The Scriptures were read by the Rev. J. Kay, and prayer was offered by the Rev. J. A. Measmore and Mr. Geo. Webster.

After opening remarks of a congratulatory character from the Chairman, the names of the representatives from the Quarterly Boards to the District meeting were called for. Thirty four laymen were found to be present, only one being absent.

The greater part of the morning session was taken up with reading the statistics of membership of churches, and of the connexional funds raised on the various circuits.

In the afternoon the election of lay representatives to the General Conference was proceeded with, amidst a great deal of interest. The ballot resulted in the following being elected:—Isaac Langford, Birr, Geo. Webster and Alex. Johnson, London; and J. B. Lane, Dorchester station.

Speeches were called for, and the elected representatives, in suitable terms, expressed their thanks for the honor conferred upon them. T. M'Cormick, Esq., of this city, was the next highest on the list.

Ballots were again distributed for the election of a representative to the Stationing Committee. Revs. Graham, Dickson and J. E. Dyer, of Belmont, shared the votes cast, resulting in the election of the latter.

Recommendations to the Missionary Society, and to the contingent fund for special grants were made in regard to three circuits.

Only one change in the boundaries of circuits was recommended, viz., in the case of Belmont Circuit, in which it was deemed advisable that one appointment be transferred to the Springfield Circuit.

Requests from the Lucan, London South, London North and Centralia Circuits, asking permission to sell property, were passed on to the Conference.

Thomas M'Cormick was elected as the District Representative to the Conference Missionary Committee, and James Evans and Wm. Bowman the lay members of the Contingent Fund Committee.

After some minor matters had been attended to, this harmonious and profitable meeting was brought to a close about 7 p. m. by Dr. Sanderson pronouncing the benediction.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Large Meeting in King Street Methodist Church.

Last evening a temperance meeting was held in connection with the Conference in the King Street Primitive Methodist Church. Mr. F. W. Day, of Collingwood, was the chair, and, after religious exercises, called upon Rev. Mr. Moor, of Mitchell, to address the meeting.

Mr. Moor said that the temperance question was the all-absorbing question of the present day, and he took a stand against the liquor traffic, because it impeded both our temporal and spiritual interests. Out of the 4,000,000 population, 40,000 were addicted to strong drink. This was a frightful army of drunkards, which was being constantly recruited by moderate drinkers. He called upon the ministers to work for the cause of temperance.

Rev. Mr. Kerridge, of Hamilton, was the next speaker. He said there was great unanimity on the question. Nearly every one now doubts the evil of intemperance, or that drunkenness is caused by drinking intoxicating drinks; that the best health and ability to labor is secured by total abstinence; that the removal of intemperance is desirable, and that the complete remedy for the evil is total abstinence. He wondered that the people did not rise in their might and demand that the evil should be swept away. The Government would not do this because of the vested interest in this trade. He condemned the Crooks Act because it endeavored to make the licensed victuallers trade a respectable trade. He thought it would be better to allow every one to sell liquor to the community, dispensed with the licensed victuallers' trade altogether. The increase of drunkards, which amounted to 139 per cent. during the last nine years, showed the little effort for good produced by the Dunkin Act and the Crooks Act, and he thought that the money paid to public schools should be taught the evils of intemperance.

[Rev. Mr. Hughan, of Bowmanville, thought that the friends in these parts were backing up the wrong tree. He thought that temperance could not be separated from religion. We must implant men sober by legislation (hear, hear), and he thought that a pledge of total abstinence should be made imperative on every church member.

A collection was then taken up, and the meeting concluded with prayer and praise.

Professor Henry's Religious Faith.

The following is an extract from a private letter written by the late Professor Joseph Henry, in the 12th of last April:

"We live in a universe of change; nothing remains the same for even one moment till another, and each moment of change in time has its separate history. We are carried on in the general current and course of life of our destiny, and at the end of the voyage we are always at a considerable distance from the point of its beginning. How short the space between the two extremities of an earthly career, the point of birth and that of death; and yet what a universe of wonders are presented to us in our rapid flight through this space! How small the wisdom obtained by a single life in its passage; and how small the known when compared with the unknown. The accumulation of the millions of lives through the art of printing in hundreds of years!

"How many questions press themselves upon us in these contemplations! Whence come we? Whither are we going? What is our destiny? What is the object of our creation? What mysteries of unfathomable depth environ us on every side; but after all our speculations and attempts to grapple with the problem of the universe, the simplest conception which explains and connects the phenomena is that of the existence of one spiritual being, infinite in wisdom, in power, and all divine perfections, which exists always and every where which has created us with intellectual faculties sufficient in some degree to comprehend his operations and his moral laws, and in nature by what is called 'science.' Thus we find, as it were, a chain of evidence, his operations are always in accordance with the same laws, the same principles governing the same. Events that happen to-day will happen to-morrow, and then again a thousand years to come, providing the condition of existence shall be the same. Indeed a universe governed by law would be a universe without a God, and without a moral principle. In the scientific explanation of physical phenomena we assume the existence of a principle having properties sufficient to produce the effects which we observe; and in this principle we assume the existence of logical deductions from it all the phenomena which, in a theory, thus we have the theory of light, the theory of electricity, etc. There is no proof, however, of the truth of these theories, except the explanation of the phenomena which they are intended to account for. This proof, however, is sufficient in any case in which every fact is fully explained, and can be predicted when the conditions are known.

"In accordance with this scientific view, on what evidence does the existence of a Creator rest? First, it is one of the truths best established by experience in my own mind that I have a thinking, willing principle within me, capable of intellectual activity and of moral feeling. Second, it is equally clear to me that you have a similar spiritual principle within yourself, since when I ask you an intelligent question you give me an intellectual answer. Third, when I examine operations of nature I find everywhere through them evidences of intelligent arrangements, of contrivances to reach definite ends precisely as I find in the operations of man, and hence I infer that those two classes of operations are results of similar intelligence. Again, in my own mind I find ideas of right and wrong, of good and evil. These ideas, then, exist in the universe, and therefore form a basis of our idea of a moral universe. Furthermore, the conceptions of good which are found among our ideas associated with evil can be attributed only to a being of infinite perfections like that which we denominate God. On the other hand, we are conscious of having such evil thoughts and tendencies that we cannot associate ourselves with a divine being, who is the director and the governor of all, or even call upon him for mercy without the confession of one who may affiliate himself with us.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

WOODSTOCK.

Mr. John Coventry, who is well known here leaves for a trip to the Old Country in a couple of weeks. He, of course, expects to see Paris and its wonders. We wish him bon voyage.

Francis Monilon, of New York, is in town.

Gurney, the notorious wire-sign vender, who has been erecting business signs here, left rather suddenly, much to the regret of his many creditors. Oh, if I could but catch him, he should have free lodgings in Castle Casimo."

Our Town Fathers need a good hard rub. A mistaken idea of economy has hitherto prevented them from placing a few lamps on our side streets. Strangers who visit us can see, and will attest, that Woodstock is the dirtiest, dustiest town in the Dominion. Would that we could have a Council elected who would at least take a passing interest in the well-being of our town.

The Queen's Birthday is going to be celebrated with due order, as befits a country town of such pronounce as Woodstock. Our native Indians have in a grand concert in the evening of that day. Their names do mortal ear could twist around them.

On Monday evening a very successful concert was given in Knox Church by the Woodstock Choir in Aid of Dr. Barnardo's Home for Little Arabs. It was decidedly one of the best given here this season. The programme was a good one, and was well rendered, the musical part of the entertainment being a worthy of mention. Miss Nora Macklin, a young lady of Ingersoll, who gradu. ated from the Toronto Conservatory of Music—is a complete mistress of the piano, and the brilliancy of her touch and the sound stirring music brought down the house—the audience, one and all, agreeing that such a brilliant performer was appreciated as a Woodstock audience cannot better be. This young lady is a decided acquisition to our town, and we are often to appear in our Town Hall as a pianist. All the other singers have appeared often before the Woodstock people, therefore they need no word of commendation from me. Miss Macklin being a stranger, and one whose music was deservedly appreciated, as the number of encores received attested.

The band is playing on the Market Square this evening.

A large quantity of ties for the Credit Valley Railway has arrived, and the section between this and Streetsville is being rapidly pushed on to completion.

Mr. George Forbes, prior to leaving for Cleveland, was presented with an address and a valuable ring.

HURON COUNTY.

The Goderich Masonic Hall had a narrow escape from being destroyed by fire last week. The premises in their occupancy, which contained six lamps, fell to the ground, breaking some of the carpet, which was completely destroyed. A few of the Masons were fortunately present, who extinguished the flames.

Three girls, aged five, eight and nine years respectively, living in Goderich, formed a little boy aged three years to accompany them to a lonely spot near the station and there stripped him naked. One girl held her hand over the little fellow's mouth while the other two beat his body with burnt staves until the child fainted with pain. This is a crime of no ordinary depravity.

WEST MIDDLESEX.

The Rev. George W. Wye, incumbent of the Wardsville Mission, is leaving the Mission for Port Perrowl, where he has been appointed Rector. His late parishioners have signified their appreciation of his services by presenting him with the following address, accompanied with a handsome double-cased gold watch and chain of superior workmanship. The watch was procured from the establishment of Messrs. A. S. Murray & Co., of London. The following is the address and reply:—

To the Rev. George W. Wye:

REV. AND DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned members of the several churches of Wardsville, Glencoe, and Newbury, comprising "The Wardsville Mission," desire to express to you our regret at your removal from amongst us after a period of nearly five years, rendered during which we have found you have efficiently discharged our pastoral duties, and, by your unwearying kindness towards us, and untiring exertions amongst us during the whole period of your incumbency. We are aware that from the extent of the mission your duties, particularly on the Sabbath day, have been very arduous, and at times difficult to perform, yet through the grace of God you were enabled to do so cheerfully, we have ever found you ready to afford your kind administrations as a pastor cheerfully and willingly, notwithstanding the large extent of your parish; these and many other of personal consideration which endear you greatly to us, and amongst us a great loss, we can but congratulate you on your removal to a sphere of labor where you will be less onerous, thus affording you more leisure for study, and also enabling a lesser strain upon your mental and physical energies. We avail ourselves of this opportunity of begging your acceptance of the accompanying gold watch as a parting gift, expressive of the high esteem in which you are held by your late parishioners, sincerely wishing you every success and happiness in your future labors, and trusting that you may long be spared to labor in the vineyard of your Master, which the Apostle terms "the field of the world."

REPLY.

My kind Friends in Wardsville, Glencoe and Newbury:—

It is with mingled feelings of regret and pleasure that I rise to thank you for your extremely kind address, and for the gift with an welcome accompanies it. The pleasure is the regret with which I leave this pleasant part of the vineyard through enforced labor I have lately resided, one of what we have, under divine Providence, accomplished by united effort during more than seven years of, I trust, fruitful labor.

As long as consistent I will, this work has been too much for me, and that alone, is the reason why I leave you.

I have had expressions of sympathy in your address, please accept my heartfelt thanks in return for the same. I have in your prayer and sermons presents a deeply exhausted by the unanimous opinions which have prevailed in for me at this time of financial depression, as well as the general feeling of sorrow at the prospect of my leaving, which I have long wished for but never possessed—a good home-keeper.

As your pastor, and now bidding you for a season farewell, I earnestly add a word of counsel—Be true to yourselves as christians, and be faithful to the wealth and intelligence of this section, representing as they number over fifty families. Your future looks bright, and I trust it may be realized to the fullest extent. Be true to your principles, and have God's glory ever viewed with and those dear to me by your kindly sympathy and prayers, and your generous present and sympathetic address.

Permit me once more to thank you, and in the hope of reunion in everlasting life, given unto us by our Saviour, I am wishing for you all God speed you at the farthest a short farewell.

PERSONAL.—Mr. W. B. Heath, of Messrs. Heath & Finnemore, Commission merchants, has returned from his business tour in Britain. He came out by the "Egypt."

PROFESSOR GOLDWIN SMITH.—The London correspondent of the Liverpool Courier greatly regrets to announce that Mr. Goldwin Smith's visit to England is drawing to a close, and that he will shortly return to Canada.

GRANGERS' PICNIC.—The annual picnic of the Grangers of East Lambton will take place on June 4th in the grove of Mr. Charles Smith, 2nd line, Warwick. Seventeen lodges are expected to take part in the pleasures of the day.

BAND OF HOPE.—At a meeting of the Managing Committee of the London Street Centre Band of Hope, held on Wednesday evening, Mr. W. D. Willis was elected Secretary. We predict a very successful future for the Band under the new management.

CREMATION.—Mr. J. Skeffington, B. Major of the 7th Battalion Band, writes to say:—"Without going into the information about the Forest demonstration was in error. Mr. King, of Sarnia, paid the band before they started for home. No doubt Citation was meant instead of Forest, as that account is not paid yet."

SENT BELOW.—The two navvies named William O'Brien and Patrick Shane, on account of whose brutal assault upon Mr. Charles Manung was given in these columns yesterday, were tried before Squire Lawrason yesterday afternoon. O'Brien was convicted and sent to jail for a month at hard labor. Shane was bound over to keep the peace for a year.

NEW PATENTS.—The new patents granted at Ottawa up to the 22nd were:—A. P. Roberts, head and detacher; W. J. Lloyd, lawn mower; A. V. Stewart, vegetable packing and lubricator; W. A DISORDERLY HOUSE.—At an early hour yesterday morning, Serjt.-Major Baskerville and constables raided the house of Thomas Ley, in the southeastern part of the city, and took out of it Keziah Ley, the younger, and a girl named Mary Bennett, a young woman whose character has been severely hurt by her frequent appearances at the Police Court. Owing to the fact that the old woman Ley's child had died since the arrest of the parties, the investigation was adjourned until the 31st. Bennett was remanded to jail, and the other allowed on bail.

A SNEAK THIEF.—For some time past, Mr. Alex. Cousins, of the Cousins House, Wellington street, has missed sums of money from the bar-room till, and had a suspicion that the bar-tender, a young Englishman named George D. Lane, was the person who was making too free with the cash. Mr. Cousins, on Wednesday night, marked some money, and placed it in the drawer. It was missed, and when Lane was arrested by Detective Murphy this morning some of the marked coin was found in his pocket. He pleaded guilty before the Police Magistrate, and was sent to jail for one month at hard labor. He is also suspected of stealing a number of shirts from the hotel.

LOCAL LEGAL.—In Chancery, at Toronto, on Wednesday, before Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot, in the case of Crouse vs. Crouse was re-argued. This was a petition by the Huron & Erie Loan and Savings Co. to set aside decree herein. No order made on petition in the meantime. Sale to go on under decree. Costs reserved. W. Cassells for petitioner; Meredith for plaintiff; Moss for defendant. In the Common Pleas, in the case of Petrolia Oil Co. vs. Englehart, J. K. Kerr, Q. C., moved to set aside verdict for plaintiff and enter verdict for defendant, or reduce damages. McRoberts vs. Allen; Becher, Q. C., moved for rule nisi for new trial. Reserved. McDonald vs. South Dorchester; J. K. Kerr, Q. C., obtained rule nisi to set aside verdict for plaintiff, and to enter non-suit.

MARRIAGE OF A YOUNG LONDONER IN DETROIT.—Wednesday, at H. M. Barnard's, second son of Mr. P. C. Barnard, of this city, was married to Miss Hattie, youngest daughter of D. C. Whitwood, Esq., of Detroit. The interesting ceremony took place at the private residence of the bride, and was attended by over one hundred friends, the élite of the city, some coming from Chicago. The happy pair were the recipients of a large number of handsome and costly presents on the occasion. The affair caught the happy couple took their departure for New York to spend their honeymoon. We are sure the friends of Harry will be pleased to learn of the success that has attended him since he left London, which can be ascribed to his own industry and undeviating fidelity to his employers at all times.

POLICE COURT PECULIARITY.—At the Police Court yesterday, Patrick O'Brien was charged with being drunk. He excused himself by saying that he had met a friend—and probably smelt his breath. Pat was discharged, with a caution. Wm. Brown and Henry Markham, two waterworks laborers, were charged with vagrancy. They were told to be gone at once. Messrs. Smallman & Ingraham were ordered to pay $4.35 for keeping horses too long on the sidewalk. Thomas Cavanagh, John Cavanagh and Dick Chrystler were arraigned for feloniously entering a car on the Great Western Railway and stealing therefrom biscuits and confectionery. The two Cavanghs elected to be tried by a jury at the sessions, and Dick said he would take his by the County Judge, if there were no objections. The information against the three was laid by Constable Logan, and the case was watched for the Company by Inspector Day, of the G.W.R. On evidence being taken, there was not sufficient testimony adduced to warrant the Cavanghs being detained, and they were accordingly discharged. Chrysler was sent for trial.

Another new style of note paper has been introduced. It is light green and sprinkled with flowers. It does not smell as sweet as it looks, however.

The youthful mind contemplates with joy the approach of the swimming season, while the undertakers are laying in an extra supply of small-sized goods.

The camphorated incense at many of the churches on a Sunday suggests how unanimous the public are in resenting its presumptuously-near approach to their nostrils.

A woman named Jane Stewart escaped from the Asylum for the Insane on Wednesday night. She was a pauper, and had been employed in one of the departments.

Green things, which got such a fine start the latter part of April and the first of May, are now growing very slowly, on account of the chilly nights and touches of frost of late.

The indiscretion of a married man leaving strange women's letters in his coat pockets, where the inquisitive wife of his bosom can discover them, is one which can never be atoned for.

When a man wants to get rid of his wife in California in the shortest time and easiest clime, but in this climate he hires a man to tell evil tales of her and then goes off with a handsome girl.

A Benedictine exchange observes, critically, that marriage is a lottery in which the man generally draws a prize. This is too distressingly enigmatical. Blank check, or the devil, or some other "unspeakable Turk!"

In the course of a few days, it is said, a band of "lecturers" on the Eastern tour, will be let loose upon the country, and about 80 of the number will be simultaneously having "Mary had a little lamb" in as many parts of the country.

Mr. W. H. Dyer, salesman for Messrs. C. F. Colwell & Co., while assisting in the removal of a piano yesterday morning, had the misfortune to have his ankle broken, in consequence of one end of the instrument coming on his leg.

"Anything new or fresh this morning?" a reporter asked in a certain city office. "Yes," replied the occupant of the apartment. "What is it?" queried the reporter, with pencil poised in one hand and his note-book in the other. "That paint you you so recently had painting against." Such are the pools a newspaper man must be taught.

There are those in the world who seek to throw a strong light on the faults, errors and deficiences of their neighbors, keep a score of suspicion in waiting for their friends; are ever ready to assign mean and low motives for acts which are per se disinterested, to cast a slur on generosity, to smile decisively on honesty, or to nod suspiciously on enthusiasm. This appearance is the reflex of their own perverted natures.

A RUNAWAY CAPTURED.—About a year ago to-day young man named Patrick Moore enticed a little girl named Allen under a bridge at the corner of Maitland and Great Market streets, and attempted to commit an assault upon her person. The assault was committed in the afternoon, but the child not being reported to the police authorities until night, Moore had plenty of time to make his escape. Detective Murphy took the case in hand, and acquainted the police of the towns and villages within a radius of thirty or forty miles of the city, and yesterday afternoon received intelligence from Chief Constable Wilson, of Stratford, that Moore was in custody, and that if necessary he would take him into custody. Detective Murphy telegraphed him to detain Moore, and that officer leaves this morning to bring him to London. Thus Patrick Moore's "chickens are coming home to roost."

A CABLE TELEPHONE.—There is telephonic communication between Stony Island and Amherstburg, on opposite sides of the Detroit River. The tone vibrations are transmitted by the cable, which contains a number of separate wires in close proximity. Superintendent Woodford, of the Canada Southern, who is a scientific gentleman and a thorough telegraphist, has discovered that the telephonic vibrations would be interrupted by the adjoining wires in the cable and that the sounds would be unintelligible. The result proves that they are as clear and distinct as those carried on an insulated and separate wire upon land. The tele phone in use on the Canada Southern is supposed to be the first that has been attached to a submarine cable.

IMMIGRANT CHILDREN.—Mr. John T. Middlemore, the founder of the Children's Emigration Charity, Westminster, will leave Liverpool (D. V.) on the 30th instant with one hundred children. He is expected to arrive at Guthrie Home, in this city, on or about the 16th of June. This will be Mr. Middlemore's sixth annual visit to these shores with juvenile emigrants from England since 1872. Already over eighty applications, accompanied with references, have been made for the children expected to arrive.

FRONTIER ARMAMENTS.—Two nine-pound cannon from the London (Ont.) arsenal were received in Windsor Tuesday, and are to be placed in position in front of the Court House at Sandwich. Lieut-Colonel Taylor, commanding the forces of the western district of Canada, arrived in Windsor Tuesday with sealed orders, and after instructing the Captain of the Essex Rifles to inspect his company and see that they were ready for service, started on Wednesday for Chatham and other interior towns.

ENTERTAINMENT.—Another entertainment under the auspices of the Red Ribbon Club and 7th Batt. band, took place in the recently erected tent last evening, and was fairly attended. The music was of a very pleasing character, and was manifestly appreciated by those present. In addition to the band, the following took part:—Misses Henrietta and Hamilton, Messrs. C. A. Sippi, S. Charlton, and J. Godfrey. Mr. St. John Hytteraach presided at the piano.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Uticas are losing rather heavily of late, but what they want is an elegant reception. There is nothing like elegant receptions and music to make a club play ball.

The Rochester Democrat thus teases the Buffalo press over the second defeat by the Rochesters of the Buffalo club (5 to 3) on Wednesday:—"Again was the band told its services would not be needed, again were the candles placed back in the boxes, again was the banquet hall deserted, and again were the congratulatory speeches laid aside until a more convenient season. The city was hushed in gloom, the bells tolled dismally, the wind howled in its anguish around the corners, and the lake, catching up the sad sounds of woe, carried them far out across the waters, where they were lost in the innumerable throng that had gone on before. Gentle reader, let us not gaze upon this scene of anguish, a city mourning for the lost.

The Tecumsehs played an exhibition game at Syracuse, yesterday afternoon, with the Stars, of that city—the same club that defeated the Champions a week ago in an international match—and who, so far, lead in the race for the pennant. There was a large crowd in attendance, and Mr. George C. Campbell umpired impartially. Mr. Powers did not play, owing to the injury he received the previous day at Utica. Dunnigan caught during the game, and filled the position as well as could be expected. McCormick, the regular pitcher of the Stars, laid off for a day, his place being taken by Farrell and Macmillar, both of whom proved puzzling to some visitors, although no fewer than 14 base hits were made off them. The Stars did not succeed in batting Goldie to any extent, only 5 base hits being credited to them. Barnes made 3 two-basers, and Hall, Goldsmith and Doescher succeeded in piling up three to their credit. The error score showed 10 for the visitors and 8 for the Stars. The following score will supply the points of the game:—

THE NEW TECUMSEH CLUB.

Meeting of Shareholders Last Night—The New Officers.

A largely-attended meeting of the shareholders of the "Tecumseh Base Ball Club" was held in the Tecumseh House last night for organization, under the charter recently obtained from the Ontario Government. Mr. J. L. Englehart occupied the chair, and Mr. Alfred Gilbert officiated as Secretary.

The following Board of Directors were chosen:—Messrs. Englehart, Moore, J. Jones, Gilbert, Gorman, W. Hill, E. R. Robinson and F. Mulkern.

The new Board subsequently met, and elected the following office-bearers:—

President—Mr. J. L. Englehart.

Vice-President—Mr. John W. Jones.

Secretary—Mr. F. Mulkern.

Financial Secretary—Mr. A. P. Tregent.

Treasurer—Mr. E. M. Moore.

Managers—Messrs. W. Hill, J. Plummer, H. Gorman and E. R. Robinson.

It was reported that the Eastern tour, from which the players will arrive this morning, had been a very successful one, after paying expenses over expenditures being about $600.

CONFIDENCE MEN ABOUT.

Two Sharpers Play a Little Game on a Verdant Countryman.

Yesterday afternoon, while a gentleman, who is in attendance at the London Distriet meeting of the Methodist Church, was strolling about the G. W. R. platform, he was accosted by two young men, one tall and dark and the other shorter and of fair complexion, who represented themselves as being about starting for a trip to the East with a few car loads of cattle. They commenced with the usual palaver time, and one of them drew out a cheque on the Bank of Montreal for $1,800 in the name of Mr. Sharpe, and intimated that he would like to have it changed, and suggested that he would pay a gent a man a decent percentage if he would advance him a sufficient sum to buy cattle over to-morrow. The layman, after hesitating some time, manifested a disposition to accommodate, and the trio adjourned to a bar-room, where they all drew out a cheque on the Bank of Montreal for $1,800 in the name of Sharpe. The following scene will supply the points of the game:—

Sharpe—Now, gentlemen, I'll stand treat, and we'll have a little game of cards to see who will pay the treat.

Layman—I don't play cards.

Sharpe—Oh, you must play a game with us.

Layman—I don't play cards.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of dice, then.

Layman—I don't play dice.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of checkers, then.

Layman—I don't play checkers.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of dominoes, then.

Layman—I don't play dominoes.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of euchre, then.

Layman—I don't play euchre.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of poker, then.

Layman—I don't play poker.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of seven-up, then.

Layman—I don't play seven-up.

Sharpe—Well, we'll have a game of old sledge, then.

Layman—I don't play old sledge

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

New York, May 30th.—The Herald's St. Petersburg special says the Emperor has given orders to prepare a grand theatrical representation to take place on the proclamation of peace.

London, May 30.—A Vienna despatch reports that the charter of the Umbria, now on the coast of Maine, has not been renewed, and the steamer will return to Hamburg before long. This is regarded as a bad sign.

London, May 30.—The prices of securities on the Stock Exchange continue to rise.

A despatch from Berlin says that the Emperor William has appointed Prince Bismarck and Herr von Bulow to represent Germany at the Conference.

Edinburgh, May 30.—A London correspondent says:—Rumors of a dissolution of Parliament are again current.

London, May 30.—The reported removal of Fuad, Osman and Mukhtar Pashas from their commands before Constantinople is not confirmed, but it is stated that the Sultan is suspicious of them, and appointed Mahmud Damad Minister of War partly for the purpose of neutralizing their influence, although the act is likely to have a contrary effect, as Mahmud is unpopular with the troops. The Sultan nominated him without consulting Sadyk Pasha, hence the withdrawal of the latter from the ministry. Mehemet Rushdie Pasha, Sadyk's successor, is represented to be honest and patriotic, but too old to have much influence. He is known to favor an alliance with Great Britain.

London, May 30.—A despatch says that Bismarck and Von Bulow will represent Germany at the Congress.

London, May 30.—It now seems probable that some scheme for a British protectorate over Asiatic Turkey has really been put forward by the Government.

The Times says a constitutional ministry in Turkey is at present a mere dream. There must be some permanent centre of force to control by its attraction the shifting elements of Asiatic anarchy, and that central force it is to be hoped the Porte will consent to accept at our hands, and thus introduce the only principle of stability into its Government of which it is capable.

The London correspondent of the Edinburgh Scotsman says:—There is little reason to doubt that our Government is determined to exercise control in Turkey, which will, to a great extent, place the actual government in our own hands, not that the Sultan's authority is to be interfered with, but we shall take care that under the new treaty a reformed and good government shall become a reality.

It is reported that fears are entertained in St. Petersburg of an outbreak or hostile collision at Constantinople. No such apprehensions are felt in London. It is also thought Russia is merely bargaining for the utmost available concessions before a final agreement is made. Thus a special despatch from St. Petersburg on Thursday says the general peace feeling is strongly evidenced by the appointment of Prince Labanoff to Constantinople, and the departure of Gen. Ignatieff for his estates. It is said England ought to meet those pacific overtures by the recall of Minister Layard, who is not in sympathy with the present attitude of the Russian and British Governments.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg last night is in the same strain. It expresses the fear that the war party at Constantinople may produce a crisis, and says the appointment of Labanoff in the place of Ignatieff was intended to lessen this danger, and broad hints are now being thrown out that the British Government might give some corresponding proof of its pacific disposition. These hints furnish a probable explanation of the present apparent hitch in the negotiations. Trouble from the Turks is altogether improbable.

A telegram last night says the impression generally prevails in Constantinople that peace is assured.

The threatened trouble between the Turks and Montenegrins is the result of the aggressive action of the latter, who crossed the river Zeta and occupied the heights commanding Podgoritza after the conclusion of the armistice. The Turks now demand the withdrawal of the Montenegrins.

A letter from Constantinople, explaining the recent change of position by the Russian forces, says the country between San Stefano and Adrianople is exceedingly malarious, and 15,000 Russians on that line have died mostly of fever within two months.

Various special despatches mention Schouvaloff, Lord Lyons and Andrassy, Waddington, Count Corti and Sadyk Pasha as the representatives of their respective Governments at the Congress.

A telegram from Berlin says Bismarck and Von Bulow will represent Germany.

Herr Von Radowitz, nominally Minister to Greece but permanently employed in the Prussian Foreign office, will take notes and make a daily report of proceedings, and M. Tiny, formerly Secretary of the French Legation in Berlin, and now Minister at Cape Lagen, is expected to draft the final report embodying the decisions of the Congress. It is believed in Berlin that Greece will be invited to send a representative.

London, May 30.—An extra edition of the Globe contains the following:—

"We have good reason to believe that the assembling of the Congress is definitely settled. England and Russia have arrived at an understanding, subject to the decisions of the Congress, on the following points:—

"1. Bulgaria is to be divided into two provinces—one, north of the Balkans, under a prince; the other south of the Balkans, but not touching the Ægean Sea, with a Christian governor and governing as far as that of English colonies.

"2. Turkish troops to pass through Bulgaria.

"3. England explores, but does not possess, the retrocession of Bessarabia to Roumania, and reserves the right to discuss Congress the arrangement relative to the Danube.

"4. Russia retains not the Dobrudscha, but Asiaguntier, or Isle of Serpents, in the Black Sea, or interprets with the Russian claims of her creditors.

"5. The question of payment of the Turkish indemnity is discussed by the Congress, which decides Thessaly, Epirus and Candia.

"6. Bayazid is to be added to Turkey ceding the province of Passin.

"7. Russia agrees that the passage of the Dardanelles and Bosphorus shall remain open.

"8. England will support at the Congress the claim of Europe to reorganize Bulgaria, and will discuss the questions of Russian occupation and the passage of troops through Roumania."

Vienna, May 30.—Count Andrassy has informed the Hungarian Delegation that he thought England and Russia were determined to agree between themselves. Hungary. So far, none of the questions Russia replies to the Ambassador's objection to the Treaty of San Stefano have been conceded in consequence of the changing views of the two Powers. The plain meaning of yesterday's despatches means exhausted those involved the interests of Austria, to which the Danube and Roumanian questions were important. Andrassy's language was determined. He said the monarch vested on a basis of historical development.

Constantinople, May 30.—The Commissioner of the Porte reports that the Batumdan insurgents number 30,000, well armed and impregnable. They refuse to disarm as the Russians are powerless to repress the excesses of Bulgarians.

If an understanding is reached on certain points in the first few sittings of Congress, the British fleet will retire from Besika Bay, and the Russian to Dardanelles and Adrianople.

Chakir Pasha, Turkish Ambassador to Russia, has left for St. Petersburg.

London, May 31.—The Morning Advertiser says the negotiations have made such satisfactory progress that Sir Stafford Northcote may be expected to make a statement in the Commons on Saturday.

A St. Petersburg special says it is rumored that Montenegro will be evacuated in a few days. Public opinion and the press are more and more disapprove of the Government's concessions. The army is also [illegible] over the Armistice. The Turks have demanded the withdrawal of the Montenegrins.

THE RUSSIAN PRIVATEERS.

A Grand Naval Scheme on Foot.

New York, May 30th.—Of nine Russian officers from the Cimbria wh[illegible]ed Tuesday, six left yesterday for Philadelphia. Commodore Lowe, with lieutenant Chichizoe, sub-Lieutenant Shize and Midshipman Branner still remain town. Commodore Lowe accepts the command either of the Columbo or the State of California, now undergoing some alterations, and will cruise in the Atlantic. When asked if the Russian agent intended to buy any more ships, he said:—"Certainly, he will have twenty as many as he likes." Daniel Dodge, Minister of War partly for the purpose of neutralizing their influence, although the act is likely to have a contrary effect, as Mahmud is unpopular with the troops. The Sultan nominated him without consulting Sadyk Pasha, hence the withdrawal of the latter from the ministry. Mehemet Rushdie Pasha, Sadyk's successor, is represented to be honest and patriotic, but too old to have much influence. He is known to favor an alliance with Great Britain.

Fatal Accident—Squabble Between Coroners.

THE CANADIAN PRESS ASSOCIATION.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie at the Helm.

Special Telegraph from Our Own Correspondent.

Toronto, May 30.—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie received a deputation this morning from the Orange Association, who came to request him to order out the militia to prevent the Orange procession on the 12th of July. The minister could only be a civil authority, and the deputation was informed that this department would undoubtedly be powerless. They replied that they would be powerless. They would then call out the Queen's Own Rifles, Hamilton, and the Governor-General's Body Guard, Toronto, and would be bloodshed. The deputation waited on the hon. gentleman for the Crown Counsel and withdrew.

This morning three men were brought up before the new brewery of Messrs. Thomas Davis & Co., on Queen street, charged with having in their own possession 132 or 14 feet, and immediately afterwards named Spinks and Ingham, two other named Reynolds and Riley, the latter having a wife and a family of children, was a sober, steady man. Inspector Riddel, coroner, on hearing of the accident at four o'clock, went to the police station and obtained a warrant for the arrest of the four men. Two hours afterwards Spinks, another coroner, issued a warrant. They were also secured a warrant. They were arrested in an empty house in the rear of the residence of deceased, and Dr. Bergin was found at the door and secured the key. It appears that he would hold an inquest on Robinson, it is understood, is detained in his right and, if not, he will be refused admittance to the house. Mr. Bergin, Inspector of the Canadian Association met here to-day, and it is said he will be in attendance to-morrow at 2 p.m. The annual trip will be made by the steamer Bergin to Detroit by rail; thence by steamer to Sarnia and return by rail. The Civic Council have purchased 500 feet of Brooks seamless cotton hose for the Fire Department, at $1.20 a foot, being 15 cents per foot under the price paid for ordinary rubber hose. It is stated that seven crowds filled the Queen's Hotel corridors on Monday, when Mr. Gladstone was enthusiastically received. It was an immense crowd, which filled the whole evening, preventing the voice from being heard beyond a few in front of him.

JAMAICA.

Great Drought Prevailing—Casualties of the Late Governor—Money Case.

Kingston, Jamaica, May 30.—Great drought prevails. The cattle are suffering from the withering dried up.

The planters are all doggedheads with Sir Henry Musgrave, the new Governor, in a law making importers of provisions pay two-thirds of the cost of immigration expenses, the planters paying the remainder. Hitherto the planters have only paid one per head. The charge now will be $106. Sir Anthony Musgrave is best remembered for opening up the country for the extension of its resources. He is a brother of the telegraph king.

KID GLOVES,

AS SEEN AT

A.B. Powell & Co.'s

The Kid Glove Department of our Big Establishment is the most attractive feature about the Dry Goods trade of London.

We know that our Lady Customers speak in praise of A. B. Powell & Co.'s Gloves, and say that they are unrivalled for fit, quality of kid, sewing, &c. Still, we could not be so untruthful as to say we are the only direct importers of Kid Gloves in London. We well know that a Big House having a trade for any special line of goods and possessing Cash or CREDIT can go into the markets of the World and buy so as to successfully compete with rivals in the same line of trade.

One thing we do assert, that the sale of our Sensation Glove, at 75 cents, and A. B Powell's Favorite, at $1, is confined wholly to us. We further assert that no house in the West can show their customers—we think—as good a glove for the price as we can.

A call and inspection of our Kid Glove Department respectfully solicited.

THE GRIT CANDIDATE AT CHATHAM.

Mr. Macmahon has already mastered the most important part of a Grit politician's education. He can howl as fiercely, boo as assiduously, bespatter himself and party as effectively, and abuse his opponents as scurrilously as though he had stood half a dozen campaigns with Mr. Mackenzie on his right hand and Cartwright on his left. In fact, Mr. Macmahon is not aware of any reason that at least one-half of his abilities should not be received in the worst possible taste by the other half based on the most incorrect reasoning. The latter may well plead that justice be tempered to mercy, and justice be satisfied to see him [illegible] as a candidate just [illegible] career as an advocate [illegible] ago to bolster up a [illegible] the former there is [illegible] his manner of addressing [illegible] which is utterly [illegible] gentlemen. Perhaps [illegible] Macmahon may [illegible] good severe, but we [illegible] here no wish to [illegible] grossly with [illegible]

Ashe calls himself [illegible] he has had a fair [illegible] professional career, [illegible] natural than that he [illegible] case, that he should [illegible] does snobbishness, [illegible] point is the portfolio [illegible] or sermine of the judge, [illegible] reason way to this point [illegible] constituency of Kent, we [illegible] man in the world why he [illegible] slavey if it be within his [illegible]

Mr. Macmahon stood true to the [illegible] with which he started, he would [illegible] a large [illegible] of the respect [illegible] of North having [illegible] to be said, also [illegible] attack [illegible] the character [illegible]

[illegible] member for the county, Mr. Stephenson, was not a representative he was a [illegible] machine. . . . He was a puppet in Sir John's hands; nothing more.' [illegible] again :—'It was humiliating to an intelligent constituency like Kent, that it should have such a useless representative. The electors might just as well—in fact, better—send a figure stuffed with straw to Ottawa, labelled, 'I vote with Sir John every time.' Such an arrangement would save a great deal of time as well as the indemnity money amounting to $1,000 a year.'

Now had Mr. Macmahon cudgelled his brains for six months fit the keenest and most offensive personalities, he could not have found more appropriate terms in which to have it couched. "Mr. Stephenson is not a representative, he is only a voting machine." If this is not personal we fail to understand what is the meaning of the term personl and private character. If Mr. Macmahn can separate a man from his own mind quintellect, and pronounce the one privatemd the other public character, he will be entitled to take higher rank as a metaphysician than he has yet done as a lawyer. Mr Stephenson is possessed of more knowledge of that kind, which is necessary to legislate for the country, than does Mr. Macmahon; but the one following public speaking as a profession, and the other writing for the press, must give the professional speaker a vantage in a contest like that now raging in Kent. Still this would not, by any means, justify any one calling himself a gentleman, and possessing the instincts and refinement of a gentleman, in using Mr. Stephenson as a figure [illegible] with straw, and labelled a char[illegible] voter of Sir John Macdonald's. This is one of the grossest kinds of personal insults, and if the electors of Kent [illegible] intelligent as both candidates profess them, then Mr. Macmahon will find to his cost, that this rude insult will do more injury to the estimation of the poet than it will the opponent.

Equally offensive and twice as [illegible] is that of his own wealth, and its [illegible] asset at Mr. Stephenson's poverty. The thorough "snob," the unadulterated "shoddy" may try to raise himself in the esteem of others by such an argument as this; but the true gentleman, as Mr. Macmahon would desire to [illegible] should spurn such low, mawkish thoughts and vulgar comparisons. Wit Test a man's usefulness in the community, or his fitness for any public office in the gift of the people, by the possession of a few thousand dollars!! Let us talk Heaven Canada has not sunk low as this yet, and it is to be hoped will never will. While the soldiest, the best, and the most patriotic men in the old world, in our own fatherland as well as the rest, are laboring by the sweaty from the incubus of a wretched aristocracy, here Mr. Macmahon and some one successful lawyers, are employing any powers of mind they possess to organize an establish in this free and happy country this most grovelling and most despicable of tyrannies—the tyranny of shoddy upstarts and their yellow idol. Let us commend these sentiments of the Grit candidate to the men of Kent, and ask them, in Mr. Macmahon's own words—"Is them your sentiments" We feel assured they will condemn them with the same feeling of abhorrence and contempt with which they are regarded by every true, generous and wholehearted Canadian, we care not whether he be Whig or Tory, provided he be in heart and soul a Canadian, and we feel assured that in no part of Ontario will they find more thorough contempt than among the true men of Kent.

Somewhat of a novelty in religious services, as well as in political agitations, in Scotland at least, was introduced into a Nonconformist Church in Gourock one Sunday lately. After the Rev. David [illegible] Free Presbyterian body, had concluded the ordinary morning service, he told his congregation that he intended then and there to put the question of peace or war to the vote. He first asked those who were in favor of war to stand up, and afterwards those who were for peace. Only a portion of the congregation took part in the strange division, "the bulk," it is said, having remained seated. At the close Mr. Macrae announced that, "by an overwhelming majority, the congregation were in favor of peace." The correspondent who relates this incident adds—The innovation cannot be commended or defended as a safe one. It is obviously a game which two can play at, and if Christian churches were turned into political arenas it would be got neither for politics nor for religion. If Protestant priests in Scotland use their influence in that way, with what reason can they object to Catholic priests in Ireland doing similar things? Before the division Mr. Macrae was careful to say that, as the congregation had met for the worship of God, they would, therefore, be able to lay aside all political bias; but after the division he was less discreet. He very plainly admadverted on the Government policy, and he characterized the Turks as "the enemies of humanity, and a race that ought to be expelled from Europe." [illegible] Mr. Macrae who last year [illegible] society by assailing the [illegible]

NO TIME YET NAMED.

That the convention of the public should be considered concerning the time to be selected for the holding of the elections, is apparent from the few still dissent from the proposition which few will dissent from. It is needless that long continued periods of public excitement are injurious to business, causing a heavy loss to the country. Any Government that wantonly or negligently inflicts such a loss, especially at a time when no much depression exists, commits a grievous wrong, for which they must be held to be rightly accountable. No doubt it is true that the Ministerial intention was to dissolve Parliament almost immediately after the prorogation of it three weeks ago, to bring on the elections in the month of June as soon as possible from a state of excitement which is as socially inconvenient as it is commercially bad. It is now evident that something has intervened to alter that programme, and that something is, that ministerial supporters have found the existence of such a change in public feeling concerning the administration of the day that they plead[illegible] hard for more time. They want more opportunity than they would have had to endeavor to explain away the glaring acts of commission and of omission which Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues are broadly and boldly charged with. But though such a course may be sound enough as affecting the convenience of a party, it is certainly inconclusive when tested by the wants and interests of the country at large. The month of June includes a period during which business is in a transition state. Farming industry, too, is not active, for though seeding has been done harvesting has not yet commenced. If elections are held during the summer at all, the month of June seems to be peculiarly suitable for the occasion. The weather has not become too hot, nor the demands of industry too pressing, to permit of attention to the call which should be incident to such an occasion. It appears that if parliament were [illegible] the [illegible] session, [illegible] now [illegible] dispose [illegible] the [illegible] there [illegible] and [illegible] them, [illegible] intentions have [illegible] arrived at that July or even August may be chosen before the elections will be on the existence of such an uncertain [illegible] most prejudicial. Men in business [illegible] to make their arrangements, and that they cannot, owing to the [illegible] of the government to make a declaration which they improperly withhold from knowledge of the people. "A reform" [illegible] that has nothing to reform" [illegible] at least meet the views of its people the extent pointed out. The probability that they don't know exactly what is the best in order to suit [illegible] which they and their friends have now [illegible] and are thus putting off the evil day notwithstanding that in doing so they are sacrificing the public convenience.

An extensive local rebellion is just now raging in Barcelona, Spain. There was a municipal tax laid on gas in that city, and the gas companies, instead of paying [illegible] the tax, paid the tonnarity to appoint themselves a committee to collect it from the consumers. The citizens would see the gas consumed before they would pay, so they ceased burning the gas of despite they "pronounced," which is the [illegible] to do in Spain, and [illegible] when they wouldn't stand it. The stores, also, were closed at sunset, and the authorities wanted to have them opened, that it might burn the obnoxious gas. This was failure. The trouble [illegible] lasted for six was and is working [illegible] charm. The authorities are making [illegible] on the newspaper, finding the editors who [illegible] Barcelona [illegible] other topics it [illegible] Cortes. The opposition send forth [illegible] [illegible] shouting [illegible] the hirelings of despotism slap editorial coals up [illegible] heads of the opposition. The rebellion has given place to the gas rate question, and in the great legal [illegible] [illegible] both parties and [illegible] [illegible] during the debates. War songs are [illegible] [illegible] the media. The [illegible] [illegible] already called back and the Premier is [illegible] [illegible] stand of compromising an adjustment [illegible] "turns off" the discussion.

In Texas, recently, a youthful hero is turned up, whose adventures for solid [illegible] and romance. His name is Lehman Bookmeyer. His parents, eight years ago, lived on the banks of the Colorado river, near San Antonio. One moonlight night the Apaches swooped down upon their hut. Little Lehman, aged eleven years, was carried off, while his mother escaped alive. For years she mourned her children dead. Gen. Mackenzie's troops recently captured a number of Comanche braves. Among them was a man Bookmeyer, who [illegible] [illegible] Indian in all but blood, and the husband of a chieftain's pretty daughter, although he had been sold by the Apaches to the Comanches, and had become a war[illegible] in the tribe. He had even forgotten [illegible] the language of his childhood, and when recaptured, spoke only [illegible] and Spanish, broken English. CHAPTER XXVII.

PREPARING FOR ESCAPE.

Alone in his chill and almost lifeless room, Fitz Spendrisse and stood before that sketch of which he and Sir Neil had been talking. Long and sadly he gazed upon it, his firm lips shaking as he did so; then, still standing there in the silence, he covered his eyes, as if the sight of it had grown into pain for him. So Jet, entering the room timidly and gravely as he had never entered it before, found him, nearly half an hour afterward.

"I've been to The Anchorage, dad," the child said, nervously, as he approached him. "I—I didn't think where I was going until I saw—and—and—I think Jack's pony went without us knowing."

Fitz had quickly dropped his hand, and now he looked, with a long and questioning gaze, at the little face below him.

"Laddie," he said, in his rich, gentle tones, "what has frightened you?"

"Nothing," the little white lips stammered, in their horror and their great love.

"What have you seen?" the man continued, gently drawing the boy toward him. "Tell me exactly. Don't shrink away from me. Tell me what you saw. I can not hurt you, laddie; you are not afraid of me?"

The voice which the lad had always known so prompt and bright and ringing was almost wistful now; and still there came no kiss from the childish lips, and no caresses from the little hands.

"Dad—father," he cried, piteously, "don't ask me. I can't tell it!"

With a deep, acute pain, Fitz felt how involuntarily the child shrank from him, and felt, too, how little he could wonder at this, or blame him for it.

"Very well, laddie," he said, with quiet sadness; "I will not ask you to tell me what you saw, because, of course, I know; and I know who saw it as well as you. Let us talk of something else, shall we? Let us think of other things—prepare for other things. Run, laddie, and fetch me all the treasures that you have; for we must take them with us."

Without even asking his favorite question, "Why?" the boy went slowly upstairs, hesitating presently with a small wooden box in his hands.

"Here they are, dad; do you want them?" he asked, holding the box tightly

"Not to keep," the artist answered; "only to see what you have got—what you have to cherish when we are apart from us."

He checked himself, with a smile into the child's inquisitive face.

"Now you can hold the box. Keep it safe, and I will make discoveries. All right. Open, Sesame!"

Fitz turned over the trifles gently, one by one, smiling a little sadly to see how absolutely they were. Not that he had the child this; on the contrary, he handled the things with tenderness, and now and then exclaimed, admiringly.

"There's the jew's-harp; how well I remember buying that! And here's the old baby-rattle; and here's— Ah!"

The cry was slow and full of thought only that one short word, and Fitz Spendrisse's eyes were keenly and intently bent on a small piece of gilded jewelry which he held between his fingers—a piece of jewelry, at least, that had been gilded once, but was now in its unmistakably tarnished state. Breathing quickly, Fitz signed Jet away with the box, and opened the locket.

"I—knew it," he muttered. "I wonder why I felt so certain of it all in a moment. Is, what a good thing this is for my boy! I need not take him now. He will have a home. I remember the story so well! I suppose I should have remembered every word of it as I do, if any one else had told it to me! God bless her! I think I never could forget any of her right, kind, thoughtful words, even if I had been mad for each of them. Jet," he added, aloud, "don't look so astonished, ear lad. Come here and see this. Take up to the lamp, and describe it to me."

"It is a locket, father," the boy said, in a gentle, practical way, wondering why it must look at it alone there; "I know I shan't understand looking. There's hair on both sides, and names; under one is her there's 'Jessie' written, and under the her there's 'Dorcas.' That's all. And was mother's, you know, and she told to keep it. Are you going to do any ing to it, dad?"

"No," replied Fitz, gently. "Take it in n own care, laddie. Now, let us tell ories to each other, like old times."

"Yes," faltered Jet, without the prompt dness with which in those old times he always received the idea.

"Shall we make up the fire first?" asked t, rising, and moving toward it with an empt at his old ease, which failed most fully. "What do you think, old fellow! uldn't a fire strike up quick-

I'll light you to fetch them, for we've time to lose."

"Why no time to lose?" inquired Jet, lously, even suspiciously. "What have got to do, dad?"

Many things," laughed Fitz; but the watching him as he lighted the candle his hand, saw no smile in his eyes. He st the sticks on the little grate while Jet d by, open-mouthed.

Why, dad," he ejaculated at last, when astonishment found words, "you'll leave ugh for a whole week—you'll burn 'em

We can't light the fire to-morrow," d," replied the artist, slowly, his face len as the crackling flames leaped at him, "not to-morrow."

There, dad, leave off," whined Jet, sing fretful because he felt he could not erstand things to-night.

All right, laddie," assented Fitz, taking own seat in the cheerful fire-light. me, are you too big to sit on my knee right?"

ut the boy, ignoring the invitation, another chair up for himself, and , his said silently and demurely. Fitz ndir, in his sorrow and heart-loneliness, this keenly; but no glance or word told e pain it gave him. His eyes, warm tiful as the boy had ever known n, turned to him as he drew the two rs close together; his words, genial as boy had ever known them, were —these:

Now, laddie, it's my turn first, I sup- I'm ready. You must listen all , because—because I want you to tell very same story afterward."

The same one, dad—why?"

ng-eyed look fixed the face upturn- n its surprise. It seemed brought as if strong, self-concentrated man longed craved even for the love and sympathy he timid, cautious child.

You will know some time, little one. or mind any reasons for any thing to t. Forget that favorite word of yours, ," and listen to me just as you listen to 's Arabian Nights' and 'Robinson soe."

he wood fire crackled and blazed, and d and blazed again; and in its fluctu- g light they sat, the man's voice low earnest as he told the little story h the boy was to tell afterward, and to ch he listened so breathlessly.

That's the end," Fitz said, presently, w, listen a little longer. Presently—ently," he repeated sadly, for the word to him the sorrow which belongs to last time, "you will go in next door, tell this story to Mrs. Cheere; and stay to see what she thinks of it. But n't want you to forget a single word of as now tell it to me—just as if I were Dorcas herself. Now, then, for the arsal."

o question passed the boy's lips. The 's deep, quiet earnestness was infecti- and Jet put his head bent in the fire, t, and his thin fingers tight upon the ee) spoke with his gentle, old-fashioned dity.

I shall go in and show this to Mrs. ere, and I shall say that there was once the girl who was stolen from her home Inercraft, and from her mother, and she this upon her neck, and she kept it al- ; till she died. And she was taken a way off, and sold to a circus—she ight one 'as said, but wasn't sure—and used to ride and things, and she got tired of it, and was very unhappy, e one day she fell down from a high e, and somebody who was a dream- er took her home and cured her, and staid with her, and was quite happy she was grown up; and she always the locket, but couldn't ever find her her or her old home, because she didn't remember either of them, except a far away sort of dream. And so one a gentleman said he was very fond of , and made her marry him, and go away everybody that had loved her, and always been good to her, and taken care of her; and made her live in a house in a lonely part of London, with nobody but him; and soon he got to stay away from her all day, and then he got to stay away all night, and then he got to stay away altogether; and he left her alone and poor, and she had only her little boy (but he didn't know it, 'cos he was only a baby), and then—and then— How am I to say this, dad?"

"As you like, dear laddie."

"And then," resumed the boy, with still the gravity in his eyes and voice, "somebody who had known her cruel husband, and had known that dress-maker, who'd loved her, tried and tried to find her out and help her. But he couldn't have time, because he was sent a long way off for eight years. But when half the time was over he came back, and found her out really, just as she was growing more and more dying; and the little boy was with her, and nobody else; and this gentleman staid and helped her as much as he could, only he was as poor as he could be. And when she was dead, he took the little boy with him, and they've lived together ever since. And the locket—"

A WONDERFUL ESCAPE.

A Woman Passes Five Days in the Hold of a Capsized Vessel in Lake Erie—Her Final Rescue Alive.

From the Erie (Penn.) Dispatch, May 24.

Ever since Lake Erie has been navigated by civilized people, especially for the last century, has she swallowed up large numbers of human beings by shipwreck, by fire, and by other casualties, and while many bodies are recovered there are hundreds that are never found, and many that float ashore that are never identified.

I propose now to give an instance in which a human being was shipwrecked on Lake Erie, remained in the water five days, and was finally rescued alive. In the autumn of 1833 Captain Gilman Appleby, of Buffalo, was captain and part owner of the schooner New Connecticut. A steamboat was then being built at Connneaut, (the North American) which Captain Appleby had charge, and was for many years her master. An aunt of his, then residing at Black Rock, below Buffalo, was on a visit, staying with a brother who was then a resident of the town. The lady went to Connecut in company with a nephew to visit her brother there. After remaining for some time she became exceedingly anxious to get home. Capt. Appleby, who was busy with the steamboat, endeavored to persuade his aunt from taking the journey unless he should be going out with his vessel, when he would take her home. His efforts in that direction, however, were unavailing, and he had her taken on board the schooner to go to Buffalo in charge of the crew. The vessel being light, and the time of year late in August, the captain had entire confidence in the ability of the crew to manage the craft and land his relative safe at her destination. Everything passed off quietly until after the vessel had passed Erie, when a sudden squall struck and rolled her over on her side, when she nearly filled with water, but continued to float. The crew, launching the vessel's yawl, jumped in and pulled for the shore, leaving the women in the cabin, as they supposed, drowned. The party landed at or near Portland, Chautauqua County, N. Y., and made their way as best they could back to Connecaut. Three days after the accident Capt. Wilkins, of the steamboat William Peacock, in coming down from Presque Isle was brought by Capt. Appleby to board the wreck, if he saw it and, if possible, get the body of his aunt out of the cabin and convey it to Buffalo. Capt. Wilkins discovered the disabled vessel drifting down the lake, and after coming along side, Capt. Wm. Hendon, then first mate of the Peacock, boarded the wreck and made search. The schooner lay upon her side, and, to all appearances, was full of water. A pole was employed and it was supposed every part of the cabin was knocked, and as no object in the shape of a human body was felt, the conclusion was reached that the remains had floated out of the cabin into the lake, hence further search was given up. Two days afterward Capt. Appleby came down with a vessel with facilities to right the schooner and tow her into the nearest port, the drowned woman's son being along to assist in the recovery of the body. The vessel was finally righted, and when the cabin door had nearly reached a level position, the woman walked through the water and came up the stairs upon deck. She was caught by Capt. Appleby and supported, while her son swept and sailed ashore. Five days and nights she had been in the water, while a portion of the time she was up to her arm pits. She could not lie down, and what sleep she got was in that position, and all the food she had was a solitary cracker and a raw onion, which floated on the water. She stated that after the vessel capsized and was abandoned by the crew, she found herself alone in water waist-deep. The cabin door was open but the flood was two feet above it, and the sea made constant changes in her position. When Capt. Wilkins stepped she could hear the boarding party talk and walk on the vessel, and although she used her voice to its utmost to attract attention she could not make them hear. She saw the pole thrust into the cabin door by Capt. Henton and asked if she should hold on to it and be pulled out, but no answer came, the Captain hearing no noise other than the plashing of the water, and having not the remotest idea that the woman was there alive or dead. This event occurred 45 years ago, and I have never heard of a parallel case either on the lake or other waters, and her rescue from drowning may be regarded as little less than a miracle. N. W. R.

Longevity of the Turtle.

Mr. D. H. Willard says that in the year 1838, on his east farm, half a mile south of Newington Junction, he came across a large and beautifully mottled box or hinge tortoise, so-called from its power to close its shell so tightly as to exclude the water. Turning it upside down he, with his pocket-knife, inscribed on it his own initials and the date, letting it then go free. In 1862 he found the same turtle again, half a mile west; it had crossed two bridges or forded the streams, and three railroad tracks. A new date was then added, the first inscription being very distinct. Mr. Willard had not seen him until last Saturday, the 18th inst., when he discovered it again on his west farm, and near New Britain town line, about one and one-half miles from the first point named, looking as hale as ever, but not increased in size appreciably. It was duly marked "1878," and sent on its way.—Hartford Courant.

An Elephant's Revenge.

Attached to John Robinson's circus, that visited Prostburg Monday, is a vicious elephant, weighing eighty-six hundred pounds, that has already killed two colored men, his keepers. Going through the tollgate west of Frostburg, Tuesday morning, the elephant was slightly refractory, and was prodded by his keeper, a stalwart colored man from South Carolina. At a watering trough, some distance further on, he again became troublesome, and his keeper, who was walking beside him, again punched him with the goad, whereupon the elephant turned, and, with an angry snort, with his trunk lifted the keeper and dashed him lengthwise, and with the greatest precision, into the watering trough. The man was only ducked and slightly bruised.—Cumberland (Md.) News.

A Foe of the Shad Fishers.

The shad pounds in Saybrook and Westbrook, except two or three near the mouth of the river, have all been taken up, the sunfish being so abundant that it is impossible to make the pounds stand. These sun-fish are circular masses of transparent jelly, ranging from the size of the bottom of a tea cup to the size of an ordinary dinner, some even reaching the size of a dining plate, and these, floating in the water, load the nets in such numbers that the nets are carried away and the stakes broken off. The nets that are standing are those that are set in shoal water, where the tides do not run so strongly as they do further out shore. The pounds have caught but few salmon, and most of those have been set at liberty.—Hartford Evening Post.

..The Brighton Aquarium, in England, has lately lost a large conger eel, weighing some 28 pounds. The eel was opened, and in its inside was found a large fieldock, which had evidently caused inflammation and death, and which must have been swallowed long ago, as the eel had been in the aquarium four years.

..It is proposed to annex Paraguay to the Argentine Republic, and the project finds favor with the Paraguayans, who think their country is in such a bad way that annexation alone can save it.

A LIVE MUMMY.

A Healthy Young Woman Kept in Bed Since Her Seventh Year, Swathed in Flannels and Closely Hooded Her Mother's Extraordinary Theory.

From the St. Louis Republican.

No. 2911 Broadway is the house of a man named Christian H. Tiepel, who lives there with his wife and only daughter. The man is a shoemaker, but there appears little necessity for a pursuit of his trade, since the family are in good circumstances, Tiepel being reported as worth from $15,000 to $20,000. Tiepel himself is a quiet, mild-mannered man, past middle-age, who attends to his work, and who, from his own half-admissions, is not altogether the autocrat of the household. Mrs. Tiepel is a woman of perhaps sixty years of age, of decided force of character, and with what appears to be a singular monomania. The daughter, 17 years of age, has, save to a very few, been until lately a nonentity. For the last ten years, though neither a cripple nor in danger of death, she has been in bed.

A reporter found Mr. and Mrs. Tiepel at their house. They were very much averse to admitting him or conversing with him, but at length the woman said—

"My daughter has a fever in her breast. She has had it since she was born. She gets it from me. I have it, too. I told my husband of it before we were married, but he does not believe. When my daughter was very little, I bathed her with saltpetre water. Do you know what that is?"

"No."

"Then you don't know much."

"Oh, I know what it is, of course. I meant only that I didn't understand your use of it."

"Well, saltpetre water, when you are sick as we are, makes you strong and happy. It does that for three months. Only when you are bathed in it, and it makes you feel better, it makes whoever is with you sick, just as you may have been. My husband was sick when he bathed in it. After three months' bathing the saltpetre water makes you well and strong, and so I continue it. When my daughter was seven years old I bathed her no more that way, but put her in bed! She has been there since. Not in bed all the time. She is down in the room. The reason of that is the air or the sun would kill her. Sometimes the blood goes to her head. I have strapped her in flannels to keep the blood back and away from the head, and have cut off her hair and put on a hood like this. My husband does not think she is sick, and says she should work and go out, and has made me great trouble—but I must not speak of that."

"Does your daughter think she is ill?"

"Oh, yes; she knows it."

The visitor wanted to see the invalid, but the old lady's concessions had reached their limit. He next sought for Mr. Tiepel, but he had disappeared totally. From the account of the policeman who had actually seen the girl, though, further facts were obtained.

The young woman was 17 years old in April, and has not been out of the house since she was 7. She lies in bed, a veritable mummy, with the hair cut short and the head encased in an enormous hood. Her legs, arms and body are wrapped in red flannel, and she has the appearance of a person weighing at least 200 lbs., though partly dead in fact as to size. Her face, from the confinement of years, has assumed a wonderful whiteness, but otherwise she does not appear to be ill. She appears from her conversation to possess intelligence, though she seems patient in her confinement, having probably become impressed with her mother's idea that should the air strike her or the sun shed its rays upon her she would die. She is never allowed, even when out of bed, to sit at table, lest a portion of the current of air should reach her, and part of the time when in bed she is kept between mattresses of feathers. Mr. Tiepel was interviewed by the officer, and stated that he thought the course pursued by the girl all wrong; that he had combated Mrs. Tiepel's mania for years, but in vain; that he did not know what to do in the matter. Inquiries made further on yesterday in relation to the singular case elicited the fact that the young lady is the last of a family of nine children, and it may be that it is this sad experience which has led the mother to the belief that the only way to preserve the life of the one remaining to her is the adoption of the remarkable course of the past ten years. Upon the one subject she is apparently a monomaniac, though a loving and tender one. It was learned that physicians had been one or two called in to prescribe for the girl, but that when so called they had been allowed merely to prescribe medicine, not to consider and treat the case fully.

The Contest in West Huron.

MR. PAT. KELLEY'S CANDIDATURE.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

Sir:—The statement which has been circulated in the local papers, that Mr. Pat Kelley has resigned his candidature in West Huron, in favor of Mr. James Sutherland of Wingham, is false and unfounded from beginning to end. It was evidently put forward from a sense of fear of Mr. Kelley's success, which seems to be well assured. There is no more popular man in the field, nor one more useful, energetic and public spirited, than Mr. Pat. Kelley. He has always taken and still takes a leading part in every beneficial public enterprise, and was one of the foremost promoters of the London, Huron & Bruce Railway, as all who know the history of that road can testify. The Grit papers I refer to may think to sneer at Mr. Kelly on account of his nationality, and bring his mother account into ridicule, but such tactics only meet with the well merited scorn of sensible people. I am happy to report that Mr. Kelly is meeting with success in his canvass. The party supporting him is thoroughly united. Orange and Catholic alike will go to the polls and record their votes for him. WEST HURON.

..The new steamers built for the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company will be the finest vessels ever put on the Channel service. They are of steel, and draw little more than seven feet of water. The Victoria was tried the other day on the Clyde, and realized a mean speed of 17 knots.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

BRANT.

Weddings are all the rage in Newport just now. Within the last few days Masters. Charles Sanderson, W. Henderson, and Monse took unto them-serege wives.

Brick making has commenced with great vigor in Newport. Both Houlding and Martin's yards are turning out thousands of bricks each day.

The roads about Newport are in a terrible condition, and the pathmasters ought to see to them.

The Brantford Lacrosse Club is arranging to play with the Hamilton club, on the grounds of the former, on the 1st of July.

On Tuesday morning Robert Turner, of Brantford, was before the magistrate charged with assaulting his wife. The couple have been married about three years and all went happily between them until a few months since, when Miss Maggie Wilson, of Burford, came to live with them. It appears that Miss Russell has completely taken the wife's place in her husband's affection, and it was while complaining of this that Turner struck his wife and knocked her down. He has been bound over to keep the peace.

The Bank of Commerce will open an agency in Paris very shortly.

Last Sunday evening Rev. Dr. Cochrane preached a very touching sermon in the Zion Presbyterian Church, Brantford, referring to the death of Mr. Alexander Robertson.

Messrs. Wilkie and Cromble, of Toronto, are holding special meetings in Wickliffe Hall, Brantford, to arouse greater interest in Young Men's Christian Association work.

A great horse sale is to take place on the Fair Grounds, Brantford, on the 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th of June.

WATERLOO.

The school in section No. 5, Hayesville, has been closed for two weeks on account of the prevalence of scarlet fever.

Within the last few weeks three old settlers in Haysville have died, Mrs. Ira Reed, Mr. Samuel Marks, sen., and on Saturday last Mrs. James Smith. They were all greatly respected.

Nith Valley Creamery in Haysville, is receiving over 15,000 lbs. of milk daily.

The late frost did very little harm in the neighborhood of Haysville. Cherries and grapes appear to be the only fruit injured by it.

The seventh Covenant Parish S. S. Association will hold their annual picnic, which promises to be a very large one, in Mr. Wm. Hendry's grove, Waterloo, on Wednesday, the 12th inst. Excursion tickets will be issued from all stations at 25 cts. Mr. [illegible] Esq., of Lakeside, P. O., has been appointed Minute secretary. The following are the officers:—Rev. Mr. Lewis, President; Rev. Mr. Hagar, Vice-President; Mr. Meet ups and How to Make Them Attractive and Profitable," introduced by Rev. J. Lewis.

Our Responsibilities as Sabbath-school Workers," introduced by Mr. W. Hendry, of Waterloo. Connection with the Sabbath-school," introduced by Rev. J. S. Hill.

At the evening session an address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Lewis, after which the choir rendered some appropriate anthems, which was very highly spoken of by the audience. The Rev. F. H. Marling delivered an address on the subject, "A Bible Example of Successful Teaching."

On Wednesday morning the Association was resumed in the third session at 8.30 by a prayer meeting, which was largely attended, and was led by Rev. Mr. McLeod, of Stratford, after which the minutes of the last session were read and confirmed. Mr. Jos. Foy, Secretary-Treasurer, then read the report of the Executive Committee, which was received, seconded and carried, that letters of condolence be sent by the Secretary to the members of this Association who mourn the loss of their children who have passed away. Next came the discussion of questions, introduced by Mr. George Mann, and after a short discussion by different members of the Association. The meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the President.

WOODSTOCK

The steel rails for the Credit Valley R.R. arrived here yesterday, and the men under the superintendence of Mr Brothers, are busy laying the track. The line is expected, will be finished some time in September.

Mr. Emslie, organist of the Bishop House, Toronto, has been appointed to the same position in Knox Church, Woodstock.

Lacrosse seems to be the favorite game here at present, judging from the numbers of young gentlemen who have lacrosse sticks over their backs.

Fishing as yet has been done by our amateur towards leaving the streets watered. This is a crying shame and a burning disgrace on the shoulders of our Town Fathers. It seems that the Council have not the slightest interest in the health of the people, as the streets do not see the necessary of plashing with water. Some of the streets are positively dangerous, and must affect injuriously the health of the inhabitants, and merchants and business men have a right to have a voice in this matter. If the council does not attend to their wants they will, when an opportunity offers, elect a council that will look after welfare of the people.

WINDSOR.

A number of the citizens of Windsor are organizing "The Rose Island Fishing and Excursion Company," for the purpose of purchasing Rose Island, which is situated at the mouth of the river, and is to be converted into a pleasure resort on behalf of the public park for the accommodation of excursionists. The company will then build an excursion boat, which will make daily trips between Detroit, Windsor and the island.

The American House is being repaired and generally renovated.

Mr. George Bell, a well-known resident of this town, died on Monday night of dropsy.

No appointment to the vacant police justiceship in Windsor has yet been made, although it is generally conceded that Alex. Bartlett will be the man.

The site upon which the new Government building is to be erected has as yet not been selected. It is proposed by a few property owners to submit a plan to the Government to tear down the old Town Hall and erect the new building on that site. The town is to have its offices in the new building.

ST. THOMAS.

Elgin County Council meets at the Court House next Tuesday.

Five Chinamen passed through on the Canada Southern Railway, en route from San Francisco to New York.

The annual picnic of the Grangers of Middlesex, Norfolk and Elgin will be held at Port Stanley next Tuesday.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is going to deliver a lecture shortly.

Mr. W. A. Cooper has returned, after a three months' visit to Germany. He had a very pleasant time.

Victoria Day in Cobourg, has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. J. A. Williams, of this town.

A cricket match will take place next Saturday between picked sievers of the St. Thomas Cricket Club.

CANADIAN CURRENCY COLLECTIONS.

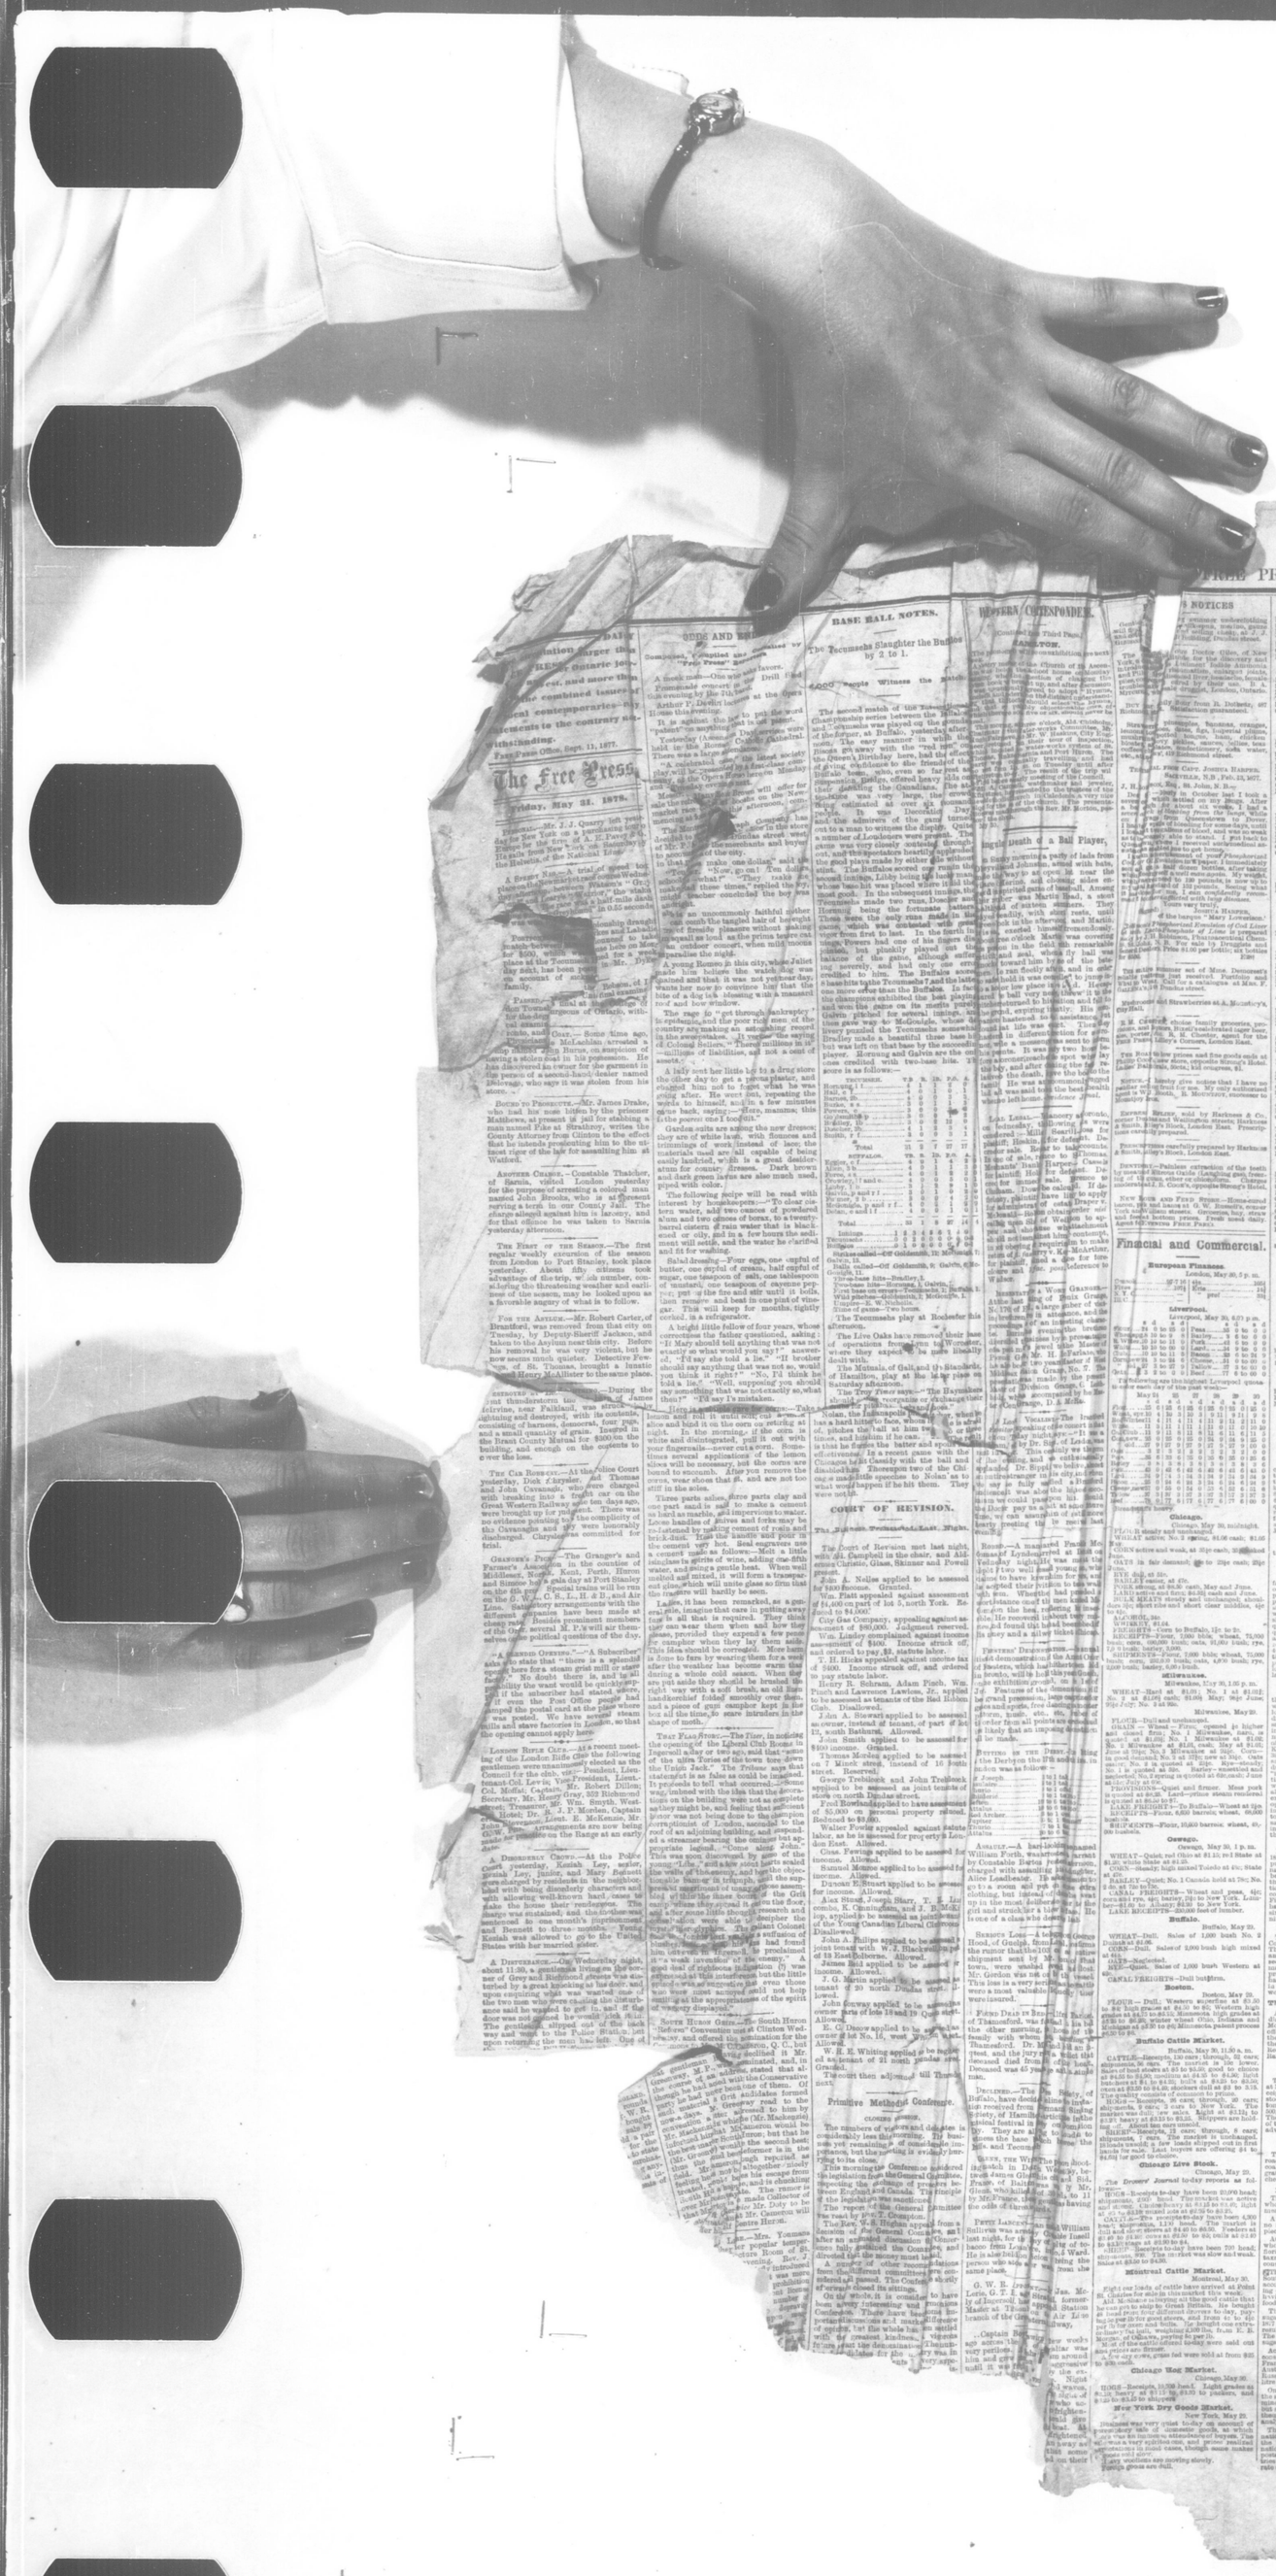
On Tuesday a little boy, son of Mr. John Bone, of Whitby, was drowned in the mill-race.

The conviction of the man Roy, who was found guilty of bigamy by a jury at the late Assizes, has been confirmed by the Superior Court in Toronto.

Mr. Joseph Mahs, a well-known journalist of Montreal, has gone to Paris for the benefit of his health. During his sojourn in the French capital he will act as correspondent for the French papers of Montreal.

On Saturday, Mr. John Henry, of Ottawa, was severely bitten by a sow, whose young he attempted to drive away from her. He had a severe struggle for his life, and is now lying ill.

Two Ottawa merchants the other day commenced "marking down" ready-made pants. Next day they reopened his store and "marked up" below cost, the other sent agents and sold the lost portion of them. There is nothing like competition in this world to enliven trade.



A distressing accident is reported from Desert, Addington. A Frenchman and his wife were returning from town in a canoe, and capsizing to a rapid the latter got out and commenced to row the craft by means of a rope. When at the swiftest point the canoe capsized, the man being drowned within sight of his wife, who could render no aid.

Power of the Waves.

Those who have never lived on a stormy coast, nor been to sea, can form no adequate idea of the effect that can be produced by the impact of a succession of waves, or of a single wave. What has happened at Wick, on the extreme northern coast of Scotland, where a breakwater has been building for some years past, may give an idea of what is meant by wave-power. It was found that stones of ten tons weight were as pebbles to the waves, which have been measured to be here forty-two feet from crest to the bottom of the trough. The outer end of the breakwater, where the storms beat most violently, was built of three courses of one hundred ten stones laid on the rubble foundations; next above these were three courses of large flat stones, and upon this a mass of concrete, built on the spot of cement and rubble. The end of the breakwater was thought to be as immovable as the natural rock; yet the resident engineer saw it slowly yield to the force of the waves and swing round into the less-troubled water inside the pier. It gave way not in fragments but in one mass as if it was a monolith. The displaced mass is estimated to weight about 1,350 tons.

..By an error of the press, the London Eclectic Review was advertised the other day as the Epileptic Review, and on inquiry for it at a bookseller's shop the bibliopole replied that he knew of no periodical called the Epileptic Review, though there might be such a publication coming out by fits and starts.

ODDS AND ENDS.

A mock man—One who sells lawns.

Promenade concert in the Drill Shed this evening by the 7th Battalion Band.

Arthur P. Devlin lectures at the Opera House this evening.

It is against the law to pull the word "cabbage" on anything cast in cast plate.

Yesterday (Ascension Day) services were held in the Roman Catholic Cathedral.

Play will be suspended at the Queen's Park cricket ground on Monday morning at the request of Mr. P. Turner.

Mr. Wm. Hamilton will offer for sale by auction at his rooms on the corner of Market Square and Jarvis street, on Monday afternoon, a number of lots.

The Toronto Gas Company has declared a dividend of 6 per cent. for the year, and has transferred $50,000 to a man to witness the display. Quite a number of Londoners were present. The game was very closely contested throughout, and the spectators heartily applauded the good plays made by either side without stint. The Buffalos scored one run in the second innings, Libby being the first man to whom he gave a base on balls, and who made the most good. In the subsequent innings, the Buffalos scored two runs, Dowdall and Hornung being the fortunate batters. These were the only runs made in the game, which was contested with great vigor from first to last. In the fourth innings Powers had one of his fingers badly injured, but pluckily played out the balance of the game, although suffering considerable pain, and only one error is credited to him. The Buffalos scored eight assists and the Londons nine, the latter one more error than the Buffalos. In fact the Londons exhibited the best fielding and won the game on its merits purely. Galvin pitched for several innings, and then gave way to McGinley, who very much puzzled the Tecumsehs somewhat. Bradley made a beautiful three base hit, but was left on that base by the succeeding player. Hornung and Galvin are the only men enrolled with two-base hits. The score is as follows:—

The Tecumsehs play at Rochester this afternoon.

The Live Oaks have removed their base of operations from Queen to Wellington, where they expect to be quite locally famous.

The Mutuals, of Galt and Ont. Standards, of Hamilton, play at the Model Grounds Saturday afternoon.

The Terry Fines says:—"The Haymakers are shortly going to organize or exchange their ammunition for baseball goods."

Again, the Irresistibles are a unique club. They have a hard hitter to face, whom they always strike out at his first time at bat; sometimes, and hitslim if he can. The drawback to their efficiency. In a recent game with the Chicagos he hit cleanly with the ball and disabled the Chicagos pitcher so badly that one of the Irresistibles speaks to Nolan as to what happened if he hit them. They were not hit.

COURT OF REVISION.

THE BERLIN CONGRESS

Publication of the Anglo-Russian Agreement.

ENGLAND'S TERMS SUCCINCTLY STATED.

Appearance of the Leading Plenipotentiaries.

Beaconsfield the Cynosure of all Eyes.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, June 14.—The Globe will print to-day the full text of the agreement between Great Britain and Russia on the 5th May, confirming in detail the terms of the memorandum published on Saturday.

There are some minor points not mentioned in the former summary, namely, the rectification of the western boundaries of Bulgaria on the basis of nationalities, superior officers of militia in Southern Bulgaria to be nominated by the Porte, with the approval of Europe, and the Turkish garrisons of the Balkan passes to be left exclusively to Russia, for election of Bulgaria also.

The following is the former summary of the points of agreement:—

"1. Bulgaria to be divided into two provinces—one, north of the Balkans, under a prince; the other south of the Balkans, but not beyond the Rhodope Range, with Christian Governor and Government similar to that of Eastern Roumelia.

"2. Turkish troops to permanently quit Bulgaria.

"3. England deplores, but will not oppose, the retrocession of Bessarabia or the annexation of Batoum, and reserves the right to discuss in Congress the international arrangements relative to the Straits.

"4. Russia promises not to further advance or increase her territorial acquisitions in land, or interfere with the claims of English creditors.

"5. The question of payment to be discussed by the Congress, which will also reorganize Thessaly, Epirus and Crete Provinces.

"6. Dayazid is to be added to Turkey, Turkey ceding the Province of Colzor to Persia.

"7. Russia agrees that the passage of the Dardanelles and Bosphorus shall remain in statu quo.

"8. England will suggest at the Congress that Europe reorganize Bulgaria, and will discuss the questions of a Russian occupation, and the passage of troops through Roumania."

London, June 14.—The London Globe to-day publishes the full text of an agreement between England and Russia, which it asserts was signed at the Foreign Office, in this city, on the 30th of May last, and by which they serve as a basis of agreement for the Russian and English plenipotentiaries at the Congress. The conclusions of this agreement provide for a division of Bulgaria into two provinces, one north, the other south of the Balkans. Provision is made for the government of the provinces and for the departure permanently therefrom of Turkish troops. England stipulates only to occupy the passes of the Bessarabia or the annexation of Batoum, but reserves to herself the right of discussing in the Berlin Congress any territorial changes relative to the Danube. Russia agrees, in part, not to take any increase in dimensity in land from Turkey or to further advance her Asian frontier or to interfere with the claims of English bondholders. It is agreed that the reorganization of Bulgaria by Europe, the passage of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, and of Russian military occupation of Roumania, are also to be submitted to the Congress.

Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply to inquiries, stated that he had not received the agreement in to-day's Globe purporting to be an Anglo-Russian agreement, and declined to say whether or not it was authentic. He added, however, that the Government did communicate it to the Globe.

London, June 14.—A Berlin correspondent says Bismarck looked much aged in appearance on entering a white hair instead of a moustache, as formerly. Gortschakoff leaned heavily on his stick and moved with difficulty. He is greatly changed; his face is wan and emaciated.

Berlin, June 14.—The English, French, German and Eastern branches of the Israelite alliance have sent a delegate to represent to the members of the Congress the deplorable condition of the Jews in Roumania and Bulgaria.

It is reported that Beaconsfield will move for the admission of Greece.

The Roumanian delegates are much mortified at the cool reception which they met with at the Congress. Bismarck is the centre of attraction, and crowds assemble to see him.

THE DOORKEEPERS IN CONGRESS.

When the twenty-four Plenipotentiaries and Secretaries had entered the apartment, the door was closed. They were then assigned seats. The table occupies three sides of a quadrangle. Prince Bismarck took his place at the middle of the exterior of the principal table, and the Plenipotentiaries were then seated alternately to the right and to the left of the Prince, in the alphabetical order of their countries' names in French:—The order of precedence became, therefore, Allemagne, Russie and, to the left, France, Italie, Turquie. The other representatives of Germany occupied the side of the principal table opposite Prince Bismarck. In order to form an idea of how the members of the Congress were seated, trace a square, one side of which is wanting. There will be three tables, a principal one, and from each of its ends another table running at right angles to it. Prince Bismarck is seated at the principal table. At his right, successively, sat Andrassy, Karolyi Haimerle, Beaconsfield, Salisbury, Russell, Derby, Schouvaloff, Micheli, Oubril. At Gortschakoff, Schouvaloff, and Oubril. At the small end of this right-hand table, turning the corner from M. Oubril sat M. Busch and Count Corti. Bismarck's son, Herbert. A close study of the above will disclose the curious fact that the British and Russian Plenipotentiaries are brought together. Lord Odo Russell having the Austrians separate the German Chancellor from Lord Beaconsfield; while Mr. Bismarck, in turn, act as a feather between the Austrian and Russian.

On the left of the German Chancellor sat the great table in three sides. Malmesbury, Washington, St. Vallier and Despree, the latter occupying the seat next to the corner. This, turning the angle, and facing at a distance the Marquis of Salisbury sat Count Karolyi, and on the same side were D'Avrey, the vacant chair for Count Beaconsfield, while at the empty seats of Melemet, these five last facing across the intervening table, were Gortschakoff, Schouvaloff, Oubril. This is likely to be the place side of the table, at the small end of the table, around the corner, sat the Count De Merey, adjacent to the chair of Melemet. In the centre of this entrance Mr. Desprez. The Count occupied a position at the table corresponding to that of Busch and Bismarck, Fils at the other. The Congress at once proceeded to the verification of the powers of the Plenipotentiaries of the various States represented, which established the absence of the Turkish representatives, with the exception of Mehemet Ali Pasha, who, it was thought, would arrive this evening. The Congress then passed to other business. Tricoupi Bouzaris was by unanimous consent chosen permanent President of the Congress. It was then decided to admit to the hall of the Congress the counsellors of the Russian Legation in Berlin, MM. Arapoff, Kotzebue and Boutenoff, the counsellors of the Austrian Legation, M. Van Mayra, and Baron Passel, and the counsellor of the British Legation, Capt. Fitz George.

London, June 12.—A Berlin spectacular states that it is said that Beaconsfield will depart from Berlin next week, whilst Andrassy has arranged to stay a month. This causes the belief, which is encouraged by the Russian and English Plenipotentiaries, that the critical point between them will be much more easily settled than that between Russia and Austria.

Despatches from Berlin say that Earl Beaconsfield, in a speech in the Congress on Thursday, called attention to the perils attaching to the military situation at Constantinople. One correspondent states that Beaconsfield demanded an immediate change that would remove from dangerous proximity the Russian and Turkish armies in Roumelia, and expressed the hope that the Russian delegates would be able at the next sitting to announce that the Russian troops had been withdrawn.

London, June 13.—The Standard and Times consider the fact that Sir Stafford Northcote did not repudiate the report of the agreement between Great Britain and Russia as published in the Globe, when he was questioned in the House of Commons last night, shows that the report is authentic.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.

Constantinople, June 14. — Mouktar Pasha and the General staff to-day visited the British fleet. The fleet will shortly remove from Izmid to Princess Island for sanitary reasons.

It is believed a suspension of hostilities between the Russians and Turks has been arranged.

The Russian Ambassador has suggested to the Porte the formation of a mixed Commission, composed of the Consuls at Philippopolis and Turkish officers, to investigate the outrages by Bulgarians upon Mussulmans.

The Imperial Guard of Circassians has been disbanded by the advice of Osman Pasha.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE COTTON STRIKERS.

London, June 14.—A large meeting of weavers at Blackburn unanimously resolved to resume work at ten per cent. reduction. Meetings of employés at the various mills throughout East Lancashire will be held on Monday to ascertain the general feeling.

London, June 14.—An arrangement has been made between the operatives and masters in Burnley to start a dozen mills next week at the 10 per cent. reduction. It is expected all the mills will be thrown open.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

London, June 14.—Giles (Conservative) was to-day elected member of Parliament for Southampton, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Russell Gurney. His majority over the Liberal candidate was 244. Otway (Liberal) has been returned to Parliament from Rochester by 280 majority.

Berlin, June 14.—The Old Catholic Synod, by a vote of 72 to 22, adopted a resolution in favor of the marriage of the clergy.

WASHINGTON.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

New York, June 14.—The Tribune says the internal revenue receipts for the present year will be ten millions less than the estimate. This is entirely the result of the agitation in Congress over the reduction of the tax on whiskey and tobacco.

STARTLING DISCLOSURES IN THE TERRACOTT.

The World says Gilvery Committee has come upon what it declares to be a forced forgery against Tilden. It is brought about by an alleged false entry on June 13th, 1865. Connected with what is claimed to have been a false entry and forgery, was a secret issue of nineteen million compound interest notes, taken out of the revenue and not accounted for anywhere. The theory of the Committee is that this was to cover up the old defalcation.

New York Items

Algernon I. Chase, one of the oldest dry goods merchants in New York, died yesterday, aged 70.

Jno. B. Murray, proprietor of the Harrington House, Demarest, N. J., has failed. Liabilities $84,000.

Successful Prediction of an Earthquake.

Panama, June 14.—A severe earthquake occurred at Tacna, and at the Port of Arica on May 16th. The inhabitants left their houses, and remained in the open air all night. This is one of the earthquakes prophesied by Prof. Taib, who specially mentioned the 15th, the day on which it occurred, the shock would be severe.

The Locomotive Brotherhood.

Cleveland, O., June 14.—Chief Arthur, of the Locomotive Brotherhood, just returned from an extended tour of the West and North, says a better feeling between the Brotherhood and railroad officials never existed. He denies that railroad men have any Communistic affiliation.

The Erie Railway Third Rail.

New York, June 14.—The Directors of the Erie RR. yesterday unanimously adopted a resolution to continue the third steel rail from Waverly to Jersey City, first English bond and stockholders having signified their unanimous consents for covering the necessary means and bond issues.

Trampled to Death by a Horse.

Hartford, Conn., June 13.—G. Lamb held his horse, which was attempting to run away, while Malmsbury, frightened by a rattling wagon, fell. Locke, trying to stop the runaway, was trampled upon and killed. His wife was thrown out of the carriage, and badly injured.

A U. S. War Ship up the Rio Grande.

Washington, D. C., June 14.—A despatch announces that the U. S. ship of war Rio Bravo was yesterday at Rio Grande city, 300 miles above Matamoras. This is the first vessel of war that has ever been so far up the Rio Grande.

THE PRESIDENCY.

Remarkable Speech of General Sherman.

Hayes Determined to Remain by Fraud or Force.

New York, June 14.—The Herald says.—Gen. Sherman made a very remarkable after-dinner speech yesterday at a meeting of the West Point alumni. He declared Hayes, although a mild-mannered gentleman, would be found to possess the nerve to maintain his right if it was assailed. In so doing he would have the support of the army. This sentiment drew forth a burst of applause from the veterans as well as the young graduates.

Washington, June 14.—Mr. Burchard moved to suspend the rules, and adopt a resolution reiterating that the House of U. S. as many as 500 cigars on payment of duty.

Bennie Greene beat Billy Sealy in the record prize fight in East Boston. He was arrested for his success in Providence R. I., yesterday, and taken to Boston for trial.

Gortschakoff's journey to Berlin has seriously affected his health that he is scarcely able to move about. He was too ill to attend the state banquet last night.

John F. Mines writes a two-column letter to the New York World, charging that Roscoe Conkling started the movement in favor of a third term. Mines suggests that the Potter Committee examine the Senator, as he professes to know a good deal.

Fatal Casualty at Brooklyn Bridge.

New York, June 14.—This afternoon as workmen on the Brooklyn Bridge were lowering one of the large cables, the tackle parted, and instantly killed a laborer, fatally injured another, and dangerously injured two others. The tackle parted at the Water street anchorage, and a huge iron shoe, weighing between 800 and 900 lbs., shot over the adjoining houses and lodged a hundred feet distant. It knocked down several chimneys, and completely demolished the telegraph wires.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, June 14.

The Assembly met at 9 10 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Jenkins, Moderator.

COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

The report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures reported, through Rev. Mr. Proudfoot, and the Assembly adopted the order of business.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

The following were nominated as a Judicial Committee:—Dr. Topp (convener), Dr. McGregor, Principal McVicar, Principal Grant, Revs. John Scott, K. McLennan, Dalgleish, Laing, Dr. Waters, Young (Napanee), Principal Cavan, Dr. Robb, Mr. T. W. Taylor, Hon. Mr. Starks, Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Messrs. Gordon, Jas. McLennan, John Charlton, M. P., Laing (whitby), it is to be hoped that the members of that none should sit on cases in which they are interested.

OPEN, FROM THE PRESBYTERY OF SYDNEY.

An appeal by the Presbytery of Sydney against a decision of the Synod of the Maritime Provinces, in reference to the supplying of the mission stations of Lingan and Victoria Mines. A number of papers relating to the case were read by Rev. Dr. Reid. It appears that Rev. Mr. Murray is minister of Falmouth street Church, Sydney, and that he and his congregation wished to be attached to their place of worship two stations, ten and twelve miles apart, named Lingan and Victoria Mines, on the ground that it was impossible for these stations ever to be able to support a pastor. The Presbytery, on the other hand, decided that these two stations should be knitted together, and that a catechist would be appointed to take them in charge. The Synod held that the Presbytery had not made sufficient inquiry as to the state of the stations, that their proceedings were unconstitutional and therefore adopted the views of Rev. John Murray. From this decision the Presbytery appealed.

The Presbytery of Sydney having appointed representatives to take their body to attend the Assembly, Rev. Mr. Gordon asked if such a course was proper.

The Moderator gave it as his opinion that the Presbytery could not do so.

Principal Grant challenged the opinion given by the Moderator.

The Moderator said he simply gave it as an opinion, and he did not believe Presbyteries had a right to employ eloquent men outside their body to plead their causes.

Rev. Mr. McRae, of St. John, N. B., said such a course was pursued in Scotland.

Several members—But we are in Canada.

Principal Grant thought that notwithstanding the eloquent speech of the Moderator, he did not believe he (the Moderator) had a right to give a ruling on a matter of this kind. If the chairman wished to make speeches on subjects such as this, he would have to take his place upon the floor.

The Moderator—I was asked an opinion, and I gave it. I know my duty, and when I wish to make a speech I will leave the chair; but I hope the Assembly will bear me in simply giving an opinion. (Hear, hear.)

Rev. Principal McVicar moved, that the parties appointed by the Presbytery should be allowed to appear. Rev. John Scott seconded.

Rev. Principal Cavan maintained that the appeal of the Assembly were being interrupted by Presbyteries appointing members of Assembly to represent them in the House. They had no right to do so.

The Moderator left the chair, which was taken by Rev. Dr. Topp. He (the Moderator) said he wished to remove the matter from the Presbytery's hands, and from those of Principal Grant. That rev. gentleman wished to argue the case on general principles, but he (the Moderator) thought it would be highly prejudicial to the interests of the church that interested parties should come down and appoint the judicial element of the Assembly to represent them, thus taking the judges to argue the very cases which they should adjudicate upon.

Rev. Dr. Muir said the case had been put by the Moderator and Principal Cavan as he himself wished to put it.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Kingston, said the Moderator's ruling should hold good, because is was in accordance with the common law of the Church. Until, therefore, they had a different law on the subject, the common law should hold good.

Rev. Dr. Robb held the opinions given by the Moderator, and Principal Cavan could not be gainsaid.

After remarks by Rev. Dr. Waters and Rev. John Scott,

The motion of Principal Grant was withdrawn, the mover and seconder stating that their views had been changed by the facts which had come out in the discussion.

The Moderator ruled that Rev. Principal Grant and Messrs. Murray and Sedgwick, appointed by the Presbytery whilst not in it, could not be regarded as at the bar.

After further discussion it was resolved to remit the case to the Judicial Committee.

APPEAL FROM CHURCH PRESBYTERY.

The Assembly next took up an appeal from Rev. J. H. McMaster, of Quebec Presbytery, against the decision of the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa. The Presbytery of Quebec had authorized Rev. Mr. Vandenhoff to realize on a lot belonging to the church at Sherbrooke, with which to pay a portion of stipend due. This decision was protested against by Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, in the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa, and the protest sustained. Rev. Mr. McMaster therefore appealed.

Rev. Dr. Peter Lindsay appeared and stated Mr. McMaster was prevented from being present by illness. He had intended to appear along with Mr. McMaster, but owing to his illness, he (Mr. Lindsay) had not been able to see him. It would be a great hardship if the case was not gone on with at the present assembly.

Rev. Mr. Gordon moved that Rev. Mr. Lindsay be appointed to represent Mr. McMaster.

The matter was given to the Judicial Committee to proceed with as soon as Mr. Lindsay is certified to as representing Rev. Mr. McMaster.

APPEAL FROM PRESBYTERY OF STRATFORD.

An appeal was read by Dr. Reid from Rev. Mr. Cameron, of the Presbytery of Stratford, against an enjoinment of that body. It appeared that Rev. Mr. Watt is the stated minister at Shakespeare, and that Rev. Mr. Cameron officiates at New Hamburg and a station near that place. Mr. Came

The London Free Press

A LONDON MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Despatches and Special Correspondents. THE QUEBEC JOCKEY.

By means of a system of artful jockeying the "Reform" Government of Quebec has managed to regain its majority of one, that one being the vote of the Speaker, a person taken from the ranks of the Liberal Conservatives in order to lessen, if not destroy, the true effect of the voice of the people at the polls. Of course, the "laugh" may be for the moment on the side of these good people who conspired to dislodge a Government while in the full tide of Parliamentary success, and now retain office by means which are simply the tricks of gamblers. Taking matters as they are, however, it must be quite plain that if members continue to maintain the existing attitude the progress of public business will be impossible. In addition to the dubious majority of one, gained by the casting vote of a place-bought Speaker, the Joly-Bachand Government have to face an Upper House, strongly antagonistic to them. True, it is not what may be called a people's house, but is, notwithstanding, an integral portion of the apparatus of government, and will have its weight. Under such circumstances it would not be surprising if resort were to be had to a new election. Looking at the facts fairly, it may be said that neither party is in sufficient numerical strength to carry on affairs. Yet such an expedient will not be resorted to until further necessity compels. The game of the "Reformers" has been from the first to contrive to grasp the reins of administration during the coming federal elections. In order to accomplish that object they have resorted to the most subversive means, and have made a sad spectacle of constitutionalism and reform. Still, they are not ashamed. On the contrary, they glory in their shame, and are adopting the principle that any scheme, no matter how nefarious, is justifiable if it does but confirm them in office in Quebec, and their friends at Ottawa in the task of muzzling the Dominion for some time longer. Taken as a whole—from the day Lieutenant-Governor Letellier overturned his administration in the face of Parliament down to the transactions which placed a Turcotte in the Speaker's chair—the spectacle is a sorry one. Many people in Canada, those not bound up by any strong party ties or political feelings, regarded the so-called reform party with hope. So long as it was deemed to be honest, to be actuated by sound principles, it attracted to it the good wishes of many to whom constitutional procedure and economical government are as landmarks to the country. Such people can but look on the transactions of the last four years, and those now current at Quebec, with something approaching to astonishment. "Can it be possible," they may say, "that these are the acts of people calling themselves reformers?—of people, quite, who have paraded themselves for years "before the public as superior to others in "respect of their honesty and their motives?" Such questions must naturally arise in the minds of persons to whom the welfare of the country is a matter of grave concern, and they are apt to be shocked at tricks which are characterized by that same species of smartness which are seen in the professional sharper, and among the black legs of race-courses. The line line of action that has been pursued at Quebec, justified and applauded as it is in Ontario by "reformers," will set many persons a-thinking there is little doubt of. Such a series of betrayals and usurpations cannot long pass without rebuke, and the probability is that good will at last come out of so much that is evil.

A successful attempt has now been made to store up the heat of the sun's rays for immediate practical use. The rays were first made to pass through glass fixed an inch away from the actual apparatus, which was consequently entirely surrounded by hot air. The enclosed apparatus, a copper receptacle, was blackened outside—a color which is well known to absorb heat, as any one may prove by wearing a black coat on a warm summer's day. The heat thus retained was further assisted by a conical reflecter of silvered glass, and a quantity of mutton and vegetables placed within was perfectly cooked. To further aid in retaining the absorbed heat, when the apparatus was removed from the sunlight it was covered with a rug as ladies place a "cosy" over the teapot to draw the tea. Since then the inventor has improved upon the process, and can now cook chops or steaks in the open air as quickly as by an ordinary fire, and entirely by the sun's rays. The most remarkable point is, perhaps, that the heat is kept in the apparatus for as long as three and a half hours.

...A burglar broke into a store in South Framingham, Mass., and instantly found himself face to face with a clerk. Both had revolvers, but the clerk was quickest in using his, and the burglar fell.

A DOUBTFUL STATEMENT.

Though the statement has come to hand that Lord Dufferin will be continued as Governor-General of Canada for another year, yet it lacks confirmation, even probability. It had its origin in a paragraph in the London Echo, and was repeated from Ottawa as if authentic. It may be taken for granted that Lord Dufferin is sufficiently en rapport with the Colonial Office not to have committed himself to an elaborate leave-taking of the Canadian community without he had had his course duly marked out for him. It is not likely that he would commit the mistake of Mr. Blake, say "good-bye," and then consent to stop a little longer. At the same time, if arrangements had been made for a continuation of his service in this country, such an event would have been the cause of much satisfaction amongst us. Indeed, it might be supposed that the wishes of Canadians might be to some extent consulted in such a matter. At the same time it is not certainly known if it would have suited the convenience of Lord and Lady Dufferin to have remained here. They have claims elsewhere, interests elsewhere, which may at first, then 360,000, and now the double circular give 500,000. So that a workman produces from 2,000 to 3,000 times the work of a knitter of the old times. If the same line of research be followed, the power to shoe manufactories; to the means of moulding and shaping metals, and to many other industries that will naturally present themselves to the mind, even more will be seen. Steam and horse power, adapted to ingenious machinery, is making human toil less, and for that reason manual labor is becoming dear in the market. Multitudes to-day stand in need of ordinary necessaries of life because there is no use for their labor. They have large frames, covered with a powerful muscular apparatus, and have the grit to work, yet they go a-begging for employment. Day's work is different in many parts of Canada above the locks. In this city there are men to-day, not residents, possibly, but persons in need of work for bread, who have asked, with the sum of a dollar in the hand, to be employed in digging for even fifty cents a day, and this during the most active part of the season, and at a time when labor of all kinds should be in requisition. Yet the gangs were full and they could not be taken on. Navigation by means of steam is fairly driving sailing vessels off the water. And with these go a class of men who are being succeeded by a few engineers and stokers, the employment of steam-propelled iron vessels of large capacity reducing manual labor to a minimum in proportion to the tonnage carried. So, too, with respect to dock laborers, steam-hoisting apparatus being the means of dispensing with a large amount of human labor. In short, almost every department of life human labor is being displaced by the more economical and effective energies of machinery, variously propelled by steam or adapted to the energies of the horse. It may be found that society will gradually adapt itself to the changes that are now rapidly going on, but meanwhile it should not be lost sight of that much individual suffering is a present result. And it may be well in a Christian country for measures of relief should be employed to lessen the strain to individuals which the economical revolution which is going on is the occasion of. Does not that have enough as regards their own country. Having associated William Leggett with himself in the management of the Evening Post, he sailed with his family for Europe in the spring of 1834, and travelled through France, Italy and Germany, enlarging his knowledge of the languages and literatures of the leading nations. His poems bear witness to his familiarity with the Spanish, Italian, German and French languages, which he had continued to cultivate. After returning to his native country, and resuming his professional labors for some years, he went again to Europe in 1845. In 1849 he made a third visit, and extended his journey into Egypt and Syria. The letters written to his journal during these wanderings were published in a book called "Letters of a Traveller," soon after his last return. But in the intervals of these foreign journeys he had by no means neglected his own country, and the same motive contains evidences of his sojourn in nearly all parts of the United States, from Maine to Florida, and of a trip also to the Island of Cuba. About 1845 he purchased "an old-time mansion," embowered in vines and flowers, near the village of Roslyn, on Long Island, where he has since resided. In 1857 and 1858 he made another journey to Europe, writing letters to the Evening Post, which were collected under the title of "Letters from Spain and Other Countries." A new and complete edition of his poems was published in 1855, and in 1865 a small volume of new poems appeared under the title of "Thirty Poems." In 1864, on the completion of his 70th year, his birthday was celebrated by a festival at the Century Club, nearly all the prominent literary men of the country being present, or sending complimentary letters, which, with the proceedings, were subsequently published in a volume. He was for several years occupied in a translation of Homer into English blank verse. The "Iliad" appeared in 1870, and the "Odyssey" in 1871, and both were almost universally commended as the best English versions of the great epics. Mr. Bryant has been frequently called upon to pay public tributes to the memory of eminent Americans. On the death of the artist, Thomas Cole, in 1848, he pronounced a funeral oration; in 1852 he delivered a discourse on the life and writings of James Fenimore Cooper, and in 1860 he paid a similar tribute to his friend, Washington Irving; he made an address on the life and achievements of S. F. B. Morse, on the occasion of the dedication of his statue in Central Park, New York, in 1871, and addresses on Shakespeare and Scott on similar occasions in 1872.

FOREIGN NOTES.

SWINBURNE was invited to the Voltaire Centenary, and a place was reserved for him by the side of Victor Hugo, but he did not put in an appearance.

Two young men were lately killed near Ballingarry, County Tipperary, Ireland, in a shooting match got up for the feat of the "Sniders" and "Carcass."

THE London Library, which has been established for 30 years, contains 90,000 volumes, and has 1,578 members. The Earl of Carnarvon presided at its annual meeting recently.

A BOG show is to open in Paris on the 30th; there is to be a special class for blind men's dogs, St. Bernard dogs, and the Archbishop of Aix's dog, under the designation of "guides of man."

THE London School Board has adopted a resolution making cookery a regular branch of instruction. Sixty pounds a year was settled on as the proper remuneration of an efficient instructress.

REV. CANFORD TATE, only son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, died at his father's residence on the Island of Thanet, May 31. He graduated at Christ Church, Oxford, with high honors, in 1873.

THERE has lately been discovered in the library at Lyons, France, a globe of 1703, in which the Entre Compo River is represented as flowing from a large lake westward to the Atlantic, much in the direction shown by Stanley.

THE sudden death of Mr. Wykeman Martin, of the British House of Commons, while writing a letter in the library of that body on the 31st of May, cast quite a gloom over the proceedings and brought them to an abrupt close for the day.

THE case of the Maharajah Partal-Narain Sing against the Maharani Bukhao Koer and others was lately before the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords, on an application for the reopening of a former decision, which gave an estate in England, valued at £1,500,000, to Mr. Sing.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pall Mall Gazette, complaining of the working of the bankrupt law, relates two cases. In one the assets were £162, of which £148 went for fees and costs, leaving £14 for the creditors. In the other, the assets were £368, costs and fees, £366, leaving just £2 for distribution.

A CURIOUS case was tried in London recently in which cross actions were brought by Mr. Rice, late manager of Covent Garden Theatre, and Mr. Collier, who had contracted to compose the music and furnish and conduct the orchestra for last season's Christmas pantomime. The music was not ready in time, the orchestra did not have the stipulated number of performers, Mr. Collier did not conduct in person, and the pantomime was a failure. Mr. Rice brought suit for breach of contract and damages, and recovered £75, and Mr. Collier brought suit to recover his music scores, which he got.

LABOR AND ITS DISABILITIES.

To what extent labor saving machinery is destined to alter the conditions of employment is one of those problems which must be left to work out its own answer. Yet it cannot be doubted that it is creating something like a revolution which must have definite and permanent results. Not only is the land now cultivated with an ease and inexpensiveness never before known, and even now little understood, but the manufacture of fabrics has been rendered so economical that production has outrun consumption. Indeed, in the textile industries the progress of invention has produced extraordinary results. Steam spins, weaves, and prints a thousand different stuffs, which the sewing machine afterward seizes hold of. A good weaver could formerly turn out ten yards a day; now thirty yards can be made with the looms in use. In knitting still greater progress has been made. The best knitter could only make 150 to 200 stitches a minute. The French loom produces from 5,000 to 6,000, the straight automatic loom 45,000, the circular stitch loom 50,000 to 60,000, the articulated needle loom 240,000

PROPOSED SALE OF CITY PARKS.

The vote on the proposed sale of the Exhibition Grounds and Salter's Grove will soon be on. Whatever may be the ultimate fate of these two public reserves from the barbarism of brick, it must be apparent that the present would be a very inopportune time to place them on the market. It is further evident that but one of those places could be sold in any case, seeing that Exhibition Grounds are a necessity to a Canadian city, and especially so to London, in which place the Western Fair as well as the Provincial Exhibitions have been so unvaryingly successful. If the Salter's Grove were to be sold it is not likely that at the present time it would sides long and even approach in size the very best testimonials from his patrons. His sermons are "of very sound church tone and teaching; practical, plain and earnest, adapted to the average hearer, from fifteen to twenty minutes in length, and written in a very clear, legible hand." There are two qualities, said respectively at $2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. appear also sermons that my work, I abstain altogether from advertising in any public journal, and confine my communications to private letters. I do not think it desirable to attract to such a work the notice of any but the clergy themselves. I have, at present, two or three vacancies in my list of subscribers, all occasioned by removal or death, which I wish to fill up. One of these is in your diocese, and I shall be glad to supply you if you require such help. I have one complete set of my sermons for a year on hand, which I am willing to sell at a reduced price. It will afford me pleasure to send you, at your request, some specimens of the series on approval, which you can return if they should not suit you. Every communication will be received in the strictest confidence."

So far from being grateful for this unsolicited offer to lighten his pastoral labors, the Surrey parson denounces his correspondent as a harpy, and asks Truth to show him up.

Halifax Reporter.—That first-class political pirate, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec Province, in his speech to the Houses, on the 6th inst., got off the—to say confidently pray that heaven may bless your labors." What arrant hypocrisy! He has just been making an attack upon the principles of Government by party as base, so piratical that it will never be forgotten in the history of this Dominion. He has been party to a series of disgraceful intrigues, calculated to destroy public confidence in public men. He has but recently returned from engaging in a political contest, from participation in which his oaths of office ought to have restrained him. Yet he—this bold, bad Governor, who ought not to be permitted to remain in his present position an hour—has the audacity to tell the public that he prays to Heaven for a blessing. The murdering king in "Hamlet" knew better than that. He said:—"Words without thoughts never to Heaven ascend." This base betrayer of his trust has no hesitation in declaring that his prayers ascend to Heaven—forgetting that one of the first essentials to success, in that exercise, is that there be no regards for iniquity in the petitioner's heart.

The first and original catamaran, the Amaryllis, will leave the salt water forever. It will go West—catamaran, go West. A Chicago man has purchased it for $300, and the South Sea craft that distanced the fleet at the Centennial regatta will be launched in the waters of Lake Michigan.

Mr. Bryant's Literary Career.

William Cullen Bryant was born at Cummington, Hampshire county, Mass., Nov 3, 1794. His father, Peter Bryant, was a distinguished local physician, who had also traveled considerably, and devoted much time to the culture of his mind. He took unusual interest in the intellectual and moral development of his children, and was rewarded in the case of all of them, and particularly in that of William, with early evidence of their proficiency. The poet, in his beautiful "Hymn to Death," alludes feelingly to him in the lines beginning:—

For he is in the grave who taught my youth
The art of verse, and in the leaf of life
Offered me to the muses;

which was no poetic exaggeration, but a literal truth. There are few instances of precocity more remarkable than that of Bryant. He communicated lines to the county gazette before he was ten years of age, and in his 14th year his friends caused to be printed two considerable poems, "The Embargo," a political satire, and "The Spanish Revolution." These passed to a second edition the next year (1809), and in the preface to that edition it was found necessary to certify the production of them by a person so young, in order to remove the skepticism of the public. In his 19th year he wrote "Thanatopsis," which still holds its place in general estimation as one of the most impressive poems in the language. He had in 1810 entered Williams College, where he was soon distinguished for his attainments in language and in polite literature. At the end of two years he took an honorable dismission, and engaged in the study of the law. Admitted to the bar in 1815, he commenced practice in Plainfield, and afterwards removed to Great Barrington. He speedily rose to a high rank in the local courts; but his tastes inclined him rather to letters than to law. In 1817 his poem "Thanatopsis" was published in the North American Review, and introduced him to the acquaintance of Mr. Richard H. Dana, who was one of the club which then conducted the Review. He contribute l also several prose articles to that periodical. In 1821 he delivered before the Phi Beta Kappi Society at Harvard College a didactic poem on "The Ages," and in that year several of his poems were collected in a volume at Cambridge, and obtained for him immediate recognition as a writer of high merit. He removed to New York in 1825, and was engaged as an editor of the New York Review, soon after merged in the United States Review, to which he contributed several criticisms and poems. In 1826 he connected himself with the Evening Post newspaper, under the editorial control of William C. Bryant. At that time it was inclined to federalism, and Mr. Bryant sought to give it more and more a republican character. When he acquired an exclusive control of its columns, a few years later, he rendered it decidedly "democratic," taking ground in favor of freedom of trade, and against all partial or class legislation. From 1827 to 1830 Mr. Bryant was associated with Robert C. Sands and Gulian C. Verplanck in the editorship of the Talisman, a highly successful annual, and he contributed about the same time to the tales of "Medifah" and "The Skeleton's Cave" to a book entitled "Tales of the Glauber Spa." In 1832 a complete edition of his poems was published in New York, and a copy of it reaching Washington Irving in England, he caused an edition to be printed there, with a laudatory preface. It was most generously reviewed by John Wilson in Blackwood's Magazine, and from that time Mr. Bryant's reputation in Europe has stood as high as it does in his own country. Having associated William Leggett with himself in the management of the Evening Post, he sailed with his family for Europe in the spring of 1834, and travelled through France, Italy and Germany, enlarging his knowledge of the languages and literatures of the leading nations. His poems bear witness to his familiarity with the Spanish, Italian, German and French languages, which he had continued to cultivate. AUCTION SALE

THREE COTTAGES AND LOTS

—IN—

UPPER KENSINGTON,

the property of Chas. Hutchinson, Esq.

P. C. BARNARD

is instructed by the proprietor to sell by auction, on the ground,

On Tuesday, June 18th, at 3 o'clock p.m., the property above referred to, being a new survey of the remainder of the Kensington property now completed, comprising which has been designated, and will hereafter be known as "Upper Kensington."

These Lots, forming part of that well known elevated ridge of land which bounds the valley of the Thames on its western side, and commanding an extensive, charming and unique prospect of city and country, will, from their picturesque and convenient situation, inevitably become one of the most popular of the ever-increasing suburbs of the City of London.

Mr. Hutchinson having at his own expense graded and constructed the roads and sidewalks belonging to the survey, one of the principal inconveniences necessarily attending the sale of such properties will thus be completely avoided.

The streets, Oak and Francis, are now complete, and the others will be made on or before the day of sale, as the proprietor is determined to sell on completion. For a good portion of the improvements required in connection with the opening of Grant street above mentioned, the Council of the Township of North Dorchester have kindly consented to advance the money, which, I am glad to say, has had the effect of restoring me to perfect health, and with pleasure I sincerely recommend it to the public.

EXPRESS RELIEF!

THE FRIEND OF MANKIND.

An Internal & External Remedy

A Balm for every Wound

It cures Rheumatism and Neuralgia, and kills all pain instantly. "Does it what?" "It is the only known remedy for Rheumatism on the American Continent, and it is by thousands As soon as applied it gives instant ease." "Has the extraordinary power to cure the most excruciating pains." "Is the only remedy known that will instantly penetrate to the seat of pain, and relieve at once." "Is the only remedy that will relieve Pain in the Back, Kidneys and Loins." "Will cure Rheumatism in any part of the system through the natural outlets."

IT CURES

Toothache, Earache, Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sprains, Swellings, Inflammation, Burns, Scalds, Cramps, Pain in Side, Pain in Back, Pain in Chest, Pain in Kidneys, Sore Throat, Frost Bites, Chilblains, Diarrhœa, Cramp in Stomach, Summer Complaint, &c., &c.

It will cure the most agonizing Pain internal or external, in one minute after application. Forget your prejudices, and give it a trial. The great secret of its success will all classes is owing to the fact it is safe and harmless, and can be taken by the most delicate, and can be applied to any case of disease in accordance with the printed directions. Not any preparation which research, skill and "Medical Science" has yet produced

As a proof of its great power over disease, any person, not a cripple, who is suffering from any of the above named painful complaints, is requested to call at the store any day of the week, and get practical proof, "free of Charge," of its magical power over pain in the application.

Testimonials from all parts of the Dominion are constantly coming to hand, giving expression to the most grateful gratitude for astonishing relief which it has performed, and we would say to the sufferer, don't delay a day, but let all others who have tried it unanimously

Physicians of the highest respectability recommend it as a most effectual "domestic remedy" for the relief of Pain in cases of sudden emergency.

Carry it to your house, and it will prove a blessing to your families and afflicted friends.

I challenge the world to produce its equal.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

Marjorie had been at The Anchorage all the afternoon, and the shabby phaeton had been sent for her. Then, in the darkness of the March night, James drove her away from the bright and happy home, where her thoughts still lingered.

"Marjorie, I thought I should see you. I have waited for you. Take my horse on, James, and I will drive your mistress."

It was Sir Neil Atheston who greeted her thus, at the gate of The Anchorage, and whose look his coat beside her, with his old ease and air of proprietorship.

"Let the old pony go as slowly as you like, Neil," she said, absently; "there is nothing very cheering awaiting me at home; and it is a very dismal morrow that will dawn upon this gusty night."

"I'm more than willing, dear," said Neil, taking the pony as slowly as possible along the dark highway. "How is—how are they all, Marjorie?"

"Mrs. Eslaide has had bothache for a few hours," returned the girl, with her old air payment of misunderstanding and provoking him,—but, fortunately, it is better now. Little Jack cut his finger about a week ago; but—don't you grow serious about it?—under a strict discipline régime, it has healed sufficiently for him to finish, with ease, a copy which I set him 'Learning straightness, refines, and elevates the mind.' But the cook is lying down with headache; caused, I fancy, by—"

"I don't want to hear about the servants," cut in Neil, petulantly.

"I was just coming to the others when you interrupted me. He has not, that I guess of, called in professional advice: no I—"

"Bother!" growled the young man. "James—Jessie's husband, you know—my mind telling me about him, Marjorie!"

"You asked about them all," was the girl's calm rejoinder, "and so I began to—"

"How is Miss Chester?" he inquired, in a tone which said that she had read his thoughts from the first; and so attempting no more roundabout methods of reaching the truth.

"How can you expect her to be?"

Something in her voice, it must have been, which made his next words almost apologetic as well as regretful.

"I'm very sorry she's subpœnaed for to-morrow, Marjorie. No one could be more sorry than I am."

"I'm sorry you were the cause of it," she answered, coldly. "Perhaps her coming back could not possibly have been prevented; but your bringing her could, and would have been, if you had had ever so little thought for her unmixed with thought for yourself."

"It would have made this difference," said Neil, a dull wrath rising in his heart as he felt how daringly Marjorie put his motives on his conduct with—he never had the power of contradicting—that she would have been glad to see him and die—or worse—alone in London. She with her beauty and helplessness and poverty! Can you calmly thinked it, Marjorie—you, a tender-hearted woman?"

"I suppose we never shall be able to put ourselves in each other's places," smiled Marjorie, looking into his face frankly and kindly for the first time for many months—"alas, I suppose, Neil. I should not think quite the same of your part in this—I wish I could. I can not bear to go on thinking of you as selfish and cruel."

"Thank you," he answered, in a voice of pain, not irony. "Even without the power of putting myself in your place, I can not appreciate fully all the goodness of your motive, Marjorie dear. You have always been good to her."

"I was not goodness," the girl answered; "I sadly; "perhaps it was as much mine as yours. All I do, or could her she deserves from me, for her love for me, she has been unconsciously to me—"

"But I may thank you, may'n I?" the young man said, turning to her now and then as they drove down between the great old pillars of Hazelwood, weird-looking in the light of the passing lamps. "because she has been, as it were, under our protection—my mother's and mine—and ours ought to have been the home to shelter her now."

"Better as it is," said the girl, curtly, her eyes aflame at his last lame speech, "better for her, better for me, better for you."

"But I must do something."

"Of course, you will," she replied; "your protection is indispensable, I see, my ways felt that. Just wait till to-morrow is over, then claim your privilege. If the sky brother is condemned, surely it will be a consolation to Hester to feel that she has high-sheriff is more merciful than the judge, and offers her, at any rate, an entire absolution."

"Don't be sarcastic to-night, Marjorie," pleaded Sir Neil in earnestness, which was foreign to his usually lazy tones. "I am as miserable as she is herself. You win all her gratitude, I all her contempt. I own it is natural, but still it is rather too cruel to bear from you, can imagine. Where—where you wish to please, it is hard to find that you always hurt."

"Neil," inquired Marjorie, abruptly, "how long is your mother going to persist in her inveterate anger against Miss Chester?"

"I don't know," he said, and as he spoke she lamp-light showed a real anxiety on the fine-bred face always known so carious. "I have told you again and again that I think you could convince her, if you would try."

"I won't go to her again to try," was the quick answer; "my mother would not until the trial was over, and I will not. She was unpardonably rude to Hester and my-matic in her arguments, as only a woman can be. I said I wouldn't encourage her again to say things that put me in a position, and made her bellow—oh yes, she did bellow, Neil; don't interrupt. So I've never been but that once, and I don't intend to plead for Miss Chester again. We till to-morrow is over. Surely the horrible farce cannot last longer than one day."

"You never break your word, Marjorie; so it is of no use asking you."

"Can the usual amount of labor, numbers usually,—but oh, I do break my word; I've broken it 'I hundred times since' also checked herself hurriedly)—since I made even that one resolution. But I have not broken it in that. I will not stoop again, to Lady Atheleton. Miss Chester can live without any more assistance from me, or my sister. Let them go."

"Please," smiled Neil. "But do you change your opinions, if you do not break your word, or do you still think—"

"I still think every thing I used to think," the girl answered, hastily; "I still think I shall always all I have thought; and am not mouthful you and I hadn't been so idiots as to get where we stand to-day with Louise. Oh, if I had been but miles away! It seems that every face is to be asked to tell something to help on that one story, and is to be made to do it, too! And foremost of all, Neil, I still think Eustace Jeffry is not dead."

"Ah, Marjorie," he said, gently, "the very way you say it betrays how weak your belief really is. You have no confidence in your own opinion. No; the impossibility of such an idea must be patent to us all by now."

"Good night," she struck in, abruptly; "don't come in. I don't want to hear Louise talk about to-morrow, and I don't want to talk about to-day. I have fancied all day that I could hear the Bisshorough bells and the trumpets—deafening farce! Good-night."

She stood upon the steps, looking after him as he rode away.

"Poor Neil," she said to herself, with a smile and a sigh together, "will anything ever teach him how to act in real, noble self-forgetfulness? I feel so often maddened by him, yet never hopeless. The idea of Lady Atheleton's old fallacy that I do him good! I—think of it! I wonder what good I could ever do any one, even if I loved them, and I suppose that is the motive-power most wanted. If I loved Neil, should I be less miserable tonight than I am, or more so? I wonder. And if I loved—

Even the unbreathed thought was not finished. Standing there in the hush and darkness of the night—standing there alone and unseen—the color yet rose slowly and vividly in Marjorie's cheeks; and, knowing what thought had summoned it, she put up both her hands to hide it, sobbing as she never sobbed when any eyes could see, or ears could hear her.

And Neil went slowly on his way back to High Attleton, thinking, more than he imagined, about the girl who had dismissed him so suddenly; but for such thoughts she might have been glad and grateful, in her heart.

COUNTRY NOTES.

Crops from London to Wingham, from Wingham to Newry—Grange Picnic and Other Matters.

The London, Huron & Bruce and Wellington, Grey & Bruce Railroads pass through some of the best agricultural counties in Ontario, although a proper estimate cannot always be made of what land and crops are by judging of the whole country by the land lying contiguous to the railway. From Ryde Park station to Brecon, London Tp., the road passes through some of the oldest settled farms in Western Ontario. This part of the township has been settled for nearly half a century, yet the farms appear to be no more advanced, as regards improvements, than the more recently settled townships in the county of Huron. A little over twenty-five years ago, the land in the vicinity of Elvster was called the "Queen's Bush," a name which was not appropriate, as the land really belonged to the Canada Company at that time. But a few years' toil has changed the primeval forest into well-cultivated farms. Farm property in the counties of Huron, Bruce, and Perth, has increased rapidly in value in a few years, considering the comparatively poor settlement. Railways, good roads, and a prolific soil have all combined to favor this part of Ontario. From Wingham, a noticeable difference can be observed in the height of trees from the lower part of London Township, say from Hyde Park, Sanchez, to Brecon, the same difference can be observed—the trees are higher as you go north. There is fully a difference of 14 feet in height in 25 miles. This denotes a superior strata of soil supplying plant food. It is a natural deduction that fresh soil produces a heavy growth of trees It will correspondingly supply grain with nourishment. The prosperity of the farmers of the new Tp. counties has not been so much owing to good farming as to the natural fertility of the soil, as it has the elements of an almost inexhaustible supply of food. Some lands in the Huron District fields have been known to be sown for fifteen years in succession with wheat without fertilizing, and the last crop yielded more than the first. This land is a rich alluvial soil, with a fine wheat subsoil of clay, and probably there is no better land in America than this northern part of Western Ontario. There is one great need, however, which the land sadly wants, and that is better draining. The prospects of an abundant harvest are good all along the line. The fall wheat is in full bloom, and in rich ground, a portion of it is already lodged. The wet weather of the last few days has been favorable in retarding its growth and giving a steady growth in developing the kernel. In fact there is no bad fall of fall wheat to be seen. Besides, a large acreage has been sown, and if the spring crop of wheat is a total failure the fall wheat will bring up a large average in the yield of wheat. The spring grain is not, considering the early spring, so far advanced as might be supposed, owing probably to the lateness of getting upon the ground. Some of the fields have been slightly injured by the frost, especially barley in low ground. It is not permanently damaged, and is fast recovering from the effects of the FARMERS are luxuriant, and a large flow of milk is obtained, and a consequent supply of milk to the factory, and an increased quantity of butter made. The attention of farmers through these counties has been attracted of late years by the profits realized by dairy ing, and as is usually the case to many who neglected other branches of farming, and rat, the very thought of which makes me shudder. I never go near the horrid place if I can help it; the smell and general unlikeness is something dreadful. Poor Jack and Jack, and very often Maps, have many times in that place played the "pets" tricks, and pretending they are sick in order to detain them, and they say it is the most delightful place in the island. Opposite it Fred keeps his own boat, of which he has appointed Jack first mate. They are going out to-morrow for another day's fishing. Why under Mr. Maps will meet with another accident remains to be seen, but I hope not. I have promised to write an account of it if they do, among my adventurers worth recording.

NELLIE.

I don't think we have given you too many praises to-day this week. Those make the first of the new series for which prizes will be given, of which I will tell you more next week. Nellie has made all of Jack bonding, or rather canoeing on a plank, which is one of his favorite methods of courting sudden death; here it is.

Hints on Etiquette.

From Fun.

Friendly calls should always be made when least wished for.

It is looked upon as a delicate act of attention during a call of condolence for the caller to offer his pocket pistol to the afflicted. A very intimate friend may bring in a pot of porter.

A visit after a party should be made before breakfast next morning. Enclose your card in your hat, and fling it up at your friend's bedroom window; if he does not wake leave the card at the nearest lamppost.

If you think your friend's servants are indolent, it is a kindness to him to give a runaway ring every time you pass his house.

Keep your hat on your head in a drawing room until you are requested to take it off. In that case, do as you please.

When a lady enters a drawing room, the gentlemen present should rise and play leapfrog.

Never enter a drawing room on a bicycle.

The last arrival, if no other seat be vacant, must place himself on the mantlepiece.

A lady is not required to kiss any gentleman caller above the age of sixty.

When your visitor retires, ring the bell for the servant and bid him look after the spoons.

About two years ago skating rinks were the rage in London and many other places of fashionable resort in England. The thing was absurdly overdone, and bankruptcy has overtaken nearly all. It will be the same with the flood of newspapers. There is actually another new weekly, Piccadilly, to add to the list, which includes the World, Truth, Vanity Fair, the Whitehall Gazette, the Week, London Fair, the Whitehall Gazette, the Week, London Magnet, and Social News. When it is remembered that the Saturday Review at its best is understood never to have carried more than $3,000 a year, it is difficult to see how most of these papers can survive.

HOLIDAY ISLAND,
Lake Stillwater.

We are alone in our glory! Uncle and aunt have departed on their voyage to that wonderful "Old World" Europe, about which Fred and I have thought, talked and read so much, but have never seen.

I think Mr. Mapes took as lively an interest in the preparations for the journey as if he had been going himself, and gave Uncle Geoffrey many hints as to places to be visited in London and sights to be seen there. These included Tussaud's Waxworks (the crowned heads is alone worth the money you pay for admission—he said), being likelies in expression and awe-striking in attitude; a little shakiness which is visible in their legs only when viewed from the rear, and evident to the observant eye; and the British Museum (where you may tire yourself out examining stuffed beasts and mummies, and yet not see a tenth part of it).

He was also very particular in recommending the ascent of the Monument and the dome of St. Paul's, and, indeed, every place that necessitated a large amount of physical exertion and promised little besides painful depression in return.

Mrs. Peterkin—whose fixed idea is that all "foreign parts" are frivolous in the extreme—begs parts" are frivolous in the extreme—begs Uncle Geoffrey carefully to avoid the Tower, and by no means to be seen in the neighborhood of Traitor's Gate, for fear he should be taken up on suspicion of being a conspirator.

Uncle Geoffrey has promised to be very careful in this respect, and to avoid the Tower and Traitor's Gate, and all places of a suspicious character, and to keep a sharp look-out for pickpockets, and to be very careful of his money, and to be sure to write us a long letter every week, and to tell us all he sees and does, and to remember that we are anxiously waiting to hear from him

The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is larger than that of any other Ontario journal in the West, and more than that of the combined issues o its local contemporaries—any statements to the contrary notw withstanding.

FORESTRY.—At St. Thomas, on June 13th, Tecumseh Court, No. 11, Independent Order Foresters, was duly organized by Bro. Fortune, P. C. R., assisted by Bro. J. H. Ley, of Court Dufferin, No. 7, of London. This Court starts with every prospect of success.

CANADA PATENTS.—The following are the latest granted:—J. Lay, broom; A. D. Cable, et al., lamp burner; S. Smith, furnace grate; W. M. Woodbury, millstone setting; E. E. Carpenter, et al., corn broom; G. W. Scollay, preserving animal matter; E. B Butterworth, steam or hot water boiler; J. F. Rose, powder package; W. M. Woodbury, millstone setting.

WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The first regular meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, as recently organized under Mrs. Youmans, was held in the W. M. Lecture Hall, Clarence-street, Thursday, at 3 p. m., Mrs. Murray Anderson in the chair. The St. Catharines constitution was read and adopted. An encouraging number of ladies was present, and it was decided that the meetings should be held on the second and fourth Thursdays of every month, at the same hour.

THE DETROIT EXCURSION.—The large number of 700 passengers, quite a respectable pilon yesterday on a pleasure excursion to Detroit over the Grand Western Railway. The first train comprised twelve coaches, densely crowded, which did not stop until Chatham was reached, when two more coaches were hastily well filled, and between London and Chatham picked up over 300 passengers, one-half of whom embarked at the latter place. Both trains arrived in Windsor in good time, without the slightest accident occurring to any of the excursionists.

MASONIC INSTALLATION.—The following officers of Merrill Lodge, No. 344, G. R. C., Dorchester-station, were duly installed by Wm. Bro. J. B. Watson, of Strathroy, assisted by W. Bro. A. S. Murray and R. D. Hungerford, of London, in a very able and impressive manner last (Thursday) evening:—Bro. W. H. Gurnick, W. M.; Bro. John Beverly, S.W.; Bro. E. T. Shaw, J. W.; Bro. S. S. Murray, Chaplain; Bro. Francis Chattick, Treasurer; Bro. R. L. Blundes, Secretary; Bro. Abram Slaight, S.D.; Bro. Sandham Leonard, J.D.; Bro. Wm. McKay, I. G.; Bro. George Wilson and Samuel Wilson, Stewards; Bro. W. H. Collins, Tyler.

BURGLARIOUS ENTRY.—Between 10 o'clock Thursday night and an early hour yesterday morning some evil-disposed person broke into the fruit stand of an Italian named Frank Spano, on the east side of Richmond-street, near York, and stole therefrom between $8 and $9 worth of candies, figs, lemons and other condimentes. The sneak thief broke open the door at the back of the stand, and once in the place was quite secure from the gaze of the officer on the beat. It is highly probable that the theft was committed by one of the army of bootblacks who congregate daily and nightly in the vicinity.

LONDON AT THE PARIS EXHIBITION.—The Mail's Paris correspondent, in reviewing the Canadian exhibit, makes the following reference to one of our London firms:—"A corresponding stand on the opposite side bears more homely articles in a bedstead, a mirror, with marble dressing, hat, secretary, and a book shelf and desk combined all extremely well put together and tastefully carved. This exhibit is from the George Moorhead Manufacturing Company, of London, to which firm also belong a row of excellent perambulators (that nursemaids deadly weapon, as well as the rocking chairs that are strewn through this division, and have so often been such a blessing to the exhausted pedestrian."

POLICE COURT NOTES.—At the court yesterday Chas. Strong and Thomas Callaghan, the vagrants arrested by Detective Murphy and constable on suspicion of larceny, were remanded until the 17th. A lad named James Gilbert, from West minster, was charged by Mrs. Miller with the larceny of a gold locket on the 30th of May last. The evidence for the prosecution was taken, and an adjournment had until Thursday next for the purpose of hearing the testimony for the defence. Wm. Sullivan was up on remand, charged with the larceny of tobacco from a storekeeper named Logan, in this city, a few nights since, and also on suspicion of stealing a watch from the same place. He was committed for trial.

HIGH SCHOOL.—A special meeting of the Board of Education was held Thursday night last as the press were not notified there were no reporters present. Mr. H. Crump was in the chair, and Messrs. Reid, McIntosh, Wright, Moffat, Overell, Craig, Hayly and Wilson were present. The following is a synopsis of the business transacted:—The report of the School Improvement Committee was read, which recommended that the water closets be placed in a separate building; that a bell be placed on the High School building, leading from the Head-teacher's room to the several class-rooms and to the Janitor's room, and that a Janitor be advertised for at the rate of $200 per annum. This was carried. It was also decided to have the streets around the High School graded and boulevarded.

PROMPT ACTION NEEDED.—The daring action of a band of masked burglars, whose proceeding a for the past few days have been recorded in the FREE PRESS, calls for prompt action. A few more robberies carried out with impunity will not only give those already engaged hardihood to proceed to still greater extremes, but will tempt others to become Knights of the Road. The London Chief of Police is willing and anxious to do all he can to rid society of those daring pests, but his jurisdiction ends with the city boundaries. It therefore becomes the duty of the County authorities to take action in this matter, and it behooves them to move at once. The offer of a reward for the capture of the burglars, and a guarantee of protection from violence by the police in ferreting them out would be desirable, and would entirely meet with the approval of the ratepayers.

LOCAL NOTICES.

NEW GROCERY.—Mr. J. J. Southcott, who is well and favorably known, has opened on the corner of Dundas and Clarence streets, immediately opposite the Oddfellows' Hall, with a large and well selected stock of everything usually kept in a first-class grocery. He will also keep a varied supply of such products as are in constant use for culinary purposes, such as bacon, hams, butter, eggs, &c., which will be sold as cheap as can be purchased elsewhere and from a long acquaintance with this branch of trade, all favoring him with their custom can depend upon being served with the best of goods.

The beautiful working model of the celebrated Strasburg clock will open for exhibition at Mechanics' Hall next Tuesday, and continue for the remainder of the week. It is certainly a mechanical marvel. It is fourteen feet high, and is in every particular a correct model of the wonderful original. The globe, showing the revolutions of the earth, and the grand calender set for fifty years, showing the changes in the Copernican system, signs of the zodiac, phases of the moon, &c.; the "four ages of man," represented by four figures of childhood, youth, manhood and old age, which appear and disappear as the day fin the needs a quarter of an hour advance. Father Time with his hammer, announcing on a gong the changes, are all very interesting and excites the curiosity of a large number of spectators. The procession of the apostles, which, in the original, takes place at twelve o'clock, is the special attraction every fifteen minutes. The twelve apostles appear and pass before a figure of the Saviour, each bowing as he passes, until Peter comes, when a figure of Judas appears on the balcony, and like cock on the barrel claps its wings and crows. When Judas brings up the rear of the procession, Satan again appears. It is certainly a great curiosity.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Composed, Compiled and Corralled by "Free Press" Reporters.

The straw hat wave has at last struck the city.

The scarcity of ice has occasioned the people no inconvenience as yet.

Last evening's pleasant weather drew out a large crowd of promenaders.

Give the Clevelanders a hearty welcome. They are on a peaceful mission bent.

The Synod of the Diocese of Huron opens in this city on Tuesday afternoon next.

The policemen had little to do last night save to gaze at the stars and keep awake.

It is whispered that the weather was frightened into good behavior by threats of an investigating committee.

The click of the croquet mallet is only heard at odd intervals. The prevailing sound is now the twang of the bow string.

Arrangements will soon be made for the annual Masonic excursion. Committees have already been appointed.

The Exeter Reflector talks of Mr. Greenway "despising the actions of the Opposition." Wonder what led him to despise thusly?

It is said to be the intention of a number of property holders on Great Market street to petition the Council to change the name to Princess avenue.

The police blotter yesterday announced a "sandy haired girl" lost. Undoubtedly the prevailing dust of the day had something to do with this condition of the young girl's hair.

Messrs. Thos. McCormick, Anthony Keenleyside and L. Olmstead, of this city, attended the meeting of the wholesale biscuit manufacturers at Hamilton the other day.

Messrs. Robinson, Tracy, Durand & Co., have prepared the plans for a handsome block of brick stores on the corner of Dundas and Adelaide streets, which are to be commenced by the 1st of August.

Inspired by the recent popularity of archery, it is estimated that about nine-tenths of the young men in the city have tenderly whispered, on the appropriate occasion, "As unto the bow the string is, so unto the woman is woman."

The Great Western Railway intend shortly replacing the old wooden structure over the Thames at Windsor by a T. & P. R. branch, near this city, by a substantial iron bridge. The iron is being placed on the embankments.

Baron Heichenbach says:—"Always sleep with your face to the equator." "Yes, so, Baron," replies a convivial writer, "But when a fellow gets home at one a. m., and sees the bed and chairs quietly spinning around like bobbins in a mill, how's he going to know where on earth the equator is?"

A genius intends applying for a patent for a machine which, he says, when wound up and put in motion, will chase a hog over a ten-acre lot, catch, yoke, and ring him or, by a slight change of gearing, it will chop him up into sausages, work his brains into shoe-blacking, and manufacture his tail into a corkscrew.

London East Notes.

Friday evening.

The Mutual Improvement Society of King street Presbyterian Church gave a very pleasant strawberry and ice cream social this evening. Rev. B. A. Tait presided, and, in opening the proceedings, delivered a brief and interesting address, after which he introduced a varied programme of instrumental and vocal music and readings. The following persons took part:—Misses Cox, McCabe, Johnston, Crown, Hitchen, Fairbairn and Hutton, and Messrs. Maynard, Smith and Hobbs. The attendance was large, and all apparently enjoyed the entertainment very much.

The members of the Liberal Club held an official meeting in Hicks' Block this evening. Mr. David Glass was present, and urged upon the few in attendance the necessity of immediate and earnest efforts in the interest of himself. Committees were accordingly struck for the purpose of canvassing the village and ascertaining the political sentiments of the electors. It may seem strange that notwithstanding the presence of their valiant leader and candidate, there was apparently little interest manifested in the action taken by the Club. No one, not even Mr. Glass, felt sufficiently inspired to deliver an address.

A Committee of the Council met this evening, and opened the applications sent in for the position of village constable. They numbered seventeen. After reading the testimonials of the applicants and discussing the fitness of several, the Committee postponed the appointment for a couple of days, in order that further enquiries might be made.

The Board of Works also met, and opened six tenders for stumping Quebec and English streets. Mr. Charles Mabery, to do the work efficiently by the 15th of July for $500, was accepted. He will commence work at once, and laborers will also be employed early next week in rounding the village streets.

SERIOUS RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—About nine o'clock last night a colored man visited the police station at the City Hall, and informed Constable Burke that a fire was in progress in the vicinity of Clarence street and Dundas. The officer, as a matter of course, took it for granted that the Senegambian had upset a lamp somewhere, and accordingly rang the alarm. The firemen at once responded, and, as is their wont, headed the engines and apparatus towards the Market Square. Just as the horses attached to the chief engine passed leisurely crossing on Richmond street, the vehicle struck the second left by the men who have been laying gas pipes, and the driver, George Gray, being unaware of the obstruction, was thrown violently to the ground, receiving a severe contusion on the face and head. The team then took their heels, and ran along King street at a furious pace. Again tried his luck. He was driven out by the first three batters, however. Mc-Geoughe met the same reception, and Mc-Sorley was pounded about as badly as the other two. In that one inning some the Rochesters made eleven base hits off the three pitchers, and then they only got eight from exhaustion.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

ESSEX.

Rev. Mr. Ayers has been reappointed for the next year as pastor of the Bible Christian tabernacle, Windsor.

Rev. Mr. Campbell has been reappointed by the Bible Christian conference for the Windsor circuit, Windsor, for the next year.

Captain Rice, of the Windsor volunteers, has received orders to give his men their annual drill some time in or December next. A rifle competition then brought their furlings next week.

The Detroit and Essex county cricketers play a return match at Windsor to-morrow afternoon. Members of cricket clubs from Amherstburg, Sarnia and Leamington are to take part.

The Windsor town Council gets no pay, and they have not been able to get a quorum at the two last meetings for the transaction of business. If there is any business to ar ange it would be wise to pay them.

June 14.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Last night, about ten o'clock, as the train from Detroit reached the London station, a serious accident happened. Mr. Andrew O'Mara, of this city, in his eagerness to get off, jumped from the train before it had stopped. His foot slipped, and he fell between the cars and the platform, and had his right arm terribly torn and the bone crushed. Mr. Robert Logan, who saw the accident, rescued the unfortunate man as soon as possible, and had him taken to his own house, Drs. Brown, Waugh and Mitchell were called in, and upon examination it was found that in addition to the injuries to the arm Mr. O'Mara has received a severe cut upon the left thigh. After consultation, it was decided that the arm will have to be amputated this morning. This sad case is only another warning, added to the many that have already occurred, against the danger of leaving a train while it is still in motion.

RED RIBBON EXCURSION.—The Red Ribbon Reform Club intends having an excursion to Hamilton on Tuesday next. A special train will leave this city at 7.30 a.m., and returning will leave Hamilton at 6 p.m. The Band of the 7th Batt. will accompany the excursion, which promises to be a very pleasant one.

PERSONAL.—Hon. David Mills, the Minister of the Interior, left London yesterday afternoon en route to the capital. Considering the cool reception he received in Richwell during the week he looked about as well as could have been expected.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Tecumsehs Defeated by 6 to 3.

The return match between the Hornells and Tecumsehs, yesterday afternoon, resulted in favor of the visitors by a score of 6 to 3. The attendance was about the same as at the previous game, and all present anticipated an exciting match. But for the fact that several decisions of the umpire were execrable in the extreme, it might have proved exciting. In the third and fifth innings no more flagrant errors of judgment were ever witnessed on a ball field, and the crowd in attendance did not hesitate to pronounce them as such. Mr. Andrus, to put it mildly, seemed to lose his head whenever a close decision presented itself, and, as a matter of course, the visitors, from the manager to the worst player of the nine, "kicked"—metaphorically speaking—against such conduct. At the close of the fifth innings a change was made, and from that time until the close a comparatively lively game was witnessed. The visitors took advantage of an error of Dunnigan's in the early part of the game, and assisted by a base hit or two scored three runs in a similar number of innings. This lead was increased in the sixth and seventh innings by three more, while up to this time the home nine hadn't tallied at all. In the eighth and ninth, they scored three runs, the first by a couple of overthrows of Keenan and Derby, and the last two by base hits, aided by errors of the visitors. Hall, Burke, Dunlap and Keenan led the batting for their respective nines. The hits of the home team were scattered and ineffective, while those of the visitors were the very opposite. The Hornells are a very good team, and may be classed as the strongest nine that have visited London this season. Some very good plays were made by individual members of both clubs yesterday, but not of sufficient importance to require special mention. The following is the score:—

Boston Herald:—"A note from Mr. Chas. J. Ray, manager of the Stars, states that the game with the Worcesters after the 4th instant does not count in the international series, as the latter were not members of the International Association at the time the game was played."

The Fredonia, N.Y., paper says:—"It is announced that Craver's disqualifications have substantially been removed, and that he will play on the Haymaker nine next week." It such be the case, why not reinstate Devlin and Galvin also? Craver was accredited the worst of the black sheep.

A game of base ball was played Thursday afternoon between Tyler's and Mac Corrigan's rooms, which resulted in favor of Corrigan's by a score of 13 to 8 in the sixth innings.

The Rochesters only made three base hits off Mahaffey in the game with the Forest City's, of Cleveland, Thursday, while the latter made but five. The Forest City's next says they had evidently exhausted themselves in defeating the Buffalos the day previous.

We find the following in the Albany Argus:—"A number of persons interested in the national game are negotiating it is said, with W. S. Arnold, manager of the Auburn club, for the transfer of that team to this city. It is to be hoped that the movement will be successful. Albany should be represented in the game, and the Argus has strenuously advocated the adoption of some nine for the season of 1878. The record of the Auburn club thus far, though not brilliant, shows that it is composed of plucky men, and if brought here would probably meet with better encouragement, and the nine is surely superior in every respect to the Haymakers."

The Erie Dispatch says that Fouser, late of the Alleghenys, has joined the Rochesters, but no information to that effect has yet been made public.

James, right fielder of the Crickets, has been released.

Dehlman, late manager of the Erics, has taken to umpiring.

The Rochester Democrat gives the following account of the game at Buffalo on Wednesday last,—"The Rochesters won another International unassisted game from the Sorrowful Nine at Buffalo yesterday. How it so came to pass had the mickey gentlemen so badly that we almost hesitate to publish the score for fear of libel. Sixteen to three, we believe, was the story told by the telegraph wires last evening, a score that must have mystified and pained the hearts of the brave two thousand who flocked to the scene of the conflict yesterday. As before, the trouble with the scrowful men was the want of a pitcher whom the Rochester nine could not hit. Galvin tried it first, but two base hits discouraged him and he retired to the field, McGeoughe taking his place. The new man stood up to three balls, and was then thrown very violently to the ground, receiving a severe contusion on the face and head. The team then took their beds, and ran along King street at a furious pace. Again tried his hand. He squarely by the first three batters, however. McGeough met the same reception, and McSorley was pounded about as badly as the other two. In that one inning some the Rochesters made eleven base hits off the three pitchers, and then they only got eight from exhaustion.

INDEPENDENT FORESTERS

First Visit of Col. A. B. Caldwell—Presentation of a Cane—Formation of a P. H. C.

A large number of the members of the Independent Order of Foresters met last evening in their chambers, Edge Block, to welcome to the city Col. A. B. Caldwell, R. W. H. P. S., and founder of the Order, of New York. The hall was tastefully decorated for the occasion. Dr. Oronhyatekha, on behalf of Courts Hope, Maple, Dufferin and Victoria, read an address of welcome, and presented him with a gold-headed cane, as a souvenir of his first visit to Canada. Bro. Caldwell replied at length, stating that the membership was now over 11,000. Speeches were also made by Bros. Halle, D. D. H. C. R., of Kent; W. W. Fitzgerald, D. D. H. C. R., of Middlesex, and Dr. Oronhyatekha, after which a few hours were spent in social intercourse.

On Monday morning Bro. Caldwell will proceed to Brantford, where he will institute a Provincial High Court for Ontario. The representatives from this city will be:—Court Hope, James Hooper; Court Maple, Sam. Hooper; Court Dufferin, George Wrigley; Court Victoria, Dr. Oronhyatekha.

A very beautiful bird has made its appearance this spring along the Connecticut shore, and lately about Danbury. It is a little smaller than a robin; has a black head, gray breast, a little lighter than the sparrow, a bone-white bill, brown and white feathers on the back, and a very bright carbuncle red mark on the breast. It has a pretty song, something like a bobolink, and begins to sing early in the morning.

Oil Still Explosion Yesterday Morning.

The Victor Oil Works Cooper Shops Burned.

Together with 300 Barrels of Oil and 1,500 Empty Barrels.

Shortly after four o'clock yesterday morning residents in the vicinity of the Victor Oil Works, on Adelaide street, between Horton and Bathurst streets, were startled from their slumbers by a loud noise, occasioned, as was subsequently ascertained, by the explosion of a 200-barrel oil still in the yard of that Company's works. The oil, it seems, was being run off at the time, and of course, the visitors, from the manager to the worst player of the nine, "kicked"—metaphorically speaking—against such conduct. At the close of the fifth innings a change was made, and from that time until the close a comparatively lively game was witnessed. The visitors took advantage of an error of Dunnigan's in the early part of the game, and assisted by a base hit or two scored three runs in a similar number of innings. THE BERLIN CONGRESS

A Four Hours' Session on Saturday.

The Greek Representative Admitted Unanimously.

A MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED.

Turkish Protest Against the Occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Roumania to be Heard on Monday.

Probable Declaration of the Principality's Independence.

The Turkish Representative to be Replaced.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

St. Petersburg, June 29.—The Journal de St. Petersbourg says now that the Bulgarian questions are disposed of, Europe, which has, hitherto regarded the integrity of Turkey in the light of a dogma, have undergone a total change. Europe now recognizes the necessity of the late war by sanctioning its results. This bears testimony to the success, ability and prudence of Russian diplomacy, which may be congratulated upon having obtained the object for which it has striven.

London, June 29.—The English press differ greatly in opinion, as to the results thus far reached in the Congress.

The Daily News says:—"It is not for us to profess any regret because of the terms that have been imposed upon Turkey by the Congress, but we confess we cannot see how her Majesty's present advisers can now, with any credit to all of the whole transaction. The dullest Turk must now see that Turkey would have had far better terms if she had submitted to the reconstruction of Europe, as proposed at the Constantinople Conference.

The Saturday Review says, the comparison between the treaty attached to the Treaty of San Stefano and the Constantinople Conference, shows that the Congress, largely but inadequately reconstructed the service which the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary have rendered to England and to Europe. The result of such a consultation of Europe has been attained are even more valuable than the material results. The English Government has throughout the negotiations never been exacting or overbearing. Its tone from first to last has been dignified, and it will be still less favorably viewed by the people of this country if it is intended to be the sum and end of all our diplomatic exploits. For all practical purposes the danger against which we proposed to guard Europe remains almost as great as it was.

The Times says the Congress, like most reasonable assemblies, has disappointed equally both of the extreme views which had been taken of its prospects. It has been sitting for no more than a fortnight, but the questions which threatened most directly the peace of Europe have been in substance settled. England having secured the barrier of the Balkans to Turkey no compromise on minor points destroys the value of such a concession.

General Sir Garnet Wolseley has written an important and exhaustive article for the July number of the North-American Review, on the subject of the standing army of India and its present and future organization. He discusses the effect of Beaconsfield's recent visit to the courts of the Mediterranean, and declares that peace will acknowledge the lasting consolidated on England by Beaconsfield's masterly policy in thus utilizing this mine of military strength. India, he says, is a recruiting ground vaster than all Europe put together.

Berlin, June 30.—When Lord Salisbury at the Congress urged the admission of Greece, he alluded to her own interests, on the ground that the Slav element had an advocate in Russia, the Turkish Empire centuries declared that the Porte was the sole representative of the Slav, Bulgarian and Greek population of the Ottoman Empire.

The Congress sat yesterday from 11 until 2.45 p.m.

Gorschakoff was present. The Greeks were admitted. The Congress on Friday unanimously authorized the Austrian occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Congress agreed to grant the Turks halting stations on the road to the Balkans, but they will not be allowed to be quartered on the inhabitants. If objections are raised to the acts of the Turkish Generals in command, the Consuls will remonstrate, and if no redress is obtained they will transmit protests to the Ambassadors at Constantinople.

In the Congress yesterday M. Deyannis, Greek plenipotentiary, submitted a memorandum, the reading of which occupied an hour and a quarter. The Roumanian delegates will be heard to-morrow. A series of preliminary deliberations of the several plenipotentiaries, presided over by Prime Hohenlohe, began on Saturday.

London, June 30.—A Constantinople despatch of Saturday says it is understood that Austria will persist in the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Turkey will probably confine herself to protest which Safvet Pasha has already made to the Austrian Ambassador. A later telegram says to indicate disposition on the part of the Turks to compromise. It is asserted that the Turkish Plenipotentiaries will demand that only a limited territory be occupied.

Constantinople, June 30.—The Russian at Adrianople introduced the Russian fiscal system of levying high duties in advance and farming out tithes.

Pesth, June 30.—The Emperor Francis Joseph closed the Hungarian Diet yesterday. In his speech he took an exceedingly favorable view of the relations with Russia Powers and the probability of peace.

London, July 1.—The Greek city in Epirus is stated that the Porte is disposed to give a fortune has returned, and reports the estate worth $1,000,000.

Tenders for the Georgian Bay Branch opened to-day. There were an unusually large number. The result will not transpire for several days.

In the first innings of the cricket match Montreal scored 123, and Ottawa 116. The match will be finished on Monday.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.

Good Progress in His Condition.

Berlin, June 30.—Satisfactory progress is reported in the condition of the Emperor William. The bandage has been removed from the head.

London, June 30.—A rumor was received in Paris on Saturday that the Emperor William had intimated a disposition to abdicate. It has received no confirmation.

GREECE.

CONTINUED FIGHTING.

Athens, June 30.—A Syra despatch reports that fighting is continued at Apocorona, and several Turkish men-of-war took part in the conflict. Armed Mussulmans have encamped outside of the town of Canea, and demand the dismissal of the Governor of the Island.

COLLAPSE OF A TUNNEL.

Twenty-seven Persons Buried Alive.

Barnsley, June 29.—A portion of the tunnel near Schwalin fell last night, burying 27 persons. Seven bodies have been taken out thus far.

American Telegrams.

Elizabeth, N. J., June 29.—Mrs. Jacob Boehm was sunstruck to-day, and died shortly after.

LOUISIANA POLITICS.

Eliza Pinkston Has an "Awakened Conscience."

New York, June 29.—The Herald publishes a sworn statement of Eliza Pinkston, her present husband, and several other persons. Eliza relates that she received $500 for her testimony; that she was carefully instructed what to say before the Returning Board; that though entirely free to walk, she was laid on a sofa when she was about to enter the chamber of the Returning Board; that her testimony was false; that her husband was murdered, and she was assaulted, not by Democrats, but as she has always believed, by a colored man, and the quarrel had nothing to do with politics.

Steamer Day at New York.

New York, June 29.—Nearly 650 saloon passengers sail for Europe to-day. Six steamers sail all loaded to the utmost capacity; considerable freight offerings having to be left over. Grain and cheese shipments are much beyond the average; the former aggregating about 220,000 bushels, and the latter over 60,000 boxes.

A Black Sheep.

Detroit, Mich., June 30.—Henry Bostwick, general manager of the dry goods establishment of Freelman & Co., is discovered to have embezzled $15,000 during the past nine years. Bostwick was a deacon and a Sunday-school superintendent. He made over all his property to the firm, and was allowed to leave the city.

Killed While Pole Driving.

Brigden, Ont., June 29.—Wm. Watson, a young man belonging to this village, was killed on Bear Creek this morning, while pile-driving, the rope breaking.

A Wreck in the Pacific.

Madras, June 29.—The American ship Mabel Clark, from Liverpool, March 30th, for Hong Kong, was totally wrecked on the Island of Trostan a Acunha, in the South Pacific ocean.

An Aristocratic Journalist in Trouble.

New York, June 29.—Cecil W. Carr, a young journalist under arrest in this city, on complaint of a Bosgo lady, who loaned him a thousand dollars, is Lord Ogilvy, son of the Earl of Airlie.

MONTREAL AFFAIRS.

Montreal, June 29.—Hon. Mr. Bachand, Provincial Treasurer, is recovering from his late illness, and expects to be able to attend the first meeting of the local house.

A man named Charles Brunet was stabbed in a drunken row to-day.

Military guard will be placed over the armories in the city from the 1st to the 15th of July, as a precaution against the attempt of disorderly persons during the celebration to steal arms.

The fleet of the Montreal Yacht Club left to-day on a three days' cruise down the river.

Out of 50 samples of milk taken from dairymen here, 30 passed as unadulterated, 4 having been classed as doubtful, and 16 more or less adulterated from bad to very bad.

A sailor on the steamship Agra received a sunstroke to-day. The thermometer at the time registered 98 in the shade.

The Montreal Transportation Company has reduced the freight rates from Kingston to this city to 2½c per bushel for wheat, and 2c for corn.

A meeting of Magistrates is to be called immediately to make arrangements for the protection of the city on the 12th of July. The Assistant Secretary of the Canada Jubilee Company, Mr. Crozier was in Montreal on business to-day.

London, June 30.—A Constantinople despatch of Saturday says it is understood that Austria will persist in the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Turkey will probably confine herself to protest which Safvet Pasha has already made to the Austrian Ambassador. A later telegram says to indicate disposition on the part of the Turks to compromise. It is asserted that the Turkish Plenipotentiaries will demand that only a limited territory be occupied.

In the first innings of the cricket match Montreal scored 123, and Ottawa 116. The match will be finished on Monday.

WATFORD.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

Watford, June 29.—Mr. Francis Powell, of the township of Brooke, had his leg badly broken yesterday evening while out logging.

LOST IN THE MACKINAW DISASTER.

It is reported that the John Boyle who lost his life in the Mackinaw disaster, is a resident of this place, who, for several years, has been keeping hotel, and not getting license for the last two years, had gone back to sailing on the lakes. He left here without letting any one know where he was going, and nothing has been heard of him till now.

DOMINION DAY

is to be celebrated here with great eclat. To-day the heat has been very severe, the thermometer standing at 100 deg. in the shade at 1.30 p.m.

Three Boys Drowned.

Dundas, Ont., June 29.—A boy named Mills Smith, aged 13, was drowned in the mill dam here to-day while bathing.

St. Clement, Ont., June 29.—Two boys were drowned in a water pit at St. Roch's brick yard to-day.

The St. Mary's Poisoning Case

DR. FORD BAILED IN $4,000.

The Argument in Queen's Bench.

At the Court of the Queen's Bench Friday morning before Chief Justice Harrison, Mr. Jones applied for the discharge of Dr. Ford from the Stratford gaol, on the ground that the Coroner's warrant of committment was insufficient, and contained no criminal charge. The prisoner, Dr. Ford, was in Court, having been brought to Toronto under a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. Scott, Q. C., appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Jones, in making the application, said that the prisoner had been committed by Coroner Harrison on a charge of having administered poison to Robert Guest, thereby causing his death. He moved that the prisoner be discharged on the ground that the warrant of committment made no criminal charge against him.

Chief Justice Harrison—I think you are right on that point, but I will hear the other side. Under the terms of the warrant the poison might have been given unintentionally.

Mr. Scott said he would not oppose the prisoner being admitted to bail.

Mr. Jones said he did not think there was sufficient evidence even to commit the prisoner for manslaughter. He then reviewed the evidence and contended that, leaving out the evidence of Delmage, to which he would refer afterwards, there was only the testimony of Bethune which at all reflected upon the prisoner. Bethune stated that the deceased told him that he had been poisoned or drugged by Dr. Ford. This was about seven o'clock, and after that the deceased went to an hotel with Bethune and took a drink of water, and then proposed to go for a walk, thereby indicating he did not think his indisposition a serious matter. Deceased then went home, and although he saw several persons, he never mentioned that he thought he was going to die. The last intelligible words spoken by him were, "Send for Dr. Wilson." He admitted to Dr. Wilson that he had been drinking that evening, and had got something more than liquor. There was no evidence to show that he considered himself in such a state as to warrant his words against Dr. Ford being received as a dying declaration. Another point worthy of note, in this connection was that when Dr. Wilson passed the deceased and Bethune near Dr. Ford's, the former did not think it worth while to say he had been poisoned. Dr. Ellis, the analyst, who examined the stomach of the deceased, could find no trace of poison, but reported that the stomach was inflamed, as well. The inflammation might have been caused by some corrosive irritant. A poison to produce such injuries would not have been a volatile agent, but would have left traces behind it, and as Dr. Ellis said, would at least be expected to be found in the coats of the stomach. In the absence of any traces of poison, it should have been shown that Dr. Ford administered something to the deceased to justify so serious a charge. It was admitted that the deceased might have died of acute gastritis, aggravated by alcohol. With regard to the evidence of Delmage, it could only be accounted for on the supposition that he was still crazy, and bore ill-feeling towards Dr. Ford. If Delmage was sane, and or suspected that a crime had been committed it was extraordinary that he did not interfere in the matter, but went home that night. He admitted that he was not friendly with Dr. Ford, and showed as much animus that he reflected upon Dr. Ellis' skill as an analyst because that gentleman could find no traces of poison. Finally, there was no evidence to show any motive for the crime on the part of Dr. Ford, who was on friendly terms with the deceased. The coroner's warrant and the verdict of the jury were defective, as no malice was imputed in them to Dr. Ford.

The Chief Justice—If the poison was given through carelessness, it would be manslaughter.

Mr. Jones—The jury did not find carelessness, and there is not evidence sufficient to make a prima facie case.

Mr. Scott said the only question was, whether there was sufficient evidence to justify an indictment before the Grand Jury.

The Chief Justice—I am quite satisfied there is a case for bail. The evidence is slight, but it might be sufficient to justify a grand jury returning a bill. I cannot, therefore, discharge the prisoner.

The prisoner was then admitted to bail, in two sureties of $1,000 each, and his own security for $2,000.

MONTREAL.

Montreal, June 29.—Business to-day is almost at a stand-still, being generally observed as a holiday. The exchanges are closed.

The intense heat of the past few days has had its effect on the canine race, and several well ascertained cases of hydrophobia have occurred in the city.

A good deal of excitement and indignation exists here over the strong utterances in the City Council in reference to the Twelfth of July celebration. One Alderman said if the Orangemen walked in procession the streets would be like a butcher's shambles.

JARVIS.

THE VOTERS' LISTS.

Jarvis, Ont., June 29.—At the Court of Revision held here yesterday and to-day, of the voters' lists of 1877, for the Township of Walpole, before His Honor Judge Stevenson, the Reformers appealed to put on 48 votes, and put on 22, to strike off 26 votes and struck off 9. The Conservatives appealed to put on 76 votes, and put on 31, to strike off 49 votes, and struck off 5.

TORONTO.

THE POLICE FORCE.

Toronto, June 30.—The police force burst upon the public on Saturday with white helmets; stretched over their winter helmets is a skin of white cloth. The force still wear their winter garments.

EXTENSIVE LARCENY.

Richard McKeown and Arthur Quinn were arraigned on Saturday, in the Police Court, charged with breaking into the house of L. H. Lee, 15 Peter street, and stealing therefrom a quantity of valuables estimated to be worth $600.

FIRE.

The premises of the Citizens' Milling Company, on Elizabeth street, a little above Queen street, were completely gutted by a fire on Saturday at 6.30 p. m. The damage is estimated at $5,000, almost covered by insurance, principally in the Scottish Imperial.

AN INTENDED SUICIDE.

Henry Wright was shot by John Whitton, market gardener, on Saturday night. The latter suspecting that persons were milking his cows, kept watch, and finding two men in his field, on Bathurst street, fired, hitting Wright. The other man escaped. Whitton was arrested for unlawful shooting.

A GAS WELL IN LINCOLN.

A Man Injured—Curious Phenomenon.

St. Catharines, June 29.—For some days past Mr. C. P. Mills, of this city, has been boring a well for Mr. Blain on the Four-wards Niagara. After they had reached a depth of 50 feet, and when the pumps had been removed, a rumbling noise was heard proceeding from the well accompanied by a very great agitation of the water. The noise increased until it could be heard for a distance of half a mile, the sound proceeding from the bowels of the earth. Last evening there seemed to be an abatement of the sound or agitation.

Mr. Blain's son held a lighted match to the mouth of the well, when an explosion took place, and the young man was very seriously burned about the upper part of his body face and arms. The flame leaped high, lighting up the country about like a burning volcano. The phenomenon has created a most extraordinary excitement in the neighborhood.

LORD DUFFERIN AT QUEBEC.

Quebec, June 29.—Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Dufferin arrived here this morning by rail from Boston, being greeted with a salute from the citadel. Their Excellencies drove direct to their quarters at the citadel.

THUNDER BAY.

Good Reports from the Mining Districts

Kincardine, Ont., June 29.—Col. Wilson, of the J. A. Mine, Thunder Bay, came down in the steamer Quebec. He speaks very favorably of the mining prospects of that district, and intends returning soon to commence work with renewed vigor.

Collingwood, Ont., June 29.—The mail steamer Francis Smith arrived down to-day. The captain reports great rejoicing over the Duncan mine. No mineral higher than $3 per ton was found at the depth of 250 feet down; at 450 feet mineral was struck, which assayed 2,050 to the ton, as well as a small quantity of native silver having also been found. As they go down the paying vein increases. At Garden River the Victoria mine has turned out very rich with silver bload, which assays 30 per cent., and the lead 70 per cent.

MANITOBA AFFAIRS.

Winnipeg, June 28.—Men are now engaged regrading the old track north of Graham in Minnesota.

Mr. Prettie, of Toronto, arrived here to-day with a large party for Little Saskatchewan.

Information has been received here that General Rumsey, Engineer of the Northern Pacific Railroad, has started to locate the line from Fargo to Pembina. It is expected that a meeting of the Directors, which takes place July 10th, will decide to put it under contract at once.

London East School Trustees.

Business Transacted at the Meeting Last Night.

The London East Board of School Trustees met last Friday night in the Town Hall. Present:—Messrs. McLeod (Chairman), Ridley (Secretary), Short, Tyndall and Deacon.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and signed.

ACCOUNTS.

R. M. Chester, hardware, 75 cents; Alex. Noble, watering can, $1. Ordered to be paid.

RESIGNATION.

Mr. Wm. Gray, teacher of Rectory street school, sent in his resignation, giving three months' notice.

Mr. McLeod said he would sooner Mr. Gray had resigned without giving the necessary three months' notice, as it would be far easier to get a good teacher now than in September.

Mr. Gray stated that it had been his intention to go to the medical school at the next February term, but a change having been made in the number of terms in that school he was compelled to go in September. He would sooner keep on teaching till then.

Mr. Ridley thought it was hardly fair to give the teacher who was engaged for the first half of the year the salary for the summer holidays, as the teacher who taught for the other half did not receive any holidays whatever, but it was the law, and it could not be altered.

After further discussion, Mr. Gray's resignation was accepted.

TEACHER'S REPORT.

Mr. Eckert, headmaster, read a report of the number of pupils in the village schools for the last half year, of which the following is a synopsis:—

Members entered on the rolls of the different rooms:—

Mr. Eckert's Room	.....	73
Mr. Gray's	"	97
Mr. Stock's	"	90
Miss Stinchcombe's	"	73
Miss Stalker's	"	62
Miss Gerrie's	"	135
Miss Oliphant's	"	111
Miss Percival's	"	220
Total		810

The average attendance for the last six months was 483.

The number of pupils from London township was 32; London city, 11, and Pygle's Gore, 9.

The amount collected from outsiders during the month was $7.

The number of days the schools were open during the half year was 123.

The report was received and adopted.

SALARY.

It was moved and seconded that the teachers be paid, at the close of the schools for the summer vacations, their salaries for June and July.—Carried.

COMMITTEES.

Mr. Ridley, Chairman of the School Management Committee, reported, verbally, that the senior children of the Anderson School were now taught in the Town Hall.

Mr. Toll, Chairman of the Improvement Committee, reported progress.

Considerable discussion took place in regard to the placing of desks and seats in the Anderson School. The matter was referred to the School Management Committee.

MOURNING THE CONDEMN.

The Chairman said the Council had not thought it necessary to give an answer to their request about the raising of money for the purpose of enlarging Anderson School, which was commenced to these at last meeting, but he had seen in THE FREE PRESS that they intend borrowing the money on the school bank. They should have sent them an official answer.

Messrs. Deeow and Ridley said the Hoove had told them about it.

Mr. McLeod had not the terror of debentures which some people had, and thought that they should have made the Council name them. It was in their power to do so.

The subject then dropped.

An account was handed in by Mr. Isaac, who has acted as janitor ever since the Town Hall was turned into a school house, which is about three months, for $30.

Mr. Isaac was heard in regard to the matter, and said that the school in the Town Hall had commenced on the 8th of April. He understood from a few of the trustees that he was to receive $10 a month. Every time an entertainment was held in the hall he had to take the seats and desks up, and put them down again. He left the matter in the hands of the Board.

Mr. Ridley said that $4 a month was what the female janitors in the other schools received. He should not like to pay Mr. Isaac more than any other janitor, but the taking up of the desks and seats being extra work, they were willing to pay extra for it.

Mr. Toll did not think that $10 a month was too much.

After considerable discussion it was decided to grant Mr. Isaac $25 for his services.

Mr. Stock addressed the Board, stating that he had bought a lot of copy-books in a bookstore, and that the bill was sent to the School Board, and was paid by them. The amount was $3.50, and he would refund the money to the Board.

Mr. Ridley commended Mr. Stock on his honesty, after which the Board adjourned.

The Forest City Quoiting Club.

Constitution and Rules of the Game.

The Forest City Quoiting Club of London was organized on the 26th instant, with a roll of 80 members. The following were appointed office-bearers:—

President, W. Lewis; Vice-President, D. Dodd; Secretary-Treasurer, J. Cuthbertson; Managing Committee, J. Fairgrieve, W. Fegg, E. Sparrowhawk, F. Lees.

It was ruled that the annual meeting shall take place on the first Tuesday in April, seven members to form a quorum at this and all regular meetings. The by-laws of the club are as follows:—

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 1.—The duties of the President shall be to preside at all meetings, sign all orders upon the Treasurer for ordinary expenses of the club, and all official documents. He shall have custody of all medals or other valuable trophies belonging to the club, and shall be responsible for the safe-keeping of the same. He shall have the casting vote at all equal divisions, and shall see that the rules of order, as provided for in these by-laws, are strictly enforced.

SEC. 2.—In the absence of the President the Vice-President shall perform his duties. Should a vacancy occur in the office of President, the Vice-President shall immediately become President for the remainder of the year. Should any other vacancy occur, a special meeting of the Club shall be called for the election of an officer to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 3.—The Secretary shall keep an accurate record of all proceedings at all meetings of the Club or Managing Committee, conduct the correspondence of the Club, preserve a correct register of the members, indicating their residences and places of business, notify new members of their election, and generally perform such other duties as appertain to the office of Secretary.

SEC. 4.—The Treasurer shall keep the accounts of the club, collect the annual subscription of members, receive all funds belonging to the club, and make disbursements on the written order of the President and Secretary, after approval by the Managing Committee. He shall submit his accounts to the inspection of auditors, and make statement of the same to the club at the annual meeting. The duties of the Treasurer may be performed by the Secretary at the discretion of the club at its annual meeting.

SEC. 5.—The duties of

THE ANNIVERSARY.

Whether Canada has good or bad men, statesmen or empirics at the helm, the country has every right to celebrate the birth of the new Canadian Nationality. If our course has been a little unsteady, alternating between remarkable progress and no progress at all, still we have on the whole reason to be satisfied with what we are and what we have done, when all the obstacles to our onward march are taken into the account. During the first half of what may be called our national life, the Dominion of Canada was exceptionally prosperous, her affairs were conducted, happily for her, by the very ablest and most experienced men British North America could produce, while the people displayed wisdom, vigor, and a patriotic desire to assist in the progress of the country, and in bringing into play her vast undeveloped resources. By judicious management on the part of our rulers of those days the boundaries of the country became coterminous with three oceans, and the Dominion of Canada in the hands of statesmen expanded in a very short time from a comparatively small space on the eastern slope to the dimensions of half a continent. We were launched upon our voyage among the nations with four Provinces, and already we have doubled that number, with capacity in reserve, when brighter days dawn upon us, for twenty or thirty more. The happiness and prosperity of the people during our first instrum kept pace with the expansion of the country; and individual wealth, and the diffusion of knowledge, grow with material greatness. Canada, during this period was the admiration of not only of her own sons but of all who watched her course and could appreciate her progress. That, not the seven but the five lean kine, have done much to blight this glorious prospect and mar the beauty of this delightful picture is something that cannot be denied, but to-day is not the period to refer to these gloomy themes. We have still much for which to be grateful as a people, and we can look forward with confidence to the near approach of the time, when the chief causes of this altered aspect of our Dominion shall cease to cast their baleful shadow over our happiness, and the country again bask in the sunshine of material prosperity and content.

Many of the great public improvements projected by the Macdonald Government have already been brought to completion or are on the fair way to it. The Intercolonial Railroad, a work essential to the permanence of the union, is now in full operation; and they who have made a boast of having opposed it at every stage, admit that it is one of the best roads on this continent, and one too that may truly boast of being the cheapest when its quality in all particulars is taken into account. Already all parts of the country are realizing the advantages of this road, and with an open port on our Atlantic border, it is impossible to over-estimate its value to all parts of Canada as a means of egress and regress in the long winter season of this country.

The Welland Canal, another link in the internal navigation of the Provinces and the Dominion that had become imperative, is approaching its completion; and when this and the other improvements along our lonchy course of lake and river navigation have been finished, it will be difficult to point to works of such magnitude, cost and utility in any country of the same,or of even ten times the population of ours. No doubt we are now burdening ourselves with the cost of constructing these mighty works, but it is equally certain that wisdom and foresight projected these works, that the interest of the country demanded this undertaking, and that the people of all classes in half yet reap full returns for their investment.

The greatest of all these works, the Canadian Pacific Railway, is one that must be admitted necessary, unless we feel able to endorse the narrow, one-horse policy of the Blakes, Mackenzies, and Cartwrights, and claim that the completion of the Greater Britain on this Continent, was a blunder, and that we should have been content to confine our Dominion within the limits of the old Provinces or the Atlantic Province. We cannot too much congratulate ourselves on the fact, that men of such contracted vision and so defective in grasp of mind as statesmen, had no potential voice in shaping the course of Government at the time when the destiny of this young Dominion was being chalked out. Had they had their will at the time, or even subsequently, Canada never could o: would have been a nation, capable of taking an independent stand alongside such a country as that of the United States, never would have been a source of honest pride to ourselves, nor a source of honor to the mighty Empire from which we sprang, and of which it is our highest ambition to form no mean part. This great work has fallen into bad hands, and has made but little progress in comparison of the expenditure already made upon it. It was first opposed on political principles, and the wise and prudent scheme by which it was proposed to build it were frustrated by men whose greed of office was much stronger than their love of country, and who in office have only shown in a conspicuous manner their inability to use for the country's good, the power they sacrificed their principles to obtain. From the first day of their administration to the present, their management of the Pacific Railroad has been nothing but one continued series of blunders, intermixed with other features to which, on this festal day, we care not to allude. But with a little patience and wiser heads to direct the enterprise, we may yet hope to see thisgreat work pushed forward to a happy completion. Canada possesses wealth and the means of wealth; she possesses a degree of vigor, enterprise and elasticity that lungling statesmen may sap and mar, but cannot destroy.

We can all unite to-day in celebrating this anniversary of the birth of the Dominion; we have plenty of cause to feel proud of our common country; we may compare it with others and take cause of congratulation from the contrast; and we can all look forward with the hope to the dissipating of the clouds that have for years obscured our horizon and lowered around us political and financially. The worst this country could suffer from maladministration at the hands of any Government whatever, would only be a partial and temporary eclipse, to which time and patience, aided by the exertions of the people themselves, will invariably bring the remedy.

Notwithstanding, perhaps on account of, the complete possession of India by the English, they are not liked by the mass of natives; nor, in fact, is there any reason why they should be. The bulk of the people have very queer notions of their rulers, their manners, language, and institutions. To them, the Englishman is half monkey and half cannibal. They doubt if he has any country, much as he talks and boasts of it. If he has any Queen, they feel sure that she pays tribute to the Sublime Porte, and holds India by its permission. The Englishman is indebted for all he knows to the Chinese, who once overthrew a vast army he had brought against them by mere mechanical contrivances. He has no language. He utters certain sibilant sounds, by which he communicates his ideas, and in this respect only a slight advance upon the quadrumanous species. The sole object the Europeans have in the study of the Bible, a miserable translation of certain volumes of Hindoo philosophy. He has no notion of kinship; his parents drive away their sons as soon as they feel the daughters are worth money. Of connubial affection he has no conception; carnal passion alone holds him and the other sex together. His highest idea of happiness is to eat to excess, get drunk, and kill his neighbors. All this, oddly enough, is not satire, but the actual belief of the average Hindoo.

The famous marble quarries of Carrara, although they have been worked since the reign of Augustus, and have furnished a steady and enormous supply to the whole civilized globe, seem to be inexhaustible. They compose an entire mountain range, and embrace every variety and quality of marble, from the coarse, common kind to the statuary marble, Monte Crestola and Monte Sagro yielding the largest and finest blocks. The blocks are detached, drawn out by oxen, and rolled down the hill. The quarries number some 500, only about 20 of them furnishing the marble used by sculptors. Most of the inhabitants of Carrara and the vicinity—some 6,000 workmen in all—are employed in the labor, at 2 to 3 lire (40 to 60 cents) a day. The marble taken out year before last was in the vicinity of 120,000 tons, valued at $2,400,000, of which 40,000 tons came to the United States. The export of marble to this country has increased immensely within twelve to fifteen years, the third largest marble firm now at Carrara being American. Our Consul there is a member of the firm, and his Consulate is said to produce a larger revenue than any other in Italy.

The Territory of Alaska (for which $7,200,000 was paid to Russia by the United States Government) has been practically turned over to a mammoth corporation known as the Alaska Commercial Company. This company are to be absolute rulers over some 580,000 square miles of territory and 30,000 Indians. Although the concern has only a lease from the Government of the seal islands, five hundred miles from the coast, it is stated that it has taken possession of the mainland practically, and there will doubtless be a great deal of trouble in the future for the Government whom it sees fit to assume control and give the protection needed by the inhabitants. The resources of Alaska in ship timber and minerals, besides the salmon and seal fisheries, are very great. The Louisville Courier-Journal thinks, "the best disposition the Government can make of the Territory is to convert it into a penal colony, under strong military supervision, and let the States abolish their penitentiaries and send thither their criminals sentenced to life imprisonment, to be set to work."

While there is all this fuss about dogs why is nothing done about cats? To one person who is annoyed by the former, ten are exasperated by the latter. At this season, when people are obliged to sleep with open windows, the nuisance of caterwauling is greater than ever. The increase of these animals is entirely out of proportion to all domestic requirements. Hundreds of them have no homes, live by predatory incursions, and are the terror of the numerous class of persons who try to raise a few plants and flowers, which are destroyed by these marauding pests. It would be an excellent enactment that every one should pay a tax of $1 a year for keeping a cat, and that the police be directed to shoot all cats without a collar.

The loss of the Grosser Kurfürst has naturally excited an immense amount of discussion of ironclads generally in England. Captain Varney, a distinguished officer in the British navy,in a letter to the London Times which has attracted much attention, says that an ironclad "is a clumsy dead mass, made to float by brute force—that is, by a perfectly flat bottom giving great displacement below water. Given a flat-bottomed ironclad with twin screws, being forced through the water at Berg[illegible]Fourton Minister for having made such an unmusical ass as his son a Prefect.

Tom Thrasher Royal, recently destroyed by fire, at Plymouth, England, was the property of the city corporation, and formed one wing of a fine block of buildings, including the Royal Hotel, which was erected in 1813 at a cost of £60,000. The fire occurred shortly after the conclusion of a performance.

The O'Connel Monument Committee in Dublin held a meeting lately to consider a contract with Mr. Brock, the pupil of Foley, for the completion of the monument according to the designof the master artist. The work is expected to be pushed to a speedy completion.

MONSIEUR LAURIER AT STRATHROY.

Will Mr. G. W. Ross, in his present shaky condition, profit much by the visit of the Hon. M. Laurier, to the west riding of Middlesex? It is to be doubted, but of that we are willing to leave himself to be the judge. It seems pretty plain that though Mr. Laurier is said to be an eloquent speaker, he is evidently very far from possessing a mature judgment. Had he deliberately selected his topics from the entire black record of the party to which he has so foolishly attached his fortunes, he could not have chosen acts of a more corrupt nature, and acts that are more beyond the power of logic and facts united, to defend. To talk of the career of the Government being free from the taint of corruption, when the consideration of their notoriously corrupt acts was not forced upon him by circumstances, was a piece of Quixotic bravado for which Mr. Mackenzie, who knows himself and colleagues better than this enthusiastic young Frenchman, will give him no thanks. Equally foolish was the attempt to defend the steel rails, the Foster scandal, the Goderich harbor fraud, and last but not least the huge Neebing swindle. Poor young fellow:—

"As yet he little knoss about the matter,
Which we misdoubt is like to hang him better."

He will soon learn that the old pretence of Mr. Charles Mackenzie having ceased to be a partner in the firm of Cooper, Fairman & Co., does not thaw their cold hearts on them at the expense of the country took place, is all moonshine, and has been long since by indefeasible public records placed beyond dispute. It is well at this season of the year to look back upon the past, and there will doubtless be a great deal of trouble in the future for the Government whom it sees fit to assume control and give the protection needed by the inhabitants. The resources of Alaska in ship timber and minerals, besides the salmon and seal fisheries, are very great. The Louisville Courier-Journal thinks, "the best disposition the Government can make of the Territory is to convert it into a penal colony, under strong military supervision, and let the States abolish their penitentiaries and send thither their criminals sentenced to life imprisonment, to be set to work."

While there is all this fuss about dogs why is nothing done about cats? To one person who is annoyed by the former, ten are exasperated by the latter. At this season, when people are obliged to sleep with open windows, the nuisance of caterwauling is greater than ever. The increase of these animals is entirely out of proportion to all domestic requirements. Hundreds of them have no homes, live by predatory incursions, and are the terror of the numerous class of persons who try to raise a few plants and flowers, which are destroyed by these marauding pests. It would be an excellent enactment that every one should pay a tax of $1 a year for keeping a cat, and that the police be directed to shoot all cats without a collar.

The loss of the Grosser Kurfürst has naturally excited an immense amount of discussion of ironclads generally in England. Captain Varney, a distinguished officer in the British navy,in a letter to the London Times which has attracted much attention, says that an ironclad "is a clumsy dead mass, made to float by brute force—that is, by a perfectly flat bottom giving great displacement below water. Given a flat-bottomed ironclad with twin screws, being forced through the water at Berg[illegible]Fourton Minister for having made such an unmusical ass as his son a Prefect.

Tom Thrasher Royal, recently destroyed by fire, at Plymouth, England, was the property of the city corporation, and formed one wing of a fine block of buildings, including the Royal Hotel, which was erected in 1813 at a cost of £60,000. The fire occurred shortly after the conclusion of a performance.

The O'Connel Monument Committee in Dublin held a meeting lately to consider a contract with Mr. Brock, the pupil of Foley, for the completion of the monument according to the designof the master artist. The work is expected to be pushed to a speedy completion.

Late English papers give details of a terrible disaster in a theatre at Ahmedungar, India, a short time ago. The building was densely packed to witness the performance of a Bombay theatrical troupe, when suddenly the ceiling was seen to be in a blaze. A terrible panic at once ensued, many persons were trampled under foot, and frantic efforts were made to escape the flames, which in less than five minutes completely enwrapped the slight structure. About 50 persons perished in the flames, including about 20 native soldiers. In several instances families lost two and even three of its members, and one well-to-do merchant perished with his two sons, leaving only one survivor in the household, his widow.

The irregular paper which S. Augier Chace, the Fall River defaulter, negotiated during the last four years amounted to about $3,000,000, more than $700,000 of which were discounted at New York, and more than $1,000,000 by one Boston banking firm. He carried in all, after he got fairly started in hiscekking, about $500,000 of this illegal paper. His notes of five, ten, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars were maturing almost every day in the year, and to meet the notes that were payable in Boston, he would either get his discounts in New York, and vice versa.

The Queen has requested that some of her Indian troops be brought over to England, so that she may review them. If Parliament sanctions the necessary outlay, it will be the event of the year. It is thought possible that the entire force of officers and men from the different regiments are brought over from Malta they might leaven the whole of the Indian army, and that the experiment may prove a capital policy.

...The Marquis De L'Angle Beaumanoir was a mere or less expert performer on the horn, and was wont to relieve the tedium of old age by wakingthe echoes of the Rue Richelieu with that instrument. It was his favorite if not his only diversion, and he took a great deal of it. His son, not having inherited the paternal fondness formusic—at least for that particular sort of music—remonstrated in a private capacity, but his remonstrances were unheeded. At length the horn having probably been noisier than usual, he took a sudden resolution. Was he not the Prefect of the department? The Marquis might be dead to the entreaties of his son, but he could not disobey the order of the magistrate. Accordingly, in his official capacity, he proceeded to abate his father as a musical nuisance. The old gentleman was furious. Was this proper behavior on the part of a son toward a father who had been in his day Deputy, Sub-Prefect, Mayor of Quimperlé, and Colonel? He made the Cotes-du-Nord ring with the story of his wrongs, and the wits of the Paris press espoused his cause. Now it becomes that the Marquis is dead, and that to the day of his death he never forgave the Berg[illegible]Fourton Minister for having made such an unmusical ass as his son a Prefect.

The Salter Grove Property.

A STRONG PLEA AGAINST THE PROPOSED SALE.

Let the City Keep the Place.

Some of the advocates of the sale of the Salter Grove are boasting loudly that they are sure of accomplishing their object when the vote is taken next Wednesday, and that soon the woodman's axe will lay low the beautiful elms and oaks and pines, which have so long been a delight to every visitor, and afford a cool retreat in summer. They are misleading some by trying to make it appear that the Grove will sell for a very high figure, and that our taxes, by this sale, will be materially lessened. The sum expected to be realized has been suddenly advanced from $30,000 to $40,000 or $50,000. Including the streets, the Grove contains 30 acres; exclusive of the streets, about 26 acres. I have been at some pains to ascertain the price of land in that neighborhood, and find that on Dundas street it is commanding a good figure, from $1,000 to $1,500 an acre, but on the back streets there is plenty of land now in the market, which is being offered at from $250 to $600 per acre. The southeast corner of the Grove, on Dundas street, is low and damp, and would not sell well, while the fact of the cemetery bounding the western portion would deter some from purchasing there. Taking all these points into consideration, I should think that an average price of one thousand dollars per acre would be the outside figure which could be calculated on. Supposing it to be sold at this figure, how much would it affect the city revenue? If sold on time, say one-fifth down, and the balance in four annual instalments, there would be an income of $5,000 a year for five years. Our rulers know perfectly well that such a small sum as this would not affect the taxes at all, and even if it were possible to realize the whole amount in cash it would disappear in a few weeks like snow before summer's sun, and before the end of the year no trace of it would be left, and the grove would be lost to the city for ever. There is scarce a town in Canada of any size that has not its little wood or grove where the people can congregate on holiday and other occasions, and picnic in the cool shade; and in London poverty-stricken that it cannot afford to hold its own among the villages and towns in this respect? Where else have we a place that we can hold any large public gathering with comfort? Our Park is improving, but very few of us will live long enough to see trees there as large and beautiful as those we now own in that grove. Apart from its suitability as a future exhibition ground, whenever the citizens see fit to remove from the present quarter, its beauty and usefulness for other purposes should not be overlooked, and any man who cannot see more in those trees than the number of cords of wood they represent is not fit to be a representative of this progressive city. To sell too at such a depressed time as this, and make a sacrifice of the place, would be the height of folly. His Worship the Mayor told us distinctly at the public meeting on Thursday night that the city finances were not in that state which required the city to sacrifice any of its property. It is hoped, then, that those who are looking for an opportunity to make a speculation out of the results of this will be disappointed.

Let all who look to the city's greatest good rally to the rescue on Wednesday, and frustrate the schemes of those who are trying to sacrifice that which belongs to us all.

WM. RENNERS.

Caution to Farmers.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

London Township, June 26th, 1878.

SIR,—I have been a farmer of this township for the last twenty-four years, and I acknowledge I have been imposed upon by agents from different nurseries, but above all by agents who pretend to represent American nurseries, and in most cases I find those men buy their stock from some broken down American nurseries. It is evident that such is the case, for I find some agents have sold Rochester trees through this section of country at fifteen cents each. Now, I find that good, reliable stock, from a good, responsible nursery in Rochester, cannot be delivered in Canada, after paying freight and duty, for much less than double that price. It is not the fault of the American nurseries, but of Canadians who carry on a brokerage system in the tree business, by taking orders through the country in every possible manner, by telling farmers fine stories, and when they have secured those orders they go to some insolvent American firm and buy the stock to fill those orders at the lowest possible rates, and bring it over to Canada and palm it upon the Canadian publicfor reliable stock.

Now, I say no farmer, nor any man wishing to purchase trees, should buy trees from any agent except from those who can produce a certificate from the firm which they represent, and that to be a good reliable firm and their agents to be good responsible men.

The subject of protection on Canadian manufactures have been spoken of both in Parliament and out of Parliament; it is the topic of the day. Now, why can't we have protection afforded to Canadian nurseries. We know there are thousands and thousands of dollars leaving Canada every year, and going over to the United States in the purchase of trees, but if Canadian nurseries were patronized, this large amount of money would be kept in the country, and would enable Canadian nurserymen to enlarge their premises, and employ a larger number of men, which no doubt would be a great benefit to many of our suffering fellow-countrymen.

Hoping, Mr. Editor, you will give this article space in the columns of your valuable journal, so that farmers may see how they have been deceived, and that they may guard themselves against imposition in future.

I remain, yours truly,

LONDON TP. FARMER.

Ilderton Against Vanneck.

To the Editor of the London FREE PRESS.

It was moved, seconded and carried by the members of Innerville Division, that an official reply to an article appearing in the FREE PRESS of the 12th inst., be sent to the press.

The article appeared in the FREE PRESS of the 12th inst., said to be a full account of the whole matter of dispute between Ilderton and Vanneck. If the question had been, How could we best vilify Attwood on the one side, and Stevenson on the other? the author of that article performed his part of the programme quite faithfully, as the article did not contain but one sentence that was not a personal attack upon Attwood. This is the sentence:—"Some parties at Vanneck have wandered as far from the truth as it was possible for them to do." Who or what this means we cannot tell, but this we do know, that a nameless scribbler from Ilderton has not only wandered from the truth, but also from the subject, and as he has given us no name to name him by, he, perhaps, will excuse us for naming him "Wanderer."

The dispute was simply this:—Shall the new Temperance Hall, about to be built by Innerville Division, S. of T., be built at Vanneck or Ilderton. A motion to build a hall was carried without opposition, a Committee appointed, the report adopted, plans and specifications accepted; so far no party was known. Where shall we build this hall was next in order, and on this question alone were party lines drawn. A night was appointed to take the vote. Those workin before the vote was to be taken each party was paying his way to success. Ilderton moved, that five dollars constitute a vote. Vanneck moved as an amendment that all who pay up their dues to the end of the quarter be entitled to a vote. Amendment carried, 19 to 5. Ilderton had no number under 18 years of age shall vote. Vanneck had nine members under 18; passed a by-law granting them equal privileges with older members. The W. V. refused the by-law out on the ground

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY,

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"We all understand"—began Marjorie, earnestly; but he stopped her with a quick, beseeching gluce.

"No, please, don't excuse me. I can have no excuse to offer presently before the Judgment-seat above. I had my own work to do; why did I think of him? Miss Marjorie," he continued, presently, "I should like you to know how often you lightened that work for me, and heightened the life I led here, giving me a little glimpse of what other men's lives hold."

"And I want to tell you, Gerard"—Marjorie spoke in grave and unaffected simplicity, as if she knew this talk between them was no ordinary talk, and needed no ordinary forms—"how you have helped me (without knowing it) in making my own life a little less useless. But—but, after all, I can not tell it you, I see. Gerard," she broke off, "you have found that church, and prayed for Gerard's first marriage. I know what you want to do, and I have been almost as anxious as Lina. I can see that you have succeeded, and I expected it, for I always felt the story a true one. Ah, how different all our lives might have been, if this truth had never fallen so awfully and wickedly between us! But I must not say those sad words now," she added, seeing how the feverish color came and went upon his worn and tired face. Some time you will let me come again."

"I wish," said Gerard, leaning against the couch, when Marjorie had said her good-bye, and speaking with grave earnestness; "I wish I felt sure you would be happy when—when you bear my mother's name. Let me think of it as my mother's name, Miss Marjorie, and not as the one you say I wish I felt quite sure you would be happy then."

"How?" exclaimed Marjorie, while a bright blush mounted to the very roots of her hair. "Your wife will be Lady Athelston, Gerard."

He looked into her face, with a little of the old warm happiness in his eyes.

"It would not be worth while taking the title from Sir Neil, just for such a little while," he said; "it would only have to go back to him. And she will be his wife, and his son's wife, and his son's wife, on and on, will be those who will wear my mother's title, though so much that has always gone with it must now go to Lina. I can think of you wearing it, Miss Castillaie. I—I only wish I knew or felt sure that it would bring you a great happiness, such as life sometimes holds for such as you."

"I wish you would not think of me as I am going to be," said Marjorie, with her rare wistfulness, "but always as what I am."

"I can not help thinking of the one, and trying to picture the other," Gerard answered. "I do so little now, that my dreams and idle fancies have all their own way, and I try to picture the future of those who have been so kind to me. Like Orlando—isn't it, Miss Marjorie?—I have been able to look into happiness through other men's eyes."

"If you ever care to fancy what my life will be, Gerard," Marjorie said, very softly, and almost solemnly, as she laid her hand in his, "I hope it will make the fancy brighter for you to know that it can never be so listless and heedless a life again as it always had been until I knew you and Lina. And you must never picture it as spent with Neil, for I never shall be Lady Athelston."

A startled surprise, almost amounting to pain, had at first filled Gerard's eyes as she spoke, and no answering words rose to his lips. Only a moment's pause, and a short, deep silence, the meaning of which neither of the girls could, either then or afterward, even faintly comprehend.

"Gerard, are you so sorry?" his sister asked, at last, coldly offended for him to break this pause.

"Sorful," he answered, just in his old, clear, happy tones, and now with all the old gladness in his smile.

Then Marjorie laid good-bye, and went; and as she drove slowly back, in the calm sunset light her thoughts lingered still with the brother and sister, and she had no need to hide their sadness and hopelessness now, as she always would when any eyes could read and interrupt them.

"How hard it was," she whispered to herself, as she turned the ponies slowly into the lanes at The Anchorage, "to hide from Lina the shock I felt at the first sight of him! Ah! the long anxiety, and the ceaseless work, and the meagre life, have told upon him now, as well as that horrible wrongdoing before March. What can be done to counteract all these?"

And so unlike to Marjorie's face, even when Jack Sedallo ran up and sprang beside her in the carriage. The wheels rolled on lightly over the gravel. The rich, sweet breath of the hawthorn made the air fragrant around her. The red light, lingering in the western sky, shone dazzlingly on all the windows of the low, white house she loved as she had never loved her home. Upon the steps against the rich background of clustering roses, Colonel Stuart stood waiting to receive her. And still Marjorie's face was grave and thoughtful, and, without giving up the reins, or leaving her seat when the ponies stopped, she asked if she might drive on to Hawkedale.

"Tell William to take his seat again, Colonel Stuart," she pleaded, with a glance at the groom, "and I will and the phæton back by him."

"You may stay at homeowe, William," the colonel said; "I'm going to drive on, Jack, run in, and, when those ladies are gone, tell mamma that I am taking Miss Marjorie home, and that Miss Chester is not coming back to-day. Say that Marjorie is coming again to-morrow, and that I will tell her everything else when I return."

"Now, Miss Marjorie, will you tell me of them?" he asked, when shahad moved her seat, and he had taken thereins.

So she told him all she thought of Gerard; all the hopeless thoughts which she had hidden before.

"It will weary him for me to go to-night," he said; "but I must bring him home with me in the morning. Rest and ease, with care and nourishment, will soon do their work in restoring a fine frame and constitution such as his."

"They may—please Godbey will," said the girl, still with the same sweet gravity upon her face which Colonel Stuart so often pondered over now.

"Then one thing while I must do at once," mused Marjorie though that solitary evening—for Mr. Cadlain and his elder daughter were dining at Barton—"I must tell Neil what I told Sir Gerard Athelston—how funny it sounds!—this evening. It is time he knew how now that others know it) how I can never be his wife. I will write to him in the morning. I fancy he must know—because now he understands what real love is—how impossible it would be that he and I should marry. He and I to impossible it is; and he will see this as I see it, now that he knows for whomsoever one's love is."

CHAPTER XIII.

NEIL AND MARJORIE TELL THE TRUTH.

Colonel Stuart had been at the cottage all the morning, but had not taken Gerard and Lina back with him to The Anchorage, as he had intended, for Gerard was not fit to be removed. The colonel had sent at once for a physician from Bloxborough; but the chief prescription had been for rest, and the chief words had been pitying ones for Lina, when she read the hopelessness which his simple directions betrayed. And now the colonel had sauntered down the lane with him toward The Anchorage, where his carriage waited, and where he was to lunch.

"Did you send and ask Sir Neil Athelston to come, Lina?" asked Gerard, when they had been some time alone.

"Yes, dear. Jet went. It pleases him to do any thing for you. It seems his only pleasure just now."

"Dear little fellow," Gerard said, smiling as he used to smile upon the child. "It is such a joy to me to think he will be cared for always. His grandmother loves him really—doesn't she, Lina?—and you will have the power to do all that money can do for him, and the love to do it as no one else could. Lina, he is not like his father, is he?—is he, dear?"

The wistful questioning of the weak, low voice went to Lina's heart. She seemed to see, for the first time, how anxiously he had brought the child up in their poverty, looking always forward to his manhood.

"I should think his father, as a boy, must have been as unlike Jet as it is possible for any boy to have been," she answered, confidently.

"I think so—I hope so. I wish Sir Neil would come."

Then, almost as the words were uttered, Lina heard Sir Neil's step on the garden path. Because it quickly, a resolute look upon his face, such as Gerard had never seen there before.

"I did not know you were so ill," he said, standing beside the couch, and slowly withdrawing his eyes from Lina.

Then he ran his fingers through his curls, and looked longingly at the hat which he had taken off and put down as he entered—for Lina was gone now, and he was alone with the man of whom he had thought with contempt through many months, and it was no use trying to think of him with contempt now; and—and—what could he say? What had he been brought there to say? Why had Lina gone away, and where was she?

Lying on the bed upstairs was Lina, with her face hidden. To lie so, in silent, solitary prayer, was a rest unspeakable for the anxious girl, and so she did not move until the sound of the opening door reached her. Then she rose, drawing her hand a moment across her tired eyes, and went down-stairs again to take her place by Gerard's couch.

The Strawberry Season.

A FEW CHOICE RECIPES.

STRAWBERRY BRANDY.

Mix equal parts of mashed strawberries and brandy together; let them stand for twenty-four hours; then press out the liquor, sweeten, and add a little cinnamon and cloves, and in a few hours after strain and bottle it.

TO BOTTLE STRAWBERRIES.

Pick the strawberries into bottles; fill up with syrup, boiled to the thread, or twenty-five degrees. Now place the bottles, packed and corded, in a flat-bottomed, open pot or wash-boiler; pack them in loosely, but have a cushion of hay on the bottom; fill up the vessel with cold water, two-thirds the way up the sides of the bottles; boil the whole over the fire, and allow the water to simmer gently for five minutes; then remove from the fire, and as soon as the bottles have partially cooled, gently pour off their syrup into a clean copper preserving-pan; then carefully add the fruit of the bottle to that of another, thus making one bottle out of two. The whole of the syrup from the strawberries having been placed in the preserving pan, add to it one fourth part of its quantity of filtered, red currant juice; place this on the fire, remove the scum as it rises, and when it gives one boil up, take it from the fire, skim it, and then fill up your bottles of fruit; cork and tie or wire down. Now replace your bottles in the kettle, as at first; place it over a moderate fire, and let it boil gently for fifteen minutes; remove the kettle from the fire, allowing the bottles to remain in the boiler until the water is cold, then remove them, wipe, sideways, in a cool, dry situation.

TO PRESERVE THE PULP OF STRAWBERRIES.

The thoroughly ripe fruit; rub and press the pulp, through clean hair sieves, into a clean stoneware pan; add a quarter of a pound of white pulverized sugar to each pound of pulp; mix thoroughly; fill your bottles cork and tie down with wire; place them in a boiler of cold water, as directed in the foregoing; put them on the fire, and boil gently for fifteen minutes, and when cold, store away. Thus prepared, strawberry pulp will keep for years, furnishing a delicious flavor for hot-buns, cakes, creams, ices, puddings, etc.

COMPOTE OF STRAWBERRIES.

Select the finest fruit, and pick them carefully without bruising them, and drop them into hot syrup of twenty-two degrees strength; give them a scald, and after straining them pour them gently into a stoneware basin, and, when cold, dish them into a compotier in the form of an elevated cone, and pour the syrup round the base.

STRAWBERRY WATER ICE.

To one and a quarter pints of strawberry juice or pulp, made by pressing one and a half pints of picked strawberries through a hair sieve, add one pint of syrup, at thirty-two degrees of strength, the juice of half a lemon, a few drops of cochineal, or vegetable red, and a gill of water. Mix these ingredients, and work ONE ounce of gum tragacanth in and when sufficiently frozen, set the ice up into its mould.

STRAWBERRIES AND CREAM.

These with us are a national dish, and all Americans are "native here, and to the manner born" at the table. Select some of the ripe berry can be so greatly improved by cooking as by adding cream. Put a layer of strawberries in a deep dish, cover the same with a liberal supply of powdered sugar, and sprinkle over the whole a few drops of lemon juice; then add another layer of fruit and sugar, alternately, until you have the desired quantity, then express over the whole the juice of half a dozen sweet oranges. Let the whole stand for half an hour, and then serve.

Another expedient for heightening and improving the full flavor of this delicious fruit, is to prepare, in every respect, as above described, as to alternate layers of berries and sugar, and substitute for the orange juice, half a pint of pure cider. Where our home-made currant wine is also most admirable for bringing out, in this latter form, the delicious native flavor of the strawberry.

I will now give an original receipt for that exquisite invention, the strawberry shortcake:—

MISS MAY'S STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.

To one quart of sifted flour add two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar. Now rub into this a large tablespoonful of the best butter, or the same quantity of leaf lard; then wet it up with sufficient buttermilk to form a soft dough, having first dissolved one tablespoonful of soda in the milk; mix lightly, and bake on a griddle as one make the cake rather thick, and about the size of a large dinner plate. When baked, split it while warm, and spread it freely over with the best butter; cover thickly the lower half with ripe strawberries, sprinkling them liberally with fine white sugar, cover this with the other half of the cake, as a lid; dust it over with fine sugar, and eat while warm with a sauce of sweetened cream. In place of soda and cream of tartar, any equivalent baking powder may be used.

I will now dismiss my subject by saying, with good old Dr. Botalor:—Doubtless God could have made a better berry than the strawberry, but doubtless God never did."

Mr. Bergson' Sycorson.—The Chicago Tribune of the 29th says:—"It is believed that Mr. W. K. Muir, General Manager of the Canada Railroad, will be the successor of Mr. Brydges as Railroad Commissioner of Canada. Mr. Muir has the reputation of being as able a railroad man as there is in this country, and his appointment to that important position will undoubtedly be hailed with delight by the people of Canada. Mr. Brydges, it is reported, will become General Manager of the Grand Trunk, in place of Mr. Joseph Hickson, who, it is said, is about to resign. Mr. Hickson is now, or has lately been, in England to raise money to extend his road westward to Chicago, but from what can be learned has been unsuccessful in his efforts, the stockholders refusing to invest any more money in railroads this side of the Atlantic. Mr. Hickson is shrewd enough to see that his road without an outlet to Chicago cannot make a fight against Vanderbilt, and must necessarily come to a disastrous end. Therefore he is anxious to get out from under before all the blame is placed upon his shoulders."

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in Packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London, Eng." dasd wcow

LOCAL LEGAL CASES.—Fitzgrald vs. G. T. R.—In the Common Pleas, Toronto, in this case the Court delivered judgment, on Friday, discharging the rule with costs, thus settling the case in favor of the plaintiff.—Re Becher—A quieting title matter. The land in question had been a portion of an old highway in London, which had been closed up and sold to the petitioner. The plaints gave the Corporation power to sell, but did not specially give them power to convey. The Attorney-General appeared for the petitioner, and argued that a power to convey was implied. Brantford Young Ladies' College.

Brantford, June 29th, 1878.

The commencement exercises of the Young Ladies' College were brought to a close last night in Zion Church, which was filled to overflowing by one of the finest audiences that has every met on a similar occasion. On the platform were the Professors of the College, Rev. Dr. Cochrane, D. Kemp, the Principal, Rev. Dr. Topp, of Toronto; Rev. Dr. McKnight, of Halifax; Rev. Dr. Wallace, of St. John; Rev. Dr. Urie, Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Goderich; Rev. Mr. McLean, of Londonderry, N. S.; Rev. Mr. Grant, of Ingersoll; Rev. Mr. Rennie, of Alma Craig; Rev. D. Duff, of North Brant; T. M. McIntyre, Ll. B., the new Principal of the College; Robert Henry, Esq., Mayor of Brantford; Alex. Robertson, Esq., Chairman of the Board of Directors, and many others of the prominent citizens of Brantford. Among the audience were representatives from every part of Ontario and Quebec, and from many of the principal cities in the United States. After a voluntary on the organ from Professor Whish, Dr. Topp engaged in prayer, and graduates read their essays. Taken as a whole, the essays were exceedingly creditable to the writers, and delivered in a style very different from the general average of lady graduates. They spoke in a clear voice, and articulated so distinctly as to be heard in the large edifice by nearly everyone present. The following is the complete list of the graduates for the present year:—Belle Cameron, Collingwood; Margaret Christie, Paris; Ida Fairgrieve, Hamilton; Jennie Forin, Belleville; Annie Gowdy, Guelph; Emma J. Harkness, Wilkesbarre, Penn.; U. S.; M. Carrie June, Fremont, Ohio; U. S.; Ella J. Mutchmor, Ottawa; Jessie McCallum, Stornoway; Ida McGibbon, Montreal, P. Q.; Letitia McLean, Toronto; Kate McTaggart, Clinton; Ida B. Odell, Toronto; Agnes Jane Robertson; Barbara P. Thompson, Dundas; Elizabeth S. D. Torquine, Nassau, Bahia; Watt, Brantford; Annie J. Whiting, Onondago.

The essays were as follows:—Salutatory in French, Miss Jessie McCallum; "Home," Miss Belle Cameron; "Veil and Dust," Miss Barbara P. Thompson; "Diversity in Nature," Miss Annie McGibbon; "In the Distance," Miss Ida B. Odell; "All Rivers Flow to the Ocean," Miss Maggie A. Reid; "The Picture Gallery of Life," Miss Mary E. Smith; "What People Talk About," Miss Jennie Forin; "The Mutability of Taste," Miss Hattie McGibbon; "Violets Plucked will Never Grow Again," Miss Annie Gowdy; "No One Lives for Himself Alone," Miss Annie J. Whiting; "Words," Miss Marion Ellis; "Mental Crowns," Miss Lizzie Patterson; "Evening Hour," Miss Elizabeth S. D. Torquine; "Sunsets," Miss Ida Fairgrieve; "Life's Vicissitudes," Miss Annie W. Smith; "Appearances," Miss Kate McTaggart; "Life is a School," Miss Agnes Jane Orr; "Who Are Heroes?" Miss Ida Mutchmor; "Measures of Memory," Miss Annie Gowdy; "Time's Changes," Miss B. O. Watt; "Valedictory," Miss Ellen Mutchmor; "Weaving," Miss Carrie M. June.

After the reading of the essays, Dr. Cochrane presented the diplomas to the graduating class, and the medals to the successful address, in which he spoke in affectionate terms of the relations now ended between teachers and scholars. A Special Art Diploma was given to Miss Annie Brewer, a graduate of 1876, for excellence in painting. Then followed the distribution of prizes. The Dufferin Silver Medal for Rhetoric and English Literature was awarded to Miss Ada B. Odell, of Toronto, as was also the silver medal given by the Members of the county of Brant. The bronze medal given by Lord Dufferin for Canadian and English History was gained by Miss Nora Victoria Wallace, of Brantford. The College silver medal by Miss Lizzie Torrance, of Guelph; the silver medal in the second year by Miss Jessie Lewis, of Goderich; and in the junior year by Miss Nellie Cockshutt, of Brantford. In addition to these may be named as prominent prize takers, Miss Annie W. Smith, of Hamilton; Miss Maud Widder, of Goderich; Miss Montgomery, of Islington; Miss Ethel, of St. Thomas, and Miss Gordon, of Longwood. The fair recipients of honors as they came to the platform to receive the prizes were greeted with applause and covered with bouquets.

The closing address was delivered by Drs. Topp, Waters, McKnight, and Mr. Grant, of Ingersoll. The Mayor of the city, Mr. Henry, in a neat speech, thanked the large number of visitors for their presence, and offered a silver medal for the next graduating class. Next followed a presentation to Dr. Kemp, the retiring Principal, by the young ladies, the address being read by Miss Forin, of Belleville, and a handsome dress from the Chairman of the Board of Directors, Alex. Robertson, Esq.

Dr. Cochrane announced that the College would open again on the first Wednesday of September next, when he hoped to see many old and new pupils to begin their studies.

The new principal, Mr. McIntyre, enters upon his work in the College under most auspicious circumstances, and we predict for him the greatest success.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

INGERSOLL.

The promenade concert, under the auspices of the Young Men's Association of the St. James' Church, which came off last week in the Drill-shed, was a grand success. The band was present and discoursed the most charming selections, much to the delight of all present. Proceeds realized, $30.

A political meeting in the interest of Mr. Colman, is to be held in Norwich village this evening. This gentleman is meeting with marked success at all the public meetings. The cry now in Wilson, ish, whose is the palmed system. Some take up the refrain, but instead as some the cheer, I am anxious to find out wherewith, for I want some of the blue ribbon for friends to wear. Some say it is "Scott Act," and others the style of tuba used advertise. Little Dougherty has faith in his tossing up, for his tongue still wags on his name. Does it not seem a little strange that F. J. Brown and James Brady are so suspended in Malmo now at last election they voted for Edey, and sailed the Colonel a sneak. The scene is changed.

Quite a number from here a few evenings ago went out to a concert given in St. Andrew's Church, East Oxford. The concert was one of the most successful ever held there, and the people who were present owe their thanks to Mr. Sowerby, who was the mover and promoter of the whole thing. After the entertainment was over, the ladies and gentlemen were invited to the residence of Mr. Sowerby, and were entertained in a manner that was a credit to the gentleman. The proceeds of concert were $140. The first thing a stranger would notice in visiting Wood Order I would be the beautiful farms and residences that everywhere meet his eye, and among the most beautiful was that of our host, Mr. Sowerby. It is said that he has one of the finest 50-acre gardens in the county of Oxford. When we say that in the garden there are thirty-six different kinds of apples, and the same number of pears, some idea of the size of the place may be had. Town people in the country are apt to show what their business is by their country—thus, Holloway, from lack of knowledge. They think that country people does not extend, but if we are to judge of that from refinement by the adorning of the houses, then I say that country people are far ahead of us, for they have that natural refinement which is the result of the pure air and the fresh fruit and vegetables in the country bred youth. Jean acquired one.

Mr. Sowerby has gone up to-day on his own private car to London and, who we all the best of good luck in their journey. We are sure that in our wishes that the success that attends them in the country may follow them in the city.

Ingersoll boys are to-day on their own way to London and, who we all the best of good luck in their journey. We are sure that in our wishes that the success that attends them in the country may follow them in the city.

GALT.

We were at the G. T. R. stock-yard yesterday, and saw a fine lot of cattle destined for Europe. The said cattle was the property of Gowan Bros., well known farmers in the county.

Mr. Hall, of Hall House hotel, has made an addition to the G. T. R. station the other day, and the improvement is a decided benefit to the appearance, and one that reflects credit on its owner.

On the interview with Mr. T. Brothers, Conservative candidate for the North Riding of Waterloo, we learned that it is the intention of the Conservatives to run a candidate in the North Riding of Wentworth, and that a requisition has been signed by Sandiford and Woodcock in the interest of Mr. Gibbons was in town looking up votes, &c.

The store of Mr. Linton, one of the teachers in the Central School, was entered by burglars on Saturday night last, and considerable damage done to the stock. They succeeded in capturing fourteen cents and a pocket-knife, and left the premises. Saturday night will mind others that that wouldn't hesitate to murder a man for the sum of ten cents, or the cost of the bottom of beer bringing pan and sell it for beer blacking.

The Reformers have had the Galt Reporter will better a suit of criminal libel against its new editor, Mr. Dafoe, for libel published in the Free. The Dufferin Post has had the pleasure to chronicle. Among the trees on the lawn were many lanterns, shedding their light upon the festive scene, and adding much to the beauty of the occasion. The music of the band, and dancing going through the night came the nearest harmony of Galt's favorite sons. The summer lasting was celebrated on the tympanums of those lovely young men who had not been favored in getting invitations to circle of young ladies and gentlemen who were present. Dancing was kept up until the early dawn. The regular order of the Galt Reporter will be resumed in a few days. Mr. Dafoe, the Reformer's candidate for the Local Legislature, was also present. GOWAN'S BAND.—The band which will play for the Mount Hope Orphan Asylum picnic this afternoon is the famous Gowan Band and Orchestra, formerly of Ottawa, and now residing in this city.

LACROSSE.—The London Lacrosse Club play at Stratford with the club of that town to-day. The recent amalgamation of the Lacrosse players in London will show itself in the match to-day, if we mistake not.

CONFIRMATION.—A confirmation service, of an interesting and impressive character, was held in St. Peter's R. C. Cathedral yesterday, at which a large number of children presented themselves for that sacred rite of the church.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC.—The scholars of St. James' Church Sunday School, London South, held their annual picnic at Parke's Flats Saturday afternoon. The day was pleasantly spent by the children, who appeared to be happy and contented with the amusements provided for them by their teachers.

HONORARY DISTINCTION.—The Board of Regents and Faculty of Cornell College, Iowa, on June 25th, conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. Geo. Young, of Toronto, and Rev. Daniel Sherman, of the Conference. Cornell College is one of the most noted Colleges of the Western States, and is very careful of her Degrees, hence this particular case a mutual honor is conferred.

A THIRD DECISION.—The Court of Queen's Bench, on Saturday last, again gave judgment in favor of Mr. McArthur, the plaintiff in the Middlesex Enoch Arden suit, who brought the action to recover possession of a valuable farm in Ekfrid. The Chief Justice and Judge Armour coincided in the decision. Mr. W. Rock, Q.C., was counsel for the plaintiff.

HOLMAN OPERA HOUSE.—A very attractive bill of opera, farce and burlesque will be given this evening in the Holman Opera House. On this occasion Mr. H. Jarrett will make his first appearance on the lyric stage, and Mr. A. D. Holman, Mr. Ellis Ryse and Madame Cara Fice will also appear in selections from Maritana. The farce of the Benicia Boy and the burlesque of Follies of a Night will be also given.

HIGHWAYMEN.—Early on Saturday morning two men stopped Mr. W. H. Niles' horse on Adelaide street while he was driving home. One of them undertook to pull Mr. Niles from the buggy, but by giving the animal a sharp cut with the whip, the would-be robbers were left in the lurch. A similar occurrence is reported to have taken place on the Governor's Road, opposite Sailor's Grove, about one o'clock yesterday morning. Look out for them.

FALL FROM A BUILDING.—About 7 o'clock Saturday morning a young man named Charles Phillips, an apprentice with Messrs. S. McBride & Co., while assisting to put a new roof on the rear part of Mr. William Saunders' dry store, happened to lose his balance and fall from the roof of Merritt & Co.'s warehouse, a distance of 25 feet, on the flat roof of the adjoining building. He alighted on his side, and bounding up again fell the second time on his face, injuring his nose very severely. He sustained considerable shaking, and had to be removed home on a dray, where he was attended to by Dr. Woodruff. It is thought that he became dizzy while looking down from the Merritt building.

POLICE COURT PENCILLINGS.—At this court Saturday, the P. M. presiding, John Stott was fined $1 for being drunk. He was given a couple of days to pay it, but he subsequently discovered that it were fond upon him, and he paid it forthwith. John Symonds was fined $2, or in default ninety one days' imprisonment for being drunk. Thos. Robinson, the sneak-thief who attempted to rob Mr. Colpitt's till on Friday last was convicted, and sentenced to three months of imprisonment at the Central Prison. This is his second offence. Mr. C. W. Inman was fined $1 and $3.35 costs for allowing one of his horses to run at large, in contravention of the by-law. Robert Hunboy was further remanded until the 4th July on two charges of larceny. Stephen Starr was remanded until the 5th July for larceny of money.

THE APPROACHING HORSE SALE.—The entries for the forthcoming auction sale of horses continue to pour in, and the London Horse Market promises to become one of the institutions of the city. It will supply a long-felt want, and will differ from a former one in this, that every transaction will be square and above-board. The buyers and sellers may rest assured of that. The conduct of the affair is in the hands of gentlemen who have reputations to sustain, and who intend to keep them unsullied in the strictest type under consideration. Already, through the exertions of the indefatigable Secretary, H. D. Wright, a successful sale is assured, and when we say that horses will be offered from the stables of such well-known gentlemen as Messrs. T. Patteson, Eastwood, Dumpgerell, Fitzgerald, Higgins, Collins, Davis, Henbyn and numerous others, horsemen will readily understand the character of the animals to be put up at auction. The agents for the most part are veterinary surgeons in the surrounding towns and villages, and they have been busily engaged in making selections suitable for the English market. In addition, some very fine carriage horses, heavy draughts, and general roadsters have been promised. During Mr. Wright's recent visit to New York, Michigan and other places, he found a great demand for dapple greys, and through the efforts of the agents, quite a number of this class has been secured. On the whole, the approaching sale will afford buyers the best chance ever offered them to select from.

LOCAL NOTICES.

GRAND LIBERAL - CONSERVATIVE DEMONSTRATION at Strathroy Driving Park, on Monday afternoon, July 8.—The Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald will deliver an address on the political issues of the day, at the above-named time and place. He will be accompanied by Hon. M. C. Cameron, J. B. Plumb, M. P. A. W. Lauder, Esq., M. P. P., Hon. John Carling, W. R. Meredith, Esq., D. McMillan, Esq., M. P., and others are also expected to attend.

ST. PATRICK'S SOCIETY.—The Dramatic Club of this Society gives a performance to-night in the Mechanics' Hall, when a first-class bill will be produced by some good local talent.

The first drowning accident of the season in this vicinity occurred yesterday morning. The wonder is that there are not more of such fatal casualties to report, as the youths hereabouts are as reckless about swimming as if they were supplied with fins.

Have you ever noticed the fact that there are a good many imperfect men in the world? Some are underdone, some are overdone, and some, like Ephraim in the Scriptures, are "a cake not turned." They are done brown on one side and all dough on the other. Perfect men, like angels, are seen only as rare intervals.

It was very action, certainly, in the young girl, and very truthful also, "Mary," said her critical parent, who for some reason objected to cosmetics, "why do you me paint?" She archly replied to her parental relative, who happened to be a musician, "Well, father, for the same reason that you use rosin—to help me draw my bean."

Within the past two days the detectives have succeeded in finding another of the silver forks stolen from Captain Drought's house some time since. A bottle of acid was also found in the cellar of the house formerly tenanted by Dynan, the man in custody on suspicion of being one of the Ley-Wright gang of robbers.

Here is some gush specially built for today:—

Let other LOVES have their street parades, their Hansom Cab and Coupé Serenades,
Well lead the van on the First of July, to the tune of Edmonds March.
We'll gather them in, from every side, from the bitter cold either end of the earth,
To rejoice with us and had the day which gave to our country birth,
And when the over, and the lights are out, the May-queen, to the millenium, and Gabriel blow his Horn.

The catechism ought to be handled with great delicacy. A little girl was asked, "What is the sacrament of matrimony?" The poor child, who had learned her lesson by rote, got a little mixed and gave the answer to another question, as follows:—"It is a state of torment into which souls enter to prepare for another and better world." The priest, who had observed but not experienced, simply replied, with a sigh, "For aught I know you may be perfectly right," and went on with the examination.

It does a man good to have a right hearty laugh; neither is it inconsistent with the serious business of life. The man who never laughs is fit for stratagems and spoils. Well, nothing more provokes a good laugh than the peculiar wit of the Hibernian. We have enjoyed this more-over to our heart's content, and now pass it over to you.—Two Irish brothers looked so much alike that it was difficult to tell them apart. One owed one of them a grudge, but he couldn't tell which. One day he met what he thought was the offender, and got ready to wipe his wrathful shillalah. To make sure that he was right, however, he asked, "Is that you, or is it your brother?" The young man took in the situation and answered, "Oh, I'm only by them will take place there. The Stars on his stick and walked away saying, "He me faith, it's mighty lucky for ye that your not yerself, that's all."

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION

A Biddulph Farmer Fired at on the Highway.

Information reaches us of a determined attempt to take the life of a farmer in the Township of Biddulph, on the evening of Tuesday last. It appears that the younger members of the Sullivan family, on the 6th concession of that township, have for some time past held a grudge against a neighboring farmer named Thomas Keefe, and, it is alleged, had openly avowed their intention of "making it warm" for Keefe whenever an opportunity for revenge presented itself. This, it seems, occurred on the evening in question, when Keefe, while walking down the concession line, was startled by the sharp report of a revolver, which was followed by three others in rapid succession. They came from a fence corner near by and as Keefe, after the fourth shot, states that he made for the spot from which the shots emanated, and distinctly saw Edward, Patrick and Margaret Sullivan leave the place and run towards their house. He did not pursue them into the place, but made up his mind to invoke the law against them, and accordingly lodged information against them before Squire Peters, of this city, who placed the warrant in the hands of County Detective Hodge. The latter arrested the three persons named Saturday night, and, bail being given for their appearance, they were remanded for examination before Squire Peters on Wednesday next.

Dominion Day Programme.

TTe base ball match between the Buffaloes and Tecumseh clubs, on the grounds of the latter, will be called at 3 o'clock, and promises to be very interesting.

A quoiting match will take place at the White Sulphur Spring grounds at 2 p.m. between the Burlingtons, of Hamilton, and the London club.

A picnic will be held on the grounds attached to the Mount Hope Orphan Asylum.

In the Holman Opera House, a very attractive bill, consisting of opera, farce and burlesque, will be given.

The St. Patrick's Society will give an amateur performance in the Mechanics' Hall in the evening.

A tea meeting will be held in connection with the Bible Christian Church, London South.

At 10 a. m., the regular thirty-cent excursion train will start for Port Stanley.

DEDHAM.—The Irish Benevolent Society, of this city, has decided upon holding their annual picnic at Port Stanley on the 24th inst. It will, no doubt, be a "slap up" affair.

BASE BALL NOTES.

Another Game Won by the Hornells-ville.

The Championship Records Up to Saturday Night.

The Tecumsehs played the Hornells at Hornellsville on Saturday afternoon, and were defeated by a score of 3 to 2. The game was a good one throughout, and but for the wretched umpiring would in all likelihood have terminated in favor of the champions. The home team were shamefully treated, so far as umpiring is concerned, on their last trip through the State of New York, and more especially at Hornellsville, where some of the most rascally judgments were given against them. It appears to be a put-up job with many of the individuals chosen for the position to do all that lays in their power to defeat the Tecumsehs, probably from fear that the nine which they represent cannot outplay them. This should not be so, but it is done, nevertheless. If it is persisted in, only one remedy can be the result—and that may be left to those more directly interested. The batting of both clubs was poor; per contra the pitching was good, exceedingly good on Goldsmith's part, and it may be stated here, that that player never pitched better in his life than he did last week. Quinton's hands gave out after the Utica game, and although he pluckily caught in the match with the Cricketa, he was not in a condition to catch such pitching. Dunnigan caught in the last game, and although his hands were not in a first-class state he bring to the balls tolerably well. The other members of the team did all that lay in their power to win the game, but their efforts went for naught against such umpiring. The record of the individual play may be gleaned from the appended score:—

The much-talked-of removal of the Indianapolis club to St. Louis is liable to be brought about. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat announces that the whole Indianapolis team, and probably the best of the local team will be organized from the Milwaukee and Indianapolis nines, with other players of note from other sections.

The managers of the Providence Club have offered Marrantte $500 to release Bradley from his engagement. This proposition has been brought before the Directors of the New Bedford Association, and after consideration the New Bedfords offered to release Bradley for $700, but as yet it has not been accepted by the providence Club.

Bagley, the new Maple Leaf pitcher, pitched something after Hicks's style, and with the boys, Friday afternoon, and everybody down. On Cricketers' Field, says the Herald man, is satisfied.

Washington Heckler says:—It is noticed that no one of the nominees exhibited at a base ball tournament looks so languid and unconcerned when the pitcher sends a red-hot ball into the batter's stomach as the latter individual. He usually looks as though he didn't know anything about it, while the multitude as a rule, rather like it."

It is said that Secretary of Rochesterys has engaged to play with the Chicago next year.

The Cleveland Leader thinks the Atlantics of this city will play the Forest City this afternoon. If so, they will be defeated by 6 to 1. The Actives played a good game, but the Standards' professional pitcher was too much for them. The following is the full score:—

Western Fair Board.—The Western Fair Board met at two o'clock in the office of Mr. McBride. Mr. J. Johnston occupied the chair, and Messrs. Christie, Partridge, Belton, West, Routledge, Dreaney, Andrews, Douglass, Whetter, Griffith, H. Anderson and J. Nixon were present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Mr. Partridge, from the Entertainment Committee, reported progress. The Board then elected judges in the different classes for the next fair, after which they adjourned.

A DISORDERLY CHARACTER.—On Saturday night County Constable Hodge was sent for by a woman named Outram to arrest a disorderly character by the name of Tom Cavanagh, who was attempting to break into her house in the Gore of London, and was also conducting himself in a disorderly manner. He was taken before Squire Peters, who remanded him to jail until Wednesday next.

Sad Drowning Accident.

A Young Man Loses His Life While Bathing.

Yesterday morning, at 5 o'clock, Mr. Jas Gahan, who works in Mr. T. F. Kingsmill's store, left his residence in Peterwille, in company with his two brothers, for the purpose of bathing in the river. The three young men plunged in near the Cove Bridge, about a mile west of the city. The deceased, who was a good swimmer, had crossed the river, and was on his way back, when he suddenly called for assistance. His brother Harry, who cannot swim well, at once went to his aid, and seized hold of him, and they sank together. The youngest brother of the three, Joe Gahan, then reached the scene, and seized Harry when he came to the surface and brought him safely to shore. James Gahan again sank, however, to rise no more, and it was an hour or more before his body was recovered by Constable McGuire and Mr. Nichols. When found his legs and hands were in a contracted condition, showing that death resulted from cramps. The deceased was a steady, industrious young man, and his melancholy death will be deeply regretted by his family and friends. Mr. Harry Gahan, last night, was in a very precarious condition, consequent upon the shock.

Sad Death of an Old Citizen.

Mrs. Simeon Morrill died on Saturday morning, at an advanced age, under very painful circumstances. A short time since she suffered from an attack of heart disease, and her physician advised her not to live alone. This advice she did not follow, and on Friday evening, when, it is supposed, she was in the act of closing a window, she was seized with another attack, and fell on the floor. Here she remained all night until her moanings attracted the attention of her neighbors, who broke into the house on Saturday morning, and found her unconscious, in which state she remained until Saturday night, when she died. Mrs. Morrill was one of London's oldest residents, and the widow of one of the earliest Mayors. A strange coincidence is that Mrs. Morrill died on the seventh anniversary of the death of her husband.

THE MONTH'S STATISTICS.

Customs, Inland Revenue, U. S. Exports and Vital Returns.

INLAND REVENUE.

The following is a statement of the Inland Revenue collected in the Division of London for the month of June, 1878, which shows an increase over the corresponding month of last year of $5,392.66:—

	1877.	1878.

London East Notes.

Sunday afternoon.

Constables Nichol and Leathern arrested a man in Salter's Grove for being drunk and disorderly. He was brought before Squire Peters, who committed him to jail.

A number of smallnesses are to be issued to-morrow to several young men who make it a practice to swim on Sunday near Moore's Distillery.

The new constable, Mr. H. Aldridge will be on his rounds to-morrow. He will be in plain clothes.

The victim of the Hagarsville murder is a brother to the Rev. Mr. Calvert, of the Dundas Street Methodist Church, in this village.

Owing to the warm weather the Battery and Cavalry paraded for church service this forenoon on the camp grounds at ten o'clock. Major John Peters read the English Church Service and Lessons for the Day, and concluded by reading two chapters in the Bible and the Lord's Prayer. Seats were placed for the officers and men, and a large number of ladies and civilians were present. The men listened with great attention, and the Major, on his part, performed the ceremony to the satisfaction of all present.

The troops will march to the Park to-morrow (Monday) morning, and fire a salute in honor of the Dominion Day anniversary.

Perfect order and discipline have been maintained since the command was formed, which speaks well for the officer in command, Major J. Peters.

BAND CHALLENGE.—The band of the 7th Batt justly smarts under the fraud from which they suffered in the recent band competition in Montreal. They believe that had they received fair play they would have carried off the first prize, and in this opinion they are supported by some of the leading musicians of Montreal. Feeling confident of their cause, and being supported by public opinion in London, they have issued a challenge to Band Master Lavigne, of the Montreal City Band, to play in Toronto for $1,200 and the banners to which the 7th Batt. Band considers their Montreal rivals are not justly entitled. The public will await with curiosity to see whether this challenge will be accepted.

BLACK WALNUT FOR EUROPE.—A correspondent writing from Alvinston says :—It may be said in your city, and in fact out of it as well, that the black walnut timber is a thing of the past in Western Ontario, but such I assure you is not a fact, twenty-five car loads of this valuable timber having been shipped this week from Alvinston, a station on the St. Clair branch of the C. S. R. All the walnut was shipped in the log, and is, I understand, designed for the European market, and was taken from twenty trees off the lands of J. W. Brannon, Esq., who has an extensive lot of timber lands in the township of Brooke, most of which is yet interspersed with black walnut.

THE "GLOBE" AND THE JUBILEE.—The Hamilton and London bandsmen will, no doubt, feel that they owe a debt of gratitude to the Globe for its advice on the Musical Jubilee fraud :—"From all we can learn, the malcontents at the Montreal contest had no sufficient cause for the unfavorable shape which they took in declaring their prizes. The judges were selected from different parts of the Dominion and the United States, and are, therefore, free from any just imputation of local partiality." Wonder how it will look to have the "boters" of the Queen's Own Band been similarly assisted.

ONTARIO IMMIGRATION RETURNS.—The following is a statement showing the number of immigrants settled in Ontario during the five months ending 31st May, 1878, with the arrivals for the corresponding period during the previous year :—

THE BERLIN CONGRESS

London, July 8.—Berlin advices state that the question of Batoum was at one time the cause of grave apprehension. Its settlement is the result of an application to the Czar for new instructions. Reasonable hope exists that unless the commercial character of Batoum were strictly guaranteed England would deem herself entitled to send ironclads through the Straits whenever she pleased. Various correspondents at Berlin agree that the settlement now reached implies that the fortification shall be completely dismantled and no number of war stationed in that harbor. The Post's Berlin correspondent says—As regards Eastern Roumelia and that of Batoum, the Congress decided that the Turks shall retain Bayazid and the whole valley leading thereto, including Alashgerd.

London, July 8.—A telegram from Vienna points out that Batoum is not to be made a free port after the fashion of Hamburg or Albouna, but becomes a Russian free port, which is quite a different thing. Respecting Crete, the solution proposed by Congress is considered unacceptable at Athens, where public opinion is unsupported. Friday's manifestation, in which 15,000 people participated, took place in front of the King's palace. The Government is powerless to resist the current popular feeling, and Friday the cannons were loaned for the transfer of the Royal Guard to the forts of Phalerum.

London, July 8.—A Times' Berlin correspondent telegraphs he learns from persons in close intimacy with Prince Gortschakoff at Petersburg, and still more in Moscow, great disgust is felt at the result of Congress. Russian diplomatists in general, and the plenipotentiaries at Berlin in particular, are quite downcast. They see concessions, nothing, people say, but make concessions, and are ready to accept any humiliation to gain the approbation of Europe.

Some of the Greeks in Berlin seem to have resolved a little from the profound dejection and strong animosity which the decision of the Congress regarding the Hellenic question at first produced, and the more cool headed among them begin to perceive that the policy is to make the most of what is obtained.

Vienna, July 8.—According to present arrangements the army that will occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina consists of 70,000 men and 240 guns.

Asiatic Turkey.

Important Defensive Treaty Concluded with England.

Brigade to Occupy Island of Cyprus.

London, July 8.—It is reported that England has concluded an independent defensive treaty for the maintenance of the integrity of the Sultan's Asiatic dominions. The Porte has accordingly granted to England the right to occupy the island of Cyprus immediately.

London, July 8.—The Telegraph's Berlin correspondent says the defensive treaty between England and Turkey does not necessarily come within the scope of the deliberations of the Congress. It is an independent contract. Any question for pecuniary compensation will be arranged at Berlin, however, be announced to Congress on Monday. The position of Cyprus will give England absolute control over the Euphrates valley, and a line of railway having this object in view is to be constructed. No further Russian encroachments in this direction will be possible. So far as Asia is concerned, the settlement effected will practically form one power.

London, July 8.—Asshorton Cross, Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, made the following statement in the Commons this afternoon:—"In the event of the cession of Batoum by Russia, a constitutional convention concluded the 4th of June last with the Porte agreeing to defend Turkey against aggression, and the Porte ceding Cyprus, which will be immediately occupied by England.

Sir Garnet Wolseley will administer the affairs of the island.

Petroleum Explosion at Lyons.

THIRTY PERSONS KILLED.

Paris, July 8.—An explosion occurred yesterday in a petroleum factory at Lyons. Thirty persons were killed.

Recent Elections in France.

Paris, July 8.—The twenty-two supplementary elections yesterday resulted in the return of 17 Republicans and 5 Conservatives. In two instances no choice.

International Chess Tournament.

Paris, July 8.—Up to date three rounds have been played in the International Chess Tournament. Winaur, of Russia, still leads, he having won all his games. Blackburne, of New York, won 5½ and lost ½. Mason, of New York, won 4 and lost 2. A drawn game is reckoned as one game to each. The contest ends 23rd of July.

Sassulitch Expelled from Switzerland.

Paris, July 8.—The Gaulois announces that Vera Sassulitch has been expelled from Switzerland, but there are doubts regarding her identity.

The American Oarsmen.

London, July 8.—The Shoes, crew arrived to-day. They will leave Liverpool on their return here on Saturday next. Loe, of the Tritons Club, of Newark, accompanies returns to the United States with the Shoes, and not row in the Metropolitan Regatta.

American Telegrams.

Independence, Iowa, July 7.—Last night Clarence Blake shot, and instantly killed, Miss Mattie Sherwood, daughter of a prominent citizen, and he then shot himself. Jealousy is the supposed cause.

New Orleans, La., July 7.—Wm. Sutcliffe, who a few weeks ago defeated Frank Fowler in a walking match for $1,000 on the Mississippi River to-day while swimming in the swell of a passing tow boat.

Liberty, Ind., July 7.—The Agricultural Works was burned to-day. Loss, $75,000.

Rochester, N. Y., July 7.—Prof. Lewis Swift, of this city, discovered a comet in constellation Andromeda at two o'clock this morning. It is in the right ascension about 17 hours and 30 minutes declination, north 1 degree. It is large but faint, and is moving very slowly in the southwest.

Elmira, N. Y., July 7.—Reid & Cooper's Foundry and Architectural Iron Works was burned last night by an incendiary. Loss, $15,000.

Paterson, N. J., July 8.—John and Frank Ewing, aged 9 and 11, residing at Belleville, were drowned this morning while bathing.

Taunton, Mass., July 8.—A tack factory was damaged to the extent of $75,000 by fire to-day, insured.

Falls River, Mass., July 8.—James M. Anthony was found dead at his residence at noon. Death was caused by an overdose of chloral.

Three Persons Shot in a Drunken Frenzy.

Shaebenville, O., July 6.—George McGann, his small son, and two other men, were shot by a blacksmith named Stewart on Thursday. McGann was instantly killed, the boy fatally wounded, and the third person sustained a frightful wound. Stewart had been drinking.

The Indian War.

Disastrous Defeat of the U. S. Volunteers.

Portland, Oregon, July 8.—Gov. Chadwick, at Umatilla, telegraphs July 7, that the volunteers under Capt. Sperry, 50 strong, were defeated at Willow Springs, 30 miles south of Pendleton, yesterday. Sperry is killed and nearly all his command were killed or wounded. We can hear of but seven left.

Death of a Noted Publisher.

New York, July 8.—Geo. S. Appleton died this morning, aged 57.

Murder at Gatineau Point.

Dead Body of a Man found in a Gully.

Ottawa, July 8.—The body of a man named Martin Clair was found lying in a gully back of Ashwith's mill, Gatineau Point, yesterday. On examination it was found that he had received a blow in the head from some blunt instrument, from which it is supposed he died. Clair had been in the village the night previous selling some land claims, and it is said had a large sum of money on his person. When found he had nothing on his person. It is thought he was murdered and then robbed. An inquest will be held by Coroner Graham, of Ottawa County. The wildest excitement prevails at the Point to-day.

Ottawa, July 8.—The body of the man Cornelius Morlarty, whose clothes were found on Thurso Dock, was picked up a short distance from the wharf, probably washed ashore by the swell of the steamer Peerless. An inquest will be held. It is supposed that the unfortunate man committed suicide. He had been drinking to an alarming extent for some time previous.

Ottawa, July 8.—The body of the man Cornelius Morlarty, whose clothes were found on Thurso Dock, was picked up a short distance from the wharf, probably washed ashore by the swell of the steamer Peerless. An inquest will be held. It is supposed that the unfortunate man committed suicide. He had been drinking to an alarming extent for some time previous.

Suicide by Drowning.

St. Catharet, Que., July 8.—Ellie Hudon, other Beaulieu, stone cutter, drowned himself while bathing above Mr. Marmo Delorme's mill, of this place. Mr. Hudon is the father of three children, who reside with their mother in Montreal.

Man Drowned at Fergus.

Fergus, Ont., July 7.—About 11 to-day a young man named Peter Conroe was drowned in the Grand River here below Harvey's dam, while bathing with another young man. The water is from fifteen to twenty feet deep, with a swift current. He went beyond his depth, and being unable to swim could not save himself. The body was recovered after being three hours in the water.

Leap of a Somnambulist.

Belleville, Ont., July 6.—On Thursday night a servant girl, whilst in a state of somnambulism, opened her bedroom window and jumped to the ground, a distance of twenty feet, but escaped with slight injury.

Fire at Palmerston.

BASE BALL.

Troy, July 8.—Haymakers 6, Albanys (formerly Auburns), 0.

Springfield, Mass., July 8.—Lysells, 9, Springfields, 2.

...A suit is pending in a London court, brought by the Emma Mining Company against Lowis & Son, to recover damages for the part taken by the defendants in effecting a sale of the mine to the company for much more than it was worth. The defendants are metal brokers in Liverpool, and are charged with a conspiracy in promoting the formation of the company and the sale of the mine.

...The most novel of centenary celebrations is that which is to be held in Rome next year, on the 1,800 anniversary of the eruption of Vesuvius, by which Pompeii and Herculaneum were overwhelmed. The celebration of such a calamity is presumed to be in the interest of those who will make money from visitors.

...The Royal Westminster Aquarium has obtained a live specimen of the almost extinct manatee, the original of the fanciful mermaids of seamen's yarns. It weighs half a ton, and is not at all beautiful, but has a way of getting up in the water with its head and breast above the surface.

...The Court of Queen's Bench has decided that the Mayor and Aldermen of the town of Sunderland must personally foot the bill of about £2,000 for expenses incurred in the reception and entertainment of Gen. Grant, on the occasion of the opening of a bazaar held in that town.

...A distinguished foreign personage, who particularly prides himself on his English, and on his compliments, said, the other day, a reigning beauty who comes from outre-mer that, "like Aphrodite of old, she had risen from the scum of the sea."

...There is no truth in the report that Lord Cremorne is to marry Miss Graham, sister of the Duchess of Montrose. Neither is there any truth in the reported marriage of the Hon. Harry Corbett to Lady Beatrice Cecil.

...There was a prize crochet meeting at Brighton, England, lately, which was to be followed by a competition for the championship of all England, at Wimbledon. Crochet is becoming one of the national sports of Old England.

...On application of Mrs. Bagot, of the famous will case in 1870in, as Administrator of the estate has been appointed. The rental amounts to over £3,000 a year, and the personal estate is worth nearly £60,000.

...We hear that the Princess Beatrice will be married to the new Duke of Cumberland, who will take his money from the dog on top of them, lay sprawling upon the floor. The shock caused by this contemptible, following upon a surfeit of strawberries, is supposed to have occasioned Prince Gortschakoff's indisposition, though there are some who are of opinion that it was mosky assumed as an excuse in order that he might have an opportunity of preparing a long speech at his leisure.

It is said that at the private performances at the Theatre Royal, Munich, for the King exclusively, the following is the lonely ceremonial:—At 7 o'clock exactly the King, in a plain black grit, and unattended, takes his place in the middle box opposite the stage. The house is brilliantly lighted, but no one except His Majesty is anywhere to be seen in front. The King's appearance is the signal for the performance to commence. After each act the King retires, and the performance is resumed the instant he returns. The artists mostly belong to the Theatre Royal, and, save in the case of opera, the co-operation of others is seldom invoked.

The London Record says that the recent lectures of Dean Stanley are intended to prove "that there is no supernatural or divine element in the Old Testament Scriptures; that the canonical and apocryphal books stand on precisely the same footing of authority and credibility; that in neither the one nor the other was there any inspiration beyond that ordinary action of the Spirit on the minds of men to which all that is good and great is to be attributed."

THE TWELFTH IN MONTREAL.

Two Thousand Volunteers Called Out.

Major-General Smyth in Command.

Montreal, July 8.—The Mayor left for Ottawa this morning to have an interview with the Government, for the purpose, it is said, of preventing the military being called out on the 12th, or, if they are called out, to have their direction placed in his hand.

The Mayor has stated that if the magistrates have the direction of the troops, he will refrain from any active participation in preserving the peace.

Rev. Mr. Dondlet will preach the sermon to the Orangemen on the 12th. The latter will walk in full regalia.

Ottawa, July 8.—The Government having received a requisition for troops to preserve order in Montreal city on the 12th of July, signed by four magistrates, Major General Smyth has ordered 2,000 men to go into camp on Dominion Square on the 11th.

The force will include the Montreal troops, French and English. A and B Batteries, of Kingston and Quebec, with a mounted detachment of Lord Aberdeen's regiment, from Richmond, and other Eastern Township corps. The Major General left for Montreal to take command.

It is expected that he will also be sworn in as a special commissioner.

The magistrates who signed the requisition are Messrs. D. E. MacDougall, W. Clendenning, Adam Dingle, Geo. Thorne and John White.

Toronto, July 8.—The officers of the Queen's own have been instructed to hold their men in readiness to go to Montreal, should their presence be needed there on the 12th.

Per Dominion Line.

Montreal, July 8.—Sir Hasby Smyth's plans, as far as have transpired, were telegraphed from Ottawa to-day. In selecting the Dominion Square as the headquarters of the troops, he will have a much more central location than the Champ de Mars. It is the unimproved ground upon which Windsor Hotel and Dorchester Street Methodist Church front; and it is about three quarters of a mile from where the procession starts, and quite close to Stanley Street Church, where it terminates. It is thought Mayor Beaubry's visit to Ottawa is with the object of having the Orange procession dispersed on grounds of its being illegal. He has obtained the opinion of two lawyers to that effect, one of whom is Mr. Bernard, who will publish his views to-morrow, which are to the effect that the Orangemen have no right to march with bands of music and regalia. To-day the Orangemen made an application to the Montreal Lacrosse Club for the use of their grounds, with the object of having addresses after the sermon, which will be preached by the Rev. Mr. Dondlet. The Orangemen will decide to-night whether or not party tunes will be played, they having agreed to forego playing party tunes only on condition that the civic authorities would protect them in procession with regalia, which they have refused to do. The preparations for the celebration are the chief topic of conversation, and the inflammatory element are to be seen at every street corner discussing the situation. Several rows are reported.

George Brasher, an Orangeman, promenaded the street yesterday afternoon with an orange tie, and this was considered sufficient offence for a number to pounce upon him. He defended himself ably, and to-day is getting out warrants for his assailants, several of whom he can identify. Special Constable Keon, an Orangeman, had a terrible encounter with a number of assailants on Saturday night, but in both these cases, as no deadly weapons were used, the injuries received on either side are not dangerous. He, too, can identify his assailants. The agitation is injuring business, and business men are sick of the whole matter. Many stores will be closed on the 12th, and the banks will be fully protected.

Montreal, July 8.—A great open air demonstration, attended by about 10,000 Irish and French Canadian Catholics, was held in Chabouillon Square to-night to uphold the stand taken by Mayor Beaubry in reference to the Orange procession. The meeting was only called late in the evening, when it became known that the power was taken out of the Mayor's hands. McKenzie, contractor, Mayor of St. Cunegonde, Patrick Dolan and others delivered strong addresses in support of the position taken up by His Worship, and resolutions in conformity with the speeches were passed with great enthusiasm. The Mayor's course at the Magistrates' meeting was eulogized and thoroughly endorsed.

The meeting pledged itself to support the Mayor under all circumstances. The excitement when the speakers referred to the Orange proceedings waxed into a frenzy. It was finally arranged to await the Mayor's return from Ottawa, which takes place to-night, and a report of his mission to the Government will be made at another open-air assembly to-morrow. These demonstrations augur ill for the preservation of the peace on the 12th.

The following pastoral from the Vicar-General, in the absence of the Bishop, was read in all the Catholic churches of this city yesterday:—"My brethren: you are no doubt preoccupied with the anxieties that unhappily attach to the 12th, which is now near at hand. As the regularly constituted authorities of the city have taken action, and fully assumed the responsibility of preserving the peace in our midst, I have, as your pastor, but one word of earnest advice to give you—Offer your fervent prayers each day to the God of Peace, that He may reestablish His own divine spirit of charity in our city, and banish from it forever the demon of discord, of strife and hatred. Let each one be an upholder of the law, and defender of holy peace, and for that purpose, if called upon, be ready to place yourselves at the disposal of the city authorities, who are the natural and duly constituted guardians of the interests of our city. One word more, I ask you in the name of God not to taste one drop of intoxicating liquor on the 12th, and I venture to request those who sell drink to keep their houses closed on that occasion."

This is the true story of Prince Gortschakoff and the dog:—Upon the occasion of his paying a visit to Bismarck, his foot accidentally slipped, and he was upon the point of falling. Bismarck rushed forward to assist him, when his dog, which is trained to attack all unwelcome intruders, mistaking his master's movement for an hostile one, immediately flew at Gortschakoff's throat, and in a moment both princes, with the dog on top of them, lay sprawling upon the floor. The shock caused by this contretemps, following upon a surfeit of strawberries, is supposed to have occasioned Prince Gortschakoff's indisposition, though there are some who are of opinion that it was mosky assumed as an excuse in order that he might have an opportunity of preparing a long speech at his leisure.

It is said that at the private performances at the Theatre Royal, Munich, for the King exclusively, the following is the lonely ceremonial:—At 7 o'clock exactly the King, in a plain black grit, and unattended, takes his place in the middle box opposite the stage. The house is brilliantly lighted, but no one except His Majesty is anywhere to be seen in front. The King's appearance is the signal for the performance to commence. After each act the King retires, and the performance is resumed the instant he returns. The artists mostly belong to the Theatre Royal, and, save in the case of opera, the co-operation of others is seldom invoked.

The London Record says that the recent lectures of Dean Stanley are intended to prove "that there is no supernatural or divine element in the Old Testament Scriptures; that the canonical and apocryphal books stand on precisely the same footing of authority and credibility; that in neither the one nor the other was there any inspiration beyond that ordinary action of the Spirit on the minds of men to which all that is good and great is to be attributed."

PROF. PAWCETT AT HOME.

Habits of the Blind Economist and Member of Parliament.

From the London World of June 13.

The member for Hackney dwells in that tolerably thoroughfare known as the South Lambeth Road, in a house called the Laurels. It is an offensive brick structure, flat-faced and unadulterated, the house in which one might expect to find a disagreeing man chandler retired from business. There is a smug look about it vastly irritating to æsthetic minds, a suggestion of gloss, easy, mid-class competence, exasperating to any beholder. It is not till one is intimately acquainted with the Laws that its redeeming features become perceptible, from the rear of the large bay-windowed drawing-room stretches a garden exactly the tenth of a mile long, a convenient promenade for Mr. Fawcett, who likes to know how far he walks every day. This beautiful garden, which suggests by its outline that some previous denizen of the Laws must have been guilty of removing his neighbor's landmark, would hardly be allowed to exist in South Kensington or any locality infected with a building mania; but at South Lambeth there is room for crowding, and Mr. Fawcett enjoys his garden in peace. Open-air life is to him an essential condition of existence. There may appear strange tidings of a man deprived of his sight in the prime of his early manhood, and thrown by that very accident into political life, but it must be remembered that Mr. Fawcett was built by nature for an athlete, and that an athlete he chooses to remain. As he rises from the commons arm chair in his sunggery, his full height becomes apparent, as well as his massive shoulders and long, powerful limbs. A sinewy hand is stretched out of the very short sleeve of an old shooting-jacket, as a cheery voice with a pleasant Western twang in it—not an aggressive burr or heavy drawl, but an echo of breezy Wiltshire, a good strong voice which could make itself heard from afar on Salisbury Plain—bids to the visitor welcome. In attire he affects the gentleman-farmer, and his massive boots denote the ardent pedestrian. There is about Mr. Fawcett a complete absence of Cockneyism, and a healthy animalism not a little remarkable when the 6 ds of his idolatry are considered.

That he should take long walks accompanied by his wife is, however, far less extraordinary than many of his other outdoor feats. When at Cambridge he rides every day with one friend or the other, his companion riding by the side of him, but unattached. The long strips of greensward by the side of the Cambridgeshire roads are much prized by equestrians generally, and Mr. Fawcett in particular, but he makes up his mind for a long ride he reveals in the turf of Newmarket Heath; and it is a pleasant sight to see the Fawcett Professor of Political Economy in his blue spectacles, mounted on a good steady weight-carrier, taking a canter over the Two Middle Miles, and exulting in every draught of that bright, keen air for which Newmarket has no rival. Not only does Mr. Fawcett gallop across the flat, but during his annual sojourn at Cambridge, often follows the harriers on a clever hunter, and on these occasions, as on others, requires only the aid of a friend to ride near him. As he loves the road and the heath, so does he love the river. In open weather he may be seen pulling stroke-oar in the "Ancient Mariners" boat, several boy-crew fellows and tutors quite content to take the time—in the boat, at least—from the member for Hackney, a hard winner he indulges in another amusement of a more "swanlike" kind. He is a rapid and powerful skater, and loves a long skate over the frozen fens, or a longer spin on the Cam from Ely and back. Not only does he enjoy these vigorous exercises for the muscular exertion they require from him, but sympathizes largely with the open-air enjoyments of others. Perhaps no Fellow of Trinity Hall takes a keener interest in the college boat than he, and he rarely misses the match of the "rival Villes" on the Thames. On these grand occasions he is nearly always to be found on the Cambridge steamboat, interested heart and soul in the struggle. At Trinity Hall he is completely at home, wandering about the hall and its beautiful gardens without guidance, knowing every turn and nook and corner. It would seem as if an accident which might have soured a narrower nature into asceticism has only widened the sympathies of the political economist. He is ever alive to descriptions of natural scenery, and listens to the remarks of art critics on picture exhibitions with the keenest pleasure. He is especially anxious that Mrs. Fawcett should see all the art galleries, and waits anxiously for her well-judged remarks on their merits. Precluded from shooting, he confines his sporting exploits to an occasional ride with the harriers and to salmon fishing; and so eager a fisher is he that he has landed many a salmon within 12 hours of making an elaborate speech in the House. He will not wait till he can escape to Scotland, but dashes off in fits and starts to Ringwood, in quest of the famous salmon of Christ Church. "A 32-pounder within range of the House of Commons is too good a thing to be missed," he says, in his full, strong voice; "they are such prime fish. No little sons to annoy you; only fine fellows, in rare condition."

...Dr. Klein, of Cologne, has discovered on the moon's surface a great black crater on the Mare Vaporum, and a little to the southwest of the crater Hyginus. He says it is about three mi

LOVE OF COUNTRY AND LOVE OF POWER.

It has been a practice with the Ministerialists to accuse Sir John of a love of power. The people at large seem to think that his manner of entering office was the result so much of a love of power as of a love of country. And in this they are right. Speaking at Parkhill last week, Sir John said that he was ready and willing to act under any Liberal-Conservative who would adopt the national policy, and carry it into effect. And no one can doubt the sincerity of the statement. During the whole of his political career self, in a sordid sense, has not been an impelling cause with him. The ambition to lead a strong and noble party aright is a laudable one, and is to-day resulting in England in measures in relation to its foreign policy which are acknowledged with satisfaction by the nations at large. In Canada there is no such extended field of action. Statesmen are restricted chiefly to affairs special to ourselves. But though the scope of action is somewhat narrow, there is none the less need for the application of astute measures in order to protect Canadian industry. It is this to which Sir John stands on has committed himself and the Opposition. As he goes from place to place, opening to large assemblages everywhere, at points out what those measures will be, and they commend themselves to his listeners. In all parts of the country the public mind is awake to the necessity of protecting native industry by keeping the Canadian market for the Canadian people; and this arrogates agricultural produce as well as respects manufactured articles. If there were no charges of mismanagement against the Mackenzie Government; no record of broken promises; of inexcusable extravagance; of falsified anticipations, still the different attitude which the respective parties assume on this matter would alone be sufficient to decide the verdict against the Grits. With a determination that is dangerous as dogged, Mr. Mackenzie has made up his mind that neither he nor his party will do anything in the direction of fostering the industries that require to be sheltered from the too-heated competition which capital and opportunity conferred elsewhere create. It is as if a medical man, finding a patient in danger, refused to apply remedies on that had been found useful elsewhere, and had determined to let him "take his chance." He might do, as Mr. Cartwright does, wrap himself up in an abstraction, and leave everything to Providence, attempting to justify his indifference upon the plea that a government can do nothing for a people. This is a doctrine which is not believed in by those who object to see our markets swept from foreign centres. They recollect the moral conveyed in the fable of Æsop, in which the waggoner is represented as falling down and praying to Hercules to help his team out of the mud. But the Deity appearing in the clouds told him to leave off whimpering, to get up and put his shoulder to his wheel! So to-day, the Opposition policy is to help ourselves, for it is in that way that heaven helps us. The choice which the Canadian people have now to make is between a party that will do nothing—which apparently cares nothing—for Canadian industry, and that which has set its shoulder to the wheel to bring about a better state of things. It is true that there are against the men in office charges of so grave a kind that should lead to their dismissal from the confidence of the people. These form, certainly, additional reasons for that reversal which is impending. But the true charge is not one touching maladministration so much as that of non-administration. They refuse to do while there is so much needs the doing. They refuse to act in a direction in which action is desirable. The days before the verdict of election are closing in. The radical issue existing between those that are for action and those that prefer inaction is forcing itself upon public attention, and in a way that there is no mistaking. Sir John Macdonald declares he has no other wish than to see action taken in the direction he advocates, and that he is prepared to act with or under any of the recognized men of the Opposition in bringing about the needed changes. Can that be called a Love of Power?

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN ENGLAND.

One of the most interesting records of the year is the official report, lately issued, of births, deaths and marriages in England. Besides supplying a mass of data pertinent to the growth and well-being of the English nation, it discloses many curious facts which deserve special attention.

It appears that out of a million children born in England, more than a fourth part are removed by death before they reach the age of five years. In the next quinquennial term, however, there is an astonishing change, the number of deaths being to those of the earlier period only as one to seven. But the maximum of vitality occurs between the ages of ten and fifteen, after which the rate of mortality again increases, consumption and childbirth being mainly chargeable with the havoc among women, while the more dangerous occupations of men begin to entail evident deaths. The period from twenty to twenty-five seems to be the supreme harvest-time of consumption in England, that disease being then accountable for nearly one-half of the whole mortality. From this point to the age of forty-five the deaths from pulmonary troubles still predominate, although not in the same excessive ratio, diseases of other principal organs now beginning to be conspicuous. Up to this time, too, the quota of violent deaths is much the same as at the date when men first entered active life. It is worth noting that on an average every person born in England has just one chance in two of reaching the decade from forty-five to fifty-five, also out of a million births a moiety is found surviving at that period. Few persons, indeed, will expect to hear that set of a million not less than 420,000 attain the age of fifty-five, and that even twenty years later 160,000, or nearly one-sixth of a given generation, are still alive. In other words, out of every six human beings living in England one is seventy-five years old or upward. By the age of eighty-five, however, the number of survivors has diminished to about one in twenty-five, and according to this report only about 220 in a million gain the age of one hundred. Even this proportion, being more than one in fifty, is sufficiently astonishing. We need not say that these figures represent the average state of things all over England, the death rates in London being much less favorable to longevity, while those in Manchester and Liverpool are, it appears, still higher.

As regards the death rate of particular occupations, we note many paradoxical though doubtless authentic statements. The mortality among butchers, for instance, is greater than the average, and this is the more singular because at the earlier ages, from fifteen to twenty-five, the health of men engaged in this calling is better than the normal standard. These facts would seem to indicate that butchers are selected lives, which, nevertheless, in time succumb to the baneful influences of their work. Fishmongers are not more healthy than butchers, and bakers after middle life show a more than average mortality. The influence of occupation is also shown in the case of the blacksmith, who is much less healthy than wheelwrights, carpenters, and all those who work in wood. So, too, the death rate among chemists, druggists, and dry goods clerks is considerably above the ordinary level. Some classes of mining are particularly dangerous, and as a rule miners' lives wear out more rapidly than metal workers, both classes being far less healthy than those engaged in out-door labor. The extreme of mortality seems to be reached in the English potteries, the death rate after the age of thirty-five being nearly double the usual quota. The health of plumbers, painters and glaziers, who formerly suffered so notably from metallic poisons, is said to be much improved. But the most favorable change is enjoyed by the wool, silk, and cotton manufacturing population, who no longer suffer a more than normal mortality. English legislation seems to have done much to ameliorate the condition of workmen in factories and mills, and especially to secure a removal of deleterious dusts. An equal gain in point of health is not remarked among tailors and shoemakers, and those operatives in general who work up goods at home. We are not, of course, surprised to hear that farmers and agricultural laborers are beyond comparison the healthiest classes in the English community.

Among isolated facts, of peculiar interest cited in this report, we observe that the deaths ascribed directly to hunger in all England during the past twelvemonth were only seventy-seven, but these figures, we must not say, afford no sort of clue to the number of those whose constitutions were sapped and whose lives were shortened by privation. It appears that in Liverpool the Irish rate has the advantage over the birth rate, the population there being kept up and even augmented by continual immigration. Another curious point is the fact that English women are now married at earlier ages than were their mothers, about a quarter of the brides of England being such as were so under twenty-one. This circumstance may account, to some extent, for another fact, that while the birth rate has continued much the same, the number of children born in wedlock has increased. The mortality of unmarried men is above the average, and this is explained by the report on the ground that it is chiefly invalid men that do not marry. It is certain that of one hundred women of the same age eleven are spinsters. Finally, the report calls attention to the singular fact that the number of medical men in England has not increased in proportion to the population, but, on the contrary, has fallen off not less than twenty per cent. in twenty years. We may add, that the above deductions as to the health of different vocations, based on the statistics of the English people in the year 1877, are found to tally somewhat closely with a series of observations compiled in an Italian city just two centuries ago.

Industrial Art, for June, contains papers on the Nottingham (England) Fine Arts Museum, the Industrial Artists of Scotland, and the Condition of Art-Study in America. The illustrations are many and interesting. One of them is after a portrait in tapestry of Queen Victoria. The text starts with the following quotation from Lord Beaconsfield:—"I still adhere to an opinion formed early in life, that practically to recognize the influences of the fine arts on the character and conduct of the nation is the act of a wise Government."

The Prince of Wales has consented to become President of the Royal Colonial Institute, the aim of which is to cement the union of England's various dependencies with the mother country and each other. The act is considered important in London, as tending to associate the Prince personally with the colonies and their interests.

Strathroy, July 8.—From an early hour this morning this busy town wore an air of unusual activity. Despite the threatening aspect of the weather, farmers' waggons and buggies were observed coming in from all directions with full loads, and by 10 o'clock a. m. it was safe to say that a far larger crowd was in town than gathered at the recent meeting in honor of Hon. R. Cartwright. The town was very gay with banners, which were hanging from the windows of nearly all the stores, while several handsome flags floated from the roof tops. Six handsome arches were erected along the principal streets, bearing appropriate mottoes, such as "Welcome to Sir John A. Macdonald;" "Equal Rights and Prosperity;" "Ever Increasing Debate;" "No West Economy;" "Steel Rails;" "The Country Tired of the Salary Grabbers," "West Middlesex Supports Mr. Currie and the National Policy;" "Succour to Her Majesty's Opposition." One arch was built of empty flour barrels, and another arch erected by farmers, near the grove, where the speaking took place, bore the following mottoes:—"We welcome the Conservative Chief." "Steel Rails will Build Our Tenders," "Canada's Growth Harbor Contract."

By 12.30 p. m. the streets were almost impassable, and the cry was "Still they come!" The weather had at that time cleared up, and gave every prospect of a fine day. The Band of the 25th Battalion paraded the streets, and added much to the interest to the proceedings.

At 1 o'clock the train arrived from the west, bringing in a large crowd, so that already the number present exceeded the most sanguine anticipations of the committee.

At 1.30 p. m. a procession was formed, consisting of the Conservative Associations, by Mr. Carterwright. He thought the deliberate council of the country was entitled to the respect of the people, whether they agreed with its decisions or not. He would not say that the Government had been perfect in all its acts, but he thought that, on the whole, they had done well. He would not say that the Government had been perfect in all its acts, but he thought that, on the whole, they had done well. QUESTIONS!

What is the Cause of Dyspepsia?

Dyspepsia is caused by a want of assimilation of the food. It is found in the incompetence of the digestive principle of Pancreatine Acid, which is the cause of nearly every disease. Who is free from any malady or pain? Brunton's Digestive Fluid neutralizes this acid, removes the cause, and restores health and strength, and relieves the sufferer in a few hours. Call and get a pamphlet. Further? The Fluid is a specific for Diarrhœa, and is unequalled externally as a Blood Purifier, and is sold by all Druggists.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY,

Author of "'Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"I think of him often," the young man went on, gravely, "and I am always the better an I the stronger for such thought. Now, we can talk together how he would have acted, and I know I shall make a better master, a better friend, a better man altogether, for trying to do as he would have done. You are stronger, my love—you are stronger and better, are you not?" he broke off, raising her drooping face, and gazing into it with untold fondness; "and your life shall be easy and restful now, as it has never been. Lisa, Lisa"—in a whisper of happy emotion—"look up and meet my eyes just once, and say you love me. No, that is too much for me to ask; look up and meet my eyes just once, and tell me that I may stay with you for always."

She looked up slowly, her eyes most beautiful in their perfect trust, and she answered him in one word, soft, happy tones.

"Neil, I want you to stay with me always."

Then with what deep and passionate gratitude did he hold her to his heart, while his lips clave to hers in their first kiss.

CHAPTER XLVI.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

The fire and lamp were burning bright in Mrs. Chorrie's little parlor, and at the table sat Jet, making, in his drawing-book, a rather distorted copy of one of the illustrations in Colonel Stuart's daily pictorial work on Highshire—the one book which Dorcas prized, which she was among the first to buy (though such an expensive literary treasure she had never known before) and which she thought was even already beginning to look worn and damaged from the contact of the unsteady fingers which turned the picture leaves.

Jet was stooping very much, and his brows were knitted; but even with those advantages he could not, as it seemed, obtain an artistic effect, for his rather ensemble imitation of one of the Churchill views failed entirely in winning the approval of the little artist and critic himself—a sure sign that the boy had either real talent or a pure taste.

"Foreign, granny," he said, meditatively, as he gave his pencil a suck which might be professional, but certainly was not elegant—"perhaps I might make it more like, if you could just help me a bit now and then—like father used."

"But, you see, I don't know any thing about it, dear. You must get on as well as you can by yourself at present."

The old woman's eyes were soft and gentle behind her spectacles, as she sat close to the child, knitting him stockings, and watching the progress of his work with the gentlest interest, while the most pleasant and unconcealed ignorance of its defects. But that words made her thoughtful, as his inadvertently uttered wish to learn anything always did.

Bright she would have the way to school at once if any loneliness to herself, while she knew she could not afford to send him to such a one as she let her thoughts build upon for him? Or ought on which she had fixed her hope for him? For those quiet eyes behind the glasses could wander miles and miles away beyond the cottage, and mark them all now, and where she should leave him some day, day, that she might go and tell it all to his mother in heaven, and to some one else who had loved the child, and would remember him even there.

But at present it seemed that the start for him was unattainable. He ought to be at school, and at a good school; yet she could not afford it for the money Mr. Dymocke had left him was not to be touched until he came of age. Nor could she either bear to part with him or to separate him from Jack Esdaile, who was not going to any public school until his father's return from abroad, and who, as Dorcas full well knew, was the best friend that her boy could have.

It was just as she was thinking of him, that Jack himself entered the room, with his bright, familiar, yet always courteous, greeting:

"Mrs. Cheere," he cried, letting his momentary subdued excitement break out again, "please I'm come to fetch Jet and Jet to The Anchorage! Who do you think came to-day? You, you rascal," to Jet—"you own father, you know, Jet, who's been away for years. Yes, he's come, Jet. And the two boys looked at each other, as if to wait for you, and not take any refusal. Please to say, Mrs. Cheere. Make you say, among the first to buy (though such an expensive literary treasure she had never known before) which she was even already beginning to look worn and damaged from the contact of the unsteady fingers which turned the picture leaves.

BEACONSFIELD'S COUP!

State of Public Opinion Thereon in Europe.

TRIUMPH OF BRITISH DIPLOMACY

The English Liberals Dazed and Paralyzed.

Comments of the Foreign Press.

The Congress Nearly Over.

A Treaty of Peace to be Signed on Saturday.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, July 10.—Beaconsfield's coup has thrown into the shade all other topics, but it is yet too soon to judge what direction the current of public opinion here and on the Continent will take.

The Times' Berlin correspondent says when the Anglo-Turkish convention was first announced, then English diplomacy enjoyed a prestige such as it had not enjoyed for a long time, but later some dissenting voices were heard. The coup, said she, undoubtedly was a splendid one, but questioned whether in the long run it will redound to the honor and interest of England. Others still speak of the event with unmingled admiration.

The Post Paris correspondent says:—We cannot but hail with sincere satisfaction this victory, won without bloodshed, by the English policy over the Eastern question, for the existence of Turkey, so frail when she looked for aid to Europe, with only the energetic protection of England, be able to be maintained for long years. The majority of the Vienna papers speak in the same friendly tone.

The Times Paris correspondence reproduces public opinion there as about equally divided, while the press is unanimous and very conflicting. Some critics say France ought to be satisfied, as it is now shown that England has no designs on Egypt, while others declare that England virtually has possession of Egypt in asserting Cyprus.

The Manchester Guardian's London correspondent says, officially, the Liberals will not find much difficulty in the policy of the Government, but will criticize it, and may even propose a resolution, but in no case will the effect will be to throw the responsibility entirely on the Government, to find fault with them for the surprise, and to bring into prominence the limitless obligations in which the country is likely to be involved. The Conservative party regard it as a necessary result of the late campaign, but many of them look upon it as a necessary evil. As a party, they feel heavily the responsibility cast upon them.

The same correspondent says the system upon which Asia Minor is to be administered will be generally that based upon the Indian practice of residents or agents. The representatives of the English Government will be placed in most of the Pashalics for the purpose of advising the Turkish officials in their administration, but will have no administrative powers. The Ambassador at Constantinople will act upon the information they supply, and the Sultan's ministers would not be deemed requisite for the good Government of the country, will be maintained by the Porte. In order that the demands of the English Ambassador may receive the needful support, it is said there will be a large garrison permanently fixed in Cyprus. But for the objection of France, the British occupation of Constantinople will act upon the information they supply, and the Sultan's ministers would not be deemed requisite for the good Government of the country, will be maintained by the Porte. In order that the demands of the English Ambassador may receive the needful support, it is said there will be a large garrison permanently fixed in Cyprus. But for the objection of France, the British occupation would have been, not in Cyprus, but in one or more towns on the mainland. I have reason for saying that the Anglo-Turkish Convention was considerably modified, out of deference to the views of the French Government, and that over and above the convention there is an arrangement by which the interests of France in Syria are guarded from interference.

The Congress sat four hours to-day. It ratified the Committee's arrangements in regard to Dalmatia, and as to the disposal of several questions of detail.

The material portion of the work of the Congress being concluded, the reading of the text of peace was commenced. A great portion of it was read and agreed to. The Anglo-Turkish convention was not mentioned. Beaconsfield was absent, suffering from sore throat.

The Provincial Correspondence says all important questions connected with the treaty of San Stefano are now adjusted. A commission for the settlement of the frontiers has also arrived, at a satisfactory result.

A treaty of peace will be signed on Saturday. The Anglo-Russian convention will not delay the conclusion of the Congress, as it does not affect the treaty of San Stefano.

The Congress read fifty articles of the treaty of peace.

The Congress resolved, on Wednesday, that the respective Powers should charge their Ambassadors and Consuls to watch over the execution of the treaty in which they are interested.

Berlin, July 10.—It is uncertain whether the subject of the Anglo-Turkish Convention will be brought before the Congress, but its discussion by the latter is not considered improbable. Should this be the case, it is believed the question will not raise material difficulties in Congress. It is thought in fact that the discussion of the treaty will be of great advantage in promoting an understanding among the powers.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Mark Lane Express Weekly Review.

London, July 9.—The Mark Lane Express says the agricultural reports, although somewhat variable, generally speaking, are favorable as to the wheat field. The growth of straw is everywhere abundant. The plant is now strong, and the season so far advanced that the chances of damage from future untoward weather is greatly diminished unless the summer proves exceptionally disastrous. The yield of rather over 11,000,000 quarters may be looked for as the product of the home crop. Barley has improved slightly in some districts, but the crop is too much injured to yield anything but badly. Beans and peas are still fairly promising. In other respects the agricultural situation is unchanged. Small supplies and less demand have been the characteristic features of trade for English wheat during the week at Mark Lane and in the country, but no further decline has taken place. With moderate arrivals at ports, all the floating cargo trade for wheat has been fairly steady, with some inquiry for the United Kingdom and the continent, but prices closed 6d. per quarter lower. Maize is unchanged. Barley slightly declined.

Sentenced to Death for Shooting at Emperor William.

Berlin, July 10.—Hoedel, charged with attempting the life of the Emperor, was sentenced to death to-day. He pleaded not guilty, and asserted that his intention was suicide. There were 30 witnesses against him.

Berlin, July 10.—Hoedel was sentenced to be beheaded. His demeanor was insolent and defiant. It is thought the sentence will be carried into effect.

GERMANY

RETIREMENT OF PROF. VIRCHOW.

Berlin, July 9.—Prof. Virchow has decided to retire from politics. He was prominent in the Prussian Diet as an opponent of the centralization and military system.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.

Subtlety of the Anglo-Turkish Policy.

More Bulgarian Horrors.

This Time Russians are the Perpetrators.

Villages Burned, Men Burned Alive, and Women Violated.

A British Official Report.

London, July 10.—A correspondent at Paris telegraphs that intelligence has been received from Constantinople that the withdrawal of the Russians from San Stefano is being negotiated, and that they will leave when the Turks quit the heights commanding Varna and Shumla.

A dispatch from Pera announces it was decided at a council of the Turkish Cabinet on Saturday that Turkey should not yield to the demands of Greece.

London, July 10.—The Daily Telegraph believes the British flag was hoisted at Cyprus on Monday by Lord John Hay, Commander of the Channel squadron, who had sealed orders to that effect to be opened upon the receipt of a telegraphic dispatch.

London, July 10.—The Times Berlin says the date for the publication of the Anglo-Turkish treaty is supposed to have been selected with a view to avoid utterer complications. If the Berlin peace is signed by Russia with the knowledge of the existence of an Anglo-Turkish treaty, the latter cannot hereafter be alleged by Russia as a reason for impugning the validity of the Berlin instrument, whereas, should Russia now decline to adhere to the Berlin treaty, unless modified to suit the position which supervened since the publication of the Anglo-Turkish treaty, she must prepare for the troubles she wished to avoid when going to Berlin.

It is understood that the French Government is going to ask, or already has asked Russia whether she does not prefer adhering the idea of Asiatic annexation rather than see the Cyprus treaty carried into effect. Should the question be negatived, France, it is thought, will adopt a more active policy.

A Constantinople despatch says Mr. Fawcett returned from Lagos, and reports intense suffering among the populations south of the Rhodope Mountains. He enumerates the horrors perpetrated by the Bulgarians and Cossacks, and sometimes by regular Russian soldiers, whose design seems the extermination or utter dispersion of the Musselmans and Christians favorable to them. In the Demotika district fifty-three villages were plundered and burnt by Russian and Bulgarian troops. Within the last two months 25 villages were equally laid waste, and burnt, in the district of Haskia, and in the Philippopolis district 17 villages were burnt. In numerous villages there has been a wanton destruction, with deeds of unheard of barbarity. Cases of men and women deliberately burnt alive have been frequent, as well as the violation of very young girls. Nothing more horrible than the particulars of this report can be imagined. Its veracity rests on the official authority of one of the most respected of Her Majesty's servants, and of the men employed by him. Upon his conviction and their perfect trustworthiness Mr. Fawcett intends to lay his report before the English, Austrian and French Ambassadors, with a view to sending a Commission of Enquiry to the spot to endeavor to put an end to the excesses.

The North German Gazette declares the occupation of Cyprus cannot fail to be greeted with approval in the interests of civilization and progress. It believes Germany had been previously informed of the arrangement, without, however, being asked to pass an opinion thereon.

Lavaletta, Malta, July 10.—The transport Canari has sailed for Cyprus with the commissariat staff and Indian sappers to prepare for the reception of the troops. The 75th Madras regiment is under orders to embark with the European troops.

RUSSIA

THE MILITARY SYSTEM CONDEMNED.

St. Petersburg, July 10.—A memorandum by Prince Peter, of Oldenburg, condemns the universal military service as the cause of Socialism and general discontent.

Asiatic Cholera.

Three Deaths in Norwich, Conn.

New York, July 10.—The Herald's Norwich, Conn., special reports an outbreak of Asiatic cholera. Clara Draper died on Monday night; her body turned instantly black, and the stench very soon became highly offensive. Two other deaths are reported.

Norwich, Conn., July 10.—The reports of Asiatic cholera's arose here from a couple of ordinary cases of cholera infantum and ch dera morbus.

The Fishery Award.

Washington, July 10.—It is the opinion of high officials that instructions concerning the fishery award will shortly be transmitted to Minister Welsh, who will at once lay the subject before the British Government. The opinion prevails that if England holds the decision valid, the President will order the payment of the award.

American Telegrams.

New York, July 10.—At the Juvenile Asylum yesterday, a boy named Crowley was accidentally killed by a blow from a bat, which flew from the hands of a comrade during the ball game.

Christian Schafer took Paris green, in presence of his wife and family, yesterday, because his wife had obtained a warrant for his arrest for abandonment. His wife left him to die, and the neighbors found him too late to be of assistance.

A Snide Lord Ripped Up.

New York, July 10.—Wilfred Montressor, the pretended Lord Ogilvy, proves to be an imposter. The Earl of Airlie declares that his son is in India. Montressor will be arrested for forging Ogilvy's name.

Peremptory Trade Sale of Woollens.

New York, July 10.—A peremptory trade sale of 10,000 packages of flannels, and 5,000 cases of blankets, was commenced this morning by the order of Fankler, Page & Co.

Bush Fires in Quebec.

Drummondville, Que., July 10.—Bush fires are raging here and in the vicinity. Two saw-mills and several houses were burnt. Loss not known.

A Captured Burglar's Desperation.

Chatham Village, N. Y., July 10.—Two of the Troy burglars were being taken to Albany, and when one was freed to take off his coat, he drew a revolver and commenced firing. Officer Quinn received two balls one in the hand and one in the lower part of the abdomen. The passengers fled. The prisoners were finally bound by those in charge, after a desperate struggle.

ORANGE AND GREEN.

Precautions Against the Expected Troubles in Montreal.

THE MILITARY IN READINESS.

Two Thousand Special Constables to be Sworn.

Large Employers and the Clergy Counselling Peace.

The City Filled With Rough Strangers Ready for Plunder.

Circular from Grand Master White, of East Ontario.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press.

Montreal, July 10.—Deputations of citizens waited upon the Mayor this morning, and presented him with resolutions of confidence, passed at the meeting on Champ de Mars and in St. Patrick's Hall last evening. The Mayor briefly acknowledged the compliment paid him by his fellow citizens, and then entered into conversation with the gentlemen present as to his plans for keeping the peace. In addition to the A and B Batteries for active service in the streets, and the local militia in reserve, he intended to swear in 2,000 special constables, to be divided equally among Protestants and Catholics. He thought this would be sufficient force to restrain the lawless. Until the arrival of Lieut.-Gen. Smyth the disposition of the troops will not be known.

The Chief of Police proposes, with the sanction of the Police Committee, to employ the whole of the force at his command upon the 12th in keeping the streets clear of crowds or gatherings of people, breaking up and dispersing them wherever they are found in certain districts. This will be carrying the intention of the proclamation of Mayor Beaudry, and will no doubt have a salutory effect in repressing the organization of trouble. There are many rumors floating about as to the mischief that is threatened on the 12th. It is said the quarrymen from St. Jean Baptiste, and the laborers from St. Henri and other villages around the city, intend joining forces with the city roughs, and setting up a barricade on Victoria Square to impede the passage of the procession.

It is also asserted a plot exists for barricading down the Orange Hall and Presbyterian Church, where it is contemplated to hold a commemorative service.

Another rumor, and one much more pleasant to record, is that the Catholic clergy and influential Irish citizens are about to join in issuing a proclamation enjoining upon the co-religionists not to interfere with the Orange procession, but to remain peacefully at home or at work during the day. A counsel of this kind would be invaluable, and would go a long way in calming the excitement now existing. The police have received information that a large number of thieves and rogues of every description are in town, ready to take advantage of every opportunity.

Many large manufacturers have posted up notices on their doors of business not to-day. Firing employes that if any of them are absent without leave on Friday they will be instantly discharged.

Mr. Dubuil, Clerk of the Peace, swore in about 30 men employed at the Grand Trunk this evening as special constables. The Police Magistrate and Recorder have received numerous applications from men, who state they are employed by large firms, to be sworn in as special constables for the protection of their employers' property. About 50 able - bodied men made application this evening to be sworn in for the protection of the banks, but he referred them to the Recorder. His Honor refused to swear them before he consulted the Police Committee, as he had no guarantee that the man had been engaged by any firms. Numbers of people applied to-day to the Police Magistrates, under the Blake Bill, to be allowed to carry arms, but from an omission on the part of the Government to appoint Commissioners to grant such licenses these applications could not be granted.

The hospital authorities have made ample provision for treating any patients that may be brought there. A ward has been speedily set apart for accidents on that day.

The employes of the Grand Trunk Railway at the sheds near the depot were sworn in as special constables for the protection of the Company's property.

When Mr. John Ogilvie, of the large milling firm of A. W. Ogilvie & Co., went to his mills at the St. Gabriel Locks this forenoon, he found some of his employes engaged in a party dispute. He at once summoned all hands and informed them that if any were absent on the 12th they would be discharged.

Mr. M. C. Mullarky, this a. m. notified the employes of his large boot and shoe manufactury, that every employe, Protestant and Catholic, must be at his post on the 12th as usual.

All the city corps have been ordered under arms at 7.30 a. m. on Friday, cannon being put up on the lacrosse grounds to-day.

The guards on all the armories were doubled to-night.

Considering that the bill to abolish partypossessions has yet to be read a third time and passed by the Legislative Council, and sanctioned by the Lieut.-Governor, there is not the slightest possibility of it becoming law before the 12th.

The 6th and 9th Battalions have received orders to be in readiness in case their services are required to-morrow, and the 4th company of the 9th, under Capt. Garneau, is now under arms and on guard at the Parliament House. It was reported by an evening paper that the Parliament House would probably be burned up if the bill was not adopted. This is not credited, though in view of the excitement the Premier moved the adjournment of the House at 5.50.

Several rumors are current with reference to the probability of pillaging to-morrow by laborers out of work.

A CARD FROM THE GRAND MASTER OF ONTARIO EAST.

Belleville, Ont., July 10.—Mr. John White, M. P., Grand Master of Ontario East, has issued the following address to the Orangemen under his jurisdiction:—

"To the Orangemen of Western Ontario—

"DEAR BRETHREN.—As there is now every prospect of our brethren in Montreal being afforded sufficient military protection to enable them to assert their right to march in procession through the streets of Montreal to attend divine worship on the coming 12th of July, I would strongly advise you to refrain from visiting that city on that day.

"I am yours fraternally,
(signed) "JOHN WHITE.
"Grand Master of Ontario East."

THE LATEST.

The Mayor has issued a proclamation that will appear in the morning, protesting against a large body of military being brought in from outside at great expense to the city, and advising all peaceable people to stay at home on the 12th and not interfere with the procession. The Irish Catholic societies have received legal advice this evening from four of the most eminent lawyers of the city, to the effect that the Orange body was illegal and that the Mayor has the power to stop the procession. The executive officers of those societies are in session, considering what action should be taken on this advice, and a large crowd outside awaits the result. The Mayor has given assurance that he will not interfere with the procession. The A Battery, from Kingston, arrived to-night, and is encamped on the Lacrosse grounds, Sherbrook street. Sir Selby Smyth is also here.

Quebec, July 10.—B Battery, under command of Col. Strange, left this evening by boat for Montreal. They were hissed and "bah's" at on embarking, and a slight rush was made on them by the crowd at the boat, when they were ordered to load with ball cartridge. A man named Blackburn, who was leaving for Montreal, was dragged off the boat by some of the crowd, and badly beaten.

A mass meeting of about 2,000 Roman Catholics was held this evening on Durham Terrace, the greater part being composed of Irishmen, who marched up town in procession firing pistols, and headed by the Diamond Harbor drum and fife band. T. J. Mooney was the principal speaker, his remarks being mild and well received. A series of resolutions were adopted, endorsing the action taken by Mayor Beaubry in Montreal, and naming a deputation to confer with the Government with reference to the Bill to prohibit party processions.

The meeting, though noisy, was orderly, and after parading the streets, those taking part in it returned to their homes.

The deputation then interviewed Mr. Joly at his residence, and urged the views of the meeting upon him. He informed them that the Bill would be read a third time to-morrow. They then withdrew, and will report to the D.C. U. to-morrow morning.

TORONTO

PROVINCIAL MISSIONS.

TORONTO, July 10.—Rev. Dr. Reid, Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, has received $5,000 under the will of the late Mr. John McLean, apportioned as follows:—Home missions, $2,000; foreign missions, $1,000; widows' and orphans' fund, $1,000, and aged and infirm ministers' fund, $1,000.

A MINSTREL IN TROUBLE.

George Wilson, alias F. C. Howard, who calls himself a minstrel, was arrested this evening for having in his possession a quantity of jewellery and other articles which he is believed to have come by in a dishonest manner.

CHILD DROWNED.

G. Howie Munroe, aged 5 years and 6 months, fell off the Grand Trunk wharf, near the Don, on which he was playing, this evening, and was drowned.

FALL OF A STEEPLE—TWO MEN SERIOUSLY INJURED.

The steeple of the old St. Andrew's Church, which is being pulled down to make way for a new structure for a different denomination, fell unexpectedly, this afternoon, and killed a horse outright and seriously injured two workmen named Daniel Meany and John Stapley. The former was knocked senseless and badly bruised by the falling debris, while the latter, who was carried down with the steeple, which fell 50 feet, had his right arm smashed, his jaw badly cut, and was otherwise so seriously injured as to endanger his life.

PROBABLE MANSLAUGHTER.

Mr. Stewart, of the firm of Pearcy & Stewart, who was assaulted last night by Alfred J. Bezley at the scene of the fatal accident to Neil McTaggart in Yorkville, lies in a critical condition, and is believed to be beyond recovery. Bezley, who it appears was endeavoring to keep the crowd back, struck Mr. Stewart with a heavy piece of wrantling on the side of the head, knocking him insensible and causing blood to stream copiously from the ear. Bezley alleges that Stewart refused to keep out of the way and struck him, and that he hit back in self-defence. Bezley is under arrest. So far Mr. Stewart has been unable to make any deposition.

THE YORKVILLE ACCIDENT.

The jury at the inquest on the body of Neil McTaggart, who was killed last night by the falling in of the White Bridge at Yorkville, this evening returned a verdict to the effect that deceased followed out the instructions as to driving at a walking pace over the bridge, by the collapse of which he met his death, and censuring the Yorkville Council for gross negligence in allowing the structure to exist in its rotten state.

Mr. M. Jarvis has intimated his intention of proceeding against the village corporation to recover damages on behalf of the widow of deceased, and to recover the cost of the bank, which belonged to one Jordan.

MONTREAL AFFAIRS.

Montreal, July 10.—An excursion party of 150 arrived by steamer to-day from Detroit.

Twenty-two candidates are under examination to-day for leave to study law here.

Several American journals have special correspondents here to report proceedings on the 12th.

A writ of attachment has been issued against Robitaille & Lafortune, grocers.

A young man named St. Laurent was drowned in the river.

E. H. Goff to-day instituted an action for $50,000 damages against the Canada Agricultural Insurance Company, for false arrest and imprisonment, together with defamation of character, arising out of the late proceedings of the Company against him. Other actions of both criminal and civil nature are to follow.

Jas. Wilson, from New York, who attempted suicide by shooting himself, at the Express Hotel, this morning, was admitted to the general hospital shortly after. The physicians entertain little hopes of his ultimate recovery.

The farmers and market gardeners complain of the want of rain for their growing crops. The country is quite parched up by the long spell of hot, dry weather, and if abundant showers do not soon set in the results will be deplorable.

George Lessard, 98 years of age, who was a soldier under Napoleon I., was married here yesterday to a lady 50 years of age. The bridegroom says his father lived to be 122, and his grand father 180.

NOVA SCOTIAN AFFAIRS.

Halifax, N.S., July 10.—Rev. Dr. Jenkins, of Montreal, is in town.

Daniel Fraser's house, at New Glasgow, was burned yesterday.

The Pictou mines last week shipped 2,644 tons of coal, making the total for the season so far 33,306 tons.

Business continues quiet. Flour is still declining; superior extra choice, $6 to $6.10; superior extra, $5.60 to $5.80; extra superfine, $5.30 to $5.45; spring extra, $5 to $5.20; strong bakers', $5.20 to $5.30; superfine, $4.25 to $4.75; extra State, $5 to $5.25.

Heavy Storm at Brockville.

GREAT DAMAGE TO PROPERTY.

Brockville, July 10.—At 10.30 a violent wind and rain storm from the northwest swept over our town, breaking windows, blowing down trees, surrouding boat houses, tearing cavers off steam yachts, knocking down Dominion telegraph poles, twisting the top of Church steeples, and must have done great damage to the rye headed out.

OTTAWA

SEN. SMYTH LEFT FOR MONTREAL.

Ottawa, July 10.—Lieut.-General Sir Edward Selby Smyth, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, left this morning for Montreal.

RESIGNATION OF MR. FRECHETTE, M. P.

Le Federal, a new French paper published in this city, contains a letter from Mr. F. H. Frechette, M. P., to his constituents, in which he states he has sent his resignation to the speaker, as their representative in the House of Commons.

PRINCETON.

BARN AND OUTBUILDINGS BURNED BY INCENDIARISM—LOSS, $9,000.

Princeton, Ont., July 10.—About six o'clock this morning lightning struck a barn owned by A. Clutrich, 7th concession of Blenheim. The barn and outbuildings were burned. The barn was a new one, and was insured only yesterday. Loss, about $9,000, nearly covered by insurance.

LATEST FROM ST. THOMAS.

Special from our own Correspondent.

St. Thomas, July 10.—A young man of the name of Charles Moore, while attempting to get on board the train while in motion, slipped and fell across the rails, when he was terribly injured by the engine in case of the train passing over both legs. The platform was crowded at the time, a good many ladies being present, and a scene of great excitement immediately ensued. As quickly as possible the unfortunate youth was picked up and placed on the platform, and Drs. Kains and McKay, of St. Thomas, who happened to be present, were speedily in attendance, and his injuries attended to as well as possible under the circumstances, and preparations made for his removal to his parents' residence on Talbot street. A number of medical gentlemen, including Dr. McLarty and others, were speedily summoned, and, on examination, the following operations were found to be necessary, namely: the amputation of the right leg, immediately below the knee, and of the left leg, about four inches above the ankle. These were immediately performed and the wounds dressed, the unfortunate youth being quite unconscious during the time, and from enquiries made this day, he is, as far as can be at present ascertained, progressing favorably. The accident caused quite an excitement in town on the becoming known, as the unfortunate lad was so well-known and a general favorite with all.

The case of enquiring into the discrepancy in the accounts of the late Treasurer of the Township of Dunwich, was concluded last night, but no decision has, as yet, been rendered.

The races held this day in the Driving Park were considering the short notice given, and the fact that they were, in a measure, entirely local) well attended, about 500 persons being present. The weather was very favorable, and the morning rain had rendered the track in good going order.

The following is the result of the day's sport

The London Free Press

A LONDON MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Dispatches, is issued every morning. It is the only paper supplying the earliest information published west of Toronto, and circulates the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in its columns twelve hours ahead of the contemporary evening press. Its circulation and influence are constantly advancing. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, outstripping other journals in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 2 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly, $1.50 in advance; delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or POSTED FREE OF CHARGE to distant places at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, DOMESTIC Wanted; Articles Lost or Found; Houses to Let or Sold, &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for twenty-five words, each additional portion. Births, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted at NONE NONPARIEL (agate) measurement) per line (nonpareil measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each continuance. Special contracts are made for advertisements of a permanent character, by the year, the business of which can be had on application at the business office.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issue of its local contemporaries.

The Evening Free Press

NAMES VERSUS REALITIES.

Mr. Gladstone has done for the Reform party in England pretty much the same service that Mr. Mackenzie and his abettors have done for the so-called "Reform" party of Canada. That is, he has brought it into derision and contempt, by consulting individual opinions rather than pursuing national interests. In either case it has taken but a very short time to reduce a strong and successful party to the depths of degradation. While Mr. Gladstone and his followers have been screaming at the top of their voices that they alone should be considered as the true champions of the people's welfare, the true elevators of morality, Lord Beaconsfield has been strengthening the interests of the Empire in a manner which was the envy of statesmen all the world. Without having fired a shot, he has not only checked the advance of Russia, and rendered nugatory, to a great extent, the results of her recent military successes, but has assumed a protectorate over Turkey, which must add immensely to the strength and prestige of England. Russia, on the other hand, after a war that has strained her resources and internal organization to the utmost, that has involved the loss of $600,000,000 and 300,000 lives, finds her conquests narrowed down to the thin strip of Roumanian Bessarabia and two barren strongholds in Armenia. By the astute policy of Lord Beaconsfield, England has been able to snatch a real victory for herself, leaving to Russia broken bones and empty dollars. If the "reform" policy of Mr. Gladstone had been pursued, the Turk would have been driven "bag and baggage" out of Europe, and the Mussulman population in India, as elsewhere, forever alienated from British rule. And, no doubt, many have been content to sustain such a policy because it was called "reform," and having believed themselves to be reformers all their lives have been unconsciously led into the acceptance of a line of action which, if it had been carried out, would have proved most disastrous to English interests. And it is pretty much the same in Canada. Because Mr. Mackenzie dubs himself a "Reformer," he asks all people to support him, as his name to assist him, to complete his cycle of blunders, to aid him in letting Canadian interests go still more completely to the wall. But such people are beginning to understand that the mere attachment to a name — time - honored though it may be — is but a poor substitute for a lack of statesmanship. Even Mr. Blake could not contain the disgust he felt in having been chained to "a reform party that had nothing to reform." In other words, he could not conceive of the nullity of an organization that had absolutely no principle in its platform. Now, Sir John and the Opposition do not propose any such course to themselves or the country. They have set forth a definite policy, which is a radical reform in the fiscal administration of Canada. They are to-day the part- of advance, the party that presents something tangible, useful and hopeful for the acceptance of the people, for the good of the country. And it will be found impossible for the Grits to blind the eyes of the public to the merits of the occasion. The Mackenzie faction clambered into power principally by reason of the continued iteration of its superiority in talent, in morality and in purpose. Experience has shown that in talent it is weak, in morality it is defective, and that in purpose it is infirm. I aleed, to-day, if it has any purpose at all, it has relation to hanging on to office rather than of taking a comprehensive survey of national affairs, with a view to the amendment of them. All this is becoming plain to the people, and the plainer it becomes the more the conviction deepens that it is time to cast aside more names in order to grasp realities.

Medical men have known for a long time that the best remedies for consumption were plenty o' pure air, sunshine, and exercise, and food that contained much carbon. Cod-liver oil has been a favorite remedy, and has done good in prolonging the lives of consumptives, and putting off the approach of the grim monster. The virtues of other remedies are in proportion to the amount of carbon they can infuse into the system to feed the consuming flame that wastes the body. The theory is, that the internal fever burns up the carbon in the blood faster than the food eaten can replace it. The disease then preys on the fatty substances of the body, and destroys the lungs, and eventually the life. In short, there is not oil enough in the lamp, for the wick, and the latter is burnt and the light goes out. Dr. D'Unger, of Minneapolis, makes public a prescription which he declares has produced excellent effects, to his personal knowledge. This is his prescription :—

One half pound finely cut-up beefsteak (fresh)
One drachm powdered charcoal
Four ounces pulverized sugar.
Four ounces rye whiskey
One pint boiling water.

Mix all together, let it stand in a cool place over night, and give from one to two teaspoonfuls, liquid and meat, before each meal.

I have used this preparation very frequently, and have never found it to act otherwise than favorably. Some patients will vomit at first, until the stomach becomes used to it, and then gradually increased.

This remedy has at least the merit of simplicity. Any one can try it. If it does no good it can do no harm.

THE QUESTION OF FREE SPEECH.

A case involving something more than a usual amount of interest has just been disposed of, temporarily, before the Queen's Bench, Toronto. It appeared that some time since a Mr. Pringle engaged the Town Hall, Napanee, for the purpose of a lecture, to be delivered there by Mr. Underwood, of Toronto. Subsequently the town authorities refused to permit the use of the Hall by Mr. Underwood, upon the ground that he called in question the truths of Christianity. Mr. Pringle was then obliged to hire another hall, and pay a very large sum for it. He then sued the town of Napanee for breach of contract to recover the difference between the price he was to have paid to them for their hall and that which he was obliged to pay for another when the use of it was refused. The action came on before Chief Justice Moss, in the County Court, when a verdict for the amount claimed was returned. Subsequently a rule nisi was obtained to set aside the verdict, and upon the case being argued before the Queen's Bench, Hime, Armour and Armour) the former verdict was set aside. The ground taken by the original defendants (Napanee) was, that the contract was an illegal one from the first, inasmuch as the lectere was for the purpose of bringing Christianity into disrepute, and to declare that the Bible was not inspired. The learned Chief Justice in giving judgment summed up the English and American decisions on the subject, and came to the conclusion that Christianity was part of the common law of England, and nesuch was made a part of the law of thiscountry in 1792. He held that the tendency of a lecture like the one in question was against the interests of Christianity, and as such illegal. The rule nisi was accordingly discharged. Hence it follows that any lecture which may call in question the inspiration of the Bible, or any part of it, or any of the tenets of Christianity, is in itself illegal. Yet it is well known that the literature of the day deals very freely with these topics, and that even in the pulpit statements are frequently made casting doubt upon the authenticity of certain passages and chapters in the Bible. But if Mr. Underwood may not give his views on "inspiration" on a platform, how is it that so much of the literature of the day is advertised and publicly sold which does precisely the same thing for which the lecturer has been censured? There are the Fortnightly, the International, the Nineteenth Century, the North American Review, Belgravia Monthly, all of which publish articles from time to time, that in the stores every trenchant attacks upon the "inspiration" of the Old Testament especially. So far as the case heard has reached us, it contains no extracts from the lecture to show that it was any more objectionable in an orthodox sense than any of the magazine articles referred to. If it is to be decided that no one is to call "inspiration" in question, then some one must first decide what is to be understood by that term, and to determine once for all what is and what is not "inspired." There are so many differences and divergences that what is orthodox according to one section of the Church is very unorthodox according to another section of it. That which one portion holds to be most sacred other portions denounce as idolatrous. Neither Mr. Underwood nor any other lecturer could present a wider aspect of divergency than that. But the question comes, in this just the time, just the age, when man's mouths should be closed by such authority in order to prevent public discussion upon questions which are freely commanted upon in the current literature of the day? If the answer is that no discussion on such matters is allowable; that reason must be imprisoned and research restrained, then it must come to this, that a censorship in the cause of orthodoxy should be established, and no literary matter permitted to be published or sold which should in any way contradict or call in question a certain standard of faith—yet to be agreed upon. But, as of old, "If these things be not of God they will come to naught." Why, then, should the civil magistrate and the courts of law be called upon to interfere?

The annual report of the Committee of Council on Education in England and Wales for 1877-8, recently presented to parliament, shows that a great advance has been made during the past few years in furnishing accommodation for school children. The schools visited by the inspectors for the purpose of annual grants, which provided in 1869 for 1,765,314 scholars, or for 8.34 per cent. of the population, were in 1877 sufficient for 3,653,418 scholars, or 14.88 per cent. of the estimated population. An additional provision of room in aided schools for 1,887,474 children has thus been made in eight years, so that accommodation in efficient schools is increasing in a much more rapid ratio than the population of the country. In the last year the accommodation was increased by 193,000, school places, the scholars on the registers by 211,199, those present at inspection by 220,987, and the average attendance by 166,110, while the number of children individually examined has increased by 192,506. The number of names at present on the register is 3,154,973, and of these 2,633,198 were present on the day of the inspector's visit to their respective schools, while 2,150,683 were, on an average, to daily attendance throughout the year. It is estimated that the number of children in England and Wales for whom elementary schools are required is at least four and a half millions. The number on the registry is about seventy per cent. of this, and the average attendance is not quite fifty per cent. Including night schools, however, which return an average attendance of 58,000, the average attendance has increased from 1,225,764 in 1870 to 2,208,462 in 1878—an increase of about eighty per cent. The same rate of progress within the next eight years as has been exhibited during the past eight will leave little more to be desired in respects the accommodations of elementary schools and attendance thereat.

As important return has just been issued by the Metropolitan Board of Works of London (England) showing the "number of inhabited houses, population and ratable annual value of the parishes and districts comprised within the metropolitan area in the years 1856 and 1876, or as near those dates as can be accurately stated." According to this return it appears that the total ratable annual value has more than doubled itself within the 20 years. In 1856 the amount was £11,383,663, and in 1876 it was £23,111,312. The total number of inhabited houses has increased from 306,086 in 1851 to 419,642 in 1871, but in this column a decrease is shown in respect of the city of London. The number of inhabited houses in the city of London in 1851 was 14,483, but in 1871 there was only 9,235. In 1851 the population of the metropolis was 2,362,236, and in 1871 it had increased to 3,266,987.

Queen Victoria, the Princess Beatrice, and the Duchess of Roxburgh come in for an awful wigging from the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland, in its last annual report. The Royal party was in the Highlands last September, and desired on a Sunday to visit Marco Island, in Loch Maree. "The worthy innkeeper at Aucharacen" declined to let them have a boat, nor would he lend a horse to convey letters to her Majesty on the Sabbath; furthermore, the boatmen who were "residenters" declined to row her over the ferry, but an opposition innkeeper, with an eye to business, manned a barge with his waiters and conveyed the Queen to the island, to the deep grief of the Sabbath Alliance. The Prince of Wales is also hauled over the coals for having visited Hamilton Palace.

CANADIAN HUSSARS.

The Montreal Herald says that is questionable now whether the Royal Canadian Hussars will be raised, although Colonel Turnbull, of the Quebec Cavalry, was given full power by the War Office to raise a regiment in the Dominion for service in Europe, if the occasion should require. The regiment was to have consisted of eight troops of 75 men per troop—a troop to be raised in each Military District by officers selected from the present Militia Cavalry of Canada. 20 of whom would receive commissions, the remaining ten officers, to complete the full strength of the establishment, being transferred from the Regular Army.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SHAREHOLDERS, HELD AT THE BANKING HOUSE, TORONTO, AT NOON, ON TUESDAY, 9TH JULY, 1878.

The President, the Hon. William McMaster, having been called to the chair, it was moved by A. V. DeLaporte, Esq., of Toronto, seconded by W. J. Baines, Esq., of Toronto, "That the following gentlemen be appointed to act as scrutineers :—Messrs. James Browne, Henry Pellatt, and R. H. Temple ; and that the General Manager act as Secretary."

REPORT.

The directors beg to lay before the shareholders the results of another year's business.

Balance at credit of profit and loss account, 30th June, 1877 ..... $ 67,403 15

The profits of the year ended 30th June, 1878, after deducting charges of management and making provision for all bad and doubtful debts outstanding, to the year's operations, are 241,550 40

$308,953 55

From this sum has to be deducted:—

Dividend No. 21 of 4 per cent., for six months, ending 31st December $240,000 00
Dividend No. 22 of 4 per cent., for six months ending 30th June 240,000 00
Transferred to Reserve for rebate of interest on current discounts 10,000 00
Reserved for accrued interest on deposit receipts 30,000 00

Leaving a balance to credit of profit and loss account $42,467 75

It will be observed that notwithstanding the continued depression, the Directors have been able to pay out of the twelve months' profits the usual dividend of eight per cent., provide for the bad and doubtful debts legitimately belonging to the year, and transfer $15,156.60 to the credit of the Rest or Reserve account.

It having been apparent for some time past that certain obligations held by the bank, which it was hoped would ultimately prove recoverable, had been rendered more than doubtful by the drying and protracted ordeal through which nearly every branch of business has been passing, the Directors determined to deal with them at once. It is possible that a portion of these obligations may yet be realized, but in continuing to include them in the available assets after their character has been so altered, the bank tained could not be justified on any principle of sound banking; and as they are the final outcome of business transacted during a former period of general and undue expansion, when the rest was largely increased, the Directors decided to provide for them out of that fund. The sum of $500,000 has therefore been withdrawn and applied as follows:—

Appropriated for bad and doubtful debts $300,000
Placed at credit of Contingent Fund Account 150,000
$450,000

The rest, or reserve fund, now amounts to $1,400,000, equivalent to 28¼ per cent. on the capital.

The policy of the contraction observed by all prudent business men has largely diminished the volume of commercial transactions, while excessive competition in banking and the necessity for extremely cautious management, have materially affected the earnings. There are, however, indications of improvement, and the position of the Bank fully warrants the Directors in studying that when business becomes sufficiently healthy and active to afford safe and profitable employment for money, every reasonable expectation of the shareholders will be realized.

WM. MCMASTER,
President.

COGNAC.

A Visit to the Town Where the Brandy Is Made—Great Depression of the Business.

Correspondence of the New York Tribune.

Cognac, May 24.—"There is but one Cognac," mused my companion, as we threaded our way yesterday, umbrellas in hand, through the narrow winding streets of the ancient little city—"and brandy," added, "is its profit."

It is related that, not many years ago, the bishop of the neighboring city of Angoulême called at the Vatican to pay his respects to Pius IX. Ushered into the presence of the sovereign pontiff, the visiting dignitary announced his title. "I have," said he, "the honor to be your holiness' very humble servant, the bishop of Angoulême." His holiness nodded, and his benevolent face momentarily assumed an expression of doubt and inquiry, as if to recall exactly where the Angoulême see was located. "And of Cognac," added the bishop. "Ah," said the good pope, with a smile, "we know Cognac well."

So does everybody know—everybody, at least, who calls for "pony brandy" at fifty cents a glass — everybody who, whether in South America, Australia, Algeria, or New York, has heard the name of Hennessey, Martel, Otard and Dupuy. But to few of all the hundreds of thousands to whom those words are so familiar has it happened to visit this quaint little town, and see for themselves the store-houses from which is annually sent out enough of the precious liquor to float half a dozen good-sized iron-clads.

It is difficult to imagine a more picturesque scene than that presented through which the River Charente passes in its course through this city. Poplar-lined, as indeed, are most of the rivers of France, spanned by an imposing stone bridge with generous arches, through which you catch glimpses of ancient mills and shaded roadways, and little dots of green islands, overlooked on either bank by lines of stone buildings, black with age. To complete the picture of the little stream which bears upon its peaceful current the barges upon which the beautiful product of Cognac is shipped to the seaboard, you must add the sense of drowsy dreamy sense of antiquity, an indefinable presence of glories long gone by. The warehouses of Otard, Dupuy & Co., for instance, were in the sixteenth century the royal palace of Francois I. The neighboring storehouses and offices of Hennessey & Co. were in old times the abode of Franciscan monks, and through the long warerooms, now crowded with puncheons, and tierces, and tanks, and reddened with flavors of the vines, the Cordeliers in old times plodded counted their beads and meditated on mortal brevity.

Without its brandy interest Cognac, as the reader may have already inferred, would be the "demnition bore town." Had it been it's baker's dozen of principal shops, and grass would grow in the streets. The brandy men are the feudal lords—the townspeople their vassals. Here and there, in the city and its suburbs, one comes unexpectedly upon princely residences—palaces of stone—surrounded by parks laid out in the most approved style of modern landscape gardening, lit with gas, luxuriously furnished; possessing, in fact, every comfort that a king could wish for. The Hennessey place, about a quarter of an hour distant from the city's centre, comprises an area of lawn and grove and garden covering one hundred acres, and the house itself is a marvel of luxury. The horticulturist, on the other hand, numbering some twelve thousand, are all more or less dependent for their business or employment upon the money put in circulation by the brandy trade, and, in common with that trade, they feel the unparalleled depression marking the present period.

"For fifty or sixty cents part," said Mr. Hennessey to me yesterday, "such a crisis has not been known in the trade." He attributed this to, possibly, excessive shipments last year, and to the fact that sellers were drawing upon their reserve stock in preference to making further purchases at the high rates, caused, I suppose, by the damage done by the phylloxera. A quarter of the brandy district was last year ravaged by this troublesome insect. The French Minister of Agriculture directed his personal attention to discovering some means of arresting the evil, but in vain. The worm did his little work thoroughly and well, and the probability is that American buyers, bearing in advance of its prospective ravages, ordered large consignments in anticipation of the increase in prices, which, in fact, ensued.

Be this as it may, Cognac is undergoing a season of unwonted dullness. One of the largest brandy houses lately discharged sixty employés, having still employed two hundred, of whom one half, they told me, could easily be spared. This is a fact seriously worth looking at, and will, I imagine, furnish many a crumb of comfort to Francois Murphy and his co-laborers in the temperance cause. Here are some figures which put the matter in a still clearer light, viz :—

Brandy shipped to the United States, May, 1878 1,000,000
Here is a falling off of nearly two-thirds. Who will explain it? That the trade will continue to decrease, or even remain in the present state of depression is, I think, doubtful. The month of May being, as it were, between two seasons, was the dullest of the year, and it may be that the last month's decrease is ascribable to increased shipments at earlier dates, in anticipation of the proposed advalorem tariff. We shall have to wait until, say, September, before any deduction of permanent value can be made from the figures given above. Give the brandy-growers a good crop this year, with no reappearance of the phylloxera, and all may yet be well. A month ago, as may well be imagined, the campagnard, or vine - grower, was on the qui vive. Jack Frost was his principal bugbear, and a cold, chilly night brought him frightful visions of hunger and the poor-house. At one time the atmosphere was so cool that a neighboring vine-grower, rising betimes in the morning, and feeling the weather altogether too fresh and bracing for his ideas of a safe brandy crop, at once betook himself to the field, and, heaping hastily together a pile of brushwood, kindled it in hope of warming the air and keeping off the dreadful frost. This is fully equal to the enterprise of the Yankee stove-dealer, who claimed to have invented a bar-burner that would "warm a forty-acre lot."

A glimpse I as been obtained of Karatagin, the little known territory which once owed allegiance to Khokan, but which now forms part of Bokhara. It borders on the Pamir steppe, and only in the summer is communication with the neighboring districts practicable. The people are in exceedingly primitive condition. They are said to have no ideas of length or weight. They possess no markets, caravanseries, or institutions of a public life. But there are no thieves among them. A species of Communism prevails. If a family is in want of anything, assistance is obtained from the neighbors as a matter of course. Agriculture is not pursued to any great extent. The chief industry is cattle-raising.

Elias Black, of New Britain, Penn., has not sold an ounce of his farm products in years. He believes in keeping everything. A field of four acres is covered with stacks of grain, some of which have stood there fifteen years, and are the homes of vermin.

The clergy of Oxfordshire, England are trying to reduce farmers not to give laborers intoxicating drinks during hay and harvest time.

Jugglery Extraordinary.

Samples of Hindoo Magic that Puzzled an Ohioan.

What a White-Robed Conjurer Did in Broad Daylight—A Mango Tree, Five Feet High, Growing from the Nut in a Single Hour.

From the Cleveland Herald.

I was smoking my chibouk on the wide veranda of a bungalow, or Government inn, one day in Northern India. It was in January, but the weather was intensely hot, and my Dakgahrrs, with its rough, untrained horses, had stopped here for a midday rest. My Hindostance servant, with an unpronounceable name, whom I nicknamed "Handy Andy" on account of certain mishandy ways, and a merry twinkle of the eye that indicated no lack of Hibernian humor, came up the porch and, with a salaam, said,—"Would Sahib like to see conjurer make tricks?" "Yes, bring him on." I suspected the fellow was consulting his own fondness for amusement more than mine, but it was too hot to sleep, and I was ready for anything that would kill time.

A tall, fine-looking Hindoo, with a clear-cut, intelligent face, and eyes that looked straight at you, next appeared on the scene. He was dressed in the ordinary long white robe of his race, with a rich cashmere shawl wound round his waist, and his sabbaton and manners were respectful, without the least shade of servility. He was followed by two attendants, carrying the various implements of his profession, which they spread out before him, and a dozen or two bangyans of all ages grouped themselves at a respectful distance to enjoy the free show. The ground in front of the bungalow was paved with large, flat stones, and upon one of these the conjurer seated himself, curling his legs under him in Oriental fashion, and asked in Hindostance, "What special trick would the Sahib like to see?" At the same time he bared his arms, long, well-formed, but not muscular, and rolled his shawl upon his robe and show me that there was no concealed mechanism about his person. I told him through Handy Andy that I would like him to perform the mango-trick—which I had seen once before at Delhi without being able to penetrate its mysteries. He nodded assent, and taking a box about ten inches square, filled it with earth, and in it planted a mango nut about the size of an English walnut, having first handed it to me for examination. He then made a framework, or tripod, of three sticks six or eight feet long and tied together at the top, placed it over the box, and covered the whole with a piece of white muslin. The only thing thus far that looked like charlatanism was a mysterious incantation, muttered over his own eyes. One of the party took a ball of cord, and, grasping one end, threw the other up in the air with such force that its extremity was beyond the reach of our sight. He then immediately climbed up the cord with incredible swiftness, and was soon out of sight. I stood full of astonishment, not conceiving what was to come of this, when, lo! a leg came tumbling down out of the air. One of the conjuring company instantly snatched it up and threw it into a basket. A moment after a hand came down, and immediately on that another leg. And in a short time all the members of the body came thus successively tumbling from the air, and were cast together into the basket. The last fragment of all we saw come down was the head, and no sooner had that tumbled the ground than he who had snatched up all the limbs and put them into the basket, turned them all out again topsy turvy. And straightway I saw with these eyes all those limbs creep together again, and, in a short time, form a whole man, who stood up and walked about without showing the least damage! Never in my life was I so astonished as when I beheld this wonderful performance, and I doubted now no longer that these misguided men did it with the help of the devil. I had an attack of palpitation of the heart like that which overcame me once before in the presence of the Sultan of India, when he showed me some thing of that kind. They gave me a cordial, however, which cured the attack. The Kazi Afsharradin was next to me, and quoth he, 'Wallah! 'tis my opinion there has been neither going up nor coming down, neither marring no mending, 'tis all hocus pocus I' which was a very wise conclusion to come to."

The conjurer then took the mango-nut, which he had carefully examined by me, and dug it up to see if it had sprouted. It had not. He then replaced the earth from the box to show that nothing was concealed within it.

Through Handy Andy" I offered him two rupees if he would disclose to me the secret of the mango tree. It then doubled and trebled the offer, but he only shook his head, and I presume a thousand rupees would have been no temptation. He rewarded him with a generous "tip," and for the moment regretted that I was not a showman by profession.

The learned class of Buddhists repudiate and despise the lower exhibitions of common magic and charlatanism, but, as the common people will not dispense with these marvels, every great monastery keeps a conjurer who does not belong to the brotherhood of the convent, and is allowed to marry. The practice prevents the priesthood from losing down the secrets of their art by tradition. In India conjuring as well as everything is a hereditary profession, and the mystic practices are transmitted from father to son.

A very learned friar, who is spoken of as perfectly truthful, says that among the Tartars there are certain men whom they honor above all others, who are, like priests in India, persons of deep wisdom, well-conducted, and of the purest morals. They are acquainted with the magic arts, and depend upon the counsel and aid of demons. They can sit in the air without any visible support, first on a tripod of three sticks, then one stick after another is removed, and still the man remains, not touching the ground. He further relates that with a long cane he felt all under the suspended individual, and found nothing upon which his body rested. This last performance was professedly exhibited in Madras during the present century, and is minutely described by writers.

And now comes the most astonishing trick of all, which has a touch of tragedy to give it a more piquant flavor. I shall tell it in the quaint language of the old chronicler, somewhat abbreviated. After describing very vividly the basket-and-limb trick, which is well known in India, he says :—"I am now about to relate a thing which surpasses all belief, and which I should scarcely venture to insert here had it not been witnessed by thousands under my own eyes. One of the party took a ball of cord, and, grasping one end, threw the other up in the air with such force that its extremity was beyond the reach of our sight. His then immediately climbed up the cord with incredible swiftness, and was soon out of sight. I stood full of astonishment, not conceiving what was to come of this, when, lo! a leg came tumbling down out of the air. One of the conjuring company instantly snatched it up and threw it into a basket. A moment after a hand came down, and immediately on that another leg. And in a short time all the members of the body came thus successively tumbling from the air, and were cast together into the basket. The last fragment of all we saw come down was the head, and no sooner had that tumbled the ground than he who had snatched up all the limbs and put them into the basket, turned them all out again topsy turvy. And straightway I saw with these eyes all those limbs creep together again, and, in a short time, form a whole man, who stood up and walked about without showing the least damage! Never in my life was I so astonished as when I beheld this wonderful performance, and I doubted now no longer that these misguided men did it with the help of the devil. VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY,

Author of "Old Myddelton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"I shall be very glad for the boys not to be separated," put in Mrs. Endale, kindly noticing how the words that Dorcas wanted to utter would not come from her shaking lips.

"I think it a famous plan," added Mr. Endale, seeing this also, and patting in his own cheering words to help her.

"How kind!" faltered Dorcas, presently. "Can you really, really consent for your boy to grow up with—his?"

"We think of him as Gerard's boy," said Mrs. Endale, gently, "and we really want you not to separate your little grandson from Jack."

"Sir Gerard Athelston himself would have been glad for them to grow up together," said Colonel Stuart, quietly.

Poor Dorcas! This last and most thoughtful proof of the good opinion of these friends who had so utterly forgiven and forgotten her complaining discontent, entirely broke down her self-reliance, and she could but let her tears have their own way.

"I can not help it," she moaned, apologetically, as Jet's caressing little hands drew down hers, and she looked up to meet Marjorie's bright eyes—"I can not help it, Miss Marjorie. I was thinking if my little girl could only see this prosperity come to her child, and know how good you all are to him, and to me, for his sake—or for the sake of him that was good to us both. I'm a weak and selfish old woman: I've been hard and ill-tempered all my life, but this makes me more of a child than—than my own grandchild.

"And don't you think your little girl does see your happiness, and her child's?" whispered Marjorie, softly. "I think so.

"Then you will consider our plan, will you?" asked Mr. Endale, wishing to cheer her again, "and we will discuss it further presently. I shall be all over the country for the next few days, looking for a house, so we shall be popping in to see you and arrange it."

"Colonel Stuart—please—Colonel Stuart—"

He had walked aside from the group to rise the bell for the luncheon tray, and Mrs. Jo had followed him, was gently and modestly trying to win his sole and entire attention. "Colonel Stuart, you will tell me something, please?"

"A hundred things, my lad, if you have a letter-bag that wants answering."

"Colonel Stuart, father didn't kill—Mr. Jolley at all, did he?"

"Not at all," was the colonel's emphatic answer, as he smiled to hear to whom the formal title was given and to whom the formal title.

"Then, Colonel Stuart, that—that promise you know, about the amusement, doesn't come off?"

"No, dear," the colonel answered, pleased that the thought was not altogether unwelcome, while hastily and kindly he added, "but I'll make it up to you, my lad, long before, had come so quickly to the child too.

"And—and, Colonel Stuart, is that money for me, for me to do what I like with, because—oh! Colonel Stuart, you—I don't know how to say it—may I do for father what he did for my own mother?"

Clear and bright, the full meaning of the wish flashed into the mind of the listener, and he put his arm about the eager, trembling little speaker, with a sudden dimness even in his own brave eyes.

"You shall do your share, dear little lad," he whispered; "but there are many of us who love his memory so well that we can not be left out in a task like this. We have been talking of to-day; but you did not know this when the thought came to you. I am glad of that. Yours shall be the least share in this, my child, as yours was not the least share in his love and teaching."

CHAPTER XLVII.

IN MEMORIAM.

It was a calm and calm spring evening; its very air rich with unspoken thoughts, its very beauty breathing benediction. To Neil Athelston, sitting in the church porch, while the slanting sunbeams lingered tenderly among the graves, there was even a further reminder of happiness; for over the iron gates of the church-yard stretched the fragrant branches of the morrow, foundation of such a dark arch of pure white flowers, and he could see the tree from his pew which was to be his. For this morrow was to be his marriage day, and a day—a day—and not only that, but it was to be Colonel Stuart's and Marjorie's too; and for the brides were to go from High Athelston, and the magnificent and lavish preparations for the ceremony were understood to be equally in honor of both.

Lady Athelston, and Sir Neil too, had been partner about this; knowing what a failure a festival at the manor would be, at a time when Marjorie could take no part as hostess, Lady Athelston's will had been in this case purely kind, and (a great deal more astonishing) she had succeeded in working it without assistance.

In her delight at the marriage of her son with the heiress of High Athelston, and the girl she had grown to love so well, the failure of her first scheme for him grew into absolute self-gratulation that by refusing he thoroughly contented herself, she determined on doing all in her power to add to the happiness of the girl who certainly had never been able to appreciate Neil, but of whom she had always been fond, even though she had seemed learned to depend and lean upon the gentle, grave girl, who was to be Neil's wife.

So the arrangements and gorgeous preparations which she delighted to order were ordered equally for the two brides and the friends of the two brides.

Old Mr. Caulfield checked a good deal over this, reckoning how many pounds it would save him, yet thankfully pronounced it "a whim of the old lady." And the big it "a whim of the old lady." And the "old lady's" very kindest and most generous act of all was her reticence about having any cause for the whim, save her fondness for Marjorie and great respect for Colonel Stuart. She never pretended to Colonel Stuart. She never pretended to need noticed Louisa's cold, sarcastic words and behavior about these marriages. She only told her pleasantly that, on the strength of long friendship, she had determined to adopt Marjorie for that occasion, if she and Mr. Caulfield would allow her. And, of course, Louisa, who looked forward herself delightedly to the wedding gayeties at High Athelston, knowing she would be the very handsomest among the twelve brides-maids, said nothing but that it was very nice," and then went home to laugh over it with the squire.

He had been so much put out by the breaking off of the match between his youngest daughter and Sir Neil, that he had never yet recovered his temper; but three circumstances went a long way to-ward enabling him to do so. The first was Sir Neil Athelston's open, fearless declaration that, except the disappointment to his ambition, he had no cause for complaint in the match, because—oh! Colonel Stuart proposed for the wife (much more interesting to the old gentleman) that nasty little declaration of love; and the third was the expense of the wedding being saved for him.

To continue.

Alma Tamela, the painter, has a new piano formed and decorated in the Byzantine manner. The seat accompanying it is a sort of a throne, the top of the instrument is enriched with inlays of various colored woods, ivory, mother-of-pearl, and ebony; indeed it is a mass of exquisitely carved woods and ivory. The panels on the carved sides contain incised figures of owls, nightingales, and cuckoos, with lines of music figuring the notes of each bird; and inside the cover are large panels of ivory destined to receive autograph signatures of the distinguished musicians who may favor the owner of the beautiful piano by using it.

George Thompson, an Englishman started from Grindelwald in Switzerland, intending to ascend the Faulhorn without a guide. Taking the path over the Holzmatten and becoming giddy, he got into such a position in the Knebrecher that he dared neither advance nor retreat. Here he remained five days and six nights, subsisting on such roots and herbs as he could gather. At last growing desperate, he contrived to slide down the mountain on his back, and crawled to a cottage near the Alpine Alp, where he got food and shelter.

Lord Charles Beresford, M. P., was married on June 25 to Miss Miss Gardner, eldest daughter of Mrs. Gardner (nee Countess de Mandelsloh) at St. Peter's Church, London. The Prince of Wales and Prince Louis Napoleon were present. There were six bridesmaids. The Archbishop of Armagh officiated.

What to Eat in Time of Heat.

The general chorus of citizens yesterday sang, and may sing again to-morrow,

"OH, IT IS TOO HOT TO EAT!"

But, hot or cold, the people who neglect the human stomach for their own convenience will bear from it. It must be always cared for, but people must be careful to gauge its capabilities for digestion by the thermometer. For instance, lobsters and soft-shell crabs may be eaten with impunity when the thermometer marks 67 deg., but let the mercury stumbler 83 deg. and shell fishes generally act like a poison on the gastric juices. The same thing is true, more or less, about broiled ham or bacon, hot corned beef, flannel cakes, rye bread, meat pies, clam fritters and a dozen other things which may lie upon the gastrics during a heated term as easily as Richard's murdered cousins sat upon his conscience in the tent scene. During such days as we have known since Sunday last he best ate who ate least and oftenest. Nature, which is man's best doctor, and prefers an ounce of prevention to a pound of cure, fills our rivers and bays in July and August with fish, which, whether cheap or dear in price, act can deal with in a dozen palatable ways. Not the least pleasant of these is hot weather for breakfast. Red-pie in July, or the clam-chowder of the old Acadians, or cold string beans in the form of a salad, or a leak of lamb surrounded with poached egg—each and all are dainty summer dishes. Let the hearty scorps and roads be left with sorrow, and the scarlet runner and to-day's pea-pod. Shall we, however, during those hot days disdain liquors and juycers? There are high-sounding names, but the best of them, with almost any kind of meat broth for a basis, is cheap, and they may be tickened by means of rice flour, or of the finest farina, or of fresh tomat sauce. Not the worst of all sauces is to be made by tickling butter claws and thickening the liquid with tomato and bruised biscuit. But the prudent gastronome, during the heat, will postpone squashes and cucumbers (though he may remain steadfast to the tender and scorbutic chico), as well as the early sunset ball of white wax which your grocer calls

A NEW POTATO.

If the wise pursue the gyeacherry it will be in the shape of what the Dawkins termed the Hackensack (where sour the reed and nice birds shall be shot) call by the real French name of gooseberry fool, which refers not to the brains of the eater, but to the process by which the berries are pressed. In hot weather the delicate acid of ripe currents is both savory and wholesome at breakfast, when, too, should be eaten the cherry, "delighting the sense of every hearer," as the Koran hath it, and every raspberry, and that really new American fruit, the cultivated blackberry. Every physician knows how a really ripe peach will fit and "tone up" the disordered digestion even of a child. Last of all comes a vexatious question when the thermometer tops ninety degrees—what to do with the watermelon. The watermelon is a beast maligned at times by the Board of Health, but when his seeds are black and his heart is red and his melon has grown cold in the cellar corner or under a Croton top (where refrigerators are wanting) he is neither an unpleasant nor a mischievous assuager of thirst, provided only there be no deal with him look well upon the meat where it grows green, and cry, "Hold, enough!"—N. Y. Herald.

A Great Storm in London.

London was visited with a thunder storm of uncommon severity on the afternoon of the 23rd of June, and the newspapers describe it as a storm of unusual violence.

One correspondent of the London Daily News thus describes the storm as it was seen in the North of London, says that at a few minutes before 5 o'clock peals of distant thunder dissipated all doubt that might have existed as to whether the oppressive and charged atmosphere indicated blight or storm.

As soon as the sky became generally clouded the storm burst forth, and fell violently for at least an hour. The lightning was vivid in the extreme, and the peals of thunder, which occurred in rapid succession, appeared to shake the roofs of the houses over which they burst. The rain was simply tropical in its character, and mingled, as it was, with large hail stones, it poured down in continuous shoots, inundating in the course of half an hour both the gardens of the houses and the public roadways.

The fury of the storm put a stop to all pedestrian traffic. Not a soul was to be seen in the streets, and few occupants of houses ventured to the windows for fear of the continuous vivid flashes of lightning. The downpour lasted for nearly an hour, during which period a semi-darkness prevailed, which necessarily added to the lugubrious aspect of the outlook. The roadways were literally running streams for the time being, and when the storm had ceased those who had put up for shelter resumed their journeys under anything but favorable circumstances, some of them were obliged to bare their feet and plod their way through the rushing waters.

During the storm one of the great sewers burst at King's Cross, and in a few minutes the Metropolitan Railway line from that station was deluged with water to beyond the Farringdon street station, where even the platforms were flooded. Traffic on this portion of the line was suspended for about half an hour, after which, though the water continued to flow along the line, it found an outlet on the low level line which dips under the older line between Farringdon street and King's Cross. The lower level was specially covered to the depth of six feet with water.

A hundred men were promptly set to work to repair the broken sewer, and three steam fire engines of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade were brought to Farringdon street to pump the water out of the lower tunnel. Owing, however, to the fact that a railway line is by no means so well set up for the passage of these engines as a common road no small amount of difficulty had to be encountered before these engines could be got to work. The driver of one, thinking to get rapidly down to the scene of action, unluckily got the hind wheels entangled in some way with the metals, so that the rear platform of the engine was pulled off, and the engine had to be taken mounted on a small truck. With all the care which was taken of the other two engines it was 7 o'clock before they could be got to work, and by that time the water was eight feet in depth in the lower tunnel.

When Lightning Will Strike.

We may now endeavor to ascertain under what conditions damage from lightning is possible, and what are the means by which the risk may be lessened or avoided. As the risk may be lessened or avoided. As the isolated tree, standing either upon a wide plain or upon an eminence, is obviously likely to determine the lightning discharge, it will pass harmlessly over. Hence to "attract the lightning," is to use a common expression. The top of the tree is the nearest point to the cloud, and since the tree is a better conductor than the air above it, the lightning will be drawn vertically through it to the cloud which the shortest and easiest course along which the electricities may pass. If, when the charged cloud arrives directly over this point the tension is sufficient to overcome the resistance along that line a discharge will take place, and the tree will be struck. But if the tension be not sufficient, the cloud will pass harmlessly over. Hence it appears that a person standing during a thunder storm beneath a tree so situated is exposed to some risk. On no account, therefore, should the traveller take refuge under an isolated tree; generally he will do well to avoid its neighborhood altogether, but should he be overtaken by the storm when on a plain with no shelter near, the tree may still be made to afford him some protection. It he take up a position near it, but not under its branches, he will probably escape unhurt should the lightning descend upon it. The safest distance from the tree is that which is equal to its height. To approach much nearer than this is to incur the risk of being within the influence of the stroke; to remain at a much greater distance away is to place one's self in the same conditions of isolation as the tree itself. It will have been remarked by all observers of the phenomenon that wherever a tree has been struck by lightning it has generally occupied an isolated position. Insolably occupied an isolated position. In describing the position as one of isolation, however, it is not meant that the tree is necessarily standing alone, but it is not one of a numerous group. When there are many trees together, their collective convexity is often sufficient to cause indirective discharge of the electricity. This is especially likely to happen when the trees are wet with rain, for then their surfaces are covered with a film of water.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

INGERSOLL.

Knox Church has been closed for the past four weeks during repairs. The church is one of the oldest in the county, the first sermon preached within its walls having been delivered by the Rev. W. C. Burns, who at years became one of the most successful Christian missionaries to China, and in the course of years became a renowned Chinese missionary. The congregation was formed a few years ago. The present year, and organized in the September following, with a considerable number of members. The present church was erected in 1853, and is comfortable in its appointments. What is remarkable is that it has only had three pastors—Burns, Inglis, and Wells—who have been ordained, and one pastor, Mr. Grant, who was ordained to the ministry, but who has been for many years engaged in the work of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Knox Church has been entirely repainted, and a new pulpit, the gift of Dr. Spence, has been put in. Four behind this pulpit are new windows. The pulpit is handsome stained glass, the gift of the ladies of the congregation. For some time the Church was opened twice each Sabbath by the Rev. John Thompson, who preached during the day and Mr. Wells, a student of Knox College, in the evening. Both of these gentlemen are very popular preachers, as it was evident from the large congregations that were addressed by the children, of whom there was a large attendance. Mr. Grant is also a very attractive preacher, and he is deservedly the pastor of this church, and he has had from other pulpits. Several of his sermons have been published at the request of the congregation. The strawberry festival in connection with this church, held on Tuesday evening, was a success, able addresses being delivered during the evening by the Rev. John Rea and Chas. The exhibition of pens have already been nearly all let.

Mr. Wm. Jackson, of the Daily House, left for London, yesterday, taking with him a very fine horses, which he intends disposing of at the London horse mart.

A meeting of the Drill Association has been called for Friday evening next. They are to assemble at the rooms of Chapman & Underwood for the consideration of important business matters.

Dr. Goodyatchka, of London, was down here last evening to organize a Lodge of Independent Order of Foresters. The instalment of officers is to take place next Tuesday evening. Bro. A. Chapman, of London gentlemen are expected to be present and to address the meeting.

Mr. George Loyd, a former resident of Ingersoll, was a present in town visiting friends.

Workmen are busily engaged on the Pomeroy Block, and during the heavy rain yesterday the roof of the building was discovered to be leaking in several places. It was done for the stipulated contract price was a disgrace to Ingersoll.

Last Friday the pupils of the High School in the above-named town were favored by Mr. David F. Clapp, who has resigned his position as assistant inspector for Simcoe to become Inspector for North Wellington, and a most excellent address was delivered to them by him.

On Friday last a handsome set of flags, the gift of Mr. Thomas Kidd, were presented to the Orange lodge in the Town Hall.

At the annual examination of St. Joseph Convent, Ingersoll, Miss Emma Kidd, daughter of Mr. Joseph Kidd, of this place, was the successful competitor for the gold medal presented to her with appropriate remarks by Lady Macdonald.

The return rifle match between the Albert Rifle Club, of Ingersoll, and the Fort Amherst Rifle Club, of Stratford, took place on the ranges of the latter association on Saturday last, the 29th inst., the weather victory for Gait by 24 points. The following are the figures:

	POINTS.		DAILY.	POINTS.
Capt. Peterson	91	H. Sandall		89
Lieut. Clark	91	R. Jaffray		89

Gait's victory

The Perth Rifle Association Challenge Medal was re-quested for at the annual match, which took place on Thursday last. The three highest are:

	1st.	2nd.	total.
D. Mcgregor	91	91	182
Captain Parkinson	90	90	180

The day was very hot, with a bright sun shining all the time, which baffled the skill of many of the competitors.

The late James Sairs, aged 72, was killed at the Grand Trunk station here on Monday last. Many years that deceased, who resided in the township of Pullarton, came to Stratford to spend the evening with his son, Mr. John Cowan, who works in the Railway Company's shops. He left the house about 9 o'clock to go over to Mr. Crawford's to see his brother, Mr. Shakespeare, who was living there. Having put on his boots and taken his hat he walked out of the house, and on reaching the platform he stepped on the track of the switch engine which backs into the station, and was killed instantly along the railway, and did not survive the injuries he received more than a few minutes. The men on the engine did not see him, but the fireman, who was standing on the rear of the tender of the switch engine, saw him as he was struck by the engine. Deceased received injuries which resulted in his death. Other injuries were received, and a verdict of accidental death, exonerating the engine driver, was returned.

George Hood was before the Police Magistrate here on Tuesday, and had six months added to his liquor without a license on Dominion Day at the previous sitting.

KINCARDINE.

If there is one thing more than another that deters the country people from this journey through life, it is the vulgar fear that church members are "down" on everybody amongst themselves. Oh, the pity of such origin, for—

There are some "keen" on Victoria street that want to be "escaped."

The anniversary sermons of Rev. J. L. Murray into the new church on Victoria street will be held in the residence of Knox Church, on Sunday, July 11, 1878, at 7 o'clock, p.m. On the following Sabbath, July 14, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Rev. Mr. Jeffrey, of Bruce, will preside. Strangers will be welcome.

Kincardine has a menagerie, but there is nothing in it to frighten the children with—no lions or tigers or "hyenas" in it, because there are any "hyenas" in town. We wonder if our old Constable knows that sections 44 and 45 of the Act No. 41 will "fetch" him if he is not right enough.

Summer tourists are beginning to arrive here. There are not as many as heretofore, but there is no doubt but that another will be here shortly, especially within the next two or three months. Others spend most of their time on the lake and beach.

The Orangemen of this vicinity have given up the idea of going to London on the 12th inst., as the Committee of Management increasing the fare from 61 to 81. Now, we don't blame them for not going, but they say they won't go now unless they can go and return for the same money.

GUELPH.

It is not generally known that Bartholomew's church, which it was expected would be opened for service on the second Sabbath before some time in August.

On Friday, the 5th instant, the pupils in the public school in section No. 1, Eramosa, (York Road) assembled together in the school house, and after a handsome provided Bible and case, were presented with the same, which he is held by the pupils on the 5th inst.

On the 5th inst., Hon. Judge Gilmor, in the County Court of Baltimore city, granted a decree of divorce to Catherine Ann Ingram, from Angus, a circuit contractor, from Guelph, and awarding her as alimony, the sum of $1,000 and the custody of their joint lives, to be paid by the said Jos. Angus in monthly instalments of $25 each.

On Saturday morning last a youth called at a house on Cork street and hired a horse and buggy to drive to Fergus, stating that he would be back in the afternoon about nine o'clock. The owner was requested to be supposed that he got the rig a square box buggy and a grey horse, and that he had left the stables. Up to the time of writing he has not put in an appearance, and the supposition is that the conclusion that his property has been stolen.

PERTH.

Mr. August Baumbach, who lives near Wartburg, cleared $1,000 on Dominion Day while engaged in putting down tiles in a field belonging to Mr. Wm. Hamilton, as overheard by a party in a buggy. Little can what had accompanied him to the scene, and on the return journey, when the load was heavily loaded, he was overheard to say that he had found the latter in sugar when he found upon the latter in sugar when he found a pocket-book carried his children's houses, and procuring a gun, started in pursuit of the owner of the book, which had, however, made off, leaving the money in the pocket.

On Monday last, as Mr. John Dempsey was assisting in raising a barn for Mr. Jones, a piece of timber fell upon him, inflicting serious injuries.

Last Tuesday during a game of base ball at Mornington, a young man named Simon Leroy received a heavy blow from the bat in the hands of the striker, which badly injured him about the chin and neck.

HAMILTON.

The funeral of the late Mr. Tyner took place yesterday from his residence in East Flamboro. The remains were taken to the Great Western Railway station, and thence conveyed to Toronto, to his mother's residence. Rev. W. S. Williamson was the minister who officiated on the occasion. The pall-bearers, who were old personal friends of the deceased, were Messrs. Wm. Johnson, John Crerar, J. M. Buchan, Dr. Mullen, and a member of the staff of the Spectator. The pall-bearers in Toronto were Messrs. A. T. Wood, M.P., Hon. A. Mackenzie, Hon. Thos. Hodgins, M.P.P., Q.C., M. Hossack, J. Eastwood, of Hamilton, and Prof. Wallace, of Belleville.

Mr. John D. McDonald, the well-known railway contractor, has secured the contract for building the Flamboro & Collingwood branch of the Hamilton & Northwestern Railway.

On the 29th ult., a man named John Ryan was arrested by a number of the police here on the charge of having stolen an overcoat, a pair of pants and a watch. He was taken before the police magistrate, and Detective Harcourt Dorsett and Detective Burrows, of the Toronto police force, came up here and took Ryan back with him to Toronto, where he has been wanted for some time on a charge of theft.

Early on Sunday morning Mr. John Davidson, steam keeper, on the corner of King and Catherine streets, had $120 stolen from his pocket. He had the cash in his pants pocket when he went to bed, and when he awoke found that the money was gone. Had the burglar removed the room he would have found $180 in a leather pocket-book.

EXCURSION TO CLEVELAND.—The excursion train Wednesday night for Cleveland had on board between 250 and 300 excursionists, picked up at Port Stanley, St. Thomas and this city.

THE INTENSE HEAT.—Three of the workmen engaged upon the water-works on Maitland street were overcome by Tuesday evening with the heat of the sun, and were promptly removed to the hospital. Proper treatment soon restored them, and they will probably be around again in a few days.

LODGE OF INSTRUCTION.—The M. W. the Grand Master of the A. F. and A. M. of Canada, Bro. W. H. Weller, of Oshawa, will visit this city on the 18th instant, and hold a Lodge of Instruction. No doubt the London Masons will accord the Grand Master a welcome befitting his position and influence in the Order.

B. C. IMPROVEMENT CLASS.—The usual weekly literary meeting of the London South Bible Christian Church Improvement Class was held Tuesday evening, with Rev. Mr. Whitlock in the chair. The names of those who contributed to the entertainment were:—Messrs. Drywood, J. W. Gerry and Brond, and Misses Westland, Drywood, Parish and Redd.

WATCH STOLEN.—A few nights since, while Mr. Coppinger, of the Field Battery, was on guard at the camp in Salter's Grove, some sneak thief made off with, from one of his pockets, it is supposed, while he was taking a nap. There were three persons in the tent during the night, and it is not improbable the theft was committed by one of the three. The watch belonged to Sergt. Macleod.

WITHDRAWN AND SETTLED.—The following cases, which were to have been tried at the Police Court, yesterday, were settled before the Court opened by the parties interested:—Joseph Galpin vs. Patrick Johnstone, assault, $3.60 costs paid; William Smith vs. James Clark, assault, withdrawn; R. Rawlings vs. John F. Doyle, assault, withdrawn; Carrie Proctor vs. Mary Billington, assault, withdrawn.

BREACH OF FIRE BY-LAW.—Mr. Alex. Harvey, the contractor for street watering, being desirous of providing for water-supply addition for street watering purposes, has erected a large wooden tank on Wellington street, near the corner of Dundas. The structure was not observed by the police until it was erected, and as soon as it was in the breach of by-law was reported to the police authorities. Mr. Harvey has been summoned to answer the charge on the 12th.

CAPTURED.—Detective Heenan visited St. Thomas, and in company with Chief Constable Jarvis, of that town, arrested Joseph Cook, Odell, for being a defaulter to the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the amount of $100 and upwards. The London detectives "spotted" him while he was there for a few days, and assisted Heenan, while in London, to locate Odell. Detective Heenan left at 7.45 p. m. for St. Thomas with his prisoner. Odell has been on the move for twelve months, till arrested at St. Thomas by the Chief and Heenan.

THE BISCUIT SHOOTING CASE.—The case of James Patterson, of Biddulph, against the Sullivan family, of the same place, for attempting to shoot and being shot at by Patterson, was before Squire Peters to-day. It seems that Patterson went in to the Sullivan farm to open a water course to run into a neighboring farm, when Pat. Sullivan, jr., pointed a rusty gun at him and said he would shoot him if he tried to do so. The complaint was withdrawn on the Sullivans paying costs and promising to open up the water course.

POLICE COURT PENCILINGS.—At this Court, yesterday, Charles Green, the rough who tore Constable Insell's clothing and assaulted him on Tuesday last, was sent down for two months. On the charge of drunkenness he was also fined $4 or 30 days. Tuesday, one of the old originals, was committed to jail in default of procuring sureties for his good behavior for threatening his mother and sister, Thomas Bush, drunk and disorderly, was fined $1 and costs, $2. Ed. Lee, a stranger, drunk, discharged. Hannah Watkins will answer on the 16th for assaulting Mrs. Fountain.

MAD DOG SHOT.—The season of rabid dogs is upon us, and it behoves the Police authorities to take some decided action in disposing of the numberless curs to be found cavorting around the city both night and day. Cook, of Dufferin Avenue, observed one of those animals acting in a peculiar manner near his residence this morning, and being convinced that the brute was suffering from hydrophobia, he procured a revolver, and at one shot dispatched the cur. If a similar course was adopted by our citizens, the streets would very soon be rid of the useless canines.

THE HORSE SALE.—At the second day's sale of the Horse Mart thirty-two horses changed hands at fair prices. Among the purchases were a fine carriage team by Mr. Wm. Dobson, of this city, for an English buyer; Messrs. Burrell, of Michigan, bought several horses at comparatively high figures; six or seven animals were purchased for livery purposes by a gentleman of this city, A Manitoba buyer secured four thoroughbred colts. Mr. Davis, of Henfryn, bought the Clyde stud, lot 170, at the low price of $61. There were a very large number of horses on the ground during the afternoon, and considering the interest taken, the sale was very well conducted. The reserve that the owners of several animals put upon their horses spoiled a large number of sales. This forenoon the sale of horses will be concluded, after which bids for carriages will be received.

PROTESTANT HOME.—The Trustees of the Protestant Orphans' Home gratefully acknowledge the following contributions so far June:—Mrs. Hyman, lesson books for school-room; Mrs. Fred. Mitchell, two bottles of elixir of best wine and iron; Mrs. McIntosh, dry goods; Mrs. Green, bals for the children; Mrs. Carr, quantity of clothing; Mrs. Saunders, clothing; Messrs. Laing & Sutherland, box of remnants and samples; Mrs. Ross, spinach, onions and lettuce; Mrs. Johnston, onions and spinach; Mrs. Spencer, rhubarb; Mrs. Hutchinson, lettuce and spinach; Mrs. Whitaker, lettuce, onions and radishes; Mrs. Partridge, onions and rhubarb; Mrs. Spencer, spiced currants; John B. Murphy, one ham, one cheese and side of bacon; Mrs. Chisholm, woodwork for show-case; Mr. Winkey, pair of slippers; and the following gardeners for flowers and planting of the same:—Mrs. West, Mrs. Cairncross, and Messrs. Pegler and Murdock.

"UNDESIRABLE INSULTING."—The Toer, under the above caption, endeavors to excuse the conduct of the volunteer officers who made the "midnight attack" a few nights since, by alleging that the officers in charge were misrepresented and insulted by this journal. If its readers are given to accepting all their "information" as gospel, then they are indeed verdant. The paragraph was taken almost a dozen months ago from the truth, the greatest of which is that "the FREE PRESS, in order to gratify private animosities, is ever ready to have at all ill-natured sneer at the volunteers." If it were necessary to go over the several allegations in the article referred to let little difficulty would be experienced in proving them to be unblushing falsehoods. Here is one, for instance:—"Col. Cole, anxious to give his men practice in street firing, ordered a night drill for the purpose." Now, would it be believed that Col. Cole did not take cavalry officers to the practice, but two from the artillery, and "would you be surprised to learn" that Major John Peters, the Commandant of the "bunch," stated to Lieut. Sergeant Crawford that he was not aware that the officers had once attended to had been promenading the city during the night, until the following day. The fact is, the "night drill" was a "series of surprise parties," and both officers and men were out for a "lark"—nothing more—as their nocturnal visits to the residences of certain gentlemen in the city attest.

The house of Mrs. Brown, on Ridout street, near York, was tampered with by a burglar early yesterday morning, but the intruder not being a professional his noise awoke one of the inmates, and he was frightened off.

Coal Barges appears this evening at the Red Ribbon Tent entertainment, where he will sing several songs, and in addition will give his celebrated temperance lecture entitled "Drinking a cool hearty laugh should go and hear Coal Barges.

"Corpse, coffin, and Will."—"I pray you devote Just half a minute to mend this coat. Within a nail has chanced to rend." "Tis 10 o'clock," said his drowsy mate, "I know," said Will, "it is rather late, But it's never too late to mend."

The Holman Opera Company presented the comic opera "Field of the Cloth of Gold" at the Opera House on Friday evening, and drew the performance with a farce. The attendance should be large, as the play is one mirth-provoking in the extreme.

The singing festival of the Public School Teachers will be held in the Drill Shed this evening, and it promises to be productive of great interest. The pupils are well up in part singing, and in addition the Chairman's prizes for general proficiency will be distributed. A small admission fee will be charged.

An old bachelor, picking up a book, exclaimed, upon seeing the woodcut representing a man kneeling at the feet of a woman, "Before I would encircle my neck with a rope and stretch it." And then, turning to a young woman, he inquired, "Do you not think it would be the best thing I could do?" "It would, undoubtedly, be the best for the woman."

Mothers often fret at their children and make a great many threats of condign punishment which are never carried out. A great deal of the ordinary domestic discipline consists of raging what you will do and then not doing it. Often in a while the child unconsciously shows up the absurdity of this mode of government—"If I speak to you again, I shall punish some of you," said a mother to half a dozen romps who were having their own way and intended to have it. It was apparently a fearful menace, but the children knew that it was like boat lightning, which flashes but doesn't strike, for the smallest spoke up and said—"Well, mother, I advise you to hold in your speak then."

OUTRAGE.—A large circle of our readers will hear with regret of the death of the Rev. W. Logan, Episcopal Minister of Lucan, and Rural Dean of North Middlesex, which occurred at Lucan yesterday. Mr. Logan has been ailing for a long time, and consequently his death was not altogether unexpected. Deceased, who was a Heroa College student, was ordained by His Lordship the Bishop of Huron in this city some six or seven years ago, and was assigned to the pastorate of the Lucan congregation, wherein he labored with great acceptance, until the malady which terminated his existence prevented him from exercising parochial control. He also officiated as Secretary of the Western University until his health compelled him to resign the position, which he did with great reluctance. Mr. Logan, who was aged 51 years, was an earnest Christian minister, and was beloved by all classes and creeds. He was a member of the Lucan Lodge of Masons; also, of St. George's R.A. Chapter of this city, and of Richard Coeur de Lieu Preceptory of Knight Templars, of London, the members of which will take charge of the funeral arrangements by request. The funeral will take place on Friday next at 11 o'clock.

The Twelfth in London.

A Grand Demonstration in Prospect.

The Programme, Order of Procession, and General Arrangements.

Probably the greatest demonstration ever held in Western Ontario, under the auspices of the Orange Association, will take place in London to-morrow (Friday), on the occasion of the celebration of the one hundred and eighty-eighth anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. Several months since a number of the city lodges conceived the idea of, holding a monster demonstration of the brethren from all parts of the West in London, and the suggestion has met with the most favorable reception from the members of the Order as it was communicated with. Since that time active committees have been at work, and, aided by the leading officers of the Order in Ontario, they have arranged for a demonstration which will eclipse in point of numbers, anything hitherto attempted by the Orangemen of the Province. Favorable replies have been received from about twenty County Grand Lodges, embracing in this city, and probably 150 Subordinate Lodges, and each of these will send deputations. These excursion trains have been arranged for by the committee on the different lines of railway, and from the number of car changes in regard to them, it is probable that a very large number will participate in the demonstration. In addition to the Canadian visitors, a large excursion party, estimated at five hundred strong, will arrive from Cleveland at nine o'clock a.m. They will be the guests of the London Lodges, and special arrangements have been made to give them a cordial and kindly welcome. Between ten and eleven o'clock the trains from Stratford, St. Mary's, Lucan, Glencoe and other points on the Grand Trunk are expected to arrive, and about the same hour the G. W. R. trains from all points on the line from and branches will put in an appearance. The visitors will be met at the railway depots by the members of the Reception Committee, who will escort them to different hotels, at which special rates have been granted by the proprietors. After dinner the different Lodges will assemble at the Fair Grounds at one o'clock sharp, and form in procession there in the following order:—

Cleveland Brethren, headed by Band.
Hamilton True Blues, Young Britons, Prentice Boys and Orangemen.
The Wellington Lodges, including Guelph Lodges.
North York Orangemen.
Elgin County Lodge, St. Thomas and Port Stanley Lodges.
Brantford True Blues, Young Britons and Orangemen.
Kent County Lodges and Chatham Young Britons.
St. Mary's and South Perth Lodges.
Bluevale and Wingham Lodges.
Brantford and Paris Lodges.
West Middlesex County and Sarnia Lodges.
The 7th Battalion Band, of London.
West Middlesex County and District Lodges.
East Middlesex District, County and Subordinate Lodges.
London and London East Young Britons, True Blues and Orangemen.

In this order the procession will move from the Fair Grounds down Richmond street to Dundas; west along Dundas to the Queen's House; south from Dundas to King; east along King to Richmond; north on Richmond to Dundas, thence to Salter's Grove, where addresses will be delivered by the Grand Lodge officers and members of the Order, among whom may be mentioned the Grand Master of Western Ontario, Bro. Nuttall; C. Acton Burrows, of Guelph, and others. Bennett & Chesney pictorial Jew Mills, the speakers, and every arrangement made for the comfort and convenience of the visitors. A very wise remark has been made by the members of the Executive Committee, and that is that no intoxicating liquors will be allowed for sale on the grounds. It is expected that Mr. Burrows, of Guelph, editor of the Herald, will deliver the oration of the day. Carriages will be provided for distinguished visitors. If the weather prove propitious, there is reason to believe that the demonstration will be one which will reflect credit on the Order in this city and elsewhere. Let us hope that nothing of an untoward character may occur to mar the pleasure of the visitors, and that the best of feeling may pervade all classes of the community.

PRESBYTERY OF LONDON

Wednesday, July 10.

The Presbytery resumed this forenoon, according to adjournment.

The report of the committee recommending the union of old St. Andrew's Church and Knox Church, and the separation of the McGillivray Church from them, was received and adopted, after considerable discussion.

The Presbytery agreed to meet at Parkhill on the first Tuesday in August to consummate the union of the two congregations.

An application was received from the Wardsville congregation for an increase of $100.

A committee was appointed to consider the application, and report at next meeting.

The Rev. Dr. Proudfoot, who is going owing to indisposition, asked to be relieved of his position as Convener of the Home Mission Committee of the London Presbytery.

The Rev. John Thompson, of Sarnia, was appointed in his stead, and Rev. Mr. Cochrane and Elder Robertson, of Strathroy, were named to carry on the Home Mission work.

Rev. Mr. G. Sutherland read a call from the congregation of Port Stanley. The call was in favor of Rev. G. H. Faudoe.

On motion of Mr. Duncan the call was sustained, and Mr. Pardee accepted, and on motion the induction was appointed to take place on Thursday, the 25th inst.

Rev. Mr. Goldie was appointed to preach, Rev. Mr. Sutherland to preside and address the minister, Rev. Dr. Kellogg the elders, and Dress the people.

Rev. D. Cameron asked to have a call moderated in for Dorchester. A like request was made by Mr. Fleming on behalf of Westminster. Agreed to.

On motion, Revs. Messrs. Cameron, Murray, Monroe, Proudfoot, McKinnon, and Mr. Cowan, were appointed a deputation to visit the congregations within the bounds of the Presbytery. Carried.

The committee appointed to consider the claim of Delaware against the congregation of Komoka reported in favor of recognizing the claim, and recommending that Komoka pay $20 to the Delaware congregation.

A claim from Rev. Mr. Ferguson for arrears was taken up, and on motion the claim was authorized to pay the amount.

A motion was made appointing Rev. Mr. Abraham and Elder Gordon a deputation to visit the Alvinston congregation, in reference to arrears due Rev. Mr. Hougsmith.

A report in reference to the election of elders for the London East congregation was then read. Several recommendations were made thereon.

Mr. Willis was heard on behalf of the congregation.

Mr. Rennie moved the adoption of the report, which was carried.

Rev. Dr. Proudfoot was appointed moderator, with Messrs. Murray, Duff and Cowan as a special session.

A petition from Mandawmin was allowed to drop at the request of Rev. Mr. Cameron.

Mr. Galloway was received on trial for license.

The Presbytery then adjourned, to meet in Parkhill.

Sad Accident on the Railway

A Young Man Seriously Injured while Jumping on the Cars.

Tuesday night an accident occurred at St. Thomas station which only furnishes another of many illustrations of the danger of getting on or off trains while in motion. Mr. Charles Moore, aged 17, a clerk in Mr. Reynolds' dress goods store, St. Thomas, and son of Mr. Neil Moore, tanner, of that town, while endeavoring to jump on the Cleveland express at St. Thomas last evening at eight o'clock, fell on the track, and the pony engine, which was in the rear of the train, ran over his legs, cutting off one at the ankle and taking off a portion of the other foot. Young Moore lies in a very low condition.

London East Notes.

Wednesday afternoon.

A man named John Donaldson was arrested by Constable Aldridge yesterday for being drunk. He was brought before Squire Peters, who remanded him till the 13th inst.

Thomas Wilson was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the County Jail by Squire Peters to-day for being a vagrant.

The Slattery broke up camp yesterday at Port Stanley, and marched to their quarters in the city. This has been one of the most successful camps ever held in London, and the men, besides doing their duty well, appeared to enjoy the entertainments provided. The citizens are in the Grove to-day, cleaning the guns and fixing things up generally. The volunteers are three cheers for Col. Cole, when he was leaving the camp yesterday.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER FROM C. H. S. CRESSMITH, ESQ., Editor of the CANTERBURY STATION, York Co., N. B.

October 18th, 1876.

MR. J. H. ROBINSON.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your letter of enquiry, I would say that your Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto-Phosphate of Lime is the best preparation of the kind I have ever seen or taken.

I was ordered by my physician to take it, and commenced using it the first of August, and since that time I have felt a different man, and also look differently. I am all for the latter, as the doctor can testify.

I was unable, in the summer, to walk any distance without fatigue. I can now walk three miles and travel all day, and feel first-rate at night, and as much as any lumber-man. Have not had one sick spell since I took your preparation, and can now make up my mind to keep well during my natural term, and think I can inflate them up to full average weight, which is 200 lbs., and will not be satisfied with less. I weighed 160 the summer was I, but, last month, I weighed 150 lbs., which is more than I have for a number of years.

The foregoing is a correct statement which I am prepared to swear to, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity in any manner.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,

(Signed) C. H. S. CRESSMITH.

We, the undersigned, hereby consent to have our names published as witnesses to the effects of Mr. Cressmith's letter, and to the genuineness of Mr. Cressmith's letter, and do assert that the foregoing statement is correct in every particular.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Second Defeat by the Stars.

The fourth and last match of the International series between the Stars, of Syracuse, and Tecumsehs was played yesterday afternoon in this city, in the presence of a small crowd. The game was not uninteresting, although it was a foregone conclusion, when it was known that Goldsmith was unable to fill his position, that victory would rest with the Stars. Doscher pitched, and for one who has had but little practice in that position this season, he acquitted himself in a most creditably, and proved himself to be a much more difficult pitcher to hit than Bradley, although, of course, he lacks as yet thorough control of the delivery of the ball. The batting up to the last innings on the Tecumseh side was weak, and the hits without significance. In the last innings they got on to McCormick, and batted him for five hits, which produced three runs, and but for an extraordinary catch by one of the Stars, the probability is that two more would have been scored. The fly was nabbed, and Burks was caught too far off his base, and, as a result, retired. From the time the prospects for a victory appeared the brightest. The Stars batted Doscher pretty hard at times, but the majority of their runs were gained by errors of the Tecumsehs, Dunnigan and Barnes being the "sinners" on this occasion. The game was not of that nature calculated to excite enthusiasm, and closed shortly before six o'clock, the following being the score:—

The second nine of the Bounding Rocks defeated the Standards yesterday forenoon by 9 to 7.

The Fourmaughts defeated the Diamonds by 9 to 0.

Dunean, formerly of the Tecumsehs, who joined the Rochesters to play with them until Crane recovered, has signed with the Oswegos.

The directors of the Buffalos the other day received a dispatch from Cincinnati, asking for what amount they would release Crowley. A reply was sent asking the Porkopolis base ball managers for what sum they would release Pike, their big hitter.

The Binghampton Cricketts have disbanded—the chirpers are no more. The Cricketts, as a nine, were strong, but lacked the great substantial of all forms of sport, money. The disbandment of the Union was daily reported, and it has been a surprise to base ball men that they could survive as long as they did. There were several fine players in the nine, none of whom, probably, will long stand in want of a position. Already one of the Cricketts has signed to play regular field for the Stars, Denny Mack having resigned on account of trouble in the nine; also that Dickerson, the left-fielder, will go to Buffalo on May 20th. The Binghamton Cricketts have come down at to the effect it will have on the championship race. It makes but little difference, however, with the leaders, as they had each won an equal number of games from the Crickets, and will therefore be reduced equally.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Tecumseh base ball club has been summoned for Saturday evening, to take into consideration important matters in connection with the team. In all probability, the Tecumsehs will be reorganized, and a number of stockholders, a motion to disband will be introduced, but whether it will prevail remains to be seen. Many arguments can be introduced in support of this contention, the most potent of which is that, if the club cannot be reorganized, it will be called upon to disburse over $2,000 within the next month. On the other hand, many, very many citizens, although intensely disgusted with the result of a recent game, would deeply regret action in that direction. They favor the re-organization of the team rather than its disbandment, and believe that under proper management, and guided by a more determined human nature better than the present incumbent appears to, the Tecumseh team may yet prove to be the leading club of the International Association. As we said in a previous issue, the services of funeral is not ours, and the stockholders may do just as they please without consulting us or taking the slightest notice of our suggestions, which, by the way, are given gratuitously in the friendliest spirit.

The Rosedale Club, of Hamilton, are, according to the Times, to play the Mutuals of this city here to-morrow afternoon.

THE BERLIN CONGRESS

End of the Eventful Meeting

A TREATY OF PEACE SIGNED ON SATURDAY.

A Summary of its Provisions

A Congratulatory Closing--Speech by Prince Bismarck.

Hope of an Assured and Lasting Peace.

EARL BEACONSFIELD STARTED FOR LONDON.

Paans of Joy Throughout Europe.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, July 14.—The Government appears busy with the details of military and civil establishments in the Island of Cyprus. The papers announce the appointment of Postmasters and other officials for the Island. It is reported that Sir Garnet Wolseley has already under consideration a scheme of a financial convention for introducing railways on the Island. Arrangements are also being made for laying a new submarine cable to Alexandria, which will give direct communication with England. Among other schemes is that of the Euphrates Valley Railway. The Duke of Sunderland and others are in active communication with the Government on the subject. It is stated if within reasonable time it appears that the Anglo-Turkish convention is successful it is possible the country will be asked to give a guarantee for the proposed railway.

London, July 15.—At yesterday's sitting of the Congress Bismarck moved that a supplementary conference be held next autumn either at Constantinople or Berlin. But Salisbury declared his inability to accede to any proposal interfering with the immediate conclusion of the papers to the English Parliament. The motion was thrown out.

Berlin, July 13.—The Congress held its last sitting to day. All the plenipotentiaries and members present in full dress, as at the opening of the Congress. The proceedings commenced at half-past two and ended at four o'clock. The treaty was signed by all the plenipotentiaries alphabetically. The secretaries attended previously at one o'clock in the afternoon to affix the plenipotentiary seal to final copy. After the signature, Andrassy warmly eulogized Bismarck's Presidency.

Bismarck thanked the plenipotentiaries for their indulgence.

The proceedings terminated with a grand court dinner this evening at Whitehall palace.

Crown Prince Frederick William congratulated the Ministers assembled upon the realization of his hope that the blessing of peace crowned their efforts. He declared that Germany's co-operation can be counted on for all that tends to secure and preserve this great benefit. He drank the health of the Plenipotentiaries who on this memorable day signed the treaty of Berlin. The only absentees from the banquet were Beaconsfield and Gortschakoff.

The German semi-official press publishing long pæans rejoicing and triumphing in the signature of the Treaty of Peace.

London, July 13.—The treaty of peace contains fifty-eight articles. The Times' version, which is declared at Berlin to be unauthentic, contains fifty-seven articles, and makes no mention of two important questions, viz., the Dardanelles and Armenia. It is probably an early copy, obtained before the final revision.

Its first twelve articles are relative to Bulgaria, which is constituted an autonomous tributary Principality under the sovereignty of the Sultan, with a Christian government and National Militia. Subsequent articles further regulate the election of a Prince by the notables of Tirnova, arrange a Provisional Government previous to his election, and lay the basis of the Government of the Province. The Russian army in Bulgaria and Roumelia shall not exceed 50,000.

The independence of Montenegro is recognized. Antivari is annexed to Montenegro. No fortifications shall be constructed except to protect Sentari. Montenegro shall have the right of free navigation of the Drina, but have no flag or ship of war. Antivari is closed to war ships of all nations.

Spizzia is incorporated with Dalmatia. The consular rights of Austria protect the merchant flag of Montenegro. The latter has adopted the Dalmatian maritime code.

The Danube is free to the commercial ships of all nations. The fortifications are to be dismantled on its banks, but ships of war shall not enter it. The Commission of the Danube, in which Servia shall be represented, is maintained. The removal of the obstacles which the iron gates and cataracts caused to navigation is entrusted to Austro-Hungary.

The ratification of the Greek frontier is handed over to Turkey and Greece for settlement between themselves. If they cannot agree they may ask help from the great Powers to act as arbitrators. The Porte engages to apply to Crete the plan of the Government of 1868. Analagous regulations adapted to local requirements shall be introduced into other parts of Turkey.

The right of official protection is accorded to agents of the powers in Turkey and the holy places, with their religious and charitable establishments. The rights conceded to France are expressly reserved, it being understood that the statu quo with respect to holy places shall not be seriously affected in any way.

Perfect liberty of religious belief is accorded in all the Provinces. The Provinces are each to bear a proportionate share of the Turkish public debt. All international arrangements concerning the Provinces remain in force.

A despatch from Berlin gives seven additional articles of the Treaty of Peace, making 46 in all. These principally relate to the arrangements in Asia, which are already known.

Article 63 provides that the Treaties of 1856 and 1871 shall be maintained in all those dispositions which are not abrogated or modified by the present treaty. This article is considered very favorable for England.

London, July 15.—A Constantinople special states that Osman Pasha visited Gen. Tolleben and asserted him the Turks harbored no hostile intentions, and he would do all that was possible to avoid a conflict.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Latest Liverpool Review.

London, July 13.—A leading grain Liverpool circular says:—

The grain markets have been steady this week; some were quoted 1s. dearer for wheat, the agricultural supply being exceedingly small. The off-coast and ocean passage trade was also firmer. Some descriptions were 9d. to 1s. dearer. On the spot and in distant markets there is still a fair demand since Tuesday at the extreme rates of that day, and in some instances a trifling advance. Maize was in fair request for on the spot and future arrival. The market to-day was fairly attended. The millers bought considerable red American wheats at an advance of 3d. to 4d. over the currencies of Tuesday. Whites were in moderate request and improved only 1d. to 2d. per cental. Flour was held for 6d. advance, without moving freely. Corn was steady for the consumptive demand, and was also taken to some extent for forward delivery, in each case at an improvement of 6d. to 9d. per quarter.

England in Egypt.

Everything Done Under British Dictation.

New York, July 14.—A Cairo letter says the whole of Egypt is in English hands, including the navy, coast guard and every thing else. The Khedive might as well abdicate in favor of an English protectorate, as everything is now done under English dictation.

The Orange Celebration in Britain.

London, July 13.—The Orange demonstrations throughout the Kingdom were quiet, except at Wishaw, Scotland, where the military were called out. About fifty persons were injured.

FRANCE.

THE CHESS TOURNAMENT.

Paris, July 13.—In the Chess Tournament Winawer, the Russian, still leads, with 12½ games won. Mackenzie, of New York, is seventh in the list, with 8½ games won, and Mason, of New York, tenth, with 6½ games won.

THE TELEPHONE.

Paris, July 14.—An American telephone is in full blast between here and Versailles.

OFFENDING JOURNALISTS.

The police continue arresting journalists at the Exhibition for making memorandums.

AFRICA.

RESULTS OF THE KAFFIR WAR.

London, July 13.—The Cape Town Standard and Mail, summing up the results of the war with the natives in South Africa, says that only a few small parties of the enemy remain. It will not be long before they will be dispatched. A number of chiefs have been taken prisoners, others killed or surrendered, and the only man of influence at liberty is Kreli. The loss of life of the insurgents is much more severe than the natives experienced in any previous outbreak. It may be said their power as a people has been utterly destroyed.

NEW CALEDONIA.

THE NATIVE UPRISING QUELLED.

Paris, July 12.—The Governor of New Caledonia informed the Government by telegraph of the revolt of the natives, and reports that he is master of the situation. The Minister of Marine replied that reinforcements would be immediately sent from Saigon and France.

Railway By-Law Carried.

Harriston, Ont., July 13.—The by-law to aid the Stratford & Huron Railway was carried to day.

Burglary at Drummondville.

THREE OF THE VILLAINS CAPTURED BY ONTARIO POLICE.

Their Immediate Trial and Sentence.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press.

Clifton, Ont., July 14.—On Friday evening Chief of Police McDougall received information that the dwelling house of Theodore Woodruff, Postmaster, Drummondville, was to be burglarized some time during the night. Accordingly he took his force, also Gorman and Grey, specials, and placed them to watch the house and await the result of the information. Shortly before one o'clock a spirited team and light conveyance drove past the house and stopped about four hundred yards up the road in a secluded place. The rig contained three strangers, one of them remained with the team, the other two came to the house and by the use of jimmy forced open one of the windows and entered. The intention of the Chief was to let them get properly to work and then close on them, but through some movements by some one on the inside of the house the robbers got alarmed, jumped through the window, and made for the rig. One of them, Joseph Birbeck, was captured while making for the rig, the other two managed to get away in the direction of the rig, and dispatched Officers Young, Gorman and Wynn after them. Although by this time they had close on an hour's start, no rig being handy for the police, they were finally captured, Gorman and Young catching Geo. Forsythe in Thorold, nine miles from where they started at 3.15 a.m. The only one now in custody is Walter Gow, who had the team and still in his possession. He, however, was captured by officer Wynn at 4.30 a.m. Each of the prisoners, when arrested, had a loaded seven-shooter on his person. Saturday at 2 p.m. they were brought before Magistrate Hill. They elected to be tried by him, all three pleading guilty. Gow, who was known to the police, and who put up the job, was sentenced to five years in the Penitentiary, the other two, Birbeck and Forsythe getting three years each. They were taken to Welland jail by Wynn and Gorman on Saturday afternoon, where they were delivered to the jailor. The whole job being done so quietly and with such success, the Ontario police here are being congratulated by many.

WEATHER REPORTS.

Fifty Cases of Sunstroke at St. Louis—Twenty Fatal.

St. Louis, July 13.—Ten sunstrokes this forenoon and four deaths. Weather blazing hot; thermometer 96° to 100°.

St. Louis, Mo., July 14.—This has been the hottest day of the season. Thirty cases of sunstroke were reported at the City Dispensary and Hospital during the day. Fifteen deaths occurred to-day from this cause alone, and 22 burials.

Quincy, Ill., July 14.—Since yesterday morning there has been seven cases of sunstroke here, five of which are fatal.

St. Louis, Mo., July 14.—There were 50 cases of sunstroke to-day and 20 deaths.

THE FISHERY AWARD.

Kellogg's Defence—Dalfosse's Explanations.

Boston, July 13.—The Herald publishes the defence of Kellogg, the American member of the Halifax Fishery Commission, in which he says that Minister Thornton had placed him under social obligations; also denying the report that Kellogg is of unsound mind. It is added that the award was first fixed by the other Commissioners at four and a half millions, and that Kellogg refused to sign when they raised it one million. It is reported that Delfosse being asked how it was that he had agreed to make the United States pay $5,500,000, the Belgian answered that it was a great international question. "I did not go there to listen to the testimony of a parcel of fishermen. We took the various totals submitted, and split the difference. A prominent citizen, who attended the session of the Commission says the great mistake in the first place was the fixing upon Halifax as the place of holding sitting. The feeling in Halifax was that our Government had got in the Geneva award several millions more than it was entitled to, and that this surplus should be restored in a way of compensation for alleged fishery damage.

Auburn, N.Y., July 13.—Charles E. Courtney held a consultation with Hanlan's representatives at Cape Vincent. A reporter of the Auburn Morning News learned from him this afternoon that nothing definite was settled beyond the fact that a race was to be rowed some time this fall. No agreement was signed, and no positive agreement as to the time, place, or amount of money to be put up. Courtney will write to Hanlan next week with a definite proposition.

Steamer Day at New York

New York, July 13.—Eight ocean steamers, fully freighted, sail to-day. Shipments include a large number of live cattle and a large quantity of domestic dry goods besides usual assorted cargoes. 373 saloon passengers sail for Europe to-day, the smallest number for ten weeks.

Young Man Drowned at Chatham.

Fee Dominion Line.

Chatham, July 14.—A young man named James Pallucci, aged 26 years, son of Geo. Pallucci, farmer of the township of Dover, was drowned in the river last night below Third Street Bridge while getting beyond his depth and being unable to swim.

Dastardly Attempt at Murder.

Man Shot from Behind by a Companion.

Escape of the Assassin—The Country People in Chase.

Napanee, Ont., July 14.—One of the boldest attempts to commit murder was perpetrated yesterday afternoon between four and five o'clock on the highway near Marysville Corners, eight miles west of Napanee. A young man named Samuel Kelly, a Young Briton, while passing along the road came up with a man named James White, a Catholic, who sat on the fence. Kelly remarked "I saw some person looking for you today." White replied, "All right," and named over two or three persons. At last he asked it it was Rothlon, a policeman, of Shannonville. Kelly answered in the affirmative, when White said, "Oh, I shoot lands with him to-day. It is all right." White then entered into conversation with Kelly, asking him how many loads of brick he drew a day. He was answered three—had drawn two and would draw another—when White got off the fence, remarking, "As you are going to return I will go down with you." White got up on the rear of the wagon, and drew his revolver without the least provocation and deliberately fired at Kelly from behind. Kelly looked back and exclaimed, "You have shot me." He remarked "No" jumped off the waggon, put the revolver in his pocket, and ran across the fields. The bullet passed between his arm and body and struck the centre part of the left thigh, passing angularly down towards the lower part of the knee. Dr. Newton, of Millpoint, was called to and has probed the wound here, but the ball is imbedded deeply into the flesh and cannot be extracted yet. Kelly has no use of his leg and lies in a critical condition. He assured your correspondent to-day, made by same one on the inside of the house the robbers got alarmed, jumped through the window, and made for the rig. One of them, Joseph Birbeck, was captured while making for the rig, the other two managed to get away in the direction of the rig, and dispatched Officers Young, Gorman and Wynn after them. Although by this time they had close on an hour's start, no rig being handy for the police, they were finally captured, Gorman and Young catching Geo. Forsythe in Thorold, nine miles from where they started at 3.15 a.m. The only one now in custody is Walter Gow, who had the team and still in his possession. He, however, was captured by officer Wynn at 4.30 a.m. Each of the prisoners, when arrested, had a loaded seven-shooter on his person. Saturday at 2 p.m. they were brought before Magistrate Hill. They elected to be tried by him, all three pleading guilty. Gow, who was known to the police, and who put up the job, was sentenced to five years in the Penitentiary, the other two, Birbeck and Forsythe getting three years each. They were taken to Welland jail by Wynn and Gorman on Saturday afternoon, where they were delivered to the jailor. The whole job being done so quietly and with such success, the Ontario police here are being congratulated by many.

WEATHER REPORTS.

Fifty Cases of Sunstroke at St. Louis—Twenty Fatal.

St. Louis, July 13.—Ten sunstrokes this forenoon and four deaths. Weather blazing hot; thermometer 96° to 100°.

St. Louis, Mo., July 14.—This has been the hottest day of the season. Thirty cases of sunstroke were reported at the City Dispensary and Hospital during the day. Fifteen deaths occurred to-day from this cause alone, and 22 burials.

Quincy, Ill., July 14.—Since yesterday morning there has been seven cases of sunstroke here, five of which are fatal.

St. Louis, Mo., July 14.—There were 50 cases of sunstroke to-day and 20 deaths.

THE FISHERY AWARD.

Kellogg's Defence—Dalfosse's Explanations.

Boston, July 13.—The Herald publishes the defence of Kellogg, the American member of the Halifax Fishery Commission, in which he says that Minister Thornton had placed him under social obligations; also denying the report that Kellogg is of unsound mind. It is added that the award was first fixed by the other Commissioners at four and a half millions, and that Kellogg refused to sign when they raised it one million. It is reported that Delfosse being asked how it was that he had agreed to make the United States pay $5,500,000, the Belgian answered that it was a great international question. "I did not go there to listen to the testimony of a parcel of fishermen. We took the various totals submitted, and split the difference. A prominent citizen, who attended the session of the Commission says the great mistake in the first place was the fixing upon Halifax as the place of holding sitting. The feeling in Halifax was that our Government had got in the Geneva award several millions more than it was entitled to, and that this sur

SIR JOHN MACDONALD ANTI-BRITISH!

One would think on reading some of the remarks regarding the national policy, that it was the intention of the Conservative leader to embroil Canada with the United States and cause a separation between the Dominion and the Mother Country. Of course all this is got up for either sensational purposes, or originates in sheer ignorance. The United States fix their own tariff without consulting the well-being or prosperity of Canada, and a perfectly good right they have to do so. It is pretty much with Governments as with individuals. They adopt such a course of trade and impose such duties as the necessities of the revenue, or the progress of the industries of the country may demand, and they leave their neighbours to follow the same course. If the United States have so fixed their commercial intercourse with Canada and other countries as the exigencies of the exchequer or the prosperity of all ranks of the people require, she is no doubt prepared to concede the same rights to others as she claims for herself. It cannot be construed into an offence for the people of the neighbouring Republic, that we should take counsel of our necessities, and place our trade relations with other countries upon such a basis as the demands of our exchequer, the happiness of the people and the prosperity of the country require. We may even take a leaf from their book, acknowledge the useful lessons they have taught us, apply this lesson to our affairs, thank them for the information we have obtained and all this certainly without giving or dreaming of offence to the United States. They who raise such an issue or use such an argument are either very poor logicians or very poor Canadians. Who would be a Canadian citizen with the conviction forced upon him that we dare not make our own laws, nor modify our own tariff, without the consent of the United States' Government? Better a thousand times annexation than such national servility as this. Why, the United States would be the first to despise us, should we submit to such control or dictation from a foreign State.

But it appears that we have independent legislation and we have not. We are told in one breath Canada possesses an independent Legislature—independent to act on every question that affects her interests as a nationality, but in the next breath we are also told that this liberty only consists in going in a certain direction. "Your Legislature is certainly free and untrammelled to make laws respecting Canada and Canadian interests, but this freedom resolves itself into doing as you are told, and acting in accordance with Imperial wishes." Now we have no intention of subscribing to any such doctrine. Great Britain has no intention of raising such pretensions, nor of making a mockery of the liberty accorded to this country. So long as free trade does dominate in her commercial policy she would no doubt like to see her colonial empire follow her lead and adopt the same principles. But the Imperial Government will never interfere with Canada's right to initiate and continue her own trade policy. The statesmen of Britain are, some of them at least, well enough acquaint with the difference that obtains between such a young, growing country as Canada, and an old, populous, wealthy and manufacturing country like England. These know well that there are many of their laws, customs and conditions that are not adapted to the state of society in which we are now placed, and not a few will admit that this question of free trade is one on which a diversity of views may well prevail. We have not fear, therefore, that the British Government will desire us to depart in peace, because we may, in a few months, rightly or wrongly, determine, that a certain amount of protection is necessary to encourage manufactures in Canada.

Then, that the terms arising from the disapproval of our trade policy by the Imperial and the United States Governments were not enough, we are warned that a disruption of the union may be anticipated as certain to follow from the adoption of a national policy. The Maritime Provinces will certainly secede from the Canadian Confederation, should any trade policy be adopted which they may deem inimical to their local interests. This, in the first place, is a gratuitous insult to the honor and intelligence of this portion of the Dominion. They are fully represented in the House of Commons and in the Senate, and to say in advance, that they are so petulant that they will break off from the union because they cannot have everything as they wish, is to represent them as statesmen of the George Brown type. They must be content to bow to the will of the majority, whatever that may be, and they know enough to understand it as their duty to consult for the general interest of the Dominion first, and for the interest of the several provinces afterward. But we are not aware that any one of the Conservative leaders, whose words bear the stamp of authority, has ever proposed to lay on duties on American goods or productions of from 30 to 85 per cent. This has been got up to scare the people who do not understand the nature of the proposed change. Enough of protection can be given to the manufactures and other products of the country without occasioning any inconvenience to the people of the Maritime Provinces. Besides, after the next election when the new Ministry is formed, they will have a voice in it as potent and as deservedly respected as any other section of the Dominion. Such men as Dr. Tupper, Mr. Tilley, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Macdonald, of Pictou, and Mr. Pope may well be entrusted with the interests of their own section of the Dominion, and whether in the Government or members of the House, they are quite able to make their influence felt, and what these assert to the people they represent need not hesitate to accept. Whether the national policy be the panacea for our present ills or not, this policy will have to be met with weightier and more convincing arguments than these, before the people of Canada are led to distrust it.

The annual report of the Deputy Master of the Royal Mint of Great Britain shows that last year the amount of new gold coin struck at the mint in London was less than that of light coin withdrawn for recoinage, so that there was an actual decrease of £458,779 in the circulation. There was no new sovereigns struck at all, and only £1,-097,741 in half sovereigns, while £1,857,500 of worn coin were returned for recoinage. Taking the last three years together, the annual average of new gold coinage has been £1,106,288 in sovereigns and £916,484 in half sovereigns, or £2,022,740 in all, while the average surplus of new coin over old withdrawn has been £580,388. But during the same period there has been an importation of gold coin and bullion in the custom house returns. It is curious to notice that in France during the same three years, where specie payment has been in suspense, and the double standard is supposed to prevail, the coinage of gold has been much greater than in Great Britain. Last year it was an equivalent of more than £10,000,000, in 20 and 10 franc pieces, and the average for three years has been equal to £8,887,817 per year. Meantime, the silver coinage of France has been entirely suspended, which shows how far it is a double-standard country in practice, whatever it may be in theory.

The fashionable game at the Paris clubs is baccarat, which seems to exercise an extraordinary fascination upon many French men who have not hitherto shown any propensity to gambling. Letter-writers say that gambling has grown to be quite a mania in the French capital, owing partly to the exasperation by a number of young noblemen of the highest rank and partly to the national love of excitement. The baccarat tables are crowded nightly, and the game is often kept up until 10 or 11 o'clock the following morning. Many grades of life are represented there—venerable merchants and bankers are seen side by side with dissolute young men of rank, journalists and litterateurs with distinguished savants, actors with spectators on the Bourse, theatrical managers with army officers, manufacturers with landed proprietors, advocates with scientists, abbes with physicians, deputies with poets. Baccarat is a sort of French faro, and is entirely simple. It somewhat resembles lansquenet, having no other interest than is derived from the stakes. At the head of a long table, divided into two parts by a line drawn lengthwise, sits the banker, with several packs of cards in his hand, while the betters stand around him. He draws cards from the pack, putting one for the letters on the right, and another for himself on the left and the party who whose card or cards bring nine points or the number nearest to nine; each party having the privilege of calling for supplementary cards to improve its number. Some nights single players have won or lost 50,000 to 60,000 francs, which is a great deal for France.

An unprecedented arrival in St. John's (N. F.) harbor took place. Two greenhouses of large size were observed sporting with great vigor and dashing about in a frantic and bewildered manner in the waters of the harbor. They had probably been tempted to pass the narrow entrance of the harbor while in pursuit of caplin, which are now around the coast in enormous shoals. After awhile one of them escaped and made its way to the sea, but the other, being pursued by a boat's crew from Her Majesty's steamship Sirius with a view to capture it, headed for the western side of the harbor, and at length got entangled in some piles and became completely powerless, its tail having become fast between two stakes. Hopes were passed round it and it was dragged ashore, where it soon died. It proved to be a full-sized grampus, 25 feet 4 inches in length, and 15 feet in girth at its thickest part. The captors put it on exhibition for three days, and realized a considerable sum by the show.

One of the first fruits of the Cuban settlement has appeared in the form of a decree concerning the election of Deputies to the Spanish Cortes. Hereafter the island of Cuba will be represented in the Cortes by one Deputy for each 40,000 of free inhabitants. The use of the word "free" should be noted. According to the latest trustworthy census the total population of Cuba is 1,359,458, of which 366,550 are slaves and Chinese. But leaving out these, and making due allowance for the ravages of war, it will yet be true that the Cuban deputation will be numerically strong. This is a concession to the "Ever-faithful Island" which should have been made long ago. And, though it may be hampered with conditions and hindrances, it will be joyfully hailed by the people of Cuba as a boon of great value. It is an experiment in the management of Cuba; and, being only an experiment, we can assume the conservatism which exacts of the electors a property qualification and the attainment of the age of 25 years.

The electric light threatens, since the introduction of Paul Jablochoff's improvements in its production, to become a very dangerous rival to the gas light. In Paris it has taken its place in the great weaving establishment of Pouyer-Quertier, in the machine shops of Mignon and Rouart, in many depots, theatres, large retail shops, and even in some streets; l'Avenue de l'Opera is lighted with electric light, and preparations are made to employ it also in the Place de la Concorde. In Berlin it is used in the factories of Siemens & Halske, in Madrid the Puerta del Sol is lighted by it. Everywhere it is found cheaper than gas, though decidedly more trying to the eyes.

Do dreams ever come true? A lad named Crowley, an inmate of the New York Juvenile Asylum, dreamed on Monday night that he was struck by lightning and killed. He related the story at the breakfast table next morning. In less than an hour after, while playing ball, he was struck by the bat, and killed instantly.

ALTERATIONS IN THE CRIMINAL CODE.

It has long been matter for regret that the criminal law should be the repository of much that is incongruous and in some cases cruel. A noted master of jurisprudence in England, Sir James Stephen, has long since devoted himself to its ameliioration, and has now given to the public suggestions for modifications, which are to be embodied in a Bill and submitted to Parliament. By this method of procedure neither the profession nor the public will be taken by surprise, but time given for ample and intelligent discussion of the alterations proposed. They are seventy-two in number, not including suggestions for the removal of seventeen existing distinctions between felony and misdemeanor. Take, for example, a few of these proposed changes. At the present time a person charged with felony has the right to make twenty peremptory challenges, but one charged with a misdemeanor none at all. The provision under which the offences now going under the name of felony and misdemeanor will be reduced to a single list of thirty-five challenges in cases when treason is charged; twenty when murder is charged, and six in other cases. As the law stands, a man charged with felony has no right to a copy of the indictment against him, though if a misdemeanor is charged he has. This injustice is to be removed, and a copy of the indictment furnished to the accused in all cases. Juries now cannot separate in cases of felony, though they may in those of misdemeanor. In future the question of separation is to be left to the discretion of the court in all such trials. The question of costs is one that has much to do with an efficient administration of justice. A person who complain proposes to take costs in all cases. As the law now stands, if a man is convicted of more offences than one, he may in all cases be sentenced to any criminal punishment, with hard labour. By section 15 of the new act, a scale is provided, according to which a sentence of penal servitude might be passed in such cases. By the existing law a married woman committing a crime in her husband's presence is presumed to have acted under his coercion, and his accused thereby. It is doubtful to what crimes this rule extends, and coercion is not held to be an excuse for crime in the case of persons other than married women. Section 22 one is to be laid down for all persons alike, whether married women or not. The rule is believed to express the existing law in all cases other than the case of murder. The existence of provocation to acts of violence, even though leading to murder, is to be taken into account. By the present law hardly any provocation seems to be sufficient to reduce murder to manslaughter, except a blow, or the sight of adultery committed with the offender's wife. By Section 136 the jury would in all cases have to consider the question of provocation given such as to deprive the offender of the power of self-control. This proposition has danger lurking within it, and as some would think, a tendency to make murder more properly left to the Court to express an opinion upon. The law of theft is at present extremely complicated and technical, and dates back as far as 1827. As a general rule is not a criminal offence, though a great number of exceptions to it have been made by legislation. In Sir James Stephen's Bill criminal breach of trust is made an offence in general terms, and the whole law is recast in a simpler form. Several minor alterations are made in the law of theft. Forgery is also defined so to abolish the present law of supportation, which involves several technicalities, and to make it clear that the offence of forgery is complete though the payee may mean to redeem them. An increase in the severity of punishment is provided for in certain cases. Official corruption is to be punished with fourteen years' penal servitude if the object is to interfere with the administration of justice. In case of perjury the offence is to be punishable by penal servitude for life in some cases, and by fourteen years' penal servitude in others. Conspiracy to accuse persons of crime is often resorted to in order to levy "black mail." This abominable offence is to be met with fourteen years' penal servitude if the crime to which the accusation relates is punishable with death, &c. In other cases seven years. Conspiracy to pervert justice, such as tampering with juries or witnesses, will subject the offenders to seven years' penal servitude. By the present law the corrupt taking of a reward for helping a person to recover property illegally obtained is punishable by a maximum of seven years' penal servitude. By section 229 this is qualified by a proviso that the punishment is not to exceed that with which the offender is charged. In case of perjury, &c., committed in the course of a trial, the punishment is to be left to the discretion of the court in all such trials. The question of costs is one that has much to do with an efficient administration of justice. A person who complain proposes to take costs in all cases. As the law now stands, if a man is convicted of more offences than one, he may in all cases be sentenced to any criminal punishment, with hard labour. By section 229 this is qualified by a proviso that the punishment is not to exceed that with which the offender is charged in the original offender. As the law stands, a man who steals a dog is liable to six months' imprisonment; a man who takes a reward for restoring the dog to seven years' penal servitude. Some doubt has been expressed as to the civil liability of a man who has committed a criminal act. This is to be removed by Sec. 284, which provides that the civil remedy is not to be suspended by reason of the criminal character of the act. By Section 287 it is made an order compensation not exceeding £100 to any person whose property has been injured by any felony. It is now proposed that this power be extended to all injuries either upon person or property by any indictable offence. Many other modifications are to be made, but enough has been indicated to show that the criminal law is to be relieved of many of the absurd accretions to which it has been subjected. This is a great and good work; one that has long been needed, but neglected, while matters of secondary and party interests have been made the subject of long-continued and painful struggles. A wonder will be impossible, if England sented to deal with the matter and relieve the criminal code of many of the incongruities by which it has been vitiated, the government and legislature will have suggestions made. Recent events in Europe have interfered with the introduction of the Bill, but even if it does not become law this year it should do so next. There is room for modifications which Canada will be able to profit by hereafter.

Some of the Parisians who gaze upon Nasar ed Din might find the edge of sycophancy a little dulled by thinking of the Persian's visit to Europe as "Lightning Rod Men," whose nefarious practices throughout the country have brought him justly into disrepute and contempt. Nasar ed Din should think the proceedings at Montreal would make him wish he had the control of the electric fluid himself, so that he could conduct it safely into the earth, as an easy trough conducts water from the roof of a building.

Every rod is erected under the supervision of experienced mechanics, and a guarantee given to each purchaser, that the rods will protect buildings against destruction by lightning; failing to do so, the money will be refunded with interest thereon, at any time within ten years.

The works of the Company being permanently located, and the officers and stockholders being men of well known integrity and business ability, are guarantees to the public that all orders entrusted to the company will be faithfully and satisfactorily executed, and that the company will fulfil the purpose for which they are constructed.

Full experience is now afforded the people to protect their homes against the ravages of lightning, and rest firmly assured that no swindling will occur.

This Company pays special attention to erecting Conductors on School Houses, Churches, Halls and other Public Buildings.

Globe buildings cannot be protected in any other way against lightning except by Good Conductors or Rods, and since the business of erecting lightning rods has been heretofore carried on by a class of wandering peddlers known as "Lightning Rod Men," whose nefarious practices throughout the country have brought this laudable industry almost into disgrace, and well might shake the confidence of the public in the utility of lightning rods, this company has been incorporated with a large paid up capital and established works in the City of London to manufacture and erect lightning rods in a skilful and workmanlike manner.

The rods of this company are made from pure copper, which has been proven by actual experiment to be the best conductor of lightning.

The office of a lightning rod is not to attract lightning, but to conduct it safely into the earth, so as to save trough conducts water from the roof of a building.

THE MEETING IN AYLMER TO-DAY.

Position of the Liberal-Conservatives

Aylmer, July 13.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—In the St. Thomas Journal of last Friday it is announced that Mr. McDougall will address a public meeting at this place on Monday evening, in which it says "the Conservatives of this locality are greatly exercised over this announcement, and are making great efforts to import an Opposition speaker." A more palpable falsehood never appeared in the same Journal, although it is famed for such.

It says, again, "Why don't they invite their own candidate?" The "candidate" looks upon the occasion as insignificant. And again, it continues, "Are they ashamed of Mr. Arkell's abilities?" They are neither ashamed of him or his abilities, but, on the contrary, proud of him in every respect, and he will be enough found to place him at the head of the polls.

The object of the article is to give value to the presence of Mr. McDougall, but, unfortunately, it is as little in the power of the Tory as it is in himself to make his presence on this occasion of paying value, as the Conservatives and the rest are so thoroughly tired of such "organized hypocrites."

There is far less concern on the part of the Conservatives and many others of the locality over the arrival of Mr. McDougall, and what ever flock may accompany him, than there would be over a herd of tramps into our village.

Neither Radicals nor Conservatives ever heard one word of inviting an outsider to exhort anything Mr. McDougall may have to say, as there are sufficient material in the locality to do that if it is seen fit.

Although the Ancient Insurance Agent is on the war path, and Jeremiah Jerk out with his usual false facts and everything else to soften the road for the Radical candidate, they will find no ardulous and very unprofitable task before them to convince the unbiased of this county that the Grits are completely and honest in dispensing the affairs of the country.

In bringing this matter before the numerous readers of the FREE PRESS I wish to show that it is only a blue blot endeavoring to stain and damage the cause of the Grit party, and fully in accord with their usual tactics. GITE.

Injustice at Montreal.

Ilderton, July 13th, 1878.

DEAR FREE PRESS.—I am a Reformer and have always been so, but I am pained to confess that the party which I have hitherto so strenuously advocated "has been weighed in the balance and found wanting," so far as doing justice to the Orangemen of our country. I might have said more properly the Protestant population of our country, as not being an Orangeman I do not wish to write as a partisan of that body. I was much pleased, sir, to find your comments in this morning's FREE PRESS regarding the trouble at Montreal. Your remarks will find a response in the heart of every loyal, woman and child who loves honor and justice—unless we wish to be down-trodden and to subserve all our freedom of action, our liberties as a people.

I am surprised that our people do not feel more keenly on this subject. But they appear to be blindfolded completely. The time will come, sir, when they will have to rouse from their apathy to redeem their true position. We, as British subjects, are the inheritors of our liberties. I should think the proceedings at Montreal would make the people of this country how our liberties have been trampled in the dust by a partizan Mayor. What has come of Riel? He is now doing that he did not order the military to march with the Orangemen, and thus give him fair play in that city. Let the issue be put as it will, he has proved himself to be contemptible, as was also his reply to the Orange deputation which waited on him in Toronto. I should like to ask him why he refused to grant incorporation to their society. Look how the Orangemen were protected in New York in 1871. Are we less worthy of protection, who are subjects of Her Majesty?

VINDEX.

Rundall, Farr & Co.

From the Berlin News, July 11.

SIR,—The removal of the business of the late firm of Rundall, Farr & Co. from Hespeler to Massachusetts seems destined to play a part in the game of Canadian politics during the coming election. If I may judge by the references made to the subject by certain politicians, they are perfectly welcome to make any use they like of the facts, either as arguments for or against protection, but I must ask them to stick to facts.

One leading politician, living not 100 miles from Guelph, is reported to have said that he received some fabulous sum by the way of bonus to induce us to move to Holyoke; another prominent western candidate while doing duty at the last meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade, circulated the story that the business wasn't very prosperous in its new field, and he had some stock in the new company which he would sell at a very low figure; and some of the leading "Grit" newspapers went so far as to say that we had become bankrupt since our removal to Holyoke.

In answer to these parties, I would say we never received a cent of bonus to induce us to move, that the gallant delegate to the Dominion Board of Trade never had a dollar of stock in the company to sell at any price, and cannot buy a share to-day, except at a premium, and that my late firm have every reason to be glad they made a change of location. The company employs over 400 hands, a large portion of whom you may be surprised to learn are French Canadians. It is one of the most successful of the many prosperous manufacturing corporations in Massachusetts, has a very large regard, and turns out its goods to full confidence of finding a market. I would say further, as an item of news, showing the absurdity of some of the Free Trade arguments, that they have made a line of goods the past season which (or similar materials) seems to have found its way into Canada, and while this class of goods is advertised in Hamilton (as American made) at 25c per yard, it is sold in Springfield, Mass., at 12½c!

As senior partner in the old firm, and having 6 large stakes in the new company, I feel interested in thus contradicting the many absurd stories circulated about us, and hope we have heard the last of them.

Yours truly,
GEO. RANDALL.

The Value of Cyprus.

From the London Spectator, June 29.

Situated just on the coast of Syria, commanding the sea-ways to the Gulf of Scanderoon, and the mouth of the Orontes, and, therefore, the Mediterranean entrance to the Valley of the Euphrates, Cyprus, with its deep harbors, offers singular advantages to a power interested in India, but unable for the moment to secure possession of its natural gateway, the Valley of the Nile. It would be impossible, if England were once seated there, for any power to attack Egypt or Syria by sea without her full consents, while the island itself, as a possession, offers some singular advantages. It is probably the one place in the world which could be easily turned into a storehouse of timber for the national dock-yards. Much of its mountain ranges is already clothed with forests, which belong, we believe, to the State; the oak grows in profusion, and the cedar of Lebanon would be in a home where it would need no acclimatization. The forests could be protected by the State with any needful care, without interfering with the people, who have been reduced by oppression and misgovernment to 100,000, perhaps a twelfth of their proper number, and who for years to come would be employed in repeopling and reubbuing the beautiful valleys, where every cereal and every known fruit will reach perfection. The tobacco plant and the apple will grow in Cyprus almost side by side. With a little care and energy in the formation of tanks, on the South India plan, to be formed by the torrents which now waste themselves down the hills, Cyprus would have all the natural advantages of Jamaica, a better climate, and a population now degraded indeed, but once among the most industrious and enterprising in the world. Within ten years, in Anglo-Indian hands, the island would pay all expenses, provide much of the wood needed for the dockyards, and be in a fair way toward that prosperity which to be full must wait for the recovery of the population, now depressed by misgovernment, debased by want of freedom, and declining in number through want of the means of subsistence. It is useless to be industrious when if a man prospers his prosperity enriches a Pasha; but under British rule, Cyprus would supply half the cities of Eastern Europe with cut marble, fine tobacco, fruit, and the liqueurs for which the sweet grapes of the island, now used to make abominable wine, are so well suited. The island itself might be a splendid garden, thrive the size of Suffolk, and from the extraordinary variety of its climates a sanitarium for the wealthy invalids of Europe, even if we could not succeed in the very interesting experiment it invites—the formation for the first time in our history of a European colony.

GLOBE LIGHTNING ROD COMPY,

J. F. MASON ..... President
C. R. HUNT ..... Vice-President
T. H. SMALLMAN ..... Sec. and Treas

Since buildings cannot be protected in any other way against lightning except by Good Conductors or Rods, and since the business of erecting lightning rods has been heretofore carried on by a class of wandering peddlers known as "Lightning Rod Men," whose nefarious practices throughout the country have brought this laudable industry almost into disgrace, and well might shake the confidence of the public in the utility of lightning rods, this company has been incorporated with a large paid up capital and established works in the City of London to manufacture and erect lightning rods in a skilful and workmanlike manner.

The rods of this company are made from pure copper, which has been proven by actual experiment to be the best conductor of lightning.

The office of a lightning rod is not to attract lightning, but to conduct it safely into the earth, so as to save trough conducts water from the roof of a building.

Every rod is erected under the supervision of experienced mechanics, and a guarantee given to each purchaser, that the rods will protect buildings against destruction by lightning; failing to do so, the money will be refunded with interest thereon, at any time within ten years.

The works of the Company being permanently located, and the officers and stockholders being men of well known integrity and business ability, are guarantees to the public that all orders entrusted to the company will be faithfully and satisfactorily executed, and that the company will fulfil the purpose for which they are constructed.

Full experience is now afforded the people to protect their homes against the ravages of lightning, and rest firmly assured that no swindling will occur.

Samples of rods can be seen at the Company's City Office, 84½ Richmond St., or at the Works, King St., London, Ont.

This Company pays special attention to erecting Conductors on School Houses, Churches, Halls and other Public Buildings.

The Shadow of a Dream.

A STORY.

I never had any thought of danger during the whole twenty years I made the journey; nothing ever happened to me; and then to think the very first time this youngster goes, he—but I must begin at the beginning.

The way of our bank at Charvendon was just this. We had several branches at distant places—small towns, you understand, where there was not enough business done to pay for keeping a clerk constantly on the spot; so we only had an office, and only opened it on market days, once a week.

One of us used to go over in the morning and return at night. The railway helped us to three of these journeys, but the fourth, to Mereslene, had to be made by gig. The place lay fifteen miles off, in the very heart of the downs, and the road ran all in among them. And sometimes over their topmost shoulders. It was for the most part lonely, and in winter sometimes very rough and bleak. I had to do the day's business at Mereslene, but, beyond bitter winds, snow, and rain, nothing ever befell me, as I have said, for twenty years. In the summer it was a pleasant drive; in winter, of course, in bad weather, it was an unpleasant one—that was all the impression it ever made upon me. Young Chase, however, never seemed to fancy it; from the first, when it was talked about for him to do, he did not like the idea. He told me so, and I laughed at him. I said, "Oh! you won't mind it; after a bit you'll think nothing of it, no more than I do." You understand, he was not used to the country; he had been born and bred in London, and they drafted him from our chief office there, down here, for the sake of his health. He had been ailing a long while; the doctors said he had to live out of town; and, being a trusty servant and liked by our manager, an exchange was arranged.

He had been at Charvendon about six months and did not seem much the better for the change. He was tall and nonsecular, but a thin, pale-faced, large-eyed, fellow, always fond of reading Shakespeare and the like, and had a dreamy, absent kind of way with him at times, and was particularly fond, in his leisure, of wandering over our downs with his book. He often used to talk to me about them, saying how beautiful they were, and that no sort of country that he had ever been in had impressed him so much. I was afraid I did not sympathise with him; the downs had never been anything to me. Indeed, I don't know that I ever gave them a thought, till he used to speak about them; and yet I have daily had to them nearly all my life.

Well, as I was saying, he had been with us six months, and it was just about the beginning of November, when I was attacked by rheumatism. They said if I did not take care, I should be laid up, and that I must not expose myself the next day coming cold weather. This led to young Chase's having to do my work at Mereslene. So I drove him over one week, to show him the road, and the way the work was done, that he might be able to take my place the following week and for the rest of the winter.

Now it was when this was settled that he first seemed to shirk the job. He told me that he had been constantly dreaming about the downs, and, as he seemed to say, one particular part of them. Being myself, he had never seen the place, didn't know there was such a place really; but he said he had dreamed of it over and over again, and it always made him uncomfortable. It was a big chalk-cutting, he said, past which the road wound up the side of a hill from one of the bottoms or valleys. In a sort of way, he described the place to me, but, bless your heart, I never paid any heed to it; I didn't recognise it as any place I knew; and it was only when I was driving over the Mereslene, that I found out what he meant.

We were exactly half way on our journey, and I had begun on to what are like as the Whitways—that is, several narrow chalk tracks which start white and wide across the turf, and run side by side with the road for some distance as it descends the steep hill past a great chalk-cutting on either hand. Dene's Gate turnpike at the bottom of the hill being the nearest; and when we came to the beginning of the descent, where we could see down in the valley—there's a splendid view, mind you, there—he almost frightened the life out of me by suddenly jumping from his seat and exclaiming, "There! there it is! that's the place; that's the very place I've seen a hundred times before in my dreams! I have seen it every night for a month past!"

Sure enough, the road passes the chalk-cutting, but I had never thought anything of that, and I have never recurred to me as being the place he meant.

"Well," I said, "but don't excite yourself like that, you'll upset the gig. It is the place, it's worth your while, and then he sank down quietly by my side, his chin dropped on his chest, one of his dreamy fits came on, and he never spoke another word till we reached Mereslene.

The little town was busy with the sheep market, and he roused up figureheart the day. He was always mine as his work, soon took in what was to be done, and was quite comfortable until we set out homeward. Then the dreamy fit seemed to come on again. It was past five o'clock, and getting dark, when we stopped at Dene's Gate turnpike to light our lamps. Soon after this, we began to ascend the hill, near the top of which is the chalk-cutting and the Whiteways. I was on the look-out for what he would do here, expecting some oddity for he was always odd; but he remained silent, and beyond fidgetting in his seat, and looking from side to side of the road, not at the steep cliff of chalk as far as the twilight and glitter of our lamps would show it him, he did nothing; and when we got back to Charvendon, I said, "Well, there's not much to be afraid of in that day's work, is there? And now that you have seen the reality, perhaps you'll leave off dreaming about the Whiteways." He merely smiled, and said, "I dare say, of course not; it's only a stupid fancy I had. There no difficulty about the journey; I shall do it all right enough." Yet I thought he had not himself rather to say this, and didn't mean it.

Well, nothing particular happened during the next week, only I noticed that young Chase was a little more dreamy and odd than usual. I said to him on the Tuesday, (as he was to go on the Wednesday) "Look here, you'll mind the job, do you, or would you like to have some one with you? We might send the other lad, I think." Whereupon he said, very hurriedly and anxiously, I thought—"Oh dear no; no, certainly not; on no account!" and I answered: "Well, I think you are right; I would look rather silly, you might get laughed at!" Though I am bound to say of late years, since the railways have brought London so much closer to us, people have more than once said that they thought it rather foolhardy of me to come back at night alone in the winter, seeing there was always a good sum of money in the driving seat, the farmers' pay-ings-in, and the like, during the day, you understand. But, bless your heart, I never in fact say fear, and I could not understand why anybody else should; so I was quite relieved when young Chase pitched up, and would not hear of having anybody with him.

..At the marriage of the late Queen of Spain her train-bearer stumbled on the steps of the altar. "Bad omen," said the Duchess of Medina, one of the ladies of honor. At the bull fight next day, in honor of the royal marriage, a veteran fighter, who had abandoned the ring through old age, desired to fill his old position. The bull had been much weakened by the matadors, and, before giving him the final sword thrust, the old man turned to the Queen and bowed low. "I hope your Majesty will live a hundred years," said he. At this instant the bull butted him from behind, and bounced him several feet. "Bad omen," again remarked the Duchess.

..A laborer named Matlebrook, a member of the sect called Peculiar People, who do not believe in medicine, was tried in London for killing his infant son, who died from whooping-cough. The prisoner had no objection to call in medical aid, and had by choice saved the child's life might have been saved. The evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge.

..A meeting was held in London recently for the encouragement of provident habits among all classes." Lord Shaftesbury presided, and Emily Faithfull read a paper on the "Extravagance of Modern Life," which she attributed largely to the credit system in trade.

Don't Lose Your Pocket-Book in Russia.

A correspondent of the Sheffield Telegraph relates the following story, which he says illustrates forcibly one phase of life in St. Petersburg:—

A young Scotchman from Edinburgh, Mr. B——, by name, passed a few days here for pleasure. One day he went into the Post Office to purchase a post card. Having written this card, which was simply to inform his friends of the time at which he expected to reach his home, he left the office. He had scarcely got outside when he found that he had forgotten to take up his pocket-book, which, while writing, he had placed on the table in the office. He returned immediately, and found the clerk in charge very busy counting the banknotes and 30-mark pieces, which were the chief contents of his pocket-book. "Excuse me," said Mr. B——, in German. "I have forgotten my pocket-book; will you be so kind as to give it back to me?" The Russian official kept the book in his hands, and stared at Mr. B—— as if he did not understand him. He, who had spoken German quite fluently only a few moments ago, now could only shrug his shoulders, as he put away the foreign money in the recesses of his capacious Russian pocket. Mr. B—— then addressed himself to the other clerks, and one of them cried in an imperious voice, "take off your hat." The Englishman had forgotten that in his hurry, and immediately complied with the rudely expressed dictate. He then asked once more for his pocket-book. "The book," was the official's reply, "you cannot have just now; you must, in the first place, give satisfactory proof that you are the owner."

"Well," said the young man, "look then in the pocket-book and you will find my passport and other belongings with my signature," which, of course, he was not prepared to write for the benefit of the official.

"Not now, Sir," was the Russian's answer. "We shall examine your papers to-morrow; you may then come again."

"But I want to start to-morrow," replied Mr. B——.

"That is no business of ours," replied the Russian gentleman.

Very much put about, Mr. B—— continued to insist on the uselessness and inconvenience of putting off till to-morrow what so easily could have been done at the time, but he could get no other answer from the Russian official than this:—

"We don't care," and "We have no time."

Finally Mr. B—— went to the English Consulate and stated his case. The Consul went with him to the Post Office, but was told that the book with the money had already been sent to the Police Office. Then to the Police Office went the Consul and his compatriot. The book and the money had both been heard of, no doubt they were still at the Post Office. And thus for a few days the Consul and Mr. B—— were kept running from the Police Office to the Post Office, and from the Post Office to the Police Office without getting any satisfaction. At last, when the British Consul became very serious, the Russian authorities gave back the pocket-book to Mr. B——, but how!

The Russian official—Gospodin Talkoy, we may call him—kept back £7 of the money, and this simply because the pocket-book was left for a few moments on a table in the Government office in Russia. Imagine such a thing happening in England or in Germany. Mr. B—— asked for what reason this sum—about a third part of the contents of the pocket-book—was kept back. The Russian added insult to injury. "I do not want your money," he said, "but I like to make an Englishman give a donation to the new volunteer Russian fleet; that is where your gold will be sent."

Mr. B—— had to pocket the affront, and the Russian pocketed the money.

How they Keep Coo'in France.

From the London Standard of June 28.

The truth is that the best way of fighting the heat is by avoiding it. If we wish to escape sun-stroke, even in its mitigated form of languor, lassitude, and drowsiness, we must keep ourselves cool; and to do this as it ought to be done we must take precautions against the heat before it intrudes upon us. Those who wish to know how this can best be effected have only to pay a short visit to Paris during the sultriest weeks of August. As soon as the weather demands it the change, a French man apparels himself in low shoes (the trousers of "duck," or nankeen; his shirt-collar expands; his neckties dwindle to an apology; waistcoat he altogether discards; his coat is of thin alpaca or the lightest Tussore silk; his hat of white felt or of straw; and is he ashamed there—he almost frightened the life out of me by suddenly jumping from his seat and exclaiming, "There! there it is! that's the place; that's the very place I've seen a hundred times before in my dreams! At the bull fight next day, in honor of the royal marriage, a veteran fighter, who had abandoned the ring through old age, desired to fill his old position. The bull had been much weakened by the matadors, and, before giving him the final sword thrust, the old man turned to the Queen and bowed low. "I hope your Majesty will live a hundred years," said he. At this instant the bull butted him from behind, and bounced him several feet. "Bad omen," again remarked the Duchess.

..A laborer named Matlebrook, a member of the sect called Peculiar People, who do not believe in medicine, was tried in London for killing his infant son, who died from whooping-cough. The prisoner had no objection to call in medical aid, and had by choice saved the child's life might have been saved. The evidence was not sufficient to sustain the charge.

..A meeting was held in London recently for the encouragement of provident habits among all classes." Lord Shaftesbury presided, and Emily Faithfull read a paper on the "Extravagance of Modern Life," which she attributed largely to the credit system in trade.

LACROSSE AT DETROIT.

The London Club Defeats the Stratford Players.

The Detroit Free Press of the 12th gives the following particulars of the game between the London and Stratford Clubs in that city on the afternoon of Thursday last:—The match between the Stratford Club, of Stratford, and the London Club of London, was called on Woodward avenue grounds at 3 o'clock. The London club, stepped into the field dressed in white tights with black or blue velvet trunks, moccasins and caps. The Stratford Club wore black tights with lemon-colored trunks. J. G. Smith, President of the Stratford club, and D. L. Cavan acted as umpires for the London club, and R. M. Horne and P. J. Woods acted for the Stratford club. The day was just right for such a game, the glaring sun being hidden behind some friendly clouds, and the Canadian boys went to work with a will. After a short, sharp contest the Lond ners succeeded in getting the ball through Stratford's goal. The second game was also won by the London club, and it began to be evident that the fellows in the black tights were overmatched. The London club evinced wonderful running powers, and the speeding of some of the players would have done credit to a quarter horse. Whenever a player caught a ball on his stick and ran for the opposite goal the captain shouted "Check him," meaning to knock the ball from the stick and stop the player's running. Sometimes this was accomplished at the cost of the spectators; at times several contested each other several times, and heels were over head in the air, much to the amusement of the spectators; at times several contested each other several times, and heels were over head in the air, much to the amusement of the spectators; at times several contested. The game was a lively one, and the spectators caught so much of its enthusiasm that they left their seats and followed up the game with almost as much interest as the players themselves. The Stratfords played much better, but after a half hour's struggle the ball angularly through the flag gate and won the match for the London club.

Especially good playing was shown by Messrs. Pike, McCullough and Dalley, of the Stratfords, and Winkler, of the Londoners. The spectators, among whom were many ladies, all seemed delighted with the game.

The Planets in July.

Jupiter will be a conspicuous object in the eastern sky during the month, rising more almost nine o'clock, and shining with wondrous beauty in the constellation Capricornus. On the 25th this planet comes into opposition with the sun, and will at that time shine with its greatest brilliancy, for he is at his nearest approach to the sun, the earth, and the planet being in a line, with the earth in the centre. He is then more than 400 millions and eighty millions of miles nearer than when in the opposite portion of his orbit, he comes into conjunction with the sun. The opposition of a planet means, that its position is opposite to the sun, and that it will rise when the sun sets. Therefore the sparkling gem that to the latter part of the month will rise above the south-eastern horizon, as the sun sinks below the western, and will be easily recognised as Jupiter. It will be delightful to watch as he rises in the early part of the evening, increasing all the while in size and brilliancy, until he reaches his opposition on the 25th. Nothing, perhaps, in the heavens will dispute his supremacy until the crescent moon wears in her appearance that overshadow his milder beams. The evening after she has passed her full, on the 10th, she will be in conjunction with the bright evening star, and a charming picture will be painted on the dark azure of the sky.

Mars is also evening star, but is of little account, he is so far away and shines with so insignificant a lustre after the glorious display he made last year on his glowing aspect turned all the world into star-gazers. He is passing in his course, and will approach with the sun, reaching this point on the 15th of September, when he will be two hundred and eighty millions of miles nearer than at his memorable opposition of 1877, the epoch of the discovery of his two satellites. Mars may be looked for in the constellation Leo sailing now not far from nine o'clock, and not very distant from Regulus. On the 22nd Mars and Mercury are in conjunction. On the 29th those who are fortunate enough to witness the total eclipse of the sun will see Mars, Regulus and Mercury forming an irregular line. Mercury being the brightest, and possibly the only one of the starry trio visible during the short period of total darkness.

Saturn, although not classified as an evening star, will rise at his opposition on the 22nd of September, rises now not long after eleven o'clock, and at the close of the month may be seen nearly two hours earlier. He is tracking his slow course among the small stars of the constellation Pisces, coming into better position for observation, and may be easily recognised from his superior brightness to the stars in the vicinity, rising also a little south of east.

Venus remains unrivalled among the morning stars. She passed her greatest western elongation on the 2nd of June, and is now speeding far away from us to her superior opposition on the 5th of December. She rises during the month not very far from two o'clock, and early fleets by commanding a view of the eastern horizon will be well rewarded by the sight of her charming face, and the soft, delicate coloring that distinguishes the most beautiful star among the myriads that make up the starry host. Though far away, and small in size, she retains her sovereign sway, and lingers in the morning sky till the sun is ready to rise, when she is borne the horizon.

Mercury, in the first part of the month, is too near the sun to be visible, but, on the 31st he does not set till twenty minutes past eight o'clock, and may, perhaps, be picked up by sharp eyes in the evening twilight, seven degrees south of the place of sunset. On the 28th Mercury and Uranus are in conjunction, and both planets are near Regulus, but a good telescope is need for a good view of the celestial phenomenon.—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Dun, Wiman & Co.'s Quarterly Report.

We have received Messrs. Dun, Wiman & Co.'s circular showing the number of failures in the United States and Canada during the past three months and for the first half of the year. The number of failures in Canada during the past quarter was 192, with liabilities of $1,407,200 against 550 failures with liabilities of $7,-577,326 in the corresponding period last year, or a decrease in 1878 of 258 in number and $3,167,326 in amount of liabilities. Taking the six months of the present year are 305, as against 1,749 in 1877, an increase of over a thousand in number, equal to nearly twenty-five per cent. The liabilities for the first half of 1878 are 130 millions of dollars, as against 99 millions for the same period of last year, a percentage of increase still greater. Messrs. Dun, Wiman & Co. explain that there are special causes for this increase, such as the notice of the repeal of the Bankrupt Law, which caused a large number of brokers to avail themselves of its provisions, and the discussions in Congress in relation to the Silver Bill, which had the effect of unsettling business. Two other reasons are given, which apply well to causes of failures in Canada. First.—An unusually open winter, resulting in a greatly reduced absorption of heavy goods, which are to a large extent being carried over for the entire year; the want of fuel rendering almost impossible country roads, and thus materially interfering with the deliveries of produce and the consequent collections of outstandings until months later than usual. Second—The steady decline in prices of merchandize, and the general shrinkage which has been even more noticeable in the past six months than at any period since 1873, have been productive of numerous misfortunes, and, after so long a period of depression, have altogether so discouraged business men that many have been unable to withstand the pressure. The Circular says in relation to business in the United States—"That there are still too many in business in proportion to its volume and profitable-ness there is no denying and that failures are likely to occur while this condition lasts is equally certain; but this does not alter the great fact that the country is rapidly recovering itself and that by the success of agricultural operations great bodies of producers over vast sections of the country are materially increasing their purchasing power. There are numerous other indications of an encouraging character; the enormous amounts realized from both natural and manufactured products exported, the certainty of magnificent crops, the continued success attending the development of mineral resources—all point to a steady gain in national wealth. The probability of early resumption of specie payments is another most encouraging circumstance, and taken in connection with the likelihood that values have touched their lowest point, will result in begetting a degree of certainty and stability, to which the trade of the country has been a stranger for some time past."

BASE BALL NOTES.

A Second Defeat for the Manchesters.

The Manchesters and Tecumsehs played the last of their series of international games in this city on Saturday afternoon in presence of a fair crowd of spectators, who were doubtless drawn thither in anticipation of witnessing some fine ball playing. In that they were not disappointed, for although the Manchesters had hard luck, they played a fine game and proved themselves to be expert ball tossers in every sense of the word. Still they were either overmatched or—it was the Tecumseh's day to win, and win they did by a score of 4 to 0. Leary, the pitcher of the Manchesters, was batted quite freely by the home nine, who scored no fewer than 17 total bases off him, while on the other hand the visitors got only a total of 9 off Goldsmith. Donelson and Hall made some wonderful catches, the latter especially distinguishing himself by running nearly to the west-end fence and jumping up into the air to catch a ball. He was successful, and for this effort received the hearty plaudits of the crowd. Donelson also made a pretty run-off of a hot one, and Barnes excelled himself in fielding a fairy-cutter while on the run and throwing it to first base, whereby the runner was retired at that base. These plays were well worth the price of admission to witness. Hall also retired the side on the last ball, which was batted into centre field, and for which he ran and caught just as it was about to strike ground. At the time two men were out and two were on bases, second and third respectively. The "fly" spelled the two runs and blanked the visitors, one or two of whom appeared to think that Hall had picked the ball off the ground. But that player solemnly assured them that the ball never touched the earth, and that seemed to satisfy the crowd. Barnes, Burke, Bradley, Goldsmith and Horning batted tremendously, and their strikes were just where they were required. Leary, O'Rourke and Dally led the batting for the visitors, but the extraordinarily good fielding and pitching of the home team prevented them scoring during the game. The home team played a faultless game, if we except Quinton's passed ball, and showed that when in proper condition, they can play ball with any team in America and win. The Manchester team is a good one, much stronger than it was last season, and although they played well here, the opposite nine were too much for them, and defeated them by the score:

WESSERN CORRESPONDENCE.

KINCARDINE.

We would like to know who's business it is to look after those people that go in nothing of the South pier. It is time that that nuisance was stopped.

Mr. Wm. Murray, painter, has gone on a trip to the Paris Exposition. He left rather suddenly.

We would remind our townspeople that the name of the street leading to the wharf, formerly Harbor street, has been changed to that of Whiskey Alley.

About forty or fifty people from here at noon the oddfellows' picnic at Tiverton on Wednesday. They spent a very pleasant day.

A cricket match was played on Wednesday afternoon between the single and married, which resulted in a victory for the former by 11 runs.

July 13.

ELGIN.

There is a great deal of sickness in Springfield at present, and the doctors are kept busy.

A few nights ago a thief stole some money out of the pocket of a pair of pants that Mr. Gordon, of Springfield, had left over the window sill to pacify a safe distance from the window after this.

Mr. S. Woodworth has been engaged as head teacher of the Springfield public school.

On Monday lightning struck Mr. Nichol's house, in Springfield, and tore a hole five feet square in the roof, and otherwise damaged the building, but the family, who were at breakfast at the time, escaped uninjured.

July 15.

MIDDLESEX.

A garden party was held on the evening of the 9th instant on the parsonage grounds of the English Church, Ilderton, which was quite a success, both as regards the number present and the amount realized. The evening was all that could be desired. The appearance of the grounds, lit up with lanterns of various kinds, was very fine, and a novel sight to many, this being the first affair of the kind held in the place. A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the Dorchester brass band, the Belmont glee club and the choir-room of the evening.

July 13.

GUELPH.

John Nosey, a laborer, had a watch stolen from his pocket on the passenger train on Monday morning last. He was sitting on the platform outside of the engine house at Stratford, and while there was jostled by a crowd of men jumping up into the cars to catch a ball. He was successful, and for this effort received the hearty plaudits of the crowd. Another also made a pretty run-off of a hot one, and Barnes excelled himself in fielding a fairy-cutter while on the run and throwing it to first base, whereby the runner was retired at that base. These plays were well worth the price of admission to witness. ASSAULT.—A man named James McCready was arrested on Saturday afternoon, charged with having assaulted John Green. He was bailed to answer the charge.

HORSES POISONED.—Three valuable horses belonging to Mr. Milne, a farmer of St. George, were poisoned on Friday. Paris Green had been mixed with their oats, for killing potato bugs, and left standing in a pail. The horses ate this mixture and all three died.

POCKET PICKED ON LORD.—Mrs. Rogers, of 120 Dundas street, reported to the police that while at market Saturday morning she either lost her pocket book or had it stolen from her. It contained 85 cents in money and a gold locket and chain, besides sundry other articles.

RUN AWAY.—On Saturday morning the horse attached to Mr. R. Moonlay's delivery waggon took fright and ran away. The driver was thrown out at the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets, but beyond receiving a few bruises, he was not injured.

REAPING MACHINE MATCH.—A keen competition took place on the farm of Mr. H. Kelly, Delaware, amongst six or seven reapers, on Thursday last. The trial was one of the machines competing were the Royce, Hubbard, Massey, Harvest Queen, Hornseye, and Ball's Ohio. The Harvest Queen was awarded the first prize, shown by J. S. Smith, of Hyde Park.

THE GREAT WESTERN ON THE TWELFTH.—On the Twelfth the Great Western Railway conveyed upwards of 5,000 passengers to and from Sarnia, and so perfect were the arrangements that this large crowd was handled without any inconvenience. As the station here was a special force of policemen to preserve order, and in every respect the Company's officers, more especially Asst.-Supt. Dawson, deserve the greatest praise.

BREAKING INTO THE MARKET.—Three boys, aboth fourteen years of age, named Fred. Moore, William McClary and Thos. Fortune, were arrested on Saturday night while breaking into the market. They removed the street grating opposite Mr. Hutchison's stall, and had descended into the cellar, probably with the intention of helping themselves to fruit, when they were arrested. It is not known whether anything was taken, as Mr. Smithson is out of town.

SHIFTING GUIDE.—Messrs. Dun, Wiman & Co. who have an office in this city, having been requested by many subscribers to their Reference Book to insert shipping directions and other gazetteer information in their work, have made arrangements that they think will be more generally satisfactory. Instead of increasing the bulk of their Reference Book they are prepared to supply "Bullinger's Shipping and Travellers' Guide," a book which contains 856 pages to subscribers for $2. And as the Guide contains the fullest information for the United States and Canada, it will prove of very great value to shippers, indicating to them the routes and rates for the shipment of goods from place to place.

INSTALLATION.—At a regular meeting of Adelphian Encampment, No. 38, I.O.O.F., held on Friday evening, the 12th inst., the following officers were installed into their respective chairs by T. G. Lowe, D.D.G.P., assisted by Ch. T. Campbell, G.M., and W. F. Howell, P. C. P.:—H. J. Boyd, C. P.; W. T. Stansbury, H. P.; T. Blackwell, S. W.; F. Harding, J. W.; Geo. M. Anderson, Treas.; Geo. C. P. Bingham, Phys.; Scribe; E. Beltz, Treas.; J. Mitchell, O. S.; H. Bobier, I. S.; W. F. Howell, Guide; A. McBride, 1st W.; W. D. Biddle, 2nd W.; E. R. Robinson, 3rd W.; Geo. Bowmore, 4th W.; P. Biddle, 1st G.; T. G. Campbell, 2nd G. of T. E. Bolts, P. C. P., was elected representative to the Grand Encampment, which meets in Toronto on the 2nd of August.

A CHARITABLE BEQUEST.—It will be recollected that a sum of $1,000 for charitable purposes was raised for the purpose of buying a residence for Mr. Simcoe Martell, who was largely esteemed and respected by his fellow citizens. The conditions of the bequest were that the residence should be for the enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Morrill during their lives, and the children should in succession go over to some London charity. Mr. Morrill died a little over seven years ago and Mrs. Morrill died quite recently, so that it devolves upon the trustees to carry out the instructions respecting the property. The large majority of the original subscribers are in favor of benefiting the Protestant Orphans' Home, but the minority, of which Mrs. Morrill property, and this aid to a most deserving charity will meet with general approval.

THE TECUMSEH CLUB MEETING.—A largely attended meeting of the stockholders of the Tecumseh Lacrosse and Base Ball Club was held at the Tecumseh House on Saturday night for the purpose of considering the affairs of the club. Many members present appeared to feel the defeat of the Tecumsehs by the Stars very keenly, and considered that the patronage which would be received by the club in the future would not warrant the Directors in keeping up the organization any longer. On the other hand, several stockholders said that a few social games would soon eradicate the defeats allended to from the minds of the admirers of the team, and as an earnest of their belief in the playing powers of the nine, these gentlemen there and then took additional stock to the amount of $600 in the club, and it was finally decided to call a general meeting soon to enable the present management for the remainder of the season.

OF UNSOUND MIND.—The father of John McGuinness, who committed that tragic assault upon Mr. George, at Mount Brydges, on Friday last, visited this city on Saturday afternoon. In conversation with a FREE PRESS reporter, Mr. McInnes stated that he now had been wrong in his second since infancy, but until lately had been quite harmless. On Monday he was refused by a bar-tender for smoking, and immediately flew into a tantrum and left the place. On Thursday evening, when he stated that he had been to his father's house, in Aldboro. During the few part of the night he was very restless, and occasioned the family considerable trouble. About cider o'clock he arose and walked out of the house, and the next they heard of him was the account of his arrest from reading the FREE PRESS. Mr. McInnes says his son was never known to act rashly, and the supposition that he was the worse of it when he committed the terrible deed, is the most tenable. In all probability he will be sent to the Asylum for safe keeping.

GRATIFYING AND CONVINCING.—Messrs. H. M. Wiman & Co., Canadian Agents for manufacturers, Hamilton, Ont., are running their factory full force, sending out every week hundreds of their celebrated and world famed Singer machines. The merited increasing popularity of their highly improved machines enables the Messrs. Wanzer & Co. to refuse while so many factories are shut down. The celebrated Wanzer machine can be seen at the officesal sales-room, 214 Dundas street, London.

Mr. Perkins was a Boston widower, having lost wives. Miss Carlton was a spiritualistic medium. She went into a trance, and the spirits of the two dead wives, speaking through her, said that she and Perkins ought to marry. Of course Miss Carlton was astonished, after coming to herself, on being told of the communication she had delivered, but she was willing to obey. The ceremony was performed the next day.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE ON FRIDAY NIGHT.

Coombs' Mill and Driving Shed Burned.

Some time during Friday night a fire took orphanage for the orphans of Dundas county, which is situated on the land acquired by the Water Commissioners about two months ago. The fire apparently started in the engine-house, and quickly spread, destroying both the mill and the machinery, and the dwelling house adjoining was only saved with great difficulty. A sufficient quantity of grain had been used for some time, it is quite evident that the fire was the work of an incendiary. The property was purchased some time ago by Mr. Holmes, the County Engineer, who resold it to Mr. R. Summers. The promises were insured for $1,200, which about fully covers the value.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Saturday afternoon.

A serious row took place yesterday at the corner of Hockey and Simcoe streets, in that four young men, named Cowie, Nichol, Tierney and Arcott, had been drinking considerably during the day and one of the party, where they began fighting. Jimmy Cowie got the worst of the bout in the cheek by either Tierney or Arcott, and Nichol was badly cut in the face and head. The other two got off pretty easily, but were more or less bruised.

Another row took place at Harley's Commercial Hotel, between two young men of the village, who had been indulging rather freely during the day. Constable Aldridge appeared on the scene and soon put them to rest. They will most likely be summoned.

At the election of officers of the Union Band of Hope, of London East, the following were elected:—President, Rev. Tagg, Superintendent.

Police Court—Saturday.

John Peters, Esq., J. P., sitting P. M.

Two of the old-timers were up for celebrating the "glorious 12th." Their names were Matilda Grafton and Catharine Goodfellow, both of whom are well-known to the Police Court readers. For being drunk and two full for themselves, a fine of $5 and $3.25 costs was imposed upon each. In default, they were committed for three months at hard labor.

John McGuinness, the man who committed the dastardly assault upon Mr. George, of Mount Brydges, and who made his desperate attempt to regain his liberty at the Central Station, was remanded until the 30th for examination. It is said that he hails from the neighborhood of Glencoe, and had evidently been drinking hard that day.

Fife Webb, a Clevelander, was charged with drunkenness and with having a loaded revolver in his possession. A fine of $20 and $4.60 costs, or one months' imprisonment was imposed. The friends of Webb paid the money during the forenoon, and he was liberated.

John Hastings, drunk, $2 and $3.25 costs, or twenty-one days; Sandy McPherson, ditto, ditto; Alexander Johnson, ditto, ditto; Barnhart, John Hennessy and Dan. McKinnon, ditto, ditto. MASONIC FUNERAL YESTERDAY.

Interment of the Late Rev. W. Logan at Lucan.

Large Assemblage of Knight Templars and Friends—Impressive Ceremony.

The funeral of the late Rev. William Logan, Rural Dean of North Middlesex and Rector of Lucan, who died there on Wednesday last, took place from his late residence in the village of Lucan yesterday afternoon in the presence of fully 3,000 people. It was deemed a wish that he should be buried by his brother Masons, more especially the Knight Templars, to which branch of the order he was devotedly attached. Accordingly arrangements were made by the Sir Knights of Strathroy Lodge du Lion Preceptory, of this city, to comply with their deceased Prater's dying request, one of them being the chartering of a special train from St. Thomas to Chatsdeyne, on the L. & P. R. R. line. The object of this was to afford the Sir Knights of St. Thomas an opportunity of paying the last mark of respect to a departed brother, who, while in life, was very highly esteemed by a large number of them. The train left St. Thomas about one o'clock, having on board Sir Knights R. W. Potter, of York Preceptory; Wm. Davis, J. Corlis, J. H. Thompson, F. O'Donnell, John Beatty, Geo. King, W. H. King, J. H. Stewart, Jos. Kerr, John E. Smith, Wm. Fraser, Geo. Pettit, R. B. McKay, Hendiberg, Silliker and others. They were joined at London by Very Eminent Sir Knight D. B. Read, of London; by V. E. Sir Knights A. G. Smyth and James Moffat, and Eminent Sir Knights George Mackie, J. B. Smyth, W. H. A. Baxter, H. T. Wetherly, Rev. Mr. Smylie, John Ferguson, Chas. F. Knapp, Thomas Brock, W. Thornton, R. F. Knapp, C. F. Goodhue, James Reid, Geo. Ridout, Thos. Brock, Thos. Peel, Wm. Marriott, Robt. Mackay, James O'Connor, F. B. Mitchell, M. D., George McKenzie and F. J. Hood. The following members of Enoch Council No. 10, also attended, with a troop of Ross, J. R. Dixon, Ed. McKenzie, James Arkell, and R. Kloepfinan. Quite a number of members of St. John's and St. George's H. A. Chapters and the several Blue Lodges of the city and London also accompanied the Sir Knights on their sad mission. After a speedy run Chatsdeyne was reached and here the brethren of Irving Union No. 154, of Lucan, received the visitors, and drove them to Lucan some two and-a-half miles distant. After a few refreshments the procession was formed, and headed by the 7th Battalion band of this city, the different bodies marched to the late residence of deceased, where a brief service was held by Sir Knight Rev. G. M. Benson, assisted by his brother Knights. While the service was in progress the crowd in the vicinity of the house increased to numbers every minute, many coming from long distances to do honor to the memory of a man who was loved and esteemed by all classes. After the service the remains were taken in charge by the Knights Templars, who formed the guard of honor. The coffin having been placed in the hearse, the procession moved in the following order:—

Family Carriages and 50 Vehicles.

The cemetery at St. Andrews' Church, Biddulph, some two miles distant from Lucan, was thronged for hours previous to the time named for the ceremony, and farmers' teams were standing in every shady spot, and lining the entire side of the road. This place was selected as the receptacle for the remains, as by the will in session proceeded on its way thither, the cortege was enhanced largely by people from every portion of the surrounding townships. The sides of the road were thickly lined with spectators all the way from Lucan to the cemetery, and the approaches to the latter were completely blocked by vehicles of all kinds, being the scattering remains of a resting-place destruction. A sufficient quantity of grain had very arduous task. The remains were removed to the church, where a short service was held by the Rev. J. W. Magahy, Rector of Lucan, and F. Ryan, of Exeter, the former reading the Scriptures and the latter the Lesson. Thereafter, and then placed in the hands of the pall-bearers and taken to the grave, where the Episcopal Burial service was read by Rev. Mr. Magahy, assisted by Rev. Mr. Benson, Rev. Mr. Smylie, Rev. Mr. Tagg, Rev. Mr. Hill, and DeLew, of Byron. At the conclusion of this service Sir Kt. Rev. G. M. Benson and the Templars of Ma. Iem sojourned in the ceremony by Sir Kts. A. G. Smyth, R. Ridout, Hendiberg, Moffat, Mason and three thereupon of evergreen into the grave, and in a few minutes thereafter the grave was filled to the brim with flowers. A large number of prominent men took part in the mournful proceedings, including the number Mr. J. Jennings, of Guelph, W. R. Atkinson, of Alma Craig; L. E. Shipley, of Falkirk; J. W. Marr, Inspector of Public Schools; Mr. Gillivray; James Addison, of Goderich, and many others whose names could not be ascertained. The arrangements were of the most complete character, and reflected the greatest credit on the Knight Templar Order, under whose auspices the ceremony was conducted. The late Rev. Mr. Logan is sincerely mourned by a very large circle of friends, and alone his parishioners, four by four, among whom he had during his seven years pastorate came in contact. He many excellent traits of the head and heart, endeared him to a large circle of friends, and amongst his parishioners at the Mystic Tie, deceased was a great favorite, and was looked up to as a good and true friend. He leaves a widow and family to mourn his loss, who has the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in her great bereavement.

Free Press Correspondence.

The Church of England Cemetery Question.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—I observe in your paper this morning that a correspondence is being commenced in reference to Church of England Cemetery Grounds. While gone can object to this matter concerning the fullest publicity before final action, I cannot but protest against unfounded statements being made in reference to property under my manage[illegible]. A correspondent, signing himself "Fair Play," states that the Cooke farm is a swamp. Now, sir, the residence of John Cooke, Esq., is a portion of this farm, and it is higher and dryer than the highest part of the asylum grounds. To call any of the rolling land flat and swampy is an actionable to call a citizen by a name calculated to injure him. Yours truly,

A. S. EMERY.

The brickwork on Mr. Ben Marrs' new dwelling house is just about completed. When finished it will be an ornament to the town.

The trouble among the colored people is about ended, and I must say that I think they have behaved pretty well, and that our community have been badly treated. They have their rights, and so long as they conduct themselves in a lawful and proper manner, they have a right to be respected by the outsiders and all the beach intended for two or three broke the law and consequently boldly injury, it is not any reason why the whole of their brethren should be condemned. We do trust that it will be the last time some of our young men, who pride themselves upon their respectability, will lend themselves to such a degrading thing as hunting down poor, defenceless men. During the time I was at the bottom of the gang who flourished so prominently in the recent shindying case, has not been found.

LATEST SARNIA ITEMS.

From our own Correspondent.

While a party of young gentlemen from Port Huron were making their way in a small skiff up the rapids of the St. Clair River, on Saturday last, about 2 p.m., opposite the Grand Trunk Railway Dock, a large wave from the steamer upset the boat. Fortunately, the current took them into a bend of the river where the water was quite shallow, and they succeeded in gaining the shore without other damage than a thorough soaking. This is not the first accident that has happened in the same place, as the rapids are dangerous to small row boats.

The excursions on the Sarnia ferry boats from Port Huron and Sarnia yesterday were well attended, and arrived home between 7 and 8 p.m., with no accident reported.

The schooner Anvy is chartered to carry lumber from Penetanguishene to Sarnia at $1.50 per M.

Mr. J. G. Buchanan, formerly of the Hamilton Times, is in Sarnia. He accompanied the Press Association en route for Chicago, Ill., as far as Detroit.

The steamer Quebec, Capt. Anderson, left for Detroit to-night. Full passenger list. Cargo principally liquors, and a few horses.

The propeller Cuba passed Sarnia yesterday with the propeller Java in tow, one of the latter's shafts having been broken.

The propeller Ocean, chartered by the Dominion Government for distributing lighthouse supplies, called here to-day on her way up Lake Huron and Superior. She had an excursion party on board, taking the round trip, of about 2,000 miles, from Montreal and return, which will take from three to four weeks.

THE TORONTO FEMALE RUNAWAYS.

Arrested in the Streets of New York.

Their Romantic Notions of New York Life, and Where Obtained.

Special from our own Correspondent.

Toronto, July 14.—Last Wednesday considerable grief was occasioned in three families in the city by the sudden disappearance of a young girl from each family. Thomas Bartlett, aged 13, disappeared from her parents' residence, 55 Victoria street; Minnie Dixon, aged 14, left her home on Sherbourne street, and Lillie Gray, aged 15, left the residence of her parents on the corner of Queen street. Enquiries were made by the Sir Knights of Richmond, but could be gleaned, and all was mystery and silence in respect to their movements. Nothing was heard from New York stating that the three girls are in that city under the wing of Lizzie Quigley, of No. 5 Patrolman Grasdick, of the Fifteenth Precinct, was on patrol on Fourth avenue, New York, on Thursday night, he noticed three well-dressed little girls wandering aimlessly about. They were evidently strangers, and their movements were so singular that the officer watched them closely. Finally one of little girls accosted him, and asked him to direct them to Egyptian Hall, a place of unsavory reputation in Bond street. The intelligent officer questioned the girls closely, and they told him that they were sisters and actresses, and had come to New York to get an engagement at that place. The officer, convinced that the girls were not telling the truth, took them to the station-house, where Sergt. Westervelt questioned them, but they persisted in the story they had told the policeman. They also said that they had appeared at several variety theatres in New York. Finally, Sergt. Westervelt took the youngest of the three girls into the back office, and questioned her privately, and she then confessed the whole truth, stating that she and her companions had run away from Toronto. They had a circus engagement, and were in charge of performers at the Egyptian Hall, who were continually filling their young minds with the recital of the pleasures of the life of variety performers in New York, and eventually induced them to run away from home. Minnie Dixon stole $40 from her parents, who are well-to-do people, and with this money the children determined to wander forth and make their fortunes. They left their homes in Toronto on Wednesday, and went to Montreal, and there took the train for New York, arriving there Thursday evening. The girls intended to hunt up their old acquaintances at Egyptian Hall, and adopt the stage as a means of livelihood. They were detained at the station-house, and it is probable that they are now on their way home. If young people had any adequate idea of the hardships of the stage, if their views were taken from a knowledge of the hard work, the drudgery, and the small pay that are the necessary apprenticeship of even the most successful aspirant, instead of the gaudy and untruthful accounts that appear in cheap romances, there would be considerably less desire to leave comfortable homes to appear on the stage.

New York Petroleum Market.

Market for refined is quiet but firm, and offered at 9 3-8c for July delivered at New York and 10c for the same delivery at Baltimore; 10¼c was bid for August delivery here, and 9¾c bid for the same delivery at Baltimore. We quote—Crude, in bulk, 6½c; do, in barrels, 8c to 8½c; naphtha, 6½c; refined, cas or lots 10½c bid; do, in cases, 12½c asked for ordinary brands; refined, at Philadelphia, 10½c bid; at Baltimore, 10¾c.—July 12.

The market for refined was firm. Late last night a cargo, for prompt delivery, sold at 10½c. Crude, 7½c; a portion of this farm, and it is higher and dryer than the highest part of the asylum grounds. To call any of the rolling land flat and swampy is an actionable to call a citizen by a name calculated to injure him. Yours truly,

A. S. EMERY.

THE ENGLISH GRITS.

Gladstone on the Anglo-Turkish Convention.

W. E. Forster's Opinions.

Radical Discontent With Harrington's Resolution.

STRAINED RELATIONS WITH FRANCE.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, July 20.—At the anniversary of the establishment of the Liberal Association of Bermondsey street, London, tonight, Mr. Gladstone made a long speech, in which he begged to decline resuming the leadership of the Liberal party. He powerfully attacked the manner in which the people had lately been governed. No despotic Government in Europe would have dared to do what this Cabinet has done, in accepting such responsibilities unknown to the people. He criticised the Treaty of Berlin, whereby England consented to replace, under the despotic rule of Russia, Bessarabia, which belonged to free Roumania. Russia retains her claim to a heavy indemnity, which she can always make a pretext for war. At the same time the treaty destroys the integrity and independence of Turkey. With regard to the Convention with Turkey only one epithet is possible, viz., immoral, an insane covenant. None of the great English statesmen of the last forty years would have signed it. It is, to our shame, a convention of absurdity and duplicity. It is odious to every Valiet and Hellenist of this country, and has alienated the friendship of all foreign Powers. England has sold Bessarabia to Russia, the brave Montenegrins' conquests to Austria's jealousy and selfishness, the Greeks to Turkey, and, lastly, Turkey herself to England. Gladstone concluded by saying that the ministry would shortly be judged by an appeal to the country.

London, July 21.—The Right Hon. W. E. Forster, presiding at the Cobden Club dinner last night, made a speech on the Eastern question, taking the same general grounds against the Government's policy as Gladstone. He said he and other Liberals had hesitated to challenge the Government while the negotiations were pending, lest a strong opposition might encourage Russia in her warlike attitude or weaken or discourage our own rulers; but he declared that the Liberal leaders are agreed that they will make their protest, and take a division regarding their weakness or strength. They will give the country an opportunity by a long debate and thorough examination of the subject, to maturely consider whether or not it approves of the Government's acts.

Lord Hartington's resolution is regarded as rather weak. It virtually gives up the question of the Treaty of Berlin, and censures only the Anglo-Turkish convention, the grounds of which the Government will have no difficulty in defending. The Radical wing of the Opposition is dissatisfied with the resolution, and will probably move one of their own far more aggressive in its terms.

A Paris special says:—There is much chagrin there at the understanding manner in which England acquired Cyprus. Gambetta antagonizes Waddington, the French minister, who threatens to resign his portfolio as a foreign minister, and he has been busy since returning from Berlin explaining that no other result could be arrived at.

Beaconsfield's convention with Turkey has made a severe strain upon French and English amity.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

London, July 20.—The Paris and Vienna newspapers generally comment favorably upon Beaconsfield's speech.

The Italian Government and Conservative organs continue to attack England. Italian Radical newspapers do not notice the subject of the English occupation of Cyprus, but generally attacked the manner in which the people had lately been governed. No despotic Government in Europe would have dared to do what this Cabinet has done, in accepting such responsibilities unknown to the people. He criticised the Treaty of Berlin, whereby England consented to replace, under the despotic rule of Russia, Bessarabia, which belonged to free Roumania. Russia retains her claim to a heavy indemnity, which she can always make a pretext for war. At the same time the treaty destroys the integrity and independence of Turkey. With regard to the Convention with Turkey only one epithet is possible, viz., immoral, an insane covenant. None of the great English statesmen of the last forty years would have signed it. It is, to our shame, a convention of absurdity and duplicity. It is odious to every Valiet and Hellenist of this country, and has alienated the friendship of all foreign Powers. England has sold Bessarabia to Russia, the brave Montenegrins' conquests to Austria's jealousy and selfishness, the Greeks to Turkey, and, lastly, Turkey herself to England. Gladstone concluded by saying that the ministry would shortly be judged by an appeal to the country.

London, July 21.—The Right Hon. W. E. Forster, presiding at the Cobden Club dinner last night, made a speech on the Eastern question, taking the same general grounds against the Government's policy as Gladstone. He said he and other Liberals had hesitated to challenge the Government while the negotiations were pending, lest a strong opposition might encourage Russia in her warlike attitude or weaken or discourage our own rulers; but he declared that the Liberal leaders are agreed that they will make their protest, and take a division regarding their weakness or strength. They will give the country an opportunity by a long debate and thorough examination of the subject, to maturely consider whether or not it approves of the Government's acts.

Lord Hartington's resolution is regarded as rather weak. It virtually gives up the question of the Treaty of Berlin, and censures only the Anglo-Turkish convention, the grounds of which the Government will have no difficulty in defending. The Radical wing of the Opposition is dissatisfied with the resolution, and will probably move one of their own far more aggressive in its terms.

A Paris special says:—There is much chagrin there at the understanding manner in which England acquired Cyprus. Gambetta antagonizes Waddington, the French minister, who threatens to resign his portfolio as a foreign minister, and he has been busy since returning from Berlin explaining that no other result could be arrived at.

Beaconsfield's convention with Turkey has made a severe strain upon French and English amity.

London, July 21.—A circular has been issued, giving notice that the militia reserve will be disbanded after July 31st.

Edinburgh, July 21.—A London correspondent of the Scotsman reports that July 28th has been fixed as the date for the entrance of the Austrian forces into Bosnia, whether the Turks object or not.

A Berlin correspondent states that a reliable report from Vienna declares that Austria has resolved to take timely precautions against any Italian aggression.

ITALY AND AUSTRIA.

Great Mass Meetings in Rome Yesterday.

GARIBALDI AGAIN TO THE FORE.

Rome, July 21.—A Democratic meeting in favor of the annexation of the South Tyrol to Italy was held to-day. There were 2,500 persons present. Menotti Garibaldi, son of the General, presided. A number of letters and telegrams, expressing sympathy with the movement, were received from Gen. Garibaldi, Signor Safi, Campanella, and others, and were read to the meeting. A resolution was adopted condemning the violation by the Congress of Berlin of the principle of nationalities and sovereignty, affirming the solidity of the Italians with the people bought and sold by the Congress, reminding Italy that Italian countries were still subject to foreign domination and looking for speedy justice. The meeting was orderly but somewhat noisy. A demonstration was made in the evening with shouts of "Long live Trieste." The authorities posted troops around the Corso, and issued a few summonses against the demonstrators. A similar meeting was held at Genoa.

London, July 22.—Special despatches from Rome say that four thousand people were present at the annexation meeting held on Sunday. Some accounts represent that the principal object of the meeting was a Republican demonstration. In the evening a demonstration was made before the Austrian Embassy. Gen. Garibaldi telegraphed as follows:—"Ireland people have a right to revolt. Men of Trieste, take to the mountains."

The Ministerial journals of Vienna warn Italy it is dangerous to play with fire.

DISASTER IN THE BRITISH CHANNEL

A Schooner Sunk and Crew Lost.

Queenstown, July 20.—The steamship Adriatic, from Liverpool for New York, coming down the Channel yesterday in a fog, sank a coasting schooner. The crew of the schooner, with the exception of one, were drowned.

LORD DUFFERIN'S DEPARTURE.

Official Announcement in the London Times.

London, July 22.—The Times publishes an official paragraph denying that Lord Dufferin has consented to prolong his term of office as Governor-General of Canada, and announces that he leaves Canada in September.

Foreign Cable Telegrams.

Ferole, Spain, July 20.—The British steamer Staffalmund, from Newcastle to Malaga, collided with the steamer Europe from the Mediterranean ports via Gibraltar, for Liverpool. The latter sank. The crew and passengers were saved.

Berlin, July 21.—The Emperor goes to Badenbaden soon, but it is undetermined yet whether he will make the usual visit to Gastein or Teplitz. He has entirely recovered from his wounds, but is still very feeble.

Paris, July 21.—The miners' strike at Anzin continues, the efforts to settle the difference having failed. There have been some arrests for picketing, but the strikers are generally quiet. Other labor troubles are reported at Bordeaux, Marseilles and St. Etienne, but they are of an insignificant character.

Paris, July 21.—The amphitheatre for bull fights and five houses in Monte de Maison, south of France, were destroyed by fire. Nobody injured.

ROME.

THE POPE LEAVING THE VATICAN.

London, July 20.—A Rome despatch says instructions have been given for the preparation of lodging for the Pope at Perugia. The French representative at Rome has been assured that the Pope's absence from the Vatican will not disturb the Papal relations with France.

GERMANY.

THE COMING ELECTIONS.

Berlin, July 21.—The approaching elections absorb public attention. The canvass is becoming latterly personal and acrimonious. Apparently the utmost confidence is felt in Ministerial circles that the Government will secure a good working majority.

The Grand Trunk Western Connection

London, July 21.—The Observer, in its financial article, says Mr. Hickson, of the Grand Trunk Railway, and Mr. Garrett, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, are negotiating here to give the Grand Trunk a Chicago connection over Garrett's line, in order to counteract Vanderbilt's recent acquisition.

Supposed Counterfeiter and Bank Robber Arrested.

New York, July 20.—Horace Huestes, an Englishman and farmer at Crown Point, was arrested in attempting to pass counterfeit $50 bills on the Tradesmen's National Bank of this city. Three ten dollar bills on the Consolidated Bank of Canada were found on his person, believed to be a portion of a large number stolen from the Canadian Bank a short time since. The prisoner refused to make any statement.

The Fastest Trotting Time.

Toledo, O., July 20.—Protime won the 2:20 race postponed from yesterday. Best time, 2:21, John H. 2nd. In the 2:26 class Lucille won; Walford 2nd. Best time, 2:24. Barnes trotted 3rd in the trial heat against time, going to the quarter pole in 34 sec.; half mile in 1 min. 8½ sec.; three-quarter pole in 1 min. 41½ sec., and a mile in 2:16, being the fastest mile ever trotted on a half mile track. He went without a running mate.

Yellow Fever.

Washington, D.C., July 20.—There were ninety-three yellow fever deaths in Havana during the week ending July 6. It is prevalent at Matanzas also, and a few cases have occurred at Key West harbor.

Two Persons Killed by Lightning.

Gloucester, Mass., July 21.—During a heavy shower this afternoon the house of John Fiens was struck by lightning and Mrs. Julia McPhee and Mrs. George Byers instantly killed. Five other houses also struck, but damage slight.

A Fire Beyond Control.

Defiance, Ohio, July 21.—This evening at ten o'clock a fire broke out in R. C. Newman's livery stable, and at this hour, 12.30 a.m., it is still raging, having already destroyed seven buildings. The fire is beyond control. Assistance has been telegraphed for. It is impossible to estimate the loss to-night.

THE WESTERN WHEAT CROP.

10,000,000 Bushels Destroyed by Hail, Rain and Heat.

Chicago, July 20.—Reports from portions of Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota state that heavy winds and severe storms of rain and hail, followed by the unprecedented hot suns of the last ten days, have occasioned immense damage to all grain, but especially to wheat. These are mainly the only districts to which the wheat crop had not been secured. The grain has been flattened, lodged and tangled by rain and wind, and the once nice heat has produced smut and rust. Two weeks ago, under the favorable conditions and prospects, the crop of wheat in that section was estimated at 50,000,000 bushels. It is now believed this amount will be decreased 20 to 30 per cent.

THE AMERICAN LAZZARONI.

An Excursion Train Boarded by Armed Ruffians Passengers Outraged.

Springfield, Mass., July 21.—A gang of armed ruffians and tramps boarded a excursion train on the New Haven and Northampton R.R. at Cheshare on Saturday night, as the party were returning from the bound. Women were insulted, clothing stolen, man abused, the rear car unshackled and the train stopped several times. The passengers and conductor were helpless.

EX-BISHOP McCOSKRY.

Departure for Europe on Saturday.

New York, July 20.—His Lordship the Right Reverend Samuel McCoskry, ex-bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the eastern diocese of Michigan, accompanied by Mrs. McCoskry, sailed for Europe to-day. His lordship will make a protracted stay on the continent.

A Tornado.

Springfield, Mass., July 21.—A tornado destroyed the fences and all the buildings of the Hampshire, Franklin and Hampden Agricultural Society, Northampton, to-day. Loss, $7,000.

Albany, N. Y., July 21.—It is believed the losses by a cyclone which passed here to-day will approach $100,000.

MISCELLANEOUS CANADIAN TELEGRAMS.

The tug Collingwood, owned by S. C. Raunaly & Co., of Toronto, was totally destroyed by fire on the evening of the 15th, twelve miles out from the Byng Inlet light. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The crew were with difficulty saved, as within five minutes after the alarm was given the boat was one sheet of flames from stem to stern.

Mr. Alex. Donald's barn, at Prince Arthur's Landing, was burned down, and his teamster, Hugh Fraser, burnt to death. Fire supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

There is about seven hundred tons of ice at Port William for shipment to the States.

The schooner Mountaineer, intending to load grain at Port Elgin for Goderich, was blown ashore three Saturday night. A heavy gale blew all day yesterday.

WALKERTON.

STRATFORD AND HURON RAILWAY.

Walkerton, Ont., July 20.—Voting took place to-day in the township of Brant on the by-law to grant a bonus of $50,000 to the Stratford & Huron Railway. The by-law was defeated by 17 votes.

ILLICIT STILL SEIZURE.

Mr. Caven, Collector of Inland Revenue, Goderich, and officer Craig, Walkerton, seized a distilling and malting establishment in Colborne. The concern was not in operation at the time of seizure, but evidences were not wanting of a large illicit traffic having been very recently carried on. The officers demolished the utensils, which included a very serviceable and ingeniously constructed malt kiln.

QUEBEC

GOLD MINING IN BEAUCE.

Quebec, July 20.—It is said that $15,000 worth of gold was taken out of the Beauce mines last week.

THE GRAVING DOCK CONTRACT.

It is definitely arranged that Larkin & Co. of St. Catharines, are to have the contract for building the graving dock.

NAPANEE.

ARREST OF THREE SUPPOSED SAFE ROBBERS.

Napanee, Ont., July 21.—Two showmen and a third party were arrested to-day in the vicinity of Centerville and are supposed to be implicated in the safe robbery. They were brought to Napanee this afternoon, and lodged in the police station. They will undergo examination to-morrow.

MANITOBA.

Winnipeg, Man., July 21.—Wires have again been down for several days.

Contractors for the completion of the Pembina branch have set men to work.

Contractors for contract No. 14, C. P. R., expect to have it completed in six weeks.

A Woman Decapitated by a G. T. R. Train.

Acton, Ont., July 20.—This morning, between 1 and 2 o'clock, a G. T. R. train, going west, struck a woman named McAlpin, a short distance east of this station, completely severing the head and shoulders from the rest of the body. She had been drinking the night before, and a bottle containing liquor was found near her body. Inquest this evening.

Haddock, the Bank Forger, Pardoned.

St. John, N. B., July 21.—Haddock, who was pardoned and released from penitentiary the other day, on account of continued serious illness, was serving a 24 years' sentence. He was one of the gang who, in 1875, defrauded the branches of the Bank of British North America, in various cities, by means of forged letters of credit. Haddock obtained $4,000 at the Bank here, and his accomplices escaped with the money while he was promptly arrested.

The Coming Boat Race.

St John, N.B., July 21.—The final deposit of $500 a side in the Hanlan-Ross race was made on Saturday with Mayor Earle, who is now the final stake holder. There is nothing more to do previous to the race, except to select the judges and put down the bu

WILL BE READY SOON.

Mr. Mackenzie will be able to meet his friends in person a few days more. The Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec and his worthy compeer, Mr. Joly, can now afford to let their unfortunate victims, the Prices and the Scotts, enjoy the cool air of health a few minutes, and, having braved public opinion, their own dishonor, and the contempt of the very party they thought to serve, they can proceed to the main business of their official lives, and play political jackals for the Government that placed them in power. With the casting vote of the Speaker, and he a commodity bought in the market and paid for at his own price, the Joly Government have contrived to scramble through the session without incurring more than one or two such defeats as the Turcotte veto would not cover. Released from police duty over their prisoners, they can now turn their attention to the great duty before them, the attempt to gain over a few of the Quebec members who voted July most have been taken into Mr. Mackenzie's confidence, and frankly informed of the dirty pass it has come to, and how he is expected to pay in seducing the electors to support the organized hypocrisy. He was, no doubt, informed that the base paid upon the principles of responsible government was not made on his account, nor for the purpose of installing a Rouge Government in Quebec as a primary object, but only as a means to an end; and this end was the retaining M. Letellier's kind friends in office at Ottawa. The celebrated coup d'etat was undertaken for this purpose and no other. It originated at Ottawa, and not at Quebec; it is the product of Ottawa brains, and there rests the responsibility.

But we will now see every member of the Joly Government, every public official, and every political power that present or prospective advantage can set in motion, as busy as bees in corrupting the electors. Local works will be projected at every point, and promises will be as plentiful as blackberries. Mr. Mackenzie will, for the last month has been pottering about the Departments at Ottawa, and presenting a plan that would become his Knight of the doleful countenance, will now pluck up courage and cheered by the hope of a diversion in his favor by Letellier and Joly, he will buckle on his armor and take the field in person. Activity in every constituency may be looked for immediately, the bustle of preparation will be heard in every hamlet and farmyard, and the vote of indifference will follow close upon the note of readiness from Quebec. The Premier will recover from his temporary stupor, and lively times may be looked for as soon as the fiery cross has been caused to circulate among the clans in Ontario.

Small troubles will this occasion to the Liberal Conservative party. They have been waiting the summons to the field for months past, and their most ardent longing has been to meet the foe at the earliest moment. So far, the time wasted has been in their favor rather than in that of the Ministerial party. The time has been employed in explaining and taking advantages of the National Policy, and in showing the electors in what way an active, skilful and experienced Government might have contributed to lighten the burden of the people during the seasons of depression through which this country has passed, and so managed the financial department of the Government that the means of employment to our workingmen and mechanics might have been preserved, and the best and most productive portion of our fellow-citizens been freed from an enforced expatriation.

These explanations and the discussions consequent upon the visits of Sir John Macdonald and his friends to different parts of the Province, have produced their legitimate effects, and every day as it rolls over adds its tale of converts to the good cause. With the Opposition, therefore, the longer the time for discussion is protracted the greater will be their majority from the whole Dominion, and the greater the number of supporters in each constituency. The only drawback to this is the continued excitement in the country and the time wasted which could be better employed in other ways. All will rejoice, therefore, to know that the Quebec Government are ready to commence business in the morning from the patron, Mr. Mackenzie. "Ca me, en you," is an honest maxim, and none should be offended if it be found that Mr. Joly and his friends act upon this principle. It will be another illustration of the prominent Grit doctrine, that "between the Central and Local Governments there must be no entangling alliances." Bah!

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR.

Mr. Cartwright finds it rather difficult to keep cool these times when the heat marks 101 in the shade. But Mr. Cartwright has other causes of nervous irritation than the raging heat of the day star. When a heated temper acts in conjunction with a high temperature, the situation becomes painfully dangerous. He cannot get the electors of London into a happy frame of mind, his voice has ceased to charm, and his stock arguments have ceased to convince. In short, he has lost control of the constituency and he is barely tolerated where before he was welcomed with enthusiasm, and he is listened to with impatience by audiences who have been accustomed to garner up his utterances as words of almost infallible wisdom. At the various meetings which he now finds it necessary to hold in all quarters of the building, he has learned with much chagrin disappointment, and a swelling of the bile difficult to be suppressed, that the words of his opponent work conviction, while his fall upon their ears and produce nothing beyond a shake of the head, a shrug of the shoulders, or a smile of good-natured contempt.

He is beginning to discover the fact—a fact that seems to penetrate his mind against the force of his will—that while he allowed himself to be rocked to rest in a fool's paradise, and vainly imagined that his leading theory "of the fly on the wheel" was as acceptable to the people of Canada as it was to himself, the world has been advancing while He remained stationary, as it ever will, like the hound friend Hap Van Winkle, he has awoke to the conviction that this is an age of progress that cannot wait upon the action of such unfledged politicians as he is. He has alluded to the question of reaction in some of his speeches, and like the rest of his colleagues who are too thick witted to see what is familiar to all others, he has only sneered at the idea as a myth. He has held the opinion up to quite recently that all that was necessary to put an end to this reaction, and to inaugurate, by means of John A. Macdonald, and interlard this abuse of Canada's prime favorite with allusions to the Pacific Scandal, and some streaks of fulsome praise of himself and friends. But a few meetings with the trusty men of London have disabused his mind of this folly, and he has learned at last, late as it is, that these same electors of London do not estimate at the value of a single cent any personal abuse he can pour out upon his former friend and leader. They have come to the conclusion that abuse of an opponent is but a poor substitute for administrative ability, that this ability is deplorably deficient in the present Government, and that their incapacity and want of principle combined are the chief causes of all the ills under which Canada now groans.

At the beginning it was fashionable with the Finance Minister to sneer at his opponent, and he promised himself an almost amount of amusement in meeting Captain Hooper and showing him up before the electors. In fact he believed he would laugh him off the course and out of the field. But he has learned ere this to form a higher opinion of his opponent, and now that he finds that the voice of the electors at every meeting goes in favor of the Conservative candidate, when he finds the cold shoulder turned to himself and Mr. Hooper received with favor and enthusiasm, he has changed his estimate of the man, and awakened to a realization of the great fact, that nothing short of a change of men and measures will go down with the people of London. "The fly on a carnival pumpkin," which figured so in these enlightened electors, and they hold firmly to the opinion that intellect was bestowed upon man in order to be used by him for his own advantage and that of his fellow-citizens at the same time. They hold the opinion that if a government can do nothing to all the country in times of emergency of national suffering, then it would be better to abolish such an expensive and useless institution, and substitute a few salaried clerks and bookkeepers to manage the public accounts and carry out the instructions of the Legislature. A Ministry who are unable to initiate any better policy than one of strict inaction are of no use either to the country or Parliament.

Five years ago thousands of children died in the tenement houses and cellars of New York and Philadelphia, during the hot season, for the lack of a breath of fresh air. Some good soul thought of free excursions, and the kindly idea spread like wild-fire from city to city, all over the country. Some other friendly soul conceived the idea of cheap summer hospitals by the seashore, and it is enlarged now into a dozen sanitariums, boarding-houses at cost. Two summers ago the Quakeress Elias Turner, whose life is a true and simple as her poetry, brought one or two sick, poor babies with their mothers to her country home for a fortnight. The fortnight over, she brought others, and asked the neighboring farmers to open their hearts to the little waifs. The press told the story, asking that others should imitate her. With cheap, simple, and most helpful charity. This summer we hear of organized systems through several of the farming districts of New York, New Jersey, Delaware and Pennsylvania, by means of which many lives of innocent children will be saved.

We have coats for winter use and coats for summer use. We have nearly all articles that we use constructed to suit the particular season of the year they are intended for. Many have summer residences and winter residences, and no one thinks of calling the same food in summer that he would subsist on in winter. Yet with these facts staring the investor in the face, he has not attempted to make a thermometer for summer use only. That is what the people want. None of your 104-degree-in-the-shade instruments, but a good, plain, serviceable thermometer, that is warranted not to go above 75 degrees at the most. The man who can get out this kind of a thermometer will make his fortune before the summer ends. The week just gone by has shown conclusively that old Mr. Fahrenheit, although no doubt an exemplary man in other respects, did not understand how to build a summer thermometer.

The American threshing machines on exhibition at Paris are splendid specimens of workmanship, and they fairly astonish the Parisians. The Echo Agricole, of Paris, speaks of them in the following terms:—"To see these threshing machines, constructed with perfect taste as to shape, and with intelligence in the materials employed, the specimens of cabinet work and joining these reapers and mowers, where all the metallic portions shine like silver, one does not imagine himself in the midst of apparatus destined for work which is reputed vulgar, such as cutting the wheat or mowing the grass, but going to the cabinet maker for jewelry and among fine work of art. Never, in any country, have been seen such grace and splendor. If by the magnificence of the machine we are to judge of the character of the workman we would be inclined to suppose the American farmer to be equally fine, walking the earth, not in blouse and wooden shoes as with us, but in full dress and with hands gloved."

The term "sun-stroke" is a misleading one. The idea gained from it is that people are struck down by the direct rays of the sun. This is indeed sometimes the case, but by no means always, for in St. Louis men have received the fatal blow in their houses, in their beds, even at midnight. The disease called sun-stroke is really a paralysis of the nervous system, resulting from excessive heat, either natural or artificial. The more or less complete action of the nerves checks muscular action, and the result is congestion either of the brain or of the lungs, or both. Death comes from either apoplexy or asphyxia. When the former, it is quickly fatal, lastingly injurious consequences nearly always remain.

"Show your passports" is the watchword for those who contemplate visiting Berlin. In future, every traveller whose face is set in that direction must have one of these documents at hand, and if he fails to produce it when he arrives in the city, he will be "proceeded against according to law." The official journal announces that this step has not been taken with the view of introducing a passport control at the railway station, but of exercising such control in connection with a system of registering all new arrivals at Berlin.

A restaurateur at Brussels recently obtained the contract for a grand political banquet, on condition that the managers of the demonstration should have the privilege of fixing him roundly for any deviation from his agreement. The banquet took place, and the landlord was fined $200 for not supplying the waiters with numbered badges, $300 for not supplying all the wine he had agreed to, $400 for not giving the $500 because the guests could get nothing to eat. The eaters must have had a mean on the European plan with a vengeance.

Mr. Treasurer Wood's letter to Father Stafford is dubbed by the Galt Reporter, the "Little Push." Yes, it is not likely that that kind of push will push a great deal.

A Russian Assassination.

ANOTHER POLITICAL MURDER—KILLING OF THE CHIEF OF POLICE OF KIEV—A REIGN OF TERROR.

The Paris Temps translates, from Russian papers, a detailed account of the recent murder of the chief of police at Kiev, Russia, perpetrated in the twilight of a summer evening, at a time when the streets of a populous city are most crowded, and every showing on the part of the murderer and his accomplices a coolness, self-possession and organization which would seem to indicate that one man was not as was the case in the days of De Maistre and Talleyrand, the political regime of Russia may be described as a despotism tempered by assassination. The Temps arrives at the conclusion that there is no doubt that the assassination of Baron Heyking at Kiev is a further link in that series of crimes which have of late so unfortunately for the honor of Russia and the judicial authorities both in Germany and in Russia, have been declared to connect this latest execution of the sentence passed by an unknown Vehmgericht with the still existing political conspiracies of the island and Hoedel and Nobiling in Germany. The victim, Baron Heyking, fulfilled at San Remo the functions discharged at St. Petersburg by Gen. Trepoff. Both were chiefs of the gendarmerie and also of the secret police, and the latter responsible for—perhaps unjustly—as responsible for the doings of the mysterious Cabinet Noir. Its machinery has already been described, but it cannot be too often repeated, for the benefit of English readers, by means by which holy Russia holds her own during the minority of her present youth or some middle-aged man, after possibly a glass too much of vodka; some young man goes reading the words of Schilling or the new-fangled social themes, may, in a convivial moment, when the wine has copiously simmering on the table, have expressed his or her opinion as to the necessity of introducing reforms, that is to say, perhaps two or three days after, the rash utterance would be reported to the secret police with the chief of the gendarmerie, and would invariably be treated with every courtesy. The high official would express his regret that imprudent words should have been spoken, and leave the room, when the visitor's chair would sink with him or her, the supper had to be eaten or body remaining above the floor, while below unseen hands administered a flagellation, the severity of which was only equalled by its agonizing. This over, the trap-door would close again, and the sufferer, suffering severe bodily pain, and even more harrowing moral anguish, would be bowed out by the ever-courteous and affable chief.

These secret whippings are said to have been frequent of late at Kiev. It enables us to understand what happened in the evening the chief of the gendarmerie, Baron Heyking, was enjoying the coolness of the air, smoking his cigarette, in company with a solid friend, strolling down the main street, suddenly the "old friend" heard the baron cry out, "Help! I am murdered." On turning around he saw his friend the baron sinking to the ground, a kindgal - i. e., a long dagger, something like the pliaus of the Bedouins, or the kindjar of the Turks—having been driven through his side up to the hilt, and a man running away. The friend raised a cry of murder, and several persons started in pursuit. A lad of 15 was the first to come up with the murderer, but a shot from a revolver speedily disposed of him, and further shots disabled the other pursuers. Finally the assassin got clear off, and even his name remains a mystery. The baron died in a few days, and it is reported that the murderer has confessed his moral—in all probability the murderer himself figuring among the mourners. Personally, the deceased officer was not unpopular, he was the docile instrument of an atrocious system, and far no doubt felt a victim to it. Such a system in our western countries would bring about speedy and terrible retribution, but in a country like Russia the sense of private wrong and outrage is very strong, and fully accounts for the commission of such crimes. The murderer of Baron Heyking will never be discovered.

Camping Out.

Some Experiences Common to Life in the Woods.

This is about the time of year when the camping-out fever is most liable to develop itself. A tent, a boat, a fish line, a couple of hooks, an army blanket, a frying pan and a pinch are indispensable to a party that are intent upon a good time. After the tent is pitched night usually comes on with remarkable celerity, and each person is assigned to some duties. Rules are passed, and all desire is felt for a refreshing sleep. The fish which have been caught are divided among all hands. Every head is raised up in anxious inquiry, when the guide comforts the camp by telling that the animals are not dangerous at this time of year, but later in the season have been known to destroy every human being in the woods. Thus comforted, all bends are again laid down. An occasional grunt comes from some rheumatic chap who complains that his back aches. Another is found to declare that sand tags are not fit for pillows, while others are ready to swear that roots and stones are wounding them. Another general start for dreamland is made and the good-night is repeated. A desh-like silence ensues, but is interrupted by a clear-complexioned individual who has dropped asleep. How he snores! Every head is raised, and "Who is that?" "Somebody punch him." "Turn him over," is heard from every mouth. A stalwart chap turns the sleeper over—the grand mistake of the night. An effort to turn him back awakes him. One half then turn out and set outside smoking and waiting for morning. By this time a "refreshing shower" sets in, and when the sleepers return to the tents, they find a duet or a tenor and soprano going on with a chorus always coming in at the wrong time. This lasts till daylight.

The camp arises somewhat dreamsbell, but cheerful. A wash in the lake, and a half-cooked breakfast prepare all hands for the day's sport. The streams have become muddy and the stones upon the mountain sides too slippery to climb. The day is spent in drying the straw, digging drains, and in a general Fourth of July. The time spent in these expeditions is usually governed by the desire of the camp to avoid responsibility and clean clothes.

England and Turkey.

Text of the Convention of Alliance.

The convention entered into between Great Britain and Turkey on the 4th of June last was laid before the British Parliament on July 8. It is as follows:—

CONVENTION OF DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND TURKEY, SIGNED JUNE 4, 1878.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, being mutually animated with the sincere desire of extending and strengthening the relations of friendship happily existing between their two Empires, have resolved upon the conclusion of a convention of defensive alliance, with the object of securing for the future the territories of Asia of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan.

Their Majesties have accordingly chosen, and named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, the Right Honorable Austen Henry Layard, Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Sublime Porte.

And His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, His Excellency Safvet Pasha, Minister for Foreign Affairs of His Imperial Majesty;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in due and good form, have agreed upon the following articles:—

ARTICLE I.

If Batoum, Ardahan, Kars, or any of them, shall be retained by Russia, and if any attempt shall be made at any future time by Russia to take possession of any further territories of His Imperial Majesty, the Sultan, in Asia, as fixed by the definitive treaty of peace, England engages to join His Imperial Majesty the Sultan in defending them by force of arms.

In return, His Imperial Majesty the Sultan promises to England to introduce such necessary reforms, to be agreed upon later between the two powers, into the government, and for the protection of the Christian and other subjects of the Porte in those territories, and in order to enable England to make necessary provision for executing her engagement His Imperial Majesty the Sultan further consents to assign the Island of Cyprus to be occupied and administered by England.

ARTICLE II.

The present convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged within the space of one month, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Constantinople, the 4th day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight.

A. H. LAYARD,
SAFVET.

ANNEX TO THE CONVENTION OF DEFENSIVE ALLIANCE BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND TURKEY, SIGNED JUNE 4, 1878.

"Convention additionnelle" between H. B. M. Layard, G. C. B., and His Highness Safvet Pasha, now the Grand Vizier of His Majesty the Sultan the following articles are added to the convention signed by them at Pera:—

I. That a Mussulman resident in the island shall be named by the Board of Pious Foundations in Turkey (Evkaf) to superintend, in conjunction with a delegate to be appointed by the British authorities, the administration of the property, funds and lands belonging to mosques, cemeteries, Mussulman schools and other religious establishments existing in Cyprus.

II. That England will pay to the Porte whatever is the present excess of revenue over expenditure in the island; this excess to be calculated upon and determined by a mixed commission, to be duly verified hereafter, and the first term of the payment to be made at the expiration of five years, dating from the date of the present convention, and the subsequent payments to be made at the end of each succeeding year.

III. That England will pay to the Porte whatever is the present excess of revenue over expenditure in the island; this excess to be calculated upon and determined by a mixed commission, to be duly verified hereafter, and the first term of the payment to be made at the expiration of five years, dating from the date of the present convention, and the subsequent payments to be made at the end of each succeeding year.

IV. That the Sublime Porte may freely sell and lease lands and other property in Cyprus belonging to the Ottoman Crown and State (Arazi Mirieh ve Emlaki Houmayoun), the produce of which does not form part of the revenue of the island referred to in Article III.

V. That the English Government, through their competent authorities, may purchase, again, and sell lands, which required for public improvements or for other public purposes, and land which is not privately owned.

VI. That if Russia restores to Turkey Kars and the other conquests made by her in Armenia during the last war the island of Cyprus will be evacuated by England, and the convention of the 4th of June, 1878, will be at an end.

Done at Constantinople, the 1st day of July, 1878.

A. H. LAYARD,
SAFVET.

SALISBURY'S INSTRUCTIONS.

The convention is accompanied by a dispatch from Lord Salisbury to Sir A. Layard, dated May 30, in which the Foreign Secretary points out that Russia would not recede from the stipulations of the Treaty of San Stefano as regards the clauses concerning Turkey in Asia.

A Dothegirls Hall in England.

During the last week public attention has suddenly been drawn to a Dothegirls Hall (almost as disgraceful a place as the famous old Dotheboys, of which Dickens tells, the deceased officer was not unpopular, he was the docile instrument of an atrocious system, and far no doubt felt a victim to it. Such a system in our western countries would bring about speedy and terrible retribution, but in a country like Russia the sense of private wrong and outrage is very strong, and fully accounts for the commission of such crimes. Total Depravity of Flies.

The fly was never known to perform a meritorious act, and all his energies are devoted to making an unmitigated nuisance of himself. Perhaps his most conspicuous trait is his colossal impudence. Albeit diminutive in size, he will outdo a whilter in nose of hotel clerks and railroad officers in the display of arrogance and impertinence. He is more penetrating that love, and stony limits cannot keep him out. No privacy is so sacred that this pestilent insect does not make his way to its inner depths, without even offering an apology. He never waits for an invitation, but comes everywhere as a "dead-head," without as much as remarking "by your leave." The most enterprising and persistent of special commissioners is diffident in comparison. In august assemblies of state he invades the seat of honor, and does not forbear to perch upon the nose of the grandest plenipotentiary, or to explore the nostrils of the Prime Minister. Even Kings and Queens are not exempt from his prying curiosity, and he will walk boldly into their royal ears, if carelessly left open, without the smallest compunction. At banquets he evades the most vigilant door-keeper and makes himself at home—an unwelcome but inevitable guest. He pounces upon the choicest viands and takes a taste from every dish, and does not scruple to use the frills and laces of the company as his napkin. He flies him to my lady's chamber, and unblushingly explores its most guarded secrets. What he does not know about these things is not worth knowing, and he pries into them from sheer depravity. Thence he ranges through all the habitacions of high and low, and makes himself acquainted with every department of the household. He is found at every resort of fashion or dissipation, and is alike night-cosmopolitan in his tastes. Sea shore and mountain are alike to him, if he can find human beings to torment and annoy.

Not only is the fly an intolerable bore, through his persistent presence where he is not wanted and his offensive familiarity, but his habits are every way bad. As a "dead-beat" he has no rival in animated nature. He keeps all manner of late hours, and utterly disregards the claims of order and decency. He loafs about bar-rooms, and partakes of free lunches without the least sense of shame or degradation. He eats and drinks of everything that can be eaten or drunken, and always at the expense of somebody—as, and without the slightest show of gratitude. Filth is as attractive to him as elegance and luxury, and he has a most repulsive habit of exploring every accessible mass of pollution and straightway intaking himself to the pampered ebook of vanity or the delicious cates of the fastidious epicure. He delights in tormenting man, from whose labors he derives his chief sustenance, and will take any means advantage to give him annoyance. If his victim has the misfortune of having to part his hair with a towel, he will rally his forces with the most insensitive expanse of the bald cranium a regular parade ground, and will pounce upon it with delight as it heightens in a barber's chair, with his arms swathed in a sheet and a dozen yards of calico, and the perilous edge of the razor at his throat, and will hang from almost the ceiling. He will catch him in the act of taking a bath, and will be the earliest visitor in the morning as a fringe to the disturbed slumbers of the night, or after dinner as a restoration from the labors of the day, and with maddening ingenuity will keep him from the desired noon, and lumpy bed—a place where he is ready to accept the counsel of Job's wicked wife.

And what are the consequences of the life of iniquity pursued by this depraved insect? In the first instance, adequate to the offences prepared for him either in this world or the world to come. On his arrest, logical branch of this inquiry we shall not presume to offer an opinion, but we are sure that he never comes by his fate deserts here. He is idle, dissolute, gluttonous, pestiferous, and tormenting, and yet he seems to pass his life gayly, free from care or trouble, and defiant of all laws, human and divine. He even defies the law of gravitation, and travels with equal ease in any direction or on any surface not whitened with soda treacherous stickiness. Apparently, he enjoys complete immunity from the retribution which his conduct deserves, except when he is entrapped through his insatiate appetite into sloughs of despond, drowned in milk, or smothered in molasses, and occasionally he is crushed or slaughtered as a penalty for his temerity, but he never dies of sickness or old age. Barring accident or violence, the fly is practically immortal, a perennial nuisance, a standing example of total depravity, which, so far as we know, the eternal punishment which is its proper corollary.

The Alligators and the Ox.

The Tallahassee Floridian says: "That the alligator should attack an ox will be surprising news even to those who are familiar with fresh-water monster. The Floridian has been furnished by an eye-witness with the interesting details of the strange encounter last week at Lake Jackson. The ox went into the lake to drink, and was attacked by the alligator, whose mouth closed on the fore-leg of the animal, crushing the bone. The ox started immediately out of the water, dragging the alligator. Enraged with pain, the poor animal reared and plunged wildly, endeavoring to horn his antagonist. Meantime, the edge of the lake was black with the snouts of alligators which had smelled the blood that ran from the ox when first struck in the water. Four or five of the monsters crawled out, and, with wide open mouths, started for the attack. Meanwhile the ox loosened the hold of his antagonist, and, snorting out of the wound, went in with infuriated ardor to the assault of the reinforced assailant. He caught one of the alligators on his horns and threw him high in the air, the clumsy thing falling heavily to the ground, where it lay stunned. Another was tossed far into the lake. But the gallant ox was, by a false manœuvre, again in the water, in which element his activity was impeded, and being surrounded by the foes, one of which caught him by the nose and pulled his head under water, he soon fell a victim by drowning."

Nature's Gentlemen.

From the London Truth.

Arabs are nature's gentlemen, as differ-ent from the Turks as an Englishman is from the Neapolitan lazzaroni. I remember a story that I heard, when in Syria, of an Arab. He had a garden, and in his garden he was accustomed to take his frugal luncheon. One day he saw the son of a neighbor stealing this luncheon. The Arab at once ran away. A friend met him, and to him he explained what had occurred. "I suppose they gave you a dollar," the friend asked the friend. "No," replied the Arab, "I am running away lest the boy should see me, for it would be a terrible thing for him, when grown up, to be aware that he is a thief."

The correspondent of the Western Morning News at Zanzibar writes that the slave trade is largely on the increase since the withdrawal of the cruisers, thus leaving two thousand miles of coast unwatched.

JET:

OR

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

"Those were my father and mother," says Mark, shortly. "I recollect they were living at Naples when I was a small boy at Ragley. I went down there once for my holidays."

"Sir George in ill-health," Mr. Conyngham goes on to read. "staying at Hotel Farnese. A Mr. Biron of the party."

"A Mr. Biron of the party!" repeats Mark Austen, mechanically.

"Then we have our next meeting. I leave a space—Ohm, you see—in the event of coming across the same people again. Sir George and Lady Austen, Hotel des Trois Reines, Upper Engadine. Sir George greatly broken. The Reverend Mr. Biron with them." Can that be no error of the pen do you suppose—the Reverend Laurence Biron?"

"No error at all," answers Mark Austen, almost with a groan of impatience. "You have every detail most correctly, sir."

"Oh, as to details, I cannot pretend to enter upon them," says Mr. Conyngham, deprecatingly. "I add a word or two, betoken the name and date, and trust to such wretched memory as I possess for the rest. There is yet another entry, I perceive—quite a recent one: 'Hotel Carour, Florence. Lady Austen patroness of fancy-ball' (this, of course, is since your father's death); 'kept awake till three in the morning by the fiddlers.' Your mother, I imagine, must have been staying in the same hotel with myself. 'Mem. The Reverend Laurence Biron.'"

"The Reverend Laurence Biron appears to be the burden of the song," observes Jet, consciously, in her turn, to be saying something to suit the case. "Pray, Mr. Conyngham, does the Reverend Laurence Biron go about as traveling-chaplain to your mamma?"

Mark Austen turns his eyes full upon her. He has handsome, outspoken eyes—indeed, his whole boyish face is handsome, although Miss Jet Conyngham may not choose to think so.

"The Reverend Laurence Biron is so little of a reverend that I have never remembered to call myself the nature of his clerical duties. Altogether," says Mark, "I suppose I have been in his society four times during my life: twice when I was at schoolboy; again"—a curious inflection changes his voice—"at my father's funeral; and—once since!—It is probable that you know Mr. Biron's history much better than I do, sir!" he adds, turning in manner than the subject would seem to warrant.

"I know no one's history well," says Mr. Conyngham, with melancholy promptness. "I have neither strength nor spirits for the intricacies of this interesting world. The entries in my name-book I appear to have cast this gentlemen's portrait, as nearly as it would seem, Mr. Austen, in the society of members of your family. There my knowledge of him ends. I do not imagine I should know Mr. Laurence Biron by sight if I were to meet him in the street."

And a really noteworthy side of Frederick Conyngham's character is laid bare in the admission. Living, winter after winter, in the most condensed atmosphere of gossip—I refer to town—he is a stranger to it—passing long months with the same set of people in the case of the large invalid hotels along the Riviera, seeing every kind of social drama, every variety of love, hatred, friendship, semi-friendliness, played out under his very eyes—he confesses insensible to it all. The name of his acquaintance he enters in his book. Their physical ailments, real or fancied, may, from his general sympathy with medical subjects, linger in his memory. Here his interest in his fellow-creatures ends. You might sit next him at dinner and breakfast through half a winter, and, unless you consult the same table-d'hôte bearing directly upon his own personal comfort—such as wishing, on behalf of the room, for an obnoxious draught, or the like—you would fail to impress your personality upon his mind.

"Mr. Laurence Biron I should certainly not remember were I to meet him in the street. My impressions of Lady Austen are more vivid. Does she resemble your mother, I think, Mr. Austen?"

"Not the very least in the world: I am told, sir," is Mark's quick answer.

"Ah! C'était M. son père qui n'était pas si bien," murmurs Jet, tentatively.

Happily, the impertinence is lost. Mr. Conyngham has risen from the table, and is softly gazing, despondently, at the arrangement of the traveling-bags. Mark Austen is too thoroughly engaged in his own wet over-cheerful reflections to catch the drift of Miss Conyngham's whisper.

"I suppose I have to go, sir," he marks, feeling blankly in his heart that will those last ten minutes of daylight be side the window went his last chance of declaring himself. On the transparent pretext of looking up a school-friend at Folkestone, he has accompanied Jet and her father thus far upon their journey (money for railway-tickets, alas! a consideration to him at present), little more ridicule than usual for his pains! "You have preparations still to make, Miss Conyngham, and will be glad to get me out of the way."

"Out of the way!" repeats Jet, coolly. "On the contrary, I think you would do well to stop and be of use, if your friend can spare you."

"Oh, my friend—"

"Is of the Mrs. Harris type—hypothetical. So much the better. With all the will in the world, I am not Paolo; and we have eleven large cases, besides a host of little parcels and hand-bags, to look after."

"Paolo, sir?" says Mr. Austen, at the sacrifice of most valuable time, is kindly going to see us on board: so you can lie down and sleep for just one hour and five minutes. You need have no more trouble about luggage or porters than if Paolo were here," adds the girl. "Mr. Austen and I take all the responsibility in our own hands."

Mr. Conyngham shakes his head pathetically.

"I never sleep when I am traveling, my dear—it would be scarcely an exaggeration to say that I never sleep at any time; but I can go through the form of lying down. It is a duty to exhibit a duty to one's strength while we can."

And, muffling the ferret cloak around him, the invalid lies passively down on a sofa, closes his eyes, and in a few minutes' time, as far as man's testimony can be judged by of others than himself, is in the land of dreams.

"Poor papa! This is his last chance of rest until we join Paolo," says Jet, in a whisper. "If you can stand the frightful slowness of a tête-a-tête, Mr. Austen, I propose that we take ourselves and the lights into the next room. The bags can be looked and the hotel-bill paid in a few minutes. That will give papa a good hour's sleep."

And Mark Austen an hour's undisturbed talk with the object of his adoration.

Who shall say his pole-bear was been propitious to him at last?

They move across the room; Jet on tiptoe, bearing the candles; young Austen with the sensations of a man about to hear a sentence, following. Softly they open a door that leads into a small adjoining sitting-room, close it noiselessly behind them, and are alone.

"If we had only a pack of cards," says Jet, seating herself beside a table, and looking bored by anticipation—"if we had only a pack of cards, we might enliven these terrible sixty minutes with a game of écarté. Or do you understand fortune-telling? Cora has a genius for it. Long before papa decided on taking me, Cora foretold how I should 'meet my fate'—tall, dark, in spectacles (of course, with the usual drawback of the malignant fair woman), in the south. Do you understand fortune-telling, Mr. Austen?"

CHAPTER III.

"I PITY THE PERSON."

He draws up a chair to about three feet distant from her, and begins—yes, on my word as a faithful narrator, begins—without one syllable of introduction, one note of warning; just, with a girl as keenly alive to the ridiculous as Jet Conyngham, the very worst policy upon for him to adopt. Young Mark, however, is far too agitated, far too deeply, too passionately enamored, to think of weighing his impulses in the balance of prudence.

"This is the last time I shall be likely to see you for a great many months, Miss Conyngham."

"Are you going to tell my fortune?" she interrupts, with a half suppressed yawn. "Some people read the book of fate by palmistry—these lines, you see, that intersect each other like a capital 'W'—and tinting out her delicately-cut, slightly sun-burned hand for his inspection.

Mark seizes it between both his own—an unwise action enough, but the temptation, poor lad! is too strong for him.

"I have known you one year!" he exclaims, not pausing to decipher the meaning of her face. "By the time I had known you a week, as you yourself, as every one else, must have seen, it was all over with me."

Jet, on this unexpected sally, allows her hand to remain tranquilly in his possession. She looks at him straight between the eyes, an ominous quiver, the while, hovering about the corners of her lips.

"By the time you had known me a week, it was—all over with you! Before we go any further, Mr. Austen, before I even attempt a reply, will you tell me if it is any kind of riddle? Cora and Adolphus are real masters of the art, but I—"

"You—are affecting to jest at what to me is a matter of life and death."

Hot Weather in India.

Devices for Keeping Cool in the Torrid Regions.

Communicated by an East Indian.

In India, the "hot weather," or dry season, lasts from about March 15 to June 15, and the thermometer gradually rises till, from April 15 onward, it may register anywhere from 110 to 118 deg. in the shade.

In various parts of the Indian peninsula the climates and temperatures vary. Along the coast the thermometer will sel iom go higher than 105 deg., and will not often reach that height. But the "cold weather" temperature will not reach much below 65, if at all, remaining constantly between 70 and 100 through changes of the seasons. "Up country," as going inland is called, where the altitudes are high, the range of the thermometer is more extensive, and in the cold nights of the cold season will drop down to the freezing point, the coldest hours of the twenty-four being from 2 to 5 a. m. With the rising sun, the atmosphere warms up, till at 2 p. m. it is at its greatest fervidity, being then, in most Provinces, such as Oude, the Punjaub, Rohilcund, etc., of the country," as going inland is called, where the altitudes are high, the range of the thermometer is more extensive, and in the cold nights of the cold season will drop down to the freezing point, the coldest hours of the twenty-four being from 2 to 5 a. m. With the rising sun, the atmosphere warms up, till at 2 p. m. it is at its greatest fervidity, being then, in most Provinces, such as Oude, the Punjaub, Rohilcund, etc., of Bengal, about 95 or 70 deg. The coldest weather is in late December and early January, and with the growing day, the days become oven-like; as I have said before.

During the "hot weather" there is always a wind blowing—a hot, burning blast more or less strong, which sweeps over the arid plains thirsting for water. Sometimes it shifts about from point to point, but generally it is constant from the south or southwest. All houses are built with French windows opening to the ground, and with doors on all sides to admit every breeze and encourage a thorough draught. Up near the ceiling are small windows built like the transoms over our doors and closed or opened at will by means of cords. As the weather becomes warmer the "cuscus tatties" are fitted to all the doors and lower windows; tubes for water are placed beside each tattie, or between two, and two or more coolies, according to the size of the house, are hired. Their duties are to provide a constant water supply for the tubs, to keep the tatties ever moist, and to "trim ship, as it were—i. e., to keep the draught from end to end of the house with the wind.

But there are days when there is no breeze—when the fervor of the sun scorches up even the energy of the simoom, and leaves the whole atmosphere a dull, breathless oven. To counteract this evil has been invented. It is a large box, containing an aisle which crosses from side to side; to his sais are fixed four to six fans, raising from the centre and extending to within an inch of the top, bottom and sides. The front end of this box is elongated into a square funnel, which is inserted into a window or door, and the remaining space is carefully boarded up around the funnel and made as air-tight as possible. The open sides of the thermantidote is fitted with "cuscus tatties," and a curtain is so arranged that a constant supply of water is given (by means of pierced troughs placed over them) to the tatties of the thermantidote. The machine is now ready for work. The motor is a coolie, who turns a crank attached to the axle of the fan. To multiply the revolutions of this fan, a complicated attachment as pulleys is often resorted to, but this requires more motor power.

But these means are insufficient to keep the atmosphere cool. Punkahs are needed within. These are long swinging fans, made of a wooden frame-work covered with cotton, to the lower edge of which is attached a heavy, deep fringe. These punkahs are slung to the beams of the roof by stout cords, and from one side a cane (rattan) passes out through a small hole in the wall to the outside or verandah of the house. Two or more of these fans may be connected together from room to room, and are constantly swinging by the motor without—the ever-present coolie.

Without the coolie, India would not be habitable by the civilized European. He keeps the punkah ever swinging, and they rarely faint or fail. Sleep they do and often at their post, but still without relinquishing their automatic labor.

With these varied appliances, the heated atmosphere, which causes the thermometer to register 115 and 118 degrees in the shade, is toned down to 80 degrees, 76 degrees, and even 76 degrees. In such an atmosphere one can breathe, move and live.

AND NOW SO THEY LIVE!

Let us picture to ourselves a European military or civil station. At 4.30 a.m., the air quivers with the long-drawn "dress" call from the quarters of the various regiments. Outside the horse-keepers are grooming their masters' horses, and the cooks are preparing tea, coffee, toast and eggs. Within doors the mess are bathing and dressing for parade or drill, if military, if civilians, they are preparing for the morning ride with the ladies, who are also bathing and donning their riding habits. A cup of tea is taken, or coffee, and a bite of toast,—perhaps an egg, but not often. Then away to duty or to pleasure. By 6.30 a. m. all are winding their way homeward. By 7 a. m. they are all home, and are seated in the verandas, or "sub legnine fuji," partaking of the chota hazeri, or "little breakfast." This consists of tea, coffee, chocolate, toast, bread and butter, preserves, eggs, and fruit of such kinds as are procurable. This meal is drawn out to 8 and past, but by 9 a. m. every one who has no duty to perform out of doors is doffing his gossamer garments and getting into light washing order. The civilians are at their offices, the military officers are in their mess-house at breakfast.

In the very hottest weather the time is mostly spent lounging with extended legs on long-armed chairs, or lying on the bread of the back, in either case under the cessupkas. In the hottest weather the "door is closed" to say but the most intimate friend from 10 a. m. till 4 p.m. There is no prevarication or "not-at-home" about it. "Darwaza band" ("the door is closed"), says the attendant in the verandah to any stranger who may by any "power" enough to attempt entry, and the door remains closed except to those who may have been asked to "tiffin" (all calling hours, which are from 4 to 7 p. m., but nearer the latter than the former.

BATHS.

Those are due about June 10 to June 15. The afternoon has been hot and sultry to a degree of utter prostration: branding sodas have been gulped down ad libitum. Perhaps all are gently languidly trying to eat dinner, whilst some sorry overheated individual calls out "Pull," and lotta back is hanged in his chair. Suddenly, a mighty rushing wind is heard sweeping over the distant plains; at first it comes hot, fervid, and burning, then a patter of heavy drops, then a rush of water pours from the opened flood-gates of heaven that for four long months have been sealed. "Open the doors and windows!" "Hurrah!" "Open some more champagne!" rounds through the reanimated throng, and in ten minutes the thermometer outside has fallen from 110 to 70. The rains have begun. The hot weather is over.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. BASE BALL NOTES.

The Worcesters Again Defeated.

How the Race for the Pennant Stands—Other Games.

The final and last match of the Toronto-Worcester series for the International Championship was played in the city on Saturday afternoon last, in the presence of quite a number of spectators. The game was one which could not be termed entertaining, owing to the loose manner in which the players disported themselves. In the case of Burke there was some excuse, as he was indisposed, but Dowcher and Bradley evidently had an "off" day—probably occasioned by the excessive heat of the afternoon. The game during the first two innings looked rather blue for the home team, but on the fourth they got the hang of Simpson's pitching, and batted him for seven runs, which the visitors could not counterbalance during the remaining innings. Matthews took Simpson's place afterwards, and, although four runs were made off him, the batting of the "red men" was not so heavy as in the fore part of the match. Errors were the rule rather than the exception, as will be observed from the following score, which supplies all the data requisite to a proper understanding of the game:—

THE INTERNATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

The Tecumsehs have distinguished themselves during the past week by winning the entire series of games played with their opponents, viz:—Two from the Lowells and two from the Worcesters. This gives them the lead in the list of games, with the Buffalos being second and the Stars third. The Hornells have swept up to a fourth place, and if they continue to play as they have been doing recently, will give the first-named a hard tussle before long. Some statisticians omit the Cricketers' games, but it's not their fault that they were handed and the other was expelled, so that if one is left out the other should be. In the following list the games of both clubs, as allowed by the International Constitution, are inserted. The Stars have been defeated twice this week, and do not appear to be in as good trim as they were a few weeks since. The following is the record so far as we have been able to keep track of the games:—

It may afford a little consolation to know that this weather is healthy for the potato bug, and he is thriving on the luxurious plant which he has selected as his future destinated for him, and he for it. We rail against the world a great deal, as though it were cruel and unkind to the last degree, and yet under right conditions it is exceedingly obliging. When, for instance, a man is in a financial corner and wants money, does the world stand in his way at all? By no means: it very cheerfully lets him want it.

DROWNED AT TRAMSWILDE.—A correspondent writing from Tramsville on the 19th, says:—On the evening of the 17th instant Mr. George Fox, express agent and son of Mr. C. Fox, merchant of this place, was drowned while in bathing in the River Thames along with four of his young friends. He swam across the river, and in returning he gave signs of fatigue. Being asked if he was all right, he answered No. His companion went to his assistance and endeavored to save him, but all efforts proved fruitless. They were greatly hindered in their efforts by two dogs that accompanied the party. They began fighting in the water, and separated the young men from their drowning companion, and he sank for the last time. His body was recovered about three hours afterwards, and was interred last evening. His remains were followed by a long concourse of sorrowing friends. The parents have the heart felt sympathy of the community in this sad bereavement.

POLICE COURT.—At this Court on Saturday, the Rev. M. pressling, a tramp named Dick McGuinness, who said he was from Montreal, was charged with vagrancy, he having been found walking about the streets at three o'clock a.m. He was remanded for three days. Constables Engleram, James Barney and Thomas McLoughlin were charged at the instance of a colored woman named Bee Logan with assaulting and assaulting her. The fact is that neither of the parties were at all concerned in the matter, and they were discharged from custody. It is a pecular law that will force a man to jail on the word of such women as Bee Logan. The boys charged with breaking into the Market House were again remanded for investigation.

BOY DROWNED.—Alexander Percy Watson, a boy of nine years, was drowned on Friday at Windsor, by jumping into the river after his hat. He was unable to swim, and was not found on Sunday last, in the water hat by a comrade, who probably did not expect that the little fellow would follow. The alarm was given instantly, and many attempts were made to rescue the boy without avail. About two o'clock a young man named Richardson, after diving several times, brought the body to shore. body. The lad was a son of Mr. John Watson, formerly of this city.

A WELL KNOWN THIEF DISCOVERED OF.—At the Police Court on Saturday, the Police Magistrate heard the case of Mr. John Macdonald, who charged a notorious thief named Joseph Gainor, alias Leslie, with the larceny of a satchel from his hotel in the winter season. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to four years' imprisonment in the Provincial Penitentiary. On the second charge of burglariously entering John Devoy's house about the same time, Gainor was also convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment—both being to run concurrently.

A JUVENILE PICKPOCKET.—A boy, probably one of the arabs who are becoming altogether too numerous in the city, made a bold attempt to snatch a purse out of the pocket of Mrs. Alex. Stewart of Maple street, on the market, Saturday morning. He was caught in the act, and manoeuvred in carrying with a pocket handkerchief only. The person that knows the youngster the market within a short time were, no doubt, taken by the same class of sneak thieves.

AWFULLY SUDDEN DEATH

Of Mr. Daniel Neilson, one of the G. W. R. Conductors.

We regret to record the death (and we feel sure the regret will be shared by thousands throughout Ontario who had the pleasure of his acquaintance) of Mr. Daniel Neilson, of this city, a well-known and deservedly esteemed passenger conductor of the Great Western Railway, which occurred on the Steamboat Dreesen sailor week, between Ingersoll and Dorchester, in an early hour last Sunday morning. Mr. Neilson was a very stout man, and although he looked the picture of health, did not possess a strong constitution. Frequently of late he was forced to relinquish his usual trips, but after a few days' relaxation he generally reappeared sufficiently to resume his work. On Wednesday last he left for the East on his last trip, and, although the day was very warm, he did not experience more than ordinary fatigue on reaching Clifton. While there, however, he was taken suddenly ill, and telegraphed to his brother-in-law, Mr. Allan Douglass, to come and take his train. Mr. Douglass did so, and was en route home this morning when the sad event occurred. It appears that deceased took a berth in one of the sleeping cars on leaving Clifton, and had reached pretty near Ingersoll without occasioning Mr. Douglass or his friends any alarm as to his condition. Shortly before arriving there Mr. D. missed him, and Mr. Neilson got up, partially clothed himself and came out of his berth, and sat down on a stool at an open window. Mr. Douglass, shortly after leaving Ingersoll, went into the car again to see how he was, and found him sitting perfectly still in the seat. He shook him several times, but to his great astonishment did not receive a response. He felt his pulse, but it had ceased to beat, particular him to call himself from which the vital spark had fled forever. Upon reaching Dorchester, a telegram was despatched to his relatives here, and also to the Company's physician, the latter of whom was promptly on hand on the arrival of the train. A casual glance, however, at the deceased was sufficient to convince the practiced eye that he had succumbed to heart disease, and that restoration was out of the question. The body was subsequently removed to his mother's house. Deceased was a young man, unmarried, and had worked his way up from the humblest position on the road to the responsible position of a passenger conductor. He was of a genial temperament, fond of a practical joke, and made many and lasting friends amongst the travelling public. He enjoyed the full confidence of his superiors, and was in every respect, a trustworthy official.

Deceased was a member of Kilwinning Lodge, No. 64, A. F. and A. M., and also of Eureka Lodge, No. 30, I.O.O.F., of this city. The funeral yesterday afternoon was attended by representatives of both Orders, fully 250 of each being in the procession. In addition to the London brethren, special trains were run from Port Stanley, St. Thomas and Clifton to London, the latter having on board about fifty of deceased's intimate friends and fellow-employés, who had been permitted to pay their last tribute of respect to the memory of deceased through the kindness of the General Manager. From Clifton we observed Conductors Hamilton, Brown, Purness, and Macdonald, and several engineers and train hands from Port Stanley and St. Thomas, Station Master Knight, Locomotive Supt. Chambers, Conductor Fraser and Gen. Supt., W. Egan, Pass. Agent, J. E. Dawson, Asst. Supt., and other officials, all of whom we noticed endeavored to keep their road from being last to arrive. On the other hand, Mr. Petheram, the engineer of Mr. Jenkins' special vestige left the late residence of deceased, and proceeded up Talbot to her of Credit Valley road, where he halted and opened their ranks to allow the hearse and mourners to pass through. The cortege then proceeded to the First Presbyterian Cemetery in London Township, and conducted the ceremony according to the ritual of the Order. There were seventy-seven carriages in the procession, and along the streets traversed a large number of citizens were assembled. The pall-bearers were all old friends of deceased, and embraced Messrs. R. Furness, David Fortune, Hugh Brodie, James Rhonat, Thos. Brock, John Robinson, W. L. Flaherty, and Thomas Minton. The service at the grave was conducted by W. Bro. R. B. Hungerford, of Kilwinning Lodge, assisted by his officers and brethren. The large attendance on the occasion showed the respect entertained for deceased and his family by his former fellow-workmen.

FATAL MOUNTAIN ASCENT.

Two Young Englishmen Lost on a Volcano Near Arequipa.

From the South Pacific Times.

A letter from Arequipa gives particulars of a fatal accident to two gentlemen who had made the ascent of the Misti, a volcano about 12,520 feet above that city, and 20,320 feet above the level of the sea.

On Saturday, the 11th of May, a party of three gentlemen started from Arequipa to make the ascent. Mr. Stephen Ryder, of the house of Fletcher & Co., Arequipa, Mr. Bothwell, a young man of 19, who only recently arrived from England as a clerk in the same house, and a Mr. Bulpett, lately arrived per the Cotopaxi on a tour to the west with a friend. On Sunday, the 12th, Mr. Bulpett returned to Arequipa alone, having made the ascent. He had gone on ahead of the other two. He had reached the same way he went, and having seen nothing of the others after his first separation, he concluded that they had given up the idea of going to the top and had gone back to Arequipa.

On Monday, the 13th, Mr. Ryder's horse, which had been tied up at about 9,000 feet from the top, returned to Arequipa without a bridle, which at once caused considerable that something must be wrong, and parties immediately went in search of the missing pair. For several days nothing was heard of them. They had taken neither provisions nor blankets with them. It was evident, however, that they had reached the top of the volcano, as a similar had hoisted a flag, which was found floating in the crater. The Prefect of Arequipa sent an officer and troops to scour the mountain, and innumerable private search parties followed.

At 10 p. m. on the 17th of May news reached Arequipa that the body of Mr. Ryder had been found far down in a precipice in a small recess, where the Indians would hardly get to them, even by the help of a rope and at the greatest risk. He was found in a sitting posture, with his head jammed into a small opening. How he got there is a mystery. It was a point where he could neither get down himself nor get up again. It is thought he had been alive above three days after the fall, as he had taken off his coat, hat, watch and chain, and placed them with his pipe at his feet. His pants were torn, probably in rolling down, for he must have rolled a long distance, and one boot was off, evidently in the effort to get his foot free. From the night or early Saturday morning, some person, at present unknown, obtained an entrance into one of the windows of Mr. Robert Bredin's house, 347 Simcoe street, by means of a chair which had been left outside the night previous. The thief rifled a desk in one of the rooms, and stole a $5 bill, a bank book and sundry articles of value, besides a new pair of pants and a shirt. The intruder did not alarm the occupants of the house by his movements.

PRESENTATION.—Rev. J. J. Rice, having recently been removed from Horton street charge to that of Dundas street, London East, was surprised a few evenings before this removal by the leading friends of his old charge and valuable present made to Mrs. Rice. Last evening a number of the Dundas street congregation, in the name of the whole, took friendly possession, and presented a purse of money, with an affectionate address, to the reverend gentleman, and also presents for Mrs. Rice.

CRICKET.—A match was played on Wednesday last on the Paris grounds between the Paris and Norwich clubs, terminating in favor of Paris, with seven wickets to fall. The innings of the manager. She was a bunch Oliver, 13 and 1, were the chief scorers; Wm. Hodgson, 9 and 2, were the best for Norwich, C. Adams played a good second innings for 22. Score:—Norwich, 51 and 46; Paris, 87 and 35, three wickets down.

SUN STROKE.—On Friday while a man was working in the water-works trenches, he was sun struck, and Mr. John Orange had him removed to his residence. The ambulance was summoned some years ago as bearer at Sinmon's Northern Hotel in this city.

A Railway Blockade.

Lively Issue Between the Western and Credit Valley Railways.

Attempted Forcible Crossing by the Credit Valley Line at Woodstock.

The Workmen Checked by G. W. Men.

A SERIOUS RIOT ENSUES.

Special Correspondence of the Free Press.

WOODSTOCK, July 21.—At this west end of Woodstock and about a mile from the G. W. R. Station here the new road, the C. V. R., crosses the G. W. R., as yet the right to cross has not been definitely settled. The C. V. R. is finished on one side of the crossing and the men are working on the other side and are nearing Beachville, five miles from this town. The carting of the rails, ties and materials the C. V. R. authorities considered involved an immense amount of extra expense and delayed them considerably in the completion of the road to Ingersoll. They determined to get their engine, the "Robert Hay," and the cars across so that they would have them all in the work. The crossing they wished to cross was not a permanent one, and only to allow their locomotive to pass. Yesterday afternoon, about half-past one o'clock, they commenced bringing the engine and built before the first of September. If this is not done, then the sums of $10,000 received, will revert to the authorities who voted it on these conditions. While the C. V. R. people give out that they only desire a temporary crossing, in order that they may be the better enabled to proceed with the construction of the road, it does not require a great deal of foresight to see that by gaining a crossing at this point they would be, to a certain extent, masters of the situation hereafter. The G. W. Railway people, moreover, object to a level crossing at the point named, more especially as there are two stopping places already within a couple of hundred yards of each other, and a third one at which it would be compelled to come to a dead-stop in either direction towards the south.

The weather to-day is warm and close. Last night was very sultry. Thousands living in the tenement districts slept on the sidewalks and roofs, and many women sat up on the stoops with sick children all night.

Forty thousand people bathed at the free baths yesterday.

Visitors at Long Branch and Coney Island complain that the heat was unbearable there yesterday.

Portland, Me., July 21.—Gen. George F. Shepley, Judge of the United States Circuit Court for the First District, died here last night, aged 59.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 21.—The thermometer stood yesterday at 94° and 95° more deaths.

St. Louis, Mo., July 21.—Nineteen cases of sunstrokes were treated at the Dispensary yesterday, and three deaths. It is believed the worst is now over.

A Religio-Maniac Breaks his Wife's Neck, and then Hangs her to a Tree.

Hancock, Wis., July 20. — The particulars of a horrible wife murder, perpetrated on Sunday last, in the town of Deerfield, have just come to light. A German named Whitney, who has been for some years religiously insane, on Sunday morning got up artificially insane and went to the barn to do chores, his wife soon after following him, leaving two daughters to get breakfast. The meal being prepared, the father came in, and after waiting some time for the mother they ate breakfast. A chapter in the Bible was read and prayers offered. Mrs. Whitney not yet appearing, the youngest daughter went out and found her body hanging to a small tree, her knees upon the ground. The neighbors were called, and an inquest followed, which revealed the fact that Whitney murdered his wife by breaking her neck across the manger in the barn, and had then tied her body up to the tree to make it appear as if she had hung herself. CANTERBURY STATION, York Co., N. B., October 10th, 1876.

MR. J. H. ROBINSON,
DEAR SIR:—In reply to your letter of enquiry I would say that your Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto Phosphate of Lime is the best preparation of the kind I have ever seen or taken.

I was ordered by my physician to take it, and commenced about the last of August, and since that time I have felt a different man, and also took considerable change myself, as regards appetite and flesh, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity in any manner you see fit.

Yours, dear sir, yours truly,
(Signed) C. H. S. CROSKRITE.

We, the undersigned, hereby consent to have our names publi-hed as witnesses to the effects of Robinson's Phosphorized Emulsion on the person of Mr. Croskrite, and do assert that the foregoing statement is correct in every particular.

Sir Capel Fitzgerald.

Accused of Stealing the Diamonds of a Girl whom he Stole off to Paris.

From the Liverpool Mercury.

London, July 8—To-day we are talking of our new Alfred, who on Saturday was charged at Marylebone Police Court with stealing his Violetta's diamonds, value £400. Alfred's name is Sir Capel Fitzgerald, and Violetta is known in the dramatic as Susan Stevens. The young lady was living under the "protection of another gentleman," when she received some presents from Sir Capel, albeit quite out of funds, stole her off to Paris. They returned a week ago, and the unfortunate creature discovered that the young profligate was also a married man, and, moreover, a father of five children. This put the final stolen her jewelry, worth some hundreds of pounds. He then made a most dishonorable proposition of love and promises to restore the stolen property which the enraged young woman gladly pledged or stolen.

Who is this Sir Capel Fitzgerald? Is he an Irishman? Is he of the Geraldine family in Ireland, which counts one duke and several minor peerages among its members? No; he is indeed named Fitzgerald, but that is all. His family history is a strange one, and the Police Court case the other day will cause many a Tipperary peasant to prick up his ears, as well as his pony, at the ancient popthey and a heritage of malediction.

This young fellow's grandfather was the first baronet so created for the bloody part he took in the horrors which followed the Irish insurrection of '98. He was known as "Hanging Fitzgerald. He stalked through the country shooting hanging, and flogging men, women and children whom he chose to suspect of "disloyalty." The pitch cap, the triangle, and the lash were part of his travelling equipment.

One day an old woman actually knelt in the blood of her two sons, whom "Magistrate" Fitzgerald had shot dead: at their own do r, and lifting her hands to heaven, "cursed him" to the third generation, and prophesied a death of disgrace to all his race. Twenty-five years later the first of this malediction died by his own hand; ten years ago his son cut his throat; and the young baronet now in jail is the last of the line.

THE HEAT WAVE.

New York, July 20.—The Tribune says the officers of the Signal Bureau say that the heated term for the summer, east of the Alleghenies, probably reached its culminating point on Thursday. This opinion is based upon the fact that the heat wave has steadily followed a descending barometer eastward, and that the air currents which set in several days ago in the northeast of Canada and the United States, have steadily increased in force and direction towards the south.

The weather to-day is warm and close. Last night was very sultry. Thousands living in the tenement districts slept on the sidewalks and roofs, and many women sat up on the stoops with sick children all night.

Forty thousand people bathed at the free baths yesterday.

Visitors at Long Branch and Coney Island complain that the heat was unbearable there yesterday.

Portland, Me., July 21.—Gen. George F. Shepley, Judge of the United States Circuit Court for the First District, died here last night, aged 59.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 21.—The thermometer stood yesterday at 94° and 95° more deaths.

St. Louis, Mo., July 21.—Nineteen cases of sunstrokes were treated at the Dispensary yesterday, and three deaths. It is believed the worst is now over.

Cincinnati, O., July 21.—Nine cases of sunstroke yesterday; three fatal.

Newburgh, N.Y., July 21.—John Reilly, a farm hand, aged 50, was sunstruck to-day and died.

New York, July 21.—Ten deaths here on Saturday, and eleven more prostrations, from the heat.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Liverpool, July 19.

A leading grain circular says:—All the wheat markets were dull this week, owing upon the continuance of fine weather. The cargo trade was quiet, and prices were 1d to 2d per cental easier at our calling ports. Of the latter, only two remain unsold. At the markets, where Tuesday there has been no quotable change in prices, except for corn, which took a firmer tone, and closes this morning. There has been a steady consumptive demand for wheat, and transactions on the whole are fair to middling. Flour is in request and is 6d to 1s per barrel dearer. Oats are quiet and unchanged. Beans and peas are 1s per quarter dearer. Indian corn is 6d per quarter dearer, with a fair demand.

BRITISH FOREIGN POLICY.

The Expected Government Majority.

England's Course Generally Approved in Europe.

Manchester, July 24.—The London correspondent of the Guardian says it is expected the Government's majority on Plunkett's amendment, expressing confidence in the Ministry, will be between 120 and 130.

It is probable Parliament will not adjourn before the middle of August.

London, July 24.—The Times says there is every reason to believe that the approval of the work of the Berlin Congress expressed by the Queen in Monday's Proclamation and Salisbury will be confirmed by the matured judgment of all impartial critics. The irritation intemperately expressed in Italy is discountenanced by the better judgment of the nation and from other countries evidence is received of increasing satisfaction, and the hasty rhetoric which assumed that every other nation was offended by the course England had taken at Berlin is promptly refuted.

London, July 24.—At a meeting of twenty-six Radical members of the House of Commons to-day, it was resolved to press to a division Sir Charles Dilke's amendment to the Government's motion for a Vote of Thanks to the Duke of Cumberland, on the occasion of his approaching marriage. It was also stated that Peter A. Taylor, member for Leicester, would move the rejection of the Bill authorizing the grant, which contains provision for the second residing.

London, July 25.—The Times gives an outline, apparently on authority, of the reforms which England will require of Asia, embracing humanity of treatment, effective Governors, educated and competent judges, efficient police, and the abolition of farming out taxes.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Constantinople, July 24.—Thurveracation of Shumla has commenced. The Turkish officials formerly stationed there are now at Varna. Several Russian battalions have already entered Shumla.

It is believed that Greece will ask the mediation of the Powers, and the latter will submit the question to arbitration.

Athens, July 24.—Typhus, hitherto supposed incendiary, continues to devastate the country.

Three French ironclads have arrived at Syracuse. A division of the Italian fleet is expected there.

Constantinople, July 24.—The Greek minister has not communicated the views of Greece about the rectification of the frontier.

Vienna, July 24.—A portion of the Turkish garrison in Herzegovina has been recalled to Klock, whence they will embark for Constantinople. Several hundred railway Capture of Escobedo.

San Antonio, Texas, July 24.—Information received to-day from Mexico announces the capture of the Lerdoist leader, Gen. Escobedo, at Cuatro Cienegas, Mexico, by Col. Cisneros, of the Mexican regular army. The prisoner has been brought to Gen. Naranjo, commanding in the State of Coahuila, who will immediately convene a court-martial and will be subjected to a court-martial and most likely be shot. Escobedo's recent efforts to arouse his fellow-countrymen against the Diaz Government availed nothing, though they were very annoying to the dominant party. Mexican citizens generally express the hope that this persistent revolutionist will now forever be silenced.

The Throne of Hanover.

Hanover, July 24.—The Hannoversche Volks Zeitung reports that the Duke of Cumberland, on the 11th inst., informed the German sovereigns that he maintains his right to the throne of Hanover, although for the present he will only bear his dual titles.

The Riley Extradition Case.

Toronto, July 24.—William Riley, alias Mish Riley, was before Judge Mackenzie this morning for extradition on charge of participation in a robbery of $3,100 from Thomas Buckley, paymaster of the Albo Knitting Mills, Troy. Riley pleaded "not guilty," and the evidence of witnesses from Troy is now being taken. Riley says he can prove an alibi, and that he was in Montreal on day the Troy robbery was committed. As an evidence of his having been at the commercial capital on the day in question, he offers a number of articles, the proceeds of a burglary there, for the discovery of which a reward of $6,000 has been offered

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Mark Lane Express Weekly Review.

London, July 22.—The Mark Lane Express says the crops are ripening early under the brilliant sunshine. A continuance of such weather as we are now experiencing will go far to repair the injury by the prolonged floods in May, except where rain is needed, but to judge from the badly filled wheat ears which are to be seen in many parts of the country the yield in those districts will scarcely come up to the average. Wheat cutting may be expected to commence this week in the southern districts, provided the weather continues reasonable. The barley fields present a bleached and unhealthy appearance. Reports from Scotland and Ireland are satisfactory. Barley and oats have vastly improved, and turnips have thriven even on the poorest soils. Potatoes generally are good, except in Ireland, where disease has made sad ravages on what promised to be a heavy crop. The country markets and Mark Lane are scantily supplied with wheat, but a continuance of the bright weather causes a slight relapse. Foreign barley maintained its currency, and trade has not been overweighted with imports, as the return was under 100,000 quarters. Millers have supplied their wants so freely during the previous week that the decreased demand for consumption has been barely sufficient to supply the immediate requirement. Nevertheless sellers are slow to accept the reduction in view of the decreased quantity of wheat on passage, and the possibility that the American corn reports are exaggerated, so that the week's transactions were not large, although it comprised the end of the month. The continental demand still affords some support to prices with few arrivals at ports of call. The floating cargo trade vanishes, but the continental demand continued and values were fairly supported. Maize dull and rather lower. Barley unchanged. Sales of English wheat noted last week were 22,902 quarters at 44s. 5d.; against 21,782 quarters at 43s. in the previous year. The imports of the Kingdom, July 13, were 1,416,068 cwt. of wheat and 20,803 cwt. of flour.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

The Grand Trunk Western Connection.

New York, July 24.—The Tribune says that railroad men do not appear to be able to explain the cable despatch of Monday that Mr. Hickson, of the Grand Trunk Railway, and Mr. Garrett, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, were negotiating in London to give the Grand Trunk a Chicago connection over Mr. Garrett's line, in order to counteract Vanderbilt's recent acquisition. Should a combination be formed between the Baltimore & Ohio and the Grand Trunk Railroad Companies, three routes have been suggested. The first supposes the purchase of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad, or the making of running arrangements over it, from Bankers by Auburn, which would give a mileage as s.—Detroit to Ypsilanti (no build), ; Ypsilanti to Bankers, 64 miles; rs to Auburn, 47 miles; Auburn to , by the Baltimore and Ohio, iles. Total, 264 miles. This is precise distance between Central between Detroit and o. The second route suggested requires more track-building, but shortens stance twenty miles, and is, from Detroit to Bankers 725 miles to build), 91 miles; Bankers to Fremont, 19 miles; ont to Milford (to build), 48 miles; d to Chicago, 106 miles; total, 264 The third route suggested requires twenty miles of new road, but it is reported to have less grades and more straight than either of the other proposed routes. ileage would be as follows: Detroit akers 67 miles; to build), 91 miles; rs to Milford (to be built), 65 miles; d to Chicago, 106 miles; total, 262 This route is claimed to be twenty-s shorter than the Michigan Central, and it is estimated that it could it for $10,000 a mile, or $600,000 for the rdinate distance, furnishing a road that interest all the leading lines in gan and Indiana. Whatever may be ject of Mr. Hickson's visit to London Mr. Garrett, railroad men agree that rand Trunk, by an outlay of a comparatively small sum, can easily overcome o obstacles in its attempt to reach go, placed in its way by the recent York Central legislation.

The Communists.

EXPECTED UPRISING IN AUGUST.

Banks and Wealthy Residences as Objects of Prey.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., July 24.—A despatch says the leading manufacturers believe that a communistic strike, with pillage of all banks, rich men's residences, etc., is to be made in August by the miners, railroad men and workmen in manufactories. The strike was originally intended for the 15th of June, to begin in Pennsylvania, but the prompt action of the Government led them to postpone it till August 15. Bishop O'Hara, of Wilkesbarre, shares the fears relative to the threatened trouble next month.

Liberian Emigration.

Charleston, S. C., July 24.—The Liberian immigration bark Azor arrived to-day, having left Monrovia on June 10th. She brings fifteen colored persons, sent out last winter by the American Colonization Society, and the New York Herald correspondent. The emigrants carried to Liberia by the Azor were being cared for at last accounts by the Liberian Government. They are well probably take out another load of emigrants next month.

A Tramp Law in New Hampshire.

Concord, N. H., July 24.—A bill for the punishment of tramps passed the House to-day. It provides for punishment by imprisonment from fifteen months up to five years, the former penalty being provided if any person proved to be a tramp.

THE HANLAN-ROSS BOAT RACE.

Arrangements for To-day's Contest

St. John, N. B., July 24. At a meeting of the backers of Hanlan and Ross this evening, the judges were elected for the race to-morrow, as follows:—

On judges' boat—For Hanlan, John Davis, of Windsor, Ont; for Ross, David McLellan, M. P.

At turning buoys—For Hanlan, Scholes; for Ross, Robt. Dalton.

At finish—For Hanlan, David Ward; for Ross, Geo. Baker.

The course is now marked off and every arrangement made for the race. Sheriff Harding has agreed to act as referee, and the appointment is generally satisfactory. The few bets made to-night are 3 to 1, and there appears to be very little disposition to put up any money. Although the water was rough this evening the steamer went out for a spin. Ross was never in better condition than he is to-night. Hanlan looked the picture of health and strength on returning from his gall, and will go to-day to the contest in perfect form. While Hanlan is considered most likely to win, there is a feeling that Ross will win, principally owing to the reports abroad of the good time he has made in practice.

Lincoln Election Case.

By Special Telegraph from our Own Correspondent.

Toronto, July 24.—In the Lincoln election matter, the cases of stolen ballots, and the case of stolen counterfeits and pollbooks were reserved. The votes of Alfred Fag, Nicholas Hayden and Peter Service were held good. The votes of James W. Boyle, Stephen R. Boyle, Edward Boyle, and Richard Darby, property qualification, held good.

Court adjourned till to-morrow at 11.

MONTREAL AFFAIRS.

Montreal, July 24.—Nine hundred and twenty-eight head of cattle, 1,652 sheep, 90 hogs, and 12 horses are being shipped from this port this week to England.

A committee has been formed here of French Canadian gentlemen for the purpose of applying to the Government to have passed the provisions of the Act of the Quebec Parliament of 1875, which authorizes the seizing aside of 100 acres of land for inhabitants of the Province. The object is to settle unemployed workmen of the city on Government land.

A team of athletes, from the London (Eng.) Athletic Clubs expected here in the fall.

An invitation has been extended to oarsmen here and throughout the Dominion to take part in the sixth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateurs, at Passaic River, Newark, N.J.

A young man was stopped last night by a gang of rowdies on St. Dominque street, who examined the color of his necktie, and finding it green, let him go.

The case of Thomas Whitten, a volunteer, against Frank Fitzallan and Chas. McKay, for assault on the 12th inst., came up in Court to-day and was postponed till to-morrow.

The following account is given of fly fishing in the Moisie river this season:—Mr. Havemeyer, of New York, in 13 days bagged 75 salmon weighing 1,599 lbs. Mr. Jas. Turner, of Hamilton, in 14 days caught 66 weighing 1,564 lbs., and Mr. R. W. Cameron, of New York, six days secured twelve, weighing 233 lbs. Mr. Turner has the honor of killing the largest fish, which weighed 39 lbs., but Mr. Havemeyer carried off the prize in number for one day, the average being fourteen fish averaging over 22 lbs. each. The lowest average weight of the fish taken was 19 lbs. 7 ounces.

Two attempts have been made since the 12th to burn the premises occupied by Rev. Mr. Dondiet, who preached to the Orangemen. The last attempt was made this morning, but was noticed before any damage was done.

From a return made by the medical officer of the Board of Health, it appears that three-fourths of the deaths last week from small-pox occurred in the east end, where the inhabitants are opposed to vaccination.

BELLEVILLE.

THE BARLEY AND RYE CROP.

Belleville, Ont., July 24.—Some of the new crop of barley and rye is being marketed. The former is, in a good many cases, somewhat shrunken by the intense heat, but the latter is a fine crop. Prices, 50c. to 55c. for barley, and 58c. for rye.

DEATH IN THE HARVEST FIELD.

A French Canadian named Lavalee, while engaged in mowing on the farm of Mr. N. Vermilyea, in Sidney, yesterday, cut his arm, from the effects of which he died at midnight.

MANITOBA.

Winnipeg, Man., July 24. — The first market will be shortly opened.

Harvesting of barley has commenced.

A town site will be shortly laid out at Red River crossing, where elevators will be erected for the export of Mennonites' grain.

TORONTO.

OVERCOME BY HEAT.

Mr. Alfred Boultbee was overcome by the heat to-day, but is not seriously ill.

INTERNATIONAL VISIT.

The Corporation of Lockport, N. Y., with a number of friends and the National Guards' Band, visited this city to-day. They leave by a special boat at 1 o'clock in the morning.

SEAFORTH BURNED IN EFFIGY BY YOUNG BRITONS.

The Young Britons had a torchlight procession this evening, carrying Major Beaudry's effigy, and ending by burning it.

OTTAWA

Ottawa, July 24.—Intelligence has been received here that judges of pencils at the Paris Exposition have awarded the gold medals for pencils, against all competitors, to the Dominion of Canada Plumbago Co.

Messrs. Anderson and Tims, of the Finance Department, with Sergt. Connors, of the Dominion Police Force, are at present in Toronto in connection with the recent robbery from the Receiver-General's office.

Horrible Tragedy at Rockford

A MAN KILL

The London Free Press.

A Large Morning Newspaper, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Dispatches, is issued every morning. It is the only paper supplying the earliest information published west of Toronto, actually putting the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

The Local Intelligence of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in its columns twelve hours ahead of the contemporary evening press. Its circulation and influence are constantly advancing, and it is recognized organ of opinion in the West, outstripping other journals in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

Single Copies, price 3 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly, $1.50 (in advance); delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or posted free of charge to distant places at the same rate.

Situations Wanted, Domestics Wanted; Articles Lost or Found; Houses to Let or Sell, &c., &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for twenty-five words, and so in proportion. Birth, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

Advertisements of a transient kind are inserted a NONPARIEL measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising space by the year at a half-rate, the terms of which can be had on application at the business office.

Circulation.—The circulation of the Daily Free Press is far larger than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries.

The Weekly Free Press

Is a Mammoth Sheet, containing 64 columns of matter, and enjoys a large and influential circulation among the best classes. It is a Western, not a Toronto, paper, and compares favorably with the sheets published elsewhere. Its compilation is made with great care. It contains the cream of the news of the week from all parts of the world, ample commercial information; and its literary department finds great acceptance in the columns of the Weekly, and a well worthy of the ambition.

Price $1.00 per annum, postage free, including premium picture.

The Evening Free Press

Is issued at 4 o'clock p.m., and contains not only the matter found in the morning edition, but additional telegraphic despatches and local intelligence up to the hour of going to press. This edition is published at TWO CENTS, and is for sale by the newsboys and at the various agencies throughout the city, and in St. Mary's, Stratford, St. Thomas and other western towns.

☞ Special Notice.—Advertisements appearing in the DAILY FREE PRESS are published in the Evening Edition free of extra charge!

THE ENGLISH GRITS.

It is not unusual for those of a discontented habit of mind to quarrel with their best friends, and to find fault with those who have been their benefactors. It was so in Canada, when a trivial indiscretion with respect to funds to be used for election purposes, was made use of to turn out of office the most successful administration of Sir John Macdonald. That Canada, as a whole, has repented of that act is true enough, and that constitutional means will soon give an opportunity to amend it, is amply certain. Yet the fact remains that a reason which people now laugh at and are ashamed of was given in 1873, as a justification for forsaking men under whom Canada had been abundantly prosperous. And so it is just now with the English Grits, so-called Reformers or Liberals. Though Lord Beaconsfield has brought the Empire out of the European negotiations with eminent success, has raised the prestige of England to a pitch not enjoyed since the days of Trafalgar and Waterloo, yet that does not content them. They make any and every cavil because it is their nature to do so, and would turn their backs upon Lord Beaconsfield in spite of his great service. The resolution of which Lord Harington has given notice reads as follows:—

Resolved, That while the House has learned with satisfaction that the troubles in the East have been terminated by the Treaty of Berlin, without further recourse to arms, and restored in the extension of liberty and self-government to populations of European Turkey, it regrets that it has not been found practicable to deal more satisfactorily with the claims of the Greeks; that, in regard to Asiatic Turkey, the military habilities of the country have been unnecessarily extended; that unofficial engagements relative to a better administration of the Asiatic provinces have inpos d many responsibilities on the state, while no sufficient means are indicated for securing their fulfilment; and that those responsibilities have been incurred without the previous knowledge and consent of the country.

The debate will commence July 29th; when we feel sure that it will be found that the discontented ones will go to the wall and the policy of Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury be sustained by a decided vote.

MORE TIZER SILLINESS.

One generally finds something silly in the Tizer. The latest childish suggestion on its part is that Mr. Carling should retire from the contest in London. Such puerile banter is about all that the great "reform" party in this city have to offer. Their candidate possesses a notoriety which has its ugly side, unlike Pyley—which is to do nothing and let things take their chance—is being repudiated throughout the entire country. The cause of Liberal-Conservatism will be sorely stricken in London than it is to-day, while Mr. Carling as its standard-bearer among us has gained an appreciation which the tenable and spiteful remarks of the Tizer do but tend to enhance. But Col. Walker may possess his soul in such patience as he is best able, in view of the blank prospect before him. He has been found out long ere this. His little games and palpable plots to cover up his great transgression at the Court House are all seen through, and estimated at their true value. He is the only man that ever publicly disgraced London, and the people know and feel it and intend to reward him for it. It says but little for the so-called "Reform" party that out of their ranks they cannot evolve a single man who can appeal to his character and antecedents for political support. The Tizer should not draw attention to these things by a display of silliness and noise.

THE HOME MARKET.

The New York Herald endeavors to open the eyes of the farmers to the fact that while they are straining to gain a foreign market by the export of grain, they stand to lose not a little by neglecting markets at home. The same remark applies with increased force to Canada. Indeed, recent discussions are teaching our farmers that the home market for their produce is the most profitable, while by the variety of its demands it does not make such calls upon the land as unvarying grain crops are the occasion of. But in order to attain this degree of excellence a home population is needed, which can only be secured and retained by a successful manufacturing system. It is to bring about such results—profitable to the farmer and mechanic alike—that the "National Policy" of the Liberal-Conservatives is directed.

In the western cities on the lakes, those who were able in the late heated term, took steamboat jaunts at night as the only sure way of getting sleep. For instance—Clevelanders went to Detroit and back by boat, thus securing two cool nights for sleep.

A COOL WAVE FROM THE EAST.

"The Maritime Provinces will support Mr. Mackenzie at the coming election, and final by a larger majority than he has from the same section at the present time." So said the chief organ only a few days ago. But of course this was very innocent whistling with a very innocent intent. But the whistle will have to assume the power of a tornado before it has much effect in elevating the depressed spirits of the party, and free them from the dread of the avenger that dogs their steps. The triumphal march of Dr. Tupper through Nova Scotia, from Cape North to Cape Sable, and from Halifax to Truro, which has been little else than a series of ovations, will no doubt tend, and tend mightily, to encourage the confidence of the Grit leaders, and prove an antidote to the "trembling that has seized upon them down at Ottawa.

We expect to hear the booming of the Tilley guns in New Brunswick in a few days or hours more, and when all the forces are brought into play, there will not be much difficulty experienced in repeating for the House of Commons the victory that has been recently gained for the Local House. In fact there is nothing but gloom and ominous clouds overhanging the Grit prospects, turn as they may, and look in what direction they please. Mr. Jones is not making "a big push" so far as can be learned, and it seems as though he had allowed a good deal of his martial spirit to follow in the wake of his friend Rob Acres. He is a brave soldier is Mr. Jones, but philosophically inclined to take Hudibras for his Mentor instead of Mars, and take as his watchword in battle the sage reflection of the renowned Puritan:—

> He that fights and runs away
> May live to fight another day

This, as we take it, is wise counsel as far as crossing swords with Dr. Tupper is concerned, and prudence may well dictate to this hero of a hundred fights that there is at least safety, if not honor, in seeking some less formidable antagonist with whom to try conclusions, and establish the Mackenzie doctrines of steel rails and New king Road jobs. The times seem sadly out of joint in Nova Scotia, at least as far as respects the Grit prospects, and the look-out must be gloomy enough when it has caused such a veteran salt as Hon. Thomas Coffin to haul down his colors and run for it. It would seem as though the Mackenzie Government may have trouble enough in finding recruits to fill up the forlorn hope in Nova Scotia, and make at least a show of fighting. Things really look worse for the Minister down by the sea than they do here in Middlesex, where they are doomed to lose the whole three Ridings, unless some unforeseen circumstance occurs to save the demoralized and disheartened faction.

But poor Vail! he is a badly treated mortal. Only think of it. By supporting Mr. Mackenzie's iniquities he has lost his seat, lost his office lost his income of $7,000 a year, lost his honor and lost his influence. Why, what an ungrateful party the Mackenzie Cabinet must be. Down by the banks of the St. John the fattest kinds of offices are going a-begging, from that of Lieutenant Governorships downwards, and yet not one of these can be thrown to Mr. Vail, who might well take to himself the words of one of Shakespere's most noted characters, and say:—

Had I served my God as faithfully as I served my Chief, he would not have so deserted me in my old age. We feel inclined to pity poor Vail. He was first seduced by the Government into a breach of the law—the Independence of Parliament Act—by tempting him with a $25,000 bribe, and when the terrors of the penalty he had incurred forced him to resign his seat, and face sure and certain defeat, all the mourn that was made for him was "We are well rid of him!" Mr. Vail was servile enough while he had a vote to support Mr. Mackenzie's worst jobs, even at the risk of his own good name and local influence, and now when both have been destroyed through his own magnanimity in shouldering the sins of his leader, they throw him aside like a pair of old boots, with the sneering remark, "We are well rid of him." Things look rather gloomy down in the Maritime Provinces, and, instead of the boast being likely to fall true, that they will go solid for Mr. Mackenzie, he will scarcely carry a constituency.

THE SUNSTROKE.

The recent heat and the fatal consequences attending it, have called renewed attention to the best means of dealing with sunstroke. A New York physician says:—

"Take the unfortunate into a room, if possible, and procure at once a bucket of hot water, awaiting the arrival of which apply ice water to face, forehead, temples, and top head, but on no account the back head or any part of the neck, at the same time making brisk passes with the hands over and down ward from the head. Another person should rub the legs and feet briskly. The hot water arrived, strip the clothing to the waist, and with cup or pitcher, pour the water,hot as can be borne, on back of neck and lower back head as the man lies on his stomach and is held out from the bed or lounge. As the cold application and hand manipulation drive the congested blood and nerve forces backward, thus relieving pressure on front brain, the hot water along neck and back secures an open way of retreat for the crowding blood, the patient soon revives. Cold water should by no means found back, brain or neck after the plan frequently adopted, as by its contracting nature it would tend to deaden a great vitalizing centre, and to close the channels of egress of blood in its movement from the front brain.

Let us pray that the poor victims be no longer douched with ice water, or chunks of ice applied along the spine or under the arms. The large number of deaths from sunstroke arise from just such treatment—nothing else. If the first case of sunstroke here this season—that of the late Wm. Cullen Bryant—had been treated at once in the rational manner outlined above, he would be alive and well to-day."

Oberlin, Ohio, is strenuously jealous of its good name, and although human passions will have their course there as elsewhere, there are some of the common temptations to vice which it has never tolerated, and it seems determined to keep the door closed against the slightest approaches from that direction. Recently a billiard hall has been opened, which has caused intense excitement. On the 8th inst. a public meeting was held to consider the matter, and committees were appointed to act. During the week following, daily visits were made to the saloon by ladies and gentlemen from the different churches, who in many cases remained until 11 o'clock at night, the time of closing the saloon. This was the means of keeping many away who have been in the habit of spending the most of their time there. On Sabbath evening last another meeting was held, at which the evils of a billiard hall, although not accompanied with strong drink, were clearly depicted, and a firm determination that the thing must be removed, and that immediately, seemed to prevail.

It must have been a highly interesting recital given by a school girl in Ann Arbor, Mich., who took her lovers as a theme for an essay, which she read on commencement day, much to the astonishment of the assembly. She gave the names of the lovers, and described minutely their varied manners of courtship. Her list will be likely to fall off measurably after such a performance.

THE ORPHANS' HOME.

A notification has been issued for the purpose of calling together the subscribers to the Morrill Homestead, with the view of determining to what benevolent object, the property now vacated by the death of Mrs. Morrill, shall be devoted. Very many of the subscribers desire that it should be handed over to the Trustees of the Orphans' Home, while it is understood that an attempt will be made from another quarter to secure it for the Mechanics' Institute. The purpose of the original subscribers was a benevolent one, and it was so expressed in the deed. But it may be questioned if the Mechanics' Institute is a benevolent institution in the sense intended. After passing a very useful life as a citizen of London, the late Mr. Simeon Morrill fell into decayed circumstances, brought on, to a very great extent, by reason of failing powers. A number of his friends and admirers, desiring that his declining years should not be harassed by the gaunt presence of want, presented him with a homestead, to be used by him during his life, and by Mrs. Morrill to the end of her life also. It was ordained that when her death took place the property was to return to the hands of the trustees, to be used for some other benevolent object. Perhaps there is no benevolent institution among us deserving of a greater amount of support than the Orphans' Home. The only surviving trustee, Mr. A. McCormick, is desirous of consulting with the subscribers as to the disposal of the property, and the meeting is to take place at Mr. Hock's office at 3 o'clock to-morrow, Friday. A full attendance of the friends of the Home is expected, when the question at issue will be submitted. While wishing the Mechanics' Institute every prosperity, yet we believe that it will be found that the large majority of the subscribers will desire that which was given for benevolent purposes should not be diverted to an educational institution which has excellent resources of its own, but continued to be used in the cause of the needy.

THE BOAT RACE TO-DAY.

The long-talked-of sculling race between Hanlan and Ross, the champion of St. John, N. B., champions, is timed to come off to-day on the Kennebecasis Course, some six miles out of St. John. Of the merits of the two men, much has been said by outside people, whose opinions may perhaps be warped by local prejudices, or personal predilection; but on the spot it would appear that opinion is greatly divided, the odds being, however, two to one in favor of Hanlan. The latter, fresh from his victories over Morris, Plaisted, Riley, Luther, and other cannon of less note, arrived in St. John on the 9th of July, and has been in steady training ever since. He is of little over one hundred and fifty pounds weight, with no extraordinary muscular development, but any amount of grit and determination. He is described as a well-made young man, of five feet eight inches, with a good forehead, a handsome face, keen eye, and slight, dark moustache—a man who, in a crowd of athletes, would be the last man any one would suspect of being the champion oarsman of America. His opponent, Ross, is a much bigger and stronger man, turning the scale at 180 lbs. After being so badly beaten by Hanlan last October, it may seem strange that his backers are willing to invest their money in his now, especially in face of the laurels which Hanlan has since won. But the grounds on which the friends of Ross base their faith in him are, that he was in a very bad condition of health during the whole of last year, he having caught a cold which affected his kidneys and weakened him greatly. Then, at Toronto, he had the misfortune to smash his best boat, injuring her so badly that she sank like a basket during the race, and, what was worse, weakening her to that extent that she lost her shape and sagged under him when he tried to row hard in her. The friends of Ross regard it as a strong proof of his superiority that, with his boat in such a condition, he was able to hold Hanlan for three-quarters of a mile, or until they got out of smooth water, and yet that at no time in that three-quarters of a mile was he rowing in anything like his proper form. But, should the weather permit, all doubt will be set at rest to-day, when Hanlan will be crowned with another wreath of victory or made to yield much of the glory of his late well-won triumphs.

The River Kennebecasis may be described as forming a portion of that line of landlocked water by which the Indians of Acadie went in their canoes from the head of the Bay of Fundy to the interior of Maine. In later times steamboats plied upon it going to Hampton from St. John city, for the Kennebecasis is a tributary of the St. John, but since the railway era commenced the steamboats have been driven off, and now the Kennebecasis is as solitary a piece of water as an oarsman could desire. The intercolonial commerces of Canada whirls past it on rails of steel, but the bosom of the river is seldom disturbed by any keel save that of a yacht or of the ferry-boat which crosses the river at Hoddeway. In this respect, indeed, the Kennebecasis is a model course, but it has other characteristics which are not so favorably regarded by sporting men. The river at Torryburn, the starting point, is three miles and a half wide, forming, in fact, an estuary or lake quite out of proportion to the size of the stream a few miles above. It is, however, divided by a long island which reduces the width of the actual race course to one and a quarter miles. This stretch of water lies nearly north and south, and, as a consequence, winds from the north, west or southwest, however slight, make the course too rough for a shell. Winds from the northeast, east or south do not disturb it, but as the west is the prevailing wind in summer much of the time the course is unfit for a race. It is a hard course for an oarsman to get work on, and for that reason St. John oarsmen have frequently preferred to train up the St. John River or in the harbor of St. John; and even during this season—that of the late Kennebecasis too rough for his shell he is driven into town and takes a spin in the harbor. But, however bad for the oarsman, there is perhaps no course in the world better for the spectator. From the starting place at Torryburn to the turning buoy opposite Rothesay the shore forms almost a straight line, with hills rising gradually from the water to the height of one hundred feet or more, the whole forming a sort of terrace on which a spectator can sit and see the whole of the course from the start to the finish. Add to this that a line of railway runs along the shore, with an ordinary road behind it, and it will be understood that the facilities for seeing a race are of the best, and the means of getting to it equally good. The hills among the shores of the Kennebecasis at this point are covered with pretty cottages and villas, the summer residences of the business men of St. John, and the contrast between their white forms and the deep, green fields and orchards in which they are set forms an extremely pleasing picture, especially when the villas are dressed in flags on a race day and the hillsides black with eager spectators

Experiments at the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens go to show that women and monkeys are the only animals that exhibit intense fear and dislike of snakes. It has long been an unsettled question among commentators, as the World points out, whether it was a serpent which tempted Eve in the Garden, and Dr. Adam Clark was firmly of the opinion that the devil appeared to our prostrate mother in the form of a monkey or ape, which then walked upright, and could speak as the serpent never could have done. Taking all these circumstances apart and putting them together, it is interesting to know that now it is the woman and the monkey who most violently hate the snake. Dr. Darwin would explain the matter in one way, and Dr. Clarke in another, but the fact itself is well worth "making a note on."

CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA.

The Drawbacks it has to Contend with in the Celestial Empire.

From the Hong Kong Daily Press, May 30.

That the animosity which has always been entertained by the literate class in China against Christianity still exists in all its force and bitterness is abundantly evident from the demonstrations made against it every now and again. Wherever an attempt is made by the missionaries to break fresh ground, there they are sure to be confronted with the stereotyped stories of atrocities which the cunning literati have coined to rouse the prejudices of the ignorant people. The latest demonstration against Christianity has been made at Kiuking, a city of Chekiang province. Placards have, it is stated, been posted up in all directions in this city denouncing the foreign religion in true Chinese style. After attributing the tail-cutting scare of last year to the Christians, this precious document goes on to say, speaking of the foreign religion:—"On submitting to that religion it is necessary first to eat certain medicine, and then all the ancestral tablets, kitchen gods, etc., are utterly destroyed, while the newly-married wives are corrupted by the heads of the religion. When death has taken place and the remains are being enoffined the relations are not allowed to be alongside, and it is declared that the eyes are scooped out in order to make a kind of medicine. We might well afford to smile at the childish absurdities contained in such effusions but for the serious consequences which too often follow their publication. The libelous statement is artfully contrived to appeal to the angry passions of the mob. The Chinese hold their ancestral tablets in the deepest veneration, and the idea of destroying them is of itself quite sufficient to rouse their resentment. Then it is set forth that the bodies of those who die in the Christian faith are horribly mutilated, an idea most repugnant to the Chinese mind. Consequently, false, and transparently ridiculous as such accusations seem to the foreigner, they are calculated to stir up a fanatical Chinese mob into a dangerous mood. The occasion of this outburst of fanatical prejudice in Kiuking appears to be, from the placard itself, that some missionaries or their native teachers from Ningpo have been endeavoring to rent premises for the purpose of establishing a mission in the city. The local authorities are openly declared to be "unwilling to move in the matter," and their indisposition to interfere has evidently caused considerable irritation among the literati, who are ready to go to almost any lengths to keep the intruders out. "We may not, indeed, beat them," they say, "but we must pull down their houses, and eternally root out the very foundations, if they have refused an empty piece of ground to foreigners, we must at once raise a high mound on the spot, so as to fill the place and show no forgiveness in the matter." It is to be regretted that the authorities of China will not take the trouble to contradict these false stories. They ought to know that they are not only slanderous, but also promotive of outrages which bring European life ill-feeling against foreigners and render amicable intercourse between the former and the native extremely precarious. It is constantly asserted that the missionaries are a fruitful source of disunion in China, but as the treaties provide that Christianity may be taught in the empire, it is the duty of the native authorities, for example, to see that no false statements calculated to cause violence and hostility are placarded about the cities and towns as to protect the missionaries from actual assault. Almost all the outrages on missionaries and their converts have been directly caused by this system of posting libellous and inflammatory placards against the Christians in the streets of the various towns where they have occurred.

A Glut of Silver Dollars.

The extraordinary efforts of the U. S. Treasury Department to be rid of the large accumulation of standard dollars which now fills the silver vaults, do not meet with a very ready response. About $8,000,000 of these dollar pieces are now held by the Treasurer, and although they means can be devised to get them in circulation, they will be found difficult to obtain a course for an oarsman to get work on, and for that reason St. John oarsmen have frequently preferred to train up the St. John River or in the harbor of St. John; and even during this season—that of the late Kennebecasis too rough for his shell he is driven into town and takes a spin in the harbor. But, however bad for the oarsman, there is perhaps no course in the world better for the spectator. From the starting place at Torryburn to the turning buoy opposite Rothesay the shore forms almost a straight line, with hills rising gradually from the water to the height of one hundred feet or more, the whole forming a sort of terrace on which a spectator can sit and see the whole of the course from the start to the finish. The Warfare in the Sea.

The Newfoundland letter in the Montreal Gazette contains the following interesting matter:—

St. John's, N. F., July 17.

A ceaseless and noiseless warfare is going on in the world of waters. There is no part of the serene depths of the ocean where this savage war is not waged. One species of fishes preaches and devours another, and that in its turn becomes the food of a larger or more powerful race. It is pretty safe to affirm that not many of the finny tribe die of old age, or pass out of existence peacefully. The strong tear and devour the weak; the eater becomes in turn the eaten; the pursuer finds itself the pursued. Unlike the solitudes of the forest, where the same sort of warfare progresses, but amid savage roars and fierce cries, the groans and yells of the dying and the eager panting of the assailants as they spring upon their prey, the ocean war goes on in dead silence. No dying screams are heard; no exciting savage onleries. The "leviathan of the deep" is stabbed by its enemy the sword fish, and pounded by the threshers, or torn by a band of grampuses, but it suffers and dies in silence. There is no "confused noise of the warriors," as on land, for the inhabitants of the deep are voiceless. Still the fight proceeds. The smallest animals are supplying food to some other creature higher in scale, which in turn furnish sustenance to others higher still. In the very nature of things, the life of one species must be sustained by the death of others. In fact, the ocean, in which they live, may be regarded as a great mass of living matter, and its mantle inhabitants furnish by far the largest proportion of the food required. Take, for example, the Greenland whale, which is from 60 to 70 feet in length. It has no teeth, and could not prey on the smaller of its own species, or on the larger fishes. Its throat is but an inch and a half or two inches in diameter, and yet its huge bulk is sustained by the myriads of minute creatures with which the ocean pastures are stocked abundantly. A very considerable portion of those spaces in which the whale is found is occupied by green water, the color of which is owing to the presence of immense numbers of animalcule, most of them invisible without the aid of the microscope. The greater number consist of an animal the Medusa order, commonly called "sea-blubber"—a soft, gelatinous substance often found on the sea shore. These animalcule, however, are not the immediate food of the whale, but they form the food of the various shrimps and minute crabs, lobsters and sea snails upon which the monster of the deep is supported. Not only are these devoured by the whale, but also by the smaller fishes, which again supply nutriment to the larger, which in turn are devoured by seals, grampuses, dolphins, and other cetacea. The best again feeds upon the seal; and thus the war goes on, every link in the wonderful chain of existence being essential to the integrity of the whole. But how does the whale raise and nourish its prey? Simply by swimming below the surface with its jaws wildly extended. The water enters, and with it large quantities of those minute creatures. It escapes at the sides, but the food is entangled and sifted in the "baleen" with which the upper part of the mouth is filled, and which, from its compact arrangement and the fibre interfused covering of hair, does not allow the smallest grain to escape. So conspicuous is the waste of life in the ocean, nature has endowed fishes with immense reproductive powers. The female shark, for example, yields eggs at the rate of one thousand for each pound weight; so that, one weighing 20 lbs. would, in season, yield 20,000 eggs. This is nothing, however, compared with the sturgeon, as much as two hundred pounds weight of roe having been taken from one fish, yielding a total of 7,000,000 of eggs. A single codfish yields 3,000,000 eggs; a flounder, 1,250,000; a sole, 1,000,000; a mackerel, 500,000; and a herring 35,000. Of course a vast proportion of these eggs perish without coming to life, or are devoured by other fishes; and the enormous numbers of young are destroyed in their natural existence. Were only half the eggs to come to life, and but one moiety of the young fish to live, the sea would so abound with animal life that it would be impossible for a boat to move in the waters. The expenditure of both seed and life is something tremendous; and the destruction of fish life from material causes is sufficient to keep the stock down to a moderate amount. It has been ascertained that only ninety per cent of the young fish perish before they are six months old and of the surviving few, some natural law believe only five per cent come to life. If destruction did not balance reproduction, the waters would be impassable from the superfluity of fish. Buffon has calculated that if a pair of herrings were left to breed undisturbed for a period of twenty years the result would be a bulk of fish equal to the globe on which we live. The business going on continually in the ocean is like great wars among the human species, thins the population, and keeps it within moderate bounds. The ocean is the sea of life;

JET:

OR,

A FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

Frederick Conyngham is too methodical a wretched a man to grumble overmuch. He secures the most comfortable arm-chair in the warmest chimney-corner that the public cafes of the Hôtel de l'Univers yields, and there, with Peregino at hand to minister to his needs, sits making entries in his different neat little note-books, and drinking barley-water; a slight, exceedingly slight, cold that Mr. Conyngham believes he may have taken during his journey from Paris rendering the consumption of this melancholy liquid necessary.

Beside one of the windows, an invalid guide-book in her hand, stands Jet, looking out with longing eyes at the keen blue of the sky, the sharp whiteness of the sunshine, and envying every living creature who walks. I might more justly say who is well-mentally propelled, along the narrow street that leads from the Place Crillon into the court-yard of the hotel.

Never yet has there blown a wind so cold —and she has experienced the zephyrs of nineteen English springs—that Jet Conyngham would not sooner have braved its inclemency than stay, inactive, within doors for the girl is hereditarily restless, has a temperament adapted to any "doing" life, rather than to one of contemplation, or avowed work. But Mr. Conyngham keeps her fast prisoner to day. Would she wear blue spectacles, a respirator, or a furred cloak, there might be hope for her. As she is continuaneous on these points, she must remain captive, thinking over a statistic, just gathered from her guide-book, as to the number of days on which the mistral prevails throughout the winter, and speculating as to whether evidence will be more cheerful locked at through the double windows of southern hotels than she and Cora used to find it among the mud, and mildness, and freedom, of the Devonshire lanes.

Only one other traveler shares possession of the salon with Mr. Conyngham and his daughter—a fat Anglo-Indian who came on in the same train with them from Paris, yesterday, and who, at the present moment, is engaged in deciphering a letter at the centre table of the room—a letter, bearing the Florence post mark, ill-written, crossed; its import certainly not of love, one would say, or friendship, if, in the bored, impatient expression of the fat fellow's face I speak true.

"Amico mio,"

By an ironical whim of fate it happens that those four scrawled pages across the key-note of Jet Conyngham's story. It must, therefore, impress upon the reader the same infliction that the lawful Amico aids in undergoing.

"You do not deserve, bad creature, that I should write you two letters for one; however, I really want a commission. Bound to Avignon, and as I believe you will make that city the point-de-repere of your voyage, I put on the chance of addressing a few harried lines to the Hôtel de l'Univers.

"Go to Mademoiselle Palmieri, modiste. I forget the exact address, a milliner in a little street leading off the Rue Caisse—I will not take you an hour to hunt her up—and get me one of those sweet black-velvet affairs worn by the Arlesian peasant. Palmieri, I fancy, keeps them made up; if not, order one. You will probably stop a night or two in Avignon, or can do it for the sake of my head-dress. They are made of black velvet and lace, but I am not sure whether a flower should be fantasie grouped above the ear or not. This you must use info. I do not require any of the large-headed pins worn by the peasants, as I have my own lovely Pink Coral à Pivot, according to my toilet.

"All the gentlemen were telling me at he carnival-ball last year how admirably he Arlesian head dress would suit the face of natrso, so I mean to have one by me for my occasion when I may want to look my best.

"Florence has been dull to desperation since I came down from Homburg, and I really look forward, mon cher, to your reappearance. Thank you for your letter, which I am an ardent convert), and one of he fascinating and intellectual rest ures—a mind quite above any small nought of gaining by his profession, and he most poetic profile! But yes will adge of him for yourself.

"If you remain more than a week at Isteret, I shall, like your friend, Hotspur, o risking it, his bloodgunners. He alls me a piece of news that will be interesting to the Nismes seekers of the Riviera. fr. Conyngham has taken rooms at the Hotel Paradis for the winter (you must remember Conyngham; we met in Paris on first in Naples—also! in happier ays), and is to bring his daughter, a wellill octoroon, with him. The mother was Trench and Italian, and the girl will come into forty thousand pounds on the ay she is twenty-three. There will be a hance for some unprincipled fortune-hunter, mon cher—eh!

"Miss Conyngham's not a beauty. Oh! rett remember seeing her at the theatre London, and says that her hair is inclined to swollenry, while her lips and skin stray the dark blood unmistakably. But hese red-and-white beauties would be rown away on a girl with forty thousand arms—in the three per cents. You remember what Lord Byron wrote:

"Shakespeare says 'tis silly
To gild refined gold or paint the lily."

"Depend upon it, Miss Conyngham will ash visitors and to spare for the Paradis inventurers, thick lips and woolly hair notstanding.

"Vallance warns me that it is post-time, I must bring my scribble to a close. Please you return Jo Conyngham's bow, I hall positively be forced to ride out with a room, which I detest.

"Toujours a toi,

"HELENA ACKWORTH.

"P. S.—In case of a flower being worn, ck Palmieri if 'tis most elegant above the ght ear or the left. Pack the coiffure in your at-box to avoid crushing.

"Et rouderie."

The Englishman reads this farrago rough from the first word to the last, inattentive gradually merging into attentiveward its close. Then he takes up a ulpaper from the table close at hand, unlds, lifts it, and peruses—the countenance Mr. Conyngham and of Jet.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

PERTH.

Mr Alex Carver, of Stratford, Collector of Inland Revenue, and officer Craig, Walkerton, seized a distilling and malting establishment in Elma, County of Perth, last week. The concern was not in operation at the time of seizure, but the manufacture and selling of a large illicit article having been very steadily carried on. The officers demolished the utensils, which included a very serviceable and ingeniously constructed mash kiln.

Detective Beecan, of the Grand Trunk Railway, arrested a gang of seven juvenile thieves at Fort Erie the other day. They were tried before Squires Treble and Newbiggin, at Fort Erie, for trespass and larceny under the juvenile Act, and, being convicted, were sentenced to pay small fines or go thirty days to Welland jail or hard labor. Their parents were very respectable, and Detective Beecan asked for a light sentence on those on that account.

Perth Fall Assizes will be held in Stratford on Wednesday, 18th September.

Yelling took place on Saturday in the Township of Hurd on the by-law to grant a bonus of $20,000 to the Stratford & Huron Railway. The by-law was defeated by 43 votes.

A son of Jas. McIntosh, of Molesworth, a lad of about ten years of age, met with a serious accident on Monday, the 15th inst. He was playing with another boy about his own age, who accidentally pushed him over a log, and in falling he got his arm broken at the elbow joint. The break is rather of a complicated nature, and as yet it is extremely doubtful if the arm will ever be all right again.

Bro Henderson has been elected representative to the Grand Lodge.

Mr Packhamon, of the firm of Packhamon & Haddleville, sailors, left Stratford on Tuesday for the old country to join business on the other side of the Atlantic.

Last week the following county contracts were let:—Mr. Mulhorton, Mitchell, was awarded the contract for fence around Court House at 50c per foot, without painting; Mr. Pratt supplies the wood for same; Jas. Ferguson, of Mitchell, contracted for building the jail, without boss; Jas. Ickle, Herald, the county printing.

A few friends of Mr Spencer Street, of Stamford, met at his residence last Thursday evening to present him, on behalf of the Deacons of St Andrew's Sabbath School, with a finely-illustrated address, accompanied by a unique parcel containing $31 in gold, as a slight token of their appreciation of his services in training the musical talent in the school.

WOODSTOCK.

Last evening a public meeting of the citizens of Woodstock was held in the Town Hall for the purpose of considering the most desirable day on which to hold Woodstock's civic holiday. As suggested by your correspondent, the 17th of August had been fixed upon, and quite a farmers' festival being allowed to remain as the only monument of the day. Mr. Webber, however, thought that it should be accompanied with the various pageants, and so as to the rates to Port Stanley, Port Dover and Lake, and also to Hamilton and Toronto. No doubt a pleasant excursion will be arranged. The meeting took an additional interest in the firemen's demonstration on the 1st of August. It was proposed that all the townspeople should throw themselves energetically into the matter and make a strong helping hand, not by a static and general decoration of the town help to the firemen, but by joining in the procession heartily for the public support of our citizens to suggest that they should not be backward in this matter, but cannot be too often agitated. Speaking of this demonstration, I may say that on Friday last the Woodstock firemen declined to come to Woodstock Driving Park, and will bring a company. Here I know the talk of the 18th Band accompanying them. I also know that it has been the intention to make the same visit. Two or three neighboring towns have fixed their day similarly for that day.

On Monday last an election took place in St. Mary's, for a Mayor, to succeed Mr. Hall, who resigned his seat in the Council, between Mr. Parker, Fox, and Mr. Thomas Kelly, and Messrs. Kelly & Co. leading dealers. The vacancy was created by the retirement of Mr. Hy. Holt. The contest was a close one, and while it was felt for some days previous that there would be a good fight, still it could be foreseen that it was a matter of surprise to see Mr. Parker elected by a majority of 19 votes, the votes standing—Parker 91, Fox 72. Mr. Parker's vote stood 74 for Parker to 81 for Eden. Mr. Parker is a gentleman of energy and practical ability, well known in the public spaces of by those who know him in the kindest terms of praise and we feel sure will make his mark at the Council board. He succeeds to the very public position and certainly the Town Council is not beset with any shortage of this commodity.

The Actives play the Athletics, of Norwich, here on Saturday next, and are likely to play the Aurora, of Aurora, here on Tuesday next. On the latter occasion they will play the Red Stockings, of Toronto, for a prize.

This afternoon, a summons was granted by Judge Macgeorge on behalf of the Credit Valley Railroad Co calling on the G. W. R. to show cause why an order should not be made allowing the C. V. R. full liberty to cross. The summons is returnable on Saturday next. Matters will, therefore, in the meantime remain quiet.

This morning Ellis, the youngest daughter of the pastor of Knox Church, Rev. W. T. McMullen, departed this life. The funeral takes place on Tuesday next at 2 p.m. from the residence of the bereaved parents. The sympathy of all Woodstock.

SARNIA.

Three little boys from Sarnia were upset in Black River last night. One of them attempted to ramp from the boat on to the dock, and in so doing stepped on the side of the boat, turning it completely over. The captain of the steamer Queen City, which was passing at the time, put out and a couple of boats.

A young man from Canada took up his residence at the Whitmore House, Port Huron, a week or two ago, for the purpose of taking in some unwary citizen by gambling. He made no secret of his profession, and got into a fight yesterday with a resident of the city, and was roughly handled. He was afterwards arrested by Mrs. Whitman for his board bill, amounting to $12, and taken before the Justice, who fined him $5 and costs, which he paid.

ESSEX.

Of the eight pupils who went up to the High School examination from Amherstburg, five were successful. Alanson Botsford, Robert Healey, Walter Lambert, Fanny Smith and Annie Scott.

Charles Kelsey, the Windsor grocer, had a serious set-to with Mrs. Kelsey saturday night, wherein blows and hair pulling bore a prominent part. Mrs. Kelsey screamed and brought the police on the scene. Both parties were lodged in the station until the morning, when Justice Bartlett released the prisoners pay under promises of a peaceful future.

J. D. Robidoux, son of Malden, an 1872 man, is now in session, last saturday, at Amherstburg. The old man looks hale and hearty. He says he has been working in the harvest field constantly this summer, and feels quite at home there. He is now in his 65th year.

Some time ago a colored man, of the name of Moore, of Amherstburg, fell in love with a fair maiden, daughter of a wealthy farmer of Tolede, Ohio, and eloped with her. Marriage into the face of the father of the damsel, eloped with her. He was recently arrested and promised his freedom if his wife would return to the parental mansion, but this she indignantly refused to do.

Mr. Toole and Tiny Tim.

At the recent annual dinner of the Royal Theatrical Fund in London Mr. J. L. Toole, the chairman, told the following story:

"I will tell you of an experience of a stage supper which the name of Mr. Charles Dickens recalls to me, and which is not without its bearing on the business before us. I was playing Bob Crotchet in the Cricket on the Hearth, at the Adelphi, under Mr. Webster's management, and every night at 9 o'clock my signals, I had to serve a goose and a plum pudding. Mrs. Webster generously provided a real goose and a real plum pudding, which were served with Bob Crotchets, of course including Tiny Tim.

"The children always had enormous portions given them, and they all ate heartily every night; but what really troubled me was the conduct of the little girl who played Tiny Tim. That child's appetite appalled me. I could not help noticing the extraordinary rapidity with which she consumed what I gave her, and she looked so wan, and thin, and so pitiful, that she always used to positively haunt me. I used to say to myself before I began to eat, 'Well, Tiny Tim shall have enough this time, at all events,' and I'd pile her plate more and more each evening, until I recommended that on one occasion nearly half the bird, and potatoes and sausages, and apple sauce, and I hardly knew how she could carry it away to the fireplace, where she sat on a low stool, in accordance with the story, to eat it. To my amazement she cleared her plate as quickly and as often as ever, and pushing forward for plum pudding with the others.

"I grew alarmed, and spoke to Mrs. Alfred Mellon, who was playing Mrs. Crotchet, and expressed my fears that the child was going to feed. Insider, although I like the children to enjoy a treat—and how they do enjoy it!—I do not like to see them gorge. I can't understand the mystery—for I got into a condition that if I fed a single child's house and a guest were to come very important in consequence of the recent discovery of gold therein. From the Governor of the Atlantic, from the Santa Cruz to Terra del Fuego, the country seems full of it.

Europe will next year be divided among five great powers—Germany, Russia, Austria, France and England, the latter to retain its present importance—Sweden, Spain, Italy, and Turkey, thirteen small States—Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Portugal, Greece, Roumania, Servia, Montenegro, Eastern Roumelia, and probably Western Roumelia, and the United States of Mexico, San Marino, and Andorra. If no other species appears at the outcome of the Congress, I shall have given four.

Red Ribbon Gift Concert to-night in the Tent, corner of Dufferin Avenue and Wellington, choice programme. A large number of valuable presents will be given away.

LACROSSE.—The London Lacrosse Club visit Woodstock on Friday next for the purpose of playing a match with the club of that town. An exciting game may be anticipated.

IVERNIA CORPS.—The following case was tried before Judge Elliot this morning:—Francis Rock and J. Dyer, charged with shooting at Mrs. Jane Ranton and Walter Hebblethwait. They were each sentenced to one month's imprisonment.

FOUND.—Officer Caufield, of Detroit, on Sunday night, found a canvas sack on the street, filled with male attire and a letter written by one F. K. Livingstone and dated Montreal, July 11. The property remains at the Central Police Station in Detroit for identification.

THE PROPOSED LAUNCH.—The steamer which is to run on the river Thames is nearly in the launched, and in order that a sufficient height of water. Tuesday night the dam was raised for the purpose of giving a sufficient depth of water, but up to the time of going to press there appeared no immediate prospect of the launch.

FIRE YESTERDAY MORNING.—Early yesterday morning the dwelling of Mr. Wm. Fitzgerald, on Victoria street, was discovered to be on fire, and as assistance could not be obtained, was soon consumed. The family were aroused in time to save only a portion of the furniture, and that with considerable difficulty. A defective chimney is supposed to have been the cause of the fire. The loss, which amounts to about $700, is nearly covered by an insurance of $500.

SWEAT THEFT.—About six o'clock on Tuesday night, two young men were noticed entering by a rear door the carpenter-ing shop of Mr. Thomas Clarke, on Dathurst street, and subsequently going away with a valise. Information was found on opening the establishment yesterday morning Mr. Clarke missed the article, and upon being informed of the conduct of the young men by a neighbor, discovered that it had been stolen.

BRADSTREET MERCANTILE AGENCY.—Mr. T. C. Irving, of the Bradstreet Mercantile Agency, is in town for the purpose of opening the enterprise with which he is connected. The new volume of mercantile reference just issued is replete with information useful to those in business, and comprises a gazetteer, which is found of great utility in the dispatch of goods. So far as our information extends Bradstreet is able to supply special information with promptness and accuracy.

POLICE COURT PRESCRIPTION.—Pat. Kelly, an old pensioner, formerly of Goderich, was fined $5 or 24 days in gaol for being drunk and disorderly. Mrs. Pinkham, for using abusive language, was fined $1 or, in fine, was fined $1 and $3.55 costs. Bob Black, for assaulting Stephen Scott, was remanded on the 30th inst. R. McGinness, a vagrant, brought up on remand, was discharged. John Stacy, Dutch Joe, and Mick Hurley, charged with having broken into a stall in the Market, were remanded until the 31st inst. The Court then adjourned.

BASE BALL MATCH.—The lawyers of London have accepted the challenge of the bankers to play base ball, and the following nine will probably represent the Lawyers—A. H. MacAdams, p.; Kelley, c.; B. C. McCann, 1 b.; P. Mulkern, 2 b.; H. Blackburn, 3 b.; Sir Spencer, s. s.; H. McMacheth, l. f.; F. P. Betts, c. f.; F. Love, r. f. Bankers—Strong, p.; Stainbeck, c.; Hespeler, s. s.; Dampier, 3 b.; Tregent, 1 f.; McEachren, c. f.; Sinclair, 1 b.; McBeth, r. f. The game will come off this afternoon at 3.30 on the Tecumseh grounds.

COURT DUFFERIN, No. 7, FORESTERS.—At the regular meeting of the above Court Tuesday night the following officers were duly elected for the ensuing term by Bro. Geo. Wright, H. W. H. G. Ranger of Ontario.—P. C. Ranger, Bro. T. Colton; C. Ranger, Bro. J. W. Jones; V. C. Ranger, Bro. A. J. Craig; Rec.-Sec., Bro. A. Ray; Fin.-Sec., Bro. C. Bennett; Treasurer, Bro. John Edwards; Sen. Woodward, Bro. W. H. Weston; Jun. Woodward, Bro. J. F. McLauchlin; Sen. Beadle, Bro. W. H. Struthers; Jun. Beadle, Bro. A. D. Dismore; Chaplain, Bro. Robert Munroe; Physician, Dr. Samuel Payne.

MINUTE CHANGES.—The following changes of local interest have been gazetted:—Lieut. Arthur Ellis, to be Lieutenant. Ensign George Edgar Laing, V.B., vice Hurd, resigned. To be Ensign, Thomas Brunton, gentleman, V.B., vice Laing, promoted. The resignation of Ensign James Pope is hereby accepted. 7th Lambton Battalion of Infantry.—No. 5 Company, Wallaceburg.—To be Captain, Lieutenant Joseph Hall Beattie. V.B., vice Lewis promoted. 30th Wellington Battalion of Rifles.—No. 2 Company, Erin.—To be Captain, Lieutenant James Scott Speirs, M. S., vice John Cleghorn, left Inulis.

ASSAULT.—On Monday evening a young man named John McDonald was accompanying Miss Fanny Rothwell from Dundas street to her home on the other side of Westminster Bridge, and it appears that when near her home he attempted to commit an assault on her, and used indecent language. It is also charged that a man named William Farrin was accompanying Miss Hannah Rothwell, a sister of the former, and that he made use of improper language. The former case was heard before Squire Owrey yesterday, when McDonald was fined $10 and costs or the charge of assault, and $1 and costs for his bad language. The other case will be heard to-day.

THE 1ST REG.—Since the return of the Band of the 7th Battalion from Montreal they have only played in Watterman's Grove, which was kindly placed at their disposal by Mr. Waterman. Tuesday night, however, at the request of a large number of citizens, they determined to play in the Victoria Park, and had only completed the first three pieces on their programme, when Mr. Grant, the caretaker of the Park, informed Mr. Biscott, the bandmaster, that he had better take his band away, as it found it impossible to keep the people off the grass and flowers. The Band accordingly played God Save the Queen and departed, to the evident disappointment of the large crowd assembled.

INTERNATIONAL OCCURRENCES.—The Cleveland Leader says that the Ladies Aid Society of the First Methodist Episcopal Church have been invited to visit the city of London, Canada, to pay them a visit on July 30th, and they have chartered the steamer Chicora to leave Detroit on Monday evening, July 29th, and return home Wednesday morning. The Mayor of London has arranged to meet them at Port Stanley, and has tendered them the freedom of the city. They invite all their friends to go with them and a pleasant time is assigned. The ladies of the various Canada Methodist Churches in this city are making all arrangements to give their Cleveland friends a cordial reception.

LOCAL NOTICES.

NEW CHEAP GROCERY.—Messrs. Moses Wilson & Co. have opened out in the store lately occupied by M. A. Lynch, one door north of Dundas street, on Clarence, where the public will find a large and well selected stock of groceries, provisions, etc., for sale at fair rates and square dealing. Teas and sugars of the choicest brand and quality. A call solicited.

THE CITY OF DULUTH AND PEMBINA, VERY CHEAP.—Tomorrow Manitoba, Friday night, 26th inst. Parties wanting to go can get particulars from H. E. Nelles or Wm. M. Moore.

The Magazines, &c.

THE CANADIAN MONTHLY AND NATIONAL REVIEW. Rose-Belford, Toronto.

This popular Canadian periodical for August presents unusual attractions. The opening pages are devoted to the "Edinburgh Ceremony," which are tastily illustrated and contain much that is interesting concerning the rare old city. Wilkie Collins' tale, "The Haunted House," is continued, as is also that other exciting story, "The Monks of Thelema." Several pieces of poetry enliven its pages, and the editor, Mr. George Stewart, contributes a clever review of "Our Secret Military Tales." Those interesting papers, "Current Events," maintain their vigor, which together with "Literary Notices" and "Table Talk" forms a whole which should continue to command the patronage of Canadian public. The typographical execution is unusually good.

THE PORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. Edited by John Morley. Rose-Belford, Toronto.

The spirit of this standard English magazine, issued by the Toronto publishing house, places in the hands of Canadians one of the best publications of the day at a very low price. The number for June-July is just out, and is rich in thought as in information. The leading article by G. H. Lewes, "The Dread and Duties of Science," is a masterly production. Braelam and Disestablishment," by Edward Jenkins, M. P., addresses itself ably to a subject which is pressing more and more upon attention in England. "The Future of Asiatic Turkey," by James Bryce, affords an insight to many causes which have led to the decadence of the Turkish power, and which appears likely to lead to the ultimate necessity of the erection of a new dominion. "The Political Adventures of Lord Beaconsfield" are permeated with a sneering style, scarcely compatible with the estimate in which that notable personage is held to day, though it is refreshing as containing historical and personal reminiscences of a very remarkable man. Several other articles of interest are to be found in the pages, making the present number one of great interest.

Erin go Bragh!

Annual Picnic of the Irish Benevolent Society.

Interesting Addresses by Revs. Messrs. Ballard and Flannery.

The second annual excursion of the Irish Benevolent Society, of this city, took place to Port Stanley yesterday. The day was all that the most fastidious Irishman could have desired; the crowd was respectable, orderly and exceedingly well-behaved, and the feeling displayed was of unity in sentiment, thought and intelligence. In a word, the excursion proved quite as successful as the initial one, and it is conceded to have been one of the finest and best conducted ever held at the Port. Shortly before ten o'clock two trains, consisting of eight cars, left the city for London for Port Stanley, and arrived at their destination shortly after eleven o'clock, in the best of time for the time. Amongst the excursionists we observed a large number of leading citizens who appeared to have made up their minds to be Irishmen at least one day in the year. After reaching the summit of the hill, the excursionists passed the time in the usual manner of such occasions. The only thing known to every one there is no need of enlarging further upon it. At half past one o'clock the members of the Society and guests dined at the Fraser House and enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content.

Subsequently, between three and four o'clock the dancing sheet was put down for a session of the members of the Executive Committee and others, and an impromptu programme of dancing was conceived for the purpose of hearing addresses from the representatives of the two societies, in particular—G. Cannon, G. Davey Brand, W. Vestland, Mrs. Baker, Misses Baker, Cutler, Paris, Jessie Bremner and Cooper.

Interesting Addresses by Revs. Messrs. Ballard and Flannery.

The second annual excursion of the Irish Benevolent Society, of this city, took place to Port Stanley yesterday. The day was all that the most fastidious Irishman could have desired; the crowd was respectable, orderly and exceedingly well-behaved, and the feeling displayed was of unity in sentiment, thought and intelligence. In a word, the excursion proved quite as successful as the initial one, and it is conceded to have been one of the finest and best conducted ever held at the Port. Shortly before ten o'clock two trains, consisting of eight cars, left the city for London for Port Stanley, and arrived at their destination shortly after eleven o'clock, in the best of time for the time. Amongst the excursionists we observed a large number of leading citizens who appeared to have made up their minds to be Irishmen at least one day in the year. After reaching the summit of the hill, the excursionists passed the time in the usual manner of such occasions. The only thing known to every one there is no need of enlarging further upon it. At half past one o'clock the members of the Society and guests dined at the Fraser House and enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content.

Subsequently, between three and four o'clock the dancing sheet was put down for a session of the members of the Executive Committee and others, and an impromptu programme of dancing was conceived for the purpose of hearing addresses from the representatives of the two societies, in particular—Mr. Ballard, Assistant Minister of St. Paul's Church, London, and Rev. Father Flannery, of St. Thomas.

Mr. H. D. Hoog, First Vice-President of the Society, officiated as Chairman, and expressed his regret at the unavoidable absence of Mr. Hugh MacMahon, the esteemed President, who had been called home on important business. He was proud to see such a large number of people at their second annual picnic, and felt that it augured continued success to the Society. Last year the Society had been inaugurated, and he was happy to say that since that time it had increased largely both in membership and means. Such societies as St. George's and St. Andrew's were established in London, and accomplished a great deal. It was frequently said that we tastily threw aside all these national distinctions and be Canadians. But when Societies, such as that now existing, were established for charitable purposes, we, as Irishmen, felt that we would not be doing justice to ourselves if we remained passive, and, as a result, the institution of the society under whose auspices we had met. Irishmen in Canada were a large and influential body, and such societies as that now existing were needed to unite them in brotherly love and friendship, and in carrying out those laudable objects the relief of a practical character was afforded to the needy. The Society numbers at present 150 to 200, and, with a little exertion, he knew that the membership rail could be increased to 500 in a very short time. He urged all who heard him to do all that lay in their power to extend its influence. Everything by so doing they would feel more deeply interested in its welfare, and have the satisfaction of feeling that they had not labored in vain. He concluded by introducing Rev. Mr. Ballard, President of St. George's Society, and Mr. Dewar, Vice-President of St. Andrew's Society, both of whom made a few congratulatory remarks on the good feeling and amity which existed between and amongst the Sister Societies.

The Rev. Mr. Ballard then delivered an eloquent and patriotic address. He said—I am glad to be present here to-day, and have been so long without a cheer, and now let's give three cheers for old Ireland. (Cheers given and three times three.) (Laughter.) The previous speakers had not even once referred to the pleasure spending a few weeks with the ladies at this festival, and he felt that while the slight had been intended, it had been wisely reserved for him to commend their presence and their joining in our sports, or rather his attending his first picnic on Canadian soil. He spoke warmly of the efforts of the Society in the cause of charity and the welfare of the people, and related a humorous anecdote in support of his contention, that the ladies were all he had painted them. Alluding to his old country, and to Irishmen, he observed that Mr. Ballard remarked that while many claimed to be Irishmen, he believed that he could lay claim to being a true descendant of St. Patrick, as he was reared a few yards from where our patron saint was buried. Geographically, at least, he had good ground for boasting his nationality. The Irish Society under whose banner we were enrolled had a good ring in the word. It was a grand idea to unite men together in the work of benevolence. The memories of our country should remain in this he amongst us, for when we consider the memories that are clustering around the geography of our native land, when we think of such men as Grattan, O'Connell, Cullen, Moore, Father Matthew, Oliver Goldsmith and others, we have a right to feel proud of our native land. While Ireland suffered for many long years from political persecution, she had many acts who were shining of the ornaments of the land. He spoke of the ancient bards who sang in praise of her songs, and contended that, despite the upheavals and strife that had taken place for years gone by, we had a right to be proud of our nationality, and should feel that a Irishman's love for the land is to stand up and show ourselves men in anything calculated to advance her material interests. The speaker then referred to the failings of the Irish people, and they had no more than other people. They were their natural and national impulsiveness, their almost universal inferiority, and their bigotry, which separated class from class. He dilated upon these failings at some length, and concluded by urging his hearers to leave all these failings behind the Atlantic, and assist in raising up a grand Dominion in this section of the British Empire; try to make our sons and daughters as our forefathers were in the trials and sorrows of the past; and if this Society is true to its principles, we can surely have a glorious and noble future, and be able to say, with the bard of old, "Erin mavourneen, Erin go bragh." (Cheers.)

The Rev. Father Flannery was then announced, and his appearance was greeted with loud applause. He felt at the outset that there was nothing left for him to say, after the eloquent address of his predecessor. But while Mr. Ballard was speaking it was nothing wonderful for a man fresh from the Cold Soil to be unnerved, if he wasn't, he would be an exception to the rule. (Laughter.) We would be disappointed if he did not have eloquence, coming as he did, with the sanctity of St. Patrick around about him. (Cheers.) The people couldn't expect a hardened old man like him, who had but recently celebrated his silver wedding in this country, (great laughter,) to interest them as the new comer had done; but, notwithstanding the trouble of fighting against Irish eloquence, he would endeavor to make a few remarks. While deeply regretting the absence of the Rev. Mr. Gemley from the second picnic of the Society, he couldn't but admit that his mantle had fallen on the shoulders of a genial Irishman. Alluding to the time gone by, he said when their next anniversary came, and at which time he (the speaker) had urged them to work together in brotherly love, Rev. Mr. Flannery congratulated those present on keeping their pledges of fidelity to one another. The place where they were now standing was a befitting place to bury the hatchet of animosity and strife. It was a portion of the hunting grounds of the Aborigines, who had furnished us with an example, which he hoped would not be lost upon those whom he had the pleasure of addressing. Henceforth, let there be no religious distinctions between Irishmen; let the Irishmen of London, St. Thomas and neighborhood show to our fellow-countrymen in the Dominion, that we maintain the pledge of unity, that we do not doubt each other's sincerity, and that we are willing to stand by each other in times of trial or adversity. (Cheers.) These reunions or picnics are very happy meetings, and are the means of forming and acquiring lasting friendships, which cannot be broken. The rev. gentleman then referred to the letter of Mr. George Watson, read on a previous occasion, and which had created a sensation of feeling that they had not labored in vain. He concluded by introducing Mr. Thomas Heasley, President of St. George's Society, and Mr. Dewar, Vice-President of St. Andrew's Society, both of whom made a few congratulatory remarks on the good feeling and amity which existed between and amongst the Sister Societies.

The Rev. Mr. Ballard then delivered an eloquent and patriotic address. He said—I am glad to be present here to-day, and have been so long without a cheer, and now let's give three cheers for old Ireland. (Cheers given and three times three.) (Laughter.) The previous speakers had not even once referred to the pleasure spending a few weeks with the ladies at this festival, and he felt that while the slight had been intended, it had been wisely reserved for him to commend their presence and their joining in our sports, or rather his attending his first picnic on Canadian soil. He spoke warmly of the efforts of the Society in the cause of charity and the welfare of the people, and related a humorous anecdote in support of his contention, that the ladies were all he had painted them. Alluding to his old country, and to Irishmen, he observed that Mr. Ballard remarked that while many claimed to be Irishmen, he believed that he could lay claim to being a true descendant of St. Patrick, as he was reared a few yards from where our patron saint was buried. Geographically, at least, he had good ground for boasting his nationality. The Irish Society under whose banner we were enrolled had a good ring in the word. It was a grand idea to unite men together in the work of benevolence. The memories of our country should remain in this he amongst us, for when we consider the memories that are clustering around the geography of our native land, when we think of such men as Grattan, O'Connell, Cullen, Moore, Father Matthew, Oliver Goldsmith and others, we have a right to feel proud of our native land. While Ireland suffered for many long years from political persecution, she had many acts who were shining of the ornaments of the land. Free Press Correspondence.

The Voters' Lists.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

SIR,—In looking over this morning's issue of your paper a letter published over the signature of W. E. Eastlake attracted my attention. With your kind permission, I will briefly reply to the statements contained therein. My reason for doing so is that they are entirely erroneous. Without contesting the writers' assumption that none but voters in the city of London are qualified to enlighten the public through the columns of a newspaper, I would just state that, in the first place, I am not, as Mr. Eastlake declares, "grossly ignorant" of the provisions of the election and Voters' Lists Acts; secondly, that I did pay my income tax for the 31st of December, 1877, and hold a receipt for the same; and, lastly, that I own, and have been for about seventeen years, a resident of the city. Mr. Eastlake, on the contrary, cannot have said a word in favor of his assertion, as he (Mr. Hall would certainly be the very last place he would have inspired at with the publication of receiving reliable information.

If the fact that a newspaper correspondent is a non-resident be any evidence that what he writes is false and calculated "to mislead the public," I may just observe, in passing, that the name of your correspondent is not to be found in any voters' list or assessment roll that I have yet seen—and I have seen a number of them.

Yours, etc.,
W. E. WESTLAKE.

London, July 24, 1878.

THE PROVINCIAL FAIR.

Appointment of Judges to Act at the Fair in Toronto.

A meeting of the Directors of the London Mechanics' Institute was held Tuesday evening, with Colonel Walker in the chair. When the following judges were appointed to act at the coming Provincial Fair at Toronto:—

Cabinet Ware, Carriages, Sleighs and other Wood and Hair Manufactures—Mr. Ardell.

Chemical Manufactures and Preparations —Dr. Walker.

Building Materials and Constructions, Pottery, Stained Glass, etc.—Mr. John Grant.

Fine Arts—Ald. J. R. Peel.

Woollen, Flax and Cotton Goods, Furs, Wearing Apparel, etc.—Mr. A. J. G. Henderson.

REAPING MATCH.—On Friday last, 19th inst., a reaping match took place at Cole's Corners, Sarnia Township, on the farm of James Moore, Esq. The day was exceedingly hot, but the attendance of both men and machines was fair. The judges on the occasion were Messrs. Wm. Hoskins, Benjamin McMicken and Patrick Maitland. After a hard struggle, it was decided to award the first position to the combined "Deering Lark" and the second to "Phœnix Reaper," the former manufactured by John Elliott, London, and the latter by F. J. Craig, Strathroy, and sold by Evans & Wood, of Sarnia, who are the agents there. A large number of these machines have been sold by them this season with very satisfactory results.

ORDERLOWN EXCURSION.—The Oddfellows' excursion yesterday to Hamilton and the Beach was a complete success. Over 500 tickets were issued from this city, and the entire number of the excursionists, including those who joined it from various ports along the Air Line, was fully fifteen hundred. Arrived at Hamilton, the party divided, some viewing the sights of the city, while the majority went by steamer and carriage to the beach, where they thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The return journey the train left Hamilton at 9 o'clock and arrived in this city at 1 a.m. this morning, tired, but thoroughly satisfied that they had a good day's outing.

A BOAT CONFERENCE.—After many hints, and after many days, the G. W. R. authorities intend, we hear, running a special train to Port Stanley from this city on Saturday night next and each succeeding Saturday during the summer season. The train will leave here at half past ten o'clock, so as to permit merchants and clerks to avail themselves of the cooling breezes of Lake Erie after the turmoil of business cares of the week. It will, we have reason to believe, be largely patronized.

SELLING FARM GOODS.—Detective Smith, of this city, has recently had several merchants throughout the country fined for selling Paris green. It is contrary to law for anyone but duly registered druggists to sell this article, and if anyone in these parts is ignorant of the law bearing on this point, has been selling it, he should profit by the fact that a vigilant and active detective might make it his business to pay the place a visit.

APPOINTMENT.—Richard Baxter, oldest son of Chief of Police Baxter, of Chatham, for some time past employed in the freight department of the G. W. R. in that town, has been promoted to a position in the freight department of that road at Brantford.

...Mrs. Beckwith, who astonished London some little time since by swimming ten miles in the Thames before she was 15 years of age, will shortly try to swim twice the distance. Should she succeed, she may try the passage from Dover to Calais.

...The German Emperor is before everything a soldier. As soon as he was able to dress he put on his military uniform.

County Magistrates' Court.

Wednesday—Before Squire Peters.

A man named George Feeney was arrested yesterday by Constable Hodge while at work on a farm on the 4th concession of London Township, on the charge of maliciously damaging a covered buggy some time since in Petersville, by throwing a stone through the covering. The buggy belonged to a man named Hall. Feeney pleaded guilty, and was fined $1 and $8.10 costs and damages.

Joseph Sifton was charged with assaulting George Crockett, and with using abusive and insulting language towards him. Sifton paid Crockett $5 and the costs of the Court, and that settled the matter.

Windsor Items.

The Windsor cricketers played a match with the Amherstburg club, of Amherstburg, yesterday, and victory perched on Windsor's banners. The return match will be played on the Fenwick ground, left Detroit, soon.

Yesterday two neighbors, Louisa Barns and Helen Green, had an animated discussion over some domestic matters. They were on opposite sides of the street, and had to talk quite loud. Mrs. Barns claims that Mrs. Green used bad language, and had her arrested. But Mrs. Green this morning gave bail for her appearance tomorrow, when she thinks she can show that the bad, bad words were spoken by the other woman.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.
The English Grits Demanding Reconstruction of Parliament.
DEBATE THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.
Prince Arthur Granted $50,000 Per Annum.
The Grits in a Hopeless Minority.

London, July 25.—In the Commons today, Joseph Cowan (Radical) will present a petition of a small faction of extreme Turcophiles, demanding the impeachment of Beaconsfield.

London, July 25.—In the Commons, today, Mr. Cowen presented the petition of the extreme Turcophile faction, demanding the impeachment of Beaconsfield. Charles Edward Lewis (Conservative) rose to a point of order, but the Speaker allowed the presentation of the petition.

London, July 25.—The marriage of the Duke of Connaught and Princess Marie Louise of Prussia, came up in the House of Lords to-day. After eulogistic speeches by Earls Beaconsfield and Granville, the House unanimously agreed to an address assenting the Queen of concurrence in the financial measures suggested in her message.

London, July 25.—In the Commons today, Robert Bourke, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, in replying to Gladstone, said the Government could not lay on the table the memorandum of the Schouvaloff-Salisbury agreement without other documents accompanying it, and these could not be produced without the consent of other powers.

Mr. Gladstone then gave notice that he would move for the production of the documents.

Mr. Bourke, replying to Hastington, said the powers had been asked to permit the production of the documents, but one of the powers had refused to consent.

Mr. Gladstone then withdrew his notice.

In the House of Commons,

Sir Stafford Northcote proposed to go into Committee upon the Royal message relative to the marriage.

Sir Charles Dilke Radical moved an amendment postponing consideration of the subject until the Government's policy was before the House a return showing the number of Princes and Princesses there entered since the accession of William III. He argued that such applications had hitherto only been made with a view to provide for the succession to the throne.

Northcote maintained that the application was not unprecedented, and eulogised the Duke of Connaught.

Mr. Anderson, the advanced Liberal member for Glasgow, complained that the Princess had nothing for their money, but were immersed in pleasures.

Gladstone supported the Government.

The House by 350 to 33 decided to go into committee.

In the Commons it was decided, without a division, to grant the Duke $50,000 per annum, and in the event of his death, his widow to receive $30,000 per annum.

Mr. Taylor, member for Leicester, previously gave notice that he would move the rejection of the measure on the second reading.

LIFE IN WEST VIRGINIA.
The "Red-Men" as Moral Reformers.

Wheeling, West Va., July 24.—On Monday a secret organization called the "Redman," who have become famous for their numerous lynchings and similar deeds of violence, destroyed a saloon in Mannington, West Virginia, tearing the building to pieces. It was owned by one Cartwright, whose son Carl was recently accused of murder, and who was generally believed to be guilty. The mob horsewhipped a man named Beatty, who was a witness in the murder case and gave him 48 hours to leave the county. Another witness has been given six weeks to settle up business and leave the county.

A woman calling herself Mrs. Fairburn, living in Boone county, killed her four-years-old illegitimate child on the 19th. She was recovering from a fit of sickness, and the child was playing by her bed-side, when she suddenly sprang up, seized it by the feet and dashed its head across the headboard of the bed, killing it instantly.

THE LABRADOR FISHERIES.
Inexhaustible Stores of Cod, Salmon, Mackerel and Herring Neglected.

New York, July 25.—A letter from St. John's, Newfoundland, says that in the early part of June a report was circulated about a terrible famine on the coast of Labrador, owing to the failure of the fisheries and the scarcity of provisions. The truth is, that the fishing on the Labrador coast is pronounced a marked success this season. All the fleet is well supplied and the weather proved propitious. The Newfoundlanders neglect to accept the valuable advice of Prof. Hindom, attache of the Colonial Government, who, in his extensive researches throughout the island and its dependency, found that in the northwest parts of the latter, which are never frequented by fishing vessels, cod, salmon, mackerel and herring abound in seemingly inexhaustible numbers.

ACCIDENT TO THE SS. SCANGINAVIAN.
Loss of Her Propeller in Mid-ocean.

New York, July 25.—A London special states that the bark Eldra, at Plymouth, reports having spoken the S.S. Scandinavian on the 17th inst., in lat. 28 deg., lon. 19, under full sail, having lost her propeller, but in otherwise good condition.

Leprosy in New York.

New York, July 24.—The World says that two genuine cases of leprosy have been brought from Cuba, and are now under the treatment of Blackwell's Island. The disfigured features, swollen limbs and bandaged feet of the patients show that they are afflicted with a disease happily not often met with here. One of them is too sore to move, save when it is positively necessary. The other, though much further advanced in the disease, is at present as lively as a cricket. One of them, Abraham Brown, is a New Yorker, and 54 years old. The other, Emilio Trenal, is a native of Cuba, and only 19 years old. Trenal has been afflicted about five years, and is in the last stages of the disease. Brown has the disease in a more acute form, and the disease has so invaded his whole body that he presents a frightful appearance. His hands and feet are almost black, and covered with ulcers, his fingers are enlarged to nearly three times their former size, so that the ends stand apart like the claws of a fowl; his nails have fallen out, and his features have an expression of despair that makes it painful to look at him. Brown brought his leprosy from Cuba, whither he went in 1865, remaining there about nine years. He feels keenly that he is an object of universal loathing. No one cares to go near him except the physician, who have not the slightest fear, being satisfied that the disease is not contagious. The physicians have no hope of curing the lepers. They say that, although it has been claimed that lepers have been cured, no well-authenticated case has ever been recorded. All they can do is to mitigate the disease as much as possible.

An Improper Tramp Shot by a Michigan Farmer.

Detroit, Mich, July 23.—The police have in custody a man named John Adler for shooting a man in Grosse Point, on the shore of Lake St. Clair. Adler lived in a retired spot, about six miles above the city, and is a farmer. The man who was shot is John Haffey a tramp, who had made indecent proposals to Mrs. Adler, and defied her husband in his unkindness. Haffey was Mrs. Adler's "partner" named Jim Lynch had been in the vicinity of Adler's several days, and had previously been to the house for food, and last night they came again, when Adler, who determined to put an end to their coming in the future, ordered them to leave and steer clear of his shanty. They paid no attention to Adler, and threatened to ravish his wife. The woman screamed, when Haffey produced a knife and started towards Adler. The Dutchman picked up a gun and planted a charge of shot in the ruffian's neck, made his way to Detroit, and gave himself into custody. Haffey is now at St. Mary's Hospital, and will probably get over it.

A Pastor in Trouble.

Watertown, N. Y., July 25.—The authorities of Governeur have issued a writ for bastardy against Rev. H. C. Miller, Episcopal clergyman, of that place, upon the complaint of Catherine Cole, a young lady in his parish. At first Miller denied his guilt, but it has become so apparent that last night he fled, leaving his bail to settle.

THE AGITATION SUBSIDING—ENGLAND AND THE VATICAN.

Rome, July 25.—The Italia irredenta agitation is subsiding.

The changes in the foreign representation of the Vatican is postponed till November, when a papal nuncio, having semi-official status, will go to England. England will notsend a representative to the Vatican.

Scotch whiskey is as cheap in America as the home-made article, but in Scotland it costs fully three times as much as it does here. These facts are to be credited to "our Consul at Glasgow." Imbibers of pure "Scotch whiskey" in America will know now why it is that the latter costs no more than home-made.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Vienna, July 25.—News has reached here that the Treaty of Berlin has caused great irritation among the Bulgarians, who, since the Russian occupation, have been the ruling class in Eastern Roumelia.

A so-called Pan-Bulgarian Committee has been formed at Adrianople ostensibly to agitate for Bulgarian unity. The Committee telegraphed to Prince Lobanoff, Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, to Akaskoff, Chief of the Pan-Slavic propaganda at Moscow, and to the Czarowitch, informing them of the Pan-Bulgarian movement.

Arrangements for the march of the Austrian troops into Bosnia are complete, and the troops were ready to cross the frontier at any hour. The order to march will not be given before the end of the week, as the Austrian Government is anxious to complete arrangements with Turkey in order to enter the Provinces as a friend and not as an enemy, but with or without the good will of Turkey, the order to march will not be delayed much longer. The headquarters of the Austrian forces at Brod. Nobody anticipates serious resistance from any quarter. The Turkish authorities in the provinces have received directions from Constantinople that in all circumstances they are to meet the Austrians in a friendly spirit. Greater difficulties are feared in repatriating the Bosnian refugees, who do not appear anxious to go back.

Vienna, July 25.—The Italian demonstrations absorb political interest here, but it is understood the whole affair is directed against the Cairoli Ministry.

Paris, July 25.—Le Temps says the demands of the Italian Radicals are unreasonable as they are ridiculous. The agitation might not only deprive Italy of the respect of Europe, but prove a great danger to her. It is felt here that the movement is confined to a few hot-headed Democrats, and it is unfair to hold Italy responsible for it.

EXTRAORDINARY TRAGEDY.
An Infidel Lecture Followed by Suicide Before a Crowded Audience.

Capron, Ill., July 25.—Last May George W. Burleigh, a man of fine education, came here from Ohio, ostensibly to start a tonsorial establishment. He was often in depressed spirits. On Sunday he published a card, announcing that he would lecture on Tuesday evening, and at the close shoot himself through the head. The admission was to be a dollar, and the proceeds were to be used for his funeral expenses and to buy scientific books for the town library. At the appointed time the hall was crowded. Burleigh delivered an infidel lecture of wonderful power, and at the end, despite the efforts of friends who were present to prevent it, shot himself through the head. The brain was literally torn to pieces.

The following was the notice published by Burleigh:—

To the Worthy Citizens of Capron and vicinity

Having, since the great sensation in Chicago—the hanging of Sherry and Connolly—heard sundry citizens of Capron and vicinity express a strong desire to witness some such tragedy. I have concluded to gratify their lust for the horrible by committing suicide by shooting myself through the forehead on the evening of the 23rd inst., at Thornton Hall. The price of admission to this real tragedy will be $1, and the fund that may be realized thus shall first be applied to my burial expenses, and should any surplus remain, it shall be invested in the works of Darwin, Tyndall and Huxley, and the same shall be presented to the town library in my name. My reason for thus putting a period to my life is that I have endured the manifold miseries of existence as long as I desire to, and my only wish now is to plunge into the eternal, soundless, lifeless gulf of unconsciousness. The death of the body is the annihilation of the man, and annihilation is eternal peace. Before destroying myself I shall read my auditors and death witnesses an original lecture, in which I shall justify suicide. In all sincerity, G. W. BURLEIGH.

It may be well surmised that this remarkable notice awakened a degree of interest and excitement in our quiet town not often felt here. Soon it was the theme of every tongue, and ere nightfall every village and every countryman who had come to town to attend church, was informed of this amazing announcement. Many set the author of it down as a suddenly developed lunatic. Others believed it was merely his intention to create a sensation and perpetrate a joke on the community.

However, a strong and very general desire prevailed to see how far he really would carry out his announced intention; and our citizens concluded to let him go so far as the reading of his lecture, and then, by a well-arranged stratagem, to gain control of his person and endeavor to reason him out of his rash purpose. But they had not calculated the coolness and strength of Burleigh's determination to effect his end. All day Sunday Burleigh kept himself closely secluded in his room, and, with the exception of two of our local clergymen, he refused admission to any one of any pretext. At 2 p. m. he permitted a brief admission to Rev. Mr. Wilcox and Rev. Mr. Burton. His allowed these gentlemen to expostulate with him until quarter of three, and then dismissed them, courteously declining their offers of prayer in his behalf. They report that he listened to their arguments calmly, and answering them as calmly, but that all their efforts failed to weaken his resolution. During his long seclusion, from Saturday morning until Sunday morning, Burleigh was doubtless engaged in writing his lecture.

By 8 o'clock fully one hundred and fifty persons had purchased admission to the scene of the interesting event, which many thought would not happen, and some thought would happen. Burleigh himself acted as door keeper, and no children were allowed admission. The audience was composed of men and women, in the ratio of three of the former to one of the latter. At exactly ten minutes after eight Burleigh closed the door, walked forward with a firm, deliberate step to the platform, took his stand behind a temporary desk he had erected, bowed gracefully to the audience, and immediately began the delivery of his lecture. While Burleigh was attending to the duties of doorkeeper, a couple of stout citizens had secreted themselves in a small side room that opened near the speaker's stand. Their intention was to overpower Burleigh, who is a small man, at the close of his lecture. The failure of this plan proved that Burleigh had in some manner gained a knowledge of its existence, and that he had planned most effectually to render it futile. The delivery of the lecture occupied just one hour and ten minutes, and during that time the audience was held spell-bound. The stage manners of the lecturer plainly indicated that he was no novice in public speaking. His voice was clear, distinct and musical, bearing evidence of his scholarship in elocution. His modulation was simply perfect. His lecture was certainly a production of infidel reasoning, and its language was most powerful and forcible. He had studied to make it end in such a manner that its end would be unsuspected. As soon as he had finished he stepped quickly backward until he reached the middle of the stage, and with a lightning movement drew a Derringer from his hip pocket, and while Messrs. Gibbs and Morton were rushing upon him, he placed the pistol to his forehead and fired, falling into the arms of those who had sought to save him. During this act women screamed and fainted, and strong men stood aghast. The scene was such as will haunt one vividly to his dying day. It was the embodiment of the horrible and terrible. The lodged ball had literally torn Burleigh's skull to atoms. His death was instantaneous. Since the consummation of this fearful tragedy, a depression of horror and gloom has pervaded the community. The deepest sorrow prevails at this wanton destruction of so noble an intellectual structure. Burleigh left a request in his room that his body be forwarded to his friends in Cincinnati. This will be done immediately.

MONTREAL AFFAIRS.
BOLD ROBBERY AT A BANK.

Montreal, July 22.—The robbery of Bertis Casselman, of Casselman, near Winchester, Ont., in an Exchange Bank today, was one of the most successful here for years. Mr. Casselman had drawn $2,864 from Molsons Bank, which he rolled in two packages of $1,400 and $1,464. These he placed in the coupon pockets of his coat, and proceeded to the Exchange Bank, where he paid a note of $1,029 with the smaller package, and received the difference in change. He commenced counting the change at a desk where a stranger was apparently engaged in a similar operation. The latter handed Mr. Casselman a bank bill, asking him if it was good. Mr. Casselman examined it carefully, and returned it with an affirmative answer, when the stranger left. Mr. Casselman finished counting his change, and when putting it in his pocket, discovered the larger package gone. The stranger was gone, too, and nothing has been heard of him. The money was in 100 ten dollars, and 400 four-dollar bills. Several robberies have taken place here since the 12th. It is believed that a gang of thieves, known to have come here from the United States, expecting trouble to occur, are still in the city carrying on their practices.

Destructive Fire in Brockville.

Brockville, July 25.—About nine o'clock last night a fire broke out in the planing mill of Tilley & Briggs. The wind blowing hard at the time, the fire could not be gotten under control until the building was gutted, and nearly all the machinery, with a large quantity of unfinished sashes, doors, window frames, etc., were destroyed. The loss on machinery, &c., is about $4,000; insured in Manufacturers' & Merchants' for $2,000. Loss on building, which was owned by Mrs. Booth, about $3,000, uninsured. The fire originated in the vicinity of the boiler.

THE ROCKFORD HORROR!
The Inquest—Verdict, Murder and Suicide.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press.

Simcoe, July 25.—The following is the remainder of the evidence taken on the murder of Geo. Smith, yesterday:—

Josie Ann Smith, sworn.—Am second daughter of deceased; was awakened about two o'clock by father and James quarrelling; heard something about money and excursion; did not get up, but my sister did; she lit lamps, and father got up; money was in bureau drawer; father and James went out and stayed ten minutes, then returned still quarrelling; in half an hour father went out and got some kindling and built a fire, and shortly after both went out; in half an hour brother returned and lit me up to our room; asked if we were asleep; struck sister on the head twice; she ran down-stairs; he struck me several times; I got under the bed; at daylight Mr. Humphrey came from Mr. Culver's; we went out to the barn, and found the body near the straw stack; father and James had been quarrelling for a week about money; saw James cutting a piece of pump-handle last night.

John G. Culver, sworn.—Live next door to deceased; at about 6, a. m., John Waters came for me to come to Smith's, as James was raising the deuce; I came down and asked where Smith was; they said they did not know; Miss Humphrey and Jessie Smith went before me into the yard; I went towards the barn and found deceased lying on his back; there were marks on the ground as if he had been dragged along; some time after my wife said some one was in the barn; I came out in front of the barn and found James, as I thought, knocking on a load of grain; Mr. Lovelace opened the door, and there saw James' body suspended by a rope; he was dead; Mr. Lovelace said he had no pulse, but his hands were still warm; Mr. Lovelace went through the wheat field and found the club produced; there was still fresh blood upon it; James was not easily excited, but when angry was very violent.

John Waters, sworn—Live across the street from deceased; am well acquainted with the family; about ten minutes to four o'clock this morning George, son of deceased, came to my house and said James was killing 'd em all, and wanted me to come over; I hurried over; went to the house; asked Jessie where her father was; she said he had gone over to Culver's; then saw Jane with her head cut; they said James had struck them with a club; I went to the barn, and found deceased lying on his back; there were marks on the ground as if he had been dragged along; some time after my wife said some one was in the barn; I came out in front of the barn and found James, as I thought, knocking on a load of grain; Mr. Lovelace opened the door, and there saw James' body suspended by a rope; he was dead; Mr. Lovelace said he had no pulse, but his hands were still warm; Mr. Lovelace went through the wheat field and found the club produced; there was still fresh blood upon it; James was not easily excited, but when angry was very violent.

John Waters, sworn—Live across the street from deceased; am well acquainted with the family; about ten minutes to four o'clock this morning George, son of deceased, came to my house and said James was killing 'd em all, and wanted me to come over; I hurried over; went to the house; asked Jessie where her father was; she said he had gone over to Culver's; then saw Jane with her head cut; they said James had struck them with a club; I went for Culver; he came with me, and when he saw the state of affairs he said to go for a doctor; before I went he had found Smith dead; I went for Dr. Howell; I never knew Smith and his son to quarrel; never noticed anything wrong with James.

W. A. Howell, M. D., Jarvis, sworn—Have examined the body of deceased, and found marks of violence on it; the body is well nourished an muscular; on examining the head I found a number of wounds; the bones of the skull were common steel, the wounds extending into the brain, and from the wounds portions of brain matter protruded from the whole skull, with contents being pounded to a pulp; the ears were lacerated, and death must have been instantaneous.

The verdict rendered was that the deceased, George Smith, came to his death by wounds inflicted by his son, James Smith, with a club through malice aforethought; and that the deceased, James Smith, committed suicide by hanging from a mow

CAUGHT ON THEIR OWN TRAP.

Clear Grit cards have been considerably exercised of late in recent exhibit in the FREE PRESS showing that the joint Revisions of the Voters' Lists in December, 1877 and July, 1878, resulted in a Liberal-Conservative gain of 371. And there is a certain amount of retributive justice in connection with the matter which is worth referring to. At the January revision last year the Grits did not put in an appearance. Some wonder was expressed at this, when it leaked out that they had received assurances from the truly "reform" Government of Ontario that an Act would be passed during the session which would give "reformers" a big number of "reform" offices by fixing up the Voters' Lists in a way to suit themselves. Hence they felt supremely indifferent to what was going on in December, and enjoyed a good laugh at the Conservatives who were putting themselves to so much unnecessary trouble before the Court. But the event has proved rather disappointing to these gentlemen, for the Court refused to reconsider any cases in July which had been adjudicated upon in December, it is possible that if the Grit legal representatives had been in Court in December the Conservative applications for names to be put on and struck off might not have been quite so successful. But walking in the light of their own wisdom, affecting a supercilliousness that is characteristic, they did not offer any opposition to the applications respecting the Voters' List then made. When the Court of Revision was re-opened in July, under the terms of the special Act kindly provided for their especial benefit by Mr. Mowat, it was supposed by the Grit wise-heads that they had nothing to do than lay their complaints in order to have them enquired into. The Court, however, had an answer to that had been decided upon in December could be re-opened, and hence the Conservative gains of December, 1877, amounting by good management to 371, objectionable ones struck-off to 174, stand good. Such an illustration of an "engineer hoist by his own Fetard" is rich, because if the "Reformers" had not rallied round the Fetarian Act which Mr. Mowat had promised them, it is likely that they would have done their business in a less long lasting manner. A strong attempt was made at the last sittings of the Court to "cut out of the trap set by them for others, but into which they had themselves fallen. But it proved abortive. The relative gains had and the losses sustained incident to the last revision balanced each other, leaving the episode of December a clear gain by the Conservatives of 174 votes. It may be confessed that such a result must be somewhat annoying to those that interest themselves in Grit affairs, but the general public will not grudge a quiet smile to the other side when they understand how readily the Grits dropped into the trap so cunningly set by themselves.

Germany is excited over her Parliamentary elections, which occur July 30. There are about 400 members of Parliament, who have always been divided into several parties. Thus at the last elections the National Liberals carried 28 per cent. of the districts, the Centre 25 per cent., the Conservatives 9 per cent., the Social Democrats 8 per cent.; the Imperial party 7 per cent., and there were several smaller parties. The Liberals have always supported his march, but now oppose the vast and expensive military establishment and also the restrictive anti-Socialist legislation. An effort will be made to secure a majority to sustain the Government without the Liberals, but it is not believed it will succeed. The Social Democrats will doubtless poll a larger vote than ever before, and it is likely that Bismarck will have to make concessions to the Liberals to retain their support or act without Parliamentary backing. But the election will be hotly contested, and some surprising results may be seen.

The tramp nuisance prevails in Wisconsin to such an extent that Gov. Smith has been in consultation with the railroad authorities to see how the scourge can be avoided or mitigated. Railroad trains are often taken possession of, and the engineers made to run them as the tramps direct, without any reference to way stations, time tables, or any other sort of regulation except the will of the tramps. Several cases of murder has appeared in some localities by the doomed, and are often seen in such force as to defy the legal authorities. Fifteen of them were recently re-aged up in the suburbs of Milwaukee at one haul, and safely lodged in jail. Their aversion to all kinds of work is proverbial, and the tramp question is getting to be a very serious and perplexing one, and its practical and satisfactory solution is as far off as ever.

HER MAJESTY'S INDIAN TROOPS.

While there is but one opinion in England, and one might even add, out of England, regarding the preponderating influence which this bold stroke of policy on the part of Beaconsfield gave him and his co-delegates in the late Congress, its wisdom in practice and its conformity to the principles of the constitution in theory, have become subjects of lively discussion. Whether the Government had or had not the right to order troops from India, to support the cause of the Empire in a purely European struggle without the sanction of Parliament, may be safely left to be decided by those whose duty it is to enlighten the Legislature on such questions. One thing, however, is certain, that when all looked upon war as inevitable, and the country was just about to enter upon a mighty contest with one of the first military powers in the world, the man who would hesitate about the legal interpretation that ought to be placed, or might be placed upon a doubtful question, involving nothing of vital interest, especially when he foresaw that the life and honor of the Empire were trembling in the balance, would have been utterly unfit for the office of First Minister of England at such a crisis, and a poor successor of the two Pitts, Canning, and Palmerston. While as a general rule, the practice of Parliament and the principles of the Constitution cannot be too carefully observed, yet all know that the fate of nations has often been turned upon the eagle glance to see, and the promptness, decision and fearless self-reliance to seize upon the one favorable moment in which to strike. Canada is not large enough to affect this step, and waited for a long, feeble debate, where timidity and political selfishness would have played no mean part, the stroke might never have fallen, and if it had fallen, it would have been deprived of half its effect. The man who, placed at his critical moment, fears to incur any responsibility a national emergency may impose upon him, is no war Minister for Great Britain, however gifted as a speaker, a financier or a statesman he may be. In this part of the case we are more inclined to the "Macedonian madman's" method of dealing with the Gordian knot, than to silly quibbling over the expression—"In what state was England at the time—peace or war."

Some of those who condemn the action of the English Minister for introducing Indian troops into European wars foresee great danger to the future Englishman rather than to the future of England. The London Spectator has taken a kind of lead in showing all the evils, and the extent to which these evils may go, from this rash step of Lord Beaconsfield. These fears so expressed have been handled in a masterly style by Mr. Greg in the June number of the Fortnightly, and his reasoning ought to be satisfactory to all who have read the article, and convince them that the dangers are more imaginary than real. We can do nothing more than merely indicate the evils to be dreaded on the one side, and the leading arguments urged on the other, why these evils are not by any means of a kind likely to affect the modern Englishman.

The objectors to Beaconsfield's policy, as respects the introduction of Indian soldiers into European wars, urge two reasons principally to support their views. First they say if the Indian troops are willing to fight, if they are found to fight well, and if, as we all know is the case, they can be had in numbers to which there is no limit but the ability of the Government to pay, feed and transport them, then this inexhaustible reserve will be drawn upon on every occasion when England becomes involved in war, and thus England would be brought to depend upon an army of mercenaries, the nation would lose its fighting capacity, and thus come to depend upon her purse for her victories, instead of her muscle, her indomitable pluck and personal bravery, as heretofore.

In the second place, these parties fear that Great Britain, having such a reserve of raw material, from which vast armies may be drawn at a comparatively small cost, the exercise of such unlimited power would react most injuriously upon the national character, and cause England to lose sight of justice as a unit in the family of nations, and in place of an arbitrator in the disputes of others, become a tyrant and a terror to the different States of Europe.

If these are the most serious dangers to be guarded against, the English people may very well contemplate the future without apprehension. At the present moment the English armies are filled up by voluntary enlistment, and it is safe to say that but very few indeed enter the ranks as common soldiers whose prospects at home are at all encouraging. What fighting is done is mainly done by those outside the wealthy ranks, and therefore so far as the change would affect "the purse-proud snobs" it would seem to matter but little, whether the food for powder be drawn from the teeming ranks of English or Irish farm laborers, or the still more plentiful supply which the East offers us. Mr. Greg very properly denies the term "mercenary" to the Indian troops. It is evident that he is to a large extent right. The inhabitants of the different sections of Britain's vast Indian Empire, though lately subdued and annexed, are still British subjects, their willingness to fight in the cause of their Empress and the people with whom they are united, shows loyal loyalty, and therefore being fellow citizens with the white regiments in the same army, they cannot be called mercenaries. Our Canadians, had the war gone on, would have offered their services to the Imperial Government and would likely have been gratefully received, and to have styled these "mercenaries" would have been a poor return for their loyalty and bravery. In fact, unless those who were fortunate enough to obtain commissions through family influence, or who were rich enough to purchase them, but few of the wealthier classes in Britain ever smelt powder in the field, and therefore how is it hardly necessary to add that the ladies had no further use for the electric light. In the yellow light of gas the dear creatures can make themselves appear charming, but in the clear white rays that shoot the moon-like globes wrinkles cast shadows, and even dimples turn black. It is not difficult to foreshadow the result of the struggle. Gas companies may go on with their extortions.

The co-operative mills and associations of England have both almost equally with other manufacturing interests the pressure of the times, and the workmen have learned thereby a useful lesson. Commenting upon this, the New York Times sensibly remarks:—"When a cooperative laborer finds that his oppression and the lowering of his wages come, not from the hard-hearted capitalist, but from his own brethren, and from the inevitable laws of trade and production, we may well believe that one of the best lessons of political economy has been taught him in the most effective of methods. The factory hand will learn that his wages are paid by the master, not from some unlimited and mysterious fund, but from the profits of the business, and that, when these are nothing, the manufacturer really borrows from the future to support his men."

THE RAILWAY ISSUE.

The Credit Valley Company seem to have dropped their high-handed attempt to take forcible possession of the crossing near Woodstock over the Great Western Railway, and to have done what they ought to have done at the first, and resorted to their legal remedies. There is no cause for the amount of feeling that has been displayed. As we understand the facts, the course of the Great Westerns has been consistent and justifiable throughout. That Company were assured by the Credit Valley Company that no attempt would be made to cross without the consent of the Great Western Railway Company or an order of the Court, and in the face of that assurance the lawless proceedings, reports of which have appeared in the papers, have taken place without the slightest warning to the Great Western Railway Company. The Great Western contended, as every proprietor of property has a right to contend, that they are entitled to compensation for the damages they will sustain by trains crossing their tracks upon the level. The amount of the compensation is still in dispute, and they object to allow a Company of the financial standing of the Credit Valley, to take possession of their property until the amount is not only ascertained, but actually paid. This is what any farmer would be allowed to insist upon, and why not a railway company, as the damages they are entitled to are infinitely greater?

When it is known that all the Great Western have been contending for is that the Credit Valley should construct a bridge crossing, so as to avoid the dangers inseparable from level crossings, the public will be inclined to applaud rather than to condemn them for the course they have taken, as it will, we have no doubt, soon come to pass that the country will, in the interest of the public, and probably at the public expense, insist upon every level crossing of one railway over another being removed and overhead crossings substituted.

The London correspondent of the New York Times confirms the general report that the British people are almost as much in cordially supporting Beaconsfield's diplomatic course. An unnatural hatred of Beaconsfield is, he says, the religion of Gladstone and his immediate followers. The patriotic members of the Liberal party are with the Government now more than ever, and English opinion, wherever it is expressed, rejoices at the prospect of standing face to face with Russia in Asiatic Turkey, and not waiting until the Cossacks of the Don flash their lances in the mountains of the East Indian frontier. At hotels, in cafes, in smoking rooms, at dinner parties, in the clubs, at St. Stephen's, on railways, and in omnibuses (and they are talking of Cyprus everywhere), there is one general expression of satisfaction that Turkey in Asia is to be taken care of, and that Constantinople and the Straits are also thus secured against Russian domination.

Mr. Marvin, who has been undergoing his trial for the larceny of the Anglo-Russian Progrès Monumental, turns out to be a lecturer on the art of memory. It appears from the evidence given by one of the proprietors of the London Globe that, when he wrote out the pretty full summary of the document in question, on the evening it was published in the paper, he had neither a copy nor notes. He wrote the whole summary, in its proper order, wholly from memory. Subsequently, in the course of the evidence, the fact, already mentioned, that he had given lectures on memory, was elicited. He is also a linguist of more than ordinary ability, having been engaged by the Globe and other newspapers to translate articles from the Russian journals. The wonder is, to find a gentleman of such accomplishments working for the comparatively low wages of ten pence an hour.

The latest invention is the "Bradley Promether," which is destined, its inventor says, to supersede steam as a motive power. It is being fitted into the steamer Bradley, a vessel intended to run from Atlantic City to Brigantine Beach. A trial trip is promised soon—just as soon as the new machinery for the application of the power is perfected. A few days ago the machinery was started on the boat, to keep it in working order. The gauge which should indicate the pressure was new and didn't work right. As a result, the power was generated so rapidly that the vessel was forced away, torn loose from her moorings, carrying part of the dock with her, and run into another vessel, almost sinking her.

An unwillingness on the part of the elder Disraeli to pay forty guineas, caused his son, the Earl of Beaconsfield, to become an attendant at Christian churches. The former belonged to the Portuguese synagogue of Bevis Marks, in London. He was chosen President of the synagogue, but declined to serve. The penalty for the declination was forty guineas. This he declined to pay, and withdrew from membership rather than comply. Being a free thinker and a Jew by race rather than religion, he immediately attended an Episcopal Church with his family. At his death a friend paid his fine, and he was buried in the Jewish cemetery.

There is a possibility of a dead-lock between the authorities of the State of South Carolina and those of the United States. It appears that some time ago a man was killed in this State by a United States' legal officer. The United States authorities claim that, as an official, he should be delivered up to them. Judge Kershaw, on the other hand, asserts the right of having the man tried in the State and county in which the fatal deed was committed. He does not recognize any exception from the prevalent rule. Lawyers, on both sides, are preparing statements of their respective cases, and it is uncertain which side will prevail.

Among the curiosities at the New York aquarium are two very beautiful fishes, called drum fishes, because of a peculiar musical sound made by them. Some weeks ago they were observed to chase each other through the water of the tank as if in play, and occasionally this musical sound, resembling the beating of a distant drum, was heard all over the building. A short, sudden turning of the body simultaneous with the production of the noise indicates some internal movement on the part of the fishes. The vibration made by the noise may be felt by placing a hand against the side of the tank.

An explanation of the reason for the excessive heat this season is attempted by Professor Langley of the Pittsburg Observatory, who says that the cause of the heat is that "the sun's face is at present free from spots almost beyond past remembrance. Next summer, he adds, the spots will begin to reappear, and will go on increasing in number and expanding in size until they reach their maximum in 1882 when they will again almost or quite disappear in 1890.

"Mount Washington is suffering a water famine. The hotel proprietors have to cart and water for the engines on the railway up to the hotels from the base. On Monday there was a perfect calm on the summit.

Scientific Gossip.

According to the recent experiments of A. Frisch, micrococci, bacteriæ, and bacilli, are not destroyed by a temperature of even 87.5° C., and that, therefore, no permanently disinfecting action can be produced by cold.

The sensitiveness of the microphone is said to have been brought into control by Mr. A. Haddon. By attaching a thin piece of elastic to the middle of the pointed graphite he makes the microphone receive sounds of any given intensity.

In the Mustagh range of the Himalayas there are two adjoining glaciers having a united length of 60 miles. Near these a third glacier 21 miles long and from one to two miles broad. The glaciers of the Alps are trifling in comparison.

The practice of filling up the holes of mill-stones with a mixture of lead and glycerine has resulted in producing serious cases of lead poisoning, and in some places in France, Norway and England. The French have prohibited the use of lead in that way.

Mr. Edison has invented a toy which he calls the phonometer. The vibrations produced by speaking into a cone terminated with a diaphragm communicate motion to a spring and pawl, which act in turning round a ratchet wheel on a shaft carrying a fly-wheel.

Remains of dolphins have been found imbedded in loam on the coast of the Bay of Christiana, Norway, three metres below the present surface, and 43 metres above the sea level. During the latest geological period the coast must have risen at least 43 metres, as all the surroundings of the fossils were recent.

The progress made in ocean steam navigation is far more surprising than most people are aware. At the present day fifteen times as much freight can be carried across the Atlantic in one-half the time, and at an expenditure of less than one and a half times as much fuel, as in 1840. This has been shown by a comparison of the data of recorded averages of the steamship Britannia in 1840, and of the steamship Britannic in 1877.

Wheat grains have a vitality which resists intense cold. A sample of the wheat left by the Polaris, in 1871, in 81 deg. 16 min. north latitude, and exposed to a temperature varying from that of summer to that of winter in that position for five years, was sown last year by Dr. Schaubergh, of the Botanic Gardens and Government Plantations, South Australia, and out of 300 grains 60 germinated and produced plants three and four feet high, with ears containing 30 grains each.

Two torpedo boats built for the British Admiralty by Yarrow & Co. have attained the speed of 21 miles an hour. They are each 85 feet long and 11 feet beam, and they draw three feet of water. The hulls are of steel, and the component surfaces combining engines are capable of indicating 420 horse power. The high pressure steam cylinder is 12.5 inches in diameter, the low pressure, 21.5, and each has a 12-inch stroke. One of the boats is fitted with a three-bladed screw, 5 feet 6 inches in diameter and 5 feet pitch, and the other with a two-bladed screw, of the same size and pitch.

The Guinard $2,000 prize has been awarded by the Belgian Academy to Dr. Melsens, who has discovered that iodide of potassium, administered in doses, at first small and then gradually increased, transform the insoluble compounds of mercury or lead in the human system into soluble compounds, which are then expelled from the body in the usual way. It is essential that the oxide administered be pure. This antidote will prove a boon of incalculable value to those engaged in trades which produce poisoning by lead or mercury. The French Institute has also given a Montyon prize to Dr. Melsens.

Rev. R. J. Whinnes, in a paper on the ethnology of the islands of the Pacific, regards the Melanesians as the original people. This black race had, he says, affiliations, more or less remote, with the Australians, the Papuans, Negritos, and they formerly extended further across the Pacific than they do now. The brown Malayo-Polynesian race, he finds, had doubtless entered Polynesia from the west. A third people, differing from the others are the Micronesians, who proceeded from the Philippines or some other part of the Indian Archipelago, and became mixed with Melanesian and Malayo-Polynesian blood.

Mr. Gorham has written a paper on complementary colors. The three primaries are green, red and blue. Yellow he sets down as a luxury compound of green and red. Yellow and blue when mixed form white. After looking at a green disk the eye evokes another color if the ceiling turns on a spindle by a gray surface. Grays can be formed by cancelling either reflected or transmitted rays of white light. The first of these cases may be illustrated by painting over white paper with a light wash of Indian ink, and the second by observing the effect produced in Faritin tales when the light and shades are obtained by varying the thickness of the ware.

A notable success has been attained in chemical synthesis by Prof. A. Bayer, of Munich. He has just announced the discovery of the final link in the synthetic reactions which result in the formation of indigo. Although his method does not seem to be available on account of its cost for manufacturing purposes as yet, still his achievement justly takes the lead of anything that has been accomplished in chemistry this year. Prof. Baeyer's method was hitherto the only coloring substance which man could produce like that contained in the plant. The process of preparing from coal tar the colors which could be had from madder was likewise the work of German chemists. It was discovered in 1868 by Frick, Graebe and Lobermann.

Dr. Favre, consulting physician of the Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean Railroad, has arrived at the conclusion that color blindness may arise from blows or wounds on the head, and the abuse of tobacco and spirits. He therefore recommends that the working staff of railroads should undergo a periodical examination to decide their competency. Three blows arises the question, how can it be determined when an employee is threatened with the loss of his right perception of color, inasmuch as color-blindness may come on suddenly. The plan suggested to obviate this is to attach to locomotives a frame containing pieces of red and green glass, with the color inscribed over them, through which the driver can look.

Great Flow of Beer.

Beer is drank pretty freely in all parts of Germany, but in Munich it literally supersedes water, and even the United States. Potatoes, washing dishes and making beer. As much beer as a person can drink can be had for ten pfennigs, or about 2 1-2 cents, cold and sparkling, and it is not to be wondered at that everybody rolies upon it. When good drinking water is so scarce, and if you put a bung-hole in it will cost you much money. A visit to the breweries, and beer gardens and tap-rooms of Munich would astonish the most inveterate beer-drinkers of Baltimore. It is sold at the breweries in mugs holding about as much as four ordinary glasses, and so great is the demand that of an evening when the spigot of a fresh barrel is turned it is never stopped until the barrel is empty. We have seen five barrels thus running at one time in a large establishment, the mugs being filled with remarkable dexterity. It is used in every family as a part of the daily food, young and old partaking of it with all the freedom that we use water. They contend that it is healthy and much less injurious than coffee, and that as few persons injure themselves by drinking to excess as others do by drinking too much coffee.—Balt. Cor.

The two Messrs. B., father and son, distinguished lawyers of Boston, are noted for quick temper and quick wit. They rarely meet without an amicable passage at arms. Last week young S. was making a call at the paternal mansion, when a cur of his father's attacked him, and received a kick which sent him howling down the staircase. The noise brought out the old man from his lair, and the following colloquy ensued: S. Senior—"What did you kick my dog for?" S. Junior—"He bit me." S. Senior—"He didn't bite you." S. Junior—"I didn't kick him."

Wood peeling—that is, stripping the bark off oak and larch—is a business in Scotland. Between May and July some 2,000 men, women, and children, chiefly Irish, have been employed at this. The wages, which in the last ten years have been more than doubled, range from 80 cents to $1 for men; to 25 to 30 cents to children, but large importations from abroad have diminished the price of bark 20 to 25 per cent.

The grasshoppers have appeared in Central America. Latest advices from Honduras state that crops have entirely disappeared in a day, and the scarcely populated localities are entirely at their mercy.

certain remedy for pain, in a wider range of cases, and more speedy in its action, than any other known remedy. It is the only preparation we have to say of what no other manufacturer will have to say of his preparation, viz.—It absolutely will not cure everything from a corn on the toe to a diseased lung. It needs no flighty or agerated puffing, being one of the few things which sell on their own merits. Sold by C. McCallum.

The Modern Farmer.

The pipe of steam all in the stubble-field,
Let us be set of the snow-queen fire;
And all day long the whistle and the shriek
Of the reapers so far away.

The restless racket and the grain,
The noise of the reaping machine,
And over again the howl of pain
Comes over the maidens green.

Oh, sweet is the field where the meadow-lark flits
When songs are to warm and clover,
When the trimmer sits, and yells as he gits
His beard among the knives.

No longer we lear, on the hillside sere,
The scythe stone's clinkett-clink,
But the reaping machine o'ts his leg off, I ween,
Before ever his man can think.

With foreboding and fears his good wife hears
The team of the house say good-by
A return, in month, with a brown rake tooth
Missing four inches out of his eye.

When the Dressmer come in, with hallow and sin,
How burdened with sorrow the land!
When they pause to wash what is left of the nose,
Channel up in six eight-horse power.

Oh, little and listen! From over the hills
Wind come for the darkey hoer!
'Tis the choker who fell, and awful to tell,
The demi-harrow ran over his legs.

Thus all day long, with mirth and song,
They laugh at the dread alarms;
Though the waving field shall its harvest yield
Of fingers and legs and arms.

Then pity the sorrows of a poor old Granger,
Whose mangled limbs have borne him to the tomb;
Who heaved, with reckless courage, untold
dangs,
An I run his farm with modern implements to.

JET:

OR,

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

"If you only knew how I like cold winds, papa!"

Papa: Double in a moment has become assurance, to be quickly followed by faith, hope, I know not what other train of pleasureable exactions, in the stranger's mind.

"Mistral cannot be worse than east wind, and at Daiford we always have that from February to June—yes, and go out in it every day of our lives."

"You are not sufficiently protected against those climates, Jet. You know nothing about the pernicious effects of mistral or sunset. Now if, instead of buying so many new bonnets in Paris—"

"Hats, papa. I have never yet worn a bonnet except to church——"

"You had provided yourself with a sensible furred cloak like mine, it would be different."

"But I have got a thick tweed jacket," persists Jet, "if you will let me go out only for half an hour. I promise to put on my tweed jacket."

Mr. Conyngham sips his barley-water and looks as though he heard not. Anxiety about other people's health can scarcely be considered one of his foibles; neither can he be held an over-nervous parent. During Jet's nineteen years of life, he has probably not spent as many months in the girl's company. Wrapped in his furred cloak, he simply looks at her as though through a pair of smoke-colored spectacles, breathes the breath of the south of a refrigerator, and feels it a kind of personal injury when the young and robust refuse to do the same.

I see a baker's shop within a hundred yards of the hotel," remarks Jet, presently; "and I do not think I ever felt so hungry before; and dinner will not be served for another three hours."

At this affecting appeal, or rather series of appeals, Mr. Conyngham shakes his head gravely.

"There is no worse habit than that of eating between meals, he remarks. "It is sufficient in itself to lay the foundation of almost every disorder. Hungry in three o'clock! And we had a tolerable, really very tolerable, breakfast at noon."

"As far as quality goes, the breakfast may have been unimpeachable," says Jet "but you must remember, papa, that we have to solid English food. The most substantial thing I ever tasted in my life was dinner dishes to-day was a cock-robin in a paper shirt."

"Blessaines, my love—blessaines, and very fairly dressed, too, for a provincial inn."

But blessaines are not sustaining, papa, you must allow me. Now, if I could get a bun—I suppose they make buns in France?—or a roll, just to carry me on to dinner."

"Take a little barley-water, my dear. It is surprising what nutritive qualities barley-water possesses. Let me desire Peregino to bring you a glass."

"I thank you, papa. Aunt Gwendoline made me drink barley-water once when I had whooping-cough. No, Peregino, I will be enough for the remainder of my life."

Mr. Conyngham shuts his eyes, and, leaning back in his chair, puts on an attitude of sleep. With such perfect taste and gumsuits up to the present time have been based on sinful considerations, and reference if this matter of braving mistral and sunset could be shown to affect other interests than her own?

"We have no grapes for to-morrow; I have just remembered it! And Mrs. Desmond expressly said you should not be without grapes for the whole week. How stupid I must have been not to think of the state of the commissariat sooner!"

"Eh—how?" cries Mr. Conyngham, his faculties awakened on the instant "No grapes? Oh, this will never do, papa, no!—I must trouble you, my dear Jet, to ring for Peregino at once."

"Peregino has gone out," says Jet, promptly. "Don't you remember? We sent him to the station to telegraph to book a couple. I saw Peregino pass down the street not three minutes since."

"If I had my poor Paolo!" murmurs Mr. Conyngham, sinking back. "Those unhappy, those cruelly overlights never occurred in Paolo's time."

"Put a Scotsmarket is quite close at hand," urges Jet. "I remember passing one last night on our way from the gare. If you would only let me—"

"Put on your wraps, put on your warmest wraps, and stay," replies Mr. Conyngham, in an injured voice. "The wind has somewhat abated; half an hour's sharp walking may possibly do you good. Ask remember that the Cotean-Brûlé grapes—those long canes of purple and gold, 'raisin de Cotean-Brûlé'—are the best. If the skins show signs of dryness, so much the better. I know, on respectable medical authority, that the Cotean-Brûlé grapes are well-skinned after the process of shrivelling has set in."

Jet said, as you may believe, for no second permission. Her eyes, her face, her whole figure, illumined with thankfulness at being free (although the freedom shall last but the space of a single half-hour), she dances away like a flash of lightning across the polished floor of the salon; away in her own room on the second floor; then forth, without a respirator, blue spectacles or fur, into the bustle, glare, and dust, of Avignon city.

Mr. Conyngham, sipping his barley-water; the stranger, meditating how he shall best renew his acquaintance with the father of forty thousand pounds—already Jet a pigeon-holed as "forty thousand pounds" in his thoughts—remain alone.

A baker's shop and the fruit-market lie within a stone's throw of the Hotel l'Univers.

"Tenez, ma petite demoiselle, tenez—le beau panier pour trente sous," says the dive-cheeked, classic featured dame de la halle, as Jet stands waiting for her grapes. "Cinq livres de raisin, bon raisin de Cotean Brûlé pour un rien!"

Can any one say it is a bad country to live in where the sun is hot enough to give you sunstroke in November, and you may buy five pounds of nectar-sweet grapes for fifteen pence?

Her marketing accomplished, Jet Conyngham pursues her way briskly along the quai de Rhône, the fruit-basket slung upon her arm, a fresh-looking goddess of sour bread in her hand. The blood stirs in her veins as we breathe in mingry Devonshire has ever stirred it. She feels it a subtle kind of excitement merely to breathe—feels as though a ten-mile walk before dinner would just serve to rest, not exhaust, her desire for quick movement, bright sunshine, cold and sparkling atmosphere, that is in her.

The mistral's blinding glare, the mistral's blinding dust, are miseries thrown away like meat of life's miseries upon us. She has got one half-hour's freedom in which to explore the Isles of Avignon—the broken bridge, the Palace of the Popes, Laura's tomb—and determines to make the most of it.

One half-hour! And the sun, when she started, was already slanting across the tall roofs of the hotel; and, in these regions, night, like winter, overtakes you at a bound. Well, in small things, as in great ones, the possibility of mischance seldom finds a place in Jet Conyngham's anticipations; she flies past the broken bridge; she glances up at the Palace of the Popes; on her homeward road, at the instance of a franc-seeking sacristan, is persuaded to visit a church, mediæval, incense-flavored, garlic-haunted, in quest of Laura's tomb. Two minutes later—emerging into an unknown street, and by an opposite door to that through which she entered—the girl finds herself benighted.

"The sun's run days, the stars rush out—
At one stride comes the dark."

Jet has, literally, to rub her eyes and gaze about her ere she can believe in the reality of this sudden dark. Alas! the sharp increase of cold; the hush that, with the sun's departure, has fallen like a cloak upon the city; lastly, the fact that the old sacristan is lighting a lantern, as he locks the chancel-gates behind him, confirm it only too forcibly.

This sacristan, carrying his church keys in one hand, a villanous little oil-lamp in the other, would seem to be the soldiers' link left between her and the living world—her one uncertain chance of getting back from mediæval shades to lighted shop-windows, paved streets, and the Hôtel de l'Univers, to-night.

And she follows him.

Never was will-o'-the-wisp a more fatal guide. Down one narrow alley, up another, glimmers the lantern, clink the keys. At length, in a kind of cul-de-sac, narrower and darker than the rest, overhanging roofs and upper stories shutting out all but one narrow strip of sky overhead, the sacristan—keys, lantern, and all—disappears as suddenly as a figure in a Christmas pantomime. There is a momentary crash, as of a porte-cochère swinging heavily on its hinges, a crash echoed and re-echoed down the length of the whole row of houses, and Jet, alone, guideless, trembling, is left to realize her desolation.

She looks fearfully about her; she thinks of her father; she thinks of Mark—for the first time in her life she wishes Mark Anderson were at her side. By-and-by comes the sound of sleepy, slatternly, loud dames crooned with New York merchants, who had come to watch the developments in the case. The creditors were led by two well-known Broadway merchants, who had by the bankruptcy of Wilson & Greig, some $60,000. Those gentlemen believed that there was something very wrong in the way in which the business of Wilson & Greig was conducted, and they think that their bankruptcy was mainly owing to a series of frauds which, in the course of time, each of which they suspect that more persons were parties than the three clerks under trial. These creditors are now acting in concert with Captain Byrnes, of the Fifteenth Precinct, who unearthed the doings of Phillips, Hines, and Hendrickson. They petitioned the Court to have all further hearing in the case postponed until Friday afternoon next, the 30th instant, at 3 o'clock, promising to present to the Court some startling developments. Justice Smith granted the motion.

At this point a young and beautiful girl made her appearance upon the scene, and requested an interview with the Justice. She is tall and slender, of very delicate and refined appearance, with coal-black hair, dark, bright eyes, and blonde hair. She said her name was Mary Emma Towey, and that she wished to identify Mr. Samuel Wilson, and make a complaint against him for attempts to poison her. Her story was substantially as follows:—Lady Seagrave, a noble maiden lady, living near Howth, County Dublin, Ireland, owned large estates there and in Derbyshire, England. She never married, and became quite as the grey old. Her sister married a land-owner named Hughes. Mrs. Hughes bore a daughter named Sarah. Lady Seagrave became attached to Sarah, and promised to make her sole heiress if her parents would consent. They did so. Sarah was educated carefully, and grew up with a just right to great expectations. When nearly of age she fell in love with a man much below her in rank. Her aunt forbade her to follow her inclination; she persisted in meeting her lover, and engaged herself to him in marriage. This so incensed Lady Seagrave that she disowned Sarah, disherited her, and sent her away. Disheartened, she left Ireland and came to this country. Here she married Towey, and again took the name of Lady Seagrave. Mrs. Hughes,

PERSONAL.—Mr. W. K. Muir, of the Canada Southern Railway, is in the city.

FOOT RACE.—Messrs. H. Martin and H. Wallace, both of this city, will run a foot-race in the Tecumseh Park between two and three o'clock this (Friday) afternoon, for $25 a side.

SPRAINED HIS ANKLE.— Conductor Charley McArthur, on alighting from the D., G. & R. B. train on Wednesday evening, happened to step on something and sprained one of his ankles. He was conveyed home in a cab, but will soon be around again.

UNION PICNIC.—The Sunday Schools of the Canada Methodist Churches of Chatham held a union picnic at Port Stanley on Wednesday. There were about 750 persons present, and a very pleasant time was spent.

ARCHIVE LANGUAGE CASE.—Before Squire Peters on Monday morning last Samuel William Tanner charged Hannah Holbrook well with using abusive and insulting language towards him in the Township of Westminster a few days since. The case was dismissed without costs. Wm. Tanner and J. A. Macdonald were then charged before Squires Peters and Gregory with wilfully damaging Hannah Bothwell's bonnet. The charge was sustained, and the defendants were fined $1 each.

CHANGED ITS NAME.—The Red Ribbon Club, of Petersville, has changed its name to that of the Petersville Temperance Reform Club. At the same meeting, the following officers were elected:—D. C. Macdonald, President; John Simpson, 1st Vice-President; Peter Grant, 2nd Vice-President; E. Hardy, Treasurer; Thomas Morrison, Secretary; Wesley Morden, Assistant Secretary; Charles Gillespie, Wm. Pudney and Stephen Lowe, Directors; Edward Edwards, Chaplain.

EASTLAKE VS. WESTLAKE.—The issue raised by Mr. Eastlake, whether Mr. Westlake is or is not a qualified voter, is no doubt a very grave one to the parties especially concerned. Westlake says that he is a qualified voter, and Eastlake says quite that he is not, and in a letter to this paper quotes the best part of an Act of Parliament to prove his position. Still, Messrs. Eastlake and Westlake will please excuse us if we fail to devote any more space to the momentous issue. If Westlake can vote let him do so; if he can't he can stay at home, or—go fishing.

SENT BACK.—The man named Burke, and family, who have been dependent upon the city for six months past, owing to the illness of Burke, and whose family were refused to assist by a grant of money on Monday night last, have been provided with tickets, and have gone to Ireland. The Mayor, Ald. Powell and others took hold of the matter, and on Wednesday succeeded in raising sufficient funds to supplement the $61 given by the Irish Benevolent Society. The man has been unable to work ever since he came here, and his friends in Ireland are willing to look after him and his family.

POLICE COURT PENCILLINGS.—At this Court yesterday, the P.M. presiding, Jane Pratt was charged by Sarah Bonney with being drunk and disorderly on the street, and with cursing and swearing. In default $1 and $3 costs she was locked up. She will also wot down for 21 days. H. S. Murray and T. J. McDonough each fined $1.50 for allowing goods to remain on the sidewalk longer than the by-law permits. Sarah Bonney, a young woman of unsound mind, was committed to jail for examination. Mrs. Fowers and Mrs. Clarke were charged by Constable Lucas, of the G. W. R., with stealing lumber from the L. and P. S. B. Bridge. They were convicted and sentenced to one week's imprisonment at hard labor.

IGNITIED.—Sometime since, a youth named William Sullivan was convicted of burglariously entering the house of Mr. Logan, on Queen's avenue, and stealing some trifling article therefrom. He was sentenced to three years in Kingston Penitentiary. It was known at the time that he had an accomplice, and that person was supposed to be a chum of his named John Stacey, although until yesterday afternoon, no definite information of him could be obtained. Two youths who saw Stacey in the vicinity on the night of the robbery pointed him out as the accomplice, and he will be examined upon the charge in due time. Stacey is an old jail bird, and has been down two or three times for larceny.

CONSUMPTION CURED.—An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure for consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and using, in German, French or English. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. BEHRAS, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N.Y.

WATERWORKS WASTE.—The energetic contractors, Messrs. Rowell, Turner & Burns, are pushing the construction of the waterworks with commendable vim and vigor. At present 400 men are employed, and a good idea of the magnitude of the undertaking may be gathered from the pay list, which footed up last Saturday night over $2,500. Pipes are being laid on several streets, and extra gangs will be put on as soon as the large pipes arrive from Scotland. They are expected here every day. For some time considerable trouble was experienced in laying the pipes across Carling's Creek, on Colborne and Maitland streets, but that difficulty was finally surmounted, and everything is working as smoothly as possible. Many miles of piping have been laid, and appearances indicate that the contractors will complete the undertaking within the prescribed time.

Windsor Items.

Windsor doctors report business very good just at present.

James Fisher, William McLane, Edward O'Baldwin and Edward Burrows, young men from Detroit, were sent to jail for 40 days each by Justice Bartlett yesterday for breaking into a car to steal a ride.

Mrs. Green was this morning fined $7, or 20 days, by Justice Bartlett for calling Mrs. Lemaine two filthy names. Both the women are colored. The court-room was crowded with colored people and a few whites, who enjoyed the dirty testimony intensely.

A poor old man, suffering with acne, arrived in Windsor from Chatham on Monday. He had no money, and was taken in by a charitable citizen. Yesterday application was made to the authorities for help, but it was refused. "Well, doctor, can't you send him up some medicine?" "No, I can't do it," said the kind-hearted official. Then he added, with an exquisite stroke of humor, "If he dies, though, we'll give you a rough box for him."

Foolish girls who appear on the public streets every night are known as "pavers." Many of them behave somewhat like the "universal" without obligation.—Rochester Express. And afterwards "bursal" in that "devouring element" so much prized and which "licked with demon-like fury" about some old bedstead in a recent conflagration.

How discouraging the laws of nature are! We sometimes feel as though they were conspiring against us for sport, or a frolic. Just buy a new silk hat and go out for a promenade on a cloudless day and see how matters will sport with you. She will entice you miles away from any shelter, and then stealthily drag up a great black cloud from the horizon. You have no umbrella, and therein lies the joke. With long strides you make the homestretch, thinking of the five dollars which you thought you safely invested, but which proves to be a vain speculation, over the trees you see the rain drops fall, but hope fills your heart and you quicken your pace. At last despair seizes you, for the rain travels faster than you can. Patter, patter, it falls on your new tile until it looks as though you had parboiled it at some pawnshop, and then, when it is completely spoiled, the sun comes out to look and laugh at your plight. Nature may be our mother and all that, but there are times when instead of a kind and wayward matron it seems as though she was out on a mischief-making lark, and doing serious matter to get her into this mood than a new hat.

Accidents at the Port Yesterday.

The pleasure of yesterday's excursion at Port Stanley was slightly marred by a number of unfortunate accidents. The first happened in the morning to Miss Wing, of Chatham, while proceeding in the train towards the Port. She was standing on the steps of the car, and not noticing her proximity to a station platform, had her foot caught and badly crushed, requiring medical assistance on her arrival. The next occurred to Master Henry Mast, of this city, who while playing upon the "merry go round," was accidently pushed off by a playmate, and falling violently to the ground, fractured his arm between the wrist and elbow. A surgeon was promptly on hand and set the broken bone. Shortly afterwards, a little son of Mr. R. O'Moore, of Chatham, while running down the steep towards the pier, was thrown to the ground by a switch engine, and fell a considerable distance by Mr. Gunne, running down the steep about the body, and causing the blood to gush from his nose and ears. He was also attended by a medical gentleman, and was able to proceed home with the excursionists in the evening.

THE NEW PLEASURE BOAT.

Launch of the "Forest City" Yesterday.

Her Dimensions, Tonnage, Accommodation, etc.

Yesterday afternoon, at a quarter to three o'clock, the new steamer, which has been on the stocks at the foot of Carling street for the past month, was launched in the presence of a large number of people, who were attracted to the scene by the novelty of the occurrence. From the remarks which escaped the lips of a majority of the bystanders, it is safe to say that many of them formed very favorable opinions of the craft as a proceeding for the first time, and once the boat left the "ways" the larger number openly forwarded their hearty, thoroughly satisfied that ingenuity, combined with experience, can overcome many obstacles, and make the previously apparent insurmountable. The craft took the "slide" easily, and glided off like a thing of life. But those who had charge of the arrangements had omitted to remove the lumbermen in the river upon which the "stays" rested, and the keel of the boat "grounded" solidly upon them, and for some time baffled the best posted mariners in their efforts to get her off. Enough, however, after an hour's hard work, the "Forest City" was drawn round low first into the stream, and then towed to the new slip erected for her at the foot of Dundas street, where for the next ten days she will lay, while the machinery is being placed in her. The new boat is a Mississippi model bottom, and is intended to be run as a passenger steamer between the city and the Water-works Property during the summer months. Her dimensions are:—Length of keel, 90 feet; breadth of beam, 15 feet 4 inches; breadth of deck, 24 feet 6 inches; length of deck, 107 feet; depth of hold, 4 feet; tonnage (carpenters' measurement), 40 tons; Government register, 20 tons; draught, 15 inches. She will be run by two engines, having a capacity of 35 horse-power. The boiler will be of the locomotive pattern, 12 by 4½ feet, containing 150 iron flues, 7 feet 6 inches long, and of 2 inches diameter. Her wheels will be 12 feet in diameter, with 4 feet buckets, driven by a shaft 24 inches in length by 5 inches in diameter. Her carrying capacity is estimated at from 200 to 250 passengers. She will have a full-width promenade deck and a light portable awning above that. Additions, it is said, will be built on the lower deck, neatly finished, for the accommodation of ladies and children, and the boat will be seated with portable seats, which can be used as life preservers in an emergency or laid aside when not wanted. When completed, and it is confidently expected she will be ready for running about the 5th prox., the name "Forest City" will be given her by Misses Wilkinson, Wadie and Carling. The intention is to make hourly trips between the Combe Springs and the city, although at first, of course, she could be made shorter excursions necessitate it. The property is to be given over to the Corporation at the end of the season, and will afford our citizens a pleasant method of spending the afternoon. The scenery along the river is not surpassed in Ontario, and the spot cannot fail in proving to be a favorite resort for holiday seekers. The enterprise of the proprietors, in spending not less than $4,000 on their undertaking, should meet with the hearty sympathy and liberal patronage of the citizens of London.

Opium Farming in Africa.

Fifty Thousand Acres of Poppies—A Disreputable Industry Set on Foot.

Fifty thousand acres of hitherto uncultivated land in Mozambique, a considerable Portuguese colony in Africa, has been leased to a joint-stock company, whose capital is said to be $600,000, for the purpose of growing the poppy plant, the product of it, and obtaining vast profits by its sale. For this purpose several of the natives have been largely imported from Malawah, in Hindostan, where the best opium is grown, as the climate is required in a rich and sorel soeding. The company, largely consisting of English and Anglo-Indian capitalists, has also obtained the exclusive right for twelve years to export opium free of duty through all the custom-houses of the Province of Mozambique. Considering the evils which the use and abuse of opium have caused in Asia, particularly in China, and the Anglo-Indian traders smuggled large quantities, the declaration from Mozambique, "it is satisfactory to learn that the poppy plants are thriving, and the fruits are reported to be largely developed in the best opium districts of India," sounds rather roughly on the ear of humanity.

The Anglo-Indian Government ought to be held responsible for the sin caused by the production of opium for consumption in China, the Burman Empire, and Indian ports in the straits of Malacca. In the banks of the Ganges is one district, 12,000 square miles in extent, where the poppy is exclusively cultivated. Its growth is also encouraged in the more northern parts of Hindostan. The plant is sold to the officers of the Indian Government at a fixed price, is manufactured under the strictest surveillance at the Queen's factories at Patna and Ghazipore, and thence sent to Calcutta, where it is sold to the merchants, who smuggle it, wholesale, into China. About 50,000 chests of this pernicious drug, intoxicating, drug are annually produced in India. Of these 30,000 consumes 60,000, and the tai thereon brings about $50,000,000 per annum into the Treasury of British India. In 1870, the Chinese Government demanded the surrender of all the opium then in the factories and godowns, and all the chests, then worth about $5,000,000. The result was a desultory war, which ended in the cession of Hong Kong and other ports, the transfer of the island of Hong Kong, the payment of $30,000,000 as indemnity to the English, and the silent connivance through the Indian Government at the opium trade. It is a matter of severe reproach to the Indian Government that, even to add $50,000,000 per annum to its revenue, the manufacture and sale of opium should be carried on by its officers.

Canadian Telegrams.

HON. JOHN SIMCOE SAUNDERS, President of the Legislative Council of New Brunswick, died at Fredericton yesterday morning.

THE traffic receipts of the Grand Trunk for the week ending this inst., were $145,-791, a decrease from the corresponding week of 1877, of $23,284.

THE Lincoln Election case proceeded yesterday. Mr. Rykert now has a majority of 8.

THE FIRE RECORD.

Douglas, Ont., July 25.—Bush fires are very bad here. The village is surrounded by fire. Considerable damage has been done two miles north of here. Thos. Martin losing his sheds, barns and stables. The fire is still raging.

St. Catharines, Ont., July 25.—Early this morning the barn of Mr. James Bishop's on the Thorold Road, together with its contents, including a valuable lumber pile, was destroyed by fire. A driving shed was partly destroyed, and a soap factory and residence adjoining had a narrow escape. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

WOODSTOCK.

CONCEALMENT OF BIRTH.

Per Dominion Line.

Woodstock, July 25.—The excitement over the fact that a young child had been secretly concealed in the rear premises of the Bank of Commerce here, and that a servant girl, about twenty-eight years old, named Mary Wilson, in the employ of Mr. Dewar, bank manager, who was supposed to be the mother of the child, was lying dangerously ill. A post mortem examination was at once held, and the coroner came to the conclusion that the child had been born alive. A jury was empannelled who last evening and this evening have been investigating about the matter.

BASE BALL NOTES.

On Tuesday—Rovers, 13; Elms, 8.

J. Lynch has been dropped from the Pittsfield nine.

Crane has been appointed Captain of the Rochesters.

Dickey Pearce, the famous short stop, is umpiring in Boston.

The Maple Leaves defeated the Buckeyes yesterday morning by 13 to 9.

The Tecumsehs and New Bedfords play a game here to-morrow afternoon.

Dixon, formerly of the Hornells, is playing with the Manchesterson Irial.

The Hounding Rocks got a forfeit game from the Shamrocks yesterday by 9 to 0.

It is rumored that Caskin is to catch and that Sullivan is to pitch for the Utica nine next year.

Jim White lost the last game between the Cincinnatis and Bostons by a wild throw to second.

The Guelph Fatties defeated the Hamilton Skedeoos at the latter place, the other day by 34 to 17.

The Bankers and Lawyers game announced for yesterday afternoon was postponed owing to the rain.

A Western club has a player named Buckwheat. We are creditably informed that he makes an excellent batter.

The "Wonder" Goldsmith—Reel, Goldsmith is 6 feet in height, and weighs at present 190 lbs. At the beginning of the season he weighed 208 lbs.

It is stated that the Rochesters purposely allowed the Stars to beat them in their last game, in order to help the Twinklers in the championship race.

The Syracuse Stars have so far (not counting yesterday's game) played 53 games, of which they have won 38; lost by play, 13; lost by forfeit, 1; tie, 1.

It is said that Crane and Tobin are to play with the Lowells next season, and that the Lowells will enter the league. No engagements have been entered into, but there is an understanding to that effect.

The Rochesters have only five more championship games to play, as follows:—Two with the Springfields, two with the Utican and one with the Stars. They have won eighteen and lost sixteen and stand a good chance for the championship.

The Springfields are at present on their Western trip. They play as follows:—27th and 29th, Rochesters; 30th and 31st, Tecumsehs, of London; Aug. 1st, Buffalos; 2nd and 5th, Forest Cityes, of Cleveland; 3rd, Forest Cityes; 6th, Hornells; 7th and 8th, Buffalos; 9th and 10th, Hornellsville; 12th, Stars, of Syracuse; 13th, Uticas; 14th, Albanys; 15th, Manchesters, at Springfield; 17th, Lowells, at Springfield.

The Cleveland Leader says the game between the Tecumsehs and Forest Cityes the other day was "the finest they (the F. Cs.) have played since their defeat of the Chicagos. Great heavens, if such games please the Clevelanders they must be indeed easily satisfied. Why, if Goldsmith had been pitching, the probability is the F. Cs. would not have had a base hit to their credit, far less a run."

The Springfields didn't play the Pittsfields on Monday last, and the game was given to the latter by 9 to 0. The cause of their absence is accounted for by their failure to pay the Pittsfields their guarantee in the game played at Springfield the previous week, and fearing that the Pittsfields would retaliate by withholding the amount in Monday's game. If subscriptions are not made speedily, the Pittsfield Club will be disbanded.

A POET POEM

The boy stood upnasty on the lane—
Already two were only—
The grin that lightened up his face
Shone round about his ears.

The boy he raised the ash skirt
And called for one big bit;
The pitcher put it in real hot—
It had an awful fit.

Again the gallant stood up,
Determined he would not
The torture of the stomach—
He yearned in vain for more.

The Hartford Club manager received his notification of expulsion at Troy, and on Saturday disbanded his team. Many of the players, including Barnie and West, Mr. Hugh Jackson, whose team was to play here this afternoon with the Tecumsehs, but cancelled the game on receiving word, in fact, the money due there was all paid up to date, and the Club, he considers he has been unjustly treated.

The Rochester Express says.—The experiment of an International pennant now lies between the Stars, Buffalos and Tecumsehs, with the chances strongly in favor of the first named, although both the others lead them in the number of games won. This is because they have yet thirteen games to play, of which they will undoubtedly win eight or ten, at least. The Tecumsehs have only six to play, of which we imagine, they will win at least four or five. The Buffalos have only five to play of which, the chances are, they will only win about three. The Stars have already won nineteen or twenty games, and the probabilities are, therefore, that when they have played all their games they will have twenty-eight or thirty credited to them. The Tecumsehs have now won twenty-one games, and have still six more to play, the chances are 4 against them. The Buffalos have won twenty-two games, and they will therefore have to win every game is very unlikely thing to keep even with the Stars. We are thankful if the Rochesters keep a respectable place in the race.

...Young mother, deeply interested in a novel, but preserving some idea of her duties as a mother, to her eldest born: Henrietta, where is your little sister? Henrietta (from the next room): Why, mother, turning over page: Go and see what she's doing and tell her to stop it this minute.

BY SPECIAL TELEGRAPH FROM OUR OWN REPORTER.

Ingersoll, July 26.

The attendance at the Town Hall this evening was very light, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. G. W. Ross' name was very extensively billed. Indeed, some people say that this was the cause of the meagre attendance, and that if it had been generally known that Mr. Gibson was to reply, the town hall would have been crowded to overflowing. At 8.00 the platform was filled, and the meeting was called to order, and after the usual preliminary addresses of welcome and congratulation amongst the leaders of the Reform Club, who were running about and whispering together. At 8.10 the hall was a little over half-full, and as the platform still remained deserted, the impatience of the audience became more frequently manifested itself. Mr. Gibson was in attendance from before eight o'clock, but as the meeting had been called by the Reform Club, he awaited the arrival of his opponents. At length, at 8.15 o'clock, Mr. Ross put in his appearance, accompanied by Mr. Noxon, and was received with a little applause. He was followed in a few minutes by Mr. Gibson, who was received with long and continued applause.

Mr. Noxon took the chair, being the only occupant of the platform, except the two candidates and Col. Skinner. Amongst those in the audience were:—Reform—Jno. Markham, James Lawson, Dereham; Col. Skinner, James Brady, D. M. Robertson. Opposition—Mr. Gibson, Dr. Walker, A. McKellar, North Oxford; Wood, of Woodstock; Walsh, Daly, Dongster, Daly, etc.

The chairman explained the object of the meeting, which was to enable the two candidates to discuss political affairs. He introduced Mr. Ross.

Mr. G. W. Ross, who was received with cheers, said that it was with no ordinary feelings that he appeared before the invitation of the Liberal club to discuss the political questions of the day. He was pleased to see that the young men of the sales of politics were taking an interest in politics. He thought it looked well for the country that there should be an intelligent electorate. Instead of treating of general questions he would confine himself more specially to financial matters. He thought, perhaps, as a private member, he was in a somewhat going out of his path in bringing up this subject. In England the financial statement of the Government was rarely discussed, but here, owing to various circumstances, the statements of those who had to administer the public funds were more closely scrutinized. He would endeavor, in discussing this question, to be as impartial as possible. And he referred to the expenditure of the present Government since they came into power, and would frequently contrast their expenditure with those of their predecessors, and for the present standing Sir John Macdonald as the leader of the Government. He admitted that the public debt had been increased by the present Government over twenty-two millions of dollars. Was this increase unjustifiable? He maintained it was. Of the twenty-eight millions that were expended by the present Government on public works, only some $60,000 was expended on new works. So it was with other works. The former Government had commenced the construction of certain works, such as canals and railways, which were admitted to be for the public good, but and those had to be completed; and therefore it was not fair that the present Government should be charged with the responsibility of the increased debt. Another charge brought was that in the management of our finances we had largely increased the number of our officials. He admitted it; but if we are not responsible for the debt we cannot be held responsible for the increase. The Mackenzie

The London Free Press

A LARGE MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Mileight Telegraphic Dispatches, is issued every morning. It is the only paper enjoying the earliest information published west of Toronto, anticipating the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 2 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in its columns twelve hours ahead of the contemporary evening press. Its circulation and influence are constantly advancing. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, outstripping other journals in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 1 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly, $1.50 in advance; delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or POSTED FREE OF CHARGE to distant places at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, BUSINESSES WANTED; Articles LOST or FOUND; HOUSES to LET or SOLD, &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for three insertions each week; and 60 cents per month. Births, Marriages and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted a NONPARIEL at the rate of two cents per line (measuring measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising space by the year at a liberal rate, a copy of which can be had on application at the business office.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries.

The Weekly Free Press

IS A MAMMOTH SHEET, containing 64 columns of matter, and enjoys a large and influential circulation among the best classes. It is a Western, not a Toronto paper, in politics and favorably with the sheets published elsewhere. Its compilation is made with great care. It contains the cream of the news of the week from all parts of the world, with full commercial information, and is thoroughly independent in politics. Its value to all family readers "is best appreciated by the subscribers of the Worklike," and is well worthy of the commendation.

PRICE $1.00 per annum, postage free, including premium picture.

The Evening Free Press

IS ISSUED at 4 o'clock p.m., and contains not only the matter found in the morning edition, but additional cable despatches and other local intelligence up to the hour of going to press. This edition is published at TWO CENTS, and is for sale by the newsboys and at the various agencies throughout the city, and at St. Mary's, Stratford, St. Thomas and other western towns.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Advertisements appearing in the DAILY FREE PRESS are published in the Evening Edition free of extra charge!

MORE GRIT ABSURDITIES.

The veracity of the Tiser is sinking lower and lower, which means that it has nearly reached zero. One of its latest efforts was to put words into the mouth of Sir John Macdonald which he never used, and the Globe says:—

"The reporter of the London Advertiser is responsible for the statement that at the Strathroy meeting Sir John declared his preference for a 35 per cent. tariff."

It is singular that neither Mr. Wallis, of the Mail, Mr. Horton, of the Globe, or Messrs. Brenner and Dedrickson, of the FREE PRESS, heard any such statement. But if anything were necessary to confirm the absolute inaccuracies of the report, it is to be found in the following despatches, originally published in the St John Telegraph:—

"Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald:

"The Government press here state that you propose to increase the present duty to 35 per cent. Can I contradict this?

"JOHN BOYD."

"Toronto, July 19.

"To John Boyd, St. John:

"It is an absurd falsehood; neither at London or elsewhere have I gone beyond my motion in Parliament, and have never proposed or increase but only a readjustment of tariff.

"JOHN A. MACDONALD."

Sir John declares that the Tiser statement is an "absurd falsehood." Just so! Sir John has put the final nail squarely on the head there, and the ring of the blow will be heard the country through. No doubt efforts have been and may be made by Grits to make premature disclosures, but he has always refrained from doing so. And that this was clearly understood to be his line, is manifest from the words of Hon. Wm. Macdougall upon the occasion referred to. He said:—

"Commenting on the unfair position in which the American tariff placed Canadian trade, he said it was not for him to say what particular items would have an additional duty placed upon them. That would be the duty of the future Finance Minister when the tariff was brought down for consideration."—Report July 16th.

So the statement that Sir John was in favor of a 35 per cent. tariff all round is a denial in three points.—First, That the leading newspapers had no reference to so important a statement. Second, that Mr. Macdougall had clearly pointed out that it would be left for the incoming Finance Ministers—Hon. Mr. Tilley, probably—to deal with the readjustment of the tariff, and, Thirdly, Sir John's own declaration that the statement was "an absurd falsehood." The Tiser had better take a back seat, and stay there.

VOTERS AND NON-VOTERS.

It has transpired from recent correspondence in this paper that even some of those who profess to know, who may think that they really do know, are ignorant of some of the shades of difference which controls the right to vote at Parliamentary elections. This is peculiarly the case with regard to persons rated as income voters. A few extracts from Mr. Hodgins' handy manual may prove interesting to those concerned:—

PERSONS WHO ARE ENTITLED TO VOTE.

(1) Voters in Respect of Income.—"Every person who has continuously resided in the municipality since the completion of the last Revised Assessment Roll, and, who at the date of such completion, had for 12 months previously, was in receipt of an income of $400 per annum. P. 116.

PERSONS WHO ARE NOT ENTITLED TO VOTE.

(8) Voters in Respect of Income.—"(1) That he (the voter) did not reside on the municipality where assessed for income at the date of the final revision of the Assessment Roll. That he did not pay his municipal taxes 14 days prior to the period prescribed by law. Mun. Man., P. 119.

The definition of the word residence—Residence is where one continually sleeps." Regina Newcomb, 2 U. C. R. 427. Gibbons election (barrister's case) 7 O. S. R. 136. P. 11.

"Income" is also required at the election must reside that at the date of the final revision they were, and thenceforward have been continuously resident in the municipality since the municipality in which they are assessed and vote." P. 119.

This last clause seems to make it certain that a man to be able to vote on his income must be a resident of the municipality in which he wishes to vote. For example, he cannot live in Westminster and vote in the city, though a properly qualified tenant may do so. The extension of the franchise has tended to complicate the issues not a little, and it would not be matter for surprise if considerable error arose in connection with the coming election springing from that cause. Those who may intend to act as scrutineers, or who are likely to be called upon to serve as Returning Officers, would take a good plan to post themselves up on the intricacies of the election law.

Whisperings are going on that the election is to be still further postponed, in order to give time to manipulate the constituencies in Prince Edward, which are declared to have "gone all wrong." Singular clared to have "gone all wrong." Singular that so many constituencies should "go wrong" at the right time.

GOING BACK ON THEMSELVES.

When the Grits brought the country to grief by getting rid of Sir John Macdonald's Government, one of the principal charges they made against it was, that in seeking to subsidize a Company for the construction of the Pacific Railway an improvident policy had been pursued. It was their intention, they said, to let Canada enjoy all the profits arising from building the line. It was to be built directly by the Public Works Department, and an immense saving was to be gained by using the "water-stretches." Canada now knows that those celebrated lines of communication have been abandoned amid general ridicule, and that the only legacy of that wonderful policy is to be found at the St. Francis Lock, begun without consent of Parliament, costing some $300,000, and proving of no value in respect of the main line, which is located more than miles of it. Now a sudden shift has taken place, and Mr. Mackenzie is advertising in England for a company to build the Pacific line. The advertisement reads as follows,—

"CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

"TO CAPITALISTS AND CONTRACTORS.

"The Government of Canada will receive proposals for constructing and working a line of railway extending from the Province of Ontario to the waters of the Pacific Ocean, the distance being about 2,000 miles."

So Mr. Mackenzie has to confess that Sir John and his supporters were right—that it is ridiculous for so young a country as Canada to attempt to carry out such an undertaking without the aid which foreign capital can supply. Anyone of judgment must have known that from the first. The Premier must have known it himself, but pretended not to know it, because he wanted some excuse on which to hang charges against the Liberal-Conservative government. The confession is now made, that Sir John was right, and that Mr. Mackenzie and the Grits were wrong; as well as that the "magnificent water stretches" were a gross delusion and a fraud. Meantime, some five years have been lost by the obstinacy and fanaticism of the Grits, who are now obliged to adopt the very policy which they condemned. Had the Pacific Road been placed under construction, as was proposed by the late Government, there would have been no cry of "hard times" in Canada, for the construction, transport, and general expenditure incident to it would have been so great as to have kept things lively among us. But now, after having hindered the development of the country during five years, and denied it opportunities which would have proved of the greatest service, the Grits are compelled to fall back upon the policy which they denounced in measured terms. Oh, yes! if you want to have a bungling, shifting, inefficient, unreliable, obstructive set, this now eruption of ruffianism, for it is the boys to make things go—the wrong way.

RUMORS AND REPORTS.

The Tiser pretends to believe that there was "a repeat" that Mr. Carling was about to withdraw in favor of Mr. W. R. Meredith. If there was such a report it was one of those manufactured ones which the Tiser is noted for. By the way, has our contemporary heard the "report" concerning Col. Walker? It has been actually stated that it is his intention to try and become an honest politician, and that he has asked Mr. David Glass to assist him. Whether that the report is true, and that Colonel Walker will at last come to see that the straight-forward honest way is not only best in itself, but pays best in the long run.

Great ado is made over the intelligence displayed by the Chimpanzee in the New York Aquarium. There is a performance on the stage of the Aquarium, in which a pistol is used, and for fully five minutes preceding its discharge the Chimpanzee is on the watch waiting the report, and her actions meanwhile are precisely like those of a child under like circumstances. She will go to the corner of her cage farthest from the noise, and look at the stage curiously, then suddenly rush back to where a vast pugnacious of the Central American Republics, is at present is the grasp of a dictator, Guardia, who has a sublime contempt for what is known as "constitutional government." The Costa Ricans themselves, it is stated, view the position of affairs with the utmost complacency. Fraud, corruption and misgovernment have disgusted them with the necessity of Republicanism, and they welcome Guardia's rule as a decided change for the better. "The country," says the Panama Herald, "remains in the same state of tranquil acquiescence if the present regime it is not likely to be called upon to brush for the eccentricities of insane legislators. No election has been held for a long time, and the constitutional assemblies been convened to muddle the politics of the country and confuse the Executive." It cannot be denied that constitutional assemblies frequently "muddle politics and confuse the Executive," but it is strange to hear this language in a professedly Republican country.

We do not generally look in the advertising columns for a paper for real high-toned pabius, yet the following "ad," clipped from the London Times, comes up to all the requirements. Here it is:—

"Fat Lambton Reform Association.—Pot Cob for disposal, guaranteed perfectly quiet, docile, and used to children. No whip required. Ordinary pace, a fair trot, but with a little persuasion can do nine miles in the hour. About six years old. Price 45 guineas. Particulars, by letter, of Stephen Davies, 139, Cheapside, N. B.—Will not be sold to a tradesman.

Some parts of Gladstone's late speech sound ominously enough. The protest against putting Rosendale's mills in a despotic rule of Russia," and the objection to the treaty that it "destroys the integrity and independence of Turkey," would come better from almost any other man than from the most eminent of, the Englishmen who recently were strongly in favor of Russia, and eager that "the unspeakable Turk" should be driven out of Europe. The change of front suggests the heat of the partisan rather than the wise deliberation of the statesman.

One does not hear quite so much of late concerning the coming victory of friend Macmahon, in Kent. It is said that there have been inconvenient discussions as to there which have struck the candidate "between wind and water," wherever that may be. At any rate, the Grit cause is very flat down there, and the "go-religionist" dodge does not pan out as had been expected. Mr. Stephenson has served his constituency well, and he will have his reward.

Says the St. John Globe:—

Mr. Joly has certainly disproved all the Opposition assertions that he would not be able to maintain himself in power.

On the ward of confidence vote taken in the Assembly a few hours before its prorogation, the House divided equally, the Government being sustained for the tenth time by the casting vote of the purchased Speaker.

People have been heard to say, "There is no money in him this time." And that makes all the difference to a "reform" election.

MODERN IMPROVEMENTS.

Science, even in its application to domestic matters, seems to be without any assignable limits. Society is being rapidly revolutionized by the new features it is introducing into our mode of living. The Holly system of heating whole towns from a common centre, by steam pipes radiating in every direction, is not the least wonderful of these latter day inventions. Air ships to cross the ocean in thirty or forty hours, ships that can be steered and propelled against the wind, driven by screw propellers of which the motor power is electricity—no longer strike us with surprise, though one aerial navigator, a few hours ago, declared that such pretensions as that of propelling an air ship in the eye of the wind should be relegated to the companionship of such problems as squaring the circle and perpetual motion. One surprise succeeds another so quickly that one has hardly time to realize its nature and importance before another, still more striking, takes its place. It is not fashionable, and that the abolitionists have kept the public on the tip-toe of expectation for months past, so that one can scarcely say what is the exact position of affairs on the utmost complacency. Fraud, corruption and misgovernment have disgusted them with the necessity of Republicanism, and they welcome Guardia's rule as a decided change for the better. "The country," says the Panama Herald, "remains in the same state of tranquil acquiescence if the present regime it is not likely to be called upon to brush for the eccentricities of insane legislators. No election has been held for a long time, and the constitutional assemblies been convened to muddle the politics of the country and confuse the Executive." It cannot be denied that constitutional assemblies frequently "muddle politics and confuse the Executive," but it is strange to hear this language in a professedly Republican country.

FARMERS ON THE DEFENSIVE.

The fact that farmers in the States have resorted to the expedient of shooting tramps who exhibit criminal dispositions, may teach that class of ruffians that the limits of endurance has been reached. In Minnesota two fellows were shot recently for attempting to set fire to a binding machine. In Michigan a farmer named Adler shot a tramp who had made indecent proposals to his wife, and in Massachusetts three tramps were nearly lynched for having attempted to rob a farmer of his team. In some of the States anti-tramp laws are being passed, and society is thoroughly aroused by the presence of a danger which one would scarcely have looked for in a young and vigorous country like America, overflowing as it is with all that is necessary to support life. But the first shots having been fired, and society seeming to approve of dealing with the nuisance in this summary way, it may be expected that repression will take that form all over. It is likely that tramp-shooting will become prevalent in the fall, and that the shot-gun will determine a question which neither charity nor legislation has been able to solve. It is sad, indeed, that matters have been driven to protect themselves and their families in such a rude and ready way. Yet it would appear that no alternative has been left them if they did not wish to see their property stolen or burned and their families abused before their eyes. It is very likely that if fifty or more tramps were to be shot down by farmers against whom they were plotting, the news of such events would lead to the disbanding of trampdom, and the clearance of the country of a set of wretches who have united to set law at defiance. So far, they have had it all their own way. Their numbers have increased in proportion as leniency has been extended, until now the evil has assumed colossal dimensions and is fraught with unusual dangers. Up to the present time, Canada has remained comparatively free from the unruly license of tramps, but if the farmers on the other side are about to move upon them on the basis of self-defence, many will naturally begin to think that this country may form a more eligible field for their operations. It is true that the criminally-disposed portion of the United States population have a wholesome dread of justice as it is administered among us. Though lying along side of the States for a long stretch, the professional American tramp is not known among us. Yet if he finds his own country too hot to hold him by reason of the farmer and his shot-gun, he might emigrate to this side in uncomfortable numbers. Bearing this in mind, it might be just as well if our own people were to be prepared in their isolated homes to meet this new eruption of ruffianism, for if it were to be understood that the farmers of Canada were just as determined as their neighbors seem to be to put this thing down by means of law, if possible, but without it if necessary, it would greatly tend to bring matters to a conclusion. At any rate, Canada must not be permitted to become the refuge of trampdom.

The reappearance of Temple's comet was announced from Vienna on Saturday last. This comet was discovered by Temple in 1873, and its return has been expected this year. The difference between the calculated position and that actually occupied by the comet when discovered was very slight. When last seen, in 1873, the comet could be plainly seen with an ordinary refractor, and although its light will be three times more intense than on that occasion, it will only be visible through a good telescope. It is a brilliant fashion, has returned within the Earth's circle. Whatever occurs in Europe directly affects her, and her interests entail wherever political equilibrium and civilization are at stake.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH INTERESTS CONNECTED.

"France cannot but feel this change with gladness. Things have returned to their logical and natural course. The interests of France and England are closely connected that the return of England to a less narrow policy rouses the two states at the same time from the temporary isolation into which they caused to fall. It is a policy of reason, a policy of defence and good results for every one, without danger to any, which will come from this new state of things.

A DESIRABLE CHANGE.

"I do not say that any particular attitude is thought of. France dreams of nothing which makes alliances desirable or necessary. I simply say that in consequence of the change brought about by the Congress the interests of England and Austria are identical in the East. The interests of England and France, already somewhat identical, in the West. And I congratulate myself, in the name of my country, on seeing the two nearly very fortunate and very assuring for every one. I will not enter further into a new treaty, because it is already known. It should not be able, perhaps, to approve in all its parts, but it is a treaty that time will prove to you that I cannot be classed among those who are the adversaries of the work of the Berlin Congress."

LATEST FOREIGN ITEMS.

THE King of Hanover has left a fortune of $12,000,000. He was expected to leave $4,000,000.

MR. THOMAS MOST, who spent $500,000 trying to solve the problem of sending frozen meat to England, has died in Australia.

A PARIS ordinance placing restrictions on the breeding and keeping of dogs in Paris prohibits the taking about in that city of "any dog of the race of basle dogues."

THE Spanish Government has decided that the fisheries award, on the ground that she has an interest in the fisheries, secured by the treaty of 1783, and is not likely to give way.

A SERAGLIO, the property of a farmer near Peterborough, Eng., has been sold to a boy six years old, who was teasing it, into a duke of water. The animal then jumped on the child, and lay on him in the water till life was extinct.

THE widow of the editor and proprietor of a provincial newspaper in England has recovered £1,250 from a railroad company as damages for the death of her husband, who had been killed by a train leaving Port Stanley at 7 a.m. Monday.

JET:

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

That the approaching human being shall prove a nobler is, naturally, the first idea that presents itself to her mind. She is to "meet her fate" though after a different fashion than she dreamed of here, in the south. Well, she has about her two ringlets to gold, seven frames, a watch, a pair of sleeve-links, and five pounds of Cobeys Hedge grapes. If she is to be robbed, most probably she is to be murdered likewise. Poor little Cora will refer an amount of the tragedy in the daily papers —out of compliment to Aunt Gwendoline it may even be copied into the Examiner Despatch.

"Miss Jet Conyngham, I believe?" says a voice. Ah, that welcome English voice coming to her in her direst need—when will Jet forget its accents? And the footsteps cease.

CHAPTER V.

PRACTICAL BY NATURE.

The new-comer stands in the middle of the narrow street. As he speaks, a lamp, carried from one window to another in the neighboring house, sends a momentary flash of light across his face, and Jet recognizes him.

"You—you were in the cabs at the Hotel de l'Univers, when I left papa. How in the world, sir, did you come to recognize me here?"

To this point-blank question, a raw lad like Meade would, in all probability, give a veracious reply; easing his conscience by the confession that he has, in fact, dogged her footsteps from the first few quarters of an hour, awaiting the most effective moment for his self-introduction. The stranger is a man twelve or fifteen years older than Meade. Austen—a man of the world, not wearing his heart, if he possess one, on his sleeve.

"These chance meetings are extraordinary, are they not? But the truth is, Miss Conyngham, I was more than half commissioned by your father to go in search of you. I do not know whether you are aware of it," he adds, "that you have managed to find your way into the most outlandish quarter of the whole city."

"Have I?" cries Jet, with her merry laugh. "Good Heavens, sir, what a tale did that makes (you)! It is all the fault of Laura's tomb, and of a sacristan—a miserable old man to whom I regretfully resolved to be cruel, because he carried a bunch of church-keys. It has taught me a lesson—"

"Never again to be imposed upon by the gracious, I hope?"

"Exactly. Now, unless you wish to assist at your own assassination, as well as mine, do you not think it would be well for us to make a start?"

The stranger offers his arm; Jet takes it, and five minutes' walking through a labyrinth of lanes, threaded by the English, brings them into the fine Cathedrale; a broad, well-lighted street, where may be seen officers playing dominoes in safe, handsome cafés; equestrian young ladies behind the counters of glove and cigar shops; gas, pavements, well-appointed carriages, civilization.

"And, at least, we are in no further danger of our lives," says Jet Conyngham, drawing her hand from beneath her protector's arm, with a lady recollector of the conventionalities, and of the circumstance that, as yet, she does not know his name. "I am sure papa would not be more sufficiently thank you, as a stranger, for—"

"Mr. Conyngham and myself are not strangers to each other," interrupts her companion, quietly. "For the last half-dozen years, at least, I have had the pleasure of Mr. Conyngham's acquaintance."

"Which just takes away the whole edge from the situation," thinks the girl, among whose virtues gratitude does not seem to hold a prominent place. "An old friend of papa's! Somebody's husband, doubtless. Most probably a clergyman. No wonder for my luck!"

And she turns, shyness, embarrassment —if, indeed, she ever was threatened by such weakness—at an end, and looks at him.

He is, beyond all comparison, the most outwardly "correct" personage who, as yet, has crossed the prosaic paths of Jet's life—the colonel of the regiment, Mark's rival at the ill-fated archery-ball, not excepted—a tall, black-haired man of six or eight and thirty, with a head thrown up on a pair of stalwart English shoulders, with cool, steadfast, clearly cut features of stone Antinous, with iron-line, coldish eyes that admirably set off the pallid olive of his skin; a man that an artist could not choose but look after, on a city pavement, or in a mountain scarra, (but in Bond Street "ulster" or a peasant's peache, in grand opera.

At the present moment he wears a suit of the nondescript gray in which Englishmen ordinarily pursue their travels; a scarf containing just the smallest dash of color round his throat. Jet Conyngham's quick girl's eyes taking in every detail of his appearance at a glance) feels reassured as to closer number two of her own supositions, by that dash of color. A peripatetic clergyman may wear a coat of any hue, even of any cut, if his views be sufficiently broad; a tie with a dash of color, on it never. As regards the question of his being somebody's husband, or a free man, she must remain in doubt—but only for another two minutes. An incident, trifling in itself, however fruitful of untoward consequences, sets the matter at rest for her.

Coming out of the Rue Calade, a short, glass-covered passage, on the right, leads toward the Place Crillon. In this little arcade may be found some of the best shops in Avignon; among others, a modiste's, its window well stocked, not with Parisian chiffons, but with the unchanging fashion of the district, thegraceful peasant-costumes of Arles, Avignon, and Orange.

Jet lingers, drawn by the instinct that must ever attract a pretty woman's foward becoming head-gear. Her companion, as in courtesy bound, lingers also.

"Mademoiselle Palmeria!" he says.

The stranger reads aloud the name that, in gas-illumined capitals, figures above the central window; then, taking forth a letter from his pocket, he bends forward to the light, opens and examines it.

"We spoke of chance meetings, Miss Conyngham. Here is another whimsical accident. I received a letter from Italy this afternoon—a letter from a lady, I need hardly say—asking me, if I stopped in Avignon, to purchase some kind of finery at the shop of Mademoiselle Palmieri. The commission was put out of my head—by subjects of greater interest," says the Englishman, gallantly "but a man cannot escape his fate in these things. Here I am, without will of my own, standing before Mademoiselle Palmieri's very window—"

"Ready to execute your correspondent's orders! I have no doubt," says the girl, "that you are an excellent judge in matters of millinery. Some gentlemen, I have heard—married men, of course" (this is a hint of profound comprehension—will buy you a bonnet or a hat better than you could buy it for yourself."

"Unfortunately, the gift is denied me. I know when I see a handsome girl becomingly dressed." Something in his tone converts the remark into a compliment. Jet Conyngham blushes. "There my science ends. But you must remember," he adds, "that I am plead extenuating circumstances. I have no wife to educate my tastes."

"Really!" cries Jet, without a moment's hesitation, and in her most mocking voice. "And I felt sure, so absolutely convinced, that you were married."

Which betrays that she was sufficiently interested in the contingency to speculate about it.

The stranger smiles—in the depths of his own consciousness, not with his lips.

"If it were half an hour earlier, Miss Conyngham, I should ask you, short though our acquaintance is, to do me a favor—to send me with your taste in carrying out 'my correspondent's orders.'"

It is only half-past five. There is time, and to spare, answers Jet, with her customary frankness. "Papa always goes to his room for an hour before dinner—my literary resources are comprised in an invalid guide-book and the embroiderer. Help me to kill the next sixty minutes, and the favor will be on my side."

"You are quite sure you do not think me impertinent?"

"I am quite sure that I like looking over pretty things, even though I may be only required to officiate as a 'milliner's block.'"

"Then I shall take you at your word."

He pushes open the door. A little Frenchwoman, making up her days accounts at the further end of the shop, comes forward, with a smile and a salutation, to know what gossoner and madame desire.

HOLIDAY ISLAND,
Lake Stillwater.

THE STORY OF OUR CAMP CONTINUED.

As day after day passes by we only grow the more in love with our new way of life. We were afraid at one time that we should find it monotonous and soon weary of it, but somehow or other every day brings with it a fresh stock of incidents and experiences unlike the previous one, and every night we declare aloud that we could live here always. But as to the desirability of our present abode in the months of winter I have rather strong doubts.

We never go to bed, and we never "get up." Those expressions have been voted altogether too commonplace and civilized. We "turn in" soon after nine o'clock, and turn out" about daybreak. Mr. Mapes brought with him the rooster, whose likeness appeared last week, and installed the bird (a very ancient one, with a distinctly harsh voice, suggestive of an incurable sore throat,) to act as a morning caller; I don't mean to say that he has not a sort of automated alarm, that should wake us with the first streak of dawn and not permit us to lose the precious first hours of morning. The idea was good, but unfortunately failed from the bird becoming through his great age, I suppose) slightly deranged after removal to these new quarters, and selecting the most unusual times for crowing, which sent Mr. Mapes flying out of the tent five times between ten p.m. and two a.m. After this he utterly refused to believe in his sentinel, and the next day carried him on board, and left in the best of tempers either of them.

It is rather fortunate that we are not dependant for subsistence on the fish we catch, as I really believe up to the present time the total thrown in has exceeded in weight and value the fish hauled out, and Mr. Mapes's advice not to give up all hopes of adding to the larder by means of the hook and line, and especially enduring the numerous instead of wasting them in vain attempts to lure their larger and more bashful brethren. But M.'s faith in our angling was always very faint, and seems now to have vanished altogether.

Mrs. Peterkin has a sister staying with her at present, and since the latter from high living, Fred has been there twice this week to bring over things not required, and he says the dinners, and the communication of domestic experiences seem to go on in an uninterrupted line before and after. Indeed, Mrs. Peterkin has several times repeated her first visit to our camp, and never without the basket, the contents of which are always highly appreciated by the boys, though they seem to look upon washerwoman and the minions in connection with the romantic, outlawed air of our camp life.

On Sunday we all drag in our anchor, and go over in the boats to the church in the town of ——— which we usually attend. On those days we first row round to the boat house, and bring off Mrs. Peterkin.

Yesterday Jack was completing loudly of the great heat, and F. and M. began laughing at him, and asked him if he really was afraid of spoiling his complexion (his freckles are countless as the stars), and whether he thought he was made of wax.

"Just like you boys—forcefly grumbling about the weather!" cried M. "I wonder what sort of climate really would suit you. Now, listen while I tell you what a girl can do on one of these hot days. I will take the day but one before I came over to the Island,—Rose set free (for which relief the cows, churned and prepared fifteen pounds of butter for the market, at the same time performing all the usual routine of dairy-work. In the afternoon, cleaned and up nine bushels of what for a girl (with my younger sister's help) to cross without our consent before o'clock. In the interval I had time to change my dress, and read the Fairy Tales and solve the five puzzles in it; a good game of ball in the cool of the evening finished up the day. A long walk indeed to see big boys sprawling in the grass (as you call lounging), and shaking pillows, (as we say) and turning summersets on hill-tops while there is so much work to do!"

"Well," said Jack, "you've given us one of your sample days, supposing you now give an account of one of your ordinary, no special Welsh days, Miss M."

But G., M. and F. began talking in such a determined manner that he disappeared in a remarkably rapid manner, but was soon back again, and I heard him say off—for the first three or four weeks was always sure to produce a revulsion of military enthusiasm in him. Well, then he'd come home with his hair chopped that close that his sisters were afraid people would wonder, and as they didn't like to own up to this having been in the army they used to tell their friends he had had a fever, and after the sixth or seventh time it made it appear as if fever was constitutional in him and had become monotonous. So at last, after sinking a small fortune in him, they let him stop in."

"And what was the end of it?" asked Fred.

"The end of it was that he came home from forrin parts with his auburn hair turned grey, with his left hand shattered by a accidentally discharged carbine, with two medals and no liver to speak of. So take warnin by him, Jack, and live to be good."

COUNTRY NOTES.

The Progress of Harvesting—Health in the Country—Machines Giving Out—Fruit and the Minor Crops.

The polar wave that has passed over has been a godsend to the farmers in the way of work. The previous week was so extremely hot that farm work progressed but slowly. Neither horses nor men could do a day's work, and the consequence was harvesting progressed but slowly. Scarcity of hands, hot weather, sickness and breaking machines have been the causes of delay all round. The fall wheat will be mostly housed this week, and then threshing will commence in order to make room for the other crops.

THE GENERAL HEALTH OF FARMERS.

There has been a good deal of sickness generally during the hot weather. The cases of sunstroke have been caused by improper food and exhaustion. Farmers eat altogether too much fat pork in the hot weather, and too little of vegetables. During the long hours of harvest the system requires to be kept up with light and more nutritive food well cooked. In fact there is a great deal to be said on the food question. The practice of not taking a dinner but during meal hours is another evil. Many farmers and their hands, in harvest, work an hour at noon, at least, should be allowed for rest and repose, in order to give the digestive organs a chance to get from their work. Farmers thus by fast eating and over-work, ruin their health instead of being the "hardy sons of toil" we read of, are often weakly, stooped-shouldered, dyspeptic, and among other people, must keep themselves in bed for a day or two. They are ashamed much work, but we are afraid this is the only way they can get rid of the evil results consequent under the excessive heat of last week, and thus work was considerably retarded. Many have been unable to get help.

MAGGOTS.

The heavy grain and stout straw has put reaping machines to a severe test, and has frequently demonstrated that a machine will not be sacrificed to neatness of construction. In the majority of breakages the rake gear-ing is put out. There are endless quantity of time lost by farmers having their machines laid up for days, while repairs are being done. The grain all through is bad to handle, from cutting to stacking and mowing. The second crop of hay promises a great amount of stack building, and unless the weather be very fine, the stacks are threshed, a large per cent. of the grain will be destroyed. The stacks are thrown together in a hurry, in a slovenly, loose manner, and the first heavy rain that comes will soak into the grain, and the grain stackers are scarce in Canada, and if farmers will not want to have a crop on a large per cent. of their grain, they must have hard stacks to encounter, and not more attention to stack building, as the majority of farms of one hundred acres that I have seen will be taken by the rain and wheat, leaving all the spring grain out of doors. It would pay the farmer well if he were to remain long out, to thatch them, as is the practice in the old country. One experienced thatcher would be worth to a small crop a number of farms, and not much would be lost in the end. Any one who had no knowledge of it could be easily taught, and there is a job in the future to do their own work.

THRESHING.

Active preparations are being made to commence threshing, and the majority of farmers will be compelled to thresh early, in order to make room for their other grain. There is going to be such a bulk of straw that it will be impossible to get any more than a small part of the crop into the cover. Threshers are already spoken for in many localities, and, while we have no assurances on the part of the selector of the C. V. R. Co. that no attempt would be made till the courts had settled the matter, and the G. W. R. Company had appealed, the following is an extract from a letter sent by Manager Brough-ton to Mr. Wells, of Bowmanville, dated the 24th inst.:

"I find that what I telegraphed you from Saraloga has taken place, notwithstanding your assurance of the 16th that you would not attempt to cross without our consent or the leave of the court. Will you let me know if this has been done without your authority."

To which Mr. Wells replies as follows:—"I do not think you believe that our Company has the slightest intention of attempting, if I have not only not advised it, but the scarcity of hands. In fact, it is difficult to ascertain what a field of turnips is like owing to the height of weeds; however, there is plenty of time yet for the grain to grow, and they may turn out a good crop.

POTATOES

Are rather poor in places, and appear to have been struck with some kind of blight. The stalks withered up early, and the bulbs they are half matured. Their growth has been checked by the dry weather, and the crop will be light.

ROOTS

Are not doing well as a general thing. The fly has been very destructive, and has necessitated a second sowing. There has been no labor in the way of weeding done as yet, owing to the rush of other work, and the scarcity of hands. In fact, it is difficult to ascertain what a field of turnips is like owing to the height of weeds; however, there is plenty of time yet for the grain to grow, and they may turn out a good crop.

FRUIT.

Although last year was what is termed the "off" year for fruit, this year, owing to the frosts and the ravages of caterpillars, in many parts of Canada, the crop will be far below an average, is a great many cases the crop is as short as that of 1877—in fact, a complete failure. The other orchards have not fully revived from the depletion they underwent last year by the ravages of worms. A great number of trees died from the effects, and those that survived by throwing out a second crop of leaves, were not in a good condition to receive another attack this year. It is invariably the case that old trees that were eaten last year had few blossoms on this spring. We conclude from this that any serious injury done to the tree one year will affect the bearing the next. There are a great number of young trees coming into bearing orchards through the country which should be supplanted by new trees. Even in the most favorable seasons trees that have been planted forty or fifty years will not yield much fruit. A good number of trees were planted last spring, and they look thriving and healthy. They were bought very low, considering the quality of the stock. But it may be safely said that fruit trees will not be so cheap again for a few years. The scarcity of fruit for two seasons will have a tendency to impress upon the minds of our farmers the value and necessity of a plentiful supply of fruit, and it may be expected there will be a large increase in the number of trees planted.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—A few days since, a little boy, four years old, son of Mr. Rice Mathers, of the 11th line Zorra, had a most miraculous escape from a terrible and sudden death. His father was engaged in reaping grain. The little boy had crawled in amongst the grain unnoticed by any one, and then fell asleep. The cutting was continued until they came to where the boy lay, when the machine passed over him before he was seen. One of his arms was terribly mangled by the knife of the machine, and his head was grazed by the driving wheel. How he escaped being cut to pieces it is impossible to tell. It, will, of course take some time for the wounds in the arm to heal, but nothing serious is anticipated. At latest accounts he was doing nicely.

The Railway Crossing Squabble

The Latest Phase of the Affair—Who Broke Faith?

The Woodstock Review publishes three telegrams in its last issue, from which it appears that the attempt made to cross the G. W. R. near Woodstock, by the C. V. R. has not been a fiasco, as the most sanguine assurances in the part of the solicitor of the C. V. R. Co. that no attempt would be made till the courts had settled the matter, and the G. W. R. Company had appealed. The following is an extract from a letter sent by Manager Brough-ton to Mr. Wells, of Bowmanville, dated the 24th inst.:

The following telegrams are also published:

Woodstock, July 26.—The case of the mysterious death of the 3-year-old son of Mrs. Mary Wilson, spoken of in the Free Press on Thursday, is still the topic of discussion in Ludlow. Coroner Hutchinson continued his investigation last evening, and it appeared the unfortunate young woman had not her reason and her downfall in the states, where she was working last summer. She had only been working for Mr. Dewar, the Bank Manager, but a short time. It appeared, too, that this is the fourth child which this unfortunate young woman has had, two of whom are living, while the other died about a year ago. The jury concluded their investigation after hearing the statement of Drs. McLay, Ewan and Hill, whose opinion was strong to the effect that the child had been born alive. The verdict we are unable to give as it has been sealed. The unfortunate girl is still very ill, and it was concluded not to disturb her mother's mind because better. But, when we cannot give the verdict, still it is safe to say that it will be to the effect of murder of as it is to be, from the finding of the jury, we would confess that, from the evidence given, we cannot see how any other verdict than infanticide can be returned. We are not not prepared to say whether it will be charged against the girl the crime of wilful murder, or whether infanticide occurred through neglect only; but it is to be hoped, for the sake of the feelings of relatives of the unfortunate girl, that the latter will be the verdict. The inquest has caused a great deal of excitement among the respectable parents who are much acquainted with in their present affliction. It is expected that the verdict will be disclosed in a day or two.

The funeral of Ella, the daughter of the Rev. W. F. McMullen, who died last Tuesday, took place this afternoon.

The loss last month yesterday, between the Athletics, of Norwich, and the Active, of Woodstock, resulted in an easy victory for the Active by a score of 17 to 1 at the close of the fifth innings, when rain stopped the game. The Active are now champions of the district.

ONTARIO RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The Forthcoming Matches—List of Prizes, Etc.

The tenth annual prize meeting of the Ontario Rifle Association commences this year at the Garrison Common, Toronto, on Monday, 26th August. The prizes are more numerous and more valuable than at any former competitions. All the matches, with the exception of the small-bore match, will be fired with the Snider-Enfield rifle.

The first match opens to all members of the Association, will be fired at a range of 200 yards, the prizes will be:—1st, $20; 2nd, $15; five prizes at $10, fifteen at $5, and fifteen at $3. Total, $270.

The Maiden stakes will be open to all regularly enrolled militiamen who have not won prizes at any Ontario or Dominion rifle match. The range is 400 yards, and the prizes are:—1st, $15; three prizes at $10; ten at $5, and fifteen at $4. Total, $155.

In the affiliated Associations match the team prizes are:—1st, Ladies' Challenge Cup and $50; 2nd, $40; 3rd, $30; 4th, $20; 5th, $10. Total, $150. The prizes for individual scores in the same match are:—1st, 20; 2nd, $15; five prizes at $10, eleven at $8, and fifteen at $4. Total, $200. The ranges are 200 and 500 yards, with five rounds at each range. The Ladies' Challenge Cup was won last year by a team representing the 13th Battalion, Hamilton.

The fourth match, entitled the "Ontario" match, is open to all comers, and is fired at 200 yards. The prizes are:—1st, $25; 2nd, $15; three prizes at $6, ten prizes at $5, ten prizes at $4. Total $211.

The fifth match, entitled the "Gordon," is at a range of 500 yards. The prizes offered are, 1st, $20; 2nd, $15; five prizes at $10, five prizes at $5; fifteen prizes at $4. Total $200.

The 47th Battalion match is to be competed for by eight previously named officers, non-commissioned officers or men from any battalion, brigade or garrison artillery company or field battery. The Merchants' Challenge Trophy and $75; 2nd, $50; 3rd, $30; 4th, $20; 5th, $10. Total, $185. The Merchants' Challenge Trophy is in the possession of the 47th Battalion of Kingston.

The Company match is to be competed for by five previously named officers or non-commissioned officers, and bugler from any active militia, and the prizes are:—1st, Brassey Cup and $50; 2nd, $40; 3rd, $30; 4th, $20; 5th, $10. Total, $150. The Brassey Cup was won by the 47th Battalion, the Lancashire Fusiliers.

In the two last mentioned matches the Canada Company offers the following prizes for individual scores:—1st, $25; 2nd, $20; 3rd, $15; five prizes at $10; five at $8; twenty prizes at $5; fifteen prizes at $4. Total, $350.

The Sir Peter Tait Cup, which is now in possession of the 47th Battalion, of Kingston, will be shot for.

In the seventh match for the Gzowski Cup the teams, from any military district of Ontario, eligible to shoot, will be composed of twelve, instead of fifteen men, as formerly. The range will be at 600 yards. The prize is the cup presented by Lieut.-Col. Gzowski and $60. In this match, however, the following individual prizes are offered:—1st, $25; 2nd, $15; three prizes at $10; fifteen at $5, and fifteen at $4. total, $200.

The prizes for the small-bore match, at 200 and 300 yards (seven rounds at each range), are:—1st, $25; 2nd, $20; 3rd, $15; three prizes at $10, and five at $5. Total, $100. The second stage—ten rounds at 1,000 range—the prizes offered are:—1st, $25; 2nd, $20; 3rd, $15; 4th, $10; 5th, $5. Total, $75.

For the highest aggregate scores in the 3rd, 5th and 7th matches, the Hiking Tam cups, which have to be won three times before becoming the property of the winner, are to be shot for.

For the highest aggregate scores in the 1st, 3rd, 5th, 6th and 7th matches, the Governor-General's Cup and $35; 2nd, $30; 3rd, $25; 4th, $20; 5th, $15; 6th, $10.

It is also the intention to give an extra series of prizes (in value) at 200 and 500 yards, of such articles as may be contributed for that purpose. Competitors for the extra series will be allowed to enter three times; the highest score only to count, and no two members in order to make room for their other grain. There is going to be such a bulk of straw that it will be impossible to get any more than a small part of the crop into the cover. Threshers are already spoken for in many localities, notwithstanding the assurances on the part of the solicitor of the C. V. R. Co. that no attempt would be made till the courts had settled the matter, and the G. W. R. Company had appealed. The following is an extract from a letter sent by Manager Brough-ton to Mr. Wells, of Bowmanville, dated the 24th inst.:

"I find that what I telegraphed you from Saraloga has taken place, notwithstanding your assurance of the 16th that you would not attempt to cross without our consent or the leave of the court. Will you let me know if this has been done without your authority."

To which Mr. Wells replies as follows:—"I do not think you believe that our Company has the slightest intention of attempting, if I have not only not advised it, but the scarcity of hands. In fact, it is difficult to ascertain what a field of turnips is like owing to the height of weeds; however, there is plenty of time yet for the grain to grow, and they may turn out a good crop.

POTATOES

Are rather poor in places, and appear to have been struck with some kind of blight. The stalks withered up early, and the bulbs they are half matured. Their growth has been checked by the dry weather, and the crop will be light.

ROOTS

Are not doing well as a general thing. The fly has been very destructive, and has necessitated a second sowing. There has been no labor in the way of weeding done as yet, owing to the rush of other work, and the scarcity of hands. In fact, it is difficult to ascertain what a field of turnips is like owing to the height of weeds; however, there is plenty of time yet for the grain to grow, and they may turn out a good crop.

FRUIT.

Although last year was what is termed the "off" year for fruit, this year, owing to the frosts and the ravages of caterpillars, in many parts of Canada, the crop will be far below an average, is a great many cases the crop is as short as that of 1877—in fact, a complete failure. The other orchards have not fully revived from the depletion they underwent last year by the ravages of worms. A great number of trees died from the effects, and those that survived by throwing out a second crop of leaves, were not in a good condition to receive another attack this year. It is invariably the case that old trees that were eaten last year had few blossoms on this spring. We conclude from this that any serious injury done to the tree one year will affect the bearing the next. There are a great number of young trees coming into bearing orchards through the country which should be supplanted by new trees. Even in the most favorable seasons trees that have been planted forty or fifty years will not yield much fruit. A good number of trees were planted last spring, and they look thriving and healthy. They were bought very low, considering the quality of the stock. But it may be safely said that fruit trees will not be so cheap again for a few years. The scarcity of fruit for two seasons will have a tendency to impress upon the minds of our farmers the value and necessity of a plentiful supply of fruit, and it may be expected there will be a large increase in the number of trees planted.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—A few days since, a little boy, four years old, son of Mr. Rice Mathers, of the 11th line Zorra, had a most miraculous escape from a terrible and sudden death. His father was engaged in reaping grain. The little boy had crawled in amongst the grain unnoticed by any one, and then fell asleep. The cutting was continued until they came to where the boy lay, when the machine passed over him before he was seen. One of his arms was terribly mangled by the knife of the machine, and his head was grazed by the driving wheel. How he escaped being cut to pieces it is impossible to tell. It, will, of course take some time for the wounds in the arm to heal, but nothing serious is anticipated. At latest accounts he was doing nicely.

SHIPPING CATTLE.—Messrs. Wright and Roderick, of Watford, shipped, yesterday, 225 head of cattle from this city for the English market. They purpose shipping them by the Dominion Line of steamers. We wish them a safe and speedy voyage, and hope the pecuniary returns may prove satisfactory. These gentlemen are made of the right material to command success.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

WOODSTOCK.

Woodstock, July 26.—The case of the mysterious death of the infant child of Miss Mary Wilson, spoken of in the Free Press on Thursday, is still the topic of discussion in Ludlow. Coroner continued their investigation last evening, and it appeared the unfortunate young woman had not her reason and her downfall in the states, where she was working last summer. She had only been working for Mr. Dewar, the Bank Manager, but a short time. It appeared, too, that this is the fourth child which this unfortunate young woman has had, two of whom are living, while the other died about a year ago. The jury concluded their investigation after hearing the statement of Drs. McLay, Ewan and Hill, whose opinion was strong to the effect that the child had been born alive. The verdict we are unable to give as it has been sealed. The unfortunate girl is still very ill, and it was concluded not to disturb her mother's mind because better. But, when we cannot give the verdict, still it is safe to say that it will be to the effect of murder of as it is to be, from the finding of the jury, we would confess that, from the evidence given, we cannot see how any other verdict than infanticide can be returned. We are not not prepared to say whether it will be charged against the girl the crime of wilful murder, or whether infanticide occurred through neglect only; but it is to be hoped, for the sake of the feelings of relatives of the unfortunate girl, that the latter will be the verdict. The inquest has caused a great deal of excitement among the respectable parents who are much acquainted with in their present affliction. It is expected that the verdict will be disclosed in a day or two.

The funeral of Ella, the daughter of the Rev. W. F. McMullen, who died last Tuesday, took place this afternoon.

The loss last month yesterday, between the Athletics, of Norwich, and the Actives, of Woodstock, resulted in an easy victory for the Actives by a score of 17 to 1 at the close of the fifth innings, when rain stopped the game. The Actives are now champions of the district.

PARIS.

The cold-blower excursion to-day was very successful. Both engines of the G. W. R. and the Grand Trunk had by all odds the largest crowds of the season. Brantford and Paris furnished each up this A. P. U. to Hamilton Beach.

The Paris Cricket Club went to Galt to-day to work up the enthusiasm among the "paris," but the game was not worth a cent. Galt has reported that Bob Thomson, the eloquent and only Paris professional, was not there, and the Maitland Cricketers are showing a vast deal of indifferent interest.

Tournament log rowing question is again up for discussion. The Paris Rowing Club have a challenge from Galt, and a meeting is placed at some point selected by the Council. Brantford and the South Ward people have held negotiations, and it is said that a challenge will be out not placed some twenty or thirty feet farther up. This seems to be a difficult question to decide when the squabbles between the Orange Lodge and Young Men's Christian Association are remembered that a contest is an abomination and should be avoided. Nevertheless, the people would rank the beginning of the decision as a Christian act. Perhaps Galt will be heard from anyway. There are some things so fatish can be endured. Paris delighted itself in the past in suggesting the substitution of the London mare. And Paris has won.

The Jr. ends of Mr. Robert Lowe, formerly of Paris, but now of Brantford, have had the honor to be appointed general agent for the disposal of the Massey Manufacturing Co.'s machines. The commission is a large one. We understand he is about to operate in Hamilton, Toronto, Paris and Brantford.

The establishment of a branch of the Bank of Paris. The officials have been appointed, and the Paris credit will, see still following up the success of the past few years.

The Paris cricket club are still following up the success of the past few years. Their latest victory was over the Brantford Brantford in a match played on the Paris grounds on Saturday last. Paris played a good innings of 84, and Brantford 58 and $35; 2nd, $30; 3rd, $25; 4th, $20; 5th, $15; 6th, $10.

The Latest Phase of the Affair—Who Broke Faith?

The Woodstock Review publishes three telegrams in its last issue, from which it appears that the attempt made to cross the G. W. R. near Woodstock, by the C. V. Saturday, July 27, 1878.

CRICKET TOURNEY.—The St. Mary's cricketers are endeavoring to arrange county matches between Perth and Lambton, Middlesex, Waterloo, Wellington and Huron.

DIED.—Many of our readers will regret to hear that Mr. J. Jackson, who for a long time a resident of London, and a well-known schoolmaster, died in Toronto a few days since, aged 33 years.

NEW FLOUR.—Messrs. Plewes & Peer, millers, shipped a carload of new flour from this city Thursday. The grain was grown on the farm of Mr. Lewis, West minster. Who can beat this?

POSTPONED.—The Methodist Sunday School children of this city and suburbs, along with their friends, were to have had a picnic in the Port yesterday, but the rain compelled a postponement.

TO BE ANTITIATED.—Daniel Servos, the hostler at the McMurray House, Ingersoll, who was cut by the negro Neil in the late row, was taken to his home in Hamilton the other day, the doctors deciding that anoptation of the arm was necessary.

JUMPERS, TAKE NOTICE.—Mr. A. W. Graham, of Hagersville, Haldimand, is preparing to accept the challenge of Mr. John McKillop, of Fingal, to jump standing jump with weights, three standing jump, backalso, standing two hops and jump, providing McKillop will extend the challenge to the County of Haldimand.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF AMATEUR OARSMEN.—We have received a circular from Mr. Henry W. Cardell, Secretary Regatta Com. N. A. A. O., of Albany, N. Y., intimating us that the sixth annual regatta of that Association, to be held on the Passaic River, Newark, N. J., on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 20th and 21st, 1878, will be open to Canadian oarsmen; and a cordial invitation is extended to them to be present.

NARROW ESCAPE.—Mr William Payne, formerly of Payne's Mills, Southwold, who is now building a flouring mill near this city, had both feet severely crushed on Wednesday by the fall of a ton of stones which were being unloaded at the mill. Had it not been that a piece of wood happened to stop the stone filled cart over, thus keeping it from coming down flat, the accident would have been even more serious than it was.

FOREIGN COURT PENETRATION.—At the Police Court to-day, the P.M. presiding, John Dingman was fined $40 and $2.35 costs, for being "indiscreet" the other night, and Jas Hoining was assessed in a similar amount for "indiscreet" conduct during the Victoria Park contrary to orders, and against the provisions of the by-law governing the same. John McDonald, from Woodstock, is minus $1 for being drunk. John Brunstead was fined $5 and $2.85 costs for using threatening language towards A. Flanagan. The amount was paid.

SHOW OF SHEEP.—It is intended at the forthcoming Michigan State Fair, to be held at Detroit on September 16 to 20, to have one of the best displays of blooded sheep ever shown in America. Special efforts to that end are being made by Superintendent Wood, who himself is thoroughly posted as to the peculiarities of the different varieties. This will be a grand time for the Ontario breeders to show what they know about sheep husbandry by exhibiting samples of their flocks of Cotswolds, Leicesters and Downs. The premiums offered amount to $814.

THE MORRILL ESTATE.—At a largely attended meeting of the subscribers to the Morrill homestead fund held yesterday afternoon in the office of Mr. Warren Rock, the trustee was recommended to sell the property at public auction and take one-fourth cash and the balance, secured by mortgage, to be paid in four equal annual instalments, interest seven per cent. The subscribers will observe that no disposition of the funds has been made and, in fact, cannot be made until after the sale has been placed, in accordance with the terms of the deed. A meeting will then be called by the trustee for the purpose of distributing the proceeds of the sale, of which due notice w ll be given in the public press and by circular. It is desirable that as many subscribers as possible attend, as the majority will have the determination of the funds.

DEATH FROM SUNSTROKE.—A man named Patrick Parker, working with Mr. Alexander Ross, 8th line, Blanshard, met with his death on Saturday night last from sunstroke. He had been working in the hay field, and at five o'clock went to tea with the other men, and ate as hearty a supper as he usual. Shortly after the men commenced work, but in a very few minutes Parker complained of not feeling well, and was advised to go back to the house. He did so, and on reaching it sat down upon the verandah. After sitting there for a short time Mrs. Ross spoke to him, but receiving no answer she went over and shook him, but he could not speak to her. She immediately called to the men, who on coming in found him insensible. Medical aid was sent for, but the poor man never rallied, and shortly after midnight breathed his last.—Lond.

SUCCESSFUL TEACHERS.—The West Middlesex Board of Examiners for third-class teachers examination papers, has awarded the following as the list of successful candidates:—Daniel Mitchell, 903; William Mill, 891; Mary J. Cameron, 864; William James Weeks, 845; M. Swartout, 840; Charles Stuart, 809 (under age); Maggie E. Hill, 799; Waller Thompson, 797; Mattie M. Ross, 794; Thomas A. Amos, 794; Maggie McKellar, 786; Charlis Dutton, 785; Hiram Holden, 785; Mary McI. Fisher, 760; Mary E. Moore, 760; Grace McKay Brophy, 749; Kate McIlwen, 745; Robert Owen, 742; Emily A. Murray, 742; Eva Burns, 739; Jennie A. Cowan, 734; John H. McLean, 728; Catharine Thompson, 707; Annie Adams, 707; Jane E. Whiting, 695; Salina E. Holmes, 685; Dugald Cameron, 674. The following obtained fifty per cent. on the total aggregate, but failed on text subjects: Jessie McTaggart, 694; Mary Patterson, 657; Julia Sutherland, 628; Sarah A. Campbell, 641; Sarah Chittick, 635; Alleyn Husband, 626; Jane Cameron, 620; Kate Munro, 615; Jennie Carson, 615 (under age).

THE UNEMPLOYED.—The following petition is to be circulated amongst our citizens to-day for signature. It speaks for itself:—"To the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London :—In view of the large number of unemployed persons in the City of London, we, your humble petitioners, pray that your honors may be pleased to use your influence with the Dominion Government to secure a tract of land and aid for the unemployed of the city of London and others, who desire to settle on the public lands. We, your humble petitioners, believing that through the advance of improvements in machinery and other facilities for production, all classes of labor are becoming in less demand, and the chances of labor will become greater. And, further, by placing the unproductive labor on the Government land, it increases the value of wealth, and no burden. And we, your humble petitioners, believe that the settlement upon the land is the remedy for this surplus labor. Leaving this important interest of the working men in your consideration, your petitioners will ever pray, etc."

LOCAL NOTICES.

PROF. WOOD gives a sparring exhibition at Mechanics' Hall, Saturday evening.

NEW PLUMBER.—As will be observed from advertisement, Mr. E. Patton has opened out as plumber, gas and steam fitter in No. 241 Dundas street, next to the new Mechanics' Hall. This gentleman is well and favorably known at least to some of our citizens, having been in business here some years ago. Since then he has been in business in Montreal. From his long experience and comp.etency in getting up first-class work, every reliance can be placed upon him.

It is lucky that some men are poor, for riches would only help them to display their weakness and folly. Many a man's insignificance is his safety. Give him prominence and everybody would see what a fool he is. There is an odd sentence in the Scripture which cannot be forgotten because it expresses so much truth, and it is this: "Every man is altogether an ass when he is more he shows his baseness."

Many a jaded woman in the country who is now looking for her relations to visit her feels like the one who wrote to the Free Press as an overworked woman, "and makes her complaint through the columns of the New York Tribune—She has been married fifteen years, has seven children; lives on an old homestead, and every summer her husband's mother, brothers, and sisters, with their children, come visiting. "Once when my husband told me that he had heard from his mother, and that she would be with us to-morrow, I said, 'Oh dear! Oh dear what' said he, 'I don't know how to take any more trouble,' said I. 'My mother never made any trouble anywhere,' said he. 'I mean that I can't take any more work.' 'My mother won't make any more work. All you have to do is to put on another plate.' I said no more, but from that day to this, each year, she comes with her children and grandchildren. They sit on the cool piazza, and I cook for them over the hot kitchen stove, with one child in my arms and another hanging to my skirts. Edith thinks it a cruel way to treat any woman. It at least shows that the inconveniences and annoyances of mother-in-lawism do not end on the side of the husband.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL PICNIC.—The annual Sunday-school picnic of the Memorial Church, held at Salter's Grove on Thursday last, was a very enjoyable affair. The programme was admirably arranged, the children meeting in the school-room at 11 a.m. After prayer and praise, they proceeded to the Grove in nice order, each class having a banner with the number on. An hour's recreation was agreeably spent, and when the bell rang for dinner, each class formed round their little banner, and the teachers and friends dispensed the bountiful supply of provisions so generously bestowed by the congregation. After a blessing had been asked, the games were opened. Flat, hurdle, sack and three-legged races were entered into with much spirit by the girls and boys, while the ladies, race, headed by Mr. H. Burdick, and the clergymen of the congregation, Rev. Messrs. James, Rev. F. B. DeLong, Rev. Ballard and Mr. Rev. J. B. Richardson—won by Rev. Ballard. During the day Gowan's orchestra enlivened the proceedings with choice selections; when the rain coming down, the school-room, compelled the committee to repair to the school-house, where tea and substantials were served. The prizes were then presented to the fortunate winners by Mr. Burdick, and the clergymen accompanied the band, the National Anthem finished the programme. Credit is due to the ladies and gentlemen who assisted in getting up the entertainment, and also thanks for the very liberal contributions of provisions and prizes from the congregation and friends of the Sunday-school; and the Rector, Rev. J. B. Richardson, may well feel proud of his flourishing charge.—Com.

THE OLD AND RELIABLE HOUSE.—Messrs. John Birrell & Co., who are widely known as one of the most reliable wholesale dry goods firms in the west, have within a brief period received 393 packages of goods direct from the European markets. In view of the reputation which they have so long held, it will be unnecessary to advise western merchants of the quality of these fall importations. Suffice it, that they have been selected during the present season with the greatest possible care and regard for quality, thus enabling the firm to compete favorably with rivals in the Dominion. Variety has not been lost sight of, and on Monday, August 5th, they will place on exhibition an assortment of goods which cannot fail to please even the most fastidiously-inclined purchaser. It may be added, with due propriety, that the terms upon which the goods are to be offered will be exceedingly liberal, and in the firm, with a full knowledge of the quality of their purchases, will doubtless warrant satisfaction to their old as well as their new customers. A number of extensive consignments have yet to arrive, but everything is announced to be in perfect readiness for the fall trade by the date mentioned.

A Lunatic Who Contemplated Suicide Secured While Preparing to Carry Out His Design.

Between three and four o'clock yesterday afternoon, a young man, whose appearance is beckoned that he was unsound in mind, was observed, while walking along Dundas street, to be communing with himself, and otherwise acting as if he was "non compos mentis. He was noticed by Mr. Doidge, caleman, who recognized him as the individual he had driven from the Asylum on Monday last. Mr. T. Tracy, barber, and Mr. Doidge conversed with him for a few minutes, but could only glean from him that he had been ordered by his Master to put an end to his life, as he was of no further use for him here. He could not be persuaded to return with the persons named, and the latter immediately drove to the Police Station and acquainted Sergt. Crawford with the fective Wigmore of the circumstances of the case. These officers at once took possession of the lack, driven from Richmond street, and came upon the unfortunate man who was found on the edge of the steep bank, gazing at the water beneath. On the officers approached him and grabbed him as he was taking off his boots. Sergt. Crawford, as to his intentions, he replied that he was obeying God's commands, that he was in God's hands, and had been cut during the week. A Scotch maiden, upon her lover's refusal to carry out the will of his Maker. The officers at once secured him, and had him conveyed to the Central Station, where he was kept in custody until the Asylum authorities were informed of his capture. The telephone was used, but the reply from the Asylum was that they did not miss anyone from there, with a request that the man be kept in safe and closed until he can be removed. The unfortunate person in this case is a farmer, and the fact being made known to the authorities, they shortly afterwards became aware of his absence from the institution. Hanlan, however, objected to rowing in the race unless Sheehan back. There is reason to believe that Sheehan intended committing suicide by drowning himself, and that the opportune arrival of the police and rescue had prevented him from carrying out his design. He is a religious monomaniac, and comes from Dunnville. On his arrival here last Monday, he left the sheriff's officers guardians, and secreted himself in Green's lumber yard near the G. W. R. station, from which place he was removed, after considerable trouble, by force. He is quite a young man, of intelligent cast of countenance, and the impression is prevalent in the mind that he is awaiting trial and sentence from some offence of the many sins committed by him during his life.

BASE BALL NOTES.

Jimmy Chisholm joins the Actives at Woodstock. He played latterly with the Standards, of Hamilton.

If a ball-player wishes to become a favorite with the public he only needs to call for a "waist-high" ball; the girls know from natural instinct what that call means.

The Tecumsehs and New Belfords play at Tecumseth Park this afternoon. Both of the former here this afternoon (weather permitting). The Belfords are a strong nine, and will make it hot for the "red men," probably.

The Utica Republican, speaking of the recent Utica-Springfield game at Utica, feels lies in their pitcher, were he properly sustained, the club would be a

The Cincinnati Commercial says :—"The present system of scoring is injuring base ball. As long as the base hit and fly columns are preserved, so long will players be fined for errors and their records rather than for their actual worth. The efficiency of the clubs will be depreciated and their standing lowered, because base hits cannot be made under circumstances that error columns should be abolished."

The Actives, of Woodstock, play the Maitands, of London, in the Woodstock Park on Tuesday, and on Thursday the Red Stockings, of Oakwood, the latter game for a prize of $20, given by the Actives. After these games the Actives intend giving special attention to champion-ship matters, which will take up the whole of August.

The glory hath departed from Hamilton and her people meander through the grass-grown streets weeping for the loss of their stiff-bore base ball club. What the "ath" of the Times will do now is a conundrum. This is how one club ex-pired, as told by its wet nurse, the Spectator reporter. Says he, "Mr. Stewart, the President, and asked him if the report was true. 'Certainly not,' he, 'it's quite true. I am not going to keep up a team here to pay for the edification of the rough element for nothing. I am there to-day trying to keep them out, but they came swarming in in all directions. When I go to the directors for help they refuse. I am 'out of pocket now, and I won't put up any longer.' And he kept the guarantee to the Worcesters to-day out of his own pocket. What a row there will be among the directors to get some money they only laughed at me. I've got to do everything, and I won't put up with it any longer." The wet nurse then called on Mr. Stoneman, the chairman of the executive Committee. He said that it was time it had come to a head, as he was tired of the business. Stewart had brought the Worcesters here and arranged for the guarantee without consulting him. Stewart wanted all the honor, and he consequently had to do all the work.

WINDSOR ITEMS.

Windsor, July 26.—The Windsor young men must this evening to organize a Young Men's Liberal club.

Ten prisoners have been sent from Windsor to the jail at Sandwich within a week.

McKee Rankin has purchased the West property at Patito Cote, just below Sandwich, for $7,150.

Chief Bains has notified Windsorites who violate the Sunday ordinance that they must shut up or pay a fine.

The men out of work in Windsor keep up their strength by beating their wives. Several cases have been reported this week.

The Windsor Young Men's Christian Association is $180 in debt, and the members are in a brown study about the means to pay same.

This evening, at 8 o'clock, the third game of chess in the series between Windsor and Walkerville will be played at the Windsor club room.

The merchants on Sandwich street, Windsor, complain bitterly of the dust. As they pay for having the streets sprinkled, they naturally think the corporation should be forced to do it thoroughly, or else refund to satisfy them.

In September, 1876, J. G. Dacnst, of Windsor, had a harness, worth about $20, stolen. Dacnst has long believed Joseph Lapoint to be the thief, and has now had him arrested, but he was discharged for want of evidence. At last Mr. Dacnst found that he has a witness who can testify positively to Lapoint's guilt, and the case is being tried before Justice Bartlett to-day.

London East Notes

A correspondent draws our attention to the dilapidated condition of the sidewalk in front of Grayson's blacksmith shop, and suggests that the Council attend to the matter at once, and thereby save trouble and expense.

The cemetery question does not appear to be discussed to any great extent, even by those most deeply interested. The action of the Council in leaving the matter over is commended.

There is a celebrated professor in Germany whose works on Biblical subjects, and authorities, who is singularly ignorant of all affairs save his studies. He was lately paid a large sum of money by his publisher, on account of copyright funds. The amount was more than he could use for present requirements. "What on earth can I do with all this money?" he asked a friend distress. "Why," replied the publisher, "you can put it out at interest." "Interest!" exclaimed the professor, instantly exhibiting a moment in evidently greater anxiety than continued: "No, no, that will never do. I don't you see that will make it still worse, for there will then be ever so much more of it."

The following is a literal copy of a label affixed to a cage of some fowls that were exhibited at a poultry show:—"I is a Coach and Chinas."

THE HANLON-ROSS BOAT RACE.

ANOTHER DISAPPOINTMENT

The Race Again Postponed on Account of Rough Water.

St. John, N. B., July 25.—The greater number of strangers who came to witness the race have gone home disappointed. Having waited two days, and fearing they might be kept over Sunday, they concluded it was better to return, especially when the weather continued unpleasant. To-night rain is falling, and there seems no probability of improvement. The bay was comparatively quiet at the course; between 6am and five thousand spectators gathered on the road along the bank, and in vessels on the river, anxious to see the contest. Before three o'clock word began to fall, and for three hours it poured down unceasingly, rendering the position of the majority of this very large gathering most uncomfortable. The wind commenced to blow from the south-west in the morning, sweeping up the course as on the previous day, and producing such rough water that boat racing in the shells now used was out of the question. Crowds patiently waited hour after hour, but towards six, when they saw no prospect of a lull in the storm, most of them returned to the city. In the afternoon the judges' boat went over the course, looking after the buoys. A consultation was held among the backers of the respective caramen as to the course to be pursued, and it was decided that as apparent no race could come off to-day. It was proposed that the race should take place between nine and eleven o'clock to-morrow morning if the water was smooth, but Hanlan objected to this, as he could not succeed in arresting any of the men. The judges then searched the house, which is occupied by a man named Kelly. They found a large quantity of counterfeit coin, in 50 and 25-cent pieces, together with several pieces of white metal, from which the coin was made. A considerable quantity of counterfeit money has been circulated in the city lately.

Suicide of a Farmer.

Richmond Hill, Ont., July 26.—A respectable farmer named George Nichols, of the Township of Markham, living four miles from here, committed suicide last night by cutting his throat.

Fire in Whitevale.

Whitevale, Ont., July 26.—The Belford Hotel, with all its outbuildings, was burned to-night. The fire broke out about nine o'clock. Insured for $1,100.

A Sportsman Assassinated.

Whitehall, N.Y., July 26.—Charles Long, while fishing in Lake Champlain last evening, was shot and instantly killed by some person. The deed is supposed to have been committed by a rival fishing in that locality.

Whitehall, N. Y., July 26.—Edson Dunrick, of Dresden, has been arrested, and confessed to shooting Charles Long, who was fishing. He says he thought Long and three tramps trying to steal his goose, and fired to scare them. Lynching is threatened.

Arrival of the SS. City of Tokio.

San Francisco, Cal., July 26.—The missing steamer City of Tokio has just arrived. She has been out about the last thirteen days, having broke a crank pin. The Chinese ambassador and suite are on board.

Outlawry in Michigan.

Detroit, July 26.—Tramps burned the barn and wheat stack of a prominent farmer near Battle Creek, and several self-binders are reported injured near Burr Oak, in St. Joseph County.

The Coal Trade.

Pottsville, July 26.—The Miners' Journal announces a week's suspension of mining by the Schuylkill region, beginning on Monday. It is reported that the Knights of Labor threaten to strike unless their demands are complied with.

Kearney Coming East.

Omaha, July 26.—Kearney, the Californian labor agitator, passed east yesterday in a second-class car. He made communistic harangues at several stations.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER FROM C. H. S. COX Canterbury Station, York Co., N. B.

MR. J. H. ROBINSON

Dear Sir:—In reply to your letter of enquiry, I would say that your Phosphoreted Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto Phosphate of Lime & Soda has been used in my family for the last two years and as much as any laudable mate. Home and I find it a most valuable remedy for children who have inflate my lungs without feeling to fast sometimes and I think I can safely recommend it to the unacquainted nature as before I was sick; have also used it myself and found it very beneficial. I am pretty well up to my business, and can say I feel as well as I ever did in my life, which is something I could not say before I used it. The foregoing is a correct statement which I am prepared to swear to, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity if you see fit.

I am, dear sir, yours truly,

(Signed) C. H. S. COXWELL.

I, the undersigned, hereby consent to have our name published as witnesses to the above statement of Phosphoreted Emulsion on the person of Mr. Coxwell, and we assert that his statement is correct in every particular.

Beaconsfield and Salisbury.

Grand Banquet by the Carlton Club.

SPEECH OF EARL BEACONSFIELD.

London, July 29.—The Carlton Club gave a grand banquet last night to the British Plenipotentiaries to Congress, Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury. The Duck of Buccleugh and Queensberry, presided. Five hundred peers and commoners were present.

Earl Beaconsfield, replying to the toast, awarded Salisbury the greater share of and merit in the labors at Berlin. He defended his conduct towards Greece, saying he had counselled Greece to abstention, and the facts proved that Greece obtained more than the revolted principalities which had lavished blood and treasure. He passed a great eulogium on the present Sultan, who throughout was desirous of acting in a conciliatory manner to Greece. Earl Beaconsfield maintained that by the convention with Turkey we successfully increased, our responsibilities. He brought back from Berlin the conviction that neither the Crimean nor the last war would ever have occurred if England had spoken out firmly. Repelling the assertion of Mr. Gladstone that the Turkish convention was an "insane convention," Earl Beaconsfield spoke of Gladstone as a "sophistical rhetorician, inebriated with exuberance of his own verbosity and egotistical imagination."

Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote also spoke.

London, July 28.—The Carlton Club banquet in honor of Beaconsfield and Salisbury was held in the Duke of Washington's riding school.

In his remarks relative to the Anglo-Turkish convention Beaconsfield argued that if the settlement of Europe had been limited to the Treaty of Berlin, Russia would probably in a few years again assail Turkey, when whatever British party might be in power, that party would even, though no convention existed, have felt bound, after a considerable and perhaps fatal hesitation, to defend Asia Minor. The convention with Turkey, by preventing such hesitation, practically lessened England's responsibilities.

Salisbury, in his speech, claimed that Her Majesty's plenipotentiaries have tried to pick up the broken thread of England's imperial traditions. He refused to believe the other powers would display jealousy when they saw that England's object was merely to establish peace and order.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Austrian Occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

A Proclamation by the Emperor Francis Joseph.

Reported Secret Negotiations of England and Turkey.

THE TENEDOS STORY REVIVED.

London, July 27.—A despatch from Constantinople says that Austria has abandoned the idea of a convention with Turkey, and will move her troops into Bosnia and afterwards send a note to the Porte giving Austria's intentions.

A Bucharest despatch says that rowdies decoyed some Jewish artisans, Austrians and Russians into a cellar, and then shut the shop, and beat them shockingly. The Government has promised to investigate.

Vienna, July 27.—In view of the impending occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Austrian Government has prepared a proclamation, which has been translated into the native tongue and distributed. It says the Austrian troops come as friends, to stop the evils which have for many years disturbed Bosnia and Herzegovina and Austrian borders. The Emperor Francis Joseph could no longer look on and see the sufferings of these provinces, where force and turbulence reigned, while the government of the country were incapable of restoring order, and want and misery were knocking at the frontier of his own States. The Emperor has therefore directed the eye of Europe to your condition, and the Council of Nations decided that Austria should give you back your long-missed peace and prosperity. The Sultan commits you to the protection of his mighty friend the Emperor. The Austrian troops bring you peace, not war. They will protect all and oppress none. Established customs and institutions will be respected; the revenues will be applied solely to the wants of the country, and arrears of taxes will not be collected.

Belgrade, July 27.—Austrian subjects in Servia, belonging to the Austrian reserves, have been peremptorily summoned to join their battalions. The creates uneasiness, because it indicates a large mobilization that was originally intended for the occupation of Bosnia.

London, July 27.—A Constantinople dispatch says the Porte and Minister Layard deny that negotiations are proceeding for the cession of a portion of the Syrian coast and the Island of Tenedos to England. Persistent reports, however, are current that negotiations, the object of which is unknown, continue between England and Turkey.

The Austrians will enter Bosnia on Sunday, though no convention has been concluded. It is expected they will encounter an armed resistance.

The Russians have occupied the chief positions around Shumla.

The Russian authorities have categorically assured the Porte that the Imperial Guard will embark, and the other Russian forces retire, as soon as Varna is surrendered.

Constantinople, July 28.—Osman Pasha has ordered the discontinuance of work at the entrenchments on the Constantinople lines, all probability of a conflict with the Russians having disappeared.

The Porte intends to issue a memorandum relative to the Greek question.

Greece has applied to Prince Bismarck, as President of the Congress, to make representations to induce Turkey to come to an arrangement.

The Pan-Anglican Synod.

London, July 27.—The Pan-Anglican Conference adjourned yesterday. A Te Deum and farewell service will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral this morning. The Bishop of Pennsylvania will preach.

FRANCE.

GENERAL GRANT AND THE BONAPARTE FAMILY.

New York, July 28.—A Paris special states that there is considerable comment there at a report in the Temps that Gen. Grant denounced Napoleon as the enemy of France, the betrayer of the Republic, and the author of useless and fatal wars, and that he did not care to see any of the Bonaparte family.

A Christiana dispatch says Gen. Grant was received everywhere in Norway with extraordinary enthusiasm, crowds following in his about.

VARIOUS NOTES.

A Paris special states that the strikes in the mining districts show signs of coming to an end.

The average attendance at the Paris Exhibition is 75,000 daily.

Stanley gave a dinner on Wednesday to his American and French friends. The affair was a brilliant one.

THE MARQUIS OF LORNE

Canada's New Governor General.

London, July 29, 7 a.m.—The Post announces that Lord Beaconsfield has selected the Marquis of Lorne to succeed Lord Dufferin, as Governor-General of Canada.

London, July 29.—The Times announces officially that the Marquis of Lorne has accepted the Governor-Generalship of Canada.

GREAT BRITAIN.

ACCIDENT TO THE CHINESE AMBASSADOR.

London, July 27.—A brougham, containing the Chinese Ambassador, collided with an omnibus this morning. The ambassador's right arm was injured, head contused and his system received a severe shock.

ARISTOCRATIC WEDDING.

New York, July 28.—A London special says:—A. H. Paget, Lieutenant of the Scots Fusilier Guards, was married on Saturday to Minnie Stevens, daughter of the late Parran Stevens, of Boston. The Prince of Wales and several English and American aristocrats were present. The gifts were numerous and costly. The Prince of Wales evinced the extraordinary condescension of paying a personal visit to the bride's mother.

AFRICA

MORE FIGHTING IN THE TRANSVAAL.

Cape Town, July 9.—There has been some severe fighting with the natives in the outlying districts of Transvaal. The British losses are comparatively heavy.

The Fastest Time on Record.

Great Feat of Harus at Cleveland.

Cleveland, O., July 28.—The three fastest heats on record were made here yesterday by Harus in the special speed match for $2,500, Rarus only started three heats; time, 2.14¼, 2.15, 2.14.

LABOR TROUBLES IN WASHINGTON.

A Threatening Notice—Riot by the Mob—The Police Fire upon Them.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—Affairs are quiet to-night among the laboring men, though there is considerable excited discussion.

A circular is posted up that no man is allowed to work at less than $1.50 per day; and, hereafter, any one doing so shall be shot or stoned to death. They also demanded men to stop work, and one or two stones were thrown at workmen. A crowd numbered about 7th street, many with clubs, shovels and clubs. It was swelled to three or four hundred. About 9.45 a.m. fifteen policemen, on their way to breakfast, were met, when the mob charged, but the police promptly fired a volley to frighten them off. A colored man passing received a shot in the back.

Boundary meetings have been held two or three nights, and the police authorities gave notice to-day that they must be stopped.

One other colored man was shot while in the act of hurling a brick at a policeman.

Troops of idle men have been hovering about the grounds all day.

American Telegrams.

New York, July 28.—Lazarus Cantel, aged 65, who served under the first Napoleon, was buried on Friday.

The eldest boy of Mr. Ewing, of Belleville, N. J., was gored to death by a cow on Thursday. The family lost two children by drowning three weeks ago.

During a drunken fight on Saturday night some roughs fought. Isaac Pollock was fatally shot, two others stabbed, and several badly hurt with clubs, stones, knives, and slungshots. Two policemen were also badly hurt. Only three arrested. August Volke was knocked down on his own doorstep by some of the above gang, stabbed, kicked, beat, and robbed of his watch and wallet.

Galveston, Tex., July 28.—Escobedo is condemned to be shot. This, however, does not bring peace to the border.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Border Excitement Increasing.

Galveston, Texas, July 28.—A Fort Clark special says that on Friday night the Mexicans from Las Vacas, Mexico, fired shots into the town of San Felipe, Texas, in retaliation for having been pursued the day before by a captain of the United States army, who took from them some stolen stock. Great excitement prevailed. Parson Potter, of frontier fame, shot and wounded a Mexican on Friday night, while stealing his horses.

Escaping Prisoners Shot.

Boston, Mass., July 28.—On Saturday an attempt was made by two convicts of the State Prison at Concord to escape. They reached the roof of the main building, where they were discovered by the guard, who immediately brought them down by several well directed shots. One prisoner was probably fatally wounded through the body.

The Game of Polo.

Newport, July 27.—The first game of Polo this season was played this afternoon. Sir Edward Thornton, Max Outrey, the French Minister, and other distinguished visitors were present. Reds—James Gordon Bennett and George R. Fearing. Blues—Fairman Rogers and Edmund W. Davis. Ten excellent games were played. The Reds won 7, the Blues 3.

Died from Grief.

Pittston, Pa., July 27.—Mrs. Patrick Lavin on Thursday attended the funeral of a young man who was accidentally killed in the mines while working for Mr. Lavin. The dead man's mother accused Mrs. Lavin's husband of being her son's murderer. This preyed upon Mrs. Lavin's mind, and she became ill and died yesterday.

A Funny Duel.

Madison, Ind., July 27.—General Thomas Green and David McGuire, well-known citizens, fought a duel on Thursday with shot guns. After two shots and no damage, a reconciliation was effected. It is now stated that the guns were loaded with paper.

Disastrous Storms.

Richford, Vt., July 27.—Storms during the week raised the Missisquoi river and other streams very high, the washouts on the South Eastern Railway preventing trains from running to Montreal this morning.

A Cloud Burst—Seven Persons Drowned.

Yankton, Dakota, July 27.—Parties arriving from Silver Lake bring intelligence of a cloud burst on Monday by which a large portion of the country was submerged. Seven persons were drowned.

BASE BALL.

Providence, R. I., July 28.—Milwaukee, 7; Providence, 2.

Montreal and the West.

Ontario Merchants Withdrawing their Trade.

Widespread Feeling of Bitterness.

Montreal, July 27.—The Ontario merchants are still manifesting a desire not to trade with Montreal. A local journal says: Our reporter was shown a letter from the principal of a large manufacturing firm which has its headquarters here, but a flourishing branch in a western town. He said the people here are very bitter against everything of a Montreal stamp, so we have left our nose clean. They talk of leaving Montreal out in the cold as far as business is concerned, and doing all with the west or importing direct. Again, the proprietor of a clothing establishment, whose name sounded rather suspicious, has had some writing to do lately in order to set his customers right on the Orange and Green question. His business, in the country districts, has been considerably hurt, and there is not a shadow of doubt in his mind but he is the cause.

A well known crockery merchant says one of his best travellers reports serious falling off in his orders from the west at this season of the year. He said: I was accustomed to receive orders for thousands jof dollars' worth where now I am informed that our business relations must be brought to a close. In the meantime I receive limited orders for certain class of goods, which storekeepers or their patrons are in need of, and the storekeepers do not hesitate to state the case and whom they are going to do business with in the future.

An agent for a wholesale chemical establishment here gives his version of questions asked him in the west when he solicits orders, and being in a position to answer them in a (to them) satisfactory manner he reports his business prospects to be brightening.

A manufacturer who has supplied a large amount of castings for mills and other manufacturing establishments in the West finds his business curtailed, and for no other cause, as far as he can judge, than the antipathy to Montreal on account of the 12th of July troubles. This state of affairs is not confined to Montreal, as evidenced by the fact that one of the most extensive wholesale boot and shoe houses in Quebec, which boasts of having the best traveller in the Dominion, has felt the effects of how the minority in Quebec and Montreal have been treated recently. The traveller referred to belongs to Montreal, and says: "It is all very well for the Mayor and his specials to try and close up the breach, and lethygones be bygones, but I find it will take a long time to do it, and it is a question in my mind, if ever it can be done. It is not only Orangemen and Orange Young Britons, but the whole Protestant population will join them in this matter."

Scores of other cases might be mentioned, but by this time the mercantile portion of our community are aware of the feeling which exists.

Canadian Telegrams.

Port Rowan, Ont., July 27.—During the gale of yesterday the schooner Portage, loaded with coal, from Fairhaven to Toledo, sunk eight miles west of here, close to shore. All hands saved.

Montreal, July 27.—Complaints are made that the farmers throughout the Province have been swindled by vendors of patent churns and hawkers of farmers' requirements.

The deposition of a young girl was taken at the Police Court to-day against a man in a high position for rape. The accused party is out of the way, and the names are withheld until the arrest takes place.

The publishers of an evening journal are about to take legal proceedings to compel the mayor to give a list of his 12th of July special constables.

Quebec, July 27.—Bartley, who has been acquitted of the murder of Dore, has now been admitted to bail on the three remaining minor charges against him.

The Allan four masted ship Romadale, which arrived from London yesterday, has on board a quantity of powder and war material for the western military depots.

THE FISHERIES.

From dor and the Magalen Islands.

Halifax, July 27.—The weather for the past ten days in the Magalen Islands has been very cold, wet and stormy, retarding the fishing operations. The Government steamer Lady Head, for the protection of fisheries, arrived on the 24th, and sailed on the 24th for Labrador coast. Most of the Labrador fleet arrived at Magalen Islands on the 24th with small farce. They report fish and bait very scarce all along the coast

THE LINCOLN ELECTION CASE.

Toronto, July 28.—Seven or eight declarations were given in the Lincoln election case by Justice Patterson on Saturday, the result being to leave the respondent as he was on Friday, four in the majority.

BODY FOUND IN THE BAY.

The body of a man was found in the bay this p.m. On being taken to the morgue it was identified as that of Thomas Healy, who has been missing since Tuesday last, and as one Samuel Lundy, who has also been missing for some days. An inquest to be held to-morrow will probably establish the identity. It is the fourth drowning accident in this city within three weeks.

PROBABLY FATAL ACCIDENT.

An eight-year old lad named Poole tried to board a train while in motion yesterday, and falling broke his arm in two places and sustained other injuries, which it is feared may prove fatal.

REGATTA FOR EXHIBITION WEEK.

A meeting of the Licensed Victuallers' was held on Friday, and a committee appointed to wait on the Hanlan Club to endeavor to get them to take initiative steps in getting up a regatta here. Several members of the club stated that nothing could be done until after the Barrie regatta, and then they would be prepared to consider the subject. The Licensed Victuallers subsequently took steps, which, it is expected, will lead to holding a regatta, probably during the exhibition week.

Young Man Drowned While Bathing

Dunham, Q., July 27. The eldest son of Mr. Hill, miller, of this place, was drowned in the mill pond to-day while bathing. His companions endeavored to save him, but their efforts were of no avail. The young man could not swim, and came very near drowning another young man who was assisting to save him.

The Rouse's Point Murder.

THE ALLEGED CRIMINAL TAKEN AT KINGSTON.

He Makes a Written Statement.

The Murdered Man's Goods Found with Him.

Kingston, July 27.—Costofroiez, the man accused of murdering the silk peddlar, arrived here to-day from the east on the steamer Passport and was arrested by two Montreal detectives. He had in his possession a gold watch and trunks containing silks and other goods said to have belonged to the murdered man. He will be taken to Montreal to-night.

Montreal, July 28.

Detective Cullen returned here to-day from Kingston, with Cyprien Costofroiez De Merliel, the alleged murderer of Mathew Mathevon. He was immediately placed in a cell in the Central Station. Two keepers were placed at the door, and all ingress was denied to outsiders. Your reporter was late this evening, allowed to approach and converse with the unfortunate man. At first he was not inclined to give any information, wishing first to see his counsel, but after some parley he commenced to speak. Before giving his evidence, he said that when arrested last evening on board the steamer at Kingston the gold wat

The London Free Press.

A LONDON MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Mileight's Telegraphic Despatches, is issued every morning, being the only paper supplying the earliest information published west of Toronto, anticipating the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in the columns twelve hours ahead of the contemporary evening press. Its circulation is therefore unprecedented and increasing. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, contemporating other events in the general, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 1 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly, $1.50 in advance; delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or posted free or charged to distant homes at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, Business Wanted; Articles Lost or Found; Houses to Let or Sold, &c., &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for twenty-five words; and so in proportion. Birth, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted NOTH SUNDAY at the rate of two cents per line (nonpareil measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising spaces by the year and half-year, and terms known on application to the publisher at the business office.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries.

The Weekly Free Press

IS A MAMMOTH SHEET, containing 84 columns of matter, and enjoys a large and influential circulation among the best classes. It is a Western, not a Toronto, paper, and compares favorably with the sheets published elsewhere. Its compilation is made with great care. It contains the cream of the news of the week from all parts of the world; ample commercial information; and its literary department holds most acceptable and highly circles. It has been aptly termed the "King of the Weeklies," and is well worthy of the appellation.

PRICE $1.50 per annum, postage free, including premium picture.

The Evening Free Press

IS ISSUED AT 4 o'clock p.m., and contains not only the matter published in the morning, but additional telegraphic despatches and local information up to the hour of going to press. This edition is published at TWO CENTS, and is for sale by the newsboys and at the various agencies throughout the city, and at St. Mary's, Stratford, St. Thomas and other western towns.

THE BRITISH PROTECTORATE IN ASIA.

The English Government have, no doubt, incurred a serious responsibility in extending the British Ægis over the dirjecta membra of Turkish rule in western Asia. They may plead, with great force, the defence of their own Eastern Empire, and this we may freely admit was the primary object in forming this defensive alliance with Turkey. But the cause of humanity, and the improvement of the social condition of the Christians and Moslems alike, in those distracted regions, might have played a far more conducive part in British Government in entering into such engagements. For centuries back the government of the wreck of a magnificent empire, in the name of a government, has resulted in ruining the country and in plundering the inhabitants. The Pashas have had it all their own way, and scarcely ever Knight of anything but how they could squeeze the most out of the unfortunate people placed under their control. No justice was attainable, and no complaints could ever reach ears angst enough to afford redress. The element of fitness for such an office was overlooked into account, and as the rulers were all of the same creed as the dominant race, the Christians had to suffer from rulers first and from haughty, overbearing neighbors afterwards. The effect of a state of things may be easily calculated. Many districts that were once populous, fruitful, and flourishing are now only a howling wilderness, because it is useless to cultivate the soil, while the people generally have sunk from one degree of poverty to another, until they can scarcely exist any lower in the scale and live. Now as we understand it, Britain is to have a controlling voice in the selection of governors for the various districts, and are entitled to exercise a rigorous supervision over the manner in which these Pashas perform their duty. We believe that when the articles of this treaty between the English Government and the Porte are fully understood, that the power of interfering extensive and radical reforms in the internal administration of Asiatic Turkey will be found placed in their hands, and Lord Salisbury would fail us to believe that those powers have not been demanded by the one party and conceded by the other, without the intention of using them for the good of the country and for the protection and amelioration of the social condition of the people, without respect to creed or nationality. If the treaty results in securing protection to life and property to the people, and something approaching to the reign of law, it will be an unspeakable advantage to these countries, and will soon work a wonderful change for the better in their condition. If England has secured the right to interfere in the appointments, it may be taken for granted that fitness for office will be insisted on first; responsibility for his administration while in office, second; and some definite time within which he may exercise his power for the country's good, and his own honor in the third. Even with such a change as this, it is impossible to imagine what might be effected in the way of improvement in the course of a quarter of a century, especially if some means of rendering strict justice between man and man can be found, so that the Moslem will no longer be in a condition to oppress the Christian with impunity, simply because he belongs to the one creed rather than the other. The good that may be done to this country in which the world may participate, would be a work worthy of the British people, and is scarcely less important than the object the Government had primarily in view, that of the defence of Hindostan.

We understand that the Credit Valley Railway Company have now approached the Great Western in an amicable spirit, and that a meeting has been had between the solicitors, the result of which is that the Credit Valley have agreed to give a formal covenant to use diligence in bringing the settlement of compensation to a decision, and in the event of their failure to pay, within a reasonable time, whatever amount may be awarded to the Great Western, that that Company may, of their own accord, take up the temporary crossing which is to be made. This understanding having been come to, the Great Western have, at the request of the Credit Valley, permitted an engine and some cars to be taken across their track, so that the Credit Valley may proceed with their work south of the Great Western Railway.

In Italy, as in France, the government has a tobacco monopoly, and the cigars it furnishes are so very poor that a popular agitation against their use is in progress all over the country.

POLITICS IN ACADIA.

With every day as it revolves, the Ministerial journals proclaim from the house tops, that Mr. Mackenzie will have a solid vote from the Maritime Provinces. From recent manifestations this is not at all unlikely, the only difference being, that he will have the vote solid against him instead of with him. He lately said that the Opposition would not carry a single constituency in Prince Edward Island, and more recent intelligence and better informed authorities, would lead the people of this section to believe, that here also the reverse of the Grit statement is the true one. Much weight has been attached by the Reform press and by the Ministerial speakers to the fact, that the tariff in these Provinces, prior to Confederation, was a light one, and that to meet the views and wishes of the people, the Government of that day set bound to make the Dominion tariff as light as circumstances would permit. So strongly does the leading Ministerial organ urge this view, and so little does it allow for the effect of ten years' experience and altered circumstances that it throws before the country the horrid bugbear of a Confederation dissolved, and the glorious prospect of a great Anglo-American Empire on this continent blighted and destroyed, as the result of an attempt to readjust the Canadian tariff so as to afford encouragement and give renewed vitality to our languishing industries. Of course, this is only meant for the least intelligent class of readers, as those who can examine the subject for themselves would only laugh at such absurdities. But it does not appear that such crude and narrow views of trade policy prevail to any great extent in either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. The public men in these quarters are quite as well prepared to adopt a National Policy as are the most advanced ranks in Ontario, and with the latter there is no halting between two opinions. In this Province there are few indeed who are not in favor of supporting our home industries by some modification of our present fiscal system, though in every case we do not expect that these modifications will outweigh the force of party ties and party obligations.

When a gentleman offering himself for one of the most intelligent and influential constituencies in the Maritime Provinces as a candidate for the honor of a seat in the House of Commons, with one of his opponents a Minister of the Crown, can afford to use such language as the following to the leading men of the place, it would seem as if Free Trade doctrines were not such over popular in that locality. The speakers were Messrs. Palmer and King, and the constituency they aspire to represent is the city of St. John, New Brunswick. Mr. Palmer tells the people assembled that—"the man who believed in practical Free Trade was a fool. Instead of sending such men to Parliament, they should be sent who knew the principles of local wants of the country, and who would "see that the people pay no more for their bread than was necessary, while retaining their own markets for themselves."

Those who can extract comfort from this as an evidence that the electors of St. John, the capital of the Province of N. B., are blindly devoted to free trade, are welcome to all it affords. If this were believed to be a free trade constituency by Messrs. Tilley, King and Palmer, the latter would not be quite so outspoken, and as it is held by the best judges that these gentlemen will represent the city in the legislature that legislates for the rising tide, that the Globe is either very ignorant on the subject of feeling on this head in the Maritime Provinces, or that it is quite willing to suppress what it knows to be the truth and publish for an evil purpose what it knows to be untrue, and between these two the choice may very well be left to itself.

Mr. Palmer further remarked: —"Expenses had shown that no matter what the duties, manufactured goods were cheaper when made at home than when imported free of duty." He told them he would do his best to serve the constituency if reelected, but would unswallow a bad thing in the name of Free Trade, and reject a good thing in the name of Protection. This is quite enough to show the advanced professions of the Grit journals to speak on behalf of the people of the Maritime Provinces, and to represent them all as pronounced Free Traders, even to the extent of breaking up the union should any encroachment be made upon their favorite doctrine. The people of these Provinces are as conversant with the principles of constitutional government as those of any other part of the Dominion, and they are quite as ready to bow to the application of those principles; and therefore, should the necessities or the interests of the Dominion as a unit require any change in either the fiscal policy or in any other, they will content themselves with offering a constitutional opposition to anything they disapprove of, and when this ceases to be of avail they will know how to yield with a good grace without any bluster or talk of rebellion.

Then the reception accorded to Dr. Tupper a few days ago in Cape Breton should silence such cavillers as these. Such a demonstration was never seen in that part of the world before, and he made the National Policy, its explanation and defence, the principal theme of his three and-a-half hours' speech. The bursts of applause with which he was greeted at every pause sounded strange coming from the hearts and lips of men, who are represented by the Globe as determined rather to incur the horrors of civil war, should this be necessary, than brook the introduction of the National Policy. Anything more grossly absurd cannot well be imagined than the ascription of such sentiments to men who are ready to follow one of the leading advocates of this policy with unswerving loyalty, without any distrust of his judgment and patriotism.

The work of agitation in what remains of European Turkey is already about to begin. A "Pan-Bulgarian Committee" has been formed at Adrianople—under Russian auspices or instigation, of course—and formal notice of the organization has been sent to the Czarowitz and the Russia Ambassador at Constantinople. The toleration of such an agitation by the Russian garrisoning Rumelia, is of course a gross violation of the spirit of the Berlin Treaty. It shows that they intend, before leaving that region, to sow seeds of dissatisfaction and disorder that may be depended upon to bear abundant fruit in the future. When the Turks are allowed to resume possession, they will of course endeavor to crush out the disturbing elements left by the Russians, and in this process will be certain to create another outcry about "Bulgarian atrocities," which may serve as a pretext for border troubles between the Bulgarian principality and the Turks in Rumelia, if not for fresh intervention.

The Toronto Globe must have a very peculiar idea of what fair play means. On Friday evening a political discussion took place in Ingersoll between Messrs. G. W. Ross and J. Gibson, in which each spoke for an hour and a half. In the Globe's report of this meeting it devotes over two columns to Mr. Ross and gives Mr. Gibson exactly twelve lines and one word! Is the Globe afraid of the effects of the truth upon its readers, that it has to suppress one half of a political discussion?

HON. S. L. TILLEY AT ST. JOHN.

A Personal Explanation—The Government Arraigned.

THE NATIONAL POLICY.

St. John, N. B., July 26.—Mr. Tilley was received by twelve hundred people with the greatest outburst of applause that ever greeted a man. He said the welcome had an old-fashioned ring. He heard it thirty years ago when it was an augury of success, and as such he welcomed it now. (Cheers.) He was rejoiced to feel free once more, and meet the people and commune with them on questions of the deepest interest to every man, woman, and child. (Cheers.) He returned his acknowledgments to the press on the whole for the manner in which his acceptance of the nomination had been referred to. Those who condemned him were ignorant of the facts. He was happy to acknowledge the endorsation which the press had given him as an honorable public man. (Cheers.) He had been charged with having sat and voted in the Commons with his commission as Lieutenant Governor in his pocket. He had not been in a position until now to state the facts. He never entered the House after he decided to accept the Governorship. On his arrival from England he found his colleagues in Council and they said they came near making him a Governor in his absence. He smiled and said he had no desire for such an appointment, and had informed the Governor-General so. He heard no more of the matter until the morning after, when Sir John told him that the Governor-General had assented to a recommendation for his appointment. It was a surprise to him, and he had never seriously thought of such a thing. He had stated the particulars of the appointment to Messrs. Smith and Burpee, and obtained the assent of the Governor-General to a public explanation on the first fitting opportunity, and this was the first. Under these circumstances he was in favor of supporting our home industries by some modification of our present fiscal system, though in every case we do not expect that these modifications will outweigh the force of party ties and party obligations.

When a gentleman offering himself for one of the most intelligent and influential constituencies in the Maritime Provinces as a candidate for the honor of a seat in the House of Commons, with one of his opponents a Minister of the Crown, can afford to use such language as the following to the leading men of the place, it would seem as if Free Trade doctrines were not such over popular in that locality. TERRIBLE DISASTER AT SEA.

Loss of Forty-Seven Lives on the Australian Coast.

A Lady Passenger and One of the Crew Saved.

Auckland, N. Z., June 25.—The British ship Lock And, Captain Gibbs, from London for Melbourne, with a cargo valued at $250,000, was lost near Cape Otway on the morning of June 1. Miss Evey Carmichael was the only passenger saved out of seventeen and a Sublehlman named Thomas Pearce is the sole survivor of a crew numbering thirty-two.

For two days previous to the morning of the 1st June the sky was so overcast that the captain was unable to take observations. At four on the morning of that day he saw Danger Reef, being at that time scarcely half a mile from the shore, the ship being under close reefed topsails and running before the wind. The captain, who was on deck, gave orders to bring the ship to the wind, but she would not weather the land. He then let go both anchors with a fifty fathom cable to each, but she would not hold and the ship dragged. When 150 yards from the rocks the captain slipped both anchors and tried to put on sail, but only got the main-sail set when the vessel struck on her starboard quarter. This was just when it was breaking day, and immediately the top sail fell over, killing two seamen. The captain at once ordered the crew to get the boats out for the lady passengers, but this was not done, as the waves were washing over the decks. Pearce and five other seamen got into the life-boat, but were washed over. Pearce swam to the boat and kept on it while it drifted into a small bay, where the ship had struck. At daybreak he found himself drifting toward the beach and managed to get on shore. At this time the beach was strewed with wreck and drift wood. After he had recovered he walked about to see if there were any of the passengers or crew. After a little while he heard a cry, and saw a lady about fifty yards out. He swam out to her. She appeared to be insensible, but was clinging to a spar. From her statement it appeared that she was nearly the last on board, being in a cabin with the captain just before the ship went down. The captain told her, if she should survive, to tell his wife that he died like a seaman at his post. Before Pearce came to her there were only two others clinging to the same spar, but she saw them washed off. This young lady was Miss Evelyn Carmichael.

ALMOST LOST AGAIN.

He dragged her ashore and pulled her into a cave, gave her some stimulant and covered her up, and laid down himself to sleep, being exhausted. He thinks he must have slept about two hours, and on awakening found the young lady apparently recovering. He then started to get help, and after some considerable difficulty climbed the cliff, which is upward of one hundred feet high. After he got on top he walked about till he luckily found a track, and started on in the direction of Mr. Gibson's Gleample station. After walking on the track about two miles he was met by a man in Mr. Gibson's employ, named George Ford, who, after making inquiries of Pearce, started back to the station and brought Mr. Gibson with him. Pearce having gone back to the lady to give her the good news that help was at hand, when, to his horror on arriving at the cave where he had left her, she was not to be found. He searched about till Mr. Gibson came and they then together searched; but she evidently had strayed away, and they were afraid that she had got washed into the sea again. Pearce, just as it was getting dark, G. Ford who was searching among some scrub, heard a faint cry, "O, I'm dying!" He went to the spot and found the young lady. After Mr. Gibson came up they at once carried her to the top of the cliff. She was nearly bare of clothing. Mr. Gibson took off his own boots and stockings and put them on her and got her into bed. Dr. Cooper, who had been sent for, and in the meantime, about two a. m., when Mrs. Gibson kindly took charge of her, and has since continued to take every possible care of her.

WANTON DIABOLISM.

A Clergyman's Residence Burglariously Entered, the Furniture Ruined and the Premises Defiled and Despoiled.

From the Tilsonville Herald.

The town was thrown into an excitement yesterday by the discovery of a piece of destructive and wanton sacreligious vandalism hardly paralleled in the history of modern civilization. Rev. W. J. Chichester, the recently appointed pastor of the Presbyterian Church, has been sojourning at Cape May for the past two weeks on a term of vacation. The parsonage stands on Franklin street, nearly opposite the church, and was left in care of some of the lady members of the congregation. Yesterday afternoon it was thought advisable to air the house, and some of the ladies entered the house for that purpose. To their amazement they found every room in a state of the most extraordinary confusion and disorder. The trunks and drawers had been emptied, and the contents scattered over the floor; the furniture was saturated with kerosene oil and besmeared with salt, sugar and jelly; the bedding was ripped and cut open with knives, and the feathers spread broadcast. Ink was poured over the carpets, lounges and chairs; the lamps were broken into fragments; a card case and other valuable ornaments, including a fine clock, were twisted out of shape an hurled into the cellar; valuable photographs and pictures were torn to pieces and strewn about; the sewing machine was untinkered, and a family relic in the shape of a silver watch was taken to pieces, the works thrown on a table and the case left on the floor. In fact, the entire premises gave evidence of one of the most unjust, wanton and destructive outrages ever perpetrated on private property. The walls were defiled by filthy and obscene inscriptions. The house was full of gas caused by the leaving of a stop-cock turned on. The indignation of all classes of citizens at this almost unparalleled piece of diabolism and wanton destruction of property is such that if the scoundrels are detected their punishment can hardly be too severe. Everybody is at a loss to assign a motive for such mean and degenerate behavior. Mr. Chichester and family are held in universal esteem by all classes, and his ministerial labors have been crowned with large accessions to the church. There is a burning feeling of indignation in his congregation at this base indignity put upon so worthy, blameless and excellent a family. The most extraordinary feature of the outrage is its pure devilry, inasmuch as nothing was removed or purloined from the premises to indicate a felonious attempt to rob or steal.

Bearing Sloan in His Den.

Dr. Sloan has issued three shoots to the electors of North Huron. First a circular, then a statement of figures purporting to be a true account of the position of affairs in the Dominion, and lastly, a shot headed "Mr. Farrow's Acts as a Legislator." Now, I wish to say to the electors of North Huron, if Dr. Sloan wants to deceive and lie his way into Parliament (strong language, I know), I do not, and he will find that such a course will fail him. As these shots have been sent generally to Conservatives and Reformers alike, with no doubt, the express purpose of deceiving the electors (for I cannot conceive the Doctor is so ignorant of public affairs), I want to state that I challenge Dr. Sloan to meet me at any central place in the Riding, say Wingham, Brussels, or Blyth, and if I can't prove that in every circular there are more or less falsehoods couched therein, the last one no less than 20, I will resign. Now, Doctor, face the music, or act the coward, whichever you choose. Name the day, place and hour, and I will be on hand (D. V.), and resign if I don't prove what I say. This is fair. Is it not, electors? Such reckless, untruthful and deceptive statements I never saw before from any source.

Binevale, July 22, 1878. T. FARROW.

..Considerable excitement has been caused in the district of Teknob, near the Village of Funder, in Roumania, by the sudden appearance of a species of mole, yet lowish in color, 20 centimetres in length and 9 in circumference, of a snake-like appearance, which has already destroyed 120 acres of wheat, part of the ground being cleared so effectually that it is impossible to tell what species of grain had been sown thereon. These animals disappear during the day-time in holes dug in the earth, and come out at night to commence their depredations. The oldest inhabitant of the district has never seen anything of the kind before.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN NOTES.

A GIRL 17 years old was recently fished out of the Regent's Canal in London before she had accomplished her suicidal purpose, and it proved that she had had a quarrel with her lover because another young man had treated her to a glass of wine, and the lover aforesaid had refused to go home with her as usual.

THE Pekin Staats Zeitung publishes three interesting decrees of the Empress-regents of China. The first announces that the royal troops have again reduced the city of Nan-lo to subjection, and that 1,100 of its inhabitants have been beheaded. "This news," says the decree, "will cause great pleasure to the recently-deceased Emperor, who now reigns in heaven."

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY'S salary as Governor of Cyprus is £5,000 a year. The garrison is to consist of 10,000 men, 7,000 of them natives of India, and, according to the Spectator, will cost £1,000,000 a year. This, with "improvements," &c., the same paper thinks, will make the island cost Great Britain at least £2,000,000 a year for 10 years, after which it may possibly pay its own expenses.

AMONG the British Indian troops now quartered at Malta there are the Jewish World says) some black Jews, members of the community of the Beni Israel, existing on the coast of Malabar. They claim to be descendants of the Jews sent by King Solomon to India to collect ivory and precious stones. They differ very materially from other Jews in many of their religious ceremonies, and only observe the Jewish Sabbath and the Passover.

A DEAL was lately going on in the Gers, France, of a peculiarly savage murderer, named Cortade, who, having a dispute with his landlord, got the Juge de Paix to view the premises, and there shot dead the plaintiff, the Judge, the Registar, and the Clerk, besides grievously wounding a woman. The curious statement is made in the indictment that he was of a choleric temperament, and, being an old soldier, was accustomed to bloodshed.

CATHERINA, an Italian painter of repute, has just died at Milan under extraordinary circumstance. He was a man of the most careless, not to say dirty, habits, and in order to save time he discarded the use of the palette, which he deemed unnecessary and troublesome. His wax wont, therefore, to spread his colors on the impasto of the left hand and on his bare chest. The other day, while standing at his easel, he was seized with strong convulsions, and expired after forty-eight hours' agony. The doctors examined the body to the absorption into the system of poisons used in painting.

THE Roumanians are beginning to discover that the new territory which they receive in exchange for a part of Bessrabia has considerable advantages. The port of Kustenje accommodates 13 steamers along its quay, and it is estimated that a safe harbor could be formed at an expenditure of 12,000,000 francs. Kaverna is likewise an excellent harbor, and very little money would be required in order to make it one of the best ports on the Black Sea. The Dobrudscha, in the hands of an enterprising and a commercial people, may be transformed into a very valuable territory. It had been so utterly neglected under Turkish rule that its capabilities are like those of the Sahara, which is constantly previously unknown.

MR. JACOB POWELL, a merchant who died in England the other day, leaving $800,000, showed, in the disposition of his property, his aversion to the Established Church of England. He bequeathed to the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control, $25,000. A number of missionary and charitable societies got $5,000 each; the minister of the Baptist chapel which Mr. Powell attended, $2,500; and the societies connected with the chapel a like sum. Two nieces got $100,000 between them; but it is provided that if either of those ladies should marry a minister of the Established Church, her interest in such legacy is to lapse, and to go among the charitable societies or hospitals enumerated. Finally, the testator directs that he shall be buried in accordance with the Quaker rites.

THE London Court Circular tells this story: "The Duchess of Edinburgh, while driving herself not long since in her pony carriage at Malta, unfortunately ran over a child who was seriously injured, but, thanks to the promptitude and energy of the Duchess, its life will in all probability be saved. Her Imperial Highness at once lifted the child into her carriage and drove off to the doctor. The latter—a native of the island—being a stupid fellow, could not be made to understand the affair, though tried by the Duchess in English, French, and Russian successively. 'Who ever heard of a doctor not knowing English or French?' at last cried the Duchess, with impatience. 'And who ever heard of a Duchess driving Maltese?' retorted if medico in his own lingo, (a barbarous mixture of Arabic, Italian, and Italian,) by some means comprehending what was said. Her Imperial Highness was not, however, so easily defeated, and dispatching messengers to both the Minister and Archbishop, she obtained eventually the assistance of surgeons from both of those war-ships. The Duchess has not only sent her own medical man daily to the child, but has also been most assiduous in calling herself, and giving practical advice to her parents as to their treatment of the patient, not forgetting to afford them both constant and substantial pecuniary assistance."

The Order of the Garter.

Mr. W. Grenville Murray writes as follows in Belgravia of the honor which has just been conferred on Earl Beaconsfield:—"How eagerly the privilege has been sought is matter of history. For five centuries it may almost be said to have been the last infirmity of noble minds in England, and since 1660 in Scotland too. Probably, indeed, a good deal of the bitterness with which North Britons were long regarded in London was due to the fact that they obtained from the Stuart Kings far more than their share of honors, and notably an undue proportion of blue ribands. James I., by the way, while as yet only the Sixth of Scotland was generally understood to have accepted the Garter from Queen Elizabeth by way of compensation for his mother's loss of her head. But the English Queen judiciously supplemented the gift of George with a pension of £5,000 a year. One of William III.'s allies among the German princes thought money could hardly be weighed in the scale with a Garter. His Serene Highness had long and persistently demanded a subsidy of £400,000, but cheerfully agreed to accept £100,000 plus the blue ribaud. Opinions differ. The late Lord Fitzwilliam, on being offered the same distinction, asked what it would cost him, and on being told 'about a thousand pounds,' said he thought he could get a better one for the money. The Garter has been in fact, though not in name, a quasi-hereditary honor. At certain epochs one finds it running in certain families, which then exercised the greatest authority in the country.

"As late as the eighteenth century Walpole received the Garter while still a member of the House of Commons; so, about fifty years later, did Lord North. The younger Pitt was also offered the blue riband; while declining it for himself, he begged it for his brother. The King assented; but, while conferring the riband on Lord Chatham, said he wished it to be understood that the honor was accorded in consideration of the services rendered to the Crown by all the members of the family. The last member of the House of Commons who was a K. G. was Lord Palmerston. A century ago he would have been designated in debate, like his predecessor in the Premiership, as 'the noble lord with the blue riband.' But then Lord North wore his riband in the House. A Commoner, being a Knight of the Garter, parks immediately after the oldest sons of barons and immediately before Privy Councillors, this being the position assigned him by Letters Patent issued in the reign of James I.

"Of foreign Princes the Emperors of Austria, Russia and Brazil are Knights of the Order; so is the German Emperor, as well as his eldest son and eldest grandson. The sovereigns of Greece and Persia (in strange juxtaposition as well as the sovereigns of Italy, Denmark, Portugal and Belgium are also Knights, as are several Princes of the German Empire. The Sultan and the Kings of Spain and Sweden have still to receive the honor. Unlike the Golden Fleece, conferred on Marshal MacMahon and M. Thiers, the Garter has not in our age been bestowed on the Chief Magistrate of a Republic.

"Ladies were occasionally admitted as Companions of the Order down to the reign of Edward IV., who, for the greater contentment of his subjects on the other side of St. George's Channel, instituted an Irish Garter. The sister Order was, however, ab-lished by act of Parliament, 10 Henry VII., 1494. Three clergymen are always members of the Order, according to modern custom. One Knight, it may be observed, and only one (excepting the sovereign), is a member of the Order by right of birth, the Prince of Wales being, as Sir Bernard Burke observes, 'a constituent part of the original institution.'

"Forty thousand pounds is a sum worth running risks for under any circumstances," remarks Major Brett, with guarded vagueness. "But when to forty thousand pounds you add not a Miss Kilmansegg, but a handsome girl of nineteen, one cannot wonder that even the Reverend Laurence Biron should be tempted into playing a hazardous game. And a hazardous game it is," muses the old major, crossing his arms, and looking up, with a Lord Burleigh shake of the head, at the ceiling; "a desperate one against a penniless Duke like his reverence to begin playing fast and loose with a woman the age and temper of Miladi."

Major Brett is the most curiously well-informed little octogenarian extant. He acknowledges to the forscore years himself, so I may venture upon setting them down in black and white without extenuation. Not a wrinkle has time written on his sunny, whiskerless, rosy cheeks. Nor is his teeth are a marvel; his faculties of sight and hearing intact. Walking behind him as he trots briskly about the streets of Estoril, "newsmongering" away the hours between mid-day breakfast and six-o'clock dinner, a stranger would probably rate him as a man under fifty—would, I am sure, back his chances at an insurance-office against half the men of fifty of his acquaintance. He dresses, invariably, in Thibet, in brown; a long brown frock-coat, with velvet collar; pantaloons of the same color, but a shade lighter than the coat; a brown felt hat; a white cambric necktie, in which is pinned an amethyst brooch; and a flaxen wig.

EAST MIDDLESEX.

Mr. Glass Before the Electorate.

His Views on the National Policy.

Conspicuous Absence of Prominent Reformers.

Jokey Joe Rymal Goes Back on Davey.

Specially Reported for the Free Press.

The meeting called by the "Reform" Association of East Middlesex, to defend Mr. D. Glass, Q. C., an opportunity of explaining his position, was held in the City Hall on Saturday afternoon last, and was tolerably well attended, between 500 and 600 persons being present from different portions of the Riding, and a large number from the city. Circulars had been printed bearing the signature of "A. J. B. Macdonald, Secretary," and scattered broadcast throughout the constituency, urging prominent politicians to be on hand at 12:30 p.m., so that they might be in their seats on the platform at one o'clock, at which time the meeting was to commence. But in very many instances these begging missives did not stir up the enthusiasm of the recipient, and, as a result, the "crowd" on the platform, at the hour last mentioned, was confined to one individual, and A. W. Belton, Esq., J. P. Glass presented him the latter with a bouquet of flowers, and apologized to the sixty or seventy then present for the delay in re-entering speakers, and made an indulgence while the Committee arranged a programme. The audience was then treated to a selection, winning that the Wentworth Joker, Joe Rymal, would be in on the afternoon train, and that the delay was occasioned by his non-appearance. Half past one arrived, but no Joe; two o'clock came, but no Joe. The crowd manifested signs of impatience, and looked as if they had been "sold" the victims of a "sell." They realized they had, when at 1.40 p.m. Joseph Belton entered the hall, followed by Messrs. D. Glass, W. H. Bartram, John Burns, Murray Anderson, J. Gregg, A. J. B. Macdonald, and Patrick, W. Wheaton, James Armstrong, G. W. Ross, Dr. Kennedy (Mayor), and Commissioner H. Sifton, J. S. Laing and W. H. Macpatter—all of whom took pews on the platform. Joseph Rock, Esq., Q. The facts are these: Supply and demand fix the price of barley all over the world. If the thousand bushels would not be admitted States farm are sufficient for the United States market, then they will not come to Canada for what is grown on the Canadian farm; but, if they require the barley they will come for it to Canada and pay the extra duty. It was said that the Reciprocity Treaty did more for us. He acknowledges to the forscore years himself, so I may venture upon setting them down in black and white without extenuation. Not a wrinkle has time written on his sunny, whiskerless, rosy cheeks. Nor is his teeth are a marvel; his faculties of sight and hearing intact. Walking behind him as he trots briskly about the streets of Estoril, "newsmongering" away the hours between mid-day breakfast and six-o'clock dinner, a stranger would probably rate him as a man under fifty—would, I am sure, back his chances at an insurance-office against half the men of fifty of his acquaintance. He dresses, invariably, in Thibet, in brown; a long brown frock-coat, with velvet collar; pantaloons of the same color, but a shade lighter than the coat; a brown felt hat; a white cambric necktie, in which is pinned an amethyst brooch; and a flaxen wig.

Minnie Warren's Death.

MAJOR NEWELL'S WIFE AND GEN. TOM THUMB'S SISTER-IN-LAW.

The Youngest and Prettiest of Mr. Barnum's Ewarfs—Commodore Nutt's Attentions to Lavinia and Afterward to Her Sister.

Minnie Warren, the youngest, brightest, and prettiest of Mr. Barnum's dwarfs, died in Middleboro, Mass., on Tuesday evening, in child-bed. She was the youngest of a family of eight children, all of whom except Mrs. Lloyd, A. J. Middleton, and Mrs.

The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is larger than that of any other Ontario journal in the West, and more than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries—any statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

FREE PRESS Office, Sept. 11, 1877

The Free Press.

Monday, July 29, 1878.

PERSONAL.—The Rev. J. B. Richardson, M. A., Rector of the Memorial Church, leaves on Monday for a trip to the Maritime Provinces for a vacation.

SPECIMEN HERON.—On Friday last Mr. Ira Dicy, of Westminster, shot, on the 3rd con., a fine specimen of the Blue Heron. It measures 4 ft. 8 in. from bill to toes, and 6 ft. 2 in. from tip to tip of wings. It has been placed in the hands of Mr. Munro to be mounted.

A BAD US.—Detective Ploair took into custody Saturday a youth named Joe Hurley, on suspicion of being one of the Arabs who broke into the fruit store of the Italian on Richmond street some time since. He had in his possession, when taken, a lady's switch, which it is more than likely he had stolen. He is one of the worst boys in the city, and has spent a portion of his time in the Reformatory.

BOXING MATCHES.—The Mechanics' Hall was tolerably filled on Saturday night last by a mixed crowd, sparring matches being the attractions. Messrs. Lowe, Young, Doyle, Barlow, O'Hearn, Moran, O'Hagan, Johnson, and Prof. Woods took part in the exercises, the sparring between the last-mentioned gentlemen and "unknown" being a fine display of scientific sparring. The entertainment appeared to be relished by those in attendance.

THE GREY POW-WOW.—Between three and four hundred people assembled at the City Hall, on Saturday, at the invitation of the East Middlesex Reform Association, to hear Mr. D. Mills, Q.C., the candidate in the Reform interest, explain himself on the various questions of the hour. Mr. W. Belton, President of the Association, occupied the chair, and apologized for the meagre attendance on opening, which was owing, he said, to the busy time with farmers. About twenty-five ladies occupied seats in the gallery. Mr. John Burns, the Demosthenes of West Nissouri, was speaking when our reporter left.

POLICE COURT PERCOLATIONS.—At this Court on Saturday last, the P.M. presiding, Jeff. Bell, Geo. O'Neil, George Talbot and Arthur McLaughlin, all waterworks laborers, were fined $1 each for being drunk. Two of them also paid the assessment, whilst the others gave time in which to collect it. Tom Alexander promised to go to the country and never return to his old cell at the Station again. He was permitted. Wm. J. Medaland, Billy McClary, Frank Moore and Dennis Ireon were charged with breaking into Mr. Smithson's stall in the market. They were further remanded for evidence.

SUDDEN DEATH.—The Rev. A. Hurlburt, an old and much-respected superannuated minister of the C. M. Church, died suddenly on Friday afternoon at his residence in Mitchell. Mr. Hurlburt was over 70 years of age, and during a long and faithful service in the Christian ministry usually enjoyed excellent health. He occupied the pulpit of the Rev. H. Christopher, who is indisposed, morning and evening last Sabbath, and attended to his accustomed duties during the week till within two hours of his death. By his death the town loses a good citizen, the Methodist Church a faithful worker and minister. He has resided in Mitchell 13 years, and leaves a widow and large family to mourn his loss. "Truly in the midst of life we are in death."

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING.—On Saturday evening a young man and two ladies, one of whom was Miss Elwood and the other a lady from Chatham, went for a boat ride down the river and had reached very near Griffith's Dam, which they were leisurely steaming, when all of a sudden one of the waterworks men lifted the sluice, and allowed the water to run off. The boat, notwithstanding the efforts of the young man in the boat, was drawn into the vortex, and went over the dam with its fair occupants, both of whom were upset in the river. Through the exertions of several gentlemen who witnessed the occurrence, the young ladies and their guide were extricated from their perilous position, and soon rallied from the effects of the fright and bad bathing. That laborer has made himself scarce in the vicinity ever since.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN W. HARRIS.—The many friends in this city of Mr. John W. Harris, of Hamilton, will learn with regret of his decease, which took place on Saturday morning. Mr. Harris had been connected for many years with the business department of the Hamilton Times, but left his post last October through illness, hoping that a little rest would restore him to health. But the trouble proved obdurate, and he gradually sank until death ended his sufferings on Saturday. Mr. Harris was born in Barnstaple, Devon, England, in 1826, and served an apprenticeship to the printing business in his native town. He came to this country when a young man, and started the Dundas Warder in company with Mr. S. I. Jones, in 1849. He went to Hamilton, and began the publication of the Canadian in 1852, and became connected with the Times in 1861. His thorough knowledge of all the details of printing made him a valuable head of the managing department of the Times. His death will be regretted by a large circle of friends.

A CATTLE STEALER CAUGHT.—A man named John McCann was arrested by Constable Richel yesterday morning for being a vagrant. He was brought before Squire Anderson, who committed him to jail.

Walter Short, of York street, was charged before Squire Anderson, on Saturday, for beating and abusing his wife. He was bound over to keep the peace in sureties of $40.

A hard looking case named Welsh was arrested by Constable Schram, on Saturday night, for abusing a woman on Adelaide street, on the city side, and brought before Squire Anderson, who discharged him, as he had no jurisdiction over the matter.

The Victoria and Baltic Oil Works Companies are to be summoned to-day for allowing refuse from their works to lie on the street in front of their refineries.

LOCAL NOTICES.

AUCTION SALES TO-DAY.—Messrs. Manville & Brown will offer for sale at their rooms this forenoon a well-assorted collection of household effects, comprising many excellent articles suitable for those desirous of replenishing their stock. At the same time, the furniture of the insolvent, A. Newberger, will be offered at auction. Any one in quest of household articles cannot do better than attend these sales, as the goods are in excellent condition, and must be sold.

THE ANCHOR SALE.—The sale at Mr. Quarrye, on Wednesday next, offers a splendid opportunity to those desirous of refurnishing, as the goods to be offered are all in splendid order.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Composed, Compiled and Corralled by "Free Press" Reporters.

Among the disagreeable things of this life is borrowing an umbrella and finding the owner's name on the handle.

Mr. W. L. Judson, portrait painter, sailed from New York on Saturday for a pleasure trip of three months' duration.

There is a heap of consolation in the thought that if a man has no shirt, it costs him nothing to have it washed and ironed.

People who attempt to cut boarding-house pie-crust with a fork should realize that time thrown away can never be recalled.

The weather always furnishes a fresh topic for discussion. It is a subject commonly considered, both with pen and tongue.

Does your head swim? Do your ears buzz? Do your eyes water? You need rest. Go and hang on your country relatives for two weeks.

Messrs. James Smith, of the "Albion," and Samuel Grigg, of the "American," leave on Tuesday night on a trip to the Old Country.

The tramp won't work in the harvest fields. It's far better to sit in the shade and be told by an orator that he ought to have a carriage of his own.

"We love to lie beneath the shade."—Tiger. Oh, it doesn't make any difference. In the shade, or elsewhere, you love to lie, because its natural to you.

The London Township "Telephone" occupied a seat on the platform at Glass' meeting on Saturday last. They didn't have any use for him, however.

Mr. A. Jamie, late Principal of the Baltimore, Ont., public school, has purchased the Canadian Statesman, Bowmanville, and assumes control on the 1st of August.

Potato bugs have commenced to invade houses and are crawling about the streets. They will endure any amount of kicking about, and will die only when crushed.

Mr. D. Glass, Q. C., boasts that he was born in a log house, and asks to be sent to Parliament because he was. If he could be helped to it, he wouldn't mind boasting about it now.

The Burlington Hawkeye believes that Eve looked under the bed for a man the very night of the day she was born. Yes; and we have no doubt she looked a little bitterly because he wasn't there.

The ladies' switch, found in possession of Mr. Hurley on Saturday last, has been claimed by a hair-dresser on Richmond street, who states that it was stolen from his place on Friday last.

The Red Ribbon tent was well filled last night, the Rev. Mr. Gaud, of the Bible Christian Church, officiated in the temporary structure, which was highly appreciated. One or two others assisted.

"What fine dark hair you have, Miss M——!" Fly wife, who is more jealous than you, has her hair quite gray." "Indeed," rejoined Miss M——, "if I had been wife my hair no doubt had been gray too."

Three of Glass' Justices of the Peace showed their gratitude for their master by occupying seats on the platform on Saturday last. Two of them frowned, the Conservative cause, in order that they might be labelled Squire.

"Hurrah! hurrah!" cried a young lawyer who succeeded to his father's practice, "I've settled that old bore-suit at last." "Settled it!" exclaimed the astonished parent; "why, we've surprised the family market for the last few years."

The Tiger affects ignorance (nothing new) in regard to the publication of the Norwich Gazette, which is one of the best local journals in Oxford county. The Tiger is getting quite jealous, and can be appeased by its general knownothingness.

If you wish to interest children, you have only to ask among the children, you have only to supply them liberally with half-ripened fruit. Two of the first instalment will necessitate the presence of the family physician and the second the undertaker as well.

The Ithaca Journal thus describes a "scene at Charlie's:" Thirsty individual, sipping a glass: "Whose beer is this?" "It is Bartholomay's," replies Charlie. "Well, when I meet Bartholomay I'll pay him for it," and the customer as he slid out. This paragraph was twisted by the Tiger's sunstricken brain another day, and made to do duty against Mr. Carling.

There are some gentlemen who imagine that street car politeness requires them, when they take a lady's fare, to bring her back the envelope, and let her open it herself, instead of sensibly breaking the envelope, putting the money in the box and returning her the change Don't do it again. Life is too short to spend so much of it walking back and forth in a street car.

The young men of this country will be amused to know that a barber has invented a machine by which he can singe off the human hair one thirteen-one-hundredths of an inch closer to the skull than it is now possible to bring it with a clipping machine. A young man who will go out into society with great straggling locks nearly three-eighths of an inch long, struggling down his back ought to be ashamed of himself.

The Volksfreund is the name of a new Conservative German paper which has just made its appearance in Stratford. The proprietor was for many years a staunch Reformer, but the "cry of the false wheel" policy of allowing the country to go to the dogs without an effort, was more than he could endure, and hence, as an honest and conscientious citizen, he has thrown in his lot with the Liberal Conservatives. May his shadow never grow less.

THE SUN'S ECLIPSE TO-DAY.

Get Ready Your Smoked Glass.

This afternoon an event of great interest to astronomers and other scientists the world over will take place, namely, an eclipse of the sun. The centre of the moon's shadow strikes the earth at sunrise in Siberia, Asia, or about half-past eight, Greenwich mean time, in longitude 113 degrees east, latitude 54 degrees north, and moving to the northeastward will cross the Arctic circle at its greatest latitude, 70 degrees; then, moving southeastward, will sweep in a great curve over British Columbia, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Kansas and Texas, passing over the Gulf of Havana and on to St. Domingo. This is the path of the total eclipse—phenomenon which will be seen for a period of not much more than three minutes at any place. Two parties are on the line of the centre of the shadow, Denver and Havanna. The path of the shadow will be a narrow belt about 116 miles wide, and scattered along this line, at the most available points the observers sent out by the United States Government will be stationed. Five parties have been sent out from the Observatory at Washington, under the command of professors of mathematics in the navy, assisted by four officers of the line. They are well equipped, Congress having granted $9,000 for the purpose. Professor Newcomb goes with Professor Harkness to Creston, Wyoming, Professor Hall to Denver, Professor Eastman to Virginia City, Professor Upton to Fort Benton, Professor Ferrel to Fort Shaw, Professor Pritchett to Separation Station, Professor Hilgard to Bismarck, Professor Peirce to Pike's Peak, Professor Young to Sherman, Professor Langley to Mount Whitney, Professor Holden to Mount Hamilton, Professor Davidson to Portland

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

Debate on the Eastern Policy Opened.

Hartington Approves the Berlin Treaty.

But Condemns the Turkish Defensive Alliance.

The Discussion General and Bitter.

Sharp Passage Between Beaconsfield and Granville.

By Cable—Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, July 29.—The debate on Hartington's resolution against the Government's eastern policy, which began last night in the Commons, is regarded as the most important in many years. The Times, in discussing that part of Hartington's resolution relating to the British guarantees ——Turkey, says: ——"There is room for the contention that Harrington's censure of the the Ministry have involved the country unnecessarily in liabilities of so grave a character, the Opposition ought to be prepared to express something more than regret; they ought to be ready to turn out their opponents, to take office themselves and reverse the policy to which the country stands committed. If they are not prepared for such a decided course they ought to leave the Government unweakened by party info affect the settlement of which it has laid the basis. In certain cases it is desirable the Government should act with one party majority. The real question is whether in the permanent interests of the British Empire it was desirable to say distinctly to Russia "Thus far shalt thou go, but no further. The Times also says it has reason to believe the propositions of reform England made to the Porte has been very favorably received, and that the counsel and supervision of England will henceforth form a regenerating influence for the Ottoman Empire.

The passage in Beaconsfield's speech, at the banquet on Saturday, which attracted most attention, is that leveled at Gladstone, and it is expected this incident will increase the bitterness of the coming debate.

London, July 29.—In the Commons, at 5 p. m., Hartington moved his resolution censuring the Government's Eastern policy. He said he was pleased to find that while the House has learned with satisfaction that the troubles in the East have been terminated by the Treaty of Berlin, without further recourse to arms, and rejoices in the extension of the liberty of government to some populations of European Turkey, it regrets that it has not been found practicable to deal more satisfactorily with the claims of the Greeks; that in regard to the Asiatic provinces military liabilities of the country have been unnecessarily extended; that the undefined engagements relative to the better administration of the Asiatic Provinces have imposed many responsibilities on the State, while no sufficient means are indicated for securing the fulfilment, and that these responsibilities have been incurred without the previous knowledge of Parliament.

The motion was received with cheering on the Liberal side, especially among the Radicals. Hartington's now speaking. The House was very crowded.

In his speech to-day Lord Hartington said a very inadequate idea of the Treaty of Berlin was to be derived from a mere perusal of its provisions with those of the Treaty of San Stefano. Hands, pressure to the war, made demands which did not go anything like so far as the Treaty of Berlin, yet England never approved of them, nor urged them upon Turkey. He said he did not take a too serious satisfaction against the Government regarding Greece, as other Governments shared the responsibility, but the British Government had incurred a special responsibility in a promise given to Greece which had not been fulfilled. If the Conservative party accepted the amendment of Plunket they would they approved of the conduct of the Liberals.

Lord Hartington spoke for an hour and forty minutes.

Hartington generally approved of the Treaty of Berlin, as although not a final settlement, it left the future of the Turkish dominions to be determined by natural causes, uninfluenced by foreign military domination. He made a powerful attack upon the Anglo-Turkish convention, and asked if the British Government would have deemed a similar agreement between Turkey and Russia justifiable. Cyprus was useless for the defence of Asia Minor. Even granting the Government's contention that a necessity for the occupation of Cyprus, which he had been created by themselves by not advising Turkey to accept the original terms of peace, which would not have materially increased Russia's dominions in Asia. He denied the existence of British interests in Asia Minor, as that was not the road to India, and demonstrated that the Government's utterances up to the close of the war showed that they were of the same opinion. He pointed to the Tripartite Treaty of 1856 to show the impossibility of binding posterity by a guarantee. By the present convention the Government had advanced the time of a conflict, supposing there was to be one, by one hundred years. He left a frontier, he said, with which the best military authorities of India were content, and placed ourselves close to the resources of our supreme authority. Finest views wanted to know whether such a policy, which would compel England to exercise a general protectorate over Turkey, was not rightly described as insane. He considered Beaconsfield's remarks on Gladstone insulting to the Queen and country, of whom that statesman once had the confidence. The Government apparently was content with the work of Reform; then, when some progress had been made, raised Parliament for means to prevent the work from being interfered with. But this would have been a showy policy. Hartington said, in conclusion, he might have been wiser, from a party point of view, to postpone his motion until it could reap advantage from the disappointment which he considered it more patriotic to enable the country, while there was yet time, to retreat from an unfortunate complication.

Sandy Plunkett seconded, as a vote of censure, his amendment, expressing the hope that the Government's efforts would preserve peace, maintain the interests of the Empire and ameliorate the condition of the East.

Plunkett declared it was quite obvious to Russia that England would never recede from her obligations in regard to Asia Minor. It was not an English custom to avoid responsibilities because they were unprecedented.

Sir Charles Dilke believed the convention would ultimately and inevitably lead to war with Russia. The tendency of these arrangements was to make England a dependency of India.

Captain Cochrane, member for the Isle of Wight, and David Plunket, for Dublin University, supported the amendment.

Evelyn Ashly, Liberal member for Poole, supported Hartington's motion. He considered the Anglo-Turkish convention a sham, to be shuffled out of so soon as convenient. The recent course of foreign affairs has caused a growing feeling that the prerogative of the Crown ought to be diminished.

Grant Duff, Liberal member for Elgin, made a bitter attack on the Convention.

Bourke, Under Secretary for the Foreign Department, believed England was never more favorably regarded by all the powers, or more influential. Replying to Hartington, he said the Government had not advised Turkey to accept the original terms of peace because she was then making a gallant defence, and such advice would have been fatal to English influence. Russia would only be hurt by the convention if she cherished aggressive designs.

The debate was adjourned.

London, July 29.—In the House of Lords to-night there was a sharp personal discussion between Granville and Beaconsfield, relative to the latter's attack on Gladstone. Beaconsfield defended his conduct.

Salisbury incidentally expressed the belief that the Russians would evacuate Turkey within the allotted period.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

The Austrian Troops Entered Bosnia.

Bred, July 29.—The Austrian troops crossed the frontier into Bosnia this morning, in perfect order, without encountering difficulties. The Archduke John Salvator, of Tuscany, at the head of the brigade, has entered Derbend.

A Constantinople special announces that the Sultan has ratified the Treaty of Berlin.

Athens, July 29.—The Cretan National Assembly has applied for the mediation of the British Consul to obtain autonomy for Crete.

The Pan-Anglican Synod.

An Orderly Session—Important Resolution.

London, July 29.—The Manchester Guardian's London correspondent says it is understood that more harmony has prevailed in the recent Pan-Anglican Synod than at the one previous. It is stated that one of the last acts of the Synod was the passage of an important resolution relating to the doctrine, order and discipline of the English Church, presumably aimed at the extreme school of Ritualists.

GREAT BRITAIN.

GREAT INTERNATIONAL PIGEON MATCH.

London, July 29.—The betting is slightly in favor of Coventry in the great international pigeon shooting match with Bogardus, the American champion, for £100 a side, each to shoot at 50 birds, on the 6th of August.

London, July 29.—Bogardus shot a pigeon match to-day with Capt. Shelley, of the Nottingham Gun Club, for £200. Shelley retired at the 43rd round, after having killed only 34, while Bogardus had killed 37. The latter killed 84 out of the 100.

London, July 29.—Bogardus' score to-day, in the pigeon shooting match with Shelley, is the highest ever made in England.

DARING ESCAPE OF CRIMINALS.

London, July 29.—The Globe says fifty-four convicts of the Mount St. Bernard Reformatory in Leicestershire, escaped last night after assaulting the officers in charge. A telegram was sent to Loughboro, and the police of that town and a number of constables were sent to meet them. Thirty-two of the fugitives were re-captured. They were armed with bludgeons, from which they made desperate resistance. One convict received a concussion of the brain.

EPIDEMIC.

A Blackburn special says an outbreak of epidemic typhoid fever has occurred there. There have been three deaths this morning, and there are 150 patients.

FRANCE.

EXTENSIVE FIRE IN PARIS.

London, July 29.—A Paris dispatch says: —A fire broke out this morning in a lumber yard (two acres in extent) of a furniture manufacturer in the centre of the populous district of the city. Six engines were ordered out. At the time of telegraphing (at 3 o'clock this morning) the adjoining buildings were in great danger. The timber, valued at $100,000, is a mass of flames.

MARQUIS OF LORNE.

The Canadian Press on the New Governor-General.

Ottawa, July 29.—Speaking of the Marquis of Lorne, Lord Dufferin's successor, the Citizen says:—"One of the royal family by marriage, the future Governor will be cordially received in Canada."

The Free Press says the appointment will no doubt be received with satisfaction by the people of Canada, who will regard it as a distinguished honor to have among them, presiding over the hospitalities of the Government House a daughter of our beloved Queen. The new Governor General will find a warm welcome among Her Majesty's Canadian subjects, and will have the satisfaction of having handed over to him an office, which has been lent unusual popularity and respect by a polished gentleman, and wise and sagacious statesman, who is now leaving us; and from what we can gather of the past services of the Marquis, we may look forward to a continuation of the popularity, and of the affectionate regard of our people for the representative of the Crown in Canada.

Hamilton, July 29.—The Times (Reform) commenting on the appointment of the Marquis of Lorne as successor to Lord Dufferin, says the appointment is a good one, and will give the liberalest satisfaction to the people of the country. His appointment will be a great compliment, not only to Canada, but to Earl Dufferin, whom no ordinary selection from England would be likely to supercede satisfactorily. The article concludes with the statement that the country at large will be glad of the appointment which will serve as an additional link, if that were needful, to bind Canada more closely to the English throne.

Montreal, July 29.—The only allusion in the press here to day concerning the appointment of the Marquis of Lorne as Governor-General is the following from the Star.—The news has come apparently from all reliable sources that the Marquis of Lorne is to be the new Governor-General of Canada. This is but the legitimate outcome of the conservative policy towards the colonies, as indicated by Lord Beaconsfield in his speech of explanation the other day. On that occasion he intimated that the desire for a close relationship between Great Britain and her colonies, and if the Marquis be the coming man, it is evidence that the course to be pursued towards the colonies is to draw them toward the central authority, a portion of which bond it was to be presumed would be in the fact of Canada being presided over by one who had the closest family relationship with her Majesty. The news of the appointment will be generally hailed with satisfaction.

THE LONDON "TIMES" ON THE APPOINTMENT.

London, July 29.—The Times, commenting on the Marquis of Lorne's appointment as Governor-General of Canada, says the new Governor-Generalship opens a career for him for the political activity from which his marriage cut him off at home. He is well known to be intelligent and cultivated, with an interest in the colonies, of which he gave proof in his early travels and writings. The most significant consequence of his appointment will be—if we are not mistaken—the effect on public opinion in Canada. It will be hailed, we have no doubt, as the most popular act of policy that the Imperial Government ever carried out since the Dominion of Canada was founded.

THE RAILWAY CAR OUTRAGE.

Appalling Danger of a Lady Travelling Alone.

Conspiracy of Two Monsters on a New York Central Train.

Extended Account of the Crime.

New York, July 29.—The Times prints the particulars of an atrocious crime which was committed some months ago at Utica, in this State. Until this time the revolting facts have not been published, as the family involved were averse to publicity. Some time ago the lonely wife of a wealthy gentleman of Boston visited friends in this State. At length she started on her homeward journey on a train of the New York Central Railroad, expecting to meet her husband at Albany. She changed cars at Rome, and took a seat in the drawing room coach. She noticed two middle-aged, well dressed men behind her, who seemed to be making her the subject of conversation. As she was about to pay the conductor for her seat, one of the men told him to take no money from the lady—she was in their charge, and they would pay her fare. The lady was terribly frightened, and denied any knowledge of the men. The conductor, after a short talk with the men, asked her pardon and withdrew, which she gave him, believing in her fare from the strangers, to refer to her frantic protest—

Madam, these gentlemen told me your name and residence before I asked you, and they say your friends have entrusted you to their care, and that you are being removed to the Lunacy Asylum at Utica. The poor woman was wild with terror and fainted in her demonstrations of fright. The passengers really thought her insane. She appealed to them for protection, but received nothing but pity. Her pretended guardians, with sorrowful faces, told of her malady, and of the hopes of her friends that, under treatment at Utica, she would recover. The conductor led her through the train to see if any one knew her, the two ruffians following. All believed her insane—her own hysterical account, the plausible story of the two men, and their respectable appearance, giving colour to that theory. Soon the train drew near Utica, the men bore her fainting from her seat, put her into a carriage, and drove off, while the train sped on its way. When the cars reached Albany the husband was waiting for his wife. He was astonished at her failure to meet him, and when he described the lady of his search to the conductor, the latter knew at once that he had made a terrible blunder. He procured an engine, and the two proceeded at full speed to Utica, where they arrived about 4 a. m. They found the blackman, who told them that he had driven two men and a woman to certain house. One of the men said the lady was ill, and carried her into the house in his arms. The husband and conductor went to the house, and were told by them that the men had engaged a room, and after awhile had left, saying that the lady was tired and unwell, and husband found his wife almost made and in a raving state. She had been drugged in the carriage. And then outraged and robbed of her diamonds, and even of her wearing apparel. As soon as possible she was removed to her home in Boston, but has suffered terribly in mind and body ever since, and will probably never recover from the shock of that terrible night. Her family have tried to keep the facts from the public, and much money has been spent, and the best detectives in the East employed, to discover the two villains, without success. Not a clue to their identity has been found. The primary object of the men was probably to rob their victim of her money and jewelry.

Utica, N. Y., July 29.—Inquiry at the police station, railroad depot and other places fails to give any light on the sensational report in a New York Sunday paper of the outrage on a woman being outraged and robbed in Utica.

Providence, R. I., July 29.—The Bulletin prints the following:—We are sorry to hear from a gentleman acquainted with the circumstances that the report of a cruel outrage upon a highly respectable Boston lady, travelling on the New York Central, is true in all material circumstances.

A Utica dispatch attempts to discredit the story, but there is no doubt of the fact.

LITTLE GIRL BURNT TO DEATH.

Her Parents Look On, Powerless to Lend Help.

Kerwood, July 29.—A three-years old daughter of John Morgan, Esq., ex-Reeve of Adelaide, was burnt to death in her grandfather's barn, about a mile from here, yesterday afternoon. The scene was most heartrending, the barn being in view of her father's house. The father and mother could only look on and see her perish; the flames were so fierce that no help could be given.

THE BOAT RACE.

The Contest Again Postponed.

St. John, N. B., July 29, 9.15 a.m.—Weather fine and clear, wind changed to southeast. More favorable for race to-day.

St. John, N. B., July 29.—The weather is fine to-day, and a light wind from the south. The water on the race course is smoother than at any time since Thursday, and conditions favorable for the race. There is some talk of having the race rowed on the St. John River should the Kennebecasis be rough.

St. John, N. B., July 29, 6.10 p.m.—Wind falling; water still a little rough.

St. John, N. B., July 29, 6.30 p.m.—Race postponed till to-morrow.

Yellow Fever.

New Orleans, La., July 29.—The President of the Board of Health says yellow fever exists here to such an extent as to compel the people to issue clear bills of health to vessels leaving port. The Board reports the total cases of yellow fever at 90; deaths, 33.

An Indian Tragedy.

THE COMING GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The selection of the Marquis of Lorne as the successor to Lord Dufferin, as Governor-General, cannot fail to be pleasing to the people of Canada. Apart from his capacity for public business, which was well illustrated during his Secretaryship in India, under his father, the Duke of Argyle, he is a son-in-law of the Queen, and as such has peculiar relations with British subjects in Canada. It is true that when his name was mentioned some time since as a likely successor to Lord Dufferin, it was objected that there would of necessity be a species of second-hand court at Ottawa, and that the trappings of "royalty" would be tacked on to the plain and simple proceedings to which we have been accustomed. Of course, such an objection was designed to tickle the ears of the unthinking, for there is no reason why Princess Louise should not prove as acceptable here as her illustrious parent has been during her long and beneficial career at the central seat of government, in England. Princes are not in Canada, nor are we much in love with republican institutions, as seen in their development in the States, as to be offended at a spice of royalty among ourselves. Indeed, the fact that the Marquis of Lorne will bring with him a daughter of the Queen as wife is one which is altogether in his favor. It indicates the personal approval of her Majesty, and that approval will weigh not a little with Canadians at home. Besides, it is seen by the fact that he has been selected for the important position by no less a personage than Lord Beaconsfield is of itself a fact that carries great weight. That statesman has so often proved his excellent capacity in relation to affairs that when he sends the eldest son of the Duke of Argyle to us as governor, a responsible one which our people will not lightly regard. It has been the fashion among us to give every Governor-General credit for the best intentions, and seldom has it been that there has arisen any just cause for disapproval. And the Marquis of Lorne will be received in the same generous spirit that was. He will be welcomed among us in a frank and hearty way for his own sake, in the full belief that he will execute the trust confided to him faithfully and to the general advantage, while his connection with the Queen by so near a tie will secure him a place in our affections upon grounds which are more easily alluded to than accurately expressed. It may scarcely be necessary to add that the names of the Marquis of Lorne are John George Edward Henry Douglas Sitthertand Campbell; that he was born in London in 1845, and was married, March 21, 1871, to Princess Louise, fourth, daughter of the Queen.

WHAT IS A "FAVOR"

Before descending from the platform on Saturday afternoon Mr. D. Glass took occasion to say—

"A morning paper had stated that he had received some favor from Hon. Alex. Mackenzie. He desired to give that statement an emphatic and unmistakable denial. He had never asked a favor from Sir John Macdonald, and he never received one from Mr. Mackenzie, nor had he expected one. He repeated in the most emphatic manner a complete and unqualified denial."

These be bold words, yet if they do not contain some play upon the word "favor," they are scarcely consistent with the facts as the public has had them. We would ask Mr. Glass whether he was not interested in the contract for the construction of Section No. 1 of the Pacific Telegraph Line, at a price of $107,850? This contract was let soon after Mr. Mackenzie came into power, and was awarded in face of the fact that Mr. Fuller offered to do the work for a far less sum. This contract came upon the heels of Mr. Glass' celebrated defeat in East Middlesex, when from a defeated candidate he became a Government contractor in the course of a few weeks. Yet he now declares that he had never received a favor from Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. The Ottawa Citizen of Friday comes opportunely to hand, making the following statement on this matter:—

"Another most remarkable transaction was the letting of Section 1 telegraph line to Messrs. David Glass & Co., for $107,850, when Mr. R. Fuller offered to do that work for $88,750, a difference of two hundred per cent. Mr. Fuller is a man of means and a first-class contractor. He was awarded another Section (No. 2), which was completed before any of the others. As he had to travel over the whole length of Section 1, in order to get to his section, No. 2, it would have been an easy matter for him to do the work on Section 1, and for that matter it would have been more advantageous to work both sections had they been awarded to him, besides saving the country the large amount of $69,000. Of course, Mr. Glass had to be rewarded for his treachery to the Conservative party, and that was, to be sure, the most economical way of settling the score in so far as Mr. Mackenzie was concerned."

It is now Mr. Glass' turn to speak.

"CURRENT EVENTS" AND COL. WALKER.

The writer of Current Events—an authority frequently quoted with caution by the Grits—takes occasion to have a fling at party action on account of the candidature of Col. Walker being the upshot of it in London. He thinks that when such a result is arrived at, "it is time that the electorate took the reins of power into their own hands." No doubt the appearance of Col. Walker as a candidate in the interest of the "party of purity," in the interest of those who proclaimed that their mission was to elevate "the standard of morality" among us, has done very much to discredit "Reform" throughout the country. That a person who had made himself so notorious both in and out of court, who had called down upon himself the severest strictures not only of one judge but of the bench sitting at Toronto,—should be the one selected and authorized to raise the banner of reform, was too glaring an inconsistency to pass without remark. It is an illustration of the time-honored remark that men do not expect to find figs growing on thistles, or in other words, to effect good through the medium of bad agencies. But now that it is seen that "reform" has taken Col. Walker to its bosom, honest people begin to conclude that the whole of the Grit pretences are but so many shams. They argue that if there was any man in the whole category of political aspirants whom the Reformers should have avoided it was this same Col. Walker, for they contend, "of what good is the profession of principle, of our declarations that our motives and actions are superior to those of our opponents, if after all it results in the selection of one who has done so much to discredit popular government as Col. Walker?" As a matter of fact, it would have been far better for the interests of the Reform party in general had they selected some other person as their candidate in London. There are half-a-dozen gentlemen among us who have rendered faithful service in the past, but who have never sullied their cause by acts such as those Col. Walker was a party to, anyone of whom might have been selected for the post. But, no; the "Reformers" must go out of their way to neglect old friends, in order to choose a person who was proved to be the incarnation of political immorality. The loss or gain of a single seat could be nothing to a party that has boasted of 100 majority in Parliament, and now claims that it will again sweep the country. But it was of infinite importance to them that they should not be implicated by party action with the shocking political immoralities which Col. Walker was proved to have committed. By adopting him as their candidate they have made themselves participators in his delinquencies, and have shewn that the character of a man is not of any consequence to them. It is true that the "Big Push" letter from the Hon. George Brown did a great deal to shake public confidence in Grit honesty. That Senator Simpson's declaration that he "mesmerized them in batches of fifteen at a time," led to similar conclusions. That the steel rail business; the Godwich harbor job; the Neebing Hotel swindle, and the other malversations of trust have also played their part in shaking public confidence. It may be questioned, however, if all these have done so much to injure the Reform party in its moral aspect as the selection by them of Col. Walker as candidate for London. It has shocked the sensibilities of the people, who had looked to the Reform party as an agency for good, had trusted to it to purify rather than contaminate the political atmosphere. The writer of Current Events sees in what has taken place not only a great public wrong, but a libel upon the system of government by means of party. And there is no doubt that he has some ground for his conclusion. It is a scandal, but one that falls rather upon those giving rise to it, than on a system which with all its imperfection has, in England as well as in Canada, borne good fruit, though often swept by the storms of passion. But the end is not yet. It is altogether certain that the electorate will take "the reins of power in their own hands," and that Col. Walker will not sully the Reform ranks by his presence in Parliament, though his friend Rossin and Hoskinson as the candidate at the present time is doing so much to tarnish their professions. Yes, the electorate of London is about to take good care of Col. Walker.

The catch of sardines in France this season will be larger, it is said, than it has been for many years, the little fish being unusually abundant in French waters. The method in a manner so as to shame of taking them is very simple. Nets are set in the evening, and in the morning the fish are found entangled in the meshes. They are taken off, packed in small tin boxes, filled up with fresh oil, and hermetically sealed. The boxes are next put in an iron basket, and plunged into a covered boiler of water and boiled from half an hour to an hour and a half, according to their size. After drying, labeling and placing in wooden cases, they are ready for shipment.

Why working hours in the long days of Summer should be the same as in the short days of Winter, it is difficult to understand. In July and August, from 4 to 6 o'clock in the morning are two of the coolest and most delightful hours in the day, and from 6 until 8 in the evening, for working purposes, are nearly as good. Hours might easily be arranged in many employments that would allow workmen to lie by from 11 in the morning till four in the afternoon, and make up the time in the cool mornings and evenings. A change like this would save life and health to many a sweltering workman, who seems to think it a law that never can be changed that he must labor steadily on under a mid-day sun.

Seth Green's declaration that he would make the James River so full of fish that the water would rise permanently a foot higher, has been seconded by Prof. Baird, who has invented and put in operation a method of producing fish by the million. It is proposed to hatch cod in Southern waters, where they do not naturally belong, in the hope of keeping them along the shore, so reducing the hardships of the cod-fishery—a business that is pretty much all hardship and deprivation.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL UNION.

If there be no interconmunion of trade, of interest, of sentiment between the Provinces forming the Dominion, it is clear that the existing federal arrangement stands upon but slippery ground. It is one of the merits of the "National Policy" that it is calculated to evolve interests that are now latent, as well as to stimulate those that are in existence. If Canada is to progress it must not be by Provinces, sideling, but as a united whole. For the sake of such national progress the eye of the statesman should not be directed to the interests of one Province in contradistinction to those of others. What is required is, rather, the establisment of a well-balanced system by means of which the Provinces shall be mutually supporting, that Canadian interests shall take precedence as a whole. At the present time the efforts of the Grits tend to keep the Provinces apart by refusing to recognize a community of interests. Nova Scotia is told to object to an import duty on flour, because it is urged to protect against an import duty on coal. The natural result is that Nova Scotia buys her flour from the United States, and Ontario goes Reform for coal. Were other conditions established Ontario would supply the Maritime Provinces with breadstuffs, and they would supply us with fuel. By this means we should trade among ourselves and be mutually self-sustaining. And another direct result would be found in the uprising of a large carrying trade, now falling to the profit of the States. It is they who do so much of the carrying trade for Canada in consequence of the continuance of a policy which has become to be insulted to our condition. The National Policy seeks, among other things, to amend this defect. It is a policy based not only on legal, but commercial union; a union of interests. On the one hand, the Grit idea seems to be that each province should "go on its own hook," and that the existing compact should be one enforced by law rather than cemented by affection. Such was not the principle upon which Confederation was founded. It recognised the birth of a wide-spread community of interests, which was exemplified in the building of the Intercolonial; the enlargement of the Western canals; the acquisition of the North-West country. Since those days the varied Provincial interests have become better ascertained and understood, and it is now seen that the time has come to weld the members into a whole, upon a progressive basis that is truly Canadian. On the other hand, persons in power wish to advance new persons upon the ill adage, "Divide and Conquer." They seek to play off province against province, while the Nationalists desire to strengthen by means of union. Between parties so diametrically there should be no difficulty as to choice on the part of the people.

Baron Heyking, Chief of Police at Kiev, occupying there the same position Gen. Trepoff holds at St. Petersburg, was lately killed while walking along the public street with a friend. A long knife was thrust into his side; the assassin escaped and has not been apprehended. The murder was provoked by the frequent application of a secret, dreadful, and indecent punishment of those charged with denouncing the Government. This police discipline is described as follows:—

"Some rash youth or some middle-aged man, after possibly a glass too much of vodka pathers young women together in the schools, or dabbling in the new-fangled social theories, may, in a convivial party when the samovar is gently simmering on the table, have expressed his or her opinion as to the necessity of a change of régime. The next day, or perhaps two or three days later, the luckless critic of the speaker would be invited to an interview with the Chief of Police, and would invariably be treated with every courtesy. The high official would express his regret that ingredient words should have been spoken, and leave the room, when the visitor's chair would slide from him or her, the upper half of his or her body remaining above the floor, while below unseen hands administered a flagellation, the severity of which was only equalled by its ignominy. This over, rose the trap-door would rise again, and the victim, suffering severe bodily pain, and more severe unnerving moral anguish, would be bowed out by the ever-courteous and affable Chief.

It is not much wonder that such practices as this should develop a deep rooted hatred of Russia and Russians as the only remedy itself in assassination and attempts at assassination. The present indications are that Russia is in more danger from internal troubles with a people goaded on to revolution than from any future wars.

It is stated that the new secret society of workingmen called the Black Hand, now numbers 874,000 persons in its membership, and has Clans (lodges) in every city and large town in the United States. Although politics are forbidden by the constitution, it is understood to be the back-bone of the National-Workingmen's Green-back-Labor-Reform party in the United States, and to have wielded the balance of power which has gained the Greenbackers their successes in various cities throughout the land. Their representatives say there is no truth in the report that a general strike of workingmen has been ordered for the 15th of August, or any other day.

The destruction of the flouring-mills at Minneapolis last spring has given rise to a big dispute between the mill-owners and the insurance companies, that will probably have to be settled by the Courts. The mills were burned, selected and flaked dust cut, are well washed and sprinkled with fine salt. A few hours later they are arranged in almost perpendicular rows on frames, and these are immersed again and again in the best boiling pulver oil. When sufficiently cured, the oil is drained off on zinc-covered tables sloping toward a central groove, through which the oil runs into a vessel for the purpose. The fish are then packed in the small tin boxes so well known to consumers, by women and children, sitting around the tables, and, when packed, are filled up with fresh oil, and soldered down by men. The boxes are next put in an iron basket, and plunged into a covered boiler of water and boiled from half an hour to an hour and a half, according to their size. After drying, labeling and placing in wooden cases, they are ready for shipment.

Cincinnati is determined to have cheap light, and free itself from the influence of a gas monopoly. In the three months just closed Cincinnati has "ordered up" 4,000 meters, and proposes to play it alone with kerosene. During that time over 20,000 coal oil lamps have been purchased. This oil is thrown on the troubled waters of Porkopolis, and the jovial inhabitants make light of their troubles.

The rule of the Cossacks in Roumelia has made a horrible commencement. According to the official report of a joint commission appointed to inquire into the matter, the greatest cruelties are exacted upon the defenceless population. The mutilation of men, the burning alive of women, and the outrage of young children, are among the common expedients of the new diabolism.

The German Elections.

Preparations for the Struggle To-day.

THE SOCIALIST AGITATION.

From the Berlin Free Press.

The following are the districts, with the relative strength of parties at the election in January, 1877, where the social democracy will at once enter with vigor and energy upon the campaign preparatory to the election of July 30. In 1877 the total vote of the Socialists in German was about 600,000. The best authorities believe that at the coming election they will double the number of representatives in the Reichstag:—

Majority ..... Imperialists.

It will be seen that in all the districts above named, with the exception of Waldenburg, the socialists have as opponents the progressionists and national liberals. These are the twenty-nine districts in which they will concentrate all their strength.

SOCIALISTIC APPEAL TO THE ELECTORS.

The following manifesto has been issued by the Central Committee of German Socialists in session at Hamburgo:

PARTISANS—The elections for the Reichstag take place on July 30. We have but little time for agitation. But the shorter the campaign, the more energetic must be the efforts in behalf of the Social Democratic cause. You know why the Reichstag has been dissolved. The Government wants a Parliament that will suppress the Socialists, decree new laws against the labor movement, decree new and higher taxes, renew the iron military measures which are double, strengthen the laws against public assemblies and the press—in one word, strengthen the reaction and destroy the last idea of universal suffrage. Our enemies endeavor to justify these reactionary measures because they hold the Social Democracy of Germany responsible for the two attempts by two insane persons upon the life of the eighty-one-year-old German Emperor—the same German Social Democracy which in principle abhors all murder, and has nothing in common with the two criminals.

The attempts upon the life of the Emperor, they say, must be followed by attempts upon the life of a great political party, the social democratic labor party of Germany. They desire that the people shall only do as they are bid, pay year after year more taxes notwithstanding the hard times, submit to the military yoke without murmur and abandon all their political rights to those by whom they are already governed. Everywhere the command has been given, "Down with the social democracy, down with the labor movement, down with the rights of the people! Conservatives, national liberals and progressists are all our enemies; they all believe in the same watch-word.

What is to be done? Relying upon our party programme and true to our old tactics we must hold on to the work.

"One for all, all for one." Never until now was it so necessary to enter fearlessly upon the campaign. Our victory means political and social equality and economical deliverance of the people. Our party, the party of the small middle class, the farmers and the workingmen, in young, yet, and our means are limited. We must therefore concentrate our means and our efforts upon a few districts. The strength of our party has been amply demonstrated in the election of January 10, 1877, the 30th of July will demonstrate the resistance we can offer in times like these. The manifold here names the districts given above, where the socialists are advised to concentrate their strength. Time is precious—to work, then, at once. The 30th of July will be a turning point in history of our people. See to it that it shall be a day of triumph and not of mourning. Rouse the electors everywhere, rouse the people, warn them of approaching danger, bid them to close up their ranks and resist with all the force at their command the powerful reaction, which is endeavoring to add political suffering to our social misery. Utilize the prevailing excitement in a manner so as to shame our enemies and to honor the social democracy. Patriots, we know your willingness to submit to sacrifices. Now is the hour. Agitate, agitate!

THE PERSECUTIONS OF THE PRESS—YOUNG GERMANY REBELLIOUS IN THE SCHOOLS—FAMILIES TORN ASUNDER—A DEBAUCHED STATE OF AFFAIRS.

An Sunday, July 7, the police of Berlin confiscated and seized the electoral circular issued by the Central Socialist Committee, notwithstanding the fact that the organs of the Socialists had already published the document as being couched in exceedingly moderate language. The Berlin Free Press of the following day maintains that the carriers who delivered the circulars were set upon by the police, that the circulars were rudely taken from them in the public streets, and hence complaints will be lodged against this unlawful proceeding before the Royal Police Department. In Frankfort, a carrier of Socialistic newspapers was arrested, notwithstanding the fact that he had in his possession a license permitting him to distribute printed documents. He was kept in prison during the entire day, and released at night without even an explanation as to the cause of his arrest.

A PAPER HAVING ALL ITS EDITIONS IN JAIL.

From the Dresden Volks Zeitung.

On Tuesday last (July 9) George Vollmar, the editor of this paper, was arrested in Lössnitz—where he had gone to visit his sick wife—on a requisition of the Dresden Court, transported to this place and incarcerated during the first night in a cell with a common criminal. On the preceding Friday one of our sub-editors, Friedrich Ehlsam, was arrested in the editorial rooms. The cause of this arrest is unknown. Letter bearers and citizens! the reaction thinks that they can frighten you and prevent Dresden from being represented by a social democrat. Show them how terribly they are mistaken; show them on the 30th July that the great majority of the Dresden population are in accord with the sentiment:—"Long live the Social Democracy."

A MEETING AT FIVE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING.

From the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung.

To show the extraordinary energy displayed by the social democrats in their canvass for the coming elections an incident ought to be mentioned that took place near the Halle Gate the other morning. A new row of buildings is in progress there, where about nine hundred men are employed. Two social democrats had placed themselves as early as five o'clock in the morning in conspicuous positions for the purpose of addressing the workingmen as they were about to commence the labors of the day. The builder and contractor, hearing the speeches, called two or three of his workingmen together and urged them to tell their comrades not to meddle with the elections and to drive the social democrats from the places where they were then addressing the crowd. Several laborers thereupon set upon the orators and maltreated them in such a manner that they had to be taken away in a wagon. One of them, even after having been wounded, exclaimed, "Those are my principles and I will die for them!"

POWER OF THE SOCIALISTIC PRESS.

To give an idea of the popularity of socialistic ideas in Germany on the eve of election evidence is produced to show the extraordinary increase in subscriptions to the socialistic press. The Brunswick Volkszeitung announces that on a single day, June 23, it received 400 new subscribers. The circulation of the Hamburg-Altona Volksbote has wonderfully increased during the past few weeks.

A SCENE IN A BERLIN SCHOOL.

In one of the common schools in Berlin, during the hour devoted to religious exercises, the teacher impressed upon his pupils the importance of reverence for the divinity, without which there could be no respect for the authorities, as was shown by the recent attempts on the Emperor. Hardly had these words been spoken, when a boy rose in his place and said, "My father desires me to request you not to denounce the Social Democracy any more." The teacher asked him if his father was a Social Democrat, and the boy said, "Yes, and so am I." The teacher was about to punish the young fellow, when all at once any number of boys rose in their seats and proclaimed themselves to be Social Democrats. Since this incident, and others which have occurred in various Berlin schools the Government has ordered the school inspectors to hold conferences with the rectors so as to concert measures to stamp out Social Democracy from the schools. In Bromberg a pupil of the Seminary has been expelled for uttering Socialistic ideas in the presence of his classmates.

WHOLESALE ARRESTS—CITIZENS DRIVEN TO DESPAIR AND SUICIDE.

From the New York Volks Zeitung.

It is impossible to publish all the reports that reach us from every part of Germany of numerous and cruel punishments inflicted upon those charged with "insults to His Majesty," and we only give a few to show the fearful state of political affairs in our fatherland. The punishments already meted out aggregate many years of imprisonment. Verily, indeed, a sad sign of the times.

In Lutgig, a man accused with this offence has hung himself in prison.

The wife of a mason in Passewalk, upon being arrested for words spoken against the Kaiser, was kept under surveillance in her own house, upon procuring a doctor's certificate that she was enceinte. In the meantime her husband, who had been previously arrested, upon hearing of his wife's fate, became deranged and committed suicide in prison.

Upon his body was found a letter to the Crown Prince praying him to order the release of his wife. The poor woman has, however, since been condemned to six months' imprisonment.

In Hanau a meeting of the social democracy was broken up by the police.

In Pomerania the Imperial representative has issued a proclamation calling upon his subordinates to arrest and hold as prisoners all those uttering seditious language against king or country, religion or church. All keepers of inns and saloons are held responsible for language spoken in their places of resort, and the rigors of the law are to be applied to those proprietors who quietly listen to thereunto like made by their guests.

The Berlin Free Press warns people not to enter into conversation with strangers at public places. Often they are policemen in civil dress, who attempt to drag them into political discussions, and also to lie on their guard against pedlars offering photographs of Hoedel and Nobiling.

Bootblacks, painters, railroad employes, cobblers, students, restaurateurs, and even numerous women, have been condemned to one, two and three years' imprisonment in Marienburg, Elbing, Gerlitz and other places.

ENGLAND'S NEW SCHEMES.

The Development of Asia—The Euphrates Railway—Ambitious Projects.

From a London Letter.

The Globe, which has become an author ity since it published the Anglo-Russian treaty, describes the policy which is to emerge from the eastern chaos as one that will make the name of England a household word from Constantinople to Calcutta, "and those who have enterprised a mayhem and abandon all their political rights to those by whom they are already governed. Everywhere the command has been given, —Down with the social democracy, down with the labor movement, down with the rights of the people! Conservatives, national liberals and progressists are all our enemies; they all believe in the same watch-word.

"The Riders of the Plains"

THE NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE, CANADA.

I.

Oh! let the Fife rise shrill and clear,
The ever welcome wind,
Ring out the bells and sandfire,
Its stinging order sound,
Our horses toss their tossled locks,
And chafe against the reins—
Ring out—ring out the marching call
For the Riders of the Plains.

II.

Over many a league of prairie wild
Our rallying way did lie,
Our foes were many and the fiercest tribes
That roam the mountain chock
The Riders of the Plains.

III.

We track the spreading cactus land,
Where lost to white,men's ken,
We startle the mountain sheep on wild,
And fight the a in their den;
For whatever our destination be,
The bugle sounds its stirring,
The marching order's heard up
The Riders of the Plains.

IV.

The Fire king stalks the broad prairie,
And hastens in its use,
The rushing wall of flame and smoke
Grolling fierce behind,
Tis there we shoot' defiance,
And mock its fiery control,
For safe the cleared circle stands
The Riders of the Plains.

V.

For us no cheerful hostelries
Their welcome gates unfold,
No pampered board, or downy bed,
Await our troop to hold.
Beneath the starry canopy
At eve, when daylight wanes,
There lie the hardy sun'sborn,
The Riders of the Plains.

VI.

But that which fries the courage sore
Of horseman and of steed,
Is want of kindred water,
Hard by, where is our need,
We'll dare, like lions, where or befalls,
Of perils, hardships, pains—
Oh! God, deny not water to
The Riders of the Plains!

VII.

We muster but three hundred
In all this "Great Lone Land,"
Which stretches from St. Lawrence's wave
To where the Rockeys stand;
But not our heart doth falter,
No coward votes complains,
True for the true abandons are
The Riders of the Plains.

VIII.

In England's mighty Empire
Some men must take his stand;
Some must let world be fame,
Some have it well by hand,
It's not our part to face her foes—
Then 'tis no remains!
What duty does our country give
To the Riders of the Plains!

X.

Our mission is to plant the right
Of foretich freedom here,
Restrain the lawless savage
And civilize the wild,
And if we fall and dare not trust
To hold these vast domains,
Will but these hundred mounted men—
"The Riders of the Plains."

OR,

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

There are persons living who remember Major Brett, brown coat, amethyst breastpin, wig, and all, a Saunr of the boulevards in the days of Louis Philippe.

Half an hour's chat with the old man is as amusing as a chapter of Balkes—Harlene, but with a goodly sprinkling of Horace Walpole's spite. What dynasties he has seen tother, what men and women of all, what hopes, what loves, what hatreds, pass to their common grave! And how clearly he remembers details, great and small, social and political—such details, especially, as throw light upon his own Walpolean views of human nature!

Some octogenarians you will meet, admirable mixtures of fifty-years-old gossip, but dead to the hearsays of the hour. Not so the little old major. He reads the winters, as regularly as Frederick Conyngham himself, in the south, and is acquainted with all the knowable (some few unknowable) characters between Marseilles and Naples. An adept in every kind of scandal, is scandals matrimonial, the specialty of the district, he revels especially. The precise words that A and B said to each other for the last time—what they wrote, what they thought they ought to have thought, what they did not think—in all these delicate, subtle strokes, master-touches, over which your mere vulgar Paul Pry inwardly sympathizes, he is unerring. An old bachelor himself, a bachelor in the story of whose fourscore years of life no whisper of a love affair finds place, he has an absolute genius for chronicling the marriage hopes and fears, the settlements, unions, jealousies, separations, of other men.

Lady Austen is in the enjoyment of just nine hundred a year. You understand, my dear madam, that this income is stated as strictly between ourselves? Nine hundred a year, representing some eighteen thousand pounds of capital, over which her control is absolute. Well, she and her son do not get on—

"Lady Austen has a son?"

"A very fine young fellow of one or two and twenty, but who does not care for the Reverend Laurence Biron naturally. If he had chosen it, Biron, I suppose might have made the nice hundred a year his own a twelvemonth and a day after the Lord's death. But he did not choose it. There, perhaps, one respects the fellow. He did not without a struggle, sell his neck to such a bondage."

"Mr. Laurence Biron seems to me to have so sadly little of the clergyman about him," deplores Miss Wylie, with pathos.

Old Major Brett shrugs his shoulders.

"Biron is a bit of a chameleon, no doubt. Carries an assortment of neckties with him in his portmanteau, and is prepared at any moment to twist whatever color it may be most expedient to suit under. In the society of miladi he has to wear the regulation four-in-hand collar, with cord-tassels and heels. Lady Austen is a stanch upholder of liveries and titles. She uses the word 'prince' for 'the Duke's'—R. C. H'—on her invitation-cards; has been known to dismiss a servant for addressing her otherwise than as 'miladi;' and never speaks of Biron without giving him the profit of reverend. That is how they originally came by their cognomens—his 'reverence' and 'miladi.'"

"His reverence does not look particularly reverend at this moment," Miss Wylie remarks, with severity.

"No; as Mr. Conyngham's sailor we behold Mr. Biron a layman full-blown. When he has married a wife with three hundred pounds, he will have the delightful liberty of reading a layman Service!"

"Not," says Miss Wylie, emphatically, "a very irreparable loss to the Church of England or any church!"

"When he marries a wife with forty thousand pounds," repeats Major Brett in his hook nosed his thin old lips that might well ghill Laurence Biron's blood could he believe in it), "My dear lady, I do not pretend to greater wisdom than my fellows, but I should like to take any number of bets, to give any amount of odds, in the matter of his reverence (aforesaid), one fresh sorry for the man) and that forty thousand pounds."

"She has not got it!" Miss Jet Conyngham's face is her only feature" exclaims Miss Wylie, eagerly.

Major Brett passes his fingers—smooth, little, white fingers they are—through the wavelets of his peruke.

"Jet! Jet! displays one half the sense I give him credit for, he will keep his ambition within the limits of the well known Lady Austen's comfortable income, those good, solid nine hundred pounds a year, are facts beyond the reach of cavil."

But Miss Wylie's thirst for knowledge is not to be quenched by such generalities.

"You know more than you choose to tell me, bad man," she declares. Hitting a playful forefinger of reproach. "Why, I have heard you say that you and Mr. Conyngham have been partners, more or less, for the last five and-twenty years. How can you say you have no notion as to whether his daughter is an heiress?"

"Who says that I am uncertain?" returns the major, with an air of innocent frankness. "I am, on the contrary, perfectly positive that Frederick Conyngham's daughter is an heiress. He married—let me see, what was it?—he married Miss Blake, of London in May. Palmerston was premier—one of the fullest seasons ever known—exactly four-and-twenty years ago next spring. Conyngham married a lady all the young fellows in Florence were wild about—a West Indian octoroon."

"An octoroon! Well, now you mention it," says Miss Wylie, giving a beaming glance at her rose-and-white English face—"now you mention it, I do see a decided creaminess about the poor girl's lips."

"Do you, indeed?" cries the old major, with a chuckle. "There, my dear madam, you have the advantage of me. I see no trace of coarseness, no hint whatsoever of the negro, in Miss Jet Conyngham. But, then, I'm getting old—old, and my sight fails me! Yes, Conyngham married this West Indian lady, and, by the will of an uncle who died six months after the marriage, the sum of forty thousand pounds was left strictly tied up to her child or children. There is no manner of doubt as to the facts."

"And still you would make any number of adverse bets with regard to Mr. Laurence Biron and the forty thousand pounds?"

"Still I would make any number of adverse bets with regard to Biron's chance of possessing the forty thousand pounds—Ah, what have we there? Open windows—draughts!" And the little old man springs to his feet, not sorry, it may be, of a diversion that enables him to effect a retreat from Miss Wylie. "The great window-war commencing! I must go and stand by—see that there is fair fighting and no foul blows on both sides."

CHAPTER VII.

MOONLIGHT, OR ASPETUATION?

Whoever has passed his winters in any of the monster sanitariums, the great hotel hospitals along the Mediterranean coast, must have learned that society in such lanitudes is prone to be factious. Tis like life on shipboard. A hundred or more chance-assorted individuals find themselves bound, during a certain inevitable number of months, to eat three meals a day in company, to exchange civilities, to play whist together, to consult each other's taste, to listen to each other's music, to laugh at each other's jokes. And, by the time every man has well learned his neighbor's name, the human nature of the hundred chance-asserted individuals begins to show itself. Two or three marked characters, people gifted by Nature with the dangerous talent for leadership, have emerged a head and shoulders above the crowd. They have followers. they have rivals, they have deserters—the sport of factions one fairly cannot, and no one knows whom he may call his friend. The people who think as you do, the people who do not think as you do, are alike unreliable. What principles, what adherence of principles, can stand upright under the combined influences of absolute idleness, and of little cherished personal likings or dislikings perpetually trodden under foot?

Thus, you start for your afternoon's walk among the olives, on terms of amity with your next door neighbor, Number Nineteen, dirted from you, alas! by the entire thinnest partition of lath and plaster, a structure all too frail for human friendship to depend upon. You return, looking forward to your quiet hour of writing, smoking, or sleeping, before dinner, and find Number Nineteen has started an harmonium! He was professed a degree of sympathy with your tastes, and who knows that he has got you, helpless, in his power for the next three months to come, has started an harmonium!

You try, weakly, to appeal to his finer feelings. You are delicate, and your hour of sleep before dinner does more for you than food. These wet domains. What but these hundred accredited men—

Sarnia, July 29.—The Ontario (Captain Reverteau) arrived yesterday morning from Duluth, with about 150 passengers, part of whom were transferred to the propeller Asia at Sarnia for Detroit; and as the Asia passed down the river, the air was filled with cheers, and from nearly every window of either boat handkerchiefs were waving a last adieu. In addition, she had a large cargo—16 tons merchandise—from Cockburn Isle.

The engineer of the Ontario reports the following from the Northwest:—"At Duluth the spring has been late, harvest fields of the West and Northwest are—Iowa, Wisconsin and the south-western part of Minnesota, higher and rust will cause a shrinkage of 17 per cent. Lakes will be a large yield. For the northern part of Minnesota on the Saint Paul & Pacific, and Northern Pacific Railways, and the whole of Red River valley, the yield will be above the average, and the acreage must in excess of previous years.

At Monkata, Minn., despite the fact that the country is flooded with tramps, the farmers are paying from $1 to $5 per day for help in the field.

At Prince Arthur Lacrlag, tenders for the rebuilding of the Neebing Hotel have been opened. E. H. Ingalls got the contract at $3,200. The building will be converted into offices and a private dwelling for resident officer Mr. Bethune. It is also proposed to build an elevator here. Bonds will be issued by the town. The Bonding evening there was a regular pitched battle between the Orangemen and Catholic members of the fire brigade, the latter being in the majority. Several were injured, but no fatalities occurred. The affair was the result of an old feud.

Mr. McDonald's barn was burned to the ground on the farm of Hugh Fraser, 77 years of age, was burned to death in the flames. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, suspicion having been attached to one Wm. Richards for starting the fire, and who has been committed to jail to await trial.

Silver Islet the week before last turned out eighteen barrels of concentrated and ten barrels of rough silver ore, valued at $20,000. This is the best week's work for a week in two years.

The school in St. Marie the new schoolhouse is almost completed; cost, $7,000. It is a large and substantial structure, built by Mr. Brampton, architect, and the taste of the inhabitants who pay for it.

At Marquette, Hitchman & Co. have bought Echo Lake Iron Mine, and are working it with a strong force. Col. Rhodes, of Quebec, has bought the interest in the Silver Lead Mine, of Colin Campbell, of New York, for $50,000. Parker's Landing on Thessalon River, Peterboro County, has found the richest deposits of mica ever found on both sides for several hours with the greatest vigor and determination.

The family of the Carys, from whom their side lurgyes its name, are tall, athletic, powerfully built men. They force their adversaries into a house by the roadside. Hone forbade them to pursue the vanquished into the house; and so, after a short breathing time, the beaten men came out, and the fight was renewed. The contest. This took place six or seven times. At last Mike Daly's father had the advantage, and gave with a knife—an occurrence impossible in the old days of the shillelagh and the road. His brother Philip received several slats in the head, and a son in law has reduced him to poverty. One of the performers who got stuck at Glenville for want of funds, said that he had always heard that if a man could go anywhere else he could go home, but he had been trying to get home for two weeks and failed. Thus ends the career of the great the circus," remarked Major Brett to me from the sawdust fraternity a and and

Average Yield of Eggs.

Poultry Yard.

Though in exceptional instances individual hens will lay 150 to 200 eggs per annum, yet when several hundred head are kept together the average is generally not over ten or eleven dozen. When we kept 600 fowls ourselves, embracing eight or ten different breeds, and counted the eggs daily, year after year, we averaged never over 130 eggs per hen per year, and in some instances as low as 110. But we believe that by prolonged selection of the best layers, grown for three generations, and skilful management, hundreds of fowl can be made to yield an average of a gross per annum.

A man named Favret, but known by several aliases, was lately sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for two years in Paris for raising the denomination of French Treasury bonds. He was connected with a band of swindlers engaged in this business, and exposed them to the Government for revenge for some personal wrong, hoping, of escape with a light sentence in consideration of the evidence which he gave. In this he was sadly mistaken.

AN OFFICIAL DILEMMA.—Traveller.—"Hi! Guard! Have you seen a man walking about with one eye, of the name of Wellington?" Guard (promptly).—"N-no, sir, I don't think so at all." What was the name of the other eye, sir?"

We do not judge men by what they are in themselves, but what they are relatively to us.

Average Yield of Eggs.

Poultry Yard.

Though in exceptional instances individual hens will lay 150 to 200 eggs per annum, yet when several hundred head are kept together the average is generally not over ten or eleven dozen. When we kept 600 fowls ourselves, embracing eight or ten different breeds, and counted the eggs daily, year after year, we averaged never over 130 eggs per hen per year, and in some instances as low as 110. But we believe that by prolonged selection of the best layers, grown for three generations, and skilful management, hundreds of fowl can be made to yield an average of a gross per annum.

A man named Favret, but known by several aliases, was lately sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for two years in Paris for raising the denomination of French Treasury bonds. He was connected with a band of swindlers engaged in this business, and exposed them to the Government for revenge for some personal wrong, hoping, of escape with a light sentence in consideration of the evidence which he gave. In this he was sadly mistaken.

AN OFFICIAL DILEMMA.—Traveller.—"Hi! Guard! Have you seen a man walking about with one eye, of the name of Wellington?" Guard (promptly).—"N-no, sir, I don't think so at all." What was the name of the other eye, sir?"

We do not judge men by what they are in themselves, but what they are relatively to us.

TOO MUCH CIRCUS.

What Befel a Michigan Doctor who was Beguiled into the Show Business.

A letter from the Red river of the north to a St. Paul paper says: The country is full of fragments of Dr. A. W. Hagerty's Paris circus and its penniless and destitute members are straying all around from Glyndon to Winnipeg. The proprietor of this great show is a plain and unassuming physician, who has for many years practiced his profession at Mount Clemens, Michigan, where one of his daughters, a very fine lady, became attached to and married a showman by the name of Dwyer, to whom the doctor became a victim, and the father-in-law returns home in a sad financial condition, as he is penniless, and the accumulation of a lifetime has melted away. The story, as told our reporter in a pitiable case, is the doctor says Dwyer, after shamefully abusing his wife, left her and went to Canada with another woman, who committed suicide, when he returned to his legitimate companion, and professing the deepest contrition promised reformation. After the remaining some time he suggested to the doctor that if he had money to start a circus he could earn a competency for both of them, but he refused absolutely to have anything to do with Dwyer until both his own wife and Dwyer's persuaded him to enter into the arrangement, as they thought it would work a reformation in the reprobate. He started with an appropriation of $600 and continued to advance until he had expended all he had and he could raise on a mortgage of his property. The show then started up Lake Superior. When they landed at Duluth they were already in straitened circumstances, but kept along to Fargo, their condition becoming more desperate as they advanced. At Fargo they concluded on a trip to Winnipeg, where they expected to retrieve their losses and get a new start, as it was the first circus ever introduced to the Winnipeggers. It was well patronized, and the doctor says that only for the bad conduct of Dwyer, who managed the affair, they would have left Winnipeg with $1,000 clear gains. The first bad conduct of the manager bought the company into bad repute, and the result was the company was broken up and the performers and all hands are now left without a cent. All the manhigs of the show are now getting back as best they can by leaving their baggage in pledge for fare, while some of the party have organized small shows and perform in the small towns along the route. The doctor with his wife and two daughters left Fisher's Landing on Thursday evening for St. Paul, and says he gets home with his remains like practice of medicine and that one dose of circus life is all the medicine he wants. Two bank and son in law has reduced him to poverty. One of the performers who got stuck at Glenville for want of funds, said that he had always heard that if a man could go anywhere else he could go home, but he had been trying to get home for two weeks and failed. Thus ends the career of the great the circus," remarked Major Brett to me from the sawdust fraternity a and and

TIPPERARY TROUBLES.

A Forty Years' Feud Regarding the Age of an Irish Bull—An Innovation in the Method of Warfare.

A letter from Dublin, July 10.—Tipperary, with the neighboring district of Limerick county, is the cause of all the Irish faction fights. For the last three quarters of a century all serious outbreaks of agrarian, political, educational, penal—have been at work to exercise the full spirit. The late Cathedral archaeology of Cashel (Dr. Leahy) labored hard at this holy task, and it was found somewhat fruitful. But quite lately there have been some savage encounters, which show that the evil still lives. Nor does it take that time for an improved the mode of fighting. Formerly the shillelagh was the favorite weapon, which might under stress of circumstances be supplemented with a stone. But nowadays any weapon is pressed into service. Even reaping hooks and pitchforks. A curious point in connection with this latest Irish outbreak is, while it is always set down as a peculiarly Irish pastime, its home is not in Connaught—in the least Irish county in the island, so far as race and pure Celtic blood is concerned—but in Tipperary, where nine inches in two centuries and a half ago in the eyes of Cromwell's troopers, and has settled down there by thousands. From those Puritan ancestors, however, have sprung descendants who have given the English Government more trouble than the people of any other county in the country. It is an old story of the conquerors becoming more Irish than the Irish themselves.

FORTHCOMING PICNICS.—To-day the Fall Fair and London East Sunday Schools picnic at the Port. On Wednesday (Simcoe's civic holiday) the people of that place participate in an excursion to the same place. On Friday, the Union Methodist Sunday Schools of this city, Petersville and New Brighton, hold their annual picnic at Port Stanley, and on Tuesday next, St. Paul's Sabbath School will visit the same place, on the occasion of their annual picnic.

INDEPENDENT FORESTRY.—A new Court of this Order was instituted in Tilsonburg on Friday evening last. The following are the officers for the present term:—Bros. W. R. Hardy, W.C. R.; George Sinclair, V. C. R.; Norman D. Brower, Secretary; Charles Brownell, Financial Secretary; Thomas Brown, Treasurer; William Weir, S. W.; H. Weatherwax, J. W.; M. D. Crooker, S. B.; Herbert Hogan, J. B.; Rev. G. C. Nicholls, Chaplain; Dr. L. C. Sinclair, Court Physician.

LODGE OF INSTRUCTION.—The St. Catharines News of Saturday says:—"Last evening the M. W. G. M. of the I. O. O. F., Dr. Campbell, of London, opened a Lodge of Instruction, which was largely attended. The work was thoroughly exemplified in a most interesting and highly instructive manner. In addition to the attendance from the various lodges in the city, several brethren from Thorold were present. The Doctor spoke highly of the efficiency and standing of the Order in St. Catharines, and complimented them upon their work."

A DISCREDITABLE CHARACTER.—On the excursion train from Port Stanley last evening, a colored man named Samuel Stevenson, who had been indulging freely in "forty-rod" at the Port during the day, discharged a revolver several times in one of the cars, and threatened to shoot James E. Marshall for remonstrating with him. Stevenson's brother also annoyed himself by repeating the experiment. On arriving at London, Samuel was given into the custody of Constable Logan, of the G. W. R., and remanded to the cells to await trial.

A DISAPPOINTED AUDIENCE.—For some time past it has been extensively billed that a grand celestial performance of great novelty, in the shape of a partial eclipse of the sun, was to take place yesterday afternoon, at 5 o'clock. Preparations had been made for some time, and a number of smoked glasses were in readiness to view the phenomenon; but to the utter disappointment of the public, the eclipse failed to put in an appearance. Five o'clock came, and with it clouds and continuous rain; but the sun was not visible, and what adds to the general indignation is that no apology was made for the absence of the chief actor in the long advertised drama.

THE CLEVELAND VISITORS.—A meeting of the Reception Committee of the Methodist Churches of London, appointed to make arrangements for receiving the visitors from the First Methodist Church of Cleveland, was held yesterday morning in the Lecture Hall of the Queen's Avenue Church. His Worship the Mayor and Messrs. Thomas McCormick and J. H. Flock, were appointed a deputation to proceed to Port Stanley and receive the excursionists, who will arrive here at 8.25 this morning. The visitors will be entertained at the Queen's Lecture Hall, when some addresses will be delivered, after which they will disperse throughout the city and view the various attractions.

POLICE COURT PECULIARS.—At this Court yesterday, the P. M. presiding, Owen Young, an elderly man, who was found by Constable Templar sleeping on the City Weigh Scales at midnight, was ordered to pay a fine of $1 for his bed. He hadn't the needful, and went down for ten days. Thos. Walsh, who was charged by Mrs. Quick, of Adelaide street, with threatening to beat her, was fined $1 and $4.60 costs; or twenty-one days in jail. He dropped down. George Tallen put in his second appearance as a drunkard on Saturday evening, and will be out of jail ten days from that date. Wellington Dean was charged with being a vagrant. He was allowed to go home, and ordered to remain in doors in future. Joe Hertley, for being a thief, was remanded until the 31st for examination.

THEFT BY A SERVANT GIRL.—Detective Flair arrested a young woman at the Grand Trunk station yesterday afternoon, on the strength of a telegram from Chief of Police Fewings, of St. Thomas. She was brought to the Central Station, and subsequently taken by Mr. Fewings to St. Thomas for examination. She gave her name as Margaret McFarlane, but her real name is Cleveland, and she is charged with the larceny of a lady's jacket from Mrs. Putnam, of St. Thomas. She admits having the jacket, and says that she forgot to give it back to the owner. It appears this is the second time that she has been arrested for a similar offence. When taken she was on her way to Goderich.

The Abbot of the monastery of Sept Fonds, in France, a branch of the most austere of all the orders of monks, is a nobleman by birth, and has bestowed a colossal fortune upon his order. He is the youngest abbot in the church, is strikingly handsome, his ruddy complexion betraying no sign of the severe austerities of his life. His dress is not distinguishable from that of the simplest friar in the house any but for a little piece of violet ribbon on the breast of his gown bestowing his rank as abbot. While honorable in a splendid degree to visitors, especially foreigners, he has the reputation of being as abstemious as any of the brotherhood.

A Challenge to A. C. Reid.

To the EDITOR of the Free Press.

SIR,—Your will oblige me by inserting the following if space permits:—To A. C. Reid, of Parkhill.—I hereby challenge you to compete with me, for the sum of from $50 to $100 a-side at the following games:—Running high jump, running long jump, standing jump, hurdle race (one to two hundred yards, three feet hurdles and one-quarter mile race), and the winner of the majority to take the money. In sincerity thereof meet me at the City Hotel, on Monday, August 5th, between the hours of one and six p. m., to draw up articles of agreement, the rules of Caledonian Societies to govern. (With or without weights.)

Iced Buttermilk.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—It is a matter of surprise that iced buttermilk has never been introduced as a beverage into this city. As a summer drink it is cooling, cathartic and healthful, far surpassing the various decoctions that are so largely consumed by our thirsty population. If some enterprising student would introduce this beverage to the notice of the public, being careful to keep his stock fresh from day to day and thoroughly cold, he would be surprised to find how large would be the demand for it. In southern cities it is a leading article in all drinking saloons, and nothing is more popular with those who avoid stimulants.

Bishop McLean at the Conference.

At a recent meeting of the Pan-Anglican Conference at London, the Bishop of Saskatchewan (the Right Rev. John McLean, D. D.) addressed those present upon the state of his diocese, which, with Moosonee and Athabaska, had lately formed out of the old Diocese of Rupert's Land. The four sees now formed a province, of which the Bishop of Rupert's Land was Metropolitan and the Archbishop of Canterbury Primate. When, in 1866, at the invitation of the Bishop of Rupert's Land, he became Archdeacon of the New River Settlement, the journey from Western Canada occupied him three weeks, whereas it could now be completed in five days. Bishop McLean spoke in glowing terms of the material wealth of his diocese, the fertility of its prairies, and the extent of its coal fields, and he urged the duty of sending out the Church fully equipped from the first to deal with the vast immigration which was certain before long to pour into the country. Besides, we owed something to the original possessors of the soil. There were in his diocese nearly five and twenty thousand Indians, for whom he was unable to provide a single missionary, whereas he found that the Roman Catholics were well supplied with men and money, and were making great efforts for their conversion. He could not help saying that at missionary meetings there was too great a disposition to use the language of congratulation when that of humiliation would be far more appropriate. (Cheers.)

"OUR PROMINENT MEN."

A Bulldozed Biographer Reappears on the Scene.

Singular Concatenation of Nervous Symptoms.

Etymological Research as a Substitute for History.

The following was intended for the columns of the Advertiser, but its publication in that organ having been prevented or delayed by unforeseen difficulties, advance sheets have been kindly submitted to the FREE PRESS by the talented author, in order that a public famishing for the continuation of the series of sketches under this heading may not suffer any longer deprivation :—

"The series of notices of "Prominent Men," which we began some weeks ago, has come to a sudden collapse, for the reasons given in the note which we produce below. We had injudiciously intimated a week ahead the subject next to be capitated upon, and much to our chagrin, received the following letter by the next post :—

"To the Editor of the TIMES.

"SIR,—I have read with trembling the announcement of your intention to print next week some biographical notes of my much esteemed, I may say distinguished, friend, Mr. H ——t R ——d. Dear sir, permit me—as a friend. Are you aware of what you are about to do? You cannot be. I appeal to you as a man. I assure you nothing is farther from the wishes of my honest friend than any printed history at this time which, to do him full justice, must necessarily include certain names and references, the "damnable iteration" of which by a corrupt and partizan press has already driven him well-nigh distracted. Why, sir, at the bare mention of the word "Neebing," I have seen him start up in a manner betraying great agitation, and on one occasion, at once vehement and sinister, and I feel sure that compliment to his abilities as a writer would be worse relished than to ask him to spell "Kaministiquia." These words, sir, may be all very well to say that there is "nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream," but mayapple would just as well have two plates of cream.

"Come ye!" cried Crooked Stick; "I brought you here to obey orders, not to go your own way."

"O, I'm not accustomed to that," said the honest valuator.

"Ye-aich, eh!" Then I'll Custem ye!" yelled Crooked Stick, with a threatening gestrure.

"O, it that's your lay, I'm your pal. But what's to become of Strathy?"

"Ha!" exclaimed the trapper with a bitter laugh. "I'll settle him! Keep mum, and as no conundrums. Let's shake."

And so they made it up. Whether the compact was ever executed or not is one of those knotty points upon which history is dumb. And so must we be.

NOTE.—We have retained the services of the Times contributor, and will condense the series in this paper. The subject of our next biographical sketch will be—But no! We shall not give it away.—ED. F. P.

"Oh! yes," said an old lady, "the modern cook stove is a great invention, and when my boy James gets through his studies in practical engineering, so he can come home and run it, I'll buy one of 'em; but not afore."

Selected Turf Notes.

Pilot won the mile and three-quarter dash at Saratoga on Saturday. Fusion fell at the third hurdle, and threw his jockey, Dick Young, who has been insensible ever since.

The thoroughbred bay mare Inspiration, foaled 1870, by imp. Warminster, dam Sophia, by imp. Bonnie Scotland, out of Lady Spaniel, by Gaviar, the property of Dr. Smith, of Toronto, has been laid up in ordinary for a while. A dog that had been the companion of the mare in her stall hit her on the leg, causing a temporary lameness. As the injury is not permanent, the mare will be allowed a period of rest before she is again trained for the turf.

The Buffalo Driving Park Association will hold its thirteenth annual meeting today (Tuesday), and continuing on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, and no pains have been spared to make it a success.

The thoroughbred chestnut mare Ella Wotten, 5 years, by War Dance, dam Georgia Wood, by imp. Knight, of St. George, out of Margaret Wood, by imp. Priam, the property of Mr. Ford, of Prescott, died recently from an attack of inflammation of the bowels.

A Cleveland telegram of Saturday says:—"The performance of Barus to-day in the special speed race was the most wonderful ever seen, and has placed that horse on the pinnacle of fame, so far as trotting is concerned. Owing to the heavy rain of yesterday morning, the track was far from being in first-class condition for fast time to-day; and, although John Splan, Barus' driver, had promised to equal Goldsmith Maid's 2.14 if the track was good, nobody expected that he would be able to accomplish the fact to-day, with the track still heavy from yesterday's rain. Lula and Great Eastern had also been entered in the speed purse, but both were withdrawn, the big bay horse being the only one to answer the judges' bell. No description of the heats is necessary, as they were trotted without a skip or break, the first in 2.14¼, the second in 2.15, and the third in 2.14, the time of the last heat being equalled only by Goldsmith Maid's 2.14 at Mystic Park, Boston, Sept. 2, 1874. But it should be remembered that the Maid's record, which was unapproached for nearly four years, was made in the second heat, the first mile having been done only for exercise and practice. Barus, on the contrary, was sent three heats at fearful speed, on a slow track, and trotted the third faster than either of the others, and faster than a third heat was ever trotted before. His first heat was also the fastest first heat on record, the next to the fastest three heats, and he was the fastest three consecutive heats on record, beating Goldsmith Maid's 2.16¼, 2.15¾, 2.15, at Buffalo, in 1874, by two and three quarter seconds. Thus Barus has in one race lowered the record for a first, second, third heat, and three consecutive heats. At the close of each heat in to-day's race, both horse and driver were greeted with applause, and when the white face of the big gelding went under the wire in 2.14, the entire crowd stood up and yelled itself hoarse.

BASE BALL NOTES.

The Tecumsehs and Springfields play a championship game on the Guelph grounds this afternoon.

The Oswego nine, according to the Palladium, has "gone up."

It is now rumored that Carey, of the Providence Club, is to be retired when Pike goes on the nine, and Dick Higham made captain.

The Washington Capital says:—"The idea of paying a ball-dollar to see League ball—egad, we tried our best to balance ourselves when you can see it just as well in the International, is absurd. The six League clubs are very shrewd in letting severely alone such clubs as the Mutuals, State, Tecumsehs, etc. The twenty fivecent fellows would flatten some of them out before the season was half over. There is a deal of running and scoring that people can knock the stuffing out of the old Leaguers, round off whom are going to seed, and should go back to half-soling and ball tapping, or become ticket snatchers, rum sluts and managers for fifty cents—anything but dun a uniform and have their ball bones creak around the bases."

The following International games are booked for this week:—

At Syracuse—Lowells and Stars.

30. At Guelph—Springfields and Tecumsehs.

31. At Utica—Lowells and Utica.

31. At London—Springfields and Tecumsehs.

1. At Syracuse—Worcesters and Stars.

1. At Buffalo—Springfields and Buffalo.

2. At Syracuse—Worcesters and Stars.

3. At Utica—Worcesters and Utica.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Man Drowned near Merritton.

St. Catharines, Ont., July 29.—Three men went out to row in a small boat near Merritton, yesterday, and started rocking the boat, finally swamping her. One of the party, named Barrett, from the Propeller Garden City, was drowned.

Coal Schooner Sunk in Lake Erie.

Port Barwell, Ont., July 29.—The schooner Portage, of Buffalo, loaded with 240 tons of coal, sank near shore, ten miles east of here, on Friday night, in about four fathoms of water. No lives lost.

The Canadian Peach Crop.

Beamsville, Ont., July 29.—The first shipment of peaches from this point was made this morning by J. C. Kilborn, to R. Murray, Guelph. Crop light.

THREE MEN DROWNED.

Lamentable Casualty on the Gatineau.

Ottawa, July 29.—A sad drowning accident is reported on the Gatineau. A party of young men started for a sail on Lake Nacean. One of them named Flaver waded in to push the yacht into deep water, and while doing so he fell into a hole. Another of the party named Adams, in the boat, resolved over to rescue him, but was dragged into the water. Paul Lacroix, the adjutor of scales for that district, was on the bank of the lake, and seeing the accident, and being an excellent swimmer, threw off his coat and plunged into the lake, reaching the other two. They grasped him around the body, and the three were drowned. Two of the bodies were recovered ten minutes after, life being extinct. The other was recovered about an hour after. Mr. Leeds was twenty years of age, and the sole support of his elderly father and mother. The other two were 16 and 17 respectively.

HORSE THIEF CAPTURED.

He Pleads Guilty and is Sentenced to Twelve Months' Imprisonment.

Clifton, Ont., July 29.—Some time during Saturday night the barn of Mr. John Eason, contractor, Allanburg, was broken into, and his horse and buggy stolen. The thief, Robert Walsh, made for the new bridge here and attempted to cross as four on Sunday morning with the rig, but, from his suspicious appearance, he was taken into custody by an Ontario policeman. Young Eason identified the property this morning. Walsh, who has heretofore borne a good character, pleaded guilty to the theft before Police Magistrate Hill this morning, and was sentenced to twelve months in the Central Prison.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER FROM C. H. S. CROW, CANTERBURY STATION, York Co., N. B., October 25th, 1875.

MR. J. H. ROGERSON:
Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of enquiry, I would say that your Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the best medicine I have ever used in the best preparation of the kind I have ever ever tried.
I was ordered by my physicians to take it, and commenced about the first of August, and since that time I have felt a different person. I am quite fleshy, and all for the better, as the doctors ordered me.
I was unable, in the summer, to walk any distance without much pain. I can now take my gun and travel all day, and feel first-rate at night. I was troubled with a bad cough, which after one dose lowered the record for a first, second, third heat, and three consecutive heats. At the close of each heat in to-day's race, both horse and driver were greeted with applause, and when the white face of the big gelding went under the wire in 2.14, the entire crowd stood up and yelled itself horse.

ALEXANDER PRIDDY, J. P.,
WILLIAM MANN.
CHARLES HARTIN.

The foregoing is a correct statement which I have read over to each one, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity in my name.
Witness, my hand, this 25 day of October, 1875.

A gentleman has offered to give $1,000, in sums of $100 each, to ten London parishes in aid of planting plane trees. These beautiful trees shield form a natural arbor, grow to perfection in London, and seem rather to thrive than otherwise in a smoky atmosphere.

The harp upon which Mme. Roland played an extempore requiem in front of her cell in the Conciergerie of Paris is said to be in the possession of the present duplicate of the old man, M. De la Marche, whom the heroine requested on his way to the guillotine.

A London magazine says that a light of distinguished fame was lately visiting a Kentuckian admirer, who said:—Sir, we admire your courage, and have shown it. We had no academic distinction to confer on you, having no university; but we have done our best. We are a racing people, and have named our best stallion after you.'

Gladstone rose, and began by reading a letter he had addressed to Beaconsfield, asking him to use, in instances in support of his discussion, of unjustifiable and reckless attacks. He declares he never attached the Government without a deep sense of responsibility. He had never assigned any dishonorable motive to the Premier, his attacks upon whose policy were based upon irreconcilable and fundamental differences of opinion and feeling. He made a long review of the results of the Congress. He regretted the selfish jealousy of some of the Powers in regard to Greece. With Servia and Montenegro independent, Bulgaria practically so, and Bosnia and Herzegovina irrevocably annexed to Austria, it was impossible to deny that the partition of Turkey, if not as complete, was as great as that of Poland. He desired the elevation of the native races instead of the supercession of Turkey by another power, and complained of the Government's policy from the first to last. He said they must feel some shame when they looked upon the results obtained and what might have been obtained without so much bloodshed, if they had not jealously severed themselves from Russia two years ago. They had left Russia the finest possible field for working against the present agreement. Russian plenipotentiaries had throughout the Congress done their utmost to prop up Turkey, and kept down the subject races. For the first time in history their attitude was not in accordance with free institutions. The assertions of Beaconsfield relative to British efforts in favor of Greece were not supported by anything in the protocols. The conclusion of the Anglo-Turkish Convention was practically making high-sounding pretensions of Salisbury's notes. The Government thereby surrendered their power of action in the cause of freedom. He urged objections similar to those made by Hartington to the military situation created by the Anglo-Turkish convention. He had been conciliated than the changed, Karsi brooghing and Jobbing a specialty.—S. KING, 940 Dundas st.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

The Debate on the Eastern Policy.

GLADSTONE REPLIES TO BEACONSFIELD.

Violent Denunciation of the Anglo-Turkish Convention.

THE PREMIER'S REPLY.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, July 30.—The debate in the Commons last night is described as dull and spiritless. It was adjourned at an early hour. Some have expressed the hope that the debate would be concluded to-night; but it is generally expected to close on Thursday.

During the speeches of Baillie Cochrane (Conservative) and Ashley (Liberal) only three or four members were present.

London, July 30.—The debate in the Commons on Hartington's resolution, was resumed to-day by Lord Sandon (Conservative), who defended the policy of the Government.

London, July 30.—The debate on Hartington's motion was continued in the House of Commons to-day.

Viscount Sandon, President of the Board of Trade, said where the Government had acted without the consent of other Powers, none of them had taken any offence; but, on the contrary, the English policy had been cordially received. He did not believe the people of the Liberal party would sanction Forster's suggestion, that the Liberal party in office, should immediately reverse the Government policy. Such a course could only mean that Russia be left to do what she liked. He challenged the Opposition to state what policy it wished to have adopted.

Gladstone rose, and began by reading a letter he had addressed to Beaconsfield, asking him to use, in instances in support of his discussion, of unjustifiable and reckless attacks. He declares he never attached the Government without a deep sense of responsibility. He had never assigned any dishonorable motive to the Premier, his attacks upon whose policy were based upon irreconcilable and fundamental differences of opinion and feeling. He made a long review of the results of the Congress. He regretted the selfish jealousy of some of the Powers in regard to Greece. With Servia and Montenegro independent, Bulgaria practically so, and Bosnia and Herzegovina irrevocably annexed to Austria, it was impossible to deny that the partition of Turkey, if not as complete, was as great as that of Poland. He desired the elevation of the native races instead of the supercession of Turkey by another power, and complained of the Government's policy from the first to last. He said they must feel some shame when they looked upon the results obtained and what might have been obtained without so much bloodshed, if they had not jealously severed themselves from Russia two years ago. They had left Russia the finest possible field for working against the present agreement. Russian plenipotentiaries had throughout the Congress done their utmost to prop up Turkey, and kept down the subject races. For the first time in history their attitude was not in accordance with free institutions. The assertions of Beaconsfield relative to British efforts in favor of Greece were not supported by anything in the protocols. The German Elections.

Success of the Progressists in Berlin.

Berlin, July 30.—The elections for members of Parliament were held to-day. The Progressists were successful in five districts in Berlin. A second ballot between the Social Democrat and Progressist candidates is necessary in one district. Cologne elected an Ultramontane, Cassel a National Liberal, and Konigsberg a Conservative. Second ballots with the Socialists are necessary in Breslau and Elberfield and between Dellbruck, and a National Liberal at Stettin. At Strasburg the Protest party elected their candidate.

Berlin, July 30.—The National Liberals returned their candidates from Saarbracken and Heidelberg. Second ballots will be necessary in Frankfort, Mannheim, Mayence and Hanau. These second ballots will rest between the moderate and advanced liberals except at Mayence, where one of the candidates was an Ultramontane.

Berlin, July 30.—Although the Social Democrats are dread in this city, only in the Fourth District, where a second ballot is necessary, they polled 55,000 votes against 30,000 in 1877. Gen. von Moltke only received 2,911 votes again 8'977 for the Progressist Hasnel. Dr. Falk has been defeated in two district, by tremendous majorities.

Gen. Prim's Assassin.

Startling Statement of a Prisoner in a Madrid Court.

London, July 30.—A Saxtander correspondent says—A few days ago, in the court at Madrid where the prisoners connected with the assassination of Gen. Prim, against whom criminal proceedings have been dragging along for five years, were arraigned, one of them, named Jose Perez, stated that if he were placed where he could be thoroughly protected, he would reveal a well authenticated, though secret, facts which would bring to light the real assassin. The Judge stopped the prisoner and declared his statement inadmissible. But so much curiosity has been provoked that it is thought the Judge may alter the matter.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

CHINA.

Hong Kong, July 3.—The emigration of laborers to Peru is rendered impossible by the opposition of the Canton officials, who recall the ill-treatment of the Chinese in the past, and refuse to believe in a guarantee for the future.

Rains continues in the famine provinces, and hopes are entertained of a good harvest, but meanwhile the suffering continues unlimited.

JAPAN.

Yokohama, July 3.—The Japanese Government express an interest in Senator Sargent's proposition to open negotiations with Cores, and notwithstanding obstacles perhaps insuperable, are willing to cooperate. If they do so, it will be an act of good-will which other western nations have repeatedly asked in vain.

Great indignation is manifested by the Japanese Minister at the disclosure of confidential and informal documents shown some months ago to the British Envoy here, and now published by his agency as a basis of the new tariff treaty asked for by Japan.

Franco-American Commercial Treaty.

Paris, July 30.—A preliminary meeting of delegates to the Congress for the consideration of a commercial treaty between France and the United States, was held yesterday. A draft of the treaty was submitted, and it was discussed at a future meeting. It is proposed that the French Government shall engage to admit all American productions at the same rates as imposed on the productions of the most favored nations, and the United States shall make the same engagements regarding the productions of France; that if either imposes a domestic duty upon its own productions, the same duty may be imposed upon the productions of the other party.

EGYPT.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REFORMS.

Alexandria, July 30.—Nubar Pasha, announced from Paris by the Khedive, to assist in the establishment of reforms in Egypt, has accepted the post of minister without portfolio.

FRANCE.

Paris, July 30.—The Government is about to allow of the return of a number of political refugees.

A cotton mill at Tourconing was burned to-day. Loss $200,000.

Paris, July 30.—It is announced that the Bank of France is about to change its issue of notes, on account of surprises.

FRANCE.

ILLNESS OF CARDINAL FRANCHI.

London, July 31.—A despatch from Rome says Cardinal Franchi is seriously ill.

Shocking and Fatal Accident at York.

A Man's Leg Torn Off by Machinery.

York, Ont., July 30.—A young man named John Kingsborough, son of Wm. Kingsborough, of Seneca, got entangled in the trimbling rod of a threshing machine to-day. His leg was torn clear off below the knee, rendering immediate amputation necessary. The shock to the system was so great that he died in a few minutes after the operation.

Poisoned by Milk.

Cleveland, O., July 30.—On Wednesday fifteen girls employed by Madame Somers, dressmaker, had milk for dinner. During the afternoon all took sick, including Madame. None were so ill as to be unable to return to work next day except Mary and Nettie Devitt. Physicians pronounced them cases of poisoning. Yesterday Mary died in great agony. Nettie is in a very precarious condition.

The Tasimeter and the Eclipse.

New York, July 30.—The Herald's Rawlins, Wyoming, special states that during the eclipse yesterday, Edison's tasimeter was adjusted ten times too sensitive, never having used it before for a similar purpose. The heat from corona threw a ray of light entirely off the scale, and before he could make the second test the eclipse had passed. The experiment demonstrated that, compared to some of the fixed stars, corona's heat was much greater.

Robbery and Probable Murder.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 30.—Two robbers last night knocked down and bound John Baschore, aged 50, near Boiling Springs, Cumberland county, and tied Mrs. Baschore and another lady in the house. They then stole all Baschore's money. Baschore will probably die.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Belgrade, July 30.—It is stated, in well-informed circles, that proposals will be made in September to make Servia a kingdom.

Vienna, July 30.—The political correspondence reports that a Turkish agitator has raised an insurrection against the Ottoman authorities at Serajevo, capital of Bosnia.

London, July 30.—Reliable letters from St. Petersburg report that no Russian loan will be issued within the next few months.

Pesth, July 30.—The Turks offered a nominal resistance to the Austrian forces which crossed here, refusing to strike their flag or evacuate the guard-house until the Austrians threatened to fire.

London, July 31.—A correspondent at Vienna states it is rumored that the Turks object to the evacuation of Varna, unless the Russians remove a 48 hours' march from Constantinople.

GREAT BRITAIN.

London, July 30.—The little craft Nautilus, from Boston, 45 days out, passed the Scilly Islands yesterday. All well.

SALISBURY'S DECORATION.

Salisbury went to Osborn this morning to receive from the Queen the insignia of the Garter.

ANOTHER K. G.

London, July 30.—The Duke of Cumberland, son of the late ex-king George of Hanover, has been gazetted as Knight of the Garter.

AUSTRIA.

ROYAL BETROTHAL.

Vienna, July 30.—The Fremdenblatt announces the approaching betrothal of Count Andrassy's only daughter with Prince Alfred, of Montenuova, a distant cousin of the Emperor of Austria.

Destructive Fire Near Ottawa.

Batson & Currier's Saw Mill Destroyed.

LOSS ABOUT $150,000.

Ottawa, July 30.—Shortly before one this a.m. a fire was discovered in Batson & Currier's saw mill, Hull, and before the flames could be smulued the establishment was completely destroyed. The origin of the fire is a mystery. From circumstances attending it, there can be no doubt it was the work of an incendiary, and one well acquainted with surroundings. Two watchmen were employed, and made the usual rounds at midnight, after which one of them, named Rogers, went to his boarding house to get supper; the other, Demers, made a regular tour in front of the mill. When he was startled by a reflection; he rushed out and found the mill enveloped in flames. It appeared to have been set in the front part of the building, and spread with such rapidity that before the alarm could be given the whole structure was doomed; in fact flames leaped from the ceiling to ceiling as though the timber had been saturated with coal oil. No time was lost in trying to get force pumps in working order, but it was found they had been tampered with, and even the boiler had been filled with wet wood, so that a great delay occurred before they could be worked. The fire was got under control about 3.30 o'clock, but not before the mill and a portion of the machine shop were laid in ruins. The loss will reach over $100,000, on which Mr. Batson thinks there is not one cent of insurance, the policy having run out a short time ago.

Ottawa, July 30.—Messrs. Batson & Currier have, on account of the large premiums charged by insurance companies for eleven years, taken a fire risk on themselves. Before that they were insured for $80,000, the premium being 6½ per annum. A high fence was built all around the mill, which was constantly manned as watchmen, and a pump-house with powerful machinery, run by steam, built for fire purposes near the mill. It is to the ground, and the engine house, boiler and work shops, store buildings, are completely gutted. The engines are badly damaged by the heat and falling timbers. It is not known what extent of injury is done to the boilers. The damage to lumber and plank near the mill is only a loss to lumber. The loss will amount to $150,000. There are 150 men thrown out of employment.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

Montreal, July 30.—At a large and influential and representative meeting of Conservative electors of this city, held in Dorion Hall to-night, M. G. Gault and M. P. Ryan were nominated as candidates for the West and Centre divisions for the coming Dominion elections. The nominations were unanimously and feelingly expressed to ward both gentlemen, and were very enthusiastic. Mr. Gault will give his decision on Thursday morning, but Mr. Ryan accepted forthwith.

Stranding of the Steamship Megantic.

Passengers and Crew Rescued.

Montreal, July 30.—The steamship Megantic was stranded on Monday morning at Otter River Island, off Anticosti. She is full of water and badly damaged. The passengers were rescued by the steamer Eri King. About 180 head of cattle were saved.

Montreal, July 30.—The latest report from the steamship Megantic, says:—All the cattle are in the water. Very little can be saved without divers. The cattle that were landed are roaming over the island. The Captain expresses an opinion that the vessel might be platformed and floated, but it would be very expensive.

TORONTO.

THE EXHIBITION BUILDINGS.

Toronto, July 30.—Work on the Exhibition Buildings is progressing actively and favorably. A large number of additional hands are to be employed next week.

INAUGURATION OF THE NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE.

About 3,000 people were present at the inaugural proceedings at the National Amphitheatre this evening. Mr. Robt. Hay, the Conservative candidate in Centre Toronto, occupied the chair, and made a few remarks in introducing the first speaker. He was very well received. The speakers were Sir John Macdonald, Messrs. Davis, Boultbee, and several others, all of whom were loudly applauded. The whole affair was marked by considerable enthusiasm.

ROBBERY.

Mr. J. T. Spotton, proprietor of the Portland frecstone works, was robbed of $65 to-day on route or at Scarboro' Heights.

BURGLAR ARRESTED.

Michael Hogan, a notorious burglar, was arrested this evening for a robbery committed in Clifton several years ago. This same Hogan received two years in Penitentiary for burglary in the Terrapin Saloon in this city, and striking one of the inmates on the head with a sharp instrument on his awakening.

MONTREAL AFFAIRS.

Montreal, July 30.—Counterfeit Dominion Bank $4 bills are in circulation here. They are so well got up as to be difficult of detection. The great difference between them and genuine bills seems to be the cottony appearance of the paper and lack of finish of the figure of Britannia in right corner, the right arm of which is thrown around a trident having far from a natural appearance. The shading under the name of the bank is blurred, the lines running into each other and presenting a blackened appearance. The lathework on the back is also defective. Rumor says there are a number of counterfeit two's, also of this Bank.

The preliminary investigation in the Orange case, postponed from the 18th, was brought before the Police Magistrate this p.m. By consent the case was adjourned until Tuesday next, 6th Aug., for the purpose of having a test case, which will elicit the opinion of the highest court in Dominion, the Privy Council. Without further comment the case was adjourned as requested.

NAPANEE.

THE SCOTT-HOOPER EMBROGLIO.

Napanee, Ont., July 30.—Mr. W. Scott, of the Express newspaper, was released from the jail this evening by giving bail, himself in $1,000, and two sureties $500 each. A writ was issued to-day against Mr. Edmund Hooper for $10,000 damages by Mr. Scott's attorneys, Messrs DeRoche and Madden, for false imprisonment.

CANADIAN TELEGRAMS.

Clifton, Ont., July 30.—Mr. Geo. Liddle, Surveyor of Customs at this port for the last 24 years, died last night.

St. Catharines, Ont., July 30.—An old man named Wm. O'Neill was drowned near lock No. 2 on the Welland Canal last night while fishing. The body was recovered. No inquest was held.

Quebec, July 30.—The election of Mr. Bourbeau, M.P. for Drummond and Arthabaska, has been annulled on the ground of bribery and corruption.

SHIPPING.

New York, July 30.—Arrived, Russia, from Liverpool.

The London Free Press

A LARGE MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Dispatches is issued every morning. It is the only paper supplying the earliest information, published west of Toronto, embracing the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in the columns twelve hours before the contemporary evening paper. Its complete and unbiased views are universally acceptable. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, contemporizing other journals in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 1 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly $1.50 (in advance) delivered free within the city and 33 suburbs, or POSTED FREE OF CHARGE to distant places at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, DOMESTICS WANTED; Articles LOST or FOUND; Houses to Let or Sell, &c., &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for twenty-five words, and so in proportion. Birth, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted in NONPAREIL at the rate of two cents per line (measured measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising space by the year as half-year, the terms of which can be learned on application at the business offices.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issues of the local contemporaries.

The Weekly Free Press

IS A MAMMOTH SHEET, containing 84 columns of matter, and is one of the best and influential agricultural papers in the land circulating in Canada. It is a first-class family, town, paper, and occupies favorably with the sheets published elsewhere. Its compilation is made with great care. It contains the cream of the news of the week from all parts of the world; ample commercial information; and its literary department finds great acceptance in all family circles. It has been aptly termed the "King of the Weeklies," and is well worthy of its sobriquet.

DAVID GLASS QUOTES POETRY.

When Mr. David Glass launches out into poetical quotations he is like to miss the season in listening to the rhyme. So, the other day, after spending several hours in endeavoring to prove that affairs are so prosperous in Canada as not to require any aid, he wound up in flourish of fireworks by quoting Goldsmith as follows:—

"Princes and lords may flourish and may fade;
A breath can make them as a breath has made.
But [illegible] remains, whose country's pride,
When once destroyed can never be supplied."

But it is just because it is not wished that the "bold yeomanry" (the poet said "peasantry,") of Canada should be "destroyed," that the National Policy has been organized. It is a well known fact that many thousands of Canadians, sons of farmers as well as other citizens, leave the land of their birth each year and throw in their lot with the States, because an opportunity does not present itself here for the employment of their talents and their labor. The author of the "Deserted Village" was lamenting the exodus of the "bone and sinew" from his country when he hit upon the truth that a "bold peasantry" if once destroyed can never be supplied, and the continual and continued exodus from Canada though it cannot "destroy" our yeomanry is certainly an agency of weakness respecting it numerically considered. It has been stated upon excellent authority that no less than two millions of people once our fellow citizens, or spring from them, are now domiciled in and reconciled to the States on account of the disabilities with which the Canadian labour market has had and still has to contend. If it had not been for these exodus the Canadian nation to-day would have presented a very different aspect. Instead of a people of four millions we should have been one of six millions, and territory now lying waste and untilled would have been reclaimed to the advantage and profit of the Dominion. If depletion is not to continue, to the general disadvantage, something must be done to avert it. If Canada is such "a cheap country to live in" as Mr. Morton in a way it is; if its general arrangements are so excellent, and the advantages it affords so superior, how is it that people from the States do not flock to us? Instead of doing so Canadians are constantly slipping across the lines to them, to a number variously estimated at from 50,000 to 60,000 annually. Now, the fact that our population is gradually draining to the States is one that it is no use to blink at. It speaks in warning tones to all, and Mr. Glass, quoting Oliver Goldsmith, tells us that the yeomanry once destroyed or removed, can never be supplied. And we quite agree with him. But what I do be propose to do in order to prevent that inroad which is constantly going on? Absolutely nothing! Having had profitable dealings with the Mackenzie Government, he is quite certain that their doing nothing policy is just that which the country needs. He tells us that he was born in a log house, and in the usual logic proceeds to argue that he knows just what the country wants as a consequence, how many great men have been born in log houses, but they have not been great on that account. They have stood above their fellows because they have proved themselves men of capacity, equal to occasions as they presented themselves. When Mr. David Glass tells the people of East Middlesex —including London East, New Brighton, and Petersville—that affairs are prosperous, and need no legislative amendment, he says that which shows him to be unable to grasp the necessities of the occasion, notwithstanding he "was born in a log house." If Mr. David Glass could indicate some means of amendment the information would be gratefully received. But like the rest of the Grits, he is unable to do so. All he can do is to swear by Messrs. Mackenzie and Cartwright, and let things take their chance. This he deems to be statesmanship, and points with gushing enthusiasm to the log house where he was born. But Canada is just now looking for something different from that.

Gen. Sheridan has discovered that the "Medicine Men" among the Navajo Indians tie their patients to trees, in some cases, and shoot stones into their bodies to cure them. The shooting, however, generally had the opposite effect, and soldiers who discovered the doctors at their work put a stop to the treatment and asked the doctors what they had to say. The Medicine Men replied that they had been taught the practice by a neighboring tribe, but that that they had lost some of the medicine that should go on the stones, so that it "didn't work very well." A number of other "doctors" were accused, and some of them admitted that they had killed a good many patients in that way; but, being only "Indians, not taxed," they were let off on promising to abandon the practice.

TROUBLE IN THE CAMP.

It has been so confidently declared that the Maritime Provinces would repudiate the National Policy in the interests of Mr. Mackenzie and free trade that later events have given the Ontario Grits "a turn." Some of the organs have wisely kept silence on these revelations, as a knowledge of the fact that there is neither aid nor comfort to be expected from our fellow-citizens on the Atlantic coast, would be a sad damper to the ardor of the faithful in this quarter. Mr. Tilley is by far the most influential man in the Province of New Brunswick, a man whose opinions will be accepted and his lead followed by the electors of his own Province with more faith and confidence than those of any other man in the Dominion. The same may be said with all truth respecting Dr. Tupper in Nova Scotia, so that not even the deceased Howe in the zenith of his power and influence could so control the action of the electorate, or direct their political course with such unanimity as can this able, eloquent, and popular statesman. The conviction is slowly but surely making its way into the solid minds of the Grits, that they have miscalculated the popular sentiment of the people of the Maritime Provinces, with whom cheap bread was deemed the principal object, but who are now alive to the fact that a cheap loaf with nothing to buy it is not the surest means of securing a hearty meal. A celebrated Queen of France wondered why poor people should be hungry, when such nice cakes could be bought for two sous apiece. But the question with the poor people was not the quality of the cakes—left where were the sous? It is just as one of the candidates for St. John lately put it—bread as cheap as possible and Canadian markets for Canadians, that we may be able to buy it. One of the Grit organs, failing to disprove these startling facts, tries to ridicule what it cannot refute. The idea of a circus was suggested by the exhibition of such fun-provoking characters as Joe Rymal and the Hon. R. J. Cartwright, who formed the principal attraction in the late alarming expeditions through Ontario. We have therefore a kind of elephantine attempt at wit by representing the first men in the Dominion, irrespective of party or party feeling, as circus riders. Sir John rides a "team of twenty horses;" Dr. Tupper only two, while Mr. Tilley's stud is so poorly provided with presentable cattle that he can only bestride one. Well, whether the team consists of one, two, or twenty horses, they will assuredly carry their riders into the seats now occupied by Mr. Mackenzie and his friends, and this, being the objective point, must be held to settle the merits of the horses and horsemanship. Sugar, coal, wheat, and manufactured goods—all that can be turned to the account of Canada's prosperity and happiness, will receive the most careful consideration at the hands of these gentlemen, when the people have restored them to that place in their confidence which they never justly forfeited. One of the organs, by collecting a series of expressions from Sir John's speeches, in almost every one wrenched from their context and expository connections, would seem to present contradictions; but if allowed to go over a studied work, even the Bible itself, taking a sentence or half a sentence, a line or half a line, where the form of words suited our purpose, we could prove anything we pleased. The same is true of any public man's life that ever lived, and yet by this unfair method of criticism, the organ has completely failed to establish either contradiction or inconsistency in the utterances of the Conservative leader. When the principals in once laid down that the exigencies of the exchequer must govern the burden of taxation, there is no use of speculating upon an unlimited rate of protective duties, especially as it has been declared that not a general raising of import duties, but the wise modification of those we have, will effect all we require.

The English Government Telegraphs Bill having proposed to extend to telephones the monopoly already possessed by the Post Office with respect to telegraphs, a firm of London solicitors write to the Times to say that if the Bill should pass into law, it will practically amount to a confiscation of the invention of the telephone without compensation, notwithstanding that the inventor has obtained letters patent, and that a large amount of capital, to say nothing of time and study, has been expended upon it, and all this upon the faith of the existing law, which confers no such monopoly on the Postmaster-General. "Parliament," they add, "never interferes with vested interests without compensation, and this principle was fully recognized when the Telegraphs Act, 1869, was passed. That Act enabled the Postmaster-General to take away the business from the then existing telegraph companies, but the Legislature took care to provide that the latter should receive full compensation."

There is a curious story current in Naples, according to the Progrès, which savors intensely of the mysterious and supernatural. A very wealthy English gentleman, with his wife and daughter, some months ago ascended Mount Vesuvius, and while standing a little distance from the crater, the child excitedly called her papa to look at "Harry." Papa really beheld Harry, and so did mamma. The daughter called after him, and so did the old gentleman, but Harry heeded not. He hurried on toward the crater, looking pale and troubled, and carrying a bundle under his arm. Downed he plunged into the crater, to the bewilderment of the guides, and was seen no more. Harry was the baker of the old gentleman's sumptuous establishment at home. One of the guides, though trembling, ventured to be lowered down a little bit, but declined to make an exploration on a large scale. The old gentleman fined the hour and minute of the baker's descent, and it happened that just at that hour and minute the baker died in England.

The Premier of the Dominion, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, on Thursday evening accompanied an excursion party down to the St. Lawrence River on the steamer Canada, the purpose being an inspection, with the object of deepening the channel. In its report of the affair, the Witness has this suggestive paragraph:—"At eight o'clock the steamer began to move, and in a few minutes after it was rumored "drinks are free," and the bar-room was consequently crowded. Then supper followed, after which the guests began to disport themselves as best they might, some playing chess, some playing cards, some in their berths, some reading, many talking, and a large, boisterous and noisy company in drinking and singing patriotic and other songs, which was kept up till all hours in the morning, and led to the belief that some representative businessmen and politicians are also representative drinkers."

The Rev. R. S. McArthur, of New York, claims that few persons who are Christians are sunstruck, the Bible having promised them, "mother shall the sun smite thee by day nor the moon by night." If this promise is to be taken literally why should any Christian at all be stricken? In Milwaukee an archbishop was prostrated, in St. Louis one or two priests experienced a similar mishap.

A younger brother of the Earl of Beaconsfield has been discovered in the person of Mr. Ralph Disraeli, who is assistant clerk of Parliament—the second office of the House of Lords—with a salary of $3,000

A PUNGENT LETTER FROM AN OLD REFORMER.

In the FREE PRESS report of the proceedings of the Glass meeting at the City Hall, on Saturday, attention was called to the fact that the Secretary had been somewhat derelict in his duty, in that he did not read to the audience the letters of apology that had been sent in. And in doing so our friend Mr. Warren Rock, Q.C., was particularized and the gist of his letter given. The Herald now supplies the full text, as follows:—

London, July 26, 1878.

"DEAR SIR,—I have received your letter inviting me to a seat on the platform to-morrow on the occasion of the grand rally of your supporters. I feel that nature never intended me for an ornament, and besides, I will be much better employed at the time in my office attending to my business. You are therefore at liberty to place the chair intended for me at the disposal of Col. John Walker, Murray Anderson, Hugh Macmahon, Q.C., or some better life-long Reformer.

Yours respectfully,
"WARREN ROCK."

The rebuke herein administered is just one. It may be all very well for Mr. David Glass and Col. Walker to force themselves upon the Reform party, and so compel their recognition, but it is quite another to secure confidence and cordiality. From the tone and temper of the foregoing letter it is quite certain that neither of the gentleman referred to has secured the confidence nor gained the cordial good wishes of Mr. Rock. Now, Mr. Rock has long been a representative man among the Reformers here. He worked and struggled for them when their chance of success was small, and often led a forlorn hope in their behalf right gallantly. But since Messrs. Glass and Walker have become "true Reformers," he and many others like him have been unceremoniously set aside. They have been pushed into the corner as of but little account, but when taken any notice of it has only been that they might grace the triumph of those by whom they have been supplanted. If an opinion had to be obtained or a nomination to some post secured, the gentleman still lying under the ban of the Election Courts has always been consulted, but when the day has arrived for the Reform party in London and East Middlesex have been systematically ignored in order to satisfy the insatiable demands of Mr. Glass, and to show the public how contemptuously "Reform" leaders can treat the judgment of the Election Court which they boasted so much about in the cause of morality. Mr. Warren Rock has gained a wide-spread sympathy on account of the plucky stand he has taken in refusing to be made a platform "ornament" on the occasion referred to. Others may not think proper to be so direct and outspoken, but that his sentiments are widely shared no one can have no doubt of.

HON. D. L. MACPHERSON'S PAMPHLET.

The Canadian public is greatly indebted to Hon. D. L. Macpherson for the publication of a review of his noted speeches, addressed his former constituents at Kincardine and elsewhere. The facts and figures he adduces, the statements he makes, and the conclusions he arrives at, indicate an amount of research which may be truly called exhaustive. He deals with the public expenditures, with loans, with revenue, with public works, with immigrants, salaries, broken promises, and defective administration in trenchant and convincing style. Though a free trader of a pronounced type in the past, he gives a hearty support to the National Policy. And he does so not from a partisan point of view, but because he regards such a policy as a Canadian necessity. And those who wish to have in their possession a hand-book of Canadian affairs should procure a copy, which will be issued early for distribution shortly in London and elsewhere. In the course of the coming weeks we shall make copious extracts from this work, which has never been equalled as an elucidation of current Canadian affairs.

Stanley does not seem to have put all the interest of his recent African explorations into his book, Through the Dark Continent, judging by a late private letter from Paris. At a dinner given him by Count Thomas W. Knox, at which a score of journalists and literary men were present, Stanley, at their request, gave a minute and thrilling account of the death of his starving expedition at the mouth of the Congo. The recital, which was in the simplest and most modest manner, occupied two hours; was listened to with breathless attention throughout, and at the close there was not a dry eye in the room. Its eloquence was in its simple truth, and one who was present says that it was the most interesting and pathetic narrative he had ever heard. Surely, a man who can hold for two whole hours a company of journalists and authors many of whom had traveled far and wide, and had moving and perilous experiences themselves, must have something extraordinary to relate, and must be possessed of the gift of true eloquence.

There is in London a house where a terrier dog is kept—the exact house is not indicated. One day last week a man in the house (which has a high wall around it) bought a lively monkey and brought him home, dressed in hat, coat, and breeches. The dog saw him enter, and gave chase in the yard, and started for him. When he got within a few feet the monkey sat so still and unconcerned that the dog was puzzled. For this contest Harris, Lillie, and Great Eastern had been entered, but during the afternoon the last two were withdrawn. It was the intention to let the race alternate with the heats of the other horses and pugilists, but the owner frequently Barns did not appear till the close of the 2:26 race, and then alternated with the fifth and sixth heats of the 2:20 class. As Barns came in view he was loudly applauded by the spectators, as was his driver, Mr. Spian. Gentleman Jack was announced to accompany the great monarch of the turf. Barns got away in fine style, gradually drawing ahead of his running mate. He passed the quarter in 0:33½, the half in 1:06½; the third quarter in 1:40½, and made the heat in 2:14½. During the entire heat he trotted magnificently, working in grand style, and gradually leaving Gentleman Jack further and further behind. It was a square and most beautiful trot. After a brief rest, Barns appeared for the second heat, having for running companion a saddle horse. Spian drove twice around the track, and then took up the second struggle for time. Barns went away like the wind, passing the first quarter in 33½, the half-mile point in 1:07½, the three-quarters in 1:41½, and passing under the wire in 2:15. The excitement was now very high, and great were the expectations for the next heat. Barns soon appeared for the final struggle, receiving loud applause. In a moment more he was away, followed by the gaze of the spectators. He went toward the first-quarter post with great steadiness as well as rapidity, passing it in 33. On he sped to the half mile, shooting by it in 1:07. Then he passed the three-quarter point in 1:40. The excitement was now the greatest ever seen on the Cleveland track, but Barns apparently minded it not. He came on toward the grand stand in splendid shape, and passed under the wire in 2:14, making time equal to that of any other horse. The crowd cheered loudly for a moment or two and then all was quiet, in expectation of the time being announced. This was done, and then the crowd gathered around the great horse. Had it not been for Friday's storm, Barns would undoubtedly have beaten the best time on record.

The editor of a Virginia paper was asked by a stranger "if it were possible that little town kept up four newspapers" And the reply was: "No, it takes four newspapers to keep up the town."

"PURE HAVANAS."

The public faith in "genuine pure Havana" cigars will be rudely shaken by some facts which have just been divulged. It has always been thought that the Cubans, whatever else they may be, were honest in cigar making. This has been acknowledged as one of their peculiar virtues. But it is now stated that the city of Havana exports more pounds of cigars than the tobacco raised on the island would weigh. Of course a large amount of tobacco is consumed at home, and a much larger amount exported before it is manufactured. Several of the other West India Islands produce an inferior tobacco, which is said to be marketed in Cuba, after which it is known as Cuban tobacco. Santo Domingo raises considerable tobacco of inferior quality, and imports much from the neighboring islands and from Central America, the import duty being nominal. Some of the Cuban newspapers acknowledge that this tobacco finds its way to Havana, where it is used to adulterate that grown on the island of Cuba. They declare that the practice must be stopped or the Queen of the Antilles will lose its reputation for excellent cigars. There is also a well-grounded suspicion that much of the tobacco raised in the United States is sent to Cuba, made into cigars there, brought back and sold as genuine Havana. It has long been known that Wisconsin tobacco is often sent to New York, put in new packages, brought back to the west, and sold as "Connecticut seed leaf." During several years past Connecticut tobacco has been packed in the holds of vessels and sent to Cuban waters for the assumed purpose of allowing it to sweat. This tobacco makes excellent wrappers and tolerable filling, and it may be that the Cubans have considered it sufficiently good to use for both purposes. This is evident from the fact that cigars imported from Havana are sold in New York for less than they can be made there. The duties on one thousand Havana cigars of the "Concha" brand are $40 to $50, while those on a sufficient amount of tobacco to make them is only $8. Most people will profess to be good judges of this weed they smoke are satisfied with a cigar taken from a box having a foreign revenue stamp. The stamp, and not the flavor of the article, gives the reputation.

Keeley's motor has a rival in New York, where Francis Winters, jun., has invented a machine with two chambers, a few pumps and valves, into one cylinder of which water is poured and appears in another cylinder as a gas, in whose odorless flame the hand can be held without burning it, which neither explodes nor generates friction, heat or moisture, and, while costing only half as much as steam, it is claimed will do everything which steam can accomplish. Its inventor has organized a company, with a capital of $10,000,000, one-eighth of which is already subscribed, to manufacture the motor in New York, and it is proposed to store it in huge central reservoirs and conduct it in pipes wherever it is wanted. If it accomplishes half that is claimed for it, it will be as much an improvement on steam as that was on horse and water power, but the public will be incredulous till it sees the proof.

Paris has just organized a "Hygienic Society," the object of which is to discover by analysis the actual nature of such articles of food and drink as may be presented for examination. They have found sulphate of copper in bread, a delicious apple jelly consisted of turnips flavored with an extract from coal tar, while a tender veal patty had been made from an animal of such extreme youth that it could be designated only by a Latin term frequently encountered in manuals of obstetrics. No analysis of boarding house hash has yet been published, but it is not fair to expect that a society only just upon its legs would first address itself to so deeply complicated a subject.

Some one has invented an automatic torpedo, which, if generally applied, will make the race of grave robbers either very rare or perforated with holes like a sieve. The device is designed to be fastened to the inside of a coffin lid, and if not disturbed will rust on quietly until the moldering dust beneath returns to its primeval earth. But if the nocturnal grave robber approaches and ventures to disturb the coffin, the torpedo is exploded and fires upward a volley of buckshot, so distributed that anyone in the grave above the coffin must be riddled.

Some envious fisherman at Alexandria Bay wrote to a Watertown paper that ex-Lieut.-Governor Tom Alvord, the bass fisherman of the 98 Lawrence, so-called, has a novel way of killing fish. He has a glass globe full of minnows, which are confined by a wire gauze and then sunk by anchor near the bottom on bass grounds. His own bait concealing the hook, it is lowered in the vicinity, and he thus robs the river, with no escape for any fish, no matter what size, from two inches up.

A Great Racing Feat.

Barns' Time on the Cleveland Course.

Cleveland, July 27.—The closing races of the Cleveland Club came off to-day in the presence of a large number of spectators. The great event of the day was a race for a special purse of $1,500, open to all. For this contest Barns, Lillie, and Great Eastern had been entered, but during the afternoon the last two were withdrawn. It was the intention to let the race alternate with the heats of the other horses and pugilists. The owner frequently Barns did not appear till the close of the 2:26 race, and then alternated with the fifth and sixth heats of the 2:20 class. Our New Viceroy.

The London "Times" on the Marquis of Lorne's Appointment.

The following article in the London Times has been cabled to the Globe:

"We publish with great pleasure the announcement that the Marquis of Lorne has accepted the office of Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, and will enter upon his duties in immediate succession to Lord Dufferin. The announcement will be hailed with enthusiasm by Canadians in this country, and will be regarded with the greatest satisfaction. The Ministry were apparently placed in a position of embarrassment by the fact that Lord Dufferin's term of office, which the wise and wholesome rule of the Colonial service limits to six years, expired a few weeks ago. It was felt difficult to select any successor to Earl Dufferin who would not find his reputation overshadowed by the memory of the most popular of Governors there. There was, however, one kind of selection which was at once impressive and likely to produce substantial political advantages. A direct connection between the Throne and the representative of the Queen's authority in Canada is certain to be welcomed by the colonists all the more warmly because their loyalty has of late been stirred by the eloquent appeals of the retiring Governor-General. The choice of the husband of one of Her Majesty's daughters to represent the Sovereignty of the Queen in Canada will appeal to the sentiments and traditions of Imperial unity and the historic pride which have recently acquired fresh life and vigor.

"It is very satisfactory to learn that the Marquis of Lorne has not declined the responsibility involved in the succession to Lord Dufferin. The services in his power, and not less in that of the Princess Louise, to render the empire, are great. The opportunity of rendering them is worth pursuing at the cost of some inconvenience. Never was there a better chance for completing a consolidating work which has been well begun.

"The feelings of Canadians towards the Mother Country a few years ago were curiously mingled. Their attachment to "home," which is one of the strongest characteristics of Englishmen and their descendants in newly-settled countries, was crossed with irritation at what they considered the coldness and neglect, social and political, of which they had to complain, being convinced that the dominant party in the Imperial Parliament were longing and searching for an excuse to get rid of them. They bitterly resented this, but unfortunately the game of cross-purposes in which several Colonial Secretaries took part, prevented the colonists from showing a certain healthy school of politicians at home that they were wrong. Those politicians contended that the colonists wished to do nothing for themselves, but that to every responsibility, every expense, upon the Mother Country. When that period of vacillation and confirmation came to an end, and it was settled that the Colonies should undertake to keep up their self-defence, as well as the duties of self-government, the obstacles to a cordial understanding rapidly disappeared. Canada, in particular, has shown a high, generous public spirit, which Lord Dufferin has known how to cultivate and guide. The sentiment of loyalty, not only to the monarchical principle, but to the person of the Sovereign, which has always been powerful in Canada, is now freed from any alloy of suspicion and dissatisfaction with the policy of the Colonial Office. It is unfortunate how forced was the enthusiasm with which the Prince of Wales some years ago was received by the Canadians. The Princess Louise is certainly not wanting in the winning qualities which distinguish members of the Royal House. But in both there is no need to speculate upon the influences of individual character. If the great body of Canadians it is enough now that the daughter of the Queen is among them. It is higher Court in her mother's name. They will finally rid themselves of the lurking, haunting suspicion that we colonists they are poor relations of the Imperial household.

"The task which the Marquis of Lorne has undertaken does not require great powers of statesmanship in the ordinary sense of the term, but calls for a rare combination of qualities which no man can summon to his aid at will. Lord Dufferin was a model Governor-General of Canada. His cultivated intelligence, disciplined by practical experience of public affairs at home, was stimulated by a quick, rich imagination which gave breadth and warmth of color to his oratory. Yet his tact, his balance of judgment, his strong sense of equity, his fine temper, were never found wanting. The first duty of a Colonial Governor is to hold himself above, away from local politics. But his record and hardly less important duty is to avoid chilling sympathies, barring the sympathibilities of the people by a too rigid reserve. Lord Dufferin steered clear of excess in both particulars. The Marquis of Lorne, however, has great advantages in attempting the same career. His wife has exalted rank will naturally raise him high above the level of local intrigues, and will at the same time prevent condescension from having inconvenient consequences. The principal function of the Governor-General of Canada is to keep alive a sense of the real and intimate connection between the colonists and the Mother Country. The colonists cannot doubt that such a connection exists when they see among them one of the princesses of the Royal Family of England. The Governor-Generalship opens a career to the Marquis of Lorne that may be compensation for the political activity from which his marriage cut him off at home. He is well known, intelligent, cultivated, with an interest in the colonial empire of England, of which he gave proof in his early travels and writings. He inherits the political reputation of one of the "governing families" of Great Britain; and in Canada, so abundantly peopled by Scottish settlers, his heirship of Macallum More will count for a good deal. But the most significant consequences of the Marquis of Lorne's appointment will be, if we are not mistaken, the effect on public opinion in Canada of its bare announcement. It will be hailed, we have no doubt, as the most popular act of policy that the Imperial Government has ever carried out since the Dominion was founded.

How They Manufacture Misstatements.

From the Halifax Reporter.

The Chronicle, noting in its misstatement about the "thirty-five per cent. tariff," telegraphed something or other to the London Advertiser, from which paper the Chronicle professed to have taken the report of Sir John's speech. The answer is a model of evasion. While no doubt desiring to help the Chronicle out of its dilemma, the Advertiser refuses to say that it its report there was any mention of 35 per cent. Here's the answer:

LONDON, ONT., July 23.

The reporter believes that the report was substantially correct. The speech was delivered in a rain storm, and no complete notes taken by any of the reporters present. Sir John certainly named some figure as a basis of tariff.—ADVERTISER.

Therefore—because Sir John, in the opinion of a reporter who confesses he could not hear for the storm, and took no complete notes, "certainly named some figures,"—the Chronicle thinks itself justified in putting the figure down at 35 per cent.

This is a nice way to deceive the public, is it not?

The authority the Chronicle appeals to in order to bolster itself up, though only too willing to assist, will go no further than to say Sir John named "some figures" as the basis. The Advertiser would not say he named 35 per cent., as the Chronicle wanted him to say.

If he (Sir John) did "name some figures there would be nothing wrong in that. If he had said 17½ per cent., that would be "some figure." If he had said an average of 22 per cent., that would have been the "figure" which the present Government calculate to be the average rate of the present tariff. But if he had named either of these figures, he would not have in any way contravened his position, viz.:—That he does not believe increase of taxation to be necessary, but only readjustment of the tariff, so that all classes shall have their fair proportion, and the "bone and sinew" of the country be relieved from the grinding exactions of a set of selfish schemers, who profess great love for the working man, and then load him down as if he were an ass made to crouch under the burden like Issachar, son of Patriarch Jacob.

The recent election at Reading, England, cost $8,000, the lowest sum on record in that borough.

JET:

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

For two days you and the man with the harmonium do not speak. On the third day the Polish countess, of unknown antecedents, on the floor immediately above you both, begins a series of little afternoon teas, with dancing. You make up your minds, and you never missed the monthly decoration. You go down, this time together, to the bureau. Again the people are in a rage at the hotel. Again the secretary is desolated. Neither of them sighs an oath. By the day after to-morrow the countess has invited them to one of her little parties. You think her a charming woman, rather like them. Again the cheerful sound of dancing from an upper floor; and on the question of antecedents, are prepared to fight any battalion against counsel. At the end of a fortnight you receive a hint that the Polish lady's list of accomplishments, draws capital character-sketches. Well, if you mess upon hearing the truth, or if you are a man who prides yourself that was furtively handed about last night in the cloak-room over which everybody, your friend Number Nineteen in particular, looked so deliciously amused.

The Grand Hotel Parade at the present time, the second week only of November, is already cut up into the usual cliques and factions. There are the people who have their own instruments and when musical instruments drive wild. There are people who sing, with birds, with sewing machines, with nurseries. There are the series-minded promoters of meetings, who would turn the desert into a conventicle. There are the light minded speculators in flowers, who would convert the salon into a stage. All these unmet sources of Hellas—

"We come at an immense expense, sir, try the bracing effects of warmth. See what Williams' book says about night air. Hear Dr. Oldham.—Is Dr. Oldham in the salon?"

"Oldham is in the smoking room, ma'am, with every window open, and no fire."

"Ah! Dr. Oldman can commit suicide in any way he chooses. It is no affair of mine. If you go on, open every door and windows as you do—I declare to Heaven I'm a Gorilla if, sooner than have the chest full of wrath—I declare to Heaven you should be called upon to pay theodctors' bills of the house."

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

M. Feray has an article in the Moniteur Scientifique on the various kinds of woods sales sold in France as a source of alkaline lyes. He states that the former have been used to expend in the washing of linen, &c., the sum of 1,500,000 francs.

It is difficult to clean glass bottles and other vessels that have been sailed with fatty substances; but if a concentrated solution of permanganate of potassium, to which a few drops of hydrochloric acid are added, be used as a wash, the cleansing is effected speedily and thoroughly.

The gas which escapes from coal in mines is very rarely quite pure, or such an atmosphere unless the latter is agitated, and the gas has a decided tendency to form strata in distinct zones. Air in a mine may thus be quite safe in the very neighborhood of a dangerous stratum of gas, and the miner become without any warning.

A fine black finish may be imparted to portions of cut brass work of telescopes, levels, opera glasses in this way:—A strong solution of nitrate of silver is made in one centre on the subject of ventilation. Are the windows of the Parade (no pun is kept open, or are they to be kept shut, throughout the ensuing winter?

A small, surly maid, miserly of the body politic remains neutral: thinks something may be hoped on either side that the opening of the windows should depend upon the state of the external atmosphere; upon the number of occupants of number of invalids as may happen to be present. But the genius who has a cold-spoiled reasonors go for little. Real history if you would see how much influence is exerted common sense, "the mean," principles of compromise, have ever obtained in great moral questions, and attaining the peace, and agitating the passions of their fellows?

"And the windows, up for good, close doors and passages hermetically; render draughts impossible?

So say one half of the English people inhabiting the Parade.

"Keep the windows permanently opened night and day. Take out top panes. Render draughts a wished-for impossible."

Those speaks the opposition.

And both sides have the advantage of the generality. On both sides are chiefs, prepared for a sanitary campaign, and ready to dispute inch by inch of vantage ground, just at the point of the sword.

An irascible old lady of rheumatic diathesis and implacable watchfulness, an old lady holding good, old-school doctrines as to night air and chills, and who, if need were, would storm the breath of lawful rest and feed the better to scan the movements of her adversary—this is the leader of the conservatives. A gentleman somewhat past middle age, sound as a bell, rubicund as morning, seeing every fog; authority on ventilation at his fingers' ends; a sanitary philanthropist, looking upon the health regulations of the universe as, in a certain measure, placed under his own personal inspection; uncompromising, it might almost be said unscrupulous, when the questions of health are in dispute; supported by dragon are trenched upon—such a chief-tain have the nonconformists of the opposition.

To-night the two leaders are destined to come face to face.

In the middle of her rubber, obstinately playing her aces second hand, scorning her partner's calls for trumps, declaring to her adversaries that everything they say, or do, or look, is "not whist," the irascible old lady suddenly feels a cold silver pan down her backbone. She starts to her feet, draws aside a curtain, and discovers that the enemy has outwitted her. At nine o'clock, p.m., secure in the sense that some sixty pairs of human lungs, with a well oiled fire, and a couple of dozen gaslighters, are doing their worst on the atmosphere—killed, I say, to rest in these balconies behinds, the whist-players are seen sitting, with a window open, not six feet distant. Air, night air, damp, chills, rheumatism, pouring in upon them in volumes!

At this precise juncture the philanthropist enters by an opposite door—a glass door leading from a terrace, and which in accordance alike with his custom and his principle, he leaves open. Thereabouts old lady stands in a thorough draught. The ribbons in her cap bristle. The very gas-lighters flicker.

It is a thrilling situation, and one appreciated by the audience. In an invalid foreign village the general completion of human life is such as to make people snatch at whatever incident of dramatic interest may present itself. The remaining whist-players lay down their cards and exchange glances. The performer on the piano stops short. Little Major Brett, as we have noted, treks busily across the room to the scene of action.

For a moment both belligerents pause.

I have said that the leader of the opposition has an aspect florid as morning. His eyes are impudent; his lips wear a smile of universal benevolence. At the present season November half spent, he dresses as though "race of the year" were in June, as to cost and white waistcoat; wears no cravat to speak of, and turns back his shirt collar with boyish airiness from his throat. His attire, his face, a certain jaunty freshness pervading his whole person, would seem to indicate a perfectly aggressive condition of health physical, if not moral.

The irascible old lady crosses the salon with an angry run. She stands, confronting him.

"May I beg, sir, as I have been forced to do a dozen times before, that you will have the kindness to shut that terrible door when you enter or quit the salon?"

The philanthropist looks around him blandly.

"Twenty, thirty, forty—yes, there must be quite forty pairs of lungs in the room, each consuming five cubic feet of air per minute. Pocket-save five, Heidi ten, Arnott twenty. I myself incline to the opinion of Arnott. Do you think, madam, that it is simple necessity for you whist-players, that we may consent to admit a breath of pure atmosphere? Whist, madam, entails thought. In thinking, some action of change occurs in the nervous substance of the brain, to the removal of which oxygen and blood are necessary."

"Oxygenated!" exclaims the old lady, upon whom the word seems to act as a direct irritant. "I think, sir, the less said on the subject of oxygen the better! There is a wendow, a window in this room open immediate y behind the whist-table at which I habitually sit. And I hereby hold open the whole evening."

A smile of triumph lits round the philanthropist's lips. The enemy uses it, and being out-manœuvred, loses her temper and self-command.

"We do not accuse you," she cries, and by this time her voice has grown loud enough to be heard throughout the length and breadth of the salon. "We do not accuse you of so dishonorable an action as setting that window open, and drawing a draught across it, deliberately. You were observed to be the first person who entered the drawing room after dinner. We may hope that you admitted the night air from inadvertence, that you forgot the unhappy invalids' rule gives a wave of her hand around the room) "to whom the cumulative agencies of your action might be fatal."

The philanthropist laughs outright. He is too thoroughly engrossed by one set of ideas, too blissfully conscious of the greatness of his own mission, to lose h s temper lightly under provocation.

"Poor invalids! If I did leave the window open, dear lady—let me think—yes; I certainly opened it to enjoy the glorious sight of the moonrise over the mountains—if I did admit a current of vital air into a room charged with such gases as these, the invalids should both upon mess their benefactor. Why, my dear madam," he goes on, with the most dispassionate candor imaginable, "what may I ask you, do you come here, to the south, for?"

"Rheumatism, a good many of us," retorts the lady, waxing angrier and angrier. "Rheumatism and its allied complaints, for all of which draughts, and damps, and night air are destruction. You hear me, sir, destruction."

"We come to the south, my dear madam, for health, for air:

"To air, not gas, for which we post,
More air and freer heat we want."

The irascible old lady turns on her heel, and murmurs "Book!"

"We come to revive the free, blithe, unconscious spirit of Hellas—"

"We come at an immense expense, sir, and under the advice of our physicians, to try the bracing effects of warmth. See what Williams' book says about night air. Hear Dr. Oldham.—Is Dr. Oldham in the salon?"

"Oldham is in the smoking room, ma'am, with every window open, and no fire."

"Ah! Dr. Oldman can commit suicide in any way he chooses. It is no affair of mine. MUSIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM

Mr. Edmund Gurney's Views—Plato's Conservatism—Thackeray's Wine-shop Singer.

RICHARD GRANT WHITE'S PSYCHOLOGICAL AND PHYSIOLOGICAL THEORY OF MUSIC.

A remarkable article, the first of a series by Edmund Gurney, in the Nineteenth Century, for July, takes a view of the nature and the functions of music, which will be expected, at first, at least, by most of its votaries—that it has no moral or intellectual quality or influence. In reviewing the philosophy of Plato in regard to music, the Greek advanced the idea that the connection between music and morals was of such a character—"I declare to Heaven you should be called upon to pay theodctors' bills of the house."

And both sides have the advantage of the generality. On both sides are chiefs, prepared for a sanitary campaign, and ready to dispute inch by inch of vantage ground, just at the point of the sword.

An irascible old lady of rheumatic diathesis and implacable watchfulness, an old lady holding good, old-school doctrines as to night air and chills, and who, if need were, would storm the breath of lawful rest and feed the better to scan the movements of her adversary—this is the leader of the conservatives. A gentleman somewhat past middle age, sound as a bell, rubicund as morning, seeing every fog; authority on ventilation at his fingers' ends; a sanitary philanthropist, looking upon the health regulations of the universe as, in a certain measure, placed under his own personal inspection; uncompromising, it might almost be said unscrupulous, when the questions of health are in dispute; supported by dragon are trenched upon—such a chief-tain have the nonconformists of the opposition.

To-night the two leaders are destined to come face to face.

In the middle of her rubber, obstinately playing her aces second hand, scorning her partner's calls for trumps, declaring to her adversaries that everything they say, or do, or look, is "not whist," the irascible old lady suddenly feels a cold silver pan down her backbone. She starts to her feet, draws aside a curtain, and discovers that the enemy has outwitted her. At nine o'clock, p.m., secure in the sense that some sixty pairs of human lungs, with a well oiled fire, and a couple of dozen gas-lighters, are doing their worst on the atmosphere—killed, I say, to rest in these balconies behinds, the whist-players are seen sitting, with a window open, not six feet distant. Air, night air, damp, chills, rheumatism, pouring in upon them in volumes!

At this precise juncture the philanthropist enters by an opposite door—a glass door leading from a terrace, and which in accordance alike with his custom and his principle, he leaves open. Thereabouts old lady stands in a thorough draught. The ribbons in her cap bristle. The very gas-lighters flicker.

It is a thrilling situation, and one appreciated by the audience. In an invalid foreign village the general completion of human life is such as to make people snatch at whatever incident of dramatic interest may present itself. The remaining whist-players lay down their cards and exchange glances. The performer on the piano stops short. Little Major Brett, as we have noted, treks busily across the room to the scene of action.

For a moment both belligerents pause.

I have said that the leader of the opposition has an aspect florid as morning. His eyes are impudent; his lips wear a smile of universal benevolence. At the present season November half spent, he dresses as though "race of the year" were in June, as to cost and white waistcoat; wears no cravat to speak of, and turns back his shirt collar with boyish airiness from his throat. His attire, his face, a certain jaunty freshness pervading his whole person, would seem to indicate a perfectly aggressive condition of health physical, if not moral.

The irascible old lady crosses the salon with an angry run. She stands, confronting him.

"May I beg, sir, as I have been forced to do a dozen times before, that you will have the kindness to shut that terrible door when you enter or quit the salon?"

The philanthropist looks around him blandly.

"Twenty, thirty, forty—yes, there must be quite forty pairs of lungs in the room, each consuming five cubic feet of air per minute. Pocket-save five, Heidi ten, Arnott twenty. I myself incline to the opinion of Arnott. Do you think, madam, that it is simple necessity for you whist-players, that we may consent to admit a breath of pure atmosphere? Whist, madam, entails thought. In thinking, some action of change occurs in the nervous substance of the brain, to the removal of which oxygen and blood are necessary."

"Oxygenated!" exclaims the old lady, upon whom the word seems to act as a direct irritant. "I think, sir, the less said on the subject of oxygen the better! There is a wendow, a window in this room open immediate y behind the whist-table at which I habitually sit. And I hereby hold open the whole evening."

A smile of triumph lits round the philanthropist's lips. The enemy uses it, and being out-manœuvred, loses her temper and self-command.

"We do not accuse you," she cries, and by this time her voice has grown loud enough to be heard throughout the length and breadth of the salon. "We do not accuse you of so dishonorable an action as setting that window open, and drawing a draught across it, deliberately. You were observed to be the first person who entered the drawing room after dinner. We may hope that you admitted the night air from inadvertence, that you forgot the unhappy invalids' rule gives a wave of her hand around the room) "to whom the cumulative agencies of your action might be fatal."

The philanthropist laughs outright. He is too thoroughly engrossed by one set of ideas, too blissfully conscious of the greatness of his own mission, t i ow k a temper lightly under provocation.

"Poor invalids! If I did leave the window ope, dear lady—let me think—yes; I certainly opened it to enjoy the glorious sight of the moonrise over the mountains—if I did admit a current of vital air into a room charged with such gases as these, the invalids should both upon mess their benefactor. Why, my dear madam," he goes on, with the most dispassionate candor imaginable, "what may I ask you, do you come here, to the south, for?"

"Rheumatism, a good many of us," retorts the lady, waxing angrier and angrier. "Rheumatism and its allied complaints, for

HAMILTON.

Hamilton, July 30.—The Journal of the late Mr. J. W. Harris, of the Public School, Hamilton, has been presented to the Library of the Toronto Normal School, and it is highly spoken of by the Inspector, A. Macallum, M.A., LL.B., Inspector of Public Schools, Hamilton, and H. C. Moore, B.A., Head Master of the Hamilton Collegiate Institute. The Journal contains a number of valuable papers on educational subjects, and is edited by Mr. Harris, Assistant Minister of Church Church Collegiate. An excerpt from Samuel Henry Johnston, was followed along the street last evening by a number of boys, who were hooting him. He broke away and threw at a little girl, daughter of Mr. Moore, and struck her on the head and sister, whom she was nursing. The stone inflicted a severe wound on the child's head. The man was arrested and brought before the police magistrate this morning, but the case was postponed until next week, the child's injuries being considered too dangerous a condition to be brought into court.

Last evening the members of Messrs. R. H. Whitney & Co presented Mr. J. G. Bowes, manager of the Hamilton branch, with a gold watch and chain. Mr. Bowes is leaving.

Mr. Thomas Bell, who was caused John Mc-Nab's residence. He was armed with a pick axe, and greatly frightened the inmates of the house. Two gentlemen fortunately came along and succeeded in capturing the lunatic, and placing the gentlemen obtaining a clothes-line about him. While he was being taken to the cells he broke away a few times, but was finally secured and locked up. Bell will very probably be sent to the Asylum.

The Political Contest in Bothwell.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

DEAR SIR,—As there is such a wide difference between the reports published in your paper and those in the Advertiser concerning the meetings held by Mr. Hawkins in the Riding of Bothwell, perhaps a word from an auditor at the meeting held in Henderson's schoolhouse, Tp of Orford-ville on last Saturday night may be received. Monday evening, July 24, would be received by your readers as more authentic than reports written by parties who have to draw on their imagination for their facts. The meeting referred to was the third in favor of Hawkins and the national policy. The audience numbered about 100 voters, and were held delighted for two hours and half by the logical, eloquent and convincing speech delivered by Mr. Hawkins. The gentlemanly language in debate is praised by both parties. He was followed by Jr. Smith, of Ridgetown, who has a good flow of language, but lacks in knowledge. Hawkins, in reply, made some very happy hits, and carried the meeting with him completely. The next meeting announced for meetings as an index of how the vote is going, that Hawkins will be elected by a good majority.

Origin of the Canadian Horse.

I have occasionally seen it asserted in our agricultural papers the Canadian is a Norman horse reduced by scantier food, colder climate, etc. Now, this I think physically impossible, as a reduction of size in this way, I am confident, would produce a long-legged, slab-sided, stumbling brute, very different from the compact, hardy, fine-formed, active little Canadian, as he has existed there as far back as the memory of man, still maintaining his ground in considerable numbers, notwithstanding the numerous crosses in late years of larger English horses. When I was in Quebec, in 1852, I saw a very fine light or dappled grey stallion much in the style of Mr. Dunham's Success, except he was finer in his points. He was about fourteen hands high, possibly not over QUOITING TOURNEY.—A grand quoiting tournament will take place at Galt on the 8th August. Prizes to the amount of $65 will be given. The first prize will consist of a silver cup and $15.

TOTAL WRECK.—News has been received in town that the steamer Lake Superior, reported ashore on Anticosti, is a total wreck. Among the goods on board there were packages for Messrs. Pritchard Bros., Pierce & Pickering, and Heath & Fennimore, of this city.

LATE PATENTS.—Up to the 6th inst., the following new patents had been issued:—C. E. Lipe et al, Broom, sewing machine; A. C. Martin, furniture caster; W. A. Scott, manufacturing floor oil cloth, &c., &c.; D. F. Hill, surveyor's plotting instrument; T. C. Hewitt, lightning rod.

THE GAELS OR DESERT.—It is the intention of the Orange Young Britons and True Blues of this city, to celebrate the anniversary of the closing of the gates of Derry, on the 12th of August, by an excursion to Brantford, where a monster demonstration is to be held.

NEW LAW FIRM.—Messrs. Lawson & Vivian is the title of a new legal firm which has opened its office at 86 Dundas street west, in this city. Both members of the firm are enterprising young men, well read in their profession, whose energy and ability are likely to secure for them a liberal patronage.

ACCIDENT.—On Monday afternoon, while Michael Ryan was engaged caulking the waterworks pipes, on the corner of Dufferin avenue and Maitland street, part of the embankment, which is of a very sandy nature, caved in and broke his leg. A doctor was sent for at once and the broken limb was set, and he is now doing well.

FATAL OPERATION.—On Sunday last as Mr. Neil D. Moore was undergoing an operation in the Western Hotel, in this city, conducted by Dr. Hanson and others, for the removal of a tumor from his side, he succumbed and died. The deceased was a teacher of Galt, and son of Mr. Dugald Moore, of Strathroy.

PRESENTATION.—The members of the I. O. L., No. 226, intend presenting Bro. R. Wright, County Secretary, and Bro. Geo. Watson, District Master, with a handsome medal watch, composed of silver, with an outside rim of gold, as a mark of deference to the same. On these two gentlemen in getting up the very successful demonstration held in the city on the 7th inst.

THE RECENT EXCESSIVE HEAT.—Professor Lungley, of the Pittsburg Observatory, rises to explain the cause of the late "scorcher." He finds it owing to the fact that "the sun's face is at present free from spots almost beyond past remembrance." Next summer, he adds, the spots will begin to re-appear and will go on increasing in number and expanding in size until they reach their maximum in 1882, when they will again almost or quite disappear in 1889.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—A man named Edward Lok, an employe of the Ontario Car Works, met with a very serious accident on Monday. He and another man were having some wooden blocks with a steam auger, when the tool slipped and ran into his abdomen to a considerable depth, making several revolutions before the machinery could be stopped. He was at once conveyed to his father's home, where his services of Drs. Edwards and McArthur were obtained. The man lies in a very critical condition.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH GARDEN PARTY.—The garden party at the St. Mary's (R. C.) school grounds last night was largely attended, and proved a very enjoyable affair. The City Band, under the leadership of Mr. S. John Hyttenrauch, played capital selections, to the delight of the audience. A musical programme was also rendered by Misses Phillips, Nagle and Powers taking part. The refreshment table did a thriving business, under the direction of the ladies of the Altar Society of St. Mary's church.

THE CITY ELECTION.

SPEECH OF COL. WALKER.

Col. Walker, on coming forward, said he was proud of being there to-night on the invitation of the Young Men's Liberal Club of this city, and he was also gratified to find such a humanizing influence in a political contest as the presence of the fair sex. He trusted that that influence would enter more largely into our local contest, so that the presence of ladies would keep feeling down, and that the contest should be carried on without that bitter personal feeling which had sometimes characterized similar contests. He rejoiced that in the present contest a great issue was before the people, on which they will confirm their choice. A little time ago it looked as if the issues were to be somewhat trifling. A few months ago the papers were taken up with such petty issues as the Neebing Hotel, and Goderich Harbor affairs, and it seemed as if both parties were going to the country with no great question before the people. It happened, however, that a great question had to be decided. There were found to be weak spots in the armor of the Opposition party, and they have, as a last resource, raised a question of extreme protection in opposition to the Government policy of a revenue tariff, hoping to carry the country upon it. They forget that the intelligence of the country is necessary to carry it, and that no "glittering generalities" will suffice. They seem to have forgotten that the people must be satisfied that the change must be for the good of the country, and that without it as otherwise they will not support it. And it is only by seeing how utterly impossible it is for John A. and Mr. Tupper to answer the question as to its benefit to the country, that they should themselves under "glittering generalities." Last night Mr. Leonard, an authority on the Eye and Ear, in the Toronto School of Medicine, 11 the Toronto Medical Faculty, 1st Saturday of each month. Residence and Office—Exeter street Toronto. 14 tf m w s has been swept off the face of the waters? Yet there was never an industry protected as is the American shipping interest. In addition to a very large duty on all materials used in ship-building, there is a law on the statute-book that no American can own a foreign ship; yet nine-tenths of the carrying trade of the United States is done by Great Britain. In 1860 the shipping of our neighbors was prosperous and was increasing, and had it not been for Protection the United States at the present day would be giving England a race for maritime supremacy, whereas under Protection she had dropped so far astern that not only England but Canada was ahead of her. He hoped the fate of the Republic would be a warning to us to resist going in the same direction, and that instead we might go on in the road we have pursued in the past. It has been calculated that under Protection $200,000,000 has been lost in manufacturing beyond the requirements of the country, and that at the present time there are 2,000,000 men out of employment, of whom 1,000,000 are tramps, and that a general fear of Communism prevails. He hoped from this state of affairs we would take warning. He did not intend going into financial matters, but there were some local matters that he wished to touch upon. The Government were not responsible for the hard times that affected the country. The wave of depression struck us before the Reform Government went into power. But he believed that daylight was appearing, and that we are approaching a more prosperous era. Politicians are taking advantage of the bad times to ask for increased Protection, but it was a significant fact that the manufacturers were not asking for this Protection. In London there was no demand for it from the manufacturers as a body. Mr. Fraser, the agent for the National Policy League, came to this city, but he could not obtain a sufficient number of manufacturers to form a meeting to ask for Protection. What better answer could the Conservatives get than this when they said that the manufacturers demanded Protection? All the works in the city were running even during the dull times and doing a fair business. Now they are all doing well, and some of them are enlarging their premises to enable them to fill the increasing orders that are pouring in upon them. What was the reason that this Protection cry had been resorted to? It was simply an attempt on the part of Sir John Macdonald to have the former division of the people reversed and to get back into power. We manufacture in Canada very largely. There are $221,000,000 worth of goods manufactured in this country annually. It does not want stimulating. Our exports of all varieties amount to $70,000,000, and of manufactured goods we export $5,000,000. We export over $17 worth per head of the population. The United States exports a little over $12 per head. We beat the United States by exactly $5.66 per head of the population. But it is said our farmers must have protection. What on earth for? Of animals we import $6,000,000, and export $12,000,000. Of agricultural products we import $1,500,000, and export $12,000,000. And what would be the effect of keeping imports of food grain from coming in? We have got our canals, built at great expense, as a carrying medium to the seaboard, and if we put on protective restrictions we stop all that source of traffic. We have got our mills—are they not all run for export? They bring in raw material from the west, manufacture it here, and export it, and these would be stopped. So we would deprive ourselves of our import and milling trade, all to give power and place to a set of men irrespective of the interests of the people. Here the audience became restive, and many left the hall, evidently wearied with the dryness of the speeches so far. Col. Walker said he would now pass on to the consideration of the local questions affecting this election. He would go on to reply to some things said by his opponents on the platform. Sir John Macdonald, at a late meeting, had referred to him as having connection with his (Sir John's) Pacific Railway Charter. He was surprised that he should make such a statement. His connection with that charter was simply as a commercial man. He had nothing to do with his private arrangement with Allan, and he (Sir John) might have left it alone. And if it were not that he respected the principle of not striking a man while he is down, he would state that while he (Col. Walker) was in that position he and others came to the knowledge of circumstances that would have made his (Sir John's) conduct much worse in the eyes of the people. I don't, continued the speaker, wish to say anything against the party he leads. The Conservative party is a great party, a respectable party, and I am surprised that it retains at its head a man so utterly devoid of the first principles of ordinary right. He thinks that all the rights of the world belong to him, and that he is at liberty to play football with the country's interests to serve his own personal interests. I have no hesitation in saying that no man was more devoid of feeling for the best interests of the country than Sir John; and I am surprised that the party will consent that he should be at its head. Following in his path, Mr. Carling took up the role of abuse of me. I thought he got a lesson at the last contest. He has been very cunning in this matter. He avoided saying any personal abuse of me on the platform; but takes another way. He goes to the Free Press. He has got two organs in the city. He gets the Free Press to go so far in abuse of me. The Free Press occupies a respectable position in the western part of Ontario, although conducted on "common party principles," and won't go quite so far in personal abuse of me as he would desire; and so he got possession of the Herald, by owning a part of it, and gets it to pour out abuse that is too vile for the Free Press to sully its columns with. He says to Dawson, "You go and do the dirty work of calling Walker all the hard names." "Well," says Dawson, "suppose there is a libel suit." "O don't be afraid; he can't recover any damages, and if you were put in prison, you will get out very soon. As to thrashing, if Walker did thrash such a dirty blackguard as you, he would only loose one or two hundred votes by it." (Sensation.) I want to put it to this meeting, and through this meeting to Carling, that if he has got any abuse of me to do, let him do it himself on the platform. He is cunning in getting the papers to do it, because it shuts my mouth. I can't silence him off the platform in return for this kind of abuse, because he would say it was cowardly. I want to tell him, and I challenge him to do his own abuse of me, instead of hiring his assassins to do it for him. Let him stand up as a man to do it himself, and I shall promise to make him ashamed to walk the streets of London by the revelations I shall make. (Movement.) He is a fellow citizen; he has got his wife and family, and I have got mine, and I don't want to introduce personal feelings, but if he will have it (emphatically) he must have it! he will find that I will make him so sick (movement in the audience) that he will regret having hired his assassins to abuse me. Passing on from that, let him refer to what Mr. Carling did say on the platform. He said that he (Mr. Walker) had used bribery at the last election. He admitted that his friends had been indiscreet; but there was no one regretted it more than he did; but such charges came with very bad grace from Mr. Carling, who spent money by the bushel, and did not dare come forward to claim the seat he was so anxious to get now, because he knew what his fate would have been if he had

A LARGE MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Dispatches, is issued every morning. It is the only paper supplying the earliest information published west of Toronto, anticipating the metropolitan press from three to eight hours in all western towns—a matter of great importance to all commercial men as well as the general public.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock a.m., also finds a place in the columns of the London Free Press, whose large and ever-growing press. Its circulation and influence are constantly advancing. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, outstripping other journals in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 2 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarterly, $1.50 (in advance); delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or POSTED FREE OF CHARGE to distant places at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, Domestics Wanted; Articles Lost or Found; Houses to Let or Sell, &c., &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents for twenty-five words; and so in proportion. Birth, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted in BOTH EDITIONS at the rate of two cents per line (measured measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising cases by the year or half-year, the terms of which can be had on application at the business office.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries.

The Weekly Free Press

IS A MAMMOTH SHEET, containing 64 columns of matter, and enjoys a large and influential circulation among the best classes. It is a Western, not a Toronto, paper, and compares favorably with the sheets published elsewhere. Its compilation is made with great care. It contains the cream of the news of the week from all parts of the world; ample commercial information; and its literary department finds great acceptance in all family circles. It has been lightly termed the "Ring of the Weekies," and is well worthy of the appellation.

PRICE $1.00 per annum, postage free, including premium picture.

The Evening Free Press

IS ISSUED at 4 o'clock p.m., and contains not only the news found in the morning edition, but additional telegraphic despatches and local intelligence up to the hour of going to press. This edition is published at TWO CENTS, and is for sale by the newsboys and at the various news depots on the line of the G. T. R., St. Mary's, Stratford, St. Thomas and other western towns.

☞ SPECIAL NOTICE.—Advertisements appearing in the DAILY FREE PRESS are published in the Evening Edition free of extra charge!

MORE GRIT FALSEHOODS.

The Tiers, with characteristic rascality and fraudulent intent, continues to speak of Sir John Macdonald having in his speech at Strathroy named 35 per cent. as the rate of tariff he would adopt. Now, Sir John has already denied having said so. He has stigmatized the statement as an "absurd falsehood." And yet the Tiers people, bent upon multiplying their wicked falsehoods from day to day, continue to put words into Sir John's mouth which he has distinctly repudiated. When questioned by the St. John Telegraph as to the veracity of their report, what did the Tiers people do? They dispatched the following explanation:—

London, Ont., July 23.

The reporter believes that in regard to the statement is substantially correct. The speech was delivered in a hurry, and no complete notes taken by any of the reporters present. Sir John certainly named some figures as a basis of tariff arrangements.

It is under such circumstances that the Tiers presumes upon public forbearance by representing that which Sir John has publicly denied as the fact in the reporters were driven from their positions assigned to them to take shelter from the storm, the noise of which and the distance to which they had gone prevented the possibility of taking accurate notes. The Tiers reporter was huddled up with the rest, and had no better opportunity than the reporters of the other dirty days and FREE PASS of hearing what was being said to the audience, who pluckily stood out in the storm in order to listen to what Sir John had to say. The confession has been made by the Tiers that a storm prevailed during the speech, and that complete notes were not taken by the reporter. Still it alleges that "Sir John certainly named some figures as a basis of tariff." And that is all the excuse it has to offer for leading the public astray on so important a matter. "Named some figures," indeed! Why, then, not have said so, instead of inventing a figure and putting it into Sir John's mouth? Such journalism is but the embodiment of falsehood.

THE POLICY AS PROPOUNDED.

Instead of the Grits allowing themselves to the proposed NATIONAL POLICY in a spirit of patriotism, they oppose it upon the narrow basis of party. They seem to be quite averse, if not actually incapable, of looking at it from any other standpoint but that of party. Seeing that it has not Mr. Mackenzie as its author, they not only oppose but endeavor to misrepresent it. One portion of them go the whole length of putting words into the mouth of Sir John which he never uttered, while another is engaged in splitting up his speech in one place and another into fragments, and by ingenious transpositions seek to make them contradict one another. All this is done not with the idea of forwarding Canadian interests, but in order to mislead the people. It is well, therefore, to keep before the minds of our readers the true basis of the National Policy as formally set forth by Sir John in the Parliament, in his celebrated resolution:—

"That this House is of opinion that the welfare of Canada requires the adoption of a National Policy, which by a judicious readjustment of the Tariff will benefit and foster the various interests of the Mining, the Manufacturing and other industries of the Dominion; that such a policy will retain in Canada thousands of our fellow-countrymen, now obliged to expatriate themselves in search of the employment denied them at home; will restore prosperity to our struggling industries, now so sadly depressed; will prevent Canada from being made a sacrifice market; will encourage and develop an active inter-provincial trade; and moreover, will greatly tend to procure for this country, eventually, a reciprocity of trade."

That is the programme which the Opposition offer for public acceptance. It contains truths which cannot be gainsaid, and sets forth a policy which is supported by all who have been enabled to disenthrall themselves from party dogmatism and individual control.

The idea of settling in Palestine, and there reviving the Jewish kingdom, meets with but little favor from Hebrews. In the Hungarian Parliament, however, a member, not a Jew, has proclaimed himself an earnest advocate of this project. Mr. Istoczy has no love for the Jews, but, on the contrary, rather dislikes them. He thinks that the race is altogether too vigorous, energetic and prolific, and that in a few years more they will have crowded out the Magyars, unless something is done. Therefore he wants all the Jews sent to the Holy Land, there to increase and multiply far away from the vineyards of Hungary. Istoczy's speech excited only laughter in the Parliament, for the Jews are highly esteemed in Hungary, where they are not only among the most industrious, but among the most patriotic of Francis Joseph's subjects.

MR. G. W. ROSS.

If we mistake not, Mr. G. W. Ross has been a Public School Inspector, even since he entered the House of Commons, and is now, so far as known, an Inspector of Model Schools, in which Mr. Crooks has the young teachers trained for their professional work. It is to be hoped that the principles of morality have not been overlooked in this course of training, and waiving altogether the question of having a politician, and a bitter, bigotted, virulent politician besides, filling such an office, some might think that a slight regard to truth might not be out of place in the constitution of an official character of the kind. No doubt, it is a desperate game he tries to play, to impose the renegade Glass upon a strictly Conservative constituency, such as the East Riding of Middlesex, but still he ought not to lose sight of his dual position of M. P. and Inspector of Model Schools, nor yet forget what he owes to the country in the latter position, and also that he should set before these young teachers under his supervision an example of truth, honesty and integrity in his public career. In his predictions to these "teachers in training" as they are called, he no doubt dilates on this very subject, and impresses upon his young hearers the grand fact that they are bound to set before their pupils in Ontario Public Schools both a gentlemanly deportment, and give them the advantage of an exemplar as respects truthfulness and general morality. How he is to do this and retain his own consistency with his speech in the City Hall, at the Glass meeting before the world, is something difficult to understand. We have seldom seen less regard paid to accuracy in facts and a more studied determination to mislead an audience upon important matters than are displayed in this speech.

He knows, at least he ought to know that on the question of a modification of the tariff, or on "the National Policy," there was but one real test vote during the last session, and this on the resolution moved by the leader of the Opposition and seconded by Dr. Tupper, "that the Mackenzie Government were saved from defeat on that occasion by some thirty-one of a majority, and yet Mr. Ross, with shameful disingenuousness, tried to leave the impression on the minds of his hearers that the greatest support it met with was twenty-eight votes. We say disingenuously, had Mr. Ross desired to treat the tariff question with fairness and candor, instead of taking a motion brought up by a private member—and in some cases this was done by a Ministerialist with an evident purpose—he would have dealt with the only test question of the session, brought up in strict conformity with Parliamentary practice.

He also told the electors present that "They had to choose between a party led by men who possess the confidence of the country and a party who have already forfeited the confidence of the people of the country." Now Mr. Ross knows better than this. He know that even on the floor of the House of Commons the majority of the Mackenzie Government have been reduced from one hundred to about forty; he knows well that every constituency that has been opened for the three last years has almost invariably gone against them; he knows, none better, that in less than two years from his receiving the seals of office, Mr. Mackenzie had made shipwreck of whatever of popularity and reputation he had made for himself by very extensive professions never realized in practice; he knows that of every fault which the Premier had attributed to the Conservatives while in power, and for which he condemned them in the most uncompromising style, he has himself been guilty and in a highly aggravated manner; and finally he knows right well that his leader now stands before the people of Canada as tinged in reputation as respects his lofty pretensions to morality, as he is hopelessly and helplessly incompetent in administrative ability.

Mr. Ross told them that the Mackenzie party "had managed the affairs of the country with economy; had cut down expenditure, and had lowered the rate of taxation." Now this is really too bad. A small stretch when a man essays to bear such a dead weight as Mr. Glass might be overlooked, but to fly in the face of the plainest facts is more than the people of Ontario have a right to bear from one Inspector of Model Schools. Mr. Mackenzie parted company with economy when he entered office. It is true that Mr. Mackenzie told the people shortly before he was unexpectedly ushered into office that "the Ministry were packing the public buildings from attic to cellar—two or three in every room—till one could hardly find his way through them." Well, to what extent has this economist reduced the number of employés or their salaries? Why a look at the blue books under the Mackenzie regime will show that year by year, the expense of the civil service has gone on increasing, so that before he was quite two years in office this branch of the public expenditure had increased about 21 per cent. Does not Mr. Ross know this? But then says Mr. Ross this economic government—"has reduced taxation." Perhaps so. Will Mr. Ross deny that the present Government has not reduced taxation? Then, if the additional burden upon the shoulders of the people of three millions and a half of taxes, and with all this there has been an annual deficit of from half a million to nearly two millions of dollars? Now we say again; if Mr. Ross does not know these things he ought to know them, or otherwise his riding to instruct the electors of East Middlesex is a piece of impertinence, and if he does know them, and so shamefully misrepresent them, he is utterly unfit to be a member of Parliament, but still more unfit to be an inspector of Model Schools. Mr. Ross holds up the Government as models of economy and retrenchment. Be it so. Will he deny those figures as taken from public records? That for the collection of each $100 of customs duties the Macdonald Government paid in 1872-3, $4.35, while for collecting the same amount in 1876-7 the economical Government of Mr. Mackenzie paid $5.75!! Will he deny that in 1872-3, for collecting $5,017,200, the Conservatives paid at the port of Montreal the sum of $87,700, while for collecting $3,869,700 at the same place in 1876-7, the Mackenzie Government paid $118,000? In other words, the Conservative Government paid about 1¾ per cent., while the economical Grits paid 3 per cent.

But why should not Mr. Ross stretch a point or two in favor of Mr. Mackenzie? He has certainly made well out of both Governments since they obtained power, and even a common mercenary will fight, for those who pay him. But it might be well for the people to ask themselves this serious question—Is this pensioner on the bounty of two Governments likely to be an independent representative of a constituency?

The electric light is making successful strides everywhere. The city of Memphis is to have its streets lighted with electricity. The introduction of this illuminator into the Capitol at Albany is all that could be desired. The electric light was also permanently established last week in the permanent exhibition buildings at Philadelphia, and the entertainments there during the coming fall will be under the brilliant rays of electricity.

SQUARING THE CIRCLE.

The Chatham Planet, referring to the Grit candidate in Kent, says:—"The London Lawyer Nowhere." We think that there is a slight error here, because at last accounts Mr. Hugh Macmahon was at Ottawa doing a snug little business in connection with the Boundary Commission. In fact, Mr. Macmahon is the recipient of considerable favors of this kind, which is one reason, we apprehend, why he finds himself a candidate in opposition to Mr. Rufus Stephenson. Like our friend David of this ilk, he does not serve for naught. But then this should be understood by the public, so that matters may be made square all round.

New York Times:—The word paganism is now often applied by writers and speakers to skeptics, deists, and rationalists, to denote that such persons have freed themselves from everything like superstition; that they, having totally discarded tradition and authority, live from inner promptings, and by the light of reason alone. Pagan and paganism have not, and never had, any such meaning. A pagan is one who worships false gods; one who is not Christian, Mohammedan, or Jew. It is nearly synonymous with heathen and gentile, though the former term was employed by the person living in the country, (pagan referred to the dweller in city or town), while the latter term was bestowed by the Jews upon anybody not of their nation. Pagan, instead of signifying a person free from superstition or guided by reason, signifies just the contrary. A pagan is always more superstitious than the people who call him so. We style pagans the Brahmins, Buddists, and all who have any other form of faith than our own; but they have exactly the same right to style us pagans. The pagans of ancient Greece and Rome were fanatical in creed. Like many modern religionists, they did not practice morality, and had very little, if any, humanity; but they believed excessively, implicitly in many impossibilities and in conduct. They were intolerance itself; their idolatrous creed rendered them cruel and cowardly. They never hesitated to sacrifice their best and ablest men if once the cry of irreligion was raised against them, as it frequently was, by demagogues who wished to set them aside or destroy them. To designate as pagans men who claim to be concerned with humanity instead of divinity, who boast that they reject all evidence not based on reason, who pride themselves upon the fullest freedom from superstition, is totally to pervert the import of the word. The ancient philosophers were more like what our so-called pagans claim to be; they were allied to our men of science and our rationalists, who can only be considered pagans in that they are not, in an orthodox sense, Christians.

The recent scandals and divorce-court affairs among the English aristocracy are a subject for congratulation, and I have newspaper men. It is said that a number of members of various London clubs have formed themselves into a vigilance committee, and have sworn among about Brigham Young and his wives to ladies of their own order, laugh and playfully tap them with parasols, and how they are reproached publicly by public roustabouts for not having paid them—in the week in which a baronet has been brought to the Police Court for pushing a prostitute off the pavement, and a "gentleman rider" in the habit of whipping a jockey who had won on the latter's trainer for the wages of his guilt! Are these "slanders?" The facts are taken from the records of law courts and the police sheets! Vigilance committee and energetic managers, forsooth! Let the members of the various clubs take energetic measures against the Prince of Wales's

JET:

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

The sanitary reformer does not lose his temper; but he does sometimes deeply glitter comes into his eye.

"Do you know, my good lady, are you in the very least aware, how much preventable disease occurs annually from vitiated air throughout the United Kingdom?"

"I know that I will prevent you from killing us all if I can, sir! Windows are aired open in this hotel at every hour of the day and night, and I'll—A better watch is kept than you, perhaps think for. I know that myself, as the window was opened, on the floor where I slept, at midnight. But I have made it right with the proprietor, I have, Mr. Henry Schmidt," announces the stanch old lady, as a glance round the room at once that it promised that the interests of the many shall not be sacrificed to the mad caprice of the one."

I have stated that the philanthropist is in word is less intelligible. At this point in the discussion it must, however, be admitted that "la moutarde lui monte au nez."

"Herr Schmidt!" he echoes, derisively. "Of course, in him you see the cause of all. We are all familiar with the German ideas of ventilation and cleanliness."

"Cleanliness, sir!"

"Cleanliness, madam. Fresh, pure, clean air—the one vital condition of our existence, by day or by night, in dry weather or in wet."

"In wet weather! Monstrous!"

"Murderous, madam; your Black-Hole system is murderous."

"Rheumatism! Bronchitis!"

"Vitiated blood. Stunted nerves system."

"Obstinacy!"

"Infatuation!"

By this time both combatants are flushed in the face, and a dead silence reigns throughout the salon. The discussion has evidently reached a point at which diplomacy loiters on its last legs, and force stands ready and willing to take diplomacy's place.

Sir, at length demands the lady, solemnly, "I ask of you, for the last time will you have the goodness to shut that door by which you have just entered the salon?"

"I will challenge the common sense of the whole room first," says the gentleman, curtly. "I will not budge, I will not be a bondage of obstructed people in the nineteenth century elect to breathe an atmosphere compared with which the prisons of Calcutta would be refreshing."

He looks appealingly round the room. People take up newspapers, or are suddenly interested in the state of the fire, or in the gas. No one catches his eye; no one responds. Such is human nature—blind to reason, deaf to appeals. And a private canvass, a couple of hours ago, would have secured more than half the ominous number of votes in favor of ventilation. But civilians like some advice, will fight most obstinately behind intrenchments yet shrink from meeting the enemy in the open field.

"If any persons wish a door or window left open, I will not prevent them," says the lady, with a stiffened, save that of little Major Brett; still his only reaches a sufficient elevation to—"cut carver" only.

"You see, I hope," cries the old lady, her face lit up by the triumph of early parliamentary victory."

"I do see," says the gentleman, with emphasis—"I see, but I cannot breathe! I shall therefore return to the terrace, countenant the enjoyment I have to inhale my fresh air, and drink my cup of coffee al fresco.—Ladies and gentlemen, you have, all of you, my best wishes as to your prospects—of asphyxiation!"

And, making a low and sweeping salutation, the philanthropist quits the room; shutting the door with much marked good-will as he set every one in the chamber, every pane of glass in the windows, shivering.

"Now is the time to show forth the faith that is in us," observes Laurence Biron to Jet. "Principles, in the aggregate, look as a glance round the room will show you, as promised that the interests of the many shall not be sacrificed to the mad caprice of one!"

The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is larger than that of any other Ontario journal in the West, and more than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries—any statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

FREE PRESS OFFICE, Sept. 11, 1877.

The Free Press.

Thursday, August 2, 1878.

FALL SHOW.—The London Township Agricultural Society have decided to hold their fall show at St. John's, on Friday, the 27th of September next.

REGISTRATION.—There were 29 marriages, 60 births, and 23 deaths registered with Mr. James Grant, the Division Registrar of London Township, during the first six months of 1878.

VITAL STATISTICS.—During the month of July there were registered with the Division Registrar in the city 45 births, 30 marriages and 37 deaths—a slight increase over the previous month.

SURGICAL OPERATION.—We are glad to learn of the success of the surgical operation performed on Saturday evening on Mr. Warren Rock, when Drs. Moore and Woodruff removed two tumors from him. He will resume his professional pursuits in a few days.

ARRIVED.—The large iron piping to be used for the supply mains have arrived from Scotland, and in a few days work will be commenced along the principal streets. Extra gangs of men will be put on, and every effort made to push the work to a speedy completion.

HORSES FOR ENGLAND.—Twenty-one carriage horses were shipped from Toronto for Liverpool, via Halifax, by Mr. Joseph Gerard on Tuesday. They were purchased in different parts of this Province, and are of a good quality, the stock being valued at about $5,000.

GARDEN PARTY.—A pleasant time may be anticipated by those who attend the garden party at the Mount Hope Orphan Asylum this evening. The good ladies of this benevolent institution have spared no pains to make the event attractive. Gowan's band, a whole concert in itself, will contribute to the enjoyment, while some of the best local talent of the city have promised to assist.

CRICKET NOTES.—The arrangements for a cricket match between the Prickwick and Asylum teams on Friday next have been broken off owing to illness among the Asylum players. It is to be hoped, however, that the rival clubs will meet, and as has been the annual custom of late years, have their annual good-natured struggle for supremacy.—The Prickwick Club intend playing the Pickwicks at an early date, and a good game may be looked for.

MOUNT HOPE ORPHAN ASYLUM.—The feast of the Sacred Heart of Mount Hope Orphan Asylum Rev. Mother Ignatius, was celebrated Tuesday. Mass was celebrated in the chapel by Rev. Father Tiernan, assisted by Rev. Father Molphy and Dollard. The singing of the choir was rendered in exquisite taste. After the services in the chapel the community with the inmates and orphans, repaired to the lawn, where vocal music was rendered by the children, and pieces spoken, which were very pleasing. A feeling and eloquent address was presented to Rev. Father Ignatius.

LACROSSE.—The London Lacrosse Club leave for Stratford Woodstock, to play with the club of that town. The team, with one or two exceptions, is the same that defeated the Stratford Club at Stratford on the 1st of July, and in London on the 11th of July. From the well-known record of the Woodstock club, we have no doubt this will prove a very close contested match. The following are the names of the players who will represent the London club:—Captain McEachren, Stevens, McGuire, Angus, Barr, Wing, Rose, Rutherford, Wheeler, Spelton, De Blaquiere and Butler.—The same club play the St. Thomas club on Tecumseh Park on Tuesday next.

POLICE COURT PENCILINGS.—At this Court, yesterday 8 to P. M. presiding, Wm. Sleighholm was charged by James Quick and Thomas Taylor with refusing to pay them their lawful wages. The matter will be investigated on the 14th. John and Joseph Stevenson and Thomas Pryor were arrested at the instance of Constable Logan, G. W. R., charged with being disorderly on the L. & C. P. R. cars on Monday last. John Campbell, from the township of Ekfrid, was charged with being drunk. He was fined $1 and costs. Jas. Irvine, Wm. J. Molsland and Fred. Moore, two youths, charged with breaking into one of the stalls of the market, gave bail for their good behavior, and were discharged. Wm. McCrary, a companion, was sent for trial on the charge. Joseph Hurley was committed for trial on the charge of stealing a lady's switch from Mrs. Bird's shop, on Richmond street, a few days since. John Stacey and Joseph and Michael Hurley were sent for trial on the charge of breaking into the stall of an Italian named Bernatti, a week or ten days ago. Burch Irons, charged with being one of the parties who broke into the Market House, was discharged from custody. Henry Going, M.D., and Mrs. McLean were fined $25 and costs for a breach of the Medical Act. Mrs. Bland, charged with a similar offence, did not appear, and her case was enlarged until the 5th inst. John Stacey was remanded until the 5th on the charge of larceny from the store of Mr. J. Logan.

A SNEAK-THIEF ARRESTED.—Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Richard Jennings, bar-tender at the "Office Restaurant," had his coat stolen, and shortly after missing the garment gave information to Detective Phair in regard to his suspicions. That officer made a tour of the second-hand shops, and at one of them found the garment, which had been purchased from a young man answering the description of the person whom Jennings suspected. Pursuing his inquiry further, Mr. Phair ran across the thief just as he was entering another second-hand shop. He had in his possession a pair of black cloth trowsers, which are also supposed to have been stolen in the city. On being taken to the Central Station and searched, a great many letters and documents were found on his person. He gave his name as James Collins and said he came from Cleveland. He has numerous letters signed S. A. Roberts, St. Louis, Henry Smith, Cobourg, and so. Another is from Enterprise Company's envelope, which had contained $100 addressed to the last-named person. An assignment of Robert's right to property in Cobourg was also found among the papers, and a letter addressed to Mr. Benson, Woodstock, from S. A. Roberts, in which it is stated that the latter knew Benson's father, and being hard up asked him for assistance. It is surmised Collins has stolen these letters. The owner can have them by applying to the Chief of Police.

LONDON EAST NOTES.

Wednesday afternoon.

The charges against the Victor and Atlantic Oil Works Companies, for allowing oil to remain in front of their refineries, were dismissed by Squire Anderson last night, the complainant, a Mr. Depper, not putting in an appearance.

A raid was made on the house of one Beck, on King street, last evening, by County Constables Nichol and Leathorn, but when they made their appearance the "birds" had flown. Beck was arrested, however, and brought before Squire Anderson, who remanded him for a week.

John Collingwood was arrested on Rectory street this afternoon for being drunk and using abusive language towards several ladies. He was brought before Squire Peters and fined $1 and $2 85 costs, or ten days in jail. He went down.

A man named Dilke will be tried before Squire Peters to-morrow for being drunk and disorderly on the Hamilton Road last night.

The Ontario Car Works have sent away two passenger cars for the Lake Champlain & Jenning Railway, and four improved street cars for the city of Quebec. They were all handsomely finished, and showed that first-class cars can be built as nicely and as well in London East as in any other place in Canada or the United States.

Edward Cox, who was seriously injured at the Ontario Car Shops the other day, is improving very rapidly, and is considered out of danger.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Many good people with inquiring minds have probably gone down to their graves without ever finding out what made circus lemonade sour. The mystery is solved. It is raspberry syrup that does it. Circus lemonade is composed of a pail of water, half a pint of "syrup," four slices of lemon, for advertising floaters, and a chunk of alum for the fun.

The result of the contest has been to convince the people of St. John as to Hanlan's abilities. He can beat any man in the world," is the general remark, and if Hanlan was engaged in a race elsewhere he would be backed by odds to come here.

To-night things are very quiet. Hanlan came to town for a time, and returned again to his old quarters. He lowers not a finger this morning. He has got back to Torrybarn Cove after the race, he was quite calm. The reception to Hanlan is to take place to-morrow evening. On Friday morning Hanlan and party will leave for Boston, and Ross will be left behind. Rr. Ross is quite dejected over the result, but his backers are more over the fact that there was much an unsatisfactory conclusion to the race.

Orangemen's Rights in Montreal.

The Matter to be Referred to the Privy Council.

Montreal, July 31.—This afternoon the counsel retained by the Orangemen in this case now before the Courts met to consider the proposition submitted to them by counsel for the representatives of the opposing party, with the object of having the case brought directly before the Privy Council. It is reported that there are some other important propositions in connection with the present. The counsel present were Judge Badgley, Judge Day and Joseph Doutre, Q.C. They arrived at a decision, which will be submitted to the Orangemen. It is understood that the Orangemen will arrive here shortly to deliberate in reference to this.

HAMILTON.

Hamilton, July 31.—An accident which might have resulted more seriously happened this morning to Mr. Patrick Noonan, of the perfects at the Royal Hotel. He was engaged in cleaning the windows on the Merrick street front, and by some means lost his balance and fell a distance of about twenty feet to the ground. Fortunately, the only injuries sustained were a sprained back and a severe shock to the system, from which he will probably recover in a short time.

The vital statistics for the past month show that there have been registered at the City Clerk's office 76 births, 52 marriages and 52 deaths. It will be seen that the number of deaths and marriages are similar—a remarkable coincidence.

The following are the exports at the Consulate of the United States in the Port of Hamilton, for the month ending July 31st, 1878:—

ARTICLES.	VALUE.
Animals	$ 2,395 00
Malt	5,000 00
Skins of animals	304 10
Sewing machines	2,035 18
Wool	21,191 62
Wheat	4,786 72
Miscellaneous	13,506 32
Total	$49,823 00

In addition to the above shipments, Messrs. John Harvey & Co., of Hamilton, shipped $33,142.17 worth of wool, being verified at other Consulates in Ontario.

Governor Hencery, of the Provincial Penitentiary, left to-day for Kingston, taking with him Robert McCulloch, recently sentenced to three years' imprisonment, for larceny at a bagnio.

A Sea Monster.

Horse Shoe, N. J., July 31.—A marine monster, weighing a thousand pounds, and resembling an immense black turtle, was captured near Squan Beach yesterday.

THE HANLAN-ROSS BOAT RACE.

Hanlan Wins — The Race a Fizzle.

Riverside, N. B., July 31, 2.35 p.m.—The water is calm, and the judges have gone to the upper stake-boat. The men will be called in a few minutes.

Riverside, N.B., July 31, 3.25 p.m.—The water is like glass; waiting for the referee.

Riverside, N. B., July 31, 4 p. m.—A consultation was had this p.m. between the backers of Ross and Hanlan. The former proposed Chipman Smith as referee in Sheriff Harding's place. Hanlan's backers declined to accept any referee than Harding, and if he cannot be induced to serve, they will draw the stakes and return home. Mr. Harding's name was on the articles as referee, and if part of the agreement is violated the whole must be. The judges, Davis for Hanlan and King for Ross, have just telegraphed the state of affairs to the Sheriff, and an answer is now anxiously awaited. Had there been a referee here this afternoon the race could have been rowed. The water was in excellent condition. At the present time it is slightly rough, but not sufficiently so to prevent the race coming off. If Sheriff Harding consents to serve the race will likely take place this afternoon. The men are waiting at their quarters.

Riverside, N. B., July 31, 5.30 p. m.—From four to five o'clock the water was in excellent condition, hardly a ripple disturbing the surface. From five to six, owing from the south-west, but was a very light breeze, and everything seemed to conspire to make the great boat race take place at last under most favorable circumstances.

At 4.40 Sheriff Harding left the steam engine and landed amidst the loud and continued cheers from the crowd on shore. The Sheriff immediately boarded the Sheriff was soon taken on board the Judges' boat, and at 4.45 she steamed down to Torrybarn Cove. The signal to come out was at once sounded, and in three minutes Ross was out in his boat, stripped to the buff as in the morning; Hanlan appeared two minutes later with blue shirt as before, and he received loud cheers from the crowd on the Judges' boat. At five o'clock the men were given their instructions and ordered into line. The water was in good condition, when at eight minutes and twenty seconds past five the men were sent off, Hanlan being ahead. Ross took the lead, and struck out vigorously, pulling 32to the minute. Hanlan followed at the same pace, but, taking a longer stroke, soon got even, and before he reached Lepley's Ross was a length ahead. Above the wharf Hanlan was pulling 32 strokes, going along beautifully. Ross 30 to 31 strokes. Three hundred yards from Appleby's Wharf Ross' boat was seen to capsize, and for a moment it was feared he had been drowned. It was soon seen, however, that he was clinging to his boat, a boat went off and picked him up.

Ross says the spring of the row-lock worked out, and he gave his boat the box of the boat. Hanlan meantime went up the course, taking his wife in the act of the boat. Ross was picked up and went round the stake-boat at 5.28. On his return he showed some fear of meeting Hanlan, not over-confident himself. He reached the point in about 37 minutes. The accident did not appear to affect Ross' any harm. When taken on board the judges' boat he was very much exhausted, very badly over the way he lost the race. He says the boat got in bad condition soon after the race started, and that he was watching the boat and not Hanlan.

General regret was felt at Ross' misfortune, but the prevailing opinion was that he was over matched.

At Appleby's wharf, three-quarters of a mile from the start, Hanlan was a length ahead. Ross struggled gamely while rowing.

There was great excitement on the shore during the continuance of the contest, but the accident to Ross soon threw a damper over the day's sport.

Hanlan's time to the scene of the accident was about 40 minutes.

Hanlan is to be given a reception at the Dufferin Hotel this evening.

The official time of the race was 36 minutes and 58½ seconds.

SECOND DISPATCH.

St. John, N. B., July 31.—There is comparatively little to add to the report of the boat race. Such a brief period elapsed from the start until the time of the accident, and the distance was so short, being only slightly more than a mile, that there was really no race. Hanlan made extra ordinary time in the return trip, however, covering more than a mile in 6.10. Ross, too, did hard rowing for the one only a length and a half behind. Hanlan stopped for about a minute, and then went on towards the turning boat. Accounts greatly differ as to the time Hanlan was delayed, from two and a half miles. Some say the time was 15.30, while others placed it as high as 17 or 20 minutes. Coming down the home stretch Hanlan rowed with vim, and was loudly cheered by the crowds on shore. It had been said that the official time was 36.53, but they now say 36.58. A few pet theories and the correct time is variously put down from 36.54 to 37.

The result of the contest has been to convince the people of St. John as to Hanlan's abilities. "He can beat any man in the world," is the general remark, and if Hanlan was engaged in a race elsewhere he would be backed by odds to come here.

To-night things are very quiet. Hanlan came to town for a time, and returned again to his old quarters. He lowers not a finger this morning. He has got back to Torrybarn Cove after the race, he was quite calm. The reception to Hanlan is to take place to-morrow evening. On Friday morning Hanlan and party will leave for Boston, and Ross will be left behind. Mr. Ross is quite dejected over the result, but his backers are more over the fact that there was much an unsatisfactory conclusion to the race.

THE SPRING CROPS.

Hon T. N. Gibbs' Opinion in Regard to Them.

Montreal, July 31.—A local paper says that Hon. T. N. Gibbs, of Oshawa, one of Canada's largest millers, who also buys wheat for export, was in this city to-day, and talked in a very "bearish" strain of the prospects of the spring wheat crop in Ontario, but more particularly in the district between Port Hope and Brampton, with which he has more intimate acquaintance. He intimated that the prospects of three weeks ago would by no means be realized. During the past ten days farmers were talking most dismally of the injury done by the fly and the unpropitious weather. The crop will scarcely be an average one. Barley, too, was very much discolored and in other ways injured.

Attempted Suicide in Windsor.

On Tuesday afternoon a married woman, living on the west side of Goyeau st., in Windsor, four doors above Park, attempted to commit suicide by hanging. She was discovered with a rope around her neck struggling violently, and cut down before life was extinct. She was the wife of John Kochner

A despatch from Windsor last night states that the woman who circulated the story alleged that Mrs. Kocher got drunk, whipped her boy, quarreled with her mother, and then put a clothes line around her neck and suspended herself from the ceiling. Mrs. Kocher denies the whole story, and so does her husband, who has been employed as foreman of the Detroit house of correction paint shop for 17 years. The latter states that his wife asked a neighbor for some money which she had loaned her, as she was always extensive and wouldn't pay it. A quarrel ensued, and that is all there is to the story, and no further denies that his wife is a drinking woman.

THE ROUSE'S POINT MURDER.

Montreal, July 31.—The inquest on Matheson was continued to-day. The only witness examined was Giles L. Spears, Chief of Police at Rouse's Point, N.Y., who, in his evidence, gave a very concise report of the different movements of the prisoner before and after committing the act. He clearly proved that the murdered man was last seen in the company of prisoner, and explained the way in which he procured the news that accused was to start from Montreal for London, he receiving from the man who informed the Montreal detectives of the movements and manoeuvres of the prisoner. He also found the money with which it is supposed the dark deed was done.

ST. THOMAS.

A Human Beast—Excursionists.

St. Thomas, July 31.—A shocking case of parental depravity has come to light here, Nathan Ryan, a colored man, having been detected by his wife in the act of incest with a 14 year old daughter, who stalled that the intimacy has existed during the last three years. He threatened to kill her if she told.

Richest cars loaded with excursionists from Indianapolis passed over the Canada Southern, en route to Niagara Falls, this morning.

QUEBEC.

A STARTLING AND PAINFUL MYSTERY.

Quebec, July 31.—The residents on the Grand Allee were startled this morning by producing from a residence on Rampart street, evidently those of a woman. It was at first thought by our informant that illness might be the cause of the cries in question, but they have now been constantly heard for the last four or five days, at all hours of the day and night, and are said to be of a most painfully startling description. It is not known whether the sounds in question proceed from a person in the proper possession of her senses, or whether she is under the influence of treatment or other ill-treatment. The whole matter as reported to us seems to be a mystery.

Quebec, July 31.—Mr. Cote will, it is said, oppose Mr. Malouin in Quebec Centre.

Messrs. Stonge Bros., of the Chaudiere gold diggings, arrived in town to-day with 300 pounds of gold, amounting in value to $1,600, which was taken out of the diggings in six days by 50 men in the employ of the firm.

From Lake Superior.

Southampton, Ont, July 31.—The Steamtion Company's Line, arrived from Lake Superior this a.m. Among the freight were 300 bales of buffalo robes for the Hudson Bay Company, of Montreal; 91 barrels of silver ore from the Silver Isles Mine, and 6 cars of fresh fish from Cockburn Island.

Gas Co.'s Mains Assessable.

Ottawa, July 31.—Judge Ross recently in giving decision in the Ottawa Gas Co.'s favor on appeal, held that retorts, purifiers and gas holders within the building, together with the mains on the streets, were real estate, not personal property, as contended, and therefore were assessable as part and parcel in connection with property assessed.

THE ECLIPSE AND THE ASTRONOMERS.

Pet Theories Put to Flight.

New York, July 31.—The Herald's Denver special says the strange and unexpected results of the eclipse observations have agitated the astronomers gathered here to-day. Not a few pet theories have been utterly demolished. The astronomers of the various expeditions will meet in Denver to compare notes. Prof. C. A. Watson, of Ann Arbor, feels confident the planet which he discovered is Vulcan, which has been missing since 1859. The absence of lines in the corona's spectrum is considered most extraordinary. All previous eclipse observations have revealed them. That the corona is composed of material not shining by reflected light is accepted by astronomers. What effect the quiet condition of the sun, as shown by the almost entire absence of protuberance, will probably have on the climate of the earth will be earnestly discussed.

American Telegrams.

New York, July 31.—It is reported that Jay Gould has lost from a million to a million and a half by the decline in Georgia stocks.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 31.—The iron mill owners in this city three weeks ago gave their hands notice that a reduction of 10 per cent would be made in wages after the 1st September. The hands refused to submit, but have been allowed until the 15th September to decide whether to accept or not. It not, then it is decided that the reduction will certainly take place.

Bloomington, Ill., July 31.—$16,000 in bonds and $4,000 in currency were stolen from the safe of L. L. Holmes' private bank last nigh. No clue yet.

New Orleans, La., July 31.—The first bale of new cotton from the Mississippi Valley was received here to-day. It was classed good middling, and sold for 18½ cents.

A SQUEEZE IN WALL STREET.

Jay Gould Caught in a Tight Place.

New York, July 31.—The Herald's money article states that there has been no impropriety in repeating the street belief that Jay Gould has been caught at least temporarily, and, vulgarly speaking, is in a tight place. It was in the air last week that certain loans of his, effected upon the pledge of the Union Pacific shares, had been with difficulty renewed, and it is certain that calls for further margins upon borrowed moneys were indifferently responded to yesterday.

The Yellow Fever.

Cairo, Ill., July 31.—Arrangements have been made by the City Council to enforce the quarantine regulations against the steamboats and railroad trains from below, not only forbidding entrance to the city of fever patients, but of any species of baled goods liable to convey infection.

Memphis, Tenn., July 31.—At a largely attended meeting of merchants this morning, means were raised to assist the Board of Health to prevent the introduction of the yellow fever. There seems no possibility of the fever reaching Memphis this year.

New Orleans, July 31.—The Board of Health reports thirty-one new cases of yellow fever, and five deaths, for twenty-four hours, up to noon.

SUICIDE BY ARSENIC.

Mrs. Cynthia Stokes, of Sarnia, Takes a Thimbleful and Ends Her Earthly Troubles.

Detroit, July 31.—About three months ago, a young woman of 25 years of age, comely in appearance and reserved in manners, presented herself at the house of Mrs. Lizzie Shaw, 84 Lafayette street, in this city, and desired rooms. She was accommodated with a single room, and stated she took her meals at a Mrs. Stone's boarding house, on Larned street, and that she was a seamstress by occupation; also that she had a husband and child, and kept constantly referring to some sort of domestic troubles, about the details of which, however, she was very reticent. The young woman continued in this sort of half-despondent way until last night about nine o'clock, when she retired to her room. Shortly after Mrs. Shaw heard her vomiting and call for help, and on going up to Mrs. Stokes's room found her in convulsions. All inquiry as to the cause proved useless, until Dr. Cox, who had been called, arrived about 4 o'clock this morning. To him the woman stated that she had swallowed about a thimbleful of arsenic, and that she desired to rid herself of life. She complained of serious domestic troubles, but did not reveal any particulars beyond the fact that she had a brother in Windsor, and that her home was at Sarnia, where her people reside. After extreme suffering the unfortunate woman expired at 7.30 this morning.

The remains will await the result of an inquest.

SITTING BULL.

Overtures for Return to the United States Declined.

New York, July 31.—The Tribune's Washington special says Sitting Bull desires to return to the United States, and has made overtures to the Indian office. He insists that he shall not be held accountable for any criminality during the Indian wars and that he be allowed to retain his ponies. In view of the fact that Sitting Bull has had enemies in this country endeavoring to induce the Sioux to begin an outbreak, the authorities have declined to entertain any proposition looking towards his return. The decision has the sanction of the President and Cabinet.

The Coal Trade.

New York, July 31.—Fifty thousand tons of Scranton coal for the L., L. & W. R. R. Company were sold to-day by auction. Grate or stoveboat, at buyers' option, $3.47½ to $3.50; egg, $3.57½ to $3.60; stove, $3.90; chestnut, $3.22½.

GEO. CALVER, CITY BILLPOSTER and House Paper-hanger, London East, having had two years' experience in that line, while their policy was subjected to hostile and acrimonious criticism in the House of Commons, the proofs which record the work of the plenipotentiaries passed the House of Lords without comment, so that the plenipotentiaries have not the opportunity to explain them, though they alone are able to do so minutely.

Lowe's speech in the Commons was mainly a repetition of Gladstone's arguments concerning the partition of Turkey, the betrayal of Greece, and the uselessness of Cyprus. The alleged falsehoods to which Lord Salisbury referred were the instructions sent to Lord Odo Russell, British Ambassador at Berlin, to oppose the cession of Batoum after England had already secretly agreed not to go to war on the subject. Lowe violently attacked the alleged abuse of the Crown's treaty-making prerogative, which, it may be here mentioned, has been the key-note of Liberal speeches. He said this antiquated prerogative has been drawn from its rusty scabbard and used without the knowledge or consent of the people. The Government had done their utmost to drag royalty into collision with the people. It was impossible that English men could be content to leave the exercise of the royal prerogative in the present position.

Mr. Lowe's remarks were greeted with loud cheers from the Liberal benches.

Lord John Manners, Post Master General, defended the Government, and Chamberlain, (Radical) member for Birmingham, attacked them, dwelling on their extravagance.

The debate was continued on a strictly party line by Sir John Hay. Mr. Stavely Hill, Mr. Holmes, Edward Knatchbull-Hugessen, Samuel Laing, and Sir John Lubbock, who pointed out that the Anglo-Turkish Convention inevitably committed the country to eventual war with Russia.

The debate then adjourned.

London, Aug. 1.—Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the House of Commons, virtually admitted that some other secret document was signed on the 30th May as well as the Anglo-Russian agreement. The Chancellor merely denied that anything was signed relative to Greece.

BEACONSFIELD -- SALISBURY.

London's Civic Honors to the Great Plenipotentiaries.

London, Aug. 1.—Great preparations are making in London for the civic honors to Beaconsfield and Salisbury on Saturday, when they will receive the freedom of the city and be entertained at a banquet given by the Lord Mayor. A dais has been erected on the southern side of Guildhall, upon which stands a canopied throne. Here will be seated the Lord Mayor, British Plenipotentiaries, and chief officers of the corporation. There will be accommodation in this room for 1,700 persons, including 400 members of Parliament. The dais and seats will be covered with scarlet cloth, the doorways of the city. Studio, over Collars, Good paper suns, persons will be able to see the ceremony, they will have a view of the guests as they arrive. Earls Beaconsfield and Salisbury are expected to arrive at the hall before five o'clock in the evening, soon after which the ceremonial will commence. The Chamberlain of the city of London will, as ceremonial, make the presentation of the freedom of the city to the distinguished guests. It is expected each recipient will reply. The guests on their way from the West End will meet with their first welcome at the extreme boundary of the city. Temple Bar is to be in some sense resuscitated for the occasion. One side of the old structure still remains, and on the other side of the street a wooden model of the demolished wall has been erected. Dragons on top of the columns will support the standard, from which a banner will span the thoroughfare. The banner will be inscribed as follows: "Peace with Honor." Subsequent to the ceremonial Earls Beaconsfield and Salisbury will attend the Lord Mayor's Ministerial Banquet.

THE ENGLISH GRITS CONTINUE THEIR SAVAGE ONSLAUGHT.

Lively Episodes in the Commons.

The Treaty-making Prerogative the Ground of Attack.

London, Aug. 1.—In the Commons today Robert Lowe (Liberal) resumed the debate on Hartington's resolution. The debate led to a lively scene, Lowe accusing the Government of acting a falsehood. Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, rose to a point of order, that the language of Lowe was unparliamentary. The Speaker ruled that as the remark was not applied to a member of the Government it was in order. Gobble Hall then repeated his statement, when the Speaker ruled it out of order, as being applied to members of the Government. Lowe then withdrew the expression.

In the House of Lords to-day,

Earl Carnarvon, vehemently attacking Beaconsfield, asked an explanation of certain remarks recently made by Beaconsfield regarding Carnarvon's secession from the Cabinet. He said if Beaconsfield meant to say Carnarvon, at a moment of difficulty and danger, flinched from what he had pledged himself to do, he must absolutely deny such statement.

Earl Beaconsfield, in reply to Carnarvon, pointed out that the latter assented to the policy outlined in the circular stating the question of the possession of Constantinople involved British interests, and that when the Russians were approaching Constantinople, Carnarvon refused to concur in ordering up the British fleet.

The question then dropped.

Lord Salisbury, in receiving a deputation of the Southeast Lancashire Conservatives, who congratulated him on the success of his mission to Berlin, and invited him to Manchester, said he did not object to having the Government's policy submitted to a searching test two years' experience in that footing in the city, I can guarantee satisfaction in all work entrusted to me. Orders left at 345 Richmond St. west, near King St., will be promptly attended to. F6tf

GLADSTONE DRESSED DOWN IN THE "TIMES."

London, July 1.—The Times vehemently attacks Gladstone and says of his speeches: "The House of Commons listens with bated breath for his contribution to the great controversy, and for some prophetic glimpse into the future. He speaks two hours and a half, and occupies seven columns of our space. He carries his hearers irresistibly down a torrent of brilliant oratory, but when all is over and we have time to breathe, to what does it all amount? With few exceptions to nothing but prolonged invective against the present Ministry. Scarcely anything they have done or said escapes condemnation. Peace has been made, but no thanks to them. They have preferred servitude to freedom; have pretended to defend public law, and have really betrayed it; have made a mad convention, violated existing treaties, brought into question an important prerogative of the Crown, discredited us abroad, and weakened us at home. But who are those plenipotentiaries whom he denounces with this unmitigated, uncalloved censure? They are not merely Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury. They are the representatives of England before Europe and the world. Their work, when ratified, is the work of England. They have not usurped power over unwilling people. Gladstone himself admits that they command the approval of the mass of their countrymen. There are no other judges to whom beside Lord Beaconsfield, and larger questions at stake than that of the conduct of the Ministry in the details of prolonged legislation. We regret to say it, but the whole tenor of Gladstone's speech, as much by what it contained as by what it omitted, was inconsistent with statesmanship or generous patriotism, and he must proportionately forfeit his claim to the attention of his countrymen in this great issue

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Constantinople, July 30.—It is reported that General Todleben is to be succeeded by General Kaufmann.

The Courrier de l'Orient has been suspended for announcing that the wife of the Turkish Minister of Marine was present at a ball given by the Russians.

London, Aug. 1.—A Pera despatch of the 30th July says the Austrian occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina threatens to produce a ministerial crisis in Constantinople. The Minister of War and Minister of Public Instruction think it should not be submitted to without a formal convention. The Grand Vizier, Safet Pasha, who wishes to avoid disturbance with Austria, is at variance with his colleagues. There is no doubt that the Albanian chieftains have formed a confederation to resist the encroachments of Servia and Montenegro. The Porte is preparing a memorandum to be addressed to the signatories of the Treaty of Berlin, setting forth its views of the Greek claims in answer to the statement of the Greek representative at the Berlin Congress.

Vienna, Aug. 1.—The eighteenth division of the Austrian army crossed the Dalmatian frontier and occupied Herzegovina today.

Bucharest, Aug. 1.—Orders have been received by the officers in charge of the various fortresses on the Bulgarian and Roumanian to prepare supplies for part of the Russian army, which will shortly return home.

Derband, Bosnia, Aug. 1.—The Vazgard has arrived at Bangalinka. The Turkish officials and Austrian Consul General have fled from Seragera, the capital of Bosnia, on account of the menacing attitude of the populace.

Belgrade, Aug. 1.—It is stated that the Austrians were fired at for two hours in crossing the river Save by united Mahommedan and Christian bands. It is also said these will fall back and concentrate in the defiles leading to Herzegovina as the Austrians advance.

Vienna, Aug. 1.—The Austrian Government has rescinded the prohibition against the export of horses.

A despatch from Vienna says it is rumored that Gen. Todleben refuses to withdraw his men from the vicinity of Constantinople before the withdrawal of the British fleet. Difficulties are also reported to have arisen in regard to the return of Turkish prisoners of war.

GREAT BRITAIN

RATE OF DISCOUNT.

London, Aug. 1.—The Bank of England rate of discount is fixed at 4 per cent., an increase of ½ per cent.

THE GOODWOOD RACES.

London, August 1.—The Goodwood cup to-day, at the Goodwood races, was won by Blascovita's four-year-old chestnut mare Kincsem, by Cambuscan, out of Water Nymph, bred in Hungary.

London, Aug. 1.—The Times vehemently attacks Gladstone this morning.

Great preparations are making in London for civic honors to Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, on Saturday, when they will be entertained at a banquet by the Lord Mayor.

THE DORY NAUTILUS.

London, Aug. 1.—The dory Nautilus has put in near Lizard in consequence of rough weather.

TRIAL OF HARVESTERS IN ENGLAND.

London, Aug. 1.—At a three days' trial of harvesters and binders just closed at Middelburg, Holland, the first prize was awarded to Walter Wood, and the second to Cyrus H. McCormick, both Americans.

ROME.

DEATH OF CARDINAL FRANCHI.

Rome, Aug. 1.—Cardinal Allesandro Franchi, Pontifical Secretary of State, and Archbishop of Thessalonica, died this morning. He was a native of Italy, born in 1818, and was nominated Cardinal in 1873.

The Milk Poisoning Case.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 1.—The Coroner's verdict in the milk poisoning case in Madame Somer's dress-making establishment, which culminated in the death of Mary McDivitt, was that deceased came to her death by her own hand while insane. She was a general favorite among the girls, and why she would wish to poison them remains a great mystery.

Horrible Assassination.

New York, Aug. 1.—Henry Smith, a policeman of Jersey City, retired last night, and at four this morning his wife awoke and found him lying beside her with his skull crushed. The husband and wife had been chloroformed. There was no evidence of robbery.

New York, Aug. 1.—It is stated that the woman with whom Policeman Smith, of Jersey City, roomed last night at the time of his brutal murder was not his wife. The woman has been arrested. Besides the wound in his head, Smith had ten stab wounds near the heart. No clue as yet to the perpetrator.

THE BRAZILIAN LABORERS.

Horrible Treatment of the Philadelphia Emigrants.

Beaten, Starved, Imprisoned and Left to Die.

Baltimore, Md., Aug 1.—Capt. Cottrell, of Baltimore, who went from Philadelphia to Brazil in May last in charge of the tug-boats to tow railroad supply vessels on the Amazon River for Collins Bros., the American contractors for the Madiera & Mamore Railroad, returned to-day. Capt. Cottrell followed the Meredith and Richmond, and says, when he reached his destination, he found that the Meredith and Richmond had arrived safely, but of the 700 laborers, 300 had deserted and gone to Bolivia. The Americans were at once transported to San Antonio, and of their condition later Capt. Cottrell tells which is in the main corroborated by the statements of returned laborers published heretofore. On the trip out the laborers were treated with every consideration, but, when the destination was reached, they were kept on board of the ship, and were not given sufficient food. One of the men appealed to Thomas Collins, one of the contractors, who accompanied the expedition, for more food. In return he was shot at three times, and only escaped with his life by fleeing from the ship. The dissatisfied laborers assert that from the time of the landing at San Antonio, the contractor, Thomas Collins,

EXHIBITED A MOST BRUTAL AND FEROCIOUS DISPOSITION,

towards the men. Many of the latter were stricken with a disease known as "breakbone fever," a malarial contagion similar to chills and fever, but of much greater severity. They were by this affliction incapacitated from labor, and allyears half-fed, as Capt. Cottrell was informed by deserters from the colony, starved. When Collins found any of the men who could not work, he beat them with a bludgeon and imprisoned them in a pen built of railroad iron. There were no houses. They were allowed simply a hammock or a rubber or water-proof coat, and, in consequences of the constant exposure,

THE SPREAD OF THE DISEASE

was greatly accelerated. In addition to Collins' brutal and harsh treatment, with incidental privations, the men were fed on rotten beef and wormy bread. Many of the men were reduced to actual destitution, and were in a terrible condition. In consequence of their condition many of the laborers deserted and built frail rafts and floated 1,000 miles down the river to Para rather than remain in the camp. Four deaths were reported at Para, but it is thought that there were many others. Among those who died was the wife of Mr. Black, who accompanied the colony for the purpose of taking charge of a hotel which Collins was to have erected for the laborers, but did not attempt to accomplish.

THE DESERTERS FROM THE COLONY,

after reaching Para, were dependent upon the American and other Consulates. They were utterly destitute, and were lying by scores around the town, endeavoring to get back to this country. Capt. Cotterell said that 280 of the colonists were prostrated by disease, and those who managed to get to the seaports begged the officers of homeward-bound vessels to give them a passage. The entreaties were accompanied by tears, which could only be wrung from strong, able-bodied men by great privations and suffering. The provisions were sent out from Philadelphia, and consisted of beef, pork and flour, which in the Brazilian climate. Among the passengers by the Para, in which Capt. Cottrell arrived, was Mr. Bird, Chief Engineer of the surveying party, who, although engaged at a salary of $50 per week, left Brazil in disgust.

WOULD NOT KEEP

THE STOKES POISONING CASE.

Detroit, Aug. 1.—At the inquest held by Coroner Oakes this morning, concerning the death of Mrs. Cynthia Stokes yesterday morning, at 84 Lafayette street, east, numerous other witnesses repeated in substance the facts as already related. The deceased was a milliner and dressmaker, and formerly worked at Freedmans. She had been married twice. Her first husband was a man named Lambert, now dead. Her present husband is named Stokes. He left her and went to Texas, and her child (a little boy) was kept away from her by her relatives at Sarnia. These troubles caused her frequently to threaten suicide. Mrs. Stokes was an educated, accomplished woman. She gradually fell into disreputable habits, and finally engaged rooms at the house of Mrs. Shaw, which bears the reputation of being a place of assignation. The association being distasteful and disgusting to her, she rashly concluded to take her own life, and thus solve the great problem in advance of her Maker's will. The coroner's jury will return a verdict of death by poison, administered by herself, in accordance with the evidence of witnesses and the doctors who conducted the post mortem examination

The London Free Press

A LONDON MORNING NEWSPAPER, containing the latest news from all parts by Midnight Telegraphic Despatches, is issued every morning. THE COLONEL SMILES ON THE LADIES.

Col. Walker was particularly fascinating on the platform on Wednesday evening, when referring to the ladies who were present. He put on his best society grin, while he assured them that their presence was necessary at public meetings, in order "to keep down the bitterness of personal feeling" and prevent speakers on his platform from disgracing themselves. No doubt the ladies were particularly gratified at the use Col. Walker desired to put them to. Their presence was not deemed necessary by him in order that they might take an interest in so much that concerns the well-being of society, of which they form so important a part—but, all all. The gallant Colonel desired to make use of them as conservers of the peace, as a species of police in petticoats; the fact of whose presence powerfully armed with smiles would be sufficient to neutralize the suggestions of the demon of discord. Yet the ladies were scarcely comfortably seated, and beginning to recognize the position allotted to them, when the Colonel broke loose into a tirade of abuse which must have shown them how little he regarded their presence. Having told them "that he wanted them to be ranged in front of him on account of their "humanizing "influence," he gave way to words which must have sounded strange to ears accustomed only to the Colonel's most bewitching tones. Few of his fair auditors could have supposed that one possessing so calm and placid an exterior could be swept by passions which find their safety-valve in the vernular of Billingsgate. But the "bitter personal feeling" of which he is himself the victim was too much for his manners. Despite the fact that he was under personal bonds to the ladies to behave himself, he developed a side in his character which must have given his audience some clearer insight of the inner working of the man than they previously possessed. He hitched forth such choice epithets as "hired assassins," "blackguards," and spoke of the exercise of personal violence against his opponents, as if he already carried a loaded bludgeon in his hands. Now, all this was very much out of place; very derogatory to the purity of moral sensation and elevated morality. It was out of place in a London audience, and especially out of place in the presence of the ladies. Yet, if we might be permitted the rôle of extenuation, we would say that the course of events has been so untoward as to explain, if not to excuse somewhat, the display of feeling which took place. The Colonel cannot forget the $45,000 he dropped in the endeavor to make "true reformers" of the people of London. He cannot forget his short glimpse he had of parliamentary life, not the continual snubbing he received for having betrayed the friend who had elevated him into notice. He cannot forget his discomfiture on appeal from Parliament as unworthy of a seat in it, nor the biting strictures of the Judges when searing him with the ban of disqualification. Chafing as he has done for weeks and months for the period to arrive when he might again have the chance to challenge opportunity and gamble with events, he cannot forget the time and money spent to gloss over his shortcomings nor the ingenious artifices he has resorted to to win a popularity to which his political transactions do not entitle him. And after all this, to find the platform deserted by the representative men of the "Reform party," and to feel day by day, to see it in the faces of the people day by day, that his cause is already lost—is it not enough to make such a man as Colonel Walker forget himself even in the presence of ladies? If he was worthy of sympathy, no doubt it would be awarded to him. But to a betrayer of the party that had showered favors upon him; to the betrayer of his friend who had taken by the hand and warmed him into political life among us; to one who debauched young and old in order to obtain a seat in "a pure reform parliament," and thence forward gloried in his shame—to such an one what sympathy can be accorded? No! Hard as the fate is of one from whom so much better things might have been expected, he must be set aside, in order that public morality may be sustained, and personal honor among our public men preserved.

A quick and simple way of testing the inflammability of kerosene oil is to put some of it in a cup, put the bulb of a thermometer in it, suspend the cup in a vessel of water, gradually heat the water, move a lighted taper about the oil, and see at what degrees of temperature the oil begins to emit inflammable vapor, and then at what degree the oil itself will burn. Oil for lamps should not take fire below 115°. A quicker and much simpler way is to pour some of the oil on the fire to make it burn.

THE QUESTION OF PUBLIC BATHS.

It is time that the people of London were aroused to the necessity of public baths for the use of the citizens generally. We have passed through some weeks of such weather as makes the use of the bath, not a simple luxury, but an absolute necessity. In such sweltering weather as can scarcely imagine anyone feeling at all comfortable without regular and daily ablutions, and it seems to us that the preservation of health demands such ablutions as much as comfort. Free public baths for the use of all are now deemed necessary in every well regulated municipality like ours, and ere long we expect to see such a provision made at the public expense in every town and city in Canada. The swimming baths, when properly conducted, are the best kind, as in addition to their refreshing and purifying character they afford to the young of both sexes an opportunity that ought not to be neglected—the learning the art of swimming. It is grievous to contemplate the number of deaths that periodically take place through drowning around our city, and were swimming baths provided it would put an end to this fearful loss to the community. The youth of both sexes would acquire the art where the practice necessary to make perfect would be taken with, put danger, and to the really skilful swimmer the river presents no danger. Then all admit that the practice of swimming is most refreshing and invigorating, and such as are expert in the water consider it the most delightful exercise. The healthy sweltering weather we are now experiencing and pleasure are happily combined in this pursuit, and in it the individual and the general good go hand in hand. Now the city, so far as at this stage can be perceived, will be the debtor of the Water-Works Commissioners to all time, and it might be put to them whether they could not do something in this direction without drawing very largely on the heavily taxed purse of the city. They might perhaps do something towards imitating the good work of free public baths, and we imagine that with the aid of the engineer a beginning could be made under more favorable circumstances now than at any future time. The Commissioners cannot be insensible to the want, though the providing for it certainly does not come within the proper sphere of their duties, but if through the skill and rigid economy they are displaying in the management of this trust, anything can be spared from the completion of the scheme, we know of nothing upon which it could be more beneficially employed. In different places these baths have proved a great boon to the people, and in old London they are regarded, as far as the Thames is open, as an absolute luxury, while in their sanitary aspect, their importance cannot be over estimated. The same may be said of New York, though in neither have they been brought to that point of general utility to which they are destined to come soon. It is a subject worthy of the consideration of the public, and the sooner it is taken up and some scheme for the purpose devised the better for all. A very extensive and costly system need not be looked for at the beginning, but such as can be extended as the demand of the public and the means available may warrant.

MR. DAVID GLASS AND "FAVORS."

After having publicly denied that he had ever received any "favors" from Mr. Mackenzie, the admission is now dragged from Mr. David Glass that he became a contractor with Mr. Sifton in the erection of a portion of the Canada Pacific Telegraph Line. Putting this and that together the narrative is as thus:—Mr. Glass had been elected to support the Liberal-Conservative party, under Sir John Macdonald. After having been among his most vociferous and neck-and-nothing supporters, he was suddenly struck one morning after breakfast with qualms of conscience, and made up his mind to desert the party that had elected him, to go over body and soul, —bag and baggage, to the Grits. And over he went, accordingly. After a few short weeks of inglorious attendance in Parliament at Ottawa—where he became equally vociferous for Mr. Mackenzie and the Grits—a dissolution of the House took place, and upon seeking reelection Mr. Glass was defeated in a manner that is certain to live in his recollection. But it was not likely that such services in the cause of purity should go unrewarded. So, in addition to having Q.C. tacked to his name, Mr. Glass demanded further recognition, and soon after was incorporated with the firm of Sifton & Co. in a Government contract in the West. Out of this he made, as is well known, a large sum of money, and in this way was recouped by an eminently "Reform" Government for the loss of his seat, and the loss of his reputation. Yet Mr. Glass continues to ask the people to believe that he never had any "favors" from the Government.

NEWSPAPERS AND COMMERCIAL PRINCIPLES.

Col. Walker told his audience on Wednesday evening that the FREE PRESS is conducted on "commercial principles." Indeed, every successful enterprise must be so conducted, and the measure of the principles are illustrated and confirmed by the fact of success. Now, the admitted success of the FREE PRESS is attributable to a very large extent to its adherence to recognized commercial principles. It supplies a public need in a manner that has secured widespread approval, and the public, finding its wants met industriously and energetically, responds generously. We give the public that which they require, and they in turn supply us with the sinews of war to carry on an operation which is essential to Western convenience. There is thus set up a close feeling of reciprocity between the journal and the public. They give generously and we take thankfully, endeavoring to give value for that which we receive. Those are our "commercial principles," and if they suit the Colonel as well as they do the public and ourselves, all parties should be satisfied. But seeing the Colonel has talked of our commercial principles, what would he say if we were in the presence of ladies? If he was worthy of sympathy, no doubt it would be awarded to him. But to a betrayer of the party that had showered favors upon him; to the betrayer of his friend who had taken by the hand and warmed him into political life among us; to one who debauched young and old in order to obtain a seat in "a pure reform parliament," and thence-forward gloried in his shame—to such an one what sympathy can be accorded? No! Hard as the fate is of one from whom so much better things might have been expected, he must be set aside, in order that public morality may be sustained, and personal honor among our public men preserved.

P. W. Hoffman has called attention to some curious cases where hydrogen gas has spontaneously ignited. The phenomenon has been noticed in factories where large quantities of zinc were being dissolved in hydrochloric and for the preparation of zinc chloride. Violent explosions took place when no flame was nigh; and it was eventually ascertained that the gas took fire spontaneously. It appears to be caused by fragments of very porous zinc, which when lifted above the surface of the liquid during the violent evolution of the gas, and so brought in contact with hydrogen and air, act just as spongy platinum would do under the circumstances. The author recommends the performance of such operations in the open air. The ignition can be shown by treating a few kilogrammes of finely divided zinc with acid. The "zinc dust" may even ignite by contact with water.

According to a telegram addressed to a Paris paper from Vienna, landed property in Cyprus increased in value tenfold on the term means of the occupation of the island, whereas in Bulgaria the finest properties do not find a purchaser at the twentieth part of the price they would have fetched before the war.

REPRESENTATIVE IRISHMEN.

An interesting book has just made its appearance by Mr. Alfred Webb, being a compendium of Irish biography, comprising sketches of distinguished Irishmen and eminent persons connected with Ireland by office or by writing. The author has a rich fund, from which we glean. Sir Eyre Coote, whom Macaulay justly styles "one of the most distinguished soldiers of his time," "conspicuous among the founders of the British Empire in India," who with the minority advised Clive to fight in the famous council of war which preceded the battle of Plassey, who beat the French at Wandiwash, and gave the Carnatic to England, was the son of a Limerick gentleman. Sir Phillip Francis, almost certainly the author of Junius's letters, whom Macaulay styles "the ablest member of the Council" when Warren Hastings was Governor-General, was the son of a Dublin minister. Sir William Jumper, who was Sir George Rooke's best officer in the reduction of Gibraltar, was a Cork man. Blakeney, who made the splendid but unsuccessful defence of Minorca against Richelieu, and whom Admiral Byng was shot for not relieving, was also a native of Limerick. Eyre Massey, one of Wolfe's ablest Lieutenants, was also an Irishman. So was Admiral Graves, who received the thanks of Parliament as Nelson's second in command at Copenhagen. Sir George Macartney, who shared with Clive and Hastings and Coote, and on not unequal terms, the glory of founding the Indian Empire, and refused the Governor-Generalship in 1785, was born in the County Antrim. The soldier and the statesman who, after his death in 1805 by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

Some curious data about the recent great strike in the Lancashire cotton districts are communicated to the Fortnightly Review. It is well known that the struggle at Blackburn and Burnley resulted in a victory for the mill-owners, the operatives coming in fact submitting to the reduction of ten per cent. But we now learn that this occurred because the weavers thrust aside 'their delegates and acted for themselves. Their insurance or strike fund being small. The spinners, on the other hand, who subscribe liberally to their union, and have a large reserve, were disposed to stand out longer. Yet the total amount of earnings consumed in a two-months' strike turns out to be inconsiderable. Take Blackburn, for instance, where operatives and their families represent 60,000 souls out of a total urban population of 95,000. It is computed that the total deposits of operatives in building or cooperative societies and savings banks is not less than £1,750,000, from which the whole amount withdrawn during sixty days' cessation from work did not exceed $195,000, or about seven per cent. The truth is, probably, that the strike would have been greatly prolonged if any distinct principle had been at stake. But, according to John Morley, the struggle never turned on any of the great familiar issues between capital and labor, but arose from a want of tact and temper for which both sides were to blame. The workmen would have consented to a reduction of ten per cent., if, instead of reaching it at one blow, it had been gradually compassed by two or more successive steps. On the other hand, the employers now concede the fundamental claim of the operatives, namely, that a material curtailment of pecuniary profit is indispensable to a renewal of industrial prosperity.

The Russians on the Steamer Cimbria seem to have formed many friendships with the people of Maine. Mayor Hamlin, of Bangor, and friends were invited to visit the vessel recently, which they did, and were treated with every courtesy. Now that the treaty of peace is signed, the mystery which surrounded the Cimbria is being removed. These men are to man vessels which are being built in New York and Philadelphia, and will remain at their present quarters some weeks longer. It is expected that if the trial trips of the vessels which they are to man prove successful they will rendezvous at Southwest Harbor, and be fitted out at that place. The officers and men are rapidly acquiring a knowledge of the English language, many of them being able to converse quite freely in English.

Races between passenger steamboats are very exciting and exhilarating sport, no doubt, as long as nothing happens. Unfortunately, something is sure to happen, sooner or later. Some day the pound too much of pressure explodes the overworked boilers, and then innocent people, women and children, as well as men, die a horrid death. The sport that has such risks attached to it is a crime, and the steamboat officers who engage in it, or permit it, should be treated as criminals.

Free Press Correspondence.

Mr. Glass and His Telegraph Contract.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—Kindly give place to the following explanation:—

At Orangeville, on the 20th June, 1877, Dr. Tupper, in an offensive way, made allusion to my having received some favor from the Government by way of contracts. On the 27th of the same month I replied to him through the Globe and Advertiser in such pointed terms as placed him and all other persons concerned at defiance, and should have forced him in Parliament (the proper place), or out of it, if he chose, to establish any wrong-doing, if he could, or if not, by his silence to admit the error into which he had fallen. I have reason to believe that the latter course was wisely adopted by the Dr., and from that time to the present (now over a year) he has studiously avoided any reference to the matter.

Since my nomination for East Middlesex, however, this old story (which is without the slightest foundation in fact) has been exhumed, and trotted out again to do service to some one—perhaps to me, by the complete refutation it can be able to give perhaps to my opponents, by their having an opportunity of circulating the slander in quarters where before, or any other refutation of mine, cannot reach.

The history of the transaction may be told briefly as follows:—

On the 26th day of April, 1875, I moved the following resolution in the House of Commons. See Mod 26th April, 1875:—

CANADIAN TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. Glass moved the House into Committee of the whole to consider the following resolution:—Resolved, That it would be attended with great advantage to the Dominion, as well as to mercantile travellers and the public generally, if a speedy, economical and more expeditious system of telegraphy were established in the Province of Ontario, and to that end it is expedient that the Government should take steps to purchase, control, and work the whole telegraph system of the Dominion on the same, or a similar basis as was adopted in 1868 by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

I was then of opinion, and am now, that a speedy and cheap system of telegraphy over the Dominion of Canada if the suggestion contained in the resolution could be carried into effect. I had given the subject for a long time a most minute investigation, both as to the cost of construction and working the telegraph system of Europe and America. I knew when had not a single country in Europe which had not recognized the great importance to it of having its telegraph lines placed almost as a necessity in its hands, and that every Government in Europe had taken the telegraph system into its hands to operate for the benefit of the people. It is not pertinent to the subject in hand to point out how many millions of dollars the country would have saved by the adoption of my suggestion at that time, in addition to that which was the action then taken by me, and the investigation given to the subject which eventually resulted in my connection with the construction of one of the sections of the Pacific Railway Telegraph.

In the month of May, 1874, the Government by public advertisement called for tenders for the construction of the telegraph line from Fort William to Edmonton, and to be attended with great expense, and would not be dissimilar with that built in Australia through unsettled and partly unexplored country, to which I was reasonably well acquainted.

Mr. John W. Sifton is a practical contractor and builder of the highest character for probity and honor, and Col. Prince, I came to me with the view of fixing upon about what the construction per mile would cost. Then it was that he made the suggestion to me to join him in the tender, which I did. Mr. Sifton tendered for the whole line and also for the various sections of it. For No. 1 section (about 120 miles), Mr. Sifton's tender was the lowest, and the contract for it was awarded to him. He went up to Manitoba, built the section; it has now been in running order for two years.

At the time the work was done, Mr. Sifton had full practical control of it.

About this matter there never was any secrecy, as indeed there never need be about any matter of plain fair dealing between man and man. I was out of Parliament, a free man, with the same rights and privileges as any other citizen, and in common with hundreds of my profession in this city and out of it, had a perfect right to employ my judgment upon any undertaking of which I had sufficient knowledge or could assist others in the same. This is all that was done in the present case.

The tenders for the work were put in the year after the Pacific Scandal, and yet there are those to be found who would like in some way to connect them together. The following passage may be found in my letter to Dr. Tupper, but it is applicable to this also:—

"But why have three years been allowed to pass over with the three sessions of Parliament, and at this late day the Sifton tender dragged to the front to do duty. Simply because the whole band of former supporters of Sir John, who left him in '73, must be clothed as vagabonds. During the many years I supported the Government of Sir John, I never asked for or received a personal favor of any description, and, while a member of the Government of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, I have never received a favor of any kind whatever."

In your paper of the 30th ult., you say it is my duty to explain. If I had not made so full an explanation last year to Dr. Tupper, no doubt you would be right, as the organ of a large and influential party, to ask for this explanation. In any event, I am here now to explain, and trust this explanation may be satisfactory to all candid men.

Since my nomination I have heard that persons have been going about circulating this falsehood, and occasionally reference has been made to it in the press. But not until now has any reasonable paper given it definite form, so as to enable me to meet it squarely. I do not think that you or your paper would deliberately give currency to an untruth, and no doubt in this instance, by these reports, as well as the paragraph in the Ottawa Citizen, have been led into error, which doubtless you will be quite ready to correct.

Upon seeing your most damaging article of the 30th, including a paragraph copied from the Ottawa Citizen, I wrote Mr. R. Fuller the following letter:—

"London, 30th July, 1878.

"DEAR SIR,—Kindly look at the article in the London FREE PRESS of this morning, including an extract from the Ottawa Citizen, about the contract for Section No. 1 of the Canada Pacific telegraph, and inform me by letter if the statements therein contained are true or untrue.

"Please say if your tender included all the clearing and other work contracted for by Sifton & Co. on that section. That is to say, were you to clear the forest lands, and did your tender contemplate the present route of the line round the north of the Rolling Mountains?

"In conclusion, were you offered the contract by the Government, and did you refuse to accept it?

"Kindly reply promptly, and much oblige

"Yours truly,
"DAVID GLASS.

"R. Fuller, Esq., contractor, Hamilton."

And yesterday I received his reply, which is as follows:—

"Hamilton, July 31st, 1878.

"MY DEAR SIR.—Your favor, dated 30th inst., to hand. I have read the article in FREE PRESS of 30th, and extract from Ottawa Citizen. The statement that I offered to do the work of Sifton's section of C. P. T. Line for the sum named therein is untrue. I cannot enter into any particulars respecting my own or Sifton's contract without the sanction of the Department of Public Works. Yours truly, R. FULLER.

"D. Glass, Esq., London.

"P. S.—My tender was for the sum of $38,750 for the construction of Tel. Line did not contemplate running round north of Riding Mountains, as at present located, for clearing of the forest on that line; and I refused to build the line as at present located for that above figure.

R. F."

I had been informed by the Engineer in Chief, Mr. Sandford Fleming, that if Mr. Fuller had included in his tender all the work covered by Mr. Sifton's contract, the Fuller tender would have been the highest. Mr. Fuller told me the same thing, and further, that he thought Sifton had the work too low, and therefore I never doubted what his reply would be.

I trust you will do me justice in your editorial columns on this point. My shortcomings are numerous enough to give food to the press without this story or any other that has no foundation in fact.

Your most obedient,
DAVID GLASS.

The Colonel's Address Criticised.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—On reading over your report of Col. Walker's meeting last evening, I must compliment you on the excellent rendition of the proceedings; but this is so common in the general conducting of your popular journal, that my remarks may be deemed useless. In doing it, however, I am led confirming the outspoken opinion of Col. Walker himself, who really conceals that the FREE PRESS does actually occupy a "respectable position" in the "western part of Ontario," which is saying a great deal for him, and no doubt you feel flattered thereby.

I would venture some intrusion on your columns in reference to certain portions of the Colonel's address, upon the question of bribery, in reference to what Mr. Carling had uttered, that "the (Col. Walker) had used bribery at the last election." He (the Colonel) admitted that his friend had been indiscreet. Well, sir, that is the first time I have heard it publicly announced, although it is well known. Do you observe with what coolness and audacity the Colonel shifts the disgrace onto the shoulders of his friends—a compliment for which they no doubt will feel truly thankful. Why, if you talk to any of his friends upon the subject they spurn with indignation any participation in the matter, throwing the whole responsibility upon the Colonel. Of course the Colonel regretted very much such a heinous departure from the paths of morality on his account, which, from the very conscientious characteristics of the Colonel, is no doubt true.

After lying quiescent for four years, Mr. Carling stood up for "Water-works" Commissioner. What means did he take to thrust aside Messrs. Durand, McCormick and Cousins? He bribed the whole city by offering to do the work for nothing. Here again the Colonel's friends come in for it. He bribed the whole city. It should be fresh in the recollection of Col. Walker that the co-associate of Mr. Carling was our late highly esteemed citizen, E. W. Hyman, a Reformer. Is not this a reflection on the departed? By whom were these gentlemen brought out? By the citizens generally, through a numerously signed requisition. Why were they selected for this responsible post? Because they represented the greatest individual wealth of the city? Because they were gentlemen of the greatest probity? Because they were patriotic enough in the interests of the city to assume the responsibility without fee or reward? Because the public knew that the funds would be judiciously handled. These are are the reasons why the selection fell as it did. Why did Col. Walker not interest himself in the fundrances of those improvements? Why did not the public select him for a Commissioner? Query. Again:—If Mr. Carling's heart had been in the right place, rather than in his 'breeches pocket'—a very refined expression—he would have looked after the interest of our citizens, instead of employing tramps," &c., &c. I should have thought, sir, that the letter of Messrs. Stevens, Turner & Burns, lately published in your columns, would set this matter at rest, as every one knows that so far as Mr. Carling's having anything to do with employment of labor, the idea is absurd. The contracts are awarded upon the wages offered in many cases.

I observe that you are charged with being cruel to Robert Reid, the gentleman who has established his fame as an appraiser.

"Through work done so well
By the victims he has placed
On the 'Dwelling Block.'"

It is to be hoped he will prove himself equally efficient in the discharge of his duties as Gaoler Indian, and so satisfy the Colonel; but as for your cruelty, I don't believe a word of it, nor does anyone else that knows you. You are very sharp, sometimes, in your criticisms, and safe, therefore, from the frowns of the Colonel and his "little finger."

The Colonel also refers to the fool and fool question. It will be obvious to you this is done to catch votes, and is being made use of with this design. It is well known that Sir John Macdonald has on occasion committed himself to any act or expression that would answer any such end, nor is there any reason to suppose that Mr. Carling would be an advocate for any measures that would be so criminal to his own as well as everyone else's interests, as his opponents give him credit for. The catch is too transparent, and only proves that "drowning men catch at straws." CYR.

A Note from James Magee.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

DEAR SIR.—In your account of the meeting at the Mechanics' Institute last evening your reporter, no doubt unintentionally, in condensing, has made me to say: speaking of the fact that Sir John Macdonald resigned upon the anniversary of Guy Fawkes arrest, that "they were right" "to remember this dire attempt of the "Roman Catholics against the life of King "James." You'll surely see by my corrections to say that neither the words nor substance of this sentence were said by me.

Yours truly, JAMES MAGEE.

The Red Ribbon Club.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

DEAR SIR,—In your morning edition, last inst., I notice that you state, regarding the arrest of Albert Burns, that several prominent members of the Red Ribbon Club were eagerly enquiring as to "what the warrant." As this statement unconstrained is calculated to bring discredit on a worthy institution, I emphatically state that I was never approached by any member of the Club or urged to withdraw the warrant, but all spoken to favored my laying the information.

J. P. SAWERS.

A Turkish slave ship was captured the other day by an English vessel, and the slaves it contained, consisting of seventy women and ten men, were liberated. The men volunteered into the Egyptian army, but it was more difficult to dispose of the women. Under the treaty concluded between the English Government and the Khedive the importation and exportation of slaves are forbidden; but the detention and sale of slaves in the country are permitted for about six years longer in Egypt, and eleven years in the Soudan. Several planters accordingly came to the Pasha of the district with offers to buy some of the female slaves, but the Pasha declared he would not part with them unless they got married. He then announced that any soldier or civilian wishing to marry one of the slaves would have to pay six thalers for her dowry, but that the women would be allowed to choose their husbands from among those who should present themselves for the purpose. A great number of men, chiefly soldiers, assembled on the day appointed for the selection. The women were so shy that they "huddled together like a flock of sheep," and could not be induced to move. At last one of them, taking courage, advanced slowly to a black Egyptian sergeant, who was anything but young or handsome, and put her hand on his shoulder as a sign that he was the man she wished to marry. Her example was instantly followed by the other women, who rushed forward to choose their husbands as if they feared to be too late. It was now the men's turn to say whether they accepted the selection. All were satisfied but five, and even the five women who were consequently obliged to choose again were ultimately provided with husbands.

The Unita Cattolica is authority for the following:—The beatification of Pius IX., the Great, proceeds very satisfactorily. Innumerable petitions, containing prodigious facts, have reached the Vatican from all parts of the world, and the Pope seems disposed to grant special authority in this matter to the hierarchy, because the Sacred Congregation of Rites, in compliance with the prescribed rules, can immediately initiate the preliminaries of the beatification of Pius IX. The documents bearing upon this matter are so fast accumulating that the Congregation of Rites cannot longer retard its proceedings. It will require about three and a half or four years to duly examine the papers, the character of the witnesses, &c., because anything of a possibly equivocal shade found either in a writing or statement, or in the character of the writer or witness, immediately stirring or verbal deposition inadmissable.

Wild horses roam over southwestern Kansas. The difficult feat of capturing them was formerly accomplished with the lasso. Entire herds are now secured by a new plan. The hunter's outfit ordinarily consists of a fast walking pair of horses attached to a wagon, four saddle ponies, provisions for several weeks, and six men. A herd being found, the pursuers go toward them at a leisurely pace, doing nothing to frighten them. The wild horses run away, but are again and again overtaken. No effort is made to drive them in any particular direction, nor to hurry them. This is kept up day after day, until they become familiar with the sight of the men, who, at the end of two weeks, are able to go among them. They are sometimes docile through hunger, too, having been kept too steadily moving to permit of sufficient grazing. They are at length driven to a ranch and secured.

II. The avidity with which the Parisian populace volunteered into the Garde Mobile at the beginning of the war has only been equalled by their subsequent earnestness to retrace their steps. They have been made the butt of many jokes. A general, inspecting a battalion, asked a young Mobile whether he had any complaints to make. "Yes, General." "What is it?" "I am suffering from palpitation of the heart." "Good," was the reply; "it beats for its country."

Charles IV. asked the Duke of Medina Celi how many towns and villages he owned. "Nine hundred and ninety-nine," replied the grandest of grandees. "Why not make the number up to one thousand?" "Because, sir, the sound of nine hundred and ninety-nine is much more vast."

The School Boy.

We bought him a box for his books and things,
And ordered his tailor for his jacket;
And he looked the brightest and best of kings,
Under his new cap cocked.

We handed him into the railway train
With a troop of his young companions,
And two made us thought, if 'twere dust and rain
Were filling our eyes with tears.

We looked in his innocent face to see
The sign of a sorrowful heart;
But he only stared—read his fate with glee,
And—understood when they would start.

'Twas that he loved not as heretofore,
For oh, boy was tender and kind;
But he—as a word that was all before,
And more was a world behind.

'Twas not that his fluttering heart was cold,
For th—en it was loyal as true;
And the parent's love this love that is old,
And the children the love that is new.

And we came to know that love is a flower
As it wearily spoke for the space of an hour
As we over mark through the town.
—Syncopation.

JET:

OR,

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

"I gave you credit for being really half English the first hour I saw you, Miss Connaghan." This is strictly true. Had he not, in that same hour, received "unlimited better of advice? "Something alien to Mrs. Grundy in your speech, your speech, something—how can one describe the indescribable?—about your whole look and manner, that fascinated me, and made me long a genuine Britisher."

"Is that a compliment or" she asks. "A somewhat doubtful one I should say, judging from what one reads in books.

"The writers of both receive their facts out of their book shelves! Any man who uses his eyes, and a good deal more, must know that beauty is common than that the most subtle charms of all combined, of mind, and of parentage. I have lived among the States people." Amon what nation of the earth have the cruel and downs of fortune not forced Lazarus on their knees? "I knew American women as men as they are, in their own country, in their own homes."

"And your verdict is—"

"My verdict is—that a pretty woman is a pretty woman and disputed whether her place of nativity is Paris, London, or New York. Perhaps, adds Biron, "if I had to assign the most fitting background for each, I would put the Parisian in a ballroom, the English woman at an afternoon garden-party—"

"And the American"

"Is my own friend—as the bright and sunshiny companion of my life."

"Ah!" cries Jet, at last, "I understand. Mr. Laurence Biron left his heart in the States."

"I think not," in his answer, "My heart, fortunately, or unfortunately, for myself, is in the Tatersall this morning."

The girl has been looking at her companion, until now, with her accustomed keen, unabashed gaze. Now her dark eyes drop; she turns her face aside from him, and blushes furiously. What cause is there for shame? What could shame the blood in this ridiculous fashion to her cheeks? Jet Connaghan is ignorant of love's very alphabet—too ignorant to spell out the meaning of her own emotions, or suspect how far the game she has played "with fire dies" has, in very truth, progressed.

"Your heart is in Estend!" she repeats, forcing herself to look round again, forcing her voice to maintain its tone of banter. "Well, the admission sets at rest a certain wild conjecture that crossed my brain when we were buying the peasant head-dress in Avignon! I took it into my head, just as I was looking those pretty, pathetic that your Italian correspondent, the lady of no particular age, rules her—Mr. Biron, "breaking off into one of the abrupt, neck-or-nothing leaps by which Jet is accustomed to dispense with the troublesome process of researching, "I am suddenly reminded of another subject of something which I had more than once thought of during this moment. I heard about you, sir, from an unbiased source in the very evening that pays and I believe—England—

"All about me?" repeats Biron, uneasily. Jet Connaghan has a—or inclined feeling of character how habitually ill at ease t Reverend Laurence Biron is—how pe ons, despite an acquired coolness, t which his handsome person lends g ce—with the and who himself. "I thi not very atrociously bad, this Connaghan?"

"I hope not, I am for your sake."

During the space a second or two he is silent, palpably th wn of his guard; then, "Tell me th ame, my interrogant, he remarks, g stly. "Quelle est la femme? Knowing ne sources of the scan- well able to form a guess as to its iden ne."

"And suppose it Informant happened not to be a woman"

"In that case, t are would likely be no scandal at all."

"I understand you think that men are superior to small malice—or small amusements"

"I think men, as a rule, are basking in indifference to others's affairs," is answers, with rather forced carelessness. "As a matter of personal interest, I would, if I would, in any case, rather have a man for my enemy than a woman; unless, perhaps, it were to be a enemy on the grand and epic scale."

"Grand and epic! If you could have seen me—me, I mean, and papa, and—and the person who spoke of you! We were drinking tea at Falkenberg, an hour or two before going on board, and some one, papa it must have been, mentioned Lady Austen's name, and then out it all came."

"Lady Austen's name!"

Laurence Biron takes a step away from the girl's side; he leans, with folded arms, across the balustrade of the terrace, and gazes, in a sudden fit of mental abstraction, upon the scene before him.

There lie the Golden Islands—the Golden Island, to prima donnas by and Lady Austen have made so many tête-à-tête boating excursions in the last few days. There stand the olive-smooth hills, through whose every path and glade he once was wont to ride—Lady Austen his companion. A country cart comes noisily rattling along the white high-road from Marseilles. The jangle of the mules' bells seems to wreath itself into a kind of fantastic marriage-peal—the marriage-peal, so some mocking voice whispers busily in his ear, that shall some fine morning ring out for the Reverend Laurence Biron and—Hadi!

"She—" said he a character worth meeting and studying," I should guess." Jet's voice recalls him from the world of embarrassing retrospect and equally embarrassing foreboding into which his thoughts have strayed. "But near me," she goes on, it may be, from a force that distorts truth. My entire knowledge of Lady Austen, and of her eccentricities, has come to me through her son."

"Mr. Mark Austen, the only son of a widow," observes Biron, recovering, as it by magic, his usual airy assumption of indifference. "I can better understand now how much was comprised in the word 'all!' Young Mark would fain find anything favorable to say of any one. The Austens from generation to generation enjoy the reputation, Miss Connaghan, of being the very worst-tempered people on the habitable globe."

"You have found them so—she asks, looking full and searchingly at her companion Laurence Biron's face.

"I have—to my cost. Poor Sir George, during his lucid intervals, was one of the most excellent old gentlemen breathing. Happily, what with going out to New York, the family prodigious collapse, the Isold Islands, he were race. Unhappily, also, he took a fancy to myself."

"You are frank in your ingratitude."

"I am frank in nothing of the kind. Biron probably the least frank man extant. When you know me better—if that day ever—you will understand that I am a certain knack of blurting out rough truths in the most supremely perplexing manner of my character."

"I have not discovered any over-roughness in you yet, sir."

"You have known me under circumstances ill qualified to call forth the worst. The olive must be well crushed, says the proverb, 'before it gives out its best oil.' You must see me tried in the fire—see adversity before you discover all my virtues."

"Am I to understand that Sir George and Lady Austen were your friends of adversity?"

She feels feverishly, unwarrantably, even on this theme, eager to learn what his relations have been, are to be, with Lady Austen's mother.

"Poor old Sir George! He certainly was something of a blister to me during a good many years."

Mr. Biron might not unjustly add "something of a basker," did he tax his memory severely.

"But I had the consolation of feeling myself, vicariously, of service—a kind of lightning-conductor, turning aside the vials of his wrath from others. For a man so absolutely without useful objects in life, a man so thoroughly an incumbrance upon the face of the earth as I am, that was something."

"I see. Lady Austen is—cannot be—" (an excess of shyness most unwonted causes Jet Connaghan's lips to falter)—"cannot be a very young woman by this time, considering that she is Mark's mother?"

"Lady Austen is fifty-one."

The spirit of sincerity has, it is evident, taken possession of the Reverend Laurence Biron to-night: subtle inspiration, born of self-interest, warning him, probably, that to succeed with Jet Connaghan it were well to approach the borderland of truth as closely as the tortuous nature of the paths wherein he treads will permit.

"Fifty-one!" Unconsciously to herself, the girl's breath heaves a little sigh of relief. "Almost papa's age. Quite an old lady. Then it was not for Lady Austen, of course, that you bought the peasant head-dress at Avignon?"

"Ah—that evening in Avignon! How little I thought," says Mr. Biron, deeply amused by Jet's thoughts into a safer channel—"how little I thought, when I was following you and papa half-way from the church, that ten short days could see us as good friends as we have become! A propos of the racristan, you threw out some aspersions against 'clerical' people, I recollect, that saddened me deeply as we walked along in the dark."

"I should not have thought any aspersions in that direction need touch you very nearly, Mr. Biron."

"Should you not—and why?"

LES MOUCHOIRS DE MILADI.

Lady Dorchester's Handkerchief Bill Sued for in a London Court.

In the Queen's Bench at London on the 18th, before Mr. Justice Mellor and a common jury, the case was tried of Muller vs. Lord Dorchester. This was an action brought by Gabriel Muller, a silk mercer of Paris, to recover £1 6s 6d, the amount of goods supplied to the defendant, who, under a judge's order, had paid £15 to the plaintiff and disputed the remainder. While Lord and Lady Dorchester were visiting Paris in October, 1877, Mme. Muller called on her ladyship at the Hotel Bristol and she there ordered the goods in question, which consisted of Chantilly veils and pocket handkerchiefs. Three of the veils were charged at 150 francs each, six pocket-handkerchiefs, embroidered, £1 each, and six more at 70 francs each. Then there was a further charge for twelve monograms of 5 shillings each, which made up the amount claimed for the goods, the supply of which was not disputed.

Mr. Muller stated that the box containing the goods was sent to Lady Dorchester to her London residence, a letter announcing their despatch having been posted at the same time. The prices charged to Lady Dorchester were the same as would be charged to any one else. Her ladyship did not answer that letter, as he wrote to her asking if she had received the goods, but to that also she made no reply.

Mr. Jaffray, an agent of the plaintiff's in London, proved that he had called on Lord Dorchester for the payment of the account, when his lordship remonstrated with him on the extravagant prices charged, and said it was usual for London tradesmen to give three years' credit.

Mr. Pyke addressed the jury for the defendant, who, he said, defended the action on the ground that he did not wish that English travellers who visited Paris should be fleeced by the tradesmen in that city. The articles, which were charged for at exorbitant prices, were in Court, and as to the pocket-handkerchiefs they could themselves judge of their value, as no doubt they used pocket handkerchiefs.

Evidence as to the value of the articles was then called, and one of the witnesses, a London street tradesman, stated that his customers, as a rule, took two or three years' credit.

Mr. Justice Mellor—Do you charge interest?

Witness—Yes, my lord; but they don't generally pay it. (Great laughter.)

Lord Dorchester stated that he was in his adjoining room at the Hotel Bristol when Lady Dorchester made the purchases of the articles. He heard part of the conversation, and as regarded the veils, Lady Dorchester said they were to be moderate in price. On the 20th December, 1875, Mr. Jaffray called on him for the account, and he remonstrated with him on the extravagance of the charges, but said he would settle the bill if he would take 10 per cent. off. That offer, which the witness made to avoid annoyance, was declined.

Mr. Justice Mellor summed up, and observed that it would be hard upon the poor Lady Dorchester to have returned the goods at the time if she objected to the price charged, when she had the invoice, but as it was the best of the pocket handkerchiefs produced was worn into holes from use or perhaps from washing. It was for the jury to say whether the prices were reasonable, considering where they had been sold and their value at the time; for things that were sold at a high price when in fashion went down to a lower price when the fashion went out and housemaids began to wear them. Commenting on the absence of Lady Dorchester, his lordship said that it was no doubt unpleasant for a lady to come into court and be examined as a witness. It was not the most pleasant thing in the world to dress oneself in the morning, but gods and ladies must be dealt with like other persons; and Lady Dorchester might have been called. No complaint was made at the time of the delivery of the goods as to their price, and it was for the jury to say whether the charges were reasonable or not. If they considered them unreasonable, they would deduct such an amount as they thought fit.

The jury, without leaving the box, found a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

His Lordship said that after the verdict of the jury he had to express his regret that the learned counsel for the defendant had suggested the plaintiff had any desire to fleece him in this transaction, which appeared to have been perfectly straightforward.

India Wheat in the European Markets

India wheat in the European markets promises to come more and more in competition with the rade in the United States. The rapid increase in the exports in the last few years has attracted attention. In 1873, these were trifling, or next to nothing, but after the removal of the export duty they rose rapidly to the first nine months of 1877, 8 they reached 11,600,800 bushels. This is a big increase, more especially on account of the extensive famines, which, though not in the wheat-growing district, attracted large supplies, and so reduced the quantity available for exportation. India has a very large district available for wheat as yet very imperfectly utilized, in many for want of better communications. In all probability the will soon be remedied, labor being extremely cheap and the extent of ground so general that eventually the country will be able to send a big surplus to Europe. It therefore becomes interesting to know to what extent thy will be able to enter into competition with our Western farmers. At Cawnpore, in northwest India, 684 miles by rail from alcutta, wheat recently was worth 73 cr nber bushel. It costs 31 cents to ship it to Ceutta, and the rate from Calcutta to England is about 13 cents. This is less than first New York to Liverpool, though the distance is twice as great. Now, it costs 4 months same to send wheat from Minnesota t New York, a some 1,000 miles, as from Cawnpore to Calcutta, a distance less than 700 miles. That the Calcutta price is considered remunerative by the Indian wheat growers is sufficiently indicated by the rapidly increasing exports in a country where fit growth is the exception. Should the Indian railroads be further extended at a cheap rate, and carry at the rate of 10 cents per bushel instead of 20 cents the competition of another formidable power may be sensibly felt in the course of new years.—Bulletin.

A man at Liverpool was recently arrested in his bed at 3 a.m. for non-payment of School Board fees, it heinghe custom of the officials to make their arrests at night, when they are certain of finding their man at home. So sgtisfi was the prisoner on this occasion, that in reaching the jail he died of heart disease. The Board their boots on the shore in the day time, so as not to attract the notice of any Government cutter, and after conceal ing themselves in the woods, set sail at nightfall.

A WELSH MURDER.

Slaughter of an Entire Family Near Newport, in Monmouthshire.

From the London Telegraph, July 18.

A terrible discovery was made at Llangibby, near Newport, Monmouthshire, yesterday morning. On the previous day a lad had been at work at the Llankowlais Farm with a man named Watkins, a laborer, who bore an excellent character for honesty and integrity. The boy went again to meet Watkins at the same place at an early hour yesterday morning, and finding that he did not come to resume his labor, he proceeded to his cottage. On arriving there a frightful spectacle presented itself. The body of the unfortunateman Watkins lay on the garden path, hit head being on a flower-bed, while the corpse of his wife was also lying near the garden gate. The terrified boy at once ran to tell his mother what he had seen, and she accompanied him to the depot. Subsequently she informed Mr. Evans, of Cefnllwch Farm, of what had taken place, and the Police were communicated with. In the meantime, however, a man named Morgan, who was passing the cottage, had also noticed the bodies and at once concluded that both were dead. He then became aware that the cottage was on fire. By means of a ladder, Morgan, assisted by a neighboring farmer, removed the tiles and plaster from the roof, and the flames were speedily got under to some extent, the two men entered the building. They found that the dwelling had been greatly damaged by fire, the bedding upstairs were horrified at finding the bodies of three children, all quite dead, and also that every article in the house, including the furniture, apparently destroyed in the conflagration, was lying in all directions."

THE DEV FISH.

A Diver Getting Evidence of the Terrible Work of the Creature.

From the Warrnambool (Australia) Standard.

Mr. Smale had fired off a charge of dynamite and displaced a large quantity of rock, thereby uncovering a reef, and lowered down to prepare for lifting these stones by the aid of chains into the punt. While engaged in rolling a large stone he saw something which he supposed at the time was a piece of timber, and, on going down and feeling about in front of where he was working, its a few seconds this object came in contact with the diver's arm, about which it quickly coiled, partly holding him. Immediately Mr. Smale touched what was coiled round his arm he became aware of his position, and tried to extricate himself, but found it a more difficult job than he anticipated. Catching hold of the part hanging from the arm, he walked toward the end of it, when he found his hand held by one of the feelers of a large devil fish, better known among sailors as the devil fish.

Mr. Smale tried to pull the fish off from the hold of the feeler, but without effect for some time. At last the fish, perhaps thinking he had not got sufficient hold of power over his prey, loosened itself from the stones and quickly transferred its feelers, or arms, around the diver's legs and body. In this position Mr. Smale thought the best thing for him to do was to get on deck as soon as possible, and he quickly made tracks for the ladder which reaches from the deck of the punt to the bottom of the river.

The diver was certainly a curious looking object when he reached the deck, the fish looking thing appeared to be entangled all over him, holding him in a firm embrace.

The body portion of the octopus was only about the size of a large soup plate, with eyes in its head like those of a sheep, but it possessed nine arms, each about four feet in length, at the butt as thick as a man's wrist, tapering off at the end to as fine a point as that of a penknife; thus it could be seen that the fish was not the pale colour. Mr. Smale declares it was powerful enough to keep three men under water.

According to the statement published by Dr. G. Mayr, the Director of the Royal Bavarian Statistical Bureau, the proportion of blind, deaf, and dumb people, and of imbeciles in the different countries of Europe and America is as follows: The proportion of blind people is in Germany 8.79 per thousand of the population; in England, 9.35; in Denmark, 7.86; in Norway, 13.63; in Sweden, 8.06; in Finland, 9.24; in Austria, 5.55; in Hungary, 12; in Switzerland, 7.61; in France, 8.87; in the Netherlands, 7.51; in Italy, 10.15; and in the United States, 5.27. Of deaf and dumb people the proportion is in Germany and Austria 0.66 per thousand; in France, 0.67; in Denmark, 0.30; in Norway, 0.22; in Sweden, 10.23; in Scotland, 0.12; in Ireland, 0.12; in Spain, 0.36; in Italy, 7.34; and in the United States, 4.20. The proportion of idiots in Germany is 0.23 per thousand; in England, 81; in Denmark and Sweden, 22; in Norway, 30; in Switzerland, 22; and in France, 0.40. France heads in Italy and the United states, 16.

The rumor that pirate vessels had made their appearance in the Sea of Marmora is confirmed from several quarters seemingly deserving of credit. The search of the pirates are the waters of Harakl, Silivrai, Rashdimo and Boa-Bourun. They had their boats on the shore in the day time, so as not to attract the notice of any Government cutter, and after concealing themselves in the woods, set sail at nightfall.

HORSES WITH THE HAY FEVER.

How the Animals are being Affected in Philadelphia and the Surrounding Country.

From the Philadelphia Record, July 17.

"It is a sort of horse hay fever, or rather influenza, with which the animals are afflicted," said Prof. John W. Gadsen, yesterday. "There is nothing alarming in it, and it is not contagious. We have the same thing every year, only it appears earlier this season than usual. It should not be noticeable for a month yet. The symptoms are a slight running at the nose, a swelling of the glands, with a short, rackling cough, accompanied by a fever. I have attended a number of cases during the past few weeks, but none of them have proved fatal, nor is there any promise that they will. This disease is somewhat similar to the hay fever with which man is afflicted. A case which I had to-day was that of a milkman's horse, which was a rather severe attack, and fell down on the way to the depot. The horses become very weak under this disease, and the fever causes them to become greatly excited. I have had a number different street-car companies with which I am connected, and have been a few animals which have been taken in time. Any horse is liable to the disease, and it has its inception in the stable or manger. It is nothing more serious than a very bad cold, and when the horses become affected they should be attended to at once and given plenty of fresh air and rest. This has been the best course pursued by the owners, and there is less sickness than has been known for years at this season, with the standing the hot spell. I do not apprehend an epidemic like we experienced when the gasoline wave struck us a few years ago. It is a fact that horses which are left out in the air over night, and then placed in the stable in the morning, are more liable to contract the influenza than those which are left in the stable both evening and night. It is the sudden transition from the fresh to the warm air of the stables which causes a sweating and then chilling of the disease, in a measure. While it is increasing in this city, yet the cases are few and far between."

The reporter learned that the disease had spread to some extent in the towns in adjoining Philadelphia. At the different hotels, where the farmers stop over night, the disease has appeared, and on Saturday, a number of cases were reported. A tiller of the soil from Lincoln University, who had disposes of his products at the Ridge Avenue Farmers' Market, stated that one of his horses had become seriously affected, the symptoms being those described above. A number of horses belonging to his neighbors were also sick with the same disease. Mr. John Criswell, a livery stable keeper at Downingtown, had eight of his horses taken ill last week. He has been in the business for years with success. Mr. Evans, near Guthrieville, an interior town, has animals ill with the symptoms of influenza. The disease seems to be confined to the south side of the Chester County, there are a number of cases.

The disease is somewhat similar to the hay fever, which is expected to come along in a few days. The eyes will become red and sneezing. While it is decidedly disagreeable, it is fashionable, and is no respecter of persons. Frederick Gump has offered to sing cent "a chew" with it as the men who sing Gumption told Mr. Brown that his negro nations would be no longer required, and he left town forthwith.

As Mrs. Wm. Haight and her daughter, of Yonkers, were crossing the Hudson River on their way home, on Saturday of last week, the horses became frightened at a passing train, and jumped upon the dock. The young lady leaped out, and escaped uninjured, but Mrs. Haight in jumping out fell on her face and knee, breaking the bridge of her nose and injuring the knee.

Yesterday, a little after noon, a fire broke out in Mr. George Crober's tannery, on the corner of Washington and Klein streets, and did considerable damage before it was checked. There is an insurance of $3,000 on the stock and $1,000 on the building, which will scarcely cover the damage.

WARDSVILLE.

Wardsville, July 31.—The harvest in this vicinity is nearing completion, and the farmers are feeling very jubilant over their prospects for a bountiful supply of the necessaries of life. The only thing that remains to be done to make their happiness complete is to know where the present is to be sold at the extraordinarily low figure of 30 cents to subscribers to the book. Agents' Complete Prospectus, containing the steel portrait, map, and full table of contents of the work, will be sent free to any previous year.

Agents, by commencing at once, can secure first-class territory. Address—ROSE-BELFORD Publishing Co., 60 York St., Toronto, Ont. Toronto May 4, 1878. sod

HURON

Goderich, Aug. 1.—Messrs. Ogilvies & Hutchesm received 3,000 bushels of wheat at their mill during the past week.

A great deal of spring wheat in this neighborhood will not pay for cutting and threshing, and several farmers intend cutting it for feed.

The International Salt Works shipped 500 tons of salt last week.

During the past week Mr Tolmie received from the Islands 21,720 lbs. of fish for re-shipment: Mr. A. Murray 300 lbs., and Mr. M. McPherson 250 lbs.

A public hall is greatly needed in this town. At present there is a move among some of the societies to try and combine the funds of all the local societies and erect a first-class hall, having stores on the ground floor, and the hall and lodge rooms upstairs.

The following is the result of the third-class examination just closed. The pass-mark was 650, and in easiness of appearance the papers were decidedly in advance of those of previous years—Della Baker 864, Jennie Butcher 1,087, Jane Black 847, Jessie Brown 966, Martha Corbett 1,027, C. Saints always wear old and easy-fitting shoes, because, perhaps, it is dangerous to have too great pressure on the weak spot of one's understanding. Her mother saw Mary's predicament at once, and said, "Child, you've got them shoes on the wrong foot, that's the trouble." Tears came into the thoughtful cherub's eyes as she turned to her maternal ancestor and said, "On the wrong foot, mamma? What shall I do? They's all the feet I have." Life's hardest problems are sometimes as easy to solve as that; but, like Mary, we can't see it.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to letter of XX in this morning's issue "your paper, we beg to state, for the information of XX and the public generally, that they can procure at Henry's Central Milk Depot, No. 372 Richmond street, opposite Dundas street, Ambrosia butermilk; also, sweet milk and ice-cream, fresh every morning.

GOAD'S CIRCUS.—W. W. Cole's big show was the large attraction in this city on Friday, the 16th inst. It is advertised as being the "best show in the universe," and the large audience present expressed their pleasure at what has been exhibited would seem to bear out this claim. The entire exhibition has been remodelled since it was here last, and many additions have been made to its attractions. Among the principal of these are the giants—the largest man and lady in the world, which can be seen without extra charge. Cole's show has always had a good reputation, and it is safe to say that the present exhibition is the best he every had on the road. The Detroit Free Press says:—"The programme embraced many novelties; innumerable new feats of acrobatic and gymnastic skill; marvelous exhibitions of horsemanship, groups of trained horses, monkeys, elephants, and other animals and exhibitions of wonders almost incomprehensible. Everything is fresh, and with the well-selected music of an excellent orchestra, and prompt handling of every act, the audience constantly feasted their eyes and ears, and were not tired. The leading riders were Rosalie Stickney, Romeo Sebastian and Wm. O'Dale; the Ronos appeared in double horizontal bar exercises, and were good, while the Herbert Brothers introduced many new and startling feats in their tumbling act. Wm. H. Batchelder, the man who has had a standing challenge to any man in the world since the opening of the season, made his terrific leap and double somersault over seventeen horses; the Claire sisters, residents of this city, and great local favorites, won much applause in their graceful trapeze and flying rings performances. With refreshing variety they were sandwiched between the above named acts, the introduction of Captain Bates and wife, the gigantic couple, the performances of Henry Cook's trained ponies; the antics and comicalities of Pico, the clown; the enjoyable achievements of Wm. O'Dale and his five beautiful trained [illegible], and George Conklin in the dec. of [illegible]

Close of the Foreign Policy Debate.

HARTINGTON'S MOTION DEFEATED BY 143 MAJORITY.

Plunkett's Confidence Resolution Carried Without a Division.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, Aug. 2.—In the Commons this afternoon the debate on Hartington's resolution was resumed.

Sir Stafford Northcote, replying to Mr. Fawcett, said he could not promise that the reforms proposed in Asiatic Turkey, and the guarantees for their execution, which are yet to be agreed upon, would be submitted to Parliament previously for its sanction.

Mr. Fawcett then gave notice that he would introduce a resolution declaring such prior submission to the House of Commons necessary.

London, Aug. 2.—In the House of Commons this evening the debate on Lord Hartington's resolution was resumed.

Lord Elcho, Conservative member for Haddingtonshire, violently attacked the Opposition, attributing the Russo-Turkish war to their conduct.

W. E. Forster, Liberal member for Bradford, followed. He attributed the war to the Government isolating itself from the other Powers. Like all the other Opposition speakers, he based his principle of attack on the Anglo-Turkish convention, which he declared was unconstitutional in the manner of its conclusion.

Mr. O'Donnell, the Home Rule member for Dungarvon, supported the Government in declaring the Opposition had not a rag of foreign policy.

The debate was continued at great length by a number of minor members, who repeated a stock of arguments strictly in accordance with their known politics. At one time as many as thirty Opposition members rose simultaneously.

Roebuck, the member for Sheffield, said the conduct of the Liberals throughout the crisis had been such that he did not think either himself or Gladstone would live to see them in power again.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Liberal member for Oxford, declared he thought the Government was insincere; that it had no belief whatever that any danger was to be apprehended from Russia in Asia-minor, but that it wanted a pretext for acquiring Cyprus.

Dr. Isaac Butt, Liberal and Home Rule member for Limerick, announced that he would support the Government.

Sir Wilfred Lawson, Radical member for Carlisle, expressed surprise that Plunkett's vote of confidence was not more strongly worded, so as to obtain a definite decision before the dissolution of Parliament, which was imminent.

Sir Stafford Northcote declared that in regard to the prerogative of the crown, the Government had acted strictly in accordance with precedent. He pointed out that it was unfair for Hartington to compare the Treaty of Berlin with that of 1856, as the keystone of the treaty of 1856, namely, The independence and integrity of Turkey, had been destroyed by the Treaty of San Stefano. The Government had succeeded in restoring much of Turkey's independence and integrity, though after the result of the war it was impossible to insist upon their maintenance to the extent fixed by the treaty of 1856. He entered into a detailed refutation of Gladstone's statements in regard to the attitude of the British Plenipotentiaries at the Congress. The Government had used influence to prevent Turkey from attacking Greece, when she could have done so with overwhelming power. In regard to the Anglo-Turkish Convention, he said it was necessary to prevent Russia from undermining British influence in the East, and secrecy was necessary for speedy negotiations. The principal point of his speech was an emphatic denial of the existence of any other secret convention, although he admitted it was quite true there had been confidential communications. In conclusion, he maintained that it was the duty and interest of England to maintain Turkey in as strong a position as practicable.

Hartington briefly replied, closing the debate.

The vote was then taken.

Martington's resolution was rejected by a vote of 338 to 195, and Plunkett's amendment adopted without a division.

The announcement of the vote on Hartington's resolution was received with prolonged cheering.

The Trip of the Dory Nautilus,

Hardships of the Novel Voyage.

London, Aug. 2.—The Nautilus arrived yesterday in Mounts Bay, on the coast of Cornwall. The two brothers from Boston, who brought the craft across the Atlantic, were greatly fatigued. After leaving America they experienced pleasant weather for a few days, but fogs, wind and rain prevailed for a considerable time. Their bed clothes got wet, and for four weeks they slept in wet clothes. For many days they could not step at all and hardly spare time to eat and drink. They passed in dangerous proximity to many shoals of whales.

Swimming Feat on the Thames.

Captain Webb Begun His 36 Hours' Swim.

He Gives up the Task after Nine Hours.

London, Aug. 3.—Capt. Webb has commenced swimming 36 hours continuously without rest in the Thames. He dived off the Parade at Woolwich at six this morning and is swimming towards Gravesend, on reaching which he will turn with the tide and swim back to Woolwich, expecting to reach there at 6 in the evening, when he will again turn with the tide and repeat the trip.

Woolwich, Aug. 3.—Capt. Webb relinquished his attempt to swim from Gravesend in consequence of the high wind. He left the water at sixteen minutes past 7 o'clock, having swam nine hours, and completed 32 miles.

Germany and the Vatican.

Rome, Aug. 2.—It is stated in clerical circles that Monsignore Caloine Masello, Papal Nuncio at Munich, has arrived at an understanding with Bismarck relative to a modus vivendi between Germany and the Vatican.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THANKSGIVING FOR PEACE.

London, Aug. 2.—The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Primate, has issued to the clergy of his diocese the recommendation that they who during the past few months prayed for peace should now, through a general thanksgiving, return thanks that their prayers have been thus far answered.

COTTON MILLS CLOSING.

London, Aug. 2.—The Echo states that owing to the prostrate condition of the cotton trade Hornby & Son., of Brookhouse, the largest mill-owners in Blackburn district, have given a fortnight's notice to their operatives that they will close their mills.

The Shah of Persia announces that his eldest son will make a tour in Europe next year.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

London, August 2.—Regarding the rumor that Tolleben refuses to withdraw before the withdrawal of the British fleet, a despatch from Berlin says that Gortschakoff made a solemn promise at Berlin that the Russian forces should be withdrawn upon the evacuation of Varna and Shumla.

Trieste, Aug. 2.—It is reported that the men belonging to the Austrian navy on leave will shortly be ordered to rejoin their posts. Torpedoes have been placed at Kick and other points on the Dalmatian coast, and extraordinary precautions are taken in the waters of Pola, in the road-stead of Lissara.

London, Aug. 2.—A Constantinople dispatch of Thursday says there is no foundation for the report that Safvet Pasha is to be superseded as Grand Vizier. The Ministers were deliberating several hours today on the Bosnia question. The Porte has not yet protested against the occupation, and negotiations are still proceeding.

London, Aug. 2.—A Constantinople dispatch says the Russians are endeavoring to charter steam transports for the conveyance of 100,000 men to Odessa in about a month hence, but this will depend upon the evacuation of Varna. The Russian Imperial Guards have been ordered home as soon as possible. The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople urges the Porte to accept the evacuation of Varna, but the date of the event is uncertain.

Vienna, Aug. 2.—A special from Berlin reports that the ratifications of the Treaty of Berlin have arrived from all the powers except Turkey, and the exchange of ratifications takes place on Saturday, as the Congress arranged, notwithstanding the Porte's delay.

The German Elections.

Berlin, August 2.—Returns of the elections show the Socialists polled 30,000 votes in Hamburg, 12,000 in Altona, 7,000 in Kiel, 12,000 in Breslau, 13,000 in Dresden, 11,000 in Leipsic, 11,000 in Elberfield, 10,000 in Nuremberg, 6,500 in Manover, 4,000 in Frankfort, and 4,000 in Stuttgart. The latest returns indicate the election of 24 Conservatives, against 110 of various liberal parties, 67 Ultramontanes and 9 Socialists.

Buffalo Races.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 2.—The third day of the fall meeting of the Buffalo Park Association was very interesting. The two unfinished races of yesterday with the 2.30 class and free-for-all furnished a full quota of sport for those in attendance, which numbered about 7,000.

The track was in the finest possible condition.

For 2.29 class—unfinished race—Cronie, who was a pet favorite at $100 to $60 against Lucille, won handily in 2.19¼.

The unfinished pacing race was taken by Scooter: Best time, 2.16¼; Sleepy George second.

For the 2.30 class Indianapolis won. Time, 2.23¼, 2.22¼, 2.21¼.

The free-for-all was won by Hopeful in 2.18¼, 2.18 and 2.18. Great Eastern won the second heat in 2.18.

In the 2.30 class, a purse of $1,000, divided, Rubicrete won; Scotia Thomas second, C. W. Wooley, third, and Grey Salem fourth.

A Utah Village Burned.

200 Buildings Destroyed—Loss About $200,000.

Alta, Utah, August 2.—The fire which destroyed this place yesterday originated through a lamp being left burning on a lounge in the Swan House, and falling asleep with a lighted cigar in his mouth. He charred remains were found in the building. The place contained about two hundred wooden buildings, which are now all ashes. Loss from $100,000 to $200,000.

American Telegrams.

Newyaltz, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Maynard Booth, at Libertyville, was instantly killed by lightning to-day.

Henry, Ill., Aug. 1.—The Danley elevator was struck by lightning last night and burned, with over 30,000 bushels of grain. Loss $45,000.

Augusta, Ga., Aug. 1.—R. S. Saulsbury and J. S. Pearson, of Macon, meet near here, but on the Carolina side of the river, this morning. Shots were exchanged but no damage done, and the affair was settled. The parties refused to give the cause of the trouble.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 1.—The Utica & Black River R.R. have just completed the track between Morristown and Ogdensburg. The first train from Utica arrived this noon, having aboard the officials of the road.

Destructive Tornado in Indiana.

Bloomington, Ind., Aug. 2.—During the tornado here yesterday a very large quantity of fine timber was blown down, fences were prostrated, barns levelled or unroofed, and many buildings damaged. The growing corn was torn up, twisted or laid flat on the ground, many hundreds of acres being destroyed on the line of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad. From Louisville northward much damage was done to crops, fences and forests. The rain poured down in broad sheets, fairly flooding the entire country, and swelling the streams to an unusual height, washing away fences and grain stacks and sweeping off acres of corn. The track of the storm was wide, extending half across the State

Cuban Affairs.

Havana, Aug. 1.—The Provincial Cuban Committee, composed of prominent Cubans, gave a grand banquet last night in honor of General Martinez Campos, and in celebration of peace. Several prominent Cuban ex-chiefs were present. Martinez Campos presided. He was accompanied by the highest Government officers. There was much enthusiasm and great fraternal feeling between the Cubans and Spaniards. A ball followed the banquet.

On the night of July 30th six thin rocks prevailed at Batabano, in the southwestern part of the island. Nine vessels are reported lost and six ashore.

A Terrible Confession.

Trowbridge, Pa., Aug. 2.—Last winter an aged couple named Kingston were found in the ruins of their burned cabin. Sarah Hartley now confesses that Isaac Heth, Uriah Troyer, Jonathan Troyer and wife, Eldingoe and herself, murdered and robbed the couple. Troyer and wife moved to Kansas after the murder. The others have been arrested.

The Man of the Branded Hand.

AN INTERESTING DOCUMENT UNVEILED.

Muskegon, Mich.—The monument to Capt. Jonathan Walker, erected by Rev. Photius Fish, of Greece, was unveiled yesterday. Walker was well known as "the man of the branded hand," the palm of his right hand was branded S. T. (Slave Trader), on account of having assisted in getting fugitives into Canada in his vessel.

DEFECTIVE RESULTS.

It might be supposed that Canada would present a favorite field to the English emigrant. Words not look for many Germans to settle with us, but British subjects might at least be expected to prefer Canada to the States. Yet what do we find? That while emigration to Canada has dropped to not, almost, that from England to the States continues to be large. A statement just made to the U. S. Government by its Corporal Agent at Liverpool contains some interesting matter bearing upon this point. He says that the number of passengers cleared from that port to New York during the six months ending June 30th last was 32,177, being an increase of 5,622 over the corresponding period of 1877. So that while the emigration to the United States from that port has been going up, that to Canada has been very small—the total number of immigrants via the St. Lawrence having been but 7,743 during the whole of last year. Just let us consider the sharp falling off in this element of national progress. In 1873 there were 36,301 emigrants to Canada. In 1875 there came 16,038. In 1876 the number dropped to 10,901, and it has since further declined to 7,743. Now, here must be a cause for this. What is it?

At cause? May it not be put down as a act that people in England have become aware that Canada does not offer sufficient field for employment? That the opportunities for labor, except in connection with the land, are comparatively few? We apprehend that it will be the aim of those into whose hands the working out of the National Policy will fall, to seek to remedy this state of things by revising, and to some extent reconstructing, tariff arrangements which have such an important bearing upon the labor market. Canada wants men, and women, too. It is very well to talk of her wide expanse of territory, her rivers, lakes, prairie lands, and all that. But what is the use of it all without people to fill it, and make it productive? Now, the Opposition propose a plan which will foster population. Which will foster it in two ways; first, by stanching the depleting outflow, and secondly, by promoting an influx of new "bone and sinew." We cannot see why anyone should object to such a policy. It is not a proposition to benefit a few, but to promote the interest of all. Why, then, should it be the subject of so much Grit acrimony? If Canada had prospered under the Grits; fast emigration to us been on the increase and the exodus from us closed, it might have been well enough to say, "Let things remain as they are; let us rest "and be thankful." But it is because of the alarming condition to which affairs have been reduced that so many leading men of the country have made up their minds that it is time that something should be attempted in order to bring about an amendment. And it is not too much to say that the Canadian instinct sanctions and justifies the movement. If it were that the National Policy was merely a measure incident to party tactics we should despair of its success, however much it might be hoped for. But it is no narrow policy. It includes all within the scope of its action, seeking, as it does, to amend defects in whatever direction they may be found by which labor is injuriously affected and popularity retarded. Its likelihood is that it will be adopted at the polls by a large majority brightens every day; and what is so surprising is that Mr. Mackenzie should persist in maintaining conditions which experience has shown to be defective in results, and which have become obnoxious to the people.

A story is current in Moscow, apropos of Russian official routine, which, whether literally true or not, certainly illustrates to perfection the character of the prevailing system. An operatic star of some note, connected with one of the principal Moscow theatres, wishing to make a short excursion into the country, went to get her passport countersigned by the local authorities. The presiding official received her politely, and, having learned her business, inquired for her "written petition." "My written petition!" cried the lady, "I have none; I never knew that anything of the kind was required." "Not required, Madam! on the contrary, nothing can be done without it." "What am I to do then?" "Nothing easier; be good enough to take this sheet of paper, and write according to my dictation." The applicant obeyed, and transcribed word for word a formal petition requesting leave of absence from the city for a stated time, which was then duly signed, folded, and sealed. "And now," quoth the man in office, "you have only to deliver it." "To whom, pray?" "To whom?" echoed the official, with a slight smile at the absurdity of the question "to me, of course." The document was accordingly handed across the table. The great man adjusted his spectacles, broke the seal, gravely read over his own composition from beginning to end folded and pocketed it with methodical slowness, and then, turning to the impatient artiste, said, with an air of official solemnity—"Madam, I have read your petition, and regret to tell you that I am unable to grant it."

SAVE ME FROM MY FRIENDS.

This is a pithy prayer, and no man ever uttered it with more heartfelt sincerity and burning fervor than might the poor Colonel after Wednesday night's exhibition in the Mechanics' Hall. Had the Grit candidate been placed in the hands of his most bitter and unscrupulous enemy, he could not have been more severely, more unmercifully, and at the same time more deservedly scorched. How the poor man must have writhed with torture and foamed with unavailing rage, while the eloquent Magee depicted the faults and failings of the Tories, and sometimes directly, sometimes by implication, painted in glowing, brilliant colors the character of the public man the Reformers desired and would support, and in every instance this ideal Reformer was brought out in bolder relief by the shadow of Col. Walker, which, sombre, gloomy and sinister, formed the background to the painting, and served as a foil to set of the beauty and brightness of this ideal picture. Mr. Magee, had not his judgment been on a par with his flippancy, must have known that every dash of his pencil, every touch of the brilliant coloring he threw in so lavishly, was lacerating the soul of the candidate he came there ostensibly to assist, but unless he is a fool absolute, whom he intended to rebuke in the severest style, and to show to himself and the world that such a man as Col. Walker was proved to be was altogether out of place on a Liberal platform. Mr. Magee is said to possess already some ability in his profession, and to give the highest promise of being one day an ornament to it, and, therefore, it would be no compliment to him to say that this severe castigation which he administered to Col. Walker over the shoulders of an imaginary public man of the Grit organization, an ideal of his own creation, was not intended, and that he did not know that he drew blood at every application of the lash. After this statement of his views of the proper and indispensable characteristics of a Liberal candidate, he is bound either to shunt off the Colonel, or, if the latter maintains his seat on their shoulders with the tenacity of the Old Man of the Sea, then is he bound in conscience and honor to vote against him, as he is the direct antithesis of the man required.

As Mr. Magee dealt mostly with matters pertaining to, or bearing directly or remotely on, his own profession, one might have expected a more intimate acquaintance with the subjects to which he adverted. If there are no great measures on the statute books, but what had been obtained by the Liberal party, Canada must have been sadly barren of legislation for the past twenty-five or that period preceding the advent of that Reform meteor, Mr. Mackenzie, the responsibility for this legislation had rested on the shoulders of the Conservative leaders, and few will be found willing to endorse the opinion expressed by Mr. Magee on the character of the legislation of the period. Those Conservatives settled the vexed question of the Clergy Reserves, and settled it in a way so satisfactory to all, that the matter has ceased to be a question of party, and as this is the very best test that could be applied to prove the wisdom of the settlement. But what says Mr. Magee to the Canada First federation? He will surely not claim that as a Grit measure. If he attempts such a thing, we will prove from the public records, that when Sir John A. Macdonald proposed this crowning measure as the means of putting an end to their political conflicts, and the creation of an Empire upon which the fragments of British territory scattered across the Continent, Mr. Brown repudiated the whole thing as chimerical, and demanded the following amount of "pap" for it. This, the greatest measure on the statute books of Canada, is an exclusively Conservative Act, conceive. The Pact, circular, and the slop Rinaldo, with two old gunboats, the Wave and Wave, were used as lifting vessels, sailed by the Popoff air bag, estimated to displace 60 to 50 tons.

"The two gunboats were placed with their bows pointing against the flow of the tide, the Pearl and the Rinaldo being made to point east instead of west, in the direction of Culver Cliff, whilst it was intended to tow the wreck. This was a reversal of their former position and was made in order to avoid the force of the ebb tide, which runs with the rapidity of a mill-race. They were also more deeply immersed, as it was supposed that the Eurydice had further buried herself in the ground, and consequently required a greater lift to pull her out of her matrix. The Pearl was sunk 5 feet 6 inches by 922 tons of water, the Rinaldo 4 feet 11 inches by 599 tons, and the two gunboats 3 feet 6 inches by 195 tons each, the total amount of water to be pumped out as the tide rose being thus 1,818 tons.

"The morning at last was, after many bitter disappointments, everything that could be desired. The breeze which blew was scarcely perceptible, and such as there was came from the land and almost due north. The weather was also bright and summer like and the sea perfectly smooth. The lifting vessels had been moored over 60 owt. anchors and one spinker, under the direction of Commander Moss, upon whom the brunt of the preliminary operations had fallen from the first. About 400 bluejackets had been sent on board from the Duke of Wellington, the Steam Reserve, and the work of pumping down the ships in order to get the windlasses, and the steam crabs belonging to the lumps, was commenced as early as 6 o'clock, and continued as the tide fell.

"The scene at this moment was both novel and exciting. The decks of the various vessels were crowded with men hauling upon the purchases and hawsers, and the water alive with boats employed in seeing that all was right below as the tension upon the purchases increased. The heaving down continued without a hitch until 9 o'clock, when the first head of water, when everything was made fast, and the pumps on board the tugs and the Merrywather fire engines began to pour streams of water from the holds of the sunken ships.

"The critical moment had now arrived, and the onwalkes were crowded with persons anxiously awaiting the result. The first favorable symptom that everything was going on satisfactorily was the fact that the rising tide did not rise upon the masts of the Eurydice, which it would be inferred that the wreck was itself being lifted by the strong wind. The pumps were vigorously kept at work, and at seven o'clock Commander Moss announced the welcome intelligence that not only had the ship been bodily lifted 14 inches by the flood, but that the pumps had gained 1 foot 2 inches upon the tide, thus giving a total rise of 2 feet 6 inches. Indeed, there could be no doubt now that the wreck was suspended and "alive," since the cap of the mainmast had come level with the water, and was clearly rising.

"When it was found that the ship was fairly off the ground, and that the pendants and hawsers were feeling her weight, Mr. Robinson determined to ascertain what that weight, which had hitherto been a mere matter of conjecture, really was. With this object in view he instituted careful observations of the abnormal displacement of the four vessels, the amount of pressure required to bring them down an inch having been previously calculated. It was found that the strain upon the Pearl was 126 tons, upon the Rinaldo 106 tons, upon the Wave 82 tons, and upon the Swan 20 tons and allowing 50 tons of displacement for the Popoff air-bag, the dead weight of the sunken ship would thus appear to be 323 tons, or over 50 tons what was surmised at the time of the wreck."

A young Scotchman lately presented himself in great perturbation of mind at the police station of the Paris Exposition, and announced that he had lost his wife. A description of her was given, and three police agents were sent on a search. The lady was at last found, seated on a bench, crying. The young husband was so overjoyed that he drew from his pocket two notes of 500 francs each and offered them to the men. They smiled, and, Figaro says, told him that the French police find gratis ladies who have gone astray. He should have tried it for a few days.

BABIES TO BE PROTECTED.

How far a court of equity may justly go in the application of a writ of injunction is a very nice question. By many it is regarded as a necessary, certain and convenient cure-all of most moral and material ills. One of this class is a New York Bank President, who lately invoked the Chancellor to stay the wheels of a baby-carriage by his restraining writ, and obtained a temporary injunction for this purpose. The millionaire, who appears to have been a man of nerves, occupied apartments in a French flat, for which he paid a handsome rental. His fellow-tenant on the floor above was furnished forth with a baby, who, in the throes of teething, turned that part of the domicile into a howling wilderness. The only balm for the infantile pains was to roll him in a carriage, and his tender parents provided a small wagon for his convenience—not the baby wagon ordinarily seen on the streets, but a light contrivance with ligumvitæ wheels. The carpets were thus triple lined, and nurse and madame by turns impelled the chariot and wooed the god of sleep to visit the eyelids of the testy cherub. Off to the Court of Chancery ran the bank president, complaining that his neighbor "continuous, "during the day, and often at night, and "late at night, and very early in the morning of each day, rolled or caused to be "rolled or propelled, and still continues to "roll or cause to be rolled or propelled in his "apartments a heavy cart or wagon upon "an uncarpeted floor of said Higginson's "apartments, thereby causing, creating and "maintaining great noise and confusion, "with the intent and design of annoying "and disturbing" President Fool, his family and guests, well knowing that "said "noise and disturbance so created as aforesaid, greatly damages and injures" President Fool, his family, and guests. President Fool further alleged that "said noise "and disturbance is intolerable and unbearable, and injures the health and comfort "of the plaintiff and his family and guests, "and destroys the peace and quiet and enjoyment of his apartments, and otherwise "injures and damages the plaintiff." The judge granted a temporary injunction, and took under advisement the papers relative to a motion to make it permanent, in order to determine how far the operation of the writ was to become an engine of justice or tyranny in the case before him. The chancery writ has been employed to prevent the ringing of church bells, the crowing of particular roosters, the screaming of eccentric and distinct peacocks, and the yowling of specific dogs; but has seldom been brought into requisition for the restraint either of infantile cries, moans, or squalls, however distressing, which may be the result of natural causes over which it has no control, or of any reasonable and obvious methods which may be employed to soothe and relieve infantile pains. The Judge, after due exemplation, has concluded that the noise of a baby carriage on a French flat is a necessary evil, and that the parties driving the baby and baby carriage have a natural and inalienable legal right to trundle the latter over the carpeted floor, even to the slight discomfiture of the nerves of bank presidents, their families, guests, et hoc genus omne. Babies, in his judgment, ought, must, and shall be protected.

The Raising of the Eurydice.

A brief cable despatch in the United States announced that the British frigate Eurydice, capsized in a squall and sank, with all hands, some months ago off the Isle of Wight, had been raised after many unsuccessful efforts. The London Times gives the following account of the operation:—

"The means adopted to raise the wreck were substantially the same as on the Pearl occasion. The Pearl, circular, and the slop Rinaldo, with two old gunboats, the Swan and Wave, were used as lifting vessels, sailed by the Popoff air bag, estimated to displace 60 to 50 tons.

"The two gunboats were placed with their bows pointing against the flow of the tide, the Pearl and the Rinaldo being made to point east instead of west, in the direction of Culver Cliff, whilst it was intended to tow the wreck. This was a reversal of their former position and was made in order to avoid the force of the ebb tide, which runs with the rapidity of a mill-race. ARCHERY AS A PASTIME.

The saying that the weapons of one generation become the playthings of another is true at any rate as respects the long bow. This mighty arm, the twang of whose string has been the knell of death to thousands of brave men, whose whistling clothyard shafts have wrought the overturning of many nations, for the encouragement of which our Parliaments have made special enactments, has long since fallen into disuse for offence or defence among civilized nations. Song, story and tradition, however, have surrounded it with a sort of romance, that clings to it and makes it as familiar to us as it was popular away back in the days of knight errantry. In England, where its most memorable triumphs have been won, bow-shooting has always been kept alive, and archery clubs, at various vessels were crowded with men hauling upon the purchases and hawsers, and the water alive with boats employed in seeing that all was right below as the tension upon the purchases increased. The heaving down continued without a hitch until 9 o'clock, when the first head of water, when everything was made fast, and the pumps on board the tugs and the Merrywather fire engines began to pour streams of water from the holds of the sunken ships.

The first favorable symptom that everything was going on satisfactorily was the fact that the rising tide did not rise upon the masts of the Eurydice, which it would be inferred that the wreck was itself being lifted by the strong wind. The pumps were vigorously kept at work, and at seven o'clock Commander Moss announced the welcome intelligence that not only had the ship been bodily lifted 14 inches by the flood, but that the pumps had gained 1 foot 2 inches upon the tide, thus giving a total rise of 2 feet 6 inches. Indeed, there could be no doubt now that the wreck was suspended and "alive," since the cap of the mainmast had come level with the water, and was clearly rising.

"When it was found that the ship was fairly off the ground, and that the pendants and hawsers were feeling her weight, Mr. Robinson determined to ascertain what that weight, which had hitherto been a mere matter of conjecture, really was. With this object in view he instituted careful observations of the abnormal displacement of the four vessels, the amount of pressure required to bring them down an inch having been previously calculated. It was found that the strain upon the Pearl was 126 tons, upon the Rinaldo 106 tons, upon the Wave 82 tons, and upon the Swan 20 tons and allowing 50 tons of displacement for the Popoff air-bag, the dead weight of the sunken ship would thus appear to be 323 tons, or over 50 tons what was surmised at the time of the wreck."

A young Scotchman lately presented himself in great perturbation of mind at the police station of the Paris Exposition, and announced that he had lost his wife. A description of her was given, and three police agents were sent on a search. The lady was at last found, seated on a bench, crying. The young husband was so overjoyed that he drew from his pocket two notes of 500 francs each and offered them to the men. They smiled, and, Figaro says, told him that the French police find gratis ladies who have gone astray. He should have tried it for a few days.

BOTHWELL ELECTION.

Mr. Hawkins' Meetings at Kent Bridge and Thamesville.

Thamesville, July 31.—Last night Mr. Hawkins held a meeting in the Town Hall, a large and commodious room which was crowded as full as it could hold. On the platform quite a number of ladies of Thamesville were seated, and evinced a warm interest in the proceedings.

F. M. Iyer, Esq., was called to the chair, which he filled most efficiently throughout. After a few remarks the chairman introduced Mr. Hawkins, who was warmly received by the entire audience. He devoted himself principally to the discussion of the National Trade Policy of the Opposition, dealing with the subject in all its bearings in a manner most convincing and efficient. From the warm applause that greeted Mr. Hawkins throughout it was quite certain that upon this question even the Reformers present, of whom there were many, are being rapidly convinced of the necessity of a Protective Policy for our Canadian industries. Mr. Hawkins also went fully into the other issues before the country, showing up the corruptions, the extravagances and the incapacity of our present rulers, giving for proof in every instance incontrovertible facts. This meeting was admitted by all to have been one of the best attended and most successful in all respects when held in Thamesville. There being no opposition speaker present on behalf of Mr. Mills, the audience dispersed about midnight after rousing cheers for the Queen, Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Hawkins.

Kent Bridge, Aug. 1.—Last night Mr. Hawkins held a meeting in the Temperance Hall here, which was filled to overflowing. Farmers from long distances in large numbers had assembled to hear the great question of the hour fully discussed. As at Thamesville the previous night, the speaker devoted himself to a thorough discussion of the Opposition National Trade Policy. He was warmly applauded, and at the close of the meeting had the satisfaction of being assured by many Reformers of their support in the coming contest.

A British Admiral's Narrow Escape

The following extract from a letter of an officer belonging to the man-of-war Agincourt, dated Gallipoli, July 5th, has been issued at the British Admiralty:—

"I write a few words in case a garbled account of the accident to one of our boats, and also to one of the boats belonging to the Rupert, may reach England. Sir Edmund Commerell had a very narrow escape of his life. About 4 p.m. Sir Edmund took his barge and eight men to sail against the Rupert's barge, in charge of one of their lieutenants. At the time the weather appeared to have cleared up, but we had a deal of heavy rain, and yesterday a fresh gale (gunning) from the southward.

"Hearing of a rumor of an accident having occurred, I went on inquiring that seven or eight boats and a steam pinnace were away searching for the Rupert's sailing boat and our barge. An oar bossed up from the barge first drew attention to her, and seeing five or six men swimming in the water four hundred yards away, gave notice of the accident to the Rupert's boat. All the men were picked up except three of the Rupert's and one of the Agincourt's men, all seamen. The following is, as far as can be gathered, the reason of the sad mistake:

"The rain clouds had passed over banked up to leeward, and once more returned over the high land on each side of the Dardanelles. Just as the rain burst a tremendous squall struck the ship, and was followed by a torrent of hailstones. Nothing could be seen for several minutes, and when it cleared up the oar from the Agincourt's barge and the Rupert's men were seen. Sir Edmund Commerell, seeing the oar ahead, put forward everything and was running for the Asiatic shore under the jib, when the wind literally blew the boat under bare poles as the jib sheet had been eased off. The Agincourt's men, in Rupert's boat, also seeing the squall coming, had lowered everything, and was pulling under the lee of the land ahead of the other boat, intending to anchor until it had passed over, when this boat was also capsized and sank from under them. The barge fortunately floated, as they were a long way off, and the Admiral and crew must have held on to her for three-quarters of an hour. The cutter had drifted off on two breakers; these have been seen, but not the boats (named Pike), and it is feared there is but little hope of his having been saved, still, he was a good swimmer, so that we need not give up all hope quite yet, for it is now 9 p.m. and the accident took place at 5.30 p.m. He might therefore have reached the shore on the other side.

"The Admiral is, we are glad to say, none the worse for his ducking; but he had on a mackintosh, when first upset, or, rather, it was round his neck, and he had some difficulty in freeing himself from it and regaining the boat. About two hundred men were in the gangway which he came on board, and without a word all clapped their handson seeing him come over the side. I need not say how relieved we felt, for, irrespective of personal regard, the loss to the service at the present moment would have been great. Thank God, it is no worse, for it might easily have been; still, the loss of four men, and all good men, is very grievous."

Nature's Wasted Forces

Concerning the forces of nature which man will probably use when coal is exhausted, Dr. Siemens, the English scientist, speaks as follows in an address at Glasgow, Scotland:—

"When, little more than a twelvemonth ago, I visited the great Falls of Niagara, I was particularly struck with the extraordinary amount of force which in fact, is sinking under the useful purposes of man are concerned. One hundred million tons of water fall there every hour from a vertical height of one hundred and fifty feet, which represent an aggregate of six million eight hundred thousand horse-power, or, in other words, to pump back the water from below the above the fall would require an annual expenditure of not less than 266,000,000 tons of coal, calculated at an average consumption of four pounds of coal per horse-power per hour, which amount is equivalent to the total coal consumption of the world. In stating these facts in my inaugural address on assuming the presidency of the Iron and Steel Institute, I ventured to express the opinion, that in order to utilize natural forces of this description at distant towns and centres of industry the electric conductor might be resorted to. This view was at that time misreported by experimental data such as I have been able since then to collect. It would not be necessary to seek on the other side of the Atlantic for an application of this mode of transmitting the natural forces of falling water, as there is perhaps no country where this force abounds to a greater extent than on the west coast of Scotland, with its elevated lands and heavy rainfalls. You have already conducted the water of one of your high-level lochs to Glasgow by means of a gigantic tube, and there would seem to be no reason why the water could not be made to pass the water in its descent from elevated lands through turbines, and to transmit the vast amount of force that might thus be collected, by means of short metallic conductors, to towns and villages for the supply of light and mechanical power.'

"It would be wrong to suppose that a resumption of the use of natural forces would throw us back to the time of the windmill and the primitive water-wheel which used to give motion to isolated establishments. We shall have learned to store, to transport and to utilize these forces in a manner adapted to our superior requirements; and who knows whether the time may not come when our drawbacks in the third or fourth generation will look back upon the indiscriminate uses of coal with something like the same feeling that we look upon the users of flint and bronze implements."

They have been finding coal out in Ohio 60 feet below the surface, on land owned by David Harrier, near Akron. The vein is four feet thick, and is believed to underlie 100 or 500 acres. The best thing that Mr. Harrier can do with that coal vein at present is to cover up the hole, plow the land, and get a good crop of fall turnips. There are a good many coal mine people in Pennsylvania just now who would exchange all their mineral wealth for a good crop of turnips.

The San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board has appropriated $28,000 "for sunshine." It is well understood that the money had been used to bribe members of the Legislature to defeat a bill requiring frequent and accurate reports of mining operations.

In 1830 the executions in New South Wales were 233 times as frequent as in the United Kingdom—having regard to the difference of population.

The Kensal Green Cemetery, where Charles Mathews was buried the other day, is the Greenwood of London. It was created some forty years ago, and was the first establishment of the kind of any magnitude near the great city. Complaints had long been loud against the intra-mural burial before the act prohibiting it was passed. The clergy had of course the strongest interest in opposing the measure, which undoubtedly fell very hardly on them, as they entirely lost the revenue drawn from burial grounds. One reverend gentlemen is reported to have said that he did not know why 700 bodies could not continue as heretofore to be put there annually. Some of the church yards presented a revolting aspect.

There is to be in the French army a high school of war. Besides tactics and special lectures on military topics pupils will be taught geodesy—the branch of surveying in which the curvature of the earth is taken into account, as in the surveys of oceans or long lines of coast, topography, photography, and telegraphy.

JET:

OR,

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

"Because you are—please do not be offended, I mean to be civil—so exceedingly little cherie!"

Miss Conyngham, I am mortally offended. It is the cruelest thing that has ever been said to me. Will you make amends by taking one more turn before we go back to gaslight and politics? There is a legend that Corston may be seen from the upmost terrace of the garden under the rainbow.

"If I were sure papa would not want me—"

Mr. Conyngham is in the safe keeping of Marie Stuart—Marie Stuart grown saintly! No fear that in a field full of ladies your father will experience neglect. During all the winters that I remember seeing him in the south, Mr. Conyngham has invariably been selecting for the ministrations of some excellent woman concerned alike about his body and soul. Besides," adds Mr. Birron, in nearly half a sigh, "Sue, there is an alpaca coat we know still fluttering in the breeze upon the dining room terrace. We may have yet another left bower, if you choose."

"What an exquisite half hour it is! The air in the upper garden is even more crisp, more exhilarating than below, the view wider. One, at least, of the human actors in the scene is fellow-creature to the stars and heaven!

When, at length, the ringing of bells, the movement of many lights betoken that the Parabis is about to send forth its first peal of evening ham tums, and gives a hint, in reverie look at the placid beauty of the palm shaded walk they are quitting. Half absently she plucks a flower or two from an intensely fragrant, poisoned to a sexy, comes ready to the old Mohawk's hd.

Dor ground he will revive. Just before the conclusion of the lal—a desert of indigenous grapes, dals and figs, in full circulation—enters Birron, with the monday Italian letters, one of which he deposits, under the guidance of with the interpretation, of a polyi waiter, beside the major's plate.

"A billet-doux, depend upon Dr. Oldham," murmurs Miss Wyll turning respectfully away from Major ict to address a dejected-looking Eoilsman in spectacles on her other hand—"several the lamegrenade, poor fellow! living der the same roof with close upon hundred ladies, and having Miss Wyll for his immediate neighbor at breakfast, kh, and dinner. Oh! don't think I envy him, lowell as pleased before. Thtaughty, naughty major."

Tue naughty, naughty maj'shaving carefully read his letter throu twice, goes on with the preparation of his dessert—washing each little, brown ich of grapes in a tumbler of water, wag his arm, and, finally, with a sh, and ff "thanks," accustomed to southern comi and provided with resources against th mora crying evils.

Saturday, August 3, 1878.

TO THE FAR WEST.—Mr. Samuel Crawford, Manager of the Globe Agricultural Works, has left for a six weeks' trip to Manitoba.

GONE DOWN.—Mr. John English, the bailiff of the Central Prison, left here yesterday for Guelph, having in charge the three prisoners named Clarke, Howard and Fewgill, committed from this city, and two others from Chatham and St. Thomas.

WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—This Association intends holding a harvest home celebration on Wednesday, the 14th inst., which promises to be an occasion of great interest. The Trustees of the Protestant Orphans' Home have kindly granted the use of the Home for the evening.

OUR NATIONAL GAME.—Attention is directed to the advertisement in another column announcing a game of lacrosse between the St. Thomas and London clubs on Tuesday next on the latter's grounds. It is to be hoped a large number will attend to do this the first game played in this city this season.

NARROW ESCAPE.—On Thursday evening last, Mr. Chas. Fewings, a tricker, of this city, while boating her Griffith's Dam, was upset from a canoe, but the shock was so great that, although he is a fair swimmer, he failed to reach shore. He was rescued by two young men just in the nick of time.

COUNTERFEIT.—A young man named Ramsey passed a counterfeit $20 bill on Conductor Carney, of the G. W. R., the other day, in payment of fare. The fraud was discovered on the conductor reaching Sarnia, and the young man refunded. He claimed to have received the bill in Michigan for wages, and did not know it was bogus.

METHODIST EXCURSION.—Fourteen car-loads of excursionists left here yesterday a.m., on the occasion of the annual tea meeting of the Canada Methodists to Port Stanley. There could not have been fewer than 1,000 persons on board. A better day could not have been desired. The excursionists enjoyed themselves in the usual manner, and everything passed off pleasantly, thanks to the committee who had charge of the arrangements.

THE SAMUEL-BURNS BURGLARY.—Albert Burns, the young man who was arrested at Sarnia the other day on the charge of burglariously entering the house of J. P. Samuel on the night of the 21st ult., appeared to answer the charge at the Police Court yesterday. He was defended by Mr. Ed. Meredith. The evidence on the part of the prosecution was concluded, and the prisoner committed to stand his trial.

SAMUEL, Miss Kenwood, and others, was heard, and the prisoner committed to stand his trial.

STOLEN PROPERTY RECOVERED.—A man named Wm. Woolfeid, of Dereham, had a democrat waggon stolen from him some fourteen months ago. The thief was supposed to be one Samuel Lindsay, of Onondaga. Constable Capron, of Ingersoll, the other day, proceeded to a village about twelve miles south of Brantford, named Boston, and with the assistance of Constable Knoll, of Brantford, captured the wagon and brought it to Ingersoll. Woolford identified the property.

AN AMERICAN OFFSHOT OF CANADIAN HOSPITALITY.—The Cleveland Leader, of Thursday, referring to the visit of the Methodist Ecumenical Conference to the city, says:—"The excursion planned by the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. Church to London, Ontario, was a grand success in every way. The occasion will long be remembered by all who made the trip. To say that, while in Canada, they were royally entertained would be but a faint expression of the hospitality they were subjected to."

CANNIBALISTIC FEASTING.—Two farmers living a short distance from Granton settled an old grudge the other day by a rough and tumble fight on the street. One of the combatants got the finger of his adversary in his mouth, and bit it in a most shocking way. The finger began to mortify shortly after the fight, and the doctor who was called in to dress the wounded member found it necessary to resort to amputation, which was successfully performed The names of these cannibals are Tim. McKay and John Cassidy.

POLICE COURT PENCILINGS.—At this Court yesterday Alexander Ferguson and McCormack was charged with vagrancy and drunkenness. He was allowed to depart in peace, James Parker had the option presented him of paying $1 fine, or going below for ten days. He was drunk. John Symmonds, on suspicion of larceny, was further remanded until Tuesday for examination. John O'Hearn was bailed to appear on one charge, and settled the Johnson assault case by paying costs. Mary Johnson was fined $5 for being drunk and a vagrant.

HATS ON A DISORDERLY HOUSE.—For some time past complaints have been made to the police authorities by residents on Peterville of the existence in that village of a disorderly house. Last night County Detective Hodgins armed with proper warrants, proceeded to the house complained of, and captured five females, who gave the names of Matilda Carroll, Annie O'Neil, Minnie Galley, Ronix Taggart and Robert Carter. They were lodged in the county jail, and will appear for examination before Squire Peters on Monday.

LONDON ARABS ABROAD.—The other day two London lads named Newton Moderand and Edward Webster, 13 years each, and hailing from London, were brought before Lord Mayor Sir Robt. Mary's on suspicion of stealing some collars from a clothing line. Constable Harrington has had his eye on these boys for some days, as several petty thefts have occurred lately, to which one or both are suspected. On account of the youth of the prisoners, and want of sufficient evidence, His Worship discharged them with a caution, they promising to leave the town as soon as released.

CANADIANS ABROAD.—The following Canadians registered their names in London during the week ending July 27th:—Mrs. E. Blake, W. B. Geikie, M.D.; H. E. Clarke, Q.C., Hamilton; T. Robertson, Mrs. T. Robertson, T. Ferguson, J. M. Clark, H. Goulding, H. Blake, Chief Justice Moss, G. B. N. Cockburn and Mrs. J. Thippe, F. Osler, Miss Sims, Professor Fanning, Sandfield Macdonald, Rev. G. L. Cayley, Rev. J. D. A. Cayley, J. B. Mackenzie, E. P. White, J. N. Lake, M. I. Roaf, Mrs. R. C. Matlack, J. R. McCulloch, Cornick Barclay, Toronto; A. Campbell, Mrs. Littlejohn, John Boulden, Hamilton; W. Mills, Ingersoll; A. P. McDiarmid, W. H. Armstrong and wife, D. A. McMichael, J. R. Geddes, Strathroy; J. Hay, W. A. Reid, Woodstock; J. Mann, Embro; A. J. Darch, London; H. W. Brethour, Brantford.

A BOOK AGENT AND HORSE THIEF CONVICTED.—On Tuesday last, a young man who said he was a book agent and travelled for J. B. Maguire, Toronto, called at Mr. Temple's livery stable, in Hamilton, and asked to hire a rig. The owner having previously rented rigs to the man he had no hesitation about giving him one this time. The agent accordingly drove away with a grey horse and top buggy. Wednesday passed and Thursday came, but no book agent put in an appearance. Descriptive telegrams were sent to Brantford and Paris. On receiving a telegram from the former place, Mr. Temple repaired thither. On arriving at Brantford, however, he found the man had gone in the direction of Paris. The telegrams describing the thief were then repeated to both Paris and Woodstock. At the latter place Chief of Police McKee received the telegram and at the same moment saw the grey horse, buggy and man enter the town. Attiring himself in civilian's dress Mr. McKee went out and heard the man offer the whole turn out for sale. The Chief bought the rig and arrested the man. On receiving news of the arrest Temple went up to Woodstock and identified the horse, buggy and driver. The latter was at once lodged in the county prison. The man will probably be tried in Woodstock.

A BOOK AGENT AND HORSE THIEF CONVICTED.—On Tuesday last, a young man who said he was a book agent and travelled for J. B. Maguire, Toronto, called at Mr. Temple's livery stable, in Hamilton, and asked to hire a rig. The owner having previously rented rigs to the man he had no hesitation about giving him one this time. The agent accordingly drove away with a grey horse and top buggy. Wednesday passed and Thursday came, but no book agent put in an appearance. Descriptive telegrams were sent to Brantford and Paris. London East Notes.

Friday afternoon.

The man Beck, who was arrested by County Constables Nichol and Leathern the other night, was up before Squire Anderson last night. He was let off on payment of costs.

Mr. D. Macmillan, M. P. for East Middlesex, intends addressing his constituents in London East Town Hall on Monday evening next. Other well-known speakers will also be present.

PERSONS CASE AT WOODSTOCK.—On Tuesday last a man named Connell, of Curtick township, was brought before Messrs. Harris, Gibson and Kaine, J. P.'s, at the instance of Mr. James Halliday, of Howick, on a charge of committing perjury at a similarly constituted court nearly a year ago. The melancholy fate of the young woman, and the circumstances which led to it were fully reported at the time. About a year ago the eldest daughter of Mr. Halliday committed suicide by taking a dose of strychnine, which was supposed to have been procured by Mr. Connell, who, it appears, had been keeping company with the individual young woman for some time previous. Immediately after her death he was brought before a bench of magistrates, but the prosecution failing to procure sufficient evidence, resulted in his acquittal. Suspicions were again aroused which led to the present trial, the prosecutor charging Cornell with perjury at the first trial, but after hearing the evidence, the prosecution failed to establish the charge, and the prisoner was acquitted accordingly.

PAUPER.—At the Police Court yesterday afternoon a man named Wm. Watson was charged by Maria Boldsim with having procured a basket of clothing from her, and sold the stuff, with intent to defraud her. After hearing the evidence, the P. M. reserved judgment until Monday next.

THE BLACK SCOTT ASSAULT CASE.—At yesterday afternoon's session of the Police Court, Robert Black, the man who committed an unwarrantable assault upon a colored man named Stephen Scott, some ten days since, was committed for trial upon the charge.

Young Men's Christian Association.

The Annual Provincial Convention.

Hamilton, Aug. 2.—The eleventh annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec opened in this city yesterday.

After devotions and the transaction of routine business, the following officers were recommended for the ensuing year:—President, Mr. W. H. Howland, Toronto; Vice-Presidents, Dr. Nichols, Brantford; J. Woods, Galt; E. Lawes, Cobourg, and W. R. Mackenzie, Hamilton; Minute Secretary, G. R. Meadows; Recording Secretary, F. Hubbard, Stoneyfield.

Mr. S. R. Briggs submitted the following report of the Executive Committee, which stated that of the $2,000 recommended to be raised for the Executive work, only $487 was pledged, and over part of this remained unpaid. New associations had been formed at Eglington, Kinloss, Omemee and Lancaster, and Richmond, Que., and Easton, Que. Forty associations had reluctantly fallen into bad habits, etc., are alive to the annual current expense of $22,760. Eighteen have secured lecture rooms, fifteen of which report a daily attendance of 1,054. Six have buildings of the value of $61,500, with a debt of the same of $52,500. Three have building funds amounting to $2,370. Fifteen have libraries numbering 7,249 books, valued at $5,500. Thirty owned furniture valued at $11,345. Thirteen have every reason to believe that they did not, as charged, take poison with the intention of destroying her life. A letter just received from her, mailed on the afternoon of her fatal illness, would convince the most skeptical that at that time, 2 p.m., she had not the remotest thought of dying.

THE QUEBEC MYSTERY.

Wild Unearthly Screams from a Haunted House.

Startling Disclosure of Social Life at the Ancient Capital.

Quebec, Aug. 2.—The whole city is in a state of excitement over a mystery which baffles inquiry. For days and nights past the cries of a woman, plainly the cries of a woman in pain or distress, have proceeded from a residence on Rampart street. The residents of the Grand Battery, an aristocratic quarter, have been thrown into consternation by the sounds, which at night are appalling. The residence in question has been ostensibly vacant since May last. It communicates by a garden with the house of Madame Methivier, who has long had the reputation of keeping a private lying-in hospital, and practicing abortion. Its several occupants are all of wealthy families, concerning whom it was whispered that they were about to unnecessarily become mothers, had been traced to Madame Methivier's, whence they never emerged, at least to the knowledge of man. Several mysterious disappearances of ladies in society in the past ten years were talked about here, but the local press never dared mention the facts, for the families were wealthy and could purchase journalistic silence, and, being influential politically and otherwise, could enforce the closing of the mouths of the common people. The families whose members have thus disappeared are never non-plussed when the crying are spoken of. The statement is usually made that they are in convents in France or Belgium. Eight or ten years ago a young lady, daughter of a wealthy French family, who had been engaged in a desperate and long continued flirtation with an officer of the garrison, gave evidence of approaching maternity. She danced one night at a ball in the Music Hall, and when it was over entered her carriage and was driven away, but she did not reach home that morning, nor was she ever seen in Quebec afterwards. Her parents made no inquiries, though her lover was frantic. Some years later, in a second-hand clothing shop kept by one Gale, a dress and some under linen, marked with the name of the missing lady, were found, which Madame Methivier claimed to have been stolen from her by dishonest servants. The police authorities, at the request of the father of the girl dropped the case. A reporter, who had got wind of it, prepared for the ministerial organ, but it never saw the light, and a[t] inquiry was stifled. Madame Methivier bought the house and rooms, fifteen of which report a daily attendance of 1,054. Six have buildings of the value of $61,500, with a debt of the same of $52,500. Three have building funds amounting to $2,370. Fifteen have libraries numbering 7,249 books, valued at $5,500. Thirty owned furniture valued at $11,345. THE POISONING OF MRS. STOKES.

Sensational Reports Authoritatively Denied.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—Kindly allow me an opportunity of stating that many of the newspaper reports of the poisoning of Mrs. Stokes are calculated to mislead those unacquainted with her, and injure still more deeply the feelings of her relatives. In the first place, her age was 38, not 55 or 36, as stated. She had been married but once, to John Lambert Stokes, but who is now not in or near Texas, as the papers report; neither was her child kept away from her by her relatives at Sarnia. It has never been in their possession. The allegations respecting the disreputable character of the house she boarded at, her gradually falling into bad habits, etc., are alike indignantly denied by those immediately with her and her surroundings for some time past, and they appear to have been introduced into some papers solely to magnify the affair appear more horrifying. Further, from circumstances which have come to light since her decease, her friends have every reason to believe that she did not, as charged, take poison with the intention of destroying her life. A letter just received from her, mailed on the afternoon of her fatal illness, would convince the most skeptical that at that time, 2 p.m., she had not the remotest thought of dying.

BEACONSFIELD - SALISBURY.

Conferring the Freedom of London

BANQUET AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

The Speeches by the Honored Guests.

BEACONSFIELD ON EUROPEAN RELATIONS.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, Aug. 3.—The following is the programme of the civic honors to Beaconsfield and Salisbury to day. They will arrive at five p. m. and be received at the entrance of Guildhall by the city lands commission, wearing robes and carrying wands of office. Their Lordships will be escorted through a temporary pavilion to Guildhall yard, conducted to the Library, and received by the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress, and the civic dignitaries, wearing official robes. The procession will be formed and move to Great Hall, where Beaconsfield and Salisbury will be conducted to the dais and take places at the right of the Lord Mayor, the members of the Common Council sitting in front of the dais. The usual formalities will be gone through with as if an ordinary Court of Common Council were held. The Town Clerk will read the resolutions of the Common Council for presenting the freedom of the city to the plenipotentiaries. The Chamberlain will then address their Lordships, and hand to them the boxes containing Richmond St. west, near King St., will be promptly attended to. Ferm

The Lord Mayor will then address the Earls Beaconsfield and Salisbury will reply, and the Court will at once adjourn. Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury will then with the Lord Mayor in a carriage, will proceed to the Mansion House, where the ministerial banquet will take place in Egyptian Hall. The scene at Guildhall is expected to be very brilliant. The floral decorations are remarkable, embracing many of the choicest plants, which line every passage, with fountains playing at intervals.

On their arrival at Guildhall this afternoon Beaconsfield and Salisbury will be cheered theatrically received and loudly cheered by the thronging crowds during the approach to Guildhall. Weather is bright.

London, August 4.—The banquet in honor of Beaconsfield and Salisbury, at the Mansion House last night, was a grand affair. Most of the Ministers and a brilliant company were present.

Earl Beaconsfield reviewed the recent events, and said he believed the peace which has resulted will be durable because all the Powers are satisfied. There was a party in Russia, however, by no means inconsiderable, which has been checked. Our relations of all the Powers were most friendly, especially with the Emperor of France. He could not conceive of a greater misfortune than the estrangement of France.

London, Aug. 4.—During the ceremony at Guildhall, on Saturday, of presenting the freedom of the city to Beaconsfield and Salisbury, considerable sensation was created by a person who, on the appearance of the Plenipotentiaries, shouted, "Traitors to the Crown, traitors to the throne." The disturber was immediately ejected.

In his speech at the Mansion House banquet, Beaconsfield said he confident Her Majesty's Ministers had not only maintained, but greatly advanced, their own country, but had secured the independence of Europe. He drew a sanguine picture of the prospects from the Anglo-Turkish Convention in support of the view that it was not hopeless to expect reforms in the administration of the Porte. He cited a statement sent to the Emperor of Germany by American missionaries, setting forth the toleration enjoyed by Christians, the progress of education, &c., in the Ottoman dominions since the Crimean war. Earl Beaconsfield said the testimony was preferable to any official report. It was that of men of the highest principles and of sublime character, who devoted their lives to the benefit of their fellow creatures. His Lordship said that never within his experience had the relations of the Powers been so essentially friendly. Russian statesmen were convinced that a restless warlike spirit must debase, perhaps even ruin, that empire. The rearrangement of France he should regard as one of the greatest misfortunes which could happen to England.

The Marquis of Salisbury also addressed the distinguished company, his speech indicating that the Government had resolved to fully assert the right of peace in favor of good government, afforded by the Anglo-Turkish convention. He urged upon British statesmen the sinking of all party differences in support of such a policy.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Bucharest, Aug. 3.—The Russian troops are returning to Russia to the number of 5,000 daily.

The Roumanian army is expected to make a triumphal entry into Bucharest on the Bulgarian trophies.

Belgrade, Aug. 3.—A Cabinet Council has resolved to proclaim the independence of Servia on the 22nd August, with the cessation of the state of siege and martial law.

Berlin, August 3.—Ratifications of the Treaty of Berlin have been exchanged between all the Powers except Turkey. The Sultan, however, has signified that he recognizes the validity of the treaty.

THE GERMAN ELECTIONS.

Berlin, August 3.—This morning the approximate estimate of the result of the elections for members of Parliament is as follows:—The two Conservative fractions, which were 77 strong in the old House, this time muster 116. The two Liberal fractions, which were 162 strong in the old House—127 National Liberals and 35 advanced Liberals—have been reduced to 122. 107 National Liberals, and 25 Advanced Liberals. The Ultramontanes, with their Guelph allies, retain their old figures, about 98. The remaining 60 members are Poles, Dalcs, Socialists, and a few independent.

Berlin, Aug. 4.—The complete returns from the German elections show the following results as regards the great parties:—93 Conservatives, 110 of the various Liberal parties, and 98 Ultramontanes. Sixty-six second ballots will be necessary.

FRANCE.

ALARM ARISING OUT OF THE GERMAN ELECTIONS.

Paris, August 4.—The election of Socialists in Germany at the recent elections, is looked on with alarm by the French Government, as tending to greatly encourage the Communeand the Workingmen's Congress, announced for Sept. 3rd, has been prohibited.

HONORS TO GERMANS.

France has bestowed the Cross of the Legion of Honor on the German Prince Hohenlohe and Count Von Bulow, as a recognition of their kindness to France at the Berlin Congress.

A CHEATED MARSHAL-PRESIDENT.

It is also rumored that Marshal MacMahon declined attending the English concerts at the Trocadero, saying "No, that rogue Disraeli has cheated me."

SPAIN.

IN MEMORIAM.

Madrid, Aug. 3.—King Alfonso will erect a magnificent basilica to the memory of the late Queen, and will contribute one million reals annually until it is completed. Ex-Queen Isabella has given her jewels, valued at fifteen million reals, for the same purpose, and accompanies the gift with a very touching letter.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

LATEST LIVERPOOL CIRCULAR.

Liverpool, August 2, 1878.

A leading grain circular says:—The home trade for wheat has been dull this week, though no change in prices is noted. The business in cargoes on passage was inanimate, but there has been a good Continental demand from our calling ports, and in some instances rather more money was paid. Reports of the wheat crop in France are increasingly unfavorable, and that country is regularly buying off our coast to a fair extent, but much more largely direct from the United States. On the spot, since Tuesday, little has been doing in wheat, choice qualities, however, maintaining that day's quotation! Corn, from the pressure of the quantity ex-quay, is easier to buy, while American prices are relatively above ours. In the market today there was the average attendance and a fair retail demand for wheat, mostly at the currencies of Tuesday, and in some cases at a reduction of a penny per cental. Flour was quiet and steady. A good deal of corn was sold to day at a reduction of 3d., but the market closes firmer, the decline having been partly recovered.

GREAT BRITAIN.

REDUCTION OF THE PACIFIC FLEET.

London, Aug. 4.—The British Pacific fleet will be reduced immediately.

CHRISTIAN DELEGATES.

A very crowded meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association was held last evening to welcome the American delegates to Geneva. There were present many New Yorkers. Several made speeches.

AN AMERICAN BOY AS A BRITISH MIDSHIPMAN.

London, Aug 5.—Mr. Brinden, of Indianapolis, the only American boy ever entered in the British naval school on the cadet ship Worcester, has passed an examination, and has been awarded the highest honor by a vote of his brother cadets. He is thus made a midshipman in the British navy.

NO RESOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

London, August 5.—The Standard announces in an official form that there will be no dissolution of Parliament this year.

A FENIAN LIBERATED.

Dublin, August 4.—The Fenian Kelly was liberated from Mountjoy Prison on Saturday, on account of ill health.

ROME.

CARDINAL FRANCHI'S OFFICIAL SUCCESSOR.

London, Aug. 3.—A despatch from Rome says it is reported the Pope has appointed Cardinal Antonio De Luca, Prefect of the Congregation, as Pontifical Secretary of State, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Cardinal Franchi. Cardinal De Luca is an Italian, born 1805, and nominated a cardinal in 1866.

London, Aug. 3.—A Berlin despatch says the negotiations between Bismarck and the Papal Nuncio are progressing satisfactorily for the Curia, in consequence of important concessions made by Bismarck.

HORRIBLE DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.

A Man Shoots his Wife and Two Children, and Then Himself.

West Randolph, Vt., Aug. 3.—This morning Mike Winn, who lives near this village, murdered his wife and children. The facts are—About four o'clock he got up, and partially dressed himself, took a revolver and shot his sleeping child, a babe of ten months. He then shot his wife, the ball taking effect in her left side. Breathing child, a boy about 11 years of age, hearing the noise, came down stairs, when his father tried to kill him, but he escaped and started for the hills. When he saw his pursuers close upon him he shot himself, and was found dead.

THE YELLOW FEVER.

New Orleans, La., Aug. 3.—Yellow fever for the past twenty-four hours—New cases, 38; deaths, 7; total cases to date, 239; total deaths, 60. The average is six deaths and thirty new cases daily. The disease is specially hostile to children, appearing to native born Southerners only, and there are many deaths among the colored people, who, in all former epidemics, have been entirely exempt. Early developments show symptoms unlike any former sickness, and sanitarians agree that the disease is distinct from the yellow fever of Havana and Vera Cruz, and is provoked by the filthy condition of the city streets, overflowing drainage-canals and pest-holes. The present disease appeared simultaneously in different portions of the city. The excitement following was intense, and many families left town for the North under the influence of the scare. Galveston, Mobile and Vicksburg quarantined against New Orleans, and many important towns in the State followed suit, making great indignation here.

Havana, Aug. 3.—There were 129 deaths from yellow fever and 13 from small-pox during the week ended July 20th.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 3.—Despatches at the Post Office Department corroborate the news that the trains from New Orleans are detained outside of Mobile, at the county line, fifteen miles distant, and the passengers and freight transferred, neither being permitted to pass through the city.

New Orleans, La., Aug. 4.—New cases, 20; deaths, 11. The weather is unfavorable for the sick.

CALIFORNIA.

A MILLIONAIRE'S CHARITY.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 3.—Michael Reese, news of whose death at Wallenstein, Germany, was received to-day, leaves an estate approximated at ten millions or more, and, with the exception of Senator Sharon, was the largest real estate owner in the city. Some years ago he made a will, leaving the bulk of his estate to benevolent institutions.

MURDER BY THE LABOR ORGANIZATION.

Tullies, a ranchman, on Grand Island, was murdered on Thursday. It is believed that he was killed by members of the labor organization. Tullies received threats by letters that if he did not discharge the Chinamen, whom he employed in large numbers, he would be killed.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

Gallipolis, O., August 3.—The tow boat Brilliant exploded her boilers opposite Gallipolis Island and sank. The crew numbered 18. J. H. Shumaker, captain, and John Green were killed; J. B. Shumaker, pilot, Wm. Stanley, C. B. Seedler and C.J. Seedler were dangerously wounded, and G. W. Shumaker, clerk, W. L. Jones, pilot, and J. Files were wounded. It is thought that J. S. Shumaker, E. B. and C. Seedler will die to night.

Death by the Kerosene Lamp.

New York, August 3.—Mrs. Helena Happelberg, aged 34, was fatally burned last night in Brooklyn by the explosion of kerosene while kindling a fire.

Cohoes, N.Y., Aug. 3.—Mrs. Rose Boudro was literally roasted alive this evening by the explosion of a lamp which she was using to kindle a fire.

Brutal Outrage by a Tramp.

Brattleboro', Vt., Aug. 3.—A 14-year-old adopted daughter of Hon. Edward Crosby was brutally outraged by a tramp about 11 this a.m., within a short distance of home. A handkerchief was drawn tightly over her mouth, suppressing her screams. A reward of $500 has been offered for the arrest of the villain.

Medicine Dance of the Sioux.

Bismarck, Wy., Aug. 4.—A letter from the British Major Walsh says the hostile Sioux are gathering in one big camp 15 miles west of Wood Mountain for a medicine dance. They have but little ammunition, and there are no appearances of Sitting Bull crossing to the United States.

THE ELEMENTS.

Great Hailstorm in Toronto.

GENERAL DESTRUCTION OF GLASS BY ICY BOULDERS.

All the Churches Badly Damaged.

A CHURCH STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Storms Elsewhere.

Toronto, August 4.—According to the oldest residents here the severest storm Toronto has ever experienced set in about 5 o'clock this afternoon and lasted till after 6. A terrific fall of hail ushered it in; numbers of stones descending as large as hens' eggs, measuring five inches in circumference and weighing over an ounce. It lasted for fifteen or twenty minutes, stones as large as marbles coming down in clouds and completely covering the ground. The damage is very great, scarcely a house exposed at all to the north, unless protected by shutters, escaping without some pieces of glass being smashed. Nearly every skylight in the city is entirely demolished, plate glographic stock is coming in for the heaviest share of the general destruction. Conservatories and gardens in all directions are ruined; the hail stones playing havoc with the plants and shrubs. The churches suffered severely. St. Michael's Cathedral, the Metropolitan Church, Reformed Episcopal Church, Grace Church, St. Stephen's St. Paul's, and nearly every other has all their northerly windows riddled, some of those destroyed having been illuminated, and very costly. Some idea can be formed of the manner in which glass came to grief from the fact that De La Salle Institute had 117 large panes destroyed, and Adam's foundry, situated at the corner of Queen and Church streets, had 108. Many buildings had every window shattered. St. Mary's Church was struck by lightning, the fluid entering by the belfry, passing through the front of the church, and throwing open and partially destroying the main entrance doors, which were locked and bolted. A man standing by was stunned, but speedily recovered. Beyond displacing a few bricks, smashing the illuminated circular windows and injuring the doors, no damage was done. The northerly slate of St. James' Cathedral clock was also struck and shattered to pieces. The rain was fearful, coming down in torrents for nearly three hours. Many cellars and basements were flooded to the depth of three feet, and large quantities of goods are destroyed. The earth caved in in many places, and sewers became stopped up, and in some instances burst, causing immense damage to the surrounding houses. On Stanley and other streets, where the buildings are of a poor description and below the surface of the ground, the inhabitants were nearly drowned out, and chairs, tables and beds might be seen afloat. As soon, however, as the rain ceased, the water speedily subsided, and now the road large pools here and there there is little to mark the visitation of the deluge. It is impossible to estimate the total amount of damage done, but it is safe to place it well up among the thousands. The storm as far as can be ascertained, was local in its nature extending easterly, perhaps, as far as Bowmanville, 40 miles; westerly as far as Malton, 13 miles, and a few miles north. It came from a northwesterly direction.

Plymouth, N.C. Aug. 1.—A tornado on Friday destroyed the Baptist Church, several houses, fences, trees, the negro quarters on the plantations, killed several cattle, and damaged the crops seriously.

Philadelphia, Pa. Aug. 4.—During a storm this afternoon, during Sunday-school services in the Methodist tent on Diamond street and Ridge avenue, the structure was struck by lightning. Mary Elery, aged 11, was instantly killed; Walter Ensrgt, 8, was fatally injured; Wm. Adams, aged 10, and Nellie Burns, aged 10, were seriously injured.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

A Tax Proposed on Chinamen.

Victoria, British Columbia, Aug. 3.—In the Provincial Legislature to-day a bill was introduced to impose a tax of $60 per annum on every Chinese person in the Province.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 4.—A Victoria dispatch states that by a proclamation in the Government Gazette the public lands from Burrard Inlet, via the Fraser River, to the Rocky Mountains, are reserved for railway purposes, to open the Cariboo quartz reefs.

ST. THOMAS.

Per Dominion Line.

SUICIDE OF A PARSON.

St. Thomas, Aug. 3.—Peter Hampton, a Southwold farmer, was found this morning in Turvill's mill-pond, with a weight of iron attached to his neck. He left his bed on Wednesday night, and the next day a man employed at Turvill's mill found a hat on the bridge over Kettle Creek, at Reiner's brewery. Yesterday it began to be suspected that Hampton had committed suicide, and this morning search was made for him in the vicinity of the bridge with the result stated. He was about forty five years of age and a heavy drinker.

BURGLARY.

Last night the Misses Rosevear's millinery and fancy goods store was entered through the rear window by removing a pane of glass, and $400 worth of silks, ladies' undercl

THE TRAVEL OF BERLIN IN PARLIAMENT.

Hartington's motion has gone as all saw it must go under the circumstances, Beaconsfield has the heart of the Empire with him, and in this instance right and popular sympathy, the interests of the nation and the interests of the Government go hand in hand. The debate both in the Chamber of Peers and the House of Commons has called forth some pretty fervid speaking, and given occasion to the indulgence in personalities with an infusion of asperity not very common in either branches of the British Legislature. The passage at arms between Salisbury and Derby, Beaconsfield and Gladstone, and between those of lesser note, occasioned a pretty ripple on the surface of Parliamentary debate rather unusual among these staid, disciplined and dignified magnates of the British Senate. It is but fair to suppose that the Liberal party are a little chagrined at the result of the whole matter, and the conclusion arrived at regarding the Eastern question. Their political rivals have gained a more decided advantage over them in the estimation of the electorate, than did Beaconsfield and Salisbury over Gothschakoff and his allies in the Congress. In fact, if the Government appeal to the country now, they will be sustained by such a majority as assuring the Conservatives in power for another Parliamentary term, perhaps two, provided they govern with ordinary judgment and fair ability. A majority of 143, nearly two-thirds, is a very decisive verdict in favor of the Government policy, and the longer the debate continued the greater would have been this majority. Some of the extreme Liberals openly proclaimed their determination to support the Government policy on this question, and as the debate progressed and England's interest position before the world became clearer, the national pride became excited and enthusiasm began to spread among the assembled legislators. It is not surprising that this feeling should show itself within the walls of Parliament. It is difficult to conceive how it could be otherwise, when the whole Kingdom was in a estate of ferment, and burning with a desire to evince their gratitude to, and their high appreciation of, the First Minister and his associates in the Berlin Congress, and the valuable services they had rendered to Great Britain and the world. With a feeling like this burning in the hearts of the citizens generally, it would have been strange indeed if the same subtle influence had not made itself felt in the Houses of Parliament. To have held aloof from the national enthusiasm after Beaconsfield's great speech in the House of Peers on submitting the Protocols of the Congress of Berlin was circulated through the press, must have been an impossibility. An abler defence —if defence we ought to call what only prowess like indebtedness of the country to the man who speaks—of the English plenipotentiaries and their course in the Congress, and of what they accomplished on behalf of Turkey, of Great Britain, of the world and universal peace—of peace, without the sacrifice of honor—has never been delivered in the British Senate. From the extracts called to this country we were prepared for something of a brilliant kind, but now, having read the speech in its entirety, we pronounce it quite worthy of the diplomatic achievements of which it is intended to be both an expositor and defence. It meets adverse criticism at every point, and proves its worthiness; it contrasts in a masterly style the deplorable condition of Turkey as determined by the Treaty of San Stefano, and that in which she stands under the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin; it points out how the latter restores to Turkey about thirty thousand square miles of territory and two and a half millions of inhabitants; it shows that these were not only the wealthiest, but the best of the people of the Turkish Empire; it shows that the former Bulgaria was extended down to the northern shores of the Ægean Sea, cutting off Constantinople from the greater part of the remaining European territories of the Sultan, leaving him no line of defence, whereas by the present arrangement Turkey secures the impregnable barrier of the Balkans, with a compact territory within this range. It deals in equally explicit terms with the projected reforms in Turkey, and points out the true position which England now occupies in the East—a position that gives her a commanding influence in Europe and the world, places peace almost within her power, and restores her to the rank among the nations which she had lost.

SOCIALISM IN THE GERMAN ELECTIONS.

The German elections just closed will furnish Bismarck with food for thought. The fiendish attempts lately made upon the life of the old Emperor William has, no doubt, aroused a feeling of bitter animosity against the Socialists and their principles, and prevented them from attaining to any great strength in the legislature, but still the vote shows how very numerous they must be. Though not successful at the polls in proportion to their numbers, the vote polled would represent a very large section of the community. So far as we have obtained reliable statistics, it would appear, that about 124,000 votes, evidently representing Socialists, have been polled, and how much this number may fall short of the absolute vote cast cannot yet be accurately determined. One despatch from Berlin says that six Socialists have been elected, while many have yet to be settled by the results of second ballots. It is plain that this element in German society has suffered, and justly suffered in public estimation, by the barbarous attempts on the life of the reigning monarch, but their principles are spreading and their numbers are increasing notwithstanding the ill odor in which they stand. It requires great judgment to deal with social distempers in the body politic, as any undue severity exercised in the application of repressive measures is likely to defeat its own object, and by creating a sympathy with the sufferers, increase the virulence of the evil which it was intended to abate. There is some reason to believe that this has been the case in Germany, and if the accounts that reach us are to be credited the administration have passed far beyond the line ought to limit government interference with individual right and liberty. If the Berlin Executive countenance such acts as have been lately laid at their door, then the increase of socialism is accounted for in the past, and secured in the future, unless the teachings of history go for nothing in this instance. If these dangerous principles should spread with the same rapidity for a few years more the result on the elections in urban constituencies would be more marked and important, as in the many cases in which a failure has been made through a small defect in the number of voters of this ticket, the progress made in converting the working classes to embrace socialistic views would turn the scale and throw the balance on the other side. Germany requires to be governed at the present time in accordance with the dictates of sound wisdom, liberal views, and impartial justice, and any departure from such a code, even on account of the wickedness of individuals, will only intensify the evil which severe measures propose to remedy. The German Reichstag, so far as can be gleaned from the returns made, will not be materially affected by the elections just closed. The united Liberals and Conservatives combined will still have a majority, and while these act in concert the other political sects can effect nothing. How the negotiations with the Vatican may eventuate is not known, nor will the result materially affect politics as at present constituted, whatever influence it may have on German politics in the future. Germany, like other nations, will learn the lesson in time that the wisest course in the government of a State is to ignore all sectarian differences and exclude all sectarian influences by placing all classes of subjects on the same common platform. With some churches this is difficult to accomplish, but by constant labor during the time that the colony was a penal settlement. The salary at Sydney is £7,000. That at Melbourne £10,000, but certain allowances bring the salary at the former very nearly up to the latter. The utmost that a Governor in those two colonies can save, if he maintain the style and hospitality expected, is $5,000, that is, out of his salary, but no man is expected to treach on his salary in any case, and besides Lord Dufferin, who has really been unsurpassed in the whole list, only a few ever have done so. The Indian Governorships are much more valuable than the colonial, and admit of being kept at a heritage. It is considered that a Viceroy there can, without any difficulty, put by £30,000 after 18 years' service Colonial Governors of first-class colonies receive £5,000 a year pension. This is the highest pension awarded to those in the service.

It is a matter of general remark among those who have interested themselves in the subject that the opening of certain American colleges to both sexes has not been attended by the results which were expected. In fact, the young ladies do not appear to be at all anxious to take advantage of an opportunity for which they are loudly clamored so loudly. This is particularly the case in New England, where the subject has excited most discussion. In the Boston University, for instance, which has been freely opened to women, there are only 91 female students, and all but six of them are from the immediate neighborhood of Boston. The Colby University contains but 10 young ladies, and 5 of them are from the village in which the institution is situated. In the Wesleyan University, which has been thrown open to their studies, and they are all related to the professors. In the University of Vermont there are only 11 female students, and neither in that college nor the Wesleyan do they have any young ladies entered this year's Freshman Class. This manifest indifference to an opportunity which at one time was so much sought after by women, it seems to be but another illustration of the old German adage that "what we can't get that is the thing we most covet, and what we have we don't care for."

During the minority of the Marquis of Bute hundreds of thousands of pounds were spent by the Trustees of his estate in executing magnificent docks at Cardiff. There were those who demurred at so great an expenditure of a minor's money in what they persisted in regarding as more or less of a speculative investment, and the sequel is likely to prove that they were right. Unless some unforeseen event occurs, Glamorganshire has seen its best days. The iron works are dead or dying, the sound of wheel and hammer is no longer heard at Cy-fartha, and there is not the faintest prospect of Mr. Crawshay's resuming his gigantic work. The port of Cardiff taps this whilom great iron and colliery county, and, of course, when mines and works are doing nothing, will be proportionately affected. Two years ago a line of packets was established by Lord Bute's agent to run between Cardiff and New York, but it did not pay, and was perforce abandoned. "Lothair" is in no danger of starving, but his income falls very far short of what it was reported to be ten years ago.

A young New Yorker who has been travelling in the East could not resist the temptation of journeying to Bagdad, which had long appealed to his imagination through the "Arabian Nights" and their roseate descriptions of the Saracenic capital. He has written home a letter expressing his bitter disappointment at the Bagdad of his fancy as compared with the Bagdad of fact. Instead of finding a beautiful and wonderful city, the centre of Arabic civilization and refinement, possessed of 300,000 picturesque inhabitants, he found a shrunken town of 60,000 ignorant and republic Mussulmans, with narrow, dirty, unpaved streets, full of ruts, and strewed with carcases which would make perpetual pestilence but for devouring dogs, the only scavengers.

THEY DON'T LIKE IT.

The Ottawa Herald (Independent Reform) thus remarks upon a recent incident in this city:—"At a recent gathering of the "Reform party at London, Mr. Warren Rock, Q.C., a life long Reformer, was invited to be present and occupy a seat on "the platform. He declined the honor in "a note, which indicated that he felt the "neglect and indifference with which old "Reformers had been treated of late. Of "course, Mr. Rock may have had a personal grievance, but it cannot be denied that there is a feeling abroad among those "who were Reformers before the Pacific "Scandal discovery, who toiled and suffered for their party in its days of darkness, "that they are not held in the same "esteem as those who leaped the fence "when Sir John Macdonald was tottering "to his fall." Very true. And nowhere is this feeling so general or warrantable than in this city, where such men as the Walkers and Glasses, who were ardent "Tories" so long as it suited their own convenience, are seen thrusting themselves forward as representative Reformers now that that party is temporarily triumphant. Lifelong adherents of the Reform party in this city are supercilliously set aside, the men who bore its burdens and fought its battles in the days when such work was done with no little personal sacrifice and discouragement, are coolly relegated to the background, or, at best, only permitted to sit at the feet of the great turncoats who now seek to monopolize attention, and bask in the sunshine of official favor. Is it not a stigma upon the Reformers of London that a man like Colonel Walker, a service in their ranks, the right hon. the Reformer of yesterday, should be able to boast, as he did at the late meeting in the Mechanics' Institute, that one of his first acts as has been lately laid at their door, then the increase of socialism is accounted for in the past, and secured in the future, unless the teachings of history go for nothing in this instance. If these dangerous principles should spread with the same rapidity for a few years more the result on the elections in urban constituencies would be more marked and important, as in the many cases in which a failure has been made through a small defect in the number of voters of this ticket, the progress made in converting the working classes to embrace socialistic views would turn the scale and throw the balance on the other side. The Journal des Débats lately published a to the effect that a claim is made by France on the British Government for a share of the sum awarded by the Arbitration Commission as an indemnity to the Canadians for infringement on their fishery rights by citizens of the United States. The demand is based on the pretension that by the treaties of Utrecht (1713) and Paris, (1763,) the rights of French subjects to fish on the coast of Newfoundland were recognized, and that one of the co possessors of such fishery rights cannot alienate them without an understanding with the power that shares them with it. Lords Derby and Salisbury have refused to admit the claim, but the French Government nevertheless persists in it.

The British inhabitants of San Francisco intend presenting Lord Beaconsfield with a gift that will at once show their appreciation of his talents and prove a peculiar remembrance of their present home. At first it was intend id to send the Premier a gold brick, suitably inscribed, mounted on a silver stand; but the present intention is to let the presentation take the form of a gold casket, containing specimens of gold quartz, mounted by the Beaconsfield coat of arms. At either end will be a British and Indian soldier grasping hands, and the base will be inscribed with the mottoes "For Defence not Defiance" and "Ready, Aye Ready."

The Earl of Beaconsfield on the Berlin Treaty.

The following is an extract from the speech of Lord Beaconsfield in the House of Lords on the 19th instant:—

"For the last two or three years we have listened to no appeal which involved anything like an acquisition of territory, because the territory which might have come to us would have been territory which France would see in our hands with suspicion and dislike. But I must make this observation to your Lordships. We have a substantial interest in the East; it is a commanding interest, and its behests must be obeyed. But the interest of France in Egypt and her interest in Syria are, as she acknowledges, sentimental and traditionary interests, and although I respect them, and although I wish to see in the Lebanon and in Egypt the influence of France fairly and justly maintained, and although her officers and ours in that part of the world are acting with the utmost confidence and trust, we must remember that no affair of sentiment and tradition, but that we have urgent and substantial and enormous interests which we must guard and keep.

"Therefore, when we find that the progress of Russia is a progress which, whatever may be the intentions of Russia, necessarily in that part of the world produces such a state of disorganization, and want of confidence in the Porte, it comes to this, that if we do not interfere in vindication of our own interests, that part of Asia must be either the victim of anarchy or the possession of Russia. My lords, I have ventured to review the chief points connected with the subject on which I wished to address you—namely, what was the policy pursued by us both at the Congress of Berlin and in the Convention of Constantinople. I am told, indeed, that we have incurred an awful responsibility by the Convention into which we have entered. My lords, a prudent minister is bound to anticipate even the possibility of responsibility, but a minister who is afraid to enter responsibility is in my mind not a prudent minister. We do not, my lords, wish to enter into any unnecessary responsibility. There is one responsibility from which we certainly shrink; we shrink from the responsibility of handing to our successors a diminished or weakened empire.

"Our opinion is that the course we have taken will arrest the great evils which are destroying Asia Minor and the equally rich countries beyond. We see in the present time that the Porte is losing the influence over its subjects; we see a certainty, in our opinion, of increasing anarchy, of the dissolution of all those ties which, though feeble, yet still exist, and which have kept their state of mind, and what sort of mind we see the inevitable result of such a state of thing, and we cannot blame Russia working herself of it. But yielding to Russia what she has obtained, we say to her, 'Thus far, and no further. Asia is large enough for both of us. There is no reason for those constant wars or fears of wars between Russia and England. Before the circumstances which led to the recent disastrous war, when none of those events which we have seen agitating the world had occurred, and when we were speaking in another place of the conduct of Russia in Central Asia, I ventured that conduct, which I thought was unjustly attacked, and I said then what I say now—there is room enough for Russia and England in Asia. But the room that we require we must secure.

"We have, therefore, entered into an alliance—a defensive alliance—with Turkey to guard her against any further attack from Russia. We believe that the result of the convention will be order and tranquility. And then it will be for Europe—for we ask for no privileges or commercial advantages—it will then be for Europe to assist England in availing ourselves of the great wealth which has been so long neglected and undeveloped in regions once so fertile and so favored. We are told, as I have said before, that we are undertaking great responsibilities. From these responsibilities we do not shrink. We think that, with prudence and discretion, we shall bring about a state of affairs as advantageous for Europe as for ourselves."

A Russian Skeptic on the Berlin Treaty.

M Aksakoff, a prominent Russian Slavophil, recently delivered an address before the Moscow Slavophil Society, of which the following is a report:

"Are we to credit the telegrams coming from Berlin in all the languages of the world? Are we to believe that Russia is congratulating herself on the success of her diplomacy? Are we to believe that Russia is in fact pleased at the result of the Congress? Is it possible to imagine that the votes passed by Congress will be received by the Russian government? Have we been beaten by the Turks? Have we obtained a worse frontier than the one suffered by France at Sedan? Are we the party routed, and has the victorious upper hand? Nothing of the kind is the case. All that has occurred is this: Lord Beaconsfield has returned to the Peninsular Hotel, and yesterday afternoon shipped to Bryn Mawr, where Dr. Henry C. Chapman, the doctor's physician, will dissect it, with a view to determining the direction and course of the arteries and veins for the purpose of comparison with the human system in this respect. Other comparisons will be made as the investigation proceeds, and, as little will be one of the first, if not the first, original, dissection of the kind made in this country, the results will be looked for with interest by the medical fraternity. The carcase was shipped about April 19 last. The gorilla was raging alive, and came into the possession of an Englishman, who intended to ship it to Europe for exhibition. While capturing it the natives broke one of its arms, and before the Englishman got possession of it the gorilla came near dying for want of proper food and attention. Then inflammation of the bowels seized it, and from this disease in a few days it died. Its head, mouth and hands are large, nose flat, and ears small. The arms are large, and the lower limbs rather small, but the hands and feet bear a striking resemblance to those parts of the human organization. The head, arms, legs, back and breast are covered with long hair. Mr. Nassau also sent to Dr. Morton 17 years ago, to weigh from 30 to 40 pounds, a gorilla of extraordinary size. It is complete, with the exception of a few minor bones."

A Good Duchess.

The London Court Circular tells this story:—"The Duchess of Edinburgh, while driving herself not long since in her pony carriage at Malta, unfortunately ran over a child, who was most severely injured, but, thanks to the promptitude and energy of the Duchess, its life will in all probability be saved. Her Imperial Highness at once lifted the child into her carriage and drove off to the doctor. The latter—a native of the island—being a stupid fellow, could not be made to understand the affair, though tried by the Duchess in English, French and Russian successively. 'Who ever heard of a doctor not knowing English or French?' at last cried the Duchess, with impatience. 'And who ever heard of a Duchess knowing Maltese?' retorted the medico in his own lingo (a barbarous mixture of Arabic, Coptic and Italian), by some means comprehending what she said. Her Imperial Highness was not, however, so easily defeated, and, dispatching messengers to both the Minotaur and Defence, she obtained eventually the assistance of surgeons from both of those war ships. The Duchess has not only sent her own medical man daily to the child, but has also been most assiduous in calling herself, and giving practical advice to her parents as to their treatment of the patient, not forgetting to afford them both constant and substantial pecuniary assistance."

An incident mentioned by Dean Ramsay exhibits the familiar bearing of the older class of the ministers in the pulpit. A young man, sitting opposite to the clergyman, in the front of the gallery, had been up late on the previous night, and had stuffed the pack of cards with which he had been occupied into his coat pocket. Forgetting the circumstance, he pulled out his handkerchief, and the cards flew about the church. The minister looked at him and remarked, "Eh, man, your psalm book has been ill lined."

Yankees are universally allowed to be unexcelled in asking questions; but with Irish ingenuity with Yankee inquisitiveness, and the sky is full. A girl of Irish descent, but reared in Vermont, was rebuked by the lady with whom she was living for her interminable propensity to ask questions. Closing the rebuke, the lady remarked, "You beat the Jews at asking questions." True to her nature, the girl rejoined, "Do the Jews ask many questions?"

Conversions to Christianity in India.

The Madras Athenæum and Daily News says: The report for the past year of the American Arcot Mission shows that Timmelly is not the only part of Southern India where considerable numbers of the lower castes are inclined to give up heathenism for Christianity. The Madras paper says:

"During the last year (we read) between 800 and 900 families, numbering about 6,000 souls, and residing in 60 different villages in North and South Arcot, have renounced their idols and formally accepted Christianity. The movement, although principally among the pariah caste, is by no means confined to them. Pastor John states that of the 18 villages he has received, 7 are composed of caste people, one including the nonegar and 11 families. Those have broken the sacred thread from their bodies, taken off the lingum from their arms, and eaten with me. In one village in South Arcot seven families, representing three different castes, together with eight families of pariahs, form a new congregation. Although there have been some accessions from caste people, the great majority, it is plain, have come from the out caste pariahs, who are as a class the most ignorant and degraded of all sections of the population. The higher ethical aspects of christianity accordingly which lay claims upon their consciences and their conduct they are not in a position to appreciate, but the beneficent side of it, as bestowing, not requiring, and as bestowing present temporal benefit, they can understand and yield themselves to. It is a common modern objection to Christianity that it sacrifices the present life to the future, and is more careful to secure salvation hereafter than to promote men's comfort and happiness here. This objection can hardly be advanced in the present case; the very opposite, in fact, is more likely to be brought forward. That these poverty stricken, despised, and outcasted people are seeking something better there can be no doubt. Their position in the social advantage; most prominent with them is most likely also true; but we also believe that their recognition of Christianity a spiritual power and a higher moral standard, to which they are prepared to submit. It would be very interesting and instructive to learn from the report what is their state of mind, and what sort of mental process they have gone through in coming to the resolution of joining the Christian society. Very little light, however, is thrown on the matter, although it is plain that the missionaries recognize the presence of mixed motives. They do not include any of the converts in their statistical table, because they 'wish to test their motives before calling them Christians.' It would probably be a more correct expression if they said that they wished to see satisfactory proof of their motives. Although many of those who have come to the report gave us to say, may desert us when the famine is over, yet a large number will doubtless be firm, and whatever may have been their original motive in joining us, we believe it was the Lord only who gave them the mind and the courage to renounce the faith of their fathers and accept a new religion. This is not the first time that God has made famine a means of subduing men's hearts, and causing them to forsake their dumb idols to serve Him. These people are at first, of course, very ignorant, and calculations must be sent to teach them. It is a great step gained when a renounce idolatry and declare their intention to become Christians, but unless they are carefully instructed we cannot hope for any sain factory results. These sentences show that while the missionaries recognize in the movement a good impulse coming from the source of all good, they are fully alive also to the ignorance and need of imperfections of the converts, and know that the main work has to be done by a regular course of Christian instruction and discipline. But we agree with them that it is a great step gained when idolatry is renounced for Christianity, although the latter may be at first little more than a very vague aspiration and desire for better things. Everything depends for the ultimate result, proved by a thorough and

A Gorilla to be Dissected.

The Philadelphia Ledger of July 31 says:—"About two weeks ago, Dr. Thomas Morton, one of the attending surgeons of the Pennsylvania Hospital, received from Rev. B. H. Nassau a specimen of the gorilla at Bangue Hill, Ogove River, West Africa, which he had made gentle, nearly two years old, preserved in a 20-gallon demijohn of rum. The carcase was in excellent condition, and after the arrival was duly photographed. Last week it was sent to the University Hospital, where Prof. Nancrede united it, and reinflated its collapsed veins and arteries. On Monday it was taken to the Pennsylvania Hospital Museum, and yesterday afternoon shipped to Bryn Mawr, where Dr. Henry C. Chapman, the doctor's physician, will dissect it, with a view to determining the direction and course of the arteries and veins for the purpose of comparison with the human system in this respect. Other comparisons will be made as the investigation proceeds, and, as little will be one of the first, if not the first, original, dissection of the kind made in this country, the results will be looked for with interest by the medical fraternity. The carcase was shipped about April 19 last. The gorilla was raging alive, and came into the possession of an Englishman, who intended to ship it to Europe for exhibition. While capturing it the natives broke one of its arms, and before the Englishman got possession of it the gorilla came near dying for want of proper food and attention. Then inflammation of the bowels seized it, and from this disease in a few days it died. Its head, mouth and hands are large, nose flat, and ears small. The arms are large, and the lower limbs rather small, but the hands and feet bear a striking resemblance to those parts of the human organization. The head, arms, legs, back and breast are covered with long hair. Mr. Nassau also sent to Dr. Morton 17 years ago, to weigh from 30 to 40 pounds, a gorilla of extraordinary size. It is complete, with the exception of a few minor bones."

Russian Prophecies on the Results of the Berlin Treaty.

Paris Letter to the Pall Mall Gazette.

An eminent Russian is said to have expressed his discontent with the work accomplished in the congress in the following terms:—"A hundred years after the last partition of Poland the Congress of Berlin has pronounced the partition of Turkey. That Empire, founded by valiant conquerors, but ill governed by their successors, has succumbed, not to the blows struck by Russia, but to those struck by England. It was Lord Beaconsfield who, by his perfidious counsels, encouraged the Turks to compel war with Russia—a war which has forever broken their power in Europe. By imposing its protectorate, England now reduces Turkey to a state of vassalage. It is England who will rule over Anatolia, as she already rules over the Khedive of Egypt. Without having fired a single cartridge she has seized on the lion's share, the isle of Cyprus; and, to the great admiration of the world, the powers which have vital interests in the Mediterranean permit England, by the fortification of Larnaca, to dictate the law at once in the East and the West. And what has been the conduct of England toward the Greek? Lord Beaconsfield deceived them as he deceived the Turks. He hindered them from conquering the Greek provinces of Turkey when the Russian armies were victorious. On his side, Lord Beaconsfield has obtained all he desired. He hindered the Rumenians from taking Constantinople and from forming a powerful and independent Bulgaria, he ceded to us Batoum, but only as a free port; he forced us to restore Bayazid, for which we paid our blood; he prevented us from obtaining a pecuniary indemnity from Turkey, to which we had a right. In fact, Lord Beaconsfield has damaged the interests of France, Italy, and Austria; by the position England has assumed in Cyprus, she has annihilated Turkey, and has hindered Greece from claiming the provinces inhabited by their compatriots." According to the same authority, the following will be the consequences of the congress:—"Bulgaria and the two Roumelias will declare their freedom; Bosnia and Herzegovina will become Austrian; Albania may possibly fall to Italy; the isles will sooner or later be united with Greece; Egypt, Tunis, and Tripoli will detach themselves from the Porte, and England, by promises of railways, &c., will establish herself in those countries. As for the Sultan, he may be able to hang on for another century at Stamboul, thanks to the jealousies of the various European powers who will maintain him there."

A Touch of Pity.

Forth they set at early noon;
Blogger in their hands,
Across the path and through the corn,
And by a grassy slope.

Then over a stretch of clear red sand,
And reached a slippery pier;
And there the brother raised his hand,
And said, "We'll cast lines here."

And, oh, the tremor of her heart
As tackle straight he set!
She deemed her brother had more art
Than any angler yet.

An'at each bite she felt a slow
Yet pride that made her space
In his for home, there came a flow
Of blood to either cheek.

As a rustic the silvery sides
Now twinkling o'er the pier—
She thrilled with joy, but soon the tides
Of joy were changed to fear.

As full she looked upon the thing
That writhed to cut her eyes,
The heart felt for its suffering,
She loved in heart and sighs!

And all her day was clouded dim
By a thoughts she could not speak;
The vision was low, she stood by him;
But pale was now her cheek.

Her first glimpse of the ill and pain
That haunts the world, that day
Disturbed her heart, and ne'er again
Will she so gladly play.

Ah, little maid, that mystery
Overshadowers all our work,
And unto many, as to thee,
Has turned the bright to dire.

JET:

OR,

HER FACE OR HER FORTUNE?

Had he earlier suspected that untoward correspondence, he could have armed himself against its results. Major Brett might possibly have known it—at least for another week; at least until he, Biron, could openly declare himself Jet Coyngham's suitor.

But it is evident that matters have gone too far for concealment.

Miladi about to start for Esterel—it may be on the road thither already—post à distraire! A woman like Lady Austen coming from the gayest city in Italy to one of the quietest invalid villages in France for amusement!

Why has he not better utilised his time? Why, last night on the terrace, did he not risk his all literally, he feels it to be his all—the one, last, supreme good-fortune likely to come near his ruined life!—and speak?

"Dost you think it would do papa a world of good to join the donkey party?" Jet's fresh young voice breaks in upon his reverie. "I have been trying to persuade him to go all the morning—first, for his own good, of course; next, as a chaperon for me."

"And I tell you, my dear, that no chaperonage is wanted," says Mr. Biron. "Conscience, you know, is a myth (we have it on the best authority of the nineteenth century), 'a casual product of education—a deposit, accidentally left, in the crucible of experiment.' . . . Now, are you under anybody's charge, Miss Coyngham? I ask the question of set purpose."

"Something exceedingly vague was said about chaperonage," is Jet's answer. "I don't know that it got much further than your promising to see me home before nightfall, did it?"

"Because, if you are free, and do not mind losing sight for a while of all these people, I can take you to Tamaris by a short cut. There is a track leading through the thickest part of the forest, that I know well."

He ought to know it very well. How often has the Reverend Laurence Biron wandered lingeringly along the track, in other company than Jet's!

"You will scramble admirably as you have never seen in your life," he proceeds, in answer to some slight hesitation that he reads upon the girl's face. "And, by going a couple of hundred yards out of our way, we can take in the ruined chapel of Ollioules. Every one who stays in Esterel pays a visit to Ollioules."

"I am not sure that 'everybody' is an inducement," says Jet. But as she speaks she yields. "The temptation would be—a truth that no one's foot had ever trodden before one's own."

The Milton Mystery.

Arrest of an English Physician Charged with the Outrage.

The Object Supposed to Have Been Murder, so that the Body Might be Sold.

New York, August 1.—On the evening of July 4th a handsome young lady, Miss Ida Estlemo, of Milton, who had been spending the summer at her brother-in-law's, Dr. Hoshrook's residence at Milton-on-Hudson, was seized by two masked men, chloroformed and her clothing removed. She was found on the porch of the hall with her feet against the front door. It was reported as probable that the outrage had been committed by a young man in the village whose sweethearts were jealous of Miss Hesser, and that it was to disfigure her. Dr. Hoshrook employed a New York detective to clear up the mystery. Now the mystery is excited over the arrest of an English physician named Dr. Miller, charged with being interpreted according to the principle of summary vengeance are in a few instances even made. He is tall, effeminate in build, with a quiet voice, and hands as fine as a woman's. His age is 40 years. Last Friday, when Miss Hesser was sitting at a window, she saw a man jump out of a wagon, and as he walked toward the sidewalk recognized Dr. Miller, who carried a bundle. "Oh! dear, there goes one of the men who assaulted me. I know him by his build, and I'll look at his feet. They are exactly like those of the tallest of the two men I saw strapped me on that fearful night. The detectives' theory is that all Miss Doner's clothing was removed so there would be nothing to identify the girl by. She was to have been rolled in sheets that the man could take her away in a carpet. The chloroformed sponge would have been removed, and the body been sold for medical purposes. A body like hers, he said, would have been worth a small fortune. They were already carrying her out when they heard persons on the porch. The neighbors heard a scuffling in the hall, and tried the following. Then the scuffling ceased, and they tried to open the door, but could not for the reason that Miss Hesser was there against it. The family at home soon came coming, and left her in that position as they pounded on the door. Detective thinks the other man or men were roughs hired by Dr. Miller to help him, some say or not.

A graduate of Edinburgh University, and has practiced medicine in England. He came to this country ten years ago, and settled in New Hamburgh; he went to Milton, then to Milton-on-the-Hudson nine months ago. For the last few weeks he has not practiced at all, and has been living at a farm house on the Saddam Road. He is a widower with a bountiful little girl six years old. He says his arrest is a conspiracy to ruin him.

New York, August 2.—Milton on-Hudson is still greatly excited over the arrest of Dr. Julius Miller, of that place, charged with committing an outrage on Miss Hesser at Dr. Hoshrook's house, on the night of July 4th. In Court Miss Hesser and her sister only gave testimony, but nothing new was developed. Miss Hesser said that Miller was one of the men who assaulted her. At the conclusion of the witness's evidence, to the surprise of all, the prosecution rested. The prisoner's counsel moved for his discharge on the ground that no evidence had been produced showing, as was charged in the warrant, that an attempt had been made to outrage Miss Hesser, etc. An adjournment followed, in which the fact was developed that the prosecution had no more witnesses, and the noted outrage still remains a mystery which will probably never be cleared up.

Mr. Miller has the sympathy of people generally. He had four or five reputable witnesses in waiting to prove a complete alibi, but was not put on his defence. On the night of the 4th of July he was at home sick with malarial fever.

SOUTH OXFORD.

Large and Influential Meeting in Ingersoll.

Mr. Gibson Enunciates the National Policy.

On Friday night last, according to announcement, Mr. Gibson addressed a large and influential meeting of the electors in the Town Hall, Ingersoll, on the National Policy and the trade questions of the day. The meeting was attended by about three hundred of the electors, besides a couple of score of the leading ladies of the town. Notwithstanding the Grits, and by pasting the word around from mouth to mouth during the day, warning the faithful not to attend, the hall was comfortably filled with a highly respectable and intelligent audience. Mr. Gibson handled his subject in a masterly manner, the effect of which could only be to carry conviction with it. He quoted liberally from the Blue Books on the trade and navigation of the Dominion, and in order to show the inconsistency of the "organized hypocrisy" he quoted Charlton's speech of 1876, against his more recent utterances. A still more prolific source of inconsistencies was exemplified by the speeches reported in the Globe, delivered by supporters of the Ministry, as against editorials appearing in the same issues of that journal. A large number of leading Conservatives from all parts of the riding were in attendance, and also a number from Woodstock and the North Riding.

Mr. Norris, who was present, and who is a candidate for the suffrages of the people in the interests of the "Canada First" party, was invited to a seat on the platform, and addressed the meeting for about twenty minutes before the close.

It may be a matter worthy of note that Mr. Gibson has been reviled, maligned and ridiculed by Grits in this section; but wherever he has been met by them, in clashing such men as Mr. Charlton, of North Norfolk; Mr. Tom. Oliver, of Woodstock; Mr. Rose, of Strathroy, and other lesser lights of local fame, they have found Mr. Gibson so thoroughly posted on the issue in a statistical point of view that they have not seen fit to cross swords with him a second time. Although ample notice was given of the meeting on Friday night, and discussion invited, not a word amongst them was prepared to meet him. I understand that every effort was put forth to meet the challenge, but finding they could not procure a respectable, the gang resort left open to them in their wanderings, course was to try and induce the rank and file just to attend; and, notwithstanding they partially succeeded, still it was one of the best political meetings ever held in Ingersoll, and all left the hall thoroughly impressed with the talent and ability of Mr. Gibson and the feasibility of the National Policy.

The Pioneers of Cariboo.

Men who Went Out Beggars and Returned Millionaires to Die Paupers

Some Recollections of their Early Eccentricities in the Rough Mining days.

Victoria B. C., July 12.—The incidents connected with the early days of this colony, when Cariboo was in its palmiest days, and men who went up as beggars returned as millionaires, have never been told in print. Few of the heroes of those times survive. "Mountain Ferry," who used to gee it for six months at a time with nothing but his rifle, a pound or two of gunpowder and a couple of pounds of lead, a small bag of salt and a few matches, was murdered, and most of the others have died or have disappeared. "Dancing Bill," who is said to be a brother of Milton S. Latham, of San Francisco, and who, accompanied by "Black Jack" and a man named Love, fought their way through Oregon about the time that British Columbia became a colony, still lives. Not long ago he was seen in the upper country tramping along with bear and fiddle. At present, I believe, he is keeping a dance-house on the wagon road to Cariboo. He has never been known by any other name since an eventful night twenty years ago when, foot sore and weary, he limped up to a roadside shanty and begged for something to eat, as he said he had not broken his fast for three days. The proprietor took compassion on him, and the cook, an old negro, put on a steak to broil. While it was cooking he reached down an old violin and began to play a jig. Bill listened attentively for awhile, but was unable to restrain himself, and, although he had not really eaten food for three days, he scood up in the middle of the room and began to dance. The cook was delighted, and played faster. Bill, forgetting hunger and everything else, kept time with the music, and danced for an hour and a quarter, when, perfectly exhausted, he threw himself on the bench and declared that it was the best dance he had ever had. The steak, meanwhile, had burned to a cinder, but Dancing Bill," supperless he was, and ever since he has been known as "Dancing Bill."

A noted character was Blandford. During the winter months, when the ground was covered with snow and mining impossible, he would collect on the nearest villages or towns and amused themselves as they could. One night, on Antler Creek, he was very busy place in early days, and the saloons did a thriving business. A quarrel arose in the principal bar-room one evening, and invited every one in the place to drink. While the bar-keeper was busy he heard a tremendous crash, and, looking round, saw that the big mirror behind the bar was gone and the bar was smashed to atoms. The stranger, who had done the damage, was asked to pay. "You'll find the money there," he said, pointing to the fragments of glass. He had thrown a bullet from 20 paces at the mirror. It was in this same saloon that Blandford made himself famous. He got a bullet through his leg, simulating drunkenness and when drunk always spoke of committing suicide. One night he rushed into the saloon, and, pulling out a pistol, fired at himself. The ball glanced off the thick bone of the leg, and a group sat around the stove telling stories. Blandford joined this party, and, going to the door, fired a charge of powder-fin, and shaking out a few grains of powder he flicked them into the bare head of one of the unsuspecting lookers-on. Each succeeding time he threw in a few more grains, making a terrible report. He was then deemed necessary to coax him away, as several of the party got up and invited him to the bar. He was treated, and slipped into his pocket and sent and took a drink. He then began to complain of feeling very melancholy, for returning to his old place by the stove he began to talk of suicide. The company watched him, but seemed to nobody spoke. At last Blandford, with a terrible oath, yelled, "Boys, we might as well live to-day as to-morrow," and, producing a revolver from the powder-tin and cast it into the flames. The men who had watched that followed say they will never forget it till their dying day. One man made a leap through the back window in a miner like a has seldom been excelled by a Derry Lane harlequin. Four were trodden down and badly hurt in the rush for the door. The proprietor, a Spaniard, fell flat on his back behind the bar, and was picked up half an hour afterwards in an unconscious state. As everyone subsequently discovered, Blandford had been playing the drunken man, and had thrown an empty tin into the stove.

At times the crowd would do the most absurd things by way of passing the time. At a saloon in Barkerville, on one occasion a fly was seen to flag. A miner jumped up and tore his neighbor's coat off his back, and, with one swoop, secured the fly in the coat. Some accommodating friend, and so the thing went round, every one present having his coat destroyed. Shirts were next in order of destruction, and before long the floor was covered with men who were left in the cold with nothing on but their pantaloons. At this stage of the proceedings a stranger that an altogether had been made to outrage Miss Hesser, etc. An adjournment followed, in which the fact was developed that the prosecution had no more witnesses, and the noted outrage still remains a mystery which will probably never be cleared up.

Mr. Miller has the sympathy of people generally. He had four or five reputable witnesses in waiting to prove a complete alibi, but was not put on his defence. On the night of the 4th of July he was at home sick with malarial fever.

THE BUFFALO RACES.

Fastest Time on Record (2.13½) Made on Saturday.

Full Account of the Great Event.

On Saturday last the fourth day's trotting of the annual meeting of the Buffalo Trotting Association was held at the Driving Park. The attendance was very large, drawn chiefly to see the remarkable exhibition of speed by Rarus. The sun's rays were hot, but a strong south-west breeze had the effect of diminishing their power, and the atmosphere was cool and pleasant. The programme of trotting included the 2.26 and 2.20 classes in addition to the exhibition of speed by the sire of Conklin's Abdallah. Great Eastern, Hannis and Lulu were drawn, leaving Barnes to start alone in the special purse.

BARNES'S RACE.

Barnes was greeted with great applause when he appeared on the track. John Splan drove the bay around once to warm him up. As he neared the stand he gave the signal to the judges, and as he went past the wire the work of the first heat began. He was accompanied by a running mate, who did not fairly catch up to him until third pole was reached. Rarus trotted the heat without a single skip, and, although it was slow for him, yet it was simply a warmer up for the last heat. The time was as follows:—35½, 1.09½, 1.43, 2.17.

Splan drove onto the track for the second heat, and, after warming up the gelding, gave a nod to the judges for the word, which was given. The runner kept well up, and Rarus was doing his best, until near the quarter pole, which he made in 33½ seconds, when his brake badly, and Splan was unable to pull him down for quite a distance. Mr. Splan then made no effort for speed, and let Rarus go around at his own gait. The time, of course, was not fast.

For the third time was the word "go" given, but Rarus broke badly at the turn, and Splan had to turn around, and back they came to the stand.

The judges decided to give Rarus the benefit of the last heat, and before the word was given horse and driver were bound to beat the fastest record ever made on the track. The word was made with just one apparent impropriible skip at the third pole. The quarter was reached in 33½, and the audience arose in their seats. When the half was made in 1.05½ the interest increased. Splan was seen to start up the gelding at 1.38½ the excitement was intense. Rarus took a little whip just before the judges' stand was reached. As he went under the wire 2.13½ was announced as his time, and the audience broke out into cheers of the scene defied description. Everybody seemed to be aware of the importance to be attached to the event, and acted accordingly. Splan then descended to the track and soon he and his now famous horse were surrounded by a crowd, and followed by a large crowd of admiring horsemen. It was generally thought that Rarus would be led from the track and carried to his stable by the crowd, and indeed some suggested that the horse be led to the stable. But Splan did not think that the bay would know what to make of such treatment, and he might use it both to good advantages.

But when it came to the pecuniary part of the proceedings Splan was in his native city. It was claimed by some that Rarus had had three trials, and that he had failed to come up to the first quarter in the purse, "if but one horse enters and starts, $1,000 will be paid if the three first heats are made, and falling within the time, and Mr. Splan did not claim the $1,000. He did not claim the $1,000, but was in favor of allowing him, the $500 provided for in the second clause." $500 additional to be given to the first horse in "Hannis's" Charlton in this riding, and the chances are he will make thirty minutes for his opponent.

The previous evening a storm came on, and the wind lifted the building and deposited it right where it was intended to move it, and the lucky owner was spared any expense in the matter. Verily, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good.

..Women should understand that no beauty has any charms but the inward one of the mind, and that a gracefulness in the manners is much more engaging than that of their persons; that meekness and modesty are the true and lasting ornaments. These only are charms that render wives amiable, and give them the best title to our respect.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

INGERSOLL.

Ingersoll, August 3.—Mr. H. A. Dart entertained about forty of his friends in his new warerooms on Thomas street, on Thursday evening. His factory bought out Mr. Leith, and intends going into the music business on an extensive scale. Mr. Dart is a successful business man and a man of sterling qualities, and his enterprise in this new venture will undoubtedly receive the support it deserves in both town and country. We are pleased to see that he has secured the services of the former proprietor, Mr. Leith.

The Glasgow News of the 19th July gives great praise to Messrs. Thos. Brown & Co., of Ingersoll, for one of their combined reapers and mowers, which was tested in that neighborhood. It gave every satisfaction to those who were present at its trial, and we feel sure no doubt this enterprising firm will secure a large trade, however in Scotland, when they find the excellent quality of their manufactures and the terms to.

The cheese business in this neighborhood is at a perfect stand still, the unusual cool weather of late influencing factory men to hold their cheese for a time in the hopes of higher prices.

Ingersoll can now boast of two first-class barber shops kept by white artists. Ever since the fracas of July 1st the colored barbers have been at a discount. The consequence is the "whites" are doing a rushing business.

The question of the hour is, When are we going to have our civic holiday? Some are in favor of having it on the 26th August, for an excursion to Rochester, and others are equally anxious to have it on the 12th for an excursion to Port Dover by rail. At any rate, a public meeting should be called at once for the Mayor to decide what we are to do.

OXFORD.

Tillsonburg, Aug. 3.—Last Monday Mr. Fred. Tillsonburg, of a blue horse, which measures six feet from top to tip of wing, and from hill to toes four feet and three inches. It is a very fine specimen.

Mr. Louis Westover, of Malahide, had three fingers of his left hand taken off on Wednesday by getting them caught in a threshing machine.

Mr. William Story, of Courtland, had his hand badly crushed in a threshing machine, on Monday that Dr. Mosier had to amputate two of the fingers.

A boy about twelve years of age, named Tommy Silvery, struck his mother on the back with a knife a few days ago, inflicting a very ugly wound.

John A. McDonald, charged with indecently assaulting Mrs. Woodard here recently, was tried at Woodstock on Friday, and found guilty. Sentence was reserved on a technical objection.

ESSEX.

Windsor, August 3.—Several cases of wife beating having occurred recently the magistrates have determined to make an example of the first brute that came under their notice. A man named Thompson, convicted of the cowardly crime, has been sent to gaol for 40 days, and Constable Campbell has been sent to gaol for 30 days for the same crime. It is a pity those men could not be treated to a coat of tar and feathers, and then drummed out of the place.

Messrs. Thompson Brothers Taylor and Moffatt, the contractors for the Windsor tunnel, met with a bad accident on Monday evening. Mr. Joseph Hall, Chief Engineer of the Windsor, Essex & Lake Shore Railway, was severely injured.

Mr. Thomas Hunt, Inspector of Mailes, was viewing in his field last week, he cut a rattle snake into four pieces. The rattle had four rattles.

KENT.

Chatham, Aug. 3.—Mr. Thomas McCormack and family, and Mr. James Colbert, of this town, left for Manitoba on Saturday.

A little "affair" took place on the street the other day between two pedestrians which was the cause of a considerable crowd gathering around, and, looking round, saw that the big plate glass mirror at the back of the bar was smashed to atoms. The stranger, who had done the damage, was asked to pay. "You'll find the money there," he said, pointing to the fragments of glass. He had thrown a bullet from 20 paces at the mirror. It was in this same saloon that Blandford made himself famous. He got a bullet through his leg, simulating drunkenness and when drunk always spoke of committing suicide. One night he rushed into the saloon, and, pulling out a pistol, fired at himself. The ball glanced off the thick bone of the leg, and a group sat around the stove telling stories. Blandford joined this party, and, going to the door, fired a charge of powder-fin, and shaking out a few grains of powder he flicked them into the bare head of one of the unsuspecting lookers-on. Each succeeding time he threw in a few more grains, making a terrible report. He was then deemed necessary to coax him away, as several of the party got up and invited him to the bar. BASE BALL NOTES.

The International and League Championship Records.

Pond, of the defunct Alleghenies, is covering first for the Oswegos.

Manager Rae, of the Stars, has resigned, and Dorgan has been selected to fill the vacancy.

At Cleveland on Friday the Forest Citys defeated the Indianapolis nine by 9 to 6 in eleven innings.

The Rochesters were badly defeated by the Utica nine at Rochester on Friday, the figures being 19 to 3.

Maple Leaf "probs."—Tuesday at Rockforth; Wednesday at Woodstock and Thursday at London.

Sullivan, catcher of the Lowells, is in hard luck. In the Utica game on Wednesday he sprained his knee in batting and was obliged to retire.

The Rochesters are the only nine in the championship race who have won four games from another club, they having defeated the Springfields that number of times.

Pike, just before leaving Cincinnati for Providence, was presented with an elegant solitaire diamond badge, in the form of a base ball field, with the base lines and crossed bats engraved upon it.

The Rochester Democrat of to-day says it is a significant fact that the Buffalos played away from home yesterday and were beaten. It was unfortunate that they could not take their umpire with them.

Pike played second for the Providence nine in the first game against the Cincinnatis. He pounded Will White's delivery terribly, securing a base at each time at the bats, and once hitting the ball for a triple bagger.

Mr. Joseph Young, of Syracuse, has resigned as umpire for the Stars, on account of feeling engendered and manifested on the part of certain members and directors of the Stars over the result of this second Star-Worcester game.

Hallinan, of the Chicago, has secured his release from the League circuit, and signed with the Indianapolis nine. He will likely play in the field for the latter team, and judging from McKelvy's weak display, at last of late, the new man will probably supplant him.

Manager Butler, of the Lowells, writes Manager Bancroft, of the New Bedfords, that the Lowells have been excommunicated in town, that gave the gossips something to talk about. Butler says he is sorry that they were taking to some better paying business, and that he will not interfere with them. The Lowells have been compelled to disband, and the players are before constituted thus: one an insult, two a disgrace, and the remainder a disgrace in manner until his friends withdrew him.

LAMBTON.

Petrolia, Aug. 3.—The export of oil from this town for the week ended July 29 was 8,416 barrels, or 1,202 barrels per day. Number of cars loaded, 84.

It is reported that a paper is shortly to be started here to run in the interest of the Liberal Conservative party.

Messrs. Wood and Mercer, Durham and Sarnia are the representatives from this town to attend the Provincial exhibition at Toronto. Each of which newspapers in Toronto on Tuesday, 10th of August, and the Grand Lodge on the three following days.

NORFOLK.

Waterford, August 3rd.—Mr. George Sims, of this village, while getting off the train at Tyson ville, on Friday night, and falling over some ties on the platform, broke the leg at the ankle and received a severe injury.

It is rumored here that an elopement has been made from the north end of this village. The particulars have not transpired.

AUCTION SALE OF FURNITURE.—On Monday, Manville & Brown will sell at eleven o'clock an assortment of household effects in excellent condition. No. 396, Rideout street, near Court House.

DISCONTINUED.—The general ticket and passenger agents of the Lake Shore, Great Western and Canada Southern Railroads have issued a joint circular which puts a stop to the sale of passage tickets over their respective lines by outside agents.

INCREASE IN TRAFFIC.—Orders were received on Thursday last by the officials of the Great Western Railway at Windsor to send West immediately one thousand empty cars for freight that was waiting shipment there.

STEALING A SWITCH.—At the Interim Sessions on Saturday morning Judge Elliot presiding, Joseph Hurley was charged with stealing a hair switch from Margaret Bird, of this city. He elected to be tried summarily, and the trial was fixed for to-morrow.

POLITICAL.—Mr. D. Macmillan, M. P. for East Middlesex, intends addressing his constituents at the London East Town Hall this (Monday) evening on the political questions of the day. A number of gentlemen from the city will deliver addresses on the occasion.

NEW BANK FOR EXETER.—We understand that a branch of the Exchange Bank will shortly be opened at Exeter, under the management of Mr. W. A. Hastings, formerly in charge of the Bedford branch of the same institution. Mr. R. Torrom, who has been connected with this bank, will likely be his successor.

COUNTY MAGISTRATE'S COURT. — Before Squire Peters, on Saturday afternoon, Isaac Killingsworth charged by John Beverly, of North Dorchester, with unlawfully allowing the spread of Canada thistles upon his farm, and thereby endangering adjoining properties. The hearing of the case was set down for Wednesday next.

SOAP FACTORY BURNED.—At an early hour on Saturday morning the soap factory of Mr. R. Tomlinson, on Beach street, Strathroy, was destroyed by fire. The fire was so far under way when discovered that nothing could be saved. The loss on building and stock is estimated at $1,200. The building was insured for $225. Incendiarism was the probable cause of the fire.

SUCCESS OF A LONDONER.—Mr. Thomas Taylor, son of Mr. James Taylor, tax collector of this city, has a book-bindery in Winnipeg, referring to which the Standard of that city says:—Winnipeg is able at last to boast of a thoroughly appointed book-bindery—the only complete one in the North-West—our neighbor, Mr. Thomas Taylor, having just received a quantity of first class machinery from Toronto."

NEW TIME TABLE.—The new time table of the Great Western came into operation this morning. The changes affecting travellers from London are few. No. 1 Express (Steamboat), which formerly passed here at 2:45 a.m., has been taken off, and No. 8, the Detroit Express, which heretofore has not arrived before 5 a.m., via the Port Stanley line, has been cancelled. An accommodation train will in future be made up here and leave at 5 a.m. as formerly. Another accommodation, to be known as No. 10, will leave Windsor at 3:30 p.m., calling at all stations between Windsor and London, and reaching here at 7 p.m., making the place of No. 26 freight, to which a passenger car will be attached. No "express" train will be taken off the Main Line and placed on the Air Line, as some of our contemporaries stated.

PROTESTANT ORPHANS' HOME.—The Trustees, in acknowledging the donations for July, have much pleasure in returning thanks to the Orange Young Britons and True Blues of this city, the proceeds of their annual service collection:—Mr. Joseph Marshall, sen., Petersville, $5; Mr. Wallace, Westminster, $1.50; Mrs. Cowan Hamilton, $1; Mrs. McCool, sen., 50c.; FREE PRESS Office, 50c; Mr. John Wright, a valuable chart of the world and a piece of sheeting; Mrs. Lawrason, Mrs. Charles Moore, assortment of clothing; Mrs. Green, remnants; Mr. Bradford, buns (twice); Mr. Pyke, pies; Mr. Leacon, beef; Methodist Church, hams, bread and biscuits, from the breakfast given on Church and Simcoe; Mrs. Waterman, one jar of currant jam and one of pickled plums; Mrs. Ross, lettuce and onions; Mrs. Carlisle, rhubarb, carrots and onions; Mrs. Green, vegetables; Mrs. Hyman, lettuce and radishes.

POLICE COURT PECULIARITIES.—At the Police Court, Saturday, a number of colored youths named Pryer, Diggins and Stevenson were up charged with being disorderly on the L. & P. S. R. cars one day last week. Inspector Jay, of the G. W. R. Company, stated that he feared it would be impossible to convict any of the accused, from the fact that the informant had restracted his statement. The men were accordingly allowed to go on paying $1.80 costs. John McGinnes, the lunatic who assaulted Mr. E. M George, on the 12th of July, at Mount Brydges, was committed for trial. He is unsound in mind, and will, in all probability, be sent to the Asylum. James Collins, alias Samuel A. Roberts, who was caught by Detective Phair the other day while in the act of selling stolen goods, and who is also charged with the larceny of a coat from J. Jennings, was remanded until Monday for examination.

POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

Monthly Meeting on Saturday Afternoon —The Harmony Casualty, Etc.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners was held in the Mayor's Room on Saturday afternoon. Present—His Honor the County Judge and Worships the Mayor and Police Magistrate.

In pursuance of instructions, Chief of Police Williams made his report of the proceedings which led to the death of Thos. Carey by the hand of Sergeant Crawford. This report entirely exonerates Sergeant Crawford from all blame, and shows that he acted strictly in self-defence. The Commissioners desire to record their entire concurrence in this view of the case, and also to express their commendation of the conduct of Sergeant Crawford and Detectives Phair and Heenan, who all exhibited good devotion to their duty under the trying circumstances which led to this unfortunate casualty.

A communication from Mr. R. S. Murray was received and read. No action taken.

A petition of the livery stable keepers was read, and Mr. George T. Hiscox was heard in relation thereto. The matter was deferred for consideration until next meeting, it being suggested that Mr. Hiscox should in the meantime call a meeting of the petitioners, with the view of fixing a tariff.

Three farmers in Pembrokeshire, Wales, were drowned by a squall for the Royal Show on July 6, when he broke loose and made a terrible attack upon them. The ball fund greed Morgan Jones, then clashing upon Mr. Phillips broke his leg in two places and fractured several of his ribs and finally tossed the third farmer, Mr. Thomas, three times in the air. Jones died in half an hour, and Phillips will not recover.

An old lady who was wont to sit near the door of a certain church, recently overheard a conversation, to the vicar, and asked leave to take a more prominent sitting. "Why?" he asked. "The fact of the matter is," she replied, "your curates preach such rubbish that by the time it gets down to me it's worth nothing at all."

The "Old" Letter—A cockney inquired at the post office the other day for a letter for "Emery Hogden. He was told there was none. "Look 'ere," he replied a little angrily, "you examined a hold letter for my name. It don't commence with a 'aitch,' it begins with a 'en. Look the 'ole that's got the 'ole's."

Excursions on the G. W. R.

Programme of the Week—Wonderful Development of This Traffic.

The excursion traffic over the Great Western Ry. and its branches has increased to a wonderful degree during the past two years. Indeed, it is not exceeded by any line of railway on the continent having a similar number of miles and the same proportion of population to draw from. In cities such as New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, etc., much larger numbers are of course transported from one point to another on pleasure trips, but in a country sparsely populated as compared with the places named, the traffic has been developed beyond the anticipations of Manager Broughton and his able staff of assistants. Some idea may be obtained of its extent from a perusal of the arrangements entered into for the week:—

Monday—Paris civic holiday—excursions to Hamilton and Toronto.

Tuesday—St. Paul's Church Sunday School excursion from London to Port Stanley; St. Dennis civic holiday—excursion over the Air Line to Buffalo.

Wednesday—Masonic and Oddfellows' excursion from Hamilton and stations on B., N. & Pt. Burwell line to Hamilton and the Beach; Simcoe civic holiday—excursion from Simcoe and stations west on Air Line to Port Dover; Woodstock civic holiday—excursion from Woodstock to Niagara Falls; Sabbath School excursion from Dunnville and Intermediate Stations to Grimsby camp; excursion from Port Dalhousie to Niagara Falls via Welland Railway.

Thursday—Regular weekly excursion from London to Port Stanley; Sabbath School excursion from Strathroy to Port Stanley; Rev. R. B. Kender's excursion from Woodstock, Brantford and stations east to Hamilton and thence by boat to Queenston Heights; also a monolith excursion on Burlington Bay under the same auspices; excursion from Listowel and Brussels to Hamilton and the Beach.

Friday—Church excursion from Amherstburg and stations east on the Canada Southern to St. Thomas, and thence by L. & P. S. R. to Port Stanley.

Saturday—Excursions from stations on main line and branches to Cleveland via Port Stanley.

London East Notes

Saturday afternoon.

The Board of Works met in the Town Hall last night to examine the tenders for work on the streets in the southern part of the village. The following tenders were received:—

For box drain on Adelaide street, between the G.W.R. track and the river—Box, Johnston, $935; F. Hall, $1,000; G. S. Woodgreen, $319.50; George Carruthers, $515; James Robin, $315.60; John Hockins, $296; Mr. Greyson, $266. Mr. Johnston's tender being the lowest, it was accepted.

For the grading, &c., of Pearess street:—B. Johnson, $75; J. Robin, $55.49; W. Taylor, $88; J. Hockins, $33.50; G. S. Courtier, $21.80. Mr. Courtier's tender was accepted.

For putting in box drains and grading Pegler street:—Ben. Johnson, $95; G. S. Courtier, $74.80; Geo. Carruthers, $73.50; John Robins, $54.30; W. Taylor, $46. Mr. Taylor's tender was accepted.

George Oxley has been summoned to answer to a charge of using abusive and threatening language to Mr. Muller, who keeps a store on Egerton street.

Last night Constable Nichols arrested two boys, named O'Mara and Cole, charged with stealing an axe from Pat. Henry. They were bailed to appear on Monday.

The County Cricket Match.

Perth vs. Middlesex on Saturday Afternoon.

This match, as announced, came off on Saturday on the Tecumseh Park, in presence of a good number of spectators, and resulted in favor of Middlesex. Some time was lost in commencing the game, exception having been taken to the umpire of the Perth team. It was at last decided to allow him to officiate, but under protest. Middlesex won the toss, and sent Flynn and Brough in to the bowling of White and Adams, who were decidedly on the spot, hence runs came very slowly. Flynn was soon bowled by Adams, and Hammond then joined Brough, the former showing signs of some of his good old cricket which we hope to see further brought out on some future occasion. Brough was run out, and was followed by Hyman, who was decidedly in his best cricket form, as the result showed. His 25 and not out was as good an exhibition of batting as we have had the pleasure of seeing for some time. He gave but one chance, and that to Adams, who most kindly dropped it. Middlesex retired for 64, and Perth then went to the bat. Crossbiwaite and Adams were sent in, to the bowling of Gillean and Hyman, the latter appearing in a new light as bowler throughout; he took five wickets, five runs and one maiden off him. If he didn't astonish himself, he astonished a number of others, who were happy to see it. Perth, from first to last, exhibited no form in the batting line, if we except Forrester, of the Old Country, who only a "colt," he gave proof that, with practice, he can hold his reputation with most players. We hope to hear of him again, this being the first really good match he has taken part in. Middlesex managed with good bowling to keep the Perth score down, their last wicket falling for 47 runs. The match being virtually over, Middlesex proved the victor by 17 runs. It was then decided to play until the time agreed to draw stumps, and Middlesex went to bat for second innings. Hyman again came to the front with 44, his score being composed principally of fine drives and very few singles. In fact, it seemed as it he could hit what he liked, and the field, although placed very deep, made no difference to his runs getting away. Middlesex's second innings closed for 70, when stumps were drawn to enable the players to take the train for home. We can assure the members of the L. C. C. that we were highly entertained during cricket as played by Hyman, so soon will they find the public attend the matches and prove themselves the encouragement they can. The following is the score:—

How the "Lambs" Misbehave Themselves.—A Complaint Requiring Explanation.

From the Milverton Sentinel, Aug 1.

"Now, tell me, just how the corner began, if you please," said the reporter.

"Well, it wasn't intended for a corner at all. I went in and bought some wheat at 98 cents, and they all came at me and began forcing the market down. They got it down to 90c, and called me for $110,000, and wanted the margin. They said they would 'mash me,' but the thing went the other way. By and by the market commenced rising, and it offered to settle with the boys at $1.04, $1.08, $1.10, $1.12, and $1.14. Some settlements were made at $1.14, $1.16, and yesterday they settled at $1.18, $1.20, and to-day at $1.22, $1.25, $1.24 and $1.30. Under the rule, the wheat that was defaulted was bought in at $1.30."

"But how did you get into these chaps so?"

"Well, they kept selling wheat all this time when there was

NO WHEAT TO SELL.

It was their own lookout."

"How was it that the figure of to-day, $1.30, was reached?"

"I had to do it for self-protection, or, rather, they ran it up themselves. If they had come and said, 'Settled,' I would have done it. The men who have defaulted are the splendid orchestra of 120 pieces from the Theatre of La Scala at Milan. They drew immense throngs, and yet, although the municipal authorities of Milan gave them 60,000 francs to help defray their expenses, they have made a lamentable failure of it. The orchestra was under the command of the celebrated maestro, Franco Faccio. There was another powerful orchestra of one hundred and twenty pieces from Turin under Carlo Pedrotti. What could Gilmore expect to do against them without a single first-class cornetist in his whole troupe? If Arbuckle or Levy had gone along there might have been some chance, although I would have been slim enough then. The xylophone, that was entered in London, didn't take worth a cent on the continent; in fact, it was played out there fifteen years ago."

"What are you going to do now, go on to Germany?"

"Not that I heard of. In fact, it was lucky for them that they didn't. They would have faced worse there, if possible, than in Paris. I would like very much to do at five francs admission in a country where the entrance fee to the finest music halls in the world is ten cents!"

THE SHORT SELLERS.

In concluding the interview, Mr. McGeoch hoped the press would "go for" the short sellers, who were keeping down prices, and were the means of losing to the farmers nokey millions of dollars. He was firm in the belief that the coming crop is poor in quantity and quality, and that prices must be kept up.

The Misfortunes of Gilmore's Band.

It is reported that Gilmore's Band, who went to Europe for the purpose of giving concerts at the Paris Exhibition, have met with disaster, and have been obliged to disband. A reporter of the Sun had an interview with an American lately returned from Paris, who spoke as follows of the matter:—

"When the band first appeared in Paris the people laughed at it on account of its extraordinary uniform. The men wore red and blue coats and trousers, but they had no sidearms and no shakes, and the Parisians could not understand a military band without these. They laughed at the small caps that the Americans wore, and said that they looked more like servants or lackeys than anything else. The French found fault because the band allowed a lady to sing at their concerts. They said it was not etiquette for a lady to appear on the platform with a brass band. They ridiculed and made fun of the troupe in all sorts of ways, and although the American Consul-General and others got up a picnic in the Bois de Boulogne, it was of no use. The general that Gilmore had along with him was good enough for Boston or Albany, or for a popular concert in New York, but it was nothing at the Exhibition. Why, there were military bands giving free concerts every park in Paris that took the Americans out and out. There was the splendid orchestra of 120 pieces from the Theatre of La Scala at Milan. They drew immense throngs, and yet, although the municipal authorities of Milan gave them 60,000 francs to help defray their expenses, they have made a lamentable failure of it. The orchestra was under the command of the celebrated maestro, Franco Faccio. There was another powerful orchestra of one hundred and twenty pieces from Turin under Carlo Pedrotti. "Can you assist me?" asked a tramp, poking his head into an hotel parlor, the other day. His application was granted. The porter assisted him down the stairs three steps at a time.

Col. Walker's Insult to the Workingmen.

A Proper Reply from a Worker in the Trenches.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

SIR,—Allow me to inform Mr. Walker that he lies when he says that the men employed on the water-works are "tramps." They are men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow at the hardest kind of work for the smallest kind of pay. Yet we are honorable men and not tramps. We have a number of votes too, which will be cast not for Walker.

They got it down to 90c, and called me for $110,000, and wanted the margin. They said they would 'mash me,' but the thing went the other way. By and by the market commenced rising, and it offered to settle with the boys at $1.04, $1.08, $1.10, $1.12, and $1.14. Some settlements were made at $1.14, $1.16, and yesterday they settled at $1.18, $1.20, and to-day at $1.22, $1.25, $1.24 and $1.30. Under the rule, the wheat that was defaulted was bought in at $1.30."

"But how did you get into these chaps so?"

"Well, they kept selling wheat all this time when there was

NO WHEAT TO SELL.

It was their own lookout."

"How was it that the figure of to-day, $1.30, was reached?"

"I had to do it for self-protection, or, rather, they ran it up themselves. If they had come and said, 'Settled,' I would have done it. The men who have defaulted are the splendid orchestra of 120 pieces from the Theatre of La Scala at Milan. They drew immense throngs, and yet, although the municipal authorities of Milan gave them 60,000 francs to help defray their expenses, they have made a lamentable failure of it. The orchestra was under the command of the celebrated maestro, Franco Faccio. There was another powerful orchestra of one hundred and twenty pieces from Turin under Carlo Pedrotti. What could Gilmore expect to do against them without a single first-class cornetist in his whole troupe? If Arbuckle or Levy had gone along there might have been some chance, although I would have been slim enough then. The xylophone, that was entered in London, didn't take worth a cent on the continent; in fact, it was played out there fifteen years ago."

"What are you going to do now, go on to Germany?"

"Not that I heard of. In fact, it was lucky for them that they didn't. They would have faced worse there, if possible, than in Paris. I would like very much to do at five francs admission in a country where the entrance fee to the finest music halls in the world is ten cents!"
