need more protection than they are getting from the Government.

ANNIVERSARY OF GREEK INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, March 25 marks the one hundred and sixty-seventh anniversary of the independence of modern Greece. It is only fitting that this day be given due recognition because of the importance of Greece and its history and the impact that this has had on western civilization for almost 2,500 years. Much of western culture and western civilization, and the democratic form of government, can trace their roots to Greece, the cradle of democracy.

In spite of the fact that Greece was occupied by numerous successive invaders for some 1,800 years prior to 1821, the Greek culture and Greek traditions, together with the Greek language and religion, were never subdued or diminished, but continued to flourish even under the most difficult, oppressive, and tyrannical overlords that occupied the country.

I would like us as Members of this House and all Canadians to join with my fellow Canadians of Greek descent in celebrating March 25, not only as the National Day of Greece, but as a shining beacon emblematic of all things that have helped to shape a large part of our Canadian way of life.

FILM INDUSTRY

GENIE AWARDS CELEBRATION—ADVICE TO GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last night we witnessed first hand at the Ninth Annual Genie Awards that Canada does have a film industry that can compete with the best in the world. Last year the world was talking about Decline of the American Empire, and this year it is Un Zoo La Nuit which won in all nominated categories. All Canadians will be biting their nails at the Academy Awards with its nomination for an Oscar.

More Canadian films and television programs than ever before were presented at festivals in Canada and around the world, and more were winners, not only in attracting audiences at the box office but also on television screens in every major world market.

Last night was not all celebration. Quebec film maker, Rock Demers, eloquently expressed concerns about the Government's lack of commitment to the arts. He stated that the Government should place more money into the arts, less into nuclear subs, ban its censorship Bill C-54, and forget about free trade.

It took a decade of painstaking public and private action to create the structural impetus for Canadians films and television to flower. Now the Government wants to reverse itself and kick the supports and platform from under this industry. I would strongly suggest that the Government heed this advice from an industry that knows what it is all about.

PUBLIC WORKS

MIRABEL EXPROPRIATIONS—TRIBUTE TO JEAN-PAUL RAYMOND

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, next Sunday we celebrate the victory of Mirabel farmers who, twenty years ago, heard on the radio they had just been expropriated to build an airport.

It took these farmers nearly twenty years to have this gross error set right. Unwilling to admit publicly it had made a mistake, the Trudeau Government preferred to harass its victims instead of giving them a fair deal.

When the Conservatives came in with Brian Mulroney, and thanks to the support and sympathy of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), the situation was finally normalized.

Thanks to the C.I.A.C., the most tenacious citizens' group Quebec has ever known, its members were able to survive, and also thanks to the determination of its first chairman, Mr. Goyer.

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers and Canadians should pay tribute to Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond of Mirabel who continued this struggle for freedom with leadership and perseverance.

THE ENVIRONMENT

OPPORTUNITY TO TAKE CONCRETE ACTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Quebec claims to be very concerned about the environment. A non-profit foundation supported by the Premier (Mr. Mulroney) and the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), is planning a fund-raising campaign for the environment. Should we rejoice? Will Quebec's environment be in good hands?

Unfortunately, the same Ministers are taking action that puts the environment at risk. The free trade agreement will have a disastrous impact on the environment by encouraging the export of non-renewable resources and the use of energy resources that cause pollution. Furthermore, the Government of Quebec is planning more energy mega-projects, despite the fact that these projects are harmful to the environment.

The Ministers supported the Brundtland Report, whose fundamental principle is sustained development. However, decisions taken subsequently by the governments have failed to respect the recommendation that environmental considerations be incorporated in economic decisions. Talking about the environment is useless if our actions do not reflect what we say.

AIR BALLOONS

1991 WORLD BALLOONING CHAMPIONSHIP EVENT

Hon. André Bissonnette (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning, Canada was appointed host country for the Tenth World Ballooning Championship Event in 1991. The Festival des montgolfières du Haut-Richelieu was chosen by the National Aeroclub of Canada as official host of this world famous event, where 450 balloons from at least 25 countries will lift off and which will attract at least one million visitors to Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu in the summer of 1991.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the exceptional work done by the organizing committee of the festival, and to the involvement of the local community, the riding of Saint-Jean, Tourism Quebec and the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Valcourt).

The Canadian tourism industry, which supports 600,000 jobs directly and has an annual revenue of $20 billion, must constantly innovate and provide a broad range of attractions.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Bernard Valcourt, for his support.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORT SECURITY—NEED FOR PERSONNEL TRAINING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons and, more to the point, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) must take immediate action to restore integrity to the security system at Canada's major airports.

The system is in a shambles and, indeed, the notion of security at Canada's airports is a farce perpetrated upon the people of Canada by the Minister of Transport and by his predecessor, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Last night Canadians were shocked to witness on the CBC program The Journal the spectacle of airport security employees testifying that even after three years of employment they still did not have the necessary training to identify bombs or hidden weapons on Canada's X-ray machines.

More shocking, Mr. Speaker, in the light of commitment since the Air-India disaster—we ought to have learned from that disaster which took many innocent lives—we saw a student being hired after watching a 2.5 hour video and being made responsible for weapons and bombs screening. That same student, after only three hours on the job, was assigned the task of training yet another new recruit.

The Government of Canada—and these are strong words—is playing with the lives of Canadians and has a responsibility to restore integrity to Canada's security system—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

POLITICAL PARTIES

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CHARGES—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, formerly the cost of providing telephone service was dependent on the distance between the points served. Modern communications technology is obliterating this dependence. As a result, in relative terms, the cost of long distance service should decline and that of local service should increase.

I am therefore dismayed by the NDP position outlined by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) last Friday who boasted of his Party's obstruction to rate rebalancing. This blatant disregard of the interests of northern and rural Canadians, whom the Hon. Member would have to subsidize urban dwellers such as his own constituents, will not go unnoticed at the next election.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—CALL FOR HOSTILITIES TO END

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the war between Iran and Iraq is in its eighth year now. All the world has watched helplessly and with horror as these two countries have wasted and slaughtered their youth, as they have polluted their common marine heritage in the Gulf, and now as they have added a new dimension, not only the war of the cities but the use of chemical weapons.

• (1415)

I would hope that all Members of the House would join with me in saying to both countries that they have no right to pollute the planet in the way they are doing in the Gulf, they have no right to use chemical weapons, they have no right to carry on this madness, and, in the name of all that is holy, they should stop that war now.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I knew the Prime Minister would not be in Toronto last night to present one of the Genies, because his platform got lost at the Juno awards! Nor was I surprised when the Minister of Communications did not show up on the platform, since Roch Demers, our world-class film maker who received an award for his exceptional work in the Canadian film industry, condemned the Prime Minister's free trade agreement with the United States, saying: Hello free trade, Goodbye Canadian culture!

What does the Minister of Communications have to answer to that?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I cannot be everywhere that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition thinks I can be. I have to tell him that I was working in cabinet committee on a very important dossier which I hope he will approve when I bring it forward.

May I just say to the Right Hon. Member that I agree wholeheartedly that both the private and the public sectors should be putting more funding into the cultural community. That is why we have increased the budget to the cultural agencies this year by some $113 million, bringing it to a total of $2.2 billion. That is why we have put $165 million into a feature film fund, something that was not there before. That is why we have put $25 million into a sound recording fund, something that was not there before. That is why we have introduced a program for public lending rights, payments to authors for books from public libraries, something that was not there before. That—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: One further point—

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as clear as "Un zoo la nuit".

The Minister did not answer the question: What is she going to say to performers, filmmakers and directors in this country like Jean-Claude Lauzon, who claims that the free trade agreement with the United States will destroy, will deal a fatal blow to Canadian culture.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I shall, if I may, direct my question on the free trade agreement with the United States to another Minister.

The Minister of Finance knows perfectly well that the free trade agreement with the United States will put the jobs of 100,000 workers, 100,000 Canadian men and women working in the apparel industry, at risk. The program he announced yesterday will cost Canadian taxpayers $60 million. His announcement has angered the unions that represent workers in the apparel industry and also upset garment manufacturers and the entire textile industry.

When will the Minister of Finance start supporting the textile industry and speak out against the Prime Minister's free trade agreement with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can see that the Right Hon. Member got totally cowed by my colleague and had to switch his line of questioning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an example of the Liberals flip-flopping on both sides of the same issue. On the one hand they are saying that we should not be doing these things, and on the other hand yesterday they said that we should be doing a lot more of them.

We have tried to find a balance in the program on duty remission and tariff reduction to help the clothing industry. I can tell the Right Hon. Member that this is a program that the clothing industry has been trying to get Governments to agree to for the last 10 years, and we have, starting about two years ago, commenced on this track. The announcements yesterday move us further down the track of providing the clothing industry with lower cost business inputs. Manufacturers can then provide clothing to Canadian consumers at lower prices with greater variety. That will put them in a more competitive position with clothing manufacturers in other countries.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the Minister's answers may not be satisfactory from time to time, at least he tries to address the questions. That is why I abandoned the Minister of Communications.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Coward.

POSITION OF APPAREL ADVISORY BOARD CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder who the Minister is trying to kid, given that the Chairman of the Apparel Advisory Board advising the Prime Minister, Mr. Peter Nygard, said last night on national television: "We really question whether it is wise any longer to keep our industry in free trade. It would be better not to surrender to the U.S. and let them have their way. Take us out."

What does the Minister of Finance say to the Chairman of the Prime Minister's Apparel Trade Advisory Board who wants nothing more to do with the trade agreement with the U.S. and wants out?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me quote from the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute press release. It says: "CAMI welcomes Finance Minister Wilson's March 22nd announcement as an important first step in the essential objectives of reducing costs and enhancing the competitiveness of the Canadian apparel industry."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): "The major benefit to the majority of apparel manufacturers will be tangible across-the-board tariff reductions on fabric and yarn to a level comparable to U.S. tariffs."

That is what we are trying to do. We are trying to provide the apparel manufacturers in Canada with a competitive system that will allow them to take advantage, in a major way, of the opportunities now available to them through the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I want to ask him about the comments made by the Chairman of the Government's own advisory group SAGIT, which advised the Government on the trade deal and the clothing industry.

Mr. Nygard, chairman of that group, says his own operation will have to be substantially scaled back because federal attempts to shelter the industry from the trade deal have failed. He goes on to say: "It is hard to say right now how we will be able to structure our business to be able to hold on to jobs in Winnipeg. The new package will not prevent U.S. companies from taking over the Canadian market. The free trade deal no longer has any benefits to the Canadian clothing industry."

Does the Minister not find it embarrassing that our industry says to him: "You have sold out"? Does he not find it embarrassing that he has had to succumb to the pressures of a U.S. lobby group and put our industry in jeopardy? Is it not shameful for a Canadian Minister to be engaged in that kind of a sellout?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I saw this morning with my own eyes on national television this same man, Mr. Nygard, saying: "We support Michael Wilson". That is me, Mr. Speaker. I am Michael Wilson.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister would answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I forget the Hon. Member's words, but he said we caved in to the United States, or something like that.

Mr. Axworthy: You did.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If he had watched the same program this morning he would have seen the real balance we had to achieve in providing this program. On the one hand we had the apparel sector saying they wanted a lot more. On the other hand we had the textile sector saying: "If we had our druthers, we would prefer you did not do anything".

• (1425)

We have come up with a classical compromise to try to help the apparel sector achieve a degree of competitiveness which it did not already have. We have done that in a way which will not undermine the profitability and, therefore, the job creating capacity of the textile industry. That is the balance which I believe we have achieved in this program.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, that may be what the Minister thinks but it is not what the head of the textile industry in Canada thinks. Mr. Barry has said that the deal which was announced yesterday is going to put the Canadian textile industry in jeopardy because of the trade deal and the pressures they will face. I do not know what the Minister is reading or what he is looking at, but he obviously does not understand what he has done.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT BE SCRAPPED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we now know that the Government has caved in on this issue. Other industries such as the food processing industry, the printing industry, and the auto parts industry have said that they will need an exemption from the trade deal in order to survive.

Is the Government going to provide exemptions for these industries? Should it not just scrap the deal, because it is clear that it will put these Canadian industries in a deep, dark hole?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me address some comments to the Hon. Member's preamble. On the one hand he says that we did not do enough, that we should have done an awful lot more for the clothing industry. On the other hand he says that we have done far too much because it is going to hurt the textile industry.

Mr. Axworthy: You blew it both ways.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Which side is the Hon. Member on?

Mr. Axworthy: You blew it. That is your problem. That's the way you do things. You stand on your head and spit nickels.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRINCIPAL TRUST BANKRUPTCY—PLIGHT OF INVESTORS—PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I am glad that he knows who he is today. That is a good first step.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who are you? Shirley?

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask a question about the Principal Trust fiasco. The Minister will recall that almost a year ago thousands of Canadians across the country lost their life savings in the Principal Trust fiasco. Most of these people were concentrated on the Prairies and many of them are pensioners who lost their life savings through no fault of their own.

Yesterday in the House the Minister of National Revenue seemed to confirm that, incredible as it may seem, the Department of National Revenue is now going to impute income to these people that they will never get, and force them to pay taxes.

Is this the case? Is the Government now going to compel these people to pay taxes on income they will never get, adding insult to a great deal of injury which they have already experienced?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on behalf of the Minister of National Revenue. I share the Hon. Member's concern for the situation faced by those particular customers of the Principal Group. It is true that under accrual accounting the formal result is as the Hon. Member suggests. However, the whole case is being looked at in order to identify whether a policy change can be put in place.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to say that the case is being looked at and quite another to make up your mind quickly that there should be a change so that these people will get some justice at last.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we now have established policy which will give companies complete tax remissions under certain circumstances which will result in over $30 billion of tax deferrals for the business sector.

Therefore, will the Minister guarantee that, either through cabinet decision or, if required, a special measure in the House—and we have acted very quickly before—the Government will assure the House that these Canadians who have already been unjustly dealt with will not have to pay taxes on income they will never get, under any circumstances? Will he guarantee that?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is taking an absolutely untenable position from an accounting point of view. He knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: To insist upon the kind of treatment the Hon. Member is suggesting is to change the whole Income Tax Act of Canada. We are going to look at this specific case carefully with these people in mind, but we are not going to throw the baby out with the bathwater.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR TAX EXEMPTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there have been special exemptions for corporations in the past. In fact, the Government brought in a Bill that we passed in 24 hours for the banks of Canada. Why can he not act just as promptly for the pensioners of Canada? That is the issue.

No one has asked the Minister for a widescale exemption, just one for these people in the Principal case. Will he guarantee that they will not have to pay taxes on income they will not get? That is the issue.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the Government has acted with resolution and alacrity on behalf of depositors in previous cases in the last few years. It is absolutely incorrect to say that it has not acted that way in the past. We will continue to be very alert to the justice of depositors and other clients with regard to the Principal Group.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER TAX REMITTANCE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for financial institutions. It also concerns the collapse of the Principal Group of companies.

The Minister's approach to this whole issue has been to blame it on provincial jurisdictions. When he has a clear opportunity to act on behalf of 67,000 Canadians who may have lost their life savings, he says that he will study the problem. I suggest that that is not sufficient.

Will the Minister exercise the authority he has under the Financial Administration Act, in view of the public interest that exists, and today order a remittance in this particular case?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as usual with questions like these, the Hon. Member is jumping on side with other Members from both sides when they ask questions of this sort. His question adds nothing to that which was just asked by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Yesterday the Minister of National Revenue said that the taxability of interest payments depends on whether a tax filer has chosen to report interest on the cash or accrual method. Under the cash method, interest is reported for tax purposes in the year it is received, whether as cash or as a credit to a person's account. Under the accrual method, interest is recorded as it accrues.

He said:

"I want to make it clear that people on the cash method who neither received interest payments in cash nor had such payments credited to their account prior to the account being frozen will not be taxed on those amounts. However, if they did receive interest in cash or as a credit to their account the amount is required to be included in income".

That is what we are examining.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister fails to understand that there is absolutely nothing in the accounts of these investors. He can cut it any way he wants, there is no money in the accounts.

REQUEST FOR QUICK GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, surely on the basis of fairness, since these 67,000 Canadians have lost much of their savings, the Minister would want to act on their behalf not next week, tomorrow, or next year, but today, and give them the break they rightly deserve?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I can only respond similarly to what the Minister said yesterday. While the Income Tax Act already provides a measure of relief, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government is concerned about those individuals suffering hardship. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, and I hope to be able to make a further announcement concerning the taxability of interest payments when we have completed examination of the facts. That is what any Canadian would want the Canadian Government to do, and that is what we are doing.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT FLEXIBILITY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pursue this topic further. Is it correct that the Minister of State responded to an earlier question that the Government is not prepared to change the accounting system to ensure that there is some fairness and justice for these investors who have lost so much? Surely the Government is prepared to be as flexible as it has been in so many other circumstances, to ensure that the regulations are changed and these investors do not end up paying taxes on dividends and interest that they will never see?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I responded to the previous question, the taxability of these payments will be examined by the Minister of National Revenue, together with the Minister of Finance. An interdepartmental committee is considering it.

I object to the Hon. Leader of the NDP standing up and insisting in all cases, when he does not like the sound of something, that formal accounting be thrown out the window, when poor Canadians as well as other Canadians can be hurt by such action. We must act deliberately and carefully.

Mr. de Jong: I do not think my Leader ever suggested that sound accounting practices be thrown out the window. He did suggest that surely a remission order can be issued, as has been done in so many other cases, to ensure that some justice is done.

FILING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS—SITUATION OF INVESTORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, these Canadians have received their T-5 slips and are filling out their income tax forms right now. What advice can the Minister give them in the next week or two? Should they simply not file and wait for further instruction, and, if so, how long should they wait?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague just said, we are reviewing this matter on a very urgent basis. We understand the predicament in which the depositors have been placed. We are concerned about the impact of this and hope to have an answer very soon about how to deal with it.

This matter has come up on short notice and until we have a chance to look at it—

Mr. Broadbent: Short notice? You have known about it since last June.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It only came up in the House yesterday—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORT SECURITY—PRESIDENT OF AIR TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION OF CANADA'S LETTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that security at Canada's major airports is a disgrace. Indeed, the very concept of security at Canada's airports is a farce being perpetrated on the innocent travelling public—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to use the preamble necessary to ask the question and not just get into assertions which may very well be arguable.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am holding a copy of a letter written by Mr. Gordon Sinclair, President of the Air Transport Association of Canada, to the Minister of Transport on February 23, 1988. It is a three-page litany of complaints that Canada's new security systems are not working.

Mr. Sinclair said: "The system is causing delays and major expenses". He went on to say: "We have no control on the system. It is not performing as promised".

In light of Mr. Sinclair's three-page litany of examples why the system is not working, and in light of the shocking spectacle on The Journal last night of employees saying they are not properly trained, is the Minister prepared to accept the unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport last October that airport security be taken out of the hands of the airline industry itself, which is in a conflict of interest, and put into the hands of Transport Canada so that adequate standards can be maintained?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the silly adjectives that the Hon. Member used in his question. Of course, he cannot have it both ways and claim that the aviation representatives are complaining about delays, and then say we have an inadequate security system. It must be working if the aviation industry is complaining about delays.

When I have gone through the system, perhaps I look suspicious, but I have always been thoroughly checked. I empty all my pockets and I still buzz. I still have to be searched. Perhaps it is personal magnetism.

• (1440)

Since the Air-India incident of several years ago, we have spent an additional $60 million on improving security systems at our airports. We know that that is not perfect. We know that the system can occasionally be gotten around.

On April 14, 1986, a task force was appointed by my predecessor on this matter. It reported on May 15. The report was approved at the end of May. We have given contracts since for new training programs. We have trained 115 supervisors and trainees at Cornwall with a five-day course.

We now have ready audio-visual material and written manuals. They were ready in English in January and in French in March. We are now ready to ensure that proper training is implemented for all who work in the system.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I enjoy the Minister's wit as much as the next person in the House. However, I can tell him that a security system that was supposed to be improved in the aftermath of the Air-India disaster that cost some 300 plus innocent Canadian lives is no laughing matter today in the House of Commons.

I say to the Minister that the record is clear. In the letter from the Air Transport Association it is stated that the system is not working. We have heard from security employees who have gone to work after two and a half hours' training and one with three years' training, that they do not know their jobs. It is not a laughing matter.

I ask the Minister again if he is prepared now in the name of finally doing the proper thing to accept the all-Party unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport that security at Canada's airports not be done on the cheap, that it be taken out of the hands of airlines and taken over by Transport Canada, the Government of Canada, to ensure that members of the travelling public can believe the Government when it tells them that the system is secure. Today, they cannot.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, responsibility for the airport security system is delegated to the airlines themselves. They have the responsibility for operating the security system. If their representatives are not satisfied with the way it is functioning, then they had better pull up their socks. To ensure that they do pull up their collective socks, I sent a letter to the presidents of our major airlines before this matter was on The Journal last night. Without the The Journal or the newspapers the hon. gentleman would not have a word in his mouth or a question to ask.

I have asked the presidents to come in. I am convening a meeting. I expect them to discuss and to review with me the situation with respect to wages, contract duration of the security companies, performance pay, turn-over rates, and other matters. We will see how the system works after they pull up their socks, as they should.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE OVER AIRPORT SECURITY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been aware for something close to three years now that many Members of the House, including the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan and myself, have raised repeatedly the issues of airport security and safety. The Minister knows that. We did not have to wait for The Journal. But I suppose a brick wall has to fall on the Minister, and I wish one would.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, instead of getting the Minister's jocular codswallop will he answer the question as to whether or not the Government will implement the unanimous report of the Standing Committee on Transport which recommended that the Government of Canada take over airport security, and operate it by the RCMP or other police forces, so that the airlines cannot save bucks, so that the security companies cannot make bucks, and so that the Minister cannot pass bucks?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is going to need more than brick walls to get into power.

Mr. Broadbent: That is pretty funny.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member is trying to be jocular, with not much success, I must say.

The position is that there was a report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport which is under consideration—

Mr. de Jong: Now you are being funny.

Mr. Crosbie: The system which is in effect has been in effect for many years, including when the main opposition Party was in power during the previous 20 years. There have been many improvements made to that system.

I have called in the presidents of the airlines to discuss how they could better operate the present system and to see whether it is necessary for the Government to expand its tentacles to take over this service or not. There are many countries in the world which operate just as we do.

I can give Hon. Members the nine steps that we have taken since the Air-India—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Riis: Spare us!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT IMPLEMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has still run around the question. I do not understand the mental block about doing something that the committee found—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Benjamin: You are right, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so.

The committee found airport security in London, Amsterdam, Frankfurt, and Paris being handled by the Governments of those countries and the airport authorities, and not by airlines. That is why we recommended unanimously that airport security be taken over and operated by the Minister of Transport and the RCMP. Will the Government implement that recommendation of the Transport Committee?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since coming into office three and a half years ago the Government has taken many steps to improve security at airports. Most of those steps have been resisted with vim and vigour by the New Democratic Party, particularly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —steps that we have taken for security checks that connect with access to restricted areas. It has been fought every inch of the way by the Hon. Member's Party and by the unions that it represents.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

EXODUS LINK CRISIS CENTRE—REQUEST FOR TERMINATION OF CONTRACT RENEWAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The Minister will know that the Pepino inquiry report identified serious violations of security and supervision procedures in breach of contractual obligations at privately operated halfway houses in Toronto. The Minister will also know that serious allegations, including illicit drug use, have been made against Exodus Link Crisis Centre by a former inmate and concerned residents of Parkdale—High Park.

In view of these serious allegations, will the Minister instruct his officials to terminate all negotiations for contract renewal with Exodus Link and can he tell the House what action he has taken to address the breaches in contractual obligation of other halfway house operations in Toronto?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is very interested and concerned about these houses. I can advise him and the House that we did not renew the contracts of either Montgomery House or Exodus Link. I have instructed and ordered that no further inmates be placed in those houses, and that an audit be done by Correctional Services of Canada. That has already started. When those audits are completed I will then make a decision as to what to do with those homes.

I can assure the Hon. Member that if they do not meet federal standards then they will not be allowed to reopen.

AIRPORTS

SECURITY—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Minister of Transport that the weakness of Canada's air safety system is due to the fact that the Government got rid of its responsibilities by shifting them over to the airlines. The Minister simply has no excuse for having refused for the past six months to implement the committee's recommendation. Mr. Speaker, here is my question to the Minister: When will he at long last face up to his responsibilities with respect to passenger safety and stop getting rid of them by throwing the ball in the airlines court which in turn send it to security agencies which finally pass the buck to badly trained employees? When will the Minister take his job seriously?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman should think a bit before he asks such a question. It was the Liberal Government of which he formed a part that instituted the present system. No one is getting rid of their responsibility.

The Department of Transport and the Government have delegated responsibility in this matter to the various airline companies at the airports across the country. We set the standards. We have a training institution at Cornwall which, as I stated a few moments ago, has trained 115 supervisors and trainers. We now have the training material, in audio-visual and in written form, to be used by those supervisors and trainers across the country.

We have spent an additional $60 million since the Air-India incident. We are doing everything possible, without entering into a complete police state, to improve security at our airports.

The system now in effect was initiated by the hon. gentleman's Party, and he now says that somehow we are getting rid of our responsibilities. What did the Government of the Hon. Member do, if that is the case?

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSUME DIRECT RESPONSIBILITY FOR SECURITY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right when he says that the existing inspection system was set up under a Liberal administration, but this was before the Air India incident which took place when the Conservative Government was in office. It was before the current world-wide increase in terrorist activities, and it was at a time when the country was administered by a responsible Government.

I simply want to ask the Minister when will he stop playing Russian roulette with the lives of passengers, assume his responsibilities, and carry out the inspections himself instead of relying on others to do it for him?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the following are some of the steps taken in the last two years to improve the inadequate procedures that were left behind by the derelicts who preceded us.

On airport policing and security services we spent an additional $7.5 million in 1986-87; $20.4 million on physical security; an additional $2.1 million on training; $2.9 million on security organization. The following year we spent an additional $8.4 million on security guards, physical security, emergency response, training, and so on, and altogether an additional 115 person years.

In addition to all the other steps that I have mentioned, I can now give the list of nine other steps: more stringent security controls on passengers, carry-on baggage, checking baggage and cargo—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could speak with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will send over the list to the Member.

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION OF CANADIAN FEATURE FILMS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I am sure that the Minister will join with me in congratulating last night's Genie nominees and winners, including Jean-Claude Lauzon and the cast and crew of Un Zoo la Nuit which, Mr. Speaker, is a film and not the Cabinet meeting of last night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Does the Minister agree with Monsieur Lauzon's statement, "Glory means nothing if people in Canada don't see our films"?

I wish to ask the Minister, why can Canadians not see their own feature films?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most sensible questions that we have had today, and I wish to thank the Hon. Member.

I wish to join him in congratulating those films and the producers who were winners last night. I may say to the Hon. Member, regardless of what the Liberal Party does to knock Telefilm, it was the funding of Telefilm for Un Zoo la Nuit. Telefilm and the National Film Board put $1.2 million into a film that cost $1.8 million. Telefilm put $163,000 into I've Heard the Mermaids Singing a film which cost $350,000 in total.

In other words, we are making the films and they are good ones. Now we must address the distribution system. That is what the legislation that I will be bringing in will do. I can say that Liberal cabinet Minister after Liberal cabinet Minister backed down from doing this. But I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, we will be creating a separate market for distribution rights for films in this country.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—TIME QUERY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I checked with Cineplex Odeon in Kingston last night. They are showing movies all week like Aloha Summer, and Three Men and a Baby, which is the American version of a French film. At Famous Players they are showing Good Morning Vietnam. I checked in Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, and Edmonton. The only place I could find Un Zoo la Nuit was in an arts theatre in Vancouver.

The Minister knows that only 3 per cent of screen time is taken up by Canadian feature films in Canada, which is a disgrace. When will she bring this policy in? How long do we have to wait? Every time I ask the question, she states that we have to wait. When? Give us a time.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I have said that we will be bringing this legislation in, and we will.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Miss MacDonald: I will look for the Hon. Member's support. I ask him, seriously, to consider the need for this type of legislation, and to give us the support that we need. I had superb support from the members of the New Democratic Party in putting copyright legislation through the House. I wish to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at this moment in the Senate the Liberals are holding up copyright legislation which is so critical—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH CLAIMANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration and it concerns the Government's action last night in relation to the Turkish claimants. Last night the Minister decided to suspend deportation against Turks living in the Province of Quebec, and is hoping that the provincial Government will show the moral leadership that this Government abandoned through applying the special measures in the immigration agreement between the Province of Quebec and the Government of Canada.

Given that some individuals within the group of 2,000 individuals in Canada live outside the Province of Quebec and that no other province enjoys the immigration agreement as Quebec does, can the Minister explain what action will be taken against those Turkish claimants who live outside Quebec? Can he give the House the assurance that one standard, consistent application will be fairly applied to those individuals?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend I am sure is aware of the fact that first of all, the immigration process does not operate on a community basis but on an individual case basis. Also, in 1977, his Government signed with Quebec the so-called Cullen-Couture Agreement . . .

An Hon. Member: Liberal!

Mr. Bouchard: Listen, please! Eleven years ago the Liberal Party signed with the Quebec Government an agreement dealing with Immigration and Quebec's right to select its own immigrants. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government advised us of its intention to ask for the review or assessment of a number of cases in Quebec. We have accepted to delay the execution of the deportation order while the Quebec Government is adivsing us of its decisions; until then, I feel it would be advisable to wait and see.

[English]

APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I accept the Minister's answer. Neither this Member nor this Party is criticizing the agreement that exists between the Province of Quebec and the federal Government.

My question was very straightforward, and the Minister did not answer that question. If the Minister was prepared to relax the regulations, that is, the deportation, because of legitimate concerns facing this group of 2,000 Turks, and given that within this group many individuals find themselves outside the Province of Quebec, will the Minister inform Canadians if we are going to have a consistent application of the regulations?

Will he specifically inform the House what action those Turkish individuals living outside Quebec can expect from the federal Government which must assume the federal responsibility because there is no provincial agreement to show the leadership that this Minister is willing to abandon?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I hear a Liberal Member talk about honesty and suggest that we should expedite matters, I feel compelled to ask him when will he help us overcome situations such as these by convincing his colleagues to adopt Bill C-55.

Some Hon. Members: Bravo!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote part of the statement which the Quebec Minister of Immigration made yesterday in the National Assembly: "Canada is one of the countries of the world where border controls are the least stringent". Now that the Senate has been blocking this Bill for the past eighteen months, some 10,000 people have entered this country and one year from now, the opposition will probably be asking us to grant them amnesties on the grounds that these people were not properly assessed under the law.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REFUSAL OF WORKERS TO PASS PICKET LINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the way in which the CPR is using the provisions of Bill C-85 to intimidate rail workers who are refusing to cross the picket lines set up by their fellow workers in another bargaining unit. The Minister knows, as we all know, that that legislation was put in place to enforce the back to work legislation, not to provide a club for the CPR to intimidate workers forever and ever in these kinds of situations which are not the same as the back to work legislation.

Will the Minister rise in the House today and indicate to the workers and to all Canadians the injustices of this action on the part of the CPR, and that that is not the intent of Bill C-85, and that CPR should cease and desist from using the Bill in that way?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-85 was not intended to intimidate anybody.

Pursuant to Standing Order 67(4), the Report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-74

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-74, an Act respecting the Protection of the Environment and of Human Life and Health.

If I may just add a few extra words, Mr. Speaker, the workings of this committee were somewhat unique in that during clause by clause analysis we passed 261 amendments which came from the Liberals, the New Democrats and government Members. It was a superb non-partisan exercise, an example of how the parliamentary process should function. I wish to congratulate all Members, our staff and all of our witnesses for a job well done.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motions to be made and passed immediately. First:

That the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to travel to Washington, D.C. from March 28 to 30, 1988, inclusive to study how the United States Government deals with deceptive or misleading advertising.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The caucus of the Liberal Party approves of that trip but I want to give notice to the Government that after Easter that kind of authorization to travel might be a little more difficult to obtain. We would like to think that we have 12 weeks of continuous work in this House. I invite the committees and anybody else to think seriously about travel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Minister of State have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX ACT

CHANGE IN ORDER OF REFERENCE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the second motion is on consent also. It is really a change of committee reference for Bill C-117.

I move:

That the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the third motion is on consent. It is a change of committee reference for Bill C-118. I move:

That the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariffs Act standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Minister of State have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-33—RETENTION OF FULL INDEXATION OF PENSION BENEFITS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and my honour on behalf of a number of constituents from the Windsor and district area to present two petitions, both duly certified, which ask of this Parliament to maintain full indexation of federal Public Service, Armed Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension benefits by rejecting Bill C-33.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO THE EXPULSION OF TURKISH NATIONALS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition that started with the name of one dedicated woman, Mrs. Diane Ducharme of Notre-Dame-du-Rosaire parish, and calls urgently upon Minister Bouchard to be so kind as to take the necessary measures.

This petition is remarkable in that one woman started it, followed by her husband who wanted to join her as did everybody, at the corner store. That woman went to Notre-Dame-du-Rosaire parish where everybody wanted to sign the petition.

I want to thank publicly that woman of great christian principles who spontaneously undertook to have this petition signed. And it is a great honour for me to table that petition, Mr. Speaker.

I also have the honour to table a second petition, and to make things easier—

[English]

I may help you in putting them all together according to the rules so I will not have to come back tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

This petition is highly interesting. It so happens that the person who asked me to table this petition had it signed by a multitude of people.

First I would like to recognize the Samuelson Company which now employs 250 to 300 people, with 10 per cent, or 21 persons being Les Turcs. The lady asked me if I would present this petition which was presented by her to all the employees in the park extension and surrounding area. It is a great honour for me to thank that person for her great devotion to that cause.

• (1510)

The reason I am saying more is that Canadians have to understand that already these people known as les Turcs are at work in the manufacturing industry in that district and are showing that they are so devoted that I am sure they will make excellent Canadians. I am very honoured to table this petition on behalf of Madam Samuelson.

PROTECTION OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege today to present a petition signed by a number of people from the federal constituency of Moncton, and particularly from the St. Bernard's Catholic Church parish.

The petitioners express their concern over the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision regarding abortions, and they humbly pray that the Government of Canada take whatever legislative action necessary to protect the rights of the unborn child.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and the privilege of entering a petition signed by residents of Chatham, Wallaceburg, Merlin, Dresden, Tilbury—

Mr. Fulton: Quite a bundle of them, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, quite a few—Kemptville all in Ontario. These petitioners point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate whatsoever from the Canadian people to enter into any trade agreement with the United States—

Mr. Fulton: You're right, too.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. Second, whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised whatsoever, and whereas the proposed trade agreement is denying Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermines the ability of Canada to build a society which is distinct from that of the United States of America, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this so-called free trade agreement with the United States.

OPPOSITION TO THE EXPULSION OF TURKISH NATIONALS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was most pleased to see on television last night and again this morning that the situation of the Turks in Montreal seems to be on the way to being resolved, although there is still no firm commitment or full understanding of the situation, and I can certainly appreciate the destabilization of these families.

I think the open and warm-hearted approach of Quebecers to these new Canadians-to-be is a wonderful demonstration of the multicultural reality that is the Canada of today. I would hope that the Minister, in looking at this issue, would find answers not only for the Quebec Turks but for those across the land.

I was pleased that my colleague mentioned Mrs. Samuelson, and I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that these petitions, one of which has 25 signatures and one of which has over 43 signatures, come from my riding, from people who live on streets like Plamondon, Desrosiers and Barclay.

I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and I thank everyone for having thought about these people's rights in this society.

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM SUSPENDED SALE OF ATVs

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition signed by 761 residents of the federal riding of Nunatsiaq in the eastern Arctic.

The people who signed this petition are extremely concerned that the federal and provincial Governments have suspended the sale of the cheaper, more versatile and lighter three-wheel all-terrain vehicle. As most people know, we do not have any roads up in the Arctic except just around houses, and these vehicles have been used for hunting and for work. Even little old ladies use them to haul their drinking water in the spring and summertime.

The petitioners are asking that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and this House review the decision to end the sale of the three-wheel versions with the hope that the eastern Arctic could be exempted from this suspension in Canada.

PROPOSED FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who indicate that the trade deal negotiated with the United States would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence.

They believe that the negotiated trade deal will certainly result in a loss of jobs in many sectors and regions of Canada. They are requesting that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the people of Canada through a national debate on the alternatives available to the country, and that this debate result in a national General Election prior to the signing of the agreement; that means prior to its taking effect on January 1, 1989.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Questions Nos. 205 and 265 could be made Orders for Returns, the returns would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 205 and 265 be deemed to have been made Orders for Returns?

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crombie that Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose yesterday, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) had the floor. Since he is not in the House, I now recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this very important debate on Bill C-93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has welcomed people from all over the world who come here to find freedom, social peace and economic prosperity. From the first immigrants, whether they were French, Irish or Scottish, down to the recent waves of nationals from Asian countries and including the great migration that took place after the war, when so many immigrants came over from Europe, they have all found in Canada a country that was growing and especially, Mr. Speaker, a country where dreams could become a reality.

Like thousands of people from all parts of the world who became Canadian citizens, my family and I are very grateful to Canada and Canadians for welcoming us as brothers and for giving us a chance to participate fully in the life of our community, our city and our new country.

[English]

I feel that the most concrete way in which we can express our gratitude is to pursue an active role in the country we have chosen. We want to continue to progress toward greater harmony and prosperity. Our objective is to create a Canada which reflects the ideals and ambitions of its citizens.

[Translation]

As members of Canada's various cultural communities, each one of us brings with him his own cultural baggage. Each one of us, Mr. Speaker, brings his traditions and knowledge which have helped to give Canada its unique character and a uniquely dynamic social and economic thrust.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the more our cultural communities are strong, alive and dynamic, the more Quebec and Canada will be strong and productive. This is why a great majority of Canadians support a generous, open and, most important, non-discriminatory immigration policy.

The family reunification program has always been the favourite of Canadians, we should re-establish this program and make it a cornerstone of our immigration policy. We must improve our system to make it more effective and reduce the frustrations of those who want to sponsor new immigrants. Many people in my riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou come to see me every week and say that they are willing to provide any guarantee that might be asked of them to have relatives, such as brothers and sisters, come to Canada. Unfortunately, existing legislation and current policies do not allow them to do so.

Mr. Speaker, we have to implement a policy which will allow people to sponsor their relatives and which will promote family reunification to ensure that our country will always remain properous and tolerant. We must also develop a fair and effective system to identify refugees and provide them with adequate facilities on their arrival. Finally, we must eliminate from the system influential but unscrupulous lawyers and advisors who throughout the world mislead thousands of candidates anxious to emigrate to Canada. Those people, who are more motivated by greed than by compassion, cause untold damage to the immigration candidates and to the reputation of Canada.

• (1520)

[English]

We must re-establish family class and family unification categories as the unquestionable corner-stone of Canada's immigration policy. We must introduce a more effective and expeditious processing to resolve the lengthy delays and frustration which Canadians encounter in sponsoring immigrants. We must establish and implement a refugee determination system that will provide an efficient and fair processing system. We must address the problem of immigrants who are a part of visible minorities, and especially women who face tremendous and unique challenges. We have to move swiftly and vigorously to eliminate those unscrupulous lawyers and advisors around the world who viciously misinform candidates about our immigration system.

[Translation]

We in Canada already have an advantage in being able to dialogue and deal with the rest of the world in two official languages. When we add to that the linguistic contribution of our cultural communities, we gain access to the richest markets in the world, such as the European Community, Japan, China, and so on. This dialogue between the various components of our society must be based on mutual knowledge combined with the recognition of our diversity and even sometimes our differences.

Mr. Speaker, pious wishes are all very well, but we have to be realistic and practice what we preach.

As the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) so aptly put it, there are no longer any majorities in this country. One way or another, all Canadians belong to a minority and we are all equal.

Mr. Speaker, here is what former Quebec Minister Paul-Gérin Lajoie had to say about a new immigrant:

> If we expect him to like our culture and feel at home in Canada we must not give him the impression that he has to shed his own identity and forget all about his own cultural background. He went on to say unequivocally: "The only way he can make a useful contribution to Canada is to remain faithful to his past. His integration will be all the more real that he be allowed to lead a full life in Canada. It will be worthwhile only to the extent that his fellow citizens benefit from his presence and find enrichment is such diversity."

In fact, the true purpose of multiculturalism is not only to give people a chance to become part of Canadian life, but also to live in Canada and continue to develop their own culture. As Canada and its cultural communities develop their cultural strengths, we will have a strong Canada, a prosperous Canada, a Canada that will be able to compete with the rest of the world.

Once we have perceived and acknowledged this fact, it is much easier to create a cultural dialogue and to acknowledge that we are all genuine parties to this dialogue. To fight racism, to harmonize diversity, to develop a consensus among diverging attitudes, and to make equal opportunity apply to all is no mean challenge, Mr. Speaker, for a country or for a people! A very recent study in the United States found that despite the heroic struggles of black leaders like Martin Luther King, the general perception was that racism continues to exist at a level almost as dramatic as it was during the sixties. The forms it takes may not be as visible as they were when segregation was still legal, but its impact remains practically unchanged, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, Canada is not impervious to such attitudes or to their impact.

By the year 2000, three out of five people in Montreal will be of ethnic origin. Today, it is already fifty per cent. This means that Canadians of all origins, especially those who live in big cities, will have to make a quick mental and behavioural adjustment to this situation, and especially to the phenomenon of visible minorities. This takes time and energy, Mr. Speaker, and above all, it requires tolerance.

We need moral and political leadership. Token appointments to second class positions and administrative bandaid solutions are a thing of the past. We must now define new directions, generate innovative ideas and identify today's pressing problems. We have indeed come a long way under previous Liberal governments. Today, however, we must take a hard look at new challenges. We must respond to the new aspirations of our children, of members of our cultural communities who represent a second or third generation. Their attitudes, needs and objectives are not necessarily those of their parents or yours, or mine Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The present Government has clearly not understood Canada's multicultural reality of the 1980s, and understands even less the coming reality of the 1990s. Despite the election promises of 1984, the situation has not improved. The lack of government direction has produced nothing but stagnation, confusion and, in my opinion, a deterioration which will, sooner or later, heighten social agitation.

[Translation]

It was just a matter of polishing his campaign image for our cultural communities. Last December, the Government tabled a Bill on multiculturalism, referred to everywhere as being without scope or substance. Instead of giving multiculturalism the kind of support bilingualism is given through the Official Languages Act, the Conservative Government's Bill merely provides a legislative framework for the existing program and extends the principles of multiculturalism to various branches of the Government. In three and a half years, Mr. Speaker, we have had three Ministers of State (Multiculturalism). That is how important this vital issue is to the Government!

Although the operation to launch this Bill was packaged in a glossy brochure, everyone realized the Government was merely making a symbolic gesture that could not hide the lack of substance. Mr. Speaker, throughout the Bill we read constantly: "The Minister may . . . ", but never a sentence that says: "The Minister shall . . . " Will our cultural communities always be at the mercy of a change in government or a change of ministers?

[English]

The same half-hearted approach was taken by the Government in the area of appointments.

• (1530)

With seemingly impressive numbers, the Government claims to have treated the cultural communities well in this regard. However, looking closely at the appointments, they have been at low levels in Crown corporations, the bureaucracy, and often in strictly advisory organizations.

Canada's cultural communities deserve better. To everyone's benefit, we should be able to find Canadians of ethnic backgrounds involved in all sectors, in decision-making roles at the highest levels of bureaucracy right up to the presidency of any Crown corporation.

[Translation]

So we are still at square one. The Conservative Government cannot be relied on to forge ahead, it has just tabled Bill C-93 last December, and that is as far as it will go. The Bill is a positive proof that it simply cannot see the sociological evolution and respond with fairness and compassion to the needs of Canadians, regardless of their origins.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, multiculturalism has always been part of the Liberal vision of Canada. Proud of its tradition and many achievements in promoting Canadian multiculturalism, the Liberal Party purposely envisages what Canada might be in the 1990s. Architect of the first and now the second stage of multiculturalism, our Party still maintains a broader long-range perspective whose strength is its very foundation and which is at one with the new generation of Canadians and Quebecers. This leadership reflects our conviction that a policy can never be an end in itself but an ever-fresh challenge which calls for unrelenting efforts and unconditional selflessness.

More than anyone else our Leader of the Opposition is aware of the tangible contribution and vital role of cultural communities in today's and tomorrow's society. What we want is to find dynamic avenues, still more worthwhile programs to be implemented with logic and coherence so as to maximize the scope and impact of all our initiatives in immigration and multiculturalism.

[English]

Most of the people came to a new land with an undying promise of hope and purpose. Therefore, we in this House must recognize one inescapable reality, namely, that history has placed you and me, Mr. Speaker, within a common border and under a common law. All of us, from the wealthiest and most powerful of men to the weakest and poorest of children share one precious possession—the name "Canadian".

[Translation]

And so, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my colleagues in this House that I am proud to be a Canadian. I am proud to belong to a cultural community. I am proud as well to contribute to a political Party which has always been conscious of the multicultural reality and which has never skimped in terms of measures designed to enable our communities to fulfil their aspirations within the great Canadian mosaic.

Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that we can achieve the dialogue of cultures, that we can shape the Canada of the 1990s to reflect its wide variety of citizens. Mr. Speaker, let us give ourselves the tools to build a Canada where we can stand united, and let us give ourselves the tools to build a Canada to our own image.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I wish to commend this legislation to the House. I want in advance to express my thanks to all Members of the House who have allowed this to come forward and to be concluded at this time. I look forward to the debate and discussions which will follow.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Penner, I rise on a point of order. I noticed in the reading of the Orders of the Day that this Bill was to be given second reading and then referred to a legislative committee. If my information is correct, there is a willingness on the part of my colleague, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), and myself, with the concurrence of the Minister, to proceed through all stages of the Bill this afternoon. It is not in any way a controversial Bill. It is, in the main, a housekeeping Bill. Although I want to reserve the right to make a few comments about this important agreement, I wonder if we could determine at this time that in fact there is agreement that we proceed through all stages.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding as well that we could, with the co-operation of the Minister and the Government side, proceed through all stages and ship this Bill off to the Senate today.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I had some conversations with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. The Government is certainly predisposed to move to report stage and third reading stage on this Bill.

However, we would like to have clarity in the House as to whether it is the intention of the Opposition and the Government to work together to pass Bill C-116 through all stages this afternoon as well. If there is not that predisposition, then I think we should move on to Bill C-116 and perhaps have time to return to this Bill later.

I seek some guidance from the House as to its willingness to commit itself to the passage of Bill C-116 through all stages this afternoon if we go through all three stages of Bill C-102.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that this Party is committed to passing through all stages today of Bill C-116 which amends the Unemployment Insurance Act. It provides paternity benefits and corrects the problem with premature births. I want to make that clear, to ensure that the Bill is passed through all stages today. We have committed ourselves to doing that and want to stick to that commitment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Mr. Penner: Agreed.

Mr. Hawkes: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I think we should finish this Bill first and then move on to Bill C-116.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will therefore recognize the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior for debate on Bill C-102.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak for an undue length of time, but I believe that even a non-controversial Bill on which there is all-Party agreement deserves some expanded explanation in order that Members of the House will know what we are doing and those who are observing today's proceedings will understand what Bill C-102 is about. It certainly cannot in any way be described as a major Bill, but it is nonetheless important. It is certainly important to the 2,500 Inuvialuits in the Western Arctic and the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation which represents this group of aboriginal people who live north of 60.

• (1540)

The Bill contains only one clause. That single clause amends the definition of agreement in a previous statute passed by Parliament in June, 1984. That previous statute to which I refer was the Bill that ratified the Inuvialuit final agreement which came out of a very protracted period of negotiations arising out of a claim in the Western Arctic put forward by the Committee on Original Peoples Entitlement, known as COPE. In the past we often spoke about the COPE agreement, the COPE negotiations and so on.

During one part of my parliamentary career it was my privilege—one that I consider to be a very special privilege—to assist in that negotiation process. That assistance in only a small way led to an agreement in principle which was reached prior to the election of 1979. That agreement was reached under the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. Hugh Faulkner, who was the Member for Parliament for Peterborough.

When the Clark government took office, this agreement in principle was put on hold in order to pursue and consider certain changes which the Government thought to be necessary. I will not dwell on that unduly, but there were some difficulties to which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) will probably want to refer if he is speaking on the Bill today.

However, when a new Liberal government took office in 1980 those difficulties were recognized and efforts were renewed to try to achieve a new agreement in principle and a final agreement. That did not happen quickly. While it took some time to achieve this, finally, on March 28, 1984, it was announced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. John Munro, that a COPE final agreement had been approved by Cabinet.

On June 4 it was signed by that Minister and the representatives of COPE. On June 26, the Western Arctic Inuvialuit Claims Settlement Act, Bill C-49, was passed by the House of Commons.

That agreement to which I referred was very large and complicated. Like any agreement that is drawn up in some haste, it had a number of minor difficulties, such as punctuation mistakes, spelling and typing errors and, in one case, an incorrectly drawn map. Like some of the first drafts of essays many of us have written in the past, it needed a lot of work. However, there was so much anxiety to get this agreed to and ratified by Parliament, many of those details were overlooked.

Last year, all of these necessary corrections were quite properly made by Order in Council in what we would call housekeeping changes. A few years prior to that Order in Council, another Order in Council permitted the Petroleum Incentives Program to be applicable to Inuvialuit lands. One can see immediately that that is a dead issue, for all intents and purposes, because since December 3, 1987—the last day to incur any eligible expenses under PIP—and April this year, all eligible claims must be in. To the best of my knowledge, this has no applicability to the Inuvialuit people.

However, I am sure that these two Orders in Council were of some concern to the Government because Orders in Council are always under the watchful eye of the statutory instruments committee. The statutory instruments committee is not at all pleased about changes being made which in fact ought to be properly ratified by Parliament.

Finally, Bill C-102 makes it clear for the future that when non-substantive amendments are agreed to, "consent by Canada" means precisely and exactly consent by Governor in Council. That is how the Statutory Instruments Committee prefers it. It wants parliamentary approval and parliamentary authority for Orders in Council, even if they are routine and housekeeping in nature. If an amendment in the future is non-substantive, it will be done by Order in Council.

Of course, if amendments in the future have anything to do with the terms in the agreement that actually affect benefits or any specific aspect of the agreement, then it must come before Parliament for ratification and approval.

Let me describe some of the principles and benefits contained in this agreement. The agreement involves 2,500 Inuvialuit people living in six Arctic settlements: Sachs Harbour, Holman Island, Paulatuk, Tuktoyaktuk, Inuvik, and Aklavik.

There were at least three main objectives that were recognized throughout the negotiating process as essential ingredients of a just and fair settlement. The first was the preservation of Inuvialuit culture and values within a changing northern society. The second was the preparation of the Inuvialuit to be equal and effective participants in the northern and national economies and in society in general.

The third being the promotion and the preservation of the Arctic's wildlife, biological productivity and natural environment. There are no groups of people in Canada, even the most ardent environmentalists, who have a better philosophical and ancient tradition in respect of preservation of the natural environment than do the Inuvialuit.

What about benefits? The agreement we are talking about intended to protect the rights of the Inuvialuit as Canadian citizens and as aboriginal people under the Constitution Act. It is very important to emphasize over and over again that negotiating these agreements which confer special rights, which I will mention in a moment, in no way cuts off or excludes these people from the normal rights of Canadian citizens. That is why I am such a strong advocate of the recognition of aboriginal rights and the settlement of aboriginal title. Even where it leads to a very high degree of self determination, in no way can it ever be described as some kind of pseudo or semi apartheid. It is because the larger society, the dominant society of which we are a part, in no way excludes access to any of its institutions or to any of its rights. It says that because aboriginal people had established themselves many thousands of years ago—in fact, a recent archaeological estimate is that the origin of these people in North America can be dated back 100,000 years. I am not about to become involved in archaeological disputes about time. I simply accept that aboriginal people were here since time immemorial. We can put whatever figure we want on it.

Aside from conferring or recognizing that they have the rights that all of us enjoy, what are these special rights that go into this agreement because of aboriginal title? Very briefly, they are wildlife harvesting rights, land ownership and management, surface and sub-surface rights and environmental protection; that is, screening and review bodies. Economic and social development is encouraged.

Then, there is the issue of compensation, which includes $152 million through annual payments over 13 years. That calculation, that agreement, is based on dollars at the time. Those dollars are calculated in 1977 terms. That takes into account inflation. The annual payments are to continue until 1997. There is an economic enhancement fund of $10 million, and $7.5 million for social development. Inuvialuit ownership of 91,000 square kilometres of land is recognized. There are surface and sub-surface rights to which I referred earlier of 11,000 square kilometres. There are also certain exclusive and preferential hunting and fishing rights, structures for wildlife management, a conservation regime for the Yukon, northern slope, including a national park west of the Babbage River and a territorial park on Herschel Island.

Those are just some of the items contained in this agreement that was ratified in June of 1984.

In return for the provision of a range of rights, benefits and compensation, what did the Inuvialuit do in exchange for that?

What they did was surrender their interest in and to certain lands in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and adjacent off-shore islands and waters. In other words, the Government of Canada recognized the existence in this part of Canada of aboriginal title. I refer to the Mackenzie Delta in the western Arctic. The right of Canada, or as we sometimes say the right of the Crown, has been affirmed by way of agreement which flowed from the negotiations and the settlement of a claim.

I cannot end my remarks without repeating once again, and I know I do it perhaps too often but I do so because I feel strongly about it, that it is my view that the Government of Canada still has it all wrong in its understanding of what constitutes aboriginal title. I repeat again categorically and outright that aboriginal title is not merely an awkward, embarrassing and difficult lien, a shadow or an encumbrance on the Crown right. That is what the experts in the Department of Justice would like us to believe. I cannot accept that.

They would argue that despite recognizing aboriginal title in those terms and agreeing to negotiate a settlement, the Crown right is and the Crown right remains at all times and in every instance pre-eminent. I say, not so. I disagree. Aboriginal title precedes the Crown right and where surrender has not occurred then that aboriginal title in my view takes precedence over the Crown right.

How I ask, historically, could suddenly the Crown right take pre-eminence over aboriginal title? How did that happen? It could only have happened on one kind of historical basis that I am able to understand; that is, if one asserts the divine right of monarchs and one says that the God that was believed in by those who came from Europe was a more powerful God. Therefore the power that the Crown had from that God, that right, remains pre-eminent.

All of that theological nonsense has long been thrown in the ash can of history. That is why we have democracies, Sir. Here in Canada we have one vestige of this divine right concept. It is what we use to hammer the aboriginal people over the head with to say, "Well, whatever you do in your negotiations with us do not think you are talking to an equal here. This is not an equal process at the negotiating table. We will give you something. We will toss you some bucks. We will give you some land and we may even let you fool around a little bit with running some of your own affairs. But do not for a moment get up on your high horse and think that your claim is in any way equal to our claim. Our claim, the Crown right, is always and forever pre-eminent".

To that I say nonsense. That point of view is being chipped away at little by little by little. We have on our side a number of important court decisions that have chipped away at it. Eventually, that ridiculous outdated structure of the pre-eminent Crown right based on the divine right of monarchs will come tumbling down. We in Canada will have to negotiate these outstanding aboriginal claims based on aboriginal title. We are going to have to sit down in a serious way to negotiate as equals.

More about that on another day, because that is a full debate. I wish to end now simply by saying that I have been in contact regarding Bill C-102 with the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation which advised me:

> This will confirm for you the substance of our phone call of Friday, December 4, 1987, indicating that the proposed legislation amending the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act has been discussed with us by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and meets with our approval. Your support for this Bill and efforts to achieve unanimous consent permitting expeditious passage in the House are greatly appreciated.

It is signed by Mr. Roger T. Gruben, Chief Regional Councillor for the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to participate in today's debate on an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act. As my friend from Cochrane—Superior has pointed out, the process with which we are dealing today is second reading and third reading debate on Bill C-102. It is timely in that several of the amendments have already passed into history. However, the amendment proposal is important for future business to be consensually and mutually negotiated and agreed upon between the Government of Canada and the Inuvialuit.

I am pleased to also understand that agreements have been reached between the Government of Canada, for example, the Government of the Yukon so that when future proceedings are taking place they are also involved in and informed of the process that is taking place.

My friend has covered some of the points. I think it is important for the record to have a bit more of the history of the original settlement Act, what it means, who was involved and how it came to be.

The Committee for Original People's Entitlement, COPE, as it was widely known in the media and here in the House of Commons and in committees, was the key structure that dealt with the negotiations process in the original agreement that was signed by the then Prime Minister Trudeau and Mr. Munro as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Simon Reisman was the chief negotiator for Canada, Dennis Patterson was for the Government of the Northwest Territories. He is now the leader of that Government. Chris Pearson represented the Government of the Yukon. He has now gone from politics. For the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement at that time it was Peter Green, who was President. He signed together with Charles Haogak, Sam Raddi, Billy Day, Eddie Gruben, Bertha Ruben, Annie Gordon, Elsie Klengenberg, Nellie Cournoyea, Andy Carpenter, Robert Kuptana, Nelson Green, Mark Noksana, Renie Arey, Agnes Semmler, and Bob DeLury, the Chief Negotiator for COPE. At that time it was witnessed by Richard Nerysoo, Maurice Lafontaine, Michael Flavell, and Randal Pokiak.

• (1600)

It was an important moment in time. The Chief Negotiator, Bob DeLury who was living in the area of Burns Lake, was a wildlife biologist at the time. He got involved, and became the Chief Negotiator. He is still there and still very much involved.

COPE entered into the agreement with Canada on June 5, 1984. It was tabled in the House on June 19, 1984. It was passed by the House on June 26.

In negotiations between the two parties, Canada and the Inuvialuit it was quickly realized that the amendment we are dealing with today was necessary within days of the agreement being passed here in the House.

Let me return to that moment in time and discuss what brought that on. The negotiations began to proceed following the landmark 1972 Supreme Court of Canada decision on the Calder case that was referred to by my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). It was immediately prior to that time, under Jean Chrétien, the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that a White Paper was being developed on how to handle aboriginal matters in Canada. What reversed the flow of what was going on in Parliament, particularly coming from the Government, was the Calder case.

The justices of the Supreme Court of Canada unanimously found and determined the ongoing existence of aboriginal title in Canada. They also came to a remarkable conclusion in terms of the Nishga case in British Columbia, because they split three-three. They wanted to send as strong a message as possible to Parliament to get on with negotiations. It was not too long after that remarkable Supreme Court of Canada decision that a new federal policy was proclaimed in Ottawa, on August 8, 1973, reversing the assimilationist policies that had been in place since the last major treaties were signed in the past century.

There is an old saying of which I am reminded from time to time as to what happened following the Supreme Court of Canada decision, which is, "Nothing clears the mind like the prospect of hanging at dawn". I wish Members to think of that for a moment, because I hope that we do not have to have another Supreme Court of Canada decision, whether it is on the Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en case or some other case, to reverse the folly of the present road that the Government of Canada is going down. We are almost back to those slippery slopes of 1971-72 where the assimilationist dogma and politics overtook the proper consideration of what treaties are, and what the historic relationships between Canadians and the First Nations of this continent have long been.

The agreement in principle took some years to reach. It was reached on October 31, 1978. Some problems have arisen in the past decade a result of ineffective and, at times, non-existent communication between Ottawa, the federal Government, the Inuvialuit, the principal communities in that area, and also a lack of communication between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I hope that is something that does not continue to occur. Hopefully there will soon be provinces north of 60° and self-government to a much greater extent north of 60°, and those types of communication problems will be less likely to occur.

The Inuvialuit final agreement contained 18 principal points. My friend alluded to the size of the land, some 35,000 square miles in title fee simple absolute, full sub-surface rights to 5,000 square miles, to a seventh of that land. On the other 30,000 square miles the Crown holds rights to gaseous, solid or liquid minerals, principally natural gas, oil, and that type of mineral prospecting that has gone on for so long in, around, and off the mouth of the Mackenzie River.

Compensation was arranged of $44 million in 1977 dollars. Approximately $12 million was borrowed by the Inuvialuit and their negotiators to complete the process of negotiations. At present the full amount in inflation-protected dollars is $152 million of which $73 million has been put out. There is $73 million permitted yet to be outstanding.

I wish to touch on some of the other components of the agreement, because it is the amendment with which we are dealing today that will deal with anything that comes up in relation to these. As listed, they are principles, definitions, agreement and legislative approval, and citizens' rights and programs. Point 5, eligibility and enrolment, is the key, and it is what is being held up particularly at this point in time; corporate structures, Inuvialuit and Crown land, Husky Lakes/Cape Bathurst Areas, selection of Inuvialuit lands, participation agreements, environmental impact screening and review process, Yukon North Slope, wildlife compensation, wildlife harvesting and management. My friend touched on that point. There are exclusive rights in relation to some species such as muskox provided to the Inuvialuit and preferential rights to other species.

Many Canadians will be interested in the principles on which wildlife harvesting and management are based. It is found at page 25 under the heading "Principles" which states:

> 14. (1) A basic goal of the Inuvialuit Land Rights Settlement is to protect and preserve the Arctic wildlife, environment and biological productivity through the application of conservation principles and practices.
> 14. (2) In order to achieve effective protection of the ecosystems in the Inuvialuit Settlement Region, there should be an integrated wildlife and land management regime, to be attained through various means, including the coordination of legislative authorities.

It lays out exactly how that will be met. One is reminded that the bulk of this was drafted a decade or more ago. We now see it in documents such as "Our Common Future", the Brundtland Report, and other proposals that have been discussed recently in the House. A report was released earlier this week which discussed the need for an Arctic Basin council to start bringing together not only the aboriginal peoples of the Arctic but the nations of the Arctic in a move that hopefully the globe will see before too long in terms of scientific and environmental co-operation among those nations, to a greater extent on polar bears, birds, and on the greenhouse effect, and so on, but also in terms of the demilitarization and denuclearization of the Arctic. This is a role that certainly the aboriginal people and most Canadians would like to see.

One also has to keep in mind the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in the House two years ago when he was speaking on the effect that the voyage of the Polar Sea had had on Canadians. The Secretary of State for External Affairs planted the seeds and the reality of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic on the backs of the aboriginal people who, as my friend pointed out, for millennia—not thousands, but tens of thousands of years—have inhabited the Arctic portions of Canada.

We should keep in mind that Members from all sides of this House have recalled time and again the important role played by the aboriginal people, particularly in relation to security and sovereignty in the Arctic. That is something that is very clearly part of the Inuvialuit final agreement in terms of the western Arctic. One can hope that very soon the other agreements north of 60° will be signed, ratified, and recognized as binding treaties between nations that are protected by Canada's Constitution.

The other points I wish to raise in terms of the agreement are financial compensation, economic measures, Inuvialuit social development program, arbitration, agreement approval process, and transitional and consequential provisions, and the annexes to which in part I have referred.

• (1610)

My friend pointed out that some parts of the amendment have already died, namely, the PIP grant reference and the second amendment. The importance of having a procedure for amending without always having to come to the floor of the House is something that perhaps should have been looked at before. I will come in a moment to the other option that was proposed but is something thankfully the House did not choose to pursue.

The problem to be addressed today results from the technical drafting problems, in particular Section 5 as it relates to eligibility and enrollment. These lists for enrollment and membership exist but cannot be fully implemented due to the drafting impediment. It affects the approximately 2,500 Inuvialuit.

Interestingly enough, I am advised that most of the Inuvialuit were historic residents as recently as the last century farther west along the coast which is now Alaska. Dealing with the problem of wording has been extremely slow. This was realized in 1984. It could have been dealt with then through what I was referring to a moment ago, a negative resolution procedure here on the floor of the House. Proposed changes or amendments would be tabled in the House. The Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) would table them and we would then have a 30 day shot gun clause where 50 MPs or more got together and objected. This would bring about a negativing in the House which would simply send the Minister and the Inuvialiut back to the starting gate again. It would have been a preposterous and extremely slow way of dealing with a matter in respect of which it has taken almost four years to get us to where we are today.

Amendments will be made by mutual consent by the Inuvialiut and Canada with consultation as outlined in letters to the Government of the Yukon and the Government of the Northwest Territories.

The key components of what is before us today were tabled June 19, 1984 by the Minister. First was Document 322-7/20 which is the basic document. On December 14, 1987 the Minister tabled Document 332-4/43, which was the Order in Council from 1985. Document 332-4/43 (a) was the Order in Council from 1987 and Document 332-4/43 (b) was the amending agreement dated April 11, 1987. Of course Document (d) is the other key component. Any other amending agreements made pursuant to Subsection 3(13) will be able to proceed to Order in Council by mutual consent without the requirement for another Bill, such as Bill C-102 to come before the House.

I am pleased to have had a moment to add a little bit to what my friend the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) had to say, and to what the Minister had to say. I know my friend, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) has some remarks to make.

Hopefully what we do here today is in the interests of the Inuvialuit, the 2,400 souls who I am sure have been waiting with bated breath these many years to get this activity finally completed by the House.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will keep to the Bill a little more than perhaps did the previous speaker. I want to point out that this Bill does three things. It incorporates into law three agreements that have already been made between the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation and the Governor in Council of Canada.

The first one of these deals would be retroactive application of PIP grants on certain Inuvialuit lands. Inuvialuit lands are private lands. They are not public lands anymore. Title to them has been conveyed to the Inuvialuit organizations. We no longer have PIP grants. They went the same way as the rest of the National Energy Program, fortunately, but apparently there must have been applications made for PIP grants for work done on Inuvialuit lands.

When we get to Committee of the Whole perhaps the Minister would be kind enough to explain how this comes about, how much money is involved, how many dollars worth of PIP grants are to be given, if they have not been given already, and to which corporations.

The second thing we do in this Bill is to correct 14 pages in all of errors that appeared in the Inuvialuit final agreement. There are reams and reams of errors that came to light and now have to be corrected. Most of them are of a typographical nature. Quite a few deal with land descriptions, wrong latitudes and longitudes. This came about as a result of the undue haste toward the summer of 1984 by the then Minister, the Hon. John Munro. He knew in the election to be held later that year that he and his Government would stand very little chance of re-election and he wanted to get a feather in his hat. He pushed this matter before he had dotted all the i's and crossed all the t's.

It is also interesting to note that at that time the great Liberal negotiator was none other than our good friend Simon Reisman. In occurs to me that if these 14 pages of errors are a sample of that hon. gentleman's handiwork, I hope he has done a little better with the free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: I know when we discussed the Inuvialuit Bill way back on June 26, 1984 some of those errors were already apparent, especially those dealing with land descriptions. I pointed them out at that time and I remember questioning the Parliamentary Secretary in Committee of the Whole. He said, "Don't nit-pick. Don't bother with those little errors. They are not important. You should have faith in the negotiators. They have done a good job. It is not for you or I to read through the fine print. We can leave that up to the negotiators and the people in the government departments. What is the difference between 68 degrees and 69 degrees? It doesn't make any difference."

I stand here today and feel somewhat vindicated. I have the pleasure of being able to say, "I told you so". It doesn't do me much good, because it is all water under the bridge now, but it gives you a nice feeling.

The third thing today is to amend the amending formula. Under the old Article 3(13) you need an agreement by Canada and the IRC. Presumably that meant an active Parliament to make any change at all. Now Canada is represented by the Governor in Council and the IRC can be done by the Order in Council route. When you have these very complex lengthy agreements you need some form of flexibility. At the same time, I share some of the concerns mentioned by the previous two speakers.

In the Canadian Constitution, if you look at Sections 25 and 35, Mr. Speaker, you will see that we have constitutionally enshrined, not treaties and land claims settlements but the rights that flow from there. If you want to make a change there, you have to go by the whole amending formula—seven out of ten provinces and 50 per cent of the population. This requirement will shortly need to be changed to unanimity. Then at the other end of scale we are making it extremely easy. All you need is a little Order in Council to make changes. I do not know if we have the balance right. It all depends, I guess, on what you can change by the Order in Council route. Perhaps when the Minister speaks in committee he can explain to us what types of changes will be made under the new Subsection 3(13) and what types of changes cannot be made by that simple route.

Perhaps you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, for looking back just a little over what has happened in the last three and one half years or so since the land claims agreement came into effect. I do not want to take up too much of the House's time doing this, nor do I not want to address every issue that I addressed in the lengthy speech I gave on June 26, 1984. At that time I pointed out the bureaucratic nature of the agreement.

It is unfortunate that native organizations negotiating these land-claim agreement so often become the mirror images of the government bureaucracies with which they have to deal. We end up with an extremely complex and bureaucratic settlement which needs continuous administration. I made that point at the time, and that has come to light over the years.

There was a myriad of boards and committees to be established to administer the settlement. Now the Inuvialuit regional corporations and the others that were set up are in the process of trying to amalgamate to become more workable. At that time, one of my main points was the collective rather than the individual nature of the settlement and what that would likely lead to. I think I deserve at least seven out of 10 on my predictions on that score.

What has happened now is that those people who are part of the system, members of the bureaucracy, or those who hold elected positions within the Inuvialuit organizations, seem to be doing okay, but it is debatable whether or not the people who are not part of that system, the ordinary guys on the street, so to speak, are getting a lot of advantage from the settlement. When I talk to people, I find that there are always questions in their minds about where the money goes. We know that there is approximately $170 million involved in this and I get asked questions like why some of that money is down in Bermuda instead of in Inuvik. People question consultant fees and those kinds of things.

Perhaps there is some room for improvement. Perhaps we should learn from the mistakes we are bound to make as we negotiate these settlements. We have the James Bay and the Inuvialuit settlements, and with the ones that come, perhaps we could learn from the mistakes that have been made and try to get a settlement from which everyone can benefit, not just a new class of people that grows up for administrative purposes.

Now I want to make a few points about one of the things that was not addressed four years ago, but which ought to have been addressed, and this is the question of Mr. William Nasogaluak, proprietor of Canadian Reindeer Limited. Perhaps I should explain what went on in the past.

In the 1920s, I believe, the Government of Canada brought reindeer in from Alaska, drove them overland to the area around Tuktoyaktuk and operated the herd as a government herd for quite a few years. Eventually, it was privatized. It was sold to private individuals and with the reindeer went property in the form of grazing rights. Mr. Nasogaluak acquired the herd and the grazing rights. However, under the Act and under the Inuvialuit final agreement, his property rights, those grazing rights, were expropriated, taken away from him, without any compensation whatsoever. I cannot recall any other instance of a citizen of Canada being treated so badly by his or her Government.

Were the Canadian Bill of Rights to have paramountcy, as the Hon. John Diefenbaker originally had wanted, and were property rights to be included, as they ought to be in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms under the Canadian Constitution, what happened to Mr. Nasogaluak could not have happened or there would have been an automatic recourse at law.

I feel that the Government of Canada has a moral obligation to make sure that Mr. Nasogaluak is treated properly. We recall that Simon Reisman is quoted to have said, when this was brought to his attention, "What's 15,000 reindeer to the Government of Canada?" It is quite a bit to me, and the property rights of one individual Canadian are important to me.

Can you imagine, Sir, what would have happened if the person whose land had been expropriated had not been a reindeer herder from Tuktoyaktuk but a rancher from Alberta, a farmer from Saskatchewan or someone whose apartment house in downtown Toronto had been expropriated without any compensation?

When we were discussing this matter four years ago in Committee of the Whole, I asked Mr. Gingras, the Parliamentary Secretary who was then representing the Government, the following:

> May we have the assurance of the Government that it will deal honestly and faithfully with the owners of the reindeer herd so that those owners do not find themselves at a loss as a result of the passage of this Bill?

The answer was:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker.

That undertaking given by the Liberal Government of the day was a promise broken. Nothing was done.

The current Minister has tried to get Canadian Reindeer Limited and the Inuvialuit together to negotiate an agreement whereby the Inuvialuit would take over the reindeer herd at a reasonable price. There is an agreement by one who acted on behalf of the Government of Canada, Mr. Gunther Abrahamson, as to what the value of that herd was, but the Inuvialuit would never offer anywhere near the figure that was agreed to. I would like to have seen the Government step in to provide that extra little bit to make it up. We have $170 million being paid out pursuant to the agreement, so what is another couple of million dollars to provide proper compensation? However, that was not happening.

I understand some of the difficulties the Minister has faced. Although there is an undoubted moral obligation on the part of the Government of today, regardless of the fact that the Party in office has changed, I understand that the advice of the Department of Justice is that outside of a judicial finding which might arrive in the future, there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government to make that compensation at the present time.

What we have done is to force Mr. Nasogaluak to go to the courts to get recompense or fair treatment. Then, of course, if someone were to ask a Minister of the Crown about the matter, he could say that it is before the courts, we cannot do anything. This is something about which I feel extremely strong. I think justice must be done, and I look forward to the opportunity we will have to question the Minister on this issue when, very shortly, we get to the Committee of the Whole proceedings so that he can tell us what he is now doing and what he will continue to do to make sure that justice will be done.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Agreement

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to thank my hon. friend from Western Arctic. He has posed the three questions that need to be answered.

The first aspect is that with PIP gone, as of April, in terms of any claims, what is the history with respect to the Inuvialuit?

• (1630)

The second question deals with what type of changes will go through Order in Council and what type will require legislation. Is there a distinction there?

Finally, there is the matter of the Canadian Reindeer herd. My hon. friend from the Western Arctic said the Liberal promise had been broken. I found that curious because when the Parliamentary Secretary said "Yes", it was June 26, 1984, and a few weeks later there was an election. It is very difficult for a Liberal Government to fulfil a promise when it is not returned to power by the electorate. However, I accept the argument that a commitment is a commitment and I take the view that a commitment is passed on from one administration to the other. It is a moral commitment and I hope the Minister will tell us that he will not fall back on the legalistic point of view, and that the Government will do what is right.

Those are the questions that were on my mind and I thank my hon. friend from the Western Arctic for articulating them so precisely.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, on the Hon. Member's first question, basically the legislation put forward did not allow for PIPs which were obtainable from Crown land to be obtainable from what was now Inuvialuit land. The proposal, and both Members asked about this, retroactively made it legal to have the PIPs which would have applied to Crown land now apply to Inuvialuit land even though PIPs expired as of April. I am attempting to obtain the dollar figures. I have asked my officials to get this information for Members before we adjourn. If I am not able to do that, I will communicate it in writing to Members who have expressed an interest.

On the second question, all amendments would be by Order in Council. However, as the Hon. Member knows, we would not entertain basic changes that would fundamentally alter the agreement signed between Canada and the Inuvialuit.

On the third question, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, and I have had discussions on this in the past. The history of the Canadian Reindeer herd has been reviewed by this House. Members who are familiar with it understand that in the Inuvialuit settlement agreement about half the grazing area available to Canadian Reindeer had been transferred to Inuvialuit land. Both my predecessor, the Hon. Member for Rosedale, and I have tried to initiate discussions between two private parties to resolve the concern. I met with both the owner of Canadian Reindeer and the Inuvialuit leadership. We put forward the possibility of arbitration. We hoped both parties would agree to accept binding arbitration even though it was not incumbent upon them to do so. As long as the agreement was there, we would bring into play the experts who could assess the value of the herd at the time. That was acceptable to Canadian Reindeer but not to the Inuvialuit.

In the discussions we have had since, I have attempted to fulfil Canada's obligations in other ways. I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that I found it a bit difficult. The owner of Canadian Reindeer had, as I understand it, an opportunity to make sales. The Government of the Northwest Territories made those sales very difficult by looking at the export permit which the owner had. At the same time, while Canada was not objecting to the sale, Canada did reserve the right to repurchase 3,000 of the herd. I think that was prudent.

Right now, as my colleague from Western Arctic indicated, there are court actions under way. Starting in May, 1987, the Inuvialuit initiated legal proceedings against Canadian Reindeer Limited in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories. Canadian Reindeer in turn launched an action against Canada on September 2, 1987. It also filed a third party notice, I gather, in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories. That does make enunciation of ways to resolve this dispute a little more difficult, as Hon. Members will understand. I can say only that we have attempted to arbitrate and would be prepared to continue to do so. I believe there is a business opportunity in the Northwest Territories involving Canadian Reindeer Herd Limited and I hope we are able to maintain that business opportunity.

I am sorry to be taking so long but I find it difficult to explain the discussions between two private parties as they came to pass through the signing of the final agreement.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I listened with care to what the Hon. Minister had to say concerning amendments associated with, I take it, basically the 18 essential elements. If it is related to the elements, then by mutual consent new amendments can be dealt with through Bill C-102. What I am wondering about, though, concerns additional matters. Let us take self-government as an example. Is the Minister suggesting that if there is going to be a major add-on such as self-government or something else in relation to the Inuvialuit—or, for that matter, other groups, but let us deal with the Inuvialuit for the moment—then that would require either a constitutional process or a new Bill coming through the House? Is that what the Minister is saying with respect to major new add-ons?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the self-government provisions which the Hon. Member finds in the final agreement will stay. However, any other form that would change the structure of the self-government would have to be either through processes that recognize other types of self-government and be done in the same form, or else it would have to be done through legislation. I would consider that to be a major deviation from what was negotiated in the final settlement.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, different figures have been sort of bobbled around. I wonder if the Minister could clarify them for the record. How much has been actually paid out under the agreement and how much more is yet to be paid out? Hopefully we could have those figures in 1982 dollars, 1977 dollars, or whatever.

Are the basic elements in the Inuvialuit agreement the essential elements which the Minister sees as being in the other comprehensive claim negotiations which are going on at this time, or are there others? Will it will require new legislative action for the Inuvialuit to make major new add-ons? We are talking about only certain things related to the elements that are there that can be dealt with through the Order in Council route by Bill C-102. Are those other comprehensive negotiations that are going on in the Yukon, B.C., and elsewhere, restricted by that?

Is the Minister suggesting that the Government policy is that if one is to look at the collective land title and rights box of the Inuvialuit agreement that is seen as being one contained route one could have it passed through the House as legislation? Or can those negotiations which are presently under way have additional elements such as some broader definitions of self-government? As the Minister well knows, that is what some of the negotiations are dealing with, as well as issues such as fishing rights, land rights and so on.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, in response to the Hon. Member's first question, $74 million, current value, has been paid out which, I understand, leaves $76 million, current value.

With regard to the Hon. Member's other point, the most direct way to put it would be that self-government or definitions of self-government which cannot be obtained through other processes cannot be obtained through comprehensive claims. That would, I think, be fair to say. The comprehensive claims process is not in place to put into law that which cannot be obtained through other negotiations and by other aboriginal people.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would like just a little more clarification. I am sort of coming back to the Inuvialuit agreement as a box containing, you could say, 20 elements and the annexes. However, are the 18 essential principles the essential principles, both legal in terms of absolute title fee simple and in terms of fishing rights, wildlife rights, compensation and so on, that are being considered by government policy to be the basic components of the other six comprehensive claims negotiations which are presently under way?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the Inuvialuit settlement was reached before the claims policy which was announced in December of 1986. There is, I believe, more opportunity for an expanded box—but I would suggest it is still a box—for discussions and recognition of land which is important to communities plus recognition of land which has been used historically for hunting and trapping.

With regard to the defining of land into different zones, there is a limitation to quantum depending on the number of zones and the type of selection made.

The ownership of subsurface on all lands is not available. However, certain lands can be selected for ownership of subsurface. That is an additional flexibility which I would see in the other comprehensive claims agreement which are not and were not available in the Inuvialuit agreement.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, returning to the reindeer question, am I to understand that at the present time the Government of Canada is doing nothing to try to resolve this issue?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the attempt to have a binding arbitration between the two private parties, the owners of Canadian Reindeer and the Inuvialuit, I made an offer after meeting with both the owner and the Inuvialuit that we would enter into binding arbitration and assist them in that. That offer was accepted by Canadian Reindeer and not found to be acceptable to the Inuvialuit. After that time, in May of 1987, if I am correct, action was initiated in court.

At this time I am prepared to assist in any form of mediation, but I would not become involved in supporting a case or discussions with either party which would involve the actions taken in court until that action is either concluded or withdrawn.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, one of the problems is that the value of the herd is likely to be in decline. There is undoubtedly a lot of poaching going on. The owners of the herd are unable to have a proper harvest because they are scared that as soon as they move the abattoir up there and get it hooked up and ready to go and bring in the slaughterhouse workers, an injunction will be slapped on them. There is a big investment involved in starting up and they would lose many tens of thousands of dollars.

Proper management techniques cannot be applied to the herd and revenue cannot be generated from it by way of meat sales and there is therefore no money to reinvest into the herd. Canada is the loser.

This was a great, successful experiment. We ought to have a reindeer industry in Canada. There are other places in the North where it could be applied. Prices are excellent as a result of the unfortunate circumstances in Europe with the Chernobyl disaster. We should be able to capitalize on that but that is not taking place.

I am afraid that if the legal proceedings run their full course by the time a settlement is made by the court there will be nothing left for anyone.

I know that if the Government of Canada really wants to take it upon itself to do something, whether to change the Canadian Constitution or to enter into a free trade agreement with the United States, it can do it. If the will is there the Government of Canada can do virtually anything. Is it not possible to try to open up negotiations again or to have another go around, another shot at it?

So far the tack taken by the Government appears to have been to get the Inuvialuit and Canadian Reindeer together to negotiate some kind of deal between them. However, I do not think there is any moral obligation on the Inuvialuit to do that if they do not want to. It would be nice if they would, but the moral obligation is on the Government of Canada, not on the Inuvialuit. If the Inuvialuit say, "We do not want to play ball", surely the obligation rests on the Government of Canada to address the issue in another way.

Can we not have another go around at this? Can he not appoint someone to look at it again and meet with the people involved to find out what is happening and see whether there is another avenue of approach? Perhaps he can meet again with some of the principals involved.

• (1650)

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, let me answer the last question first. I find it very difficult to enter into negotiations. I sincerely believe that there must be a willing buyer and willing seller in order to conclude the agreement.

As the Hon. Member knows, an offer was made of $1.2 million. The independent assessment was that the herd was worth over $5 million. I believe my hon. friend is saying that the Government of Canada should enter into it and make up the difference. I understand and appreciate the way in which he expresses his concern.

Since that offer took place I discussed it with both the Inuvialuit and the owner of Canadian Reindeer. That is when I put forward a proposal in a letter to both parties in which I suggested that I would like to see a contract outlining the conditions for the sale and purchase of the Reindeer herd which is mutually acceptable. I went on to say: "This contract could contain certainly a clause whereby the purchase price would be established through a binding arbitration procedure".

When there are two private individuals, one selling and one buying, it is very difficult for the Government of Canada to come into the middle without some recognition that an arbitrator would be required to make a binding decision. It has been further complicated since that time by the court actions taken by both parties.

I can assure my colleague that I have not washed my hands of this, but I do find it very difficult to be involved in it at this time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I want to return to a point I was raising with the Minister a moment ago. It concerns changes that can be made. As I understand the amending agreement now, it can only be done with mutual consent. Therefore, if the Inuvialuit or the Government has an idea, they must find a mutually agreeable way to word any change. It then gets the imprimatur of Order in Council and becomes added to the agreement.

Clause 3(2) of the agreement states that: "For greater certainty it is the intention of the parties that this agreement be a land claims agreement within the meaning of Section 35(3) of the Constitution Act, 1982".

Does this mean that the only way the Government can change the agreement is through legislation before the House, with the exception of some subsections? For example, for the expropriation of land there are certain powers provided to allow the Government to take certain steps.

In relation to the legal and constitutional nuance, however, is this a treaty or is it an agreement? As I read it, it is not protected by the Constitution of Canada.

If one looks at the wording, it is the intention that it be considered as such, but I would like some clarification from the Minister. Is it protected by the Constitution? What is the difference between the Inuvialuit agreement and a treaty like Treaty 8?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, as the Hon. Member knows, the agreement states that it is considered to be under the protection of the Constitution of Canada. That is the way it reads and that is the consideration of the Government of Canada. It is considered to be under the protection of the Constitution of Canada.

It is a piece of legislation under that clause of the Constitution which was considered by the House to have protection in the Constitution.

I do not want to put words in my colleague's mouth, but I think he was asking if it is recognized as a treaty. It is recognized as having protection under the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I have one further question regarding the kind of changes that can use the new amending formula. In the agreement between the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation and the Government of Canada, as signed by the Minister and Mr. Roger Gruben, there is reference to the fact that where an amendment to this agreement requires consequential legislation to achieve its effect, Canada agrees to take all reasonable steps to put in place suitable legislation forthwith.

Could the Minister explain clearly what is envisaged within the ambit of that phrase "consequential legislation"?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the only example I can give my colleague at this time is the Parks Act, which may need to be changed to bring into effect the changes that are contemplated or could be made. That is the only one I can identify.

The Government of Canada will make those consequential amendments to other Acts. I do not believe it would be substantially changing the agreement, just keeping it current.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take one more try at finding out from the Minister the difference between the Inuvialuit agreement, which is considered to be protected by the Constitution of Canada, and a treaty like Treaty 8. What are the legal and constitutional differences?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, I can only inform my colleague that this is considered to have the protection of the Constitution of Canada. Treaties are identified in the Constitution of Canada. I suggest that that is the difference.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to learn a little bit more from the Minister. If the Minister were an Inuvialuit, would he prefer to be protected by an agreement such as the Inuvialuit agreement with this amending formula, or by a treaty?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the point is that this is a land claims agreement which is considered to have the constitutional protection. The other is a treaty which is identified as having constitutional protection.

Not being an Inuvialuit, I would have a great deal of difficulty making that decision. However, when I view the land claims settlement which is considered to have constitutional protection or a treaty which is identified, I think they are equal.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 be read the second time.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and, by unanimous consent the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—"Disentitled"

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say about the Bill. First, I wish to congratulate the Minister for moving so expeditiously on a particular issue that caught the attention of the nation. I think it is fair to say that when Mr. McInnis visited Ottawa and his picture was flashed around the country with his baby I realized that underneath the Minister's tough exterior beats a heart that any socialist might be proud to have.

There are those of us who might be so unkind as to suggest that in spite of all the complaints and the recommendations of the Boyer Commission report, equality for all, the standing committee report and the forget commission report, the Government ought to move in the direction of establishing parental care within the Unemployment Insurance Act. For all these last four years nothing could move the Government or the previous Minister, who is now the Minister of Communications, to move in this direction. The Government did not see fit to move.

What adults and politicians were not able to achieve by logic or by consensus a small baby was able to achieve. I think that is appropriate. I wish to congratulate the Minister for having responded in such a human fashion and in such a sensitive fashion to correct this need.

It happened fortuitously that the other aspect of change which is included in the Bill came about at the same time when two women, one in Halifax and one in Vancouver, gave birth prematurely. The babies had to stay in hospital while the mothers went home. They, of course, went back to work and when the babies came home from the hospital they went down to the UI office to file for their maternity benefits. However, they discovered to their amazement that they could not collect because they were outside the initial benefit period, which is the first 25 weeks of every claim. Thus the Minister was able to tackle two problems at one time.

In Bill C-116 there are two aspects. First, there is the ability of fathers, when the mothers have died or have become disabled to a point where they are incapable of caring for the child, to collect unemployment insurance benefits, provided they have a major attachment to the workforce, that is, they have contributed 20 weeks of insurable earnings.

The second aspect is with regard to the premature child. The mother will now be able to collect benefits provided it is within a 52 week period.

These are both very laudable moves. This Bill will correct those inequities. Unfortunately, it is our view in the New Democratic Party that this Bill does not go far enough. This Party has said to the Government that it ought to establish maternity benefits for which only the mother is eligible. Those maternity benefits ought to amount to 17 weeks. They ought to be only for the mother. They are not to be shared between the mother and the father.

This is very unlike the position taken by the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party. In fact, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East announced that she was entering a Private Member's Bill that would in fact share maternity benefits between the mother and the father. That is totally unacceptable to the New Democratic Party. I am glad to see that the Government accepted that position and refused to have those 17 weeks shared.

We also said that the Government ought to go beyond that and include parental benefits, an additional 26 weeks. All the enlightened countries of Europe have recognized the need for parental benefits within their unemployment insurance programs. We have urged the Government to do this. Not only have we urged it, but so has the Boyer Commission in its report and the parliamentary committee on day care. We are still pushing for it.

We have to accept and take what is being offered because it corrects an injustice. However, we fully recognize that the Minister has established a principle which it will take a New Democratic Party Government to complete. I wish to say to all parents who are watching this debate that that is the only guarantee they have that we will move toward treating parents and children with some justice under the unemployment insurance program.

• (1710)

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that we will support this. My leader and gave our commitment in the House that we will expedite this Bill and move it through.

I also said to the Minister the other day that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East wished to say a few words on this particular Bill. I think that this is only fair and just since she participated in the parliamentary day care committee which filed its report in 1987. It had a lot to do with child care and parental care in the unemployment insurance program.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will have to recognize the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte Marie, and then I will return to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and deal with Bill C-116, a major peace of legislation the purpose of which is to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

As my NPD friend just did, I want to congratulate the Minister for having responded. Unfortunately, I have also cause for complaints. In this particular matter as in many others, this Tory Government had to wait for a disaster before taking action.

The Minister certainly remember the Forget Commission which cost Canadian taxpayers $6 million. There was also a Committee of the House where all Members were unanimously asking, on the paternity leave issue, a certain equality as far as unemployment insurance benefits are concerned. The House will remember that the Minister tore up this document and threw it into the waste basket, thereby squandering a lot of taxpayers' money. The Government had to wait for a mother to die to take action.

If, at the time, in view of the unanimous recommendations of the House Committee—my friend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was quite active on this committee—on the changes to be made to the unemployment insurance legislation to improve the effectiveness of the administration and do justice to people . . .

And while the debate continues with respect to sharing, or the allowances for maternity or paternity leave, to carry forward the weeks eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, we also remember that today still in other instances there is discrimination against older workers.

The Minister has reacted and we commend him for that, but I would be remiss if I failed to congratulate my colleague from Hamilton who put a lot of pressure on the Minister. Otherwise we might not have this Bill. Pressure came from the public, from my colleague from Hamilton, from my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, and at long last the Minister came up with Bill C-116 to correct his mistakes, particularly his failure to give serious consideration to the unanimous parliamentary report urging him to change some of the unemployment insurance rules.

Mr. Speaker, indeed we can be positive, but unfortunately I would like the Minister to tell us why every time this Government . . . We remember the de-indexation of old age pensions. There again people had to demonstrate, elderly Canadians had to walk on Parliament Hill, Mrs. Denis had to throw insults or show the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the truth before he would even admit he was wrong. It was the same for the tax on pharmaceutical products, Mr. Chairman. Once more, the Government waited until there had been pressures and a demonstration before deciding to withdraw its proposal. The same happened in the case of unemployment insurance. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) went through a similar experience recently. No one in this Government, in the party opposite, seems able to realize that certain members of our society have needs which differ from those of the majority, of those who are able to make arrangements and pay their own way.

I must congratulate the Minister for having introduced this Bill, but as I said earlier, it is thanks to my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and the entire Liberal caucus, and to the pressures exerted by the population that this Government acted quickly in this instance.

On the other hand, we have to wonder why, since the Minister is making two changes in this Bill, he did not take this opportunity to make other changes as concerns unemployment insurance benefits for older workers who lose their jobs. As he was correcting one injustice and trying to improve the situation, why should we have to wait until there have been more pressures and more representations to have another Bill which will bring about a complete reform of the Unemployment Insurance Plan to provide better equity and more justice for our young poeple? The public, the unions, as well as the employers all requested a complete reform of the Unemployment Insurance Plan, but the Government is making piecemeal changes. This means that all that we are doing now is to correct past mistakes. Such has been the case for the refunds to the 46,000 senior citizens, and thanks again to the early retirees who pressured the Government, they got a grandfatherly refund.

We have another example now with paternity leave. But speaking of paternity leave, we should ensure that what the minister will be offering tomorrow is not something else than the choice for the family. When the parent at home, either the mother or father, has to look after a child, he or she will be eligible for UI benefits. Under the Bill now before us, only in case of death would the father have automatic eligibility to UI benefits. It is not an opening to sex equality in the sense of choosing, or allowing those people the right of choice.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party are proud that this legislation was tabled. We will co-operate as my colleagues did to its speedy adoption. But there are still questions, interrogation marks. It is my hope the Minister will tell us in the first place why he waited for so long. Why did he not anticipate? I would think that governing is not simply correcting, but anticipating the future, rather than simply putting out fires, because on that matter the Minister has been acting like a fireman who puts out fire. Firemen we have no need of. We have them in our cities to put out fires. A Government is there to anticipate. Hopefully the Minister will indicate and explain why, in the wake of the recommendations made not only by the Forget Commission but the recommendations indeed of the Standing Committee on which three Conservative Members were very active . . . The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) worked on that issue, and I know he is a close friend of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). The support for a greater extension of paternity and maternity leave is unanimous.

Mr. Chairman, it seems there are friendships I was not aware of. But I remember, and I am sure my colleague from the New Democratic Party can testify to that, that the Hon. Member for La Prairie played an active role. He even put his head on the block defending those interests. But why was not the minister attentive, sensitive and understanding? Why did he not listen? The important thing is to listen to the people. One must not only reason but also listen to one's heart and remember there are people with needs. Those are three changes people requested. One must listen, reflect, follow one's heart and then act. If the Minister had done all that immediately, following the recommendations made in the Committee's report, he would have made changes and introduced amendments, and then this particular case would not have become a public issue, the Minister having made provision for such an eventuality at the time.

Incidentally, I wish the Minister would tell us why he waited so long to do something about this case. I also wish the Minister would tell us why . . . well, I imagine there are a lot of older workers, all the people from Vickers and Coleco, all those people across Canada, people from the Quebec City area and Sorel who are going to be laid off because of the Conservative Government's decision, and who when they turn 55 go to the Unemployment Insurance office. So one of them says: Look, the Tories put me out of a job because they gave the frigate contracts to my pals in New Brunswick, and so there was nothing left for Quebec. So he says: I came to get my unemployment insurance cheque. So then the UIC man says: Sure, you paid your contributions, you made sacrifices for so many years, and you and your employer both paid into your pension, because the Government said to be prepared. But unfortunately, we have this Bouchard Bill and now you aren't entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits. Even if you did lose your job. Sure, but I didn't want to lose my job. And the man says: Sure, I realize that, but I'm afraid the Conservative Members and the Minister didn't understand. So I wish the Minister would tell me . . .

I know there are some Conservative Members, maybe not the Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), since he may have trouble talking to the Minister, but maybe another Member told the Minister that older workers who are losing their jobs wished the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie had something to congratulate the Minister about in this Bill. I wish I could have said thank you to the Minister today. I wish I could have said congratulations, you were generous! You removed the injustice about paternity leave and extensions and made maternity leave more flexible. But what the Minister should do as well is remove the discrimination against benefits for older workers.

My second question, Mr. chairman—and I would like the Minister to give us a clear and specific answer so I will repeat the question: Why did he waste all that money on inquiries and studies? Why didn't he think of it beforehand? Why didn't he plan ahead so as to bring forward a Bill in time instead of going uphill all the way and always having to react to events and put off fires? Why didn't he take this opportunity to bring forward amendments relating to the pre-retirement of older workers who lose their jobs? He could also have proposed changes to improve eligibility requirements for maternity leave and accessibility criteria for part-time workers.

There were several aspects to the matter. The Minister could have taken that opportunity to correct these mistakes. Of course, the Minister would prefer congratulations. Unfortunately, we cannot congratulate him as much as he would have wanted because had he listened not only to Opposition members but to Government members, he would not have had to flip-flop and be embarrassed the way he is.

Today, the Minister may feel well. But once more I have to ask him to listen to his own heart. Mr. Minister, you sure feel all right. I feel all right too. I had a pension plan in my previous job. With a pension and a Minister's or an M.P.'s salary, you've got to feel all right. But there are thousands of working men and women out there who do not feel that good.

At the end of the month they have to pay for groceries and rent, so when there is no unemployment cheque and they can see the neighbour who used to be a school principal, who had a lot of money to invest in an RRSP, who now gets his money back and enjoys the good life . . . So it is not a question of whether we parliamentarians feel fine, but whether we have done our job to make sure that the people we represent are feeling fine. I must tell the Minister that I am familiar with his beautiful riding, the beautiful region of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean—I am their spokesman in the Liberal Party—where I met people who are not at all satisfied with the Minister, even in the riding of Roberval. Older workers in that region are not pleased with the Minister because he does not listen to them, he does not understand them. I also visited the Eastern Townships, and the situation is the same. Older workers, both men and women—and even those of Trois-Rivières—are reorganizing in Quebec City, and even in Abitibi people are disappointed because they have the impression that their Members of Parliament fail to represent them properly.

Perhaps Hon. Members are saying something because the Hon. Member for La Prairie, I know, had warned him, but my impression is that the Minister should listen a little more and respond with his heart, just as he did yesterday on the immigration issue.

There are three question marks, Mr. Speaker. I still have some time left and I see that the Minister is interested in what I am saying. He is starting to listen. We can feel his heart is opening. Perhaps he is going to tell us, and it is a pity that the Hon. Member for La Prairie is not here . . . The Minister may let his heart speak out. Do not listen to the civil servant over there: He is well paid and he will do what he is told. We have been elected to tell him what to do and he will do what we tell him to do. The Minister's problem may be that he listens too much to the civil servant who is saying: "Benoît, this is what you have to do". We have been elected to tell . . .

Personally, if I had wanted to be a civil servant, I would have remained an employee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and I would have operated the way the other guy said. But you are all here as elected Members of this House, and this is something that affects each and every one of your ridings. We are here to tell civil servants what to do. You operate the way the people who elected us want you to operate. I am sure that if each . . . If there were no TV cameras, I am sure that the Tory Members would tell the Minister that Canadians want him to remove all discrimination against older people. I am convinced that within the Tory caucus, there is not a single Member—except perhaps one or two, because you will find all sorts in that party—who would stand up and suggest that the Government should fall hard on older people. I should not be extremely surprised if one or two did, though. I am convinced that the Minister will tell us—Please, tell your official to keep his papers and tell us what you really think personally. You are going to see that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and the other Members who sat on the House Committee which dealt with the unemployment insurance situation were right to warn us about paternity and maternity leaves.

I suggest that if you allow your heart to speak out, you will say that I was right, but that because of the situation, corrections had to be made. On another aspect, you are going to say that it is true, that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is right, that Canadians are right to demand changes for older workers who were denied unemployment insurance benefits. You are going to say that it is true, because if you do not say so, it will appear to the public that your colleagues never talk about that. This would go down badly in their ridings, even in Western Canada. As I look at the member opposite who used to be a policeman, I am reminded of the fact that policemen pay unemployment insurance and have compulsory retirement, just like the military. I do not think that policemen are very happy with the president of the national caucus, who is himself a former policeman. I am convinced that he spoke to the Minister. However, the Minister listens, opens his heart, and then starts talking.

I trust . . . Mr. Chairman, I wonder how much time I have left because I have the feeling that the Minister is beginning to respond, that we are slowly getting him away from the influence of his officials, that he is now taking over and that he will agree with the amendments moved either by ourselves or by the NDP, because whatever our party, we all want what is best for Canadians. I now see that my time has expired, Mr. Chairman. I shall come back to this when we deal with the other clause if we find that there is still something missing, because I want to ensure that we shall have a compassionate piece of legislation which will meet the needs of the public and that the officials will operate how we want them to operate in serving the public. However, in closing, I must say that our public servants basically do a good job. Some of them in their sixth floor offices in Ottawa might be a bit out of touch with reality, but the officials in my own riding, that of the Minister and that of the NDP Member also find the system discriminatory, and they are the ones who must deal with the complaints of the older workers who are being penalized. They are the ones who have to deal with the problem when the head of a family tells them: Why am I not entitled to the benefits? They are the ones who get called names.

It is not the Deputy Minister in his ivory tower with his well-paid job. We are here to urge these people to move, and I have the feeling that the Minister will let his heart speak for him. I expect a favourable answer.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, let me say as quickly as I can that I am very pleased to speak in favour of this Bill. I want to congratulate the Minister. However, I wish I were also able to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: —congratulate him on having included more comprehensive coverage under the Unemployment Insurance Act for maternity and parental leave. I must say that I am very sorry that the federal Government's strategy for child care neglects this very important aspect of child development which is that working parents, either fathers or mothers, must have the opportunity to be at home with their children during the first year of their children's lives.

I think it is very interesting that this case was started by a father. I think it is very natural that the men in this House, some of whom have spoken today, immediately identified with that father who did indeed face a serious situation in being widowed and left with the care of a new infant without the benefit of unemployment insurance.

I would like to remind the men who did identify very strongly with Mr. McInnis, however, that there are thousands and thousands of single-women parents who are on welfare and are not eligible for unemployment insurance. We all felt very strongly for Mr. McInnis, but let us not forget those thousands of women who are trying to bring up children and new babies and have no choice but to live on very low rates of welfare.

• (1730)

I would like to congratulate both Mr. McInnis and the women who were the guinea pigs whose cases resulted in changes to the Act. I am referring particularly to the case of Cathy MacLean from Nova Scotia, a case I raised in the House when I asked the Minister to use his discretionary powers to assist her. I am glad he did not have to use those powers. Instead, he amended the Act. This also means that Melanie Williams of Vancouver, whose case was raised several times by the Hon. Member for Capilano along with many other women who have had premature babies, will benefit.

Now the mothers of premature babies, babies who have to be left in hospital for a much longer period than normal and need their mothers' care when they come out of hospital, will benefit from the flexibility in the Act that will allow unemployment insurance benefits to be delayed until they are needed. That is a very good move.

These two amendments have significant implications suggesting that the Government is finally accepting the need to incorporate child care provisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act. We are pleased about that. We are also very pleased that these provisions are incorporated under the adoption section of the Act rather than the maternity benefits section of the Act. Maternity benefits that are intended for mothers during the period of time after birth will be protected.

I would join with my colleague in saying that I am very surprised and disappointed that the Liberals, and particularly the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, have not seen the point. They have not been sensitive to the needs of mothers who have given birth and need the protection of maternity leave for their own recovery as well as for the care of their newborns. These mothers must have that right protected under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Incidentally, they should not have to wait for two weeks to apply for unemployment insurance, it should be a 17-week provision. That was the recommendation of the special committee majority report as well.

I will try to cut my remarks short, but I did want to comment on the need for extended and enriched maternity and parental benefits. The Minister knows full well that the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the parliamentary committee on equality rights, the Forget Commission, the New Democratic Party report on child care, as well as many groups across Canada have advocated the doing away with the two-week waiting period and the use of a two-tiered system of maternity and parental leave. Maternity benefits should go to the biological mother and parental benefits to either mothers or fathers. We hope more fathers will take advantage of this. This provision should apply after the first 17 weeks and it should be available for natural as well as adoptive parents.

With so many parents working, it is extremely important that we recognize, as most western European countries have, that parental and maternity leave are absolutely essential. We will make children as well as families suffer if there is no option for the mother and later the father to be at home during that important first year of a child's life. That should be part of the government child care program as well as part of the programs under the Minister's responsibility.

Let us take a quick look at the provisions in a couple of European countries. France offers 16 weeks for mothers at full pay and six months at up to 100 per cent of maximum earnings for the third or subsequent child. As well, France offers unpaid parental leave of up to two years for both mothers and fathers. Sweden provides 40 weeks for mothers or fathers at full pay and an additional unpaid leave is available when the child reaches the age of 18 months.

Canada ranks 22 out of 23 in all the world's industrialized countries when it comes to the level of benefits paid to women workers who take leave on the birth of children and to fathers. We recommend that there be maternity leave for the first 17 weeks, followed by parental leave, which would allow either parent to have UI coverage. We would like to see this phased in gradually and eventually reach a total of 43 weeks. That is not out of line considering what has been done for many years in European countries.

We also recommend that benefits should be gradually enriched so that low-income parents have a choice. Otherwise, they will be forced to go back to work because they will simply not be able to survive on the low payments.

We were disappointed that the government strategy on child care did nothing to improve maternity and parental leave. It was not even included, and that was a great omission. We believe that this is a very important part of a parental leave program. Therefore, as a New Democrat, I must express disappointment that the Bill did not move beyond establishing the principle of a two-tier benefit system as it should have done by providing comprehensive maternity and parental leave.

We support the Bill for the specific inequities it addresses, but we desperately need a more comprehensive parental and maternity leave program.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we are just about ready to vote on the Bill, and I would like to express pleasure on behalf of the seven Conservative members of the standing Committee who worked so hard on unemployment insurance. I would also like to speak on behalf of the Hon. Member for Capilano who is busy with other responsibilities but who did bring forward a Private Member's Bill on this same subject. I would like the record to show that we are deeply appreciative of the Minister's efforts and of the speed and thoroughness with which he has moved to reduce these inequities.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3—Paternity

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get this very clear. A father would be able to collect paternity benefits if the mother of the child died. Does the father necessarily have to be the biological father? What is the answer?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, it is the biological father or the one who is considered by the community as the father.

• (1740)

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, if, for example, the mother was on unemployment insurance, she had collected only three weeks benefits and then she died, how much would the father be able to collect?

Mr. Bouchard: He would be able to collect the full 15 weeks.

Mr. Rodriguez: What if the mother had collected 12 weeks and then died? How much would the father be able to collect?

Mr. Bouchard: Always the full 15 weeks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Always?

Mr. Bouchard: If they collected 12 weeks, they are always able to collect the full 15 weeks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I want to get this crystal clear. Irrespective of how many weeks the mother had collected, the father is entitled to the full 15?

Mr. Bouchard: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rodriguez: With respect to the disability section, if the mother was entitled to collect benefits and delivered the baby, collected a couple of weeks and then became disabled to the point she was incapable of caring for the child, would the father be able to collect any benefits?

Mr. Bouchard: The only occasion when the father is entitled to get the benefits is when the mother is not entitled to get benefits.

Mr. Rodriguez: Am I to understand that what the Minister is saying is that the mother who is disabled and is collecting, continues to collect her benefits and no father can grab those benefits?

Mr. Bouchard: That is correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, about the same clause, where it refers to what happens in case of death, I imagine that once they have a certificate, employees should have no trouble administering this legislation. But when we talk about disability, about a mother being unable to look after her child, who is going to decide and on the basis of what criteria that there is a disability? The Workmen's Compensation Board already has trouble determining what the procedure should be in such cases. Should there be a letter from the mother's attending physician to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, saying that this patient, for such and such a reason, will be unable to take care of her child? Will the Unemployment Insurance Commission, having received such a letter, automatically transfer the benefits to the father or will the Commission want a second opinion? I would like to know who is going to decide, in the case of the disability of the mother.

Mr. Bouchard: If the disability is specified in a doctor's certificate, the Commission will accept it.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate further clarification, because in the legislation on workmens compensation, a medical certificate is required. However, I would like to know who is supposed to issue this certificate. Sometimes we have two or more certificates that don't say the same thing. So which one is supposed to be valid? Are we to assume that if a certificate signed by the mother's or the patient's attending physician is submitted, the Unemployment Insurance Commission will automatically assume the certificate is valid and will not question its authenticity, or might the Commission require, as is done in other areas, both a certificate from the attending physician and certificates signed by physicians chosen by the Commission? In this particular case, will the Unemployment Insurance Commission have a group of physicians on call to check the statement on the certificate?

What I am getting at is that I realize we are talking about a medical certificate. But are we talking about a certificate issued by the person's attending physician?

Mr. Bouchard moved:

That Clause 3 of Bill C-116 be amended

(a) by striking out line 18 on page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"the week in which the mother";

(b) by striking out line 26 on page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"became disabled, the primary".

[English]

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On Clause 6—Retroactive Effect

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides for retroactivity for one year from the date this Act is proclaimed. I have two questions.

First, I represented Mrs. Sharon Taylor in 1987 before the Umpire, the Hon. Bud Cullen. She is the mother of a premature child. She was not eligible. Mr. Cullen told me the date of his decision was March 30, 1987.

If this Bill carries and is receives Royal Assent before March 30, 1987, will Mrs. Sharon Taylor be able to get her benefits?

Mr. Bouchard: It depends on when the baby came home from the hospital. However, if my colleague sends the case to the commission, we could take a look and see if it is possible to give her the benefits.

Mr. Rodriguez: I sensed in that answer the possibility that Mrs. Taylor could qualify.

Ms. Mitchell: He is smiling.

Mr. Rodriguez: He is smiling but you never know with this Minister.

My second question is this. Going back retroactively for a year, there must be a considerable number of mothers who would have been affected by this. Is the department or the commission prepared to use its computers to retrieve the names of all those women who would have been eligible to collect?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, I think the very good news that we will have tonight will be publicized enough so that those mothers who are affected will refer their cases to the department. We will be very pleased, as usual, to assess every case proposed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not good enough, Mr. Chairman. While I know that we who are practitioners of politics wait anxiously every morning for our copy of Hansard and we watch TV assiduously—

Ms. Mitchell: Not everyone.

Mr. Rodriguez: —not everyone reads The Globe and Mail or watches the House on television. I ask the Minister if he will use the same process as was used with respect to the pensioners who were sent letters by the commission after they had filed applications and were subsequently been turned down. Will he use the same method to notify women who were eligible and had been turned down because of the prematurity of their child?

• (1750)

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, I may not be as familiar as is my friend with the methods we normally use to issue that kind of information. However, I am sure that my friend will understand that we cannot go much further than we normally do. I believe that all these women who were refused for any reason, good or bad, will be very eager to contact the department when the bill is passed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I wanted a commitment. The Government made a change with respect to people who took an early retirement, got a pension, and then applied for UI. Their pensions were used as income. We subsequently made a change and if they had made an application prior to January 5, 1986, they could get benefits and collect their pension at the same time.

The commission used the system. All the people in that category who had applied were pulled off the computer and were sent a notice informing them that they may very well be entitled to benefits and should get in touch with the commission. I want the same process to be used for women in this situation.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, the cases to which the Hon. Member is referring were registered in the department. I think that all such cases will be advised. However, I do not want to make the commitment that we will try to find people whom we could not find.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to make a more definite commitment in that respect. I think that we are all happy today to have taken a good step forward in a legislation and we must remember that it is those people's money. The money is not the government's, not the minister's, nor mine, but the taxpayers'.

Some people have been refused because the law did not allow it then. I think that across the government, all those cases are entered in a computer. I think it is important first that the minister make the formal commitment to see to it that a memo be sent to all offices so that these people take care of the promotion and the publication. It is not being generous to say today: See, now, we recognize . . . It is kept secret so that nobody benefits from it.

So I would like to have the formal commitment that the Department will see to it that all the people on file across Canada get a notice telling them that the Act has been amended and that they can apply, because their situation will be considered again and they could be entitled to the benefits provided for by the Act.

I remind the Minister that it had to be done for senior citizens, and I am sure there are still people who did not file an application because not everone reads the newspapers, every day and watches the news and our proceedings.

It seems that one of the Minister's tasks should be to see to it that all those entitled to benefits can take advantage of the legislation we pass. Because after all, the Unemployment Insurance money is paid by the employee and the employer. So it is their money, and those people should be entitled to it.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, the Department of Employment and Immigration does not base its decisions on the fact that the money belongs to the people. The Department obviously reacts to claimants whose cases have been turned down. As long as the people involved have placed a request to the Commission, their files are already there.

Now, listen, I do not believe that ignorance of the Bill can serve as a pretext in the application of the legislation itself. The Unemployment Insurance Commission has no means whatsoever to find out about people who for some reason would fail to contact the Commission in the first place.

Therefore, it is obvious that people whose names have been filed will be traced down. But I would not go so far as to suggest that everybody entitled to the benefits will file a claim, even though they do not read newspapers and do not hear from the media at all. One must draw the line somewhere. The Commission will certainly take all the necessary measures to see that people who are entitled to the benefits take advantage of the legislation.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Paproski): Is Clause 6 agreed to?

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I told the Minister about Mrs. Sharon Taylor who, when she received her decision, appealed it to the board of referees. we then took the case to the Umpire and the Umpire's decision was:

> This is an unfortunate case but there is simply nothing which can be done to assist the claimant. The legislation does not make allowance for this type of situation.
> Here is an area where only Parliament can bring about the necessary changes . . .

It says that this is a true copy of the original and it is dated in Ottawa, Ontario, the 30th day of March, 1987.

I want the Minister to give me a positive answer to this. Clause 6 reads:

> A regulation made pursuant to the said Act for the purpose of giving effect to sections 32.1 and 32.2 of the said Act, as enacted by this Act, or otherwise relating to those sections, shall—

Can the Minister give me the assurance that when the regulations are drawn up they will provide that where a mother with a premature baby did launch a series of appeals, that would be included, and not only when the baby came out of the womb?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, I have said before that it depends upon when the baby came out of the hospital. It is possible to have that information and we will make the decision on the basis of the time when the baby came home from the hospital.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, as a last comment, the Minister will have this immediately following the passage of this Bill. He is on the record and I am going to hold him to this.

Mr. Friesen: When was the baby born?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not that, it is that the woman appealed the process because she felt it was unfair. It went all the way to the Umpire. It was not her fault if the Umpire took time to write his decision. Surely she was entitled to exhaust all the appeal processes. Having taken advantage of the appeal processes she should be treated in the same way as we treated the pensioners who took advantage of the appeal processes and thereby established their claim. It is a simple question of carrying out justice, and I am sure it is not going to break the bank.

Mr. Friesen: You are being sneaky, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary said I was being sneaky. I am not being sneaky. I represented Mrs. Taylor. I felt it was a justifiable case then and I believe it is justifiable now. She kept her claim alive.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, I believe that my friend can read the clause as well as I can. It says:

> Where a child is hospitalized, the period during which initial benefit is payable under section 30, 32, 32.1 or 32.2 shall be extended by the number of weeks the child is hospitalized.

If the child is in the hospital for 10 weeks, it is extended for 10 weeks. It is clear in the legislation that the period during which initial benefit is payable is extended by the same period of time that the baby is in the hospital. I think it is clear in the legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I not see the clock?

Mr. Rodriguez: Please do not see the clock.

Mr. Hawkes: Do not see the clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 7—Coming Into Force.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I have one last question because this is the clause which says that this Bill is retroactive for one year. That is the point I am trying to get at, and perhaps I should have raised the point on Clause 7 rather than on Clause 6.

Mrs. Taylor received the decision from the Umpire on March 30, 1987. I argue that she ought to be entitled to collect the benefits.

• (1800)

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Chairman, the clauses are very clear. We say that the Bill is retroactive to the date of the proclamation. If the Bill is accepted tonight, it will be retroactive to March 23, 1987. It is in the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaking (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bouchard moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleagues for the opportunity to say a few words on the action being taken this afternoon.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on the action he has taken to extend unemployment insurance benefits to biological fathers in cases where, because of the death of the mother, the father leaves work to become the primary caregiver of the child, or in the case of a mother who becomes incapacitated to the extent that she cannot care for the child.

The Unemployment Insurance Act is also being amended to make the time limits more flexible where a premature newborn is hospitalized.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission, the Forget Commission, the parliamentary committee on employment, and the Equality for All report all support the concept of extending this type of maternity benefit to fathers.

These changes, as they apply to fathers, were sparked by John McInnis, a constituent of mine from Kitchener, Ontario. The mother of this infant girl died from a brain tumour shortly after the birth. Mr. McInnis left his work to take care of the baby and when he discovered that maternity benefits were unavailable to him, he turned to living on welfare.

Mr. McInnis and I requested a meeting with the Minister to see if there could be some redress for his unique circumstances. Because of the Minister's compassion, we had this meeting, quick action was promised to remedy the situation, and thus we have before us today the present amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In addition, another amendment that we will be approving today will allow the payment of maternity benefits during a period of up to 17 weeks from the time the baby comes home from the hospital, rather than from the expected or actual date of birth. That will benefit another of my constituents, Sharon Beaucage. This will allow mothers separated from their premature child due to the baby's hospitalization to take their maternity benefits when the baby comes home from the hospital.

I want to commend the Minister and the Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), for acting in the spirit of the following words spoken by a former leader of the Conservative Party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield:

> I pledge to you a government prepared to act, impatient with the notion that problems cannot be solved.
> I pledge to you a government that will deal openly and honestly with the people and with Parliament, one whose word can be trusted, one of compassion, conscience, commitment and principle.

I commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He has proven that governments do indeed listen, can act with reasonable speed, can act with flexibility where required, and with the compassion spoken of by the Hon. Robert Stanfield.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to stress the fact that when the Government introduces a Bill filling the needs of the people, Opposition parties can cooperate. In this instance, we were able to deal with such a Bill in less than one hour and a half. And as I said a few moments ago, if tomorrow, the Minister wants to introduce a Bill to do justice to older workers, we are ready to pass it in one hour! I would invite Conservative Members of Parliament to press for changes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall this Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—SIXTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the sixteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The report deals with the proposed multistage sales tax that was set out in the White Paper on tax reform. The committee has done a great deal of work on this tax reform paper, including its visit to New Zealand and its fifteenth report.

At this stage, the committee feels that until the Government has completed its negotiations with the provinces for a national sales tax, it would not be appropriate to continue working on the White Paper. The committee states that the Government must give a very high priority to this negotiation for a national sales tax. The consultations that affect parties and the operational detail of that multistage sales tax is urgent in the commercial affairs of the country.

PETITIONS

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House today which has been signed by numerous residents of the Hamilton—Wentworth region. The petitioners wish to point out to the House that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada affecting approximately 1 per cent of the population. The petitioners believe that a method of prevention and a cure can be found, but only through larger research efforts.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts relating to schizophrenia will, in the future, be commensurate with the seriousness of the illness in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions from a number of residents of Alberta who are concerned that Bill C-72 will set a dangerous precedent by banning unilingual Anglophones and other cultures.

They call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that unilingual people have a chance for a position in government.

OPPOSITION TO THE EXPULSION OF TURKISH NATIONALS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a petition in the House, pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petition was signed by a number of Montreal residents who would like the Government and, more specifically, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), to consider with the requisite fairness, understanding and dispatch the lot of 2,000 Turkish men, women and children living under the threat of deportation by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

PROHIBITION REGARDING KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition, once again from a number of citizens who are concerned about the increase in incidents of crime associated with knives in all major cities across Canada, including murder, robbery, and sexual assault.

They call upon the federal Government and Parliament to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places.

Exemptions from this ban would only include those who use knives as part of their legitimate work or when they are carried for religious purposes.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from what must be just about every living soul in the communities of Elgin and Mapleton in my constituency of Fundy—Royal.

They implore the House to restore dignity and honour to the country by bringing forth legislation very quickly so that the rights of the unborn can be protected.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions relative to the Government's signing of a trade deal with the United States.

The petitioners feel that the trade agreement negates the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty, that it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, that it would undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States, and that it would threaten hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the petitioners pray that Parliament dissolve and that the people of Canada have the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before putting the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), since today is the final allotted day the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of supply Bills.

In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the supply Bills be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—EFFECT OF INCREASED TAXES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for imposing increased taxes, both directly and indirectly, against Canadian consumers and for its abject failure to protect the best interests of Canadian consumers, as evident in, among other things:

1. the high cost of prescription drugs;
2. the inadequacies of postal services;
3. the high cost of gasoline;
4. the upward spiral of personal taxes;
5. the increase in inspector fees in the agricultural sector;

6. the imposition of user fees for Atlantic fishermen;

7. the Government's acquiescence to sky-rocketing bank charges;

8. the failure of the Government to protect 67,000 investors affected by the Principal Group collapse; and

9. the unnecessarily high interest rate policy of the Government.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like to point out to the House that the form of the motion is very much like an omnibus Bill. It may make for an interesting debate, but we can anticipate similar kinds of Bills in the future from the Government, particularly related to free trade.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that is a point of order—

Mr. Gauthier: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): —and I do not think the Hon. Member will have a point of order.

I think it will be debatable and that we can look forward to a very exciting debate today.

Mr. Dingwall: Canadian consumers have a tradition of being fair-minded individuals who, on numerous occasions, have been prepared to make sacrifices in view of the public interest. However, they have demonstrated that they do not like unfairness. They do not appreciate unfairness, and they certainly do not appreciate when a national Government purposely sets out to be unfair to them and to their interests.

We have seen that, as a result of the high cost of prescription drugs. We have seen the inadequacies of the postal services. By the end of 1988, between 350,000 and 400,000 Canadians will be without door-to-door mail delivery, having to make do with the so-called supermailboxes. According to current new housing projections, by 1990 the figure will rise to well over 500,000. Also there is the high cost of gasoline, which has risen roughly 23 cents per gallon since the present administration assumed office in 1984.

We also see an unprecedented proliferation of personal taxes on individuals across the board, so much so that they are in excess of some $22 billion.

Of course we have seen the increase in inspector fees in the agricultural sector as it affects people in Prince Edward Island, particularly those in the potato industry. The past four years have been particularly tough for P.E.I. potato farmers. Markets and prices have been better this year, but they are still recovering from their earlier problems.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was especially insensitive when he decided to increase inspection fees on P.E.I. potatoes bound for other provinces and beyond. In fact, inspection fees have risen from 3 cents per hundredweight in 1987 to 6 cents this year, and by 1990 the fee will be 15 cents per hundredweight.

We have also seen the imposition of user fees for Atlantic fishermen. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has started to charge even higher fees in some instances for the use of wharf space and facilities. For inshore fishermen who have not caught much fish, these additional charges become what is best known as an enormous burden.

The Government's apparent acquiescence to sky-rocketing bank charges is another example of unfairness being delivered to the Canadian consumer. The Government has failed to take appropriate action with regard to the collapse of the Principal Group. The 67,000 Canadians who invested in these particular companies have not received any assistance from the Government of Canada. Of course, the unnecessary high interest rate policy of the Government of Canada at the present time affects many Canadians and many consumers across the board.

I have outlined a number of major concerns for Canadian consumers, many of which will be touched upon today by myself and by other Members of the House. I would hope that we would give some consideration in a very sincere way to the plight of Canadian consumers, particularly those who were given assurances some time ago by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), and I say this with great sincerity, who has now acquired the name given to him by most individuals of the Minister responsible for the corporate sector. He is no longer the champion of the cause of Canadian consumers. What better evidence do we have than the plight of Canadian consumers and their outrage at the increased cost of prescription drugs?

It was said on numerous occasions in this House when the Bill was being debated in committees of the House as well as of the Upper Chamber, that with the passage of this Bill would come the additional high cost of prescription drugs. The Minister, in his wisdom, on September 6, 1986, —this is the Minister responsible for Canadian consumers—said:

> There is absolutely nothing in this Bill that will cause drug prices to go up by a penny.

That was the Minister speaking on September 6, 1986. But the evidence is quite the contrary. The Globe and Mail had something to say. I will quote from the article so that Members will have an opportunity to refer to it later in the debate: It reads:

> The prices of more than a thousand pharmaceutical drugs have risen faster than the Consumer Price Index in the past six months. Many of these are brand-name drugs whose manufacturers have given assurances that increases will not exceed the CPI.
> Lawrence Archer, a spokesman for the Ontario Health Ministry, said yesterday that 1,099 drugs are more than 5 per cent costlier on this month's price list than they were last July, while the CPI rose by 4.4 per cent. This number makes up almost half the total provincial formulary.
> In a few cases drug prices rose by 100 per cent and in one case the increase was 250 per cent, Mr. Archer said. He would not release the name of the drugs in question . . .
> The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada which represents the large multinational drug companies, pledged that drug price increases would not outstrip increases in the CPI when it lobbied successfully last fall for increased patent protection for brand name drugs . . .

Let us look not only at what the Ontario Ministry of Health has said about the high cost of prescription drugs since the passage of Bill C-22, but let us look at a study of five companies which belong to the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association. I should say at the outset that of the five, Merck Frosst, one company in Canada, which seems rather convincing from my perspective, had reduced the cost of its prescription drugs. This was a study done in the period from January, 1987 to January, 1988. Its prices are based on the manufacturers' published price list. Out of the five, I say to the Minister opposite, one company reduced its prices. The others, however, have had substantial increases. Smith/Kline Company produces Dyazide tablets and the price has gone from $14.23 to $15.65, a 9.9 per cent increase. The cost for 100 tablets of Dyrenium has increased 16.6 per cent. For two milligram tablets of Stelazine there is a 17.5 per cent increase. For 200 mg. tablets of Tagamet the cost is up by 10.02 per cent. Those are Smith/Kline products.

Then we come to Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals (Canada) Inc. Again, from January, 1987 to January, 1988, for 500 milligrams of Alertonic, the price has risen from $14.25 to $17.25, an increase of not 2 per cent, not 3 per cent but 21 per cent to the Canadian consumer. Then for 100 tablets of Bentylol Dospan the price has gone up from $19.55 to $25.20, an increase of 28.9 per cent. So much for the commitment of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. So much for the words in September, 1986 that drug prices would not increase in Canada. With the same company in the same time frame, for 50 Clomid tablets the price has risen from $165 to $211.15, an increase of 27.97 per cent. For 12 mg. Tace capsules, the price has gone up from $24.40 to $36.60 for a mere increase of 50 per cent. That is utterly shameful.

Another company which had its drug prices reviewed was Janssen Pharmaceutical Inc., in the same time frame as the other companies. We have a drug here called Innovar and its price has risen from $119.10 to $145.40 for an increase of 22.08 per cent.

What about Sandoz Canada Inc.? For eight tablets of Ancasal the cost was $4.70 cents. It is now up to $6.38 for an increase—this is the fairness for Canadian consumers who were not going to pay one more cent as a result of the passage of Bill C-22—of 35.7 per cent.

I think that is clear and unequivocal evidence that Canadian consumers have been given a snow job by the Canadian Government. The Canadian Government, being apprised of these facts, is sitting back and doing absolutely nothing.

The Nova Scotia Association of Health Organizations says that from March, 1984 to February, 1985 prescription drugs which it handled have increased by 17.5 per cent. From March, 1985 to February, 1986 there is a 13.6 per cent increase. It is just not evidence that the Opposition is taking into the House of Commons. This is information prepared by Canadians who are directly involved in that particular sector of our economy. I find it to be rather appalling that the Minister has chosen to do absolutely nothing.

In the Upper House, a Bill has been introduced in order to try to give some teeth to what is known as an imperfect, if you will, but at best, a prices review board. The Minister wrongly blames the Opposition for delaying the passage of Bill C-22 and thereby the establishment of the Drug Prices Review Board provided for in the legislation, he says, to control drug prices. Bill C-22 increased patent protection which was given to brand name manufacturers retroactively to June 27, 1986. You would think that that retroactivity would apply to the Drug Prices Review Board which would or may review the price of a drug. The answer is that it does not apply to the Drug Prices Review Board.

My colleagues in the Upper Chamber are attempting to make amendments that would perfect a piece of legislation which has a very strong effect on Canadian consumers. There we have the unfairness which was predicted by opposition Parties, by the United Church, by the Royal Canadian Legion, by consumer groups and by senior citizens across Canada.

The collapse of the Principal Group of companies and the 67,000 investors who have lost in many instances their life savings is but another example of the Canadian Government's refusing to accept responsibility or refusing to become involved in what is none other than a national disgrace. I do not have to remind you, Sir, as a very able representative from the Province of Alberta, how these investors feel at this time. However, the response of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been: "Well, it's not my problem. I didn't do it, the devil did it. Don't come to me, I'm not responsible. I don't want to be involved. That is a provincial matter".

I say to the Minister that that is a cop-out. The Minister knows that only too well. In his hands, he has a report from the CDIC, but he says, and I applaud him for this, that he cannot publish the report of the CDIC because that would breach confidentiality and, as a Minister of the Crown, he could not do that. I understand that argument. I do, and I have said that to the Minister. He does not wish to acknowledge that, but I have.

I have also said to the Minister that the interest of the public carries more weight than the confidentiality of a particular company or companies, because there are 67,000 Canadians who have lost their life savings. The paramount action the Minister ought to take is to make that report public so that Canadians may see what information the CDIC had and what it did with that information. That would send a signal to the financial community that the Government of Canada will not tolerate those companies, which may be in a minority but which cause Canadians to question both the ethics and the integrity of many financial institutions.

The Minister will rise and do a step-dance, the twist, the limbo and all sorts of dances to try to put it on the Alberta Government. He will try to put it on the need for new federal regulations, etc., etc., but the fact is that the Minister and the Government had an opportunity, and still have an opportunity, to help Canadian consumers who were affected by the collapse of the Principal Group.

As recently as yesterday, we heard of the taxes that Revenue Canada is forcing these Canadian consumers to pay. I am happy to read in the paper that the Minister will be making a decision on that within a very short period of time.

The litany of things that the Government has done to Canadian consumers goes on and on. I know that there are some in this House who are intimately concerned and have voiced their concerns over bank charges. I do not want to say anything about the snarky letter I received from the Royal Bank of Canada on March 22, 1988. I do not want to talk about the contents of that letter in which the author admits that there are bank charges and that there is a charge of $85 for the signing of mortgage renewal documents. The Government seems, by its conduct and its lack of action, to acquiesce to sky-rocketing bank charges.

If the Minister does not think that this is such a serious issue, let me tell him about a letter from the Royal Bank of Canada dated December 14, 1987, addressed to an individual and signed by a manager of the Royal Bank of Canada. The manager says in the letter that effective November 1, 1987, the bank began levying a charge for providing information via the telephone to its clients. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what the Royal Bank, as of January 1, 1988, is charging Canadians for information on their accounts that they may seek by telephone? It is charging $5 a pop.

Of course, the Minister sits back in his Gucci office, wonderful surroundings, and says: "Oh, well, let the consumers have it". There is the fairness that Canadian consumers are getting from the Government.

What about the tax increases that have affected Canadian consumers from coast to coast? There has been an unprecedented number of new taxes imposed on Canadian consumers. I think it is worth mentioning, for the benefit of Hon. Members, that sales taxes went from 9 per cent to 10 per cent on October 1, 1984. They were upped again from 10 per cent to 11 per cent on January 1, 1986. Again they were upped on April 1, 1986, from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. Sales taxes have gone up from 9 per cent to 12 per cent.

What has this great Government which has so much concern for Canadian consumers, done? It has extended the sales tax to candy, soft drinks, fast foods and snacks. It has increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent the tax on paint and wallpaper, and the Tory tax has even taken a new twist. The Tories have now gone after toys for kids.

The Minister laughs. I know that you are not laughing, Mr. Speaker, because you know that the unfairness of these measures will be brought to bear in the next federal election.

I have already mentioned the increases in gasoline taxes, that of 23 cents per gallon over the last four years. The taxes go on and on. I know that there are many more Hon. Members in the House who will want to participate in this debate, so I will sum up.

It has been clear, since September of 1984, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has devoted his time and his energy to promoting and enhancing the corporate interests of Canada to the detriment of Canadian consumers. We have seen it with prescription drugs, with bank charges, with inspectors' fees, with wharfage fees for Atlantic fishermen, with unprecedented tax increases, and with the lack of concern for the 67,000 investors affected by the collapse of the Principal Group of companies. That is a summary of my argument, and I would hope that the Government would assume its responsibilities for consumers as it has assumed its responsibilities for protecting and enhancing corporate interests. It is high time the consumers got a fair shake.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Hon. Member a question about the apples and oranges comparison he was making on drug prices at the beginning of his speech. The 1987 prices were compared to the 1988 prices. Would the Hon. Member tell me if he was comparing the manufacturers' level of 1987 with the retail level of 1988? If he was, he was misleading the House by saying that there has been an increase, because the increases would be calculated on a different basis.

Second, would the Hon. Member confirm that the report he is quoting containing these misleading indicators was commissioned by Senator Haidasz, a Liberal Member of the Senate? Could he confirm too that the 1987 prices he quoted contained no federal sales taxes but that he quoted a 1988 price which included sales tax?

Finally, a number of the drugs he mentioned are now off patent, and the generic companies could copy them if they wanted to. That point, of course, was made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) a few days ago. Can he confirm that he heard that from the Minister?

• (1140)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, there were several questions there. To alleviate the fear and ooziness in the Minister's mind, I would be happy to show him a copy of the report I referred to. The report deals with pricing from January, 1987, to January, 1988. The prices are based on the manufacturers' published price list. Yes, the report was prepared with respect to the impact of the proclamation of Bill C-22 on drug prices. It was prepared for Senator Stanley Haidasz by two pharmacists. As soon as I give it to the Hansard people the Minister will have an opportunity to read it at his leisure.

With respect to the high cost of prescription drugs, I want to remind the Minister that we said very clearly in committee and in this House that drug prices would increase, not only brand-name drugs but generic drugs. The reason is, and the Minister ought to focus on this, that the brand-name companies would have a period of exclusivity for upwards of 10 years. The only way the generic companies could maintain their viability in the short term was either to lay off people or to increase their prices. We do not agree with it but that is what is happening. It is happening not only to generic drugs but to brand-name drugs as well. We told the Government, and witnesses told the Government, that that is what would happen if it tried to move from the old system to one involving exclusivity for the brand-name companies.

The Minister also referred to certain comments that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made in the House. Yes, I am well aware of those comments. I am also well aware of the undertakings that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs gave to the committee, to Parliament, the committee in the other place, and Canadians generally that prescription drug prices would not increase one red cent. That was his September 6, 1986 statement.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention and that of the Hon. Member that the motion speaks to the abject failure of the Government to protect the best interests of Canadian consumers because of its unnecessarily high interest rate policy, among other things. Over the last few weeks I have been pressing the Government to bring interest rates down from the current bank rate of 8.5 per cent or so and mortgage rates of 10.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent. I believe they are unnecessarily high. However, I have a recollection that under the Liberal Government, of which the Hon. Member was a supporter, interest rates went up to 20 per cent and to 22 per cent, and mortgage rates hit 19 per cent or 20 per cent.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he agrees that interest rates are unnecessarily high at just over 8 per cent for T-bills and 10.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent for mortgages. If so, why did he not speak out in the early 1980s at the time his Government arbitrarily imposed a tight money policy and applied monetarism with the utmost rigour to the point at which farmers, small businesses and consumers were forced to the wall? People across the country lost their homes because they could not afford the high interest rates. Where was the Hon. Member then and why was he not speaking out in order to bring those interest rates down?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to be able to respond to a question from the NDP.

Mr. Blaikie: Be nice, Dave.

Mr. Dingwall: They are the ones who—

Mr. Gormley: Ask Howard Pawley.

Mr. Dingwall: Precisely. I guess you could ask Howard Pawley a number of questions.

Mr. Cassidy: Give us your answer.

Mr. Dingwall: I will respond to the Hon. Member. There is no question that interest rates now as well as at the time he referred to are and were unnecessarily high. The Hon. Member may have been here, and if he was not, he may not be aware of the fact that at that time we had a world-wide recession.

Mr. Nickerson: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Hon. Members may wish to try and poke holes in that, but the fact remains. We saw it in the energy sector and we saw it in interest rate policies not only in Canada but in the U.S. The Government is now preaching that we are in a position of economic strength. Yet we see the spreading to Canada of the unnecessarily high interest rate policy in the U.S.

The Hon. Member may be trying to take credit for things he may or may not have brought up on the floor of the House of Commons. I do not recall if he did, although I accept his word. Hopefully he will accept my word that my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides also raised that point on the floor of the House of Commons. The Hon. Member ought not to—

Mr. Cassidy: Not when the Liberals were in power.

Mr. Dingwall: He was not a Member then. The Hon. Member ought not to speak with a forked tongue.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his brilliant and most remarkable speech, especially the part about drugs, since as he said so aptly, at the time the legislation was considered in the House, everyone expected some very substantial increases. He made it clear that not only did this happen, but it happened faster, and more ruthlessly.

I have another example. I received a telephone call this morning in my riding office, about a woman who is planning to adopt a young Mexican boy. Immigration Canada says it will charge her $185 to open a file. There is a whole series of similar charges which, added to the ruthless measures I mentioned earlier, will put an incredibly heavy tax burden on consumers generally.

The Government's reaction seems to be: Don't worry. We are going to solve all our problems with free trade which will provide the framework for substantial improvements at the consumer level.

The question I would like to ask my colleague is: Does he feel that free trade will eventually bring about improvements for the Canadian consumer?

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised a number of important issues. In many instances the cost of prescription drugs is borne by provincial Governments. That is why, if you check the record, you will find that numerous provinces, although not all, have objected to the thrust of Bill C-22. Clearly, in their mind and in the minds of others the Bill caused an unnecessarily large increase in the cost of drugs. They will have to deal with that either through new taxes or through cutting back on health services.

I have often, in committee and in this House, given Nova Scotia as an example of the problem. That small province may have to pay upwards of $25 million in excess costs because of Bill C-22. The province will have to go after the taxpayers in some form to recoup that money.

With regard to the free trade agreement and how that will affect Canadian consumers, I think we have seen evidence of that already. If we have to be on a level playing field with our friends to the south, we will have to pay more in some areas. There is, though, a historical argument that free trade and the lessening of tariffs will provide benefits to Canadian consumers.

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Mr. Dingwall: Does that mean, however, that we are going to lose jobs as a result of this? The answer is very clearly yes. Therefore, the effect on the Canadian economy is negative.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate in this debate today. This debate is about the interest of Canadian consumers. The resolution is a bit of a mishmash and it is difficult to know what the focus of the Hon. Member's motion is. George Bernard Shaw once apologized to someone to whom he was writing a letter saying that he was sorry that he did not have time to write a brief letter and would, therefore, write a long letter.

This is a lengthy motion which shows a lack of focus and clarity of thought on a question of real importance to Canadians in their role as consumers. He tried to argue that in nine different policy areas there is some unreasonable burden placed on the consumer, and I will address those in my formal remarks.

We do not have in this debate a speech from the Liberal Party which can be taken credibly because of the record of that Party and indeed of the Hon. Member on consumer issues. The voting record of the Hon. Member shows that he has quite consistently overlooked great opportunities to defend the Canadian consumer.

For example, he voted against increased competition in the air and rail transportation sector by voting against Bill C-18 in the second session of this Parliament. He voted against increased competition in extra provincial trucking by voting against Bill C-19 in the second session of this Parliament. The Hon. Member had an opportunity to do something about consumers' rights on the pharmaceutical issue. He spent a great deal of time speaking about that today but he did not answer my questions, and I hope you noticed that, Mr. Speaker.

When I made the point that he was comparing apples and oranges, he avoided answering that directly. He is comparing one year with the sales tax with another without sales tax, and one year at the manufacturers' level with another at the retail level. It is misleading to quote statistics which do not have a common base. Perhaps when the Hon. Member has an opportunity to ask me questions he will respond to that question which I put to him and to which he did not respond.

The Member had a chance to vote for a Drug Prices Review Board when we brought in Bill C-22. This federal board will be in place to exercise a downward pressure on all drug prices, not only generically copied drugs. This is a huge venture on behalf of the consumer, but he voted against it.

The Member also had an opportunity to vote for the compensation of the uninsured depositors of two western banks, but he did not do so. He voted against the privatization of Teleglobe Canada. The sale of that Crown corporation has resulted in significantly low rates for overseas telephone calls.

I am suggesting that the Hon. Member is not always as alert to interests of consumers as he likes to assert he is. Indeed, his Party is not, and I can therefore understand why he has some difficulty in being alert to their interests.

His comments today invite deliberate and careful answers from me. However, this does give me occasion to talk about the consumer in a wider context than these picayune little details that he raises in his motion. Quite frankly, the failure of the Opposition to mount a coherent case against the Government's economic policies is evident every day in this House, and this failure could hardly be better illustrated than by the grab-bag of items before the House today. The idea seems to be that what you lack in the quality of criticism you can make up for in quantity.

This just does not work because the Government's economic policies have worked from the day we came into office, are working today, and will continue to work for the good of Canadians in every part of the country. I can say that with every conviction because our policies are working. It is very difficult to find any economic indicator which affects the average Canadian as a consumer which is not immensely better year over year and immensely better than it was five years ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Like the unemployment rate in Newfoundland?

Mr. Hockin: The unemployment rate in Newfoundland is a good example. It, too, has improved year after year since we have been in government.

Mr. Cassidy: It's at an intolerable level, and you know it.

Mr. Hockin: Noting the range of subjects which the motion has grouped together you will not be surprised, Mr. Speaker, that some specific areas will be discussed by other speakers for the Government today.

To begin with, let us be clear about the Canadian consumers referred to in the motion. Contrary to the impression which the Hon. Member tried to leave, they are not some special interest group with particular interests separate from those of everyone else. All Canadians are consumers. More to the point, their present and future well-being as consumers depends directly on the ability of the Canadian economy to produce new jobs and to produce higher incomes and new economic opportunities now and in the years ahead. Consumers are not only people dealt with by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but are consumers in the wider sense which I just mentioned.

The kind of negative thinking which is reflected in the motion before us today was soundly rejected by Canadians in September, 1984. Instead of approaching government this way they wanted a positive new approach to the economic challenges facing Canada. That is exactly what the Government has provided. We did not do this in an ad hoc way. We made clear to the Canadian people how we were going to proceed. We laid it out clearly in the agenda for economic renewal in 1984. It is there for everyone to see.

Often governmental statements of that nature under Liberal Governments did not mean anything, they were mere cream puffs with very little substance and certainly not followed through seriously by the Government. In this case the agenda for economic renewal is truly a blueprint. The governmental engineers have gone to work with it and have built an edifice which is very impressive. We have stuck to our program, and the results more than bear out the success of our policies. In every instance the consumer wins.

As an example of how the consumer wins, in 1987 real growth in gross domestic product reached 3.9 per cent, a growth rate higher than that of the United States. That was the third consecutive year in which growth was in that range. That is a tremendous performance.

Interest rates, too, have been stable at three to four percentage points below the levels reached in September, 1984. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) reminded the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) of this. Interest rates are much lower today than they were in September, 1984. Real interest rates are also down substantially in the same period, to the benefit of the Canadian economy as a whole and of Canadians in their role as consumers. Nothing is more difficult for consumers to cope with than high interest rates, and we have brought them down.

The typical five-year mortgage rate is a good example. It is now 11 per cent down from 14.25 per cent in 1984. What could be more relevant to a consumer than that? This represents a saving of $1,400 per year on a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years. Is the Hon. Member against that kind of action on behalf of the consumer? Consumers are also homeowners. Houses needed to be built so that they can have a choice. Housing starts are up from 135,000 in 1984 to 246,000 last year, which is the highest annual level for housing starts since 1977. Nothing could be more important to consumers than that figure.

Of course, consumers must be employed. The unemployment rate is down to 8.9 per cent in 1987 from 11.3 per cent in 1984 when we took over from the Hon. Member's Party as Government. It was down even further, to 7.8 per cent in February of this year. In response to the interjection by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, the unemployment rate is down in all provinces, which is good news for Newfoundlanders as well as people from all other provinces.

The decline in the unemployment rate reflects a tremendous achievement in job creation. February is the seventeenth consecutive month in which full-time employment increased. Since September, 1984, 1.213 million jobs have been created. That is what we have accomplished for Canadian consumers.

The growth in our gross domestic product in recent years has put us in the top rank of leading industrialized nations. In fact, people who study Canada are impressed with what they see. The latest survey of business investment intentions is a good example. While such news may not make the front page, it is astonishing that Canadian business is planning to increase its investment in plant and equipment by an extraordinary 17.3 per cent this year. Usually increased investment intentions are up by 2 per cent or 3 per cent, if at all, over the previous year. This is the largest real increase in private sector investment spending in nine years. We have achieved those results because we took the necessary action to ensure a positive environment for job creating growth and investment.

We have made substantial progress in deficit reduction and controlling the growth of the debt, thereby reducing the burden on the consumer who must ultimately pay the bills.

In anticipation of what might be said by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, I should remind the House what happened under an NDP Government in Manitoba with regard to debts and deficits. The NDP often tells us that we should increase government spending for one reason or another. However, we hear very little about how they would raise the revenue to do it.

Mr. Cassidy: Why do you not talk about Saskatchewan first? Then we will talk about Manitoba.

Mr. Hockin: I often hypothesize about what they would do if they were in power.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I trust that on a day like today, when we have had a national prayer breakfast, we would be able to wait until the Hon. Minister has finished debate. We will be able to have questions and comments after the speech. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin).

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, these are sensitive matters to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, but they must be discussed. In Manitoba, spending has increased from 18.5 per cent of GDP to 21.3 per cent, relative to the size of the economy. If the NDP Government in Manitoba had simply held spending growth to the rate of nominal economic growth, the present revenue structure would now yield a $250 million surplus rather than a $334 million deficit.

We hear talk about the NDP Government being the protectors of the consumer. The Crown corporation in that province which provides automobile insurance has acquired a $60 million operating deficit, which has led to premium increases of between 18 per cent and 112 per cent to the consumer in Manitoba. That is what an NDP Government delivers. Government automobile insurance in Winnipeg is now more expensive than private sector insurance in Ottawa. That is a very important fact to keep in mind when the NDP rises to defend the consumer. Last December, the NDP Government wrote off $185 million in Crown corporation losses by Order in Council. This is not shown on the government books as either a government expenditure or as a Crown corporation loss.

Provincial government revenues in Manitoba have increased by 94 per cent over the past seven years, more than twice the 42 per cent increase in consumer prices that have occurred over the same period. While there is supposed to be an NDP Government in power to protect the consumer, there is no protection whatsoever. As a matter of fact, I cannot imagine what would happen if that kind of laboratory experiment were applied by the NDP at the federal level.

We have fostered a healthy and receptive climate by controlling the deficit. We have brought it down for four years in a row by controlling the growth of debt and reducing the burden on consumers who must ultimately pay the bill. It is the consumers of Manitoba who will have to pay the bill for what the NDP Government did there.

We have fostered a healthy and very receptive climate for private sector investment, a fact which the opposition Parties have neglected to acknowledge. We know that the private sector is the engine of growth in the economy, not the Government.

We also reduced the burden of government intervention through deregulation. While that may not interest the Opposition, it is a very important step in order to let fresh air blow through the economy and protect the consumer.

We established a new policy to promote the development of science and technology. We are encouraging innovation. We have made regional development more sensitive to local needs. Through a combination of responsible fiscal, monetary and economic policies, the Government has provided a stable framework for economic progress, which has been of tremendous value to Canadians in their roles as consumers.

We have undertaken a major reform of the tax system. This is being done with Canadian consumers in mind. Our tax system will now be better balanced and fair. Previous Liberal Governments never did anything in terms of establishing a comprehensive and coherent way to make the tax system more balanced and fair.

As a result of our action to reduce tax rates and broaden the tax base, 85 per cent of all households, or 9.7 million, will see their tax reduced. Moreover, 850,000 lower-income Canadians will have their taxes reduced to zero.

As a result of our changes our tax system will lose many of its complicated deductions and its elaborate system of tax brackets. Lower personal income tax rates mean that Canadians will keep more of every additional dollar of earnings, which is perhaps the big message in tax reform. People will now be able to keep more of what they earn so that they can go into the world as consumers with more to spend. That is the purpose of tax reform. Tax reform means more money to save or spend as the consumer sees fit.

Tax reform also means that corporations pay more while individuals pay less. This is not mentioned by the Opposition, but it is a very fundamental reform. We can implement a more progressive tax system that is more efficient and can better encourage the productive economic activity on which all Canadians depend for economic well-being.

This first stage of tax reform is designed neither to increase nor to decrease revenues. In the same way, reform of the sales tax system will also be fiscally neutral. This is important if we are to succeed in the highly competitive international market. Obviously, the over-all thrust of tax reform is in the interest of Canadians as consumers.

Let me turn to the financial institution sector about which the Hon. Member raises questions. I know he is interested in the financial institution sector. Because we had a number of Bills passed at the end of the last session, I think it is important for me to remind the Hon. Member of Bill C-42 and Bill C-56. They speak to the concerns he raised today. The Hon. Member was not there to vote on them, and I am sorry he was not because in fact he would see that we have set up a CDIC which can play a much greater role in our financial system.

We have also established a supervisor of financial institutions who will be able to make our system far more efficient and fair to the consumer and to Canadians when they look for credit or want to deposit. Above all—and this is very important for Canadians as consumers—these two Bills will make the system safer so we will not have these Principal Group kinds of disasters. The Hon. Member knows that the Principal Group is made up of 127 companies, only one of which is federally insured through CDIC. He wants to tar the federal Government with the brush of all 127 companies, and that is irresponsible.

CDIC has paid out to depositors, and the Code inquiry is looking into the appropriateness of what went on. The CDIC is sharing information with it and will share more. If the Hon. Member does not believe that CDIC should have some confidentiality prerogatives, then he should have voted against Bill C-42, but he did not. Confidentiality provisions are not onerous, but there has to be some because individual and business relationships with financial institutions are generally understood to be confidential.

In conclusion, Canadian financial institution reform, by making the system safer, by making it more competitive, is very good news for the Canadian consumer. It is the most important news any Minister in charge of that dossier can deliver to Parliament. I am very proud of that and very proud of what the Government is doing with its over-all spending and tax record. That is the over-all answer, the truly appropriate conceptual answer to this resolution, which is a kind of a mishmash of miscellaneous ideas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Minister's time has expired. I would just like to say that I did give the first speaker additional time and the Minister was also given additional time. I will now recognize Hon. Members on questions and comments.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister and I can disagree on various points. I disagree emphatically with the concept of the Drug Prices Review Board within Bill C-22 and, quite correctly, voted against it. However, if the Minister believes in the effectiveness of this board, would he answer the question as to why the period of exclusivity is retroactive for brand-name companies to June 27, 1986, but the retroactive provisions do not apply to the Drug Prices Review Board? Why the difference, if the Minister believes so sincerely in the Drug Prices Review Board?

Second, with respect to sales tax increases, can the Minister explain to Canadian consumers why $3 billion in additional sales taxes is good for the Canadian consumer, and I mean the increases of October 1, 1984 of $1 billion, on January 1, 1986, another $1 billion, and on April 1, 1986 another $1 billion? Would he also tell the House about the benefits to Canadian consumers in paying upwards of 23 cents a gallon more to drive their cars since 1984? Would he explain to Canadian consumers how this is of benefit to Canadian consumers?

Finally, while the Minister is on his feet, he ought not to misrepresent the suggestions that Members of Parliament have made. The Minister knows only too well that I have requested a copy of the CDIC report on the Principal Group. I am not suggesting, and the Minister knows that very well, that all confidentiality with regard to financial institutions be breached. I have never suggested that. But I have said to the Minister that in this particular instance, because of 60,000 Canadians losing their life savings, is it not in the good public interest of this country that that be made public so Canadians can see the involvement of the federal Government? Thus far the Minister has said no, but I would like him to comment on that third point as well.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the position of the Hon. Member on the question of CDIC and the Principal Group is a bit like trying to find a needle in a haystack. He says he is in favour of confidentiality but in this particular case he is not in favour of confidentiality. Is that what he is saying? What is the principle that guides the Hon. Member, the notoriety of a current predicament? Does that always override the principle of confidentiality?

I do not understand the Hon. Member's point. If he believes that confidentiality should be in place in some instances and not in others, could he tell me when he would discriminate against one and lean towards the other? My position is clear. There should be some confidentiality, but the CDIC should try to participate with information as much as it can, publicly and on a confidential basis, with inquiries such as the Code inquiry in Alberta.

Second, my understanding on the Drug Prices Review Board, and the Hon. Member can correct me if I am wrong, is that the Drug Prices Review Board is looking backward. It is not just looking forward. It is looking backward retroactively. I do not know where he gets that argument. I checked with the Minister before coming to the debate today. It is confirmed. It is looking backward as well as forward. Therefore, the point the Hon. Member makes is wrongly based unless I misunderstood the over-all thrust of what he was saying.

Finally, the Hon. Member asked about federal sales tax revenues in the last two or three years. A large part of those revenues has come from the growth of the economy which has led to increased revenues. This is the wonderful thing about growth, about jobs and about increasing investment. If one compares the period in office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) from 1984 to 1988 with the period during which the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance, one will find that revenues taken by the federal Government, proportionately, were much greater under that Liberal administration than they have been under this administration.

I really do not know the basis on which the Hon. Member has made his complaint about revenues. They are lower than they were under the Liberal administration of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition when he was Minister of Finance, plus the fact that a large part of the increased take from federal sales tax comes from the growth of the economy.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was astonished to hear some of the statements made by the Minister. He suggested that provincial revenues had gone up very sharply in Manitoba and that that was of itself wrong, ignoring the fact that under his own administration, federal revenues have gone up for a number of reasons, including substantial tax increases put into place by the Conservative Government. Those increases include three increases in sales tax, and sales tax revenues have in fact doubled under the Conservative Government since 1984.

I find the speciousness of the Minister's comments rather demeaning, and I am sorry to hear him make those particular comments. However, perhaps I can focus on a couple of things. In the first place, the Minister says he has not heard anything different from the New Democratic Party. The Liberals can speak for themselves with respect to economic policy, but what he has heard from the New Democratic Party is that we believe that full employment is as important an objective of economic policy as economic growth, the control of inflation and regional development. In fact, those things all fit together.

What has been lacking from the previous Government and from the present Government is, of course, a commitment to making full employment as important an objective as what the bankers, financiers and right-wing pundits tell the Government it ought to do.

Part of this resolution deals with the issue of bank charges. I listened with some concern to what the Minister had to say. He talked about great faith in the market system which brought us the crash last October. He talked about competition and he argued that the private sector was the engine of the economy. There is, in his view, no particular role for Government. I could contest that at some length, but what I would point to is his conclusion that this is the over-all answer to the concerns raised in the debate. For those consumers who have been concerned about bank charges, about the way they feel they have been victimized by increases up to 100 per cent in the last three or four years in charges levied by the bank for different services, his answer is: "Let them eat cake", because as far as he is concerned, the market system will short them out.

• (1220)

I suppose that I should applaud the courage of the Minister for sending out average consumers from coast to coast to do battle with Canada's multi-billion dollar banks and the banking system. Frankly, I think that is a rather unfair type of competition. If the Minister really cared about the consumer, he would be seeking to ensure that there was some force by which consumers acting collectively could receive a fair deal when the banks are ripping them off.

Mr. Hockin: I am very happy to respond to the Hon. Member's points and questions, because I did not have an opportunity to elaborate further on the question of bank charges raised in the motion.

Bank charges are being looked at carefully by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. The Hon. Member is a member of that committee. I am looking forward to that report. I would like to receive it quickly in order that we can act based upon it.

With that report in mind we will act, and the role of Government will be pivotal to the way we act. We will not leave it totally to competition. The Hon. Member knows that the competitive part of our answer to bank charges is an important part of the answer, but it is not the whole answer.

Mr. Cassidy: He is backing down, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hockin: I am not backing down at all. The Government itself will have to act and it has acted before. There are a whole series of proposals—

Mr. Cassidy: This is like Saul on the road to Damascus.

Mr. Hockin: —for disclosure, for elaborating on the role of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions with regard to regulating financial institutions. There is a superintendent not simply to keep competition buzzing along, which is great, but also to help to protect Canadians as consumers. As a matter of fact, the superintendent is doing an excellent job. We also have an interdepartmental committee looking at this before we receive the bank service report in order that we can respond very quickly when we receive the report. I think that the Member will be very happy with the way in which we will respond when we receive the report.

The role of the Government is essential in the protection of depositors and policy holders in a world where there is a market system or a centralized economy. It is absolutely central, and there is not very much difference about that. Where there is a difference of opinion between the Hon. Member and myself is in the importance of this new competition that I am insinuating into the system through our Blue Paper changes. Let me give the Hon. Member an example.

It was not too long ago that the big banks stated that they could not have variable rate mortgages. The Hon. Member knows something about mortgages. He has been involved in that issue. A humble trust company in my home town brought in variable rate mortgages. Three months later the banks found a way to bring in variable rate mortgages. A small trust company gave leadership to the whole system and the banks got on board. That is what we are going to bring into the economy, based on my reforms. After my reform is passed, insurance companies will be able to make consumer and commercial loans; trust companies over a certain size will have the total capacity to do the same. As a result, banks will have a great deal of competition. I know that that is not the total answer, but it is an important part of the answer for the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Gagliano: The Minister spoke at length on the tax reform. In the past three and a half years the Government has received from consumers more than $20 billion in taxes. Next week Canadian consumers will pay a one cent per litre tax increase on gasoline. Perhaps the Minister can tell us what that will do to the consumer.

My question is specifically related to the loss of value of properties due to the installation of supermailboxes. I am sure the Minister is aware of the Ontario Municipal Board ruling that supermailboxes installed in front of a house reduce its value. As a matter of fact, a citizen in the Municipality of Pickering had his or her property tax bill reduced because of that. Is this policy of the Government to stop delivering mail door-to-door to new subdivisions, and installing supermailboxes not affecting consumers at large? Canadians who invest their savings in a new home are now seeing values reduced because of the government policy of installation of supermailboxes. Not only do they receive second-class service, but also the value of their house and their investment is being reduced.

Mr. Hockin: I am glad that the Hon. Member has interjected with this question. I feel very strongly about this whole question of postal service and the Canadian consumer. I know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) does also.

If the price of stamps has to be doubled in order to have door-to-door delivery on a regular basis, the Canadian consumer will be up in arms. Our position is that the Canadian people want a responsible approach to Canada Post. They want postage stamps to be reasonably priced, and they want good service. When Canada Post reaches the stage of balancing its budget, which it will do shortly, we will then be in a position to make many choices on behalf of the consumer, such as, for example, if we want more service, if we want cheaper service, or if we want to make certain policy departures. The Government believes that those departures should not take place until the budget is balanced. The whole initiative of the Government on behalf of Canada Post has been excellent for the consumer.

In respect of the municipal example quoted by the Hon. Member, a reporter asked a resident of Pickering about this issue. I gather that it is the Town of Pickering that has decided to sue Canada Post and the federal Government for the use of supermailboxes. The following is what one resident, Muriel Beckett, had to say: "There are a lot of people around here that have a fire hydrant on their property. They have the electrical boxes too, so it is a trade-off. You get one or the other. I really don't think it will affect the property or the value of the property very much either".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, time does not permit me to say all the things I would like to say in this debate over a very comprehensive, one might say unfocused, motion coming from the Liberals.

I note the double entente and the confusing messages delivered by the Government, as we witnessed in the speech given by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). He thumps himself on the chest and states that the private sector is the engine of the economy. When one presses and starts to say that that engine is rolling over average Canadians, forcing people to the wall, and it is not being fair to poor consumers, suddenly the Minister states that we have to direct it a bit, and Government has to step in in order to play a role.

Most people who understand the Canadian economy know that we have a mixed economy in which there is an important role for the public sector, for the co-operative sector, and for the private sector. There is nothing wrong in saying that. But I find that this cant that comes forward from time to time from Progressive Conservatives is a little sickening. Generally, it seems to be directed at the New Democratic Party, a Party which has no problems at all in acknowledging that the private sector has a role, the public sector has a role, and there needs to be a co-operation between the different elements of our society if we are going to have a society which is just, equitable, effective, competitive, and fair to all of its citizens and residents.

I ask the Hon. Minister of State, does he really think that a society that is fair only to the rich and the powerful is the type of society Canadians want to achieve?

Mr. Hockin: That is cant.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister would say "No, of course not". He would state, "I want to be as fair to the widow in Newfoundland as to Conrad Black and to the other people who finance my Party in Toronto, and places like that".

In practice, the Government acts otherwise. That is one of the problems we have had with the Government over the last three or four years. That is not to say we did not have problems with the Liberal Party as well, and that the Liberal Party is not having its problems with itself. This resolution speaks to the inadequacies of postal service. It was the Liberal Party that created Canada Post, which is currently responsible for postal services. This resolution speaks to the high cost of gasoline. It was the Liberal Party that put the sales tax increase into the 1984 Budget which was implemented by this particular Government. The resolution speaks about the Government's acquiescence to sky-rocketing bank charges. That increase in bank charges did not begin after September 4, 1984; it began back in 1981 and 1982. Who was in power then? The Liberals were in power, Mr. Speaker.

• (1230)

The resolution also speaks to the unnecessarily high interest rate policy of the Government. I have challenged the Government on this issue. I have raised it again and again. However, let us not forget that 11 per cent mortgages are a heck of a lot better than the 19 per cent mortgages which prevailed when the Liberals were in power.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) ignored my question when I pointed out that he did not raise the interest rate issue in 1982 and 1983. It was the New Democratic Party which was raising the issue at that time. Back-bench Liberals were mute while their own constituents were being forced out of business, were losing their homes, were losing their jobs, et cetera. I suppose time heals many things.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond agreed with me that interest rates were unnecessarily high six years ago, but then he said: "Well, we had a world recession at that time but we do not have a recession now". If we had a recession back then, what the devil was the Government doing imposing interest rates which the Liberal spokesperson on consumer affairs now admits were unnecessarily high? Why the devil did they not bring them down? I suppose that is a question which must be answered in the next election.

Also a question about economic and financial management needs to be raised, not just about the Conservative Party but about, the Hon. Minister of State for Finance will be glad to know, the Liberal Party itself. I should like to quote from Mr. Jeffrey Simpson's column today wherein he said: "The Liberals are stone broke. They face a deep and worsening financial crisis". He indicated that the Royal Bank, long a mainstay of the financial drives of the Liberal Party to maintain itself in power, has refused to extend its line of credit, and that the Liberal Party's corrective measures have invoked extreme controversy and differences of views within the Party to the point that the President of the Party is likely to be forced out, or forced to resign, or may in fact even lose a nomination. He also indicates that the Liberals are not yet sure how to get through the next six months without a crisis even more serious than the one of three weeks ago when the Party came within a whisker of not being able to meet its payroll.

The New Democratic Party has been giving a great deal of thought to how Canada needs to be governed and how the economy needs to be managed should we be called upon to form the Government after the next election. I want to say that a Party which does not even know how it can manage through the next six months is not displaying the necessary fitness to run the country again after the 1988 or 1989 election.

If I could turn my attention to the Minister of State for Finance, the Canadian Export Association and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are increasingly raising questions about the high interest rate policy of the Government. Let us make no mistake that that is what we have. It was not created by the market system on its own. It was created by deliberate monetary policy being carried out by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and under the authority of the Government. The Government cannot wash its hands of that, because weekly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) meets with the Governor and he has the power to tell the Governor to bring down interest rates.

I am not sure whether or not the Governor blinked this week in terms of his annual report. He had the good grace not to mention zero inflation rates as his objective in his annual report. I thought there was some significance to that. He indicated in his press conference that he was no longer prepared to confront or to seek confrontation with the Government in power. Nonetheless, we are also told that the Governor and the bank will continue to let interest rates rise on the treasury bill auction which they manage. Therefore they are bringing the bank rate up which, as the Minister of State for Finance knows, affects short-term interest rates in general and influences the inflow of money into the country.

Rather than acting, as the bank can, to bring interest rates down to a more reasonable level relative to world rates, particularly rates in the United States, the Bank of Canada is continuing to push up those rates. Instead, it is selling Canadian dollars wholesale in the exchange markets, to the point where we have doubled our foreign exchange reserves of U.S. dollars that have been tendered in return for Canadian dollars over the last year. By selling those Canadian dollars, the bank has prevented the exchange rate from going absolutely through the roof. However, now exporters are saying that it is bad enough at 80 cents because it is tougher for them to sell and to compete in Canada against imports. However, if the dollar goes up to 82, 83, or 84 cents, they will be facing a very serious situation.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association is now lending its voice to the concerns of New Democrats in saying, as I say now, that interest rates should be brought down by 1 per cent or more over a three-month period, a gradual decline which would allow for monitoring and adjustment if problems develop. I am pleased to have the support of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on this particular question.

I point out to people who are in business and people who are concerned about Canada's trading relationship with the United States that in the course of just three months or four months we have seen an increase in the value of the Canadian dollar relative to the United States which has more than equalled the tariff cuts that the United States is committed to make over a 10-year period in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement signed last October.

If the trade agreement over 10 years is meant to be giving 100,000 or 150,000 jobs to Canada—and we do not know whether or not it is true—we will have a reverse move, which will lose 100,000 to 150,000 or more jobs to Canada, and all the benefit of the trade agreement will be wiped out. If the Government wants to be consistent, it should be keeping the dollar around 76 cents and moving ahead with the trade agreement. Instead, it gives with one hand, supposedly, and takes with the other, which can cause serious harm as far as the country is concerned.

A Government which is in fact concerned about the way in which a country is developing would look at the fact that the economy is somewhere at the full employment level in the area immediately around Metropolitan Toronto. There are jobs available; they are not necessarily good jobs, but there are jobs available. The unemployment rate is down to as low as 3 per cent to 4 per cent in certain areas. However, the idea expressed by the Governor of the Bank of Canada that he must jam on the breaks every time the Toronto regional economy gets too hot seems to be unacceptable to average Canadians in most parts of Canada.

We should be talking about seeking means by which additional credit can be made available to areas like Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, northern British Columbia, and northern Quebec. Currently that is not the situation and there are excessively high rates of unemployment, but economic development and job creation are simply not applied that far.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in his attack on the banks, the Liberal Party critic chose to ignore the fact that his Party depends very heavily on contributions from the banking sector.

In 1984, donations to the Liberal Party by the banks equalled donations to the Conservative Party. The Bank of Montreal gave $75,000 to the Liberals; the Bank of Nova Scotia gave $70,000; the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce gave $70,000; the Royal Bank gave $75,000 to the Liberals; the Toronto-Dominion Bank gave $70,000; and the National Bank of Canada gave $30,000 in political donations to the Liberal Party of Canada.

In 1986, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives received about $35,000 from each of the Big Five. The Liberals received $35,000 from the Bank of Montreal, $35,000 from the Bank of Nova Scotia, $37,000 from the Bank of Commerce, but apparently nothing from the Toronto-Dominion Bank and nothing from the Royal Bank. I imagine that was because they had gone too deeply into debt.

Mr. Speaker, we have here a Party that has remained friends with the banking sector. After all, the banks contributed $350,000 to the Liberal Party in 1984. Mr. Speaker, if they are returned to power, do you think the Liberal Party will stand up for the banks or for the average consumer? I think the answer is obvious.

• (1240)

[English]

I would like to deal with this question of bank charges. We are talking about a lot of money. In the last year for which we have figures, 1987, it is estimated that the direct bank charges for deposit accounts, safekeeping and payroll processing increased by about 20 per cent, to a total of $1.1 billion by the five chartered banks. If you bring in foreign exchange revenue, credit card fees, loan fees, securities commissions, bankers acceptances, letters of credit, guaranteed fees and other items, we are talking about a total of $4 billion which the banks collect annually. They are running amok in terms of the ways these fees have been increasing. For example, over the last five years, at a time when the economy was expanding at about 5 per cent and at a time when the banks were bringing in all kinds of new machinery to increase productivity, the Bank of Commerce had a compound growth rate in its service charges to consumers of 17 per cent per annum. In 1983 it charged consumers $126 million, and in 1987 it charged them $235 million. The total of these fees now exceeds the profits that have been shown by the five chartered banks before the special provisions for Third World write-downs made back in 1987. This means that people are finding themselves paying every time they turn around at the chartered banks.

I have the figures here about increases in general for all the banks from 1982 to 1986. The Toronto-Dominion Bank increased its bank service charges by 75 per cent, the Royal Bank by 101 per cent, the Imperial Bank by 74 per cent, the Nova Scotia Bank by 81 per cent and the Bank of Montreal by 116 per cent.

If you look at the year over year increases for different services, Mr. Speaker, you will find that these charges are going up by 20 per cent, 30 per cent, 50 per cent or 100 per cent, and the consumer hardly knows where to turn or what he or she can do about it.

I have a letter here written to my friend, our spokesperson on unemployment insurance, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). This letter is from Winnipeg. It reads, in part, "Why was the bank deducting $1 off my account each month because the balance was below $200"? When the person went to the bank and asked it to do something, the bank said it would drop the charge if the person increased the balance in the account to over $200. Someone else was hit not once but twice for personalized cheques in one month just a few months ago. The cost was $8.06 a whack despite the fact that for years previously as a senior citizen, the person had never been charged for cheques. This person says, reflecting the anger existing out there—this is a senior citizen from Calgary, Alberta,—"the bastards are ripping me off". This is somebody in their sixties or seventies. It is strong language but it shows how people feel about the treatment.

I have another example of cheques returned NSF. The service charge was $13.50 on a $75 cheque for Visa with the Bank of Commerce. A cheque for $50 was returned and a service charge of $13.50 was imposed. What it demonstrates, of course, is that if you are a small consumer then the charges are particularly onerous. If you are wealthy, you bounce a cheque and you pay $13, that is bad enough, but $13 on a $10,000 draft is something different than $13 on a cheque written for $50 or $100 by someone who has a very small income.

I think it is interesting to note in the figures that we have here just how much the cost of doing business can differ for a standard package of different services from different financial institutions. The Ottawa Citizen in January this year did an estimate and it found that the annual cost of a series of chequing and savings transactions for a typical Ottawa consumer would range from a low of $154 for someone at the CS Co-op up to $234 at the Scotia Bank; $258 at the Royal Trust and $276.20 at the Bank of Montreal. I bank with the Bank of Montreal because it is close, by but perhaps I should reconsider that particular situation.

What I have found, and it makes me angry as a consumer myself, is that I get hit with these little charges here and there. It is $3 to put a cheque in on a monthly basis in order to keep my line of credit from getting out of sight. When I went to talk to the bank it said, "Oh, we are awfully sorry". The bank took the charge away. I am a Member of Parliament. I can find someone to talk to. The banks have to listen to me because they will possibly hear about the matter here in the House of Commons. But a constituent of mine living in Dalhousie ward is not in that position at all. A constituent of mine living in Dalhousie ward may feel that he or she has no choice but to spend as much as $20, $30 or $40 at a cheque cashing service because they cannot establish the ability to cash the cheque in a Canadian chartered bank. We have seen the collapse of the CCBs.

The Minister looks puzzled. The consumer protection agencies have been trying to bring this matter to the Minister's attention, but the Government has not been prepared to act on that front at all. That kind of action should be outlawed, and I believe that that should be a protection for the consumer. I believe that the chartered banks have the privilege to print money, the privilege to make billions of dollars in profits, the privilege to get by year after year without paying any tax at all, thanks to the privileges given to them by the Liberals and the Conservatives. The least the banks should be prepared to do is to cash a Government of Canada cheque or cash a welfare cheque from some average, ordinary Canadian or pensioner living on a small income and not force that person to go down that street to a cheque cashing service where he is ripped off, paying $5, $10, $25 to cash a cheque to put some bread on the table to feed the family or pay the rent.

That is reality and why I believe it is wrong, as the Minister said, to trust the market system alone. For God's sake this is a compassionate society, or it was until the Progressive Conservatives came to power. This is the Party that tried to deindex the old age pensions and tried to drive down the pensions of old age pensioners by 3 per cent year after year. This is the Party which deindexed the family allowances. In other words, it balanced its deficit not by taxing Conrad Black but by taking money away every month from families with children in this country. That is abject exploitation of average ordinary Canadians.

I realize, in talking about these things, that we are talking about the forthcoming election. In the forthcoming election I will be talking to my constituents in Ottawa Centre saying, "Do you want a Party that is prepared to give substantial tax cuts to only one group?" Only one group has tax cuts under tax reform, Mr. Speaker. The people who will be paying less in 1988 than in 1984 under the Conservative Government's tax reform are those with incomes of over $100,000 a year. The average family in my riding will be paying more than $1,000 in taxation after the Conservative Government tax reform than they were paying before. I am going to tell them that. No doubt the Government will turn around and say, "Look at all the people we took off the tax rolls". But the Government forgets that these people were taken on the tax rolls first before they were taken off.

As far as my Party is concerned, we think that issues like this are substantive and important public issues. We believe that, yes, there is a cause and a case for Government to be involved in working at the social organization of our country to have a compassionate and a caring society. That is why we fought for medicare, full employment, hospital insurance, an adequate network of benefits for people who through bad luck cannot look after themselves. Most people really believe that. The banks should not be exempt from that.

I would like to see an ombudsman protect average Canadians in the banking system the way it is done in the United Kingdom. I would like to see local advisory committees established in every community with whom the banks would have to consult from time to time on the nature of their services. I would like to see a government prepared to stand up for average Canadians and not just for wealthy Canadians.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I have some very brief questions for the Hon. Member. An NDP Member of the Manitoba Legislature said on February 12, talking about the Manitoba NDP Government: "I am afraid government philosophy tends to be: if it moves, then tax it, if it doesn't move, then put a tax on it. That is the perception people are getting out there when they see all of these taxes, some of them regressive". That was an NDP Member speaking about the NDP Government.

I think that Member was referring to the provincial sales tax rate which had been increased from 5 per cent to 7 per cent. A flat rate tax on net income and of course the payroll tax were brought in. Does the Hon. Member believe in a flat rate tax on net income and does he believe in increasing sales taxes as has been done in that province under an NDP Government?

Second, the Hon. Member talks about his Party's commitment to full employment, and that is an important objective. Does he dispute the fact that 1,213,000 jobs have been created in Canada since September of 1984? I want him to answer that, because that is a statistic we are quoting and I was wondering if he disputed it.

Finally, a columnist in the Winnipeg Free Press said that it is getting harder and harder to find anyone who is poor and that since the Finance Minister of the NDP Manitoba Government is opposed to taking big tax bites from the poor, everyone has suddenly become rich. I want to ask the Hon. Member what is his definition of poor and what is his definition of rich? I need this information to respond in the next few months.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the Hon. Minister was quoting the former NDP Member of the Manitoba Legislature who in fact decided, in an act of disloyalty to his Party, to vote against it on the Budget. He decided to break his word to the Premier of Manitoba. Having promised that he would vote for the Government on the Budget, he then changed his mind without giving any advance notice. There is a very real question as to whether or not he had been bought off. He certainly indicated that he is open to offers from the Government if the federal Conservatives are prepared to pay in gratitude for the fact that he provoked the Manitoba election.

I would also point out that one of the reasons the New Democrats have been in power in Manitoba for 17 of the last 20 years, I believe, has been specifically because of its commitment to full employment and its capacity to provide honest, sensitive and caring Government in that province. I would point out that during the course of the recession, Manitoba consistently had the lowest rate of unemployment of the provinces, and that was because of the commitment to maintaining employment and creating jobs, which was the number one priority of the Manitoba New Democrats when they came back to power under Howard Pawley about six or seven years ago.

That Government has displayed a great deal of courage on a number of other issues, including the issue of official languages. I regret to say that the Hon. Minister's friend and colleague, the leader of the Manitoba Progressive Conservative Party, defied his own leader's position on official languages and did everything he could to exploit the language issue. I think Manitoba voters were right to see through him at the time.

Yes, there have been some sales tax increases in the Province of Manitoba, as I understand it, but I would point out that in terms of over-all levels of employment, the Minister himself has said that it is harder and harder to find anyone who is poor in Manitoba. I suggest that that is also a tribute to the job that has been done by the Manitoba New Democrats in the time they have been in power.

Yes, I accept that, according to Statistics Canada, there has been an increase of some 1.2 million employed Canadians over the last three and a half years. Statistics Canada also points out, of course, that there are still some 1.1 million Canadians who are out of work today. The Government's own projections in the Budget indicate that unemployment through 1988 will rise rather than fall from last December's level.

In addition to the 1.1 million Canadians who are registered as being unemployed, we can talk of the further 500,000 Canadians who are natives on Indian reserves who do not have jobs but are not counted, people who are on welfare because they cannot get jobs and people who are discouraged and have dropped out of the labour force. On top of that, there is a further group of something like 500,000 Canadians, and probably more, who are working part time but are not doing so voluntarily but simply because those are the only kinds of jobs available to them.

That suggests to me that though we have had some progress, largely because of the spill-over of the American economic upsurge into Canada, the Government has only been doing a little better than standing still. We need a very high rate of employment-creation in Canada for demographic reasons, as the Hon. Minister is very much aware, and we have an awfully long way to go before we achieve regional equity and bring unemployment rates down to the 4 per cent or 5 per cent level in every region of Canada. That, of course, is what we should be aiming for rather than tolerating the Bank of Canada putting on the brakes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I don't have much time to analyse the speech by the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party, but I must say that while I was listening to his speech, which was very interesting, I was reminded of the time several years ago, before 1976, when the Parti Québécois was in the opposition. It is easy for the New Democratic Party to criticize since it never formed the Government. But if we were to analyse the record of certain provincial governments, and I am referring to the Parti Québécois in Quebec and the New Democratic Party in other provinces, the results would be very interesting.

But I would like to get back to federal matters, Mr. Speaker. Last fall during the postal strike, every day the New Democratic Party, like the Liberals, asked the Govermment to prohibit the hiring of scabs. However, when the New Democratic Party was asked whether it was prepared to pass anti-scab legislation, it did not have an answer, and said it would have to consider.

The Hon. Member said in Quebec City that if the new Government was formed by the NDP, he was prepared to cancel the frigate contracts for New Brunswick and give them to Quebec. A week later, his leader came to Montreal and said no, he wouldn't do that. And as far as party financing is concerned, we can assume the New Democrats are just as non-committal. My question is this: Have they taken a position on legislation that would prohibit the hiring of scabs? What is their position on the frigates? And what is their position on party financing? Is the New Democratic Party prepared to turn down contributions from the unions?

Mr. Cassidy: About the anti-scab legislation, it is clear we need this kind of legislation at the federal level, and that is our Party's policy.

As for the frigates, Mr. Speaker, it was not a week but two hours later that my Leader clarified the statement I made by mistake. I admitted my mistake. My Leader stated our policy. A New Democratic government would respect the contracts now in effect and the people of New Brunswick would be given that assurance. No question. I made a mistake, but just the same, I wonder what the Liberal Government in Quebec has done about the problems in the shipyards. There are some real problems there which I was addressing, but I agree that the answer is not to reverse decisions on existing contracts but to provide for a fair policy on sharing future contracts among the shipyards.

As for changing the legislation on political contributions, I just want to say that my leader has come out in favour of a reform.

HUMAN RIGHTS

LATVIA—CEREMONY SCHEDULED TO COMMEMORATE VICTIMS OF STALINIST DEPORTATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, a ceremony will be held in Latvia tomorrow, March 25, to remember the victims of Stalinist deportations. The Helsinki '86 Human Rights Group of Latvia has called on all Latvian citizens to commemorate victims of the mass deportations of 1949 by laying flowers at the Statue of Liberty in Riga at 1830 hours, that is 10.30 a.m. Eastern Standard Time, tomorrow.

On March 25, 1949, a mass round-up began resulting in the deportation of over 43,000 individuals from Latvia. The action was part of Stalin's forced collectivization by the physical removal of independent farmers and destruction of the traditional rural base of the country. These mass deportations, which struck all three Baltic States simultaneously, were considerably larger than those of June 14, 1941, commemorated this past summer. If indeed the U.S.S.R. authorities allow the ceremony in Riga to proceed peacefully tomorrow, we will have seen a concrete example of glasnost.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POLAND—PLIGHT OF DR. KORNEL MORAWIECKI

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on November 9, 1987, the Polish Government arrested and imprisoned Dr. Kornel Morawiecki, leader of the Polish Opposition Group "Solidarnosc Walczaca", or "Fighting Solidarity", a non-violent underground organization.

Morawiecki had been in hiding since the imposition of martial law in 1981. During the last six years he devoted his energy to the creation of this movement whose goals are democracy, freedom, and respect for human rights. The only crime of this brave Polish patriot is his dedication and commitment to the pursuit of these goals, and his unlawful arrest is clearly a violation of the letter and spirit of the Helsinki Accord to which Poland and Canada are both signatories.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to use every means at their disposal to secure the release of Kornel Morawiecki from his illegal imprisonment.

IMMIGRATION

BACKLOG OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is undermining and discrediting Canada's refugee status determination system and our legal obligations to the UN. Last week the Minister moved to deport 40 Turks out of the backlog of 46,000 refugee claimants, whereas this week the same Minister indicated he is prepared to start a new administrative review to clear the backlog. It is grossly unjust to deport some now and later allow others to stay through administrative review.

Today we learn the Minister will in a few weeks fire about 10 of the most highly qualified and competent members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. Among them are Susan Davis, formerly a protection officer in Canada with the UN High Commission for Refugees; William Barton, former Canadian Ambassador to the UN and liaison with the UNHCR; and Yvon Beaulne, formerly Canadian Ambassador with experience in the UNHCR. Such people have proven expertise and judgment in refugee matters. They are being dumped, evidently to be replaced by Tory hacks who will assist the Minister to expel refugees. Shame on the Government for its campaign against refugees.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA SPORT FISHING INDUSTRY—CALL FOR REPLACEMENT OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, only six days ago I rose in the House of Commons to condemn the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), who caused great damage to the sport fishing industry in British Columbia, for failing to consult with the industry before changing the rules for salmon catches. Since then I have received at my constituency office, subsequently forwarded here to Ottawa, 3,000 cards of support from British Columbians living on Vancouver Island.

All of these British Columbians call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to "reject the proposed punitive regulations of your Minister of Fisheries, Tom Siddon, against the recreational chinook fishery in the Strait of Georgia", and demand that the Prime Minister "abandon these proposed regulations immediately and have your Minister of Fisheries consult with the recognized sport fishing representatives to develop a proper management plan for the Strait of Georgia". I will be sending these 3,000 protests from British Columbians to the Prime Minister this afternoon.

Considering that this week alone the Minister has angered the entire Province of Nova Scotia by handing out improper lobster licences, that 14 of 15 members of his Lobster Advisory Council have resigned, and that he has failed to protect the fish processing industry on both coasts and ignored the deep concern of thousands of his fellow British Columbians in the sport fishing industry, I would suggest that the Prime Minister find himself a new Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DISABILITY BENEFIT APPLICATIONS—ROUTINE REJECTION

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express concern about the manner in which applications for Canada Pension disability benefits are processed. They are rejected at the first level as a matter of course and further appeals are very time consuming and frequently result in injustices to claimants. I am advised that the text outlined in the Act is the source of the problem, but that is only partly the case. The process is also faulty.

• (1405)

I therefore urge the Minister to consider changing the test prescribed in the Act so that disabled Canadians unable to work may receive the benefits to which they feel entitled. I also urge that an end be put to the routine rejection of applications at the lower level of assessment. It is time for this unworkable legislation and process to be changed.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

BILL C-85—USE OF PROVISIONS AGAINST NON-STRIKING WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to tell Hon. Members of the unfortunate and unwanted consequences resulting from the passage by this House last August of Bill C-85 which ordered striking railway workers back to work.

This legislation is now being used by the CPR to intimidate non-striking workers by the threat of fines of up to $1,000 a day if they refuse to cross picket lines. The CPR uses those provisions written into Bill C-85 as a way to intimidate its workers regardless of their collective bargaining situation.

There is no great emergency facing the railways today. There is no certainty that non-striking workers will be fined for refusing to cross the picket lines of a legal strike. The only certainty is that the CPR is using any means it can to keep operating.

This is a clear CPR strategy to divide its work force. It won't work, but the House of Commons should realize that this action is a direct result of the use and misuse of the passage of Bill C-85.

PROGESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

GENERAL MEETING OF QUEBEC WING

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the general assembly of the Quebec wing of our party will be held next weekend in Montreal. Over 1,000 delegates from all regions of Quebec will participate in this major political gathering. For two days, they will debate and adopt resolutions following an unprecedented democratic process for a federal party in Quebec.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1987, the Hon. Monique Vézina set up eight political commissions and ten regional panels, bringing together over 2,000 active party members throughout Quebec. More than 225 resolutions were adopted. The Commission on the Environment and Natural Resources alone, of which I am the chairman, has received 60 proposals, which very clearly shows the commitment of our members to matters related to the environment and our quality of life.

In closing, I would like to thank all Quebec Party members who took part in this political reflection exercise, in this unprecedented democratic process, and who will help to make the Progressive Conservative Party the strongest Party in Quebec, the Party with the clearest options and the only federal Party to be truly devoted to the interests of Quebecers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—REQUEST THAT LABOUR CONFLICT BE RESOLVED

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, after 18 months, the employees of the Education Group of the Public Service Alliance of Canada are still in conflict with the Treasury Board.

The last meeting between management and the union was held on January 13, 1988, and nothing has happened since. This group of federal Government employees has been without a contract for 18 months, since September 1986. What is at issue is not money or wages, but the work load of the teachers.

Under the terms of the Government offer, language teachers could spend 37 1/2 hours a week teaching for 20 consecutive weeks without any time allowed during their workday for course preparation. Under these conditions, Mr. Speaker, the quality of the teaching and the performance of the teachers would certaintly deteriorate. We have to wonder whether the Conservative Government has a hidden agenda as concerns the teaching of our official languages.

THE YUKON

VISIT BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, last weekend I had the privilege, along with five colleagues from the government side of this House, of visiting the Yukon and the vigorous, vital Yukoners. The six of us spread out to 14 communities from Old Crow in the north to Carcross in the south, and from Beaver Creek in the west to Watson Lake in the east. We met with over 30 delegations ranging from native band leaders to Yukon Chamber of Mines.

Yukoners are for free trade. Like other Canadians they crave facts, not fear and fantasy. Yukoners are disappointed about Meech Lake seeming to diminish their prospects for provincehood, but they are cheered by the consistent record of the Progressive Conservative Party since John Diefenbaker that we will bring the Yukon to provincehood when Yukon declares itself ready.

Yukoners of all origins and occupations want an early and just settlement of land claims issues. We southerners, without judging the merits of the issues, urge them on and wish them well.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF CANADIAN CONTENT LAW

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Hyundai decision yesterday by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal increases the serious pressure hitting the auto industry in Canada. The real losers as foreign producers expand here are the Canadian parts producers. The Big Three have a commitment to 60 per cent Canadian content. Hyundai and the Japanese producers have no such commitment. Therefore, as they expand market share, Canadian parts producers and their workers lose out.

It is up to the Government to make all producers play fair by passing a Canadian content law for the auto industry that says 60 per cent applies to all significant auto sellers.

• (1410)

Some 20,000 to 40,000 skilled jobs are at stake. I call on the Government to move urgently for the sake of fairness.

THE PRIME MINISTER

GOLD INSIGNE AWARD

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) will be receiving on March 28 next in New York the Gold Insigne Award granted by the Pan American Society for his exceptional contribution to the strengthening of relations among countries of the Western hemisphere, for Canada's recent efforts to strengthen democratic institutions in Haiti and for his support to the Arias plan aimed at pacification in Central America.

The Pan American Society is in the United States the main forum in the United States where issues are discussed having a vital interest for countries of the western world.

The Gold Insigne Award has already been awarded to the American Presidents Hoover, Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower, Lyndon B. Johnson and John F. Kennedy and to Latin American leaders Miguel de la Madrid of Mexico, Raoul Alfonsin of Argentina and Napoleon Duarte of El Salavador.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for all Canadians and for the Prime Minister of Canada to be conferred that prestigious award.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—PLAN TO INCREASE NUMBERS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, now, with the coming of spring, what do we hear and read? The Post Office is set to double supermailboxes.

Imagine an 80-year old lady going through the snow and cold next winter to pick up her cheque, and handicapped people going in a wheelchair to pick up their cheques at a supermailbox. How can the Government do this to Canadians? Why does it not order Canada Post to stop installing supermailboxes?

Rather than create second-class citizens, the Government should create first-class citizens. The Minister responsible for Canada Post should order Canada Post not to install those boxes and to give door-to-door service to Canadians. That is the service they deserve, first-class service for first-class Canadians.

PAN AMERICAN SOCIETY'S AWARD

RECOGNITION OF CANADA'S ROLE IN STRENGTHENING INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on March 28 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) joins a select group of international dignitaries when he accepts on behalf of all Canadians the Pan American Society's Gold Insigne.

The award is given annually to the Government which has made an outstanding contribution to strengthening relations amongst western hemisphere countries.

All Canadians can be justifiably proud of their international reputation for humanity. Having won the Nansen Medal last year, we are now doubly qualified to play a greater role in international relations. No doubt our own multicultural heritage has enabled us to achieve these lofty awards. I congratulate the Prime Minister and all Canadians. Canada's reputation abroad is growing steadily and, as we near the next decade, I do not think there has ever been a better time to be a Canadian.

BILL C-85—USE OF PROVISIONS AGAINST NON-STRIKING WORKERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and others who are concerned about the way CPR is using Bill C-85 to intimidate and scare workers, to force them into situations where they feel they must come into conflict with their fellow workers on the picket lines.

There was a situation in Winnipeg yesterday where someone in a car took a run at the picket line, injuring one person. These situations can be traced back to the legislation the Government brought in and to the Government's lack of willingness to say clearly to the CPR, this House, and Canadians that this was not the intent of the Bill. The purpose of the Bill was to implement back-to-work legislation. The CPR has no right to use it to intimidate workers as it is doing.

I hope the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) will get up in the House today and say so.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA ELECTION—SELECTION OF LIBERAL PARTY CANDIDATES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, Liberal fortunes in Manitoba seem to be improving. One of my constituents wrote: "Dear Felix: Sorry I have not written to you for a while, but I have been busy attending the provincial Liberal nomination meetings. Just as an observer, you know".

He went on to write that "these Grits held one of their nomination meetings in a phone booth. For Burrows constituency they had only three people, the candidate, the mover, and the seconder. In Inkster constituency they nominated a mailman only to find out later he was not even a Party member.

• (1415)

"The meetings get more interesting, Felix. In Kirkfield Park a Liberal was acclaimed in the basement of her house. They just held a coffee party to decide who should run.

"For the Assiniboia riding 11 people attended the meeting but no one knew the fellow who was running. The mover of his nomination had to stop halfway through to ask him his name.

"Felix, is this the groundswell of Liberal enthusiasm that the papers keep talking about? Is this the Party that the TV news says Manitobans are showing strong support for?

"Well, Felix, I think I will quit going to any more of these Liberal meetings, otherwise they might soon declare me Party Leader."

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE

REQUEST FOR BETTER PENSION PLAN FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to a very important question, a promise the Government had made to Correctional Service employees, namely prison guards.

With respect to the pension plan, the Government had promised Correctional Service staff that they would be entitled to benefits similar to those enjoyed by the Armed Forces and the RCMP.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, Treasury Board officials have put everything on hold. We believe the Government should seriously consider the proposition whereby prison guards who want to retire ought to be entitled to the kind of benefits now available to the Armed Forces and the RCMP, but this suggestion has been rejected, and for totally unacceptable reasons.

The President of the Treasury Board refuses to see them, refuses to talk to them . . .

An Hon. Member: Is this a question?

Mr. Gauthier: This is not a question, but a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21. The Solicitor General agrees with them and says: Yes, I agree. You have a good suggestion, but Treasury Board will not go along.

My question is for the President of the Treasury Board: Is he prepared today to meet with representatives of the federal employees' union at the Correctional Service and offer or give them what they are asking for, an adequate pension plan, while keeping in mind the important work they do, the stress under which they have to work and, given all these considerations, find a solution to this question?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, four years ago this week, the Prime Minister, who was then Leader of the Opposition and preparing for the 1984 election, made his first election promise before the Montreal Chamber of Commerce when he said that he would double funding for research and development before the end of his first term.

Since the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister are now preparing for the next election, I wish they would explain why funding for research and development in Canada dropped from 1.37 per cent of GNP in 1984 to 1.29 per cent today.

The Prime Minister promised to double funding for R and D but it has dropped instead.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House how the Prime Minister could again break the first promise he made in the last election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not broken the promise, as suggested by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Quite frankly, the Prime Minister has taken a very vigorous interest in this particular issue by establishing his own National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, with which he meets on a regular basis and which reports directly to him.

The report given to him back in December, with a number of recommendations, has indeed been acted upon—such things as the reorganization of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, with greater emphasis on science and technology; InnovAction; the generous R and D tax proposal; increased funding for research, $1.3 billion, an unprecedented amount of money, has been allocated for research and development which was announced in January; the establishment of centres of excellence, and Canada scholarships programs. I could go on and on.

What I think is important is that there has been a partnership organized with the private sector, with the university community, and with Governments to address this very critical problem together. I think a lot of progress has been made in a co-operative fashion.

ADVISORY BOARD'S REPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Deputy Prime Minister mentioned the Advisory Board on Science and Technology and the report in December which the Prime Minister, until today, tried to keep secret. It was summarized today in the Toronto Star. An amazing fact which appears in the report, but which was not printed in the Toronto Star, is the unbelievably bad record of the Government in support of industrial research and development. The $1.3 billion mentioned by the Deputy Prime Minister is recycled money and it is not destined for industrial research and development.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that in that report not published today in the Toronto Star, direct government support for industrial research and development on a per capita basis is 50 per cent more in West Germany than in Canada, 240 per cent more in the United Kingdom than in Canada, and nearly 300 per cent more in the United States than in Canada? Those figures appear in the report of the Prime Minister's own committee, kept secret until this morning.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm those figures?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, a number of actions had been taken as a result of the ongoing work of the advisory committee.

I must say and remind the hon. gentleman that all Liberals do not share his view. Stuart Smith, a former Leader of the provincial Party, said that "The Prime Minister has identified himself with this issue and that's very important in this country. There's a cultural change that's going to take a long time but I think this meeting helps because people will hear the same messages over and over".

I could quote Larkin Kerwin. I could quote Roy Woodbridge, the Canadian Advanced Technology Association President, who stated that the conference was an "exercise in consensus-building and profile-raising".

In so far as the Member's comparison with West Germany is concerned, I am reminded by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, that Canada has the best tax regime of any major industrialized country for the support of research and development and science and technology.

Clearly we want to encourage the private sector to work with Governments and with the university communities in order that we can address this very critical job and get on with Canada becoming a leader in science and technology throughout the world.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I think that Dr. Stuart Smith was encouraged because the Prime Minister, for the first time, had identified the problem for himself.

In any event, what we are talking about here is industrial research and development by way of direct grants from the Government. We are not talking about a tax policy.

At the same meeting in December that the Deputy Prime Minister referred to, he criticized Canadian business for what he termed a poor record in research and development, while at the same time he had in his hands by that time a report from his own advisory group that his own Government's record was pathetic.

Before blaming the Canadian business community, why does the Prime Minister not improve his own Government's record? Does the Prime Minister have any intention of keeping that promise of doubling research and development, or is he going to recyle that 1984 commitment once more in a phoney way to the Canadian people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman is interested in the record, and if I can indulge the time of the House to put the record squarely before the right hon. gentleman, may I say the following. On August 19 the InnovAction program was allocated $11 million for 1987-88 to matching funding of $7 million over four years; Federal Microelectronics Strategy, $90 million over four years; Canadian Manufacturing Advanced Technology Exchange, $3.5 million over seven years.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is recycled money that you are talking about.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Granting Councils' Matching Funding (University Research) $3.4 billion over five years; Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, $7 million over four years. There are various federal-provincial science and technology programs.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the two Ministers of Immigration I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the confusion and chaos created by those two Ministers.

Not only is the Quebec Minister of Immigration charging that the federal Government violated their verbal agreement, but we also have a situation where members of the federal Ministers' own staff are giving conflicting statements, where federal immigration officials out in the country do not know what is the federal position, and where there are two standards depending upon whether one lives inside or outside the Province of Quebec.

Rather than blame everyone else for their shortcomings, will the Deputy Prime Minister now take his responsibilities seriously and precisely outline the federal position and decision taken on the entire issue facing Turkish claimants?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is on government business this afternoon, I will be happy to take notice of the question of the Hon. Member.

I also point out to him that he may find some answers to his questions as far as the Turkish situation in Quebec is concerned if he had a look at the Cullen-Couture agreement.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, not only are the two Ministers of Immigration not here while the storm is brewing, but we have a member of Cabinet who says that he will take notice—

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that ordinarily Hon. Members do not comment on the absence or presence of other Members or Ministers.

I believe that the Hon. Minister just said that the other Ministers were involved in government business, and I think that should be accepted.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE INFORMATION TO CANADIANS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister the following question once more: Since all Canadians are aware that even if the Government were to push Bill C-55 through at top speed today, with all its serious shortcomings, it would still have to deal with the problem of the Turks and 40,000 refugee claims which are still pending. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether aside from the question of the Turks, he is finally going to show some leadership and tell Canadians how the Government intends to deal with this tremendous backlog and restore the confidence of Canadians in our immigration system and refugee status procedures?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question under advisement on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. My colleague is not in the House today owing to previous Government commitments.

However, I note that for the first time, the Hon. Member for the federal Liberal Party of Canada has raised the possibility of adopting Bill C-55 in one day, which is a brand new development. I assume he must have talked to Liberal Senators in the other place. I think he should remember that since Bill C-55 was tabled in the House, Mr. Speaker, 10,000 refugees have been added to the list, through the fault of the federal Liberal Party of Canada. And now they have the nerve to blame us for this situation!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

ADVISORY BOARD'S REPORT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Just a moment ago he attempted to justify the Government's lack of leadership in research and development programming.

The report says that Canada's weakness is serious today and that it could be disastrous for the competitiveness of the Canadian economy in years to come. Specifically it points out, in comparing Canada with seven other countries, that we are at the bottom of the list of a total of eight.

Instead of trying to keep the report secret, why does the Government not release it and immediately live up to its commitment to double R and D spending?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had outlined a number of initiatives taken since the Prime Minister established this advisory board. The fact of the matter is that much has been done—federal-provincial science and technology subagreements, for example, with Québec, $100 million over five years; British Columbia, $20 million over five years; New Brunswick, $28.5 million over five years; Canadian space program, the Radarsat program, and the Biotechnology Research Institute, $80 million over three years; biotechnology strategy, $11 million per year; the Canadian Institute for Industrial Technology, $5.1 million; the Centre for Optic Research—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Mazankowski: I could go on. If that isn't action, I don't know what is.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE REFERRED TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, first the Deputy Prime Minister knows that most of that list of programs existed before Christmas when the report came down. Second, he also knows that most of what he is talking about is recycled money. Third, taking that list into account he knows that the people who wrote the report said Canada was second from the bottom, second from the bottom I say again, in terms of government funding for research.

Having said that, I would like to ask the Minister why will he not do a constructive thing and table the report in question, and have it referred immediately to a committee of the House that could report back for concrete action during the life of this Parliament?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talks about new money or old money, I am reminded of the charge that he made when the Prime Minister announced the first billion dollar farm cash pay-out to the farmers of western Canada and other parts of Canada who suffered the disasters of the price war that was going on at that time.

The hon. gentleman found out that it was new money, as it was this year, and we are talking about new money here, $1.3 billion—

Mr. Broadbent: That is all new money?

Mr. Mazankowski: —which the Prime Minister announced in January. I know that billions of dollars do not mean much to the Hon. Member, but as far as the science and technology community is concerned $1.3 billion is a lot of money and I am sure it will be well used.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Minister to produce the list he just read out and show how much on that list is new money. I tell him in advance that the majority of it is not new, and he knows it.

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have another question concerning economic competition, particularly with the United States. The Premier of Quebec has suggested another approach to meet the need for lower interest rates. Yesterday, the Premier of Ontario suggested the same need for Canada. A few minutes ago, the Bank of Canada announced another increase in interest rates. My question to the Minister is this: Why do business people in Canada have to pay higher interest rates than in the United States?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a rerun on the questions that we have had over the last few days that are basically the same. I can only give the Hon. Member the same answer.

The facts are we have a very strong economy in this country. If the Hon. Member doubts that, I can give him the statistics but he knows full well the statistics—

Some Hon. Members: Give him the statistics.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will give him a few just to remind him. We have seen job creation in the first two months of this year continuing at the record levels we had last year.

Mr. Broadbent: What has that got to do with the question?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks what does that have to do with the question.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The facts are that when an economy is strong the interest rates in the country go up because of pressure on money and because people are looking for money to invest in new things. With an increase in investment spending per cent this year—

An Hon. Member: Why the spread with the United States?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —which is up two and a half times over the level of last year, it puts upward pressure on the cost of money. The cost of money is interest rates. That is why interest rates are strong.

AIR SAFETY

AIRPORT SECURITY—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT REVIEW

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday in response to questions regarding the appalling state of security at Canada's airports, the Minister of Transport promised to call on the presidents of Canada's national airlines and have a tough talk with them. The House does not object to that, but we have heard those kinds of tough words before from this Minister and his predecessor and nothing has changed.

The Association of Investigators and Guard Agencies of Ontario wrote the Minister on February 22 recommending an independent assessment review of security at Canada's airports, independent of the Minister and independent of the airlines. The Minister wrote them back a letter which the Association received just his morning, and said no.

How can the Minister say to this professional association: "I do not believe that the formation of a 'task force' such as you have described is necessary at this time"?

What will it take before the Minister finally does the right thing and cleans up the security mess at Canada's airports?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not accept the statement that the security system at Canadian airports is appalling. That is just simply a silly and an irresponsible statement to make. We have come to expect silly and irresponsible statements from that hon. gentleman.

With respect to the letter to which the Hon. Member refers, he seems to have his hands securely on the postal system. He gets copies of letters before I even receive them myself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to that, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to appoint any further task forces on the security system at the airports. That was done in 1986. I am myself reviewing the security system at airports with airline presidents next week. When I come to a conclusion, the hon. gentleman opposite will certainly know about it, as will the Standing Committee on Transport which has recommended that certain steps be taken.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT ASSUME DIRECT RESPONSIBILITY FOR AIRPORT SECURITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer leads one to wonder whether the Minister is running his own Department. I referred to a letter which the Minister wrote in response to a letter of three weeks ago. I am holding the Minister's letter with the Minister's signature saying that, no, there is no necessity for any independent review of what is happening at Canada's airports.

I am asking him if he stands by that. What is at stake is not the Minister's reputation, the airlines' reputation, or the security agency's reputation, but public health and safety.

The Minister knows there is a problem. Will he move now beyond talking to airline presidents to have the Department of Transport take over direct responsibility for security in Canada's airports? Will the Minister do that? He knows that it is the right thing.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis would like security procedures in the Liberal caucus improved a bit—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —so that his back would be protected when he turns around.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I was asked the same question yesterday by the Hon. Member for Regina West. The Hon. Member is simply repeating an NDP question. I refer the Member to yesterday's Hansard for the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Which you didn't give.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS TO ENSURE CONFORMITY WITH CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. A few days ago the Minister in charge of the Western Diversification Fund said in the House of Commons committee that many of the proposals he is now receiving for assistance are being reviewed by officials at the Department of External Affairs to make sure that they are consistent with the free trade deal signed between the United States and Canada.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. His Government and the Prime Minister have time and time assured us in this House that the free trade deal would not affect regional development. If that is the case, why are proposals for western diversification being referred to External Affairs bureaucrats to make sure that they are consistent with the free trade deal? Why is that the case?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member will understand, he probably already understood before he asked the question, that if, prior to the signing of the free trade agreement you were caught cheating there was an ability to countervail, and even after signing the free trade agreement if you are cheating there is the ability to countervail.

An Hon. Member: Cheating?

Mr. McKnight: There is nothing new. It is making sure, Mr. Speaker, that the actions taken by the Government are consistent with actions taken in the past.

REGIONAL DECISION MAKING QUERY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the next thing we will see is a reference of these applications to the ITC in Washington if this continues.

The Minister said: "Together we will ensure that decision making about the West is decision making by the West". What kind of regional decision making is it when these applications are now being systematically sent to the Department of External Affairs to make sure there is no violation of the free trade deal? I want to know what kind of regional decision making that is when the Minister has to have approval from the bureaucrats across the way at the Lester B. Pearson Building?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First, Mr. Speaker, the premise which the Hon. Member puts that they are being systematically sent there is completely false. Applications are not systematically sent. If there is assistance by the Government of Canada that would cause countervail, that assistance has to be reviewed. It was so before the free trade agreement and it is so after the free trade agreement.

• (1440)

It has absolutely nothing to do with the free trade agreement. It is complying with laws and assuring that people who receive assistance from the Government of Canada are not found to be countervailed by the Americans. It is very simple. We want to make sure that the borders that are open and the agreements that are consistent, including GATT, are honoured by Canada. That is all.

TAX REFORM

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—QUERY WHETHER CONSULTATIONS ARE ENDED

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Over the last three weeks, your department has made intensive consultation with prospectors, geologists, brokers and with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, concerning the impact of the tax reform on flow-through shares in Canada. My question to the Minister is as follows, Mr. Speaker: When will this consultation be completed and when are we going to know the results?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has continued to express a very strong interest in the question of flow-through shares. I would like, though, to broaden one aspect of the preamble to his question.

Our consultations with the industry and with others relate not just to the impact of tax reform but to the impact of changes in the stock market and the impact of changes in the taxable position of the larger mining companies. All of these have impacted on flow-through shares.

Right now I am reviewing the results of the consultations we have carried out, and I would probably be discussing some of these things further with representatives of the industry before any decisions will be taken.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that the President of Air Canada last week announced that the corporation is about to make a decision concerning the replacement of the 727 fleet with 34 new aircraft. The Minister will also know that 488 jobs at the Air Canada maintenance facility in Winnipeg are involved in the maintenance of the 727s.

I want to ask the Minister a very specific question. Will he give us an assurance and a guarantee that, whatever replacement aircraft Air Canada decides on, the maintenance work will stay in Winnipeg, that the new aircraft will be maintained and overhauled at the Air Canada facility which is a part of the city of Winnipeg's aerospace industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is an entirely cooked up, hypothetical question because of an election in Manitoba, one must presume. There has been no suggestion by Air Canada, not even a breath of a suggestion by Air Canada, that it has any plans to change its maintenance practices in Winnipeg or elsewhere.

The Air Canada board of directors and management will presumably in the next several weeks be recommending what kind of aircraft they may be ordering in order to upgrade the aircraft fleet that is used in Canada. We do not know what the recommendation will be. The board has not approved any as yet. Already the hon. gentleman is up, for purely political, scurvy reasons, alarming people in Winnipeg unnecessarily with silliness and scurrilous suggestions.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the only thing scurvy is the behaviour of the Minister. We are talking about 488 jobs that are at stake. We are talking about Air Canada's decision—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put a short supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED CONTINUANCE OF BASE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is simply this. I want to know why it is that the Minister and the Government refuse to give the guarantee for which I asked that the maintenance base for Air Canada will continue to be in Winnipeg. Why will the Minister not give that guarantee? Does he have a secret plan up his sleeve?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that every Member who has an Air Canada facility in his district, town or city rise to make the same request. That will show how ridiculous, juvenile, and politically hypocritical the actions of the hon. gentleman are today. They are pitiful and piteous.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CULTURE

LE DROIT LABOUR CONFLICT—REQUEST THAT SECRETARY OF STATE INTERVENE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State about the labour dispute at the newspaper Le Droit, which continues to threaten the future of that only French-language daily in the National Capital.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: You are all grounded.

Mr. Axworthy: Coming from the biggest blimp in Parliament, that is quite a comment.

Mr. Crosbie: Are we interrupting you, Michael?

Mr. Cassidy: I never got started.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Last week, in the House, the Minister gave me assurances. He said: "The matter is under consideration." If the Government is serious about helping to settle this labour dispute, why were no contacts made with journalists, strikers or the union? How can the Minister help resolve the issue if he does not do anything to communicate with those concerned?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in so far as there are labour aspects implied in the Hon. Member's question, I think he might want to direct it either to the province or the Minister of Labour. With respect to any participation or involvement, I do not think I can fruitfully add anything to what I mentioned to him in the House the other day.

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM IN NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister said: "If we can (assist), we will... The matter is under consideration." Why do you not really intervene to save the only French-language daily in the capital of a bilingual country? Is the Minister committed or not to bilingualism in the National Capital?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know how concerned the Hon. Member is about the matter, and other people are as well. It will not get any better with him yelling at me or at anyone else.

FINANCE

NORTHERN TAX DEDUCTION—REQUEST THAT COMMISSION VISIT COMMUNITIES

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that people living in communities bordering isolated areas eligible for the northern deduction feel unfairly excluded from receiving this benefit. Can the Minister tell the House when a commission to look into this matter will be established and whether the commission will visit border communities to hear the views of the people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the continuing interest the Hon. Member has expressed in this particular matter, but as he has indicated, the question of where the border line should be between those communities which receive the benefit and those which do not is obviously a very difficult issue with which to deal. That is the purpose of the commission.

We are consulting actively with people who might be members of such a commission. I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that there will be travel by the commission to those communities that are affected and it will be open to advice from representatives from the areas involved.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LABRADOR INUIT LAND CLAIMS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs. Last July the Government of Canada signed a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Newfoundland. Perhaps I could get the attention of the Minister of Justice because this is also a question of justice.

The memorandum of understanding that was signed with regard to the Inuit land claims has still not gone to the federal Cabinet. If the Minister of Indian Affairs is serious about giving native people more self-government, why has it not gone to Cabinet? Why is he holding up the land claims negotiations? When will he start giving them more self-government and more self-determination?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern on behalf of his constituents. The Province of Newfoundland, as of early January or late December past, brought out its comprehensive claims policy. I have asked for and received clarification of that policy.

I have had discussions with the Government of Newfoundland and with the Labrador Inuit as to their impression of the policy and we are hoping to be able to reach an agreement and proceed with the mandate. Once the mandate and the bilateral issues have been decided between the province and the ILA, we will be able to proceed with negotiations.

REQUEST THAT TRIPARTITE NEGOTIATIONS BEGIN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, not only has there been no information coming from the Government of Canada but there has been no consultation from the Government of Newfoundland, as I understand it. The Labrador Inuit have nothing on paper with regard to the memorandum of understanding between the two Governments or consultation with the province.

I ask the Minister again, why is it that the three parties cannot sit down together with written documents on the table to start those land claims negotiations so that they can get greater self-government and greater self-determination?

• (1450)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, once Canada and Newfoundland have reached agreement on the bilateral issues, we will proceed with the mandate. At that time tripartite negotiations will be undertaken. I would hope that, if things proceed as they should, by late spring or early summer we would be in a position to commence meaningful tripartite negotiations.

I draw to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that this claim was first recognized and accepted by Canada in 1978. Since that date the Party which he represents has been in control of comprehensive claims for a greater period of time than has this Government.

HEALTH

TOXIC MUSSELS—REQUEST THAT PERSONS AFFECTED BE COMPENSATED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will recall that as a result of the poisoned mussel fiasco last November the Government took the appropriate action to compensate some of the mussel growers involved, as well as the seafood industry generally on the East Coast. However, it seems to have forgotten the real victims of this fiasco, those who were actually poisoned. One of those individuals is Louis Beaudry of Roxboro, Quebec, who suffered permanent health damage as a result of the poisoning. He now has to pay out of his own pocket significant personal health care costs.

Has the Government considered providing some compensation to those people who were the real victims of the poisoned mussel fiasco?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could be of some assistance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is of course out of the House on business. I will raise the representation of the Hon. Member in this specific case, as well as the general question, with him when he returns.

ENERGY

PRICE PAID BY CONSUMERS FOR NATURAL GAS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The recently released natural gas price monitoring report states that for the the year November, 1986, to October, 1987, in the last month of that year, October, 1987, Canadians paid more for Alberta natural gas through long-term contracts than did the Americans. Members of the Government, including the Minister for International Trade when she was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, promised Canadians they would not pay more for Canadian natural gas than Americans.

Why has the Government broken yet another promise, this time to natural gas consumers?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is absent on government business. As you know, there was an agreement between the provinces and the federal Government on natural gas pricing where we wanted to make sure the free market system was assured. For the sake of accuracy I would prefer that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reply to the question.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the situation is getting worse because the Government is steadily destroying the protection for natural gas consumers in this country. When is it going to keep its promise? Why is it treating Canadians like second-class citizens in their own country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is a totally false allegation and the Hon. Member knows it. The National Energy Board is the regulatory agency and protector of the public interest. It will do its job. The Hon. Member, in making that allegation, is not only doing an injustice to the industry but also to the NEB.

Mr. McDermid: Tell them how much gas prices have dropped since we got rid of your regulations.

Mr. MacLellan: It is the Americans who are getting most of the benefit.

AIRPORTS

SKY CAP SERVICES—PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns another matter in the operation of Canada's airports. The security services were brought up yesterday. There is now the matter of the provision of Sky Cap services. I warn the Minister we also have the refuelling services coming up so he can get ready for that.

Will the Minister dispense with the contract provided to All Cap Baggage Services Incorporated and make arrangements with the individual Sky Caps at Pearson International Airport to make sure that they get at least the minimum wage plus their tips, and that he bill the airlines for any cost to the Department?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, neither the Department of Transport nor the Government has given a contract to All Cap Baggage Services Incorporated, nor anyone else, in connection with baggage services at Pearson International Airport. The position is that the provision of porter services, if there are to be any, is the responsibility of the airlines which operate at Pearson Airport. If there is a dispute between the employees of that company, if they are employees, and its management, then it has to be dealt with in the normal way. I believe there have been applications made to the Canada Labour Relations Board in that connection.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary, please.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE SKY CAP SERVICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister now, under the auspices of the Department of Transport, take over the provision of Sky Cap services and bill the airlines proportionately for the cost of those services? Will he take it out of the hands of the airlines which try to get by on the cheap, forcing these people to pay $80 a week to buy a job handling baggage for customers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, for many years now the provision of porter services at airports has been assigned to the airlines to deal with. It is up to them to employ a system satisfactory to the public, indeed satisfactory all around. I am not going to intervene in this situation at the Toronto Airport. It is a matter for the airlines and the people with whom they contract. That is the way it is and that is the way it has been.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

EXTENDED AREA TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The recent CRTC decision on rate rebalancing did not address extended area service. Why is it taking so long for the CRTC to expand extended area service to the Yarker exchange as well as other areas which are being treated in an unfair manner?

Will the Minister encourage the CRTC to make a decision on extended area service soon and therefore ensure that universal telephone service is a primary goal for everyone?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in this very complex issue of extended area service. This question has also been raised with me by the Hon. Member for York—Peel and the Hon. Member for Cambridge, and a number of other Members.

As you may be aware, Sir, this question is before the CRTC. A decision has been delayed, I am informed, in order to allow consumers to make their representations about its potential benefits. The CRTC is, of course, a quasi-judicial body with an arm's length relationship with the Government, but I understand, and I am sure the Hon. Member will be glad to know, that the decision on extended area service should be reached before the end of June.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—PAYMENT OF TAXES DEMANDED FROM INVESTORS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I hope he will concur that Revenue Canada's demands for Principal Group investors to pay taxes on money they no longer have, or in some instances have not received, is both repugnant and obscene.

• (1500)

Can the Minister assure this House that Revenue Canada will not demand any moneys whatsoever from these investors who are now financially ruined and, in some cases, psychologically scarred?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have considerable sympathy with the advocacy of my colleague. I must remind him that yesterday in the House my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, set out that the Government's position is that we will be looking at this very carefully to see whether some equity might be possible. When we have something to report we will be pleased to announce it.

DATE OF GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the tone of the Minister's response. However, on behalf of many of those investors, could he indicate to the House clearly and succinctly when a decision will be announced?

The Minister must be aware that the uncertainty with which these individuals are confronted, in view of the fact that they have lost, in many instances, thousands of dollars, is becoming very serious. Will the Minister give us a fixed date today as to when an announcement will be made to the benefit of these investors?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, again we are very sympathetic to the circumstances involved here. I cannot give a precise date. I can only reiterate that we have considerable sympathy for the situation. This is not the first such instance which has occurred, as my colleague knows. The situation is serious and we will be sympathetic to the plight of the individuals because of the very difficult circumstances in which these people find themselves.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be two further single questions, one from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor followed by one from the Hon. Member for Saint Leonard—Anjou.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF CANADIAN CONTENT LAW

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the decision which has been taken with regard to Hyundai by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, which will hurt many parts producers right across the country, will the Minister ensure that his Government brings in legislation to give 60 per cent Canadian content rules and regulations to all parts of the industry rather than only to a certain segment of the industry?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation. I remind the Hon. Member that this particular situation has been resolved very satisfactorily under the circumstances. The provisional duty paid by Hyundai will be repaid, and I will undertake to study the Hon. Member's request.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HOME MAIL DELIVERY—REQUEST THAT COSTS STUDY BE MADE PUBLIC

M. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. With spring just around the corner, Canada Post has announced that it is putting in place 9 000 new superboxes, thus doubling the number already in place.

I have a simple question, Mr. Speaker. Canada Post has carried out a cost study on door to door mail delivery. Could the Government undertake to table this study as soon as possible so that we could get first-hand information on these costs, rather than having the Minister tell us that the cost is $1,3 billion while it is $36 million according to Canada Post?

We would like to know who is telling the truth. Give us the figures!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Post Office was in the House. I guess he had to leave since it is after three o'clock. I will take that question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday I would like to ask the customary business question of the Government House Leader. While he is at it, since we are due to recess next Wednesday, maybe he would be kind enough to tell us what the business of the House is likely to be until we break for Easter.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, due to a great deal of co-operation from my colleagues in opposition we have been able to put together a schedule which will accomplish a fair amount of business.

Tomorrow we are going to deal with Bill C-52, known as the Coasting Trade Bill at report and third reading stage. Immediately after Question Period, during Routine Proceedings, we expect that there will be a debate on a motion for concurrence in the third report of the Transport Committee.

On Monday, March 28, we intend to call Bill C-117, the Excise Tax Act, at second reading. At 3 p.m. on that day we will call Bill C-67, the Animal Pedigree Act, for report and third reading stage. That will be backed up by Bill C-118, the customs tariff Bill, at second reading.

On Tuesday, March 29, we will call Bill C-30, the National Parks Act, at second reading, and resume any unfinished business from Monday. The back-up Bill to that will be Bill C-110, the trade tribunal Bill, at second reading.

Next Wednesday will be an allotted day. There is an understanding among the Parties that there will be no vote requested.

There have been discussions among the Parties, Mr. Speaker, and immediately after any comments which the opposition Parties may have on this schedule I would seek unanimous consent to revert to Motions to allow the Member of Parliament for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), the Chairman of the Committee on the Peace Process in Central America, to move a motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PEACE PROCESS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

SPECIAL COMMITTEE'S MOTION SUPPORTING PEACE PLAN FOR CENTRAL AMERICA

Hon. John W. Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that it has struck a special committee with regard to this subject. Yesterday's news being of such a positive nature, members of the committee unanimously asked me to seek the consent of the House for the following motion, seconded by the Hon. Members for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine) and the other members of the committee including the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

That whereas this House supports the Esquipulas II Peace Plan for Central America and has struck a Special Committee to give expression to Parliament's interest in the success of the plan, we commend the Government of Nicaragua and the other parties to the conflict in that country for their commencement of negotiations and their achievement of a ceasefire.

Further, we express strong support for the continuing success of the negotiations and for a permanent resolution to the conflict in Nicaragua and urge that parties from outside the region refrain from any activity that would disrupt this process.

Finally, we declare that progress in these negotiations should serve the broader objectives of the Esquipulas II Plan, to promote peace with justice in Central America.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTED DAY, S. O. 82—EFFECT OF INCREASED TAXES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That this House condemns the Government for imposing increased taxes, both directly and indirectly, against Canadian consumers and for its abject failure to protect the best interests of Canadian consumers, as evident in, among other things:

1. the high cost of prescription drugs;
2. the inadequacies of postal services;
3. the high cost of gasoline;

4. the upward spiral of personal taxes;
5. the increase in inspector fees in the agricultural sector;
6. the imposition of user fees for Atlantic fishermen;
7. the Government's acquiescence to sky-roketing bank charges;
8. the failure of the Government to protect 67,000 investors affected by the Principal Group collapse; and
9. the unnecessarily high interest rate policy of the Government.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate to condemn the Government's policy with respect to the Canada Post Corporation.

During the past two years, Canada Post has increased the price of stamps twice, had two postal strikes and may possibly have a third, and has substantially reduced services, thus creating two classes of citizens in Canada: those who get their mail delivered at home and those who have to brave the elements and go to the infamous superboxes to pick up their mail.

The problem is a Conservative Government that has reversed the mandate and priorities of Canada Post. This Government is to blame for the disastrous state of our postal services today.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a good country to live in, but it is a vast territory that often defies the laws of nature and reason, and a country rich in cultural, linguistic and regional diversity. To stress the need for satisfactory communications, it is often said Canada was built along its railways. In fact, at the time of Confederation, Mr. Speaker, when we became a nation, the Government set itself two goals: To protect and defend our country and to deliver the mail.

• (1510)

Of course, this was in 1867, and at the time, communications went by mail. Since then, technology has made spectacular progress, but the fact remains that postal services are still essential to all citizens of this country.

I don't think there is any question about it. Everyone realizes that public transit is an essential service, although many people never take the train or the bus. But everybody gets mail, Mr. Speaker.

In 1981, when the Liberal Government set up the Canada Post Corporation, it recognized that the postal service is an essential service. It is not a whim nor a luxury but a basic service to be made available to all Canadians.

Therefore, it is in that spirit that the Government had given Canada Post a mandate including three equally important aspects as follows: first, Mr. Speaker, to stabilize relations between employer and unions; secondly, to improve the postal service and thirdly to reduce the deficit.

From 1981 to 1984, Canada Post Corporation adequately carried out its mandate. It took some steps forward in reducing its deficit. It improved labour relations. The Liberal Government appointed union representatives to the board of directors to provide a link between the Corporation and the workers and to promote social peace. That is the problem at the Canada Post Corporation. The situation has reached a point where if an employee forgets to punch out at noon, he is suspended three days without pay. The incredible fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government has exerted so much pressure on the Canada Post Corporation that the employees are no longer inclined to work. Such is the basic problem and this why we expect that the mail will not be delivered on time, Mr. Speaker . . .

Therefore, the Liberal Government had then recognized that a coalition should exist between employer and unions, that an efficient management was necessary to give a better service to Canadians and we did so.

During the 1984 election, the Conservatives promised the moon, but once in power they threw off the disguise. They became true Conservatives over again and started slashing services. In this way, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in 1986 decided that for Canada Post Corporation the priority was no longer to deliver the mail, but to balance the books in no time, whatever the impact on service.

In the United States, Mr. Speaker, they took 14 years to balance the books. Here in Canada, a country as vast as ours, with our kind of remote areas and a small population, we want to reduce the Post Office's deficit over five years. Unbelievable, Mr. Speaker! That approach is not rational, and Canadians have to pay for it.

When Canada Post Corporation was established, the Liberal Government had a policy of offering community letterbox service to residents in new projects until home delivery was available. It was a temporary service that in no case was to become permanent. But in 1985 a Conservative Government, anxious to cut costs at any price, forced Canada Post Corporation to permanently set up the superbox system.

This means that since 1985, no new homes got home delivery nor have any hope of ever getting it. In 1986, following the Minister of Finance's statement, the Government just created two classes of citizens: one that gets home delivery and another that must go fetch their mail in a box. By 1991, Mr. Speaker, nearly one million homes and two million Canadians will be served by superboxes. But those superboxes are a second-rate service for second-rate citizens. How can the Government force an 80-year-old widow to get out at minus 20, 30 or 40 degrees temperatures to go and fetch, in a frozen superbox that will not open, an Old Age Security pension cheque that may not even be there because oftentimes postmen, on account of the snow, cannot deliver the mail. Mr. Speaker, this is unfair, irrational and discriminatory.

In the case of rural areas, the Government also intends to use collective mailboxes at major intersections and to close about 5,000 rural post offices within the next five years. What a lack of vision, Mr. Speaker, what a lack of understanding of the community fabric of Canada! Everyone knows that the post office is still a gathering place in our villages and small towns. It often becomes an information centre for all citizens. It is where people go to look for social services and to ask for information on such matters as tax returns, scholarships and job applications; the postmaster often becomes a resource person. The federal Government is present everywhere, and the post office remains a familiar place where the Government takes on human dimensions. It creates a link with the community. It is a unifying force which gives a feeling of belonging to the community and to each of its members.

What I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, is not romanticism or poetry or a politician's dreams, but the basic truth. As evidence of that fact, I have here a letter sent to the president of the Canada Post Corporation by the mayor of the small community of Trinity Bay, and with your permission, I would like to quote from it. The mayor of Trinity Bay says: "If the few businesses which we have and on which we rely for our survival stay here, it is because we have services such as the post office. Centralization for economy's sake must not be pushed to such an extent that it jeopardizes the existence of small communities . . . We urge you to find means to keep our post office, even if doing so would mean sharing with others certain of the most costly aspects of the postal service. For us here, sharing is a matter of survival, and we know something about it. For God's sake, do not help to destroy us!"

Mr. Speaker, Trinity Bay is certainly not important for the powerful Conservative Government, but we, Liberals, are well aware of the fact that there are thousands of communities like Trinity Bay in Canada. Indeed, over 2,500 communities in Canada do not even have a bank, only a post office. How can there be any thought of removing this link with the rest of the country? We, Liberals, understand that it is our duty to protect the character and the way of life of these communities and to serve them adequately. The Conservatives are obsessed by the Canada Post Corporation. Yet, it costs less to operate it than other Crown corporations of the same size, 60,000 employees.

In 1985-86, the Government paid to the Canada Post Corporation $180 million, or 6.2 per cent of its operation budget. Never, since the establishment of the Canada Post Corporation, has the Government provided it with more than 12 per cent of its budget.

In fact, over a three year period, more specifically from 1982 to 1985, the Government's share of its financing was reduced from 10.3 per cent to 6.3 per cent. This represents quite a valuable improvement, especially at a time when services are being increased instead of cut.

The Minister claims that home delivery would cost $1.3 billion and that to maintain it, the cost of a single stamp would have to be increased to 60 cents. The Minister is grossly exagerating, for according to Canada Posts' own data, $500 million—these are the figures for 1988—over a five year period would be enough to replace the superboxes with home delivery.

[English]

Yesterday we read in the newspapers that the Post Office is set to double the supermailboxes. "Canada Post plans to resume the installation of its controversial supermailbox in the hopes to nearly double their number by the end of the summer". Then we hear that: "Town plans to launch suit after supermailbox cut". The Ontario Municipal Board recognized that a supermailbox installed in front of a home reduced the value of the property and the municipality reduces the tax bill. Now the municipality wants to sue the federal Government for its loss of tax revenue. What are the savings of the federal Government in installing the famous supermailboxes?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation must fully assume its mail delivery mandate. It is the Government's responsibility to re-establish the mandate of 1981 which included improving its labour relations, increasing its productivity and reducing its deficit.

Canadian men and women want their mail to be delivered to their door every day of the week. They want an efficient and unified service which is the same for everybody. What would people say about a postman who would deliver the mail only on one side of the street? That is exactly what this Tory Government is trying to do. In my own riding, there are people living on one side of the street who are having their mail delivered at home, while those on the other side must get them from the superboxes. Yet, these people pay the very same taxes. Which proves that the Government has created with these superboxes two classes of citizens not for a little while, but for ever and ever.

Canadian men and women want also to keep their rural post offices open because they feel they are practical and useful, and because they are part of the social communication network of their community. We also want to keep the rural post offices open, because they represent a privileged link with citizens who are often isolated.

Instead of closing the post offices, the Government should enhance them by offering consumers postal related products such as greeting cards, correspondance and wrapping paper.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, all citizens worthy of the name are first class citizens. We are all equal. We pay the same taxes. We all have to buy a 37 cents stamp to send a letter. We are all entitled to the very same services, including mail services.

Of course, we all agree on the need to balance the budgets, whether it is that of the Canada Post Corporation or of any other organization. But the way to do that is not to reduce services or raise the price of a stamp to 60 cents, as the Minister claims. Management has to be creative, dynamic and competitive, they have to come up with novel and modern ways to boost revenues.

Studies have revealed that Canada Post would considerably increase its revenues simply by advertising on its trucks or at post office entrances. Some people claim that commercial advertising would tarnish the corporate image of Canada Post, but this is a specious argument because public transit systems have shown that trucks, buses or shelters can carry advertising without having a negative impact on the corporate image.

It is simply a matter of making sure that such advertising is in keeping with clear and relevant quality standards.

Private sector interests are acutely aware of post office goodwill and they know this is the way to boost their sales.

Mr. Speaker, the Government rejects progress. It rejects dynamism and fresh ideas. Its only solution is to reduce services. How can anyone be so blind?

Everywhere else in the world they find new ways to continue to serve people. Here in Canada the only way we have to solve these problems is to reduce services.

We must also set our sights on new technologies, new services which are getting ever more profitable such as electronic mail and mail advertising or direct mail.

According to a study by McLeod, Young & Weir, Canada is now eight years behind the United States in the use of sophisticated forms of direct mail.

In that case, the volume of direct mail handled by Canada Post will have to increase by about 115 per cent annually over the next eight years in order to reach the present level of distribution per capita in the United States.

By the same token, this would mean an impressive increase of revenues from third class mail. Indeed, from $300 million that it is now, Canada Post could increase its turnover in that area to $600 million. That is an extra $300 million annually. That in itself would be enough to balance the books at Canada Post Corporation, get rid of superboxes, keep our rural post offices and deliver the mail to all Canadians on time.

That is, Mr. Speaker, what should be done to settle those problems once and for all. I am glad to see the Minister in the House and I hope he will give some consideration to my comments and sit down with Canada Post Corporation to settle these problems once and for all.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Leonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) deserves our thanks and congratulations for the remarkable account he just gave of this very serious problem.

I wish as well to pay tribute to him for all the work he has accomplished these past few months regarding this important issue.

Furthermore, it is worth pointing out what seems a rather unusual and all the more positive element, in that in his speech, the Member also suggested some solutions, some answers to the problem.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I must add that I, myself, have had repeated opportunities to realize, in my own riding, the extreme importance of door-to-door daily mail delivery. I even decided for the sake of experience to follow in the steps of the rural postman during a few days, while he delivered his mail along concession roads, some very remote, and in the small towns vicinity, only to find out that as soon as he leaves an envelope or a newspaper in the mailbox, it is a matter of seconds before they are picked up. Not too many such experiences are required to understand how essential this service simply is and to know that cutting or reducing it would bring some very drastic consequences. And here, I am not particularly referring to elderly people.

The question I would like to ask my colleague is this: I know that he is an accountant. I am also aware that in his trade, anything called a deficit is obviously a matter of great concern. I also know that he has carried out several studies on the subject and I ask him the following questions: Does he think it possible not only to not cut services but to increase them and still make profits or at least enable the Corporation to balance its budget?

What we have seen for some months is the creation of a whole series of new businesses which I assume are making astronomical profits delivering mail.

Thus, in the light of all that, I ask my colleague if, according the him, Canada Post Corporation can balance its budget while maintaining and enhancing its present services in some other areas.

• (1520)

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague for his compliments and his question. Mr. Speaker, because we are limited I ran out of time and I was unable to deliver part of my speech.

Last January, Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada advised all employers that as of January this year any remittance of payroll deductions bearing a postage stamp dated the fifteenth and arriving one or two days after will not be considered and therefore a penalty will be imposed pursuant to the Revenue Canada statute.

Now in answer to the question of my colleague, yes, Canada Post can continue to provide essential services, keep rural post offices open, and deliver mail at the door instead of through superboxes without unduly increasing postage, and all this is possible, Mr. Speaker, because good service will definitely increase the volume of business, as we saw in the latest financial statement for 1986. There were no strikes between 1981 and 1986, so both revenues and business volume went up. In other words, the business community and people generally had begun to rely on Canada Post.

But then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave out his marching orders: the purpose of the whole exercise is not to provide better service or improve labour relations but to cut down the deficit, period. As a result of these orders the climate and service automatically deteriorated, and we are definitely going to pay for that because revenues will now begin to go down.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Gormley: I wish to take part briefly in this discussion with the Hon. Member regarding postal service, and his particular reference to the supermailboxes. By way of a brief preamble, I was wondering why the Hon. Member ignores what is largely a suburban reality in many parts of the country. If one looks at the demography and the working trends in urban Canada today, I wonder as most responsible people should in this debate, if one has door-to-door delivery in those brand new subdivisions, how many people are at home at 9.30 or 9.45 in the morning to pick up mail, cheques, and valuable correspondence that would otherwise be left in the mailbox beside the door for the rest of the day? Is the proposition that people should walk 600 feet to a supermailbox to pick up their mail, an impossible task for the demography of the new suburban neighbourhoods which are usually young, working couples? One should also look at the fact that this is not a deprivation of service; these are subdivisions that were not there before. They often and usually have young couples who are moving into or building a new home.

In 1977 when I lived in Saskatoon, all the new subdivisions, under the former Liberal Government, did not have door-to-door delivery extended. In 1977 the Liberal Government stated that the cost to do this was clearly excessive to Canada Post.

In light of the millions of dollars that it would cost to extend door-to-door delivery in new suburbs, in light of the fact that supermailboxes are a secure way of having mail service in new subdivisions, which is exactly what happens in the small town where I live, where we always have to go to the Post Office to use our lock boxes and in light of the fact that to provide door-to-door delivery would result in a stamp costing approximately 65 cents, I wish to ask the Hon. Member if he can assure people in my constituency that the Liberal Party would indeed restore full door-to-door delivery at a cost of millions of dollars and at a cost of a 65-cent stamp. Would the Member give us an answer? I know his time is drawing short. It need not be a long answer. The question simply is, will the Liberal Party in the next election state that it will provide door-to-door delivery to all new subdivisions? Yes or no.

Mr. Gagliano: I know that my time is short, but I wish to say that the Hon. Member outdid the Minister because the Minister mentioned a 60-cent stamp and the Hon. Member is now up to 65 cents. I do not know if the Hon. Member is doing better or worse, but I hope that he checks his figure. Each day it increases by five cents.

I wish to correct the record. The Hon. Member was talking about the Liberal policy in 1977. It was in 1974 that the policy was clear on the communities—

Mr. Gormley: You are skating on awfully thin ice.

Mr. Gagliano: If you listen carefully perhaps you will learn something. Communities with 2,000 or more points of call always received door-to-door mail delivery. One only has to come to my riding and check the records. A future Liberal Government, yes, will return to the policy of giving Canadians door-to-door mail service for communities with 2,000 or more points of call. That was the previous policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now concluded. On debate, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the hon. spokesman for the Liberal Party talk about the commitment of the Liberal Party to door-to-door delivery for communities with 2,000 doors or more. What the Hon. Member is saying is that the Liberal Party agrees with this second-class policy. There will be two classes of Canadians, those who live in communities of 2,000 or more who will receive door-to-door service, and second-class citizens, according to how the Liberals describe the class of citizens, of people who do not live in those communities. What is so wonderful about that division? What will the Liberals do to those who live in a community of 1,950 doors? They will say: "That's too bad. You are second-class, you are not going to get door-to-door delivery". That is the absurdity of the type of statement made by the Hon. Member.

The Party with which the Hon. Member is aligned, when it was in power and when the Post Office was not a Crown corporation but a Department of Government, put a freeze on door-to-door delivery. It was done for a very good reason, because the world is changing. When I grew up there was door-to-door milk and bread delivery. Shopping was basically done on foot. Corner grocery stores were everywhere for one to purchase one's groceries. In those days something less than 20 per cent of married women worked. The family and the living circumstances were entirely different than today. Today, in the majority of families, both spouses work. The living style is to have two cars, to live in the suburbs, which is the areas wherein people are serviced by group mailboxes. The pattern is that there are not even sidewalks in recognition of the fact that people travel by car and park in the driveway or garage. They shop in the evenings in shopping centres. The Post Office is changing its delivery methods to reflect that new reality.

It strikes me as being a little ironic that the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party consider themselves the more progressive parties. They call us the "dinosaurs". We are prepared to acknowledge that society is changing and that that should be acknowledged in the services. These "progressive" Parties say: "No, no, no. If it was good enough in the 1940s and 1950s, it is good enough today. No change. Keep it the way it is". They are the reactionaries. Their policy on the Post Office is to go back to the days when we lived on streets that had sidewalks and narrow lots, and when mama stayed home. Let us go back to those days and let us not go forward to the new era. That is fine. If they as Parties wish to project to the people of Canada that it is their intention to have door-to-door delivery, or to instruct the Crown corporation to do that, then in all fairness they have to answer the question as to where the money will come from.

The fact is that five years is the period of the corporate plan. To bring in door-to-door delivery to every home now serviced by group mailboxes—and we are not talking about rural routes or general delivery—over the next five years, the fact is that it would cost an additional $1,300 million and thereafter $400 million per year in operating costs. The figures are there.

It is all well and good to sit in opposition and say: "What is $400 million or $1 billion compared with the potential votes we can get by making this promise?" They can sit there and say: "It is peanuts. What we are talking about here is votes. We don't worry about silly little things like $1 billion or $400 million per year of extra costs".

Well, that translates into a 60-cent stamp. An Hon. Member was saying that the Post Office should look for a growth in business. How would it grow in business if it raises the cost of a stamp to 60 cents? Just normal economics tells us that if it raises the cost of delivering a letter, it will have less letters to deliver. According to Economics 101, raise the price and demand goes down. One does not get more business by raising the price; one gets less business.

It is an irresponsible suggestion. I can understand that it is tempting. We have unions out there funding organizations such as RAM, Residents Against Mailboxes, which are petitioning and invoking images of elderly and handicapped people struggling through snowdrifts trying to get to their mailboxes to pick up the mail and being denied the luxury of having mail put into the boxes on the sides of their houses. They are traditional techniques used in politics, propaganda techniques, but I think one would underestimate the intelligence of Canadians to play that card too frequently and with too much prominence.

I think Canadians realize that the world is changing. I think anybody who looks around at our society recognizes that if you do not get milk delivery or door-to-door bread delivery nowadays, you have to find some way to get your groceries and it is not too difficult at the same time to get your mail. Indeed, the Post Office has a policy for the handicapped or people who are simply unable to leave their homes. In fact they can arrange to have door-to-door delivery. Again I do not think those images invoked in the propaganda war will be too believable.

If the Liberal Party wants to put forward the proposal that it is preferable to spend that extra money, $400 million per year, in order to have door-to-door delivery everywhere, if that is its priority, I think it is legitimate to put it to the people of Canada and let them decide. However, it is not legitimate to suggest that somehow it can be done with no cost, that somehow we can wave a wand and make it disappear because we cannot. There is no such thing as a free lunch. It has to be paid for.

If it is the decision of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party that rather than spend $400 million on day care, education, or science and technology, those resources or that amount of money is better spent on door-to-door delivery of mail, that is their decision. They should put it before the people in all honesty and let them decide. This is what democracy is all about. However, to try to imply that there is no cost associated with these promises is dishonest at the least. As I indicated, it assumes a degree of ignorance on the part of the people of Canada which I do not believe is there. They will be able to see through that kind of posturing and behaviour.

The motion with which we are dealing today is a real potpourri. It sounds like the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) is blaming the Government of Canada for everything from poor postal services, to high prescription drugs, to the cost of gasoline, to acne. I understand that there is an outbreak of chicken pox in the day care centre in the Confederation Building. I guess that must be the Government's fault too and should be included in the motion! They seem to think that everything they deem to be wrong with Canadian society is due to the Government.

When we talk about the Post Office, one gets the impression sometimes from listening to the Opposition that until September, 1984 Canada Post was one of the best, smoothest running organizations in the world, certainly in Canada. One gets the impression that the mail got through on time all the time, that everybody got door-to-door delivery, that labour relations were sweet, that everything was hunky-dory, and that it all fell apart in September, 1984 when we were elected to Government. Of course that is absurd. In 1983 the Post Office was running a deficit of $500 million. It was borrowing $500 million. It is still there in the debt. It kept borrowing in those days. It will be paid for by future generations. The Liberal policy was very simple— "Let future generations pay for the cost of delivering a letter today". That was the kind of deficit in 1983, and all people did not get door-to-door delivery; a $500 million deficit and no door-to-door delivery in new suburbs.

Some progress has been made. This coming fiscal year the Post Office will make a profit for the first time since 1971-72. It will be a small profit but a profit. Productivity has been going up for the last three years in the Post Office at the rate of 3.5 per cent per year. Business has increased by 23 per cent. Indeed, the over-all expenditures of the Post Office over the last couple of years, and projected into next year, have increased as a result of three roughly equal measures: There has been a business increase, more volume; there has been an increase in the cost of stamps less than the cost of inflation; and there has been an increase in productivity. The Post Office is more efficient. It is making significant progress, and an honest Member of Parliament would acknowledge that.

Is there a lot left to be done? Yes, indeed there is, but current management is working on it. If only we could stop beating on them through this political process, stop the immature games that are being played at the political level all the time, and give them an opportunity to continue to make progress, we might see the day where this Crown Corporation was viewed by the majority of Canadians as one which is providing a good service at reasonable cost. It is a fair thing and a possible thing to look forward to. However, the temptation to play political games, make wild accusations, and so on is simply too overwhelming for too many people.

I guess that I am running out of time, but I would like to deal very briefly with one issue raised by the sponsor of the motion today, the one concerning prescription drug prices. Bill C-22, which we finally got through Parliament after the greatest of resistance by the Opposition Parties, is in place and is paying off. I have a little 20-page brochure here talking about the research and development commitments that have already resulted from Bill C-22—hundreds of millions of dollars. Today there are thousands of young Canadian scientists working as a result of Bill C-22, and Bill C-22 has not caused the increase in the price of any drug in Canada by a single penny. Anybody who claims otherwise is not telling the truth or is ignorant, not telling the truth because they are lying or not telling the truth because they are ignorant. However, such is the case of these people who were bitter about losing this battle. They keep raising these phoney studies about supposed price increases. We had one the other day from a couple of pharmacists from Toronto who said that the price of drugs had risen. The Toronto Star featured the study. The matter was raised in the House. A Senator raised it in the other place. Accusations were made; for instance, that Bill C-22 has caused the price of drugs to rise.

The study is a very interesting one. First it made comparisons by using last year's wholesale price versus this year's retail price. It looked at last year's price without federal tax versus this year's price with federal tax. It looked at drugs that were wholly manufactured in Switzerland and Germany. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Swiss franc and the German mark have gone up in value relative to the Canadian dollar. The study recommended that people look at the outrageous increase in price. In terms of the Swiss franc and the German mark, there was no increase whatever. Because of currency changes there was an increase in Canadian dollars, but none of this has anything to do with the patent system or Bill C-22 which changed the patent system. But that does not stop these lovers of truth and honesty from blaming currency changes on Bill C-22. It is absolute absurdity.

I can understand a political arena where from time to time people do things like that. It is less understandable to see some of these guardians of truth in information dissemination in the fourth estate making these kinds of claims in print as some, only some, did, Mr. Speaker. That is less acceptable but again it is something that we need to deal with.

I guess the ultimate absurdity is the failure to acknowledge that if the opposition had not delayed the Bill, filibustered it or had not played silly games, we would now have in place the Drug Prices Review Board. The board would have the capability of looking at prices of all drugs and making reasonable and rational assessments as to whether price increases were appropriate or not appropriate and could take remedial action or exercise downward pressure on companies that might attempt to introduce drug prices in excess of the cost of living.

To do everything possible to delay the implementation of that Drug Prices Review Board and then to scream bloody murder when the Drug Prices Review Board is not there to me is hypocrisy at the least, if not worse. I could go on. Perhaps it is unnecessary because one of the great things about being a Canadian with our well educated and intelligent population is the comfort it gives in knowing that by and large people can see through most of this nonsense. Even when you have Members of the Opposition making crazy claims about Bill C-22 and about post office costs, supermailboxes and so on, in the end the public is intelligent enough to see the accusations for what they are, propaganda at best and outright deceit at worst perhaps. Since people can see through that, it is not that much of a concern on the part of the Government. It is something we need not get overly concerned about. While a motion like this gives us an opportunity to fill a day's debate in the House of Commons, nobody is fooled by the nonsense indicated in the motion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Minister give me an answer to a question which my constituents frequently ask? I have several thousand new homes in the suburban part of my constituency. Many of the residents in these new homes call or come to me and say: "Before I lived in this new home in the suburbs where I have to get my mail from the supermailboxes, I lived in an older part of your constituency and I was getting door-to-door delivery. I moved into this new house in an urban area. The house costs more, it is worth more than the old house and I am paying much higher municipal taxes than I did before. My wife and I are working. We are paying much more in income tax than we did before. Why can I not get the same door-to-door mail service as I did when I lived in the old part of Winnipeg? Why am I treated as a second class citizen?" Frankly, I have no answer for them. I would like to be able to tell the people how the Minister would answer that question. Why do we have two classes of citizens in the cities of Canada, class one which gets door-to-door service and class two which has to depend on supermailboxes?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, actually there are four classes. First, you have classes of citizens who pick up their mail at general delivery in urban environments or in rural environments, small towns and villages. You have classes of citizens who go to the post office to pick up their mail at lock boxes. You have classes of citizens who get their mail through rural route delivery systems. There are classes of citizens who get their mail door-to-door and you have classes of citizens who get their mail through group mailboxes. That situation has been in place for over 100 years, since the Post Office has been in existence. There has never been a time in the history of the Post Office whereby the majority of people got door-to-door delivery. It was always a minority of people who received postal services door-to-door. There is a bit of an illusion that somehow we are changing from what had been an historic situation. It is not true.

The Hon. Member talked about the difference between the downtown older neighbourhood and the new suburban areas.

Mr. Orlikow: Not downtown.

Mr. Andre: We have changed patterns. The older neighbourhoods built in the 1940s and 1950s was at a time when mostly the wife did not work but stayed home. If there was a car in the family, that was all there was, public transport was used and the way of living was different. Most streets had sidewalks. People walked a lot. Shopping was done at local stand alone stores and shops.

It may have escaped the notice of the Hon. Member, but in the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s things changed. Shopping centres came into existence. New suburbs opened up. Lots were bigger. People moved to the suburbs for the benefit of a bigger backyard. Most of these neighbourhoods do not have sidewalks because people do not walk. We see mainly two car families now. Shopping is done at shopping centres where people buy their groceries, pick up their dry cleaning, and it is done in the evening. Both partners work in most families now. We have changed. The world has changed.

The Post Office was trying to change in keeping with those changing patterns. The Hon. Member is suggesting that what was good for the 1940s and 1950s, and the lifestyle that most Canadians lived in those days ought to be retained for the 1980s and 1990s. For a reactionary like the Hon. Member, I can understand that, but the fact that the Post Office will adjust and adopt to modern lifestyles and the way we live today should not be viewed as such a shocking and terrible thing. It is certainly inaccurate to describe this situation as having first class and second class citizens in it. There has always been several ways of delivering the mail. There is today. There has been those differences for over 100 years. Undoubtedly there will continue to be in the future.

• (1600)

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question, but before I do, I would like to tell him that perhaps he was on the opposition benches for too long. He was playing the kind of game that he accuses us of playing now when he was in Opposition. I would like to remind him that his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), said before the election that he would never increase taxes, that increasing taxes would be wrong. Indeed, in three and a half years, the Minister of Finance took away over $22 billion in taxes from consumers.

During Question Period this afternoon, the Minister was temporarily absent, so I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) if the Minister could release the figures he was talking about to justify the $1.3 billion cost to Canada Post. I called Canada Post and was told that in 1986 figures, it would cost $360 million and in 1988 figures, $500 million for a five-year period. Who is telling the truth here?

Why does the Minister not defend his own figures by releasing them so that Members of the House and Canadians in general could know exactly what he is talking about? Why is he talking about a 60-cent stamp when he does not want to release the figures showing that a 60-cent stamp would be needed?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, before answering that, I want to say that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), just pointed out that for over 30 years she walked to the post office to pick up her mail and she does not consider herself a second-class citizen as a result of doing that. People who have had that personal experience have to dismiss the accusations of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) may be referring to certain figures that were in an editorial in The Toronto Star which supposedly had a different set of figures. That is nonsense. The figures I have quoted to him are in fact from a study the Post Office gave me.

The Hon. Member asks a valid question. Should those figures be made available? Yes, they should, and I will see if I can get them in form to do so.

Very soon, in the not too distant future, the Post Office will be called before the Standing Committee on Government Operations in defence of the Estimates and its corporate plan. That would provide a splendid opportunity for interested Members to go over in detail with senior management of the Canada Post Corporation all of these items. They are there and I have seen them. I have seen the slides and I am sure senior management will bring the slides to the committee so that the Hon. Member can have these numbers verified.

The Hon. Member asks a legitimate question and he will be provided with those numbers. However, I would ask him something in return. If he gets those numbers and they verify what I have indicated, which is what has been indicated to me by Canada Post Corporation, will he commit on behalf of his Party to state, if the Liberals are still in favour of it, that they are in favour of putting in door-to-door mail delivery everywhere where group boxes are now used and they are prepared to have the price of stamps rise in order to pay for that? He shakes his head in the negative. There is a man who says that he wants honesty and openness. Does he want openness? Not at all, Mr. Speaker.

We will give him the figures. Will he commit to have the integrity to give them to the people of Canada as he goes around making promises? Will he tell them how much those promises will cost and how they will be paid for? He is still shaking his head in the negative. At least he is proving that he is a genuine Liberal. He is in the right Party. Never tell the people the truth or they may not elect you, that is what Liberals think.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question for the Minister and it involves the truth. I wonder if he would look into this matter for me and get me some facts and figures.

The kind of society he has been talking about is urban Canada where people go to supermarkets and are able to buy stamps at the same time as they buy groceries. He is not talking about rural Canada or northern Canada. There is another society in which people are hurting, are unemployed and need what comes in the mail. Small businesses and individuals need the mail and they are not getting it.

I just talked to representatives from the post office in Labrador City. Seventy-nine bags of mail destined for Labrador were left in St. John's today. The Minister wants us to commit to an increase in the price of stamps, but the service that is being given by Canada Post, particularly in rural and northern Canada, is absolutely abysmal. Why should we go for an increase in the price of stamps when that kind of service still exists?

Unemployed people need their cheques. Small businessmen are getting things in the mail that they need to survive. Would the Minister find out for me why 79 bags of mail destined for Labrador City were left in St. John's today? This is a specific example of the kind of service the post office is giving. If we can get the facts on that, maybe one of these days, if service improves, we can agree to an increase in the price of stamps.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) makes a valid point. It is interesting that in that connection, there is an innovation that the current management of the Post Office has brought in. It is incredible that this is an innovation because I would think that such a system would have been there for some decades, but it is only within the last three years that Canada Post Corporation has had the ability to answer the question the Hon. Member has raised, why the mail did not go on.

Incredible as it seems to me, up until three years ago, the Post Office operated almost as 11 separate little organizations. There was no central control. There was no ability at headquarters in Ottawa for anyone to know where the mail was at any one time because the mail would come into one of those 11 places, say Calgary, to be sorted. The stuff that was to be delivered in the Calgary area was kept and the rest would be sent to wherever it was to go, to the East or to Vancouver. However, no one at headquarters knew how much mail had been sorted in Calgary, how much had been sent off, where it was at any one time or what was happening.

Now there is a control centre in Ottawa, and I would recommend that Hon. Members take an opportunity to visit it if they have a chance to do so. That control centre is connected to all of the sorting facilities around the country. All of the airline information and the trucking transportation information is there. It is a modern facility and at any one time, the Post Office knows where the mail is.

Why did the mail not get from St. John's to Labrador City? I do not know. Has there been a storm there? If the airline does not fly, it cannot get the mail there. The Post Office has the same problems everyone else in Canada has when travelling in winter. Sometimes the airlines do not fly and sometimes existing methods of transportation do not work, but at least today someone in Ottawa has the ability to phone St. John's and ask why that mail did not get to Labrador City, give someone hell and hold someone to account. That is a new innovation. If that did not happen already today, I will make that inquiry and whoever is responsible ought to have a good explanation as well as a plan to make sure that it does not happen in the future.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that I heard his remarks. I gave the Hon. Member 23 or 24 minutes plus 12 or 14 minutes for questions and comments and I thought that because it was the Minister who spoke, Hon. Members would want to ask more questions of him. That is why I extended his time for a few extra minutes.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) a very simple question. I asked him to explain to the people who live in the cities and suburbs of Canada why some of them get door-to-door delivery and others have to depend on supermailboxes. The Minister, of course, talked all around the subject. He brought in the question of the kind of service there is in rural and northern areas, a separate question all together.

The fact is that city people resent the fact that they do not get the same service in the suburbs as they got when they lived in the inner city. The Minister had all kinds of explanations for these differences including the fact that there are no sidewalks in areas where there are new housing developments. A resident of Calgary must have been watching this debate because she called my office to point out that the suburban sidewalks are not built not because they are not wanted but because the municipalities cannot afford them. She thinks, and I am quoting from the message we got, that the Minister is quite ignorant on this subject and she is very angry with him.

I want to spend a few minutes on what has happened to the price of prescription drugs in the last half of 1987. The Minister spent part of his time berating those who claim that prices have gone up in the last year much more than the increase in the cost of living would have permitted. Supposedly Bill C-22 would have prevented that. He said those who were making that charge were either lying or were ignorant of the real facts. Here are the real facts as given to the people of Canada by responsible government agencies.

The Government of Ontario found that the price of drugs in its drug plan, and we are not talking about a few drugs but more than 1,000, rose faster than the Consumer Price Index for the six months before the 1987 year end. Some prices went up by 100 per cent and one went up by 250 per cent. Was there anything that could be done about this? Of course. Although the Drug Prices Review Board was set up only in December of 1987, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said this morning that the board has the authority and the ability to go back five years in determining whether unfair prices have been charged. Why doesn't it do just that?

I have another illustration of what has happened. The Manitoba Government looked at the prices of generic drugs in that province for the last half of 1987 and found that they had actually gone down by 1 per cent. If they went down for generic drugs, why should they have gone up as they did by so much for so many of the brand-name drugs? Why does the Government not try and explain this disparity in more correct ways rather than heaping scorn on those providing the information? It is an old device for Governments to shoot the messenger because he brings bad news rather than deal with reality.

Why is the Government not encouraging the Drug Prices Review Board instead of heaping scorn on the Opposition? It is not just opposition Members of Parliament, it is all consumer groups, seniors, labour organizations and others who warned what would happen if Bill C-22 passed. If necessary, why is the Government not bringing in amendments to give the board the power to roll back prices when they increase by more than the inflation rate? Instead, the Government pretends that nothing is happening, the board is not working, and the Opposition is responsible for the delay. That is not going to fool anyone. The results will be seen in the next election, and I do not expect to see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs back in this House as a Member of Parliament after the next election.

I now want to deal with the problem hundreds of thousands of people have in their dealings with banks. Bank profits are huge. In 1987 the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce had a profit of $387 million. For Scotia Bank it was $381 million. For the Bank of Montreal, $413 million. For the Toronto-Dominion Bank, $528 million. For the Royal Bank, $541 million. What taxes did they pay? Based on past experience, very little. In many cases no real taxes were paid because the banks have been able to take advantage of our tax system which permits the deferring of taxes and contains a special tax write-down provision. They can write off the losses for non-performing loans, many of them made to Third World countries. Those countries paid very high interest rates in years when the banks were making huge profits and paying virtually no taxes. Now, when the banks should be paying taxes, they are trotting out these non-performing loans and using them to reduce the taxes they should be paying.

What kind of complaints about the banks are Canadian citizens making? I can talk about a complaint my wife made to me a week or two ago. She saw an ad in a magazine for some small item which she could purchase in the U.S. for our grandchildren. The price was $6 U.S. She sent a cheque on her account for $6 and marked it in U.S. funds. When she got the cheque back she found that not only did she pay the $6 U.S., something over $9 Canadian, the bank assessed her a $5 service charge on a cheque worth less than $10 Canadian. If that is not a rip-off, I do not know what is.

I was surprised and I called the Bank of Montreal across the street where I have an account. I was told they would have charged $7.50. Keep in mind that if my wife had gone to the Post Office she could have bought a money order in U.S. funds for a $1.15 cent service charge. According to the right wing back-benchers in the Conservative Party, the private sector can do anything better than the public sector. My wife could have gone to the Civil Service Co-operative and the service charge on a cheque marked U.S. funds would cost just 35 cents. A CS Co-op bank draft in U.S. funds is $1.00. If you are over 55 years of age, there is no charge at all. That is just one small illustration of what the banks do.

Let me put on the record a case brought to me by another constituent. He has a mortgage on his house. He got it through the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. Municipal taxes were not due for payment until June 30, 1987. On June 3, 1987, the tax payment was taken out of his account without notifying him or asking him if this was agreeable. In other words, the bank had his money for 27 days. Why would the bank do that? What gives the bank the authority? Shouldn't they at least have to explain their decision? Not only that, he has now been told that the bank has a new rule that they will charge a dollar a month maintenance fee against his account on top of the charge they have always made for writing a cheque and so on. Why?

As another example, a constituent of mine has several bank accounts, one of which is used very little. On going through his statement he found that a withdrawal had been made without his knowledge for a payment on a Mastercard bill which was always paid through another account in a different bank. He did not want this account used for that purpose. He asked for an explanation from the manager of his branch who told him that there was an error. He was not satisfied with that. He instructed the bank manager that under no circumstances was his account to be touched without his approval. Later he learned that the amount which had been withdrawn without his knowledge or consent, plus interest, had been redeposited in this account. This is the kind of unilateral action by banks which people are resenting more and more.

We are talking about banks which make tremendous profit. My colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), put on the record earlier today that through the service charges which the banks are imposing in increasing numbers and in a bewildering series of ways, the banks made close to $1.5 billion of profit.

As another example of the things which banks are doing, a resident of Toronto could not believe his eyes when he opened his statement from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The bank had docked his account by £5 in service charges from a £55 monthly pension cheque which he gets from Great Britain. This man has been depositing that pension cheque in the bank every month for eight years and was never charged a service charge until this month. Suddenly the bank took it upon itself to start charging a service charge of almost 10 per cent without, of course, any notification.

There has been an increase in service charge revenues to the Big Five banks of 20 per cent over 1986. Let us look at what the banks reported as received in service charges assessed against their customers. In 1987 the Toronto Dominion Bank reported that service charges brought in $138 million, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce reported $235 million, the Scotiabank reported $113 million, the Bank of Montreal reported $283 million, and the Royal Bank reported $365 million, the total being $1,134 million. The above represents an increase over 1986 service charges of almost 20 per cent and relates to depositors' accounts, safekeeping, and payroll processing only.

These service charges do not include many other fees charged by the banks such as foreign exchange revenue, credit card fees, loan fees, security commissions, bankers' acceptance, letters of credit, guarantee fees, and other items.

We know about the interest rates charged by the banks on unpaid balances on credit cards. At a time when the interest rate has dropped from over the 20 per cent level at which it was some years ago to just half of that, the interest rate charged on unpaid balances on credit cards by banks, to a large extent, has come down virtually not at all.

Service charges are a big profit centre for banks. For illustration purposes I will refer to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce which says in its annual statement:

> The continued growth in non-interest income—is a very important factor in the banks' drive to improve its financial performance.
> Service charge revenue continues to show improvement and reflects expansion in fees for a wide variety and growing number of customer services.

First they tell their customers they will provide automatic banking, 24-hour service, and all the rest of it and that it will be more efficient because it is done by computer rather than employees at the local branch and that this will save money. In fact, it is not saving money at all. The banks are increasing their charges continually.

The banks are doing this in part to recoup the losses on money which they lent to Third World countries including Mexico and Brazil, at very attractive rates. They were getting upwards of 20 per cent interest some years ago. They were very happy to make those loans and earn that revenue through the high interest rates charged, particularly since in those years with a Liberal Government the tax system permitted and encouraged them to pay virtually no taxes at all. The banks deny this, but allow me to quote from the business publication Financial Post. In the December 21, 1987, issue an article by Philip Mathias entitled "Nickel-and-diming" says:

> Just why fees are rising is a bone of contention. Critics say banks are squeezing consumers in an attempt to recoup some of the money they expect to lose on their colossal loans to Third World countries and Dome Petroleum Ltd.

To digress, Mr. Speaker, there is something very strange in our tax system when Dome Petroleum, which has lost hundreds of millions of dollars and has received huge loans and grants from the federal Government is able, when being sold, to pay its president several million dollars severance pay. Many of Dome's workers would be happy to receive that kind of sympathetic treatment from Dome Petroleum and the Government of Canada, but they are not getting it.

Mr. Mathias goes on to say:

> Bankers hotly deny this assertion. Instead, they talk about a "user-pay" philosophy, which unbundles individual bank services and makes the customer who calls for a service pay for it.
> Both explanations may be correct.
> Service charges started rising rapidly in the early 1980s, a timing that fits neatly with the Third World loans and big corporate lending theory. (Bankers, however, say this is only a coincidence.)
> Also, in 1982, it dawned on four big Canadian banks that $3 billion lent to Dome Petroleum was not going to be recovered easily.

They should have known that long before. It continues:

> The recession of 1981-82 induced corporations to pay down bank loans rather than borrow. Competition among the banks to lend increased sharply.
> At the same time, high interest rates made the cost of loans prohibitive. The banks found it difficult to maintain the traditional 3-point spread between interest paid to lenders and that charged to borrowers. The top lending-out rate came down.
> Spreads have still not recovered fully.
> The banks have tried to retaliate.

They did not do this by going after the large and profitable corporations. They did it by going after the ordinary little Canadian who really cannot afford these charges and does not have the knowledge, expertise or time to shop around for cheaper financial services. That is the only advice the present Conservative Government will give ordinary Canadians, but it is always ready to defend corporations and individuals in the highest income bracket.

• (1630)

The banks argue that they are providing better service now to their customers. The automation of many of their services should have kept the cost down, but the productivity savings in terms of lower labour cost and overhead are not being passed on to the consumer.

Many credit unions have no service charges at all in return for minimum deposits which also earn interest. Are the chartered banks less efficient than some of the smaller financial institutions? Obviously not. But the credit union represents ordinary people and cares about them. The banks have a captive clientele. They are not interested in looking after ordinary Canadians but in looking after the accounts of large corporations and wealthy individuals.

The advice of this Conservative Government is to shop around and let the buyer beware. Canadians are being criticized for not doing what they should, but most of them are unable to take the Government's advice because they do not have the information needed.

Today, the Minister of State for Finance said that he wants to hear from the Finance Committee. He is aware of the obligation of the banks under the Bank Act. Therefore, why does he have to wait for the recommendation of that committee? The Minister of State for Finance or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should tell the banks what they are required to do under the provisions of the Bank Act.

The Minister is doing nothing about it because he is not interested in the consumer. The Government is not interested in the small business community, the Consumers' Association or in poverty groups such as the National Anti-Poverty Association, all of whom agree that until the banking committee makes its report there should be an immediate freeze on bank charges. The Government will not do it because its priority is to protect those in whom it is interested, which includes the banks. That is not surprising when one considers the kinds of donations made to the Conservative Party by the major banks.

This motion, and the way the Government has failed to deal with the banks, certainly tells Canadians where the Government stands in terms of trying to protect the interest of ordinary Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) for bringing this motion to the House today. It is appropriate to review the Tory tax record at this time and consider how the Conservative philosophy and policy has impacted upon M. et M^me tout le monde, as they say in Quebec.

The Tory philosophy seems to be: "Reach out and tax someone". Since they came to office, the Tories have hit Canadians with dozens of new taxes. I am reminded of something that Adam Smith said, which I believe reflects the Tory point of view about who should shoulder the tax burden in this country. Adam Smith said: "There is no art which one government sooner learns from another than that of draining money from the people". I would suggest that phrase "draining money from the people" has a Conservative epitaph.

Rather than giving itself credit, the Government should be thankful that it came into office at a time when increased growth and an improved economy was taking place throughout the world. Despite being the benefactors of this improved situation, the Government has reached into the pockets of individual Canadian taxpayers to make the biggest tax grab in our history.

The Government's record of taxation reveals that it is showing an increased insensitivity toward lower and middle income families in Canada. Let us consider the tax increases the Government has seen fit to impose on Canadians. In 1984-85, there were personal income taxes in the amount of $29.3 billion, corporate taxes in the amount of $9.4 billion, and sales and excise taxes of $13.7 billion. In 1988-89, personal income tax will amount to $45.4 billion, $12 billion for corporate income tax, and $24.3 billion in sales and excise taxes.

By the end of the 1989 fiscal year there will be $16.1 billion in personal income tax, an increase of 55 per cent. Corporate tax will amount to $2.6 billion, which is an increase of 28 per cent. Sales and excise taxes will be $10.6 billion, for a 77 per cent increase. When we consider that the sales and excise taxes apply to everyone, whether one is earning $200,000 or $10,000, I suggest that this fact alone indicates the insensitivity and unfairness of the Government.

Furthermore, when we consider the particular areas in which taxation has been levelled, we can see the gross insensitivity of the Government. The fact that there is a 55 per cent increase in personal income tax and only a 28 per cent increase in corporate income tax shows that there is a sense of affinity for the corporate sector. It simply proves the Government has not been fair. Although the Government campaigned on a promise not to raise taxes, it has seen fit to hit Canadians with more than $22 billion in new taxes, to which can be added another $7 billion in future taxes.

The Government has claimed that the lower deficit is due to its ingenious management of the economy. I suggest that the Government's fiscal management has been incredibly poor because there has been an increase in the over-all per capita deficit. The per capita deficit has risen to $300 billion, from $7,000 per capita in 1983 to $12,000, a 60 per cent increase. During a time of high prosperity, the Government's poor management and poor judgment has resulted in that increase in per capita deficit.

These tax increases began with three consecutive sales tax increases, beginning in October, 1984.

The Conservatives hit Canadians with their first tax bite from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, which would subsequently go up to 12 per cent in hidden sales taxes. If one adds it all up, it comes to $3 billion, just in those hidden sales taxes. What that meant was that when men and women went to shop for new clothes, shoes for their children to go to school, food for their homes, the general everyday living, the cost was higher. The Government, through hidden taxes, had increased those costs by $3 billion.

I sometimes think that White Christmas was never on the Government's mind. It imposed a tax on candy, soft drinks, snacks. The cost to Canadians was $460 million, and one can add to that the $60 million which was added in taxes on paint and wallpaper. What kind of incentive is that for homeowners to improve their property? It was certainly a disincentive. I suggest that although it may have been hard on the redecorating bills at 24 Sussex Drive, it was equally hard, if not much harder, on the pocketbooks of ordinary Canadians.

I think we should be reminded that in this latest Budget the Tories put an incredible additional tax on gasoline. The first tax was worth $900 million. There was another tax of $450 million. There was one more additional tax of $450 million. If that was not enough, we have now had an increase of 23 cents per litre, which is close to one dollar per gallon for gas since September of 1985. This new tax of one cent a litre will come in April 1 and the Government will recover $450 million from that.

I would suggest we consider that $2.1 billion the Government is pulling in on that gas tax. I think there is a gas pipe that leads directly to the revenue treasury producing money for the Government to spend in all kinds of ridiculous areas. I wish they would increase spending in areas that are important to Canada.

I think we should consider the impact on workers who drive to work. The impact on their daily lives has been very significant. I think it is very unfair.

There was $700 million taken in by the Government from the increased tax on alcohol and tobacco. It is nice the Government is looking after our health and well-being, but some of us like those little luxuries and I think it is a little unfair. Then, of course, there is the marvellous tax on talking which quietly came into effect on January 1 of this year. Long distance telephone charges went up. They are now subject to a 10 per cent tax and the cost to Canadians is $945 million. Because of the strange way the lines are drawn for local and long-distance calls, many families will have to pay that additional tax every time they call their doctors or their dentists and—

Miss MacDonald: It does not apply to residential phones and you know that.

Mrs. Finestone: It does not apply to my residential phone when I am phoning from Hull up into the Outaouais?

Miss MacDonald: It does not apply to residential phones.

Mrs. Finestone: That is very interesting. I am glad the Minister has clarified that. We will just say that the tax is only costing $945 million for long-distance business calls. I am glad to hear that.

We must not forget the income tax changes. Canadians have not been able to forget the direct cash withdrawal from the pockets of consumers. I suggest that in those income tax changes, we have had the deindexing of the whole tax system. That small bill comes to $635 million on which we will add another 3 per cent next year and another 3 per cent the year after that. It goes on ad nauseam. The Government killed the Registered Homeownership Savings Plan, which certainly was a help to young people buying their first homes. That cost families $105 million.

We then had the elimination of the tax abatement clause. It added some very nice cash into the pockets of the Government. That is where the Government collects money and then holds it and sends it back to you without bothering to pay you interest. That will cost $650 million. That is not bad. There is also the temporary 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax on high-income earners. However, that was only in effect from July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986. There must have been a big lobby that told the Government to stop that. That only cost us $500 million.

There were the changes in tax treatment of dividend income which brought in another $300 million. There was a change in spousal exemptions. Those are the married benefits. It is a small amount of money, only $20 million. That is what the Government thinks about the role of the spouse within the family.

As I mentioned, all these taxes I have talked about, the sprinkling of these dozens of tax grabs by the Government, from individuals, families, senior citizens, total $22 billion. We should compare that with the fact that many corporations in this country still do not pay taxes and there is $1 billion of outstanding taxes to be collected from these corporations, on which Revenue Canada has not followed up. Why is it not doing its job? I think that $1 billion might offset some of the other things which I find rather regressive.

It does not take long to figure out who are the friends of this Government. If it is true that Canadians often vote with their pocketbooks, they surely will remember this Government on the way to the polls. So far I have spoken now just with respect to the hidden taxes and the overt taxes. What about the new tax treat the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is planning for us? We do not have the amount it is going to cost the taxpayers with respect to the new sales tax the Government intends to introduce after the next election. I would suggest that one part of that is a horrible Tory proposal. Fortunately, the Minister backed off on the tax on food but it took a whole brouhaha. It took weeks of questioning in this House before the Minister rose and clarified that he will not tax perishable foods in the new sales tax. He will tax wax-paper, Saran Wrap and soap, all the things one uses to run one's home, but not one's food, according to the Minister of Finance.

There was an unfortunate leak that occurred when the Committee on Finance came back from New Zealand. There seemed to be some indication that it found that a tax on food was a good idea. It then withdrew that proposal. I would hope that never again will those words "tax on food" come forward and that that idea is rejected out of hand.

For the Government to put its hand in the pockets of working Canadians to the extent of $22 billion is a pretty sad situation. The Government says it is staying the course. Staying the course will certainly not help the 3.7 million Canadians who are living below the poverty line, nor those women whose revenue has fallen even further below the wages of men, nor the homeless, those people who are living on the streets, and those people who are going to the food banks.

I would suggest that staying the course and offering no plan of action is an affront to the many Canadians who have a right to look to the Government for leadership. I am truly saddened at the inadequate response to the despair that is being experienced in this country. I strongly recommend that the Government take a good look at where the real problems are and start addressing some of those serious concerns in this country.

If the Government is going to drain $22 billion in the largest tax grab in the history of this country, it should use some of that to help in job retraining, youth access, or for elderly people and their concerns, their access to the market, and their dislocation. Over three and a half years there have been many places where the Government could have done something constructive instead of a do nothing, stay the course Budget with no new initiatives or measures to assist the needy.

I think that the concept of free trade will cost Canadians very dearly. Has the Government forgotten that the consumer of this country is also the voter? I was going to address the question of bank charges and the incredibly huge charges that are hidden. I hope that the Government will move in that regard in order that people can have choices. If the Government would insist that there be open and full disclosure, we might well have signs up in the banks. Then we could do some comparative shopping and the bank charges and bank rates might be more open to general society.

If what is happening under free trade is looked at very carefully, the Canadian consumer will pay for this free trade initiative. For only the removal of the tariffs it will cost $1.5 billion this year, $1 billion next year, and $2 billion the year after. That wipes out the half of one per cent growth per year that we are supposed to have. How will we pay for that? I think that we will have to find someone to pay for additional unemployment insurance premiums, someone to pay for additional training. There is a whole series of things of great concern: the number of jobs lost, the protection of certain industries, the number of industries that state that free trade might be good, "but not for me, exempt me", whether it is textiles, apparel, furniture, food processing, or chickens. I think there are areas of very serious concern.

I would like to suggest that the Government reorder its priorities, otherwise we will walk to the polls and tell it how we really feel.

Mr. Binns: The Hon. Member for Westmount speaks so sincerely that Canadians may be tempted to believe her. I am amazed that she would have the gall to misrepresent so many basic things. I was immediately taken aback when she had the nerve to tell people that we have driven up the price of gasoline in this country since taking office.

When I was elected in 1984, the price of gasoline in my Province of Prince Edward Island was in the vicinity of 56 cents a litre. Today that same litre costs 48 cents. A quick conversion of approximately 8 cents a litre works out to approximately 36 cents a gallon. If one fills the tank and it is only 10 gallons, that is a saving of $3.60. If it is 15 gallons, that is a saving of $5.40 every time one goes to the pumps. That is a big saving.

Through the National Energy Program, the Liberal Government not only drove the price of gasoline up for every Canadian, but it ruined the whole oil industry in this country and set us back by years. Thank goodness our Government has done some things that have begun to turn this around.

The other thing that the Government has done in relation to gasoline is continue to rebate all the excise tax and sales tax to Canadian farmers. Many of the same things have been done for fishermen and for primary producers.

In the Province of Prince Edward Island the price of fuel not only affects the cost of gasoline, but it affects the cost of electric power. We buy power under a fuel clause in an agreement with the Province of New Brunswick. Every time that gasoline or fuel increased in the country, our price of electricity increased. Turning on the switch became a very expensive proposition.

In the same manner as we dropped the price of gasoline by getting rid of the NEP and returning to some rational order, we have also dropped the price of electricity to Prince Edward Island consumers. Those are two major areas where the Government has done much for the average person.

The Hon. Member talked about interest rates. I recall when interest rates were 22 and 23 per cent, bankrupting farmers, fishermen, and small business. The country was in ruins. Unemployment was rampant all over the place. We were wondering where it was going to end. Of course, it ended with the defeat of the former Liberal Government, and we started to restore some order.

My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) moved quickly to bring down interest rates to farmers. Under the Farm Credit Corporation, interest rates dropped by a matter of policy by 4 per cent from 16.75 per cent to 12.75 per cent. One can imagine the thousands of dollars that one move alone would save a medium to large size farmer in this country. It is quite astronomical. Because of the Government's policy, interest rates have come down right across the board. That means that homeowners and small businessmen are saving thousands and thousands of dollars that they otherwise would have had to pay out on mortgage payments, and so on.

I did not plan to rise, but I just could not take it any longer. I am sure that Canadians did not believe the Hon. Member when she was speaking. I am sure they would not want to return to the Liberal Government of a few years ago where the country was on a collision course because of high interest rates, high unemployment, bankruptcies, and continued economic problems and woes from one end of the country to the other.

Mrs. Finestone: First, I wish to advise my hon. friend that I am not the Member for Westmount. I am the Member for Mount Royal and quite proud of that. I am pleasantly surprised to think that I have gall; perhaps guile but not gall. I do not think that I was showing too much nerve. I thought I was telling the direct truth. I would like to ask the Hon. Member to please read his Minister's tax Budgets. In case he cannot read, the Minister imposed a 2 cent per litre tax on September 3, 1985, and a 1 cent per litre tax on January 1, 1987, the first increase bringing in $900 million, the second increase bringing in $450 million, and 1 cent per litre on February 19, 1987, bringing in another $450 million. In case the Hon. Member does not look or does not know because this is a sneaky, hidden, indirect tax, there will be an additional 1 cent per litre increase as of April 1 of this year. I suggest the Hon. Member watch the pump. When the Hon. Member adds up $450 million, $450 million, and $900 million, the total is $2.1 billion added on to the tax bill of someone who knows what he is talking about and goes to the pump. First, I wish to advise the Hon. Member about that.

Second, the Hon. Member is very excited about how well he is doing in the supplying of energy either through oil or through hydroelectricity. That is great. The only thing the Hon. Member has forgotten is that he has given away our sovereign right to make some decisions around energy in this free trade deal. The Hon. Member ought to return and look at that too.

When the Hon. Member is talking about the farmers, I think he forgot about the marketing boards and the fact that farmers will have one heck of a job under free trade when they have to reconcile the marketing board, and the Canadian environment of snow six, seven months of the year, against the Americans south of the border with nice, warm twelve months a year grow-my-own products.

Mr. Gormley: I was moved and generally enthralled by the level of debate by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs.

Finestone) and the very thoughtful remarks of my colleague from Prince Edward Island. I felt that I must be moved to participate in some small part of this.

• (1700)

I wanted to ask the Hon. Member a little more about the question of taxation in terms of gas and generally the question of energy policy. The Hon. Member will know that in terms of deficit reduction—and this involves the obscenely high deficit that the Government inherited and the high national debt—it is being ratcheted down by using, roughly, a 70-30 formula. Some 70 per cent of the deficit reduction is being done by the Government simply taking less in contracting, and 30 per cent is being done by higher taxes.

If the Hon. Member considers the removal of the National Energy Program, the deregulation of natural gas and crude oil, the concurrent drop in world prices, even with the taxes which she as a Montreal Member of Parliament so greatly laments, and the free trade agreement that will indeed make Canada stronger and more secure in its energy supplies, how can this member of the Liberal Party stand in her place as an architect of the National Energy Program and purport to speak to Canadians or on behalf of Canadians in the oil and gas issue?

In terms of what is happening now to energy policy in Canada, will she concede that Canada's energy supplies in future are indeed more promising and the future considerably brighter under this Government and what we have done for western Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on a short rebuttal.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it will be a very short rebuttal. The Hon. Member is totally unaware of world history. He has forgotten about the Arab boycott. He has forgotten that this is a finite resource. He has forgotten that his long-term thinking is going to put the country into a very serious position which is not in our best interest over the long term.

He can be very happy that world oil prices are where they are at this moment. Let him come back here in 15 years and tell me if he and his constituents do not wish that the NEP project was back in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I was very disappointed to hear not just lies but enormous lies in the speech made by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: Really?

Mr. Vincent: The Hon. Member says: Really? I will mention one. She said we increased taxes by $22 billion. I am not surprised her Leader can't count, because he was once Minister of Finance and we know what the consequences were for this country, but I think it is really too bad the Hon. Member for Mount Royal can't count either, and frankly I am disappointed.

The $22 billion represents an increase in this country's revenue that is partly due to the fact that more Canadians are working. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you understand that when Canadians work, they pay taxes, and when they pay taxes, the country's revenues increase.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Mount Royal were comparing two years. According to them, since revenues increased by $22 billion, it follows that taxes increased by the same amount. Mr. Speaker, if taxes had actually increased by $22 billion, this means that every Canadian would have paid $1,000 more in either 1986 or 1987, whichever year she wants to take as an example.

So this really amounts to lying to Canadians, what the Hon. Member for Mount Royal said earlier. And then she had the nerve to tell us the national debt has increased. The national debt did increase, Mr. Speaker, that is quite true. It was . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I see the Hon. Member for Mount Royal seeking the floor. I remind her that this is debate, not questions and comments.

Mrs. Finestone: I realize that, Mr. Speaker. I was just curious to know if one is allowed to call someone a liar in this House, when in good faith a debate has taken place and my observations were well-founded. They may have been in error according to the views of this Member.

[Translation]

But these were certainly not lies, and I did not lie to the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If that was indicated, I would hope the Parliamentary Secretary would retract the statement. I did not take it that way. However, if that is so, he knows that under our rules it is not acceptable and perhaps could retract it.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw what I said. I will say the Hon. Member unfortunately circumvented the truth quite spectacularly when she referred to a $22 billion increase in taxes.

To get back to what we were talking about, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said the national debt had increased. That is true, except for one thing. She forgot to say that when this Government came to power, the national debt was $200 billion. She also forgot to mention that in 1984, the annual deficit was $39 billion. And you know what that means. It means the former Liberal Government used Canada's credit card and raised the bill we get each month to $200 billion. It also means that during the year in question, it had the nerve to spend $39 billion more. We came to power, Mr. Speaker, and we managed to reduce the annual deficit by $10 billion in three years. At the same time, the interest payable on the national debt increased by $10 billion over three years, and it did so because the previous Government annually spent more than it should have.

Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance, and I think you were here at the time, he started with a surplus of $481 million. Do you know what he did with that surplus, Mr. Speaker, when he was Minister of Finance? He turned it into a deficit of $4 billion, and this is the Leader of the Opposition who wants to run this country. Under his administration, expenditures increased by 23 per cent a year. This is not 23 per cent over three or four years, but 23 per cent a year. This is what the C.D. Howe Institute had to say about it: Most of Mr. Turner's budgets disturbed the relative balance of economic positions by favouring very high or lower middle income families rather than the poor. When Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance, the poor and the needy were not the ones to be protected against inflation. Most of the monetary benefits went to the wealthiest 8 per cent of Canadian families. I must point out that this is a translation of the text published by the C.D. Howe Institute. This, Mr. Speaker, is the man who says that he will perhaps be Prime Minister of Canada again. However, he will not be Prime Minister because the Canadian people will not vote for someone who put the country in the hole when he was Minister of Finance.

The late Senator Lamontagne, whom the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on the other side knew personally, and who was Minister in the Pearson Cabinet, described the period between 1971 and 1976, when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, by saying: "The middle term Government strategy was not clearly defined. That period was characterized by the combined effects of unemployment and inflation, which were stimulated by the economic structure and an overabundant supply. The Government made mistakes in forecasting and its economic decisions did nothing much to counter these unfortunate trends and bring back some stability."

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker, if I may quote a last comment about the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), in his report for the last year when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, the Auditor General, James MacDonald, stated: "I am deeply concerned that Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse." Whom do you think he meant, Mr. Speaker? He meant the Minister of Finance. "Financial management and control in the Government of Canada is grossly inadequate. Furthermore, it is likely to remain so until the Government takes strong, appropriate and effective measures to rectify this critically serious situation." All this, Mr. Speaker, is taken from page 9 of the report of the Auditor General of Canada for 1975-76.

Mr. Speaker, the number of unemployed increased by 164,000 between January 1972 and September 1975. In Quebec alone, 43,000 people were added to the unemployment lists over this three-year period under the administration of the Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra. During that same period, the number of unemployed women increased by 70,000 nationally. You might not believe this, Mr. Speaker, but our trade balance for goods, which showed a surplus of $2.6 billion in 1971, showed a deficit of $451 million in 1975, four years later, under the vigilant administration of the present Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on. The price of gas to which the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) referred increased by 54 per cent under the previous Minister of Finance, 54 per cent! In my riding of Trois-Rivières, the price of gas today is lower than it was when we were elected in 1984. My friend the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) who is here will confirm it. That is a Government who takes care of consumers.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like also to deal with energy . . . The Hon. Member for Mount Royal who represents a Quebec riding who had nothing to say when we dealt with Bill C-22 claimed that free trade would be bad for the energy industry. I wish I had been able to ask her how she could reconcile her view with that of Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa who says he is in favour of the free trade deal and who, as everybody knows, is a Premier who is partial to the Quebec energy industry as a supplier of electricity and who supports outright the Free Trade Agreement with the United States because he understands that it is good for both Canada and Quebec. Yet, we have here a Member representing a Quebec riding who is trying to scare people. All the Liberal Party and its Members are good for is scaring people off. She referred to the marketing boards in connection with free trade and agriculture. Need I write with my blood that the marketing boards, as it has been told over and over, have nothing to do with the free trade deal.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): There are not many in Mount Royal!

Mr. Vincent: My friend the Hon. Member for Champlain has made a relevant comment, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, there are not many farmers in the Mount Royal riding.

I have visited my riding and my farmers. The farmers in Saint-Sévère, Saint-Barnabé, Yamachiche, Pointe-du-Lac and everywhere else have told me that they are not afraid of free trade.

Everywhere, they said: We are going to go around the various . . .

Mr. Tardif: In Richmond—Wolfe?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) is welcome to meet the farmers in my riding who are in favour of free trade and who told me: I vote Liberal in federal elections, but next time I'll vote for you, because the Liberals don't know the first thing about free trade.

Mr. Speaker, we must stop being afraid and stop scaring people.

Mr. Prud'homme: You shouldn't get so excited. If you were a Minister, you would be more relaxed!

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is making remarks on . . .

Mr. Prud'homme: Not remarks but compliments . . .

Mr. Vincent: Are these constructive remarks or compliments?

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec, agriculture is an important industry. Free trade will benefit farmers as it benefits all activity sectors. And I think it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is trying to make people believe all kinds of things and using scare tactics. To hear Opposition Members, scare tactics seem to be the order of the day.

Did they ever come up with a single positive, concrete and workable idea in three and a half years? I dare them to submit just one, just one positive and constructive idea in four years.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to banks and other financial institutions. When we were elected in 1984, Canadians had been waiting nearly 10 years for a reform of our financial institutions. Ten years before, Canadian financial institutions had pleaded with the Liberal Government for reform.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is working on it. This reform will soon be ready and will benefit all Canadian consumers: people who buy life insurance, go to trust companies and banks and use the services of brokerage firms. Everybody will benefit.

Of course, if the Opposition wanted to be positive for once and support the proposal, we could move faster and the reform would be ready sooner, for the greater benefit of all Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time is nearly up. In conclusion, I would like to say that the increase in Government revenue was not merely due to an increase in taxes but also to our cuts in Government spending which also reduced the deficit. I think that is important, and that it shows sound management on the part of our administration and government services.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed a demonstration which, to my mind, projects an accurate image of the differences and distinctions between our two political factions.

The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) made it quite clear that the deficit mushroomed when the Liberals were in office. But, Mr. Speaker, let us bear in mind that it was because the Government did go to the assistance of consumers that the financial situation took a turn for the worst.

When they took over the recession had ended, so the deficit was the next target. As indicated in the motion, we condemn the Government for tackling the deficit and seeking to improve the situation, but exclusively at the expense of consumers. Earlier this morning we heard a lot about the fact that there has been a cruel, savage and indecent increase in drug prices—the direct result of a measure taken by your Government.

What do you say to these millions of prescription drug users who now have to pay up to twice as much as they did six or seven months ago? What do you say to Canadians who can only watch the mailman go by their door? What do you tell them? Are they not entitled to the same services as their neighbours? Finally, what do you say to the many consumers who were used to paying a minimal charge for Government services and who in many cases are now faced with increases of 200, 300 and 400 per cent? What do you tell them? The fact is that you have overloaded the consumer with taxes just so you would be in a position to reduce the taxes of others that can afford to pay, and I mean major companies.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I have to smile at the comments of the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), who begins by saying: We spent more than we could afford, and should have in order to help consumers because there was an economic crisis.

I recognize that there was a recession between 1980 and 1983. The figures I quoted related to the period when his Leader was Minister of Finance between 1971 and 1975. This is when, according to the C.D. Howe Institute, and I shall now repeat it, as the Hon. Member may not have understood, most of Mr. Turner's budgets disturbed the relative balance of economic positions by favouring very high and/or lower middle income families rather than the poor.

When Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance, the poor and the needy were not the ones to be protected against inflation. Monetary benefits went mostly to the wealthiest 8 per cent of Canadian families. These comments were not made by Conservative supporters, but by the C.D. Howe Institute.

The Hon. Member says that his Government spent more during the recession to help consumers, but I challenge him to say where, in the Trois-Rivières riding, it made any investments which really helped to create permanent jobs or did anything really useful for the riding. All its initiatives amounted to flagrant patronage and patching. This is all it did. It said it was creating jobs by doing some construction work. As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, jobs in construction are not permanent jobs. It is only a band-aid solution. This is what the previous Government did when it talked about job creation.

As for us, Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with the private sector, we have created 1.3 million jobs since September 1984. Moreover, 80 per cent have been permanent jobs and a lot of them have gone to women and young people, which had never been the case under the previous Liberal Government.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised the question of hydroelectricity. It is a subject that is very dear to my heart.

There is about 10,000 megawatts of electricity in Labrador flowing to the sea every day, untapped, unrestrained. This is happening in a province which will run out of electricity in 1992. In a province which will have no more of electricity in 1992, 10,000 megawatts of electricity flows to the sea every day. That is not the problem of the Hon. Member, I know, but I want to try to put that in context if I can.

The Hon. Member talked about the value of the free trade agreement. I hope he will listen to this because I have some arguments to make and I hope he will want to reply to them later on.

Not only is it impossible to develop that hydroelectricity now without the help of the Province of Quebec, a province which takes about $800 to every $8 that goes to the Province of Newfoundland for the Upper Churchill contract, but it will be doubly difficult to do so in the future under the free trade agreement. Every province that wants to export electricity must pass a test. First, they must pass a price test and second, they must ask other provinces if they want their power. They cannot sell electricity to the U.S. unless they ask the other provinces if they want the power.

In future, the provinces will not have to do that, not simply because of free trade but because of the deregulation policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse). In a moment, I would like to quote the Minister of Energy because his words are apropos to what the free trade deal does.

The free trade deal creates a level playing field. It provides that we are no different from the Americans. I see that the Hon. Member is leaving. Perhaps I will repeat my point when he returns.

In future, we will be no different from the Americans. We will not be able to have a made-in-Canada price. The National Energy Program which has been very much maligned today allowed Canada to have a Canadian price, but we cannot do so any longer. The free trade deal says that we are a level playing field.

We are talking about consumers here today. It is great to develop James Bay. It will be great for the construction industry. It will provide a lot of construction jobs, and that is good. I applaud Mr. Bourassa for that and I say to my colleagues from Quebec that that is well done, they will create lots of jobs in the construction stage. However, what will it do to the consumer? There will be no Canadian price for hydro-electricity.

Moreover, apart from free trade, Mr. Masse has said:

> To take advantage of these opportunities, federal electricity export policies must change. We need to acknowledge that provincial regulation has become much more sophisticated since 1963, and that there is no need for the federal government to duplicate what the provinces are already doing.
> Our general policy framework needs to be more market-oriented. We need to give exporters greater latitude, so that they can concentrate more on business. And we need to streamline the export review process so that it provides incentives for utilities to be more self-regulating.

In other words, the Government is getting out of the way and industry can do what it wants. It does not have to ask the other provinces if they want the electricity and it does not have to offer it to them at a Canadian price. That is the effect of both free trade and the deregulation policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Minister does not have to ask Newfoundland if it wants the power. The Minister does not have to ask Prince Edward Island if it wants the power. The Minister does not have to ask New Brunswick if it wants the power. What will happen to the consumers in those provinces? That is what we are talking about today, consumers and what will happen to the consumers of hydro-electricity under free trade and the deregulation of Mr. Masse.

Not only will the Minister not have to offer power to Prince Edward Island at a decent price, he will not have to offer it to the province at all. That is the effect of the free trade deal coupled with the deregulation policy of Mr. Masse. The provinces that do not have access to power will have less access to it in future, and even if they are offered it out of the goodness of the hearts of those producing it, they will have to pay the American price. That is the effect of free trade and the deregulation policy of Mr. Masse.

As I say, it is great for the construction industry in Quebec and it is great for people who want jobs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that he is mentioning the Hon. Minister's name when he should be saying the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse). He has done it three times and that is the only reason I bring it to his attention.

Mr. Rompkey: We have to say things over and over so that the people opposite will understand, but I do appreciate your point, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for that.

Joe Smallwood, and I can mention his name because he never was in this Chamber, always used to say that you have to tell people what you are going to say, then you have to say it and then you have to tell people what you already said in order to get the message across. I want to make sure that I get the message across that free trade plus the deregulation policy of the Minister of Energy will have a negative impact on the consumer in provinces which do not produce hydroelectricity.

It may even have a negative impact on the consumers of hydroelectricity in Quebec itself. I cannot speak for that province, but I can speak for my own.

That is the response I would make to the Hon. Member about hydroelectricity. Of course, there are many other points to be made too, and they have been made adequately today. My colleague from Mount Royal and others have sketched out the taxes that have been increased over the years, particularly the sales tax which of course is a regressive tax because it impacts negatively on those people who have less and it does not, however, impact a great deal on those who have more.

There have been tax increases and they have been regressive. They have not been a help to the consumers of Canada. The Government, of course, says that it can do this because the economy is good and because it has created a lot of jobs. Therefore, there is more income and businesses are investing more and creating more jobs. Where is that happening? In central Canada. Sure, there are more jobs in Toronto, but how many have been created in the Atlantic provinces?

If the argument is that you can increase taxes because the economy is good and business has invested and created more jobs, then the effect of increased taxes is doubly damaging to people in areas where the jobs have not been created, where there is still high unemployment, and where incomes are still low. In the Province of Newfoundland we still have the lowest per capita income and the highest unemployment rate in the country. What is the effect of tax increases on people in that area?

What about gasoline taxes? How many things come in to that province by truck? Quite a lot, and as gasoline goes up, prices go up. Berthage fees for fishermen have been increased. At the same time there have been cuts in government programs across the board in order to cut the deficit. That, too, has a cumulative effect on consumers, particularly in have-not provinces which are dependent upon government programs.

Then on top of that is the issue I raised with the Minister responsible for the Post Office concerning the state of our mail service. He talked about the fact that people wanted to go to supermarkets and collect their stamps at the same time they collected their groceries. That is fine for urban Canada but it does not work that way in rural Canada or northern Canada. He was asking for an increase in the price of stamps so he could improve mail service. I pointed out that the level of service we get in the North is deplorable. I talked to the Post Office today in Labrador City. Seventy-nine bags of mail destined for Labrador City were left in the airport in St. John's. Labrador City is served only by air. There are no ships that go there and no roads. People there depend on the mail service. The unemployed, pensioners and those on fixed incomes depend on it for cheques. They are consumers. Yet the Post Office wants to increase the cost of stamps while still providing that deplorable service. Before they get that increase they better clean up their act and start giving decent service.

Then there is the impact of other government policies. We have not talked about young people and the effect on them of government policies. They are consumers, or they want to be. The fact is that money for post-secondary education has been decreased. The fact is there is a 30 per cent drop in funding to community colleges and CEGEPs as a result of the change in the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The fact is that the amount of money for summer jobs for young people has been frozen for the past three years. There is a direct correlation between the amount of education you have and the amount of money you earn. If young people want to be consumers, where is the incentive to get an education and try and start their own business? It is not there. This is a factor we have to consider.

I want to point out that even fisheries policy has an effect on consumers. I know of a fish plant in my riding right now that will have to lay off workers this summer, 56 people. Not a large number, perhaps, but in a community of 500 or 600, almost the total workforce in that plant will be laid off this summer. Why? It is a fisherman's co-op, the Labrador Fishermen's Union Shrimp Company, and the Government has said it cannot have a supply of offshore fish. The Government is prepared to bargain away that fish to France, but it has told the fishermen on that coast that they cannot have access to fish. That situation has a direct connection to consumers because once you start doing away with jobs, you start doing away with the wherewithal to make purchases. That aspect of government policy has its effect, too.

It seems to me that over the past four years, while businesses in certain parts of the country may have expanded and employment may have been created, the over-all effect on consumers has not been positive from the point of view of the broad range of government policy. That is the situation and I think that when this Government goes to its accountability session, as it must very soon, possibly this fall, the people of Canada will judge. If the polls are any indication, then the consumers of Canada will judge harshly indeed.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) spoke about saying something three times to get the crowd on this side of the House to understand what he is saying. I want to say that the crowd on this side of the House believe in doing instead of talking.

He spoke about harbours. When this Conservative Government came into office in 1984, the harbours around Canada were generally in poor condition. Many of them were in an advanced state of disrepair so as to render them unsafe. At that time it was estimated that approximately 112 harbours were indeed unsafe for vessels seeking safe haven. Many of them were barricaded. It does not sound like the previous Government had looked after the fishermen or recreational users in a very good way as far as the harbours were concerned.

At that time, if corrective measures had not been taken, in another five years an additional 150 harbours would have to have been closed. These statistics were and are alarming since the livelihood of fishermen is at stake. Most of the small craft harbours operated through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans are located in outlying areas where fishing represents the primary source of income. That situation could not be condoned by this Government and I am glad to say that the Minister announced this past year that $150 million would be spent over the next three years on revitalization and maintenance programs in every province of Canada.

In the motion before us reference is made to user fees. I believe that this has been put in there intentionally to try and scare fishermen into believing that because a plan is being put in place to give fishermen more say in the development of their harbours through local harbour authorities, for some reason or other they are going to have to pay more for the services. I do not believe that that is true. The fishermen to whom I have spoken in the harbours in my constituency welcome the chance to be part of harbour authorities and to be part of the planning for the development which will take place in their harbours. They welcome the chance to set fees for themselves because they know that that money will go back to them for them to administer and use to their own advantage.

It is interesting to note that some of these harbours will be leased to harbour authorities which will help the federal Government set out directions for the setting of priorities for improvement and development of their harbours. As I have already said, they will undertake the day-to-day management. They will be able to install electricity on wharfs where they want it to use to their own advantage. The same is true with water on the wharfs.

Some people in my constituency have already approached me about setting up marinas in harbours which are presently used mainly by fishermen. They know that there are more tourists coming in from different parts of Canada and from the United States and they want to be able to provide harbour facilities to these people in order to generate more revenue to use for their own advantage.

Giving local fishermen, members of town councils or development associations and others the opportunity to serve on the harbour authorities will establish grass roots user management. They will be able to match programs more precisely to local needs and set their own priorities.

As I said, I believe that this motion is only a scare tactic of the Opposition such as those used on many occasions to try to put fear into the people. However, I know that the people in my riding are not fooled by those tactics. They are very grateful for the revitalization program.

The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador talks about cut-backs. That is certainly not the indication of people in places like Grate's Cove who have been waiting for harbour facilities for 35 years, ever since Confederation. It is only now, with a Conservative Government, that they are getting those long needed facilities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(10), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply.

COASTING TRADE AND COMMERCIAL MARINE ACTIVITIES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-52, an Act respecting the use of foreign ships and non-duty paid ships in the coasting trade and in other marine activities of a commercial nature, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mazankowski (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

• (1010)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to inform the House that there have been consultations among the three Parties. My understanding is that we will debate this Bill at third reading with the intention of completing it prior to eleven o'clock this morning.

If that happens, the House will be suspended until the normal time for Members' Statements, at eleven o'clock. Subsequent to the Question Period, as we go through Routine Proceedings it is our intention to move concurrence in the third report of the Transport Committee. We will debate that for however long, perhaps for the balance of the day. That is the understanding that exists among the three Parties.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that it is the intention of the House to deal expeditiously with the Bill. It may well be that we will deal with it by eleven o'clock, but I just sound a cautionary note. With all speakers theoretically having unlimited time, it will depend on how much time each of the Parties has to make points on the Bill. We will certainly deal with this and finish with the Bill today.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there are 50 minutes left before eleven o'clock. I just wondered, since we have that agreement, whether the House would not give any speaker more than one-third of the time remaining so that we have equal time.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, our Party concurs with this arrangement.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on Bill C-52. It is the coastal trade Act which is designed to encourage growth in the Canadian coasting trade and create new opportunities for this industry and offshore exploration and development. It completely removes the coasting trade provisions from the Canada Shipping Act and incorporates amendments to them into the new Coasting Trade and Commercial Marine Activities Act. We are certain this new Act will give impetus to the marine tourism and shipbuilding industries. It will also create more jobs for seamen working in areas to be reserved for Canadians. These areas include commercial activities related to the exploration, development or production of mineral resources right up to the continental shelf.

Before I highlight some of the amendments adopted by our committee, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Members on their hard work. I believe Members put aside their political interests in favour of determining the best policy for our country. Members examined this Bill with vigour. We spent more than 10 days in committee hearings. Members heard from 23 witnesses and questioned in depth all aspects and implications of the Bill. I believe the Bill provides an appropriate balance among the various Canadian interests and reserves, to the degree possible, Canadian jobs for Canadians.

The committee recommended, and the Government accepted, certain amendments to the original draft Bill, four of which I would like to highlight for the Members here today.

First, the deletion of the exemption for hydrocarbon production platforms will require a licence to be obtained before a foreign production platform can be used in Canada. This means that a search will be made to determine if a suitable Canadian production platform is available before the licence is issued, and only if no such Canadian platform is available will it be issued. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will encourage Canadians to build platforms in Canada thereby providing job opportunities and encouragement to our shipbuilding industry.

Second, foreign cargo ships wishing to do business in Canada must obtain a temporary coasting trade licence and give 14 days notice of the proposed activity. This will allow Canadian shipping companies to adjust their schedules to allow as many Canadian vessels as possible to be employed. I would draw to Members' attention Clause 6(2) where the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing special circumstances to be taken into account by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) for the purpose of subsection (1).

Third, Canadian cruise ships operating domestically in the trades using vessels with up to 250 overnight passenger accommodations are protected by this Bill. Members will recall that the first draft of the Bill had a 100 passenger limit. So-called foreign international cruise ships with much larger accommodation are encouraged to continue calling at Canadian ports and are exempt from this Bill.

Fourth, a provision has been inserted in the Bill permitting the Governor in Council to place a cap on the number of licences that may be issued. This provision is available to the Government in situations where it is in the public interest to do so.

Over-all, Mr. Speaker, the Bill enables the Canadian supply boat fleet to extend its range beyond the territorial sea to the outer edge of the continental shelf or 200 miles, whichever is the greatest. This area will be reserved for Canadian ships.

A waiver system that allows foreign flagships to enter the Canadian coasting trade and the offshore area when no suitable Canadian ship is available will remain. Since 99 per cent of the Canadian coasting trade is carried in Canadian ships, this is not expected to have much effect on the industry.

Exemptions to the legislation include fishing vessels, ships engaged in ocean research, including those operated or sponsored by foreign Governments, and ships assisting others in distress. These foreign vessels are controlled by other Canadian legislation or by international agreements. The Bill will also remove the historic anomaly in Canadian legislation that refers to British ships rather than Canadian ships. Currently, only three British ships remain in the coasting trade in Canada. It should also be noted that the thrust of the Bill is supported by Canada's provinces as well as many segments of the marine industry.

This Bill has been needed and has been in the mill for well over 20 years and I believe Members of Parliament will serve Canada well by its passage today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. McDermid: Here comes the pit bull.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who is referring to me as a pit bull and who is an ardent, pure and pristine adherent of the Conservative philosophy ought to be careful because I have a picture in my possession from some years ago when we travelled on a parliamentary committee of the Member gazing fondly at a Karl Marx statue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Or was it the monument in the graveyard in London? Of course if I spread that around as true adherence to the Conservative philosophy, the Member could find himself with a cause but without a Party.

Mr. McDermid: Who was standing with me?

Mr. Tobin: I took the picture.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support passage of Bill C-52. The Bill before us is by no means perfect. It by no means meets every concern of those involved in Canada's coastal trade, particularly those involved in Canada's shipbuilding industry, but it is a significant improvement over existing legislation.

The Bill as it stands before us today in the House has been, I think, in substantial and in important ways amended as a result, I have to say, of the non-partisan, urgent and serious all-Party consideration of the Bill through committee stage. When those of us who welcomed the notion of parliamentary reform, in particular committees becoming masters of their own fate rather than reflections of Party policy, when we look to the work of the legislative committee on Bill C-52, we see parliamentary reform truly at work. We have seen a significant number of important amendments to Bill C-52.

I am pleased to say as the Official Opposition critic that I was successful in committee, with the help on many occasions, and certainly with the concurrence, of the Parliamentary Secretary and members of the Conservative Party, in seeing amendments made by all of us to this Bill. It was a very enlightening and positive experience to see that that kind of work can be done.

I want to point out, as the Parliamentary Secretary has, a few of those amendments. Canadians who pay attention to the debates of the House of Commons should know that, first, Bill C-52 is a coastal trading Bill. It is designed to protect Canadian jobs, the Canadian shipping industry and Canada's coastal trade. It is to ensure that the ships that ply our waters and participate in the commerce of this nation by means of water transport are as much as possible Canadian ships crewed by Canadian men and women. It is to ensure that the jobs stay here at home.

As I said, we made some significant amendments to the Bill, the most important of which I believe was to the waiver system. The waiver system provides that those who cannot get access to an appropriate Canadian vessel may apply to the government regulator to be allowed to bring in a foreign vessel to work Canadian waters. That does not happen often. Ninety-nine per cent of the business in Canada today is done by Canadian ships, or Canadian bottoms, as they say in the trade, crewed by Canadian crews. To the extent that foreign vessels are allowed in under a waiver system, up until this Bill was dealt with in committee, a company could technically apply for a waiver on a Wednesday saying that it needed a ship on Friday, and there was no minimum requirement for advance notice to give Canadian shipping companies adequate time to compete for the job and indicate whether or not they could provide a Canadian ship rather than a foreign vessel to provide that service.

We have now put a clause in the Bill requiring a minimum of 14 days' notice on application of waiver. The Canadian industry, Canadian shippers and Canadian crewmen will now have at least two weeks when there is a request to bring in a foreign vessel to indicate whether or not there is available in Canada a suitable Canadian vessel so that Canadians will be employed. I believe this is a tremendous improvement over what had been the case in the past.

Some people might say that it is all well and good to have 14-day minimum requirement of notice, but what happens to a Canadian manufacturer or shipper who has an emergency and cannot wait 14 days to find out whether or not he can get a foreign vessel? He might have a tanker that is breaking up and he has to get the crude out of it quickly. The only thing available might be a foreign vessel.

We built provisions into the Bill, notwithstanding the 14-day minimum notice, that in the event of special circumstances or in the case of a genuine emergency as determined by regulation, the regulator would have the power to grant practically instantaneous permission for a foreign vessel to be used. Again, this will happen only when it is in Canada's interest and only to prevent a Canadian shipper or manufacturer from being hurt because of a genuine emergency.

It is my belief that those kinds of emergencies do not occur too often. We are talking about thousands of tonnes of cargo being moved, and I do not believe that in 99 per cent of the cases, shippers do not know weeks, indeed months, perhaps six months in advance what they are to move, when they are to move it, who it is to be sold to and what kind of vessel they will need. There is no reason why plenty of advance notice cannot be given so that Canadian shipping has the first opportunity to pick up work.

This is an improvement to the Bill. Some people said that we should have a 60-day minimum notice, some said 30 days, some said no notice at all. We came to a compromise with two weeks of minimum notice.

There was a clause in the Bill calling for automatic exemptions and listing a whole category of exemptions for which the strict requirement of Canadian vessels and Canadian crews would not automatically apply. One of the most significant exemptions proposed in the Bill was an exemption for offshore rigs, drilling platforms. The Bill provided in its original state that drilling platforms, offshore rigs, would not be subject to the criterion of having to be a Canadian rig, a Canadian platform, crewed by a Canadian crew. There was an automatic exemption. In fact, the Bill really proposed to leave the decision as to what kind of rigs operated on the offshore in the hands of the Department of Energy.

We are living in a time when the world price of oil is low. Notwithstanding all the world's best efforts, there still appears to be a surplus of oil available in the market-place. Offshore activity in Canada has slowed considerably in the Beaufort, off the shore of Newfoundland and North Labrador, off the shore of Sable Island, Nova Scotia, and indeed off the coast of British Columbia. However, when the day comes, and it will come because we are dealing with a non-renewable resource, that offshore activity picks up and picks up considerably, there will be a tremendous potential for industrial benefit for Canada, for jobs in Canada and for development of technology in Canada, by ensuring that literally billions of dollars worth of offshore drilling rigs and equipment be produced where possible in Canada and be manned by Canadians.

I am pleased to say that I moved an amendment to the Bill to drop that exemption and I am pleased to say that it was supported by government Members. We have provided that drilling rigs are to be treated exactly the same way as ships, and that is, if they want an exemption, they have to make and prove the case that a Canadian vessel or drilling rig cannot be used. There is to be no automatic exemption. The decision is not to be left in the hands of multinational oil companies and Governments which do deals behind closed doors on the top floors of steel, glass and concrete towers in the financial capitals of the world. We are ensuring a measure of protection in the principle that always, where possible, Canadian vessels and Canadian crews will be used first in Canadian waters. I think that is a significant improvement to the Bill.

There was a waiver provided in the Bill for vessels engaged in cruise activities, a waiver that provided that vessels with accommodation for 100 passengers or more would be automatically exempted. If someone wanted to run a cruise operation in Kingston and the Islands, off the coast of British Columbia or down through the Maritimes and had a vessel which could accommodate more than 100 passengers, there would be an automatic waiver. The ship would not have to be Canadian, it would not have to be crewed by Canadians and it could be operated in Canada's waters. We increased the number of 100 passengers or more to 250 passengers or more to ensure that a developing industry, particularly off the coast of British Columbia and in Kingston and the Islands, would be a Canadian industry. I regard that, as well, as being a significant improvement to the Bill.

There was one area where the committee was not successful in seeing change. It was not the fault of the committee. It was not the fault of any particular Party. It dealt more with the fact that the change we wanted to put in does not appropriately belong in Bill C-52.

We were contemplating putting a Canadian ownership requirement in the Bill. Canadians should know that when we drafted the deregulation Bill for the airline industry, we put a requirement in the Bill that a Canadian airline is an airline that is 75 per cent Canadian-owned. We put in a requirement that foreign investment in Canada's airlines could not exceed 25 per cent. That is the law of the land. We need to make that same requirement apply to Canada's shipping industry.

Why is it so urgent that we do that now? Bill C-52, designed to promote, enhance and protect Canada's shipping industry, is mild compared to the corresponding legislation in the United States, an Act called the Jones Act. Under Bill C-52, a Canadian ship is defined as a ship that was built in Canada and flagged in Canada or a ship that was built somewhere else in the world but upon which all duties, taxes and customs have been paid. We are reasonable.

In the United States, under the Jones Act, an American ship is a ship that was built in the United States, with all parts provided from the United States and crewed by U.S. companies. Nothing but American-made and crewed ships can operate in U.S. waters, and there are no exemptions. It is an absolute government dictated monopoly under the Jones Act. This Bill nowhere near approaches that kind of rigid regime, nor do I suggest we repeat the Jones Act because there are down sides as well.

• (1030)

The American Act closes the door on anything but an American-built and crewed vessel, so we have to look at the impact of the transportation annex in the free trade agreement on our country. We do not have a Jones Act and we do not want one.

Ms. Mitchell: Do not be too sure about that.

Mr. Tobin: All Parties agree that we do not want to go the way of the Jones Act. We want protection but not the Jones Act.

Under the investment provisions of free trade, foreign investment of up to $150 million is allowed without review. The Americans have a monopoly in their own backyard, by law. As a result, their costs are higher than ours. Canada is more competitive than the U.S. We get the bulk of the cross-lakes trade because we run leaner and more efficient than the Americans. Part of having a monopoly is that they have an inefficient fleet and system. It is not as efficient and productive as Canada's fleet. However, they want to participate in the cross-lakes trade. Under the free trade investment provisions all they have to do is come North, buy a share in an existing Canadian company or hang up a shingle in Canada and call it a shipping office, and they can compete for Canadian traffic. They can take a share of the pie here, but back home they have slammed the door. No one but U.S. entrepreneurs can play the game.

The Americans are in a position to have it both ways: Absolute protection in their own backyard; and, through the investment provisions of free trade, they can come into Canada and play in our backyard as well. Canadian companies enjoy no such reciprocal rights in the U.S. Therefore, it is imperative, in order to maintain control of shipping in Canada and keep the profits flowing into the coffers of this nation, that there be a 75 per cent Canadian investment requirement. That is still far below the 100 per cent requirement in the U.S. and it does not slam the door on foreign investment, nor on foreign-built vessels, provided the duty and taxes are paid.

This cannot be done properly under Bill C-52. We tried. It should have been done when we amended the Canada Shipping Act two years ago. Of course, at that time we did not have a free trade deal which gave Americans wide open access to our market. Two years ago no one could have anticipated that it would be a problem today. Therefore, I have an offer to make to the Government. I have discussed this with my counterpart in the NDP.

The Government says it is prepared to look at amendments to the Canada Shipping Act but it is afraid if it brings it back into the House it is going to be a Pandora's box. The Government says we are going to want to make all kinds of changes and amendments with a long drawn-out debate. It says it agrees that we have to have a 75 per cent Canadian ownership requirement but it is terrified of bringing this Bill back and opening it up a second time because it is afraid the Bill will never get out of the House again.

I know my colleagues in the NDP agree when I say that we in the Opposition would be prepared, if the Government brings in the appropriate amendment which defines a Canadian ship as one being 75 per cent owned by Canadians, to pass that amendment through this House in all stages, one, two, three, in less than an hour. We will bring the Bill in, skip committee stage, do first, second and third readings, and pass the Bill out of the House. The Government cannot get a better deal than that. If the Government is serious when it says that it understands and is supportive of the concept of a 75 per cent Canadian content requirement for Canadian shipping, it has just been made an offer it cannot refuse.

I would add that my NDP counterpart, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), at least in discussions with me, is prepared to make the same offer to the Government. It is almost unprecedented that opposition Parties are prepared to give up the right to examine a Bill, propose amendments, call witnesses and so on. However, I believe that the requirement for a Canadian content law is now so critical in the free trade environment that we have to be prepared to make unprecedented offers. We have to be prepared to say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker): Bring in the appropriate Canadian content amendment to the Canada Shipping Act and we will pass it in all stages in less than an hour. I hope we will have a formal response from the Parliamentary Secretary to that offer.

I would be remiss if I did not make another comment about this Bill. It seeks, as I said, to enhance and protect the Canadian coastal trade. Yet it does nothing, and can do nothing because it is not the appropriate place to address this matter, for the sad and sorry plight of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. All of those who live in regions or communities where shipbuilding is an important part of their economic fabric have come to the conclusion that the Government's policy on shipbuilding is that there are too many shipyards and we have to close a bunch down. We have had no policy statement, no document, no pronouncement from on high. We assume there is a policy, but the Government will not tell us what it is. Shipyards being closed down is exactly what is happening through benign neglect. Canadians should recall that this nation, through two world wars, was one of the greatest producers of shipping. In a time of need and crisis Canada came through.

Canadians should remember that this is a marine nation. Next to Russia, we have more coastline than any other nation of the world. We have a great Atlantic and Pacific tradition, and now we have the North, the Beaufort Sea, the Arctic Passage. Our heritage is rooted in the sea and in shipping. Yet in 1988, despite that heritage and tradition, that historical fact, that evolution of this nation based upon the great role played by Canadian shipping, we have no shipbuilding policy. No policy at all.

We have a Government that says our shipyards are not competitive. We cannot compete with the Japanese or the Koreans or other Asian or European nations. What it does not tell Canadians is that each and every one of those other nations have shipbuilding policies and subsidies, anywhere from 10 per cent to 50 per cent, to ensure that the industry stays alive because it is a national priority. In Canada today there is absolutely no government support or subsidy to keep the shipbuilding industry alive. Twenty years ago 80 per cent of the work done by our shipyards came from the private sector. As a result of a rapid increase in the last half a dozen years, today 90 per cent of the work in Canada's shipyards is government work. That is all that is keeping them alive. The Government has responded to that crisis, to the increased threat of competition from other nations which are subsidizing their industries in an attempt to displace the Canadian industry, by turning on its heels, wringing its hands, and walking quietly away while this industry fades into the night.

Bill C-52 cannot address that problem, but surely it is the responsibility of Parliament and the Government, in appropriate pieces of legislation from other government departments, to address the problem which is the reality of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. I can see Canada in the year 2000 and beyond opening up the vast northern resource, a warehouse of untold potential, and doing it with foreign-built technology. Canada, with the second greatest coastline in the world and a rich heritage in the marine side, will have to turn to Japan to develop our northern resources. That is the future in store for Canada if Governments continue to turn on their heels quietly and turn a deaf ear to the shipbuilding industry which was one of the building blocks of this nation.

I use this opportunity to remind the Government of its responsibility and to congratulate it on work well done in Bill C-52. We worked well together. Members on the government side showed a desire to improve this Bill. I ask them to bring that same desire for reform in the operation of this Parliament and that same desire to want to work together across Party lines to the table when we are given the opportunity, which I hope we will be given soon, in a legislative committee or the Transport Committee to address the very real problems of the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pride to speak on this Bill in the name of my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), who has done a lot of work on the committee. As has been said, all three Parties have worked hard to bring about some amendments and produce a Bill with which we are reasonably pleased. On this morning we can take some hope that the reports of committees are heeded by the Government, which does at times look at the amendments and sees that they are reasonable.

This update in the shipping industry was long overdue. It reflects the national identity of the shipping industry in Canada, which we can all celebrate. Most important, some of the amendments made to the Bill moved by Members on all sides which were supported are very important. As has been said earlier, the removal of the exemption for the oil rigs and an increase in the number of berths of cruise ships is very important. The requirement for 14 days' notice to be given before any foreign ship can get a license is necessary and reasonable. It is sufficiently flexible in that 14 days will give Canadian shippers the opportunity to find a ship.

However, one of the amendments which we believe was important which the Government did not see as a priority was the change of the definition of a Canadian ship to ensure that these ships would be built in Canada and owned and crewed by Canadians. If we do not identify what a Canadian ship is and ensure that it is built in Canada, we are not giving much respect to the Canadian shipbuilding industry.

This industry borders on being a part of our culture. It is certainly a part of our legacy because we were second to none in the world in shipbuilding. That industry has been slipping and the Government should see that it needs protection from the Jones Act which implements a total monopoly south of the border in American shipbuilding. It is very important that a Canadian ship be defined as one which is owned and built in Canada.

We would also like to see a provision to allow a license to be given to a foreign ship for only one trip. We need such a restriction to assist the development of the Canadian shipbuilding industry and support as much work as possible for Canadian seafarers. This will not happen if those restrictions are not in the Bill. I do not understand why those amendments were not allowed when there was so much co-operation and agreement on the goals and objectives of the Bill.

With regard to the limit on the number of licenses we also tried to ensure through amendment that if a viable route is developed for a foreign ship it should be serviced on an ongoing basis by a Canadian ship. That only makes sense. It asserts that our avenues of transportation are ours and that we will not allow foreign control of them.

We have no objection to shippers using a foreign vessel if there is no Canadian vessel which meets the requirement. It is important that they be able to do this to complete one trip in order to establish a particular route or service. However, if they are allowed to continue and no Canadian vessel is available, a Canadian vessel should be built to meet those needs rather than continuing to use foreign ships. In that way we can give impetus to the industry and it makes a lot of sense.

Similarly, we do not want several different shippers all using a foreign ship on a one-time basis. Collectively, this could amount to less full-time use of the vessels. Again, a Canadian vessel should be built to meet this need. We must accept the fact that we are quite capable of meeting the technical needs of the shipping industry. It is very important that we restrict the number of licenses in order that that can happen.

There is a link between this Bill and the trade agreement with the United States. We know that the Americans refused to give up anything with regard to shipping and hold a very strong monopoly with the Jones Act. Once again we got no benefit from that trade deal. If the Americans had been persuaded to allow us to have that same kind of trade, our shipping industry and our seafarers would have benefited greatly. We are very disappointed with this result, but it is consistent with the trade deal in which Canada gives everything and gets nothing.

However, on this Bill in particular I do want to compliment the Government for bringing forward a Bill which was long overdue. In committee the Government was quite willing to listen to the amendments and did try to improve the Bill before it came to the House. We certainly appreciate and respect that.

Also, the Government initiated an amendment to allow reciprocation for American or any other foreign discrimination. I would like to commend the Government for that, recognizing that this is a means of retaining Canadian control of this industry and that it at least goes against one of the principles of the trade deal which seems to give Canadian control away all the time.

I would like to compliment all of the members of the committee for this Bill. I was not a member but I know how hard my colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan worked on it. This is the kind of committee work which can give us all little hope that the hard work is not always lost, that it does eventually get incorporated into Bills.

• (1050)

Therefore, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I want to give my support to the passage of this legislation. At least there is one area and one industry in which we now have more assured Canadian control than before today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to the agreement made earlier today, we shall suspend the sitting until eleven o'clock.

At 10.52 a.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

SECTION 110 OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT—SUPREME COURT DECISION—REQUEST THAT ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN PROTECT FRANCOPHONE ANCESTRAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, February 25 last, the Supreme Court rendered a historic decision stating that Alberta and Saskatchewan are still subject to Northwest Territories Act section 110. As a result, the two provinces have to pass their legislation in both official languages, and French may be used in the debates of the legislative assemblies and before the courts.

The two provinces must translate all their English statutes, or pass legislation to cancel enforcement of section 110. The choice is theirs.

Mr. Speaker, these two provinces endorsed the Meech Lake Accord, thereby committing themselves to protect Canada's linguistic duality.

I sincerely hope that all my colleagues will join me in urging the two provinces not to hold up to ridicule the ancestral rights of their francophone residents by enacting regressive legislation, but that they will seek to reach a cordial and generous agreement with the minority groups with a view to making it possible for the latter to expect additional and basic services in their legislative assemblies and before the courts.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE—INELIGIBILITY OF VETERANS LIVING IN UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is one Member in this House who would not want to do everything possible to help veterans who find themselves in dire straits. We have shown that where veterans are concerned all of us have worked together without any partisan overtones to better their lot and their standard of living.

There are now some 500 Canadian veterans and their dependants living in the United Kingdom who are existing on social security payments, and who cannot become eligible for the War Veterans Allowance because they cannot afford to come back to Canada and undertake a year of Canadian residence before qualifying for the allowance.

Those unfortunate veterans are already facing a difficult time, and we should not make their lot any more difficult than it is. Therefore, I ask the Government to really show some compassion, to show some generosity, and to show understanding to help those veterans. In this respect I am happy to say that, on discussing this matter with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) this morning, he has assured me that this matter is now receiving top priority from himself and his Department.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON AGRICULTURE AND FOOD INDUSTRIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Archie McLean describes these pamphlets on free trade as moral fraud. An avowed Tory, this McCain's Foods official told Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency delegates that 100,000 jobs would be lost in the agri-food sector in the next 15 years under the free trade agreement.

I wish to quote two phrases used by Mr. McLean in his speech. He said: "If there are no changes, we'll see farms, factories, and chickens flying to the U.S.", and:"My competitors say that free trade is the end of the supply management system".

Mr. McLean said that the deal was bad for the dairy industry, horticulture, poultry, beer, and wine. He described how much cheaper and easier it would be to buy potatoes and vegetables from the South and, using poultry as an example, he said that it was impossible to protect farm income while at the same time give processors access to cheaper product.

I agreed with Mr. McLean when he said: "We have to say Canadian agriculture and the Canadian food industry is not for sale".

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ESSO RESOURCES OF CANADA LIMITED—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW RESEARCH FACILITY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the example of good corporate citizenship exhibited by Esso Resources of Canada Limited. That corporation has committed to construction of a new research facility at the University of Calgary Research Park at an estimated cost of $46 million, with a completion date of late 1989.

The work in the new facility will put further emphasis on oil sands bitumen research and development, a facet of the Alberta petroleum industry in which Esso has already invested over $1.7 billion. The company currently has a staff of 124 at its old research centre in southeast Calgary.

The new research facility, designed by architects Cohos Evamy of Calgary, involves the awarding of a major construction contract for $46 million at its peak, and the project will create 200 much needed construction jobs. This initiative is consistent with our Government's expressed desire to apply technology and innovation in sustaining Canada's future.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH—REPRESENTATIONS OF CEGEP FEDERATION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, recently the Federation of CEGEPs adopted a resolution seeking a reversal of the budgetary cutbacks at regional Canada Employment and Immigration Centre and more specifically as they affect human resources assigned to on-campus employment centres.

The Federation made strong representations to the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest), criticizing the reduction in resources at on-campus Canada Employment Centres which may soon lead to the centres being closed altogether

The Federation objects to the status quo and even more to the sparse appearances of itinerant counsellors. The Federation demands a review of the federal policy on resources allocated to on-campus placement centres and it also demands sufficient funding to maintain the presence of placement counsellors on campus.

What is the Minister of State (Youth) doing about these pressing demands, Mr. Speaker? Will he finally intervene on behalf of the students? The Federation is right to protest the way this is being handled. I support them totally.

THE ELDERLY

IMPROVEMENT OF QUALITY OF LIFE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minsiter of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Minister of State (Senior Citizens) (Mr. Hees) have announced the federal Government will spend on average of $30 million more annually to implement a program aimed at improving the quality of life of senior citizens in Canada.

This initiative consists of four parts: A new program to help senior citizens remain independent; a research fund to which $4 million will be allocated annually mainly to examine the various factors undermine the independence of senior citizens; additional funding for the New Horizons Program; and an increase in the operation budget of the National Advisory Board on Senior Citizens.

A senior citizens secreariat will be set up at the Department of National Health and Welfare, to serve as a focus and assist the Minister of State (Senior Citizens).

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—ACCESS TO DRUGS TO EXTEND LIFE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, people who are dying of AIDS should have ready access to AZT and other drugs that help to extend life. Questions have been raised about the relative claim of scientific research versus the compassionate treatment of individuals who have AIDS and are faced with certain death while new drugs are being tested.

The B.C. Civil Liberties Association has endorsed the concept of "catastrophic rights" of people with AIDS. It states:

> An adult person confronting the catastrophe of proximate certain death has a right to elect, for themself, any medical treatment whatsoever that does not cause direct harm to others.

In the case of a person with AIDS, the B.C. Civil Liberties Association has declared:

> We regard it as nonsensical for catastrophic patients to cede their rights to self-determination in their treatment because of what can be seen to be little more than an institutional affection for the ideology of research rather than its vigorous pursuit.

I urge the Government to adopt the approach taken by the B.C. Civil Liberties Association in its dealings with people with AIDS. Human beings faced with certain death should not be treated as guinea pigs. They must have access to information and to necessary drugs.

PRICE OF GASOLINE AT RETAIL LEVEL

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, the difference between the prices of leaded and unleaded gasoline in the Ottawa area is approximately one cent at the wholesale level, while at the retail level the differential can be up to four cents. As we know, lead added to fuel is one of the greatest pollutants and causes of lead in our atmosphere which result in problems with acid rain and problems concerning the health of children.

I wonder, Sir, when we will monitor this more carefully, and when the retailers and the marketers of gasoline will be more responsible in the pricing of their product at the retail level.

ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

SPECIAL TAX DEDUCTIONS—ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to express my dissatisfaction with the Conservative Government, because it discriminates against communities in New Brunswick. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the arbitrary way in which the Government selected certain communities that will be eligible for the special tax deduction for isolated communities, since it did not give the same benefits to communities in New Brunswick.

Although dozens of communities in Nova Scotia and hundreds in Quebec and Newfoundland were designated, only the communities on Miscou Island in New Brunswick were given this privilege, and only after pressure had been put on the Ministers concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I want to explain how unfair the system is. If you look at Chaleurs Bay, all communities on the Gaspé coast were designated. A few kilometres south on the New Brunswick coast, none of the communities were designated. That is unfair, and the people of New Brunswick certainly deserve better than that. Where are the Ministers from New Brunswick? Why aren't they doing something about this? How long will it take for them to speak up? Mr. Speaker, please wake them up!

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LIMITS OF MANDATE

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec National Assembly has just censured unanimously a statement made by Mr. D'Iberville Fortier, a high official of the Canadian Parliament. The Canadian Official Languages Commissioner, an official appointed under a House resolution to act as the Federal Government guardian of the linguistic rights on behalf of Canadian parliamentarians, has taken upon himself to criticize and cast aspersions on a province and its linguistic policies.

As a career diplomat, Mr. D'Iberville Fortier has no doubt gone beyond the bounds of decency when he described the problems associated with the advancement of French and English in Quebec. A high official of this House should avoid any deviation from Parliamentary traditions.

No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot excuse Mr. D'Iberville Fortier, and his disrespect for ethics deserve more than a censure motion from the Sovereign Quebec National Assembly. Well done Mr. Robert Bourassa and the Quebec Opposition!

Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is a serious situation. Mr. D'Iberville Fortier's thoughtless remarks are unacceptable coming from a servant of the Canadian Parliament.

We shall have to reconsider Mr. D'Iberville Fortier's future as quickly as possible. I expect to meet Mr. Robert Bourassa within the next few hours to take stock of the situation. Mr. Speaker, I will certainly return to the House on Monday to get to the bottom of this.

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LIMITS OF MANDATE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the hysterical reaction to the comments of the Official Languages Commissioner is both undemocratic and childish.

Those who are blaming him should try instead to understand his motives, ask him for explanations in an effort to initiate a rational debate.

I should like to remind those who feel in possession of the absolute truth this comment made by Paul Claudel and quoted a few days ago by New Brunswick Senator Roméo LeBlanc before the Senate Committee who was considering the Meech Lake Accord.

Claudel said and I quote:

> Truth has nothing to do with the number of its believers.

If we take this reality into account, Mr. Speaker, we are likely to raise the level of the somewhat uncivilized debate of these past few days.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

GOVERNMENT'S TREATMENT OF THE WEST

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the Western Diversification Initiative, with offices in the four western provinces, will spend $1.2 billion on western diversification.

In debate on March 1 the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) talked about the good old Liberal days when, according to him, all regions were treated fairly and equitably. This was from a member of a former Liberal Government which promised $4 billion to western development—$4 billion that never materialized; a Liberal Government that forced an unfair capital gains tax on western farmers; and a Liberal Government which imposed the national energy policy on the West, thereby ruining the western Canadian economy overnight.

The Liberal Member went on to suggest that moving the WDO out of Ottawa would make it less effective. It is an incredible statement that Ottawa based bureaucrats are somehow better able to serve the needs and aspirations of western Canada than are westerners themselves. These are the same bureaucrats who conjured up the SRTC, who brought to us the on-highway off-highway fuel definitions, and who botched the regulations on isolated communities qualifying for northern allowances.

I say let us get more regional programs out of Ottawa and into the areas of the country where they properly belong, and where there can be some understanding and commonsense applied.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CEASE-FIRE WELCOMED—POSSIBLE UNITED STATES REACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members of the House will join with me in celebrating the fact that a cease-fire was reached between the Nicaraguan Government and the Contras this week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: The House gave expression to that unanimity yesterday when it passed without debate the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), seconded by myself and other members of the Special Committee on the Peace Process in Central America.

At this point my only concern is that the unanimity with which Canadian Members of Parliament and Canadians in general greet this cease-fire may not be 100 per cent shared in the White House.

I say to President Reagan and to his colleagues that the time has come to realize that Central Americans are taking their own destiny into their own hands. The Arias Plan itself was the first sign of that collective ambition to determine their own regional destiny. The way in which the Sandinistas and the Contras themselves have been able to reach a cease-fire is also a sign of that.

The day must come in Washington when they realize that Central Americans must be given the freedom to make their own peace, to make their own arrangements in their own region. The time has come for America to take more of a hands-off attitude toward Central America and let people in that region determine their own future.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF TAXES AND PRICES ON WAGES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the great challenge facing the new Government in September, 1984, was to get Canadians back to work. This has now largely been accomplished.

However, many people who are now working efficiently and diligently and who are earning what, on the face of it, appears to be quite handsome wages and salaries, just do not seem to be able to get ahead of the game financially. Their pay cheques are squeezed by high taxes and high prices.

In the Government's next term of office our emphasis will have to include allowing the more hard-working and productive members of our society to keep more of that which is rightfully theirs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AID

MOZAMBIQUE AID PROGRAM—RQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were horrified by this week's tragic incidents in Mozambique and Iraq.

My first question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday we saw shocking examples of famine in Mozambique, and in spite of the bilateral Canada-Mozambique assistance program unveiled last January and of increased funding for the South African development co-operation conference, it is obvious that these efforts are woefully inadequate.

Is the Minister aware that the assistance program announced by his colleague the Minister for External Relations will not begin before late 1989 or early 1990? Is the Minister prepared to take immediate action by launching a Mozambique assistance program within a few months?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Given these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to consider any means likely to help us provide assistance as soon as possible. We were struck by the extent of the famine in Mozambique. As the Hon. Member knows, I was there in person last August. Since then I have had an opportunity to raise the matter with the leaders of the country and non-governmental organizations.

[English]

There is another aspect of this which has to do with the security situation in the region of the front line States. At the Vancouver Commonwealth meeting, presided over by the Prime Minister, there was an agreement made that there had to be an assessment of the security needs of the front line States. As a result of the initiatives taken under the Prime Minister's chairmanship there has been a request sent forward by the Commonwealth to General Obasanjo, the former Head of State of Nigeria, to undertake an assessment of security needs in Mozambique and in other front line States. General Obasanjo began his mission this week.

ACTIONS OF SOUTH AFRICAN BACKED REBELS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, that leads me to my next question. The Minister must realize that the problems in Mozambique are grossly exacerbated by the continued attempt by the South African Government to destabilize the Mozambique Government.

Does the Minister realize that the hardships experienced in the Mozambique famine are in large part caused by the actions of the South African backed rebel group RENAMO? What specific step is Canada ready to take to counterbalance these aggressive acts?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first thing we require is as clear an assessment as is possible of what the security needs are. It was with that in mind that the Prime Minister and other Heads of Government initiated the suggestion of a mission by General Obasanjo.

I discussed that with my Commonwealth Foreign Minister colleagues in Lusaka, took the proposal to launch something of that kind to the leaders of the front line States, President Kaunda and others, and there has now been agreement.

• (1120)

That is one of the things that is required, and that is proceeding. There then needs to be, once that information is in hand, a decision on what role different countries can play.

At the Prime Minister's request I invited the Foreign Minister of Mozambique to be in Canada at the time of the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. We had useful discussions with him then, and those will continue.

When we have the report of General Obasanjo, we will have to take a look at ways in which we can contribute to the security situation in the front line States.

There are some limitations upon us that do not exist upon other countries. Nonetheless, there are things that we can do. Certainly I take it as the view of the House that we should do everything we can consistent with our traditions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Earlier this week the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed concern over the use of chemical weapons in the war between Iraq and Iran. I would like to know what the Minister has done to convey Canada's disapproval. Did he send a note of protest to Iraq, or did he take steps to have the question brought before the United Nations Security Council?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we called the Iraqi ambassador to express serious concern and disapproval with respect to action related to the use of chemical weapons by Iraq. We also told the Iranian Government about our contact with Iraq. We did raise the issue at the United Nations. The Iraqi signed the United Nations protocol and can be expected to honour their commitment.

IMMIGRATION

TURKISH REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Ministers of Immigration, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the mad confusion which is gripping his Government over the issue of Turkish refugee status claimants.

Now that his Immigration Minister is escalating his public feud with the Province of Quebec and that federal immigration officials do not know what to do because they do not know what is the federal position, it is high time that the Government got its act together.

Therefore, will the Prime Minister clear the confusion by precisely outlining his Government's action and position on the entire Turkish issue? Could he explain or outline to the House if this action will be applied equally to Turkish claimants living outside the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration may I point out to the Hon. Member that the Government's position is quite clear. The policy is being followed. Existing legislation is being followed. The rules and regulations are being followed, and due process is being followed.

I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that under the provisions of the agreement reached in February, 1978, between the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada, known as the Cullen-Couture agreement, Quebec has certain privileges and prerogatives in terms of the selection of immigrants and refugees.

Just to put the issue in perspective, the contents of the Cullen-Couture agreement are that Quebec has full power over selection of independents abroad, full power over selection of refugees abroad, and a predominant role for guarantor of family class and assisted relatives, as well as a predominant role in the selection of students. I should also say that it has a shared responsibility for temporary worker validation.

What has happened is that the Government of Quebec has exercised its right under the Cullen-Couture agreement, and that is being followed.

When the Hon. Member talks about confusion, it is time that the Liberal Party exercised its leadership in influencing the members of the Senate who have held up Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 for days and days.

Bill C-55 has been before the Senate for 156 days. Bill C-84 has been before the Senate for 193 days.

That is what is creating the confusion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Government's position is as clear as mud in cloudy weather. He should stop blaming everybody else, pull up his shirt-sleeves, and get to work, because the problems are here whether we have Bill C-55 or Bill C-84.

CLAIMANTS FOR REFUGEE STATUS OUTSIDE QUÉBEC

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since the Government was fortunate and took full advantage of the leadership offered by the Minister of Immigration for the Province of Québec, will the Government offer the same leadership to those applicants outside the Province of Québec who cannot expect a provincial solution, or must applicants travel to Québec to get justice, or, worse still, must applicants in Toronto await a Toronto visit by the Prime Minister in order to get some leadership and action as was taken for his visit to Montreal this weekend?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is somewhat confused. The Cullen-Couture agreement was an agreement—

Mr. Marchi: Get the Prime Minister up to answer; he is responsible.

Mr. Mazankowski: —which was signed by the previous Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau. If he has any objections to that agreement, perhaps he could address his questions to him.

In the absence of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, what is happening is that there is an influx of something like 2,000 people per month who claim to be refugees, refugee claimants coming into the country, an influx which we cannot control.

Until such time as we get Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 passed—

Mr. Marchi: Your own government Senators are against it, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: Until such time as that happens, that chaos will continue.

I call upon members of the Liberal Party to prevail upon members of the Senate to get the Bills passed so that we can restore legitimate refugee processing, so that we can control it in an orderly manner, and so that we can pull the whole thing together. That is what is happening, and I call upon the Hon. Member to use his good offices to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It also concerns the appalling reports of the use of chemical weapons in the Kurdistan area.

I am somewhat disappointed by the measured tones in which the Minister responded to a previous question. Obviously what is happening here sets a very dangerous moral precedent for the whole world. It seems to me that this is an opportunity for Canada to provide some leadership in solidifying and activating the international community to bring an end to this madness between Iran and Iraq.

The Minister appeared to entertain some doubt about whether or not Iraq was responsible for this when it seems that it clearly is. What has the Government clearly said to the Iraqi Government in respect of the use of chemical weapons? What is the Government planning to do to give leadership in the U.N. and in the international community in general to censure Iraq, to censure the use of chemical weapons, and finally to bring about the cease-fire which the United Nations requested many months ago in respect of this ugly conflict?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we consider the use of chemical weapons in these circumstances or in others, certainly in the proportions that have been reported to us, to be atrocious and to be inhuman.

We have made the strongest possible representations to the Ambassador of Iraq and will be following these up through other channels.

The reason I made reference to the United Nations in answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Papineau was that there is established in the United Nations secretary-generalship a requirement and a capacity to seek expert confirmation of the facts.

That should be done, and then the problem arises—and my hon. friend appreciates it—to find ways in which international opinion, apart from simply being expressed in the strongest possible terms, can be made effective against Iran and against Iraq; in this case, against Iraq and against Iran. That is the challenge. If there is some way in which Canada can move that process forward, I am certainly eager to find and follow that way.

• (1130)

ARMS EMBARGO PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that one of the suggestions made a long time ago concerning this war was that if there was not an adherence to the ceasefire request made at the U.N. there would be a total arms embargo on both Iran and Iraq.

It seems to me that one of the things the world could do would be to suffocate the ability of these two countries to wage the kind of war they are waging on each other.

I think Canada has a special role to play in calling the world community to account, the superpowers and everyone involved. It is in everyone's interest that these two nations be made to stop doing what they are doing. One of the opportunities the Minister has, it seems to me, is to take a leading role in getting the world community to put that kind of arms embargo on both those nations.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I accept and I agree with that. The problem is not to advocate an arms embargo that would, to use the Hon. Member's term, suffocate. Advocacy is not an issue. The problem is how do we do it.

There has been some movement on this question in the Security Council, some movement that one would have to characterize as encouraging, although that is not a word to use in these circumstances.

We are seeking more unanimity by more countries, and we want to make it clear that not only are we prepared to be a part of an embargo, an absolute suffocating embargo, but that we will be actively urging others to seek that, or to follow that or other procedures that can bring an end to a conflict which is more and more gruesome every day.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO AROUSE WORLD OPINION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Just on that, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right, of course, that advocacy is not everything. We certainly have not had an abundance of advocacy from anywhere in the world with respect to this war. The world has been kind of indifferent to what has been going on between Iran and Iraq in the hope that some day the war might come to an end. But it is not going to come to an end until the world awakens to the fact that horrible precedents are being set with respect to chemical weapons, and horrible precedents are being set with respect to the pollution of oceans and the sinking of tankers, and everything else. It is about time the world woke up.

I am asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs to be a prominent agent in awakening the world to the need for an end to this conflict.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly, and Canada will certainly do what we can, everything we can, to be both a more effective advocate, if that is what is required, and to be more effective in achieving a result.

I take the Hon. Member's comment in the spirit in which I believe it was offered. We will certainly respond in that spirit. If Canadian advocacy, more vigorous Canadian advocacy will help, then certainly that will occur.

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Finance but perhaps someone on the government side could answer it.

I am worried, like others, that high interest rates will hamper the growth and development of our regions. The Canadian dollar is being artificially maintained at about 80 cents, which is damaging our exports. The inflation rate now at 4 per cent certainly cannot any more be called Canada's main economic problem; and short-term interest rates are almost 3 per cent above those in the United States.

Are not some of these indicators sufficient to convince the Government that interest rates should be lowered, unless it is a definite policy of the Government—

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about the 22 per cent interest rates when you were in power.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —to keep interest rates high in order to please the Americans so that they will adopt the trade deal in the U.S. Congress?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that is a very welcome question. I take myself back to August, 1981. The interest rate then was 22.75 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mayer: And we are still paying for that.

Mr. Hockin: Today we have a prime rate of 9.75 per cent. We have five-year mortgage rates at 11 per cent. The way the Government has been able to bring down interest rates is a tremendous boom for the Canadian consumer.

The Hon. Member asks about exports. In the last quarter of 1987 our export performance was excellent and it continues further into the first quarter of this year. Because of that, and because of the almost historic proportions of the investment intentions of the Canadian business community in the Canadian economy, 17.3 per cent over last year, which is two and a half times the ordinary increase, there is, of course, a bit of pressure on the Canadian dollar and on interest rates. That is only because more people are searching for the Canadian dollar, which puts pressure on the rates. This is all the result of the confidence that Canadians and non-residents have in the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, maybe the Minister should talk to Mr. Adam Zimmerman of Noranda Forest Products—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —who said:

> Only an added penny in the value of the Canadian dollar means $15 million in lost revenue.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we aren't the only ones to ask for lower interest rates and stabilizing the value of the dollar. The Premier of Quebec, the Premier of Ontario, the Canadian Export Association, the Consumers Association of Canada, the Canadian Manufacturing Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce have all demanded a reduction in interest rates. My question to the Minister is this: Why does the Government refuse to listen to all these national organizations, with their enviable expertise on economic issues? Or does the Minister of Finance prefer to go it alone with his inflated interest rates?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, all I can do in answer to that supplementary question is to quote the Minister of Finance who said yesterday:

> The facts are that when an economy is strong the interest rates in the country go up because of pressure on money and because people are looking for money to invest in new things.

With an increase in investment spending per cent this year which is up two and a half times over last year there is bound to be this slight pressure on the dollar and on interest rates.

CHEMICAL WEAPONS

POSSIBLE PRODUCTION IN CANADA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the experimental production of chemical weapons and antidotes to those weapons in Alberta.

Since consideration is now being given to production contracts for the antidote drug HI-6 for use in chemical warfare to a firm in downtown Edmonton, will the Deputy Prime Minister give his assurance that, before any further production of any amounts of chemical or biological weapons or potential antidotes to those is contracted in Canada, the Government will produce for the public a position paper on how such production by Canada will affect the potential for progress toward a world-wide production ban on chemical and biological weapons?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been a Member of the House for some time. He knows that if he is genuinely interested in answers relating to specific developments of that kind, it is helpful to the Ministry to give notice.

I cannot accept the premises of his question without looking into all the circumstances, and I cannot answer him without doing that. But I undertake to look into the circumstances and to give him a response.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think I have a supplementary question to which the Deputy Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs can give a commitment. Millions of dollars are being spent by government Ministers on the production of chemical and biological defensive materials.

Mr. Andre: Not true.

Mr. Fulton: I have the contract from you, Harvie.

Some of the key studies on the medical effects of HI-6 are being withheld from the Health Protection Branch. Since this drug would be directly injected into Canadian troops as the next stage of testing, will the Deputy Prime Minister give his assurance that all the HI-6 studies will be reviewed publicly prior to its use on any Canadian soldier?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat the answer, if I may. I repeat the observation that if Members are interested in answers to these questions and not simply in creating a scare headline somewhere, then some notice should be given. I do not often ask for notice of questions, but in a circumstance of this kind I think the House would agree it is appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. Have the problems with the Native Economic Development Program, NEDP, now been ironed out, and are applications being processed in a timely fashion?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that enormous progress has been made in the administration of the Native Economic Development Program. Up to now we have received over 1,500 applications from throughout Canada. We have approved 420 projects and committed in excess of $200 million under that program. It is working well, but we still have improvements to make and that is why we have engaged in this consultation process. We should be about to receive that report in the next few weeks.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

EARLY RETIREMENT OPTION FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Correctional officers, the ones who work with prison inmates, have been promised similar retirement opportunities to those for members of the RCMP and the Armed Forces. We in the Official Opposition support this proposition which would allow Correctional Services people to exercise the option for early retirement if they so wish.

The President of the Treasury Board has told the unions representing these prison guards that the amendments needed to fulfil the promise are tied to the condition that the union accept Bill C-33, an Act to remove the full indexing guarantee from pensions for public servants. Why is the Government again breaking a promise to public servants? Why is the Government using blackmail to intimidate a group of public servants into submission?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has had an ongoing interest in this matter, and I regret that he has used the words "blackmail" and "intimidation", because that is not the case and he knows that. The fact is that my predecessor, my colleague who is now the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, indeed gave a commitment to introduce a special early retirement program for Correctional Services employees, recognizing the unique nature of their work. That commitment remains.

It had been hoped that we could have incorporated this into Bill C-33 because there was an agreement with the Public Service with regard to the provisions contained in Bill C-33. I hope that we can proceed with this initiative as soon as possible. There have been ongoing discussions. The commitment has been made, the commitment remains, and we will find a way to do it.

APPLICATION OF BILL C-33 PROVISIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Minister that there is no relationship between indexing, deindexing and non-indexing of pensions and the age requirement for early retirement that can be taken by members of the Armed Forces or the RCMP. Again, why is the Minister tying Bill C-33 to this amendment allowing correctional officers to take early retirement? These people work under stress and are entitled to some consideration. They have asked for it and the Government has promised it. Why does the Minister not keep his promise?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I thought I tried to make it clear. Bill C-33 provided a vehicle within which this could be done. To my knowledge, the Correctional Services employees had no difficulty with that. I understand that there were some negotiations with opposition Parties. They were not prepared to accept that, and we are trying to find another vehicle in which to proceed with it. I repeat, the commitment has been made, the commitment will be maintained, and we will deliver.

IMMIGRATION

INVESTOR IMMIGRANTS—REPORTED PROPOSAL TO GUARANTEE INVESTMENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of the current news about the guarantees of investments for investor immigrants, will the Prime Minister confirm that as of April 1 this year the Government will be allowing investor immigrants to have their investments as the basis of their visas guaranteed by Canadian taxpayers through provincial Governments?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this is an issue which was brought forth by some provinces and the Minister has considered this issue. Discussions have been taking place. Officials have been meeting. I am not in a position at this time to report just precisely what action will be taken but I can say to the Hon. Member that those discussions are continuing, and I presume a conclusion will be reached very soon.

GOVERNMENT IMMIGRATION POLICY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, again to the Prime Minister, given that the Government has not said whether it has made up its mind about this reported decision and reported regulation, I would ask the Prime Minister how he can justify or how he would justify giving visas to rich foreigners at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers, that is for guaranteeing their loans, while the same Government is pushing legislation to shut out refugees and is delaying its promise to enlarge the family immigration class.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that, on the one hand, we get criticized by the Opposition for the disorder and confusion which exist within the immigration system, and we now hear from the New Democrats that they want that confusion and disorder to be elevated. Quite frankly, these are the kinds of signals that come from opposite that really cause Members and the Canadian public, I am sure, to wonder sometime. As I said before, this is an initiative—

Mr. Berger: Do your homework next time you get up in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will do my homework as long as the Hon. Member asks some important questions.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the program had started, as I understand it, with representations from the provinces. There have been discussions going on to determine whether a consensus could be reached. That process is continuing. I am sure the Minister will be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

EMPLOYMENT

NURSES—U.S. AND SWISS RECRUITMENT CAMPAIGNS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but it might be answered by the Minister of Labour or by the Acting Minister of Health. Yesterday we were once again reminded of the unfair working conditions of nurses in many parts of Canada with examples of low pay and deplorable working conditions, with the result that they are now being recruited in large numbers to work in the United States and in Switzerland. Yesterday in Montreal over 1,000 nurses attended a recruiting meeting in this regard.

I would ask the Minister responsible if, in these circumstances, the Government will approach its provincial counterparts to work out solutions for nurses in Canada, solutions which are just and fair for this honourable profession, and make sure in addition that there is equity in working conditions for nurses in all the provinces of Canada.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly discuss this question with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and report back to the Hon. Member as quickly as possible.

PAY AND WORKING CONDITIONS OF FEDERALLY EMPLOYED NURSES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who is the proper Minister to address this to, but I would also like to know whether the Government would set a better example at the federal level by assuring better pay and conditions for nurses working for the federal Government in its own clinics and hospitals. As the Government knows, federal nurses are now earning less than other health care workers who have lesser education and responsibility. They do not object to the other health care workers getting raises, but they do want fairness and justice for themselves. I wish the federal Government would take action to do something about that. I would like to hear an answer.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is somewhat behind the times because there have been a number of representations from Members on this side and from members of the New Democratic Party about this very important issue. About a month or so ago, I announced that a satisfactory settlement had been reached with the nurses and they are all happy. What is wrong with the Hon. Member?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, excluding taxes, the difference between the price of gasoline at the refinery and the price of gasoline to the consumer is already near historic highs and most retailers are not getting rich. Can the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs assure me that when tax increases are introduced, the major oil companies will act responsibly on April Fool's Day?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can give that kind of assurance because we do not have a centrally based price control system in Canada, and indeed, if there were to be price controls on gasoline, they would have to be at the provincial level since that is where the constitutional authority lies.

However, within my Department there is certainly the capability of taking action when there is unfair or collusive marketing practices by the oil companies. The situation is being monitored almost on a continuous basis, and I would invite the Hon. Member or any members of the Canadian public, if they become aware of improper or illegal activities, to let me know and we will certainly take action.

WELFARE

SASKATCHEWAN WORKFARE PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the special Workfare Program which was arranged under the Canada-Saskatchewan Accord compels people to work for welfare, a mere $370 a month? If they refuse, they are cut off welfare completely.

• (1150)

Is the Minister aware that this kind of forced labour is contrary to the Canada Assistance Plan and the Canada-Saskatchewan Accord, both of which require work activities to be voluntary? If he is, what is the Government going to do about it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the allegations of the Hon. Member. My sense is that this is largely a provincial issue. Nonetheless, I will ensure that the matter is looked into to try and get back to the Hon. Member early next week.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Canada-Saskatchewan Accord was signed by two Ministers of the Government, and the Canada Assistance Plan is a federal plan. How can it be called provincial?

Why is the federal Government not doing its job to inform the Saskatchewan Government that it is in violation of both these agreements and must stop exploiting people, particularly those least able to defend themselves?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is being somewhat unfair because this Government has undertaken a number of initiatives with respect to job training, the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and a host of similar programs which have assisted people in getting off the welfare rolls and onto payrolls.

As I said earlier, I will undertake to look into the Member's grievance and report to her fully next week.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

GINN BOOK PUBLISHING COMPANY—GOVERNMENT'S ACQUISITION OF EQUITY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on March 22 the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion indicated that the American conglomerate Gulf and Western had not respected its March 12 commitment to divest itself of control of Ginn Book Publishing to Canadian investors as it agreed to under the Government's book publishing policy of July 6, 1985, enunciated in Baie Comeau. Now our Government, at the eleventh hour, has been forced to step in and exercise its option.

Why did the Prime Minister agree to allow the spending of $4.5 million under the pretext of achieving Canadian control while leaving significant operating decisions by the company subject to veto power by New York? Could he tell us what the Government expects from this Canadian book publishing policy made in the U.S.A?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, it is strange that the Liberal Party is not in agreement with the Association of Canadian Book Publishers who applauded the Government's decision to make the offer to Gulf and Western. These discussions continue, and I think it would be premature at this stage to try to foresee the result of those discussions taking place with the company in question.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, what kind of a deal is it when you have to pay 51 per cent of the shot and you do not get full control? Why does the Government not stand up and support the Canadian book publishing industry?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, as I said, discussions between Gulf and Western and the Government are continuing. It would not be appropriate at this time to comment on the specifics of this matter until it has been completed, at which time we can probably talk about it in more intelligent terms.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REQUEST FOR NEW CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. The extremely important and hope inspiring truce in Nicaragua, as the Minister knows, is extremely fragile and needs to be given every encouragement by countries like Canada which recognize that the root cause of violence in Central America is poverty.

Would Canada be willing, as part of our contribution to the peace process in Central America, to mount an extraordinary program of development assistance for Nicaragua, helping it to implement its program of reintegrating the Contras into local communities, and helping that country rebuild the infrastructure destroyed during eight years of war?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me very quickly make three points. The first is that the genius and strength of the Arias Plan is that it applies to the five countries in the region. Recognizing that while the conflict in Nicaragua is dominating attention, it is also important that other conflicts in the region be addressed and resolved.

Second, and in that spirit, Canada would certainly be prepared to act in ways that would move forward the process of development. Our preference would be to do that in the region as a whole as a result of the Arias Plan. If something develops that would require and make useful an intervention by Canada in one country, then we would certainly look at doing that. We would want to do it in the context of other countries as well.

Finally, with regard to the role that Canada and the Prime Minister have been able to play in this matter, I think it would be appropriate for the House to know that the Prime Minister of Canada will, on Monday, be the first Canadian Prime Minister in our history to be honoured with the presentation of the Gold Insigne Award presented by the Pan American Society, in New York.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we all wish to join in congratulating the Prime Minister.

REQUEST THAT PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE BE EXPEDITED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that the Minister's officials have said that Nicaragua is the key. Considering that now is the time when the peace process has made an unexpected breakthrough and help is urgently needed, will the Minister expedite the process, which I presume was moved forward when a CIDA task force visited Nicaragua earlier this month, so that help can get there now when it can do the most good in pushing the peace process forward?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a serious representation which I will take seriously. I will see if there is anything we can do to expedite arrangements.

I would like, if I may, to take the opportunity to make the following point. None of us know precisely the reasons which led to the recent very positive development in the negotiations in Nicaragua. There are a multitude of reasons which could have led to that situation. It is very important that no country take actions which could upset that balance.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

QUOTA SYSTEM FOR PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS ON POSSIBLE CHANGE TO CONTRACT SYSTEM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. He knows that the Canadian Wheat Board subcommittee on quota review recommended that the Board consider moving away from quota acres toward a supply contract system for producers. Given that some producers have expressed concerns about this, does the Minister know what the attitude of the Wheat Board is, and will there be further opportunities for consultations with producers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board looks at the quota policy on a regular basis with the idea of maximizing delivery opportunities and, therefore, exports. The Wheat Board asked the advisory committee to do a study of this, which it did. It has reported to the Board. Any changes will not happen until August 1, 1989. In the interim there will be ample opportunity for people with concerns to express those concerns to the Wheat Board.

I can simply say that we are constantly looking for ways to improve the delivery system to help producers, and any changes will be made with full consultation so that everyone has a chance to express their concerns about those changes which the Board might adopt.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF LOWER CHURCHILL RIVER

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I remind him that six times over the past three years he promised to intervene between the Province of Quebec and the Province of Newfoundland with regard to the development of the Lower Churchill River. Nothing has happened. In the meantime, Hydro Quebec announced a $50 billion development at James Bay to export power to the U.S.

My question once again is very simple. Why has the Prime Minister not kept his commitment to develop that hydro power, and why is he allowing 10,000 megawatts of electricity to flow to the sea every day in a province which will run out of power in 1992?

• (1200)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is, of course, quite wrong. He says that I gave an undertaking and nothing has happened. This, of course, is false.

I met with Premier Bourassa directly. I met with Premier Peckford, and have been in communication with both with a view to trying to be helpful, as the federal Government, to the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador with regard to working out an historic difficulty with the Province of Quebec.

My hon. friend will want to withdraw, I am sure, any suggestion that the Government has not fulfilled its obligation. On the contrary, I have had formal and personal meetings with both Premiers in this regard.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR—PROJECTED ELECTRICITY SHORTAGE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, as I recall the Prime Minister's words they were "to use the full force of his office" to do something about the impasse. That is the most powerful office in the land. It can do more than simply negotiate. It can offer finance. It has mechanisms at its disposal to do something.

That is what I mean by the fact that nothing has been done. Talk is not enough. In a province that will run out of electricity in 1992 it is urgent that something be done to develop that hydro potential now.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The political will is missing.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am hearing some bizarre comments from a Liberal Member from Montreal who says: "The political will is missing". Is he trying to suggest, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, that we should intervene in a matter that comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction, that the federal Government should intervene in an issue of this kind? That is what he just suggested. Now please, make up your minds!

Either, you want federal intervention, which is hardly likely, or you favour the approach I just mentioned to my hon. friend from Labrador, which is to engage in serious dialogue with the Premier of Newfoundland and the Premier of Quebec, and help Newfoundland find a solution to a problem that has existed for several decades. I agree Newfoundland needs help. I agree Newfoundland is a disadvantaged province. I agree there is an energy problem, and I also think I am the first Canadian Prime Minister to have personal meetings with the Premier of Quebec and the Premier of Newfoundland with a view to solving this problem.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but we are overtime. That will end Question Period.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport presented to the House on Monday, December 14, 1987.

I rise, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ensure that my friend was recognized, but I understand that some Members of the House have petitions to present. We are entering into a debate which will take some time. I wonder whether there might be a predisposition in the House to proceed to petitions at this time and then revert to the debate in order to allow Members with petitions to present them to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: I agree, Mr. Speaker, but I am surprised at the nice disposition of the Parliamentary Secretary today with regard to petitions. He is usually very aggressive and negative about petitions, but today he wants them. That is fine. He is learning.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions under the provisions of Standing Order 106.

The first petition is signed by a number of citizens of Winnipeg who say that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions. Therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

The other petition which I have says that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to U.S. markets, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions on two different topics.

The first is from a number of residents of Frontier, Saskatchewan, who are concerned about the recent Supreme Court decision. They feel that it has created and imposed a right to abortion which is without basis in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of the country. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose this decision to save the lives of Frontier's innocent unborn.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from a number or residents of the southwestern corner of Saskatchewan who express concerns about the eligibility list for tax deduction for northern residents in isolated posts.

They feel that in its present form it is discriminatory in that many communities not on the list are adjacent to listed communities. They feel that the tax deduction was designed to assist in alleviating the added costs of living in isolated communities and that the commission of inquiry to be established later this year to study the current criteria will not be in a position to make necessary changes to the 1987 tax filing year. The petitioners suggest that a practical solution to the problem would be for the Government to declare all communities adjacent to the corporate limits of Climax and Consul, Saskatchewan, as eligible for the isolated posts residents' reduction. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to declare those communities adjoining Climax and Consul which share the same criteria to be eligible for the isolated posts and northern residents reduction.

• (1210)

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present four petitions concerning the high incidents of crime, including murder, robbery and sexual assault, that are committed with knives. This type of activity is on the increase in all major cities across Canada.

Whereas the law, through federal Criminal Code and court decisions, allow citizens to carry knives for self-defence and whereas the carrying of knives by persons in public places is directly responsible for knives then being used in a variety of crimes, as well as altercations where self-defence is claimed, these petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. The only exception is to be for those who carry knives for legitimate work activities or for religious reasons, such as the Sikhs.

PROTECTION RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting today, on behalf of the group Objectif-Survie Québec, about ten petitions including almost 100 names. Those people have asked me to present and table those petitions on their behalf, because they are concerned about the protection of unborn children. According to them, the unborn child is a human being and consequently he is entitled to live and to be protected and the Supreme Court of Canada, by declaring unconstitutional the federal legislation on abortion, has left, according to them, the unborn child without legal protection; however, the Supreme Court did point out that Parliament is empowered to pass legislation protecting the life of unborn children.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions from a number of residents of Alberta who are concerned that Bill C-72 will set a dangerous precedent by banning unilingual anglophones and other cultures. They call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that the unilingual people have a chance for a position in Government.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions dealing with the so-called free trade agreement. Whereas the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return; Whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws; Whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment; Whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers;

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I proceed to Questions on the Order Paper?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions

TRANSPORT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin that the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport be concurred in.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since there was agreement that up to two hours could be taken to debate this motion and we have used some of that time for other items ahead of Motions during Routine Proceedings, would it be possible for the Chair not to see the clock until 2.15, if it is the desire of Members to use the full two hours?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member should raise that at two o'clock. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary agree?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, an important principle agreed to under the reform is that we try to end by three o'clock, and I think Private Members' hour between two o'clock and three o'clock is important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If we do not get on with the debate we may have to extend it for a few extra hours. Let us carry on. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on my motion of concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport which was tabled in the House on December 4.

That report is a result of a trip the Transport Committee took to Europe, where we looked into the operations of airports, airlines and the question of privatization. We looked into airport ownership and management. We studied rail passenger services. We also examined some impressive sites at two major ports in western Europe.

There are some 13 recommendations in this report to which the committee agreed unanimously.

The issue of airport security has been raised repeatedly in the last three years in this House in Question Period and during debates, and in the committee itself. Yet we still see incidents which indicate some very disturbing inadequacies in airport security measures.

The committee visited Heathrow, Schiphol, Frankfurt and Charles de Gaulle Airports. We were impressed with the way they operated their airport security services. They are entirely under the management and control of the Government, an agent of the Government, or the airport management itself. Rather than so-called private enterprise tendering for security services, it is carried on by well trained airport personnel, local or regional police, or a combination of both. The airlines are billed for the cost of these services in direct proportion to the number of flights and passengers they use, or they are paid for from airport user fees, general taxation or a combination of all three so that the costs are almost fully recovered one way or another.

In Canada, the airlines are responsible for security. Let us use as an example the Lester B. Pearson International Airport, the largest airport in Canada. The 24 airlines that use that airport make up a committee which is chaired by Air Canada, since it is the largest operator at the airport. This committee calls for tenders for airport security services. The contract for these services invariably goes to the lowest bidder because under deregulation the airlines must cut costs and hold the line in order to compete with one another and with other countries. As a result, we see jerkwater, fly-by-night security companies that tender for these contracts. Most of the contracts are held by Metropol, of which there are some eight subsidiaries registered in several provinces.

Particularly over the past three years when airport security had to be strengthened and enlarged the experience has been that those security companies pay cheap. We get cheap work and cheap results. The employees earn the minimum wage or a little better than the minimum wage. The turn-over rates are 10, 15, 17 per cent per month. At any given airport in Canada it is not unusual to find that there has been 100 per cent turn-over or more in the course of a year. Thus new people have to be continually trained.

The other thing that is found, Mr. Speaker, is that they receive as much as, would you believe it, three hours of training. The Minister states that there is a plan being implemented to make that three days. We have been hearing that for some time. It is still not in place in Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon, or Vancouver. As was shown on television the other night, there was an instance where a young lad who received three hours of training was put to work and in the next day or two he was training other beginners. To put it nicely, that is a woefully inadequate type of airport security service.

The committee recommended unanimously that the Government, the Department of Transport, take over all the operations of airport security services, and that the screening, inspections and so forth be carried out by fully trained employees of either the airport which, in most cases, would be the employees of the Department of Transport, the regional police, the RCMP, or a combination of department employees and the RCMP. The RCMP presently have officers stationed at most airports in Canada, certainly in all of the larger ones. It should be under their aegis and supervision. There could even be special constables in the RCMP to do this.

I estimate that that would double the cost of airport screening, inspections, and searches. But there would be quality airport security. We all know it can never be perfect, there will never be complete and total security, there will always be a breakdown or someone will figure out some way to get through on one occasion. But we should not make it so easy. We were impressed by the manner in which it is conducted in Europe and I suspect in many other countries. Only in Canada and the U.S. is this screwball private enterprise syndrome applied to something in which there should not be any profit-making or profit-taking. It is an essential public service, a public need, and a public demand. It is one thing that the travelling public in Canada would be willing to do. If it cost them $2 or $3 more on each plane ticket for that type of high-level quality airport security service, they would willingly and happily pay for it.

The Government remains stubborn, as did this Minister and at least three of his predecessors every time this was proposed to them. It is a move that is long overdue. I for one, and my colleagues on the Transport Committee, hoped and felt that we had achieved a goal that all of us wanted in our report that the Government would move quickly to meet. Several months have gone by since we submitted the report. The Minister states that he has written to the airlines, called in the presidents, and is going to read the riot act to them about the security services, about the low pay, the inadequate training, and the turn-over rates. This has been going on for years. Everyone knows it, including the Minister. It has never been changed and it will not be changed as long as it is left under the control of the airlines themselves. They will get by on the cheap, and cheapskate companies will carry out the security services.

That is just not good enough. We can argue and kick the airline presidents around all we like, they are not about to do it. If they do do it, one will be surprised how fast it will deteriorate again in order to save some bucks. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary can tell us today that the Minister intends to implement that recommendation.

The airlines have repeatedly complained, even to the committee, that security procedures cause slow-downs of passenger boarding and cause delays. I submit that some of this is the fault of the airlines. They all want to arrive and leave town at the same time within a two hour time frame, three times a day. It seems to me that someone has to kick them around about that. There are only so many runways, air traffic controllers, and unloading and loading docks. Something has to be done about that nonsense. Many of the things that the airlines complain about are their own fault which they have brought on themselves.

As important is the fact that at Pearson International Airport there are two screening positions to handle passengers for domestic flights in Terminal 2. Those positions handle passengers for some 20 departure locations. There are 15 domestic departure docks attached to Terminal 2, and there are 4 or 5 other loading places out on the tarmac for propeller-driven aircraft. At airports in Europe there is a screening position for every one, two, or at the most three, loading docks.

I want to urge upon the Government that it immediately locate two more screening positions for boarding passengers on domestic flights at Terminal 2 at Pearson International Airport. At the peak periods if three or four positions were operating instead of one or two, there would not be 200 and 300 feet long line-ups. Some people are frantic in the lineups because they are afraid that they may miss their flight and still have to walk up to a half mile length in Terminal 2.

It is bad enough that Terminal 2 is about one mile long, but it is going to be made longer. Tenders have already been called to make Terminal 2 longer. I hope that on the extension some moving walkways are put in. It is incredible to watch women, children, and elderly people struggling on foot from Gate 70 to the baggage area among mobs of people going in both directions to get on or off an airplane. Every airport that we were in in Europe with long terminal buildings had moving walkways. Every 100 feet there would be a break to get off and go to loading docks. It could still be installed in the rest of the old Terminal 2 building. It is long overdue. The little train and carts to move elderly or handicapped people, or people with children have been removed. Why? To save money. Those people are willing to pay through their taxes or in any other way necessary. The airport tax is now $50 per ticket. That should be sufficient for paying for them.

That type of thing needs to be done at several other airports in Canada, for example, at Dorval and Vancouver. I have been in line-ups to board a plane at almost every airport in this country of any significant size. Often there is only one screening position, and sometimes only one or two people working it. I remember one morning boarding a plane in an airport in this country together with approximately 60 passengers. There was one person on duty in the screening process who first ran the luggage through the x-ray machine, then ran the passenger through the walk through x-ray machine, then wanded the passenger, and then went back around and did it all again. Again, this is an illustration of a security company getting by on the cheap to satisfy the airlines.

I am sure my other colleagues will have more to say about these security services. I want to say that I am still not satisfied with the handling of baggage sequencing and baggage matching for international flights or flights that are domestic to international. The process is still not good enough. I am prepared to provide the Minister with some affidavits which outline some breakdowns in two different airlines in the country with respect to what is going on there.

Another matter we considered in Europe was the operation of passenger train services. I am not for one minute suggesting we could have passenger train services of the volume and frequency of western Europe. In that part of the world there is a population of some 200 million living in an area that is less than half the size of Canada. There is also a much milder climate and not nearly as harsh a geography. There is a volume of people in that smaller geography. Naturally, there are thousands of trains a day running in a dozen different countries. The one thing that we found was that the performances in terms of the speed of the schedules, the frequency and the length of stops, boarding procedures and facilities for passengers at railway stations were far superior to ours.

I have a copy of the CPR Transcontinental schedule for Montreal to Vancouver for 1892. The average speed was 33 miles per hour. That was with little steam engines which had to stop to get coal and water every 50 or 100 miles and change crews every 100 miles. Do you know what the average speed is today, Mr. Speaker? It is 36 or 37 miles per hour. The average speed for the Supercontinental or the Canadian is about 36 miles per hour. That is not much progress in almost 100 years.

One of the problems with this is that the Government refuses to order, purchase and get on stream new rail passenger equipment. I am amazed that VIA Rail employees and VIA Rail management have run the railway as well as they have when we consider the handicaps with which they have been working since 1976.

We are now into the third round of refurbishing old passenger cars. Half money again will have been spent on refurbishing old passenger cars since 1976, more than the cost of 230 new cars. VIA Rail must have 230 to 250 new passenger railway cars, including sleeping-cars, coaches, dining-cars and dome-cars. The Government keeps putting it off. It is not just this Government or just this Minister. Three predecessors kept putting it off.

We will now have to start refurbishing cars again and converting them from steam heat to electric heat. That will give them another 10 years in service, or 15 years at the most. Why do we continue to throw good money away after bad? Three years lead time is needed to get the cars built and on stream. I think the Government and the Minister ought to take the two companies in the country which build those cars and start kicking them around. I feel that in their joint tender submission proposal to the Government they are holding us up for ransom with respect to the price of those cars.

I think the Government will have to say to them, "Look, either sharpen your pencils or we will talk to some other countries which make great, beautiful passenger railway cars such as Great Britain, Sweden, West Germany, France, the United States and Japan". We could get prices from them and see how these two Canadian companies would like it. Even in Britain one can take an overnight passenger train from Inverness to London in a brand new sleeping-car, which is marvellous, for just 11 pounds for a lower berth, which is very reasonable.

I urge the Government to move quickly to adopt these recommendations passed unanimously by the all-Party committee. We do not like being ignored. We feel that we have done good work. We believe that we made an extra effort. The trip to Europe was not any holiday. We were on our feet and in meetings for 10 hours and 12 hours a day. We met with a great many experts and people who gave us a great deal of worth-while information. We tried to condense that into a report that would be useful not only to Parliament but to the Government and to the Ministry of Transport and the transportation industry as a whole.

Darn it, I resent the foot-dragging that is going on with respect to things that so obviously need to be done. Again, as I said yesterday to the Minister, it seems a brick wall has to fall on him, and it is about time one did.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions I would like to put to my colleague. Before I do that I would like to comment vis-à-vis the good work that has been done by the Standing Committee on Transport.

I have been exposed to many committees on the Hill. I must say that I do not think there is another standing committee which has worked any harder than the Standing Committee on Transport, including the work it did on its trip to Europe. In Europe the committee members had a chance to look at airport security and railway systems.

It should also be noted that the standing committee and the members of that committee have played an active role in reforming the entire transportation sector of the country. This morning we passed another Bill dealing with coasting trades which involves transportation issues.

Bill C-18 went through the House with many amendments and was accepted by the Government as a result of the good work of members of all three Parties. The same applies to Bills C-19, C-21 and now Bill C-52. The legislation dealing with railway safety is now before the standing committee. It looks as if that Bill with a few modest amendments can go through and be passed by all three Parties.

With respect to the Government's response to the report of the standing committee concerning its trip, I agree with my colleague that when we say the word "trip" some people in the public tend to think that these parliamentary trips are like holidays. They simply are not. I did not have the privilege of going on this one but I looked at the agenda and after hearing from its members since their return I know that they worked very hard.

In the many years that the Hon. Member has spent in the House and in the many reports that have been put forward has he ever seen a situation in which out of 13 recommendations put forward by the standing committee the Government instantly accepted 10? There are only three which are contentious. I think the Hon. Member would agree that concerning the three in contention the Government has indicated that there are some problems and that more work is being done on those. Has he ever in his entire experience here seen a Government respond so quickly in terms of accepting amendments to a Bill at the committee and legislative stage as well as respond to the report of the standing committee?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my good friend is looking for a pat on the back for himself and the Government. I will be glad to give it.

I can remember reports from the Standing Committee on Transport submitted which were totally ignored, going back as far as 1970. I will be quite generous and compliment the Government on accepting thus far 10 of the 13 recommendations.

There is a great deal of difference between accepting recommendations and implementing them. Some of them can be implemented almost immediately. I think that VIA Rail has already started to implement the ones that we made about baggage carts and letting people get on the train whenever they like instead of making them stand in the darn station for an hour before getting on. I think that VIA Rail has already implemented those minor recommendations. That is nice.

With respect to the most important ones, in particular the one regarding airport security, it seemed to the committee from our conversations while we were travelling that there really is no other way of doing it other than the Government take it over. The Government has no choice but to take over and operate airport security services. I know that it is not an easy decision for the Government to make, but it is an area in which private enterprise has no business. There should be no profit-making or profit taking; it should be done at cost, and only the actual costs should be recovered. This would provide a much better environment for the employees doing the work and would certainly provide more peace of mind for the travelling public.

• (1240)

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member opposite to respond to a question about aviation security enhancement and the steps taken to enhance aviation security immediately after the Air-India and CP incidents on June 23, 1985.

In terms of factual matter, nine things were done. I will quickly review them, and perhaps my hon. friend could respond by indicating whether he thinks that more should be done.

First, more stringent security controls on passengers, carry-on baggage, checked baggage, and cargo were introduced. Second, additional x-ray detection equipment and newly developed explosive vapours detectors were put into service, and acquisition of additional equipment was accelerated. Third, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) directed the interdepartmental committee on security and intelligence to study and report on airport and airline security in Canada. Fourth, monitoring and inspection of airport and air carrier security measures were increased, and a comprehensive program of airport security audits was undertaken. Fifth, key aviation security research and development projects were identified and undertaken. Sixth, additional commissionaires and security guards were employed. Seventh, the decision to terminate RCMP policing services at eight domestic airports was reversed. Eighth, a public security awareness program was initiated and security training videos for aviation personnel were produced. Ninth, arrangements were made with local police forces for trained dogs to ensure availability at all major airports.

I wonder whether my hon. friend would comment on whether in principle there are other major areas in which he thinks the Government should be responding.

I remember a number of occasions in Question Period when his Party was pretty critical of the security access program. Somehow there seems to be a contradiction. On the one hand he wants everything to be tightened up, yet I can recall many occasions in the House when his Party has been quite critical of the security access program, where people obtain clearance certificates and must be accompanied by a member of the staff, and of the time required to get the security clearances through.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member never heard any complaints by me or my colleagues on the measures taken since the Air-India disaster. However, one problem with increasing the number of guards and with increasing the number of screening locations and the amount of equipment is that the system breaks down when we have a 10 per cent to 20 per cent turn-over rate of people who do the work every month. It breaks down when people have to pay for their own uniforms and they are receiving only $6 or $7 per hour, which is not a living wage, and there is inadequate supervision. There can be the best equipment and the best intentions in the world, but with that kind of situation I am sorry, I must say to my hon. friend that it is breaking down every now and again.

When there is a mishap or a tragedy somewhere in the world, security services are tightened up. It goes on like that for two or three or four weeks, but suddenly it drifts back to the way it was before. It is a case of the barn door syndrome taking over again. After there has been a disaster, everyone rushes to close the barn door, and it is a little late.

I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned the reversal of the removal of the RCMP from eight airports in Canada. I should like to tell him that under the previous Government the RCMP was removed from 12 other airports in Canada. I am still hoping—and I am afraid it is a fond hope—that RCMP services will be restored at those 12 airports as well. That would cover the 20 busiest airports in Canada, and that would be the minimum number of airports where the RCMP would be in place.

With regard to the security access program, I do not recall our complaining about it. The Minister in good faith told the airlines that they could get security passes for personnel within 30 days, and it has taken up to four months. Even the Minister has said publicly that the airlines have a good case. Again the system has broken down. It should not be necessary to take four months to get a security pass for a full-time employee of an airline, a refuelling company, or a firm bringing in the meals, the booze, or whatever else is delivered on to the airport tarmac.

It is not that we should not have a security access program. It is that we need one which moves quicker and is monitored more closely. If CSIS cannot do it, I think we ought to turn it back over to the RCMP.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the members of the standing committee for their insightful report. I know that a great deal of serious consideration went into the writing of the report and that the members spent a great deal of time preparing for their tour of Europe. Their examination of the operations of airports and railways was detailed and exhaustive. We can only thank them at this time for their effort and contribution to the massive and complex public policy questions of transportation. A tremendous contribution was made to Canada by members of that standing committee, for they have been very active during the last three years and some months.

The committee made 13 recommendations in total. I want the committee to know now that, while the report is still under consideration by the Government, action has already been taken on 10 of the recommendations. In effect there is acceptance of the majority of the recommendations, and they already form part of government policy or programs. The Government accepts all the recommendations on Terminal 3, rail passengers, and privatization made by the committee.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said on March 23 that he had asked the presidents of major airlines to meet with him—and this will occur next week—in order to review with him the situation on wages, contract duration of security companies, performance pay, turn-over rates, and other matters.

The discussions will explore how the airlines could better operate under the present system and whether it is necessary for the Government, and I quote the Minister, "to expand its tentacles to take over this service or not".

The third report of the Standing Committee on Transport recommends that the Minister of Transport take full responsibility for passenger and carry-on baggage screening at major Canadian airports and ensure that it is done by airport employees and/or regional police or RCMP. In adopting this recommendation the committee has drawn attention to the procedures adopted at many European airports. I wish to inform the House that the recommendation remains under consideration at this time.

The Minister is concerned that Canada has the best airport security program possible. Since 1985 the Government has significantly enhanced all aspects of its security program. It has done so in the realization that no amount of resources and no law or procedure will guarantee that no criminal or terrorist act will take place or be attempted. No security system is foolproof. That being said, the airport security program in Canada is and will remain one of the best in the world. Dr. Assad Kotaite, President of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization, has acknowledged Canada's leading role in airport security matters.

• (1250)

The Canadian Airport Security Program consists of many facets, only one of which relates to passenger pre-board screening. The security program in total is based on shared responsibilities between the Government, air carriers and airport operators. A key policy in all these aviation security programs, and for that matter for safety programs as well, is that the carrier takes responsibility at the first level for the protection of its own equipment and passengers in the same way that carriers are responsible for ensuring that their aircraft are mechanically sound and fit for service. The Government comes in at the next level and, by means of inspection, regulation and enforcement ensures that they do so.

Air carriers and airport operators are required to submit to Transport Canada detailed security programs outlining how prescribed security measures will be implemented. In addition, the Canadian Airport Security Program is continually under review by Transport Canada in terms of how it can be improved.

Since June, 1985, the security program has been significantly expanded. Transport Canada has instituted enhanced checked baggage security requirements, the focus being on international flights since those are subject to the greatest risk. Additional x-ray detection equipment and newly developed explosive vapour detectors were put into service and acquisition of additional equipment has been accelerated. RCMP services at domestic airports have been doubled.

Since October, 1986, on international flights, Transport Canada has required in lieu of x-ray, the internationally recommended system of checked baggage security which entails the removal of the bags of persons not on board the aircraft. There are specific waivers to this security requirement which allow the bags of certain categories of passengers to remain on board in situations where they could not have engineered the conditions. For example, where the person is an employee of an air carrier and has been denied boarding by virtue of his or her stand-by status.

Over and above the passenger baggage match requirement on international flights identified as high risk, it is incumbent upon the air carrier to x-ray or physically search checked baggage. Currently, Transport Canada requires El Al to x-ray or physically search all checked baggage accepted for transportation and also requires the same procedures for baggage interlined to Air India flights.

On domestic flights, there are very strict procedures in place for the control of checked baggage. However, and until the system can be computerized, there is no requirement for either passenger baggage match and/or x-ray at normal threat levels since the current threat on domestic flights is assessed as very low. Passenger baggage match or x-ray or a combination of these and other measures are required where a specific threat exists in respect of domestic operations.

International experts agree that a passenger baggage match system is preferable to x-ray for the screening of checked baggage. The International Civil Aviation Organization recommends a system of checked baggage aboard commercial air carriers without the attendance of its owner. ICAO has recommended that baggage matching on international flights be implemented in all countries by December, 1987 but Canada already had such a system in place since October, 1986. In addition, Transport Canada is working on a computerized system that would match passengers and baggage on domestic flights, the same practice used successfully daily on all international flights out of Canada.

The actual conducting of pre-board screening is a responsibility put on air carriers by the air carriers security regulations. It is the general practice that carriers contract out screening to private security guard companies. There are approximately 1,400 personnel currently employed at Canadian airports to screen passengers and their carry-on baggage. Transport Canada certifies guards who are qualified to conduct screening based on successfully passing theoretical and practical tests. Transport Canada also provides and maintains the equipment used at the pre-board screening check points and is responsible for developing training programs for screening guards, supervisors and trainers.

Screening personnel are retested annually and are supervised on the job by the security guard company supervisors and air carriers supervisors. In the major airports, the RCMP conducts regular patrols of pre-board screening area and provides police response to incidents. In 1986, 986 real and simulated weapons were discovered by screening personnel at the screening check points of Canadian airports.

With regard to training, Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada implemented in 1987 an enhanced training program for screening supervisors and trainers. This programs deals with powers and responsibilities of pre-board screening personnel; the detection and handling of weapons, explosives and other dangerous items; what to do in emergency situations; the operation and use of electronic and x-ray detection equipment; how to conduct a hand search of baggage and passengers; special screening situations; supervisory skills and training methods; and an overview of terrorism and terrorist tactics.

To date, 115 supervisors and trainers have completed the program. An enhanced training program for screening guards is being implemented. The following procedure is presently in place at Pearson Airport for all individuals hired to perform pre-board security functions. The employee is hired and shown the five- part Transport Canada pre-board screening training package at the Metropol Base-Fort office in Toronto. Following the review, a written examination, consisting of 40 multiple choice questions is administered by a Transport Canada security and emergency planning representative. The minimum passing mark is 75 per cent. Candidates having a mark below

75 per cent but over 70 per cent are given a second opportunity to write the test. If the candidate fails on the second attempt, he or she is dismissed. Those individuals who successfully pass the test, are referred to the Ontario Provincial Police for a security check. If there is no problem with the check, they are subsequently licensed as a security guard. The individual is sent to a screening point and shown by a supervisor or a senior employee how to use the hand-held metal detector and trained on the use of the x-ray and hand-search techniques. This hands-on training goes on for several weeks, always under supervision. Once the supervisor determines that the employee is conversant with the job, he notifies the company, who in turn advises Transport Canada security and emergency planning for practical testing.

Practical testing is administered by Transport Canada security and emergency planning inspectors in the following fashion. An inspector monitors the wanding technique to ensure it is done according to standards. An inspector monitors the hand-search technique to ensure it is done according to standards. An inspector monitors the performance of the individual to assess his or her ability to interpret images on the x-ray machine. If the individual fails the practical test, he or she is given a second chance only after he or she has undergone training. If the individual fails the second time, he or she is dismissed. Those individuals who successfully pass the practical examination are then designated as security officers under Section 3.7 of the Aeronautics Act. It is to be noted that security screening points at Pearson International Airport are constantly monitored by DGSEP security inspectors, RCMP and air carrier representatives.

The Government also recognizes that the wages and working conditions of security guards impact on the effectiveness of pre-board screening. As I stated earlier, the Minister will be meeting with the presidents of the major airlines to address this issue next week. I want to reinforce the idea that security is a shared responsibility. The Minister will ensure that the airlines take whatever further measures may be necessary.

I turn now to the committee's recommendation that Transport Canada, in co-operation with air carriers, develop a procedure to ensure that all domestic passengers are informed of the requirement to reclaim their luggage when transferring from a domestic to an international flight. Since October 1986, Transport Canada has had a system in place on international flights whereby passengers are matched with their baggage. Baggage is not transported unless its owner is on board the aircraft.

Over and above the passenger-baggage matching, baggage on select international flights is x-rayed. Canada is a world leader in ensuring the security of checked baggage. The result of these security requirements is that baggage carried on domestic flights must often be reclaimed by the passenger before it can be processed for an international flight.

Air carrier procedures are already in place to ensure that passengers are informed whether their baggage is being checked through or whether they must reclaim it at an intermediate stop, thus any further action by Transport Canada would seem to be superfluous. Therefore, I cannot lend support to the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for concurrence in the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Transport.

I would hasten to add again that the Government has accepted 10 of 13 recommendations. The three recommendations that were not accepted are always under review and will continue to be under review. As times and circumstances change, they may well at some point come to fruition as well.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is very well read. I heard the Hon. Member's remarks about the tests given by the Department and the training of the people who do the screening. I would like to ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary his view of the adequacy of the training program and the tests and examinations that must be taken.

As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, just the other night on television, a young lady who was a screener said, when asked if she had ever detected anything, that she did not know what a pipe bomb looked like or what any bomb looked like. The average passenger is not expected to know what one looks like, but one would think that people who are doing the screening, watching the x-ray machines and running the wands over passengers would know because they have been shown and have memorized all the various kinds of devices that are known. That requires a lot more training.

Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary really think that what has been put in place so far is adequate and sufficient in light of what we all know about the people who work the job? They get a few hours or at best, two or three days of training. They stay on the job for two or three months and then they quit. Someone else takes the job and it is a never-ending cycle of inadequately trained and poorly paid people who simply will not stay.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, given the complicated language of the issue, I am happy to be charged with being a good reader. Looking at the terms used in the industry, I find amazing the bureaucratese that takes over. One must read to even keep up.

My friend opposite has said that he does not believe that what is being done is adequate. I would not stand, on the part of the Government or myself, to say that anything is adequate when it comes to international security and security against terrorism. There is always the possibility of a very clever terrorist, supported by unscrupulous Governments with enormous funds and resources to train terrorists. On occasion, even the diplomatic pouch is used to transport new types of guns that are made out of plastics and cannot be detected by metal detectors. When the resources of Governments with lots of money go into the creation of terrorist equipment and techniques, I suppose that for those of us in a democracy, it is never possible to say that it is adequate.

We want to use the security access program, but contrary to what my friend has said, his Party has taken a stand on the issue. Quite properly, his Party has raised the question of the invasion of privacy of the employees who will be inspected by CSIS. Members of the NDP on the one hand are objecting to that invasion of privacy, but on the other hand, it is those employees who, if taken over by a foreign Government or an agent of a foreign Government, would permit highly trained and sophisticated terrorists to get through.

There is a conflict here. In a democracy where we try to be open, there are always problems when it comes to security checks because they involve the invasion of the privacy of the employees as well as the flying public. The flying public wants to have quick access. They want to come to airports 20 minutes before their planes take off, and they become very annoyed when they find what they feel are overly zealous guards poking them and checking into every piece of baggage they carry. There is always a balance to be maintained and there always will be.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was not talking about terrorists, international terrorism or those aspects of airport security. I was asking the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary about the training that is provided to the people who do the screening.

By the way, the only objection I ever made to the airport security access program was made when airlines were getting passes for scabs to strike-break on a number of occasions. They were getting passes and escorts very quickly. It is hardly the way to have a good security system to give an advantage to airlines that are involved in strikes. That is certainly something about which I complained.

Again, this young woman who appeared on television the other night said that she would not feel secure if she was boarding an aircraft because she knows what is going on. These people get no training at all in crowd control. They have little or no training in first aid. They have little or no training in dealing with the massive numbers of people that can be at airports.

We all know what happens when there are a few obstreperous passengers in a lineup. It can cause a problem and quite often, the RCMP are 10 gates away. Some of these people are elderly and some of them are very young. They are not really capable of dealing with those situations. Even if they were capable, they do not get any training in dealing with them.

There is more to security than just watching an x-ray machine. Again, I ask the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary what he thinks about the adequacy of the actual training program given to the people who work for these security companies.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, again I would not want to go on record as saying that it is adequate because if there were to be a terrorist attack, I suppose that a 10-year course would not be adequate.

The fact is that when the tests first started some years ago, the training lasted about two and a half hours. It is now up to some three days for screeners. Over a period of three days, they can learn about a lot of different aspects of security. As well, on the job they should grow and mature into the job so it is a continuing process.

I think Canadians would like to know of the additional resources to enhance security at Canadian airports which the Government has put in. In May of 1986 Treasury Board approved $33.6 million and 74 person-years for immediate enhancement of Transport Canada's Civil Aviation Security Program. Those resources are allocated as follows: Airport policing and security services, $7.5 million; physical security, $20.4 million; training, $2.1 million; research and development, $700,000; security organization, $2.9 million; for a total in 1986-87 of $33.6 million. Approval was also given for $13 million to be spent on operating and maintenance in subsequent years, for a total of approximately $60 million through 1988-89.

• (1310)

In June of last year Treasury Board again approved the following additional resources for the long-term enhancement of Transport Canada's Civil Aviation Security Program: Commissioners and security guards, $4 million; physical security, $800,000; emergency response, $100,000; security organization, $3 million; training, $500,000; for a total in 1988-89 of $8.4 million and an additional 37 person-years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of the motion put forward by my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport, presented to the House on Monday, December 14, 1987, be concurred in.

It is a real pleasure indeed, Mr. Speaker, because I was and still am a member of the standing Committee on Transport, and I had the opportunity to travel to Europe.

During that trip we met a number of people who were quite knowledgeable in the area of transportation. In a number of countries we visited airports, harbour facilities, rail facilities. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that most of the time I was very much impressed.

Of course, in some cases it would be difficult to compare European facilities with what we have in Canada for the simple reason of sheer size. The European geography of course and population centres in Europe are quite different from what we have here in Canada.

When we were over there we heard about privatization, something that is dealt with in our report in the first place. We heard about privatizating airline companies and even air terminals.

In each case, it should be noted that the Government always retained the right to step in, or if you prefer to get out, and kept a preferential share that gave it a right above all other shares. I think in Canada we should keep that approach in mind if we ever consider privatizing some of our Crown Corporations.

We also heard about the free port concept. In particular, some air terminals were designated free ports, and in one case only out of six, one air terminal met with some success. This is a recommandation we made our report, Mirabel being possibly designated a free port. Certainly this is something that should be considered.

As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said earlier, we made 13 recommendations, and the Government stated it had already accepted around ten. I am pleased with that, but I would still like to see the Government take much faster action not only in accepting those recommendations but in taking action. When we were over there, Mr. Speaker, we heard about safety and security on the ground and in the air, in baggage inspection, and in every aspect of air transport. This is one of the most important recommendations in our report, at least in my view.

We were told about ground security, and I think we could consider that when we take a look at the way we operate our security program in this country.

Speaking of ground security, I imagine the House will recall the incident that occurred recently at the airport here in Ottawa when they had a bomb scare, and we saw how our system operates. In fact, we saw it did not work as far as ground security is concerned, because no one knew what to do. Mr. Speaker, you probably saw some clips on television, where airline ticket agents left their posts to go to a safe area. The public, the people who were standing in line to get their tickets, simply stayed put without being warned about what was going on.

RCMP officers on the premises were asked what was happening and they answered: Well we don't know, all we know is we have our orders.

I mentioned this incident, Mr. Speaker, to draw the attention of the House to the deficiencies in our security system. Imagine if the bomb scare had been real! Many people might have been hurt and even have lost their lives, and it was lucky the scare was a hoax.

We also talked abour air safety. In Europe—at least that is what we were told—they don't have the same problem we have in North America with near misses, but I think we should discuss this problem.

In the report by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, it says that in Canada, accidents due to lack of spacing have increased by 100 per cent, and that is a serious matter. This means that planes are flying too close together, which could be disastrous.

When we asked the Minister about this situation, he said there was no cause for alarm. However, Mr. Speaker, we now have 200 fewer air traffic controllers than we had two years ago. The Government says it is going to hire 250 controllers, but the Government will have to hurry up so it can assure Canadians they are perfectly safe in the air.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the subject of ground security, when they check passengers and baggage. We asked the Minister several times whether he was going to do something and whether he was aware of the problem. Of course, the Minister kept saying there was no problem, that everything was okay, and that people were perfectly safe. We have the best system. In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary told us earlier about various steps that had been taken by the Minister, and I could read from the same press release.

• (1320)

[English]

The press release of December 1 states that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) dismissed as totally untrue the statement on CBC that tighter security measures following the Air-India crash two and a half years ago had been relaxed.

He went on to enumerate a few security measures which had been improved upon. Additional x-ray detection equipment and newly developed explosive vapour detectors were put into service and acquisition of additional equipment was accelerated.

[Translation]

The only thing wrong with these machines, Mr. Speaker, is that they cannot operate on their own. They absolutely need operators who know how to handle them and who understand what they can do. As recently as last week, we watched a television program devoted to the inspection system. Although we had directed several questions to the Minister to make sure that he was dealing with this problem, he had insisted that no such problem existed. Now, thanks to a television reporting crew which visited our airports, we know just how the system works.

Let us go back to my X-ray machine. Some have been bought and others are being installed. But I wish to zero in on the machine operator. When interviewed, Mr. Speaker, the young man stated that having applied for a job, he had received a few hours training viewing a video. Immediately afterwards he was put in charge of security checking passengers before boarding planes to make absolutely sure they did not carry any weapon, bomb or detonating device which could jeopardize the security of other passengers.

According to this young man, he was put in charge of this machine. As he did not even know how to operate it they gave him a different job, that of checking passengers with a magic stick, a job for which he had no more training than with the x-ray machine.

Then we heard a young woman explain that she was supposed to x-ray all pieces of luggage and keep her eyes open to discover bombs, except that she did not know at all what a bomb looked like and what shape she was supposed to watch for on the screen. Mr. Speaker, I don't know any better. I have no idea what a bomb looks like or what shape I would have to watch for on the screen. But I do know that certain Canadian authorities could show these young people what a bomb looks like and how one goes about hiding these devices in luggage. But it has never been done, or at least not in this case. And these happen to be the people who are responsible for doing the checking. Why? Quite simply because the Government told the airline companies: Security is your business, you look after that. And of course they take the same approach: security being their business, they ask for tenders from private companies, and naturally the lowest bidder gets the contract because that is the way they have to operate.

That is how come young people find themselves responsible for the entire security check process. I think we have to wonder about all this. The equipment does the work, the equipment is dependable, it can be adjusted, it can spot what it is supposed to spot, but it would be nice if only the individual who operates the equipment knew what he or she is looking for, or how the equipment will identify whatever it is designed to find.

Mr. Speaker, the Government simply must take action as soon as possible, and if it were to accept all the recommendations the committee made in its report to the House, at the earliest opportunity the Minister ought to give priority to the recommendation concerning security, which reads as follows: That the Minister of Transport take full responsibility for checking passengers and hand luggage in major Canadian airports, and make sure that security checks are done by airport staff and/or by local or provincial police, or by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

• (1330)

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I must compliment the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) on his address. He was a member of the standing committee that travelled to Europe to study this very important issue.

I listened with interest to his concern about safety and security, which I share. I might add that the Minister responded to questions about airport security which were raised in the House in light of a program that was aired in the media. He said that he will watch the situation very closely and will act accordingly if he is not satisfied. I do not want anyone to think that the Minister is not conscious of airport security or that he has taken no action. That is not the case.

The Member wants the Government to react positively to all the recommendations that have been put forward in this report. The Government has already made some response, particularly with regard to Terminal 3 at Pearson International Airport. I remind the Hon. Member of the recommendation that in the planning and construction of the departure level of Terminal 3 at Pearson International Airport, the highest priority be given to check-in facilities and for the comfort and convenience of departing passengers.

He will know that the Government considers that the development of the third terminal at Pearson International Airport be a prime example of private sector and Government co-operation in developing this major airport facility. He will know that all the proposals have been carefully considered and a lease is in the final stages of preparation, with emphasis on ensuring a world class facility for Canadians.

He knows that the passenger areas in Terminal 3 will be larger than those in other terminal buildings. He will also know that state of the art flow-through counters will be installed in the domestic check-in area. The international area will have specialized facilities for high risk flights. Moving sidewalks will be provided throughout the terminal for passenger convenience.

The committee also asked that where existing and future demands warrant, to ensure the continuing economic viability and development of our major airports, we should include giving the highest priority to intermodal planning and facilities, more particularly with regard to frequent and rapid train or subway links. We saw a number of those in Europe. The Member knows that the design of Terminal 3 will include a right-of-way for an automated rapid transit link to the centre of the terminal building. Transport Canada recognizes that only a multi modal approach to transportation planning will ensure the most expedient traffic flow.

A third recommendation was for an immediate review of strategy and treatment of the facilities for in-transit passengers at our major international airports, with special attention given to this type of lucrative traffic in the planning and construction of Terminal 3 at Pearson International Airport. The Member knows that this is not the sole responsibility of Transport Canada. While Transport Canada strives to provide the best facilities, it must do so by observing stringent security regulations and other legislative constraints outside its mandate. This includes respect for the enforcement mandate of those who organize and are responsible for the inspection of the terminal passengers.

It has already recognized the importance of in-transit traffic to the airlines of Canada and its economic benefits to Canada. The department has been working with the airlines and the departments of Immigration and Customs in the past year in studying the implications of adopting a more European style of operation.

Does the Member not agree that the Government is already working very strenuously toward adopting the majority of these recommendations? I draw to his attention the first part of our recommendations dealing with terminal No. 3.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). He has five minutes to reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, thank you for letting me know how much time I have left to answer the Hon. Member who took advantage of the period set aside for questions to make his own speech.

When I started my speech, I said I was glad the Government had accepted ten of our recommendations for action. I am of course pleased the Government acted on recommendations for terminal 3 at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, and I hope the Government will do the same in all future planning for airports in this country.

In fact, we went to visit various airports and we noticed various construction details for separating the passengers and improving ground security, and our recommendation was to ensure that the people who plan our airports are aware of the facilities they have in Europe and apply the same standards here in Canada.

So I am delighted with the Government's decision, and I hope it will keep up the good work. However, even with the best facilities in the world, we still need a security system that offers better protection to Canadians and to passengers than the one we have at the present time.

I think the Government should take action on security as soon as possible.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I was not prepared to speak to this motion this afternoon. However, I will take this opportunity to speak, having just recently received a letter dated March 22 from the Mayor of Vancouver which raises a number of issues and concerns about railway safety and the Railway Safety Act in particular.

I would also like to take this opportunity to reiterate a number of my concerns about the Port of Vancouver and other transportation problems in the Vancouver region.

The major concern expressed in this letter from the Mayor of Vancouver is with regard to Bill C-105, the Railway Safety Act. The city is very concerned that this Bill does not provide for municipalities to be allowed any kind of involvement in regulations that are put into effect under Section 24. Apparently this means that municipalities will not have opportunities to effectively develop land in the vicinity of railway lines.

Many cities in western Canada evolved around the railways, and urban renewal and development of the massive amount of land around those railways, which was given to CPR in the early days, is vitally important to the development of our cities and the transportation within them.

The city manager for Vancouver was somewhat more specific. He wrote to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities about this concern and said that the City of Vancouver is very concerned about the proposals in Bill C-105 to eliminate the provision of railway relocation orders which assist urban redevelopment. He said that the city strongly supports the position of FCM on this matter.

Throughout the city's history, the relocation of railways has been a vital tool for redevelopment of the city. For example, the very dense housing developments now on the south shore of False Creek could not have happened without such relocation. We anticipate an equal need for this tool in the future. For example, the city will be negotiating with the Burlington Northern Railway, which is an American railway, for the joint use of the Grandview cut by both the railway and a major roadway which will link the Trans-Canada Highway with the centre core of Vancouver.

I am particularly concerned about this, because it goes right through my riding. Those negotiations on the part of the city are apt to be very difficult. The very existence of the powers now in the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act help the bargaining process. They want some of the present provisions in the Act to be maintained, as I understand it. I would ask the transport committee to look into this matter, because it does seem to be a very important and serious complaint. I am sure there would be similar concerns in other cities. I do not mention it only from the point of view of the City of Vancouver.

Another interesting issue in this letter concerning the Mayor of Vancouver is that under Bill C-105, Part V, Clause 44, the Minister may establish a railway safety consultative committee having between 9 and 11 members representing various interests. But a member to represent municipalities is not specified. As municipalities will obviously be much affected by the recommendations made by the committee, we recommend that a member be established to represent municipalities. That is tremendously important. It seems to me it is an omission that the federal Government also makes in other structures.

I recall when there was a complete reorganization of the port authority that the structures allowed for government appointees, which we know will be political appointees to an advisory committee or board in the case of the corporation, but did not allow for any input from the communities that surround the port. Many of them are affected by port developments, and can be extremely helpful in co-ordinating planning.

I wish to give one example of why it is important to have municipalities represented on railway consultative committees, particularly regarding safety. In Vancouver, two years prior to Expo the powers that be, certainly over the objections of residents in my community, decided to move the transfer point for dangerous goods from the central core of downtown Vancouver a few blocks east outside the Expo area into east

Vancouver, an area equally densely populated, but populated by poor people, immigrants, and by the working class. In the riding of Vancouver East we now have the transfer point for dangerous goods. In the view of many workers on the waterfront, the manner in which it was transferred was not well done. It is still an extremely explosive situation, which I mean literally, because it is the place where dangerous cargo comes in on the railways, and by trucks. There have been some very bad chemical spills in that area. The chemicals are transferred to plane to go to Vancouver Island, they are transferred on to barges and boats in the Port of Vancouver.

It is critical that this planning go forward. At the time the Minister indicated the federal Government would assist with this, to ensure that there is logical planning for the transfer point, and certainly it should be in a less densely populated area. Where municipalities are not represented on those consultative bodies, how are things like that achieved?

If I may be so bold, it is also very important that the transport committee take another look at the development of our ports. I noticed in the report that there is a small section on ports. The committee was impressed with developments in the Port of London where all the lands are being redeveloped around the port. I remember seeing that myself, and it is most impressive. The committee was also impressed with Amsterdam, which has a very effective port. There was a port manager in Vancouver who had formerly been at the Amsterdam port. That port has a very aggressive marketing procedure which is very much needed. I tend to think that sometimes the container clause was the scapegoat for everything that the port was not doing in trying to promote marketing itself. In Amsterdam there has been noted growth and commercial success. There were also some interesting comments on compulsory pilotage services.

The reason I ask if the transport committee would consider looking at the whole port development is because it has been a number of years, probably four or five, since the harbours board went out of existence and Transport Canada was born with its children that were supposed to be autonomous, namely, the local port corporations. I would like to know if the original goal of autonomy is being achieved effectively. I sometimes wonder about it. On a number of matters in which I have been involved, it is very difficult to get local decisions. What progress has this meant to the operation of the port itself?

I would particularly like to raise the question of the responsibility of a federal Government Crown corporation, in this case the Vancouver Port Corporation, to the surrounding municipalities and communities. There is an extremely arrogant attitude. One does not even receive answers to letters when one represents constituents on matters of concern. We have a right to expect answers and some response from the port authorities.

I can think of an example in Vancouver East which involved MLAs, myself as the MP, and a senior cabinet Minister, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). It involved the incidence of a large garbage scow which serves the cruise ships that operate in that port, incidentally as a result of federal developments and the new cruise ship facilities. Why on earth do the large garbage scows need to be located below a residential area, causing very bad pollution for the neighbourhood both from smells and air pollution? It is scandalous that a port manager who is a Crown corporation employee has paid absolutely no attention to submissions by the community. The City of Vancouver cannot organize a meeting or receive a response from him. MPs, and indeed the senior Member from B.C., seem to have no influence for co-ordination in solving this problem.

My final point, on which I do not have a lot of information, and perhaps my hon. colleague who is on the transport committee may have some information, is that I recall the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), who is very interested in transportation matters, being concerned about the Vancouver airport and the need for another runway there. The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River is a pilot and flies into Vancouver airport. I mention that again because it is something of local concern.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to raise those somewhat parochial concerns but concerns which also have relevance to our country.

Mr. Belsher: I listened attentively to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) speaking to the motion about adopting the report of the transport committee tabled in the House on December 4. While the Hon. Member raised some very interesting points, perhaps she strayed somewhat from the subject at hand. Nevertheless the Hon. Member did raise some very important points on which I would like to respond. When she talked about the letter from Vancouver which was in support of the Federation of Municipalities to the standing committee on Bill C-105 which is dealing with safety within rail transportation, she did raise a very important point.

• (1350)

I want to assure the Hon. Member that we are listening very carefully and with a sympathetic ear to what the municipalities are saying to us. I do not know whether she is aware of the fact that the representatives of the City of New Westminster came to make a presentation to the committee, as did representatives of the City of Regina and a number of other municipalities such as Chilliwack, Abbotsford, and Hope. Other areas in the Fraser Valley have lent their support to the submissions that have come before us.

The Hon. Member raises a point about dangerous goods. A great many people are thinking that they should be moved out to the Fraser Valley. I want to be very careful as to where the dangerous goods should be handled. Whether or not they should be handled out in Matsqui or down in Fraser Valley East will have to be looked at carefully. It is easier for me to deal with it right now where it is than what the Hon. Member is suggesting, that it be done away with.

The Hon. Member brings an interesting point forward about the Port of Vancouver and that there should be local membership running it. The membership of the Port of Vancouver is made up of local residents.

Ms. Mitchell: Not municipal.

Mr. Belsher: The Hon. Member says that they are not municipal. We want to ensure that the person has been voted on to that board. The head of Ports Canada is from the north shore of Vancouver. He is a very respected member of the community and is very familiar with the operations of Transport Canada.

With respect to what the Hon. Member has raised today, yes, the standing committee is listening, and it is listening very carefully. It has also prompted various municipalities to come in to see it. It has invited them to appear before us whenever we have been told that there were concerns. When it comes to the relocation of railways and the fact that Bill C-105 will repeal the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act, the municipalities have suggested that Part I should be retained. I know that serious consideration will be given to that recommendation.

Mr. Benjamin: How serious?

Mr. Belsher: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wants to know how serious is serious. At this point in time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to interrupt the Hon. Member at this time. I wish that he would address his remarks to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). There is only a very short period of time left.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East this. In light of the fact that municipalities have appeared before the standing committee and have put on the record recommendations, is that not sufficient to address the concerns that she now raises?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at how naive the Hon. Member is. There is quite a difference between hearing something at committee and having some government action to change a Bill. So of course it is not enough. We want to see the changes which the municipalities have been asking for.

I would like to comment quickly on the Hon. Member's point about the structure of the Port of Vancouver. He does not seem to realize that there are two structures, as I recall. There is the official board, which is an appointed board, usually made up of a fair degree of political patronage appointments, first by Liberals and now by Conservatives. There is also a place for an advisory committee. That is what I am referring to.

I think that there should be consultative advisory committees which are concerned with planning issues. We did a great deal of work on a master plan for the Port of Vancouver and it has been shelved. Nothing has been done about it. There should be people who have the appropriate connections with municipalities, as well as the expertise that is needed, to process this type of thing. The port should welcome that type of input.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for making a wonderful speech on Bill C-105, which has nothing to do at all with the recommendations of the standing committee, and which in its own right is before committee. All these points are being covered exhaustively by witnesses and by the members of the standing committee. I thought about raising a point of order with respect to relevancy, but I realized that the fact that the Hon. Member was speaking on entirely different issues spoke to how well the Government has responded in positive terms to 10 of 13 recommendations with the other three still being examined on an ongoing basis. That has told me that the Government is responding very well indeed, something which is unparalleled in the history of this Parliament.

I can remember sitting for four years in opposition and having made some very sensible recommendations. Let us face it, we all come here elected by our constituents. We all believe that we have something to contribute to the national welfare of Canada. For years we could not get a Government to accept even the commas we might want to put into a sentence. But the Government under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has accepted hundreds and hundreds of recommendations. We deserve credit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I knew that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) was well aware that Bill C-105 is in committee. However, she did get back to the various points in the debate today.

There are still a couple of minutes left in the time allotted for questions and comments.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I would like to ask if at the Vancouver airport she has run into any problems with respect to the airport restricted area access clearance program. Under the question of privacy the Hon. Member's Party has raised intrusions on the rights of existing employees to be examined by CSIS and to be asked certain questions. I would like to refer to a letter addressed to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) from the Minister. It is in reference to his letter of December 2, 1987, which enclosed a number of petitions signed by individuals protesting the requirements of the airport restricted area access clearance program.

I would like to have the Hon. Member explain to the House how she thinks the Government should balance this matter. It does not matter which Government is in. How do we balance the rights of the privacy of individuals with the rights of the rest of us to ensure that those employees are examined by CSIS so that they cannot be part of any so-called international terrorist plot?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I do not really feel that this is one of the areas of my expertise. I do not want to take the time of the House to filibuster when I really do not have enough information.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question to ask of the Hon. Member. It has been very obvious to everyone that I really wanted to have an opportunity to speak on this issue. The reality is that the Government has a wonderful record on this matter. We have a wonderful Minister who has done a marvellous job. The Parliamentary Secretary from Alberta has done a tremendous job in representing my province in this issue. There are people such as Lynda Chapin in the Minister's office who are just incredible. Even the Hon. Members on the transport committee deserve to be recognized.

I put a lot of work into the remarks that I wanted to make. It is unfortunate that I have run out of time. I want to say that the Government's record is one that we can all be proud of when it comes to VIA Rail.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of giving notice, under the terms of the weapons testing umbrella agreement with the United States, for the termination of cruise missile testing in Canada.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the motion to which I am speaking today advocating the termination of cruise missile testing was originally introduced a couple of years ago in its present form, although we have been arguing for the termination of cruise missile testing for over five years. Even though this particular motion was introduced in 1986, it is even more relevant today than it was then.

One need only look at the headline in today's edition of The Globe and Mail entitled "U.S., Soviets raise stakes in vast northern arena" and at the subheading "Bear Bombers keep interceptor planes busy" to realize that the momentum of cruise missile development, and indeed bomber and interceptor development, has picked up enormously and tragically in the last two years.

The article is in one way somewhat misleading because it does not address one of the main reasons for the accelerated activity of both the United States and the Soviet Union, particularly with bombers capable of carrying cruise missiles, in the last two years. As everyone in the House knows, the air leg of the Soviet triad is the weakest, whereas it is close to the strongest, if not the strongest, in the American nuclear arsenal. Undoubtedly attempts are being made by the Soviets to increase their bomber-cruise missile leg of what is usually referred to as the triad.

However, what has undoubtedly given them and indeed a great many Canadians cause for alarm in the past two years has been the development of ADI, the U.S. Air Defence Initiative. It is this Air Defence Initiative which was mandated by President Reagan in July, 1985, to which Canada has signed on, that is developing very advanced technologies both to knock down Soviet air-launched cruise missiles in Canada's northern air space and to advance the first strike cruise missile capabilities of the U.S. in the far North. The Air Defence Initiative is seen by many observers, if not most observers, as not simply a retaliatory instrument but, rather, as a first strike device.

A very good article written by a Canadian, David Kattenburg, appeared in the February 27, 1988 issue of The Nation on Canada's intimate involvement in the offensive air initiative being pursued by the Pentagon and to which, undoubtedly, the Soviets have been responding since 1985 by increasing their overflights in the North.

It is unfortunate that the article this morning did not go into the historical development of the increased momentum generated by the Pentagon's Air Defence Initiative and by the modernization of the cruise missile and of cruise missile technology involved in these developments.

A few years ago when we were first objecting to Canada testing nuclear weapons capable cruise missiles, some of those who were not concerned about the testing argued that at that stage the air-launched cruise missile could not possibly be used in a surprise attack, that it was too slow, too short-ranged, and too susceptible to radar. They argued that it would be purely an instrument to maintain stable deterrence, that it would not be and could not be used for first strike purposes.

That argument, in so far as it applied at all, simply no longer applies with the development of what is called the advanced cruise missile, the ACM, or what is generally often spoken of as cruise missile modernization.

The developing technologies on the cruise which are taking place in the United States today are making for much greater speed, much longer range, and a more accurate guidance system. Above all and most important, the advance cruise missile will embody a radar evading stealth technology that will make it very difficult, if not impossible, to detect cruise missiles. Some 2,300 of these ACMs will be, it is expected, produced and deployed by the early 1990s.

Also in the works now and expected to be deployed by the mid to late 1990s is the ultimate sophistication in cruise missile development, namely, the supersonic cruise missile which is absolutely impossible, one would think, to detect, a cruise missile which will also incorporate even more enhanced stealth technology, even greater speed, and even greater range.

When we read about these developments, which are fully known, we think of the constant build-up and the modernization that have taken place, going right through to the late 1990s, and we wonder whatever has happened to arms control. We wonder what the Government is thinking about. So far at least it has given only a military response to the modernization of the cruise. It has signed on to the U.S. Air Defence Initiative which is supporting the development of a supersonic cruise of a first strike capability. We have apparently gladly signed on, Mr. Speaker. We will, therefore, undoubtedly be testing the advance cruise missiles.

Last year the Minister said we had not yet been requested to test the missile with stealth technology, but left the clear implication that Canada wanted to be in on everything related to these U.S. developments and that we would get involved by implication in the cruise missile modernization program by testing the advanced cruise missile. That has been our response. The Government has not even tried to argue that this would enhance stable deterrence because it knows perfectly well it will not. It is really incredible that the Government has not at least paid lip service to another response to this modernization program, namely, an arms control response.

The Canadian Government said it places arms control and disarmament high on its agenda and strongly supports the INF agreements recently reached between Secretary General Gorbachev and President Reagan. Yet is is literally saying nothing about cut-backs in cruise missiles in our cruise missile arsenal. It has said nothing at all about the importance of pursuing negotiated cuts in cruise missile arsenals rather than the superpowers engaging in activities that encourage enhancement and modernization of cruise missile arsenals. As far as I can determine, the Government has not pressed upon the superpowers the absolute necessity of including cuts on both sides in cruise missile arsenals at the START talks in Geneva.

I asked in the House whether or not we had made written representations, and got a very wishy-washy answer from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the effect that he often writes President Reagan and Secretary General Gorbachev. Obviously, Canada, even more than in relation to INF in Europe—in relation to both air and sea-launched cruise missiles—should have been aggressively pursuing negotiated cuts. It would appear at the moment from what I have read that there are not in the present START negotiations, that is to say, the negotiations to cut back on strategic nuclear arsenals any provisions restricting the modernization of cruise missiles, let alone the arsenals themselves. I specifically mention the modernization and, above all, the enormous increase in the speed of the missiles and the radar avoiding technology, the stealth technology, as being of the utmost importance in negotiations to reduce arsenals. It is very often the case that simply reducing arsenals only gives more room for modernization, as it is called, of other arsenals. One feels one almost has a free hand to take all the research moneys, skills and defence dollars and put them into the development, including the testing in which Canada is complicit and the ultimate deployment of such modernized weapons. I am speaking again of the cruise missile particularly, that we are really undoing the steps that have been taken. For example, in the elimination of intermediate nuclear forces, we are simply transferring the problem.

Mr. Prud'homme: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Canada has not said anything about this. Canadian public opinion wants Canada to be out of the testing of cruise missiles. Today, 54 per cent of the population, up from 45 per cent a few years ago, say that tests should not be allowed, that we should, as this motion suggests, give notice now. Canadian public opinion wants to see all the response to the modernization of the cruise missile, not the testing of it, not the testing of the new radar avoiding cruise missiles but rather the pressing on the superpowers, in all fora for cuts in cruise missile arsenals and the elimination of cruise missile modernization. The Canadian public wants to see the end of cruise missile testing.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us requests the Government of Canada to consider the advisability of terminating U.S.A. cruise missile testing in Canada. I would like to explain why the Government does not view the termination of cruise missile testing as advisable and why such a termination would actually work against the mutual reinforcing nature of defence and arms control policies. While we will spare no effort to promote practical arms control and disarmament measures, we will be equally vigilant in maintaining a defence commitment that will serve as an effective deterrent to aggression. Let us not live under any illusion. To abandon our contribution to a viable nuclear and conventional deterrent on the part of the West would not improve the prospects for equitable arms control and disarmament measures.

Ms. Jewett: It has nothing to do with deterrents.

Mrs. Sparrow: What incentive would the East have to reduce its nuclear or conventional forces if the West were prepared to eliminate its weapons without the reciprocal obligations of arms control or disarmament agreement?

Ms. Jewett: That is what START is all about.

• (1420)

Mrs. Sparrow: Do Members of this House really believe that the Soviet Union would have agreed to eliminate its entire intermediate-range missile forces if the alliance had refused to deploy its own INF forces in the mid-1980s?

It was the unbreakable unity of the NATO allies in supporting the maintenance of an effective nuclear deterrent that compelled the Soviet Union to return to the negotiating table and continue the process which culminated in the historic INF treaty signed in Washington last December. This treaty is an historic arms control and disarmament agreement in the sense that it represents the first time that an entire category of nuclear arms has been eliminated.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in his statement issued at the time of the Washington Summit, President Reagan can justifiably claim great success. It was he who provided the vision in his zero option proposal of 1981. It was he who held firm against those who wanted to freeze these weapons at levels still threatening to the West. It was he who had the courage to distinguish between firmness and intransigence.

We must show equal firmness and resolve in the future. I think it clearly follows from the INF experience that if we wish to see similar progress made in the strategic arms control negotiations, the U.S.A. and its allies must display the same political solidarity. The maintenance of an effective strategic deterrent must be supported in the same manner the allies supported a credible theatre nuclear deterrent throughout the U.S.-U.S.S.R. arms control negotiation process.

For Canada, the most tangible expression of this support has been its involvement in the co-operative testing of the U.S.A. air launched cruise missile, a crucial element of the strategic bomber forces that helps provide a nuclear deterrent for NATO as a whole. This is our concrete contribution to ensuring the credibility of the alliance's nuclear deterrent. It is a modest one at that compared to those of our allies who actually have nuclear weapons deployed on their territory.

Some have claimed wrongly that Canada's testing of the air launched cruise missile was to cease once an INF Accord had been reached. The reason this Government, and for that matter its predecessor, has never established a rigid linkage between the outcome of INF negotiations in Europe and the continuation of the co-operative testing program for the air launched cruise missile is relatively straightforward. The cruise missiles that are affected by the INF agreement are ground launched cruise missiles deployed as part of a European theatre nuclear deterrent. In contrast, the cruise missiles that are being tested here in Canada under our arrangement with the U.S.A. are air launched cruise missiles that form part of the U.S.A. strategic deterrent forces and constitute the alliance's ultimate nuclear deterrent against attack.

The relative importance of these U.S.A.-based strategic deterrent forces in maintaining the over-all balance of nuclear deterrence will increase in the wake of an INF agreement eliminating United States missiles in Europe. In this connection, ensuring the reliability and effectiveness of the air launched cruise missile through the co-operative testing program with the U.S.A. becomes more rather than less compelling in the context of an INF agreement, and I mean compelling from an arms control as much as from a defence perspective.

One of the Government's priority objectives in its arms control and disarmament policy is the enhancement of strategic stability. The air launched cruise missile with its long flight time and its relatively slow, recallable carrier is currently among the most stabilizing elements of nuclear deterrent forces. It does not pose, for example, the first strike capacity of the fast flying, invulnerable to attack intercontinental ballistic missile.

We believe nonetheless that cruise missiles too should be subject to arms control restraints and have supported the inclusion of air launched cruise missiles in the limits on strategic nuclear arms currently being negotiated at the U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. Geneva talks. By giving air launched cruise missiles a greater role in the nuclear force structure of each superpower at the expense of ballistic missiles, the first strike potential of the respective forces will be reduced. In this way, air launched cruise missiles can actually contribute to enhancing strategic stability in the context of the 50 per cent reduction of strategic arms envisaged by a strategic arms control agreement.

Canada has consistently supported the agreed U.S.A. and Soviet objective of a 50 per cent cut in their strategic arsenals. We have also advocated the negotiation of effective limits on long range air and sea launched cruise missiles. In addition, we have regularly conveyed our views to both negotiating parties on how this joint aim of radical reductions in strategic weaponry can best be realized.

Canada's commitment to arms control and disarmament and the maintenance of a stable and agreed arms control regime is well known. Our work in verification research is a practical contribution second to none. This is important work and work we intend to vigorously pursue.

It is through informed allied solidarity and a constructive negotiating approach rather than by means of unbalanced and self-denying actions that progress in arms control is best assured. That is why I cannot support the motion before us today.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak on the subject of cruise missiles and the destabilizing impact of cruise missile technology on the international strategic balance of power.

In the few minutes I have, I would like to review two aspects of this question. First, the Liberal position on cruise missiles and the Government's position, described just now by the Hon. Member who spoke previously, and I think our conclusion must be that the Conservative Government's view is at odds with the movement toward international peace that prevails at the present time. I find it hard to believe that the Government, despite its success on the international scene, should insist on taking the hard line.

Second, I would like to stress the importance of another aspect of the same question, and I am referring to the advance cruise missiles, the so-called ACMs, which may persuade the Government that the time has come to take a close look at arms proliferation and that, if they miss this opportunity, the new class of cruise missiles will certainly create a far more destabilizing situation than we have today.

In the fall of 1987, the Leader of the Opposition, (Mr. Turner) asked the Canadian Government, in accordance with the provisions of the Canada-U.S. agreement on nuclear arms testing, to submit a notice of termination of cruise missile testing in Canada, and I would like to quote what he said:

I have always believed in honouring the Cruise missile commitment made by the Government of Canada to the United States and to our other allies, and we have honoured that commitment. I have always believed in honouring the commitments that previous Governments made.

As I said in my speech to the House of Commons when the issue was debated on March 6, we should test the Cruise missile until such time as there are concrete results in the negotiations between the two super powers on intermediate range nuclear weapons. There have been concrete results, much to the relief of the world, and I say the time has arrived to move forward in the world search for peace and for Canada to suspend Cruise missile testing in Canada.

It is clear, as the Leader of the Opposition said on October 1, that the time has come to reconsider the wisdom of continuing this agreement between Canada and the United States. I must say that the Government is playing a rather curious role in this matter. First of all, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has refused to either confirm or deny if there had been a request for tests of this new class of cruise missiles, when the question was put to him in the House. And the Government continues to play a kind of wait-and-see game in this respect.

In a statement to the House in March 1987, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said, and I quote:

"At the present time in Geneva, it seems that negotiations that apparently had been terminated have now been resumed. We will determine the policy of the Government of Canada in terms of what is decided in Geneva".

• (1430)

[English]

In October, as I indicated, progress was indeed made, and the Government refuses to face the fact that to pursue cruise missile testing is destabilizing. The Government had the chance to review its position and come clean on this question, but it still argues that its decision to continue testing the cruise is based on the rationale that the testing under the umbrella agreement contributes to stable nuclear deterrence.

I have serious concerns about that. How can a policy that creates the conditions for arms proliferation contribute to stable deterrence? It is clear, in the context of the information negotiations signed in Washington in December, 1987, the Government's policy is most definitely not in keeping with the atmosphere.

[Translation]

As was mentioned earlier this afternoon, a poll published recently indicated a significant shift in the position of Canadians on cruise missile testing. Fifty per cent of those surveyed are now opposed to the testing, 38 per cent are for it and 8 per cent are undecided. What is even more interesting is that when asked by pollsters whether they were aware cruise missiles were tested over Canadian territory, many people replied they did not know.

Of those 17 per cent of the Canadian people who were not aware of the test, 68 per cent said no when they were asked: "Do you want such testing to be done over Canadian territory, yes or no?" It is a cry from the heart, the immediate and spontaneous reaction of people to a factual situation that should be terminated as soon as possible.

In conclude with the opinion that a consensus seems to be emerging on that isssue in Canada, and that Canadians are no longer in favour of cruise missile testing.

[English]

In the face of this the Government persists in playing hide and seek on its policy concerning testing of the advanced cruise missile, a truly dangerous cousin to the air launched cruise missile because of its improved speed and stealth technology. Testing of such weapons in Canada's North would up the ante.

I want to quote Mr. John Barrett, Deputy Director of the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, who said that the ACM may pose a greater threat to the strategic balance than the version tested because it will be faster and harder to detect. That statement was made on January 20 after the last cruise missile test on Canadian soil. He went on to say that the Soviet Union might view deployment of the ACM as a U.S. attempt to develop a clear capability to carry out a first strike nuclear attack.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when we questioned him on this and asked him to review the Government's position, said that he was reaffirming the Canadian goal of vigorously promoting progress in arms control and disarmament. He went on to say that the goal in all these areas is stability, stability in a lower level of arms and stability in the relationship between offence and defence.

Clearly, as the situation has evolved, there is no reason for the Canadian Government to continue to pursue the same position in regard to cruise missile testing. It is clear that the recent agreement between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev has changed the situation and does not force the Canadian Government to continue to allow this testing to take place on our soil.

I want to say that I have grave doubts about the Government's clear intentions of trying to bring stability to the situation, particularly when we look at what it has been doing in relation to its position in NATO and its decision to buy nuclear submarines. It is, as my Leader said when he was speaking in Vancouver recently—

[Translation]

While superpowers are talking about weapons reductions, our Conservative Government decides that Canada will build ten or twelve nuclear attack submarines, which could cost as much as $16 billion. The construction and deployment of attack submarines signal a radical departure from the deterrence role our armed forces have played traditionally. In my opinion, the Government is wrong to seek to equip Canada with nuclear attack submarines in the Arctic. The Government says those ships will be used for the surveillance and defence of our waters in the North. If so, there are less expensive, safer and more efficient means of doing the job.

I say in conclusion it seems obvious to me the Conservative Government, far from seizing the opportunities it has to contribute to disarmement, has chosen to follow the armament and global destabilization route.

• (1440)

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it also gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on motion No. 67 related to the termination of cruise missile testing in Canada.

I have just heard the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) conclude on a note which I find somewhat inappropriate in view of the criticisms which the Official Opposition has addressed to us in the past about the ability of Canada to defend its territorial zone in the Arctic. We can tell him that we are taking the appropriate means to provide this defence and that, in our opinion, nuclear submarines are the best way to defend our territory and to prevent the Americans from violating the sovereignty of our territorial waters whenever they wish, as the Opposition said earlier.

Mr. Speaker, we should perhaps examine more closely the purpose of this motion. It seems to presume that cruise missile testing in Canada goes against our arms control and security objectives. In my opinion, such a presumption is false. The maintenance of a strong and effective defence is not inconsistent with the objectives of arms control and disarmement. On the contrary, the will to maintain a credible nuclear deterrence can make it easier to come to an agreement, as evidenced by the signing of the historical treaty on intermediate nuclear forces.

In spite of the success of the INF treaty, and perhaps because of the hopes it has raised, mistaken notions still persist about the air-launched cruise missiles, their relation to the US-USSR negotiations in Geneva on strategic weapons reduction and the importance of continued testing of these missiles. I would like to take this opportunity to correct these mistakes.

The US-USSR INF agreement applies to the middle-range missiles deployed in Europe. It does not apply to long-range strategic systems, which include the air-launched cruise missiles. The signing of this treaty never involved the termination of testing for these missiles.

The only link between the deployment of the INF's and the testing of air-launched cruise missiles is that of NATO solidarity. By deploying the INF's and other nuclear weapons on their territory, the Europeans have shown their political support for the nuclear deterrence force of NATO. Canada is doing nothing else by allowing the testing on its territory of the cruise missiles which are essential to deterrence. These tests are part of our contribution to our collective security, which is based on modern and effective weapons. And it is because we have maintained this power of deterrence unfailingly that we have had over forty years of peace and security.

The strategic systems, both the long-range balistic missiles and the cruise missiles, are under the START negotiations. Within this framework, the United States and the USSR have agreed in principle to reduce by 50 per cent the number of their nuclear warheads. The number of airborne cruise missiles will be subjected to the limits established under the START negotiations. Canada, for one, has indicated that it is in favour of reducing by 50 per cent these warheads and limiting the number of cruise missiles.

Without the Alliance's solidarity and determination to maintain a credible nuclear deterrent force, it is doubtful that the Soviet Union would have accepted to resume the Geneva negotiations, negotiations which have finally resulted in the elimination of a whole class of middle range weapons. The same solidarity and determination will be necessary to achieve any progress in the reduction of strategic systems.

A unilateral decision by Canada to terminate airborne cruise missile testing in Canada would have detrimental effects on the Alliance's strategic deterrent force and would jeopardize the solidarity which has proven so efficient in the FNI area. This testing is Canada's contribution to the maintenance of NATO's strategic nuclear deterrent force. It is a rather modest contribution compared with that of our European allies who, even with the elimination of the INFs, will bravely continue to deploy on their territories the nuclear weapons essential to peace.

I must take exception to another aspect of the motion which implies that any progress in the area of arms control could be achieved through declaratory and unilateral action, rather than through negotiable and enforceable treaties.

In the area of arms control as in any other, the first stage, often the easiest, consists in setting up the objectives which we want to achieve. In such a vital and complex area, we must have long term objectives, for I do not think it would be realistic to expect to achieve them overnight.

We might even seriously jeopardize the arms control process by not setting this issue in its proper context.

When we examine the arms control process objectives, it is important to remember that weapons are the result and not the primary cause of international distrust. Arms control could limit, and even eliminate, some manifestations of this distrust, but it would not get to the heart of the problem.

We have to take arm control for what it really is, that is a management tool in the East-West competition and a contribution to our security. It is not, as some are led to believe, an end in itself.

Arm control plays a central role in the reduction of tensions, in the reinforcement of trust and consequently of security. We often say that increased confidence on all sides is necessary to conclude those agreements. However we must take care not to interpret those agreements as being a clear indication of a lack of distrust. To the extent that they are verified and complied with, arm control agreements can restrict and focus competition. They cannot remove it.

Indeed, it would be interesting to ask ourselves what the world would be if we agreed to radical proposals for arms control. Some say that it would lead to quick progress in some areas such as development. Others contend that the reduction of nuclear arms would give rise to other problems and that issues such as the unbalance of conventional arms between the Eastern and Western countries, the Middle East and Southern Africa as well as human rights would be even more burning.

Consequently, I think that if we have to assess more carefully the arms control process, it is also essential to consider critically the various proposals made in that respect.

It is important in that respect to consider a wide variety of factors, the first one being the global dimension of the East-West rivalry. That global aspect implies that solutions to international relations as well as arms control problems must have a wide support and a wide application.

Any serious approach to arms control, and Canada's approach is serious, Mr. Speaker, must bear the stamp of caution. Proposals that do not produce the expected effects, that are easily bypassed or that do not take into account the complicated relationships which I just mentionned, must be avoided. They are useless if not misleading, and maybe even dangerous.

It is the very complexity of the arms control issue, and the interdependence of its technical, political and military aspects that explain the protracted negotiation process and our reluctance towards declamatory statements. Public discussions are full of statements of good intentions and miraculous solutions. However, we know from experience that no effective and rational initiative can ever be elaborated and applied if it has not first been negociated.

Since we have the United States as neighbours and we are partners with other democratic countries, we inevitably share the threat that hangs over the West. Our geographic position, the powerfulness of nuclear arms, their terrible effects and the way those arms could be used make it impossible for a nation gathered along the U.S. border to escape that threat. Any claim to the contrary would be delusive.

We share the threat, thus we must also share the responsibility to protect ourselves against it. By helping the United States ensure the reliability of the cruise missile, which is an important element of the strategic arms deterrent, we fulfill a responsible task for a country that benefits from the protection of these deterrent forces.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support a motion suggesting that we escape our utmost responsibilities.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity today to speak in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of giving notice, under the terms of the weapons testing umbrella agreement with the United States, for the termination of cruise missile testing in Canada.

To put it mildly, that is an idea whose time has come. It came before, but the majority of this Parliament missed it. It has come again with changed circumstances that are even more favourable now than they were before.

One of the changed circumstances of course has been what has already been mentioned by several Members, the INF agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States to eliminate a number of intermediate ranged weapons. However, another changed circumstance which I wish to speak about is the change in the outlook of the Canadian people. I am referring in part to an extensive survey done with a large number of questions by the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. About half a year ago, in their survey, they found these opinions, among others, among the Canadian people. One is on a simple question: "Do you agree or disagree that there can be no winners in a global nuclear war?"

Ninety-six per cent of Canadians agreed. The large majority, 81 per cent, strongly agreed and another 15 per cent agreed. This means that 96 per cent of Canadians have come to understand that there can be no winners in a nuclear war.

There are other questions. Some people say that the maintenance of a strong deterrence force can be guaranteed only by regular testing of existing and experimental nuclear weapons. That is the view that has been expressed by both the Government speakers. They are against 81 per cent of Canadian people, who are of the opinion that we should totally ban nuclear weapons testing.

The Government has claimed that by doing this we would weaken the western alliance and the Russians would come rolling in with their bombs, tanks, secret police and the rest. They are out of step with the majority of Canadians. Another question is whether such a policy would weaken the western alliance and cause serious problems with Canada's allies, especially the United States. Fifty-seven per cent think that on the other hand Canada should become a nuclear weapons free-zone. They are not worried about weakening the western alliance and causing serious problems.

Specifically on cruise, the question was: "Given that Ottawa has allowed testing of cruise missiles in Canada on the understanding that the United States would continue to pursue arms reductions with the Soviet Union, should the Canadian Government now refuse permission for further such tests or not?" Sixty-eight per cent said yes, Canada should refuse to allow further cruise testing.

Remember, we heard a lot about the two-track system, that we would go on with the cruise until the Russians agreed to INF arms reductions. The Russians agreed. Why go on with the cruise missile? I will come to that answer in a minute, but I want simply to add further, because one previous speaker seemed to get the figure a little wrong, that according to The Toronto Star on March 21, the Gallup Poll found that 54 per cent say Canada should not permit the tests and only 38 per cent said they should be allowed. That is quite a growth of public opinion against the testing.

The core of the Government's argument is that we need the cruise as part of the bargaining for Russian arms reductions. In fact, we are not using them that way. The public does not believe in it. The public does not believe in the nuclear deterrent any more because they are convinced that a nuclear war will simply end everything. The Government does not believe in it either. It does not use it that way.

Last year before the Standing Committee on National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) pointed out that to his knowledge there had been no public or private attempts to push for controls on the sea launched cruise missile.

The sea launched cruise missile is more dangerous to Canada than the air launched cruise missile. It is much more available if the Russians start lobbing them from their submarines than if they have to lob them over the North Pole. The submarines are less subject to central control than are air launched cruise missiles, yet the Government has not even attempted to negotiate a limitation or control of sea-launched cruise missiles. Therefore, our Government does not believe the argument it uses, that this is a deterrent and should be used to bargain with the Russians. Rather, it looks as though the Government simply wants to get in on every bit of new technology so that it can get arms contracts and higher profits for Canadian military producers. The fact is that the new stealth or advanced cruise missile, is clearly becoming a first strike weapon, the most destabilizing thing we could have.

The American Air Defence Initiative has two prongs. One prong is a better system for knocking down Soviet missiles if they come over Canadian territory. Whether air launched or sea launched, as many as possible will be dumped on Canada. Thank you very much, Mr. Reagan. The other prong is to improve the American cruise missiles so that they will be faster, supersonic, be able to evade radar as much as possible and therefore be used to launch a first strike.

The American plan for the use of cruise missiles is very dangerously destabilizing. Why do we hear reports about the Russians increasing their air patrols over the Arctic waters with their Bear bombers and other airplanes? Obviously they are afraid of the destabilizing effort.

Therefore, since there is one minute left in the debate, I believe we should have a vote on this matter. It is a good resolution and I would urge that this House vote in favour of the resolution put forward by the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate. The Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper).

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak to the motion moved by the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). I was intrigued by two things in the debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Mr. Manly: There is one minute left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Not by my watch. The Hon. Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, it is too late now, but the purpose of my point of order was to ask the Member if he would like to proceed with a vote. I would have liked to vote for this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

TENOR OF REPORT OF COMMISSIONER FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 29.

I respectfully ask the Chair to accept my proposal to adjourn the business of the House for an emergency debate on the conduct of the Commissioner of Official Languages of Canada, Mr. D'Iberville Fortier.

I have received several opinions as to the validity of my request which in every respect meets the Standing Orders of the House as adopted in June 1987. Beauchesne's, the Table Research Branch, your predecessors and you yourself, Mr. Speaker, have laid down the rules for conducting this kind of debate. All the criteria are there for the Chair to accede to my request, and they are quite clear. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker? I will be very brief.

I will spare you the various precedents I would not insult the Chair by quoting from authors like Erksine May, 20th Edition, Beauchesne's, Lamoureux or Jerome. The Clerk of the House, Mr. Robert Marleau, and his colleagues are eminently qualified to confirm the accuracy of my statement.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, all my Conservative colleagues from Quebec sitting in this House vigorously endorsed the present proposal at a convention my Party held in Montreal.

It is the first time in the history of the House that a senior official appointed by Order-in-Council to be the "watchdog" of bilingualism has been condemned by a legislative assembly.

This morning, according to the rules, I sent the Chair notice of my request. I included a passage from the unanimous motion condemning D'Iberville Fortier. I sent copies of my request to the Chair, to all Members of this House and to all Members of the Quebec National Assembly. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to read to the House the motion of the Leader of the Opposition, as amended by the Premier and adopted unanimously by the National Assembly on March 24, 1988. The Secretary General of the Quebec National Assembly has been asked to send you a certified copy, if so requested.

Mr. Speaker, here is the text of this unanimous motion:

That this National Assembly vigorously condemns . . .

Mr. Speaker: I realize the subject is a very important one, but I don't think it is appropriate to read a motion by the National Assembly of the Province of Quebec. I agree the motion is also very important, but the Hon. Member does not have to put the question for the Speaker. Proceed, please.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling.

It is unthinkable that we should not accede to the request of the premier of a province for an explanation from D'Iberville Fortier, who is a servant of Parliament and of this House.

My Party has taken a clear stand on this question, as have the Liberals and the NDP. Mr. Speaker, please don't tell me we will have to listen to Mr. Fortier in committee or somewhere else! It is in this House, under the TV lights, that we shall explain to Canadians that under Section 91 of the British North America Act, the federal Government, and especially Parliament, shall not interfere in areas under provincial jurisdiction.

Many Members of this House support my request for this debate. I am sure that out of respect for our institutions, the provinces and ourselves, we would like to debate the subject immediately. However, according to our Standing Orders, there can be no immediate debate.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask you to agree to a debate at eight o'clock this evening, and I promise it will finish at seven o'clock tomorrow morning, at the latest.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore move, under Standing order 29, that this House be now adjourned to proceed with the consideration of statements made by the Commissioner of Official Languages of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: First of all, I am sorry, but originally I said this was a question to be raised according to the usual procedure, like a question of privilege. However, it is not a clear question of privilege but a request under Standing Order 29.

I think we can say that of course this is a very important issue for all Canadians and especially for Canadians in the province of Quebec and Francophones outside Quebec. A servant of this House has made some very interesting statements which during the weekend were the subject of a great deal of debate.

However, according to the Standing Orders it is up to the Chair to decide. I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member. The question he raised is a very timely one which, as I said before, concerns many Canadians. However I must advise him that on procedural grounds I cannot allow this kind of debate because, in my opinion, Standing Order 29 does not provide for this. I would suggest that the Hon. Member might more effectively follow through on his remarks by making representations to the Joint Committee on the Official Languages. After all, it is important and necessary that Hon. Members have a very clear understanding of the purpose of Standing Order 29, especially when another forum is available for debate. We do have an important problem, and it should be raised before the committee. I understand the feelings of the Hon. Member, just as I understand the significance of the subject. I would urge the Hon. Member and all his colleagues in the House to accept my ruling because I think it is in keeping with the Standing Orders.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for Minister of Finance) moved: That Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members may have noticed that the Bill under consideration today is not very long, but still Canadian companies and individuals think it is important. If the Bill is adopted we will be in a position to amend the Customs Tariff tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wislon) last February 10 when he presented his Budget.

Most of these tariff amendments will result in reducing or eliminating duty on equipment not available from production in Canada: specified machinery used by the oil-sands producing industry, certain compressors and differentials for automotive vehicles, steel rods used in the construction of silos, unrecorded magnetic tapes used to make cassettes for the blind, certain model kits, and burial shrouds. Some of the amendments are of a purely technical nature, for they simply continue to guarantee duty-free entry of equipment which was not subject to duties before the February 10 Budget, including among others facsimile transmission apparatus and diesel engines used in certain construction equipment.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are among the least voluminous tariff measures introduced in recent Budgets. This Bill is substantially different from Bill C-87 proclaimed on December 24, 1987, which was one of the most important Bills the House had to consider. Naturally, it dealt with tariffs, but its main purpose was to review the whole customs tariff to ensure its consistency with the international harmonized goods designation and codification system.

Mr. Speaker, the development and implementation of the new harmonized system, which required massive resource investments from the business sector, without mentioning public expenditures, explain in large part the relatively small number of tariff amendment requests requiring the introduction of legislation to have been submitted to the Minister of Finance since the tabling of the 1987 Budget. I believe that this situation is also due to the fact that manufacturers, importers and other business people have focussed all their attention on the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. As Hon. Members already know, the agreement provides for the elimination of all tariffs imposed by Canada and the United States on the goods they trade. Depending on the products, certain tariffs will be eliminated on January 1, 1989, while others will be phased out over periods of three, five or ten years from that date.

I have already indicated that, while the tariff changes included in this bill are few, they are very important for the companies and individuals who will benefit from them. As an example, the tar sands development industry will be able to import duty free a wide variety of parts not manufactured in Canada, which will allow this industry to reduce its costs at a time when it is attempting by every means possible to produce oil at a cost competitive with world market prices.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government is to meet the needs of the business sector and individuals by amending the tariffs in its annual Budgets. This Bill maintains this tradition. I therefore urge the House to adopt it as quickly as possible.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said, this is a fairly straightforward technical Bill which need not take up a lot of time in the House but should, I think, be examined rather carefully in committee.

The Bill introduces amendments to the customs tariff and these were included in the Ways and Means motion tabled as part of the Budget on February 10, 1988. Duties are being removed on a range of equipment used by the oil sands industry, certain compressors for motor vehicles, steel rods for farm silos, and so on. The Government tells us that all these changes have been made at the request of certain segments of industry, and of course we will want to confirm that through hearings with other interested parties to ensure that this is indeed as generally acceptable as we are told.

The Bill also provides for some technical amendments to the customs tariff, some of which are to ensure that goods which are now duty free continue to be so. These include facsimile equipment and diesel engines used in certain construction equipment.

Finally, there are some measures in this Bill to correct errors which were made in the new harmonized systems tariff. As the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned in his speech, the previous Bill, Bill C-87, contained a truly enormous list of goods on which there were changes. The Bill in itself was not very large, but the schedules were enormous comprising several columns. In speaking to that Bill on December 11, I said that brokers, and especially small importers, were clearly going to have problems with new names, new designations, and so on.

The original Bill, C-87, will require very careful monitoring. It does contain one clause, Clause 131, which could be used to give relief. Clause 62 gives the Government very broad authority of a kind which had been used in the past merely to implement GATT decisions. However, that broad authority could potentially be used to give relief to innocent citizens who find themselves caught up in the maze of this Bill.

One would hope that the Department of Customs and Excise would continue to be helpful to users of the system. Much publicity was undertaken in connection with Bill C-87 and information was provided to the larger brokers to guide them through that more complicated Bill. Bill C-118 contains amendments which the Government has frankly admitted are necessary as a result of its errors.

On the face of it, Mr. Speaker, this is a straightforward Bill, but even Bills which are apparently straightforward and technical often present problems for the users. We do not know how extensive the Government's consultation has been. I would hope that in committee we will be able to hear witnesses and get a better understanding of the effects of these measures on Canadians.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on behalf of the New Democratic Party on Bill C-118. As the Parliamentary Secretary indicated and the spokesperson for the Liberal Party concurred in, this is not a major Bill. It is not a thick Bill like the one we received earlier which dealt with the harmonization of the trade practices between Canada and other countries involved in GATT. When we discussed Bill C-87 there were concerns expressed with regard to some of the measures. While the Government ignored some of the points raised at that time it has now, through Bill C-118, attempted to deal with some of the mistakes it made when it drafted the harmonization Bill, C-87.

This Bill removes tariffs on a range of equipment used by the oil sands industry, certain differentials and compressors for motor vehicles, steel rods for farm silos, recording tapes used to make cassettes for the blind, certain model kits, and burial shrouds.

We will have some questions in committee with regard to the importance of these measures, the revenue implications that they will have, and the type of consultation which has occurred between the Government and industry. There is not much more I can say about this Bill at this stage. Most of our questions will be asked in committee. We hope to receive appropriate responses from the Minister at that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

EXCISE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. George Hees (on behalf of the Minister of Finance) moved: That Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Bill C-117 makes it possible to implement a number of proposals related to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Most of these amendments were announced last June in the White Paper on the tax reform and in the Notices of Ways and Means Motions which were tabled later on, more specifically on December 16, 1987. Moreover, this Bill makes it possible to implement a number of measures announced in the Budget speeches of February 18, 1987, and February 10, 1988.

From a tax point of view, this Bill is very important. Although it provides for some tax increases, it should be seen in its proper context. In this Bill, most of the revenue increasing measures are part of the global tax reform program. Generally speaking, this program is fiscally neutral: the major reductions in personal income tax, which represent some $12 billion over the next five years, will be compensated by an increase in revenues from corporate income tax and by a large number of the sales tax increases provided for in this Bill. It should be emphasized that, among other measures involving personal income tax, the tax reform program provides for an increase of 40 per cent of the refundable sales tax credit paid to low-income Canadians. The purpose of this measure is to considerably reduce the impact of the sales tax increases on less fortunate Canadians.

In addition to measures announced when the tax reform was unveiled, the Bill features others aimed at a major target, namely deficit reduction. The most important factor in our deficit reduction strategy has been a curb on the growth of public expenditures, and we have been highly successful in this endeavour: general expenses have gone down, and there has been a sharp decline in operating expenses and capital expenditures. However, intent on reducing the deficit and maintaining financial management improvement, we had to combine lower expenditures with the higher taxes proposed in the Bill. Although no Government likes to raise taxes, these measures reflect our commitment to show more responsibility in the financial management of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to deal with some of the measures which will enable us to boost revenues.

I should like to sum up the major steps through which we intend to increase revenues, as set forth in the Bill. Here are the main provisions of the over-all tax reform program: a 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services such as telephone and telex, excluding service charges for local residential telephone lines. The corresponding tax rate on cable and pay TV services will rise from 8 to 10 per cent. These changes took effect on January 1, 1988 and are expected to yield additional revenues of about $870 million a year.

The sales tax rate on paint and wallpaper products has increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent effective January 1, 1988, which should bring in an extra $60 million annually.

To compensate the effects of the tax reform temporary measures on revenues, the payment of sales and excise taxes will be accelerated effective April 1, 1988. At present, all businesses are required to remit the sales tax on the last day of the month following the month of the taxable sale. Under the new provisions, the great majority of corporations will have to remit the tax on the 21st day of the month following the month of the sale, while the largest corporations, which represent fewer than 1 per cent of all taxpayers, will be required to remit the tax twice a month.

This measure does not increase the amount of tax payable on each transaction, but only reduces the time elapsed between the date on which the taxable sale is made and the date on which the sales tax is remitted. This measure will make it possible for the Federal Government to get a one time cash flow increase of $1,6 billion for the fiscal year 1988-89.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as was announced in the Notices of Ways and Means Motion of December 16, 1987, this Bill will increase the federal sales tax rate on beer, spirits, wine and tobacco products from 15 to 18 per cent, effective January 1, 1988.

The revenues resulting from this amendment, representing some $175 million per year, will be used to finance the increase in tax benefits to families with children.

This Bill will also allow for the implementation of two revenue increasing measures included in the February 1987 Budget.

Since February 19, 1987, the duties and excise taxes on tobacco products have increased by 4 per cent, which is about the rate of inflation. This measure should increase the revenues by some $70 million a year.

Moreover, to recover a greater portion of the air transport program costs, the February 1987 Budget provides for an increase in the air transportation tax levied by $4 per ticket, which should take in an extra $45 million in 1987-88.

Finally, this Bill provides for an increase in the excise tax on gasoline by 1 cent per litre, as announced in the February 10, 1988 Budget. This increase will come into effect on April 1, 1988. At the same time, the existing fuel tax discount for farmers, fishermen and other primary producers has been increased by an equivalent amount to protect them from the tax increase. The net increase produced by this measure should bring some $300 million in revenue in 1988-89.

The bill also provides for the implementation of a number of technical amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Sales taxes on motor fuels have been transferred to the manufacturer to solve the administration and reporting problems which became apparent when these fuels were taxed at the wholesale stage.

The burden of federal sales and excise taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline has been balanced to support the efforts of the Minister of the Environment who is trying to eliminate lead emissions from gasoline.

The tax rate on alcoholized coolers has been lowered to correspond to that of wine-based coolers to grant them equal tax treatment.

The provisions on the reimbursement of the sales tax for certified public institutions have been made more specific to ensure that the tax abatement is limited to non-profit organizations. Certain compliance provisions of the Excise Act have been reviewed to reflect reduced on site surveillance by excise officers in relation to the production of alcohol and tobacco products.

In addition, the Bill contains certain measures to reduce the paperwork of small businesses; more specifically, the tax ceiling for periodical and seasonal returns has been doubled, which will allow some 2,000 additional taxpayers to pay their taxes four times a year, twice a year or periodically rather than every month.

In response to the concerns raised by cultural groups, original engravings have been exempted from the federal sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill also amends certain fair price provisions included in Section 34 of the Excise Tax Act. Under the proposed amendment, the tax will apply on fair market values when non-arm's length sales are made. This amendment follows a recent ruling by the Federal Court which questioned the power of the Minister of National Revenue to determine the value of a product for tax purposes under such circumstances.

That amendment, as well as the provisions concerning the taxing of marketing and distribution costs, which will be implemented under another bill on November 1, 1988, should effectively solve the problem of value for the purposes of the sales tax before the second phase of tax reform is carried out.

Finally, the bill implements the provisions announced in the budget speech of February 1987 according to which the tax levy is shifted to the wholesaler's level for a variety of items such as candies, snack foods, pet food and certain electronic equipment. Thoses changes will come into effect on various dates between May 1 and August 1, 1987. When the proposed rules on marketing and distribution costs are enforced on November 1, 1988, the tax levy on most of those items will be shifted back to the manufacturing level.

Other minor technical amendments provided in the Bill are aimed at clarifying the interpretation of some provisions in the legislation and to give legislative authority to some present administration procedures.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate that it is a very important bill. It is one of the basic aspects of our comprehensive tax reform which will enable us to reduce considerably the income tax collected from 8 out of 10 Canadian taxpayers. Moreover, it completes important steps in our Government's comprehensive strategy which is to reduce the deficit and to improve the financial management of the economy.

To enforce those changes, I call upon all Hon. Members to approve the Bill as soon as possible.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill to implement a number of increases in excise taxes. This is from a Government that came to power on a promise to reduce the deficit without increasing taxes.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quoted early on as saying that taxes would not be increased generally because Canadians already pay a lot for the services they receive from the Government. He was also quoted as saying he would tax the rich, that the rich would pay handsomely. However, what is happening is that we are seeing enormous increases in sales taxes. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regularly inveighs about the manufacturers' sales tax, which he says is a silent killer of jobs, yet he uses it and abuses it and piles taxes upon taxes on Canadians. Between the increases in personal income tax, many of them hidden because they were arrived at by deindexing, and the increases in sales taxes, this Government has taken an additional $22 billion from Canadians since it came to power.

• (1150)

In his speech the Parliamentary Secretary also made a reference to reduction in personal income tax of approximately $2 billion this year. The Minister of Finance takes $22 billion away over a five-year period, proposes to hand back $2 billion in the pre-election year, and we are all supposed to be grateful. As the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, many of these measures in the Bill before us were contained in the White Paper last June, the so-called tax reform paper, which also had a lot of the features of a budget, and in the subsequent Ways and Means motion tabled December 16. In addition, this Bill implements some of the measures announced in the Budgets of February 18, 1987 and February 10, 1988.

In talking about the White Paper, the Parliamentary Secretary repeated the myth that his Party has continued to express, that the package is fiscally neutral. The effect of fiscal neutrality is achieved by smoke and mirrors. The package the White Paper produced was to involve reductions of personal income tax by $12 billion over a five-year period,and an increase in corporate taxes by $5 billion over a similar period, increases in manufacturers' sales tax, to which I will return, and then at least $2.6 billion worth of smoke and mirrors, that is, advanced remittances. Employers were initially required to remit at a faster rate, fortnightly instead of monthly, and later it became weekly instead of fortnightly, payroll deductions from their employees. That, I think, accounted for $1.2 billion.

Today the Parliamentary Secretary reminds us that by requiring business people to remit the sales tax earlier, on the twenty-first day of the month following the sale instead of the end of the month, and requiring some firms to remit fortnightly, we arrive at a situation where the Government has a one time cash flow increase of $1.6 billion for the fiscal year 1988-89. There were other pieces of smoke and mirrors in that exercise, but I think we should be clear that phase one of the so-called tax reform was not, and never has been, fiscally neutral.

In his speech, the Parliamentary Secretary also said that the most important element of the Government's strategy of deficit reduction has been to limit the growth of government spending. Unfortunately, that does not jibe with the facts. The facts are that this Government has tried to tax its way out of dealing with the deficit. While government spending has been reduced in some areas which are important to Canadians, such as post-secondary education, research, the environment, the Prime Minister's presidential lifestyle has required very large increases in government spending.

This Bill before us puts a 10 per cent tax on long-distance telephone calls and on cable and pay television services, which will net the Government $870 million a year. This tax is quite a hardship on people with small businesses who do a lot of business overseas as well as within Canada. I have heard from many people whose telephone calls are a necessary part of their business, and this will now represent a serious increase in their costs. The sales tax rate on paint and wallpaper products has increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent, and this is expected to raise $60 million annually for the Government.

The taxes on beer, spirits, wine and tobacco products, which were previously announced, are all in this Bill and altogether will amount to something like $240 million a year. However, the tax that will concern many Canadians is the continued increase in the excise tax on gasoline, another one cent a litre increase effective April 1, 1988. Since this Government has been in power it has raised the price of gas by 23 cents a gallon. That is causing severe problems to our transportation industry, already competing with very large American firms, and is also causing problems to our tourism industry. Of course, the cost of gasoline goes right through our economy. It affects manufacturing, packaging, storage, heating of retail facilities, and so on. At every point in the distribution chain, increased gasoline costs affect the final cost to the consumer.

When I spoke on the borrowing authority and on the Budget, I pointed out again and again that this Government, since it came to power, has taxed Canadians in a way that is unprecedented since Confederation. I will not repeat all those criticisms again today, however, they certainly still hold. The Parliamentary Secretary, in concluding his speech, said that the over-all tax reform package provides major personal income tax cuts for more than eight out of ten Canadians. What he omitted to say is that it provides income tax cuts to poorer Canadians with incomes of less than $15,000 a year, and that these income tax measures, which have been misleadingly called "reform", are particularly hard on young families with children. A family with two children and one earner earning around $30,000 per year will pay a great deal more after this package.

Furthermore, what has been left out of this argument is the cumulative effect of all the tax changes that have been built in since the Government came to power. I refer to the deindexation of family allowances, the deindexation of personal allowances. Factor all those measures in and one comes up with a very different picture in which eight out of ten Canadians will not be benefiting.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the spokesperson for the Liberal Party. I wish to address myself to this Bill as well. Many of the criticisms we propose to Bill C-117 are ones that she has stated. Indeed, when we come to look at Bill C-117 we really begin to see the smoke and mirrors of the Government, the double-talk and the double-think.

When introducing this measure the Parliamentary Secretary talked about tax reform and the great job the Government has done in lowering taxes paid by ordinary Canadians. Yet we know that since the election of the Conservative Government in 1984 some $22 billion in increased taxes have been levied on the Canadian taxpayers. What tax reform does is to return some $2.2 billion to them. The Parliamentary Secretary was certainly very forward when he suggested that the $2.2 billion was a great effort by the Government to relieve the tax burdens that ordinary Canadians pay. Yet he did not mention the $22 billion in extra taxes that the Government is collecting.

Of course, the Government likes to collect its money in what I would call the sneaky way. It has done a partial deindexing on marginal tax rates. It has deindexed family allowances so that the benefits from family allowance do not keep pace with the increase in inflation. However, these are things that are not immediately apparent to the Canadian taxpayers. I say that because they would first have to figure out what the rate of increase should be if it were fully indexed to inflation as opposed to the increases that they are getting under the partial deindexing that the Government has introduced.

The Government tried to take on the seniors by deindexing the old age pension. However, the seniors were a little smarter than the Government, and certainly a little faster on their feet. They forced the Government to backtrack on that measure.

The biggest revenue grab by the Government was the partial deindexing of the income tax which will mean that as inflation increases the Government's take will increase also. The Government benefits from inflation because it has now partially deindexed the income tax.

One wonders, if it is in the Government's vested interest to have a certain amount of inflation, then how committed is it to reducing inflation to zero? In the last little while members of the New Democratic Party have been asking for a lower interest rate. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) defends a high interest rate because he figures this is the way to fight inflation, that inflation at around 4 per cent is still too high and therefore we have to maintain this high interest rate.

Yet when we look at Bill C-117 we begin to recognize why we have the high inflation that we do have. It is not because of market forces. It is because of the forces of the Government. It has increased the taxes on manufactured goods which has resulted in increased prices right across the board. So it does not matter how high the interest rate is, it is the taxation policies of the Government that are maintaining an inflation rate of 4 per cent.

When we hear the Minister of Finance tell us that we need a high interest rate in order to combat inflation I suggest to the Canadian people that if we are to combat inflation we should turf this troupe out. If we did not have a Conservative Government, inflation would be down around 2 per cent. I would venture to estimate that 50 per cent of the reason that we have the inflation rate that we do have is the tax measures of the Government.

Let us take a look at some of these tax measures. The Bill which we are debating today will justify a 10 per cent increase on telecommunication services such as telephone and telex services, not including the charges for local residential lines. How much will this take out of the economy? It will take some $870 million per year, by the Government's own figures. Now our telephone costs are higher, which increases the costs of doing business. This increased cost will be shifted on to the consumer. It is no wonder that we have this inflation rate when the Government is taxing anything that sits, moves and jumps.

The sales tax rate on paint and wallpaper products is increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent effective January 1, 1988. That will take an extra $60 million annually. In other words it will cost a little more to renovate one's home, put on some new wallpaper or to paint, whether it is a renovation or new construction. Again, we see the cost of homes and home fixtures being increased because of the measures of the Government.

Bill C-117 increases the federal sales tax rate on beer and spirits, wine and tobacco products from 15 per cent to 18 per cent. There is an increase in specific excise tax on the excise duty rates for tobacco products by 4 per cent.

There is an increase in the air transportation tax levied by $4 per ticket to recover a greater proportion of the air transport program costs. There is an increase in the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline by one cent per litre. As my colleague and the spokesperson from the Liberal Party pointed out, since the election of the Government the federal take on gasoline has increased by some 23 cents per litre. My gosh, if Canadians wanted to have cheaper gasoline prices they should turf this group out. That inflationary cost is something that gets passed on to the consumer as well.

The Bill also introduces several technical amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. These include a shift of the taxes on motor fuels to the manufacturing level to address administration and compliance problems. Again, this is something that the finance committee has been concerned with. We did issue a report on it. I am happy to see that there is some sensitivity by the Government on this matter. Whether or not it deals with the problems of the small wholesalers of gasoline or not I am not quite certain. I think that the measures of the February 1987 Budget created unfairness in the system. That unfairness still prevails.

Part of the problem with our present excise tax and our sales tax is that they create distortions in the economy. As well as being unfair to low-income Canadians and to consumers they also create distortions in our economy. I will be addressing these distortions a little later in my remarks.

The Bill also shifts the sales tax to the wholesale level for snack foods, pet food and pet litter, candy and confectionery goods, and certain electronic equipment. This comes out of the February 1987 Budget. The tax on most of those products will be shifted back to the manufacturing level when the marketing and distribution cost measures announced in the February 1988 Budget come into effect on November 1 of this year.

The Bill clarifies the refund provisions applicable to certified public institutions. It amends the fair price provisions to apply tax on fair market values when non-arm's length sales are made, or where it is difficult to determine the sale price. There is a revision to certain compliance provisions in the Excise Act to reflect reduced on-site surveillance by excise officers in relation to the production of alcohol and tobacco products. Those are mainly housekeeping type measures.

One of the relieving measures in this Bill, and there are a few, is an increase in the existing fuel tax rebate available to primary producers for the excise tax on gasoline by one cent a litre to compensate for the increase announced in the February 1988 Budget. Thank heavens for that. The farmers in my district who are already having difficulty enough in surviving with the low grain prices and high input costs, will not be asked to pay an extra cent a litre for the gasoline that they must use to put the crop in the ground.

Another relieving measure is an increase in the tax threshold for periodic and seasonal filers in order to reduce the paper burden for small businesses. I am happy to see this provision. A small business person or restauranteur had to fill out those forms for, at times, very insignificant amounts, but it did take time. Operating a restaurant is not an easy matter, particularly if one has loads of paper work to deal with a few dollars of remittance to the Government on some sales tax item. It was a necessary part of the job, it did not make sense, and I am glad to see that there is some sensitivity on this issue from the Government.

We also see a little sensitivity from the Government regarding the fine arts. As a relieving measure in this Bill there is an exemption for original prints from the application of federal sales tax.

Let us look at the Government's philosophy in terms of tax. Bill C-117 is a Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. It is legislation coming out of the February 10, 1988 Budget. In light of tax reform, the Minister of Finance has missed the opportunity to introduce real tax reform. I think that my colleague, the chairman of the finance committee, will say a hearty "hear, hear" when I make this statement. We all recognize that, in essence, the Minister has flubbed when it comes to tax reform.

In other jurisdictions that have implemented tax reform it has been done as one complete package coming into effect on one day. When there was an increase in the sales tax and people saw the price of goods and services increasing, on the same day they also saw a reduction in their income tax, and low income people saw an increase in family benefits. All of this was done in one day in one complete package with most of the middle and lower income people benefiting from such measures. Certainly, we do not see this today in Bill C-117 and the Government's attempt at tax reform. It has reduced marginal rates. But what it has given with one hand it has taken back tenfold with the other hand. There is an increase in taxes of $22 billion and a rebate to the average taxpayer of $2.2 billion. That is a clumsy way of playing a shell game, something that I do not think average Canadians will be fooled by.

Since most of the tax reform proposals dealing with sales and excise taxes are proposed in stage two of tax reform, what is not in the Bill is more interesting than what is in it. It is obvious, by delaying stage two of tax reform, which is not expected until after an election, the Minister and the Conservative Government are content in sustaining a deeply flawed, unfair, and inequitable system of federal sales tax and excise tax.

Since the 1984 election the Conservative sales and excise tax revenues have escalated dramatically. It is clear that the Government is increasingly relying on the regressive sales and excise taxes to finance federal expenditures. The more the Government does this, the more difficult it will be to revise it.

The theory and implementation of federal sales tax is quite straightforward. The underlying principle of the tax is that it should apply only once in the distribution of the goods from producer to the consumer. Manufacturers are given licences which allow them to buy goods tax free. When the manufactured products are sold to non-licenced firms such as wholesalers they then become subject to tax. This method of licensing manufacturers is designed to avoid the problem of multiple taxation.

Canada is the only remaining major industrial country with a sales tax at the manufacturers' level. Canada now collects more revenue from those goods and service taxes, 35 per cent of our total revenues, than most OECD countries where the average is 29 per cent.

In the six decades since its inception, a wide array of variable rates and exemptions have been developed to reduce the inherent regressivity of such a tax. The system is so skewed that in 1981, six commodities accounted for 61 per cent of total federal sales tax revenue, three of which, motive fuels, alcohol, and tobacco were also subject to excise taxes.

Excise taxes which are levied under the Excise Tax Act are usually ad valorem taxes levied as a percentage of the manufacturers' selling prices, similar to the federal sales tax. They were originally designed to apply to luxury or non-essential goods. Excise taxes now are levied on goods such as alcohol, tobacco, jewellery, matches, lighters, coin-operated games or amusement devices, motive fuels, air travel, playing cards, radio and television programming services, automobiles, et cetera. Excise taxes apply to both domestically produced goods and imports. The excise duties are usually applied at a fixed rate for a given quantity of goods. Excise duties are only levied on alcohol and tobacco products. These sumptuary taxes are designed specifically to reduce consumption of what are considered to be harmful products, like the working man's beer.

The degree to which the Conservatives have decided to emphasize these regressive, hidden commodity taxes in their deficit reduction plans has become one of the hallmarks of this administration. Amid the controversies surrounding the capital gains tax exemption, the partial deindexing of marginal tax brackets, pensions, and family allowances, those commodity tax increases have gone forward virtually unnoticed.

There are some major problems with the current system. First, there is the difference in sales tax burden. The federal sales tax is levied on the manufacturer's selling price. However, the selling price may vary for the same product depending upon whether the manufacturer sells it to a wholesaler or to a retailer. Selling to a retailer brings with it a higher relative tax burden. When the manufacturer sells his or her products to a retail outlet, a higher cost will be incurred than if the product is sold to the retailer directly.

In 1977 it was estimated that fully 44 per cent of taxable manufacturers' sales went directly to retailers. To reduce this discrimination there is now an extensive list of what are called notional values, which are used to discount the price at which a manufacturer sells a product to a retailer to the price that would have been paid by a wholesaler. We can see the arbitrariness of the sales tax system.

Another problem is the taxation of production goods. When purchasing intermediate goods to be used in the production process, the manufacturer inevitably ends up paying hidden sales taxes on some goods. It was recently estimated that 42 per cent of federal tax revenues were collected on intermediate and capital goods. This leads to the third concern that we have with the present sales tax system, and that is the discrimination against exports. Hidden sales tax costs are forward shifted to the export price, making exports more costly than they would otherwise be. We are about the only industrialized country in the world that puts a tax on our exports.

The fourth concern that we have with the sales tax is the advantage to imports. Canada does not include the cost of transporting goods to Canada as part of the cost base for the calculation of federal sales tax. Consequently, those imports competing with domestically produced goods are often subject to less tax than goods produced in Canada. We tax exporters through our sales tax system and we give an advantage to importers. Aren't we smart? Instead of the Government attempting to deal with it in phase two of tax reform, which should have been brought in at the same time as phase one, the Government, through Bill C-117, is complicating and making worse an already bad situation.

Our fifth concern is the complexity. The licensing requirements of manufacturers and the documentation which entail, the special exemptions for certain goods, and the system of notional values, all tend to make the federal sales tax administratively very burdensome and unnecessarily complex.

The new 1 cent per litre increase in gasoline, which is not applicable to farmers, fishermen, and other primary producers, will cost the average Canadian family of four, assuming a $35,000 annual income, some $50 extra per year. This amount is roughly the same as the decrease in tariff rates, which the first two years of the free trade agreement will see as a reduction of federal government revenue. In other words, the Government will lose this money because of the free trade agreement and the reduction of tariffs. It will be reducing its revenues, but the Minister of Finance has made certain that he will grab it out of the hands of consumers by increasing the price of gasoline by 1 cent per litre.

The new telecommunications tax on long distance rates is a blow to Canadians for two reasons. First, the finance committee of which I am a member, in its report last fall, recommended that people living in the remote North be subject to the 10 per cent tax on long distance calls only to a maximum of $3, since many people living in northern Canada depend heavily on long distance telephone service. The Minister rejected the recommendation. In fact, the Minister of Finance rejected most of our recommendations, but this is one about which I feel somewhat outraged. It is a tax on people living in remote and rural areas who depend upon telephone services much more than people living in the cities. People in remote areas have to place many more long distance telephone calls than city people, and this 10 per cent tax is an unfair levy on them.

Second, the CRTC ruled that Bell Canada should reduce its rates because Canadians were paying too much on their telephone bill. The Government's new 10 per cent tax on long distance rates ensures that Canadians are still paying too much on their telephone bill.

These are some of our concerns with Bill C-117. It increases inflation, despite what the Government has been saying about the reasons for having a high interest rate to combat inflation. As I mentioned earlier, if we are to combat inflation, the best thing to do would be to defeat a Government which has been so inflationary because of the increases in sales tax which it has imposed.

We are also concerned about the unfairness and complexity of the present sales tax regime. I admit that it is a problem which the present Government inherited from the previous Government. However, the Government has been in power for almost four years now, and it still has not done anything about it. In fact, it has made a bad situation even worse by piling more sales taxes on average consumers, by taxing pet food, candy, chocolate bars, and so on. It has created distortions in the market-place with unsalted peanuts not being taxed and salted peanuts being taxed. If we look at the list we see that certain yoghurt products are not taxed whereas certain frozen bars are taxed. There are distortions in the market-place because of the unfairness of the sales tax system.

We have seen the Government do its smoke and mirror act regarding tax reform. In a sneaky way it has taken more money out of the pockets of Canadians while up-front it has given them some tax relief.

This is certainly not honest and fair government. A fair Government would have been honest with Canadians and, if it was to increase taxes, it would do it in an up front way rather than through hidden sales tax.

We are not happy with the Bill. As I mentioned before, it makes a bad situation even worse. We are certainly looking forward to reviewing it in committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I take part in the debate on Bill C-117 very reluctantly because we are not too happy about having to face a government that uses regressive taxation, that resorts to hidden taxes to collect from Canadian consumers enormous amounts of money, admittedly to strike where it shows the least and use measures at its disposal such as the sales tax, the most unfair of all because it affects everybody without any consideration of income. Rich and poor alike pay the same sales tax. That is what a regressive tax is, Mr. Speaker, and a sales tax such as this one must be changed, even though it brings in significant revenue, and I think there is a disposition in this country to replace this approach with a fairer and more progressive one. But we are starting to lose patience with this Government. After three and a half years of endless studies and broken promises, Canadians have every reason to grow impatient.

The objective of Bill C-117 is to implement numerous sales and excise tax increases the Government announced in the Budget of February 18, 1987, also in the tax reform of June 18, 1987 and, finally December 16, 1987 in the most recent Budget of February 10, 1988. It is therefore because of those four Government measures that we now have before us a Bill that seeks to raise present taxes and give effect to the budgets or so-called economic statements the Government presented in the last year.

Mr. Speaker, I could detail those tax measures and tell you the 12 per cent tax the February 1987 Budget imposed on candy, snacks and ice cream as of July 1, 1987 has brought in $60 million in revenue and will bring in an estimated $80 million more in 1988-89. The same February 1987 Budget slapped a 4 per cent tax on cigarettes and tobacco that yielded $70 million in 1987-88 and will yield an estimated $77 million in 1988-89.

The air transportation tax was increased by $4 per ticket: $45 million in 1987-88 and $50 million in 1988-89; the sales tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline was equalized as of April 1, 1987, resulting in revenues of $30 million in 1987-88 and $30 million in 1988-89.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we had the tax reform in June and December 1987, when a 10 per cent tax was added to long-distance calls and the tax on cable TV was increased from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. As of January 1, 1988, this tax will raise $877 million in fiscal 1988-89.

As was stated by a number of my colleagues in this House, the tax on long-distance calls is unfair because it mainly affects people who live in rural areas. The tax on cable TV is unfair to people on medium and low-incomes for whom this may be the only kind of entertainment they can afford. And now the tax on cable TV is being increased from 8 to 10 per cent. There is also an increase from 8 to 12 per cent on paint and wallpaper, which will raise $60 million in 1988-89. The accelerated remittance of sales and excise tax, which will become effective in April 1988, will raise $1.6 billion. Another increase in the excise tax on alcohol and tobacco from 15 per cent to 18 per cent will raise $175 million.

The 1988 Budget brought down on February 10 brought us a one cent per litre increase in the excise tax on gasoline. This will raise an additional $225 million in 1988-89.

Mr. Speaker, what I don't like about sales tax, and I think many Members will agree, is that it is applied indiscriminately. The rich pay and the poor pay. They all pay the same amount because this tax is collected on a transaction, and no matter what your income is, the tax remains the same. That is why it is regressive, unlike the tax tables which are progressive, in other words, the more you earn the higher your income tax.

As I said earlier, this Bill implements certain statements made in the House and certain Budget proposals, but for some reason the Government has put off presenting this Bill until today. Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual for the Government to delay such a Bill. It has made a habit of bringing in Bills that affect all Canadians and increase taxes just before the House adjourns for Christmas, Easter or for the summer.

Mr. Speaker, we must remember that the same Government, the same Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the same Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised not to raise taxes. And we do remember. This is not new.

I want to quote from Hansard of March 6, 1984, two statements made by the Minister of Finance:

> We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high.

But that is what he did, he made the load heavier still, not by taxing the rich and the 60,000 Canadian companies which do not carry what I consider their fair share of the tax burden, but by taxing low- and middle-income Canadians.

Here is a statement made by the leader of that Party, the Prime Minister of Canada, and reproduced in Le Devoir of November 29, 1984. I am quoting: "Canadians pay a fair amount of money for government services, and they have the impression they are paying enough". Quite true. The Prime Minister was right. As individuals we pay enough taxes. Perhaps he might practice what he preaches and tax his friends, those rich people who do not pay their fair share.

Since the Conservatives took over, Mr. Speaker, revenues from indirect taxes, sales taxes, excise taxes, went up much more sharply than those produced by direct taxes. Revenues from sales and excise taxes jumped by 77 per cent between 1984-85 and 1988-89, while personal income taxes rose by 55 per cent since this Government was elected, as compared with only 28 per cent for corporations and rich people. Through personal income taxes, sales taxes and excise taxes, individual Canadians rather than corporations had to shoulder most of the added burden.

Again, Mr. Speaker, for your enlightenment I could sum up the table I have here which shows the load Canadians have had to carry since September 1984: indirect taxes, higher sales tax from 9 to 10 per cent on October 1, 1984, from 10 to 11 per cent in January 1986, and from 11 to 12 per cent in April 1986. And each time it meant an additional $1 billion in the public purse, $1 billion more from hidden, regressive and unfair taxes.

I have here a list, which could be of interest to Conservative Members, concerning increases in the excise tax on gas: for example, 2 cents a litre on September 23, 1985 generating $900 million in revenue; 1 cent a litre on January 1, 1987—$450 million; 1 cent a litre on February 19, 1987—another $450 million. And, on April Fools' Day, we will get another increase of 1 cent a litre—$300 million in revenue, for a total increase of 23 cents on a gallon of gas in Canada since they came to power.

Mr. Speaker, their avowed objective is to tax the poorer people in order to get the large sums of money they cannot or do not want to get honestly in a progressive, open and fair manner. There is also the 10 per cent tax on long distance calls and cable television services. The Hon. Minister should rise on that subject and explain how those young people . . .

I see that he is singing, he finds it funny. The young people find it funny, Mr. Speaker . . . He is playing the violin . . . But I say to him that the young people, like their parents, will remember this Government for taxing cable television and long distance calls.

I could perhaps read from another interesting list on this Government's costs.

We spoke about indirect taxes earlier, and we shall now deal with direct taxes, which are collected up front.

First, the de-indexation of family allowances, personal credit and income tax tables. Since January 1, 1986, the Government has relieved Canadian taxpayers of $635 million by de-indexing family allowances. The Members opposite are happy about it!

Mrs. Bourgault: We are paying for your mistakes!

Mr. Gauthier: Since January 1, 1986, the elimination of the tax rebate has brought in $650 million. By eliminating the deduction for the Registered Home Ownership Plan as of May 22, 1985, the Government has taken away $125 million from Canadians. The temporary surtax of 5 to 10 per cent on high incomes from July 1 to December 31, 1986, has brought in $500 million. The general and permanent surtax of 3 per cent for all taxpayers implemented on July 1, 1986, has brought in $1.2 billion. The change in the tax system for dividends implemented on January 1, 1986, has brought the Government $300 million. The change in the spousal exemption implemented on January 1, 1986, has cost taxpayers $20 million.

Mr. Speaker, I heard one Member say: "That is nothing!" It was a Conservative Member, one of the silly ones who usually make such comments. "That is nothing!"

For him, Mr. Speaker, $1.2 billion, a general surtax of 3 per cent, on to all taxpayers is nothing.

The Hon. Member is probably wealthier than average Canadians. "That is nothing", say the Conservatives, Mr. Speaker!

This is why the public is becoming cynical as far as the Conservatives are concerned. It is because of such comments that the Government has lost all credibility.

An Hon. Member: All credibility!

Mr. Gauthier: That's right, the Government has lost all credibility, you have lost, wasted and destroyed everything in the past three and a half years. The little you had in 1984 you have now lost!

Mrs. Bourgault: The polls say—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I like to hear such comments because they keep me interested. There is nothing more useful than to have people make comments. It is interesting.

I would like to point out to those Hon. Members that Canadians will remember that this Government said: "These taxes are nothing! That is nothing!"

• (1240)

Maybe I should go back to my second language and say that indeed the Government's actions speak for themselves. It chose to bring in a Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act for second reading just before a recess in the hope that the opposition Parties will debate and pass it quickly.

As we know, these revenue-raising items are some of the tools used by the Government to create its smoke and mirrors illusion that the deficit has indeed decreased. If it has, it has been at the expense of the average Canadian wallet. My colleagues and I would like to spend some time in drawing attention to this Bill and in telling the people of Canada how the accelerated federal tax and excise tax remittances and the manufacturers' sales tax will impact upon them.

I spoke about the illusory $29.3 billion deficit. It bears repeating that one of the ways this illusion was created was through the use of accounting tricks such as the acceleration of federal sales tax and excise tax remittances. Canadian employers who must deduct income tax, Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance contributions from their employees and remit those amounts to the Government have been required to do this with greater frequency since 1987. In January, 1987, employers had been remitting once a month. They then had to start remitting twice a month, increasing the paperwork and workload of their operations. This gave the Government a one time increase in revenue of $1.6 billion. Then the Government told the employers to remit deductions weekly, resulting in another increase in revenue for the Government.

Due to the fact that pay-roll deductions based on new tax rates will not begin until July, 1988, the Government has given itself a six-month interest-free loan for this year of about $1 billion, because employers will still be remitting at the old rates between January 1 and July, 1988.

I want to now address the changes related to the manufacturers' sales tax, dubbed the silent killer of jobs by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself. Between October 1, 1984, and April 1, 1986, this tax increased from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. This resulted, as I said previously, in a $3 billion gain for the Government. Manufacturers, too, are required to remit this tax earlier, sometimes even before they have collected it through sales. The Government continues to tinker with this tax, apply it to more goods, broaden the base, and increase the rate, and evidently this will continue because the national sales tax that the Government was going to replace it with will not be presented before the next election, or the next two elections if the Conservatives, I hope, do not return to power.

The Government said in 1984 that it would not increase taxes, but it has done so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. There are questions and comments to follow.

Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to address some comments to the Government's Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. What we have before us is a pot-pourri of partial measures, quick fixes, limited claw backs, but above all revenue-raising measures which the Government has now put together in one vast portmanteau of legislation.

We are today examining changes arising out of the Budgets of February 18, 1987; February 10, 1988; the June 18th, 1987 White Paper on tax reform; and the December 16 tax reform paper. It is important to state the context in which the Government, rather than introducing measures and policy changes in an orderly fashion and getting them passed in legislation, is saving them up for this sort of Bill where so many changes come at one time that it is almost impossible for opposition speakers to isolate effectively the individual measures to measure their effect on the over-all tax system and tax yield, and of course to critique them effectively. However, that is perhaps what the tax happy Torquemadas, the excise extortioners of the Tory Ministry of Finance, want to see.

I am somewhat reminded of the petition given to James VI after he became James I of England in which it was stated that monopolies sit in our seats, sleep in our beds, sup in our cups. Thus it is with these excise taxes with their pervasive and deleterious effect throughout the Canadian economy and their distorting effect on the consumption and purchase patterns of Canadians. What we have here is not a sensible realignment of the tax system as this Bill should be. What we have is not a reform, not an overhaul, not even really a reasonable, minor maintenance program for the excise tax system. Rather, what we have is a wholesale and thorough continuation of some of the principles that even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has seen fit to speak out against in the past.

Why is that? It is, of course, to raise revenue. It is of course for the Government's stated goal of deficit reduction, and the revenue raising capacity of some of these commodities with their, to the Tories, unlimited ability to bear additional taxes.

I am reminded of another example or paradigm from the early days of taxation. This concerns the Minister of Finance of Henry VII of England, one Morton. He was known for the instrument called Morton's Fork whereby he would visit a wealthy noble, perhaps, or merchant, and if he was seen to be living modestly and frugally, then he must have accumulated some reserves which Morton could dip into or appropriate for the purposes of state that his master bade him do. If this merchant or noble was seen to be living lavishly—on a Tory sort of scale, I suppose—Morton said that his consumption was excessive, that he was obviously a person of manifest and evident wealth and was therefore able to contribute handsomely to the coffers of the king.

The point that I want to make, of course, is not that taxation is carried on in that way nowadays, although the long-suffering taxpayer may often feel that this is the case, but rather that the key to understanding this is to identify whom Morton went to visit. We see some unhappy similarities between whom Morton went to visit and whom the Tories went to visit because, naturally, there were those whose position or status kept them above even Morton's attention. Similarly, there are those whose status or wealth keeps them above the attention of the Tory Minister of Finance.

It is worth-while reiterating who they are, Mr. Speaker. Above all, of course, are the corporations, the chief sponsors and, in spite of any resolutions that might be passed, the chief financiers of the Tory Party, namely, profitable corporations. Last year, 60,000 profitable corporations in Canada did not pay tax. It is partly because of the failure of the Minister of Finance to bring in tax for them that we are forced to spend the time of the House reviewing this smorgasbord of legislative measures to raise that same amount of tax by slicing and dicing the consumer and the taxpayer.

Another class which Morton did not visit and the present Government does not visit is the wealthy. Tory tax policy, as implemented in Budgets and legislation, has led to some very handsome tax breaks for the wealthiest Canadians, those who have the highest personal incomes, notwithstanding the rather feeble attempt that the Minister of Finance made to adapt the policy and the platform of the New Democratic Party by bringing in an alternative minimum tax rate.

Whom does this latter day Morton visit, Mr. Speaker? He visits the middle classes and, increasingly, he visits the poor. That is where the Government is looking to raise the revenues which it sees as essential for reduction of the deficit.

The Tories have said that the reduction in expenditures is the over-all priority, but this sort of tax mining of the middle class and, increasingly, the poor, characterizes the approach. It is like the frog in the well. They get that expenditure down one notch, but in the meantime they are bumping up the tax side of the ledger by a couple of notches.

There are some revenue-raising items in this Bill which impact very seriously on Canadians, and inequitably upon some. With regard to the 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services, my hon. colleague, the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), pointed out that if you live in an isolated community a far higher percentage of your telephone calls are likely to be long distance. It seems that in some parts of the country you do not have to phone a very great distance before you start paying long distance charges.

I would like to point out a situation which pertains to some people in my riding. Entrepreneurs, in some cases, and people who choose to live in rural areas, in other cases, are now hit with a 10 per cent federal tax on the already very high rental rates that they pay for radio telephones. If you are a tourism entrepreneur on a lake 30 miles from Red Lake with no easy road access and, of course, no telephone line, in order to do your business you need to have a radio telephone. The rates for such a telephone range between $50 and $90 a month depending on the power of the transmitter and the service provided. Some of these people are suddenly being hit with a $9 per month federal tax imposition on top of all their other expenses for what is essentially to them a local telephone service. That is an injustice which the Government should consider.

The telecommunication programming services tax, a tax on the people's entertainment in the form of cablevision, is another revenue raiser for the Government. The committee recommended a $3 limit on the telecommunications tax in order to provide a measure of equity. That is something in which the Government is really not too interested and it ignored that.

Increasing the sales tax rate on paint and wallpaper from 8 per cent to 12 per cent is quite a substantial imposition on a particular portion of the population. It will, of course, affect the sales of do-it-yourself and home decorator stores. One wonders why.

The acceleration of remittances is another concealed revenue-raising measure. Before it came to power the Government made all sorts of vaunting promises to small businessmen about reduction of paperwork, reduction of bureaucratic compliance, and reduction of red tape. It is now prepared to put those people through the hoops of filling in returns on a weekly instead of bi-weekly basis and on a bi-weekly rather than monthly basis. I am sure that that is one sector of the economy which will not forget the way in which it has been inflicted upon by the Government.

I see, in the increase in the federal sales tax on beer, spirits, wine, and tobacco products from 15 to 18 per cent, that some of my more favourite vices, and some which I truly detest, are being hit in an equal fashion. I suppose that rather than making a specific confession I should point out that the Government has quite a range of legislative measures available to it if it really wishes to control and reduce the incidence of tobacco smoking.

Another tax put in for the purpose of revenue generation is the increase in the levy on air tickets. It must be pointed out that there are some benefits in the application of that levy, particularly for small, remote and isolated communities, and that it does not impact upon aircraft with a take-off weight of over 12,500 pounds. I am glad to see that exemption continued, and for this relief we give much thanks. However, I believe that we have increasingly a picture of taxation without representation whereby the Government continues to ignore many of the desires of the users of airports and airlines for whom, after all, it is a prime operating resource. That should be looked at very carefully.

The further increase on the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline is already having distorting effects in this economy. Since the Government came to power it has increased the excise tax on gasoline no fewer than four times to the point that now one-tenth of the pump price of gasoline is made up, not of total taxes, not of total federal taxes or total provincial taxes even, but of Tory increases. Every time the average Canadian fills his or her average domestically or North American produced automobile they are paying $2 in Tory increases alone for that fill-up.

Remote areas, of course, suffer from a lack of alternatives. We must recognize that by not taxing propane and by imposing lower taxes on diesel fuel the Government does provide alternatives. However, the people who use motor vehicles the most are the people who have the least opportunity to avoid the incredible imposition of those very same taxes.

I see that it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to returning at three o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, the Hon. Member will have seven minutes left for debate plus the ten-minute question and comment period when we resume debate.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

A DEFENCE OF LANGUAGES COMMISSIONER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a word in defence of Canada's Official Languages Commissioner, Mr. D'Iberville Fortier. He has been a strong and effective defender of the rights of Francophones outside Quebec. When one of the communities which I represent, Kapuskasing, Ontario, was locked in a struggle over official bilingualism, he was there to provide encouragement, support, and guidance. Thank you, sir, for that.

Now, because he expresses some concern for anglophone rights in Quebec, he is condemned and under attack. To all my colleagues in the House who have participated in this unjust criticism, I say think again.

To the Premier of Québec, and all members of his Legislature, I say shake off your hypersensitivity. You are part of a nation that stretches from sea to sea, from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland.

Our country is too vast, too magnificent, too beautiful to accommodate such pettiness in one of its parts. The criticism of one of Parliament's dedicated and devoted servants has been excessive, harsh, and entirely unnecessary.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

GREEK COMMUNITY'S CELEBRATION IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend the Greek community of Metropolitan Toronto, 120,000 strong, again celebrated the anniversary of Greek independence with an exciting parade and a huge banquet.

Last year on the same occasion, Professor Steve Triantis of the University of Toronto spoke for all ethnic communities, 40 per cent of Canadians, when he said:

> The leaders of all political Parties should be advised that no ethnic group in Canada holds a monopoly of excellence in brains and education. We demand full and equal participation in the political, social, cultural and economic life of this country. We shall be looking for action in particular with regards to appointments to boards and agencies.

This past weekend, a frustrating year later, he added:

> The leaders of all political Parties shall be judged by their acts not by their promises. We speak out today with our voices, tomorrow with our votes.

FISHERIES

REDUCTION IN ALLOWABLE CHINOOK SALMON CATCH

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, over the past 30 years Chinook salmon escapement in the lower Georgia Strait has declined from 30,000 to 4,300. For this reason I reluctantly support the 20 per cent reduction in the annual catch for all sectors of the fishing industry.

In order to reduce the over-all sports catch by 20 per cent, individual bag limits will be reduced from 20 Chinook to eight. Since 95 per cent of British Columbia's sport fishers already catch eight Chinook or less, this new policy will not hurt them. But it will hurt the charter boat industry and the tackle suppliers.

Gulf trollers will also be badly hurt by the 20 per cent reduction since it comes on top of other severe reductions since 1984. They fear that they are being squeezed right out of the industry.

Seiners worry that the Chinook reduction will cost them valuable days of fishing during heavy Pink or Sockeye runs. Indian people also face cut-backs in their traditional fishery.

Let us hope that these costly reductions, combined with enhancement, will do the job and our Chinook stocks will be restored to health.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO SCARBOROUGH RESIDENT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a Scarborough West constituent left his company because of corporate restructuring and opened his own business, which he had to close after 18 months of effort.

Although he had paid into the Unemployment Insurance Fund for 27 years, he was informed that he was not eligible for benefits because he had not paid into the fund during 10 weeks of the previous year. However, he also learned that he would have been eligible had he been in prison for those 18 months.

I speak to the House because here is a man who tried to start a business, and was denied what he could have gained had he committed a crime. I speak of this because sometimes, as Charles Dickens reminded us, "the law is a ass" and deserves a kick.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE ARMENIANS—REQUEST FOR UNIFICATION OF MAGORRY KARABAKH REGION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, since Secretary General Mikhael Gorbatchev came to power, a new atmosphere seems to be spreading over the USSR under Glasnost. We have witnessed several dissidents being released from prison, a new freedom of the press and other reforms.

Today, I should like to call the attention of the House to a most disquieting situation which exists in that country. I am referring to the situation in the Nagorny Karabakh region. Since 1923, this region has been part of the Azerbaïjan Soviet Socialist Republic. Because a great many of its inhabitants are Christian Armenians, the Nagorny Karabakh population has informed Moscow of its desire to become part of the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic and to have its borders changed accordingly.

I need not remind Hon. Members just how the men and women of this group have suffered over the past few centuries. Too many have died already. The unification of that area should proceed under the best spirit.

S. O. 21

Last week, we learned that the Soviet Union had taken measures to improve the situation of ethnic Armenians in Azerbaïjan. We hope that under Glasnost, Mr. Gorbatchev will continue this reconciliation approach and respond positively to the will of the Armenian people.

FINANCE

ENTRY OF GOVERNMENT INTO INTEREST RATE SWAPS MARKET

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, financial services, a few years ago only available in New York, London or Hong Kong, are now an integral part of the Canadian money market. A case in point is the domestic market for interest rate swaps which has grown to about $20 billion a year.

This year, for the first time, the Government of Canada has entered the domestic market. Although to date only a few hundred million dollars of swaps have been involved, this is an interesting development which will add depth and maturity to the market. At the same time, it marginally reduces interest rates on certain government borrowings, a savings for the Canadian taxpayer.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS AGAINST OPPOSITION GROUPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on Friday we witnessed the pathetic spectacle of the South African Ambassador to Canada trying to deflect criticism of an indefensible regime by claiming that Canada appears to back those who seek the violent overthrow of the South African Government. The fact is that all Canadians hope for a peaceful transition of power in South Africa. It is the Government of South Africa that does not.

Instead of encouraging meaningful dialogue between whites and blacks in South Africa in order to achieve majority rule in that country, the South African Government has banned black opposition groups, imposed media censorship, and has crushed any efforts to demonstrate against the evils of apartheid. Church people are arrested while neo-Nazis march in the streets with complete freedom.

It is not Canada that is encouraging violent revolution in South Africa but rather the repressive and uncompromising policies of the South African Government.

Let there be a revolution, but let it be a revolution of the heart, of the Afrikaaner heart, so that the violence accumulating in the hearts of the victims of apartheid might be transformed into energy for a new multiracial and democratic South Africa. Otherwise, it may indeed come to be the case that the South African Government will have sown the wind and reaped the whirlwind, and it will have no one but itself to blame.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

MEETING OF QUEBEC WING

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec wing of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada held its annual meeting in Montreal during the week-end. It was a real success. Our leader, Mr. Mulroney, sounded out his Quebec team. Over 200 fundamental resolutions and positions were drafted by the members and by the people, reflecting Quebec voters' daily concerns.

Mr. Speaker, those resolutions were first drawn up in 10 regional symposiums held throughout Quebec during the past six months. When members of the Conservative Party state their views, they are taken into consideration. They guide decisions taken by the Government. It was a genuine democratic exercise. The Quebec Conservatives have taken an important step toward cleaning up political practices when they adopted the principle of party financing by the people, something about which the Liberals are not happy.

Resolutions on the environment, reform or abolition of the Senate, regional development, agriculture and its renewal, the ageing population, etc, were analyzed. In short, serious discussions, Mr. Speaker. This is how the Conservative party listens. To the organizers, I say well done!

EXPROPRIATIONS

LA MÉMOIRE DE MIRABEL

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, March 27 is a memorable date in Mirabel. On March 27, 1969, the Liberal Government expropriated 97,000 acres of land to establish the Mirabel airport. From that moment was initiated the greatest litigation in the history of Quebec. The expropriated land owners regrouped in the CIAC in order to win back their lands that were unjustly acquired and not needed for the airport. On March 27, 1985, a sixteen-year struggle came to an end; the Conservative Government did justice to the expropriated and signed an historic agreement that terminated that social disorder.

Yesterday, on March 27, 1988, in Sainte-Scholastique, that matter was closed and Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond released La Mémoire de Mirabel, a book he hopes will prevent the repitition of such disasters.

Mr. Speaker, we must pay tribute to the people of Mirabel and their patriarch, Mr. Jean-Paul Raymond, for having shown that tenacious convictions can make one victorious in just causes. I invite all Hon. Members to buy that emotive testimony of solidarity whose language, as the bishop of Trois-Rivières said, is as straight as a furrow, as savoury as maple syrup and as direct as the cut of an axe.

FISHERIES

NORTHERN COD—LABRADOR SHRIMP COMPANY DENIED ACCESS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) is in Corner Brook, Newfoundland. If he is watching this telecast I want to ask him to take this opportunity to reverse the decision that he made to deny the Labrador Shrimp Company access to northern cod. As a result of that decision the fish plant in Cartwright has been closed, laying off 50 people. In a community of 500 where the plant is the economic backbone of the community there is no alternative.

I ask the Minister now to adopt the policy that those who are closest to the resource have primary access to it, and to grant the Labrador Shrimp Company access to northern cod so that small fish plants can remain open.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSORTIUM'S PROPOSAL TO BUILD MINESWEEPER PATROL VESSELS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited, a consortium of shipyards based in St. Catharines, has made a proposal to the Government which the Government cannot ignore. It was a design and build proposal for 12 minesweeper patrol vessels so badly needed to protect our two ice-free coasts.

CS&E has a full-time design team already at work on the project. It has technological experience in place. Five yards from coast to coast are involved. By sharing the work shipbuilders across the country will benefit. Construction could begin in six months.

To tender and delay the awarding of this contract could mean that other yards will suffer the same fate as Port Weller Dry Docks which, with the lay-offs of last week, leaves only 12 maintenance men in place.

I call upon the Government to grant this contract now to CS&E Limited. It has already done the groundwork, and it is its turn. To delay will simply cost the taxpayers more in the long run.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED DAM ON OLDMAN RIVER IN ALBERTA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a number of Alberta environmentalists met last Saturday with members of the New Democratic caucus in Edmonton to consider how to make sustainable development a reality, especially in agriculture.

A major concern raised at that conference was the Oldman River and the Alberta Government's plan to dam it at enormous cost for little benefit, all the while refusing public involvement and environmental assessment.

The federal Government has two reasons to be involved. For native people the Oldman dam would mean "the single most devastating project in the history of Alberta in terms of destroying prehistoric sites and historic buildings".

Environmentalists have asked the federal Government to consider the impact on sport fishing, which is excellent in that area. The federal Government has the jurisdiction to conduct an environmental assessment. So far it has refused to do so.

I call on the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to take the actions they can to stop this devastating assault on the environment.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF EARLY PAROLE FOR CONVICTED MOBSTERS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, law enforcement agencies are irate over the possible granting of early parole to mobsters presently serving time for committing various capital offences. These extremely dangerous individuals are gaining early parole for good behaviour even before serving two-thirds of their sentences. This is an absurd situation.

For example, one individual who is serving 15 years for arson and bombings also plotted a murder while still in prison. He received an additional 12 years and is now eligible for early parole for good behaviour.

It is clear that the parole board must receive new guidelines to deal with these underworld crime lords. Our law enforcement agencies must be given effective tools to protect society from this filth.

Justice must be done, not seen to be done, and all those who commit capital offences must serve all their time.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

DELAY IN PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO AND QUÉBEC CORN PRODUCERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Special Canadian Grains Program of the Department of Agriculture was set up to compensate Canadian farmers for their losses suffered as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill. The farmers who had seen their income drastically reduced were anxiously awaiting their cheques.

There was good news for some farmers, particularly those prairie farmers who were paid in February. I am really happy that they did manage to get their money. However, Ontario and Quebec corn producers will not be paid before the end of April. This situation is totally intolerable.

What it means for the Ontario grower in my riding is further losses. Those farmers will miss out on traditional discounts on purchases of products which are usually offered during the month of March. In some areas this will mean extra money to be reimbursed on loans that are now late for repayment because of this delay.

• (1415)

I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to use his powers to accelerate the payments to Ontario grain producers. Those farmers have suffered enough under this Tory administration.

SPACE AGENCY

A SPATIAL CAPITAL!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On March 23, the media reported that 160 highly specialized engineers would soon come to Ottawa to work for the Canadian Space Agency. The president of the National Research Council confirmed that 70 experts were already working on the orbital station project within that organization and that that number would soon rise to 120.

It would be a disgrace to let these people settle in the National Capital Region and then force them to move with their families to Montreal or some place else in order to comply with some Tory electoral agenda.

The Government must have the courage to confirm once and for all that the space agency will be in the National Capital. I say it loud and clear: the Government is already setting up that agency little by little. The National Capital Region is spatial, but it is also very special.

TRADE

IMPORTS OF BROILER HATCHING EGGS AND CHICKS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, nobody likes the thought of gassing day-old baby chicks. What is not cute either is the flood of surplus American hatching eggs and chicks which are displacing domestic production.

Six years ago those imports amounted to 12 per cent of our needs. They will be double this year. This is hurting Canada's $2.5 billion chicken industry of which $100 million is our broiler hatching egg industry.

A national agency was proclaimed in November, 1986, but producers have not been able to get the Government to agree to border controls, very necessary underpinnings to supply management.

I call upon the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) to place broiler hatching eggs and chicks on the import control list to avoid further damage to this fledgling Canadian industry.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Under the Official Languages Act, the Commissioner of Official Languages has the power and duty to comment on the status of the official languages in Canada. In fact, he has been doing that in his reports for many years.

While we might not have used the same language as the Commissioner in his recent report, on the other hand we must recognize that his report was balanced and he criticized language violations in all parts of the country. We might not always like what the Commissioner states, but we have never questioned his right to report freely. In this respect, he is like the Auditor General.

I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister if, in these circumstances, the resolution passed by Quebec Conservatives on the weekend is in accord with government policy? Further, does the Government agree with some of its members that the Commissioner should resign?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I think the Hon. Member would agree that the Language Commissioner is not an officer of the Government. He is an officer of Parliament. He is independent and should be treated with independence.

Insofar as the alleged offensive words that have been used are concerned, the Commissioner himself has recognized that perhaps he could have chosen words that were less provocative. I think he has recognized that, and for that he has apologized. Perhaps it should be considered within the context of the various mechanisms that we have in this Chamber. There is a special language committee of Parliament, which is a joint committee. Currently hearings are being conducted with respect to Bill C-72. I understand that the Commissioner will be appearing before that committee. There are also Estimates which have been referred to the respective committees.

There are various ways in which an elaboration of the points the Commissioner has made in his report can be elicited by all Hon. Members. I would suggest that that would be the best vehicle and mechanism to seek that clarification.

COMMISSIONER'S FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while the Commissioner reported on the situation of English-speaking Quebecers, he also expressed dismay about the case of Mr. Piquette, MLA, and the rights of French-speaking Albertans. If it is considered as a whole, his report can be seen as well balanced.

My question is this: Is the Government ready to support and defend the freedom of expresssion the Official Languages Commissioner needs to go on with his job?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think we have to take the Commissioner at his word. He has acknowledged the fact that perhaps he could have used less provocative language. In his press release he has said that while he may have pointed out his view in a rather blunt manner, he did not, despite certain interpretations, condemn the Government of Québec in his report. On the contrary, he credited the Government with a number of positive initiatives and expressed his confidence in its ability to reduce present language tensions in Québec.

Having made that clarification, and with all Members having the opportunity to cross-examine the Commissioner before the respective committees of Parliament, it seems to me that if any further elaboration is required that is the place to seek it.

BILL C-72—POSITION OF MEMBERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if the Conservative Party wants to censure those who really oppose bilingualism and minority language rights, why does it not condemn and demand the resignation of those Conservative MPs who oppose Bill C-72?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister may choose to answer that question, but I point out that the question is an allegation which goes to the motivation of Hon. Members and is completely improper.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to degrade this very sensitive issue into a partisan issue, then he is certainly going the right way.

Quite frankly, if he wants to condemn the Conservative Party, there are certain members of the Liberal Party in the Province of Québec who voted to censure the Commissioner of Official Languages.

If he wants to talk about Bill C-72, maybe he might want to explain why the Liberal Opposition wanted to filibuster it at second reading when we were prepared to put it through.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: We could set the record straight on that last assertion.

USE OF FRENCH IN COURTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the language used by the Commissioner in his comments on the linguistic situation in Quebec was certainly not judicious.

The report of the Official Languages Commissioner is a well balanced one, in which 95 per cent of the comments are about the francophone diaspora, that is those who live outside Quebec like myself but still use French in everyday life. Only three provinces out of ten have education programs in the minority official language under Section 23 of the Constitution. There are still three provinces where it is impossible to have a criminal trial in French, according to the most elementary principles of justice. What does the Government intend to do to remedy this situation, where you have to beg permission to speak your mother tongue in a legislative assembly, which is quite humiliating. What is the Government going to do to convince the six remaining provinces to abide by Section 23? What does he have in mind to protect our right to be judged in French in the three provinces that do not provide French in courts?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to quote selectively from the report of the Official Languages Commissioner, perhaps I could do the same thing.

He has been very complimentary about a number of initiatives this Government has undertaken. He starts in Part I by saying the following:

> The introduction to the proposed Canada-United States trade agreement offers the prospect of a "richer Canada—which can afford to enhance the quality of life through and for Canada's cultural endeavours."
> The Meech Lake accord, Bill C-72, a Multiculturalism Bill and possible new laws and policies on communications, broadcasting, citizenship and immigration convey some idea of what those cultural endeavours comprise and of the cost of maintaining Canada's distinctiveness.

Those are all initiatives which have been taken by this Government, and I think he is very complimentary in stating that.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER CONTACT SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for an answer.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what he intends to do. What do he and his Government intend to do to encourage, urge and if necessary pressure certain provinces to recognize the Canadian reality, the linguistic duality of Meech Lake? What does he intend to do to ensure that Canadians, wherever they happen to be in this country, are entitled to two fundamental services, education and justice, in their own language?

Is he prepared to invite the Premier of Saskatchewan and ask him, face to face, to take concrete action? A month ago, on February 25, the Supreme Court ruled that Section 110 applied to Saskatchewan. Not a word since then. The Legislative Assembly has been sitting in Saskatchewan since February 21, but not a word, not in the throne speech or anywhere else, about this matter . . .

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Gauthier: Does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to invite Premier Devine and talk to him and persuade him to do something in Saskatchewan? Will he bring him here to Ottawa to rap his knuckles and tell him to move, and move fast?

• (1425)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member being a member of the Liberal Party would always choose the option of confronting rather than co-operating. I think that in the course of this Government's initiative toward national reconciliation much has been gained in terms of bringing the country together and healing the wounds of the nation which were so bad during the course of the previous five years.

The Hon. Member talks about the Premier of Saskatchewan and mentions the Premier of Alberta. These two Premiers signed the Meech Lake Accord and all that goes with it. I think that is the best measure of confidence in the future of Canada and of preserving the duality of the two official languages in Canada.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

DISTINCTION BETWEEN CAMPAIGN EXPENSES AND ELECTION EXPENSES—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that the federal wing of his Party met in Quebec on the weekend, during which time they discussed the federal Election Expenses Act. During the so-called Masse affair, a very substantial loophole was discovered in the existing law permitting a Party to avoid dealing with any serious limits on election spending because of the distinction that has been made between so-called campaign expenses on the one hand and election expenses on the other.

Since both opposition Parties have called for this to be dealt with promptly before the next election is held, will the Government demonstrate its good faith and its commitment to this legislation by making sure that it is dealt with promptly before the next election?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the New Democratic Party is so sure that that is the position of his Party, I wish he would talk to his members. We brought the Bill forth for debate with the hope of moving it into committee where we could discuss—

Mr. Broadbent: What Bill?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Election Expenses Bill.

Mr. Angus: There is nothing in that Bill to do that.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is right, there is nothing in the Bill. We have entered into discussions with the opposition Parties. We are prepared to move this into committee so that we could discuss this very important issue. We think that, because there is a Bill before the House, with all-Party agreement we would be able to incorporate a new provision, and we had indicated our intention to do so providing we could get the support of the two opposition Parties. They chose to filibuster rather than to move the Bill ahead into committee.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to challenge the good faith of the Deputy Prime Minister on this issue because it is important, but my information was very different. If he is now saying that his Party is willing to deal with that matter on a priority basis before the next election, then, as I have already indicated, it is certainly our view that it ought to be dealt with. My understanding is that that is the view of the Official Opposition as well.

[Translation]

During the same Conservative Party Convention in Quebec, they also discussed contributions to political parties. I raised the question three times here in the House in the last twelve months, and I suggested we should have a decision on this issue before the next election campaign.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister on this subject as well. To show its political will, would the Government immediately refer the subject to committee for action, before the next federal election campaign?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know that the NDP spokesman on the Elections Act is not in the House, nor is his House Leader. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that there were discussions between the Government's Deputy House Leader and other House Leaders to move this Bill into committee so we could deal with the issue of segregation of election expenses and campaign expenses. It is true it was not incorporated in the Bill because it came to light during the course of committee hearings involving the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. However, we are prepared to do that.

With respect to the other item, if we can move this Bill into committee this is clearly another matter that could conceivably be considered. Certainly we have no problem with that. We thought it would be most appropriate because there are some very important matters in the Bill currently before the House that need to be moved on, and if we can incorporate the other provisions we would be prepared to do so.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows, the resolution passed by the Quebec wing of his Party did not obligate the Party at the national level or the Government in any way.

I have asked three times in the past year that all questions concerning the financing of political Parties be referred for action before the next election, with no predisposition to a conclusion. As well, two cabinet Ministers from Quebec have already made contradictory statements with respect to that Party's resolution. Therefore, will the Deputy Prime Minister commit himself to act on this before the next election instead of supporting something outside the House? It can lead only to conclusions of hypocrisy if it is not dealt with in the House.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will of course take that as a representation. There will be other matters considered when we get this Bill before committee. For example, we will be considering the propriety of the NDP financing municipal elections under the guise of the Elections Act.

Mr. Broadbent: That is good.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then we will see how far he goes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR SAFETY

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY FOR AIRPORT SECURITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I have in my hand a copy of a confidential task force report on airport security presented to the Minister of Transport in May of 1986. The report, prepared in the wake of the Air-India disaster, is signed by the Director of Security for Transport Canada and says: "The task force agreed that working conditions for the majority of security screening personnel are very poor, leading to low morale and a high turnover rate, and this inevitably had an adverse effect on security."

The report was presented to the Minister two years ago. Since then nothing has changed.

What action is the Minister now prepared to take in light of recent examples of slackness in our security screening system? Is he now prepared to take airport security out of the hands of Canada's major airlines and have Transport Canada assume direct responsibility for screening of passengers and baggage at Canada's airports?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was a task force report which I referred to here last week and which was acted upon. There were nine major improvements instituted as a result of that report. I outlined to the House how in excess of $60 million in additional funds have been spent improving airport security. Last September we instituted a screening procedure with respect to security areas in airports. All of this, of course, met with the opposition of the NDP and the unions they represent who have been kicking and screaming all the way.

With respect to the question of whether or not we are prepared to take over the screening of passengers at airports, as the hon. gentleman knows, I have summoned the presidents of the major airlines to meet with me to review that situation and see what they are prepared to do to improve the service. The Hon. Member's suggestion is a possibility or option which is being considered.

LIABILITY INSURANCE NEEDED BY SECURITY FORMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer.

The task force report also identified as a major concern the problem of liability insurance for security companies. Since that time, Pinkerton's, the biggest security agency in the world, and Burns, have withdrawn from airport security.

Can the Minister confirm for the House and Canadians generally the fact that, as a result of the near impossibility of getting adequate liability insurance in the wake of the Air-India disaster, if another disaster were to occur today those companies still engaged in airport security work would be forced to declare bankruptcy because they do not have the liability insurance they require, and those who suffer injury or loss of life would be unable to seek financial redress under this system? Can the Minister confirm that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to confirm some hoked up, hypothetical question about what might happen if there were another disaster, God forbid, of the Air-India type, and what would happen to the insurance requirements of certain unnamed firms—

Mr. Tobin: They do not have insurance.

Mr. Crosbie: —or whether they have insurance or not.

Mr. Tobin: They have to have insurance.

Mr. Crosbie: This is one of the silliest questions I have heard. I cannot be expected to take this question seriously. If the hon. gentleman was serious he might have given notice so that the matter could be looked into first, instead of continuing with his attempt at sensationalism, which is contrary to the interests of the industry.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS—FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS—DELAY IN RECEIVING T4 SLIPS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As he knows, the northern tax benefits for housing and travel are extremely important to northerners to offset their high cost of living. However, I can tell him that the number of pot-holes in the administration of this program are as large as those on the Alaska Highway.

Northern benefits guides and forms were not even out until late February. Now, contrary to Section 205 and Section 209 of the Income Tax Act, northern federal civil servants have not received their correct T4 slips as required by the end of February. If the Government cannot follow its own rules, how can taxpayers do so?

What is the Government doing to ensure that northerners all across Canada get the corrected T4 slips?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very timely question. The answer is as follows.

In this case she is referring mostly to Treasury Board since we are talking about federal civil servants. If there are errors or omissions in the T4 slips, then every employer has the responsibility to amend them and notify all concerned, particularly the employees in our Department, as soon as possible. I have had a word with my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister. We are aware of the problem and we are going to see what we can do to correct it.

INCOME TAX RETURNS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FILING DEADLINE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister extend the date for filing returns for these people if they do not receive the T4 slips immediately? In that way they will not be penalized and will not have to pay interest if they owe money and file late. As well, those expecting a refund will get interest because they have not been able to file at the proper time. If so, when will this be done?

• (1440)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of our Department that if the Government contributes to the difficulty of a taxpayer we make redress.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF CANADIAN CANCER SOCIETY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to Members' attention the presence in our gallery of Dr. Gweneth Ballantine, President of the Canadian Cancer Society, and her executive, with a special guest, Mr. Steven Fonyo.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TREATMENT OF LAID-OFF CANADA PACKERS PLANT WORKERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. When the amendments were introduced to the Unemployment Insurance Act dealing with severance benefits the Minister was careful to assure the House that all laid-off workers would be given exactly the same treatment.

Is the Minister aware that in the lay-off of 350 workers at the Canada Packers plant on Friday there was a major distinction between salaried workers, who have privileges to receive their UI benefits early, and hourly workers, who must wait several months before they will be eligible?

In light of that inequity will the Minister take steps now to ensure that the hourly workers at the Canada Packers plant, and other workers affected by the same situation, will not be treated in this unfair way and will be able to get their severance and UI benefits on a basis equal to that of all other workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is the first I hear about this. I shall take the question as notice and check to see whether or not the Hon. Member is right. If anything can be done, we shall take immediate action.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for responding. I hope that will be done in an expeditious way because the workers have in fact been laid off.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. His colleague, the Minister of Labour, was quoted as saying on the weekend that they are near to making an agreement on a major program to assist older workers. The Minister is aware that the Government cancelled the Labour Adjustment Program which would have provided assistance to older workers.

Since many older workers, including some at the Canada Packers plants, are now being left without benefits, can we get a guarantee from the Government that any proposal will grandfather benefits for older workers who were laid off during the interim between the cancellation of the Labour Adjustment Program and the introduction of the new legislation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say first that the program was not cancelled. We were at the end of the program.

With regard to the other part of the question, the Minister of Labour is working at the present time toward an agreement with the 10 provinces on the new program for older workers. The Government has always been concerned about the relationship with the provinces and, unlike the former Government, it will continue to work with the provinces.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CLOSURE OF MONCTON MAINTENANCE SHOPS—PAYMENTS TO FORMER EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is with regard to the CN shops at Moncton. CN's decision to shut the rail and shop operation at Moncton at a cost of 1,200 jobs was based on studies which supposedly show how much CN could save by closing down the operation.

Since these studies were done an arbitration award has confirmed contract rights for employees which will mean that by September, when the operation is finally shut down, CN will still have to pay over $10 million a year—full pay—for up to 300 workers to stay home and do nothing until retirement.

Will the Minister instruct CN to make these so-called rationalization studies available to the employees and to the Transport Committee or, if the Minister has the studies himself, will he make those studies known to all of us?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this matter has, of course, been discussed in the House many times. It is regrettable that CN had to take a decision to close the Moncton shops.

Mr. Rodriguez: You let them.

Mr. Crosbie: However, life changes—

Mr. Rodriguez: And so will the Government.

Mr. Crosbie: —as the railway industry has changed, and it was in the economic interests of CN, unfortunately, to close those shops.

CN's studies show quite clearly that it will make considerable savings as a result of the decision to close these shops. CN has, I suppose, the most generous compensation system in the world, or certainly in Canada, which applies in these situations. There will be very considerable compensation for the employees who are affected.

ECONOMICS OF CLOSURE

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, those studies were done before the confirmation of the arbitration decision that the CN will have to pay these workers. How can it be sensible for CN to pay 300 people to do nothing and have the work done elsewhere and pay for it there?

Why will the Minister not try to talk some economic sense into CN management and convince them to consolidate their operations, keep the shops open, and provide some job security for the workers who are there?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is complaining that CN has this extremely generous employment security plan. If you work for CN for eight years and your job is lost, CN will either ensure that you get a comparable job elsewhere, if one exists, or pay you your salary until you become pensionable. It is a very generous scheme.

Despite that, the facts remain and the figures show quite conclusively that it is most economic for CN, in view of the fact that it does not have enough work to support all of the main shops which it had in operation, to close the Moncton shops. The provision for the employees affected has been most generous.

Of course there was an opportunity for other employment to be provided in those shops. CN came forward with a plan to establish a manufacturing enterprise there but it was not accepted by certain of the unions involved, the co-operation of which was requested.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Recently General Theriault, a respected Canadian soldier and former Chief of Defence Staff, called the policy to create a nuclear submarine fleet, as a lot of defence analysts are saying, "an unaffordable extravagance".

In view of the mounting criticism of that policy is it not time for the Government to admit that the policy to create a nuclear submarine fleet has been blown out of the water? Is it not time to take that money and put it into the real, meaningful defence of Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, General Theriault also said, I understand, that nuclear powered submarines are an excellent weapons system and that the acquisition will greatly enhance Canada's maritime defence capability. Of course, that is precisely what we have in mind.

As the Hon. Member knows, after years and years of neglect our maritime capability is not up to the required standards. We have over 5,000 miles of coastline; we have three oceans. With the acquisition of these nuclear submarines we will have the capability of operating in all three oceans for the first time. That is going to contribute to Canada's defence and Canada's sovereignty. The Government remains committed to its decision.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if we had enough money we could do anything, including having a decent Post Office which we do not have. The point is that the General said that it is an unaffordable extravagance. That is the situation.

COST OF ACQUISITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the people of Canada do not want it and we do not want it, why does the Government not listen to the people of Canada and put that money into creating more jobs for Canadians by increasing the complement of the Armed Forces? Why not that policy?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should deliver the mail by submarine?

Mr. Rompkey: It will go just as fast.

Mr. Andre: After years of neglect I am pleased to be able to say that the Post Office will be turning a profit this year.

Every defence analyst who has looked at our situation has recognized that the most serious need for the Canadian military has been updated and modernized equipment. We have three very old diesel submarines and nothing else.

The Hon. Member says that we should expand the manpower, but one needs the equipment for the personnel to use. What good does it do to have more sailors if we have nothing for them to sail on?

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE CLAIMANTS—DELAY IN ISSUING WORK PERMITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, before July, 1986, refugee claimants were given generic work permits following their first inquiry when they indicated their decision to claim refugee status. Since then the Government has made it impossible for these people to work until after their statement under oath has been taken. As a result there are now about 7,000 refugee families in Metro Toronto waiting a minimum of eight months each, at a welfare cost of $500 per month.

• (1450)

Will the Minister restore to the refugee claimants permission to work as soon as they have had their initial inquiries so that they can regain their self respect by supporting themselves?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the current backlog, which is now nearly 50,000 people as I was informed this morning, has reached such a level that it would be much more difficult today to apply the policy which was in effect when there was only a backlog of a few hundred or thousand people. I believe that the best thing to do would be to allow us to take care of this backlog, and the Hon. Member knows exactly what he has to do in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina on a short supplementary.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONAL PERMITS BE ISSUED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that many of the delays are caused by the Department's scheduling problems. Therefore, if he is withholding the work permits as claimed in order to pressure people to make their statements, why not follow the advice of the Bar Association a year and a half ago and make the permits subject to revocation if there is undue delay? Let them support themselves.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to understand the coherence of a policy which gives a permit and revokes the permit if they are not refugees. The fact of the matter is that those persons have claimed refugee status. There are 50,000 in this country. It is unacceptable for all Canadians.

I believe that my hon. friend is honest enough to understand that, as long as we do not have what is needed. He knows very well that if the policy just on the other side of the wall is released, that will be the best answer for all refugee claimants in this country.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FAMILY VIOLENCE—CONCLUSIONS OF MINISTERS OF JUSTICE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last month, I asked the Minister whether he would agree to federal-provincial action with a view to reducing family violence. Within the last six months, three women have been killed by their husband or spouse. A federal-provincial meeting of Justice Ministers was held on March 16, 17 and 18. I would like the Minister to tell us what came out of that meeting and what conclusions the Ministers reach concerning this issue.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. I want to report to her and Members of the House that the federal-provincial meeting held in Saskatchewan on March 17 and March 18 was directed towards some specific topics. We are meeting again at the federal-provincial level in Québec on May 26 and May 27, at which time there will be an opportunity for more extensive discussions on a number of topics.

I should tell the Hon. Member that in connection with the particular representation she has made on the matter of family violence, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I have been working closely together with respect to a federal response.

As far as my responsibility for the criminal law is concerned, I am working with my provincial counterparts to look at areas of the Criminal Code which require reform to make sure that we can improve the law. This particular area is certainly one that our Department is considering.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Outremont on a very short supplementary, please.

REQUEST THAT SUBJECT BE PLACED ON AGENDA FOR NEXT MEETING

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I simply want to remind the Minister that, on February 29, he promised this House that this matter would be on the agenda. I would like the Minister to assure us that the issue will definitely be discussed at the next meeting in May.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is fully conversant with the complexities of this issue. The question of family violence is not something that should be dealt with solely and exclusively by the criminal law.

I think there must be a co-ordinated approach to this matter. I believe she would probably join with me in this particular effort.

We are dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code on a federal-provincial basis. It so happens that the federal-provincial meeting will take place on May 27 and May 28 in Quebec City, Quebec, Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO NON-STRIKING LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It deals specifically with the Supreme Court of Canada decision last week.

In a case where there was an industrial dispute in the workplace and workers who belonged to the same international union but a different local were laid off, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that they should be entitled to collect unemployment insurance benefits even though union dues go to the central fund to support strikes, or to support disputes.

An Hon. Member: You were right the first time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Minister intend to bring in amendments to Section 44 of the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it consistent with the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the legal implications of the Supreme Court ruling. I should think that in due course, before suggesting that the Unemployment Insurance Act might be amended—I realize my colleague likes that a lot, we have just done that recently—before starting over again I think we will try to find out exactly what the decision might entail.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I will recognize the Hon. Member for a supplementary question. There are a number of other Hon. Members who wish to be heard. I ask that the supplementaries be short.

REQUEST THAT STATUTE BE AMENDED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be short as usual.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You don't have any choice.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am standing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I assure the Hon. Member that I would believe him, where others may not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: It is good to know that I have a Speaker who has faith in me.

My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Supreme Court decision is consistent with recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration late last year regarding the whole question of Section 44 as it applies to locked out workers, maternity benefits, which are now paternity and adoptive benefits, for workers who are laid off because of an industrial dispute in the workplace.

When the Minister is considering amending Section 44, will he consider bringing those other aspects of Section 44 in line with the decision of the Supreme Court?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to be shorter than my friend. No.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, who is a—

An Hon. Member: A great man.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, he is a great man.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If the Minister is such a great man and deserving of all this applause—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Time is up.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister will no doubt wish that the Hon. Member would just stop right there. However, perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance tries to justify his interest rate policy he always says that it is for fear of fueling inflation. John Crow, Governor of the Bank of Canada, has an avowed objective to reduce inflation to zero. Do not think, Mr. Speaker, because they say it, it is their policy. The Minister is also imposing billions of dollars in indirect taxes on Canadians which in turn are fueling inflation.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Witness the 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls and increased tax on cablevision which has been in force since January 1. Witness the increased tax on gasoline which is coming onstream this week.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): My God, there is a bunch of stupid guys on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to be in your shoes and have the duty to maintain order in this place.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose all I can say is that what the Hon. Member has just said on one side is probably being repeated sotto voce at the same time on the other side. Will the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the Minister cannot say that he wants to keep inflation in check and impose taxes over taxes which fuel inflation. Why is the Minister saying to Canadians: "Listen to what I am saying, but don't watch what I am doing"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think you observed that the Hon. Member started his question on a far better footing than he finished.

The Hon. Member, I think, has to realize that we are trying to follow economic policy in the broadest sense. Part of it results in increases in taxes. Part of it results in decreases in prices. As a result of the increase in the value of the Canadian dollar, we see that the cost of imports to Canadian consumers comes down. That, hopefully, will be reflected in the Consumer Price Index and the broader cost of living.

If we are able to achieve that objective, then, as I have said before, hopefully we will be able to do this soon and get interest rates down. In the meantime we are following a balanced economic policy, to one part of which the Hon. Member has referred, but there are many, many other parts as well.

[Translation]

IMPOSITION OF INDIRECT TAXES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister why is he trying to squeeze the taxpayers in a vice. First he forces them to pay high interest rates because he claims he has to keep inflation under control, but then he continues to levy hundreds of millions of dollars in indirect taxes—we will be getting more of these this week, on April 1—and there again they have to pay.

What is the Minister trying to achieve by squeezing taxpayers from both sides at the same time?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I think the Hon. Member is being far too focused in his questions. He should look at the broader impacts of government policy and the broader objectives of government policy. Clearly, the broader objective, as I have stated on many occasions, as has the Governor of the Bank of Canada, is to improve the health of the Canadian economy and improve the ability of the Canadian economy to create economic growth and jobs.

That is happening. We have been right up at the top of the list in job creation. We have been right up at the top of the list in economic growth. We are trying to ensure that we continue that excellent performance, a performance that is widely recognized—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister. There will be one final question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
INTRODUCTION OF RATIFICATION LEGISLATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Many Canadians, myself included, believe that we should not be implementing the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement until after we have had a national election. However, all of that is going to be academic unless the United States Congress ratifies the agreement. Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that legislation intended to implement the agreement will not be introduced until after the United States Congress ratifies the agreement itself?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the preparation of the legislation is proceeding. When it will be introduced is somewhat uncertain at this time. However, I have indicated it will be sometime after April 11, so that gives me a little latitude. It will depend on a number of things that will have to be taken into consideration. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion as a representation.

Point of Order

[Translation]

POINTS OF ORDER

ALLEGATION OF FILIBUSTER ON BILL C-72

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to urge the House to consider the facts as they are and not as the Deputy Prime Minister sees them with respect to the matter of the debate on Bill C-72.

I want to get back to it because I think some Members have been suggesting that the whole exercise has turned into a filibuster.

[English]

The Deputy Prime Minister has repeated for days and weeks this filibuster obsession of his. After having had the bells ring for two solid weeks, he would know what a filibuster is. I want to remind him that Bill C-72 at second reading was here for three days only, February 8, February 9, and March 7. There was a month's delay when the Government had to deal with its own back-bench reaction, at which time we all heard and read about its hesitation in facing this Bill. There was an official time of nine hours and 37 minutes of debate. That is hardly a filibuster.

I want to remind the Minister and the House that on second reading on February 8 we had a total of three hours and 19 minutes debate, on February 9, a total of six hours and 49 minutes debate and a cumulative total on March 7 of nine hours—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I think that, obviously, it is not a filibuster.

When the Hon. Member rises on a point of order, naturally . . .

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that it is neither acceptable nor proper in this House to impute motives to a Member or a group of Members regarding a debate or a division. The Deputy Prime Minister keeps repeating . . .

[English]

He is imputing motives. He is breaking the rules of this House. I ask him to stop that kind of harassment—how is that for a word?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Poor baby!

Mr. Benjamin: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose, in the interests of fairness, I should hear the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and then I will hear the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). But I want to indicate that I will not hear Members for too long because it does not seem to me to be much of a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is a different one, if the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister is replying to the first one.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member's point of order is a different one, I will hear from him in due course.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council, and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my good friend, I think he knows that I never contravene the rules of this House intentionally, nor do I harass intentionally. What I was referring to is one day during the course of Question Period when both opposition Parties challenged me to bring on the Bill and they would pass it immediately. I took up that challenge. They decided not to pass it immediately. They decided to speak a little longer. That is the filibuster to which I was referring.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose the role the Chair at a point like this is to be satisfied that both sides have had their say.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking at Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 327. I would ask the Chair's guidance about my point of order, or that he give consideration to it.

There is a fine line between "read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the House". In response to a question by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) used information from the rationalization studies of the Canadian National Railways to the effect that the rationalization studies of the CNR showed how much money it could save regarding the Moncton shops. I admit at the outset that that is not a direct quote or citing of the document. Surely the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Transport is going to extra lengths to skirt the rule.

• (1510)

I am asking, Sir, that you check the "blues" and consider my point of order as to whether or not the Minister of Transport should table forthwith rationalization studies of Canadian National Railway regarding the Moncton shops.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary wishes to respond.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). We will check the "blues" and I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and report as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I will give this matter my consideration since the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is a very senior Member in this place. I note, however, that the Hon.

Member has indicated that it is not a direct quote. I have the point the Hon. Member is making and I will give it consideration.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANIMAL PEDIGREE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is presently on the Order Paper one motion to amend Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and there is general agreement that consent be given with respect to the following. The Hon. Member for Algoma in whose name the motion stands has been detained in his riding, unfortunately, because of weather. He has asked me if the House would give its consent to have the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) move the motion in his stead. I understand that the Government is favourable to this idea, as are members of the New Democratic Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Don Boudria (for Mr. Foster) moved:

That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 59 by deleting lines 42 to 44 at page 28 and lines 1 to 13 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"59.(1) The registration or identification of animals of a distinct breed or evolving breed in respect of which an association is incorporated may be performed only by the association, or by the Corporation on behalf of the association, and may not be performed by any other association notwithstanding any contract or arrangement to the contrary.

(2) Nothing in subsection (1) shall preclude any association from entering into any contract or arrangement for the normal conduct of its business and affairs."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I stand on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who was the representative of our Party on the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-67. When one is asked to substitute for a person who was on a committee and who is detained one has to pinch-hit, as we sometimes say. Notwithstanding that fact, as the deputy agriculture critic for our Party I am pleased to act on behalf of my colleague in proposing this amendment to the House.

The amendment which I am proposing is a brief one. I wish to refresh the memory of the House as to the contents of the amendment in question. Basically what we want to do is to amend Clause 59 of the Bill. In the first draft of the Bill Clause 59 was known as Clause 54. The current Clause 59—the one amended at committee—was amended by a member of the Conservative Party. I have the Hon. Member's name here but I know that we are to recognize a Member by his constituency. I believe it is the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell), if my memory serves me well in terms of the appropriate name of the constituency of the Hon. Member in question.

The Hon. Member for Perth introduced an amendment to the Bill thereby deleting Clause 59 and replacing it with something entirely different. That clause, removed by the amendment of the Hon. Member for Perth, states:

> 54.(1) The registration or identification of animals of a distinct breed or evolving breed in respect of which an association is incorporated may be performed only by the association, or by the Corporation on behalf of the association, and may not be performed by any other association notwithstanding any contract or arrangement to the contrary.
> (2) Nothing in subsection (1) shall preclude any association from entering into any contract or arrangement for the normal conduct of its business and affairs.

That is also the amendment I propose on behalf of the Hon. Member for Algoma. Everything that is in the amendment was in the government Bill before it was changed as a result of an amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Perth.

There are a number of things that disturb me about the way in which this whole matter was dealt with by members of the Conservative caucus. Principally, I am worried about the fact that the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation, or the corporation, according to this Bill, is mainly federally funded. Because of the fact that this funding goes to this organization the absence of the clause, its removal, means that the Government now wants to privatize that particular function. I am echoing here the sentiments of the Hon. Member for Algoma which he stated at committee.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is with us today. I hope that in the unlikely event that he is willing to consider our amendment, he is at least willing to place on record in the House that there is no attempt in any way, shape or form by the Government to privatize the function that I previously described.

The other concern that we have is the following. It is that if the Canadian Livestock Record Corporation loses its authority it will eventually lose the registration business of the larger associations, hence making it more costly to maintain the records of the small associations. It is somewhat like the argument that Canada Post brings to our attention at times. In other words, if someone else is allowed to do part of the more lucrative business the corporation will be left with the more difficult or less lucrative business. This means that it will be more costly to operate that part of the business because of the fact that the good business will be gone. This is a concern that was raised at committee by some groups.

Another concern that I have is with respect to the manner in which the amendment was brought forward. First, in view of the fact that the content was there in the original Bill, the contents of the amendment to which I am referring today, it must have been government policy. It must have been the policy of the Minister.

The Minister brought in a number of amendments to this Bill. Given that a package of amendments was brought in and in that package there was no mention of the particular amendment that was moved by the Hon. Member for Perth, I ask this: Was it the policy of the Government to have that amendment there, or was it simply an idea that came from the Hon. Member for Perth? Presumably it was a policy initiative which he was able to convey successfully to the Minister whereby the Minister's own policy should be amended to reflect the view of the Hon. Member for Perth. Or is it simply that the Government wanted to do this, but that the Minister felt that it would be politically more difficult for him or his Parliamentary Secretary to move the amendment, so he thought he would have someone else do it in order to take the heat off the Government for moving the amendment in question?

We have received a number of letters on this issue. I believe that we are permitted only 10 minutes to move our amendment, therefore, I cannot read all of the letters that we have received. The Parliamentary Secretary will know that we have received letters objecting to this change in Clause 59 of the Bill, or Clause 54, as the people were commenting on the first draft. There are people who would like that clause to remain.

In the true spirit of parliamentary co-operation to which we are accustomed from the opposition side, I would ask that the Government be as objective as we are on this side of the House and consider an opposition amendment to this Bill in order to restore it to what it was initially.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before addressing the remarks offered by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on behalf of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who, unfortunately, cannot be present due to the weather. I wish to inform you, Mr. Speaker, and the House that there have been consultations among representatives of the Parties of the House with respect to another minor amendment which we are advised would further the purpose of the Bill. I am referring to the following amendment:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary. We must first dispose of the Government's amendment before we go on with this amendment. If there is no further discussion, I will put the question.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I wish to speak to the amendment before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): First, I want to address two or three of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) when he raised questions as to the method by which the Bill was amended as it was during the committee stage. Perhaps I should begin by explaining that this Bill has been amended on several different occasions during the course of the hearings by the legislative committee. Quite frankly, I think that that process demonstrates the importance of the legislative committee function. The committee met on numerous occasions and there were many amendments. There is only a question about the one which is now before the House.

In my opinion, the wording in Clause 59, as it is presently reported to the House, having been amended by the legislative committee, should in fact stand. The implications of the amendment were very carefully considered. It was introduced only after considerable discussion and considerable notice. In fact, I believe there was some reference to this as early as December in our proceedings.

The amended Clause 59 as reported to the House was introduced at the request of several breed associations, including the Appaloosa Horse Club of Canada, the Canadian Charolais Association, the Canadian Beef Breeds Council, the Canadian Gelbvieh Association, and the Canadian Pinzgauer Association.

I would like to remind the House that Clause 59, as proposed by the legislative committee, will provide more choice to Canadian industry in processing its registrations. That is the reason why the amendment was adopted at the committee stage. We believe that this amendment as it now stands will promote an environment of free enterprise and competition in the area of maintaining records.

Under the current Livestock Pedigree Act, breed associations have the right to either register animals themselves, or have the Canadian national livestock records register those animals on their behalf. We felt that this policy was too restrictive. Since the wording under the legislation currently in force has made the policy too difficult to enforce, some associations are already using the services of another association to register their animals.

The Canadian Gelbvieh Association and the Canadian Pinzgauer Association are using the services of the Canadian Charolais Association to register and keep records of their animals. This working relationship between two or more breed associations has been very positive in terms of reducing the cost of record keeping and registration services.

Clause 59, as it now stands, will allow the expertise, staff, and equipment of one breed association to be made available to other associations for registration and record keeping purposes. Such arrangements will help reduce the need for so many breed associations to have their own record keeping systems and staff. It will also allow a choice of record keeping and registration services other than that provided by the new Canadian Livestock Records Corporation. This proposed amendment to the Bill as reported to the House in no way reflects upon the ability of the new Canadian Livestock Records Corporation to provide a service.

For some associations, it will mean a cost saving which will allow them to concentrate their efforts and finances on such other important activities as promoting, improving, testing, and showing breeds. The amendment of the Hon. Member for Algoma, as presented by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, could result in a reduction of the resources needed to support those positive activities.

I appreciate that the Members who supported this proposed amendment want assurances that the new legislation is in the best interests of Canadian industry. I am pleased to assure all Members that Clause 59 of the new Animal Pedigree Act, as it now stands, will ensure the continuing credibility and integrity of the Canadian livestock pedigree record system.

I remind all Members of the House that, under the current Clause 59, arrangements between associations for the registration of animals will have to be approved by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). This will ensure that quality and integrity of record keeping services are demonstrated.

If the Minister of Agriculture is not fully satisfied that a breed association can fulfil the requirements for registering and keeping records of animals on behalf of another association, the Minister will not approve the arrangement. It is as simple as that.

As a further guarantee of the integrity of the new system, the Minister of Agriculture can terminate any previously approved arrangements between breed associations, if there is evidence that an association is not living up to its responsibilities regarding the record keeping and registration of animals.

Throughout its long history, the Canadian National Livestock Records Corporation has maintained a high standard and a record of service to breed associations and thereby to Canadian agriculture. Under Clause 59, the Government is convinced that the new Canadian National Livestock Records Corporation can continue to provide the services of its predecessor while also standing up to the challenge of competition from other breed associations.

In conclusion, Clause 59, as amended in the legislative committee, should stand. It is a good amendment. It provides for competition where there might otherwise be an unjustified monopoly. The majority of breed associations do not oppose Clause 59 because it offers the industry both flexibility and the protection of built-in safeguards. Most important, it also offers them a choice in record keeping and registration services.

I would ask that the Hon. Member who has moved the amendment, having considered the arguments presented on this side, might consider whether he wishes to withdraw it and allow the legislation to proceed without any further delay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain the amendment of the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, be amended in Clause 21 by striking out line 44 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"Members have responded in writing to the consulta-".

• (1530)

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the sake of the record I should like to indicate that we have consulted and indeed we recognize that this was simply a technical omission.

I very much appreciate the co-operation of the two opposition Parties in agreeing to the amendment at this time.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm for my part that indeed consultation took place. The amendment in question is purely technical in nature. Therefore, the Official Opposition is always glad to co-operate, as usual, with the Government in further improving legislation for the benefit of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I concur with the proposed change. It simply clarifies the meaning of the Bill. I do not think it changes the meaning in any way and leaves no doubt as to what the meaning was intended to be.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the debate, but I should like to take this opportunity to thank members of the committee. As chairman of the committee it was a real pleasure to work with the two members of the Opposition and Members on this side of the House. They were clearly objective. There were representations from a great number of organizations, and I think that we reached a conclusion which will be very satisfactory to the people of the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Clark, Brandon—Souris) agreed to.

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-67, an Act respecting animal pedigree associations, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Andre (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add my words of thanks to those already expressed by the chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), and to repeat what I said a few moments ago.

Sometimes in the country at large, and perhaps even among the membership of the House, there is some skepticism about the role of the parliamentary process and, quite frankly, the role of so-called back-benchers in that process. Those who have had occasion to follow Bill C-67 through the hearings of the legislative committee would have been reassured to discover that, as is nearly always the case, there was very little partisanship. I appreciated that very much, because it was a clear indication that all Members of the House have real concern for the well-being of agriculture. This is demonstrated almost consistently in any agricultural issue which comes before the House, particularly at committee stage.

The manner in which the amendments were brought forward, studied, and acted upon certainly demonstrates the role of public hearings. It also demonstrates the role of receiving submissions and, quite frankly, the importance of the committee process.

I appreciate that the Bill perhaps required more clarification than we would have wished, but so be it. I think the committee accepted its responsibility in a very commendable fashion.

When I say that, I refer to all members of the committee irrespective of Party. On behalf of the Government I should like to express words of appreciation for the process as it proceeded.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief. I wish to echo those of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister and the Chairman of the Legislative Committee concerning Bill C-67 and thank all my colleagues of the House for their full co-operation in putting together a substantially improved Bill for the farm community.

This new legislation respecting animal pedigree associations which I believe will be given third reading in a few minutes contains amendments which have been long in coming and about which the least I can say is that they will bring about a much more up-to-date legislation.

[English]

The Bill before us which would regulate the activities of breed associations will be far better than previous legislation. We know that previous legislation was crying for renewal in that it had been in place for many years. As a matter of fact, we were told that it had not been amended since 1952. Obviously it was in need of amendment.

Many of the breeds and many of the issues involved in breeding animals today did not even exist at the time the last round of amendments occurred. Obviously the previous Act was due for rejuvenation much in the same way as our Official Languages Act needs to be brought up to snuff from time to time.

It is my opinion that the amendment proposed today makes the Bill better. However, notwithstanding, I know that there were groups which wanted a particular clause removed in the way the Parliamentary Secretary suggested that it was. As usual, the House will not be able to please all groups, particularly when two groups have opposing points of view on the same issue. The proposed Bill with its amendments is substantially better than what we had before, and I am sure that the House will want to give it quick passage this afternoon.

It is my hope that the Bill will become law very shortly, that it will receive Royal Assent and proclamation as soon as the other House can deal with it in what I hope will be an expeditious manner.

The industry has asked for the new Act. We have had co-operation of not only all Hon. Members of the House, as the very able chairman and I indicated previously, but we have had good co-operation from the Parliamentary Secretary, the department, and several groups of individuals representing breed associations before the committee.

As I indicated previously, I was not a member of the committee, although I think I attended three of its meetings, replacing the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) when he could not be there. I believe we were both at an initial meeting just to show our interest in the issue and to show our interest in agriculture, of course.

Having made those few remarks, I indicate my support for the Bill at third reading, as well as the support of my colleagues in the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in closing the debate on Bill C-67, I should like to point out that the Act will now clarify some of the procedures which breed associations will use to become official associations. The rules have been clarified on how they go about providing registration for their particular breed, how they establish criteria for a breed, and how they maintain those standards throughout the existence of the breed. In the past, we depended heavily on the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation to maintain the records for most official breeds. This Bill will permit, with Ministerial approval, some variations from that. That was a concern to the associations using the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation.

• (1540)

I believe that this change was permitted on the basis of it being an experiment which we would hope the Minister would monitor very closely. I point out that the proposed law does not allow any breed association to leave the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation willy-nilly. Associations must do so with the permission of the Minister and will require a reason. I presume the Minister will take great care in deciding on these issues so that he does not in fact undermine the credibility of the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation.

Under this Bill, as under its predecessor, it is possible for breeds to evolve and for new breeds to be created. Today, March 28, is a good day to commend the breeders at Agriculture Canada for the 20-year project that has just recently come to fruition. The creation of three new breeds of sheep was announced over the weekend, and the creation of a new breed is not something that happens very often in Canada.

The Lacombe hog was developed nearly 20 years ago through the efforts of Agriculture Canada at Lacombe, Alberta. The Hays Converter, an evolving breed rather than a new breed, was initiated by the elder Senator Hays and has been registered as a breed for 15 or 20 years. There are now three new distinct breeds of Canadian sheep.

The Canadian Arcott was developed for use as a provider of sires. It has a superior growth rate and a lean meat yield. Twenty-eight per cent of its genetic makeup comes from the Ile de France breed and the rest originates from existing breeds which are basically British breeds. The Outaouais Arcott and the Rideau Arcott are two sister breeds, but they are distinct breeds. They are intended to be used as prolific dams. They have an average litter size of 2.5 to 2.6 lambs per birthing. This is a highly prolific breed. The Outaouais Arcott is made up of about 49 per cent Finnish Landrace. Sheep breeders will know that they are a very prolific breed. The Rideau Arcott contains 40 per cent Finnish Landrace and 14 per cent East Friesian.

I think it is suitable, when talking about the Animal Pedigree Act, to give some recognition to these three new breeds of sheep. It is a fine coincidence that the announcement of these new breeds should come at the same time the new Bill goes through the House. This will continue the fine work and reputation Canada has always maintained as a consistent place to register new breeds and set up monitoring agencies such as the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation. This will ensure that genetics and registration procedures do meet international requirements so that we will be able to engage in international trade with the breeding stock we produce on Canadian farms.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. EXCISE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson: That Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): When the House recessed for lunch at 1 p.m., Mr. Speaker, I was criticizing the Government for its policies and their impact especially on remote areas of Canada. So I will continue with my comments on the transportation costs situation, in view of the fact that any tax increase on gas will be reflected by higher costs.

[English]

A sort of geared relationship occurs when this happens because the price of everything bought in a northern or remote area is influenced by transportation costs. Therefore, when fuel goes up, everything goes up. That is an effect which has never been fully investigated or quantified by the Government.

There are other items of a technical nature in this Bill as there always are in a measure that deals with excise tax. I think it is worth while instancing some of the effects these will have on Canadians. Of course, the shift of the tax on motor fuels to the manufacturing level is supposed to address compliance and administration problems, but we have also seen a shift to the wholesale level for snack foods, pet food and kitty litter, candy and confectionery goods and some electronic equipment.
