"H. L."

He slipped his note into an envelope, and dipped his pen into the ink, but before writing the address he stopped suddenly, and left the note incomplete.

"She might see it," he muttered, thoughtfully, "and that might show her the nature of my cards. The only wise man is the one who can do his work without the most dangerous of all auxiliaries—a pen and paper. Poor Francis! he looks a sharper."

Mr. Lowther looked down upon the sleeper with the most benign expression. He had no dislike whatever to the young Cornishman; he had only—his own plans.

"Those fellows who come suddenly into a large fortune are so ill fitted themselves before they have done spending it," he muttered, thoughtfully. "Service," he said, as he went out, "you won't forget your master's engagement. He'd better drive up to my place in the boat phaeton."

Mr. Lowther's "places" was the same lodging which he had taken for himself when he first returned to England—a lodging was an advantage, but he was not a village adventurer, and in all his dealings with Francis Tredethlyn he had not sponged on that gentleman's purse for so much as a five-pound note. He had his place, and they were not the plans of a man who lives from hand to mouth. He won a good deal of his friend's money; but he never cheated Francis out of a sixpence. His sole advantage was that which every man possesses—superior skill and experience as opposed to inexperience. In the meantime, Francis, while Harcourt Lowther lived as best he might on his winnings and a small allowance made by his mother.

The Lowthers were great people in their way, and received admission to some of the best houses in London. He was very well received in that circle in which Sabina Tredethlyn had her best place, and received somehow or other to be present for an hour or so at almost all of the parties in which she appeared. He could break away from the haunts of Bohemian life to enter polite life, and vice versâ. He went to Bohemia in the same evening, was as much at ease in a barrister's chambers as in a tantonime. Harcourt Lowther did this, however, and did it very often; and Maude Tredethlyn, enjoying all the privileges of a mamma, found herself sometimes standing in the outskirts of an ecstatic crowd of admirers in Tyburnia, talking with Harcourt Lowther almost as familiarly as they had talked in the old summer evenings by the quiet river.

Sometimes, looking back upon such a meeting, Maude felt inclined to be angry with Mr. Lowther for having taken something of the old tone with her, and for having left her to the lowered accents of his voice, while she sighed in his eyes, she unconsciously sunderance into which he was betrayed in those public meetings, when she remembered how nobly he had stood by her in her home. Never yet had he presumed upon his intimacy with the husband in order to intrude himself on the presence of the wife. What harm or danger, then, if, in crowded assemblages, he commenced the manner of small difficulties in order to make his way to her side? What could it matter if he lingered just a little longer than others, conferring all sorts of excuses for delay? It is rather pleasant for a frivolous young married woman, serene in the consciousness of her own integrity, to know that a man's heart is breaking for her in a gentlemanly way. A word too much, a tone, a look, and Maude would have started alarm, and fled from her old admirer as from the venomous fangs of some deadly reptile; but Harcourt Lowther was too clever to speak that word. He had his own plans, and he was not the man to risk all his own way; neither by work nor look had he ever yet offended Maude Tredethlyn; but now, when he tried to cut a path for himself through the crowd about her, he would look differently at the people who impeded his progress, by their glory given, and would make way for him, and it was considered a settled thing that he should be found somewhere near her. He had not offended her; he had only—compromised her.

Francis awoke before the hour at which he had been told to call him. The valet's place was almost a sinecure, for the Cornishman still retained, of his old nature, the simple habits of a miner, and was a man who can wait upon himself. He got up at four o'clock, and had nearly completed his toilet when the servant brought the soda and brandy prescribed by Harcourt Lowther.

"And if you please, sir, you were to be so good as to remember an appointment with Mr. Lowther at half-past five," said the valet, while his master drank the refreshing beverage.

"Very good," muttered Mr. Tredethlyn, with something like a groan; "you may go and order the phaeton for five o'clock."

Mrs. Tredethlyn exclaimed—

"No, sir."

The man departed, and Francis finished dressing. He had ten minutes to spare after putting on his outer coat, and he sat down by the fire of the sitting-room which Jay ready cut on his writing table. He took up the Times, but only stared vacantly at the advertisement sheet. His head still ached, in spite of a shower-bath and a vigorous application of hard hair-brushes, but his intellect was a good deal clearer than it had been before he passed.

Suddenly, out of the advertisement sheet, vivid as the figure of Banquo at Macbeth's unmentionable supper party, there arose before him a face—a wan, faded face—in a white muslin cap.

"Great Heaven!" he cried; "I didn't know her!"

The ghost that he had seen upon the previous night was the ghost of the woman he had so long been looking for—his cousin Grace.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"FOR, MY CHUMS, MINE NO MORE!"

Francis Tredethlyn drove his friends down to Richmond at a rattling pace; but he scarcely spoke half a dozen words throughout the journey, and Harcourt Lowther, keeping the watchful eye of the moderator upon his pupil, saw that something was amiss.

Now although the Cornishman's guide and monitor had his plans, very definite plans, as clearly drawn out as the great Duke's arrangements for Waterloo, which wondrous victory was not quite the lucky accident our neighbors imagine it to have been; yet he was far too wise a diplomatist not to ignore the sublime opportunities which chance sometimes throws in the way of a schemer, shattering the complicated machinery so dexterously and patiently put together, and opening a new and easy way to success over the ruins of the old road.

Mr. Lowther was quite prepared to make good use of any accident which seemed likely to help him. He was like a chess player who takes his place before the board with a perfect plan of action mapped out in his mind, and who may see his entire scheme overthrown, his most brilliant arrangements mulcted by the first move of his adversary; but who will win the game nevertheless, after his enemy's fashion, if not after his own, being no enthusiastic advocate of pet theories, but only a man of the world resolutely bent on success.

EDUCATIONAL.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ANNUAL REPORT.

Winding Up the Year's Business

Mr. B. Cronyn Elected Chairman for the Third Time.

Appointment of Standing Committees.

MINOR EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

The Board of Education of 1877 met last in the Council Chamber, to consider the night report of the High School Committee, the annual reports of the Chairman and Inspector, and for other business. With the exception of Mr. Manville, all the members were in attendance.

After the minutes of the last meeting had been confirmed,

ANNUAL REPORTS.

The Chairman submitted a report of the Special Committee on the High School, and also a financial statement of the receipts and expenditures incident to the erection of the new school.

1. After settling the advertisements or sale the property was cleared, as was also and some by private sale, for $31,196.75.

2. Under the conditions of the sale one-fifth of the purchase money was paid in cash and the balance secured by mortgage payable in four equal annual instalments with interest on the unpaid principal at 7 p. cent. annum, which mortgages were duly assigned to the purchaser 9 p. c. per annum.

3. Specifies the amounts received and paid out. The receipts from the lots were $21,383.05; the payments to contractors were $8,070; to Messrs. Macmillan, Dobbs & McNab, for conducting sale and all other expenses, $810.32; received as interest on account of mortgages, $62.57, making the total payments $8,450.89, leaving a balance at the credit of the Board of $2,774.30, which has been deposited at 8 per cent.

On motion, the statements were ordered to be spread on the minutes, and an abstract appended to the Chairman's report for the benefit of the citizens.

The Chairman, Mr. Cronyn, then presented the following annual report of the Board :—

To the Citizens of London.

GENTLEMEN,—We beg to submit the yearly report of the Board of Education for the year 1877.

The accompanying reports that statement and furnish the fullest information of our year's proceedings.

By reference to the detailed financial statement it will be noticed that the balance carried forward to next year is considerably in excess of the amount with which the Board commenced the present year. This we consider the result of careful supervision and strict economy, the only increase in expenditure during the year having been what was absolutely necessary in the interest of the schools.

In the report for last year several recommendations were made in regard to improvements and changes in the management of our schools, and, as far as possible, your board has endeavored to carry out those suggestions.

The system of musical instruction received with so much favor by parents and schools, has been extended to the Ward schools, by this arrangement, placing within the reach of all our scholars the benefits of this useful and pleasing branch of education.

The great need for further school accommodation, more particularly in Wards 4 and 6, received our careful consideration, early in the year, and although the erection of further schools was strongly advocated by some, yet the Board decided, in consequence of the financial depression which during the year has been so general through out the Dominion, that it would not be advisable to incur what would inevitably have been a large and immediate expenditure.

An examination of the school returns for many years past, shows that the erection of a separate building for our High School has been considered, in the interests of all our schools, most desirable. From time to time action has been delayed on account of the large expenditure which such an undertaking would entail.

Your Board are, however, gratified in being enabled to state that having obtained the consent of the Provincial Legislature to the sale of the site retained for a High School upon the Grammar School block, they have been able to provide nearly the required amount for the erection of a separate High School building upon two and a half acres of the "Park property" granted by the City Council with the concurrence of the Dominion Government to the Board for this purpose. This arrangement is in every way most satisfactory, and before the end of 1878 we hope to see the High School in full operation in the new building and taking its position as one of the Collegiate Institutes of our Province.

The removal of the High School pupils from the Central School will place at our disposal a large amount of room, and thereby render unnecessary any increase in school accommodation for some time to come.

In the beginning of the year we had hopes that it would have been our pleasant duty to record the establishment of a Teachers Normal School, an institution the benefits connected with which would have been of great advantage to the large number of teachers in this western portion of the Province who are anxious to acquire a Normal School training.

But the Legislature, by substituting a system of model schools, has endeavored to meet the demands for a Normal School, our Central School has been selected as one of the Schools. Our Board and teachers in every way have endeavored to assist in carrying out the arrangements recommended therewith in order that the new scheme might have a fair trial. But one year's working elapsed it is impossible to form an opinion as to how far these schools will provide for the advantages hitherto derived from the thorough training acquired in a properly conducted Normal School.

In compliance with the requirements of the school law, a complete census of the children in our city, between the ages of five and seventeen, has been taken, and the result shows that there are between these ages the large number of 4,666 children, whom we would expect to find in attendance upon our schools; but of this number it is surprising to find that there are 904 children "not attending school four months in the year," and the Board strongly recommends that some action should be taken by which all the children capable of attending the schools be compelled to take advantage of the benefits of early education.

The question of teachers' salaries, which the report of last year recommended as a subject that should, at an early date, receive careful consideration, was undertaken, and a thorough revision of our salary list has been made, all increases having been based upon the principle that "faithful service, ability and qualification should receive fair and proper remuneration." Your Board feel that it would be false economy to employ other than the best talent for our schools, and to underpay our teachers would have the effect of driving them into other professions; and desiring to maintain the high position which our schools have attained, they would strongly advocate the employment of the best talent which can be secured.

In conclusion, the Board have much pleasure in stating that during the year the conduct and management of our High and Public Schools has been most satisfactory, and our duties as your representatives have been, both at the Board and in the schools, pleasant and agreeable. We feel that this has been, in a great extent, owing to the confidence existing between the Board, our Inspector and teachers.

On motion, the report was adopted, and 2,500 copies ordered to be printed.

The Inspector, Mr. Boyle, submitted his annual report, containing a large amount of statistical matter, and the following introductory remarks :—

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education of the City of London.—

GENTLEMEN,—I have the honor to submit my annual report of the attendance, &c., of the Public Schools of the city for the year 1877, with the usual tables of statistics.

These tables I have compiled with a view to show the progress of the schools and the attendance at each. From these tables it will be seen that the whole number of pupils that have been registered during the year, of all ages and of both sexes, is 5,950. This is somewhat less than we find on the rolls for 1876, but as the average daily has been higher than in the year preceding, it would seem to indicate less of change among the inhabitants, and a greater degree of regularity among the pupils attending our schools.

Nearly all the scholars that have been entered upon the school registers are included within the usual limits; that is, from five to sixteen. From table F it will be found that the number between the ages of five and sixteen, both inclusive, was 3,839, and from 17 to 21, inclusive, the number was only 31.

Some idea of the regularity of attendance may be formed from the following summary, given in full in table G, viz.:—

Number of pupils attending less than 20 days during the year..... 365
Number from 21 to 50 days, inclusive.. 485
" " 51 " 100 " " 863
" " 101 " 150 " " 752
" " 151 " 200 " " 1275
" over 200 " " 120

The daily average for the six months, from the opening of the schools, on the 8th of January, to the 30th of June, was 2,042, and for the last half of the year, from the 1st day of July to the 21st day of December, the average daily was 2,014; while for the whole year it was 2,029. Table C will show the daily average of each school, boys and girls separately, for each month during the year in which the schools were open.

Table D will furnish the same kind of information as respects the numbers on the roll, month by month, during the year. The average of the monthly rolls, including all the schools, gives 2,652, and as the daily average for the year has been shown to be 2,029, the attendance over the whole Public Schools will be a little over 77 per cent. It would be unjust to the teachers to let it be implied that this percentage properly represents the attendance in the more advanced classes. In the Intermediate and Central the attendance ranges from 85 to 95 per cent, and this selection is occasioned by the irregularity in the lower divisions of the Primary School.

At the entrance examination for the High School, held in the month of July, 92 candidates were examined and 78 passed. In the December examination the number of candidates was 71, and 57 of these passed, and in both cases the Central Committee confirmed the action of the local examiners.

Two examinations from written questions were held with a view to promotion at nearly the same times as the entrance examinations for admission into the High School. In the July examination 89 pupils were examined, and 55[5] passed. In the December examination we have heard that the Reform party think Col. Skinner has been by far their ranks, and are trying by all means, fool or fair, to get rid of him. But Col. Skinner evidently means to stand, and will play his cards so well that he will be the Intermediate School. In King street, Horton street, and Waterloo street Schools the teachers have kindly consented to take the pupils who could not obtain their promotion fairly won, through the fourth and in somewhat similar way through the fifth division course, so that, at the end of the year, the number of pupils that have been registered during the year, of all ages and of both sexes, is 3

...of the DAILY ... is larger than ... other Ontario jour... in the West, and more than that of the combined issues o... its local contemporaries—any statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEASONS.—The Amateurs are getting up a concert for the poor. The Dramatic Club will follow suit.

PERSONAL.—His Lordship Bishop Hellmuth left yesterday for Toronto on important business connected with the Diocese. He will be absent several days.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Mr. Samuel Tebby, for the last twenty years Postmaster of Fingal, died very suddenly on the night of the 4th inst. He was attending to his office duties as usual all day. He was aged about fifty, and was well known and much respected. —Cow.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—At the annual meeting of the Westminster Fire Insurance Company, the following gentlemen were elected directors for the year:—Messrs. John Little, John Nixon, James Craig, J. Weldon and Thos. McDougall. Messrs. S. F. Jarvis and Fred. Anderson were chosen auditors.

RISE IN STRATFORD.—D. I. K. Rice delivered his first address at Stratford on Monday night, to an immense audience, in the Presbyterian Church. At the close nearly two hundred persons signed the pledge. The greatest interest is being awakened, and everyone expects good results to follow in the community in the meetings to be held.

DEATH OF A FINE STALLION.—Mr. D. McNaught, V. S., of Seaforth, has lost his fine imported stallion Prince of Wales. Mr. McNaught was out driving the horse when it became frightened at something, breaking away from him driver and ran for home. While turning in an alleyway leading to the stable the horse struck against a post and fractured his leg. He was immediately shot.

THE CLUB OFFICERS.—The following are the officers of the London Club House, which was opened here on Monday night last:—President, Mr. H. Waterman; Vice-Presidents, Mr. C. F. Goodhue and Col. Loye; Secretary, Mr. B. C. Marshall; Treasurer, Mr. Henry Taylor; Committee of Management, Messrs. D. Macfie, John Taylor, Thos. Hutchinson, G. S. Birrell and McRae.

CLEANING THE PAVEMENT.—A number of citizens were before the Police Magistrate yesterday on the charge of refusing to clean the sidewalks in front of their premises of snow. The Chief of Police, having been informed that the defendants had cleaned the paths since the summonses were issued, asked permission to withdraw the complaint, and the P. M. so ordered. This should prove a warning to citizens, and it is hoped they will heed it.

FUNERAL.—There was a large attendance of citizens of Hamilton and neighborhood at the funeral of the late Rev. Canon Hebden, of the Church of the Ascension, Hamilton. The pall bearers were:—Revs. Canon Read, Canon Houston, Canon Worrell, Canon Roberts, Canon Lucas, of London, Very Rev. Dean Bleaher, Rural Dean Bell, and Rural Dean Osler. The streets along the line of procession were lined with citizens, and the scene was altogether of a solemn and impressive character not easily forgotten.

SCHOOL MATTERS IN LONDON SOUTH.—Monday afternoon, Inspector Dearness held an inquiry into the disputed election of a Trustee for London South section. It appears that at the election "Squire Owrey was declared returned by the Deputy of the returning officer. This declaration is disputed by Mr. Rhoder, on behalf of Mr. Alex. Pouley, claiming that the hour had not expired when the nominations of the last-named was made. The evidence, which was taken under oath, was rather contradictory, and Mr. Dearness will submit the whole matter to the Minister of Education.

EASTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Exeter Branch of the U. C. Bible Society was held in the Methodist Church on Wednesday evening, when Jas. Little, of Princeton, agent of the Society, was present and delivered an interesting address on the work of the Society and Foreign and U. C. Bible Societies. The Rev. Mr. Thatcher was elected President for the year. The other officers remain as formerly. The report of the Secretary showed that the receipts for last year to be $113.71, two-thirds of which was donated to the British and Foreign Bible, the remaining one-third to the U. C. Society.

BRACKMAN'S ENTERTAINMENT.—The Royal Star Dramatic Company open for a short season at the Holman Opera House this evening, on which occasion they purpose presenting Daly's sensational play of "Under the Gaslight." The piece is full of hairbreadth escapes, interesting situations, and notwithstanding its sensational character points a moral which many, we dare say, in this city, would profit by accepting and applying to themselves. The company is too well known to Londoners to require further commendation. Visit the Opera House and be persuaded that that we speak is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

YOUNG THIEVES NABBED. — Detective Flavin, having entertained a strong suspicion that the petty thefts reported throughout the city were committed by the Hurley and Gooderham boys, paid a visit this morning to their boarding house on York street, and after ascertaining that Joseph Hurley and Martin Gooderham had brought a quantity of four to the house a few nights ago, and also two fancy glass globes, went in search of the Arabs. On approaching the Tecumseh House the detective observed the couple amongst a number of others, and took them into custody. The elder Arabs, Hurley and Gooderham, are the youths who urge their brothers to steal. But so soon as they saw the officer approaching them they ran off. The boys were remanded for examination.

DEATH OF A FORMER LONDONER. — The Hamilton papers record the death of Mr. R. M. Ballantine, merchant, which took place on Sunday last, at his residence on Park street. Mr. Ballantine was born in the County of Armagh, North of Ireland, and was one of a band of teachers taken out to the West Indies in 1840 by the Venerable Archdeacon True (uncle of A. T. Wood, Esq., M. P.) who was at that time representing the Misc Charity in London. Mr. Ballantine remained sometime in the West Indies, and from thence he proceeded to New Orleans. After remaining there he turned his steps to Canada, and settled at London, from whence he moved to Hamilton and has been a resident of that city for between sixteen and eighteen years. He had many friends, who will regret to hear of his death.

THE THREATENED MURDER OF A CANADIAN MISSIONARY.—There is little doubt that the Canadian missionary spoken of in the telegram from San Francisco on Friday last is the Rev. G. Mackay, who has been for some years stationed in Formosa as missionary from the Canadian Presbyterian Church. Mr. Mackay was the first missionary sent from Canada to that island, and has labored with the greatest assiduity and success. It would be unwarrantable to conclude, as the telegram in question seemed to intimate, that Mr. Mackay has either been deprived of life or is likely to be. At the same time it is but right to mention that Mr. Mackay is just the man, from temperament and strong conviction, to refuse to withdraw from his position, if by so doing he might appear either lacking in courage or devotion. Mr. Mackay is a native of Scarra, in the county of Oxford, where his relatives reside.

Call again some other day
When the trees do but anew—
Ladies, don't present spring
Seems fraught change still brine."

It is our subdued, unprejudiced, unwarped opinion, privately proclaimed through a public journal, that the Lingards will repay after to-night's entertainment that they had not longer lingered in London than one night.

The tee-wee says that one of the absentees mentioned by us was present at the late Grit conclave. Probably it will take the hardihood in a day or two to say that "God's absent in the flesh they were with them in the spirit."

"A young man out west attempted to kiss a pretty widow, when, in the scuffle, she thrust a finger into one of his eyes, destroying the sight." Evidently that young man had not heard of the cynical injunction to "Beware of the widder."

Discerning child (who has heard some remarks by papa):—"Are you sure new nurse" Nurse—"Yes, dear." Child—"Well, then, I am one of those boys who can only be managed by kindness; so you had better get some sponge cake and oranges at once."

"The London Free Press says Mr. Holt has been appointed Paymaster of the Great Western Railway. The employés of that road will therefore be paid by the book hereafter, and will doubtless swear by him as well."—Detroit Free Press. That's a Hoyle joke, verily!

Chief Fewings of St. Thomas has found the second instalment of his salary was stolen from Mr. G. T. Hixon's rig on New Year's day. He regards the robe to Melbourne, and obtained possession of it on Saturday morning. The thief has not yet been arrested, but in all probability he soon will be.

"What are you after, my dear?" said a grandmother to a little boy, who was sliding along a room and casting furtive glances at a gentleman who was paying a visit. "I am trying, grandma, to steal papa's hat out of the room without letting the gentleman know it; he wants him to think he's out."

"Do you know," remarked a rather fast youth the other day to a stuttering friend, to whom he was slightly indebted, "do you know that I intend to marry and settle down?" "I-I-don't know anything about it," was the reply, "b-but I think you had b-b-better stay single and set-settle down."

Even a newspaper man finds it hard sometimes to believe everything he sees in print. At any rate, that's the way it affected us the other day, when a nine-year-old boy appealed to our generosity by laying before us a card setting forth, in unshrinking double-pica, that he was a poor widow and the mother of five children. There's no fancy in this—pure, unblushed truth.

"Grease the griddle, Birdie Darling,' a beautiful new song and chorus, by the author of "Bang my Scalp Locks o'er my Forehead," will have a greater run than any piece since "Darling, I am Growing Old" The melody being simple and plaintive, and very suitable for barber-shop guitars, we append the first stanza:—

"Grease the griddle, Birdie darling—
Grease it o'er with manliest zeal,
Pour the buckwheat batter on it
From the bowl so brown and hard,
And in order that the pancakes
Be not scorched and brown and sere,
Grease the griddle in confusion,
Grease the griddle, Birdie dear."

The Mail, referring to the dispute between this journal and the Hamilton Times says "the FREE PRESS appears to have slightly the advantage of its contemporary." The Times on Friday said "Mr. Bible has not been appointed Paymaster," on Monday night it remarked "even at present writing Mr. B. has not been officially made Paymaster, though there is no doubt he is to be." Now, for the information of our slugged-like contemporary, we beg to state that Mr. Bible received official notification of his appointment on the 23rd of January. Own up, that you had to go from home to get the news, and the profession will respect you the more.

"THE BEST WATER MAIN IN THE WORLD."—This is the name adopted by the proprietors of the Wyrot pipe, manufactured by Messrs. Ayrsit, Smith & Co., Bay City, Mich., and which is brought into under the notice of the Commissioners and ratepayers in another column. It is contended that this pipe has many special advantages over those made of iron, and that something like $50,000 can be saved by its adoption for our new water-works. The following are stated to be the special merits of this pipe:—

1st.—It is the Purest Conductor.
2nd.—It is the Cheapest.
3rd.—It is the Most Durable.
4th.—It is the Most Easily Laid.
5th.—Water Freezes in Wyrot Pipe Burst.
6th.—It Can be More Easily and Rapidly Laid.
7th.—It is Less Liable to Get Out of Order.
8th.—It Can be More Easily Tapped.
9th.—Cannot Not be Laid so Cheap.
10th.—Being Elastic, it is Less Liable to Burst From Hammer Action of Pump or Hydrant.

It is in use in many cities in the United States, and from the testimonials published from parties in Rochester, Bay City, Union City (Ind.), and other places, the pipes appear to have given every satisfaction.

THE WATER COMMISSIONERS.

Organization of the Board—Mr. Carling Elected Chairman and Mr. W. R. Meredith Solicitor — Application—An Offer from the Coombs, etc.

The first regular meeting of the Board of Water Commissioners was held in the Mayor's office Monday afternoon. Present —Mayor Lewis and Messrs. Hyman and Carling.

Hon. John Carling was elected Chairman; W. R. Meredith, Esq., Q. C., Solicitor, and Mr. A. S. Abbott, Secretary pro tem.

Applications were received from the following persons for the appointment of Secretary to the Commissioners, viz.:—J. D. McLean, W. H. Hesgraves, C. D. Shaw and Thomas N. Greene. Laid over.

An application for the appointment of Engineer was received from Mr. H. A. Childs, was read and referred for consideration; and also one for the appointment of Inspector of Pipes from Mr. Levi Yale, of St. Catharines. It was also laid over for consideration.

A communication was laid before the Board from Charles, John and Henry Coombs, who offered to sell the Coombs' Mill property, being parts of lots 40 and 41, in the township of Westminster, to the city for the sum of $25,000.

In explaining the position of the property, Mr. C. Coombs stated that the property was bonded by Mr. David Glass, Q. C., in 1873 (during the water-works discussion) for $25,000, and that a minor named Joseph H. Coombs had no claim upon the property at present, although he did not know but what he would have as much as he became of age.

The question of purchase and title to property was referred to the Solicitor for a report.

Mr. Hamilton, of Toronto, an extensive dealer in iron piping, appeared before the Board, seeking information in regard to the size, quality and quantity of piping required, and the which it was proposed to have the works completed.

The Commission assured him that every opportunity would be taken to give all advertisements calling for tenders inserted in the newspapers as soon as Mr. Peterson, the Engineer, was heard from, which would probably be within a week. It was also intimated that the permission to have the works commenced and finished within a year. Mr. Hamilton intimated his intention of tendering.

Mr. R. S. Fitch, of Bay City, Mich., also appeared before the Board, and explained the excellencies of the Wyckoff Patent Wooden Piping. The water was taken under advisement.

The Lake Shore Foundry Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, asked for information in regard to the extent of the proposed works, and the Secretary was ordered to furnish the particulars.

The Board then adjourned.

London East Notes.

Tuesday afternoon.

The Pest Office removal has ours more to do to the front, and Mr. Hill the "rapidest" has arisen between Mr. Murray Anderson, the so-called "daddy of the village" and Mr. Vye, the "boss" postmaster. After the former had "pulled the string," which in the language of the theatre, or less than arranging matters with Mr. David Glass, and procured the removal of the P. O. to his block, against the wishes of the ratepayers, Mr. Mills asked that Mr. Anderson fit up the place as a Post Office. This the owner of the store refused to do, and then Mr. Mills proposed to fit up the store at his expense, if Mr. McLennan would allow him three months' rent for so doing. Mr. Mills seems to be a business man, and has accepted by Mr. Anderson as satisfactory, and that upon the strength of it he fitted up the store. Since then, it is alleged, that Mr. A. has endeavored to back out of the agreement entered into, which has not been pushing Mr. M. for three months' rent. This, Mr. M. very properly refused to pay, and yesterday afternoon a distress warrant was issued against Mr. Mills' goods to recover the amount. This, so far as we can hear, was settled for the time being by Mr. Mills' "striking over," but that part of the law's commands was not done literally by the Postmaster, who informed Mr. Anderson that he knew his "little game" was to make it so unpleasant for him as to force him to resign his position, and Mr. David Glass would see that the "daddy of the village" was appointed in his stead. Mr. Mills means to "hold the fort" against all comers, and feels satisfied the P. M. General will sustain him in his action. He has came quite a sensation among the village and social circles of the locality principally on, awaiting further developments in the new phase of the Post Office removal. "Whoa! Gettie Sat" is the cry that comes to the front.

Before Squire Peters this morning, four youths, named John and Marshall Bickard, David Livingston and Mark Stuart, were charged with stealing a game-cock from John Gilligan. The youths conducted to give up the bird and pay the costs, and the charge was allowed to be withdrawn.

Orangeism.

Annual Meeting of East Middlesex Lodge—Grand Lodge Meeting—Matters Restored.

The annual county meeting of East Middlesex Royal Orange Lodge was held in the Orange Hall, Richmond street, yesterday (Tuesday). It was very numerously attended by brethren having votes, and members of all the private Lodges and District Lodges in the city and county. The following officers of the county were duly elected:—

Bro. Robert Hobbs, County Master.
Bro. James Wilson, Deputy County Master.
Bro. Richard Wright, County Secretary.
Bro. Robert Dreaney, County Chaplain.
Bro. David Baskerville, County Treasurer.
Bro. John Wilson, Director of Ceremonies.
Bro. John Read, County Lecturer.

Arrangements are made to celebrate the 12th of July on a grand scale this year in London.

The Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario East meets in Belleville on the second Tuesday in February, and the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West meets in Oshawa on the same date. The Grand Lodge of the Orange Young Britons meets in Ottawa on the 12th prox. It is expected that the above meetings will be the most interesting that have ever been held in Canada, and matters of vital importance to the Order in this Province will be submitted for consideration.

Harmony has been restored in the councils of Orange Association of the U. S. This satisfactory state of affairs has been brought about by the action of the Earl of Enniskillen, Imperial Grand Master, in endorsing the course pursued by the President of the Triennial Council, Bro. Mackenzie Bowell, G. M. B. N. A. At the session of the G. O. L. of the U. S., held at Cleveland, Capt. John Fallows, Grand Master of New York, was elected Grand Master, and Bro. John Clark, of Philadelphia, Grand Secretary. The next session of the Grand Lodge will be held in Pittsburg, Pa.

"DAVY CROCKETT."—The production of this new American play at the Opera House last night by Mr. Frank Mayo and his talented company proved a delightful and refreshing surprise to the large audience present. Those who went expecting to see a mere Indian shooting performance, were agreeably disappointed. An American contemporary has truthfully remarked of this noble play that it is a new revelation of the border-land, and develops the best material which civilization selects to do its rough work. It holds up a mass of heart, and stations him on the outposts, doing picket duty for progress. It glorifies woman as a mother and monitor of heroes, and as the mate of man. It casts human nature in its truest mould, and develops the very simplicity of the race, and proves its integrity by hard knocks and sharpest probings. It brings the refinements of fashion and education in woman under the influence of the very largest breadth of pure humanity in man, and the more ornaments of blood and station are swept away by the strong pulses of nature finding around the heart. We find "Davy Crocket" brave and resolute, with a great, generous heart as tender as a woman's. In brief, a person in every sense of the word worthy of the name man. And such is the conception Mr. Mayo has of the character. Well adapted to the part in looks and physique, he enacts it naturally and effectively. The picture is complete in the smallest detail, to rich in color, so full of warmth, so beautiful and so natural. It is magnetic in its simplicity and truthfulness. There is a fascination in the very tenderness and humanity of this noble backwoodsman would be to resisted. We sympathise with his love for Ellen, and admire his generous nature. Kindly we follow his thoughts; of his actions we approve, for there is nothing ignoble in them; we pity his misfortunes, and rejoice in his triumphs. Mr. Mayo was admirably supported by a strong cast, and his splendid setting, without the slightest tinge of rant, was enthusiastically applauded, and the scene called repeatedly before the curtain. Should the Company return to London, as they profess to do shortly, they may rely on a rousing reception.

THE LINGARD COMBINATION.—Our theatre-going citizens are on the qui vive regarding the appearance of this famous dramatic combination who are announced to appear at the Academy of Music this evening, in one of their highly popular entertainments. It is seldom Londoners have the opportunity of showing their appreciation of witnessing performances like the Lingards, and the rapidity with which the best seats have been secured shows that our citizens are discriminating and liberal admirers of the leaders of the dramatic profession. On this occasion, the Lingards will produce A. D. Gordon's play of "Heart and Cross," written expressly for them, and in which they have been very successful in the States. It deals with a part of the life of the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, commencing with her departure from France for Scotland, and carrying on the action to the Death of Bothwell, and the scene and scenes connected therewith, depicting the assassination of Rizzo. The press speak in terms of praise of Mrs. A. Dunning Lingard's assumption of the role of the Queen of Scotts, and she seems to be well supported by the rest of the troupe, and the play abounds in grand tableaux and exciting scenes, competent critics say. It does two marriages take place, and the curtain falls on a picture of the principal characters and the chief characters which have gained him such a great reputation.

Although Mr. Duncan has been in Hamilton but a short time, he has succeeded in winning the good opinion of all the masters and students of the Institute, and was especially esteemed by his fellow-boarders, who made arrangements to entertain him with an oyster supper on the evening previous to his departure. Accordingly, a grand "spread" was prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Chestnut, to whom, in a great measure, the success of the entertainment was due. Numerous toasts were proposed and heartily responded to by the various speakers present, all of whom referred to the deep regret they felt at parting with so valued a friend.

The Exumbial Craze.

Of all the diseases that ever were known
Since Noah's unfortunate days,
The strangest that yet has afflicted mankind
Is the present hexumbial craze.
Hexumbial—
Oh, yes; the hexumbial craze!

You may spell it cumalcal crabs, if you choose
To fudge from whence it came;
But modern hobbies humbuggists use it should
Be spelled, I maintain, the same.
Hexumbial—
You know—the hexumbial craze!

Whoever is seized with this new-fangled ill
Very soon of the symptoms will show;
He'll sneeze, and cough, and gasp and lag in the house
With all sorts of strange symptoms of woe.
Hexumbial—
For such is hexumbial craze.

He and he, when this fever epidemic is o'er,
The sub-zeros will stand in scores
To find all the bacteria and fossil pots—
The remains of hexumbial brutes—
Then adieu to hexumbial bread
Bottom Cumalcal Crabs.

ONLY A CLOD.

BY MISS M. E. BRADDON.

(Author of "Aurora Floyd," "Lady Audley's Secret," etc.)

Miss Burnett occupied a very big house in the dullest street in Bloomsbury, a dismal cul de sac, in which there was almost always a cab waiting, and a perpetual ringing "Home, sweet Home," or the "Old Hundredth," with a little group of area boys and girls gathered round him. The big house stood like a tomb, and was almost as retiring. It had all the dismal look of the house of a butcher, but who brought Miss Burnett's nutton, one, or one half pound of steak, or three-quarters of liver, upon which Miss Burnett's servant was wont to make her repast, history has not yet told. Ringing the gate, and exchanged no word of comment with the grim damsel who answered them, knowing very well that the lady of the house sat at her favorite window in the front parlour, with a watchful eye upon the outward world, which some sentiment-al Christian might have thought unpleasantly consistent with so much piety.

The grim house of the afflicted Roderick Lowther to Miss Burnett's duchess, rhodes relaxed her ordinary sternness of visage into something nearly approaching a smile as she recognized her mistress's nephew.

"Your aunt has been very ill since you were last here, Mr. Lowther," the woman said, in response to Roderick's inquiry. She was very bad with her asthma, all the winter, but the warm, spring weather brought her round again."

"Yes," thought the young man, "the spring comes round, and the aunt comes round, and always will, I suppose, till I am dead and in my grave."

He was ushered into the dining-room while this irreverent idea was in his mind, and the next minute he was in his aunt's presence.

Miss Burnett was a confirmed invalid, and was entitled to her brother's lodgings, where he found Harcourt pondering moodily over the Times newspaper, and whence he soon afterwards departed to see Antipholi to discoverille.

Mr. Tre. Daniels Rodwell, but Mrs. Trebithyn was at home. Harcourt went into his friend's study to write a note, while Roderick followed a waiting-maid to the drawing-room, in the smallest and coziest of which three gorgeous young ladies were at work, Jomaist's found Maude and Rose Grumbler-pound sitting side by side on a low sofa, while proud Julia nestled herself near the window.

"You're the lady I should like to marry," thought Roderick as he looked at Julia's dark face, which lighted up for a moment with her pleasing smile as she bowed to him, and then relapsed into gloom. "there'd be some fighting, and very little talking. We could care to tame a robin" but there would be some glory in subduing the spirit of an eagle."

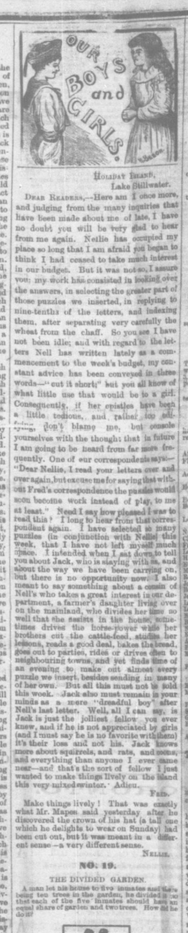
A story is going the round of the East Indian papers of a shooter officer, just after the conquest of the Punjaub, being in conversation with a Sikh chief, whom the latter remarked, "You English do not know how to manage a Pathan." I will tell you what you should do. You should get a sack, put your Sikh into it, then fill it with chaff and set fire to it. That is the way to manage a Pathan." Shortly after the same officer fell in with some Pathans, and in the course of conversation one of them observed, "You English do not know how to manage a Sikh. I will tell you what you should do. You should get a sack, put your Sikh into it, then fill it with chaff and set fire. That is the way to manage a Sikh."



Vegetables and Men.

From the New York Times.

But now, just when the believers in development feel the need of some evidence to connect plants with men, a German and an English scientific person come forward and announce that they have independently discovered that plants are afflicted with the same diseases which harass mankind. Everybody has noticed that the outside of apples and oranges is frequently dotted with small black spots. It occurred to a learned and enthusiastic German of Utrecht that these spots were the outward symptom of a disease, and being extremely fond of apples and oranges, he asked himself if it would not be possible for him to contract this disease. As he was an unmarried man of advanced age, and entirely indifferent to female public opinion, he was quite willing to be covered with small black spots, if he could thereby add to the facts of science. He therefore scraped a few of the said apple-skins, and thus reducing the black spots to the form of impalpable dust, inhaled them. Strange to say, he did not remain spotted, but in a few days he manifested all the symptoms of a severe and acute attack of hemping cough. Further experiments confirmed him in the belief that the disease which causes spots on the rind surface of apples and oranges is the same which in the human subject is called whooping-cough. We thus see that whooping-cough is in its origin a vegetable disease, and that man only contracts it from speckled fruit which he incautiously handles.

Almost at the same time during which the enthusiastic German was providing himself with whooping-cough, an English scientific person who possessed both children and geraniums, was annoyed to find that the former had contracted measles. The children went through with the disease in a perfect manner, but the geraniums, which had also contracted it, grew rapidly worse, and expired in great agony. That is bad the measles there is no room for doubt in the mind of its owner, and he considers that the circumstance renders it perfectly certain that geranium can also contract measles from measly children. If they can be kept in the same apartments, a farmer's daughter living over on the mainland, who divides her time no well that the swains in the bonny scene-tinue drives the horse-power with her feathers out the cabbage, minding her lessons, reads a good deal, bakes the bread, goes out to parties, rides or drives down to neighboring towns, and yet finds time of an evening to make out almost every puzzle we insert, handwriting in many of her own. But all this must not be told about. For a Convention held two years ago was not to be mentioned. The meeting-room was "crowded to the doors" and the other speakers were "loudly applauded" after due to the origin of various dis-eases. Very likely he innocent-looking vegetables which we admit to family-life intimacy with our children are afflicted with all sorts of objectionable diseases. How do we know that the thin and weak asparagus which is served almost every day in the country is not suffering from consumption? It is true that one rarely keeps awake at night by the restless hissing of sick asparagus on its bed, or by prolonged fits of coughing on the part of the ailing vegetable; but inasmuch as apples can have the whooping cough without whooping, asparagus may possibly have the consumption without coughing or without feeling ill in bed. The same, which gaiters even when no perceptible disease is following, noticeably grown in, regarded de-vastated by chills and fever, and we may reasonably suspect that the unhappy tree is shaking with ague when it is not shivering and that it communicates it to persons living in the shadow. "Hay fever" may prove to be the natural and proper name for the disease which renders the human nose miserable during the harvesting season, and it may be contracted solely by too close familiarity with fresh hay. The gnarled and twisted limbs of apple-trees suggest the presence of rheumatic affections, and the hectic flush which is sometimes found on a rose may be proof that the hapless flower is suffering from scarlet fever. In short, if we and our vegetables have the same disease, we shall have no difficulty in understanding how a person may contract typhoid fever or any other contagious disease without having been within miles of any other human being similarly affected.

We now see what is to leave our vegetables to struggle unassisted with the many ex-cited maladies. Every humane gardener should do his duty, and when a single spot is found upon any of his flowers or vegetables shown the slightest symptoms of any ill-health, such as dyspepsia, indigestion, and its other functions carefully examined. We must supply our sweet-pea bean with cayenne pepper, and our asparagus with cod liver oil. This we admit is not very charming exercise, but we see that whooping-cough is in its origin a not been idle; and with regard to the letters Nell has written lately as a commencement to the week's budge, no constant advice has been conveyed in these words—"cut it short" but on sitting down what little use that would be to a girl Consequently, if her epistles have been a little tedious, and rather too solemn in style, Nell begs to offer her excuses with the thought that in future I am going to be heard from far more frequently. One of our correspondents says—"Indeed, I should know your letters out of a thousand, but excuse me saying that with Cousin Nell's correspondence the puzzle would soon become work instead of play, is to say the least." Should I say how pleased I was to read this? I long to hear from that correspondent again. I have selected so many puzzles for your solving this week and next week, that I have not left myself much room. I intended when I sat down to write you about Jack, who is staying with us, and about the way we have been carring on, but there is no opportunity now; I shall mean-time to say something about a cousin of Nell's who takes a great interest in our pastimes, a farmer's daughter living over on the mainland, who divides her time so well that the swains in the bonny scene-feathers out the cabbage, minding her lessons, reads a good deal, bakes the bread, goes out to parties, rides or drives down to neighboring towns, and yet finds time of an evening to make out almost every puzzle we insert, handwriting in many of her own. DEAR READERS,—Here am I once more, and judging from the many inquiries that have been made about me of late, I have been missed by a good many of you. I hope since I had ceased to be seen and heard from me again. Nellie has occupied my place so long that I am afraid you began to think I had ceased to be interested in our budget. But it was not so, I assure you; my work has consisted in looking over the answers, in selecting the greater part of those puzzles we inserted, in replying to nine-tenths of the letters, and indexing them, after separating very carefully the wheat from the chaff. So you see I have not been idle; and with regard to the letters Nell has written lately as a com-

The Paris Man Dressmaker on Dress-making.

"Worth is a tallish man, with a big forehead and very prominent eyebrows. His brown eyes are singularly shrewd in expression, and their sense of detail is surprising—that is, for a man. He is, of course, more no more eye for detail than owls have or the sun. "Worth takes pride in his genius and knows what your style ought to be. He is a man of taste, and not a mere dressmaker I don't care to 'work my passage,' as Bob would say. I want to order what I please, and I will pay for it. If a customer brains equal to the occasion. Worth's taste, when allowed full play, is irreproachable. I prefer simplicity to anything else, he says. 'but there are women who don't know what to wear. Now, what is becoming to one person is hideous when worn by another. I study to make the best out of those I have to deal with, and fortunately, we can't have people made to order, can we? If I had my way all women should be slight, graceful and pretty. Then dressing them would be an artistic pleasure. A dress should never overpower the wearer. It should merely be a suitable frame for a charming picture, bringing out the beauties of the picture, but never distracting attention from it. Some women understand this. Why, when I did I can make a dress that suits them, and then has been agreed upon, I actually annoy clients by telling them so. They think it cannot be as handsome as it ought to be, and they would rather have more complicated dress. But that is my design may be married, than pay less, I assure you this is a fact. Consequently, when I meet ladies who know that dressing is an art, I take very great satisfaction in making their dresses.

"It isn't every woman who knows how to wear a dress. When I have done my best I try to make my client do her best by seeing her walk and sit down. To walk well is a rare thing, it does not fatigue, but it comes to being able to sit down in a graceful manner, and I have never been able to wear that dress constantly in Russia if she wears the proper underclothing to set off her dress. As she is sensible I think she will take my advice, which, you perceive, is against my interest, for the more underclothing she wears the more money I make. I am not only object. Art is intended to beautify nature, not to deform it."

Venner on the February Forecast.

PLENTY OF SNOW AND COLD YET PREDICTED.

To the Editor of the Daily Witness.

SIR,—You were rather premature in assuming in your issue of Saturday that I was again out in my forecast for February. Now I do not think my judgment can fairly be passed on this until more of the month has passed over. The severe term of cold which set in on the 4th day of February is reality came during the last four days of January, and there will be a heavy snow storm at a great number of points west and south of Montreal on the 19th or 20th of the month. Another snow-storm occurred on Saturday, the 9th inst., and a third on Sunday, the 10th, broke over Montreal, Quebec, and a very large area of country.

Then, the facts in the case are:—That between the 1st of the month and the present date some snow has actually fallen in the Dominion than at any other time previous this year. We are now in a spell of broken weather, and I expect to see some severe weather, and some very heavy snow-falls, and it is not unlikely that we shall this month record one of the coldest days of the winter. The month will again end stormy and cold, and March will probably be ushered in by deep snows. I advise railway men not to be put by their snow ploughs, but keep them ready for use; for I still maintain that February "will be the most severe month we shall see this winter, and the most severe month we shall see this winter, and the most severe snow blockades. Please, therefore, Editor, do not put down this February as a "miss" until the month has had an opportunity of showing what it can do in the weather line. "Not much more to-day, but certainly not to-morrow, is February."—I said so, and I mean it.

Yours truly, HENRY G. VENNOR.

Woman Smothered to Death.

A sad accident occurred at Fort Whitby on Thursday, January 31st, which has cast a gloom over the whole community. Mrs. James Smith lost her life. Having occasion to go down cellar to procure something for her daughter who was ill in bed, she took with a light and went to the cellar. After a short time Mrs. Smith was surprised by her daughter smelling fire, called in the neighbors, and on instigation, and by their own exertions, the fire was put out, when the dead body of Mrs. Smith was found with the hands badly burned. It is surmised, that on the poor woman entering the cellar, the light she carried in her hand set fire to some marsh hay which covered some potatoes, that she attempted to smother the fire, but was overcome by the smoke.

Western Dairymen's Association.

Concluding Proceedings of the Convention.

From our own Correspondent.

Ingersoll, Feb. 15.

The Convention resumed at 9:30 this morning, the President, Mr. D. Hopkins, in the chair.

Moved by G. W. Watson, seconded by F. Farrington, that C. W. Slawson, of Lagersoll, and G. B. Pierce, of London, be appointed auditors. Carried.

Mr. Chadwick said he was pleased to see the great interest manifested in the dairy business. Ten years ago he would not have believed that so much knowledge could be gained in such a short time.

Mr. Farrington said the Government of Ontario has been very liberal towards the dairy interest, but to make it a success we must work shoulder to shoulder, having but one aim in view, that of furthering the dairy interest in Ontario.

TREASURY OF THE ASSOCIATION.

It was then moved by John Allison, seconded by H. S. Lossee, and resolved, that this meeting expresses its satisfaction with the action of the Ontario Government in establishing a dairy, conducted on the factory system, and recommend the continuance of the same.

The next matter for consideration was the question of establishing cheese factories and creameries, and Mr. Farrington said his services to be retained for the position.

This motion caused a great discussion and for a time the meeting took on a political meeting, and a great uproar ensued.

Mr. Clark: Still we was the first of this Dairy College project, but could not give any support to the clause of the motion, that of expressing satisfaction with the action of the Ontario Government, for he thought that Guelph has been the proper place to have the Dairy Farm. All know that twice has the county in which that town is situated tried to establish dairy farms, after the plan followed in the Country of Oxford, and each time they have failed. He was willing to put down one-quarter of the money to buy a farm for dairy purposes in the county of Oxford, being positive that it would in time be a very profitable institution, which the one in Guelph never would be.

Mr. Caswell said this matter was brought under the Directors' notice last night at the Directors' meeting, and he fully concurred in believing Mr. Arnold would be the right man in the right place. He hoped the meeting would give its unanimous and standing vote to show the Government that Mr. Arnold would be the choice of this Convention. As a Convention held two years ago it was agreed that it would be a good plan to have a "mine" until the mouth has had an opportunity of showing what it can do in the weather line. "Not much more to-day, but certainly not to-morrow, is February."—I said so, and I mean it.

Yours truly, HENRY G. VENNOR.

COUNTRY NOTES.

Systematic Stock Feeding—Care of Sheep and their Profits—How the Educational Department Deals with Rural Schools in their Purchases.

The variable weather from extreme cold to almost spring-like, drizzling rain, and snow alternately, has not been so favorable to the general health of the stock as a steady cold winter. Owing to the mildness of the winter, a great number of cattle has been kept outside all the time, as, during the fattening season, no animal can thrive without water, and they should have it every day in abundance, and it should be clean and pure, free from offensive matter.

SHEEP.

Raising sheep is the best and surest investment a farmer can make. We doubt if there is any stock so well adopted to the climate of the Dominion as raising our good wool sheep, such as our Lincolns, Leicesters and Cotswolds. But, however well these long wooled sheep thrive in northern latitudes, and through our long and severe winters, yet we may say there is not that attention paid to their comfort, as far as the shed and shelter is concerned. A number of farmers have taken up the idea, owing to being supplied with stock at a cheap cost of wool, that any accommodation is good enough for them. No doubt a well ventilated, dry, roomy shed, but the object of a farmer should not be to see how many animals are living through the winter, but how many are living profitably. Because a sheep can live in a fence-corner or in a shed where a team would refuse to be tied for a night, is certain proof that the animal does not get the comfort and shelter necessary to keep it in a healthy condition. Sheep should be attended to; pure, good sheep make poor wool and diminished flocks, and weakly puny lambs, the consequence being that the chances are that a large per-centage of the lambs die during lambing time, owing to the want of proper nutriment supplied by the mother. This is especially the case if the weather during the lambing season is severe, without a warm, comfortable house, and sheep in good condition. If our farmers want good, healthy, vigorous flocks, they must be united, and a good stock of spring lambs, attend to your sheep now.

EDUCATIONAL.

Several schools are purchasing magic lanterns, small libraries, &c., for the use of the different sections. The Educational Department offer as an inducement 100 per cent. to School Boards for the purchase of any books and school apparatus. There is one thing, however, in connection with the Educational Department and the 100 per cent. which is becoming patent to all, and that is, they either buy in poor markets and recklessly, or the cost, per cent. is a swindle, or rather a ball. The way this is done is something like this:—The Department buys, say, from a wholesale dealer, at current rates, and adds 75 or 80 per cent. over and above the regular retail price, and then gives 100 per cent. to trustees. Of course, it can easily be seen where the hitch is. We recently attended an exhibition of a magic lantern in a rural school, with accompanying slides, such as astronomical and different subjects in natural history, such as animals, &c., and the manner in the showing, general proportion of the animals and execution were so bad that it was with difficulty that one animal could be distinguished from another. The proportion and symmetry were bad, but to withhold their support from the bill sought to be forced upon the Institution. Every body, unless a cleaner is therein inserted, or another bill passed, providing for the non-interference of the said boards, offices, workshops and books from the town of St. Thomas, and making the supplies, men's wages and other running expenses a first lien on the property of the said company."

A motion to enclose the Treasurer's office from the offices referred to was voted down.

The above resolution has been sent to Parliament for presentation.

SEED ORGANIZING.—The "Reform" party are busy in organizing, being evidently apprehensive of the coming general election. In Wallacetown, the other night, the following officers were elected by the same. In the purchase of books, for instance, wholesale dealers would, within a trifle, for a hundred dollars' purchase, do as well. Of course, the people pay the taxes any way, whether they pay bill value or get one hundred per cent. But the spirit and intention of thus subsidizing our Common Schools in their purchases was to encourage educational enterprise, and make one man pay for another, who did not wish to take the advantages and thus retard the educational facilities of the country. The one hundred per cent. was nothing more than offering a premium to intelligence, the same as prizes at our school examinations; or the principle may even be extended to agricultural fairs or art exhibitions. Each one expects to get an honest return for the premiums offered, and corporations who expend public money with the Educational Department expect to get their premium of 100 cent. for the value offered. There wants an insight how into this Department, where count they buy, and at what discount the 100 per cent. sell. They do not give anyhow.

The till was only contained about $4 in cash, which they also appropriated. Three brothers named Mellor have been arrested on suspicion. The burglars also paid a visit to the shop of Mr. Geo. An Anecdote of Macready.

Mr. Sala has been attacking dead actors in Tomahawk He charges Macready with having habitually used foul and blasphemous language behind the scenes. An apologist has come to the front who hints that Mr. Sala may have been led astray by the fact that in the last act of "Macbeth" Macready invariably lashed himself into a sort of fever, which he aggravated by using all sorts of strong expressions. When Mr. Phelps played Macduff to him for the first time, he was not a little amazed during the fight to hear Macready yell to him "Come, scoundrel, I will make you a dead man," and a devil. Full of remorse, Phelps hurled at the quivering wretch a volley of oaths that would have done credit to Macready himself. Macready, when it was over, ran up to Phelps, and said—"Thank you, Mr. Phelps, indeed I thank you for your excellent support." In another play, where it was necessary to enter to a passing fury, full of vengeance, and with the intention of mad bloodshed, Macready used to have a stage direction, when he would grapple and shake savagely at, of course, empty air, the words "Oh, villain, villain!" One night the regular supernumerary, Phillips, who did not quite understand the business, came on instead. Macready grappled him, when, still misunderstanding the business, Phillips returned the compliment. The astonished Macready gave a yell of rage, and being ninety years of age, yet his jet-black hair and almost ruddy face gave the appearance of being many years younger. He reads ordinary print without the aid of spectacles, and has enjoyed immunity from sickness from boyhood up.

Dangerous Visitors.—Molly Malches and four of his pals are stopping at the hotel of Windsor. Dave Levitt, the notorious shoplifter and smuggler, is also in Windsor, keeping the pickpocket company, and occasionally visiting Detroit.

Local Legal.—The following appears in the proceedings of the Court of Queen's Bench for Thursday.—Howe vs. Kent.—Macmahon, Q. C., showed cause to a rule nisi to set aside a verdict for plaintiff.—Meredith, Q. C., contra. Reserved.

Curling at St. Mary's.—The Sarnia Curling Club beat St. Mary's by one for the Governor General's gold medal, on Thursday morning. In the afternoon they beat Chatham by nine, and Sarnia beat Chatham by fifteen. Three ladies' games were merely friendly matches.

Final Postmastership.—Mr. Thompson, chemist and druggist, Fingal, has been appointed Postmaster of that village, in place of Mr. S. Tubby, deceased. A petition is being extensively signed in the township, to be forwarded to the Inspector, asking that the office may be retained in the township at Talbot.

Shuffling While Sleeping.—On Wednesday evening last an inquest was held in Dorchester on the body of a male child, who was suffocated while sleeping with its mother, a young girl from London. Coroner Mowbray, of Dorchester Station, held the inquest, and the jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

Officers Elected.—At the late meeting of the London Union Band of Hope, the following officers were elected for the current quarter:—Hon. President, Rev. F. J. Johnson; President, Mr. C. A. Conover; 1st Vice, Miss P. A. Ingles; 2nd Vice, Mr. J. Tuttle; 3rd Vice, Miss Magdie Spence; Sec., Mr. F. Wright; Treas., Mr. W. F. Tew; Organist, Mr. C. J. Case; Chaplain, Mr. G. E. Peck, of C. M. C.; Summons Sexton, Mr. A. Baker.

Accident.—As a young man named Johnson Furness was driving along the road near Richard's tavern, St. Mary's, on Thursday, a Mr. Fisher attempted to jump on the sleigh, and in doing so an axe, which he had in his hand, struck the driver on the back of the head, inflicting a serious wound. Mr. Fisher, it is supposed, was the animal had been young man to town and had his wound dressed by Dr. Sinclair.

Recent Robberies.—At Kincardine, before a full bench of magistrates, James H. Fleming, a young man, had numerous cases of petty larceny against him by brother. Particulars of the case were given in the Free Press last week. After evidence, prisoner was committed to Walkerton for trial—bail being accepted, himself in $500 and two sureties of $250 each, R. Walker and John Fleming becoming sureties.

Dundas Sabbath School Convention.—The Convention for the County of Oxford Sunday School Association has been in session at Ingersoll the past few days, Rev. J. McEwen, of Ingersoll, President. The topics which have been discussed are those of great practical interest to Sabbath School workers, and the result of the conference will, doubtless, be further the efficiency of an interest in the Sunday School work in the County. A grand rally of Wednesday's session was spent in the discussion of Normal class work for training teachers, a movement which has been fully endorsed and recommended by the Convention. C. Millard represented the Sunday School Association of Canada. The Sunday Schools from all parts of the County were well represented. Rev. Mr. McEwen, of Ingersoll, was elected President, and Mr. S. Stephens, of Woodstock, Secretary.

The Oddfellows' Entertainment.—The fifth of the series of entertainments given under the auspices of the Oddfellows of this city during the winter took place last night, and as has been the case previously, the spacious hall was crowded to the doors with a highly respectable and appreciative audience. The entertainments appear to have taken a deep hold upon the public of London, not alone because the admission fee is placed at the nominal sum of ten cents, but owing to the fact that the programmes provided are suited to the class of citizens who would rather hear a rollicking Irish ballad, pretty well sung, than all the operatic gems of leading prima donne with high-sounding titles. There could not have been fewer than 600 people at last night's entertainment, and we feel confident all who attended were exceedingly well pleased in the manner in which the programme was carried out. Mr. F. Oliver presided on the occasion, and introduced the following ladies and gentlemen, who severally and collectively contributed to the enjoyment of the evening's enjoyment:—Vocalisms by Misses M. Adams, M. Goldie, Pacey, Mrs. Tanner and Mrs. White, and Messrs. Mathews, T. Barnard, J. W. Fletcher, P. A. West and W. Nelson. Messrs. G. Sanderson, P. A. West, and Miss Ritchen gave readings, whilst the City Band furnished instrumental music at intervals during the evening, to the delight of all present.

LOCAL NOTICES.

A Successful Grocery.—Messrs. Munro, Wood & Co. did spirited firm when they succeeded to the business of W. & R. Simpson, on Dundas street recently opposite the Market Lane; are doing a large business, and are therefore in a position to get their goods fresh, and at the same time permitting them to sell at the cheapest prices possible, consistent with giving a good article. Attention is called to their list of new goods in another column. Donald is 'always on hand to deal out the good old Governor-General coffee. Give the firm a call.

Masquerade Ball.—Invitations are out for Tuesday, March 5th. Special rates have been secured from Stratford, St. Mary's, and Thorndale, on the Grand Trunk.

The Magnetician.—The fact that Mr. Mason has again found it necessary, after so long his visit is of itself evidence of the favor with which his appliances are being received in this city. Their high English reputation has no doubt been useful in securing for him so favorable a reception, and the principles upon which they are constructed so commend themselves to one's judgment as to strengthen the good opinion which is given by a perusal of the "Magnetician" pamphlet—and those who have not read it should do so. Mr. Mason will be at the Temperance Hall, Richmond street each day until Wednesday evening next, and as he removes to Hamilton on Thursday, it is important that all sufferers who wish to avail themselves of this most convenient system of applying magnetism should call upon him at once.

Mr. Peterson, C. E., yesterday afternoon completed his inspection of the section and of the proposed new waterworks for this city. It was not expected that his inspection would result adversely to the proposed supply, still it was deemed advisable by the Commissioners to publish decided opinion that the supply was there before the tenders were called for. Mr. Peterson, having made the necessary arrangements for the advertisement on the previous day, assisted by the City Engineer, completed the work to his satisfaction, and will present a written report to the Commission. He was in conference with that body all yesterday afternoon, in reference to the details of the scheme, the cost, etc. It will be several days before his report will be completed. Meanwhile, however, it may be stated that Mr. Peterson's thorough inspection fully bears out the estimate of Mr. Robinson, City Engineer. Mr. Peterson will report that the springs are capable of supplying 24 million gals. a day—a quantity sufficient to supply the wants of the city until it has a population of from 40,000 to 50,000 people. In addition to the main springs, from which the above supply will be drawn, there are springs in the immediate neighborhood which are estimated to be capable of giving an auxiliary supply calculated to bring up the total quantity to 4,000,000 gallons per day. Then there are the springs on the opposite side of the river, which could be obtained, if required. Acting on Mr. Peterson's findings, the Commissioners yesterday afternoon resolved to call for tenders for four thousand tons of cast-iron water-pipes, of sizes varying from 18 to 4 inches in diameter, as also valves, hydrants, &c. Regarding the cost, Mr. Peterson gives it as his opinion that the works can be constructed easily for the sum named in Mr. Robinson's estimate, viz., $925,000. In his report, Mr. Peterson will also give his advice as to the propriety of using the river water-power for pumping the water into the reservoir. It is believed that, could satisfactory arrangements be come by, this would be a most economical mode. Should no unforeseen circumstance arise it is anticipated that the contracts for the work will be awarded within a month from now, that in less than two months the construction will be under way, and that the London waterworks will be an accomplished fact by the end of the present year.

Statistics of Immigration, Etc.

Culled from the Minister of Agriculture's Annual Report.

The Hon. C. A. Pelletier, Minister of Agriculture and Statistics, has presented his annual report to the House of Commons. It contains a vast amount of information in connection with the prosperity of the Dominion. He also gives us in advance furnishes a statement in regard to the representation of the Dominion at the Australian Exhibition. The cost will not be much over $28,000. The total number of immigrants who arrived during 1877 was 53,985, being the smallest since Confederation. The number who actually settled in the Dominion was about 29,000 over the previous year, and about the same as for 1875. Considerable number of immigrants had means, and came to invest in and on farms. The Muskoka colonies are reported in a very flourishing condition. The total number settled in Manitoba is about 7,000. The Icelandic colonists are reported generally satisfied with their position. Notwithstanding the sufferings endured the colony of repatriated French Canadians in Manitoba is thriving. The number of sixty-three arrived during the year from the New England States was considerably number from the Western State, making the total 946. Mr. A. G. Smith, Dominion Agent, visited at 1,473 immigrants arrived at his station in 1877, besides 2,614 at Sarnia, Windsor and Collingwood, with settlers' goods. The demand for agricultural laborers and servants exceeded the supply, and he considers the prospect for the coming season good. Reference is expressed at the death of Mr. T. H. Mackay, and a tribute paid to him as a careful and painstaking officer. The total cost of transporting immigrants for 1877 was $79,669.62; less than half the sum spent in the same service in 1876. Two-thirds of the portion spent on immigrants to Ontario and Quebec is refunded to the Dominion by these Provinces.

London Loan Company of Canada.

The first annual meeting of the shareholders of the above company was held at their office, on Richmond street, on Thursday afternoon, Thomas Kent, Esq., President, in the chair. The report of the Board of Directors for the past year was submitted for approval and adoption. The report of this financial statement was also presented to the meeting.

The election of the directors was then proceeded with, resulting in the reelection of all the former members of the Board.

Resolutions thanking the President, Directors and Manager for their able and judicious management of the affairs of the Company during the past year were unanimously carried, and suitable replies expressed with the report and financial statement as exhibiting the great and substantial progress of the Company during the short period of seven months which it is elapsed since commencing operations.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, Mr. Thomas Kent was elected President, and Mr. James Owrey, Vice-President.

LONDON EAST.

Mr. A. M. Ross has (says the Petrolea Advertiser) purchased the property of the Petrolia Boiler Company, of London, Ontario. It consists of twenty acres of good oil territory, with two good producing wells on the property. The consideration was $10,000 in cash. We must congratulate Mr. Ross on his bargain, and hope he will take as many dollars out of the wells as he has already yielded, which we have no doubt he will.

The report of the late meeting of "Dead Ducks" caused a good deal of talk in the village yesterday.

Fire Brigade—Inspection and Entertainment.—The City Fire Brigade were inspected by the Fire, Water & Gas Committee of the City Council yesterday afternoon, in presence of a large number of citizens. The inspection took place on the Market Square. Within 34 minutes of the time the alarm bell first sounded, the men were throwing water on the City Hall. The men were complimented on their appearance, and generally efficient work. In the evening the Brigade were entertained by the Committee in the Albion Hotel, Mr. Lewis presiding. There were present:—Mayor Carling (Chairman of Committee), Campbell, Skinner and Regan, Chief Wastie, and others. After an excellent repast, toast, humorous and sentiment, the usual toasts, songs and sentiments being given. The efficiency of the Brigade was commented on by the Chairman and other members of the Committee; as also, the steadiness of the men, who were not bestowed without grounds. Chief Wastie stated in replying to the toast of the brigade that during the years 1876 and 1877, there had been 164 alarms, the total loss by fire during the period being $15,950. This is a better exhibit, we are assured, than any city on the continent can show, even where systems of water-works are in existence, and arises in a large measure, from the energy and tact displayed by the brigade in extinguishing fires. After a pleasantly spent evening, the company separated.

Entertainment at the Asylum.—In the hall of this institution last Thursday night, "The Rough Diamond" was rendered by the Asylum Dramatic Club, to the great enjoyment of the patients. Dr. Burgess and Miss Minnie Walters ably sustained the principal characters, whilst Miss Pope, Dr. Mesmer, Saunders Gibb and T. Flynn acted in an exceedingly pleasing manner. "I'm Not Myself at All," a good little farce, followed, Misses Ruthven and Jessie Fox, Drs. Burgess and Metcalf and Mr. Easton being the actors. (By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, Feb. 16.—The editorial is very pacific in tone. It says it will be due to some gratuitous misunderstanding if the relative position of England and Russia near Constantinople tends to any serious misunderstanding.

London, Feb. 16.—It is authoritatively stated that in consequence of the representations made by Austria, backed by Germany, the Czar of Russia has abandoned the idea of occupying Constantinople.

A Constantinople despatch says that the English war ship Raleigh is still outside at Rabbit Island. She is uninjured.

It is officially announced that the Russians occupy the Sandale redoubt, within the defence lines of Constantinople.

The Grand Duke probably enters the city on the 28rd of the month. The Russians argue that this is not sufficient cause to justify England's course.

The English Cabinet has been in session all day, considering the Eastern situation.

London, Feb. 16.—Now that the British fleet is at Constantinople, the great political question is, in spite of protest and diplomatic assertions, it is considered certain that Russia will carry out her design of occupying the Turkish capital. Should she indeed do so, the Russian occupation is the question of the hour.

London, Feb. 16.—The Russian camp renewed hostilities are discussed as more probable than peace. The entrance of the English fleet into Dardanelles waters for the conclusion of armistice would have been agreement, it is substantially said, by the Russians. A declaration of war with England would be very popular with the army.

Berlin, Feb. 16.—The indications are that Russia's demands here are unreasonable, with the understood programme, viz. the liberation of Christians and nothing more.

Constantinople, Feb. 15.—The British Ambassador had a long audience with the Sultan to-night to explain England's policy.

Constantinople, Feb. 16.—It is stated that Nedim Pasha, who has gone to the Russian head quarters, is instructed to endeavor to induce the Russian plenipotentiary to accept certain concessions, short of conditions.

Vienna, Feb. 16.—A Congress, not a conference, is certain—probably at Baden Baden.

Pera, Feb. 16.—It is generally expected that the Grand Duke Nicholas will enter Constantinople at the head of a portion of the army as a guest of the nation, with the consent of the Sultan. The Russians consider this will give England no cause for offence.

Constantinople, Feb. 16.—The British fleet is anchored in the Sea of Marmora, 40 miles south of Constantinople. This movement is regarded as a demonstration on the part of England to facilitate negotiations and to prevent the entry of the Russians.

The instructions to Namyk Pasha have been revised, and he has not gone to Adrianople.

London, Feb. 16.—The report that the Congress would be held at Baden Baden is confirmed. The Republics have been consulted. All the Powers, including Russia, have accepted.

Vienna, Feb. 16.—The Political Correspondence says the negotiations were only delayed by the sudden acuteness of the relations of England and Russia. The Czar and Sultan are actively exchanging personal friendly despatches. It is expected that peace will be signed by the end of the week if it meets, namely, two or three weeks later.

London, Feb. 16.—A Vienna telegram says notwithstanding the prospects of a Congress the situation is still considered grave. It is rumored that England has made overtures for an understanding and arrangements with Austria. The latter is said to favor a loan with the Rothschilds.

London, Feb. 16.—A Pera despatch on Sunday says: "The Turkish squadron arrived to-day, bringing stores and torpedoes from Salina, which has been evacuated.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 16.—The Agence Russe says that orders have been sent to Admiral Lessovsky not to occupy Gallipoli.

Berlin, Feb. 17.—Journals here oppose to the policy of England, state that Admiral Hornby has been ordered to seize the Turkish fleet, if necessary, to prevent its surrender to the Russians.

London, Feb. 16, 7 a. m.—A Paris correspondent telegraphs that intelligence has been received here that Bismarck on Thursday will make a declaration that, owing to the Emperor William's friendly intervention, Russia has consented to maintain an attitude which cannot impede the progress of the pacific conciliatory. According to latest information, England and Russia will maintain their respective military and naval positions during the session of the Congress. No other power will enter the Dardanelles lest it should increase the complications.

A Berlin special reports that Prince Bismarck's mission to St. Petersburg has proved successful in consequence of Russia's reasonable attitude.

A Pera correspondent says, it is reported that the Circassians, when retreating before the Russians, suffocated with sulphur eight hundred women and children who had taken refuge in a cave.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 17.—The Agence Russe, while admitting that the principle of a European meeting has been agreed to, denies that the details as to form and place have been settled.

London, Feb. 18.—A Constantinople despatch says the Russian advance guard have not transgressed the lines settled by armistice. In consequence of the withdrawal of the British fleet to Midania the Russians will not occupy the suburbs of Constantinople.

Paris, Feb. 17.—Two ironclads from the French squadron at Smyrna have gone to the entrance of the Dardanelles.

London, Feb. 17.—The Observer believes that Russia has represented to England that the United States, as a great maritime power, should participate in the Congress. England has not objected, but has taken advantage of the proposal to suggest that Greece also be allowed to take part.

The Observer is informed that Russia has suggested to the Porte the desirability of removing the Musulman population from Bulgaria.

Athens advices indicate that the Greek Government is likely to ally itself to England in the event of war between that latter and Russia.

Advices from Adrianople state that it is believed that peace negotiations will be completed on Wednesday, when the Russians will withdraw from Roumelia, unless England makes a new move.

A Vienna correspondent says that peace negotiations progress slowly.

A Vienna special reports that the recent Council of Ministers decided on a partial mobilization of the Austrian army if the satisfactory question was not settled within a fortnight. At a subsequent Council it was decided to refer the question to Bismarck; but if the good offices resulted in Russia's consenting to an early meeting of the congress, all danger of an Austro-Russian conflict being thus avoided, the chances of an Anglo-Austrian alliance are greatly diminished.

London, Feb. 18, 6 a. m.—Up to Sunday evening the foreign office had received by official information indicating a Russian advance on Constantinople or Gallipoli.

His Majesty's ship Raleigh, before reported ashore on Rabbit Island, is afloat again. She sustained no damage.

Latest from Japan.

Yokohama, Jan. 26.—The Agricultural College in the suburbs of Tokio, the capital, was inaugurated with ceremony Jan. 24th by the Mikado, assisted by the chief officers of the Empire. This establishment is to be conducted by colonial principles, as opposed to several American institutions of a similar character.

The relations between Japan and Corea is steadily, though slowly, increasing. The British merchants are anxiously watching for new opportunities in this direction. American merchants are indifferent. The field is obviously worthy the activity of enterprising Yankees.

The price policy is to let Japan clear the ground, after which America may follow in her profits. Several Japanese of high rank sail February 19th for Europe: first, Sanetsune, Envoy to France, universally recognized as the most brilliant and accomplished of the young Japanese statesmen; his career impaired by feeble health, at present Vice-Minister of the Department of Foreign Affairs; second, Mori Arinagatata, Vice-Minister of the Finance Department, who will be received by the various Japanese Exposition, accompanying some fifty attaches of varying grades.

The Japan-Corea war have left on foreign cruises, one to Australia, the other to Southern Indian. Both are manned by Japanese exclusively.

The report of the assassination of Mori, the Japanese Minister; China, has proved utterly without foundation.

Information is forthcoming in regard to the Yoo Choo Islands, the inhabitants acknowledging Japanese sway, yet desiring to admit certain qualified fealty to China.

GREECE.

SPREAD OF THE INSURRECTION.

Athens, Feb. 16.—The Thessalian insurgents took Pitsano to-day. It is supposed they will not be able to hold it. Hostilities are breaking out in all the districts of Crete. The insurgents are taking possession of the Apsia of protest and the Sublime Porte. In spite of protest and diplomatic assertions, it is considered certain that Russia will carry out her design of occupying the Turkish capital. Should she indeed do so, the Russian occupation is the question of the hour.

British and Foreign Grain Trade.

Latest Liverpool Review.

Liverpool, Feb. 16.—A leading grain circular says the threatening political situation has strengthened the wheat trade, and, though caution generally prevails, prices are somewhat dearer at most of the markets, as well as for off coast and future arrivals. Maize is looking up slightly. At this market to-day there was a good attendance. Sales of wheat proceeded steadily by the full average rate extent, holders of red and white clearly making an advance of a penny or two pence per cental on Tuesday's currencies. California and Oregon, though salable at extreme rates, were not quotably dearer. Sack and barrel flour were in improved request at full prices. In corn there was a good business on the spot, and old was six pence and new sixpence to ninepence per quarter dearer than Tuesday.

London, Feb. 15.—Mark Lane.—Wheat said corn a shade dearer. Cargoes off coast—Wheat, good demand; corn 2½d. to 3d., 6d. Cargoes on passage—Wheat, moderate demand. Country markets—English generally is dearer; French slightly better. Fair average quality American mixed corn for prompt shipment by sail, 38s. 6d. Fair average quality No. 2 Chicago spring wheat for shipment during the present and following months, 49s. 6d. to 50s. Good cargoes No. 2 spring wheat off coast, 51s. Good cargoes California wheat off coast, 59s. to 59s. 6d. Fair average red winter wheat off coast, 52s. Good shipping California wheat just shipped, 54s. 6d.; nearly due, 59s.

LIVERPOOL—Mark Lane—Wheat 1s dearer. Cargoes off coast—Wheat and corn strong. Fair average quality No. 2 spring wheat, 51s. 6d.

S. notes. Coin deposited for or representing certificates shall be retained in the Treasury for payment of the same on demand. Washington, Feb. 16.—Mr. Easton, who was absent when his name was called this morning.

New York, Feb. 16.—The Post's Washington special says the scene in the Senate during the latter part of the night was one of the most painful character. A number of the Turkish leaders broke down on the floor intoxicated. They were unable to keep the run of the proceedings, and made a frightful exhibition of themselves. This has been a subject of universal comment to-day.

They Haul Their Seines on the Sabbath, and the Virtuous Islanders Beat the Nets and Beat the Lawbreakers.

Quebec, Feb. 17.—St. John's, Nfld., papers received here, furnish information as to the nature of the fishery outrage at Fortune Bay, which has been referred to in American papers. A Burin correspondent of the St. John's Chronicle says:—"On Sunday fortnight, several American crews, aided by some of our own people, ascended in hauling many hundred barrels of herrings at Anderson's Cove. The people of the place, proof against the Yankee dollar, turned out en masse, and, having made a successful onset on the fishermen's seines, cut their nets, traps and grines to pieces." The Chronicle says:—It is true we have no statute law prohibiting the taking of fish within our waters on the Sabbath, but our people understand what the moral law on the subject is, and as they do not violate this moral law themselves, they are justified in feeling that strangers shall not violate it in their midst. We do not justify the destruction of property, but as we do not know the whole circumstances of the case, we are justified in assuming that the men who were called from a proper observance of the Sabbath to repel those who defiantly violated it, could hardly be guilty of the destruction named, without great provocation.

A gentleman in St. John's contributes the following to the Chronicle, under the date of the 16th inst.:—

Fortune Bay—My agent states that on Sunday week previous one of the American vessels was hauled ashore, and torn pretty much by the mob, whoever they may turn out to be. It appears on that day Sunday the herring struck into Long Harbor pretty plentiful, and the Americans would insist on shooting their seines against the known laws of the land, and did so. The result was that the seine above alluded to was injured, all the rest escaped damage. The Newfoundlanders say if the telegraph published on Tuesday did not, it appears, give the precise nature of the disturbance between the people in Fortune Bay and the American fishermen. It has since been stated on good authority that the latter were hauling with a seine on Sunday, which being forbidden by our law, our fishermen took forcible means of preventing and then destroyed the seine. Both sides, therefore, did wrong in one instance in violating the law, and our men in taking the law into their hands instead of informing the authorities, whose duty it would have been to enforce respect for it on one side as well as the other.

THE DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS ENDED.

From the long debate that has taken place on the reply to a speech that contains no policy and enunciates no principle, the Government may learn a lesson, though a lesson too late to profit them now. They may take it as the expression of opinion indulged in by both sides of the House, that the maladministration of the Government, their want of energy, their want of official honesty, and their want of firmness to resist the pressure brought to bear upon them by their supporters—are all known to the people of the country, and that the condemnation is quite as general as this knowledge is widely extended. The debate must surely convince them, if they were unconvinced before, that their political delinquencies are of that kind that a free and enlightened people cannot afford to overlook and forgive, as many of their offences are of that class whose tendency is to undermine the fundamental principle of the representative system, and convert the members of the House of Commons into pensioners upon the bounty of the Ministry, a kind of modified court party or king's men of other days, of other scenes, and of other customs than ought to prevail in Canada. The presumption is that, when the representatives of the people have been influenced by pecuniary motives, the interests of the people are not in accord with the interest of the Government. The electors of Canada are already pretty well aware of this, and the debate just ended must teach the Ministry that their actions in bribing and corrupting the members of the House has not passed unchallenged, and shall not pass unpunished.

The very nature of this debate, and the character of the acts that have been passed in review by their various speakers of that kind that cannot be handled without importing into the debate a degree of plain speaking, that is almost incompatible with the rules that should govern a dignified assemblage like the House of Commons. But it is difficult to avoid this evil unless by permitting a still greater evil to prevail —that of allowing immoral, illegal and corrupt acts to pass unchallenged. A simple reference to such an act as that of Jones or Vail, or the Speaker, or that of the Pembina Road, requires the reference to be clothed in fit language for the purpose of description and debate, and the description of a foul job necessarily implies the use of language akin to the act itself in which to paint it. It is undoubtedly a great pity that such language should become familiar to our legislative halls, but it is a still greater pity, that the official acts of the Government should have been of such a character, as demands the use of such language to adequately describe them. The Reform press may deprecate the use of such language, and the introduction of personalities by the members of both sides of the House into the debates, and in this we sincerely concur; but there is no use in treating the effect so harshly while the cause is permitted to remain and pass free from censure. Let those who condemn the introduction of personalities see to it, that the necessities for their use be wanting in future. The Dominion, from ocean to ocean, is ringing with the jobs of the Government, the culpable manner in which they have debauched the morals of the people's representatives, sapped the independence of the Legislature, and this strong, bitter feeling which these acts have aroused, require the use of proportionately strong terms to express them. "Tis a pity this were so, but 'tis a greater pity still that it needs to be so!"

In a bad cause there is said to be no true courage, and we suppose in a bad cause there can be no true eloquence. Unless the consciousness of popular indignation has paralyzed the mental powers of the Governmental party and confounded their reason, they make a poor show as compared with the Opposition on the floor of the House. It cannot be, but that there are some men of fair average ability in the Reform ranks, especially as they outnumber their opponents so far, and yet they compare flagrantly with the debaters on the Conservative side. It would be difficult to find a political party in any Legislative Assembly in any part of the Empire, in which, in proportion to their number, so many able and eloquent men can be found. While the numerical majority remains with the Ministerial party in the House, the balance of mental power—whether in close reasoning or in fluent speaking; whether in attack or defence; whether in political combination or Administrative action—is very decidedly in favor of the Opposition. This must tell in the long run, and, in the present case, has already told most conclusively both on the House and on the country. The Government party fight under that peculiar and oppressive disadvantage that most have experienced, when they strive without hope of victory. It is a half-hearted, spiritless, perfunctory mode of doing battle, and the only object is to ward off the hour of defeat as long as possible.

It is difficult to realize what must have been the feeling of poor Mr. Mackenzie as he sat there night after night, listened to the exposure of his misdeeds, the bringing to light of one dark and disgraceful job after another, the Conservative speakers following with unerring instinct his tortuous policy, and the dragging before the gaze of all those secret intrigues that he believed securely hidden, and by which he hoped to profit without peril to himself or party. Sir John Macdonald might have sat still without uttering a word and without even giving a suggestion, so ably has his lieutenants conducted the attack, and so completely have they been in every encounter. It must be a source of pride to him to see the ability, the eloquence, the judgment, with which the hon experienced party, and if so, we may safely regard it as being and his colleagues conducted the battle of the Opposition, and the dragging before the gaze of all those secret intrigues that he believed securely hidden, and by which he hoped to profit without peril to himself or party. Sir John Macdonald might have sat still without uttering a word and without even giving a suggestion, so ably has his lieutenants conducted the attack, and so completely have they been in every encounter. It must be a source of pride to him to see the ability, the eloquence, the judgment, with which the hon experienced party, and if so, we may safely regard it as being likely to prevail with the Emperor. Austria is as much opposed to the occupation of Constantinople as England is, and if the Government of the Emperor holds that the command of the Bosphorus by the troops of the Czar ought to be the signal for the different powers to drop their respective policies of neutrality, and unite to check the aggressive policy of Russia. The schemes of Russia as they gradually unfold themselves will call forth opposition from all quarters, and already this opposition is showing itself, even among those petty Provinces that were willing to aid the Czar in his attack on Turkey. The scheme involves a greater wickedness, and this seems to have led to the desired effect. Although many officers and men say that they saw dark objects moving about, at which they fired, I really do not believe that the enemy was seen clearly; of course, a remedy in future is to extend the distance of the cordon of guards, so as to prevent the approach of the torpedo fired by the enemy. I was standing on the dock of the flagship when one of these nasty things whizzed past. It seemed to be quite on the top of the water—its carriage near one of the iron-clads and went down unburst, the carriage being picked up.

On examining the three torpedoes which fell into the hands of the Turks they were found to be very heavy and unwieldy weapons, with a great deal of complicated machinery about them. They are loaded with about thirty-five pounds of gun-cotton. The length of the whole torpedo or waterrocket is seven feet two inches. To be able to launch such missiles at a distance of eight hundred or one thousand yards, or further more, we think they should arrive at their destination, or near to it, is a great object gained in torpedo warfare, but as none of them burst it is difficult to give an opinion on their efficiency. If they are, as they seem to be, only able to act on the surface of the water, an iron-clad would not be much injured by their contact.—London Times' Batoum Correspondence, December 31, 1877.

The Princes' Islands.

The little archipelago which has become so unexpectedly famous as the allotted station of the British fleet, lies at the northern extremity of the Sea of Marmora, some thirteen or fourteen miles distant from Constantinople itself, to which it forms, so to speak, a kind of porter's lodge. Of the three islands which compose it, Malta, the northernmost, is separated by a considerable breadth of water from Halki and Prinkipos, which backs together. The former of the air and the extreme beauty of the scenery have long since made all three a favorite resort for the merchants of the capital, and the group already holds the same relation to sultry, overcrowded, Constantinople as Brighton to London, Peterhof to St. Petersburg, or Staten Island to New York. The latter, indeed, bears a marked physical resemblance to Prinkipos, whose trim little pier, green, sunny slopes studded with white-balconied villas, and lofty, curving ridge overlooking the wide sweep of blue sea below, make it fully as well worth the attention of an artist as any of the countless "studies from nature" of the Italian coast.

But to their appreciation of the natural beauties of this charming spot, the Turks have willfully and unpardonably lost sight of its surpassing military importance. The short steam-boat voyage thither from Constantinople, with its exquisite panorama, and its picturesque concourse of all nations and all costumes—supply Greeks, dark-robed Armenians, florid Englishmen, sallow, beetle-browed Russians, portly Turks in red fezzes, olive-cheeked Dalmatians, and aquiline Jews—is a cherished recollection with every Eastern traveller, and one looks in vain for the formidable earth-works and bristling batteries which defend every mile of the Bosphorus. And this negligence is all the more heinous, inasmuch as nature has already done more than half the work herself. The Island of Prinkipos, with its steep, craggy ridges and tangled thickets, is a ready-made masked battery, wanting only common to complete it; and any one who has looked down upon the Sea of Marmora from the rocky heights now crowned by the Monastery of St. George must have seen at a glance what unsparing havoc a few heavy guns in so commanding a situation could deal with comparative impunity upon a hostile fleet below.

Such precautions, however, are wholly foreign to the short-sighted masters of the Bosphorus, though, in truth, could the teachings of experience avail so potent a moral, few lessons have been more sharply driven home. Seventy-two years ago the presence of a small English squadron at the Princes' Islands sufficed to throw the whole capital into a frenzy of helpless terror, and would have extorted the most humiliating concessions from the Sultan himself, but for the ingenious ruse by which the French Ambassador averted the threatened blow. But even such severe discipline as this has been spent in vain on the eight thousand choice books and manuscripts, in twenty different languages, the only valuable private library in Constantinople." His drawbacks are that he distrusts official confidence, and is not conciliatory.

The serious illness of Garibaldi makes it highly probable that the present year will witness the death of the trio of men who have been prominent in Italian public affairs during the past twenty years. Each of them has exercised an immense influence, and, though only one may be said to have succeeded in his aims, the work accomplished by the others will have its effect in molding the beliefs and the desires of Italians for several generations. Garibaldi is in many ways a greater man than was either the Pope or the King, as these owed their prominence in some degree to fortuitous circumstances, while with him every advance has been made in consequence of personal ability.

The London correspondent of the Spirit of the Times says of the last theatrical season:—"At the first theatrical society is talking about 'Diplomacy,' and seats are booked three weeks ahead. The Duke of Connaught went on Wednesday, and the Prince and Princess of Wales are going to-night. All the foreign ambassadors have been, and Schonvalof was seen in a stall laughing at the stage tricks of Russian diplomacy. Sardou is delighted. He has telegraphed his thanks, and he means to come to England to see 'Diplomacy.' The rights which have been secured for England and America by Mr. Hancroft will, no doubt, be quickly secured for New York."

The New York correspondent of the Boston Gazette excells his many rivals in writing gush about the theatres. He says that, while Modjeska was playing Camille, the prompter threw aside his book and wept, the lover buried his face in his handkerchief when behind the scenes and shed tears, the hard-hearted father was scarcely able from emotion to go through with his part, and even the scene shifters were affected. And the correspondent did not intend to be funny, as might be inferred.

THE SITUATION IN THE EAST.

There is nothing more that can be considered definite in respect to the war and the intervention of Great Britain. The English fleet have taken up a strong position in the Sea of Marmora, in front of Gallipoli, and some of the ships will immediately pass the Bosphorus. It is certainly a commanding position all along the coasts, and we have very little doubt that its effect will not be lost upon the Turkish Government, however under Russian influence they may have appeared disinclined to the intervention as to their safety against Turkish waters. What we lately said of Austria finding her safety and integrity identical with that of Great Britain, at least so far as respected the encroachments of Russian territorial aggrandizement, now appears to be the ruling principle in the Councils of Vienna; such is the view said to be held by Andrassy and if so, we may safely regard it as being likely to prevail with the Emperor. Austria is as much opposed to the occupation of Constantinople as England is, and if the Government of the Emperor holds that the command of the Bosphorus by the troops of the Czar ought to be the signal for the different powers to drop their respective policies of neutrality, and unite to check the aggressive policy of Russia. DOLLARS THAT ARE NOT DOLLARS.

The Bland Silver Bill has passed the U. S. Senate by a large majority, and bids fair to become actual law before many days. The experiment will then be entered upon of buying $100,000 each month to pay in silver coin of the value of 90¢. It is not likely that the enterprise will be successful, because those that have goods to sell will not sell them for less than they are worth, whether they are to receive gold or to receive silver. Aside from the suspicion it creates of an intention to defraud, the ultimate gain is very problematical. Some of the "bonanza" people—of whom Senator Jones is the representative—may manage to unload a few millions into the lags of the general public. But as soon as a plethora is felt the movement will be stopped, and it is quite certain that commercial needs do not require the presence of any very large amount of coin. Moreover, transactions take place in reference to commodities, and money is used only in settling up balances, generally of a small amount. Any legislature might pass a law declaring that a certain piece of land was a dollar. Yet we all know that such an enactment would be inoperative. So in the long run will be the attempt to make 94 cents do duty for 100 cents. It can be seen at a very evident that if the United States merchant has to pay a gold dollar for what he buys he cannot sell for a silver dollar worth from 6 to 10 cents less.

President George Thompson, of Robert College, in Constantinople, writes to the Independent that Achmet Vefik Pasha, the new Premier of the Turkish Ministry, who is decidedly the most remarkable public man in that country. "He is 60 years old," Mr. Thompson says, "with a remarkably fine head and intelligent face, which at times is absolutely radiant with fun and humor. His home is a little red house in the village of Bonmedi Hissar, on the Bosphorus, in which he lives with the simplicity of a Spartan; but his pride is his garden and library. No king was ever more proud of his jewels than he is of his plants and trees—all raised by himself from the seed, and including varieties from every part of the world. In this garden is his fireproof library, containing seven or eight thousand choice books and manuscripts, in twenty different languages, the only valuable private library in Constantinople." His drawbacks are that he distrusts official confidence, and is not conciliatory.

This is the way Bangor, Maine, gets around the Liquor law. No less than forty-two private clubs are in existence that buy stimulants wholesale and each member indulges therein proportionately to the amount of his subscription.

The two cent pieces were abolished five years ago.

There are five times as many one cent pieces used as threes.

Less than $10,000 of one cent pieces were coined last year.

No fives or threes (nickel) were coined last year for circulation.

The old-fashioned silver dollar has not been made for five years.

The shipping of silver coins from the mints began about a year ago.

Silver is purchased at the mint to a limited extent. It is paid for in gold.

Nickel and bronze coins are only made in the United States mint in this city.

The Eastern Republics and Western States take most of the nickel and bronze coins.

Double eagles are being made for the depositors there because they are more salable.

No silver is coined in subsidiary coin for depositors. The Government coins for itself alone.

In the South the people are now using one cent pieces and threes and fives very extensively.

Five times as many five cent pieces as ones are sent away, and five times as many ones as threes.

Two weeks ago nearly $300,000 in gold dollars were made for the sub-treasury department of New York.

There are lying in the depositories and vaults of the sub-Treasury in this city nearly $300,000 in five cent nickel pieces.

Five cent pieces are circulated considerably in New Orleans. Pennies were recently sent to the city, which were the first ever called for.

A large amount of the $38,000,000 in small coins circulated within the year was manufactured during the same period, and consequently the coins are new.

The Government has issued over $38,000,000 of small silver coins since the redemption of fractional currency began, and the market is fairly glutted with them.

The demand for one cent pieces has increased within the last three or four months, and the demand for fives has decreased. This is due to the issue of so many dimes.

In brisk times the mint pays out from $2,000 to $5,000 a day for the accommodation of people making change and for shipment through the country.

Nickel and bronze are kept at par by redeeming them in greenbacks. They are deposited in mint in sums of not less than $20, receipted for, and checks sent to the depositor.

No trade dollars have been made this year. Several millions were coined in 1877. Their coinage was suspended in December. They were only coined to a limited extent for circulation.

No silver five cent pieces have been made for five years. In fact they have been abolished, as well as the silver three cent pieces. The nickel threes are still issued, although but few are used.

From $5,000 to $10,000 of eagles, half eagles, quarter eagles and $3 pieces are made every year, in order to keep up the history of the coin. About $9,000 of ones are made annually for the same purpose.

The mint stopped over the country in 1876 about $500,000 in small coins, consisting of one, three and five cent pieces. They went chiefly West and East. In 1877 only about $285,000 in these small coins were shipped.

The authorities of the mint can feel the pulse of business by the amount of coin sent in for redemption. If business is falling off the redemption is large. When it is steady the redemption moves along at the rate of about $500 a day.

The greatest demand for silver coins is for the half dollar. The quarter dollar is the second favorite, and the dime is the third and last in the list. The demand for half dollars is twice as great as for quarters, and five times more halves are required than dimes.

Although more trade dollars were coined from April, 1873, to December, 1877, than were coined of the dollar of the fathers for the eighty-one years preceding, it does not follow that the trade dollar is popular. The trade dollar was intended for the China trade, and nearly all that have been coined have gone to China, Japan and India.

Separation.

A wall ere up between the two,
A stout, thick wall, though all unseen;
None knew when the first stones were laid,
But by the wall was built, I ween.

And by their lives were quite apart,
Although they shared one board, one bed;
No eye saw any sundering dart,
Yet each was to the other dead.

Each absorbed in work or pleasure gain,
Grew soon unmindful of his loss;
Heart hardened as were those in stone
Changed love's fine gold to worthless dross.

So suffered tortures all unfelt;
And while years wore, they strove to die;
The wall pressed heavy on her breast,
But while here showed her misery.

Their walls are growing day by day,
Twixt soul and soul, twixt friend and friend;
Both they could know, were lightly build,
How sad and bitter is the end!

A careless word, an unkind thought,
A slight neglect, a taunting tone,
Have laid the wall's foundation stone.

Alone, dear, in the next."

And till and too, I sometimes think
I'd change my chance for this.

His love is sterling, of the earth—
Mine is Platonic, skyey—
But, dear, he's in possession,
I'm put on view die."

ONLY A CLOD.

BY MISS M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Aurora Floyd," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Outcast," Etc.

"Tims missed Mr. Lowther, while he murmured some commonplace remark upon the beauty of the afternoon, and dropped himself lazily into a seat near Madeline Vavasour. He was gone to his studio of the night before, and during the intervening period untimely to Maude and herself. He chid himself for having, under the vivacious Rose, he did so in a manner that was a delicate admixture of the banalities of one of poor Miss Broughton's heroes with the lively banter of a Benedick. The result of this policy was triumphant, and the market gardener's daughter plunged deeper and deeper under her five-and-twentieth hopeless attachment.

While Mr. Lowther the elder was cultivating his friendship with the literary person, Mr. Lowther the younger was paying his court to Frances Tredethlyn. Whether he succeeded in making her happy, in so happy frame of mind. Imagine the feelings of a Mephistopheles who begins to suspect that his victim has slipped away from him. Harcourt was beginning to feel very desirous as to the firmness of his hold on his pupil and companion.

Francis Tredethlyn's conduct for the last few weeks had quite baffled his friend's investigation. The Dalesbank had grown suddenly preoccupied and reserved. He might still be seen in the vicinity of the Bohemians, for Harcourt Lowther could not easily extricate himself from the meshes in which he had allowed to be twisted about him; but Francis, always unwilling to be led into the scenes where he found no pleasure, was more unwilling than ever, and Harcourt Lowther found it very difficult to play the game he wanted to play without showing his cards. He had been a mere passive spectator of nothing so many feathers from an innocent pigeon, the thing might have been done easily enough, reasoned Mr. Harcourt Lowther, evidently wanted spiritless victim, but he had quite the pluck to struggle, and not so if he would be satisfied with nothing less than the utter ruin and degradation of Maude Tredethlyn's husband.

Dodley, walking up and down the stony, whose front stately, great windows commanded all the country, and whose quadrangle and the roofs and chimneys of a manor, Harcourt thought very despondently of that grand scheme to which he had devoted so patiently, which his return, to England.

"What secret is the fellow hiding from me?" he thought, resentfully; "he refused to dine with me to-day, and he dined with the party I made for Greenwich the day before yesterday. He has made up his book for the York summer, and yet he is less at home than ever. What does it all mean? Can he have made the had in real earnest at last, and without any help from me? There must be something in it; that's why is the something?"

Tired at last of such meditations as these, Harcourt Lowther flung himself into a chair to write the letter he had talked about to Mr. Tredethlyn. Before he had finished it, Maude entered the study.

He wrote his note, which was very brief, and the gist of which was to remind Francis of an engagement which would entail the most pleasure upon the visitor, the usual quakering of money for the gratification of worthless society in which a few innocent pigeons abandon themselves to be plucked without mercy by every species of predatory fowl. After having written this little note, so carefully worded that any eye might read, he tightly folded, sealed, and directed it, and then

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 18TH.

Meeting of Petersville Council.

Annual Dinner of Knights of Pythias, at City Hotel.

Art Exhibition at the Mechanics' Hall.

PETITION FOR RE-APPOINTMENT.—At the last quarterly meeting of the Board of the Petersville Methodist Church, it was unanimously resolved to ask the London Conference to reappoint the Rev. J. E. Lancelley to that station.

CONTRACTS AWARDED.—The following have received the contracts for supplying the undermentioned vehicles to the Protestant Orphans' Home during the ensuing year:—Groceries, Fitzgerald & Co.; meat, D. Sinclair; bread, Geo. McDowell; coal, W. Bowman & Co.

STOCK GOLD.—The stock of jewellery of Louis Von Gunter, Chatham, who is still confined in the London Asylum, has been disposed of by the Assignee in accordance with the wishes of his creditor, Gruntner, the Toronto jeweller, one of the heaviest creditors, was the purchaser.

NEW CHURCH OPENING.—At Aylmer yesterday, the new Presbyterian place of worship, in Stewart Block, was dedicated, Rev. A. Bonner, of Ingersoll, preaching the opening sermon. The room has been very conveniently fitted up, and seats comfortably about 200 persons. There was a large attendance.

CANADIANS ABROAD.—The following Canadians registered their names in London during the week ending 3rd inst.:—J. F. Mackinnon, Toronto; T. Thompson, Toronto; E. Dubrie, Montreal; Thomas S. T. Smilie, M.D., Fergus, Ont.; D. S. Campbell, M.D., Hamilton; John Hicks, R.N., Halifax; Dr. Hague, Montreal; Miss E. A. Bilbrough, Belleville.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—On Saturday forenoon a horse attached to a cutter ran away on Talbot street and turned into King street. When opposite the Market House, a woman named Mrs. Winters, from the neighborhood of Hyde Park, was knocked down by the infuriated animal, and received severe injuries, so serious that she had to be removed to Baldwell's Hotel, and attended by a medical gentleman.

DONATIONS ACKNOWLEDGED.—The trustees of the Protestant Orphans' Home gratefully acknowledge the following contributions for the month of January:—Mrs. Green, a doz. sponge cake, five doz. oranges and some onions; Mrs. Hyman, wine for an aged invalid, and beef; Mrs. Edward Harris, comforters, cuffs and shawls; Mrs. Webster, one doz. teaspoons; Mrs. Cairncross, two bags carrots, one bag parsnips and beets; Mr. Goss, buns and bread; Mr. Fitzsimmons, fourteen pairs of socks; Mr. John Monie, four jowls and one ham.

APPOINTMENT OF COUNTY CONSTABLES.—We are glad to hear that the magistrates of the County are concerting means by which to get a better method for appointing County constables. It has been found that at times much trouble has arisen in consequence of the nominations of inferior officers, through the recommendation of some Magistrate who evidently attached little importance to the office. This has led to the action now about taken. It is also hinted that several constables in the County are dissatisfied with the present system of remuneration, and that a petition will be presented to the Council at its next session asking for an increase of salary.

FIRE—NARROW ESCAPE.—On Saturday night, shortly before eleven o'clock, the alarm was given from No. 4 box (Central Station), fire having been discovered to have broken out in Stewart & Co.'s implement manufactory, Fullarton street. The brigade were speedily in attendance, but by a copious supply of water the flames were got under by the time of its arrival, but little damage having been done. The fire originated in the woodwork around the cupola, which had been, it is supposed, slightly overheated during the casting process just before the cessation of work for the day.

GRAND YOUNG BRITONS.—The Grand Lodge of Orange Britons coincided its labors at Ottawa last Friday evening. The next annual meeting will be held in London. The following officers have been elected:—W. G. Gibson, Toronto, Grand Master; Hamilton Cassels, Montreal, Deputy; Peter Arnott, Toronto, Secretary; Frank Lloyd, Toronto, Treasurer; Robt. McAulay, Ottawa, Chaplain; W. E. Milligan, Toronto; D. of C.; W. Robinson, jr., Kingston, Lecturer; W. Brodie, Quebec, 1; Tyler; A. McCurdy, Port Hope, O. Tyler; E. C. Grant, Ottawa, and T. R. Fry, Toronto, Associate Grand Lecturers; A. Peacock, Ottawa, Associate D. G. M.; W. A. Walker, Thorold, Associate Treasurer; R. Freeland, Kingston, Associate Secretary; W. H. James, Hamilton, Associate D. of C.; W. T. Heaslip, Gananoque, Associate Chaplain.

THE BELMONT SCANDAL.—The Belmont husband and wife's scandal is far from being at an end. In fact, it is assuming more and more extraordinary proportions, giving rise to a great deal of gossip amongst those who profess to know all about it. The other day we chronicled the fact that N. G. Woodworth, hotel keeper, had arrested on a capias, at the instance of E. J. Harris, surgeon-dentist, lately of Belmont, but now of this city, it being alleged that he was about to leave for the States to avoid the action brought against him to recover damages for crim. con. with plaintiff's wife. The latest phase of the embroglio came out on Saturday night, when Woodward laid information before Squire Jones, charging Harris with being in league with the wife to rob him of $400, with which he meant to leave for the States. Harris was arrested on Saturday night, and bailed to appear to answer the charge. It looks as if it were a case of tit for tat.

LOCAL NOTICES.

BLIZZ.—This is the subject of a lecture to be delivered by Mr. W. H. C. Kerr, M.A., of Brantford, in the Lecture Hall of the Queen's Avenue Methodist Church to-morrow (Tuesday) evening, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Kerr lectured in this city a year ago, and his remarks were so well received that the following motion was moved by Rev. J. Lancley, seconded by Mr. Rock, Q. C., and carried :—That this audience desire to express its appreciation of the practical value of such a brilliant lecture as it has been ours to hear to-night, and must express our deep regret that few enjoyed the benefit of its presentation, and in expressing our sincere thanks to the lecturer to-night for what we feel free to call a highly finished and richly-laden embodiment of the most precious truths, we would request that Mr. Kerr should be pleased to visit us again at an early date, and repeat this lecture to an audience more worthy of its lessons."

THE CHAMPION MINSTRELS.—It is not often our citizens are treated to a first-class minstrel entertainment free from coarse jests and ribald jokes, and on that account the lovers of a good performance should make a point of attending that of Barlow, Wilson, Primrose & West's Minstrels at the Mechanics' Hall to-morrow (Tuesday) evening. Apart from the fact that Mr. Primrose, one of the proprietors, is a native Londoner, and has hosts of friends here, we commend the company for their originality, sparkling wit and harmless pleasantries. No doubt the Hall will be crowded. Seats secured at Murray's.

MATINEE.—The Rev. Dr. Sanderson, one of the ablest ministers of the Methodist Church in Canada, is announced to deliver a lecture in the New Brighton Church this (Monday) evening on "Methodism, its Rise and Progress." The Dr. is too well-known here to require "puffing" at our hands, and as the subject is one calculated to interest all, we hope to see the church crowded on the occasion.

Pulpit Pabulum.

Professor McLaren on Personal Religion.

Rev. J. Edmunds Addresses the Foresters.

Other Religious Services Yesterday.

PROFESSOR M'LAREN AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH.

Rev. Professor McLaren, of Toronto, occupied the pulpit of St. Andrew's Church yesterday. In the forenoon he preached an eloquent and persuasive discourse from the passage in the 16th chap. of the Acts, which describe the conversion of Lydia and the jailor. The preacher remarked that the importance of correct views of the nature of personal religion must be felt by all who recognise this world as a place of preparation for another state of existence. There are substantially three views of the nature of personal religion which obtain in nominal Christendom in the world. The first is the sacramental, requiring a belief that saving grace was bestowed by Christ on the disciples, and then handed down to the bishops and priests, and that it is only necessary to believe this, and partake in Church ordinances, to be saved. The second theory is that of the formalist, who regards religion as a means of ameliorating society—a method to draw out of men the good that is in them, and to repress or curb any of those wayward failings, which somehow do make their appearance in the best regulated families. It proceeds on a denial of the utter depravity of the human heart. When the question is asked, "What must I do to be saved?" these formalists will say, "Be good citizens; go to church; don't lie, cheat, steal, or break any of the laws, and when you come to die God will be merciful, and all will be well." The third view is the evangelical view of personal religion. It proceeds on the basis that men are totally depraved by nature, which, however, does not mean that they are not so bad but that they can become worse; but the theory is that they will never of themselves become better. They are all sinners, and they cannot save themselves, or do anything which will even conduce to that end. Their salvation must come from some source without. It also recognizes the fact that men are regenerated by the special grace of the Holy Spirit working in them. Not, however, without external appliances. It also recognizes the fact that Christ took upon himself our nature, and died that salvation might be assured us. Everything turns upon your personal interest in Christ. People were apt to be misled in regard to their personal religion by a sentiment—a plentiful shedding of tears—a wringing of hands, and other demonstrations. But God . . . the Peacemaker, of men. . . was in them according to the scriptures which He has given them, and the position which He thinks them to fill in the world. In a great Cathedral, which I have seen, there are ten thousand niches, each of which is so constructed that it can only receive a certain kind of statuette. So it is in the World. God has a niche which He intends each of us to occupy, and which only we can fill. Take John Bunyan, for example. Read the history of his wonderful life, and who can deny that his life thus shaped was exactly that which that wonderful book, which has been read by more than one million by thousands of thousands, not only in the English, but in many other languages, and has been the means of doing incalculable good, and will continue to be so till the end of the world. No man can take the experience of Mr. Spurgeon's Christian as a test by which to judge of his own personal experience. We must take our standard from the Word of God. There is a use which we make of Christian biography, but to what always use it is in subjugation of the Bible. But there is this to be noticed, in connection with this matter:—That while the experience of no two Christians are to be found alike in details, they will, in their great essentials, be found to correspond. As the leaves on the oak tree are different when looked at one by one, yet they are all of the same type, so it is with the Christian. In contrasting the different methods pursued to bring about the salvation of Lydia and the jailor, the preacher spoke of faith at some length, stating that a man only had faith in Christ in that he is willing to be saved, and that he cannot save himself. Do not let the sacramentalist or the formalist beguile you into a belief that anything short of the personal interest in Christ will make you safe; if you trust to their statements, you will be building your house on the sand. Build on the Rock of Ages, and then when the storm comes, your house will stand.

SERMON TO THE FORESTERS.

The annual sermon to the Foresters, was delivered by Rev. J. Edmunds in Grace M. E. Church yesterday afternoon. A large number of the members of the Order were in attendance, representing the various Courts of the city. The rev. gentleman took for his text, Galatians 1st chap., 2nd verse, "Bear ye one another's burden and so fulfil the law of Christ." At the outset he gave a description of the qualities one has it to be found throughout England during the time of the Barons, the illustration being to show the selfish nature of that people at that age. A change had, however, taken place since that time, and such organization as the Foresters were intended to extermination narrow contracted feelings, which are injurious to any country, as exhibited in the history of Britain. He further showed the advantage of union, for by such means they can more easily make their influence felt. He spoke of the personal influence which can be exerted by every member of his own private sphere, and cautioned his hearers at some length to all the need of the attainment of wrong ideas concerning them. He would ask them while on their mission of relief, not to forget the spiritual condition of those with whom they came in contact. There was a wide field for the advancement of morality by them individually and as a society. The rev. sermon, which was listened attentively to throughout, embraced many words of encouragement to the Foresters in their charitable mission as a benevolent society.

RED RIBBON MOVEMENT.

Rev. J. E. Rose, B. A. and Chaplain of the Red Ribbon Reform Club, delivered an and impressive discourse at the hall of the Club last evening, his subject being taken from the 29th, 30th and 31st verses of 23rd chapter of Proverbs. This association is doing a good work, and the hall at those Sunday evening lectures is always crowded.

ST. GEORGE SOUTH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Rev. Mr. Williams, from Bermuda, preached yesterday. In the forenoon, he chose for the foundation of his remarks Psalms xxxii., verses 1 and 2, and Romans iv., verses 7 and 8. His discourse was an eminently practical one.

Police Court Rencillings.

SATURDAY—L. LAVERSON, Esq., P. M., Presiding

John McGinnis, alias Edmonds, was charged with being drunk. He was allowed another opportunity of changing his name.

Edward Cole was found guilty of stealing Laura Phoenix's ring, and sentenced to twenty-one days' imprisonment.

James Barnhart was caught by P. C. Weir at 2 o'clock this morning stealing a stick of cordwood from a pile belonging to Mr. J. W. Smyth. He was in his stockings when caught, and probably has been in the habit of doing so for some time past. Considering that the defendant maintained he only intended borrowing the wood for a short time, and because Mr. Smyth did not appear to prosecute, the P. M. allowed him to go.

A BOLD BURGLARY.—During Saturday night one or more persons entered the residence of Mr. John Kitchen, on King street, and stole therefrom a large quantity of provisions. It appears that an entrance was effected by raising one of the cellar windows, and that the thieves were not disturbed during their operations. A roast of beef, a tub of butter, a three-gallon jar of native wine, fowls, a ham and other provisions were removed from the place. In all probability the thieves took advantage of the snow storm which prevailed on Sunday morning to commit the burglary and cover up their tracks. No clue has been obtained.

A Workman Drawn to Slow Death by Resistless Suction

ALL EFFORTS TO EXTRICATE HIM VAIN.

New York, March 11.—A more tragical death than that of John Willenbacher, an unfortunate workman, who was suffocated in the vats of bone-black at Brooklyn refinery on Saturday, can scarcely be imagined. He was in bone-black falling in driblets through a hole in the bottom of the vat into a retort had a resistless motion, he was drawn into the surface of the bone-black. Willenbacher was sucked down slowly, as though by a carousel. In death, Men ran from every part of the refinery, and the foreman, Peter Lacey, was overcome by the easily began. Nothing could stop the ceaseless downward suction of the bone-black. Willenbacher sank until the lower part of his face was hidden. His comrades shouted cheering words to him, and threw planks across the surface of the bone-black, the bravest ventured out upon them. They reached the bone-black from above Willenbacher's shoulders, and, grasping him, tugged to pull him out, but they could not stir him. He seemed to be unconscious from suffocation. A block was rigged upon a tripod, and men grasped the tackle, but they did not move Willenbacher. Meanwhile, the bone-black was rising around him, and soon it was impossible to see his face. "PAY UP LIKE A GENTLEMAN."

It is not much use in supplying this gentle admonition to our astute cousins on the South. If ever they do pay, and we think that eventually they will, it is already evident they will not—"Pay up like a gentleman." There has already been too much grumbling, too many schemes of evasion broached, and too many causes suggested why payment should not be made, for the final settlement to be arrived at with that grace and international courtesy that should obtain in such questions. As nearly all these reasons that have been advanced why this award should not be held binding upon the United States Government, reflects less or more upon the honor of the arbitrators, such remarks should have been studiously avoided, unless the men in power had determined from the first to repudiate the agreement and disavow any action of the third arbitrator. Surely a little common sense might have taught these American legislators, that an investigation into the character of Mr. Delfosse and the propriety of his appointment is quite out of place now, since he has been permitted to act in this capacity, to hear the evidence adduced on both sides, to discuss the force and merits of this evidence, and with his colleagues come to a conclusion regarding the decision which ought to be drawn from it. Besides no new revelations have been made, and no new facts have been brought to light regarding this man, or his character, his honor, or his independence, to show why he is less entitled to the confidence of the people of the United States to-day, than when they appointed him a member of the Halifax Commission.

It is almost amusing to see and consider the ingenuity with which the Americans can discover causes which would justify them in refusing to make good to Canada the amount of the fisheries award. One party of diplomats assume the ground that the Treaty of Washington never intended that the award, when given, should be final, but that in order to make it operative and of the nature of a judgment, legislative action was necessary. That all the Fisheries Commissioners were empowered to do was to recommend or report a certain method of settlement which should form the basis of legislation on the subject, and thus lead up to a final decision. But we have still another class of potent, grave and reverend seigniors, who maintain that to make the award binding, it would have been necessary that this award should have been unanimous, and not that of a simple majority. But it does not require much acuteness to perceive that if the former be correct and legislation is necessary to legalize the action of the Commission, unanimity is of no consequence whatever. But if unanimity would have made the award final and binding, then legislation cannot be necessary for the same purpose. These two sets of objectors only destroy each other's premises and leave nothing behind.

Another reason why this award should not be considered final and binding on the United States is the pretence, only a pretence now, at all events, that after the payment of these five millions and a half of dollars Canada might still make the rights of the Americans illusory, by charging them their own price for bait, ice, and other supplies. When this was struck out of the record by the arbitrators as not provided for among the particulars referred to them by the terms of the treaty, it no doubt lessened the claims of the Canadians very much, and circumscribed the grounds upon which they looked for a large award from the decision of the Commissioners. Many Canadians thought that it would be competent for this country to seek a fair equivalent for these advantages from some other source when the Commission ignored this claim, but the desire for peaceful relations and the cultivation of amicable feelings prevailed, and no intention now remains to prosecute the matter any further until the expiration of the term through which the treaty has yet to run.

Equally as sea are those who would oppose the settlement of the award on the grounds that Canada wishes through this award to force a commercial reciprocity upon an unwilling people. Canadians are willing to have free trade relations with the United States, but they are not willing to pay for a treaty that would confer as much advantage on the one country as the other. If the Americans have heard that Senator Brown is going back to Washington to convert another clerk in the Bureau of Statistics, and spend these five and a half millions in manipulating a treaty of the kind, the best thing they can do is to disabuse their minds of any notions of the kind. Mr. Brown's last attempt at negotiation was neither so creditable to this country, so creditable to the man himself, nor so much in the interest of Canada, had his efforts been crowned with success, as to induce us to send him on such a mission again, with or without the power to spend the amount of the fisheries award.

But we have no doubt the Americans will think better of it, and "pay up like a gentleman." They will recollect how the British Government met all the hostile verdicts rendered against them in every arbitration. They will recollect that, of the sum awarded them in the Geneva Arbitration, one-half still lies in the hands of the Washington authorities, for which no claimants can be found under the conditions in which the money was paid. They will recollect that this money was promptly and cheerfully paid, though there was more than one gunboat in that case than in the present. We doubt not, therefore, that Jonathan "will pay like a gentleman."

There was an extraordinary scene in the course of the recent trial of the Nihilists in St. Petersburg. A prisoner named Mischkin complained of the merciless illusage and torture to which he had been forced to submit for two years. According to his statement, during the prolonged examination, forty-three of the one hundred and eighty prisoners had died from natural causes, twelve had committed suicide, and twenty-eight had gone mad. He denounced the proceedings as a miserable farce. At these words the judge jumped up and gave orders that the prisoner should be at once removed. An officer of the gendarmes promptly seized Mischkin, but at the same time two other prisoners rushed to the aid of the latter, and a hand-to-hand fight ensued, in which the officer had to contend against the three. Mischkin continued in a louder key to rail against the court and the judges. At last a gag was forced into his mouth, and he, with his fellow-prisoners, was dragged out of the chamber. A terrible tumult ensued in the court. Many women, some of them wives of the prisoners, fainted or went into hysterics, and loud curses were heard. The prisoners, officials, spectators, and gendarmes were involved in a riotous struggle, but eventually a detachment of soldiers succeeded in clearing the place.

The preparations for war in England go on apace. Ninety thousand tons of steam coal have been ordered in the South Wales district, to add to Mediterranean and other stores. Another Turkish iron-clad, making the third, has been taken off the hands of the builders for £400,000. Her burden is 5,349 tons, and she will require a ship's crew of 800 officers and men. The Invincible, one of the most powerful ships afloat, has made her trial trip. She is to carry 80-ton guns. Orders for 150,000 Martini-Henry rifles are being distributed among a number of private firms. Private offers continue to take stores to the Cape of Good Hope. Another 100 tons of miscellaneous stores have been sent from the Royal Arsenal at Gibraltar. The Royal Lanarkshire Volunteers have offered their services for garrison duty. The Royal Monmouthshire Militia have volunteered for foreign service. Other volunteer forces are holding meetings to consider what offers they shall make of their services to the Government. The volunteer review at Easter will be on an unusually extended scale.

The wine trade of Australia, which was rapidly developing into a great business, has received a rude shock by the discovery of the phylloxera in the vineyard of Victoria. The climate of Australia being exactly suited to that insect pest, it is probable that its ravages will extend till the vineyards have been annihilated. The Victorian Parliament is legislating with all its force against the phylloxera, but we are afraid it might as well legislate against the wind. It is more than probable that the only remedy likely to be successful will be that adopted in France—of importing from this continent stocks of hardy native vines, which have such an abundance of rootlets that they can, and do, bid defiance to the pest. Canada could supply such stocks by the million.

With some enthusiasm, the Herald of Health tells of a large man who lived for a month off seven cents' worth of fruit and farinaceous food a day, coming out of the experiment with increased weight and improved health. Only it is admitted that at the end of the month he returned to beefsteak as the ordinary food with renewed zest. Seven cents' worth of farinaceous food may keep a human being alive, and $1.58 may pay for a student's washing for a whole year, but it is too much like the idiotic passion some persons have for making themselves uncomfortable on a wager, for walking a thousand miles in a thousand minutes, or standing on one foot so many hours without going to sleep, and that sort of thing.

In response to an inquiry as to the rule of the Protestant Episcopal Church respecting the attendance of communicants at public balls and theatres, Bishop Badell quotes at length from former bishops and pastoral addresses of the church and from the proceedings of General Conventions, and concludes as follows:—

"It is not easy to draw the line which separates public from private amusements, or objectionable from those which are permissible. But 'gaming,' 'horse racing,' 'public balls' and the 'theatre,' have been declared by the church to be objectionable, and are forbidden to communicants; and as to others, a communicant, and especially a young communicant, will do well to keep within the safeguards of home life and of that social circle which is frequented and adorned by a parent's presence."

The feelings of the wading mariner who, seeing a bottle borne toward him by the flowing tide, thought it was sherry, hoped it was rum, and on uncorking it found a tract, can be imagined, says the London World, by those who, receiving a light-green envelope addressed in a delicate, slim handwriting, with "Grosvenor place" on the seal, think it may be a mysterious portlet, hope it is an invitation for dinner, and find it is an appeal from the Duke of Northumberland on behalf of the Seamen's Hospital.

Capt. Bone, of the Canada Southern ferry transfer, accounts for the choking up of the St. Clair river with ice at the Grand Trunk crossing at Fort Huron by the fact that the ice from Georgian Bay, and other parts of Lake Huron, has been driven by the prevailing winds into the strait. Heretofore the ice has come down in wide floes and usually arched upon the shores above the head of the river; but this season the floes have been broken smaller and drifted into the river.

High ritual is on the increase in London. Thirty-nine churches now celebrate the daily communion, against eleven in 1851; three hundred and forty have surpliced choirs, against one hundred and fourteen; thirty-five have eucharistic vestments, against twenty-three; nine display candles on the altar, and since 1867 the use of incense has been extended from three churches to sixteen.

There is little joking nowadays at militia short-comings, and a writer in the Broad Arrow recalls that the armies of Edward III., that shattered the chivalry of France, were militia; that the Wars of the Roses were fought by militia; that Burgoyne, at Saratoga, with his regulars, surrendered to an army chiefly of militia; and that large numbers of British militia fought at Waterloo.

OUR PARK.

We are glad to see that the Park Committee have resolved to do something towards making these grounds an ornament to the city instead of an eye-sore as at present. The grounds themselves are excellent, beautifully situated, convenient to the great mass of the citizens for pleasure or recreation, and require only a little assistance from art to make a park of which the people of London may well be proud. What is to see to what better purpose the proceeds of the Park property across the river could be put, when these proceeds come into the hands of the Council, than to lay out and embellish the grounds we have within the city. So long as this Park remains in its present bare and unattractive condition, it is of no earthly use to the citizens, unless to such as have fast horses and wish to exhibit their paces to horsey admirers, or as a training ground for base-ball athletes, or enthusiastic cricketers. All these may be commendable, and we have not a word to say against them, but we do say that the idea of a City Park is something widely different from such scenes as these. One cannot help combining with the notion of a park, scenes of coolness and quiet, trees, shrubs and flowers, fountains and shady walks, and a moderate degree of seclusion at the same time. Now, would any one dream of finding these refreshing accessories or any one of them, in our exposed, parched, and sun-burnt grounds, in which there is not as much shade as would cover a piping cicada, and where a mother or a nurse would take a child or a grown of children with no other view than to have them baked in a broiling sun! If the grounds are not worth the cost of laying out, of ornamenting and keeping in a state of repair, better let them remain as they are, or sell them, and pass a vote of censure on Mr. Carling and Sir John Macdonald for having imposed such a costly boon upon the city. The Council instead of a rebuke should receive compliments and votes of thanks for extravagance are entitled to the gratitude of the citizens for the liberal view they took of the Park Committee's report, and for supplying them with the means of providing for such costly improvements. We must confess to some disappointment as respects the course pursued by Ald. Campbell, whose views are generally sound and progressive, and why he should have opposed a measure, which will add so much to the beauty and salubrity of the city, and which will render it so much more attractive to intending settlers among us—is difficult to understand. And why the proffered assistance of Mr. Saunders, whose taste and skill in laying out grounds is another mystery to the writer, instead of by only a majority, however large, is another mystery to the writer, instead of by only a majority, however large, is another mystery to the writer, instead of by only a majority, however large,

ONLY A CLOD.

BY MISS M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Aurora Floyd," "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Outcast," Etc.

The letter thus lated had arrived at the lawyers' office after business hours; and when Mr. Kursdale opened it next morning there was little doubt that the Kingfisher was engaged bound with Francis Tredethlyn, on board her. Maude made a confidant of her husband's solicitors. A family lawyer is a kind of father confessor in the matter of secrets, and has generally outlived the capacity of surprise as completely as those imperturbable disciples of St. Ignatius Loyola who are irreverently entitled "screws." The lawyer's wife told Mr. Kursdale that Francis had left home in consequence of a slight misunderstanding—(was any conjugal quarrel ever yet described by the belligerents as anything more than a slight misunderstanding?)—and she implored him to assist her in bringing about her husband's speedy return.

"But do you think he has really sailed—she asked—"do you think he can have been so cruel as to leave England without even giving me the opportunity of imploring him to remain?"

Mr. Kursdale shook his head gravely.

"There is nothing in his letter to me which indicates indifference to your wishes," he said; "it is only a business letter; but in a practical way it is the most considerate evidence of a husband's devotion that ever came to my knowledge. We lawyers are a matter of fact set of men, and we are apt to form our own conclusions in a matter of fact way. What other people would treat as an affair of sentiment, we look at as an affair of figures and I must say, Mrs. Tredethlyn, that gauged by that standard, your husband comes out strong."

"But I want him to come back to me," Maude exclaimed, simply. "I don't want to be rich—or to live like a woman of fashion. He wrongs me most cruelly when he thinks that I married him for his money. I married him because he was good to my father. Do you think I would accept the income which that letter places at my disposal, knowing that my husband has left his native country because of me? Tell me what I am to do, Mr. Kursdale. I know that Mr. Tredethlyn is unhappy, and that a few words from me would set all right. What am I to do?"

"We must try to send him the few words, my dear Mrs. Tredethlyn," answered the lawyer, cheerfully. "South America is not so very far off nowadays, and you know that even in Alexander Pope's time a sigh might be wafted from Indus to the Pole, by means of ocean postage. We'll get your husband home, Mrs. Tredethlyn as soon as the improvements of modern science will allow, you may depend upon it. Shall I send the letter you enclosed to me the other day? Perhaps you would like to add something to it—another postscript, eh? Ladies have such a penchant for postscripts," said the lawyer, lapsing into mild facetiousness, which he imagined to be of an eminently consolatory character. There are people who believe that a feeble joke is an infallible specific for a deeply-rooted grief.

"I will send a clerk off to Plymouth by the next train," said Mr. Kursdale, with his hand upon the spring of a little bell beside him. He spoke as coolly as if he had been talking of sending a clerk over the way. "If by any chance Kingfisher has not sailed when the young man arrives, your husband will have the letter before dark. If the Kingfisher has sailed, the letter must be sent on by the next mail. At the worst, Mr. Tredethlyn will be back in six or seven weeks."

In six or seven weeks! It seemed a very long time; but on receiving the lawyer's letter and assuming her husband's departure, Maude had fancied that he was lost to her for ever. With what wonderful intelligence can prescience infer the value of any thing we have lost! In your daily walks, O modest collector of the humble treasures you will see a little bit of china, a picture, an agreeable spoon, a quaint old volume in a shop-window—and you will say, "What a cheap and bargain for it some day when you have leisure and money to spare!" Perhaps you are different as to its merits, half uncertain whether it is worth buying; but you discover some day that it is gone and then in a moment the doubtful shopbordeau becomes the rarest old Sèvres, the dingy little bit of landscape an undeniable Crome, the battered silver spoon of unquestionable antiquity, the quaintly-bound book a Caxton or Elzevir. The thing is lost; and we regret it for all that it might have been, as well as for all it was, and there are no bounds to the extravagance we would commit to regain the chance of possessing it.

It was nothing more than this fashion, perhaps, that Mrs. Tredethlyn regretted her husband as she drove home disconsolately after her interview with the lawyer, to await the result of his clerk's journey. She would have gone to Plymouth, if she could have done any better than the wise counsel of her friend. But that she was infallibility any where was a thing not to be found in the office of an old-established solicitor, and she thought that Mr. Kursdale's accredited agent could not fail to effect some good.

Her disappointment was very bitter the next day when she received a note from the solicitor, declining her visit, as Kingfisher had sailed twelve hours before the clerk arrived at Plymouth.

After this Maude could only await the result of her letter. Six or seven weeks seemed such a weary time as she looked forward to it; and it might be as long as that, or even longer, before any tidings from Francis could reach her. She may be in her grave, to her sorrowful heart, but though, to her received hopes, unfortunately, she could see that he blamed her severely for the folly which had driven Francis Tredethlyn from his home.

She would have gone to stay at the Cedars; but she had a fear of meeting Mrs. Rolfe on the spot to receive any possible communication from her husband, so she remained at the Stuccoville mansion; though her neighbors were daily departing.

Mrs. Tredethlyn was very glad to see London growing empty; but before the acquaintances departed, she found it a good time to discuss her husband's disappearance and her own sudden withdrawal from society. The fact of that withdrawal understanding had become patent to all Stuccoville, and had assumed every possible and impossible complexion in fortnightly debates. So Maude stood listlessly at one of the windows in her spacious boudoir, shadowed by the voluminous curtains and looked dreamily at a long line of family-parties driving away to railway stations. Other people always seem so happy. The lives of those smiling Stuccoville neighbors must have been unclouded in their serenity; but Maude watched them very sadly, remembering how she and her husband might have been starting on the twilight for the Dover mail like that merry young couple from the house over the way.

Surely she must have loved him very dearly, or she scarcely could have regretted him so much. If she had been questioned as to the real state of her feelings on this point, she could not have given any clear reply to the questioning. She only knew that her husband had been very good to her, and that she had repaid his devotion with neglect and indifference. Maude had been a spoiled child: it must be remembered, and there may have been something of a spoiled child's useless remorse in her penitence; but she was penitent. All her life for the last year had been crowded with proofs of Francis Tredethlyn's unbounded love; and, looking back upon them, she could not remember one instance in which she had been sufficiently grateful for his affection.

An Invention Much Required.

Trials were recently made at the Newburn Steelworks of Messrs. John Spencer & Sons, Newcastle-on-Tyne, of a new form of overplate, the invention of Mr. Richard Harrison, C. E. The great advantages of this invention are that by means of it wagons can be coupled or uncoupled without any person having to pass between them, and that no person is required to ride upon the sides of the wagon, and it has no springs or catches and requires no oil. The operation of uncoupling or coupling consists in simply turning a handle on the side of the wagon.

In the Warrington poisoning case, at the Chester Assizes, England, lately, Mr. Justice Lush said that the murder, if it was murder at all, had been induced by the temptation held out by insurance societies to people to insure their lives for sums out of all proportion to their means, at the low premium of a penny weekly. He said it was a thing which he could not understand how any respectable person in the insurer had a pecuniary interest in the death of the person insured.

The average length of life of Quakers is remarkably high in England. The greater number of deaths occurred between seventy and eighty years. Beautiful Homes.

SOME OF THE LATEST IDEAS IN INTERIOR DECORATIONS.

New York Correspondence St. Louis Post.

Portieres are seen in all the well appointed houses and give an air of luxurious ease and elegance to apartments. Doors, when of the swinging class, are taken off the hinges and a rich drapery of tapestry, raw silk; or any of the handsome materials can be employed for that purpose, is hung as a curtain over the space. These may be in one piece, as they frequently are when the doorway is narrow, or in two, or three widths, like the window curtains.

The most striking large brass rings are the requisite articles for hanging; the heavy portieres being thus easily drawn aside. Portieres in great variety are imported in all the Oriental goods and patterns. I will mention one or two of each of the leading styles.

A double curtain of nunnuy cloth has on the ivory white ground a medium bcrne of continuous figures in the dull, dead shades of red, blue, orange, etc., ornamented at the corners and regular distances on the sides with the green beads and remarkable winged animals, somuch admired by the Egyptians.

A Smyrna portiere has three diamonds, one above the other, woven in broad lines, as inch wide, and filled with smaller ones in different colors; the largest was white, the next India-red, then dark blue, olive, orange, and so on to the centre of each. Half diamonds of the same colors finished the sides. Another had wide cross-bands of orange, a narrow red across the lower part, and similar bands across the top.

Raw silk is very much used for portieres and curtains; the pattern and leading color are selected to correspond with the design of the room. These are not lined, the wrong side having a very presentable surface. A narrow band an inch wide which is attached ball fringe of the same width, in many colors, trims the sides, and much deeper fringe is placed on the curtain so as to just reach the bottom. Again a wide band of raw silk plush is put across the portiere near the bottom and a narrower one near the top.

Tapestry is also in great demand, and nearly all the furniture. Some are copies of noted pieces of tapestry and are very expensive; others, of green or grey ground, has a handsome large tree as the central figure, and three or four little cherubs under its branches gathering its fruits. Others, with all the shades of green, tan and brown, enlivened by a silver or gold thread which lights up handsomely, are the stylish styles. Among the cheaper goods in old English and bourette patterns are toilet satin and serge.

The directors of the French Exhibition will offer prizes for individual and team shooting, and a special trophy will be offered in a contest for the championship of the world. Bishop Bellmuth's Visit to Brantford.

The Bishop of Huron held confirmation services in Grace Church, St. Jude's and the old Mohawk Church, on Sunday last. Large congregations greeted his Lordship at all the services. Thirty-one candidates were presented for the rite of confirmation in the Church, seventeen at St. Jude's, and fifteen at the Mohawk, making a total of sixty-three persons admitted into full communion with the church. An interesting feature in the service at Grace Church was the baptism of five little children of whom Archdeacon Sanders was the sponsor. Among those confirmed were eight of the pupils from the Institution for the Blind, who were presented and presented by the Rector, Rev. Canon Read. The Bishop expressed himself as highly gratified at the large congregations and number of candidates presented for confirmation.

A HORSE TO THE BANNER.—Here is a recipe for the construction of a telephone which will be operated by means of a piece of five hundred yards :—Take two half-gallon cans and in fruit cans and take the bottoms off each can. Now take a couple of half cans, tack down the lids, and cut a hole through the bottom and lid of each, so you can fit in your cans, first bringing the ends level with the lid or bottom. Now, stretch the rawhide, parchment, or bladder over the other end and tie tight with a string, and your speaking tubes are finished. Now take two pcy of shoe thread and wax well, making it as long as you wish it. Push a hole in the centre of the parchment lead, poke the end of the string through, and tie a knot on it to keep it from pulling back. Then put up your poles like a telegraph wire, but don't let it touch wood. When you wish to support it or make a turn, run it through a loop of tin fastened to a string in a tree, but don't put the supporting loops closer together than is necessary, as the weight of the string will prevent it from being easily moved. Take up your speaking tubes at each end of the route, and you are ready to gabble away. You can here large gimlet holes in the bottom of your cans to run the line through, keeping it from touching the sides. The rigging described. The signal call is to bring the parchment up tight to the ear with your fingers, or better, pick the string and shout a few times. The parchment transmits this is high in the neck and music of the raw silk flannel so popular now for ladies' underwear; it is also shown in fine cambrics.—Harper's Bazar.

Peculiar Affair at Mitchell.

An accident with peculiar circumstances occurred in Mitchell last week. A young needle, by some means, ran into a lady's foot, which caused the limb to swell, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the little piece of steel was extracted by one of our surgeons. The foot became worse, and as the sufferer was on the eve of being married it made her case peculiarly awkward. The gentleman who had won the fair lady's heart and hand arrived from Chatham, where he resides, to claim his intended bride, but after waiting a couple of days it was evident that his espousals were out of the question, and he returned home and the bride to follow as soon as able. With this view, the lady was dressed, placed in a chair, a clergyman called in, the ceremony performed, and after the usual salute the gentleman departed for his home, and his affianced returned to her sick bed. We understand that she is recovering, and will soon be able to proceed to her new home. The re-union, although entered into under such peculiar circumstances, we have reason to believe will prove a most happy one.—Advocate.

Sad Case of Insanity and Destitution

The Observer records a case of revolting destitution and insanity near Tilsonburg, and calls upon the Council of Bayham to have it remedied. It says:—A poor crazy creature named Parmela Atwood, or Osbrander, resides on Bidwell street with her children. The other night the poor creature was cut stark naked, roaming around the streets and back yards, apparently insane. During the early morning Mr. S. A. Ellis heard a noise in his yard, and, looking for the cause, he saw the poor woman in the act of brandishing a knife in one hand and a cow's tail, singing and gyrating, and occasionally calling out, "I've got the milk, it Lord get the honey." Mrs. Ellis covered the poor creature's nakedness and sent her home; but she went towards the market, saying that she was going to the Baptist Church. Mr. Ellis fearing that she might do some injury to her children, went to the house and encamped in front of Atwood's carriage shop, and found the little ones naked as they were born, huddled up in a corner and shivering from cold. He covered them up and left them.

A. DAWSON, ISSUER OF Marriage Licenses and Insurance Agent, Dundas st., opp. Talbot Green, London East. Entry Lucas."—I notice an account of the destruction of two barns on the 2nd concession of McGillivray by fire on the evening of the 20th ult. Amongst other things it is stated that I was away on the best of terms with Rodger's brother-in law, and attempted to get him off the place. So far as the destruction of the buildings are concerned, the statement is true enough. But I beg leave to contradict the statement that I ever was on bad terms with either Mr. Rodgers or his brother-in-law that I never attempted to put him or them, or either of them, off the premises; that I have no means of accounting for how the fire originated. So far from appearances it certainly seemed to be the act of an incendiary; but Mr. Rodgers or any one belonging to him, would be the last person in this country whom I could suspect of being guilty of any act of the kind. Hoping you will be kind enough to give this statement a corner in your estimable paper.

I am, sir, yours truly,

GEORGE LEE.

Style in Underclothing.

Colored embroidery is the novelty in imported underclothing, and this is now so universally used as a distance of five hundred yards :—Take two half-gallon cans and in fruit cans and take the bottoms off each can. Now take a couple of half cans, tack down the lids, and cut a hole through the bottom and lid of each, so you can fit in your cans, first bringing the ends level with the lid or bottom. Now, stretch the rawhide, parchment, or bladder over the other end and tie tight with a string, and your speaking tubes are finished. Now take two pcy of shoe thread and wax well, making it as long as you wish it. Push a hole in the centre of the parchment lead, poke the end of the string through, and tie a knot on it to keep it from pulling back. Then put up your poles like a telegraph wire, but don't let it touch wood. When you wish to support it or make a turn, run it through a loop of tin fastened to a string in a tree, but don't put the supporting loops closer together than is necessary, as the weight of the string will prevent it from being easily moved. Take up your speaking tubes at each end of the route, and you are ready to gabble away. You can here large gimlet holes in the bottom of your cans to run the line through, keeping it from touching the sides. The rigging described. The signal call is to bring the parchment up tight to the ear with your fingers, or better, pick the string and shout a few times. The parchment transmits this is high in the neck and music of the raw silk flannel so popular now for ladies' underwear; it is also shown in fine cambrics.—Harper's Bazar.

Peculiar Affair at Mitchell.

An accident with peculiar circumstances occurred in Mitchell last week. A young needle, by some means, ran into a lady's foot, which caused the limb to swell, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the little piece of steel was extracted by one of our surgeons. The foot became worse, and as the sufferer was on the eve of being married it made her case peculiarly awkward. The gentleman who had won the fair lady's heart and hand arrived from Chatham, where he resides, to claim his intended bride, but after waiting a couple of days it was evident that his espousals were out of the question, and he returned home and the bride to follow as soon as able. With this view, the lady was dressed, placed in a chair, a clergyman called in, the ceremony performed, and after the usual salute the gentleman departed for his home, and his affianced returned to her sick bed. We understand that she is recovering, and will soon be able to proceed to her new home. The re-union, although entered into under such peculiar circumstances, we have reason to believe will prove a most happy one.—Advocate.

Sad Case of Insanity and Destitution

The Observer records a case of revolting destitution and insanity near Tilsonburg, and calls upon the Council of Bayham to have it remedied. It says:—A poor crazy creature named Parmela Atwood, or Osbrander, resides on Bidwell street with her children. The other night the poor creature was cut stark naked, roaming around the streets and back yards, apparently insane. During the early morning Mr. S. A. Ellis heard a noise in his yard, and, looking for the cause, he saw the poor woman in the act of brandishing a knife in one hand and a cow's tail, singing and gyrating, and occasionally calling out, "I've got the milk, it Lord get the honey." Mrs. Ellis covered the poor creature's nakedness and sent her home; but she went towards the market, saying that she was going to the Baptist Church. Mr. Ellis fearing that she might do some injury to her children, went to the house and encamped in front of Atwood's carriage shop, and found the little ones naked as they were born, huddled up in a corner and shivering from cold. He covered them up and left them.

MISSING.—A young lad named William Lay, son of Mr. W. Lay, of the 4th con. of Southwold, has been missing since the 23rd of February.

INTERIM SESSIONS.—At this Court yesterday, Judge Elliot presiding, the unfortunate woman Nellie Hampshire pleaded guilty to deserting her child, and was remanded until Monday next for sentence.

TEN DAYS IN QUOD.—At the Police Court yesterday a youth named John Collins, of Petersville, was found guilty of stealing a quantity of maple sugar from a farmer's wagon on Saturday last, and sentenced to ten days' imprisonment in the common jail.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC.—Hyman's Boot and Shoe Factory, on Carling street, will be open this (Wednesday) evening, between 7 and 9.30 o'clock. Doubtless a large number of citizens will embrace the opportunity of visiting this large establishment.

OFF TO PENETANGUISHENE.—Sheriff's Officer Ben Young and an assistant left yesterday afternoon for Penetanguishene, having in charge the prisoner James Gould, who was recently sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the Reformatory there upon three charges of larceny.

THE CRAZY HORSE THIEF.—At the Police Court yesterday the half-witted individual, Benjamin Bradley, who stole a horse and buggy from the barn of Mr. James James, of Nissouri, on Friday night last, pleaded guilty to the charge, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the Central Prison.

MORE OF THEM.—The Great Western authorities have received information that in addition to the burglarious entry of their freight shed, at Wingham, on Sunday last, the stations-house at Brantford and Bluevale, on the London, Huron and Bruce Railway, were entered and the safes broken open. Detectives have been dispatched after the thieves.

A HEALTHY COUNTY.—An Ingersoll firm of undertakers has during the past ten years disposed of the remains of no less than 64 former residents of the county of Oxford who had attained the age of 80 years and upwards at the time of death. Four had exceeded 100 years, one—Charles McCue, of Dereham,—having taken his departure at the great age of 114 years.

MEDICAL COUNCIL EXAMINATIONS.—The Ontario Medical Council have decided, contrary to their original intention, and to the general expectation of the majority of candidates, to hold the annual spring examination of students on the 29th April next. It is understood that the greater number of the students will petition for the date to be changed to the latter part of May, the time first intimated for holding the examination.

NEW CHEESE FACTORY.—Mr. James W. Crickdaw has purchased a half acres of his farm, concession 4, Westminster, to Mr. Henry Wall, who has for the past five years conducted a cheese factory on a leased place near by. Mr. Wall intends to build a cheese factory on the lot bought, and to carry on a more extensive business than hitherto. The institution will thus be more likely to be permanent, and to prove an acquisition to the surroundings.

THE ITINERANT PREACHER.—A few days since mention was made in these columns of the manner in which the Toronto authorities were in the habit of distributing their poor and indigent citizens throughout the Province, the latest point being that of a man named Bessay who was troubled with the St. Vitus dance, and who was denied admission to the London Hospital. The Toronto Telegram referring to the case, says:—"It was found necessary to remand the unfortunate man to jail until such time as he could be sent back to Kingston—the General Hospital being overcrowded."

ATLANTIC BASE BALL CLUB.—Last night a largely-attended meeting of the above club was held in the City Hall, Mr. H. C. Smyth, President, in the chair. The principal business was the election of a delegate to the Ontario Association, which meets at Toronto on 5th April. The President was unanimously appointed. Mr. W. Reid was elected Captain of the team for the year. The other positions will be filled in greater part by the members of last year. Mr. H. Barr, of Cobourg, was elected an honorary member. The club promises to have a most successful season.

DROWNED IN A CISTERN.—A little seven-year-old girl, named Annie, the daughter of Mrs. Mahaffy, who resides at Black Rock, opposite Fort Erie, was drowned in a cistern on Sunday morning. When last seen she was playing with a little dog which was tied near where the cistern was located. The latter coming again to look for Annie could not find her. The dog was whining and endeavoring to get loose. Mrs. Bradley untied the little animal, which instantly sprang for the cistern and peered into its depths, barking vociferously. An examination was made, and the little girl's dead body was discovered.

A SUSPICIOUS CHAP.—About eleven o'clock Monday night Constable Weir, while on duty on Talbot street south, observed two men well dressed standing opposite the residence of Dr. Fraser, one of whom was considerably the worse of liquor. After waiting and watching for some time one of them walked across the street and entered the office of Dr. Fraser, and in a minute or two thereafter just as the officer was approaching the place, the intruder came out "all of a heap," and rolled across the sidewalk, having been assisted in his exit by some person from the inside. The constable took him into custody, and this morning he gave his name as Wm. Fernley. He was charged by the P.M. after being reprimanded.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF DENTAL SURGEONS OF ONTARIO.—The annual meeting of the Board of Examiners of this College was held at Toronto last week, concluding on Saturday afternoon. At the close of the examination certificates of license to practice dentistry in the Province of Ontario were granted to the following persons, viz.:

David Wallace, Collingwood; Gold Medallist; G. H. McMichael, D. D. S., Waterford, College Silver Medallist; Messrs. W. F. B. Colter, John Robertson, Jas. T. H. Husband, F. A. White, H. Bas, D. D. I think - during Fair week, he came home here. Mr. Jarvis came after him, and I said, "Mr. Jarvis, don't beat him, as I have done so myself," and Jarvis said he would not. The next time I saw my son, he told me that Jarvis put handcuffs on him after he left the home, when taking him to the train that when they reached the factory, Jarvis stripped him, and then had him served with a clothes-line. The boy was afterwards placed in the dark room in which Annie Sparks was found, and confined from Thursday till Saturday there, and was treated very severely. I saw black marks on his body, resulting from the blows dealt him, a month after the occurrence, and told them that my boy was being treated worse than his faults required—for I admit he had faults—I called on Jarvis and Hargraves, and told them that I would complain to the Police Magistrate if they did not treat my boy better. Hargraves, I think, said:—"Oh! we have been hard on him, but he always we have done right." My son had previously told me that they had threatened him with the penitentiary. The reason why I never complained to the authorities was because I thought that my son being a bound apprentice, they had a right to chastise him. I was not able to go and get legal advice. My boy is in the factory now. He knew the girl Sparks, and says several others besides her were ill-used.

HARGRAVES RE-ARRESTED ON ANOTHER CHARGE.

Yesterday afternoon, acting on information received, Detectives Murphy and Flair proceeded to the factory, and arrested J. H. Hargraves, and arrested him on a charge of cruelly ill-treating a lad named Michael McGerry, at one time in his employ. It is alleged that the lad was treated by the defendant in pretty much the same manner as the unfortunate orphan, Annie Sparks, and that, although it is a considerable time since he left the factory, he still bears scars on his body, resulting from brutal treatment he received. He was, it is further alleged, placed in the "stocks," and tortured to a horrible extent, in consequence of his refusal to act as defendant wished.

KEPT IN CUSTODY.

Hargraves sojourned in the Central Station till last night, when he was taken down to jail.

THE HISTORY OF ANNIE SPARKS,

whose case first brought the state of matters before the public, may not be uninteresting. About four years ago, she was brought to this country by Miss Rye, being one of the orphans collected by that lady and sent out to Canada to secure homes. Wonder has been expressed by many how it was that the girl became apprenticed to this firm without the knowledge (as it appears) of the authorities in charge of the "Home" at Niagara. It has always been believed that the orphans thought out by Miss Rye would be taken charge of by Mr. Middlemore, and from the "Canada Home," now in course of erection in this city, were so kept under supervision that it was next to impossible for them to leave one home and go to another without the authorities being made aware of the fact. This is the regulation; but in the case of Annie Sparks it was broken through, Shortly after her arrival in Canada, the girl became a bound servant for her in a family by the name of Smith, possessing a farm near Lambeth, in Westminster. After staying for three years in this family, the girl was transferred by the latter to Mr. Jarvis, and thereafter apprenticed for five years in the factory. The regulations by which the girl was allowed to enter the family of Smith was that, should she prove unsuitable, or should they want to dispense with her services, the conductors of the "Home" at Niagara should be at once informed, with a view to considering the advisability of the change. The Smiths, it would appear, neglected to do this, and those in charge of the Niagara Home did not know of it till the matter was ventilated in the Police Court. Then, Rev. Mr. Davis, of Westminster, and Mrs. Ling, of this city, (who was formerly Miss Rye's assistant at Niagara,) interested themselves in the girl's welfare, and communicated with the "Home," the result being that yesterday a warrant was issued for the arrest of Mr. Jarvis, who is a prominent citizen in the city, making the necessary arrangements to assist in a thorough investigation of the affair. Meanwhile, the girl has been removed to the residence of Mrs. Ling, who will take care of her till Mr. Jarvis is found.

THE ALLEGED ARTICLES OF TORTURE.

Chief of Police Williams and Detective Murphy visited the factory yesterday afternoon, with an order from the Police Magistrate, and with the ostensible object of making an examination of the dark chamber, where the punishments are alleged to have been meted out. Hargraves was absent at the time, and the officers meandered to the top story, which they found pretty much as the witnesses for the prosecution had stated in their evidence. The first object of the search was to discover if the hunting tackle was still in position. By the light from the door, they found the marks where the rings had been screwed in the ceiling. They also found the rope and pulleys, one on each side of the wall, and one of the wristlets, with the leather attached. The pulleys were unscrewed, and, with other articles, taken possession of by the officers. They will in all probability be produced in court to day.

The Late London Mutual Benefit Society.

Winding up its Affairs—Explanatory Resolutions.

At the adjourned annual meeting of the above Society, held in Forester's Hall, during resolutions were passed unanimously:—

That the annual report, now read, be received and confirmed, and as it appears in said report that the Society has reached that stage that the revenue to be derived from all sufficients in good standing is not sufficient to meet current expenses, and to speak of any claims that may come against the Society for death, that it is desirable, under the circumstances, that the Society shall terminate forthwith that any accounts unsettled, over and above the amount of funds and effects on hand, be paid by the members pro rata.

That the following gentlemen be appointed a committee to wind up the affairs of the Society by collecting the amounts due, and pay the liabilities, and dispose of the furniture and effects," viz.: William Warner, A. J. Mansfield, Jas. Cowan, Jas. Blandy, Thomas O'Brien and F. Westlake.

ENTERTAINMENT LAST NIGHT.—A very pleasant entertainment took place in St. James' Hall, London South, last evening, which was largely attended and highly appreciated. The following ladies and gentlemen contributed towards the programme:—Misses Brunton and Hall, and Messrs. Foster, Ward, Parke, Webster, Winslow, Hall, Boyle, Morley and Tanner.

THE HAIR FACTORY HORROR.

More Extraordinary Developments.

TWO ADDITIONAL CHARGES OF CRUELTY TO APPRENTICES.

Their Experiences of the Torture Chamber.

How Annie Sparkes got into Hargraves' Hands.

Public excitement in reference to the alleged horrible cruelties practiced on apprentices in the Human Hair Factory, in this city, has been most intense ever since the evidence in full was published in this journal; and the developments of yesterday, and those likely to be made at the Police Court to-day, are not calculated to lessen the feeling of the community. Hargraves denies the statements of the witnesses, and says he will be able to clear himself of the imputations cast upon him; and it is only fair to the defendant—however unlikely this defence may appear to be—to await events.

ANOTHER CASE OF ALLEGED TORTURE.

Yesterday afternoon a FREE PRESS reporter paid a visit to the residence of the widow of the late Mr. Jacob Leclair, on Bruce street, London South, from whom he gleaned the following extraordinary statements in reference to the treatment of her son, a small boy of about fourteen years of age:—

My eldest son apprenticed the boy you refer to nearly a year ago to Messrs. A. S. Jarvis & Co. He was not a bad boy; but we thought he would be better bound as an apprentice, as I did not have time to look after him. At first, he used to come home over night, and he frequently complained to me that he had been cruelly beaten and ill-treated; I thought he might have maltreated himself, and therefore did not pay much attention to what he said. Subsequently, he boarded at the place, and I heard from him but seldom. He ran away [several times—for what reason I don't know—and once, I think - during Fair week, he came home here. Mr. Jarvis came after him, and I said, "Mr. Jarvis, don't beat him, as I have done so myself," and Jarvis said he would not. The next time I saw my son, he told me that Jarvis put handcuffs on him after he left the home, when taking him to the train that when they reached the factory, Jarvis stripped him, and then had him served with a clothes-line. The boy was afterwards placed in the dark room in which Annie Sparks was found, and confined from Thursday till Saturday there, and was treated very severely. I saw black marks on his body, resulting from the blows dealt him, a month after the occurrence, and told them that my boy was being treated worse than his faults required—for I admit he had faults—I called on Jarvis and Hargraves, and told them that I would complain to the Police Magistrate if they did not treat my boy better. Hargraves, I think, said:—"Oh! we have been hard on him, but we always we have done right." My son had previously told me that they had threatened him with the penitentiary. The reason why I never complained to the authorities was because I thought that, my son being a bound apprentice, they had a right to chastise him. I was not able to go and get legal advice. My boy is in the factory now. He knew the girl Sparks, and says several others besides her were ill-used.

Mrs. Leclair's daughter bore out what her mother testified, and the interview terminated.

Constantinople, March 19.—Sir Grenville Duke Nicholas, to obviate the difficulty in the military escort passing through the city, proposes to come here in the Imperial yacht, Eyrkhick. Nothing, however, is settled, and the Porte, out of consideration for the other Powers has requested the Grand Duke not to embark in the Imperial yacht, or have anything to do with it.

The German ambassador here has received from his agent at Buyukdere a denial of the statement that two Russian torpedo boats accompany the yacht. The Russian fleet was then at Sebastopol, and none are abroad.

Mukhtar Pasha has gone to San Stefano to inform Menkikar and Mehemet Ali Pasha that the embarkation of the Russians at Gallipoli at any moment as an offset to the Russian operations about the Turkish capital, and force Russia to come to terms relative to the submission of the whole treaty to the European powers. Inasmuch as no power will be bound by the action of the Congress, its uselessness is growing into a general conviction, inducing continued doubts as to its being held. No progress appears to be made in the effort, by diplomatic negotiation, to secure an adjustment of the difference between England and Russia. The latter Power is still insisting that certain points in the treaty shall not come before the Powers for ratification. The negotiations for an Anglo-Austrian alliance are still in progress, but the prospect is not good for a successful conclusion, owing to the diverse views on the part of the Austrian government. It is not expected that the treaty will be made public for several days. The sanction to the occupation of a second clause still continue, and although founded upon mere rumor, have increased the general irritation. There is reason to believe that the British Government is anxious over the movements of the Russian forces, and is making preparations to take action the moment the Russians afford evidence of carrying out what is generally believed to be their intentions with reference to

THE STRAITS AND CONSTANTINOPLE.

Every hour, according to a Pera telegram, is being occupied by the Russians in strengthening their position, and they are now in a position to close the Bosphorus, occupy Constantinople, and seize a position on the Straits at a few hours' notice.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Announcement Regarding the Conference.

TURKISH AND EGYPTIAN FINANCES

London, March 19.—Hon. Robt. Bourke, Under Secretary of the Foreign Department, announced in Parliament to-day that if Russia agreed to the conditions demanded by England respecting the Constantinople conference, and said about the latter part of the present month.

London, March 19.—In the House of Commons

Sir Stafford Northcote stated that the February dividend on the Turkish guaranteed loan was paid by England. The amount was £77,448. A portion of the dividend should come from the Egyptian tribute, but this has not been paid. The Khedive had promised to forward part of it immediately. England had taken steps to obtain the half of the £77,448 from France, which was a joint guarantee.

London, March 19.—The House of Commons rejected a motion stating that the establishment of the monopoly of the Cunard, Inman and White Star Line Steamship Companies in the carriage of mail, whereby the English Government was paying twice as much as the United States, was prejudicial to the public service.

GERMANY AND HOLLAND.

The Reported Annexation Scheme Denied and Ridiculed at Berlin.

Berlin, March 19.—The Governmental paper, the North German Gazette, ridicules the terrible consequences of the intention to annex Holland. The Government organ intimates that the report was started by M. Rouher when he failed to annex Luxemburg, and was subsequently propagated by the Orleanist members for Netherlands, antagonistic to German unity.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

A Surplus Anticipated for 1878.

Calcutta, March 19.—The Indian budget for 1878-79 shows a deficit of 11,000,000, exclusive of 19,000,000 for internal improvements. The estimates 1877-78 show a deficit of 17,000,000, exclusive of 24,000,000 for internal improvements. The Government, in 1877-78 borrowed 15,000,000. The estimates for 1878-79 anticipate a surplus of 10,000,000, exclusive of 22,000,000 for internal improvements. The loss on exchange is estimated at 13,000,000, and, on the total remittance, 80,000,000.

The Papal Captivity.

LEO XIII. TO PUT AN END TO IT.

New York, March 19.—The World's Rome special says the Pope is preparing to occupy one of the summer residence of the Popes at Castel Gandolfo, thirteen miles from Rome. This will put an end to the conventional captivity of the Pontiff.

GREAT BRITAIN

A BRITISH SEA CAPTAIN CHARGED WITH FELONY.

London, March 19.—Capt. McLeod, of the British bark Chilliawallah, which was abandoned at sea on the 4th December, was charged yesterday with felony, in casting away his vessel.

LABOR TROUBLES.

The cotton manufacturers of East Lancashire have notified their employes that they intend to reduce their wages ten per cent.

The masters in the North England iron trade, who gave notice of a reduction of 10 to 17 per cent., have consented to substitute a reduction of 7½ per cent. It is thought the men will accept.

The miners of Tanworth district have accepted a reduction of 10 per cent.

London, March 20.—The cotton masters of North and Northeast Lancashire have resolved to reduce the wages of the operatives 10 per cent.

A SUPERIOR'S SILVER SHIPMENT.

London, March 19.—The News says the United States is said to be a purchaser of silver, and the announcement of the arrival at Queenstown of a steamer for New York with five hundred thousand dollars worth of this metal has been made. It would be interesting to know if this consignment proceeded to the United States, or was disembarked at Queenstown. It would not be the first time the latter course has been adopted. It is curious, contemporaneously with this export, that two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was shipped last week from New York to this side.

DR. NEWMAN TO BE CREATED A CARDINAL.

London, March 20, 6 a. m.—It is rumored among Catholics in England that the Pope will shortly make Dr. Newman a Cardinal.

GERMANY.

THE MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

Berlin, March 19.—The North German Gazette says, relative to the ministerial changes, the only thing certain is that Herr Camphausen's request to be relieved will be granted.

ITALY

THE MINISTRY—THE PAPAL POLICY.

London, March 20.—A Rome special announces that Count Corti has been invited to enter Signor Cairoli's Cabinet as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Cardinal Franchi has assured a distinguished foreigner that the Pope wished for a strong and united Italy. He only required a firm assurance of the complete freedom of the Holy See. The temporal power was not a dogma.

GREECE

London, March 19.—A dispatch from Athens says the Thessalians were defeated at Velo.

From Vienna it is stated that the Servian army, under Leshkoviz, crossed a demonstration against the terms of peace.

Review of the Situation.

Special Cablegram.

London, March 19.—Disquieting rumors still prevail, rendering the situation anything but satisfactory. The English Government is evidently in possession of information not generally known, whose effect is to stimulate the war preparations. It is within the limits of probability that the British force may be ordered to seize Gallipoli at any moment as an offset to the Russian operations about the Turkish capital, and force Russia to come to terms relative to the submission of the whole treaty to the European powers. Inasmuch as no power will be bound by the action of the Congress, its uselessness is growing into a general conviction, inducing continued doubts as to its being held. RINE'S RASCALITIES.

Startling History of the Rev. D. I. K.

HIS RECORD IN THE STATES.

Special Dispatch.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 19.—The Rev. D. I. K. Rine, who has been arrested at Stratford, Canada, for committing an outrage on a young lady, and whose trial was set for yesterday, has quite a history. In early life he was a printer. Subsequently he turned preacher, and for some time was pastor of the Rebecca Street Church in Allegheny. He came into prominence here in connection with a scandal in which a certain Rev. Mr. Gray was involved. Gray soon afterward went to Kansas, where he died of fever. Rine soon followed to pay him a visit. On his return he found occasion to relieve McCormick, the reaper-man, in a sleeping car, of papers and clothes valued at $8,000. For this he was arrested, and spent some time in jail in Chicago. Rine claimed that he was in liquor at the time McCormick lost his valuables, and did not know what he was doing. He appealed to his brother-in-law in this city to help him out of his trouble, and he did so. After this Rine returned to Pittsburg, and got up a lecture entitled, "Out of Hell," being a description of his treatment in Chicago. He was next called before the public as being naught in the act of going through the till in his brother-in-law's store and business, on Diamond alley. For this he stopped at Clermont for two years, and after his release he engaged in the book business in a small way, and invested most of his earnings in drink. When Francis Murphy struck Pittsburg Rine joined the temperance ranks, and became one of the shining lights of the cause here. His powers as an exhorter were great. After laboring in the cause here for some time, he struck out for Canada. There he made "a hit." He was the only active temperance worker in Canada, and in the Dominion he was as popular as Francis Murphy was in Pittsburg. "The Rine Movement"—the name by which he designated his work—in fact took the Canadians by storm, and the papers of the country teemed with columns in his praise. In addition to his temperance lectures, he was frequently admitted to preach in the Baptist churches, to the great edification of all who attended his ministrations. He is a fine singer, but thoroughly corrupt, and needs constant watching. It is to be hoped the Canadian authorities will deal less leniently with him than those of Pittsburg have done.

RINE AT BARRIE.

Received with Faint Cheers and Loud Hisses.

He Delivers an Address on the "Master Passions."

Barrie, March 19.—D. I. K. Rine, accompanied by his wife and aunt, arrived here by the Northern Railroad at 2 p. m. Mr. Harvey, President of the Club here, and some other gentlemen, met him near Bradford. There was a large crowd at the station to meet Rine, and on his appearing he was met with faint cheers, but hearty hisses. Mr. Rine has contradicted the reports which appeared in the Globe and Mail to-day, but which are believed to be true. The feeling here is very strong against him. To-night he delivers an address in the Town Hall, taking as his subject, "Master Passions."

NORTH OXFORD.

Rousing Rally of Conservatives

SIR JOHN'S AMENDMENT ENTHUSIASTICALLY SUPPORTED.

The Quebec Outrage Condemned.

By Special Telegraph Per Dominion L. ne.

Woodstock, March 19.—A preliminary meeting of the Conservatives in North Oxford, was held in the Town Hall, Woodstock, at 2 p. m., to-day. All the municipalities were represented. Stirring speeches were made by Messrs. Gray, Beard, Barwick, Wood, McNee, and a delegation from the Simcoe Reform Club, consisting of Messrs. Hopkins, Kennedy, Rowland, Doty, Dr. Walker and others. The feeling was unanimous that a vigorous opposition should be offered to the sitting member, at the coming election, and the following resolutions were carried unanimously:—

Moved by H. Beard, seconded by Jno. Barwick, that the Vice-Presidents of the different municipalities in the riding take steps to secure a Conservative meeting in at least two persons from their municipality to meet at Woodstock Town Hall on Saturday, the 30th inst., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the House of Commons and the Local Legislature.

Moved by J. H. Wood, seconded by Joseph Plaskett, and resolved, that this meeting has watched with pleasure the course pursued by Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and his followers in Parliament, and especially their action in regard to the trade relations of this country with the United States, and we heartily endorse the amendment to the address moved by the right honorable gentleman, embodying what is known as the national policy; and we here by record our pledge to assist in securing the election of a person to represent the North Riding of this County that will pledge himself to such a policy, and endeavor by all constitutional means to secure its adoption.

Moved by H. F. Martin, seconded by H. B. Beard, and resolved, that in the opinion of this meeting the outrage perpetrated by the Lieut.-Governor of Quebec in dismissing his Ministry, while they possessed large majorities in both branches of the Legislature, fully justifies the fears expressed at the passage of the British North America Act, viz.:—Weak partizan Provincial Governors might be influenced by the unscrupulous, have been fully realized, and we feel it our duty to call upon our rulers to take such steps as will prevent the recurrence of such an outrage in any of the other Provinces, and we look to those who are authorized to speak for us in Parliament to let their voices be heard and their votes recorded in opposition to such tyranny, more especially as the Lieut.-Governor has not yet dissolved the House, but continues to govern the country by a minority and in opposition to the well-understood wishes of the people, constitutionally expressed.

The meeting adjourned till the time and place above mentioned.

MONTREAL

RESIGNATION OF THE ARCHBISHOP.

Montreal, March 19.—The Most Rev. the Metropolitan of Canada, has notified his clergy that he intends resigning his position here after the synod at Lambeth Palace in the summer. He has held the appointment about eight-four years, and retires on account of ill health.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

After recess,

Sir John Macdonald contended that the measure should not be considered one of party, but be made as workable as possible without trammelling the will of the people. With respect to Judges, they could not be placed on the same footing as other superannuated officials. Their exclusion did not obtain in England, and Judges even who did not hold their office from the Crown sat in the House. Mr. Russell Gurney, the late Recorder of London, had sat in the House. The present Recorder of London had sat in the House, and had accepted the appointment without resigning his seat. Those men were not supposed to be under Crown influence, though they received pensions from it. Sir John here cited the British Act to remove doubts as to the qualification of superannuated civil officials to sit in Parliament, which said that the position was no disqualification. He took exception to the proviso made for offices which might be hereafter created, it being highly inadvisable to lay down such a rule at present. He held that the terms "knowingly and willingly," as in the Act, was not sufficiently explicit. The provision of the old act, in relation to contractors, he held to be far more effective than the one now proposed. To the fourth section he took exception, because it might be interpreted to mean that any person who purchased any goods from the establishment of a member of this House might afterwards declare it to have been for the Government, thereby causing that member to resign. With regard to the penalty mentioned in the fifth clause, viz., $200 per day, he argued that it was entirely inadequate to meet the case. He also called special attention to the seventh clause, which made exceptions as to shareholders in incorporated companies. This should be carefully considered by the House, who really desired to secure the independence of Parliament. Under the exception any five members might form themselves into a company for the construction of works and obtain contracts, which, if obtained individually, would disqualify them from sitting. There ought, he submitted, to be some provision to exempt shareholders in banks and insurance companies, but it was not wise to have this exemption extended to companies organized for the construction of works. He would only say, in conclusion, that the Opposition would endeavor to make this measure perfect and workable, and one which would redound to the benefit of the Parliament and country.

Mr. Mills said that the observation of the member for Kingston in regard to the Superannuation Act might have been pertinent if the Superannuation Act had been before the House for amendment, but he believed he was stating the general opinion when he said people should not be allowed to sit in the House. He held that this measure was no more a restriction of the liberties of the people than acts which were every day passed.

Mr. McCarthy objected to the restrictive extent of the Bill, pointing out that able men were really wanted here, and this would exclude a large number of professional men who might take fees from the local Governments. He took ground against the disqualification of Civil Service officials or pensioners. In regard to the penalty, every member of this House was in the same position as a Civil Service official. Then he was equally open to the same influences, the only difference being that the one held a position which he must resign to be able to sit in the House, and the other might have the offer of a position, to which he must resign his seat here. The provision of "knowingly" violating the Act was a dangerous one. He thought there should be no exception in favor of shareholders of incorporated companies who contracts with Government, except, perhaps, in the case of gentlemen holding printing contracts, such as the Minister of Militia and the Speaker of the North West. He held it to be dangerous to introduce a measure of this character on the eve of a general election, during

WEST MIDDLESEX.

The meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Convention at Mount Brydges on Monday—of which a full report has been given in our columns—is an earnest of coming success. There was not only a full but unanimity among those present, coming from all parts of the Riding—but each had a large measure of hopeful expectancy to contribute from his own locality. For some time past rumors had been circulated by the Grits that the Liberal-Conservatives would not be able to unite upon a representative of their cause. That local jealousies were so rife that if a man from one section of the Riding was selected he would be coldly received, if not absolutely opposed, by those residing in other sections. The result of the Convention has been to dispel that idea and to confirm the opinion that when national issues are at stake the men of West Middlesex can unite heart and hand in a common cause. No one presumed extended the cordial grasp of friendship towards the nominee of the Convention, Mr. Nathanial Currie, more completely than did Col. English, of Strathroy, who may be said to represent more especially the south-eastern portion of the constituency. Indeed, the excellent spirit he displayed marked the conduct of all. The only object in view seemed to be to select the best man—the man most likely to carry the constituency, irrespective of any and all other considerations. And we feel sure that the choice made will be warmly approved. Mr. Currie has a capital record of consistency and earnestness to refer to, while representing the riding in the Local Legislature. His opponents cannot point to a single flaw in his career, while the accurate knowledge he possesses of public affairs is admitted by all. The campaign in West Middlesex has thus opened most auspiciously, and if continued and carried on with similar feeling, with equal earnestness, the result will be to restore the constituency to the Liberal-Conservative phalanx of Middlesex and London—one destined to exercise an immeasurable an influence in the coming political struggle.

A HAPPY SAINT PATRICK'S DAY.

The celebration of St. Patrick's Day in London was not notable by the intermingling of marks of good will between many who are sometimes found at variance on such occasions. The Irish Benevolent Society held its annual festival, which was pleasantly enlivened by a concert, and was largely attended; while the incoming President, Mr. Hugh Macmahon, aptly referred to the keynote struck by the lamented D'Arcy McGee—that Irishmen should sink religion and other differences in the brotherhood of genial feeling. The nett proceeds of this, one of the most enjoyable entertainments of the season, are to be devoted to the noble cause of charity, and to be divided between the two Orphans' Homes, which grace the northern portion of the city. How much better this than the bitterness and blood seen elsewhere. Whatever may have been the faults of other times in other lands, Canada presents to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects perfect freedom. There is no oppression here. Each individual can acquire wealth and distinction in accordance with his capacity and opportunities. There are no disabilities created by law, and any which prejudice or bigotry are the cause of would soon pass away under the exercise of such united feelings as those which have been elicited at the result of operations of the Irish Benevolent Society. Having so well begun let it be hoped that nothing will arise to mar so excellent a spirit, but that the exercise of unusual toleration and forbearance will tend to constitute our city a place of true happiness, far removed in its character from localities in which mutual hate obliterates the sweets of life, and makes existence a painful, passion-wrought trial.

MAKING MATTERS WORSE.

The Globe does not approve of the address of the Highlanders to Senator Macpherson and speaks of what they did as the "exquisitely foolish doings and sayings of a few stolid, wooden-headed Highlanders." Such language is hardly respectful. Besides, the numbers who joined in the address were far from "few," being 500, and it was explained on its presentation, that if time had permitted it would have been signed by 500 more. To speak of such an occasion in the contemptuous language employed may be natural to Lowland feeling, but it is not nice language. "A few stolid, wooden-headed Highlanders" is a term not fittingly applied, and is almost as insulting in its tone as the phrase of Mr. Cartwright, who referred to the "predatory instincts" of Highlanders as a national characteristic. By interfering in this way to defend and support Mr. Cartwright's calumnies, the Globe is only making matters worse and worse.

IN RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

To us it seems something like a new factor in government that the head of a Department, what has hitherto been called and considered—a responsible head—can, when necessity demands, demit this responsibility and throw the onus on the shoulders of his subordinate, who has neither a seat in the House nor can at all be reached except through his chief. If such be the correct view of departmental responsibility, then most of our authorities on this subject are useless, and the English world may as well pause, until Mr. Mackenzie obtains leisure, after the next election, to write a new work on the British Constitution, and furnish a learned exegesis of the principles of responsible government. He will then have an opportunity of proving that, if the head of the Public Works Department, and Premier Minister of the Dominion, can devolve his responsibility upon a hired official, and thus escape individual responsibility for the management of the Department over which he is supposed to preside, then in an extreme case of official dishonesty or corruption, such as is now being laid bare in connection with the Neebing Hotel swindle, the simple employé and not the Minister may be impeached, tried and punished. This is not only absurd but revolutionary, as the Ministers of the Crown are themselves responsible to Parliament, responsible in their own persons, and not through subordinates whom they can remove at their pleasure.

When the Goderich harbor job was under discussion a few days ago, Mr. Mackenzie put up Mr. Page as the party to blame for the loss of $30,000 to this country, and of course an equal amount of unjust gain reaped by "my friend Moore." Sir John Macdonald very properly told the Minister of Public Works, that he could not shield himself behind his own subordinate officer, that he alone was responsible—was responsible to Parliament and people for the management of his bureau, and must be held accountable for these acts by the House. Mr. Mackenzie took another view of responsible government, and held that he was quite exonerated, because he could say—though he could produce no formal report of the engineer, Mr. Page, to sustain his position—that the engineer had advised the rejection of Tolton's tender as too low. But had he been able to show a report, set forth in due form, from Mr. Page, recommending what was found a wrong course, a course that resulted in injury to individuals and loss to the country at large; then, if Mr. Mackenzie thought proper in his ignorance or dishonesty to adopt this course, he is justly responsible for the act, and he may dismiss Page or retain him as he pleases.

This is the exact position in which the matter stands. Mr. Mackenzie feels that the country has been robbed out of $30,000, which by a species of official jugglery have gone into the pocket of a friend of the Government; he knows that the Ministry as a body, and himself as an individual, are accountable, and, therefore, in a cowardly and disgraceful manner, he wishes to sneak out of his legitimate responsibility, and leave his humble subordinate in his stead. This won't do. The country cannot be cheated in this style. Mr. Mackenzie is doubly responsible. He is responsible as the head of the Department in which he—shall we say mismanagement—occurred, or the job was concocted, and, therefore, primarily responsible in this way; and as the head of the Government he is principally responsible for every Executive act. In every view, then, the Minister of Public Works is personally for this gross job. But it is in vain that he attempts to roll it over on any scratche of his office.

It is only about fifteen years since Lord Derby declared, "that it was a position that could not be gainsaid, that every act done by a responsible Minister of the Crown, having any political significance, is a fit subject for comment, and, if necessary, for censure in either House of Parliament"—a declaration with which Lord Russell entirely agreed. Now, however, according to a later, though whether a higher authority is doubtful, neither comment nor censure can reach the Minister, if a scape goat in the person of a Mr. Page can be found to bear their sins. But under this view of Mr. Mackenzie's, what avails Ministerial responsibility? It becomes a meaningless farce. Either the Minister is responsible for the management of his department or he is not. If not responsible to the House, to whom is he responsible? If he is not responsible to the people through their representatives he is not responsible, at all, and Neebing, steel rails and Goderich harbor jobs may go on unchecked for ever. It would seem as Mr. Mackenzie understands responsible government better than Lord Palmerston, for in his view of this principle "the Ministry of the day were responsible for everything that was done in any department of the State," and that while—it was true that the House of Commons ought to have a control and supervision over every such department, its functions were those of control not of administration." These are the opinions of real and distinguished statesmen, and the readers of the FREE PRESS will be at no loss to conclude on what side the weight of authority turns.

Between this denial of responsibility on the part of Mr. Mackenzie, and the undue stretch of prerogative lately seen in Quebec, one would feel inclined to think that the Reformers were drifting back to mediæval times, and as they have been for some time past sadly in want of something to refresh their memory, he would modestly suggest that they try their hand at reforming their own lives and actions. The country would find it one of the most profitable of all kinds of reform that has been attempted in Canada for ages past, though we believe it is one for which the present Ministry are but poorly qualified. Of one thing Mr. Mackenzie may rest assured, whether he holds himself responsible for the Goderich harbor job or not, the people will hold him to strict account for this juggle, by which Tolton lost his contract, the people their money and Moore & Co. put $30,000 of additional profit in their pockets. Let us recommend to Mr. Mackenzie the following from one of the latest and ablest writers on this subject:—"This responsibility is now acknowledged to be thorough and complete, and as no public act of the sovereign is valid which is not performed under the advice of some responsible Minister, so, on the other hand, for every exercise of the royal authority, Ministers must be prepared to account to Parliament, justifying the same, if need be, at their own peril."

The following communication was lately received by a London business house from an Englishman in St. Petersburg:—"The Grand Duke Nicolai Constantenovitch has desired me to get from England a number of books for his library, and I take the liberty of asking you if you will favor me by forwarding any books I may, from time to time, write for. Private individuals cannot get books direct because of the censorship; but books for members of the Imperial family are not subject to that regulation." A request for various books on India, and for a catalogue of standard works on India and its frontiers, follows. The writer adds:—"If the Prince's stay in Orenburg (on the route to Khiva) is prolonged, as in all probability it will be, we shall require a large library of English books on India and the Asiatic countries."

D. I. K. RINE.

We have always advocated the temperance reform when conducted on rational principles. Every moral man and good citizen must desire to see the people among whom he dwells sober, temperate, and generally moral. Public virtues of this kind widely diffused are a great advantage, a national blessing to any people, and social qualities of an opposite kind are quite the reverse. Acting on these principles the FREE PRESS has always supported every movement for the promotion of temperance, that has not attempted to shackle free action by Act of Parliament, regulate by law a man's dinner table, nor authorize one portion of the community, and this frequently not the best qualified to exercise such powers, to dictate to another portion in matters purely personal, and in which any outside interference is not only offensive but tyrannical. Conducted on such principles the temperance movement challenges a—"God speed you"—from every one who claims to be true to the interests of his country, the happiness and improvement of his kind.

Now all will admit that in prosecuting such a social reform proper agents should be employed. Nothing can more weaken a good cause, impede its progress, and furnish to the scoffer and the interested opponents of such a cause an effective weapon to use against it, than to place the advocacy of such principles in the hands of men whose life and actions are at variance with the doctrines they assume to teach. When peripatetic temperance lecturers are encouraged, taken by the hand, exalted to the leadership of such a movement, and honored by really good men and true, too much care cannot be taken that the lecturer is a man whose life, public and private, is such as would adorn the doctrines he professes to teach. This Mr. D. I. K. Rine has been starring it through Ontario, and taking the place of honor from our best, most able and consistent advocates, lay and clerical, and now one might be permitted to ask, What did they who stood his sponsors before the people of this Province know about him? Did these men confer their patronage Mr. Rine acted as a temperance advocate, take the trouble to enquire into his antecedents? Have they even had reliable testimonials from known quarters sufficient to justify them in giving him countenance themselves, while their example was enough to induce others to admit him into their homes and give him their confidence?

Perhaps they may point to his success and say, that good has been done, and that they were prepared to accept of any device for his works' sake. This we fear will be found a grand mistake. By one such case as this, a degree of public confidence will be cast upon a good cause which, with many, will cool their ardor and perhaps lead them to turn their back upon the whole temperance movement. People are only too prone to judge of a cause by the character of its advocates, and with this class the temperance cause cannot avoid suffering from its fellowship with Rine, and a reaction in Stratford and other places is only too likely to follow the exposure that has been made of his true character.

But dost this cause really require the aid of sensational advocates to promote it? We hold that a strictly rational, argumentative line of advocacy is all that it requires to recommend it to an intelligent people, and far this we require no foreign importations to bring it home to the hearts and consciences of our fellow-citizens. A very large majority of our Christian ministers are not only temperance but temperance men, and they, were they encouraged as they ought, would be amply sufficient to advance this cause, and their words would advance it in such a style, enforce it by such arguments, and strengthen it by such examples as would make every step gained a step secured. But, men of high standing in their profession, men of cultivated mind and refined taste cannot be expected to occupy a subordinate place in the ranks of temperance advocates to some recent convert, who, with unabashing front, stands forward as the teacher of the audience in morals, and who will throw his audience into a state of ecstacy, by detailing in coarse language and by coarser illustrations, the scenes of filth in which he was only yesterday wallowing. Polished and argumentative speakers have no chance with such an orator as this, and, as a result, the work is too much left in the hands of such men as Rine and others of even a coarser fibre, though they may, in some instances, boast of honester principles. It would be better for the cause in the end were its advocacy left in the hands of men whose consistent lives will form the best commentary on the principles they profess, and the social and moral reform they advocate.

A horrible tale of the sea was unfolded in the United States Commissioner's Court at Boston on Thursday, when Captain Peabody, of the bark C. A. Whitmore, was arraigned for cruelty to his second mate, Elwood, which ended in his death. The trouble occurred during a voyage from Cardiff to Hong Kong, in the summer of 1876, and, according to the affidavits of the crew, made before the Consul at the latter port, they were all badly treated. Peabody's treatment of Elwood was outrageous, he beating and wounding him on many occasions. He confined him in chains in the Lazarette, rode him on the keel of a boat, and scrubbed him with a broom and salt water. Around his wrists were ropes, and there were five wounds in his head, full of matter. The captain had a small box like a bunk made for him, four feet long and one and a-half feet wide. It was so short that Elwood's knees almost touched his chin, and he died in this bunk from the injuries he had received while chained to the cast heating. The captain was arrested at Hong Kong, but could not be brought to the United States under the Ashburton Treaty. The affair caused so much excitement there that he fled, and it was not for a week ago that he was found at Boston.

A reader desires to know the nature of the Egyptian tributes which were among the securities which Russia stipulated as guarantees for the payment of the Turkish pecuniary indemnity. The Egyptian tributes or sums of money, payable by Egypt to Turkey at stated times, have been relied upon by the latter as securities upon which to raise loans. The Turkish loans of 1854, upon which the Crimean war was carried on, and of 1855 and of 1871, were based upon those tributes. As England and France hold these tributes as security for the payment of their bonds, they object to Russia coming in as a preferred creditor and leaving them without dividends. As the assignment of the tributes as security was confirmed by the Porte, it is difficult to see how the latter can now alienate them to the service of Russia. It was on condition of the payment of the tributes, now amounting to about $3,500,000 annually, that the Khedive of Egypt obtained his absolute sovereignty, the right of maintaining armies and of making treaties with foreign Powers.

South Woodstock, Vt., has a remarkable time-piece in the shape of an eight-day clock. Three years ago, when unwound and with the pendulum in another room, it struck fifteen times and ran for a day or two. A year ago it went through the same programme after two years' silence. Last week it repeated the performance, the pendulum still being in another room, and ran exactly twenty-four hours. When it was running it could not be stopped, and now it has stopped it cannot be started. A number of responsible persons are ready to make affidavit to the truth of this story.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, March 19.

After prayers and routine,

Mr. Holton presented the report of the Railway Committee, reporting the Canada Southern Railway Bill, and recommending that the time for receiving reports on private bills be extended for two weeks.

Mr. Mills laid on the table a return showing the money received for land grants made upon railroad reservations.

Mr. Cartwright introduced a Bill to make Better Provision for the Auditing of the Public Accounts, taken in their details partly from the British Act, and making better provision for the severance of the position of the Deputy Minister of Finance from the Auditor's Generalship. Full explanations would, he said, be given on the second reading.

Sir John Macdonald was of opinion that it would be better to follow the English practice of explaining the Bill on its introduction.

Mr. Cartwright said that had not been the practice so far.

Mr. Holton said the member for Kingston was perfectly right in his description of the English practice.

On motion of Mr. Holton the recommendation in regard to the reception of reports on private bills was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Appleby the Caledonia & St. Stephen Railway Bridge Bill was withdrawn, and the fees thereon ordered to be refunded, it having been thrown out by the Railway Committee.

Mr. Smith (Westmoreland) moved the House into Committee of the Whole for Thursday to consider the following resolution:—That it is expedient to repeal section 23 of the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1876, as respects all ships in Canadian waters from and after the time which may be fixed for that purpose by the proclamation of the approval and confirmation by her Majesty in Council of the act to be passed for effecting such repeal.

In reply to Mr. Mitchell,

Mr. Smith said by the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1878 deck loads were to be measured at their port of departure, and added to the tonnage of the vessel, on which dues were chargeable in England. The resolutions were to remove the application of this bill from Canadian ships.

Mr. Mitchell approved of the proposal, believing Canada herself ought to regulate matters as this.

Mr. Smith (Westmoreland) moved the House into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution.—That it is expedient to provide that so much of the Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in the thirty-sixth year of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled "An Act Respecting Pilots for Canada," as would make it unlawful for any master of a ship, at certain seasons, to carry live stock on or above any part of the upper deck of such ship, be repealed, and that the words "Any cargo of any description, to any height exceeding two feet above deck," in the second section of the said Act, shall not include or apply to live stock.

Mr. Smith explained that the resolutions were to allow of cattle being carried on the Lord Gouverneur was dispalified, while As it was, their pens being above three feet high, they were against the provisions of the Act passed in the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. Mitchell approved of the resolution as far as live stock was concerned, but he scarcely favored such a provision for the carriage of cattle on the decks of vessels carrying passengers. He would propose at the proper stage that the bill be referred to a Committee, who should take the evidence of persons acquainted with the business, some of whom were now within the reach of his voice, in order that the House and accordingly might ascertain the question of any additional danger that might accrue to the cattle and their passengers from the deck carriage of cattle. Mr. Smith thought that in the way cattle were now carried there was no additional danger to ships, passengers or seamen. He should, however, be happy to consider the suggestions of his hon. friend.

Mr. Mackenzie moved the second reading of the bill to Amend the Act Respecting the Public Works of Canada, which he said was simply to allow the taking of evidence in cases of expropriation by shorthand which would much facilitate matters.

Mr. Thomas (Halifax) said that such a provision he made to allow of the parties having their property expropriated being represented by one arbitrator. He had heard people say that they had no confidence in the present system, as they were altogether in the hands of the Dominion authorities.

Mr. Mackenzie said he would take the matter into consideration, but he did not think the people had much, if any, ground of complaint, the benefit of the doubt being invariably given to the party expropriated, besides to make the change would require a considerable alteration in the existing Act.

Mr. Tupper asked if the Minister of Public Works had given consideration to a question which was raised a few days ago, viz.:—That there should be some cheap and inexpensive mode by which claims for damage done by the Intercolonial Railway should be referred to some person outside the immediate officers of the road. If this could not be done under the law as it stood, it might be provided for by a clause in this bill.

Mr. Pouliot complained, in regard to cattle killed upon the Intercolonial, that its officials were witnesses, judges and parties to the case. He only asked for justice, but at present people did not get it, as figures of the respective claims and allowances made demonstrated.

Mr. Brouse considered it to be a wrong that in cases of expropriation of property the parties should not be represented before the arbitration. At present the matter lay altogether in the hands of the Government whose officials were not the best qualified to adjudge as to the value of lands.

Mr. Mitchell corroborated the remarks of the member for Terrebonne. He held in many cases the officials of the road were themselves to blame for leaving gates open and neglecting to put up fences, and recklessly driving through herds of cattle that got on the line. There ought to be some tribunal outside of the company's officials, and upon the spot, to deal with such matters, and if this were done it would give extreme satisfaction. Not being a supporter of the Government, himself and his friends did not receive at their hands that treatment to which they were entitled.

Mr. Mackenzie said it was undoubtedly desirable that some person should have authority in cases in which there were disputes as to the fact. By the Act to Amend the Powers of the Official Arbitrators, passed in 1875, such claims as those in question appeared to him to provide for cases such as had been mentioned by the member for Cumberland, at present, in regard to damages to cattle on the Intercolonial, the cases were considered not by the parties who might be to blame, but by higher officials. In cases where there were difficulties and disputes which could not be overcome, he proposed to apply the Act of 1873, so as to have, from time to time, a competent person sent along to investigate cases that might be in dispute.

Mr. Mitchell said in some cases that he knew of none of the higher officials who had been called in to adjudicate.

Sir John Macdonald pointed out that the decisions of the official arbitrators, who were the nominees of the party in power, were not as satisfactory as those would be of a judge. He suggested that a judge of the Exchequer Court might be charged with circuit duty to go round and adjudge upon cases in dispute.

Mr. Mackenzie said that the member for Kingston then proposed to supplant the Dominion Arbitrators by a Judge of the Exchequer Court.

Sir John Macdonald—Yes.

Mr. Mackenzie said the Government would consider the suggestion.

Sir John Macdonald maintained that there must be some further provisions for the protection of people.

Dr. Tupper said the only way to settle matters was to have some one who the people would be convinced would give an unbiased report.

Mr. McCallum spoke of special cases of hardship in his own section.

Mr. Plumb said that at present the officials of the road were naturally prone to take a view favorable to the Government. He therefore thought that the parties should be entitled to name one of the persons by whom his case should be arbitrated.

Mr. Pouliot again spoke of the grievances of his constituents, who were not fairly treated.

Mr. Pope (Compton), said that the people who lived upon a line of railway were naturally prone to be careless about attending to their cattle, believing that they had always recourse against the Government. He did not think that engineers would be as careless as had been spoken of by the member for Northumberland. He thought people should be taught to exercise more care in tending to their animals, and the best way in which matters of this kind could be regulated would be by the courts of justice themselves.

The bill was read a second time.

Mr. Laflamme moved the second reading of the Act further to secure the independence of Parliament. He explained the provisions of the bill as we have previously given them, saying that they were made in accordance with the recommendations of last years committee, on the Anglin case. The amendments were not numerous, but important. The first section of the bill enumerated cases of disqualification, which applies to such as hold offices from the Crown or from any of the provinces, and also to those who enjoyed superannuation allowances, and who were virtually at the mercy of the Crown, since, were they competent to discharge the duties, the Crown could call upon them, deducting the emoluments of their new office from their superannuation allowance. The bill among its other provisions provided against a recurrence of the double shuffle. The bill also clearly defined the distinction between knowingly and wilfully and innocently violating the law, as by the entry into a contract with the Government by a firm to which a member of Parliament belongs. The bill also remedied the ambiguity of the former act as to contracts entered into and completed during the recess.

Mr. Mitchell asked if the fact of a member elected to a seat, notsitting in it during a session, would be held to be occupying it or not.

Mr. Laflamme said that would be another question. To remove any doubt as to the position of a member who was a shareholder in a limited liability company, which was covered by the Imperial Act, a section was now introduced exempting him from liability. Several sections were taken from the Imperial Act. Bankers or brokers, with whom the Government had negotiations, were exempted from the penalties provided by this act. He cited the provisions of the Independence of Parliament Act in several of the British colonies, the section as to contractors having been taken from the New Zealand Act. The eleventh section provided for the recovery of the penalties within twelve months. The remaining sections of the measure were as found in the Imperial Act.

Mr. Masson said there was much in the bill that was extraordinary and vexatious. This clause relating to pensions would not, he considered, be accepted in England. The clause excluding them should not be adopted, as the country should have the advantage of that experience which had been obtained in the service of the crown. The pension which they received they did not obtain from the crown, it having been taken from them year after year to create the superannuation fund, and therefore was entirely their property.

Mr. Mills—But they can be compelled to return to the public service. Moreover, the bill prevented persons who were entitled to superannuation from entering Parliament, since the bill gave them no power of giving up their pension. The Quebec Act provided for the exclusion from this House of those who were in the receipt of any, thing amounting to an annual salary, while here even a fee as a lawyer disqualified a member. This was over-stepping the ground, and was outrageous. Under this Act a lawyer who received a fee from the Local Government was disqualified, while As it was, their pens being above three feet high, they were against the provisions of the Act passed in the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. Mitchell approved of the resolution as far as live stock was concerned, but he scarcely favored such a provision for the carriage of cattle on the decks of vessels carrying passengers. He would propose at the proper stage that the bill be referred to a Committee, who should take the evidence of persons acquainted with the business, some of whom were now within the reach of his voice, in order that the House and accordingly might ascertain the question of any additional danger that might accrue to the cattle and their passengers from the deck carriage of cattle. Clause 2 provides, that the revenues and earnings of the Company shall be for any payment of principal or interest on any of the said bonds being chargeable with the payment of working expenses, and the term "working expenses" is defined. Clause 3 provides, that the sum of $1,000,000, or such amount of the said bonds as may be requisite, shall be set apart and disposed of, and the proceeds applied by the company in paying and discharging the debts or liabilities of the Company, other than the bondholders or bonds guaranteed by the Company, and such of the said debts as have been incurred and were held on the 12th March, 1878, in Canada, or in respect of the use of the International Bridge, shall, if not disputed, be paid within three months after the passing of the Act, and if disputed, within three months after final judgment decreed thereon, and until paid such claim shall be and remain a first lien and charge upon the proceeds of such bonds reserved as aforesaid to the amount of $2,542,661.60, and upon the tolls and revenue of the railway, and may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction by the appointment of a receiver. Clause 5 provides that the principal offices shall be in Canada.

ONLY A CLOD.

BY MISS M. E. BRADDON.

"He has been ill?" cried Maude, "dangerously ill?"

"Yes, ma'am; very dangerously. We had two doctors with him at one time. Brain fever it was, over-fatigue and trouble of the mind, and so on, the doctors said. He came up here after being too late for the steamer by which he was to have gone abroad, and he came to settle everything about the farm and the quarries, and so on; and he worked at it night and day, without rest nor sleep, though me and my husband told him how bad it was for him; and everything was almost settled when he woke one morning bad in his head, and after that got from bad to worse, until his life was almost give up."

"But he is out of danger now?"

"Yes, ma'am, thank God, quite out of danger now, but, oh, so weak; the smallest mouthful that ever I had to deal with wasn't nigher than my poor master now."

Maude burst out crying.

"Don't mind me," she exclaimed, as the kind woman made a clumsy attempt to comfort her, "I am crying for joy. Go and tell my husband that I am here; but not at all any hazard to him. I will be very patient. Thank God I have found him! thank God I shall be able to call on my knees to his bed-side and beg his forgiveness in my neglect and ingratitude!"

Martha Drysdell looked wonderingly at this motherly creature who talked in such collect failing at her husband's feet and begging forgiveness, for Francis had made no complaints in that Cornish house.

"I will walk in there, ma'am," Martha said, "if you and see my master."

She did so, more, but departed, and Maude crept into the old-fashioned room, heeded to the rustling of her silk dress might startle an invalid's slumber. It was time that she was there.

Francis Trodethlyn was lying on his back, with his eyes closed, and his head bandaged with a white cotton handkerchief, which, by the bulk it made, gave him a very different appearance from that which Maude remembered.

She knelt down by the bed-side, and laid her cheek upon the hand that was too weak to be lifted.

"Oh, my love, my love, my husband! my own true and cherished husband! If you wanted to give me a lesson, you have given me a very severe one. I am sure you have made me that I cannot live without you."

Gently she laid her head upon the pillow, and with her own hand put back the straying arms, and told him the story of her penitence and remorse. It was a sweet exchange of forgiveness for the past, and tender promises for the future. Martha kept herself discreetly out of the way, and the husband and wife, truly united for the first time in their lives in that Cornish solitude, were loath to break the spell which had brought such loving calm.

But such spells have to be broken for the common business of life. Punctual to the appointed moment Mrs. Drysdell appeared with her invalid's breakfast-tray, and was unwillingly was sent back empty to Launceston and after that to Mrs. Tredethlyn was handed from the sick room, and made sure that some of the delicacies of the farm-house should follow.

Maude ate her breakfast with a good relish, and then, with a heart lighter than it had been for many a day, she sat down to write to her husband. She had written to him before, but that letter had been destroyed by Francis, and she had to begin all over again.

She was writing the last page when Martha knocked at the door, and told her that her master was awake and wished to see her.

Maude went in, and found Francis sitting up in bed, with his head bandaged, and looking very pale and weak, but with a smile on his face that was very sweet to see.

"Maude," he said, "I have been a brute to you, but I have been punished for it. I have had a fever, and I have been very near to death. I have had time to think, and I have thought of you, and of nothing but you. Can you forgive me?"

Maude's answer was to throw herself upon her knees by the bed-side, and to bury her head in the bed-clothes, that her husband might not see her tears

STOCK MEETING.—The Synod of Hamilton and London will meet in Stratford on the 9th of April.

ARRIVED.—The new bursar of the Asylum, Mr. Thos. Short, has arrived, and will soon take his place.

MEETING OF FORESTERS.—Next month the semi-annual district meeting of the Ancient Order of Foresters is to be held in Tylersville.

REORGANIZING.—It is stated that Knowlton Lodge, I. O. G. T., have decided to sell the hall on Maitland street, erected by them some three years ago, and to amalgamate with the Morrill Temple.

DEBATE.—"Which was the greatest man, Napoleon or Wellington," formed the subject of an interesting debate among the members of St. Stephen's Literary Society last evening. After an oratorical battle of two hours it proved a "Waterloo" for Wellington, Napoleon's side being completely vanquished.

GROUND BREAKING CEREMONIES.—At St. Thomas, on Monday afternoon, the ground for the Alma College building was broken by the Executive Committee. Judge Hughes turning the first sod, Sheriff Munro, Messrs. A. McLachlin, Capt. Sisk, and a number of ladies were present. The corner-stone will be laid on Queen's Birthday.

TEA MEETING IN PETERSVILLE.—A pleasant gathering took place in the Methodist Church, Petersville, last night, under the auspices of the Sunday school. Addresses were given by Revs. B. B. Keefer, Hamilton, and J. W. Cody, Stratford, and the children sang a number of concerted pieces in excellent style. A sumptuous tea was served up in the evening.

SPECIAL SERVICES.—The revival services held in Wellington Street Church for some time past have been brought to a close. During the evening a solo was sung by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Sanderson, and twenty-five or thirty joined the church, making nearly seventy who have been admitted into membership. The meeting was very satisfactory to all concerned.

OPINION.—In our notice of the Irish Society's Benevolent Concert, reference to the singing of Miss Nellie Wolfe, in Moore's beautiful melody, "Believe Me if all those Endearing Young Charms," was inadvertently omitted a circumstance which is all the more annoying to the reporter since the solo in question was really one of the gems of the evening, and well deserving of the encore it received.

ACCIDENT NEAR STRATHROY.—On Monday morning a young man named Allan McLeod, residing in Caradoc, about two miles from Strathroy, hitched up his team, and was driving from the barn to the house, when the pole of the carriage dropped out, and the horses suddenly started and drew him over the dashboard, dislocating his elbow. It was set by Dr. Thompson, and he is doing as well as could be expected.

A PECULIAR PARSON.—There is at present residing in this city a clergyman, who, whilst attending college in New ——, walked all the way from an Ontario town. After his appointment he has now no charge—he astonished a congregation by giving out and reading the 119th Psalm, the whole of which he evidently expected the congregation to sing. They, however, struck before many verses were got through.

APPOINTMENT.—The Connecticut Mutual Life Association agency in this city has been withdrawn, and Mr. Joseph Atkinson has been appointed general agent for London and vicinity for the Corporation Life Association, one of the most successful of our home Canadian companies. The appointment is a good one, and there is no doubt that, through the new appointment, the number of risks taken by it will be greatly increased.

ENTERTAINMENT.—A very agreeable free entertainment was given in the Wellington Street Methodist Church last evening, in which a number of ladies and gentlemen participated in a very successful manner. Mr. J. Brierly presided, and introduced an excellent programme, taken part in by the following ladies and gentlemen:—Mesdames Yates, Lee and Winnett, Misses Forman, Webster and Hilton, and Messrs. G. B. Sanderson, Jr., McKillop, Lawson, Spettigue, Stock, and Bowman. There was a very large attendance, and enjoyment was manifested by all present.

CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC CLERGY.—A Conference of the Catholic clergy of Essex and Kent counties will be held in St. Anthony Hall, Windsor, June 13th. The Conference will discuss the following questions:—The sacred and hierarchial order of the priesthood; the eucharist as a sacrament; the eucharist as a sacrifice; the power of the priest over the mystical body of Christ; St. Paul's epistle to the Romans; history of Gregory VII.; essays by various ministers on the best method of preparing unwritten sermons on the best means of conducting parochial and Sunday Schools.

SEIZURE OF ILLICIT STILLS.—Mr. Inspector Romain, assisted by officers from Brantford, seized a tin, copper-bottom still in the cellar of T. G. Watson, Dumfries, Paris, last Saturday. Reliable information having been given of a still being in the possession of a farmer of Oxford county, Officer C. J. Jones was despatched to work up the case. Upon his arrival at Woodstock, having procured the assistance of Officer McWhinnie and Constable McKee, of that place, he proceeded to the township of East Zorra, where he found in a barn, in a copper still, worm, etc. These having been seized in Her Majesty's name, the premises were searched, but none found. The owner, a farmer's name is Robert Murray, commonly known as "Little Bob Murray," and he appears to be in very comfortable circumstances.

NEW IRON BRIDGE OVER THE THAMES.—At a meeting of the Joint Committee of the Middlesex and Elgin County Councils, in this city, on Monday afternoon—Mr. J. Lane Chairman, and Mr. McKay Secretary —it was decided to erect the "McIntosh Bridge" over the Thames on the town-line between Ekfrid and Caradoc. It was decided that the bridge should be erected on the site of the present one, and that the approaches and piers should be of wood, and the superstructure of iron. The tenders, sixteen in number, for the erection were then opened, many being from American companies. It was decided to award the contract for building the piers and approaches for the sum of $1,495 to Mr. Isaac Crouse. For the iron superstructure, the contract was awarded to the Hamilton Bridge Company at the following rates:—$22.50 per foot for the first span of 150 feet; $12.25 for the second of 50 feet; 17.75 for the third of 43 feet. The contract to be executed to the satisfaction of both Councils. Mr. Holmes, County Engineer of Middlesex, was authorized to proceed to Hamilton at once and test the strength of the iron to be used. Mr. J. C. Campbell was appointed commissioner to superintend the driving of the piles.

LOCAL NOTICES.

TO ROBERT I. WALKER, AND TO OLIVE WALKER, his WIFE.—With respect to the actions brought by you, respectively, against me, for arresting you on the 2nd of August last, I beg to say that I deeply regret the occurrence. I was wholly misled in the matter, and I am now convinced that your conduct was decorous and blameless. I beg to tender my apology in the amplest way for what happened.

THE RHYME IMPROMPTU.

A lovely maiden lay asleep
Upon a bed of roses;
She had the sweetest rosy lips
And handsomest of noses.

But when she oped her bright, blue eyes,
She gave a cry of pain;
A wolf had eaten Father evelet,
And she was back again.

"Struggle me close in your arms, dearest," is a new song. We do not like the word "snuggle"—it savors too much of that cheap affection which wears home spun, doesn't comb its hair regularly, chews spruce gum and drives the cows home. Yet we cannot have all things to please us, and there may easily be worse things than snuggling.

A generally mild-mannered woman was arrested on the police yesterday afternoon, and wanted to see the chap who put that "Country on The Rine Rampage" in our last edition. She was told he had gone to the country for his holidays, but she didn't believe it, and then got her mad up, jumped her back, let down her shoulder, got her false teeth, spat on her hands, blew up her sleeve, and started for the editorial room, fully determined to whale the base quill-driver who dared to insinuate anything against the character of D. I. K. Rine—because he preached in our church!

An esteemed correspondent writes to ask for the origin of the phrase, "Carry the news to Mary." We will tell him. It dates back to the Elizabethan age. The alleged Virgin Queen having resolved upon the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots, communicated her intention to the assembled counsellors by flinging the halter to the Attorney-General, saying with a coarse oath that was unfortunately but in keeping with the age, "Carry the rope to Mary." The Attorney General, however, represented to the Queen that the prisoner, as not being of pleasant birth, had a right to be beheaded, and this accounts for the hapless should-be victim's head blocked while she waited.

Police Court Pencillings.

TUESDAY—L. LAWRENCE, Esq., P. M. Presiding.

John Tytler (by his son) appeared to answer the charge of erecting a frame building on Carling street, within the fire limits, contrary to by-law. Inspector Hughes was the complainant. The defendant's son contended that the improvements were simply repairs, and that the addition 8x15 could not be called a new building. The fact is the entire roof is new, and the wonder is that the erection of the structure should have been allowed to go on in the face of the by-law and the Court's order. The case was further enlarged for a week.

John Hacket, for threatening Constable Lackin, and Thomas Cavanagh for assaulting Cornelius Ryan, were bailed to answer the charges on the 22nd and 25th respectively.

THE MURDER TRIALS.—The trial of the woman Regan and the man Hogan, charged with the murder of the husband of the former at Lucan by poison, was to have begun at the Assizes to-day, but owing to the unavoidable absence of Professor Croft, who made the analysis on the stomach, and who is engaged at the Assizes in Whitby, it is not likely the trial will take place till early next week. The general opinion is that, should no more evidence be adduced than that given at the preliminary investigation, the accused will be discharged. The trial of Munn for murdering Squires, in London township, is expected to come off during the present week.

A REMARKABLY CLOSE CALL.

The merchants and business men of Lucan have frequently remonstrated against the publication of items reflecting upon the conduct of certain individuals in that village, who have, by their wanton disregard of the laws of the land, brought disgrace upon the name of the village and its law and order-loving inhabitants, and injured very materially the business interests advancement of its denizens. The fault does not lie with the newspapers, as is wrongly supposed. Were a man or any number of men to attempt a crime, similar to that chronicled below, in any other place, the facts would be given to the public just the same as they are in this case. Until the neighborhood is rid of such base characters the village cannot be expected to prosper. The remedy is in the hands of the Lucanites themselves, and it behooves them to act promptly, yet judiciously, in any effort looking to the extermination of the members of a gang who do not scruple to outrage the feelings of a community by attempting the assassination of a peace officer after the manner following:—Between eleven and twelve o'clock on Monday night Constable Everett, of Lucan, while entering his residence, opposite Stanley's mill, was fired at by some unknown person from behind the corner of a wood-pile some fifty feet distant. The charge of buckshot, ten in number, hit the door about three inches from Mr. Everett's breast, eight of which became embedded in the door, and the other two went through the thick lumber into the hall way. The constable, for the first time in many months, probably owing to the clear moonlight, had not his revolver in his hand, but notwithstanding this he made for the direction of the assassin, and to his great surprise that there were no fewer than three on the stampede from their lair behind the wood-pile. Mr. Everett chased them for some time through Mr. Butler's fields, but they got too much of a start at the outset, and escaped—but, however, had to leave a memento of their figures. They were in their stocking feet, and made desperate attempts to get away from the same, but life they had so cruelly endeavored to take. Mr. Everett returned home a wiser man afterwards, and on examining the door found that the shot had struck within half an inch of his head, and had knocked a number of splinters off the door. But for the fact that the shot was fired in an oblique direction, the discharge must have proved the officer's last one, following with fatal results. Mrs. Everett had a narrow escape. She was approaching the door with the view of admitting her husband when the shot was fired, and trots. There appears to be no news and something ought to be done.

MIDDLESEX SPRING ASSIZES.

List of Civil Suits Justice Wilson's Charge to the Grand Jury.

The Spring Assizes for the County of Middlesex opened yesterday afternoon in the City Hall, owing to the fact that the Court House is being enlarged and repaired. On the criminal list (already published in the FREE PRESS) there are fourteen indictments; the civil list is smaller than for many years, as will be seen by the annexed statement:—

OPENING OF THE COURT.

His Lordship Justice Adam Wilson, the Judge on the circuit, took his seat on the bench at 12.30—the counsel then in attendance being Messrs. Becher, Taylor, Rock, Q.C.; M. C. Cameron, Q.C. (Crown Counsel), and H. Macmahon, Q.C.

The Grand Jury chose Mr. John Levie, of West Williams, as their foreman.

CHARGE TO THE GRAND JURY.

His Lordship, in addressing the Grand Jury, said there are not many cases on the criminal list, but several of them are of a serious character. There are 13 persons charged—six, however, being for murder, one for obstructing the railway track; two for larceny; one for obtaining money under false pretences; one for embezzlement; three for forgery; one for fraudulently removing his goods and effects within 30 days prior to the issuing of a writ of attachment against him, and one for maliciously killing a hog. Two of the cases of murder are said to have been committed by one man, and one by violence. His Lordship briefly recited the law in reference to murder, showing that in law there is no difference between one mode of taking human life illegally and another. The offence consists in the taking of life without excuse or justification, and with the intention of taking it. It is the intent that affixes the criminality. That intent, however, need not be proved by affirmative testimony. It may be inferred from the circumstances under which the act was done. If the act was done without any excuse or justification, or the pretext for any such excuse or justification is a murder. If the act was committed by the administration of poison, of such a character and in such a quantity as would be likely to occasion death, and there was no necessity for giving it, and death happened, it would be murder. Or if the act were committed with such a degree of violence that the striking, beating or kicking by which it was effected would be likely to produce death and there was no sufficient cause for the use of such violence, and death ensued, it would be murder. The intent in the act also declares to be assumed from the use of means which are likely to cause death. The law declares in such cases that the party intended to do that which he did do, and to do that which would be the probable consequence of his act. When the act is done under such circumstances, it is not the language of the indictment, done with malice aforethought. His Lordship then explained that taking a life in self-defence was not murder, but manslaughter. If the Grand Jury believed there were warrant-ed in finding the higher offence, it will be for them to do so, and leave to the Court and petit jury the determination of the being that offence or one of a lighter character. He then spoke of the serious duty of obstructing the railway track, reading the statute governing the same. The punishment meted out to such an offender, if found guilty, was a severe one, and the object of the law was to defer persons from committing acts which may occasion this most serious damage to property, and often the loss of life. His Lordship then apprehately defined the law in reference to larceny and embezzlement, and continued:—The charge of fraudulently removing by the insolvent of his goods and effects within 30 days prior to the issuing of an attachment in insolvency against him is a statutory offence, especially enacted to insure fair dealing on the part of the insolvent towards his creditors, whom he is unable to pay in full. It is his duty to give up all that he has, which is often but a very small part of his inability to those he owes so much to, and for children he is entitled to be entirely freed by the operation of the Insolvent Law. Maliciously killing a hog, or any other animal, is a serious offence, and is always severely punished, if proved. It exhibits a bad and revengeful spirit, and is generally led loose in such a manner as to be definitely proved. The following suits were then tried:—

Peter Skinner et al., vs. Wm. Clark et al.

This was an action brought by Peter Skinner, mason and farmer, residing in the Township of Aldboro', against Wm. Clark and Wm. Danby, of the same township, for $1,000 damages, in consequence of bodily injury received by plaintiff's wife through the negligence of defendants in turning out of her having been struck by a cow, sawn down by defendants, as she was driving along the 2nd line, Aldboro' and Carters, and which resulted in her being severely injured. At the Fall Assizes last a verdict was given for defendant, and application was subsequently made for a new trial, which was granted. When the case was called to-day, it was announced that parties had agreed to a verdict for plaintiffs for $280, which was accordingly entered. Jas. Bell, Esq., of Delaware, for defendants. H. Macmahon, Q. C.

SEDUCTION.

Jane Lipsit, residing in Mount Brydges, brought suit against Jas. Taggert, of the same place, for seduction of her daughter. Plaintiff is a widow and the girl Lydia, who was seduced, is the eldest of her thirteen children, and is about 25 years of age. Defendant is a man about 50 years of age, and married. Damages it was alleged, took place under promise of marriage, which defendant failed to implement. He was a carpenter by trade, and possessed no means. The Judge therefore charged the jury—there being no defence—to bring in a verdict sufficiently small to be within the power of defendant to pay. The jury found for plaintiff, damages, $250. Rock, Q. C., for plaintiff.

Moses Mawson vs. G. T. Johnston.

This was an action to recover two instalments due on a chattel mortgage given by defendant, in settlement of a claim for the seduction by him of plaintiff's daughter—the amount originally agreed on being $800. Both parties reside in Medilivray. There was no defence. Verdict for plaintiff, $637.80. Rock, Q.C., for plaintiff.

John Hoole vs. the M. & M. Insurance Co.

Action to recover on a policy, a verdict being given by consent for $500. Macmahon, Q. C., for plaintiff. Taylor for defendant.

Joseph McKay vs. James Mullen.

This case was settled out of Court. Macmahon, Q. C., for plaintiff.

London, March 23, 7 a.m.—A St. Petersburg special says rumors are in circulation that Russia has demanded from the Porte the right over the Sea of Marmora immediately. The correspondent believes that these reports, although exaggerated and entirely unfounded, and that Russia is making, or about to make, representations in regard to the Black Sea Convention, and the question of the embarkation of Russian troops at Dujukdere has caused great irritation.

An inspired article in the Journal de St. Petersburg attracts much attention. It points to the continuance of the peace in the Sea of Marmora in defiance of the International law, and asks if it is time to ask England what she really wants. Europe should call England before the Congress to explain her foreign policy. The article moderate.—W. A. PHILOCOX, Napier P.O. C210

WARLIKE RUMORS IN LONDON!

Chances of the Congress Meeting Diminished.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, March 22.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says:—Gortchakoff has positively declared that he will not submit the Bessarabian question to the Congress, but retrocess forcibly if Roumania opposes.

London, March 22.—A Paris telegram says the greatest excitement prevails. Granville should be excluded from the Congress as those touching the Holy Places, as introducing needless complication with Syria, because Syria might have been offered to her as compensation for the English occupation of Egypt, and because the English questions of Egypt and Syria and Egypt might impair the good understanding with England.

A great change has occurred in the last few days in the opinion about England's attitude. The Clairon and Le Debats and the Republique Francaise commend England's policy. This feeling is shared, with few exceptions, by the entire press of all parties.

London, March 22.—Italy will exert her utmost influence in the Congress to secure Russian predominance in Europe, by seeking to extend the Hellenic kingdom and constituting other Christian nationalities.

London, March 22.—Italy will exert her utmost influence in the Congress to secure Russian predominance in Europe, by seeking to extend the Hellenic kingdom and constituting other Christian nationalities.

London, March 22.—A Paris telegram says the greatest excitement prevails. Granville should be excluded from the Congress as those touching the Holy Places, as introducing needless complication with Syria, because Syria might have been offered to her as compensation for the English occupation of Egypt, and because the English questions of Egypt and Syria and Egypt might impair the good understanding with England.

A great change has occurred in the last few days in the opinion about England's attitude. The Clairon and Le Debats and the Republique Francaise commend England's policy. This feeling is shared, with few exceptions, by the entire press of all parties.

London, March 23, 7 a.m.—A St. Petersburg special says rumors are in circulation that Russia has demanded from the Porte the right over the Sea of Marmora immediately. The correspondent believes that these reports, although exaggerated and entirely unfounded, and that Russia is making, or about to make, representations in regard to the Black Sea Convention, and the question of the embarkation of Russian troops at Dujukdere has caused great irritation.

An inspired article in the Journal de St. Petersburg attracts much attention. It points to the continuance of the peace in the Sea of Marmora in defiance of the International law, and asks if it is time to ask England what she really wants. Europe should call England before the Congress to explain her foreign policy. The article moderate.—W. A. PHILOCOX, Napier P.O. C193-tf

THE CHINESE FAMINE.

Unparalleled Distress in all the Northern Provinces.

UTTER DEPLETION THREATENED.

San Francisco, Cal., March 22.—Shanghai advices, Feb. 17th, state that the famine is stretching all over the Northern Provinces of China, causing unparalleled distress. Land taxation has been virtually remitted in eight Provinces, but too late for relief. Government rescripts are exhausted, and the utter depletion of an enormous portion of the Empire is threatened.

Viceroy Li Hung Chang authorizes the working of the coal and iron mines in the neighborhood of Tientsin. The iron is pronounced excellent and the coal inferior.

THE GRECIAN INSURRECTION.

Villages Sacked and Burned by Turks.

London, March 22.—The Times' despatch from Volo says the villages of Olympus, Spiraea, Carta and Litochori have been sacked and burned by Turks. The women, children and old men were massacred, except some who escaped to the mountains, which are still covered with snow. Unless a ship is sent to relieve them, they will probably perish. The insurrection progresses steadily.

GREAT BRITAIN

THE WALKING MATCH.

London, March 22.—At the walking match at 11 this morning O'Leary had completed 403 miles; Vaughan, 390; Brown, 364.

London, March, 23, 6 a. m.—The pedestrian contest has become virtually a match between O'Leary and Vaughan, all other competitors being hopelessly behind. Brown's backers will withdraw their man to-day, as he is exceedingly sleepy. The contest seems now almost assured to O'Leary.

London, March 22.—At 5 o'clock this afternoon O'Leary had walked 429 miles; Vaughan, 416, and Brown, 391. Vaughan is in better condition than O'Leary, who has a trembling in his knees.

STAGNATION IN THE IRON TRADE.

London, March 22.—The Times states that the iron trade in South Yorkshire is stagnant. A large number of men are out of work. Within a few days two of the leading works in Rotherham have stopped, owing to a scarcity of orders, and about a thousand additional men rendered idle. In three establishments the Midland Iron Company had during the year 1876 paid dividends averaging 50 per cent. per annum.

It is feared the colliers will strike against the reduction in wages, in which case 30,000 men will be unemployed.

ROME

PAPAL CONSISTORY—PRIEST LEO AND THE JESUITS.

London, March 22.—Rome dispatches say that a consistory will be held on the 27th inst. Cardinal Simeoni will be the Pope not wishing to commit himself to any line of policy in the present complication. His Holiness will only deliver an allocution, avoiding all political allusions. The head of the Jesuits' Order has returned to Rome, but he received the proposition very coldly. The Jesuits are therefore opposing the Pope's general policy.

THE NEW MINISTRY.

London, March 22.—A Rome special says that excepting Signor Cairoli, President of the Council, Zanardelli, Minister of the Interior, and Debaucris, Minister of Public Instruction, all the new ministers are utterly obscure men, even in Italy.

The Cuban Insurrection.

7,000 PATRIOTS ENTRENCHED — THE RECENT SURRENDERS UNIMPORTANT.

New York, March 22.—A passenger who arrived yesterday from Havana states that from four to seven thousand Cuban insurgents are entrenched in the eastern and Los Villas districts, and less than one thousand had surrendered to the Spaniards. The opinion in Havana was that the war would not cease for years unless the Cubans are allowed to govern themselves.

Midnight Weather Report.

Washington, D. C., March 23.—For Middle States and Lower Lakes, warm, clear or partly cloudy.

Boynton Swims Across the Straits of Gibraltar.

Washington, March 22.—A dispatch from Gibraltar, yesterday, says that Boynton returned there after swimming across the Straits to Tangier, being seventeen hours making the trip across. He was nearly swept out to the sea by high waves and spring tides.

Captain Boyton reached Lisbon, Portugal, last week, and proceeded from there to the Tagus. Between Toledo and the capital he shot thirty-one cascades in the navigable part of the river. The current carried him at times more than thirty miles an hour. He arrived in good health and very little bruised.

Swiss-American Trade.

Washington, March 22.—A Geneva correspondent telegraphs:—In reply to inquiries as to how Swiss interests are likely to be affected by the proposed changes in the United States tariff, the Swiss representative at Washington has informed the Government that the import duties on watches and silks will probably be increased 20 per cent. This would entirely destroy the already languishing trade between America and Switzerland.

Curious Scene in a Church.

New York, March 22.—Father Walsh, pastor of the Catholic Church at Long Branch, has caused the arrest of two liquor dealers there, for selling whiskey to a woman who went to his church drunk and danced the whole length of the aisle to the tune of St. Patrick's Day, which was being played by the organ.

Suicide of Rev. Mr. Marples

Disappearance and Probable Suicide of a Young Girl.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Toronto, March 22.—Mr. D. I. K. Rine has issued the following card:—

To Rine Total Abstinence Clubs of Canada and all concerned:—

DEAR FRIENDS.—After a consultation with prominent temperance workers it is deemed advisable that I should, in view of existing circumstances, call in my engagements for the present, which I desire now to do, and hope there will be no rash or premature action by any Clubs or their individual members. The proper time will come for the consideration of change of name, or altering of Constitution in the contemplated convention to be holden in June or July. I ask a suspension of judgment and the measure of charity towards myself that I have extended to others. Yours for the fallen.

D. I. K. RINE.

During the week choice grade Durhams have been in brisk demand, in fill orders for English firms. No animal that does not weigh 1,250 pounds live weight in Toronto will be shipped. On Tuesday, the 19th, 106 head were sold in London at $140 per head.

Three hotel-keepers named Jas. Paul, John Fales, and Daniel O'Hara, were arrested this afternoon on a charge of having spirited away a whiskey informer, who was to have been a witness against them for a breach of the liquor law.

Some valuable throughbred Clydesdales were sold this afternoon. Sir Colin, a six-year old stallion, 16 hands high, bred by Cassilis Hill, Scotland, was sold to Peter Scott, Stratford, for $1,000. Times—Grey, a beautiful dark bay, 17 hands, bred by John Henderson, Auchtermuchty, Scotland, was sold to Mr. Giles, Brooklin, Ont., for $1,025. Marquis of Lorne, 17 hands 1 inch, bred by J. N. Fleming, Knockdon, Scotland, became the property of J. M. Gibbett, of Pickering, for $1,100.

A splendid marble bust, executed by Marshall s Wood, of late Chief Justice Draper, has just been placed in St. James' Cathedral. The late Chief Justice was a member of the Cathedral congregation for 48 years.

A race meeting is to be held at Woodbine Park, on April 25th, 26th and 27th. The programme will comprise liberal purses for running and trotting horses.

This afternoon Rev. Jno. Marples, former a Presbyterian minister, but lately a convert to a spiritualism, committed suicide by taking ten grains of strychnine. He lived six hours after taking the poison, leaving taking it at 3 and died at 9. A stomach pump and every available method was used to avert death. He suffered terribly in his last hours. An inquest will be held to-morrow. Deceased was about 50 years of age, married, and was a family in destitute circumstances. His principal public act was about his last as a Minister, was to oppose B. F. Underwood, the Boston infidel, in a three days' debate upon the "Supremacy of God."

Maggie Rummerer, aged 18, a bright and attractive girl, left a home on Simcoe street, where she was staying the evening before last, and has neither been seen or heard of since. She left a note behind her saying she was going to commit suicide, but giving no reason. Crossed on love is supposed to be the cause of her disappearance.

New Brunswick Legislature.

WANT OF CONFIDENCE MOTION BROUGHT UP.

Fredericton, N.B., March 22.—The Provincial Secretary having made his Budget speech, and having moved the House into Committee of Supply, Mr. Covert, leader of the Opposition, moved a vote of want of confidence. His resolution is to the effect that as the Government has not brought out the leaders of the House to be supplied with information relating to the affairs of the Province; has disregarded a resolution of the House with respect to the obtaining of a decision of the Courts upon the legality of expenditures which were made during the last year a large expenditure in excess of the appropriation; has violated the plain provisions of the statute by omitting to furnish detailed statements of extraordinary expenditure; has practically increased the salaries of certain heads of departments by allowing them large and unnecessary amounts for travelling and other incidental expenses ignored by official; by recommending certain manufacturers of another Province to the serious disadvantage of our own; has failed in other respects to administer affairs in the true interests of the people of the Province—is demerits condemnation by the House.

The debate will likely occupy some time.

FIRE IN PARKHILL.

Drought's Cabinet Shop and Dwelling Burned.

LOSS BETWEEN $3,000 AND $4,000

Parkhill, Ont., March 22.—John Drought's cabinet shop, wareroom and dwelling, upstairs, and contents were burned last night. The loss is between $3,000 and $4,000. Insurance on the building, $700; on household goods, $500; on stock, $700; total, $1,900. The fire seemed to have caught in the workshop. Its origin is unknown, and was first observed about 11 p. m. Two fire engines were promptly on the spot, but the fire had got too much headway to be stopped. Nothing was saved. Mr. Drought had some difficulty in saving his children.

OTTAWA.

SHOOTING AFFRAY—THE BRITISH COLUMBIA GOLD FIELDS—BREWERS' LICENSES.

Ottawa, March 21.—The report comes from Clarenden Township that a couple of nights ago a man named Jos. Brownlee was shot and injured in the back of his head and legs by a couple of farmers, who were watching for thieves. Brownlee, it seems, had his team in a suspicious locality, and refused to give his name when asked, jumping into his wagon and driving off. The fact that it was he who was shot was ascertained afterwards. The residents of the township have been losing grain and light implements lately.

Mr. Bunster, M.P., has received information that gold has been discovered at a place called Alberni, on the east coast of Vancouver's Island. A colony of about 300 Chinamen are working the digging.

The License Commissioner has received information from the Ontario Government to obtain a list of brewers who had paid a double tax on liquors for the last two years, so that the amount may be refunded with interest.

FIRES.

Cincinnati, O., March 22.—Long, Clemens & Drury's wholesale paint and varnish store damaged $12,000 by fire.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, March 22.

After prayers and routine,

Mr. Mackenzie moved that when the House adjourns it stand adjourned till Tuesday, Monday being a holiday.

Mr. Haggart introduced a Bill to amend the Controverted Elections Act. He explained that it was to provide for the return of money paid into the Election Court by way of security when such petitions were rejected.

Mr. Holton said the bill being apparently to meet a particular case ought to be introduced as a private bill.

Mr. Haggart said he had consulted with the Premier, who had advised this course.

Mr. Mackenzie said that was in a private conversation.

Mr. Cartwright moved that this House on Tuesday resolve itself into a committee to consider a resolution to provide for the appointment of an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada.

Resolved—That it is expedient to appoint an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada; salary not to exceed $3,200 per annum.

Mr. Mitchell hoped that this measure was not to legislate out of office his honorable friend the Receiver-General.

On motion of Mr. Laurier the House went into committee on the resolution—That it is expedient to repeal the customs duties imposed on malt imported into Canada by the Act, 40 Vic., chap. 11, sec. 2, and to provide that British and foreign malt, when imported into Canada, shall be immediately placed in a suitable bonding warehouse provided for the cost of the importer, and approved as suitable for the purpose by a duly authorized revenue officer, and be kept in warehoused shall be bonded under the excise regulation then in force in relation to malt made in Canada, and shall be subject to the same duty as malt made in Canada. He explained that the importation duties of foreign malt were merely nominal, and parties interested had petitioned the Government to have it removed. The excise provision was to guard against illicit distillation. Canada exported a large quantity of malt to the United States, but according to the revenue returns imported none. Canadian barley being much superior to that in the United States. The maltsters believed the duty was an impediment in their way, and as there had been no revenue derived from it the Government, whose policy was a revenue tariff had deemed it expedient to abolish it.

Mr. Masson remarked upon the anomaly that this duty had been increased last year, while this year it was deemed expedient to abolish it.

Mr. Cartwright said it was the work of peace. The Government had often to deal with foolish people, and there being no revenue derived from this imposition, the Government had abolished it, which, indeed, was a matter of convenience to the Excise Department. Moreover, were the duty continued the Americans would use it as an argument in favor of placing increased duties on Canadian malt.

Mr. Mitchell opposed the proposal. He did not believe that laws should be passed simply for the convenience of any department. Moreover, though he did not altogether favor a retaliatory tariff

ANOTHER OLD REFORMER DESERTS THEM.

In yesterday's issue some extracts were given from the Paris Star, explanatory of the causes which have led to its recantation of Gritism, and the declaration of its adherence to the Liberal-Conservative cause under the guidance of Sir John Macdonald. It is quite evident to the readers of those extracts, and of others that may be made from a succeeding article, that such a step was not taken except as the result of long continued disappointment as touching the acts of the so-called "reformers." The journalist relates his experiences affecting the party during twenty years of association with it. He continued with it during its periods of political adversity, and joined in its successes only with the hope, the expectation, that the promises it had been so lavish of when claiming the confidence of the country would be carried into immediate and effective practice. And what did they not promise? That the departments of administration should be purified, and economy mark the conduct of them. That electoral bribery and corruption should be banished as "abhorrent to reform." That coalitions should be avoided, "as being in their very "nature corrupt and contrary to the spirit "of our institutions." The promise of such conditions were included in the platform of the "reform" party. But what has the intelligent journalist to say touching the manner in which the promises indicated were redeemed? He says, in language that betrays the bitterness of his disappointment—

"HOW HOSPITALITY HAVE WE BEEN BETRAYED AND DECEIVED!"

And not the Star alone, but if the individual members in the party were to be as frank as the conductors of the Star have been, they too would exclaim, "We have "been woefully betrayed and deceived, "alas." Indeed, the country at large has felt the weight of disappointment amounting to chagrin, for it had not been deemed to be possible that such earnest professors of political virtue and rigid resolution should have so soon wallowed in the mire of corruption. It reads like a libel on the public men in Canada that those to whom the country had given almost unlimited confidence should have been preeminent in abusing that confidence by a breach of the entire code upon which it had been obtained.

"SCARCELY HAD THE FIRST SMOKE OF "BATTLE PASSED, AND MACKENZIE'S GOVERN-"MENT SEEN FIRMLY SEATED IN OFFICE, BE-"FORE OUR REFORM PRINCIPLES RECEIVED A "RUDE SHOCK."

Such is the testimony of the Star.

"UNBLUSHING INTRIGUE, SCANDALOUS SER-"VICE, CORRUPTIONS, NEPOTISM WERE "STAMPED UPON THE BROWS OF THE LEADERS "OF THE REFORM PARTY."

Such is the evidence of one who for twenty-three years had been a follower of and a firm believer in the promises of these men. And what did he do when the fact of their gross betrayal of principle first broke in upon him? He did just that which thousands of others have done.

"WE STILL STAGGERED ON WITH BLIND FAITH "IN OUR PARTY AND ITS LEADERS."

"And so did I," will be the ejaculation of thousands on thousands of those equally betrayed, who will read the remarkable confession. "Staggering on in blind faith" truthfully depicts the condition to which Reformers were reduced. Had they been in any other condition of mind they would have revolted long ago, for the evidences that they have been grossly betrayed by those in whom they trusted have been full and repeated. And the comparison the Star makes of the present with the former condition of things is equally instructive. It says on that point:—

"Under the Administration of Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada was happy, prosperous and contented. With the single exception of the Pacific scandal charges, no wrong-doing was imputed to Sir John's Government. He never was accused, even, of misappropriating one dollar of the public money. What a contrast to the history of the Mackenzie Administration does a comparison in this regard suggest?"

Then comes the narration of the long catalogue of misdeeds which lie like an unholy burden to the disgrace of the administrators of affairs. We need not recount for our readers, who are familiar with them. The last blow—the coup d'etat at Quebec, in the interest of "reform"—appears to have filled this life-long liberal with indignation. Forbearance ceased to be a virtue. Expectation of better times and better deeds had been too often baulked, and at last he cast the dust off his feet against those whom he once implicitly relied upon. And in conclusion this disappointed, indignant Reformer says.—

"No wonder that during the past summer Sir John Macdonald was greeted throughout Canada as a deliverer. The people saw dangers, mechanics, and the business men of this country look to him as the only statesman who could restore prosperity to depressed and almost ruined Canada. We say to Reformers that if ever there was a time when the interests of the country were jeopardized that time is now. If ever there was a time when unswerving loyalty, steadfast patriotism, and abiding morality at the helm of state it is now. We address this appeal to all right-thinking men that Sir John A. Macdonald and the Opposition deserve the confidence of Reformers and Conservatives alike, and that we believe they will receive that confidence."

And so say all of us!

MR. BLAKE'S RETIREMENT.

Mr. Blake is about to remove his household gods to their old shrine in Toronto. This would seem to indicate that Mr. Blake has cut his connection with official life for the present, and if so, his determination is a wise one. Mr. Blake has been a failure, a magnificent failure, and this is admitted by friend and foe. He has neither been a boon to his country, a source of strength and power to his political friends, nor a terror to his enemies. In fact his influence in the House during the latter part of his brief career has been very little for either good or evil. This is singular too, for both sides admit that Mr. Blake is by far the ablest man on the Ministerial side of the House, and this of itself should have enhanced his value as an ally and his influence as a leader. There is, therefore, something of mystery in this gentleman's sinking so much in the estimation of the Commons in so short a time. His career so far might be conned over by young legislators as a profitable lesson, especially if they have sufficient powers of analysis to discover the causes that have led to failure, and prudence enough to avoid them in their own life.

But are not Mr. Blake's friends entitled to bear a part of the blame, if any blame there be, for this failure? Was it right to raise public expectation so high regarding the achievements of an untried man? What did the world know, what did his most intimate friends know, nay, what did Mr. Blake himself know of our ex-Minister of Justice, except as a distinguished member of the Chancery Bar? But how many eminent lawyers does the Parliamentary history of Great Britain point out as ornaments of the Bar and signal failures in the halls of the Legislature? Was it not preparing the way for Mr. Blake's failure to come in for disappointment of his friends, to have ushered him into public life with that honor and éclat that should have been the result of its close, supposing that he had served his country honestly and skilfully? The party and the party organs, the party leaders and the party followers, awarded him a magnificent triumph, not because he had fought and conquered, but simply because he consented to enter the lists to win his spurs. Mr. Blake would have required to have been something more than human, to have realized the expectations that were formed of him, and anything less was only a failure. The only thing that can be said in extenuation of this folly is to be found in the circumstances of the Reform party itself. Under the imprudent and imperious dictatorship of Mr. Brown, the party had been left without a single able man in its ranks to take up the truncheon of command, which he was forced to resign, and the party, in this emergency, was obliged to march with Messrs. Mackenzie and McKellar at their head. No one need be surprised, therefore, at the paeons with which the advent of Mr. Blake was hailed, or at the flattery which turned that gentleman's head and helped on his failure.

Then we cannot believe that, however circumstances may have constrained Mr. Blake to remain too long in such questionable company, he ever descended so low, or so far compromised his honor, as to have approved of some of the worst acts of the Ministry of which he was a member. Indeed, we have too many proofs that, for the last two years or so, it has been a constant warfare between his party obligations and his sense of honor and integrity, so that there is a measure of truth in the statement, that his health at last gave way under this mental and moral conflict. When he got his eyes fairly opened to the fact, that his colleagues in several instances were men whom in private life he would not have selected as friends, and for whose actions, though officially responsible, he must have suffered contempt, then it would have been strange indeed if this young man, supposing, him possessed of high and patriotic aspirations, and a pure and generous nature, should have continued to display the same ardor and enthusiasm in the cause he avowed his heart at the beginning. When he discovered the sordid motives which actuated his colleagues in most cases, it reacted strongly upon him, and led Jay, no doubt for thousands of times, to regret his connection with them. Vigor of action and ardor in the cause are not to be found for under those conditions.

But there is something in his own character that has had a good deal to do with this failure. We can scarcely point to a successful leader of men in public life in whom the genial spirit, the kindly element, the feeling of bonhomie were not well developed and carried out in every day life. Mr. Blake, unfortunately for his success, is sadly deficient here, and much of his want of success may be attributed to this defect in his character. He is cold as an icicle, dreamy, abstracted, unsympathetic, and what militates against his success more than any of all these, is a sneering, sarcastic disposition which wounds deeply and incurably. No one therefore should regret his withdrawal from official life, but his best friends may regret that he did not carry out his threat long ago, and retire from a position in which he was powerless to confer benefit upon the country, and equally unable to gain honor or fame for himself. A few years careful study of the real wants of the country, of the temper of the House, of the cause of his own failure, and the means of rectifying his mistakes, may return him to public life a wiser and more useful man.

The late General Sir W. O'Grady Haly, whose death at Halifax has been announced, entered the service in 1808, and at the opening of the Crimean war had attained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He was one of the few who served throughout this war. He had a horse killed under him at the Alma, and received four bayonet wounds at Inkerman; he was in engagement at Balaklava, and saw the fall of Sebastopol. For his services he was made full Colonel and a Companion of the Bath; he received the Crimean medal with four clasps, and decorations from France and Turkey. He was made a general officer in 1869, a Lieutenant-General four years later, and a General in full in October, 1877. During the temporary absence of Earl Dufferin last year, he acted as administrator. In his long military career he was a gallant officer.

A man in England is fast approaching that point of wealth at which a person receives the title of millionaire. He invested all his capital in a huge black bear, an able-bodied bear with a strong constitution. The bear wears a blanket, on which is inscribed "Russia." The man and bear travel through the country with an assortment of clubs, and for five cents he will let an Englishman fling three clubs at the bear. It is pretty tough on the quadruped, but he grins and bears it. This man has used up three bears, and the fourth is beginning to show signs of losing interest in the European question, but the man clears the price of the bear in about two days, and then, of course, all is clear profit. A good-sized bear lasts him about a fortnight.

NONE THE RICHER FOR THAT.

Now that there is a probability that the United States will assent to the verdict of the Arbitrators in the fishery dispute, before whom it pleaded, and pay over to Canada $5,500,000, a visible smile is seen to play upon the features of Ministers at Ottawa. They will beg a good round sum, while as to the codfish in Gaspé Bay, it is doubtful if they will be diminished to any material extent by the bob-line and sinkers of the Yankee fishermen. And no doubt the same feeling of satisfaction would be felt among us all, if it were not for some serious drawbacks. Grit and Tory agree that five and a half millions is a fairish sum to get hold of. But what is thus gained at the spigot the Government lets out at the bunghole. Why, the losses upon that steel rail transaction of Sandy Mackenzie will swallow up more than half of the total amount of the award, to pay which the United States people have been declaring will sink them in the sloughs of poverty. If to this be added such losses as that at Fort Francis; those in connection with the Georgian Bay Branch; the Kaministiquia job; the Neebing Hotel, and the general extravagances which have marked the reckless career of the Grits, it will be evident that had not such a Government been in power Canada could have afforded to have made a present to the American nation of the privilege of fishing, and have by none the poorer than we shall be after receiving their five and a half millions of dollars in recurrence of the same. Before will stop an ugly hole in the finances, and if the Government at Washington would render a most important service to the Canadian "Reformers," they could best do so by handing over the money as early as possible. A general election is soon to take place, and five and a half millions would come in handy for the exercise of those purity tactics which "Big Push," Major Walker, Mr. Cock, Senator Simpson, and others of that ilk were proved to be addicted to. Yes, five and a half millions is a good sum, but as it has been for the most part wasted in advance by Grit agency, Canada will be but very little the richer for it, after all.

THE "GLOBE" IN A QUANDARY.

A somewhat strange spectacle presented itself in the House of Commons on Thursday night, when Mr. Dymond, member for North York, was obliged to condemn from the same seat in Parliament house memorable references that had appeared in the Globe, to the editorial columns of which he is a contributor. The following are the statements referred to:—

"Recent revelations have shown that a considerable number of the Quebec representatives in Opposition in the House of Commons have sold themselves for corruption to the action of Lieutenant-Governor Letellier, and for fooling very nearly and nearly every stranger to the presence of a Liberal Administration in Quebec. There were several members of the Opposition who fell recently by several of those patriotic gentlemen, and they are now in their graves. There are some of them, it being yet impossible to ascertain all the ramifications of the Du Bonnet-Joly system of patronage—Messrs. Baby, Macdougall (Three Rivers), Masson, Brosha, Caron, Coffey, Horner, Gill, and Guthrie all Crown prosecutors in their several districts, getting from $1,000 to $4,000 per year apiece."

The Globe editor was earnest and eloquent in his endeavors to impress upon the House that he was not the author of the calumnies, and to express his opinion that the matter in question should not have appeared in its columns. While he told Parliament that he had not had any part or lot in the matter, he did not say who had, though he must have known right well that Senator Brown was in attendance on the House. Of course the gentlemen so wrongfully inculpated rose one after the other to deny the allegations, and the Globe was thus ejected in the face of the country of a series of atrocious slanders, its own editor-in-chief, Mr. Dymond, being compelled to bear witness against it. All parties concurred in condemning what was done, though Mr. Young sought to cross the scent by setting up a cry that Sir John had something to do with the Mail newspaper. This the Opposition leader emphatically denied. Sir John said:

"Why the last speaker (Mr. Young) alluded couple his name with the Mail: he did not know especially after the announcement made by Mr. Dymond) had made a short time ago to the honorable gentleman, that he had severed his connection with the Mail. When the Mail was established he subscribed, I think, half he had given it up, and he had no more control over the Mail than the hon. gentleman himself over the Globe."

Altogether, the ministerialists got the worst of it, but it would not be surprising if Mr. Dymond were to "get the sack," Senator Brown will never pursue any person occupying such relations to himself than to be other than his political slave and persistent apologist.

Mr. Edward King writes from London to the Boston Journal: "London is beginning to agitate the question of the electric light. There is a photographer here who takes photographs by means of that beautiful invention in the darkest evenings and people prefer to sit at night rather than in the daytime. He has got all his gear and implements will shortly be made of some of the principal streets with the light now used in Paris. At Boulogne-sur-Mer, where the train stops, I observed that the Poerta del Sol, a large and rather dull square in the centre of Madrid, is most successfully illuminated by lights set in six globes of equal glass. In sets of three or two lamp posts about twice as tall as those generally used for gas. A few says the electric lights enabled him to read small print when thirty or forty yards from them; the globes have no painful glare whatever, but each one seemed like a full moon." Regent Circus, the centre of Haymarket and other crowded thoroughfares will have the electric apparatus before many months. I fancy."

There was a romance in the life of the late Judge Leonard, Representative in Congress from Louisiana. Some time ago at the age of seventy-five he married a lady who was visiting the United States with her parents, and between whom and Judge Leonard a warm attachment sprang up. The parents opposed the match, and shortly afterwards returned to Cuba, having, however, agreed to permit the couple to correspond. After her departure Judge Leonard wrote several letters, but as no answers were received, he suspected that they had been intercepted. About three weeks ago he determined to go to Cuba and get an explanation. After he left Washington nothing was heard from him until a dispatch reached Secretary Evarts, stating that he had died at Havana of yellow fever. He was only 32 years of age.

The novel spectacle of selling a negro to the highest bidder was witnessed in the streets of Hickman, Ky., on Saturday last. Mr. James Barksdale was the auctioneer, and as the negro man stood on the block, and the voice of the auctioneer rose and fell crying the bids, it revived reminiscences of old and by-gone days. The colored people crowded around in anxious expectancy. The negro sold was one John Cooper, who had been previously tried and convicted as a vagrant, and the verdict of the jury was that he should be sold into servitude for six months, as the law provides and directs.

The Detroit Free Press remarks.—The Canadian Parliament is making efforts towards economy. They still, however, cling to the custom of assembling at three p. m. instead of twelve, as Congress does, and thus waste money in gas, while parliamentary gas is wasted, besides giving the youth of Canada a bad example by keeping late hours.

A Philadelphia Horror.

A Man Assassinated by a Hired Villain.

The Victim's Friendly Walk with the Monster.

The Frightful Wounds Opened Afresh in the Absence of the Nurse.

Philadelphia, March 20.—The ... stering murder, for which three persons had been arrested, and which has kept Camden on the hooks of wonder for two months, is a mystery no longer, for a confession to-day stamps it as a crime more worthy of the days of the Borgias, Di Medicis, and the Council of Ten than of modern civilization. The miserable tool of Hunter, who is now in jail, has confessed to all the details of the terrible affair, which was planned by Hunter, to get the $20,000 for which he had insured Armstrong's life. Four weeks ago Sheriff Dashman learned that two men had gone into a beer-saloon on the night of the murder, and one had bloody hands. He and Detective Wood watched all of Hunter's employés, and found one, Thomas Graham, a American tailor of life and appearance had been greatly changed. He shadowed him for purposes until Monday, when they found where Hunter had bought a new hat for Graham on the night of the murder. Just before midnight last night they arrested Graham just as he was entering his house. He went with them quietly to Camden Jail, where he was questioned, but denied everything. The officers pressed him very closely, and gave him to understand they knew all about his connection with the murder, and finally he jumped up from his seat, and said:—"Well, I am going to make a clean breast of it!" Writing materials were at once secured, and the party sat all night, until 8 o'clock this morning, taking down the tale of blood as it fell from the prisoner's lips. It was then sworn to without any threats or promises of any kind.

Divested of minor details, it is about as follows:—I had been an apprentice and journeyman to Hunter for about eight years. Early in December he met me and asked if I knew Armstong, and I said I did. He said:—"He owes me a lot of money, and he has got to be killed." I said:—"Does he?" And he said:—"I will give you $500 to do it; and, if you don't do it, you are no friend of mine." He gave me $5. I went to his office again later, and he gave me $2. Also Saturday night before New Year's I went to his house and got $5. New Years Eve he came to my house and said:—"Take this hammer." This is what it has got to be done with. It has got a name on of 'F. W. D.,' meaning F. W. Davis. He says, "Then let the hammer lay, and it will be blamed on him, as Davis owed Armstrong money."

Graham then went on to show how Hunter, with diabolical coolness, planned the murder, drawing a plan of the house, arranging for his own absence from the city, and Armstrong's trip to Camden to see Davis at night. Hunter saw Graham several times more, and arranged the night that Armstrong should go to Camden, but Graham's courage failed, and he did not go. Next day Hunter notified him that he would go over himself with Armstrong. Graham went and bought him a soft hat, and completed all arrangements for the murder. Graham went round drinking, and at night went home, got the hammer, and met Hunter, who had on a felt hat, and a handkerchief around his whiskers. The latter met Armstrong at his office, and they started for Camden arm-in-arm, Graham following and going over on the same boat. They took a car, and Graham ran along to keep up. Getting off, they walked up Vine street to a small alley. Graham's statement continues:—

"It was agreed between Hunter and myself that when Hunter said 'Yes' I was to strike the blow, which I did. Hunter said —Hit him, and then I struck the blow. Then my courage failed, and I ran, dropping both hammer and hatchet. Armstrong staggered when I struck him, and I ran for a cellar and jumped down the first one, climbed up a brick wall, came out on Fifth street, and went home. I left Hunter behind me, and met him on the front part of the boat. I said:—'Well' and he answered that he had finished him. He told me he had to hunt for the hatchet before he could find it. After we reached the Philadelphia side of the river, between seven and eight o'clock, he gave me 25 cents, remarking that that was all the change he had. I met Hunter again next day, and he gave me $10. I never saw him again."

Since the statement it has been corroborated in many particulars, and it is remembered that Hunter asked anxiously again and again if there was any chance of Armstrong recovering consciousness, and, secure in a moment alone with him, displaced the bandages on his head, so as to start the bleeding afresh. There will be a hearing to-morrow, and a close watch is kept upon Hunter to prevent the possibility of suicide. His counsel, James M. Scovel, still insists that he will prove an alibi.

After the Battle of Worth.

A correspondent writes to a London newspaper as follows:—"The castle of Frochwiller is the name of Count Durrkheim. Frochwiller key of the position at the battle of Worth. On a sofa in the chateau, McMahon spent the night of the 5th of August, 1870, where a rent in the satin damask made by his spur still attests the fact. By evening on the 6th the village was almost destroyed by shot and shell, and the chateau and grounds were full of wounded and dying men. Nearly every house of these villages has passed away. Handsome monuments rise on the cultivated hills, marking the sites of fiercest conflict; the houses of the villagers look picturesque, comfortable, and well-ordered; but for white crosses marking graves freely dotted over the hop-gardens, orchards, and vineyards, there would be little to recall the sanguinary battle of Worth. A few bowshots by family pictures, result from shell explosions in the drawing-room, and the head of a shell firmly imbedded in the wall of the dining-room, which last came from a retreating French field-piece, are almost the only visible injuries that remain in the château, though at the time every pane of glass was shattered by bullets, and at the date of my first visit the floors were all stained with blood. The Protestant Church adjoining the château was used as a point of observation by the French staff, and at the end was burned to the ground. On its site there now rises a handsome edifice in a pure Gothic style, the gift of all Germany, which nearly every Prince and city have contributed. A Roman Catholic church, in a plainer style, has also been erected by the victors." As far as can be seen, the wounds that war made have been healed, and smiling peace and prosperity reign."

The Available Forces of Russia.

From a detailed account of the present distribution of the Russian forces, given in a usually well-informed German paper, it appears that Russia has still intact in the interior of the country, and quite independently of any garrison troops, 13 divisions of infantry, 5 divisions of cavalry, 3 brigades of rifles, and 2 brigades of sappers; or altogether, in round numbers, 150,000 infantry, 12,000 cavalry, and 700 field-pieces.

In addition, four reserve divisions are in process of formation, and 120 local battalions are being mobilized, to occupy the Polish provinces of the empire. The army on the Balkan peninsula comprised at the time when the armistice was agreed upon, exclusive of the siege artillery, the artillery parks, the train, the administrative services, detachment of sailors, etc.—23 divisions of infantry, with 1,300 field guns, 9 brigades of rifles, 16 divisions of cavalry with 200 horse artillery guns; or, altogether 324 battalions, 240 squadrons, and 1,400 field pieces. Assuming the actual strength of each of the above units to average two-thirds of its prescribed war establishment, the aggregate effective of this army would amount to 209,000 infantry, 30,000 horses, and 1,400 guns.

In the Caucasus there was at the same time 2 divisions of infantry, comprising together 22 battalions and the Kuban and the Terek Cossacks, or about 25,000 men, 10,000 horses, and 156 guns; and, finally, in Armenia there were 8 divisions of grenadiers and infantry, a brigade of rifles, and 2 divisions of cavalry; representing an effective of 75,000 infantry, 8,000 cavalry, and 372 guns. Altogether, therefore, it is calculated that, including both the armies in Europe and in Asia, Russia can dispose of a field force of 540,000 infantry, 78,000 cavalry, and 2,722 guns, or if the special and accessory services are added, a total of 750,000 men.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CHAPTER I.

AMONG THE HILLS.

I would rather not state exactly whether it lies in the North of England or the South, or the East, or the West, for some odd inhabitant may swoop down upon me with proof of the flagitious of my memory or the inaccuracy of my local geography. But I do assert that Hucbobble is one of England's most beautiful counties, and that it owes its beauty chiefly to the hills that guard, and almost encircle, the small county town of Churchill. Hill beyond hill, hill behind hill, they stretch for twenty miles. The highest of the group—throughout the district called par excellence The Mountain—rises seventeen hundred feet above the level of the sea. Yet its ascent is easy now, as a carriage-drive has been constructed round it, raised to insure the safety of the many horses which are brought here during the summer months. The summit of the mountain is a vast table-land, and its sides are rich in forest and heath and bracken; but it is happily so favorite a resting-place for the picnic parties which flock here from spring to autumn, as is the beautiful ravine which separates the mountain from the opposite hills.

A little above the fall, and in a hollow which the foot-path does not reach, though it is open and verdant, lies a silent mountain tarn, a still lake, whose dark impassable gloom shoots it, beyond that gloom, with a sharp and piercing blue. Yet lying in the shadow of the hills, no window, whose mouth is formed upon its brink, wondering at its stillness, but is glad to have the sunshine taken only and so warmly.

But we can leave the valley now. We pass through the gate, beside which stands a picturesque little cottage, where tea is provided for pleasure parties, and standing for the horses, which are seldom taken to the mountain-top. Now we are once upon the turnpike-road. On our right, bordering the valley, lies the steep, well-ordered garden of the cottage, and a long sloping drive, or from the door of the handsome modern house, or even can take in a wide stretch of the valley below. Behind, the carriage-drive round the mountain skirts the farm-yard of the rectory; for the Rev. ereed Henry Jordon is no mean farmer, and his comely wife does not fancy the produce of any dairy but her own.

A quarter of a mile more of wide, white road we traverse, and then we come upon the old gray church, standing high and grave among the brittish shadows, looking always down upon the one steep street which forms the little town of Churchill. Midway down this long street stands the old-fashioned pump, with its three lamps above, and opposite it a narrow side street ends abruptly in the railway station. We pass the shops and quaint old red houses of the main thoroughfare, and reach the more pretentious dwellings in the suburbs, dwellings over whose gray stone walls the holy hedges with a look of comfortable abundance, hiding the "genteel villa" from the vulgar gaze. Then again, we find ourselves in the shabby-genteel road, which winds on before us to Bloxborough, the county town of Highshire; and behind us, through Churchill, over and on, and on, to London.

Two miles, uninterrupted by any dwelling we need mention, then upon our right rises the high gray wall which bounds the park of High Athelston, broken midway by the bronze gates and the ivy-covered lodges. Two large lamp lights above the gates, and between them stands a great stone-wall, bearing the arms of the Athelstons—a leopard couchant. A grand old hollow house is High Athelston, standing among the rich parks of a large town, as it has stood for centuries. From the wide gates a stately avenue leads to the pillared entrance. Passing this without entering, we descend one of the slight flights of steps which lead from terrace to terrace on the western side of the house, and turn aside into a bypath across the park, thread our way through a sombre shrubbery, where thick, dark arches of yew and holly make the light of the sunniest summer noon; and reach a narrow green door in the north wall of the park. Passing through this, sainted noisily from the rookery in the high old limes above us, we find ourselves in Nether Lane, a narrow road bordered by two rows of low cottage, which in summer-time throw heavy bars of shade across the sunlit way. Midway between this door and Churchill—for the lane narrowly forks to the high-road on the northern of the town—stand the only two houses of considerable height upon it, following in its irregular course, it dances on from right to left, and left to right, through the sand, to be bound a valley. Though but a narrow and rugged ravine where the hills close above it and the waterfall. Behind and beyond the fall, as the ravine grows wider and more rugged, and the hills lower and more broken into gorges, nature is wild and desolate, the isolation complete, the silence so sharp and poignant, now so treacherous in their smooth, sheer descent, that what name is it that in Churchill records there are names of those who have lost lives among these hills?

A little above the fall, and in a hollow which the foot-path does not reach, though it is open and verdant, lies a silent mountain tarn, a still lake, whose dark impassable gloom shoots it, beyond that gloom, with a sharp and piercing blue. Yet lying in the shadow of the hills, no window, whose mouth is formed upon its brink, wondering at its stillness, but is glad to have the sunshine taken only and so warmly.

But we can leave the valley now. We pass through the gate, beside which stands a picturesque little cottage, where tea is provided for pleasure parties, and standing for the horses, which are seldom taken to the mountain-top. Now we are once upon the turnpike-road. On our right, bordering the valley, lies the steep, well-ordered garden of the rectory; for the Rev. ereed Henry Jordon is no mean farmer, and his comely wife does not fancy the produce of any dairy but her own.

A quarter of a mile more of wide, white road we traverse, and then we come upon the old gray church, standing high and grave among the brittish shadows, looking always down upon the one steep street which forms the little town of Churchill. Midway down this long street stands the old-fashioned pump, with its three lamps above, and opposite it a narrow side street ends abruptly in the railway station. We pass the shops and quaint old red houses of the main thoroughfare, and reach the more pretentious dwellings in the suburbs, dwellings over whose gray stone walls the holy hedges with a look of comfortable abundance, hiding the "genteel villa" from the vulgar gaze. Then again, we find ourselves in the shabby-genteel road, which winds on before us to Bloxborough, the county town of Highshire; and behind us, through Churchill, over and on, and on, to London.

Two miles, uninterrupted by any dwelling we need mention, then upon our right rises the high gray wall which bounds the park of High Athelston, broken midway by the bronze gates and the ivy-covered lodges. Two large lamp lights above the gates, and between them stands a great stone-wall, bearing the arms of the Athelstons—a leopard couchant. A grand old hollow house is High Athelston, standing among the rich parks of a large town, as it has stood for centuries. From the wide gates a stately avenue leads to the pillared entrance. Passing this without entering, we descend one of the slight flights of steps which lead from terrace to terrace on the western side of the house, and turn aside into a bypath across the park, thread our way through a sombre shrubbery, where thick, dark arches of yew and holly make the light of the sunniest summer noon; and reach a narrow green door in the north wall of the park. Passing through this, sainted noisily from the rookery in the high old limes above us, we find ourselves in Nether Lane, a narrow road bordered by two rows of low cottage, which in summer-time throw heavy bars of shade across the sunlit way. Midway between this door and Churchill—for the lane narrowly forks to the high-road on the northern of the town—stand the only two houses of considerable height upon it, following

LONDON PRESBYTERY.—There are thirty-four ministers in the London Presbytery.

CONFIRMATION.—Confirmation services were held in the St. James church, Parkhill, on Wednesday, by Bishop Hellmuth. About thirty candidates presented themselves.

WITHDRAWN.—The charge of breaking the liquor law, laid against a man named Jarvis, which was to have been tried before Squires Peters and Belton, has been withdrawn.

BROUGHT TO THE ASYLUM.—Mrs. Ross, of Colborne, was brought from Goderich jail to the London Asylum on Wednesday last. Thos. Griffin was also removed to the same place a few days previous.

SOMETHING LIKE A CALF.—One of John Irwin's grade cows calved on lot 24, 1st con., Westminster, on the evening of the 18th of March, a bull calf, which weighed, when 15 hours old, 101 pounds.

OFFICERS ELECTED.—The following are the officers of the Parkhill Cricket Club:—Dr. Coy, President; Mr. S. B. Marriott, Secretary-Treasurer; Mr. T. O. Allen, Field Captain; Messrs. Biggs and Leslie Taylor and Dr. Macalpine, Committeemen. The club have rented the Fair Grounds, which will be suitably prepared.

AGAIN POSTPONED.—The McGuire vs. Gould shooting case, from London East, which was to have been tried yesterday before Squires Peters and Belton, has been postponed for eight days, as has also the charge of abduction lodged against the young man Ellico, from Ekfrid. Both accused have been bailed to appear next Friday.

EVIDENTLY ARGONNED.—Mrs. Jarvis, charged with complicity in the alleged hair factory cruelties, cannot be found in the city or neighborhood, and it is believed she has absconded, as her husband has done. John G. Dewar, of Strathroy, a young man charged with forgery, has also failed to answer when called on, and it is believed he has left the country.

NEW SEED CATALOGUE.—A finely-printed catalogue of agricultural and flower garden seeds has been received from the Canadian Agricultural Emporium, whose office and seed warehouse is at 360 Richmond street. The catalogue contains about forty pages of illustrated description of the various seeds kept in stock, and ought to be in the hands of every farmer and gardener.

SERIOUS SHOOTING ACCIDENT.—Three young men, living near Embro, named respectively Case, Burtch and Harkinson, went out shooting in the vicinity of the village the other day. During the afternoon Harkinson playfully told Burtch "to fire on him," when the latter drew his revolver and fired, the ball entering the loin, injuring him fatally. Burtch said he intended firing over his victim's head. Harkinson's death is hourly expected.

ENTERTAINMENT LAST NIGHT.—Mr. Howard Clifton conducted the vocal and instrumental concert given in Messrs. Jones & Torex's Commercial College last night—Mr. Torex in the chair. The 7th Batt. Band were present, and played excellent music, and the following ladies and gentlemen also performed:—Mesdames Groom and Clifton, Messrs. H. Clifton, H. Powell, T. Groom, Clark, F. Coles, J. McAuliff, Campbell, Westlake, J. B. Campbell and S. Charlton.

CAPTURED AT LUCAN.—It will be remembered that on the 17th April last the store of Mr. Henry Powell, Wellington street, was burglarized, and a quantity of boots stolen. One of the thieves was captured, but the other escaped. Since that time County Constable Pope has been on the outlook for him, and yesterday he received a telegram from Constable Baxter, of Chatham, stating that Charles Anderson, the suspected man, had been arrested in that town. The constable left by the afternoon train to bring accused here for trial.

MR. HYMAN'S CONDITION.—About one o'clock this morning a FREE PRESS reporter called at the residence of Mr. E. W. Hyman, and made enquires regarding that gentleman's condition. At that time, although no change had actually taken place, he had slept for about four hours, and was still enjoying repose. His medical advisers held a consultation during the night, but their opinions were not made known to the members of the family. Mr. Hyman had been in a very low state the entire day, and the gravest fears were entertained as to his recovery.

BADLY SMASHED.—A city swell yesterday hired the Kentucky blood horse of the "Warrior" breed from Mr. Samuel Gregg, and went for a canter round the park. He met a couple of friends, also on horse-back, and all three set out for a gallop. Suddenly, the new arrival's horse started out too quickly for his rider, and he evidently fearful of being thrown, he jumped off. Away dashed the animal at full speed down Richmond street, at the corner of which street and Dundas, was standing Mrs. Macbeth's carriage. The animal cannoned right on to it, upsetting the vehicle, and sending the latter sprawling in the street. Miss Macbeth, who was in the carriage, escaped with but little injury. The runaway horse was severely cut about the neck by the collision; but Mr. Rudd saved his waggon, and he is likely to recover. So much for having life in him!

"KERRY GOW."—The brilliant Irish comedian Joseph Murphy, as previously announced, will appear in the Mechanics' Hall here on the 3rd and 4th April, in the Irish drama of "Kerry Gow;" in which he has been performing successfully throughout the States. An American exchange remarks of this play:—"It ranks as the best Irish play that has been produced in this country since the birth of the 'Shaughraun.' It lacks the glossy glamour and masterly finish of the latter work, but it is strongly built against the strongest of sentiment. It displays less of that stagy, startling effect which characterized Boucicault's work. If Mr. Boucicault played 'Kerry Gow' the run would equal that of 'Shaughraun.' Think of 'what's in a name.' Mr. Joe Murphy is a rising young actor, full of vim, life and energy. Everything he does bespeaks care, study and reflection, and we look upon him to-day as the superior of many theatrical pretenders whose labor has been a burlesque on the Irish character."

Police Court Fencillings.

FRIDAY.—L. Lawrason, Esq., P. M., Presiding.

William Ryan, an old soldier, was found loafing around the city during the night. He was charged $1 for the indiscretion.

Edward Bunton, who was taken in Hamilton by County Constable Hodge, was up on remand for refusing to give evidence against a man upon which he was subpœnaed some time since. He was further remanded until 29100.

John Hackett, a teamster, was charged with a breach of the city by-law, in driving a team and wagon over the sidewalk. He was convicted and fined $1.

The same individual was charged with threatening to kill John Lonkin, a police constable, at the same time. Larkin ordered him off, and Hackett gave him impertinence and threatened to kill him. A hatchet was found in his possession. For this offence he was fined $2 and $3.00 costs. Hackett's fine for a year; in default two months in jail.

LONDON EAST.

There are no fewer than 20 applicants for tavern licenses in the village. Some will be disappointed, as only nine can be granted.

There is no change in the oil market, and no sales of any importance have been effected. The price is still kept up, however, to the old figure, viz., $2.06. Refined is quoted at 13½c.

Mr. John Wilson, of the G. W. R. shop, leaves for England on 6th April next. He has sold his property on Dundas street.

The murder occurred, as all accounted with the circumstances know, through the regrettable fact that one of the parties had an ungovernable temper.

Ghastly, cremation would never do. Suppose a man came home a little late on lodge nights, and while rummaging in the pantry knocked over a shelf full of his relatives put up in a glass? DELIVERANCE OF MR. JUSTICE WILSON THEREON.

Yesterday morning, shortly after the opening of the Assize Court, the prisoner Margaret Donnelly, against whom a true bill was found for "assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm," was brought into Court for arraignment, and for the purpose of setting bail to appear for trial when called upon. The proceedings were about to begin, when

Mr. A. J. B. Macdonald (counsel for Donnelly) and Mr. Rock, Q. C., (for Hargraves), interrupted the Clerk and asked that a change of venue be made in the case, and, failing that, that the trial be largely till next Assizes. He (Mr. Macdonald) addressed several reasons, which, to his mind, should influence his Lordship in acceding to the request, prominent among which was the fact that the papers containing the accounts of the preliminary investigations into the Hair Factory Case. From one he read a few of the lines which surmounted the accounts of the trial, and commented upon the presumed object of the writer. From another he read editorial comments in regard to the manner in which the prisoner's counsel had endeavored to defeat the ends of justice by seeking summary trial, and from a third, he showed the Court that it had even gone so far as to prepare a trial of the prisoner in which the alleged cruelties were said to have been committed. And, in addition, cartoons representing the alleged manner of torturing the girl Sparks had been displayed in the windows of public places throughout the city. All these, Mr. Macdonald held, tended to warp the minds of the jury, and from the time, if those against whom imputations of this kind were made had a proper respect for themselves, and consideration for the dignity, they regarded them very little. To be sure, a case such as he had just spoken of, was different from Hargraves. The prisoner's situation was entitled to infinitely more consideration than a private person who happened to be slandered; still he was far from being persuaded that a jury could be found who would not look and truly regard their oath and give a verdict in accordance with the evidence, and have no fears on that score, although, at the same time, he could but admit that what had been done had had a most powerful tendency to create the worst of prejudices against the prisoner. He would, however, that the very fact of the newspapers being quite too free on all occasions deprived them of influence they would otherwise possess. Articles of the character referred to, were so frequent that people were not influenced by them so much as if they were a unique production of one they were unused to. They were issued at all times, and, probably, in the long run, it might be the good predominated over the injury likely to result from them. On that account, he could not say too much against the practice. From the very frequency of the publication of articles of the kind, their effect was not likely to be so sensibly felt, as if it were not the method ordinarily employed in the expression of opinion.

Mr. Cameron, Q. C., contended that the learned counsel for the accused had no right to suppose that any juryman in the county of Middlesex would not regard his oath, and render a verdict according to the evidence.

Mr. Rock, Q. C., did not mean to say that they would, but he held that the publication of the articles referred to would have a most prejudicial effect on the minds of the jury, and from reading these sensational and highly-colored accounts and illustrations, they would form an opinion.

His Lordship—Is there any objection to a juryman forming an opinion?

Mr. Rock—There is in the United States Courts.

His Lordship—I don't desire to know anything about the proceedure in the U. S. Courts. We are in Canada, and I still think that a jury can be found to try the case in an impartial manner, and render a just verdict upon the evidence. The application is not entertained in the meantime, until a proper motion is made.

The question of bail was then considered, and we understand left to the discretion of the Crown Counsel in the meantime.

Sad Drowning Accident.

A Child Falls into a Cistern and is Drowned.

Shortly after five o'clock yesterday afternoon an accident of the most heartrending character occurred at the residence of Mr. W. J. Thompson, carriage manufacturer, King street, by which that gentleman's youngest daughter Minnie, a fine child about three years of age, met an untimely death. So far as can be learned (for there was no eye-witness of the occurrence) two of Mr. Thompson's children, a boy and girl, had been playing during the afternoon in an alleyway, which runs from King street south to the work-shop along the easterly side of the show-room. In this lane is situated an underground tank or rain-water cistern, the covering of which is of the most primitive nature, and easy of removal. After playing for some time together, the little girl strayed away from her brother, and for upwards of twenty minutes, probably, was out of sight. While returning to the front of the premises, she noticed the cover of the cistern partly removed out of the place as he passed, and on looking down saw his little sister floating on the top of the water. An alarm was instantly given, and a few minutes thereafter the lifeless body of little Minnie was taken from the tank, and medical aid at once summoned. The body was carried to the residence, and every effort made to resuscitate the child by Drs. Moore, son and jun., Moorhouse and McTaggart. An electric battery was applied to the soles of the feet and the brain, for the purpose of endeavoring to restore animation, but this also proved unavailing, and the medical gentlemen were at last reluctantly forced to cease further exertion. The scene was a most touching one, and the feelings and anxiety manifested by the grief-stricken mother as the tests were being conducted, may be easier imagined than described. It was not deemed necessary to hold an inquest into the causes which led to poor Minnie's death, as they were patent to all who were early at the scene. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have the heartfelt sympathy of the community in their sudden bereavement.

Middlesex Spring Assizes.

Fourth Day—Friday.

His Lordship Justice Adam Wilson Presiding.

The Queen vs. the same—killing another person's hog—no bill.

The case of ejectment, McKay vs. McKay, which had engaged the attention of the court during the previous day, was again resumed, and continued throughout the entire day, a large number of witnesses being examined on both sides.

At six o'clock the testimony was concluded, Mr. Bayly for the defence, and Mr. Rock, Q.C., for the plaintiff, delivered able and lengthy addresses in support of their clients, after which the court adjourned until 9 o'clock Saturday morning, when his Lordship will sum up.

THE LOCAL INTELLIGENCE of importance, such as Reports of Public Meetings, City Council proceedings, and the news transpiring in the city and district up to 3 o'clock A.M., also finds a place in its columns twelve hours ahead of the contemporary evening press. Its circulation and influence are consequently rapidly growing. It is the recognized organ of opinion in the West, containing the ablest editorials in the extent, variety and priority of its news.

SINGLE COPIES, price 3 cents. Subscriptions by the year, $6.00; half-year, $3.00; quarter, $1.50 in advance, and are delivered free within the city and its suburbs, or POSTED FREE OF POSTAGE to distant places at the same rate.

SITUATIONS WANTED, Domestics Wanted; Articles Lost or Found, to Let, for Sale, Sold, &c., &c., are inserted at the rate of twenty-five cents each insertion, five words, and so in proportion. Birth, Marriage and Death notices of the same extent are charged twenty-five cents each insertion.

CIRCULATION.—The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is far larger than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries.

ADVERTISEMENTS of a transient kind are inserted in BOTH EDITIONS at the rate of ten cents per line (nonpareil measurement) for the first insertion, and five cents for each a subsequent one. Special contracts are made for extended advertising space by the year and half-year, the terms of which can be had on application at the business office.

The Evening Free Press

IS ISSUED at 4 o'clock P.M., and contains not only the matter found in the morning edition, but additional telegraphic despatches, local intelligence up to the hour of going to press, &c. SENSATIONALISM IN NEWSPAPERS.

Words that drop from the lips of occupants of the Bench are sure to attract more than ordinary attention. They are generally instructive in their character, and carry weight which learning and experience give. Yet it does not follow that they should gain an unquestioned assent. That the judges differ among themselves and from one another on various issues, is a fact which illustrates the uncertainty of opinion, even where unanimity upon a scientific basis might be reasonably looked for. It is out of this difference that safety springs; just as truth is eventually elicited by discussion. This aspect of affairs should not be taken as a denial of the statement advanced in respect of the weight which opinions coming from the bench are entitled to. To differ from them need not be matter for offence, if that difference is not made the medium of vulgar personalities, and political venom, as was notoriously the case in the attack made not long since upon Judge Wilson, by the Globe newspaper. In some recent remarks in this city Judge Wilson thought proper to censure the press in London, and to condemn trial by newspaper in advance of trial by judge and jury, in accordance with the due formalities of the law. Yet it will be apparent to most that certain facts being stated upon oath, either before a Police Magistrate or a Coroner's Jury, the general public becoming acquainted with these facts are just as able to understand the bearing of them as any "twelve men" who may be hustled promiscuously into a jury-box. Judge Wilson is afraid lest the cause of a prisoner should be prejudiced in consequence of newspaper reports appearing in advance of the ultimate trial of the accused. And we can well appreciate the solicitude he feels on such an issue, seeing that a judge is in some sort the legal protector of an accused person, and should lean rather to the side of mercy than that of vengeance. Yet no one can be asked to believe that the public should be denied access to printed reports of the evidence given during preliminary investigations concerning criminal offences, nor of their freedom to draw such reasonable conclusions as the evidence gives rise to. If one man devotes himself to the exercise of ingenious cruelty upon some defenceless female, or another is found boating and kicking a fellow creature to death in the absence of any show of provocation, who shall set bounds to the conclusions which the public will arrive at concerning such events? It may be all very well to decry "sensationalism" on the part of the newspapers, but in such matters the press is not the originator, but merely the recorder of the "sensation." The feeling itself is caused by the aversion and horror which such acts give rise to, and which are brought to the knowledge of the general public through the unceasing activity of the daily press. It appears, then, that in the recent deliverance from the bench, to which reference has been made, there was some confusion of fact, and the accounts given of transactions (the trustworthiness of which was not called in question) were made the scapegoat of the culpable acts brought under notice. It could be shown, if it were even remotely capable of proof, that any newspaper had heedlessly damaged the cause of anyone by the exhibition of false evidence, libel against society would be justly due. But if called upon in the course of affairs to become the recorders of events deplorable in their character, the "sensation" to which they gave rise is not to be laid at the door of the narrator, but of the authors of the vile doings. "Oh, but," say some, "look at your headings; are not they 'Sensational.'" Not at all. They do but illustrate the educated faculty of saying in a line, or by the use of a phrase, that which prosy drones would take a whole column to express. In a recent issue of the FREE PRESS there appeared a line, referring to the condition of affairs in the East, as thus:—

"The Air Clamorous With Alarm!"

Thus, too dozen letters were made to indicate a whole chapter of events. Such brief sentences epitomise history and emphasise current fact. It may suit a certain class of minds to detect impropriety in such condensation of phraseology, but it is far more palatable to the public, far more suggestive to the reader, than plodding through columns of vapid herbiage before arriving at a salient point.

The Earl of Beaconsfield is one of the best dressers in England; he has on the average a plug hat a month, his trousers are usually of a light lavender, and his coats perfection in fit. His valet is scrupulous about the arrangement of his curls, which are numbered; in gorgeous dressing-gowns his wardrobe is not to be surpassed; one of them is worth $3,000. He walks with his eyes cast on the ground, and takes no heed of little ragamuffins who cry "There goes Dizzy."

THE PEOPLE ALIVE.

If Reformers will look around, they will see their political doom foreshadowed. The handwriting on the wall is so plain and legible, that he who runs may read. Never did this country furnish such premonitory symptoms of a political upheaval as at the present time. Every one can see the impatience of the electors to have the matter, the trial of the present Cabinet, committed to their hands. The whole people seem alive, and their ardor can scarcely be restrained. The feeling that the country has had to suffer for the misplaced confidence of the electors is strong, general, and all-absorbing. The desire to right the wrong they have done—done to the best interests of Canada, to her progress at home and her good name and financial standing abroad, to the cause of constitutional government, and to the leaders whose ability and devotion to the country made her the land of hope and promise we lately saw her, and which in a few months more we may see her again—is the prevailing sentiment in every heart, and the spirit that inspires, animates and unites all in the great work before them.

A single glance at the action already taken in so many of the constituencies will fully bear us out in these remarks. At the rate the people in the Conservative interest, or rather the national interest, for the two are one in this instance, are pushing on the good work, there will scarcely be a constituency in Ontario without its Conservative candidate before the prorogation of the House takes place. Then the feeling of harmony, the principle of unanimity, the love of perfect accord in action, which have characterized all these meetings are the best guarantee for success at the polls when the hour comes, that could possibly be given. The only rivalry visible so far, is one that commends itself to all and tells its own tale. This noble rivalry consists in who shall most cheerfully and voluntarily sacrifice his own views, his own interests, his own honorable ambitions in favor of his party and in favor of the whole people. Even the petty prejudices we have seen on former occasions in favor of local candidates are allowed no place in the deliberations at conventions to-day. The only question with the electors in the various constituencies so far in this most pertinent one—is he the right man with whom to win, and the right man to aid his leaders, promote the cause of the people, and restore prosperity to this country when he does win? The electors never permit themselves to ask where he hails from, provided they see that he comes up to this standard. These are unmistakable harbingers of success, and as such the people view them.

Then there has been a remarkable enthusiasm as well as a remarkable concord in the people's acceptance of what has been called the "National Policy." In every constituency and in every assembly held since this policy was announced by Sir John Macdonald from his place on the floor of Parliament, this policy has been received with the greatest satisfaction and confidence. It was taken at once as the distinctive policy and platform of the Conservative party, and has received the approbation and will receive the support of thousands and tens of thousands of those intelligent Reformers who possess enough of patriotism and good sense, to prefer the prosperity of Canada to party domination! A sensible man will see, that whatever may be said or thought of the merits of this policy, it is one whose approval or disapproval ought to be determined on principles outside of the usual shibboleth of party, and may be supported without coming into collision with any of the old planks upon which electors formerly took their stand. The Conservative leaders are not alone in demanding some such modification of the tariff as will put trade on a fairer basis between this country and the neighboring States, and encourage in a moderate degree the various interests of Canada. Many "Reformers" are at one with them on this question, and will support a policy by which this encouragement is given.

It is evident now, that the electors have ceased to hope for any beneficent action on the part of the present men in power. They have completely lost the confidence of their own friends and former supporters, and can hope for no rally in their favor except among those who, to use the expressive and mournful language of the Paris Star:—"Still stagger on with blind faith in their party and its leaders." They have deserved their friends, betrayed their trust, and half ruined the country, and now, there can be no halting, no turning back, no escape from the consequences of their own acts. Already desertion is thinning their ranks and bringing about the despondent feeling which of itself leads the way to defeat. The petty efforts they have attempted during the last fiscal year to make for themselves a better record, and in some degree weaken the charge of extravagance brought with such force and justice against them, are fully understood by the electors, who are too far-seeing to be gulled a second time and led to put their faith in death-bed repentance. They have lost their hold on the country with their hold on Blake, and we feel pretty sure that he will not again permit his name, shorn of its strength as it is, to be used as a rallying point and be enjuring spell, to draw electors to the side of men who have shown themselves in the words of the Paris Star, guilty of—"in transactions (the trustworthiness of which was not called in question) were made the scapegoat of the culpable acts brought under notice. It could be shown, if it were even remotely capable of proof, that any newspaper had heedlessly damaged the cause of anyone by the exhibition of false evidence, libel against society would be justly due. But if called upon in the course of affairs to become the recorders of events deplorable in their character, the "sensation" to which they gave rise is not to be laid at the door of the narrator, but of the authors of the vile doings. THE EUROPEAN QUESTION.

There is but little use in speculating upon this new phase which the Eastern question has assumed, as our readers will find in the telegraphic despatches published daily, all the news possessed in this country regarding it. It seemed a few days ago as though the difficulties of the question might have been tided over without any other of the Great Powers having been drawn into the struggle. But matters have changed for the worse, and there is very great danger now, that the questions at issue will not make their way into the presence of the representatives of the Powers in Congress assembled. In the present state matters cannot continue long. Any hour may precipitate a conflict, and a conflict fearful to contemplate. Britain in alliance with Austria could easily have held the Northern Bear in check and cut his claws, but Britain entering upon the contest single-handed and at such a distance from her base of operations, or at least, from her source of supplies, is quite a different thing to contemplate. She certainly cannot be conquered by Russia, taking into account the character of the two countries, and their geographical position, though overpowered in the field by superior numbers she might be. But on the other hand England would increase her strength year by year were the war to continue a decade, while Russia could not bear the strain upon her finances for a single campaign more, without entailing grievous sufferings upon her people. Then her wealth and inexhaustible resources in all quarters of the world would enable Britain to recruit her army from sources now scarcely dreamt of, and in one or two campaigns she would be a more formidable antagonist than she is to-day. Her navy, too, would hem Russia in on every side, and cripple her power by sea, while whatever commerce she enjoys would be destroyed, thus adding to the suffering of the poor. The new and exciting discontent with the Government. France would throw her moral weight on the side of England, and were it not for her relations with Germany, she would again, as in the Crimean struggle, assume her old stand by the side of England, which would enable the latter to dictate the terms of peace once more, and again place the muzzle on the Northern Bear. The whole Powers of the west of Europe are pretty much in accord in respect to the danger to be dreaded from Russian aggression, and all see, that, if Turkey cannot stand, a Hellenic Empire on its old site on the Bosphorus and Hellespont, would afford more security to Christendom, than the extension of a Sclavic one to the borders of the Ægean Sea. Perhaps, ere long the question may assume this form, and a Pan-Hellenic statesmen are prepared to support such a scheme. The revival of the Empire of the East on the ruins of that Power which overturned it, would be a fitting sequel to the story of the Turk, if that story be really found a tale that is told. The only difficulty is, that your writer is very great as soon as immigration increases; in fact, I know of no better opening for lumbermen in the whole of the Dominion of Canada.

Leaving Rat Portage, travelling east along the located line at Sturgeon Lake, a distance of some twelve miles, the line is located through a low, swampy country, easy of construction. From this point to Vermilion Lake, a distance of about 40 miles, the country is a perfect network of mountains, lakes, and rivers, with every engineering difficulty imaginable. The location of this section of the C. P. R. through such a mass of difficulties does great credit to the engineering talent of Messrs. Gardner and Mortimer. The line between the two above mentioned places touches on no less than twenty-twenty-five lakes, varying from one to twenty miles in extent, with bold rugged shores. The rock is principally slate, trap, and grey granite, but the formation is very much broken up, which makes the line look rougher than it really is. On arriving at Vermilion and Eagle Lakes (a fine stretch of water some forty-five miles in length) there is a great improvement in the land for agricultural purposes, &c.

Along the North shore of the above lake there are some of the finest pine groves I have seen in the country, which will be a great help in railway construction, as timber is a very scarce article in the rocky sections of the line.

From this point to Wahagon Lake, a distance of about thirty miles, I cannot say much about the line, as I took the canoe route, south of the line. From inquiries I made as to the nature of the country, I should judge that it was very similar to what we were passing through. In that case the country is well adapted for settlement. The average of good and bad lands, as near as I can judge, is as follows:—Rat Portage to Sturgeon Lake—good, 40 per cent.; bad, 60 per cent; rock, 20 per cent. Sturgeon to Vermilion Lake—good, 15 per cent.; bad, 15 per cent; water, 40 per cent; rock, 30 per cent. Vermilion Lake to Wahagon Lake—good, 40 per cent.; bad, 40 per cent., water and rock, 20 per cent.

A HORRIBLE STORY.

The truth of the following almost incredible story published by a Hungarian newspaper, the Hon, is guaranteed to the Pall Mall Gazette by a member of the British consular service. The writer says:—"During the few days that I was a Fratesti, numerous Turkish prisoners were continually brought in. They were only protected against the cold by a few rags, and it would have been better to shoot them outright than to let them perish daily by hunger as is being done at Fratesti, where I saw from five to six hundred bodies of starved Turks lying heaped one upon the other. On a visit to the hospital there I had an opportunity of convincing myself how horrible even the wounded Turks were treated. As I entered, about a thousand wounded prisoners raised themselves slightly in their wet, cold beds, and stretching out their hands, asked of me bread in the name of Allah. Moved at the sight of so much misery, I distributed 100 francs among the sufferers, when the Russian guard overwhelmed me with curses, and took the money from them. When they began again to cry out for bread the hospital guard struck several of them dead with the but-end of his musket, whereupon the rest were silent. The guard then asked me for money, and, as I refused to give him any, he threatened to shoot me, saying that I was a Turk, and I was compelled to leave the hospital. Here at every step one sees the bodies of frozen and starved Turks about, as prey for the dogs.

Important to Agricultural Societies.

A Division Court case was held in Milton lately that is of considerable importance. Mr. Beak sued the Trafalgar Agricultural Society for $29, the amount of prizes awarded him for cattle, &c., at the Society's fair. The Society declared the prizes forfeited, on the ground that Mr. Beak had driven the cattle off the fair ground, and had slandered the judges, contrary to their rules. The following is the decision of the judge:—"In this case I make my judgment in the nature of an award, rather than a judgment, for the reason that I am of the opinion that the Association had power to make rules for its own guidance, and that the members and exhibitors were bound by such rules, and the rules sufficiently appear in the exhibition bill for 1877; and by the evidence produced on the trial. I do not think the plaintiff forfeits his prizes by interfering with his cattle, but on the other charge of slandering the judges I think the directors had sufficient evidence before them to justify them in endeavoring to uphold their rules by withholding the prizes awarded to the plaintiff. I adjudge to the plaintiff $29 without costs, to be paid within 15 days."

The heir of the notorious Bubb Doddington, Lord Melcombe, felt so embarrassed by the magnificent mansion which devolved on him at that nobleman's death that he offered any reputable person $1,000 a year to go and live in it and keep it in a livable condition. Perhaps it was a victim similarly circumstanced who has been advertising in a London paper—"Large house and garden in the country; rent free to respectable family who will entertain the proprietor for about a month yearly."

Eaters of meat in New York will find food for reflection in the report of the Cattle Inspector at Buffalo for the month of February, which was handed in to the Common Council of that city last week. From the Inspector's report it appears that of the animals arriving in Buffalo, many of them en route for New York, 1,077 were dead, and 1,149 were crippled. The Inspector, in conversation with a reporter, said that "the manner in which the stock comes in is a shame and an outrage. It is carried from Chicago to Buffalo without a rest, or anything to eat or drink by the way; and, what is worse, many of the poor animals are left in the yards for three hours without being watered or fed, and are then reloaded and shipped to New York."

The emigration from Illinois to Nebraska, which attracted attention not long since, still going on in Dutchess County. The emigrants are of the farming class, who appear to have grown tired of the losses and worry incident to mud roads and lack of transportation facilities of the lines of railway. In Nebraska the material for good roads is abundant, whereas in many parts of Illinois there is, during the greater part of the winter season, literally no bottom. The exodus farther West, therefore, is not without an intelligible motive.

The Army and Navy Gazette understands that the Marquis of Dougal has informed the War Office that the London Irish volunteers are prepared to give their services wherever they may be required, in case of need. At a full dress parade of the Penzance Rifle Volunteers on Saturday, in response to the invitation of Captain Bonse, nearly all those present signed a paper agreeing to go on foreign service for twelve months in case of emergency.

In round numbers an English army corps contains, when all its several parts are complete, about 36,000 men, of which very nearly 37,000 of all ranks. Of these, in round numbers again, 5,000 officers and men belong to the medical, commissariat and administrative departments; leaving 32,000 of all ranks belonging to the infantry, cavalry, artillery, and engineers. The army corps, again, consists of three divisions of infantry, a brigade of cavalry, a force of artillery distinguished as the "corps artillery," and a complement of engineers. Each division of infantry also comprises a force of artillery and cavalry, as well as foot soldiers. To give its composition more in detail, it consists of two brigades of infantry, each brigade comprising three battalions, a battalion of rifles, a regiment of cavalry, three batteries of field artillery, a company of engineers, a troop of military police, and an ammunition reserve column. The cavalry brigade consists of three regiments of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery. The corps artillery comprises three batteries of horse artillery and two batteries of field artillery, besides an ammunition reserve column. Altogether, therefore, an army corps includes twenty-one battalions of infantry, or, in round numbers, 21,000 bayonets; six regiments of cavalry, or 3,000 sabres; and fifteen batteries of artillery, or 90 guns.

Symptoms begin to indicate that France and England may be found acting jointly on the Eastern question. Both have common interests in Egypt, India and China, more than any other countries, and it would be only natural if they should "pull" together. It would not be surprising, should it turn out in the Congress that the other powers are willing for Russia to retain what she has wrenched from Turkey, that these two governments will then seek compensation through giving a new status to Egypt and Syria, so as to gain control of the Suez Canal and at the same time to hand route to the Euphrates Valley, the Persian Gulf and Western India. There has, from the beginning, been a mystery about England's indifference to Russia's aggressions on Turkey, which seemed to imply that she had her eyes upon new strategic points to be in due time placed under her control. Events appear to be gradually unfolding a policy in that direction.

A BLOW AT THE WEST.

It is much to be regretted that the amendment to the Canada Southern Railway Bill, providing that St. Thomas should be continued headquarters of the line, was thrown out at Ottawa. In a previous issue we advanced some reasons why such an arrangement should be insisted on, and can only hope that when the bill goes into the Senate an effort will be made to do justice to St. Thomas and Elgin in respect to this matter. It must have been somewhat galling to Messrs. Macdougall and Casey to find that the leaders of the Government threw the weight of their influence against St. Thomas, and thus have virtually driven the active control of the Canada Southern to Buffalo. Sir John Macdonald endeavored to stem this proceeding, which will inflict a heavy blow upon western interests. To legislate in such fashion as to cause the removal from Canada to the States of a considerable colony of people, whose presence among us would otherwise have been retained, is anti-national and destructive in its tendencies.

Several years ago a number of women who had become interested in the question sent to Worth, the celebrated Parisian modiste, asking him, "What costume can be devised that will be perfectly healthy and at the same time beautiful?" He replied:—"I have to make the same answer to you that I have made to the women of Europe. The costume of the Persian women is the handsomest upon the face of the earth. It consists of a loose waist, short skirt, and trousers not too loose. I have made this costume beautifully and hung it up in Paris, but the women will not wear it. I can do nothing more. They must suffer until they are willing to adopt it."

The Canada Pacific Railroad.

Along the Line—Interesting Descriptive Letter.

One who for some years was engaged on the Canada Pacific Railway survey contributes the following to the Thunder Bay Sentinel:—

Rat Portage is situated on the head of the Winnipeg River, the outlet of the Lake of the Woods, about 60 miles from the Northwest Angle, the terminus of the chain of lakes between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg. The scenery on the Lake of the Woods and Winnipeg River is grand in the extreme; what with the excellent shooting, fishing, &c., it is well worthy of becoming a place of interest to tourists and sportsmen. The land along the north shore of the lake and on most of the innumerable islands is well worthy of the notice of immigrants who are looking for bush land in preference to the bleak prairies of Manitoba and the Northwest. The bush is timbered with pine, spruce, birch, oak, ash, and elm to such a extent that as soon as the construction of Section 15 is completed I shall expect to see the grand water-power of the Winnipeg River utilized for saw-mills, etc., as the demand for lumber in the Prairie Province will be very great as soon as immigration increases; in fact, I know of no better opening for lumbermen in the whole of the Dominion of Canada.

Leaving Rat Portage, travelling east along the located line at Sturgeon Lake, a distance of some twelve miles, the line is located through a low, swampy country, easy of construction. From this point to Vermilion Lake, a distance of about 40 miles, the country is a perfect network of mountains, lakes, and rivers, with every engineering difficulty imaginable. The location of this section of the C. P. R. through such a mass of difficulties does great credit to the engineering talent of Messrs. Gardner and Mortimer. The rock is principally slate, trap, and grey granite, but the formation is very much broken up, which makes the line look rougher than it really is. On arriving at Vermilion and Eagle Lakes (a fine stretch of water some forty-five miles in length) there is a great improvement in the land for agricultural purposes, &c.

Along the North shore of the above lake there are some of the finest pine groves I have seen in the country, which will be a great help in railway construction, as timber is a very scarce article in the rocky sections of the line.

From this point to Wahagon Lake, a distance of about thirty miles, I cannot say much about the line, as I took the canoe route, south of the line. From inquiries I made as to the nature of the country, I should judge that it was very similar to what we were passing through. In that case the country is well adapted for settlement. Vermilion Lake to Wahagon Lake—good, 40 per cent.; bad, 40 per cent., water and rock, 20 per cent.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Mydelton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"Miss Chester feels the place chilly," he said as Lina slid her travelling-cloak over her bonnet, which never changed rightly together.

"I am waiting for you, Miss Chester," pleaded Sir Neil, trying to hide the real anxiety with which he spoke.

"I am waiting for Alick," she answered, calmly ignoring his words.

"And you may go to Alick," said Mrs. Rudolf to her brother. "Are you ready?"

"Quite ready," rejoined Colonel Stuart, who for the last minute had been carefully watching Jeffrey's face. "Come, Jack, jump up to your seat."

Just as the carriage from The Anchorage left the station-yard, the hotel fly drove up, and Lina took her place. The men were putting her boxes on the roof, when Sir Neil, who had stood at the door ever since he had assisted her in, spoke suddenly to his groom:

"I say, Ridley, drive on with the greyhounds; they want looking after, and they make the cart carry their weight in exercise. I'll come on after you. Make haste."

And the man touched his hat, and put, promptly, he had taken his place beside Lina.

On every subject that occurred to him he talked, through that drive in the closed fly, which, in itself, was a new pleasure to him. Perhaps he wished only to amuse her, and shorten the distance; for, at such times as this he was likely to be far more the truth—only to amuse himself, if he could, by drawing some one else out—but not very fond of your journey, eh. It would be best just to speak up, as your cousin is shy—at least, it's been very quiet to me. Still I suppose, for the purpose of the night, one is as if I can help you? I'll always be glad to help you, Miss Chester, though I daily under Fletcher. Margaret may name to us you'll always know who you send for when you want anybody—your?"

Lina fanned the girl pleasantly, even gratefully, then followed her along a wide, arched corridor, and into Lady Athelston's dressing-room.

As the maid closed the door slowly upon Lina, Lady, who sat in a lounging-chair at the fire, turned slowly to scrutinize her. At a glance Lina could have told that this was Sir Neil's mother, so like was the glance she saw that the face which met hers was cold and uncertain, a little proud, a little genial, but the latter element was only occasionally and generally accompanied by coldness, the mute, unconscious agony of the attitude, with Lina's gentle sympathy in that first moment, and the advanced curiosity to take the outstretched hand, never giving one glance to where Sir Neil, in his faultless evening dress, leaned against the high chimney-piece opposite his mother.

"Take his hand, Miss Chester," said Lady Athelston, pointing to one which had been placed beside her own. "Leave it where it is," she added, her eyes keenly fixed upon the girl; "leave it there. I want you to look at it as you will."

And Neil, from his position opposite, seemed to think it was just as necessary that he, too, should be still to see her.

Still and quiet, Lina satisfied the gaze of both mother and son; still and quiet, yet with that nameless shrinking from them of which Sir Neil was all the time half conscious, as he watched her with a sense of resentment which made her ripe to chide, and which made her cruel to the delicate white skin.

"You have got a cold parney, I fear, Miss Chester," said Lady Athelston, with strange gentleness. "From where have you travelled to-day?"

"Only from London," answered Lina, unwinding the trimmings which Lady Athelston held to her ear.

"From the house where we have been living so long—the hideous house of the lady in Bedly Square to them I wrote about you?"

"Yes," said Lina, but in such a strange low tone of pain, almost of fear, that Sir Neil looked promptly in his own mind that her experience of governs life had been far from rose-colored.

"Dreary life, Miss Chester, for no remarked Lady, in her quiet tones, intelligent, I should say, on his sad than a child to whom sense."

"I never tried the 'intelligent dog,'" answered Lina, with quiet earnestness.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

INGERSOLL.

Induction in St. James' Church Yesterday.

His Lordship Bishop Holmuth on a Pastor's Duty—The Ritualists Rebuked.

Yesterday (Sunday) morning, the Rev. E. M. Bland, formerly of Hensie, County of Bruce, was inducted a rector of the Parish of St. James, Ingersoll, by the Bishop of Huron. There was a large attendance of the congregation and the general public. Rev. Mr. Hazlewood presented and read his letters of induction, and promised to comply with the canons laid down by the Synod and the requirements of the Book of Common Prayer and Bible. Messrs. Wells and White, churchwardens, handed the keys of the church, which were received by the rector. Thereafter, the Bishop presented the Book of Common Prayer and Bible, saying the rector must strive to be sound in his teachings as his rule of life, and to strive in all things to be a pattern to his people. The usual services were then proceeded with, his Lordship afterwards preaching from the following words, contained 1st Corinthians, 4th chap., second verse—"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." His Lordship, in the course of an excellent sermon, listened to most attentively, said that fidelity of stewardship was requisite for a minister of the Gospel of Christ that if fidelity is of prime importance. An earthly steward is entrusted with the care of his master's property, a great deal of which is his private interest. advance his master's interests. Fidelity in such a case is essentially necessary, and if this is required of an earthly steward, what shall be said of a steward entrusted with the souls of men—how important and magnitude of which trust can only be made known by the words of the Holy Scriptures. It is required of a steward that he shall be found faithful. To preach and proclaim Christ and Him crucified, even at the risk of his life. In order that he may be the more successful in his labors, work, the hearty co-operation and prayer of the people is necessary. His Lordship briefly referred to the solemn responsibilities which a pastor takes upon him with ordination and demonstrated the appropriateness of the 39 Articles of Faith of the Church of England to meet the requirements of the people. These had been fitly formed by an eminent divine the "thirty-nine bulwarks of the Church of England." They were indeed a precious heritage, a noble inheritance the value of which they could best appreciate who know that it has been purchased by the blood of martyrs and through much persecution. A minister of the Gospel and of this mission; and they had as his first great requisite is unswerving fidelity. He must not caricature the Word of God, or compromise the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ. The Church of Christ proclaimed with authority. The Gospel preached in its simplicity—when the preachers were faithful—had power to convince and it was when the Church fell away from this simplicity, and adopted human devices that it became weak. Then that the Church became most corrupt, and those who endeavored to reform it were martyred. Ministers should never forget that their high vocation is from Christ and Him crucified. The Church puts the Bible first and then herself; she is the handmaid; the Bible is the lamp of life which she bears. Prove all things by the Bible. It is also a pre-requisite that a minister should preach the true Gospel. At the present time, when the Church is sorely tried in the Mother Country by a system which caricatures it—when men walking in the Church, and wearing her liveries and eating her bread—are caricaturing her pure Gospel Protestantism, and imitating Popish rites, it requires us to follow those noble martyrs who died because they would not submit to such a system. A pastor must also be diligent in prayer and study God's Word. As to the new pastor, the Bishop said he felt Mr. Bland would, to the utmost of his ability, endeavor, by aid of his Book, and God alone give him grace and strength, the wonders of redeeming love, and strive to advance the interests of the Church and parish. He (the Bishop) would not have sent him where he was not acceptable to the people. He believed this would be the case. For, as a Bishop, he had no other interest but the prosperity of the Church. His fervent prayer would be that their new pastor should continue faithful and sound in his doctrine, exemplary in his life, faithful in his pastoral character, faithful in his care of the people of his parish and faithful in his charge of the little lambs of the flock. He felt that this would be so, and he prayed that God would grant it. His Lordship then briefly addressed the people on their duty to their pastor, and in conclusion forcibly reminded them that time was short; and that if they would work for the advancement of the cause of God they should do it now.

In the evening Rev. Mr. Bland preached the new, gentleman in this parish is felt to be a most appropriate one. He is a young man of much promise, and bids fair to be an able successor to the Rev. Canon Hincks, who now incumbent of Galt, where he labors with much acceptance.

The choir of St. James', under Mr. York, embraces several excellent voices. The anthem yesterday morning was beautifully rendered.

MRS. WHITE'S CLASSES.

Mrs. White, of London, has a class of 70 young people learning music in this town. Her system is popular with much favor.

TRADE PROSPECTS.

Business is briskening up a little lately; but there are still a large number of unemployed persons in the neighborhood. Mcsawber-fashion, "Waiting for sum ething to turn up."

NORTH HURON.

Enthusiastic Meeting of Liberal Conservatives.

The Liberal-Conservatives of North Huron held a Convention at Wingham, on Thursday, for the purpose of selecting a candidate to take the field in the Conservative interest at the approaching elections for a representative for the House of Commons. The present member, Thomas Farrow, Esq., M.P., was the only nominee, and was unanimously chosen as the candidate. The following resolution was then passed:—That this meeting fully approves of the resolution introduced into the House of Commons by Sir John A. Macdonald, and we, the Conservatives of this North Riding of Huron, endorse such a resolution which would afford substantial protection to the agricultural, manufacturing, and mining interests of this country as being the only national policy that can insure prosperity to our great Dominion. The following gentlemen were appointed officers of the Association for the present year:—President, Joseph Leech, Esq., of Blantale, collected; Vice-President, John Hall, Esq., Bengough; Asst. Pres. Offs.; Sec.-Treas., Andrew Green, Esq., Wingham.

GODERICH.

A lacrosse club has been formed in Goderich, styled the Independents. The following is the list of officers elected for the ensuing season:—President, H. H. Smith; Vice-President, H. W. Hall; Secretary and Treasurer, J. J. Craig; Captain, C. Hamilton; Committee, Messrs. Horton, Reed, Smith, McGregor, McCormack, McIntosh and McDermid.

At a meeting held at the Albion Hotel on Wednesday evening last, the athletic club was formed and the following officers elected:—President, R. Dunsford, President; C. G. Dyett, Vice President; R. S. Williams, Secretary and Treasurer.

STRATHROY.

The Division Court for the sixth division of Middlesex was held here to-day (Saturday) at the Town Hall. The number of suits was not very large, and but little time taken up in the disposal of them.

Rev. Mr. Baldwin, of Port Huron, and lately the popular pastor of the Baptist Church here, preached the annual sermon to the Oddfellows of Strathroy in the Baptist Church last Sunday. A very large number of the Order were in attendance, besides many other citizens, who embraced the opportunity of hearing an old friend.

The Very Rev. Dr. Hawley delivers a lecture in the R. C. Church here on Sunday next, in which he will endeavor, from the standpoint of theological reason that hell is no illusion.

Mr. Hall, the beginning of the month a stranger brought a horse and buggy to the Commercial Hotel here, and left it in the stable, where it remains still without an owner, as the man shortly after went off, and has not since been seen in these parts. Mr. Fillmore would like some one to establish an ownership, and relieve him of responsibility.

The brick for Mr. Pearce's new block, on the corner of Front and Carafloc streets, is being laid down, and the work of building will soon be commenced, as the contractor teachings as his rule of life, and to strive in is being pushed forward with energy.

The roads are drying up nicely around here just now, and travel is likely soon to be a matter within the reach of all. Grain does not come in very freely yet, and it is probable that it will not come in any quantity now until the wood begins to move.

Strathroy, March 23, 1878.

PARKHILL.

On Wednesday last, the Bishop of Huron administered the rite of confirmation, in St. James' Church, when thirty candidates, both old and young, ratified and confirmed their baptismal vows; all of whom, with other members of the church, subsequently partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. There never before was seen in St. James' so large a number of communicants, which was wholly owing to the untiring efforts of the respected incumbent, the Rev. W. Johnson, on whom the Bishop, in his post confirmation address, passed a well merited eulogium, and he met with a hearty response from all who heard it. The address was adapted to the occasion. Simplicity, earnestness and paternal affection pervaded the whole, while the due the time arrives, we will roll up an increasing majority for the Conservative candidate.

The total value of the school property is about $75,000. The average cost per pupil for the year was $4.98. Guelph may be proud of the handsome Central School just completed.

Before the close of last year the Otterville teacher suspended one of the school girls for impertinence, and as she refused to apologize, the trustees endorsed his action. At the school meeting two new trustees were elected. The Board then resolved to admit the pupil without requiring an apology, and the teacher immediately closed the school, and in consequence of his course being unanimously sustained by the ratepayers, the trustees receded from their position, and left him master of the field.

Uncle Remus on Education.

As Uncle Remus came up Whitehall street a little colored boy carrying a slate and a number of books. Some words passed between them, but their exact purport will probably never be known. A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

Bursting of a Sawmill Boiler in Virginia.

Five Persons Killed—Six Others Dangerously Wounded.

A Boiler Without a Steam Gauge.

Richmond, Va., March 22, 1878.

An appalling disaster took place at about noon to-day in the saw-mill of Hall & Alvis, in Henrico county, about seven miles from this city. The large boiler exploded. The following is a list of the casualties:—

THE KILLED.

Gordon Rollins, colored; Binkie Thomas, colored; Joseph Hall, white; Edgar Hall, white; John C. Thorp, white.

FATALLY WOUNDED.

George Lowrey, white.

INJURED.

DETAILS OF THE DISASTER.

The Colonel regretted the small attendance, but hoped the promoters of the club would not be discouraged. He advocated the need of the young men to join these clubs, and providing for them amusements, and thus make Reformers of them. He went on to instruct the young men in the line of argument they should use in their debates, and was closing when

The engineer was standing near the fire box, and the negroes and Mr. Hall's two boys—the latter playing—were under the shed.

A WARNING THAT WAS TOO LATE.

The engineer called to the sawyer, "Hurry up and fix your machine. The water is low and I must start up." Almost the next moment, and before there was time, his words had died away, the boiler burst with a horrible report, and every individual, the hotel was built upon, how they paid for lime, tin, shingles, windows, flooring, glass, like part of the air was blown out, and like nails, &c., which never were seen in or outside the building.

We now go to the Colonel that Lonsdon Eastes don't require the standard elevated in their village as you city folks had at last electioned, and that as before, when

DISCOVERING THE DEAD.

A negro named Binkie Thomas was blown high into the air, and descending his body fell in a pine tree, part of his clothing and flesh being left in the branches. His remains presented a ghastly spectacle—a mass of scalded flesh and mangled bones.

The body of Gordon Rollins was blown into the creek, fifty feet off. It was scalded, and half of his head was taken off and was not found.

Joseph Hall, son of the manager, was horribly mangled, his brains being dashed over the earth a distance of 100 feet from the boiler.

Edgar Hall, another son, was not killed instantly, but his skull was crushed in and his brains protruded through the fractures. He died soon afterward at the residence of his father, a mile off.

John C. Thorp, the sawyer, was buried in the débris of the building, and when rescued was alive, and lived for an hour and a half.

The engineer was scalded all over the body and was injured internally. A large wounded condition he managed to get up, and ran a mile to Mr. Hall's residence. But his injuries are said to be fatal.

A large piece of the boiler, weighing about two hundred pounds, was carried about 500 feet, and another immense piece was thrown about eight hundred feet into a ploughed field.

The accident is chiefly attributed to the water being low in the boiler at the time. But the boiler was an old one that had recently been repaired, and was without that essential appurtenance, a steam gauge. It forget to say that the bodies of the negroes

SIR,—I send you a report of the meeting of the Young Men's "Liberal" Club, held in the Town Hall here on Friday evening. According to your Grit custom, there was a large attendance. Well, I will tell you just how many there were. A deputation of six Grit wire-pullers from the city, headed by the Colonel, seven old and saddle-aged men and five young men from the village. Mr. Murray Anderson, Mr. J. B. The Room Committee reported that they had rented the Hicks' Block for $199 per annum, and it was decided to fit it up with the necessary furniture. Some doubts were expressed as to where the money was to come from, when he of the Grit Block, Mr. Jones, rose and said in a brilliant, concise—Ab King's Star House,

In one of them were 6 horses, and in another 4, belonging to a consignee of Sarnia, removing to Manitoba. The flames burst out fiercely, and before the attendants could jump off, they had a narrow escape. The agonized screams of the poor animals in the flames were terrible to hear and although no time had been lost in extinguishing the fire, yet when they were got out of the car, every hair of hair was burnt from their bodies and they presented a horrible sight, parts of their ears being burned off and the burned flesh hanging from their bodies in different places. The owner valued the six animals at $1,200.

HOUSE TO WORK.—Mr. Miller, the gentleman recommended to the Park Committee as the best landscape Gardener in America, and who designed and laid out the Fairmount Park grounds, Philadelphia, arrived in this city on Saturday, and is the guest of Mr. Saunders. He is here at the request of the Committee for the purpose of preparing suitable plans for laying out (at present) "bounden with the waste." It is his intention to meet the Park Committee at ten o'clock this forenoon on the ground, and subsequently submit a rough draft of his plan to the Committee in the evening. From Mr. Miller's experience in this direction is now assured, and we hope the Committee will see it to be the best policy to push on the work as quickly as possible.

A DEFIANT ATTITUDE.—Home weeks since mention was made of the threatening address of the worthy Recorder of Mr. Robt. H. Morrison, the Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows of Michigan with the funds of that organization to the amount of $7,000. He made a statement on Thursday at Grand Rapids, Mich., to the effect that he is the victim of a conspiracy on the part of several officers of the Grand Lodge; that he is not a defaulter; that he has vouchers for every dollar of the funds; that Grand Lodge officers forged his name to important papers; that very little money was ever paid to the Grand Secretary, and that he will make things hot for that officer. Mr. Morrison's friends and brethren in London, where he lived for many years, will hear with pleasure of his resolve to "go" for his defamers.

SERIES OF BURGLARIES.—The Village of Dunet, in Elgin County, has been visited by burglars this week. At Mr. Robinson Hotel they entered by the back kitchen window, passed through the kitchen and dining room, and entered the bedroom occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robinson. The burglars passed the bed, went to the farther end of the room, turned down the light which had been left burning, took a cash box and $7 or $8 of silver coin from fifteen to twenty dollars. Mr. R. S. George's shop was visited, and six pairs of new boots carried off. Mr. A. Tait's door was tried, but the three above named only got in by the store of Mr. John Mills, Palgrave, was entered by some parties and all his postage stamps stolen. The ties and all the bedroom of Mr. J. H. Eberts was entered, his pants taken from his bedside, and what money they contained taken away. They also entered the cellar of Mr. Zimmerman, and stole away a jar of jelly.

City Church Notes.

The annual missionary and Sabbath School services of London South B. C. Church were held yesterday. A sermon to the children was preached in the afternoon by Rev. S. J. Allain, and in the evening Rev. J. J. Rice delivered a sermon upon the missionary work.

A very interesting sermon to young men was preached by Rev. R. W. Wallace in the congregational Church last evening. The attendance was large.

The discourses upon sacred writers were continued by Rev. J. Goodman in the King Street Methodist Church last evening, when an able sermon upon Daniel was preached to a large congregation.

HORSE SALES.—But few sales of horses have taken place in this neighborhood lately—the classes wanted for exportation getting scarce. At Messrs. Grands' sales on the village, and Elsenburg, which take place next month, it is expected that there will be a large number of animals exposed, and a good attendance of buyers. If farmers could raise either good heavy work horses, or light carriage animals, there would always be a market for them; but they are content with "medium," and there are not much inquired for by buyers in the foreign market. Still, there are a few good, fine, speedy horses. Of last week in city.—George Buntle, of Rochester, N. Y., last week bought a car load of horses in Brussels, paying from $70 to $140 for each animal. On Friday 61 horses were shipped from Clinton, via G. W. R., for use on Mr. Whitehead's portion of the Canadian Pacific contract—20 were worked here and comes a carriage horse. Mr. Wm. Kitt, of Clinton, sold his fine span of horses to a Hamilton firm for $280.

A Villanous Outrage.

Between four and five o'clock on Friday afternoon an outrage was attempted upon the person of a young woman, of about twenty years of age, named Mary Feeney, while she was walking along the side-road on the easterly limit of the Asylum Farm, about two miles from the city. It is said that Miss Penny, who is a daughter of Mr. E. Penny, the gardener at the Asylum, was visiting at a friend's house, a short distance northeast of the institution, on the day mentioned, and left the place with the view of going home shortly after four o'clock. While walking south on the concession line, and when opposite Mr. Brody's farm, Miss Penny was suddenly seized by a man from behind, who threw her down, and while on the ground choked her and put his hand over her mouth to prevent an alarm being given. As she lay upon the ground she had a fair struck her in the eye and swore he would murder her if she made a noise, and thwarted his infamous, but regardless of his commands, she struggled desperately with the villain, and succeeded in freeing herself from his clutches, not, however, before she had got a firm grip of one of her teeth in one of his fingers. She then made off in the direction of her friend's house, acquainted them of the outrage, and procured one of the family to accompany her home. She also informed of the affair, and reported the circumstances to the chief of police on the following day. On Saturday the case was placed in the hands of Detective Phair, who took Constable Elliot associated with him as an assistant. The officers paid a visit to the scene, accompanied by Miss Penny, and succeeded in tracing the miscreant to a house not far away in the same part. A description of the man was given by the hotel-keeper, and it coincided with that given of the assailant by Miss Penny, and with a pretty good idea of their game, the officers set out in search of a man named George Baker, who had been in the employ of a plasterer at the Asylum. On being informed that Baker had left his work at noon on Friday and had not returned, and that a straightaway a visit was made to the residence of his mother on Great Market street in the city. The detective was informed that he had not been at home the night previous, and that the family had no idea of his whereabouts. On being shown the real Mrs. Baker said it was her son's, and asked that it remain with her, but the officers would not consent, and once more set off on their search. On going into Mr. Panton's hotel, a short distance north, on Adelaide street, Phair espied the individual he had been looking for, and while placing the "darbies" on his wrists, noticed that his finger still bore the marks of Miss Penny's teeth. The accused was then driven to where his victim lay, and Miss Penny at once identified him as the individual who had endeavored to take improper liberties with her the afternoon previous. He was then brought to the Police Station, and subsequently remanded by the police magistrate until to-day. This is not the first offence of the kind charged against Baker. Four years ago a company with a colored youth, he was arrested by Detective Phair for a similar assault, committed on the person of Mrs. Hall, of Westminster, and on that occasion he was convicted and sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment in the Central Prison. Miss Penny has been confined to her room since the outrage, and bears the marks of the villain's fingers on her neck. Her clothes were also torn, and her breast having knelt upon her there. It is expected, however, that she will be able to appear against him on Tuesday. The case was exceedingly well worked up by the police, Phair and Constable Elliot, who deserve great credit for placing a scoundrel like Baker under lock and key in such a short time.

AN UN-TIME-LY MEETING.

A Free Trader Nicely Caught by a Government Protectionist!

A jeweller, doubtless well known to many of our readers, who had been on an extended trip in the Eastern States, arrived at Suspension Bridge on Saturday last on his way to his home in Western Canada. Probably he had been on a purchasing tour, and probably he had been simply "seeing the sights" of New York. At any rate he had two satchels in his hands when he landed on the Canadian side of Niagara River, and came the landing-waiter of the Customs was at his post—he draws his salary for doing Stepping up to the traveller, whose appearance might have caused suspicion in the mind of H. M.'s official (but it probably didn't), the landing waiter asked his name and whither he was travelling, and received in reply "William Willis, Detroit." Probably the manner in which the response was uttered excited additional apprehension in the landing waiter's mind that he was being "stuffed," and as a precautionary measure, he coolly collared the two valises, and sailed the unsuspecting man from the other side" to follow him to head-quarters. On the way the party met a conductor of the Great Western Railway, who was asked by the officer if he knew the captive, and without hesitating the well given by the jeweller of Western Canada, he blurted out his calling, and local habitation, which, it may be well to add, did not correspond with those given by the satchels and the jeweller of Western Canada. The satchels and the "old smuggler" were then taken before the Collector, who informed him that the contents of the bags were seized for infraction of the revenue laws, and that they would in all probability be subsequently offered at auction "for the benefit of whom it may concern." With this knowledge in his possession the jeweller from Western Canada shortly afterwards took the first train for the West—minus his baggage, which contained several dozen valuable watches, and considerable jewellery! Verily, time doth make inroads on us all!

County Magistrates Court.

Before Squires Peters, Relton and Fraser.

Mr. R. M. Chester, of London East, was before the above Court on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of hearing the assignment of the case in which he was interested. The evidence of the informant, Clark and Fleming, although not so satisfactory as the Bench desired, was considered sufficient upon which to base a conviction, and a fine of $20 and costs was imposed.

Mr. Peter Steele, hotel-keeper of Petersville, pleaded guilty to giving a man named Clark, of London East, (who it was shown at the trial was in the employment of the East Middlesex License Inspector) a glass of liquor on Sunday, the 17th inst., on his representing that he was sick, and that he was not an informer. The Magistrates, while condemning this system of espionage and sympathizing with the defendant, held that the law did not allow them to look over such an act, and consequently a fine of $20 and costs was imposed.

Mr. Reynolds, hotel-keeper at the Junction, was another of the victims of the informers Clark and Gould (both of London East) and in his case, similar to the one chronicled above, the same fine and costs were recorded.

Two others, one from Delaware and one from Westminster, were charged with the less serious offence of having their bar rooms open after the prescribed hours. It was shown to the court that the owners had gone into the bar rooms for other purposes than the sale of liquor, and consequently the cases were dismissed, with costs on the defendants.

DISORDERLY CHARACTERS.—About half-past ten o'clock last night a posse of police paid a visit to a house of ill fame on Richmond street, and succeeded in capturing the owner and her men. The woman's name is Martha Pearl and the other's Joseph Henry, who says he is a bar tender and belongs to Michigan. The women are well-known to the police as a bad character, and Henry will be, if he does not turn over a new leaf very soon.

RECORDING.—Mr. Hyman's condition last night was reported as more favorable, and unless a sudden relapse of the malady manifests itself, his physicians are inclined to think the worst is over. His many friends will be glad to see him about again.

Bismarck Reported Seeking a Compromise.

England Invited to State Her Demands Precisely.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

St. Petersburg, March 29.—The most considerable feeling in the Russian official circles over the action of the English Cabinet calling out the reserves. War is now looked upon as inevitable. The press has become impudent against England.

London, March 29.—It is reported that the Russian army about Constantinople is being reinforced. There is great excitement in this city, and throughout the domain depending over the prospect of a war with Russia. The course pursued by the Government is generally applauded.

Athens, March 29.—It is reported a terrible Turkish massacre occurred near Volo.

St. Petersburg, March 29.—The Golos Russe says the version of Prince Gortchakoff's reply which appeared in the Daily Telegraph on Tuesday morning is wholly inaccurate. Russia does not maintain the right of vetoing Parliament's decrees of the treaty outside of European jurisdiction. Gortchakoff has maintained throughout each meeting of the Congress as to the late liberty to discuss every clause, and also the entire freedom of opinion and decision.

Lord Derby's resignation caused no surprise in official circles in St. Petersburg, where it was expected.

Vienna, March 29.—It is reported that Ignatieff's first interview with Andrassy has not yielded satisfactory results to Ignatieff, who in conversation to-day said Andrassy would leave nothing standing of the San Stefano Treaty.

It is stated that the attempt has been resumed in Vienna to find a middle course in which Europe can unite.

The same despatch states that Ignatieff has offered a contradiction of the assertion in a New York journal respecting his journey to Vienna. He says he has had no conversation with the Government of New York journal.

Vienna, March 29.—Ignatieff had an interview with Andrassy to-day, which lasted four hours. It is stated he leaves Vienna to-morrow.

Belgrade, March 29.—To-morrow is the last day for the Servians to retire within the treaty boundaries, but the troops, as yet, have received no orders to that effect.

Constantinople, March 29.—On Wednesday the Grand Duke and Sultan, and Vefyk and Safvet Pashas, had a private conference which lasted three hours.

Belgrade, March 29.—In consequence of the request of Russian headquarters, the Servian Cabinet, after a council to-day, ordered thirty of the country as one of the provisionally occupy Sophia, the Russian troops there having been ordered to join the army before Constantinople.

Vienna, March 29.—A Bucharest special says it is stated that two divisions of Russian cavalry have been ordered to return to Roumania from Bulgaria immediately, to occupy a strategical line from Simais to Predeal.

Berlin, March 29.—The North German Gazette says Lord Derby's retention of office was everywhere regarded as synonomous with the preservation of peace.

The National Zeitung remarks that England is undoubtedly preparing for warlike enterprises.

Paris, March 29.—A Vienna correspondent states that Ignatieff informed him that his mission was to harmonize the interests of Austria-Hungary, with the modifiable principles of the treaty.

A Belgrade special reports that the Servians received orders from San Stefano to march with all their available forces to Pristina and Albania.

London, March 30.—A Vienna correspondent says:—The views of Austria and Russia are so widely different that the feasibility of an understanding is doubtful. Austria is certainly opposed to any scheme for partition.

A committee of the Austrian general staff reported that the treaty of San Stefano would compel Austria to extend her military power over Servia, Montenegro and Albania.

London, March 29.—A Constantinople special says Gen. Nelidoff addressed a note to the Porte, demanding a dismissal of the British fleet from the neighborhood of Constantinople. Safvet Pasha communicated the note to Minister Layard, who, in accordance with the instructions of the British Government, replied that the fleet would remain until after the departure of the Russians from the environs of Constantinople. The Porte handed the reply to Nelidoff without remark.

NOTE.—The above is unconfirmed.

London, March 30, 7 a.m.—A Vienna special says it is rumored that Bismarck is making further efforts to assemble the Congress, and has asked England to forward a precise statement of her demands.

A Pera special states the visit of the Grand Duke has ended. All the foreign vessels, except the English, manned their yards as he left in the imperial yacht on Thursday.

The Post states that Ignatieff will probably visit Berlin, Paris and Rome, and finally London.

A Vienna special says the news from England has brought Ignatieff's negotiation to a stand still. Andrassy will at present listen to no proposal, and would certainly in the event of an Anglo-Russian war insist upon concessions which Russia is now indisposed to make.

London, March 30.—A Constantinople special announces that the Turks have abandoned Kavak, at the Black Sea entrance of the Bosphorous.

Russian newspapers state that many advantageous offers for letters of marque, in case of an Anglo-Russian war, have been received from the United States and elsewhere, but none have been accepted so far.

The British Cabinet.

The Marquis of Salisbury Succeeds Derby.

OTHER REPORTD CHANGES

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, March 29.—It is announced semi-officially that the Marquis of Salisbury will succeed Lord Derby as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

London, March 30, 7 a. m.—The Post says it is rumored that Hon. Gathorne Hardy, Secretary of State for War, has been raised to the Peerage, and succeeds the Marquis of Salisbury as Secretary of State for India.

Col. Stanley, now Under Secretary of War, succeeds Hardy.

The Times speaks of the appointment of the Marquis of Salisbury to be Foreign Secretary as an actual fact, and considers it may be taken as a pledge that no measures of mere hostility to Russia will be adopted, and it should facilitate any further negotiations.

The Daily Telegraph announces that the Marquis of Salisbury transacted the business in the Foreign Office yesterday.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

Publication of the Congress Correspondence.

The Queen's Message Expected on Monday.

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE ON THE CRISIS.

Decisive Steps Firmly Resolved On.

A SQUEAL FROM GLADSTONE

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, March 29.—Sir Stafford Northcote, in the House of Commons this afternoon, said the distribution of the Congress correspondence was delayed, owing to the non-reception of the assent of some of the powers to the publication. He hoped it will be in the hands of members to-morrow. The importance thereof is Russia's reply, read yesterday. He hoped the Queen's message, regarding the calling out of the reserves, would be communicated on Monday and discussed on the Monday following. Should this is the first time this step has been taken, it is desirable to ascertain the most correct mode of proceeding.

London, March 29.—The journals generally consider the retirement of Derby strengthens the Cabinet.

London, March 29.—At the evening sitting of the House of Commons the Marquis of Hartington pointed out that, as on Monday the House was to receive the royal message, which must indicate the situation, on which either war was imminent, or at least the crisis was of extreme gravity, the Eastern correspondence should contain not only communications between Russia and England, but communications showing the opinions of the other great powers.

Sir Stafford Northcote stated that the papers submitted would give full information as to the correspondence with all the powers, but would postpone the consideration of the budget until April 8th, to enable the House to discuss the Royal message on April 4th. The Government felt the time had arrived when they should take a decided step. They also felt, in view of recent events, which in a great measure had set aside the force of the treaties under which Turkey had hitherto been governed, it was perfectly right and proper that there should be a fresh examination of the question. The Government did not object to the treaty of San Stefano being taken as a basis for a new arrangement. They had not attempted to stand on any question of form, but only desired a full and fair discussion. They regretted that the efforts to bring it about had not been more satisfactory, but, having resulted as they have, the Government were obliged to consider the position of the country as one of the great Powers, having an interest in an European settlement, and were obliged also to consider its peculiar interests, and whether it should, by means of a Conference or in any other way, endeavor to maintain them. He asked the House to postpone further discussion, as to the course the Government might feel it their duty to adopt.

Mr. Gladstone deprecated the attempt of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to vindicate the Government before the production of the correspondence. He hoped the correspondence would satisfactorily explain why England was solely responsible for the failure of the Congress.

TORONTO.

Retired Army Officers Recalled to Active Duty.

Extraordinary Wedding in the Police Court.

Row at a Dance—A Man's Eye Knocked Out.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press.

Toronto, March 29.—Several gentlemen now residing in the city, formerly of the army and navy, have received notices from England, that in the event of war, their services would be required.

In Chancery Court to-day, a motion was made that the rolls should be brought into court, and that the name of J. G. Currie should be struck off, in accordance with the decision of the Chancellor, which was accordingly done, and the name erased.

The Lincoln Election Court adjourned to-day, without appointing any day for next meeting.

This afternoon a most singular occurrence took place—a couple being married in the Police Court. It seems that about a year ago a good-looking young man named David Davis and a girl named Annie Florence Kerry emigrated from Ireland, and on board ship struck up an acquaintance which ripened into love, the pair finally becoming engaged. David took advantage of the fair Annie's confiding nature, and she became enceinte. Discovering this, he grew tired of the girl, neglected her, and at last tried to throw her off altogether. But she would not be disposed of so easily, and on Tuesday she went to Snider's livery stable, where her fickle lover is employed as a hostler, and upbraided him for his conduct. He got mad, and, after some pretty rough language on both sides, he seized the poor girl by the throat and threatened to kill her. She immediately swore out a warrant against her cruel destroyer, and he was arrested, charged with maliciously and feloniously choking the complainant, with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The girl informed the detective who had the case in hand, that she did not wish to prosecute the defendant, but compel him to marry her. This having been communicated to prisoner, and the enormity of his crime being pointed out, and being told that he might be imprisoned for life, he finally consented to yield to the wishes of the girl, and be married there and then. License was procured, and the intimidated bridegroom and trembling bride were conducted to the Chief Constable's office, where in presence of a couple of detectives, representatives of the press, the chief constable and some court officials, the twain were made one. After the ceremony the bride reluctantly left the building, and the bridegroom was about to do the same, but the law had not yet been satisfied and he was conducted back to his cell. Mrs. Davis then, weeping, sought the magistrate and succeeded in getting her husband released on bail, preliminary to having the charge formally withdrawn to-morrow. Mr. Davis, although an unwilling party to the marriage, will do his best to make the lady happy.

Last night Lewis Brophy, Thomas Fadden and David O'Hara went to a house on Ontario street where a dance was going on, and knocked at the door. On gaining admittance they commenced to create a disturbance, and attacked some of the ladies present. Two deaf mute printers, named John Fadden and Norman V. Lewis, resented the ruffianly conduct of the three men, and gallantly did their best to defend the ladies, but they got the worst of it, and received some cruel handling. Lewis made an attempt to escape, but Stegerties followed him, one flinging a stone which hit him close in the eye knocking it out of its socket. This a.m. Fadden, Brophy and O'Hara filed an appearance before the Police Magistrate, but their victims being too ill to appear, they were remanded till Tuesday.

Sarnia, March 29.—The steamers of the Beattie Line have left their winter quarters, and came into their summer mooring, where they are being thoroughly overhauled, refitted, painted, &c., preparatory to the opening of navigation, which will commence this year on or about the 5th prox., being about one month earlier than usual.

NURSING A JUDGMENT.

In the course of the debate on the Controverted Elections Act, Mr. McCarthy, in reply to a question from Mr. Mackenzie, said:—

"The House would, no doubt, concur with him that in the trial of these election petitions it was very important that they should be disposed of speedily, and that gentlemen should not keep seats in this House longer than possible where doubts existed as to their title to them. If an appeal was taken to some one, surely, going to judges of the land to consult, there must be a great deal of delay, which delay, he was of opinion, would, by further legislation, be avoided. He, therefore, proposed in his bill that the trial should take place before three judges, (hear, hear;) and that, of these three judges, one should be a judge of the Supreme Court, (hear, hear;) and the other two should be judges of the Province in which the question arises."

The principle laid down by Mr. McCarthy —that election matters should be speedily disposed of—is an important one. Take, for example, the case now before Mr. Laflamme, the Minister of Justice. More than three months ago the protest against the finding in this case was filed; yet, up to the present time, no judgment has been rendered concerning a matter which is pretty much one of fact. Hence, the Minister of Justice has maintained his seat, whether rightly or wrongly we cannot say, but maintained his seat in spite of the fact that it has been called in question and judgment asked in behalf of the people. Now the rumor is that Mr. Laflamme is about to leave the Government, and be elevated to the Bench. But whether this be so or not, it is evident that no member of Parliament, much less a minister of the Crown, should continue to hold office for months together, when his right to do so has been called loudly in question, without a determination being arrived at. A reasonable time to settle such matters by a due enquiry into the evidence, and the law relating to it, is right enough, but for months to elapse without any judgment being rendered in such a case is but mockery of the people, and an insult upon the spirit of the constitution. It would be painful, indeed, if the impression were to go abroad that the judgment in this case is being nursed till an opportunity presents itself to hoist Mr. Laflamme on to the bench. So many gentlemen of the "proform" persuasion have made a virtue of serving their country by gaining an entrance to preferment through the doors of Parliament, that the unsuspecting of the case of Mr. Laflamme should attract attention. If he was duly elected he should have the advantage of it being so decided, and if he was unseated—or sealed—if his return was the result of bribery, corruption and intimidation, that fact should be known also. As it is, he sits as a member, acts as a minister, and has prospective advantages as a judge, while his title to his parliamentary position is still in question before the courts. Such a state of things cannot be right. It may be long enough that "the law delays" are incident to the natural imperfection of a human institution. But though they may be bad enough in relation to merely civil affairs, they become intolerable when the liberties of the people are involved. And these liberties are in question, when any person can continue to hold office and preferment from month to month upon the mere accident that a particular court—affiliated with the Minister of Justice in an especial way—fails, neglects, or is unable to render judgment on so simple a matter as whether a candidate did or did not violate the election law. Why, the most notorious of election cases in Canada, that concerning Mr. Walker, was decided in the course of three days, the evidence being taken meanwhile. It is true that it may be argued that that was a plain case of bulldozed bribery, about which there could be no mistake, and that the Court had no other alternative but to unseat and disqualify the defendant. That may be true enough. In fact, it is quite true. Yet in the case of Mr. Laflamme, the evidence was procured long ago; has been of record before the judges long since, and for many weeks past the people—that is the country—have been awaiting a righteous judgment, let it go which way it might. If it should now turn out that judgment will not be rendered in consequence of the elevation of Minister of Justice to the Bench, it may be feared that a painful impression will be left upon society. We entirely concur, then, with the principle laid down by Mr. McCarthy, that it is very important that election petitions should be disposed of speedily, and that gentlemen should not keep seats in Parliament longer than possible in cases where doubts exist as to the validity of their elections.

National—It is somewhat amusing to see the organs of the Government quoting approvingly the opinion of the London Times on the protectionist agitation in Canada. It is not long since the same organs denounced the Times as being blindfully ignorant on all Canadian subjects. On the question of protection the Times appears to be totally unable to realize the position of its own country, and its utterances on Canada's position on the questions are valuable in the extreme.

MORE ABOUT THE NEEDING.

Mr. Reid has been a little costive in the hands of the Committee of the Senate, still among them they have pumped him pretty effectually. It was evidently against his will that he made many of the admissions that have been wrung from him. He has been remarkably conscientious in obtaining the opinion of better judges than himself as respects the value of the grand hotel, but some may think that it was just a little too late, and a little superfluous, to consult Mr. James Durand long after his report had been placed in the hands of Premier Mackenzie putting a value of $6,029 upon this splendid pile of old slabs, without doors, without windows, without floors, without shingles, and without paint. Even this last item shows the manner in which the valuation was conducted. By Wilson's evidence it appears that there was no paint used upon any part of the House, and he admits that the paint was charged, and Mr. Reid, with that remarkable care and accuracy which have characterized his career as a Government valuator, declares his entire ignorance of this question of paint.

Another instance of a clear head and business capacity may be found in the fact that he admits the whole value of the lands was derived from the location of the terminus in that particular position; he states, further, that he applied the Act of 1868, which provides that lands required for Government purposes must not be raised in price to them on account of increased value through government works made or projected. Now observe; he admits the lands were worthless before government works were projected here, but he applied the law which prevents the lands from being raised in price in consequence of such improvements, when they are required for Government purposes, and yet he valued these lands at $400 or $500 per acre, which, according to his own showing, should have been estimated at a mere nominal price. And yet this is the work of a man whose honor was pledged to act justly as an arbitrator between the Government and Oliver, Davidson & Co.

Mr. Reid is asked if he thought his report to the Government was a final adjudication upon the case. He says:—"No; we expected to hear further about it." "Do you consider the case was ever finally adjudicated upon?" "It seems to have been done." He is questioned whether he did not think on signing the report without calling the attention of the Government to the law question, that he had assumed the responsibility. He answered:—"No; because we made a distinct note of that point in our report." Here Senator Scott read his letter to Mr. Mackenzie, when Senator Vidal at once declared that this letter threw the responsibility of fixing the $6,029 as the price of the hotel upon the Government. He says that in making their valuation they were guided by Oliver's accounts, but that they never examined or verified them, but told Oliver to get them verified and sworn to, and they would send them down to the Government as the basis of their award, and this is the last he saw of them; but yet in a few minutes after, he assumes the responsibility because they had been appointed valuators. Here is a beautiful muddle. First the adjudication, such as it was, he declares was not final. Next, in reply to a question, he says:—"The adjudication seems to have been done." Then he declares he had not assumed the responsibility of the award. And lastly he assumes the entire responsibility of the award of $6,029, though he does not know whether those accounts, of whose worth he declares himself profoundly ignorant, had reached the Government or not. We challenge the civilized world to produce a match for this evidence, which shows in every sentence a man condemning in a quagmire of ignorance of every principle that ought to have guided him in the performance of his duty. Every second question contains something contradictory of what goes before, and when the last question was put and answered it is painfully evident that Mr. Reid did not know where he stood, what he had said, nor how he had contradicted himself. Wilson went before the Committee determined to make a clean breast of it, and got off easily; Mr. Reid tried to fence, and got foiled at every pass—that's all the difference in the case; and in the other Mr. Reid will bear all, provided he can only keep the Government clear.

A COMING ESPIONAGE.

The proposal to place in the hands of the Government the opportunity of opening letters in transmission through the post office, is evidently a dangerous one. It is true, that the pretence under which it is made is that the interests of morality are to be subserved thereby, but we can readily understand how the Clear Grit conscience will soon come to understand that to mean the opening of letters addressed to prominent opposing politicians, and newspapers not in their interest, for the purpose of ascertaining supposed secrets. Do we not all recollect how a letter written by Sir John Macdonald was subjected to the espionage of the post-office at Montreal? How Messrs. Holton, Dorion and Senator Penny formed a private committee to discuss its contents, and instead of returning it to the writer—as gentlemen should have done, published it to the world "in the interests of morality." That was the plea they set up when to open and misappropriate a letter was a felony. What, then, may be expected now, when the Administration is asking for power to detain and open any letters they may choose? Many of the elder ones among us will recollect how Sir James Graham, once a popular member of the English Government, was driven from office amid marks of public ignominy, because he prostituted the machinery of the Post Office to political purposes. It is true that he may not have intended any wrong. Yet society felt that a principle had been outraged when privacy was invaded; when that which was written in confidence, intended for the hands of friendship alone, became proclaimed on the housetop. There are certain things which the English stomach will not stand, and among them is that crawling, sneaking treacherous method of espionage which pries into a man's private affairs for the purpose of making a little possible capital of it. A case of this kind occurred in this city only a few days since, when a contemptible contemporary, who need not be more specifically alluded to, thought proper to make public a private transaction with which he had become acquainted through eavesdropping in a public office. But it is all of a piece. Nothing is too small and snivelling for their little natures, whether it is seen in action at Ottawa, or in a mean-souled grubber in the purlieus of privacy in London. No doubt the public will endeavor to protect themselves against the coming espionage. Many methods have been suggested, but scarcely any will be found free from difficulty. A blast of hot air may melt a seal if it is of wax. A jet of steam will moisten an envelope if it has been closed with gum. No ordinary method of security will keep "little fingers" out of people's letters when Government once ordains that postmasters may open them in the cause of morality. The occasion is one of those which is suggestive of much wrong-doing under the guise of doing right.

POLITICAL CRISIS IN AUSTRALIA.

The latest news from Melbourne states that the constitutional crisis in Victoria, which was some time ago reported to have been compromised, continues. The particulars received by mail show that the conflict in progress is one of the most singular and embarrassing that ever disturbed the relations of legislative bodies. The situation is at once sensational and revolutionary, being brought about by a variety of causes. There are said to be all the elements of a violent political struggle; there is a social feud between rich and poor; a strife between protectionists and free traders, and an open breach between the two Legislative Chambers. Matters have gone so far that one party has used its command of the Executive power to try and crush the other by bringing the administrative machinery to a dead stop, by a wholesale dismissal of public servants,—the County Court judges, the coroners and stipendiary magistrates, and the leading officials in the civil service departments; and it has even been threatened to discharge every public servant, stop every allowance, and do away with the entire police force, and open the jails and asylums. The dispute first arose upon the payment of members of the Assembly. The Government has for a year or two past been in the hands of the ultra Radical party, Mr. Berry, as Premier, having secured a large majority in the Lower House, which is elected by a universal suffrage. But his Conservative opponents were firmly established in the Legislative Council, which the above lands were worthless before government works were projected here, but he applied the law which prevents the lands from being raised in price in consequence of such improvements, when they are required for Government purposes, and yet he valued these lands at $400 or $500 per acre, which, according to his own showing, should have been estimated at a mere nominal price. And yet this is the work of a man whose honor was pledged to act justly as an arbitrator between the Government and Oliver, Davidson & Co.

Mr. Reid is asked if he thought his report to the Government was a final adjudication upon the case. He says:—"No; we expected to hear further about it." "Do you consider the case was ever finally adjudicated upon?" "It seems to have been done." He is questioned whether he did not think on signing the report without calling the attention of the Government to the law question, that he had assumed the responsibility. He answered:—"No; because we made a distinct note of that point in our report." Here Senator Scott read his letter to Mr. Mackenzie, when Senator Vidal at once declared that this letter threw the responsibility of fixing the $6,029 as the price of the hotel upon the Government. Here is a beautiful muddle. First the adjudication, such as it was, he declares was not final. Next, in reply to a question, he says:—"The adjudication seems to have been done." Then he declares he had not assumed the responsibility of the award. And lastly he assumes the entire responsibility of the award of $6,029, though he does not know whether those accounts, of whose worth he declares himself profoundly ignorant, had reached the Government or not. We challenge the civilized world to produce a match for this evidence, which shows in every sentence a man condemning in a quagmire of ignorance of every principle that ought to have guided him in the performance of his duty. Every second question contains something contradictory of what goes before, and when the last question was put and answered it is painfully evident that Mr. Reid did not know where he stood, what he had said, nor how he had contradicted himself. Wilson went before the Committee determined to make a clean breast of it, and got off easily; Mr. Reid tried to fence, and got foiled at every pass—that's all the difference in the case; and in the other Mr. Reid will bear all, provided he can only keep the Government clear.

A COMING ESPIONAGE.

The proposal to place in the hands of the Government the opportunity of opening letters in transmission through the post office, is evidently a dangerous one. It is true, that the pretence under which it is made is that the interests of morality are to be subserved thereby, but we can readily understand how the Clear Grit conscience will soon come to understand that to mean the opening of letters addressed to prominent opposing politicians, and newspapers not in their interest, for the purpose of ascertaining supposed secrets. Do we not all recollect how a letter written by Sir John Macdonald was subjected to the espionage of the post-office at Montreal? How Messrs. Holton, Dorion and Senator Penny formed a private committee to discuss its contents, and instead of returning it to the writer—as gentlemen should have done, published it to the world "in the interests of morality." That was the plea they set up when to open and misappropriate a letter was a felony. What, then, may be expected now, when the Administration is asking for power to detain and open any letters they may choose? Many of the elder ones among us will recollect how Sir James Graham, once a popular member of the English Government, was driven from office amid marks of public ignominy, because he prostituted the machinery of the Post Office to political purposes. It is true that he may not have intended any wrong. Yet society felt that a principle had been outraged when privacy was invaded; when that which was written in confidence, intended for the hands of friendship alone, became proclaimed on the housetop. There are certain things which the English stomach will not stand, and among them is that crawling, sneaking treacherous method of espionage which pries into a man's private affairs for the purpose of making a little possible capital of it. A case of this kind occurred in this city only a few days since, when a contemptible contemporary, who need not be more specifically alluded to, thought proper to make public a private transaction with which he had become acquainted through eavesdropping in a public office. But it is all of a piece. Nothing is too small and snivelling for their little natures, whether it is seen in action at Ottawa, or in a mean-souled grubber in the purlieus of privacy in London. No doubt the public will endeavor to protect themselves against the coming espionage. Many methods have been suggested, but scarcely any will be found free from difficulty. A blast of hot air may melt a seal if it is of wax. A jet of steam will moisten an envelope if it has been closed with gum. No ordinary method of security will keep "little fingers" out of people's letters when Government once ordains that postmasters may open them in the cause of morality. The occasion is one of those which is suggestive of much wrong-doing under the guise of doing right.

TARIFF READJUSTMENT.

The Toronto Telegram says:—"The newspapers which are opposed to a readjustment of the tariff are parading extracts from English and United States journals showing what a very foolish thing it would be for the Canadian Government to increase the duty on foreign goods. Does anybody suppose for a moment that either United States or English manufacturers would advocate the imposition of increased customs duties on their own manufactures? Canadian journals have said time and again that the United States imposed exorbitant duties on Canadian products going into the United States for consumption, but we have yet to learn that the opinions of Canadian journals have had much effect in shaping the United States tariff. The friends of the national trade policy in Canada desire to encourage and foster Canadian industries, rather than to encourage and foster English or American industries, and for that reason look at the question from a Canadian rather than from an English or American point of view.

...The Belfast Northern Whig's London correspondent says that the people of Scotland would be only too glad if Parliament would give them a tenth part of the time it devotes to the wrongs of Ireland.

...The Houses of Parliament in London have sunk over two inches during the past year.

A PIECE OF ENTERPRISE.

One of the greatest pieces of enterprise of which the ministerial press has had of late to boast, was the publication, wednesday morning, of the communication, in detail, sent by Mr. Letellier to the Governor-General. True, it was not worth the reading, and few people read it, though it emanated from so notorious a personage as Letellier the Unjust. However, there it was, and who could deny the fact with the evidence before their senses? The question which the public naturally asked was, "How was it that a public document, communicated to Parliament by His Excellency, obtained exclusive publication "in the ministerial press?" The answer is a very simple one. While Sir John Macdonald was spanning the document in his seat in the House, the new Minister of the Interior, Mr. Laurier, approached him, and begged permission to use it for a short time. Sir John, with his usual courtesy, at once acceded to the request. Instead, however, of Mr. Laurier returning the paper to the leader of the Opposition, he secretly conveyed it to the representatives of the ministerial press, to whom "the wink" had been given. These gentlemen had conveniently assembled together in a special room, and there and then copied it for the benefit of their employers, while the leader of the Opposition was in vain expecting the return of the document to himself, in order to conclude the perusal of it. Ministers of the Crown condescend now-a-days to such small meanness, by giving private information, etc., and the more hocus-pocus by which Mr. Laurier humbugged Sir John Macdonald—under a gentlemanly pretext—out of the Letellier manifesto, is, after all, but a very natural affair. It is so like them, you know.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, March 29.

After prayers and routine.

Mr. Burpee (Sunbury) presented the petition of 14,000 odd ladies in the Maritime Provinces, praying that the proposed amendments to the Temperance Act be extended to the whole Dominion. He also presented other petitions to the same effect.

Mr. Pickard presented several similar petitions.

Mr. Burpee (St. John) presented returns as to the importation of horned cattle into Canada, as well as of horses and of dried and cured meats.

Mr. Mackenzie moved that, on and after Monday next, Government business have precedence on Mondays.

Mr. Masson said he was sure that the Premier only meant this as a notice of motion for after Monday next. He trusted the Premier did not intend to deprive members of their opportunities of bringing up other matters.

Mr. Mackenzie.—The only object was to facilitate the dispatch of business. He should have no objection to give members next Monday, but would take Wednesday instead, on the understanding that Mondays should be taken in the future. But little Government business had been dispatched of, the time having been taken up by discussion. There was nothing of very great importance on the orders.

Mr. Masson.—Are we to understand that before members' days were taken Saturdays should be availed of. If the Government wanted to change the taking effect of this proposition for a week, he should have no objection.

After some discussion.

Mr. Holton said the session had reached that stage when discussion upon notices of motion were of little moment; and if the Government were to be closed within a certain time, more facilities must be afforded to the Government. Lengthened debates were almost impossible, except upon the estimates.

Mr. Mitchell said there were eight notices of motion which had not been put on the paper for nothing, nor for clap-trap, and he could see a right to say that the members had no legitimate object in putting the notices on the paper. He was surprised at the member for Chateauguay, who was supposed to be the father of the House (laughter)—the right hon. Minister of Government—their moral brake—endeavoring to stop members from bringing up matters in which persons felt aggrieved, both by the Government and Government officials.

Mr. Mackenzie—Whats! Tim Murphy!

Mr. Mitchell maintained that Mr. Murphy though he was an Irishman, was suffering from a great grievance, and he denied the right of the Government to form this, as they were attempting, into a close Parliament. Before he should be prepared to give up Monday, he would divide the House upon it. It seemed as if the object was to choke off every motion, and as a member of this House he stood up to protest against it.

Mr. Mackenzie said after the eloquent speech of his friend from Northumberland, and considering that Monday was the 1st of April, he would defer taking Mondays until commencing April 8th. (Laughter.)

After remarks from Mr. Trow,

Mr. Pope took exception to the remarks of the member for Chateauguay. Hon. gentlemen did not come here for the mere sake of getting their pay, but to discharge their public duties. The business of the Dominion ought to be done properly, no matter how long it took. For his own part, he thought the business of the session was always too much hurried. There were many most important subjects upon the paper, and doubtless there were others which had yet to be brought up. Instead of cutting down the time of members the Government ought to extend it. He had no wish to stop here until all the business was done.

Mr. Davies advocated doing business on Saturdays, but he presumed the ministers required them to get up business for the House.

Sir John Macdonald said that members must make up their minds that it was impossible to do the business of the country in seven or eight weeks. From the remarks of gentlemen opposite, it would seem to be supposed that Parliament was formed for the mere sake of doing the Government business. He urged that the House must follow more the example of England in initiating, considering, and carefully developing measures, rather than rushing them through, as was the practice here. Questions of members' or Ministers' convenience must not have so much consideration. A member was sent here supposed to have the welfare of the country at heart, and when he put a notice on the paper, it must be considered that he meant to propose it, and the Government were not doing their duty if they thwarted the desires of the people through their representatives by obtain information. The people must be allowed their voice, yet the Government appeared to think that their prerogative was to prevent them being heard. He was speaking not only the truth, but parliamentary truth, in the strongest way. To close a session with the business unfinished and unperformed was most improper, and members must be prepared to make still greater sacrifices with this object in view. He remarked that the Premier on Government days was accustomed to work members exceedingly hard, yet on offdays the House always adjourned at 11.30.

Mr. Mackenzie's motion as amended was carried on division.

On motion of Mr. Huntington, the amendments made to the Post Office Act in Committee of the House were concurred in, Mr. Huntington declining to accept the proposition of Mr. Currier in regard to a general one-cent rate for drop-letters, no matter what the weight, which in effect would make the post office common carriers.

Mr. Kirkpatrick complained that insufficiently paid drop-letters were sent to the dead letter office, whereas the proper course to pursue would be to impose a fine on the delivery of the letter.

Mr. Huntington said that, according to the regulation, this was the practice, and it was not, as he was informed by his officers, the custom to send drop letters to the dead letter office.

Mr. Dewdney said that on the occasion of a ball by the citizens of Victoria to the officers of Her Majesty's Pacific Squadron, some of the invitations that had been sent by post without being sufficiently stamped had found their way to the dead letter office.

R. C. FISCHBACH, London, Ont., March 17, 1878.

DEAR MR. MASON:—

Since you left London I have been making some account since of those who purchased the Magneticon appliances during your visit, and I have not heard of one case in which dissatisfaction has been expressed, but in several instances sufferers relieved thereby have expressed themselves very strongly in favor of your electro-magnetic remedy. The case of rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, and weak lungs, disordered liver, rheumatic affections, opinion and throat diseases, which you left with me, has become almost instantly relieved, and the relief has in none of these cases altogether been beyond expectation. I feel glad that you have introduced to the suffering of this Province so complete a remedy, covering as it does so wide a range of diseases to which our peculiar climate renders us liable.

Yours truly, J. J. HUNT.

371 Ballurst street, London, March 16, 1878.

DEAR SIR.—I have worn the "Magneticon" Chest Protector for over one year from England for more than a year, and having suffered from an affection of the bronchial tubes, have had occasion to prove and appreciate its curative properties. On your visit to London, I purchased a Spine Band, and am already convinced its good effects upon my nervous system.

R. J. ALLEN.

London, Ont., March 16, 1878.

DEAR SIR.—The Belt and Lung Invigorator which I purchased from you in February have almost accomplished a complete cure. My constitution had become so much shaken that I could not even—even a walk of a few minutes—would become, but I can now walk around and move with pleasure, and am constantly improving.

After the Banquet.

No revels are over—the orgy is past;
All my lively company leave last nor at least;
And the half-dozen strokes of my ormolu clock
Are effaced by the stories of the shrill-crowing cock.

In the grate lies the laughter that lurked from one
To the
Other Honeyman's ditties and Flemyngate's quips,
Not an echo survives in the dawn's chilly light
Of the mirth and the humour that gloamed through the night.

There were cauldrons of every conceivable shape,
There was Bass—there was Allsopp—and blood of the grape,
There were spirits, arranged by some cunning device
To be not very noxious and yet very nice,
But the vestiges of the feast bring a gloom to my heart
As I look on the wrecks that remain of it grim;
And a few bilious sentiments enter my head,
While I sweetly but sadly prepare me for bed.

As I glance at you blank and unfrequented shell
Where it once was the joy to discuss an oyster to dwell,
I am seriously restrain the low sensitive tear
And the wish to bemoan its inhabitant here.
Yonder bowl, I remember, held salad inside,
Where the lettuce and the lobster in interest vied;
Yonder bobbins, once brimming, look now so forlorn
That I train through their bodies the wivent of morn.

Yet why should I murmur?—That sunny champagne
Was productive of Jones' most rollicking vein;
And I never believed that young Simmons could sing
Till I'd a serious drink of the night was begun.
Though the scent of tobacco still sickens the air,
My cigars were pronounced a success — and they were.
Sammy Travers, who came to me down in the dumps,
Made a joke after three of them. There are the stumps.

Forth in the gaslight, and Age is the gray—
Will the follies of night vex the leisure of the day?
It is lawful for formerly poets to mock,
But at forty the laughter may set up to knock.
Giddy boys, go along, with your jokes and your song;
Which are all very pleasant and not very wrong.
But the dawn of Season, Philosophy tells,
Only serves to expose empty bottles — and ashes — and shells.

"Oh, Miss Castillain!" cried Lina, really shocked.

"Oh, now—whatever it may have been then—I dislike him a good deal."

"Oh, Miss Castillain!" and, enraged to him!"

"And engaged to him—yes, Miss Chester. Whatever you going to say, now that such engagements are decency—four months too late' I know

I am sure it ought to be written in pleasant books—in larger letters than other matters, why not marry his grandmother—that's what you may not marry the woman he does not love."

"Those there are few such engagements, Miss Castillain," said Lina, seriously.

"Do you?" inquired Marjorie, with a curious questioning in her eyes. "And I know there are many—more, at any rate, than you will dream of in our pleasant philosophy. There is something very amusing about connecting romance with our approaching marriage," she continued, laughing. "It is one of the few things from which I can glean a joke or two in spite of papa and Louis. It is true to know that it is so widely published that I can never have the opportunity of refusing another suitor; and it is fun to know that Lady Athelston is in a mildly chronic state of dread lest I should not come off. Poor, dear old lady! I wish I thought it would make her less deaf for her son to have a wife that he cannot manage, or that it would shed rays under her lazy feet. Poor old lady! I cannot help saying it, though I do really like her very well, and am sorry for her—not as I should be sorry to see a substantial branch of ivy, with years and years of life in it, obediently determined to cling to a hop-pole."

"Does that represent Sir Neil?" asked Lina, smiling.

"No, the hop-pole has a wider significance. Lady Athelston must cling to some one; so, though her son will not act the oak which is needed, she still clings to him, varying the performance by attaching herself to that Gorgon of a maid of hers, or to Louisa, who is sufficiently gifted to pour a constant stream of scandal into that blessed trumpet—I mean, that trumpet—and most especially of all to Mr. Jeffrey, from The Anchorage, who is more gifted still, in a hundred ways. He is a clever fellow, though really, and wants—wants one of Mr. Castillain's daughters for his wife."

"Which one?" asked Lina, laughing at Marjorie's method of putting the case.

"Well, it does not, perhaps, signify much, because their wealth is so nearly equal. He would like, at any rate, to have the two strings ready drawn on his bow, so that when one snaps, there is the other all ready. Don't you admire his infinite tact?"

"If it is tact," said Lina, quietly.

"Such tact I consider sufficient to place him on the highest pinnacle of greatness in these days. But I can never give you half an idea how exquisitely clever Mr. Jeffrey is. I can only hope the knowledge will gradually dawn upon you. It would take years to gain the depth and the height and the width of his intellect. He is certainly only a tutor, but—joking aside—he is wonderfully more than that too, and then he is undeniably handsome, and it is not always that one can meet a very handsome and very gentlemanly and very clever man, eh?"

HOLIDAY ISLAND,
Lake Stillwater.

DEAR FRIENDS.—Although I never believed myself to be specially gifted, I have covered, I am ashamed to confess, many squires of good servi-rable note paper with very indifferent poetry, and I never felt so inclined to "break out" again as I did this morning, when I looked forth from the window and found the world had "grown white in a single night" with the winter snow. Not poetry in praise of the scene, though; far from it. If those rhymes had been written, they would have had such a grand, majestic, Byronic, everything-gone-to-rack-and-ruin tone about them, that you would have wept all day after reading them, and have yearned for more of the same sort. "Hope is buried 'neath the snow, spring has closed its pinions bright; balmy airs no longer blow, and the sun has quenched its light."

There is just a small and totally insufficient sample of what I very nearly wrote, but didn't. However, I suppose it will not last long (I mean the snow), and when spring comes towards us again, we shall be sure that it is in earnest, and then one of our correspondents, who wishes us "long months of sweet breezes, fragrant flowers and everything pleasant and beautiful in your island home," will know that her words have come true, and that they are remembered.

Fred wants to say a word this week, so I must leave off.

About time, I think. I want to acknowledge the letters we have received from the prize-winners—at least from four of them. We are both glad to find the books have been so well liked by those they were sent to.

One says:—"Dear Fred and Nellie,—I received your beautiful present yesterday, and I now send you my sincere thanks. I value the book more because, while it is very amusing and nice to read, it is instructive. I did not think when I saw I had only come out third, that I should receive so nice a gift, so I was agreeably surprised."

Number two says:—" Your beautiful gift came to hand quite safe, for which please to accept my best thanks, and feel assured that I shall always prize it for the sake of those who sent it, as much as for its own value. My mind has been so engrossed with reading your splendid gift, that I have thought of little else, or I would have answered sooner."

Number three:—" Many thanks for the book you sent me. It is very nice and well chosen, though I am sure it must be very difficult to choose books for so many persons whom you do not know."

And last, but not least, number four:—" I received that charming present you sent me on Tuesday last. It deserves, what I gratefully tend, unbounded thanks, and the care with which it was selected makes it ever so much more welcome. I hope all your prize boys and girls are as well pleased with their books as I am with mine."

These kind words are very pleasant to us, and I hope we shall travel along together over the same road for a long time. I do hate parting with friends, and though new ones are constantly adding themselves to our list, I hope the old acquaintances of the half-six months will keep with us faithful and true. Although we have accumulated vast stores of puzzles ourselves, which we can scarcely ever find room for, we like those contributed by others best, and always give them preference.

Mr. Mapes (with whom I have made peace) commissions me to thank his friend who writes a sympathetic postscript regarding him this week. He says he is delighted to find he is thought of in a "com-fortable and competent light on the river, if he is depreciated and miscalculated on the lake."

DIAMOND FIELD NOTES.

It has been decided to reorganize the St. Lawrence Club, of Kingston.

This year the old practice of tossing for choice in the first inning will be again introduced in base ball games.

Mr. Geo. Gillespie, late of the Maple Leaf Base Ball Club, Guelph, has gone to reside in British Columbia. He took a bride along.

M. Dinnen, the second baseman of the Tecumsehs, has been released by the Directors from his engagement for the coming season, and will in all probability play with the Pall Rivers.

The Fearnaughts of Brantford have chosen the following officers for 1878:—P. Walsh, President; J. Daly, Vice-President; G. Gowland, Captain; T. Weeks, Secretary; D. Rayner, Treasurer.

The Directors of the 2 ecumsens meet to-night to decide upon a tenth man. In all probability the choice will fall upon George Hall, of last year's Syracuse Stars. He is a good general player.

The Blenheim Base Ball Club has been organized with the following officers:—President, Mr. A. W. Gissing; Capt., Chas. Rutherford; Sec.-Treas., Wm. Galbraith; Ex. Com., A Beaucr, Geo. Foster and A. Baskelo.

The Oddstockings, of Hamilton, have reorganized for the season of 1878. The following are the names of the players:—Childs, p.; Baine, c.; Flynn, 1st b.; O'Neil, 2nd b.; Maledmson, 3rd b.; Hall, s.s.; Hall, Reardon, l.f.; Titer, c.f.; Watson, r.f.

Manager Rae, of the Syracuse Stars, has completed arrangements for the following games in April:—30th, Utica, at Syracuse; 31st, Utica, at Utica; 24th, Hornells, at Syracuse; 27th, Cricketa, at Syracuse; 29th, Auburns, at Syracuse; 30th, Auburns, at Auburn.

The Skipper club, of Toronto, has been reorganized under the following officers:—Captain, Henry Richardson; President, George Nichols; Secretary, R. H. Stewart; Treasurer, Morgan Kelly; Committee, Joseph Kirkpatrick, Geo. Shea (Manager), and Harry Stephens.

The row of seats which were erected on the west side of the Tecumseh Park have been taken down, and placed in a better locality. One half of them have been erected north of the scorers' stand, and the other half south, as an extension of the grand stand.

The Guelph Herald, somewhat chagrined, because there is not sufficient enterprise about its sportive townsmen to keep up a professional nine, tries to get even by circulating the following squib:—"What a goodly thing it is to be a professional ball player, and to belong to the International Champions. The Tecumsehs this season will be required to pay for their uniform, and fifty cents a day each will be exacted from the champions, while they are travelling."

The Young Active Base Ball Club, of Woodstock, met the other evening and elected officers for the ensuing year:—Honorary President, T. H. Parker; President, H. Brown; Vice-President, W. McKay; 2nd Vice-President, John Whitehead; Secretary, H. Whitehead; Treasurer, Joseph Thompson; Field Captain, Ed. O'Neil. The officers, with Geo. Johnston, Alfred Weeks and Alex. McFarlane, to constitute the Board of Directors. The Actives are a lively lot of players.

The Cleveland club promises to be a first-class organization. Among the players who have written to the manager for positions, we observe the following names:—Luff, of the Rochesters; Hall, of the Syracuse Stars; McGinley, of the old Athletics; Mason, of the Live Oaks, of Lynn, Massachusetts; Malone, of the Athletics; William Barnie, formerly of the Buckeyes, last season of the Buffalos; James L. Clinton, of the Eckfords, of New York, Louisvilles and last season of the Stars, of Syracuse, N.Y.; John Coyne, formerly of Elizabeth, (N.J.) Resolutes; S. A. Ely, of last season's Red Caps, of St. Paul's; W. Laird, of Lexington City, of Springfield, O.; W. T. Dichman, of Lawrence, Kan.; Calaghan, of the Buckeyes; J. Cox, of the Athletics, of Mansfield, and McCarty, of the Eries, Pa.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

LUCAN.

So far as your correspondent can learn, the inhabitants have some notion of waking up from their Rip-Van-Winkle snooze, anent the loss of the London, Huron & Bruce Railway connection here. I am led to understand it is in contemplation to employ the services of a competent engineer to survey a line for a switch into the village, and make an estimate of the cost, with a view of making application to the railway authorities to build a branch into the village from some point on the main line north of Brucefield station. I presume their success would entirely depend on the amount of aid they would be willing to grant towards its completion.

Rumor has it that the Reeve of the village is not in perfect accord with all the actions of the town constable, and some parties have even went so far as to talk of requesting him (the Reeve) to resign his position as chief magistrate. I believe the precious document is yet in abeyance, and likely to be so, but should it come to light I much mistake the stamina of the Reeve if he does not give them a suitable reception.

Did you see a description of Argyle street, in the township of East Williams, in the daily Tiger of Tuesday last by their North Middlesex correspondent? He forgot to say "God bless the Duke of Argyle," or perhaps the Duke did not deserve it for furnishing the same only. That Northern Sparks cum is a shallow genius, or the residents of Argyle street very gullible in lead.

The prisoner Donnelly was committed for trial, and conveyed to London on Thursday morning by Constable Everett.

On Thursday afternoon one of the Donnelly boys and Constable Hodgins met upon the street and entered into conversation about an item in the Tiger, to the effect that a cousin of the prisoner Donnelly would be attempted whilst he was lying in the lock-up here. Words grew pretty warm between them, the result of which was that they challenged each other to go out and fight. They then withdrew to one of the back streets and went at it in true pugilistic style. They were surrounded by some one hundred or more spectators, and allowed to pummel each other for a length of time, to the disgrace of the onlookers. One of the spectators conspicuously displayed his rear-ender, and intimated that he would shoot the first man who interfered until either party cried "Hold, enough." It is to be hoped that the authorities will call them to a strict account for this flagrant violation of the peace.

Lucan, March 29, 1878.

WINDSOR

From a District exchange, we learn that Billy Burns, the burglar, is still haunting Windsor. With a keen, watchful eye, a dirk in his boot, a pistol in his sleeve, and with a pair of legs which carry him 100 yards in ten seconds, he has invariably defied any member of the police to arrest him on the street. Burns has committed numerous burglaries in Detroit, being convicted was sent to State Prison for seven years. Being under age he was transferred to the State House of Correction at Ionia, but he managed to scale the walls while the guards were at supper, and, with an hour's start, succeeded in eluding his pursuers. This was about six months ago, and since that time he has spent his time principally in Windsor and adjacent town in Canada.

At Sandwich, last week, Thomas Mass, of Windsor, was arraigned before Judge Leggatt on the charge of stealing a silver watch. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to two years' confinement in the Reformatory. Peter Rolges, indicted for stealing a quantity of lead pipe from the Windsor water-works buildings, was acquitted and discharged. John Timana, a half-a-do quarrelsome Italian, who has become a good character, was indicted before Judge Leggatt, on the charge of stealing $1,140 scrip from the house of W. Welch. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to two years' confinement in the Reformatory.

The United States consul-gen Winnipeg writes to the department of state that there is no activity in Manitoba in relation to railway matters. Canadians and English capitalists have purchased the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific railroad, heretofore held in Amsterdam, and propose to construct the northern extension in Minnesota from the Red Lake river to the Manitoba frontier, a distance of eighty miles, and have it in running order during the coming summer. They also propose to release and complete the Pembina branch of the Canada Pacific railroad to connect with the Minnesota system, and by November last next it is expected the trains will be running from St. Paul to Winnipeg, and to a point twenty miles further north, where the branch line crosses the main line of the Canada Pacific railroad at Selkirk. From this point contracts are in operation for the construction of the main line eastward to the Lake of the Woods, 110 miles, to be completed during 1880. An equal distance westward of Thunder bay, on Lake Superior, is also under contract.

The hands in the C. S. R. workshops are now working over-time.

The Assizes begin on Tuesday next. The calendar (already published in the FREE PRESS) is light.

Solomon Thompson, Jehiel Mariatt, John S. Backus, Geo. Small, James Oliver, and Frank Casey, farmers, were fined $1 each and costs, at the police court on Thursday, for breach of by-law by tying their horses to shade trees on the public streets.

TILSONBURG.

Tilsonburg is one of the most flourishing towns in Ontario; with its large number of water privileges, and the cheapness of fuel, makes it a very desirable location for either water or steam power. The railway facilities make it second to no other town on the Province, the two through lines from east to west, viz., Canada Southern Railroad and Air Line Railroads, also the Brantford, Simcoe and the G. W. R., giving direct communication with Hamilton and Toronto. Sites very desirable for manufacturing lie along the line of Brantford R. R., with easy access to every railway station in town and owing to the town being situated in the midst of a very agricultural district, and with the Holly system of Waterworks driven and supplied by one of the finest streams of water in the county, making it by far the most desirable situation for any branch of industry. Persons seeking investment should visit Tilsonburg early.—Cor.

Ex-Mayor Mathieson and Mr. Josiah Murphy purpose leaving for the Paris Exhibition in May.

The Advocate has entered on its nineteenth yearly volume. It is a spicy, newsy sheet, and one of our best weekly exchanges.

Mr. F. F. Pole returned from Kingston on Tuesday evening. He was sentenced to imprisonment for three years, but his good behaviour and influence of friends got him his liberty fourteen months before the expiration of his term.

Mr. Kemp, manager of the Merchants' Bank in this place, leaves in a few days for another field of labor. He is to be succeeded by a Mr. Hebden, of Windsor. Mr. E. H. Nimmo, clerk, was removed yesterday to Windsor, and another young man has taken his place here.

ST. MARY'S.

Our correspondent, writing on the 29th, says:—Patullo, the Reform organizer of the Province, was in St. Mary's a few nights ago for the purpose of patching up Trow's double-leading concerning the removal of the Post Office from its old site some time ago. Mr. Patullo was told emphatically by every man at the meeting convened that if the P. O. is not returned to its old position before the next election takes place, Mr. Trow's chance of reelection for the South Riding is very slim. It is evident that the Reformers of the town are very determined on this point, as a petition was circulated some time ago, and signed by two hundred and fifty Reformelectors of the town, the petition setting forth that if certain conditions concerning the P. O. are not complied with, that Mr. Trow or any other Reform aspirant will neither receive the vote nor influence, at the next general elections, of said petitioners. It is a well known fact that the signers are all Clear Grits, as none other would be allowed to sign it. This is rather significant, as this is the same party who hoisted Mr. Trow some time ago in this said county for boasting that he had the county in his breeches' pocket.

STRATFORD.

The following officers of Tecumseh Chapter, R. A. M., were installed on Tuesday evening by E. Comp. John Gibson, Grand Superintendent, assisted by E. Comp. James Lockie, of Waterloo, and E. Comp. Rev. W. T. Wilkins:—E. Comp. Thos. Miller, Z.; E. Comp., G. J. Waugh, H.; E. Comp., A. McLenhan, J.; E. Comp., W. G. Mowat, S. Baker, S. E.; E. Comp., Treas., E. N.; E. Comp., Jno. Gibson, Sec.; E. The Committee Board of School Trustees met this week, and opened the tenders for the new High School. The lowest for the entire work was that of F. Magan, of this town, $30,300. As the original estimate was $30,000 and the people are not considered able to bear such a burden, the committee will likely recommend that all the tenders be rejected.

Last week, a young man came into the clothing store of Mr. D. W. Cumming, Market Square, Stratford, and representing himself as a son of Mr. Moses Poole, Mornington, picked out a suit of clothes, for which he promised to settle as soon as he and his father were paid for a quantity of ties which they were getting out. It subsequently turned out that the young man was Wm. Bloxom, lately working on the railway at Brunner, at which place he was arrested wearing the clothes he had obtained by false pretences. He was sent to Stratford jail to answer.

Hugh McCue has been committed to the County jail on a charge of stealing $85 from the pocket of Mr. Richard Graham hotel keeper, Elma Centre.

Woodstock has remitted $250.30, and Ingersoll $231.95, to aid in the erection of a French Methodist Church in Montreal.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Challen, leader of the Baptist Church choir for some time past, was presented with a valuable timepiece and a purse of money by the congregation. The time-piece was a very fine one, worth $85.

The Rev. Mr. McKay, Baltimore, Ont., has accepted the call of Chalmers Church in this town. Great inducements were offered the reverend gentleman to remain in Baltimore, where he is highly esteemed.

Mr. J. W. Midgely, a native of this town, and a former employe in the Times office, is highly spoken of as the Secretary of the New South-western Rate Combination, with headquarters at Chicago.

Some sneak thief, at Norwich, lately entered Mark Adams' tannery and stole six sides of prime French calf skin leather, valued at about $30.

Mr. John McLeod, one of the oldest settlers in the County of Oxford, died on Wednesday morning at the advanced age of 95 years. He settled on the 9th line of Zorra some fifty years ago, and lived there till the time of his death.

Sixteen horses were shipped from Woodstock on Tuesday last for farm duty in Dacotah. Nine of them belonged to Mr. Honeyman, of Embro, who has a farm of 1,140 acres in that territory, which is under the supervision of his son.

Of late the proprietor of the general store at Eastwood has been missing money from his till, but his curiosity was not aroused to any great extent until a few days ago, when a crisp new two dollar bill was missing. He then began to investigate the matter, and after having torn the counter to pieces and turned things up side down generally, his labors were crowned with success, and the impression that a theft had been committed was raised from his mind by finding the nest of a mouse neatly built with the missing money, which had been torn in pieces to suit the builder's taste.

There are a number of rowdies in the neighborhood of Carlisle. A few nights ago a number of bad boys banded themselves in the dence of Mr. Gilbert Calhoun with bricks and stones. Some ten or twelve families, squatters on the Canada Company's lands, have been ordered to leave. Many of them are old residents, having been on the land from eight to twelve years, and hadgoods, farms, barns, orchards, &c., and have to leave all, the land being held at so high a price as to preclude the possibility of purchasing.

The Gazette reports that on Saturday evening as Mrs. James Taylor was starting to draw a pail of water from the well in the rear of residence to the street, she missed her footing, in some manner, and fell from the top to the bottom of the stairs—injuring her face very badly, and probably disfiguring her for life. It is not supposed that she has suffered internal injuries.

The death of "English Tom" Elliott, by being struck by a train while he was walking on the railway track west of Parkhill station, will be fresh in the minds of our readers. The deceased left a widow and several children. The widow seems to have been a very desirable helpmate, for we find her married again in four weeks after the death of "poor Tom." Her present "lord" is a Mr. Metcalf, and the "boys" of the Town Line gave the couple a vigorous charivari on Tuesday evening last.

LOCAL NOTICE.

Some of the local testimonials of the efficacy and rapid action of the Magneticon appliances in another column.

A LADIES' WINDOW.—Messrs. A. B. Powell & Co., 124 Dundas street, show to-day one of the finest stocks of kid gloves ever brought to London. The firm import them direct, and can, therefore, give their patrons the newest style at every shade of color. In fact, these gloves are causing quite a sensation among the ladies, who admire and purchase them in large numbers.

GRAND CONCERT.—The concert announced to be held in the Mechanics' Hall on Tuesday evening next, for the benefit of the Women's Christian Association, promises to be an entertaining character. Mrs. Raymond will have supervision of the vocalists, who comprise the leading amateurs. The association expect their numerous friends in London will aid them in making the concert a grand success, financially.

TO THE WESTERN TRADE.—The great emporium in Western Ontario for fancy and usual articles is undoubtedly Mr. W. Bryce's store, No. 166 Dundas street, in this city. The energetic proprietor, ever alert to business, announces that his premises will be open next week, on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th of April, from 7 a. m. to 10 p. m., for the convenience of patrons and dealers generally in his line of trade. His spring arrivals comprise the largest and most varied stock, ever before collected together in London, and will be found exclusive to another column. Those at a distance who intend embracing the opportunity so generously placed within their reach by the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways on that occasion, should not fail to visit this house among other wholesale establishments. Here will be found school books, stationery of every variety, works of art, and numerous appliances in great profusion. Mr. Bryce and his assistants will, as usual, give every attention to customers, and afford merchants and others every opportunity of making their trip a flying visit of profit not unmixed with pleasure. Bryce's Emporium is near the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets.

GRAND'S GREAT HORSE SALE.—That the great spring sale of horses at the Crystal Palace Corner will be a pronounced success there can no longer be any room for doubt. Enquiries are coming in from farmers in nearly every section of Western Ontario, while buyers from all the great horse markets, on the, as well as the other side of the Atlantic, are sending to the Repository in Toronto, for particulars as to those sales. Mr. Grand wishes one very serious misapprehension corrected, and that is concerning commission on horses not actually sold. It has already been stated distinctly in the bills that no commission will be charged on horses not actually sold, but only on the fees specified in the bills and the advertised rates for keeping. No man will be forced to "bid in" his horse to prevent his being sacrificed and no "bidding in" will be permitted, but every vendor who chooses to do so can put a reserve on his horse at this time he enters him for sale, and unless that figure be reached, the horse will be returned to the owner unsold.

McCALL BROS'. HANDSOME SEED CATALOGUE.—One of the finest and most elaborate seed catalogues published in the Dominion is yearly issued by Messrs. McCall, of this city. We have before us a copy for 1878, which surpasses any of their previous editions, and, in fact, is incomparably ahead of any Canadian catalogue we have yet seen. It is printed on fine tone-tinted paper made especially for the purpose, is handsomely illustrated with numerous cuts of flowers and vegetables, and contains nearly one hundred pages, which are replete with information relative to the various branches of Horticulture and Agriculture. The list of varieties offered is a most complete one, containing, however, only those which are adapted to the climate. The engravings which provides for the issue of such a catalogue, and which furnishes it free to every person requiring seeds, is likely to have a future abounding in significance. Any further comparisons on our part are unnecessary; meanwhile, we suggest that our readers who grow vegetables or flowers, or who appreciate a handsome catalogue, send to send at once for a copy. It will speak for itself, language all we have said, and tell far more than we have hinted at. A word relative to the Seed Annual of the wholesale trade carried on by this firm. Their seeds have in the short space of four years gained such a national reputation that there is hardly a town or village in Western Canada of any importance where a supply of their seeds cannot be found. The position attained, however, and the results accomplished have been secured only by energy, industry, and square dealing. The firm have unrivalled facilities for their facilities for supplying the trade and the public demand, in their new premises on the Market Square. All orders are filled with promptness and dispatch. The magnitude and extent of their business, thus far, this season, bids fair to eclipse that of any preceding year, which speaks well for the house, when the general depression in business is taken into consideration. We may state that it is not necessary for us to recommend the firm as being thoroughly reliable, or that their seeds may be depended on as the best commentary on the quality of their stock is the immense success of their business.

THE ODDFELLOWS' ENTERTAINMENT.—The last of the series of parlor entertainments given under the auspices of the Independent Order of Oddfellows of this city, was held in the beautiful Lodge Room last night, and proved quite as entertaining and successful as either of the seven which preceded it. The Hall was crowded by an appreciative audience, who seemed to be highly pleased with the manner in which the various ladies and gentlemen rendered the parts allotted them by the Committee. Bro. W. F. Howell occupied the chair on the occasion, and the following ladies and gentlemen took part in the exercises:—Misses Strong, Hodgins, Young, James, O'Neil, McLeod, Rogers, Perrault and Mrs. Lean, and Messrs. F. and L. Chadwick, G. Sanderson, Foord, Young, Taylor, Fletcher, Miller, Williams, Owen, Gahin, Bloom, Yeoh, Bowes, Marvill and Lean. The entertainment closed with the National Anthem. The evidence was of an unusually disgusting description. A portrait of a somewhat local character, the girl's father living in this city. They swore that defendant was not only the father of her child, but that he first tried, to get her to destroy her offspring, and that he even wished her to come to the hospital here, under an assumed name. Failing this, he attempted to get her to lay the paternity to an innocent man. To get her to fly to this city he sent her $10; but she refused to relieve him of his responsibility, and her father brought the action. A verdict for $200 was given.

AT THE ASYLUM.—An entertainment was given for the benefit of the inmates of the Asylum last evening by the members of the Red Ribbon Club, of this city. It was announced that it was decided to have Robert Donnelly tried at the present Assize for feloniously shooting at Constable S. L. Everett, of Lucan.

Mr. Glass, Q.C., who appeared for prisoner, said he would be ready for trial to-morrow (Saturday). As the man had no means, Mr. Hutchinson, who appeared for the Crown Counsel, had agreed that the Crown would pay the expense of subpœnaing witnesses for the defence. He had eight witnesses, absolutely necessary, and four as to character.

PRESENTMENT:—

"The Grand Jurors of our Sovereign Lady the Queen for the County of Middlesex, upon their oath, present—

That the inquiries coming upon the comparatively small number of cases which have been brought before us, although we regret to say some of them are of a very serious nature.

That the gaol, and carefully inspected the cells and other apartments, and found them very clean and comfortable, and were gratified to find the repairs and alterations in the premises, required by the Inspector of Prisons, nearly completed. When completed, we presume, they will compare favorably with similar institutions in the country. We consider it is all that the necessity of the case requires. We found 93 males and 6 female prisoners confined in the jail—all of whom, without a single exception, gave expressing, with but little sooth of his "big well," McCarthy has unbounded satisfaction as to the treatment they receive at the hands of the officials, both in regard to their food and care. Some of them stated that they never expected to be so well conducted quarters in jail. We are gratified to find a yard has been made, in which hard labor prisoners can be employed with safety, and which we think is essential to every large like between Petrolia and this city. fortunate creatures, insane persons, are confined in the jail. We understand that ordinary acceptation of the words, the Insane Asylum, and would recommend that means should be taken to have the unfortunates as soon as possible, as we do not consider the jail a fit place for such persons.

We also visited the Asylum, and consider the institution in a high state of efficiency. There are a large number of patients confined, and the able Superintendent seems to have them under perfect control. Everything about the establishment appears to be kept in a very clean, neat, and tidy manner, and we take much pleasure in expressing our thanks to Dr. Rooke, the Superintendent, and his assistant, for their kind and gentlemanly attention in showing us through the building and grounds.

We are also pleased to state that a new Court House is in course of erection, from an inspection of the plans, we are confident will not only be suitable for the purposes but also creditable to this section of the country.

We would also express our thanks to your Lordship for the very able address delivered to us at the opening of the Court, so clearly defining the law respecting the different cases coming before us, which enabled us to arrive more speedily at a decision than we otherwise could have done.

(Signed) "JOHN ELLIOT, Foreman, &c."

His Lordship, in discharging the Grand Jury from further attendance, said he did not think the presentment they had handed in required any special observations from him. He was glad, however, as one who had a good deal to do in Court Houses, that a new and improved building was in course of construction. He trusted that those having charge of it would see that provision was made for ventilation is as necessary as heating. It is perhaps a rather difficult matter to deal with. Most persons, especially those others often suffer from defective ventilation, and while these accommodations for jail-birds were liable to much injury by such defects, yet people used to life in the open air at the most liable to have their health seriously impaired. He himself had suffered severely in several court houses in this Province from such defects. He trusted also that there would be no undue expense in the erection of the new Court House. This is a rapidly growing neighborhood, and the requirements will be on the increase. The present Court House had existed for about 50 years, and the requirements of the county had long outgrown it. The new building, therefore, should be put up with a view to future wants, and not merely to meet present necessities. If these matters are properly attended to they would will result to the country; if not, they will only entail further expenses.

The Grand Jury were then discharged, and the court adjourned till to-morrow (Saturday), when the Donnelly case—the only one remaining on the docket—will be disposed of.

Police Court Enlivened.

FRIDAY—L. LAURENCE, Esq., P. M., Presiding.

John Lamont, the suspicious-looking individual who was suspected of burglarizing a house on Grey street, was sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment in the gaol on the 30th inst as a vagrant.

James Baker and Daniel Kelly, the two young men who were fined $21 for damaging the furniture of Mr. John F. Doyle some weeks ago, and who in default of payment had to pay the same, gave themselves up this morning and went to gaol. It is said they intend appealing against the decision of the P. M. in this matter.

Owen Hammond was charged with being disorderly in a house on East William street. He was fined $5, against's fees, to refrain in future from bothering the ladies.

KEEPING TEMPTING VISIT.—Sir Knights E. W. Porter, General Purchasing Agent of the Canada Southern Railway; Robert Wade, Chief Clerk of the same; James Curtis, Caterer, and J. H. Thompson, merchant, all of St. Thomas, visited Hiram Council Cour de Lion Preceptory, of this city, last night, and exemplified the working of the Red Cross of Babylon Degree. Among the Sir Knights present were W. Hayden, of Exeter, W. Mathieson, of London, E. W. Penwarden, of Aylmer, D. B. Burch, of Lambeth, and a large representation of the members of the Lodge from the city. The degree mentioned was conferred on quite a number of Sir Knights, and all present and the guests of the Preceptory during their sojourn here, and spent a pleasant time in a convivial manner at the Tecumseh House after the close of the Lodge.

"THE BLUE ROBARD OF THE TOR."—Many of our readers will be glad to hear that the sixth annual London Derby Sweepstake has met with warm support already. This year it is proposed to add a ball to the list of prizes, but increase their number by having the horses' names in triplicate, and $1,000 divided thus:—Three first horses' or winners, $100 each; three second horses, $60 each; three third horses $40 each; leaving to be divided among starters (in triplicate) not placed, $600. The drawing will take place on the evening of May 29th, at the "Albion" Restaurant.

BARNS BURNED.—On Tuesday last, Mr. Wm. Bennett, of Egremont Road, Adelaide, lost three barns by fire. About 1 o'clock the straw stack was discovered to be on fire, supposed to have caught from a spark from the chimney. In a short time the flames communicated with the barns which were soon a mass of ruins. Part of the grain was saved. The loss in buildings, hay, &c., was about $2,000. Insurance, $1,100.

READY, AYE READY.—That is the motto of the members of the London Field Battery, and acting upon the expression given, Major Peters, commanding, yesterday afternoon mailed the offer of the battery for horse or foreign service to the Adjutant-General of this district. It will in due course be forwarded to the military authorities at Ottawa. Who's afraid?

The Petroleum Trade.

NEW COMBINATION IN LONDON EAST

Latest Developments at Petrolea—Revival of the London Pipe Line Question.

A partnership has just been formed in London East by a number of leading oil refiners for the purpose of vigorously prosecuting the oil trade. The firms comprised in the arrangement are—Messrs. S. A. Adams & Co., representing the Empress Oil Works; A. M. Ross & John Wolfe, Dominion Oil Works; Wm. English & Moses Wilson, Globe Oil Works; Col. John Walker & W. D. Cooper, Beaver Oil Works. The Company will be known as the "Mutual Oil Refining Company, of London," with Col. Walker as President, and Mr. J. H. Flock, Solicitor. We understand that each firm will put in the concern about $10,000 cash.

There is no alteration in the price of either crude or refined, the farmer still holding at $2.08 per barrel. The Petrolea Advertiser, speaking of the prospects there, looks hopefully on the situation. It says:—"In the North West a few wells are being put down, and the prospects of a number more following. Bradley and Gillespie are putting down one, and are going to put down another. J. & W. Lawson have got a five-barrel well in their last venture. Lamont and Lacey are putting down one; Callanan is drilling one, and has a "big show," and is talking of putting down a more. A. S. VanAlstine has one drilling, and is, we believe, to put down two more, and VanAlstine & Bro. are putting up a rig on the property they recently bought from Snyder. Keeys are putting up a rig on the Weister half-acre, and one rig is being taken down and another put up in connection with the "Kerby" wells; John Walker expects to commence drilling on his property, near the "Empire" House, about the middle of next week; John Taylor has commenced drilling in his lot near the "Noble" wells. The London Co. are drilling near the north end of their territory, and are fixing up some of the old holes that were turned out, but the Co. have not struck a headway that nothing was saved but a waggon and a reaper. He lost 400 bushels of spring wheat, 200 bushels of oats and peas, two horses and all other implements. He had $1,400 insurance in the Agricultural Mutual, London; loss $2,000. Cause of fire unknown.

A FAST YOUTH OVERHAULED.

For Forging his Father's Name to a $400 Cheque in this City.

Some weeks since a young man named Douglas Mills, said to be the son of a hotelkeeper in the village of Aylmer, found that place far too small for him, and concluded to "go West," and grow up with the country. Before doing so, however, he visited this city, and stopped long enough here to forge his father's name to a cheque for $400. He then pursued the even tenor of his way, and finally reached the goal of forgers—Chicago, where for some time past he has been alternating between the Tremont House and Commercial Hotel. He was at the latter place, on the strength of a telegram received from his father-in-law, Police, that he was arrested on Thursday evening. On his person were found $262 in bills, and a rather flashy wardrobe. While in Chicago he sailed under the names of J. B. Cook, but that was merely fictitious. Two of his friends have gone West for the purpose of bringing him back. It is stated that he "fit out" with the cash of several people.

FIRE IN MOSSES TOWNSHIP.—On Saturday last, Mr. Thomas, of Lot 28, con. 2, Morris, noticed his barn on fire, and immediately gave the alarm. The neighbors turned out, but the fire had gained such headway that nothing was saved but a waggon and a reaper. He lost 400 bushels of spring wheat, 200 bushels of oats and peas, two horses and all other implements. He had $1,400 insurance in the Agricultural Mutual, London; loss $2,000. Cause of fire unknown.

Paris, March 31.—A special to the Patrie from Vienna says a report is current there that the immediate mobilization of 400,000 men on the Bosnian frontier has been ordered.

The Temps' Vienna dispatch reports, in consequence of a demonstration in the Hungarian Senate on Saturday, when an allusion to an understanding with England was received with cheers, Chief of the Hungarian Ministry, has been summoned to Vienna.

London, March 31.—The Paris papers publish a telegram from Athens, stating the rumor is current that England has asked permission to encamp an expeditionary corps on Greek territory.

Constantinople, March 31.—The Turks have reoccupied Bujukdere. The evacuation of the Quadrilateral by the Turks has been deferred for the present. The Grand Duke Nicholas presided over a grand military council at San Stefano. He will visit the Sultan again shortly.

London, April 1.—The Times' correspondent at Bucharest says:—In consequence of Austria's refusal to come to an arrangement with Russia, it is believed Prince Gortschakoff has already informed Lord Loftus that Russia is ready to yield to England's demand in regard to the Congress.

A special, dated Constantinople, on Friday, states that if the English fleet is not withdrawn, the Turkish fleet will leave Constantinople with the approval of the Sultan.

The same correspondent understands that Mr. Layard, in accordance with instructions from Lord Beaconsfield, has asked the Porte what its attitude will be in the event of an Anglo-Russian war. Safvet Pasha replied that he was personally inclined to neutrality, but he would submit the matter to the council.

A correspondent at Constantinople, telegraphing Sunday, says:—I hear on very good authority that the Russians will occupy Bujukdere on Monday. The English have landed a large quantity of war material on the Island of Tenedos.

The report from Berlin that Russia is ready to yield to England's demand, should be received with reserve, as both the Agence Russe and Journal de St. Petersburg yesterday opposed further concessions on the part of Russia. Moreover the correspondent of the Times at St. Petersburg telegraphs on Sunday, as follows:—"War is now regarded as almost inevitable. The vague hope that a diplomatic formula might be found for a renewal of negotiations has been destroyed by Lord Beaconsfield's declaration that the question at issue is not a matter of form, but one of essential reality.

A Paris' special says that a Belgrade telegram states that Servia will join Russia in the event of an Anglo-Russian war.

A Bucharest correspondent reports English merchant vessels at Galatz have been ordered by their owners to sail immediately, even without cargo. Gen. Zimmerman's corps has been ordered to Moldavia immediately.

A Belgrade special says Gen. Markovitz, Commander of Donajevatz Brigade, has been arrested for high treason. Many other arrests are probable.

London, April 1.—A Berlin special states that Russia has informed Austria that she would observe friendly neutrality if Austria seized the Western Provinces of Turkey. Austria is not likely to accept the offer.

The Daily Telegraph positively asserts that the Marquis of Salisbury will succeed Lord Derby as Secretary of Foreign Affairs.

London, April 1.—A Vienna dispatch says Count Andrassy is making fresh efforts to bring about a meeting of the Congress and thinks Russia will eventually yield to England's demands. Count Andrassy has informed Gen. Ignatieff that the whole tendency of the treaty was in opposition to the interests of Europe, and that no lasting peace could be concluded without the sanction of all the powers. Gen. Ignatieff rejoined that Russia had altogether abandoned the idea of Congress in consequence of the difficulties raised by England. He urged Count Andrassy to state Austria's demands, but the Count declined, as he still hoped for a Congress, but declared if he had to consider the treaty solely from an Austrian point of view, he would demand far greater concessions than if he had to consider it in relation to the general interests of Europe. Gen. Ignatieff also failed to convince the Emperor.

A correspondent says he has the foregoing on the highest official authority. He adds, Germany has approved the refusal of Prince Charles of Roumania to surrender Bessarabia unless invited to do so by the Powers.

A St. Petersburg special says that despite the general excitement, a few men in high positions advocate a final attempt at conciliation by the simultaneous withdrawal of the British fleet and the Russian army from the neighborhood of Constantinople.

SATURDAY'S DESPATCHES.

London, March 30.—A section of the Liberals will oppose the Queen's message voting out the reserves.

It is probable that the British fleet will shortly enter the Bosphorus.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—The Russian Government has given the reserves on a war footing. It is thought that some much more serious motive underlies his action. One explanation was offered to the effect that the last reply of Prince Gortschakoff to Lord Derby's note determined the Cabinet at once to issue an ultimatum to Russia, and which means war. The correspondent is assured by war office authority that hostilities will occur within thirty days, and that orders were yesterday issued for embarking the advance of the expeditionary corps. The same authority asserts that an understanding exists with the Turks, who will hold the neck of the peninsula of Gallipoli until that point can be reached by the British troops. These and similar alarming statements and rumors were in circulation, and kept the town at fever heat. The advocates of war everywhere were jubilant, and believed that their hopes were about to be fulfilled. Information received here last night from Liverpool to the effect that government agents were there negotiating for the use of vessels owned by the larger steamship companies, obviously for the purpose of employing them in the transport service.

The bill to be laid before Parliament, it is thought, will include the first and second regular reserves and the first militia reserves. In case no large a call be made, it will bring out only seventy thousand men, and, owing to the character of the armaments, mobilization will require some months to get them into condition for even preliminary service. This delay will not prevent war at once, if a war be intended, because, as has been announced, the policy of England will be to blockade Russian ports, and only carry on, at first, limited land operations. The London papers generally agree that war is now almost certain. They say that the resignation of Lord Derby removes the last check on Beaconsfield, whose determination to have war with Russia, if possible, has long been well understood. The faint hope is expressed in some quarters that the measure of calling out the reserves is only one of precaution and not necessarily one of war; but behind all these hopes are Beaconsfield's well-known views, whose existence renders a conflict probable, and perhaps only a question of time. The Times goes to the extent of saying that the movement is justified by the character of the relations between Russia and England. Although it does not regard the act as pledging the country to forcible interposition, it thinks it is the most momentous step that has been taken by the Government, and that Russia has taken a step from which, unless she withdraws, it will be necessary for Great Britain to enforce her rights.

The war organs yesterday treated the situation as if war had already begun, and were boastful what England could do single-handed with Russia.

An army official said:—"We can strike Russia on all sides and upon any side. We can destroy her commerce, blockade her ports, spread terror along her maritime frontiers, and hold the threat of our ex ecution over every considerable town from Cronstadt to Odessa; but we can do far more, although the destruction of her trade would alone be a terrible evil to Russia. We could force her to Chold in undiminished strength as long as we choose, every position to which she has penetrated, at the risk, in case she retired from any one, of seeing us occupy the abandoned post and make it the basis for fresh operations. The expenditure of much less than a half-million of money would set Central Asia in such a flame as has not yet been kindled around the progress of Muscovite conquests. We need not hurry ourselves. We would only have to gradually increase our preparations, and having once securely put our fleets in a condition to command the sea, we could abide our opportunity for striking a crushing blow." On the other hand, thinking men seriously question the ability of England to wage a successful contest alone against Russia. This is certain that unless something not now expected occurs, Russia will overrun Turkey and would take no part in the quarrel. Those who take a despondent view think Turkey cannot be relied on as an English ally, and that Austria will not take sides with England. This class apprehends a conflict, and fears the worst. The pronounced peace element is in a condition of the greatest anxiety. The correspondent was assured by a radical member of Parliament that calling out the reserves is only one of Beaconsfield's empty demonstrations, designed to give eclat and reputation of a spirited foreign policy to the Government, and not intended for anything serious. He added that the danger of the situation lies in the view Russia may take of the movement, and the increase in the intensity of the bad feeling already in existance at St. Petersburg. What is for mere show is eminently liable to result in conflict.

The moderate conservatives and peace party severely censure Derby for resigning at this juncture, after having indorsed all the measures of the cabinet to the present time. It is thought that so small a matter as mobilizing the reserves could not affect him after he had indorsed sending the fleet to the Dardanelles, and asking for the vote of £6,000,000. Hence it is everywhere believed that his resignation was influenced by some more momentous cause, and which, it is thought, can be nothing less than the determination of the government to engage in actual hostilities. That the situation was regarded as serious is shown by the panic in stocks, and the tremendous excitement which prevailed in London, and which last evening grew into a furore upon the circulation of a report that the government had declared war, and which almost everywhere found acceptance. That the government are about to take a critical step is believed to be certain. The embarkation of the first army corps is being prepared for, and the advance may be ready to leave by Monday. Important orders were yesterday sent to Malta, which are asserted to be for a portion of the British fleet to cover the movement of transports with troops on Gallipoli.

A telegram from St. Petersburg says the news of Derby's resignation was received with unbounded satisfaction by the war party, who now regard hostilities as unavoidable. The correspondent adds that the Russian war office is on the alert, and it is quite possible that the Russian forces on the straits may not wait England's motions, but may take the initiative. The correspondent quoted above, says that Russia is amply ready for the emergency, and intimates that in case of hostilities, the English forces may expect surprises at various points before securing an entrance to the Black sea.

THE PORTE PETULANTLY INFORMED.

Advices from Pera assert that the reception of the news of England's latest move has caused no little excitement in official circles that it is impossible not to conclude that it was well-known there in advance of its publication in London. This fact points to an understanding between England and Turkey, although doubt is cast upon an alliance by the extremely cordial character of the present relations of the Sultan with the Grand Duke. A summary of the intelligence from the continental capitals is to the effect that England and Russia have gone too far to recede, and that hostilities or else a prolonged armed wait must result. Except a few French expressions of opinion, the continental tone is generally deprecatory of England's last move.

From Another Correspondent.

London, March 30.—England's blood is up, and unless Russia humiliates herself to an unheard of degree, nothing can avert war. I have shown in these dispatches that war was merely a question of time, though the prevalent impression hitherto has been that England intended delaying decisive action for several months, in the hope of exhausting Russia's finances in the meantime, but the failure of the negotiations for a Congress, owing to the unexpected firmness of Russia, has precipitated warlike movements on England's part. Orders have been sent to the British Admiral commanding the Mediterranean fleet in the Sea of Marmora to patrol the Dardanelles and Bosphorus with or without Turkish consent, and in case such pressure, in unison with the British Minister at Constantinople, as will force the Porte to resist the demands and encroachments of the Russian Grand Duke. Should Turkey acquiesce, it is hoped to be able to keep the Russians away from both the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus until English troops can arrive from Malta and England. All arrangements for embarking 30,000 men at Gibraltar, Portsmouth, and Plymouth have been completed, and within fifteen days they can be disembarked at Gallipoli. There are also 12,000 men at Malta ready for active service, and the landing the men who can be spared from the fleet. I have very high authority for saying that England will act exactly as if war were certain within the coming month, without regard to Russia's action. Then if Russia, by any possibility, should back down, war will be averted, but it is not at all most probable. Russia replies to England's menaces by equally vigorous measures, it may be expected that two weeks will hardly elapse ere the first hostile guns are fired. As for Turkey, her rights or wishes will be absolutely unheeded by the English. She will be gladly accepted as an ally, but she will have no liberty of action, and, whether she sides with England or Russia, her fate will be equally certain.

It is probable that Germany will induce Austria to take a large slice of Turkey in return for remaining neutral as regards England and Russia, and, in that event, there is less reason to fear a general European war than if Austria should become involved. That war is certain is a foregone conclusion here among all classes. It is useless to recapitulate all the warlike preparations in progress, but it may give some idea of their magnitude to know that there are eighteen powerful ironclads preparing for sea in the English dockyards, each of which will be ready for service in April. Several private steamers have been purchased for troopships during the last two days, and they are now ordered to be ready for sea in ten days. As an evidence of the popular feeling as to the probability of war, the price of fresh meat has risen two pence per pound since yesterday morning, and other necessaries of life have also risen in price. This is doubtless partly due to the terrible storm which swept over England yesterday, straining immense damage to the crops.

The outlook here is regarded as of the gloomiest description, but there is no doubt that a majority of the nation are anxious for war.

THE POSITION REVIEWED.

Critical Observations of London Writers.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, March 30.—A correspondent has the following from an official source:—The resignation of Lord Derby as Minister of Foreign Affairs has created great alarm, because he is known to be opposed to extreme measures. His action was forced by the determination of the Cabinet to increase the magnitude of the warlike preparations.

The present situation does not justify an alarming view of the immediate future. There is no hope that Russia may yield the point now in dispute, but even if she should, and the Congress should meet, there is no prospect that the deliberations would result to an agreement.

ENGLAND IS EQUALLY FIRM

and under no circumstances will yield the point at issue and so long the subject of diplomatic correspondence. England will not agree to the occupation of Bulgaria by Russian troops, as provided by the San Stefano treaty, or the retrocession of Bessarabia, or the amount of territory demanded by Russia in Asia Minor.

War is not imminent unless hostilities are precipitated by some accident, or other unforeseen contingency. In case of war, England will be supported actively by Roumania and Turkey. Germany will be neutral, and Austria will occupy a position of armed neutrality, believing that she can secure greater gains than by hostilities against Russia. The result will be a Hungarian revolt and the disruption of the Austro-Hungarian government. England has one hundred thousand regular troops all ready to take the field, and is about to organize a second corps. She relies upon two hundred and fifty thousand volunteers the moment war is declared. England is entirely willing to occupy a condition of armed preparation. The fleet has to remain somewhere, and it may as well be in the Sea of Marmora as elsewhere. She is willing to keep the army on a war footing for a year or two, even without fighting, for the sake of discipline and general efficiency. The resignation of Lord Derby was not wholly unexpected, having been a constant matter of rumor for several weeks. Nevertheless, the announcement created great excitement, and was the prevailing topic of discussion. Excited crowds gathered in great numbers, and the view prevailed that war was imminent. The Earl of Beaconsfield's declaration as to the cause of the resignation does not carry great weight, it being generally concluded that Lord Derby would not resign simply because it had been determined to ask Parliament to place the reserves on a war footing. It is thought that some much more serious motive underlies his action. One explanation was offered to the effect that the last reply of Prince Gortschakoff to Lord Derby's note determined the Cabinet at once to issue an ultimatum to Russia, and which means war. THE PAPAL ALLOCUTION.

Relations of the Pope and the Cardinals.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, March 30.—A Rome correspondent telegraphs that the Pope's allocution, delivered at the Consistory on Thursday, gives the Italians general satisfaction. The Pope's speech in the Consistory is very mild. His Holiness expressed no intention to struggle for the recovery of his temporalities. The main scope of the allocution is laid on the relations which it is intended should exist between the Pope and Catholics. The Sacred College typifies the Council of Seventy called by Moses to be his assistants and advisers in the government of the people of Israel. He wishes the cardinals to be his assistanders and fellow-laborers, and lest it should be thought that merely unmeaning words fell from his lips, he reminds them the reliance he puts on their wise counsel, trusting and begging it may never fail him. It was the clearest wish of the Council of Trent that the administration of the Universal Church should rest on a council of Cardinals. This, says the correspondent, is a clear hint of a return to the old constitution of the Church, and reference to the Council of Trent seems plainly intended as a reproach of the act of the Vatican Council which, by declaring Pius IX. infallible, entitled him to dispense with the advice of either the College or Council. To the Vatican Synod itself, to the proclamation of the dogma of infallibility or that of the Immaculate Conception, and all the acts of Pius IX., except the recent sanctioned by the Church and must stand, but Pope Leo seems to think the least said about them will be the soonest mended. By his choice of Cardinal Di Pietro, one of the youngest and decidedly the most liberal of the Cardinals, as Camerlengo, the Pope confirms the hope of those conciliatory views which were always thought

THE LAST DESERTER.

The Reform journals are cooling down and trying to reconcile themselves to the inevitable—the second run of the Paris Star. The leader in this crusade seems to think that the Liberal party are better off without the aid of the Star, and would have the world assume that its support is of little consequence, whether thrown on the one side or the other. This bad temper reveals more than the plainest words could do, and proves, if proof were wanting, that the desertion of this old and influential journal from the Grit party is both a serious blow and an undeniable sign of the public feeling in Ontario. It is perhaps the latter more than even the former that has aroused the ire and the chagrin of those that write in such a spirit of bitterness against the controllers of the Star. No one, not even the head of a government, possesses the same facilities for feeling the public pulse, and reading aright the index of the barometer which points out the temperature of the people, as does an able editor of a popular and widely-circulated journal. The management of the Star has been in this position, and no doubt the sentiments of a large majority of the electors will be found in accord with the views of the editor, the convictions of both will be found similar, and effected by the same means. The fury shown by the Ministerial press may therefore be safely attributed to the fact that the defection of the Star will be taken throughout the country as affording positive proof that its principles of opposition to the Government, are now condemnation of their policy and jobbing are understood in by its readers and the people generally. One may account for the villanous abuse heaped upon the editor of the Star on such grounds as those, and on no other.

To talk of dishonest motives having actuated the Star in the course it has taken, sounds strange coming from any organ of the Ministerial party. Selfish, sordid, dishonest motives might well be deemed necessary to keep an influential journal in line, but honest and patriotic motives could have no effect but one, and this would result in such a course as we have lately seen taken by the Star. The brief statement it makes of its course for the last twenty-three years will be taken by every impartial judge as a complete refutation of the foul slanders cast upon its truth, as well as upon the sincerity of its convictions. A journal that fought the battles of Reform for nineteen years under every discouragement, and on every occasion showed its loyalty to principle and its fealty to the cause, would not now desert its party unless that party had first deserted their principles, and proved themselves recreant to their professions.

But would it not have been wiser, would it not have been more consistent, and would it not have been better adapted to restore confidence to a doubting and wavering electorate, had those journals that abuse the Star been content to show the fallacy of its logic, and the unsoundness of the reasons it has assigned for its conversion and defection. Unless the reasons it gives for its change, for deserting the so, called "Reform" party, and joining the Opposition, can be proved untrue and invalid, then the Star would have been corrupt itself, had it not acted on those convictions. It professes to have believed that on attaining power the "Reform" party would have purified every Department of corruption of which at least a part they so bitterly complained. It believed that with the advent of Mr. Mackenzie and his party to power, the existence of political corruption and jobbery would cease for ever. It believed that its party leaders were really honest in their denunciation of evil-doers, as being in their very nature corrupt and contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and then concludes in these emphatic and mournful words:—"How woefully have we been betrayed and deceived!"

We might now be willing to rest the truth of the charges brought against the Star on one very simple principle. As all the people throughout Ontario or the Dominion, who have become alienated from the present Government, whose sympathies are now with the leaders of the Opposition, and whose support will be given to them at the coming elections, to be charged with base and sordid motives for having suffered conviction to be wrought in their minds, and yielded to the force of proof? If not, why then should the editor of the Star be singled out for abuse, unless, indeed, for the very reasons which we have already assigned? Has not the leading journal of the Grits shown with great force, and very recently, too, that there is really no political principle to keep the two parties asunder; and surely, then, this general feeling of distrust and want of confidence in the present Government must originate in their acts, and from these, every man has a right to dissent, if he believes them corrupt and inimical to the true interests of the country. This aspersion cast upon the motives of the Star and the foul abuse heaped upon it will not win back a single elector who views the conduct of the Government as the Star views it, and who feels convinced that they are no longer deserving of public confidence.

A British Columbia despatch says:—There is great rejoicing over the defeat of James Robinson, the Dominion Government candidate, who ran in place of Mr. Cunningham, the member who resigned. Dr. McInnes, an opponent of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration, has been returned by a good majority.

New plans for paying off church debts are always in order. The church debt is an incubus on modern society, and forms a really decrease for handing round the plate, and sending ladies on collecting tours, in which they exhibit much intrepidity and tact. If any one could invent a plan by which such debts would pay themselves off automatically, spasmodic efforts would cease, and the expenditure of much unction would be saved. The man who will show the ordinary church member the way out from the necessity of becoming obdurate and stoney-hearted, and of diving too often into his pocket in respect of those ecclesiastical demands, would be hailed as a benefactor. His passage through this section of Christendom would be a triumphant one, and he might and his banner by a statute being erected to him in some public square, where he would essay immortality done in bronze standing, in some inconvenient or impossible attitude on a stone pedestal. An attempt has been recently made in Boston to achieve the beatitude of no church debt. It consists of a "scheme"—a financial scheme—for it is an undeniable fact that some Christians in their desire to be comfortable, and accept the means of grace while surrounded by luxury and convenience, often drive church-managers and church-wardens into expenditures which involve them in a load of pecuniary obligations. In such matters it is seldom "pay as you go." Rather, the feeling is in favor of a good deal of "go," but followed by a disinclination to pay, and thus relieve the financial managers from obligations incurred in the endeavor to carry out the wishes of congregations. The plan, or scheme spoken of includes the idea of collecting a portion of the pew rents in advance for a period of years by means of bonds, bearing a low rate of interest, and secured upon individual lettings. Another part of the scheme is that the bonds are to be taken by members of the congregation if possible, and the annual coupons are to be available for pew rents. This removes the plan at once from the status of a loan; every subscriber receiving full value for the money he invests, except that he might obtain a higher rate of interest elsewhere. It is true that to many people this may smack, too much of a broker's expedient, or the bank manager's parlor. Yet it has its value, the supposition being that the popularity of churches in question will remain unimpaired during the period that the debentures have to run. A better way, we think, is to be found in that adopted by one of our city churches, by voluntarily adding 50 per cent. to current pew rents, and thus at once raising not only enough to pay interest accruing, but wipe off a considerable portion of the principal due, year by year. No doubt a good deal of grumbling is heard from time to time among all the churches as to the expensiveness incident to attendance on them. Yet, really, when it is enquired into, such attendance is placed upon a most economical footing. Light, heat, and personal comfort is secured and an acceptable service presented for a sum that is almost ridiculous in amount. Take for example an ordinary pew, containing seats for five persons. The rent of such a pew is probably $25 a year; in many cases it is much less, in but a very few is it any more. The ordinary services held during the week are not less than three, which, with some of an extra kind, may be said to amount to one hundred and sixty (160) services during the year. For five persons, then, there would be eight hundred services, costing in the aggregate for pew rent $25, or a little over three cents per service for each individual. For such a bagatelle, which few in ordinary life think anything at all about, service is conducted amid conditions of comfort which can scarcely be or need not be exceeded. Yet there is a great sighing and groaning over the amount when the collector comes. It is held to be "too much." Instead of paying three cents for such ministrations—and the supposition is that those that attend approve them, some people would be glad to be let off with a single cent, and would be found to grudge even that. Such a state of feeling is altogether singular in relation to such a matter, and stands much in need of amendment. Three cent Christians are cheap enough, but when the tariff of their contributions drops down to a one cent basis, it becomes questionable if their real object in going to church is not to save fire and candle-light at home. No such meanness are exhibited in relation to any other affairs in society, and to be identified with a congregation over head and ears in debt, and that will not make any effort in the direction of extrication, is as poor a compliment to religion, as well as to individuals who consent to seek for cheapness in a direction in which generosity would be far more admirable.

The Duke of Cambridge presided lately at the 120th anniversary banquet of the Orphan Working School, which was held at Willis' Rooms, and, in proposing "The army, navy, and volunteers," said he had intended at late years in the army to shut up short service instead of a long service system, and it remained to be seen how it would answer. We had very much younger men to deal with than formerly. Many people had an impression that they were too young, and therefore could not prove equal to the old soldiers of former years. That might be, so but all he could say was that, so far as the physical power of those young men was concerned, he did not think we ever had a better class of recruits than at the present moment. He was sorry to see the prevalence of that spirit of depreciation which was perpetually crying things down. With regard to the auxiliary forces, he most express his satisfaction that at the present moment, when there was so much powder in the air, there had been exhibited a cordial spirit of loyalty and patriotism. He thought it was a very fine spirit which had been shown, and it was very encouraging for the future of the volunteer system, now, happily, so properly and soundly established.

A proclamation dated Santiago de Cuba, March 24th, and signed by General Martinez Campos, has been made public at Havana. The proclamation declares that peace has been substantially reëstablished in the greater part of the district lately in rebellion, and that it is now necessary to heal the wounds occasioned by ten years of strife. Therefore, in accordance with article two of the peace conditions, and by authority of the home government, the General decrees:—1—The authorities of the pacified territory are to observe the most complete oblivion for past events, and strive to prevent a resuscitation of by-gone passions. 2—All persons now in imprisonment for treason, rebellion and sedition, or for being accessory thereto, are to be liberated and returned to their homes if desired, and those who have escaped punishment are not to be proceeded against. 3—All cases now pending before the tribunals of the Island for such crimes are to be abandoned immediately. 4—All persons banished or deported for such causes are to be permitted to return home, and are to be exempt from molestation or persecution for their previous conduct. 5—All persons included in the foregoing articles and those resulting in foreign countries are to regain their rights of citizenship. 6—All deserters from the Spanish forces who are still in arms are to be pardoned if they surrender by the 15th of April.

THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

This Institution commences its next session on the 16th inst., and it is to be hoped that it may have a large number of young farmers entered on its rolls as students. We have always held that, if properly conducted, the Institution would be found to fill a blank in our educational machinery, and meet a want much felt in this country. That little or no good has been done so far is the fault of the management, not in any defect in the design of the originator. Had Mr. Carling had the working out of his own conception for a few years more, the Province of Ontario would, to-day, have been in possession of the advantages which such an Institution is calculated to bestow. One of the objects proposed by the Minister of Agriculture in those days was to create among the young a greater relish for agricultural pursuits, a greater pride in such a profession, and gradually beget a juster conception of its importance as compared with other pursuits than had formerly prevailed. A dislike for agriculture, if prevalent among the people, especially among the young, is a sure proof that there is something radically wrong in either their taste, or judgment, or both. The profession of the agriculturist is the noblest, the most independent, the most important to a nation's prosperity, and the most conducive to an innocent and moral life of any other. To counteract the desire so often displayed among the sons of farmers, to abandon the pursuit of their fathers, and betake themselves to the vexations, struggles and temptations of town life, was an object worthy of all praise on the part of the Board of Agriculture and Government, and in their hands there would have been no cause to complain of want of success.

Another object was to improve the system of farming now in vogue in this country, and give it something of a scientific basis—in fact to raise it to the dignity, in some of its more important features, of a scientific pursuit. This is just what is wanting to make it more profitable and more popular. Give the young farmer a scientific education, and show him how to apply his abstract principles to practical purposes on his own acres, and you invest the pursuit of farming with a new and higher dignity, you add to the self-respect of the agriculturist, and you make his time, labor and capital more productive.

But there has been occasionally a lackadaisical whine raised in certain quarters, though the Grits had refused to blow the people through this institution, and that Tory selfishness had withstood their patriotic endeavors. This is a convenient mode of avoiding a difficulty, and of meeting a charge of incapacity and corruption, for both have been rampant in the management of this institution under reform rule. It is said—"to have died its way through a long term of undeserved unpopularity, and has at length succeeded in conquering prejudice and malice." No doubt there was prejudice, but this prejudice was beget of corruption first, and thorough bungling afterwards. The removal from the original, well selected site through political intrigue, and making it the creature of Grit necessities was the first blow at its usefulness and popularity; and putting it under the charge of such a man as Mr. McKellar was the second. It was needless to recapitulate all the scenes of corruption and bungling through which it had to pass for a period, but we quite agree with the Globe that a prejudice was, at this period, formed against it, and justly so, and those who recall the scenes that have taken place within its walls will at least say that this prejudice was just and natural.

Will any of its defenders venture to say that the country had a right to be satisfied with either the management or the good effected by the Institution? Was there not enough brought to light, and certainly all the black pages of its history in those days have never yet been submitted to the public eye, to convince the people of this Province, that the Institution was a hot-bed of corruption, as expensive and useless as it was immoral in its effects upon the minds of the students? Did Mr. Mowat act as an honest man and upright statesman in paying hush money to McCandless? Was Professor McCandless the right man for the position? Then, why did the Government dismiss him? And if they had nothing to fear from his revelations, why did the Premier pay him to hold his tongue? Assuredly not. The Government had good cause for his dismissal, how could the people be expected to be satisfied with the whole affair? It has been said therefore of the Institution's fight with prejudice and malice amounts only to a condemnation of the Government which have it under their control.

An action for breach of promise of marriage, brought by an English schoolmaster named Heap against a lady named Marris, was tried lately. Miss Marris, who was the daughter of a solicitor residing at Caistor, Lincolnshire, had, in 1876, at the age of forty years, entered into a written agreement to marry Mr. Heap, a master in the local grammar school. She agreed, in case of failure to fulfil such promise, to give him one-fourth of the property she might inherit from her parents; and also a yearly sum of money, beginning at £20, and doubling each year from January 1, 1875, until she should become his wife. Miss Marris, having failed to keep her promise, and still refusing to fulfil her undertaking, the present action was instituted. Certain points in the construction of the agreement were objected to on behalf of the defendant, but eventually she agreed to pay £1,000 rather than allow the letters she had written to be brought before the public. Judgment was, therefore, given for the plaintiff.

The Turks are said to have been much astonished at the appearance of the Cossacks and the Russian Guard. These "conquerors of the lions of the Schipka Pass" and "heroes of Tatar Bazardjik" turn out to be small and weakly men, badly clothed, and dirty in appearance; and the Turks are now more convinced than ever of the incapacity of their commanders, who allowed themselves to be beaten by such troops. Some of the Turkish generals still believe that if better commanders were appointed, the war might be resumed, and the Turkish losses be retrieved. Be this as it may, the recruits are still being clothed and equipped; and it is stated in the Seraglio that by the end of April Turkey will have 300,000 well-armed troops. What the object of these warlike preparations may be is not clear. Some speak of a new campaign against Russia; others see in these new soldiers of the Sultan the future allies of the Czar.

..William Calcraft, the English veteran ex-executioner, is a mild inoffensive old man, fond of flowers and a rearer of rabbits. He has always evinced a great repugnance to hanging a man of intellect, and asserts that on such occasions he would have failed in the task had it not been for a powerful dose of alcohol. Calcraft, venerable in appearance, grows a handsome white beard.

..Charles Mathews, the veteran English comedian, is full of agility, in spite of his advanced age, 77. He can shave and open an oyster at the same time, and can also repeat the Book of Job. His first wife was the celebrated Madame Vestris. Mathews has all his life suffered from pecuniary embarrassments, and his knowledge of debtors' prisons is varied and extensive.

..Austria's peace establishment is put down at 207,905 men and 47,972 horses; in war, 780,028 men and 148,120 horses.

Russia's Progress.

THE PEOPLE RAMPANT FOR A WAR WITH ENGLAND—INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS—AID FROM AMERICA—VAST PRODUCTIVENESS OF THE COUNTRY.

St. Petersburg, March 6, 1878.

The popular cry throughout Russia is war against England. All classes join in the clamor, and the public are even prepared to make any sacrifice or endure any privations rather than submit to the insult and abuse heaped upon them by the British Government. They even say they are powerful enough and that their financial position is sufficiently elastic to enable them to carry on a war and probably wrest India from British rule. Russia has over one million soldiers under arms, of which more than three hundred thousand are at present on Turkish soil; many of them are veterans and have seen severe fighting. Her generals have shown that they are fully competent to cope successfully with those of any Continental Power.

RAILWAYS.

She has constructed during the past ten years over 12,000 miles of railways, forming a vast net work through the grain producing districts of the Empire. Nearly all the rails for these lines were purchased from England, but at present extensive rolling mills have sprung up in various parts of the country, which are now manufacturing steel rails. They are turning out all they require, which causes them to be independent of England in this branch of industry. The government has recently purchased from the Baldwin Locomotive Works, of Philadelphia, forty locomotives, and I am told that another large company in America have contracted to deliver 100 during the present year. A contract has been recently made with the John Stephenson Company, of New York, for the manufacture and supply of a large number of tramway cars for the street railway of St. Petersburg, as also for Riga, where a new company has been recently formed. It is stated that American tramway cars will wear twenty years, while those made in England, France and Belgium only last five years.

TERMINAL FACILITIES.

The government is engaged in constructing what is called a new port for St. Petersburg. It is situated at the south-eastern part of the city, and consists of an enormous basin, or, rather, series of basins connected together, capable, it is estimated, of accommodating a thousand vessels and barges. A railway runs around the basins and connects them with the entire system of railways. These basins are dredged to a uniform depth of twenty feet, and a continuous chain of large warehouses is being erected around them, so that cargoes can be received or discharged directly from or in cars and transported to any part of the Empire. Similar to all government works in Russia, they are constructed upon a colossal and magnificent scale. The Russians do not hesitate to grapple with engineering difficulties, which they so readily overcome, as is instanced in the situation of St. Petersburg, founded by Peter the Great upon a swamp. When it is remembered that in many cases the cost of a foundation is even greater than the structure; that not a spoonful of gravel or a stone of any kind is to be seen that has not been brought many miles, it will be understood that there is some enterprise in Russia.

BRIDGING THE NEVA.

At the present time there are only eight feet of water between St. Petersburg and Cronstadt, a distance of sixteen miles. The government have recently contracted with Messrs. Morris & Cummings, of New York, to carry out the enormous undertaking of dredging over the sixteen miles, so as to have twenty feet of water between the new port and Cronstadt. Their machinery will be conveyed from New York, in order to allow them to commence operations early in the spring. Their superintendents are now here, engaged in constructing the necessary barges. It strikes me that if New York had been provided with an emperor she would, at least, have had her piers completed, which are such a disgrace to the metropolis of the New World.

AMERICAN WAREHOUSES.

One of the most important charters or concessions in the interest of Americans has just been signed by the Emperor, giving Messrs. L. B. Shaw, E. G. Burgess and T. B. Lane, of New York, in connection with prominent American capitalists, the permission to form a company for the construction of floating and stationary grain elevators and warehouses in all parts and the Loop Line, between Reval and St. Thomas, and between Palanstoon and Kincardine, and Southern Extension of W. G. & B.

..Of late years quite a passion has grown up in Paris for handsome books. Ancient and rare works are sold for fabulous prices, and it is not unusual for a volume to fetch 1,000 or 2,000 francs. Publishers find a better sale for handsome editions than for others.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY,

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"But you dislike him!" inquired Lina, gazing eagerly, almost entreatingly, into Marjorie's face.

"No," Marjorie answered, readily, "I do not; I hate him. I have often said I hate Neil too; but I am not sure about that, though they are friends. 'Show me a man's friends'—do you remember?—and I will tell you what the man himself is.' There is something, though, in Neil's nature which makes me think that he might be better; just the same thing, however, may prove that he might be worse. I have never seen any better part dominant, and I have seen the worse; so I am only getting deeper and deeper into the Slough of Dislike. How do you like him?"

The question was asked so suddenly that Lina's answer sounded chill and deliberate after it.

"Do not ask me, please. Sir Neil Athelston and I are such utter strangers."

"You will not be utter strangers for long, Miss Chester," Marjorie said, wondering a little at the promptness of the reply. "It does not take long to sound the depths of such a nature as that of Sir Neil Athelston's, I think; at any rate, as far as I have been able yet to judge."

"I should think you would be able to judge best of all, Miss Castillain."

"I do not know; I am not sure, but I fancy you may know him before I do."

She spoke quite gravely, though the speech meant nothing but a random surmise. But so unnaturally pained and proud Lina's face grew at the words, that Miss Castillain bitterly regretted them.

"We talk of our wedding, sometimes," resumed Marjorie, "in her own light tones again, "and we try to be as anxious over it, too! all so beautifully. I choose Alice for our wedding-favour, because other married couples have it there, and because Neil likes to do what the Grundies do. I rarely begin the subject, though. Do you know why?"

"I can guess," smiled Lina.

"Can you? That's right, because I am not going to tell you—till I have told Neil himself. Oh, if my father thought there was any hitch—I hope that is not slang—in our prospects, he would look me up for a year at least, and Lorna would tell the world in a bewailing tone, and be supremely happy. Miss Chester, haven't I cause to love, honor, etc., my father, who never utters a loving word to me from morning to night, and only remembers my existence just as an agent in this marriage; while he knows the Athelstones are a selfish, dissipated, unprincipled race! I do not think there will ever be a good and upright master and mistress in this our generation; does not appear to be much prospect of that, does there, when you look at the young figure of the present baronet?"

"There may be an Athelston, even yet, who will redeem all," said Lina Chester, with a grave, inexplicable sadness.

"There may, but it does not seem very likely, now that they have borne the same reputation for centuries. Neil knows it; indeed, he rather boasts of it, and says they have gained a good name up to the present representative. Oh I doubly little him when he says such things! The last named but one was awfully wild—I mean very wild. He married a beauty, the heiress of a cotton prince. You can see still that Lady Athelston has been a beauty. He died only a few weeks after his marriage, a typhus fever, on his wedding-tour. Can't you fancy what an unspeakable nurse his wife was! Serve him right! In a year's time the next baronet (that one's cousin) married her. He was a needy, dissipated fellow, and, they say, hastened his own death; but he lived until his only son, by Lady Athelston, had inherited him on his own model."

"Indeed—I mean the last has become—at all life the present one in appearance" asked Lina, rather earnestly.

"Lord bless me, no, quite a contrast in appearance, as you may see by the portraits of him there are plenty of. You can't there! He was handsome enough, high-bred, and distinguished looking in the extreme; but he was, for all that, no credit to any family. He stood out, remarkably, even among the unprincipled, dissipated Athelstons. He was just one of those evil, paramount natures, whose power is like by much more than the average share of wrong and to be unsuspected of it."

"I thought so," answered Lina, unconsciously.

"Yes, I dare say you have heard of him. That's father was a random, hare-brained, selfish fellow, bent on his own aims and pleasures—just as Sir Gerard was—but openly and avowedly so, like Neil; and the wrong he did, everybody knew he did. Do you understand this difference?"

"Thoroughly."

"And now I have told you enough of them, haven't I? Let us dismiss them with your hope that Neil may prove to be a worthy Athelston of High Athelston. Unlikely as it seems, we may as well indulge ourselves in the notion of the possibility. Whom else shall I tell you of? Mr. Jardine, the agent, with his large head, and his large heart, and his large wife, and his small daughter? And his unmarried son? I am glad in a way when it is crammed with all the confessions of his flock; and no wonder his heart is large, when it holds room for everybody; and no wonder his wife is large, when she does nothing all day; and no wonder his daughter is small, when she has been brought up as a tiny precious pearl of inestimable value, which, if lost sight of by the parents, would be immediately swallowed by the great papier mache Churchill. She is not a bad little creature, only you will get tired of what sort, when I tell you she writes little three-cornered notes about nothing, and signs them always 'Emmie J.' If I could just live to see one of her letters uncrossed and signed 'M. Jordan,' I should have some hope of her. Another thing is, that she thinks all women are to be smiled at and petted, like kittens, and that all men delight in doing the smiling and petting part. I often wonder whether her notions or mine are nearer the truth."

"If one may be true as regards some men and some women," laughed Lina.

"Yes, I suppose so; and I hope mine are true as regards other women and other men. Miss Jordan is the type of the weak-minded girl of Highdrive, as my sister Louisa is the type of the strong minded. I only wish sometimes that we could blend, think scorn of either extreme. But, apropos of Miss Jordan, she is waiting for cap now—with all its bows flying—at Miss Jeffray. It used to be at Sir Neil, but she is my friend, and I offered to order setting her cap at any one," broke off Marjorie, flushing a little in her laughter, "we all do that—it is an exclusive woman's right."

"Do you, Miss Castillain!" inquired Lina, gently laughing.

"I! Indeed I do. My cap is almost worn out now from its frequent setting; and you should see Louisa's!"

"But you have not told me yet about Colonel Stuart and The Anchorage," put in Lina, when she was growing again.

"No, I cannot tell you about him because I never know how to describe him. He is—well, he is—he is—"

"Very little," said Lina, wondering at the new, restless energy she detected in her visitor's tone. "I have seen him."

"Have you? Do you like his face?"

"Very much."

"You could hardly help it, could you? But," added Marjorie, with a sudden, earnest, merriment, "he is bald, you see; or, as little Jack Eedale said, when he saw his uncle, 'he has another forehead on the top of his head.'"

"I do not think I noticed it," said Lina, laughing.

"Didn't you? Why, one part of his head shines like a mirror; and the other day when I saw a speck settled there in bold relief, I had to go away, for fear of being too strongly tempted to dust the glistening surface for him."

"Oh, brush!" cried Lina.

"It is odd that so many men grow bald quite young, isn't it," resumed Marjorie, demurely. "Do women grow bald too, and hide it with caps and chignons? or haven't they brain enough to work its way through? Well, it is a happy thing for me that Neil Athelston is not at all likely to lose any of his hair till he is about ninety. Colonel Stuart's story is rather a romance, Miss Chester. Shall I tell it you? His sister married the younger of a man supposed to be the richest merchant in London, but who died insolvent. And, because, before this, Colonel Stuart had heard—or found out, or guessed, or something—that Captain Eedale's only sister, a gentle, delicate girl of seventeen, was—was—what shall I say?—fond of him—loved him (not as Miss Jocelyn loves Eustace Jeffray, but as Viola loved the Duke of Illyria), he came forward (now that her father was dead and her brother going back to Australia, and she penniless) and married her, and brought her here, to be as happy as the day was long at The Anchorage. Poor little thing! In the midst of all her happiness, she died before they had been married a year. Are you tired, Miss Chester? you look so very white."

"Only as I always do," said Lina, simply, but she drew her hand across her forehead with a kind of weary bewilderment.

"Soon after that," went on Marjorie, "Mrs. Eedale and her little boy came to England, and they have lived with Colonel Stuart ever since. Captain Eedale is working in the diamond fields now, but I hope he will be able to come back soon. They say he has always been a hard, stern man; but I call him just and upright. I believe he was terribly hard on some man who forged his father's name when they were rich; still I do not judge by that, because sin deserves no punishment. But all this only fires you; and you look as if you had grown terribly tired of me within the last few minutes. So those are all at The Anchorage, except the tutor with whom Miss Jordan is smitten; that isn't slang, and I don't feel compunction at telling her secrets. When she herself doesn't keep it, what respect can I have for it?"

"Then Colonel Stuart was a widower within a year of his marriage-day," said Lina.

GUELPH

There is no definite clue to the whereabouts of the young lady Miss Rowswell, who disappeared from this town last week. On Friday, a young man named Chas. Vinesse arrived from Fergus, and he stated that a young lady was seen in the neighborhood of that village, answering to the description of the missing person at the house of E. B. Edsons. She arrived at that gentleman's house on Tuesday evening and asked to remain all night. This request was granted, and on the person being informed that she would have to go to the Poor House in the morning. She replied that she was from the County of Grey and wanted to reach her friends there. This answers to the description published in regard to Miss Rowswell answers to that of the young lady in question. Messrs. T. Galer and W. H. Marcon left for Fergus to make enquiries.

An English Bishop on the Stage.

The stage has at last found a bishop to support it. He is only a colonial bishop,it is true, but Melbourne is an important colony, and prize facie the opinion of a colonial bishop is at least as good as that of an English dean. Certain it is the clergy in his diocese having taken it upon themselves to denounce the stage with an energy and a choice of diction worthy of Mrs. Hannah More herself, the bishop has, instead of delivering himself of an allocution on the subject, taken the simpler course of writing to the Melbourne papers a long letter, clearly setting out his views.

"It is," he says, "sometimes asked whether St. Paul would have shown himself at a theatre. No,certainly not at healthen theatres, where the performances were usually connected with heathen worship. But if the question be whether he would have attended a well-conducted theatre in a Christian land, to witness a high-toned performance, then it might as well be asked whether St. Paul would have attended a cricket match, a chess tournament, or a spelling bee. In his circumstances it is very unlikely that he would,but it is equally certain that he would have called none them unlawful. Amusement is necessary for young people, and it would be equally unreasonable to forbid our boys to play at cricket, and to require grave divines either to join their sport or condemn it."

His ultimate conclusion is that what it wanted is "to make the drama what it should be—the handmaid of religion and morality."—London Examiner.

Ludicrous Scene in a Graveyard.

An otherwise grave affair was rendered rather ludicrous at the North Ridge Cemetery one night last week. A little child of Wm. Lee, who resides just North of Essex Centre, died shortly after birth, and he and a neighbor undertook to inter it in the cemetery at midnight. A party living near the cemetery happened to see them digging therein at that unseemly hour, and, thinking they were grave robbers, gathered a posse of his neighbors and pounced upon them, while at work. On discovering for what they had been called from their comfortable beds at midnight, the solemnity of the place hardly restrained their sarcastic expressions in regard to their suspicious neighbor.

CONSERVATISM IN WOODSTOCK.

The Party Rally—Young Men to the Front.

From our own Correspondent.

At an adjourned meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association, held in the Town Hall on Saturday last,the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

Wm. Gray, Esq., reelected President; A. S. H.Hill, Esq., M. D., Secretary; J. S. Scarf, Esq.,Treasurer, The Vice-Presidents for the various municipalities and the Executive Committee were all reElected on a motion of confined confidence.

The question of nominating candidates was next taken up and discussed in a very spirited manner. Mr. Woods' name having been mentioned as a probable candidate, that gentleman, in a very positive manner announced that he was not an applicant for the situation. He referred to his former candidature, and stated that he was not disposed to hold any of the electors under any obligation to support him on account of former services, and hoped the party would find a more successful candidate.

Mr. H. B. Heard took occasion to refer to Mr. Woods' efforts for the party since he came to the country, and he, for one, would be only too happy to assist him in another contest that would terminate in success. After several propositions, as to the proper means to secure a candidate, and in view of the fact that the elections are probably some months in the future, the selection was, on motion of H. B. Beard, postponed till a future date, to be probably effected by a requisition.

Nicholas Flood Davin, Esq., of Toronto, was present at the meeting, and gave some excellent advice as to unanimity and the necessity for concentrated effort.

Joseph Gibson, Esq., from Ingersoll, was present, and advocated the idea of plucky and decided action. Altogether, the meeting was a very interesting one, although many of the delegates from a distance were much disappointed at the decision to postpone the choice of a candidate. They hold that the constituency is ready for action, and anxious for the fray.

In the evening the Young Men's Liberal-Conservative Association had the Town Hall tastefully decorated for the lecture by Mr. Davin. At an early hour the hall was filled to standing room by an attentive audience of electors of both parties. The gentleman spoke for nearly two hours on the necessity for an intelligent and dispassionate investigation of the state of the country, and the responsibility of every elector for the vote he gives at a general election. After thus opening his discourse, he went carefully into the question of protection, and proved by figures and history that no country could or ever had prospered where the fostering care of the Government had been withheld. Great Britain protected her industries while in their infancy, and now when this protection was withheld and her markets thrown open to the world, the cry of distress and the call for help was heard. The illustrations and ready wit of the orator frequently reminded the audience that the speaker enjoyed the full advantage of his Irish origin. The peroration was simply electrifying, and called forth repeated roundsof cheers, a liberal supply of which frequently interrupted the speaker during the delivery of the very interesting discourse. Votes of thanks to the speaker, chairman and the President of the Y.M.L.C.A., for the treat of the evening,and cheers for the Queen and Dominion brought the meeting to a close. The day's meeting and the evening's entertainment will do much to rouse the enthusiasm of the party.

East Middlesex Liberal Conservative Association.

Annual Meeting on Saturday—Election of Officers—The National Policy.

The annual meeting of the members of this Association was held in the Young Men's Liberal-Conservative Club Rooms on Saturday afternoon. The rooms were crowded, and the utmost harmony and enthusiasm was manifested. The following were called to order by Mr. Thos. Routledge, the President, who stated that the members were called together for the purpose of reorganizing and electing officers for the year. Before proceeding with the regular business, he called upon Mr. Jno. A. Macdonell, the Secretary of the Ontario Association, to address them on the organization, which that gentlemen did in a very lucid speech.

The Hon. John Carling, who was present by invitation, also delivered a stirring and forcible address which was enthusiastically received.

The election of officers was then proceeded with, the following being the result:—

President—Mr. Thomas Routledge.

Vice-Presidents—London Township, T. Langford, Jno. M. O'Neil; Westminster, Richard Whetter; Lobo, Alexander Dreany; Nissouri, Alex. W. Brown; London East, J. W. Bartlett; Delaware, Wm. Nichol; London South, Alex. Ponsey.

Treasurer—Mr. Thos. Thompson.

Secretary—Mr. Jno. Taylor.

On motion of Mr. Choate, seconded by Mr. Wilson, it was unanimously resolved:

"That this meeting desires to place on record its unqualified approval of the National Policy embodied in the resolutions which was recently introduced into the Dominion Parliament by the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald."

Moved by Mr. A. D. Osborne, seconded by Mr. Wm. Nichol, and resolved:—"That this meeting desires to record its approval of the conduct of the representatives of the East Riding of Middlesex, both in the Dominion and Local Houses."

In the evening the Young Men's Liberal-Conservative Association had the Town Hall tastefully decorated for the lecture by Mr. Davin. At an early hour the hall was filled to standing room by an attentive audience of electors of both parties. The gentleman spoke for nearly two hours on the necessity for an intelligent and dispassionate investigation of the state of the country, and the responsibility of every elector for the vote he gives at a general election. The Lucan Attempted Assassination.

Robert Donnelly on Trial.

Prisoner Found Guilty of the Felony.

How Donnelly Incriminated Himself—He Threatens to Burn Lucan Down—Swearing—Ludicrous Scene Tough Examination—The "Fix" of a Jury, Resulting in Their Being Locked up Till Monday Morning.

The Lucan murderous shooting case came up for trial at the Assizes on Saturday, when Robert Donnelly was charged with shooting a gun at Samuel S. Everett, constable of that village, with intent to murder or grievously wound him. Prisoner pleaded not guilty, and was defended by Mr. Glass, Q. C. Mr. Hutchinson, County Crown Attorney, prosecuted, and Mr. Henry Becher looked after Everett's interests. The case has already been referred to by us at length, and it is only necessary now to give a summary of the evidence given.

An affidavit was handed in by Mr. Glass, Q. C., stating that Thos. Hodgins, a material witness to prove an alibi for the defence, could not be found, and that therefore the trial should be postponed.

His Lordship declined to entertain the application, and the trial was proceeded with.

Samuel L. Everett, chief constable of the village of Lucan, who deposed that on 10th March last, he was going home about 20 minutes to 12 p.m., and had just reached his door, which he had wrapped at. Whilst standing there, with his side towards the woodpile, heard a snap of a gun, and looked up in time to see the flash of the cap, followed by the report. Saw a man standing at the corner of the woodpile, with the gun to his shoulder; it was resting on a pole. After the shot, the man looked for a little at witness, the former remaining till witness jumped out of the gate. He turned to the left, and ran between the mill and woodpile, towards the railroad, witness following him. About this time, a man named McIsor came out of his house, and assisted witness in a three hours' search for the man who fired the shot. The distance between the place where I stood and where the man who fired the shot was is 574 feet. The night was a brilliant moonlight one, and I saw quite distinctly. Recognized the man who fired the shot as Robert Donnelly. I knew him well by sight. Afterwards found shot in my door just at the side of where I was standing. I now produce several bullets. Next morning I saw tracks of two persons, as if in their stocking feet. Traced them through the yard, and to the railroad, through the Butler property, then through two ploughed fields, and then to a gate leading to Wm. Carty's house, 75 or 100 yards from the main road, where tracks were lost. Mr. Glass cross-examined the witness at great length, but failed to shake his testimony.

Re-examined, the witness said he told Squire Stanley that prisoner was the man who shot at him. Did not tell others who shot at him. Did not tell others that I suspected prisoner. Did not consider others should be entrusted with these official matters.

On the Court resuming:

Malcolm McIsaz identified the prisoner as the man he had seen in the vicinity of the woodpile between 10 and 11 o'clock on the 10th March. Everett said to witness, (when he met him immediately after that he knew the man who fired the shot), but to mention it to no name.

Richard Tapp, Lucan, deposed that on the night of the 10th March,after tea, he was coming from the G.T.R. Station, when he met prisoner on the street, on the east side of the mill. He was going towards the mill and prisoner was going towards the station. Saw prisoner again the same evening, on the main street, at the corner of Frank street, about half past ten. This was about five minutes' walk from where I first saw him. He was standing there. We went home to bed; didn't see Donnelly that night, I was sure it was prisoner.

John Brooks deposed that he worked in a livery stable in Lucan; knew Robert Donnelly well. Saw him on the afternoon of the 10th March, three times, and again in the evening on the G. T. R. track, about 200 yards from Stanley's mill. Never saw prisoner personally.

Cross-examined.—Did not go to bed that night till 12 o'clock; was not in bed with a young man at the livery stable at nine o'clock that evening. It was not Everett whom I saw on the track.

Geo. Geer—Am a painter in Lucan, and have known prisoner for the last two years; saw him between half-past ten and eleven on the night of 18th March; saw him cross down William street, and cross from the Ontario Association to Stanley's mill; as he passed me I saw his coat buttoned up tight; there was a gun barrel protruding from under his coat on his right side; went up to try and see the constable, but did not, and went home to bed; didn't see Donnelly till next morning at 8 o'clock, when I saw him riding on horseback; about an hour afterwards, a merchant told me Everett had been shot.

Cross-examined.—Was not indicted for hanging a man named Atkinson; am not friends with Donnelly, but have no quarrel with him. Told what I saw to several people next day.

Wm. Hodgins—Am a constable in Lucan; had charge of prisoner after he was arrested; put him in the lock-up between two and three o'clock on Tuesday; about three hours afterwards, Thos. Hines was placed in the cell; there was a cell between; Charles McRoberts was put into the centre cell that night. I went with Donnelly's supper to watch that no attack was made on the cells. About three-quarters of an hour after, I was in the adjoining room; prisoner and Hines were speaking to one another; heard Hines say to Donnelly—"Everett is going to steer it hard to you," Donnelly said, "How do you know?" Hines replied, "I know he is, but you needn't give a d—n; you can get lots to swear for you;" prisoner

These boys, with others, have been in the habit of jostling and annoying passengers on Richmond street. They were remanded to jail till Saturday next.

RED RIBBON MEETING.—The Rev. Mr. Wyley leaves the lobby to-night continuing to preach in the Red Ribbon Club Rooms last evening, but his place was very ably filled by Mr. J. B. Sutherland (of Lang & Sutherland), who delivered a very impressive address. These Red Ribbon Sunday evening meetings are becoming very popular and are always well attended.

THEFT OF A REVOLVER.—In the market on Saturday, an Indian named Peter Stoking was offering a revolver for sale, when a young man named Mr. Winslow came up and asked leave to see it. The Indian handed over the weapon, when, he alleges, Winslow ran away, carrying it off. The result was that the latter was arrested, and will answer the charge of larceny to-morrow.

ACCIDENT TO A LONDONER.—Mr. Hugh Summers, of this city, who has been working for some time past with J. W. Graves & Co., confectioners, of Rochester, N. Y., while leaving the factory a few nights since tripped and fell down stairs. The result was he broke his knee-pan, and gave himself a severe shaking. He will lay him up for some time to come. Mr. Summers is a young man of steady habits. He will be sent home as soon as he can be moved.

IMPORTANT RAILWAY SUIT.—At the Assizes at Guelph, His Lordship delivered his verdict in the case of Fitzgerald vs. the G. T. R., in favor of the plaintiff for $1,114.06. This has become a celebrated case, having been now before the courts for nearly four years, illustrating the pluck and fighting tenacity of the plaintiffs and defendants alike. The costs, we are informed, will amount to nearly, if not fully as much as the verdict. W. W. Fitzgerald acted as plaintiff's attorney, and conducted the suit throughout. D. Glass, Q. C., acting with him as counsel at the trial.

COUNTY MAGISTRATE'S COURT.—At this court on Saturday afternoon, before Peters, Belton and Armstrong presiding, Thomas Small, charged with stealing from young man named McGuire, in London East, seven dollars, appeared on remand for further examination. As there is no evidence of three witnesses had been heard, the Magistrates decided upon sending the accused for trial. Wm. Ellico was up on remand, charged with the abduction of his employer's daughter, Eliza Ann Moore, Township of Ekfrid. There being no evidence to bring the charge home to accused, he was discharged.

AT THE OLD GAME.—It will be in the recollection of the reader that a very material portion of the explanations made in the Quebec Legislature, was suppressed in all the leading Government papers. They are at the work of falsification again. The Ottawa Free Press, the London Advertiser and the Herald deliberately change the text of Lieut.-Governor Letellier's memorial to the Governor General by causing him to state that the Do Bocherville Government "resigned." The London Advertiser in giving M. Letellier's "ten reasons" changes the word "dismissal" in paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 into "resignation." The Montreal Herald does the same thing, and the Free Press, of Ottawa, sins in the same direction. No lower style of political warfare could be conceived.—Mail.

LACK OF POSTAL FACILITIES.—Considerable dissatisfaction exists among merchants and others, living in the villages along the route of the G. T. R. from St. Mary's to Sarnia, in consequence of the shabby character of the mail service to this city. It is only regarded by the mail matters along the route of the L., H. & B. R.—a grievance of over two years' standing. It is contended that there should be, at least, two daily mails east and west on the G. T. R. The Parkhill Gazette, commenting on the subject, says:—"We know of no section of the Province where the mail arrangements are so unsatisfactory as they are at present. At present it takes two days to send a letter to London. A letter leaving Parkhill or Alma Craig for Montreal is opened the same time as one mailed for London."

"KERRY GOW."—The Boston Courier says:—"One of the best and most enjoyable Irish dramas that has ever been played in this city is the "Kerry Gow," which was at the afternoon and evening performances during the whole of the past week. The play was written for Dion Boucicault, and it retains the interest of the audience from the beginning to the close. The tread-on-the-tail-of-my-coat style of humman does not make is appearance in this drama. Mr. Joseph Murphy's performance of the hero is an eminently natural and manly one, wherein the value of every word is carefully weighed, and in which the youth of Ireland dialect is spoken with a richness and purity that is so pleasant to hear. The drama was very smoothly played, and the various people in the cast showed that they had been carefully drilled in their business." The Company will play in Mechanics' Hall here on April 3rd and 4th.

A DASTARDLY OUTRAGE.—Some commotion was occasioned in the north-eastern portion of the city between nine and ten o'clock on Saturday night by the report, which was extensively circulated, that a young woman named Miss Jennie Brock had been shot at while entering Pall Mall street at its intersection with Colborne. On enquiry we have ascertained that Miss Brock on nearing the place passed two young men, who, it would appear, turned back, and struck her either with a stone or stick on the side of the head, which inflicted a severe wound, and stunned her. On regaining consciousness she screamed, and her cries attracted some of the neighbors, who removed her to Mr. Tapp's house. Her head bled profusely, but the injuries are not of a very serious nature. She was conveyed home a short time afterwards. Miss Brock was returning from work when attacked by the ruffians, and is unconscious of having given the slightest offence to any person or persons. There will be a vacant chair in somebody's boarding house before long if many more attempts of this kind are made.

LOCAL NOTICE.

AUCTION TO-DAY.—Manville & Brown will sell at their rooms, at 11 a. m., a good selection of household furnishings, removed there for convenience of sale by parties leaving the city. Positively no reserve.

HATS AND CAPS, WHOLESALE.—The attention of merchants visiting London to make purchases is drawn to the fact that Messrs. Marshall & Carrie, Dundas street east, have on hand a very large stock of hats and caps in all the newest styles, calculated to suit the most fastidious tastes. The firm have an efficient staff of assistants, who will be happy to show the goods to all and sundry.

Daring Attempt at Burglary.

The Mayor's Residence Visited Last Night—An Unsuccessful Sortie.

While Mayor Lewis and family were attending divine service last night, a more individuals paid a visit to the residence on Queen's Avenue, and in the absence of the inmates broke or cut out a pane of glass in the dining-room window, which is situated some distance from the sidewalk. Luckily Mr. Lewis' servant man happened along and encountered a stranger within the fence, and enquired of him his business and the reason of his presence there. The individual replied that he was waiting to see one of the men who worked there, which answer took the questioner somewhat aback. The latter informed the intruder that he was the only person who worked thereabouts, and, quick as thought, the stranger made a bolt for the sidewalk, being followed a moment or two later by a companion, who passed the servant man like the shot from a gun. They took to their heels on gaining the street, and went in an easterly direction. An examination of the premises was subsequently made, and a pane of glass was found broken in one of the windows as described. In the room where the glass was cut the silverware was kept, and in all probability had the second party not been interrupted at the time he was, some of the valuables in the house would have been missing this morning. The burglars, from the tracks, must have been reconnoitering in the rear part of the premises, and, no doubt, watched the occupants on leaving the house.

FIRE PLENTIFUL.—Mr. James Nevin, of Sandwich, last Friday, threw some 2,000,000 young white fish fry into Burlington Bay. The fry were from the fish hatcheries in Sandwich.

AN ITALIAN TESTIMONIAL

To Mr. Charles Ribighini and Family on Leaving London.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

SIR,—We, the undersigned forming the Italian Colony in this city, having heard of the imminent departure of Mr. Charles Ribighini and his family, are exceedingly anxious to express to them, through your columns, our deep sorrow at their leaving, and also to bid to that benevolent family our heartfelt, last good-bye.

Mr. Ribighini, as we all know, has been the means of bringing all of us to this interior portion of the country, where we, men, women and children, have prospered through hard work; where we now feel comparatively at home, and happy to enjoy the patronage of the courteous citizens of London.

We wish the citizens to hear from our own lips that Mr. R. has continually been at our side with advice and protection; has acted a thousand times as our spokesman; has procured us situations and work; has kept the peace amongst us, and through his influence introduced us into the favor of these kind citizens, and also that Mrs. and her three daughters have extended kindness to our wives and children, so repeatedly, so unstintingly and effectively as to equal the saintliest Sisters of Charity.

All of us have, therefore, looked upon that noble family as the altar upon which our combined feelings of gratitude are due in this city, so far away from our Italy. We are here in the habit of calling Mr. Ribighini our father, and Mrs. R. our mother; but now that the inexorable fate takes them away from us, we cry in bitter tears, we bid them good-bye. Dear countryman, good-bye! adieu, adieu, Gliel'Giorno vi benedica!

Shameful Abscension and Desertion.

Saturday—L. LAVERSON, Esq., P.M., Presiding.

Thomas Cavanagh was fined $1 and $4 costs for being drunk and disorderly. A Kinsey and Geo. McConnell were fined $1 and $2 each for being drunk and disorderly at an early hour this morning. John Ryan, a tambleer and rag, who visits London periodically, was charged with being drunk and having no settled place of abode. He was allowed to go once more. Jas. Hall and T. McNorton were fined $5 each for being disorderly on the street.

Chas. Pope and Alfred R. Brown were charged by Constable Hudson with being drunk and fighting on the streets on Thursday night. Pope said he was taking Brown home, when the latter turned upon him and assaulted him. Just at this time Hudson came along and separated them, and had them summoned to appear. Pope was discharged, and Brown fined $4 and $4.35 costs.

Thos. Fitzgerald and George Brown were charged with breaking into the house of Annie Reid a few nights since, and with assaulting Constable Hudson, by whom he was called upon to assist the woman. The charge was withdrawn, and the accused discharged.

John Campbell was charged by Mrs. Jane Love with damaging her property by smashing a window, breaking her flowers and tearing down a fence which separated their premises. Fined $2; costs, $3.10; damages, $1.25.

A CANADIAN ROBBED.—On Friday night last Peter Swyzen, a farmer who lives near Maidstone Cross, Ont., was roaming about Detroit somewhat under the influence of liquor, when he was accosted near the corner of Larned and Second streets, and, as he claims, robbed of about thirty dollars in money. Served him right.

An exchange says that a female physician has informed it that more quarrels arise between husband and wife owing to electrical changes affecting their nervous system by occupying the same bed than by any other disturbing cause. "There is nothing," she says, "that will derange the system of a person who is eliminative in nature by force like lying in bed all night with another person who is almost absorbed in nervous force. The absorber will go to sleep and rest all night, while the eliminator will be tossing and tumbling, restless and nervous, and wake up fretful and disheartened." No two persons should habitually sleep together, according to this authority; one will thrive and the other lose.

Fast people of the eighteenth century in England oftentimes issued invitations to evening parties written on the backs of playing cards.

Interesting Series of Returns.

U. S. Exports, Inland Revenue, Vital and Police Statistics.

Through the kindness of Mr. Wm. F. Blake, the U. S. Consular Agent at London, we are enabled to present to our readers the following statement, showing the value of declared exports from the Consular Agency of this city to the United States, during the quarter ending March 30th, 1878:—

INLAND REVENUE STATISTICS.

The collections of the Inland Revenue Department at this city during the month of March, 1878, show an increase of nearly $2,800 over the corresponding period of 1877. The following figures exhibit the amounts collected for the first three months of the years 1877 and 1878 :—

	1877.	1878.
January	$20,186 86	$19,020 28
February	35,047 68	37,272 28
March	8,639 65	11,398 34
	$76,873 18	$83,691 00

It should be explained in this connection that the duty on petroleum was removed during the first quarter of 1877, which will easily account for the difference in the figures. Indeed, in January, 1877, $20,773.41 alone was taken off.

VITAL STATISTICS.

The vital statistics for the month of March show an increase in each of the following "events" over the preceding months. The Division Registrar, Mr. A. S. Abbott, is of the opinion that the latter is not obeyed as it should be, and hence it is very difficult to give a correct estimate or comparison. The figures for the month of March and the first quarter of 1878 are appended:—

	MARCH.	THREE MONTHS.
Births	43	139
Marriages	21	57
Deaths	34	77
Totals	98	273

POLICE STATISTICS.

The number of persons who have been arrested or summoned by the city police force during the month just closed show a slight increase over the month of February, and the total number for the three months is about equal to the first quarter of 1877. The figures are:—

	MARCH.	FIRST QUARTER.
Arrests and summonses	153	440
Tramps provided with quarters by the police	86	359

WATER-WORKS BRIEFLETS.

The Debentures Sold at 98 1-8 cents—The Toronto Hydrants and the Ludlow Valve Chosen.

The Commissioners met on Saturday last, and opened the tenders received for the purchase of $325,000 worth of waterworks debentures. The tenders were to be in such denominations as might be required, either in currency, at the Bank of Commerce, or in sterling, at the bank of Scotland, London, Eng., or at such other banks as the purchaser may require, with coupons attached, for the payment of interest thereon, half-yearly, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, on the first of January and first of July in each year, and to run for 20 years. Quite a large number of tenders were received, the capitalists and brokers of Montreal, Montreal and elsewhere having sent in offers. After mature consideration, the Commissioners decided upon accepting the tender of F. A Fitzgerald & Co., of London, for the entire lot. The figures offered by them were the highest on the list.

The Commissioners also decided upon adopting the plan of the hydrant drawn by the City Engineer, which is modelled on those now in use in Toronto. Several improvements have been made upon it, and practical men have pronounced it to be superior to those of American manufacture. The Ludlow valve will be used in connection with it.

It is expected that the contract will be signed to-day, and that a commencement will be made during the week.

Also furnishing the new hotel, and were to have taken possession on Friday last, but Mr. Matthews had to go to London to arrange some financial matters, and was to have returned on Saturday or Monday, but Monday's mail brought news to his wife, whom he had left in Brussels, saying that he hoped she would content herself and get along without him, as he hoped to do so without her, and that he had left the country. Mrs. Matthews felt her position very keenly, and if she was not a party to the arrangements was to be pitied, being left among strangers with an unfurnished hotel on her hands. The hotel has been well furnished throughout in every particular, the bar well stocked, &c. Most of the furniture and stock had been bought upon cash terms or very short dates, but had not been paid for. The principal creditors are from London. The town creditors are Jew, John Chandler, furniture dealer, Haycroft & Ferguson, hardware, and Thomas Fletcher, jeweller, are the principal ones. Mrs. Stretton, the proprietor, is, of course, a heavy loser, but, fortunately, not so great as if the house had been run for a length of time, and then thrown upon her hands. It is expected the sheriff will step in and take possession for the general benefit of creditors.

London East Notes.

Saturday Afternoon.

It is likely that the new oil corporation of this village will start up the sandstone works, and only run one or two of the larger.

Mr. Wm. Ridley, of this village, is understood to be a candidate for the appointment of Engineer of the City Water-works. Mr. Ridley has had charge of similar works in England, is a practical man, and in every way qualified to fill the position should he be fortunate enough to receive it.

The school accommodation question is about the only subject of discussion just now. Its future has been practically settled by the action of the Board of School Trustees last night—they resolving to add another story to the Anderson School, giving accommodation to fully 100 pupils. It will be after the midsummer holidays, however, before this accommodation can be supplied, and meanwhile School Inspector Dearness insists that a temporary school room shall be supplied, so as to relieve the overcrowding of Talbot street. Mr. Dearness has to report to the Department in Toronto within a short time, and if temporary school room is not found, his report will be such that the Board will lose the grant of some $400. In the meantime, it is hoped that the School Management Committee will now see their way clear to erect Town Hall, and also the services of another teacher. Whilst the present state of matters exists, the education of the children is at a standstill.

There was a large attendance in the Lecture Hall of the Presbyterian Church, last night, on the occasion of the Union Mutual Improvement Society giving a free musical and literary entertainment. Mr. James Smith presided, and the following ladies and gentlemen took part in the programme:—Misses Willis, Moses, Crone, and Gilmore, Messrs. W. Willis, T. Muir, Peace, J. Brown, and others. The entertainment was pleasant throughout.

The sales were 1,000 bbls. within the range. We quote:—Refined, in bris, 7c. in transit, 6½c for refined, in bbls, 11gc do, in cases, nominally. Crude, in bulk, 6c for Pennsylvania, 6½c for Canadian, 6c for ordinary refined, at Philadelphia, 11gc asked Baltimore, 11gc asked—Montreal.

The market for refined was dull, but without radical change in prices. We note sales of 6,000 bbls for Baltimore delivery at 11gc. Business at the Petroleum Exchange was only moderately active. The market opened at 81.41½ and closed at 81.40½ to 81.40. The highest point reached during the day was 81.40 and the lowest 81.40. The sales were about 20,000 bbls. We quote:—Refined, in bris, 7c. in transit, 6½c for refined, in bbls, 11gc, 6c, in cases, nominally. Crude, in bulk, 6c for Pennsylvania, 6½c for Canadian, 6c for ordinary, refined, at Philadelphia, 11½c, and at Baltimore, 11½c.—March 30.

THE GREAT QUESTION.

While we are absorbed in small political squabbles respecting the men who are to rule the country, much more than the principles upon which they shall rule, or the ability with which they work out those principles, the Fatherland seems about to rush into a fearful struggle, out of which she is likely to emerge either the arbiter of Europe, as she has been before, or reduced to the rank of a second-rate power. The sword is in her hand now, and there are too many indications that it will, then there is nothing for England but to throw away the scabbard. Russia has already a powerful army in Turkey, and she can undoubtedly add many thousands in a short time to those already in the field, and on the ground which may be chosen as the battle-field in the approaching contest. At the beginning England cannot place an army in the field equal in numbers and appointment to that of her enemy, but this advantage may be counter-balanced. Russia is vulnerable on many points, England on none. At least we may say with safety that she is not vulnerable on any vital point. Russia may be invaded from within the Baltic or Black Seas, and though Cronstadt is a strong position, so strong that a British Admiral during the Crimean war thought it his wisest course to let it pass, yet with such ships and guns as Britain could send against a fortress of this kind to-day, we might expect to hear a different account, especially as the commander may well be one who would crave a higher meed of honor than what is involved in bringing back his ships without the mark of a bullet. In the Black Sea, too, there might be reasons for avoiding Sebastopol, as whether Tolleben shuts himself in among these earthworks or not, with the British fleet riding triumphant in the waters of those seas, the English commanders may choose their own point of attack. The same course may be deemed advisable in the Baltic, as the reduction of every stronghold and army advances into an invaded country, is no longer so much insisted on as formerly, in military circles.

Then while Russia may be met at any point, at Gallipoli, at Constantinople, on the Danube, or on Russian soil, or on several points at once, "the night cometh" and is safe from any such attacks. She may by protracting the war while safe from all danger of invasion, weaken and harass her foe to an unlimited extent, and without risking much herself, bring Russia to such a state, as she would be no longer able to keep an army in the field. But this Fabian policy, if at all necessary, would only be required at the beginning of the contest, as England would have no lack of men. We have heard of two hundred thousand Moslems in the East ready to draw the sword against this enemy of their creed, and when properly equipped and well officered, a single campaign would make good soldiers of such recruits. Religious fanaticism is about as reliable a principle as patriotism to inspire an army with courage and give that elan which is found so effective in the force of a foe.

Most of our Canadians have read less or more of the opinions which Sir Garnet Wolseley has given to the British public regarding England's ability to wage a great war at the present time. He gives due prominence to the advantages England possesses from her insular position, from her commanding fleet, and the improvements lately introduced into the military system of the country. He dwells with manifest pride and pleasure upon the change that has taken place in the education of the English officer, and while admitting that much improvement may still be made in this respect, he contrasts the present between the army which would take the field to-day against Russia, and that which started upon a similar expedition a quarter of a century ago, in something remarkable and greatly encouraging. No doubt Russia as a military power has made improvements too, but judging from what we have recently seen of her performances, we are not very favorably impressed with the military skill displayed by Russian Generals. Sir Garnet Wolseley is very free in giving his opinion respecting the state of preparation for war, in which the English army is now. He says pretty truly that with a constitution such as that of Great Britian, a thorough preparation for entering upon war is something not to be expected. While making this admission he shows that England never was, at any period of her history, so well prepared for a mighty war, a war on a grand scale, as she is at this moment, and the figures he gives seem to prove this position.

Sir Garnet's calculations, which every Canadian reader must have seen, would place the available forces of Great Britain, were she called upon to take the field at once, at upwards of 400,000 men, well drilled, armed and otherwise prepared. This great army—great for England—would be supported by 372 field guns, manned by the Royal Artillery. Before the end of twelve months from the firing of the first gun, England could control an army of three-quarters of a million of effective men, and this would bring matters to a closer equality than now prevails. Then the affair looks much better for England to-day than it did a few days ago. It is now evident that Russia has not the sympathy, active or passive, of a single nation in Europe, and it is by no means clear that all of these will remain neutral. Much aid need not be expected from Turkey, as her resources in men and money seem pretty well exhausted; still, if the country becomes the battlefield, she will be for England rather than against her. It must be borne in mind that England is not now fighting for the Turk. She is simply fighting her own battles, and the causes of the war may lead her to make Constantinople the centre of operations, unless military strategy may necessitate another course. Thus fighting English battles in support of English interests, we have no right to count on the support of Turkey, especially as England allowed her to be overborne by superior force, without striking a blow in her defence. All things considered, therefore, if the Empire has to buckle on her armor, there is no cause to fear for the result. As we lately said, England cannot be conquered by Russia. She may find it difficult to meet her vast hordes of serfs in the field at the beginning, but as she can take her own time, and select her own point and mode of attack, she can assuredly do more damage than she is likely to suffer. With these advantages we have noted, and her power increasing as that of her enemy declines, we may contemplate the conflict with calmness, and the issue with confidence, while regretting the loss of life and property thus forced on the Government of England.

RAILWAYS, BUT NO JOBBERY.

It is now reported that the building of the Georgian Bay Branch will shortly be proceeded with. If this be true, it presupposes that some pains have been taken in respect to the location of the work, and that contracts will not be again let at so much per mile in the absence of even an exploratory survey. Though the line in question may be of considerable local importance to the lumbermen and the settler, yet it looks very much as if Canada was about to build one work to compete with another now in the course of construction. If the new line is to be of any general commercial value, it will be in consequence of attracting cargoes for transhipment for eastern markets coming from Chicago and other points at the west. It is quite probable that a large business may be done in that way, but if done it will be done at the expense of the Welland Canal. The enlargement of that work at an outlay of some $16,000,000 was predicated upon the supposition that it would be able eventually to command the shipments destined for the St. Lawrence route. If it comes about that the Georgian Bay Branch can receive and transmit grain to Montreal, there to be loaded for Europe, it is clear that by means of a saving of distance and time the traffic that had been expected to go via the Welland will be to a great extent diverted. This view may have been lost sight of to a considerable extent in consequence of the scandals which have been uncovered in connection with the part which the late Senator Foster and the Premier played in this undertaking. Of course, Mr. Foster had rendered that kind of service for which people who perform it look for an equivalent. That equivalent was got at a great expense and disadvantage to the country, as Senator McPherson so well pointed in the course of his speeches in the Senate, and subsequently in his pamphlet. Opinion in the west may be somewhat divided upon the advisability of the work. But if it will open up valuable land for settlement, and be the means of turning resources that are now lying in desuetude to practical account, there would not be a word spoken against it. What we do ask for, and persist in asking, is this, that there shall be no more jobbery, no more favoritism, no more compensation to the extent of many thousands of dollars for work that had to be abandoned on account of the want of foresight on the part of the Public Works Department, of which the Premier is the official head. If the road is to be built, let it be done in a fair and honest manner, such as that pursued in this Western portion of the Province, and which has resulted in so much general satisfaction.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES.

Another attempt has been made to trump up an excuse for the non-payment of the unexpended balance of the $15,000,000 paid over by Great Britain to the United States under the Geneva Award. The condition of affairs seems to be this, that all the legitimate claims coming up before the United States courts for adjudication under the Award have been long since dealt with, leaving a little over $5,000,000 of the penalty money paid over. It is now sought in what is known as the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to set up ten million claims upon which to hang a payment to a new set of claimants. Doubt is expressed if this resolution will be agreed to in Congress. And it may be expected that that doubt is well grounded. It has been seen of late, in connection with the Halifax Fishery Award, that public sentiment in the States is averse to playing up sharp financial games in connection with international obligations. It is felt that the nation has a national character at stake in such matters, which it cannot afford to sully. It may be thought that after the elapse of some time an official recognition will take place of the fact that as England acted so manly a part in paying over the immense sum in liquidation of a supposed claim, now that the true claims turn out not to be so large as was anticipated, repayment will take place. So long as matters are allowed to go on in the style adopted by the Judiciary Committee, so long will the allegation of bad faith receive some color. It is impossible for such breaches of the usual method of procedure in such cases to take place without inflicting injury upon the Americans' good name. What is looked to as a measure of common honesty as between individuals cannot be lightly esteemed when the good faith of nations is in question. There is every reason to hope that such a conclusion has become firmly fixed in the American mind.

Another curious libel suit has been tried in England. The defendant, Capt. Norman, was a correspondent of the London Times during the late campaign in Armenia. The plaintiff was an English surgeon with the Turkish troops. In one of his letters the defendant took occasion to charge that the plaintiff had abandoned his sick charge at Kars in order to join the army operating against Erzeroum. The case was ceremoniously by Norman's eliminating the objectionable paragraph from his forthcoming book made up from his correspondence.

Boston is interested in a patent ballot-box, invented for the purpose of preventing fraudulent voting. Every ballot is registered on being deposited, and, by some internal mechanism, one man see by figures on the outside of the box how many votes have been cast. This is a good and a great invention, and should be brought into universal use.

UNWORTHY CORRESPONDENTS.

It might be as well in the end if some of the correspondents at present in the Capital, ostensibly to supply their respective employers with an abstract of the Parliamentary proceedings day by day, would take a few minutes to consider what they are sent there to accomplish. If they are sent to Ottawa simply to manufacture statements which they imagine will be appreciated by the political party to which they belong, they might save their employers a heavy outlay, as they could travesty and distort facts quite as successfully at home, and do it for one-tenth of the cost. To hear the statements of many of the members of the House, such as Sir John Macdonald, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Bowell, Mr. Macdonald (Toronto), Mr. Haddow and Mr. Macdonnell and many others, proves the evil to be wide spread. Some of these complained directly of misrepresentation, and others only alluded to the affair incidentally when the matter was on the tapis, as desirous of corroborating these complaints and putting an end to the causes. Still more hinted that they had suffered in the same way, but did not think it prudent to give the affair undue importance by bringing such offences before the House.

This is a small affair in some ways, we admit, but still all the members cannot treat the outrage with the same degree of sang froid as do Messrs. Plumb and Mitchell. Besides the House ought to unite to frown down such a vicious course as this, because if allowed at all, it is more likely to spread than to cease. If the representatives of the people on one side of the House be systematically traduced at the hustings, it will naturally provoke retaliation in kind, and thus the country will be deprived of the advantage of knowing the exact course which their representatives have taken upon some of the most important questions of the day. We can hardly agree with Mr. Plumb and Mr. Mitchell that malicious and deliberate misrepresentations should be treated with silent contempt. This course will only be adopted while these correspondents confine their misrepresentations to matters of minor importance, but as soon as one of the leading men of the House, especially if he belong to the dominant party for the time being, is made to suffer, forbearance will cease to be a virtue, and steps will be at once taken to protect the dignity of the House and the character of its members.

To those who hold to this view of the question, it will appear a duty to stamp out this practice at once. It is the meanest and most contemptible mode of political warfare that could be adopted and one that no honorable man would stoop to in his own person or endorse in that of another. Let reporters and correspondents give the facts of each case that they report, and then either they or the editors of the papers which they represent, may indulge in any strictures or criticism they please afterwards, but the electors and the people generally have a right to know the truth, and have the means of forming upon which to base an independent opinion for themselves. This is surely an important principle, and the whole people have a right to complain when it is made difficult to discover them, and to prevent, for base and unworthy motives, the members of the House in a light which the facts do not warrant. Let the House make one example and this will be found amply sufficient for the purpose.

THE MISSING LINK SUPPLIED.

It is announced that the new owners of the St. Paul & Pacific Railroad have completed their arrangements, by means of which that branch, in connection with some extensions, will be completed to the boundary line by October 1st next. At the same time, the piece lying within Canada, from Winnipeg south to the line, will be pushed to completion. Already, we believe, all the little grading that is to be done, and the last work on the ties, and the laying of the rails will not be a work of any great magnitude. The only point of conflict with them, were it deemed advisable. He should conduct the exchequer business, being paid by a moderate salary and by a fee, according to the business which he was called upon to transact. To provide for his remuneration, a fund should be created, in which way it would be found that a saving would be effected on the system now prevailing. He strongly objected to there being two law officers in the Cabinet.

Mr. Mackenzie was surprised that the member for Kingston had only had dawned upon the reflection that there should not be two legal officers in the Cabinet. Had he forgotten that during his administration there were no less than four legal officers in the Cabinet. While as to the necessity of the case the member for South Bruce, who possessed more abilities for working than any other member of the House, had found his capabilities most severely taxed by the duties of Minister of Justice. He gave the experience of the Australian colonies, where it had been found advisable to have two legal officers in the Cabinet, although the opposite principle had been carefully and extensively discussed and carried into practice. There could be no doubt that the substitutions proposed would be of immense service in the facilitation of the business of the country. It would have been a relief to the member for Kingston when he was in office had he had further legal assistance, while to himself, who had not legal education, such assistance was invaluable.

Dr. Tupper remarked that it was peculiarly apropos for the recent Government to have among them gentlemen who could go on to count one day and argue one side of the case and the next day take up the other. Such had been the case with their policy. While in opposition they maintained that seven Ministers were sufficient, but when they came into power they pretended that the case was changed. They had said when the late Government were in office there were only four Provinces in the Dominion, when the fact was that the late government in the division of offices had contemplated the extension of the union over the continent. In almost every other respect the Government had made a complete charge of fraud, but he thought the country would not be prepared to coincide with such a rightabout. He contended that the Cabinet should not be larger than the necessities of the country demanded, and that there should be no office which did not require the utmost amount of capability on the part of those who filled them. Indeed, were the qualifications for office very high, there would be removed many difficulties in the way of a government on the part of their enemy friends, who would otherwise be clamorous for office. He endorsed the remarks of the member for Kingston; objected strongly to the unnecessary increase of Cabinet officers. He severely criticized the Teeswater speech of the member for South Bruce, and his reflections upon the member for Kingston, which had been unworthy of him; nevertheless, every word he had uttered had been a censure upon his chief. He alluded to the feeling of uncertainty which would be created were it understood that a Minister of Justice was entitled to practice in the Courts before Judges whose promotion and position, to a great extent, were vested in his hands. Moreover, were the Minister of Justice to be allowed to practice it would cause a feeling of jealousy of which it would be almost impossible for the members of the bar to disabuse themselves. He concluded by saying, that feeling as he did, he could not sit down without expressing the very strong feeling which he had upon the subject.

Mr. Blake maintained that the offices of the Minister of Justice, and of Attorney-General were concurrent, and that a real saving would be effected by the course proposed. He regarded the proposed change as a very great improvement, especially in regard to the initiation and control, so to speak, of the business of Parliament. It was utterly impossible during the high pressure of a session of Parliament for the legislation to secure that supervision to which it was entitled. He denied that it was the intention to increase the number of legal officers in the Cabinet, averring that the present Cabinet contained a less number of lawyers than the Cabinet of the member

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 2.

After prayers and routine.

Mr. Macdougall (Renfrew) introduced a Bill to Secure the Attendance of Voters at the Elections of Members of the Commons. If this desirable object could be obtained, it was well that it should be done.

Mr. Masson hoped that the member for Chateauguay would, as he had told the member for Cardwell, describe this bill as an ambitious attempt to introduce legislation at the close of the session.

Mr. Mitchell said the member for Chateauguay never took exception to the acts of his own friends.

In reply to Sir John Macdonald,

Mr. Macdougall said he could well understand, this being a Government day, that the Government would not desire that he should take up the time of the House when he could better explain upon the second reading.

Mr. Langevin asked the hon. gentleman to explain how he would bring this about.

Mr. Macdougall was about to explain, when

Mr. Mackenzie said he objected to the member for Renfrew speaking three or four times.

By the desire of the House, the Clerk read the various sections of the Bill.

The Speaker said that he had consulted the authorities whilst this reading was going on, and found that the call for the reading of the Bill was an exploded practice, though there was no rule against it.

Sir John Macdonald said the House, before deciding whether the Bill could be introduced, must either have it explained by the member or must revert to the old practice of reading the sections.

After some further discussion the subject dropped.

Mr. Ross presented the fourth report of the Joint Committee on Printing, to whose reception Mr. Mackenzie objected, inasmuch as the Speaker had passed the orders of the day.

Mr. Cartwright moved that the House receive the report of the Committee of the Whole, on the resolution, that it is expedient to appoint an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada, salary not to exceed $8,000 per annum. Carried.

Mr. Cartwright, replying to Sir John Macdonald, said that this did not involve the appointment of an additional officer.

Mr. Laflamme moved the second reading of the Bill Respecting the Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General of Canada, which at length he explained to be the abolition of the Receiver-Generalship, and the vesting of the duties of the Receiver-General in the Minister of Finance. An Attorney-General, who was to be a member of the Cabinet, was provided for by the present bill.

Mr. Mitchell had grave objections to the passage of this Bill. There was in this House too much legal influence. The lawyers had too much to say about the affairs of the country, having almost a monopoly of them, to the swamping of the independent laymen of the country. He was prepared to admit that the Receiver Generalship should be abolished, but he was not prepared to allow another lawyer to come in. Rumor said they wanted to bring in the present Premier of Ontario. The present Minister of Justice was, he believed, quite able for the discharge of his duties, and it seemed to him that the creation of this new office was only to obtain more political influence.

The bill having been read a second time, on motion to go into committee upon it,

Sir John Macdonald objected to the bill. He remarked upon the two measures in connection with this subject, whose result it would be difficult to foresee. As to the abolition of the Receiver Generalship, he had not so much objection, excepting that it would legislate out of office the member for Shelbourne—the only member of the Cabinet who, by word or deed, had not committed a blunder. He, however, strongly resisted the creation of two legal offices in the Cabinet, which might result in a division of opinion and an uncertainty as to the source from which certain legal opinions emanated. He had not found the duties of the Minister of Justice too onerous. He had discharged them and had plenty of time to spare, and the real calls upon the Minister were in reality no greater or more numerous than now. This new office was a careless and unfortunate division of labor. Any increase of work in the Department might be accomplished without one farthing's additional expense to the country. The Minister of Justice should remain Attorney-General. It necessary, let there be a Solicitor-General, a member of the Government, or rather, one who should go out of office with them, were it deemed advisable. He should conduct the exchequer business, being paid by a moderate salary and by a fee, according to the business which he was called upon to transact. To provide for his remuneration, a fund should be created, in which way it would be found that a saving would be effected on the system now prevailing. He strongly objected to there being two law officers in the Cabinet.

Mr. Mackenzie was surprised that the member for Kingston had only had dawned upon the reflection that there should not be two legal officers in the Cabinet. Had he forgotten that during his administration there were no less than four legal officers in the Cabinet. While as to the necessity of the case the member for South Bruce, who possessed more abilities for working than any other member of the House, had found his capabilities most severely taxed by the duties of Minister of Justice. He gave the experience of the Australian colonies, where it had been found advisable to have two legal officers in the Cabinet, although the opposite principle had been carefully and extensively discussed and carried into practice. There could be no doubt that the substitutions proposed would be of immense service in the facilitation of the business of the country. It would have been a relief to the member for Kingston when he was in office had he had further legal assistance, while to himself, who had not legal education, such assistance was invaluable.

Dr. Tupper remarked that it was peculiarly apropos for the recent Government to have among them gentlemen who could go on to count one day and argue one side of the case and the next day take up the other. Such had been the case with their policy. While in opposition they maintained that seven Ministers were sufficient, but when they came into power they pretended that the case was changed. They had said when the late Government were in office there were only four Provinces in the Dominion, when the fact was that the late government in the division of offices had contemplated the extension of the union over the continent. In almost every other respect the Government had made a complete charge of fraud, but he thought the country would not be prepared to coincide with such a rightabout. He contended that the Cabinet should not be larger than the necessities of the country demanded, and that there should be no office which did not require the utmost amount of capability on the part of those who filled them. Indeed, were the qualifications for office very high, there would be removed many difficulties in the way of a government on the part of their enemy friends, who would otherwise be clamorous for office. He endorsed the remarks of the member for Kingston; objected strongly to the unnecessary increase of Cabinet officers. He severely criticized the Teeswater speech of the member for South Bruce, and his reflections upon the member for Kingston, which had been unworthy of him; nevertheless, every word he had uttered had been a censure upon his chief. He alluded to the feeling of uncertainly which would be created were it understood that a Minister of Justice was entitled to practice in the Courts before Judges whose promotion and position, to a great extent, were vested in his hands. Moreover, were the Minister of Justice to be allowed to practice it would cause a feeling of jealousy of which it would be almost impossible for the members of the bar to disabuse themselves. He concluded by saying, that feeling as he did, he could not sit down without expressing the very strong feeling which he had upon the subject.

Mr. Blake maintained that the offices of the Minister of Justice, and of Attorney-General were concurrent, and that a real saving would be effected by the course proposed. He regarded the proposed change as a very great improvement, especially in regard to the initiation and control, so to speak, of the business of Parliament. It was utterly impossible during the high pressure of a session of Parliament for the legislation to secure that supervision to which it was entitled. He denied that it was the intention to increase the number of legal officers in the Cabinet, averring that the present Cabinet contained a less number of lawyers than the Cabinet of the member

CHAPTER V.

NIGHT IN NETHER LANE.

All that evening there was a strange nervousness about Lina Chester, a dreamy wonder in her eyes, and an odd watchfulness and listening in every act and glance. She and Lady Athelston dined alone in the brilliant lamp-light; Martin and the twin Cecils—as Marjorie Castillain called the footmen—waiting as noiselessly and deferentially as if there had been a row of g ests on either side of the table.

To Lina no meal had ever seemed so long before; but at last the dessert was on the table, and she caught herself looking across into Lady Athelston's face with eager anxiety. But Lady Athelston only sipped her wine and played languidly with the forced fruits which had cost so much labor and expense. So the minutes passed.

"Did you look out that account of the wedding for me, Miss Chester?" she asked at last, and Lina nodded with a smile. An answering smile broke in Lady Athelston's sleepy eyes, and the girl rejoiced to see it.

"Then we will go." And she rose and took Lina's arm to cross the hall.

"Now, you shall arrange my patchwork," she added, complacently, as she took her seat beside the drawing-room fire, "and I will read this to myself after tea."

Lina's heart beat joyfully. For Lady Athelston to read anything to herself [illegible] her to sleep long and soundly.

[illegible] dexterous fingers the [illegible] diamonds formed themselves [illegible] the better it seemed for the [illegible] of the little heads. The [illegible] ught in the tea, and Lina [illegible] Athelstone, sipping her [illegible] ill with an effort. The [illegible] away; Lady Athelston [illegible]ences; and then Lina, [illegible]ntically, saw her drop [illegible] of those curtailed sleeps [illegible] ously pulsed for her.

[illegible] a book [illegible] ostentatious, resting her [illegible] the light, and [illegible] d walked softly out of the room. [illegible] ent as she ran up [illegible] the lighted stairs [illegible] her footfall [illegible] and she reached [illegible] trembling [illegible] to foot, when, close [illegible] her own door, she came upon Lady [illegible]'s hard-eyed maid.

"Miss Chester. Can I [illegible] you, miss?"

"No, thank you," answered Lina, nervously. "Lady [illegible] ready, and I am going to [illegible]."

"I am sorry, miss," replied Fletcher, regarding her very keenly. "What shall I [illegible] your [illegible]?"

"Nothing, please—nothing, thank you," said Lina; "I only wish to rest, and to [illegible]."

"My lady is tiring to be with long. I am sure you find her so," insinuated "my lady's" faithful shadow.

"I am not tired, only—ill," replied Lina, [illegible]ing, trembling, harassed, as she [illegible] on into her own room.

With rapid haste she changed her dress for a black one, and as she did so, quickly beating heart, stood a moment listening. No sound save the ticking of the [illegible] door and crept down a side staircase, and through a long, dreary wood door, near which Sir Neil had waited for her that afternoon, down the steps, from terrace to terrace, she glided, then crossed the lawn, and gained the path which led toward the limes and the rookery.

Hastening along this, Lina never glanced around her in the darkness until she reached the green door among the trees, which led from the park into Nether Lane. Hastily she drew the bolt, and passed out into the gloomy little road, weird and shadowy even in daylight, but now in dense and utter darkness.

Though she trembled as did the spring leaves above her, she fearlessly lifted the latch of the garden gate. "Then this is the right one," she said, aloud in her agitation.

There was not a sound of the girl's cautious footsteps on the gravel, but a little cry of rapture burst from her when she saw that, where the shutters should have met, a ray of light shone out into the night. Leaning with trembling hands upon the wicket-gate, Lina gazed eagerly through that slit in the imperfectly fitting shutters, from which the light crept through to touch her waxenly. There was no blind to the window, and she could see a portion of the room, though the curtain was half-drawn by the clear, pale light of a paraffine lamp.

Full in this light a boy of nine or ten sat at a small table, on which a cloth was laid. There were cake and sauces. His head was bent over his plate, which a cloth was laid. [illegible] ommon, childish voice. The sound [illegible] her heart throb, as it proved that [illegible] was the house—some one [illegible] was be reading. She listened [illegible] ay of light shone into the night. [illegible] Leaning with trembling hands upon the [illegible]

Mayor Lewis act 1as chairman. Those who took part in the programme were.—Mrs. Ellis, Mrs. (Dr.) Edwards, Miss E. Raymond, Rev. J. E. Lanneby, Mr. F. Peters, Mr. Marchant, and Mr. Ellis. Mrs. Raymond conducted the concert with her well-known efficiency.

TAKEN TO THE PENITENTIARY.—The prisoners sentenced at the late Assizes here left for Kingston yesterday, in charge of Sheriff's Officer Young and assistants.—The batch embraced:—Munn, ten years for manslaughter; Hargraves, three years for injuring Annie Sparks; McCormick, two years for forgery, &c.; Donnelly, three years for felonious shooting; and William Lawless, two years for forgery. Munn and Hargraves were chained together. A large crowd saw the prisoners take their departure.

THE TRAINS' DINNER.—Talbot Street School House has been repeatedly broken into by tramps during the last month or two, and considerable damage done. All late before the next annual meeting. The following ladies and gentlemen took part in the programme :—The Misses Sanderson, Misses Lattrie and Rogers, and Mrs. Lean, Messrs. Rev. F. H. Sanderson, J. U. Lean, and Dr. Flock.

Notorious Burglar Arrested.

Chief Constable Fewings, on Monday, arrested a specials named Henry Basket, a shoemaker, at Rodney, on the C. S. station, on Monday, on a charge of having broken into W. & R. B. Morris' store, for boots, and stolen $160 from a cash box on Saturday night, filed instant. $32 of the stolen money was found in prisoner's possession, and on searching his house in Rodney, $99 was found secreted, and the larger portion was identified as having been stolen. Basket is an old hand at the business, having previously served a term of imprisonment in the Penitentiary, where he learned his trade as a shoemaker.

Fleener was brought up at the St. Thomas Police Court, yesterday morning, and remanded till the 8th inst.

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.—We regret to announce the death of John Street, Esq., father of Dr. Street, of this city, at the ripe old age 78. Mr. Street was born at St. David's, Ont., in 1800, and settled on his farm in Tradalgar in 1825, where he remained till ten years ago, when he came to this city, to reside with his son, Mr. George Street. Deceased entered heart and soul into the struggle of 1837, joining with the loyalists in suppressing the rebellion. Subsequently he held the office of Captain in the old Militia, for many years. His attachment to the British Crown and Constitution and his adherence to British institutions were most sincere. He was, at his death, one of the old ed native Canadians. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that the grandfather of deceased was one of the Loyalists at the time of the first American war; that he was killed whilst fighting for the land he loved so well, and that the father of deceased also died defending British interests in the war of 1812-15.

RED RIBBON CLUB.—The entertainment given by the Red Ribbon Club in the Holman Opera House last evening illustrated the popularity which their concerts have attained. The house was crowded, and the amusement supplied apparently pleased all present. The programme was extensive, partaking principally of a comical character, and was participated in by the following ladies and gentlemen:—Misses O'Neil, Clairmont and Bright, and Messrs. McAuliff, Clark, Bond, Campbell, Pearson, Tanner and Mann, assisted by the full band of the 7th Batt.

MECHANICS' HALL TO-NIGHT.—Lovers of the drama in London will be afforded an opportunity this evening of witnessing the renowned Irish-American actor, Mr. Jos. Murphy, in a creation of his own, "Kerry Gow," which has received the highest encomiums from the press and public. Mr. Murphy's aim is not to pander to the coarse and low associations of theatre-going and of minor life, but to depict the different phases of human nature with a truth and reality that will give correct conceptions of the evil and good in man and womanhood. The New Orleans Democrat says of him:—"The audience that assembled in the Theatre last night to greet this distinguished Irish comedian, was a very large one. Heralded, as he has been by flattering encomiums from the press, Mr. Murphy was confronted by an expectancy, the realization of which needed all of the powers of a powerful delineator of human character. But, critically high as was the expectation, it was abundantly realized. Mr. Murphy is the ideal of Irish character in all of its phases, and impersonator of one of the happiest human characters. The 'Kerry Gow' (the blacksmith) is replete with genuine Irish sentiment and genuine Irish wit." Go and see him.

Wellington Street Methodist Church.

Annual Social of the Ladies' Aid Society.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Wellington Street Methodist Church was held last night, when there was a large and evidently highly interested audience. An excellent repast having been served by the ladies to those present, Rev. Dr. Sanderson took the chair, and the literary part of the proceedings, the chairman remarked that there had been an annual report prepared, and called upon Mr. Clark to read the same. The report stated that the Society had been formed for the purpose of furnishing the Clarence Street Church, and that the membership at the time of its formation was twenty-six, but owing to removing to their new place of worship, the membership had decreased to nineteen. There is at present the small balance of $1 in the Treasurer's hands, with unpaid subscriptions to the amount of $260. The outstanding debts of the Society amount to about $400. There are, therefore, after deducting the amount of cash on hand and the amount of unpaid subscriptions, in debt, liabilities to the extent of $229. This they hope to liquidate before the next annual meeting. The following ladies and gentlemen took part in the programme :—The Misses Sanderson, Misses Lattrie and Rogers, and Mrs. Lean, Messrs. Rev. F. H. Sanderson, J. U. Lean, and Dr. Flock.

EDUCATIONAL.

A Session Occupied for the Most Part with Minor Matters.

The Board of Education met in the Council Chamber last night. There were in attendance—Messrs. B. Crosyn (chairman), Moffat, Reid, McIntosh, Bayly, Overell, Manville, Howard, Colwell, Williamson, Craig, Reed, Boyle, Sippi, Hudson, Sharman, Wright, Cousins.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

Applications for the position of High School Janitor were received from Samuel Christian, Robt. McMillan, Robt. Horne, Daniel Griffin, C. Teale, and Thompson. Improvement Committee.

Miss Martin applied to have a friend of hers from the country admitted to the school privileges. Granted.

Accounts from John Moule, sundries, brooms, etc., $81.45; and John Rayner, coal, $53.85; and Alex. Purdom, repairs, $58.35, were referred to the appropriate committees.

Accounts for extra teaching were received from Mr. Hodgins, $6; Miss E. Yates, $2.25; Miss Attwood, $3.45; Miss Christie, $1.34, and Miss Bella Magee, $1.92. Total $18.27. Ordered to be paid.

REPORTS.

Rev. B. Bayly, Headmaster, presented his monthly report, containing statistics of attendance, which showed that during the quarter 308 pupils were entered on the roll —112 boys and 96 girls. Of these 17 were in the upper school, and 191 in the lower. The number learning French was 91, German, 5; Latin, 4; and Greek, 5. The Headmaster also furnished the names of the eight scholars who were successful in passing the Christmas Intermediate Examination. They were as follows :—Emma Attwood, Agnes Collins, Emma Lee, Alfred Deacon, James Forbes, James Kerr, Thos. Losher, Octavius Weld.

The report was fyled.

The Music Master, Mr. St. John Hyttenrauch, sent in his monthly report of the lessons given during March in the city schools, viz.:—Waterloo Street South, Bond Street, Colborne Street, Waterloo Street South, Talbot Street and King Street. Fyled.

The Inspector, Mr. J. B. Boyle, submitted his monthly report, containing general statistics of attendance, which showed that the total attendance of scholars in the city schools during March was 2,718—viz., 1,401 girls, 1,317.

The Inspector also called the attention of the Board to the necessity for procuring supplies of new maps, globes, &c.

The report was adopted and the supplies ordered.

Mr. Reed, chairman, reported from the Finance Committee in favor of paying M. D. Dignan's account for painting, $18.56. Adopted.

SCHOOL MANAGEMENT.

Mr. Bayly, chairman, submitted a report recommending that in future each substitute teacher receive the same remuneration per day as the teacher receives for whom the substitute acts, calculated as heretofore, but the maximum remuneration payable to a female substitute shall be $1.25 per day, and for a male substitute $2 per day.

The Committee reported progress on the question "What is the most satisfactory mode of providing the pupils with books, stationery, &c.?"

Received and adopted.

IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. Overell, chairman, reported that they were unable to agree upon the division of the Central School Janitor, as referred to them upon a motion by Mr. Colwell.

Mr. Colwell wanted the Board to take the matter up. The committee could not agree.

Mr. Wilson contended that no man should be dismissed without being heard in self-defence, or for some other act or dereliction of duty.

Mr. Manville moved the reference of the report back to the Committee.

Mr. Moffat suggested that a special committee be appointed to investigate Janitors' duties. He agreed with Mr. Wilson in regard to the manner of investigating the charges.

Mr. Overell felt it would be a delicate matter to ask any teacher or Trustee to lay charges against Mr. Webb or any other Janitor.

The question was discussed for some time by the members. Messrs. Wright, Bayly, Reid and others favoring sending back the report for further consideration. At length,

Mr. Reid moved, in amendment, seconded by Mr. Moffat, that inasmuch as complaints had been made against the Janitor of the Central schools, and of the inefficiency of certain schools, and of the inefficiency of certain janitors of the city schools, the whole question of janitors be referred to the Improvement Committee, to report back to the Board. Carried.

NO. 2 WARD SCHOOL SITE.

Mr. McIntosh stated that Mr. Kent, the owner of the ground on which the Dufferin street school stands, had called upon him and desired to know if the Board intended to re-lease the ground. The lease ran out on the 1st of October.

Referred to the School Management Committee.

NO. 6 WARD JANITOR.

Mr. Overell, as one of the committee appointed to name a Janitor for No. 6 School, reported that Mr. Fitzthomas had been appointed in place of Mrs. McLaren. Adopted.

A PRAIN BROUTHERD.

Mr. Overell moved, seconded by Mr. Manville, that the City Engineer be requested to have a drain constructed from the King street school grounds, in order that the stagnant water on the grounds can be carried away.

Mr. Moffat suggested that the Engineer be simply requested to examine and the matter, estimate the cost and report back.

Mr. Craig moved, seconded by Mr. Wilson, that the question of the drain be referred to the Improvement Committee.

The general opinion of the members seemed to be in favor of having the place drained to King street, but that the ratepayers interested, on the south side, should also bear the expenses as well as the Board.

The amendment was carried.

AN INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. R. B. Reed moved, seconded by Dr. Sippi, that the Chairman of the Board of Education, the Chairman of the School Management Committee and the Inspector be a Special Committee appointed to fully investigate the system carried on by the Board of Education of Hamilton with respect to their charges for fees and the arrangements made for providing books and stationery to the scholars, with power, if necessary, to send for and take evidence.

The amendment was carried.

AN INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. R. B. Reed moved, seconded by Dr. Sippi, that the Chairman of the Board of Education, the Chairman of the School Management Committee and the Inspector be a Special Committee appointed to fully investigate the system carried on by the Board of Education of Hamilton with respect to their charges for fees and the arrangements made for providing books and stationery to the scholars, with power, if necessary, to send for and take evidence.

Mr. Manville moved, seconded by Mr. Cousins, that the Inspector be instructed to furnish a return showing the attendance of subjects of study for public schools which are not taught in the city schools. Carried.

THE KINDERGARTEN SYSTEM.

Mr. R. B. Reed moved, seconded by Dr. Sippi, that the Chairman of the Board, Mr. Bayly and the mover be a committee to enquire into the working of the "Kindergarten" system and report. Carried.

ANNOYANCE TO TEACHERS.

Mr. Willson moved his resolution, notice of which had been given, to have 50 copies of the school regulations printed, framed, and placed in the class rooms. Mr. Colwell seconded.

Mr. Bayly moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Hudson, that the Inspector be requested to draw the attention of the teachers to the quotations from the school law referred to in the motion, that the same be printed and one copy be placed in each teacher's hands. Carried.

Dr. Sippi again called the attention of the Board to the fact that several teachers had not attended the instruction of the Music Master as requested by the Board, and moved that as several efforts have been made by this Board to induce a more regular attendance upon the instructions of the Music Master, and having learned that the irregularities still continue, this Board feels constrained, though reluctantly, to inform the city teachers, through its Secretary, that the wishes of the Board in respect to this question must be carried out, and, if found necessary, more stringent measures will have to be adopted. Seconded by Mr. Moffat.

Messrs. Manville, Willson, McIntosh and others contended that the Board had no right to tell teachers that they must attend music class after school hours. It was a very arbitrary resolution, and one which could not be enforced.

Mr. Willson moved that the resolution be referred to the School Management Committee for consideration.

Mr. Manville said a large number of the teachers were engaged in studying for high-er certificates, and they could not be expected to give up their studies to please the music master.

Dr. Sippi explained that the teachers who had no liking for music were excused from attendance, but the teachers who were capable of being instructed would not attend one hour in the week.

The discussion was continued by Messrs. Bayly, Boyle, Colwell, Comins, and the resolution was subsequently carried.

The Board then adjourned.

London East Notes.

Tuesday afternoon.

We understand that Messrs. F. A. Fitzgerald & Co., of the Victor Oil Works, has secured a three years' contract for supplying the Dominion marine stations with the various kinds of oil needed.

In the Presbyterian church, last night, Mr. Smith, who has had charge of that congregation for some time back, delivered a lecture on "Hindooism," being the second address on heathenism given by that gentleman. Mr. Dick presided, and briefly introduced the lecturer, who spoke at length of the strange religions of our great Indian Empire, of the struggles of the Mahommedans to get an ascendancy over the natives, and of the difficulties in the promulgation of Christianity. His concluding remarks were an exhortation to his hearers to take a greater interest in the Missionary effort in future. At the close, the ladies of the church presented Mr. Smith with an address and a purse of money. In the address they said they regretted his departure from amongst them, as they had all appreciated his efforts to advance the cause of religion in London East. Mr. Smith feelingly replied, and the proceedings closed.

Yesterday, a teamster, known as Napoleon, was caught stealing five gallons of refined oil from the London Oil Refining Co.'s works. It is stated that the man was in the habit of bringing a canvas roll with him when he visited the works, in which—those who knew him say—an empty can was carried to, and a full one away, from the works. Mr. Spencer, sen., detected the theft, and allowed him to go with a reprimand.

Police Court Pencillings.

Tuesday.—L. Lawrason, Esq., P.M., Presiding.

Walter F. Bailey pleaded guilty to driving upon the sidewalk contrary to the city by-law. He stated that from the appearance of his feet wet by jumping off on the street he had committed the offence charged against him. Fined $1.

Two other than eight persons were before the court for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. They were adjudicated upon by the trade. Mr. Bryce's business has increased to large proportions within the past few years, and he is therefore enabled to sell at the lowest trade prices.

Messrs. Thos. Beattie & Co. announce the arrival of twenty-five cases of novelties in spring and summer goods. Of this firm one thing is certain—everything offered for sale is fashionable. Visitors calling at this house will be well repaid for their trouble.

Many other prominent traders might be named here, but they are so well known, and advertise so freely, it is deemed unnecessary to speak of them. Amongst them are—Messrs. A. R. Dowall & Co., dry goods; Geo. Burns, gentleman's clothing and furnishings; J. J. & G. McIntosh & Co., dry goods in all lines; R. A. Garlick, gentleman's fancy apparel; G. D. Sutherland, dry goods; McGarvey Bros. & Co., hats and caps; Hendersons & Buchanan, dry goods of every description.

VISIT OF WESTERN MERCHANTS.

Considerable Influx of Traders—Some of Our Prominent Business Houses Worth Visiting.

As was anticipated, the one-fare return tickets on the G. W. R. and G. T. R. have proved a success. Quite a number of merchants, from all parts of Western Ontario, arrived in the city yesterday, and more are expected within the next day or two. By the London, Huron & Bruce train alone three car loads of passengers arrived, and the main line of the G. W. R., Sarnia and other branches added largely to this number. The early train on the G. T. R. brought some 70 or 80 passengers. We hear that many more merchants would have visited the Forest City at this time had the notice given been ample enough for them to arrange not to go to Hamilton and Toronto, where the first cheap trips were agreed on. Doubtless in the future our business men will bear this in mind. It may be suggested that these cheap rates should be arranged for in the fall as well as in the spring. As many of our visitors are to stay in the city for a day or two, it may not be out of place to mention some of our more enterprising business firms:—

At Kingsmill's "Dry Goods House of the West" an extraordinary variety of goods has just been received, Mr. T. F. Kingsmill having purchased ten thousand pounds worth of goods during his late tour in the European markets.

Messrs. Laing, Sutherland & Co. invite merchants to visit their old established warehouse, corner of Carling and Talbot streets, where they show a select stock of English, Canadian and American dry-goods. Their terms are liberal.

In hats, caps and straw goods, Messrs. Marshall & Carrie, Dundas street, each show many fine lines in all the newest shapes and colors. Buyers wishing a superior stock to select from should not fail to inspect these goods.

Messrs. John Green & Co., in their old-established warehouse on Hilcot street, have been doing a very large business in new spring and summer goods. They show dress goods, new tweeds and coatings, ladies' straw hats and bonnets, and all the latest styles in millinery, at bottom prices.

THE WAR CRISIS.

British Ultimatum to Russia.

COL. WELLESLEY SENT WITH A DEMAND FOR EXPLANATIONS.

Also Bearing a Letter for His Own Recall from St. Petersburg.

No Successor to be Appointed.

More Supplies for the Fleet.

Heavy Guns and Torpedo Boats Being Shipped from Victoria Docks.

Each Ship to Receive two Torpedo Boats.

The Diplomatic Situation.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, April 11.—Colonel Wellesley has gone to St. Petersburg, it is reported, for the purpose of demanding explanations of the Russian movement of troops in Roumania. He also carries an ultimatum from the English Government to Russia, which circumstances may render it necessary for Lord Loftus to submit to the Czar.

London, April 11.—It is stated that Jingland proposes a revision of the Treaty of San Stefano by a joint action of the powers, provided Russia will first admit the authority of Europe to do so.

A Bucharest dispatch says that Roumania is being gradually occupied by the Russians, and the anti-Russian feeling is very bitter.

London, April 11.—The circular of Gortschakoff, and accompanying memorandum is published to-day. Gortschakoff regrets that the stipulations specified by England as conditions of neutrality have now extended to the whole treaty. Russia says she does not submit the treaty of San Stefano as affecting Russian interests to a separate judgment, dictated by separate interests. The Conference could, however, deal with those interests which the powers specified as requiring a mutual understanding.

London, April 11.—For the protection of the ships in the Mediterranean from torpedoes, a number of steam launches have been sent to Ismid and other stations. A number of torpedo boats were sent to the Mediterranean yesterday. A chartered steamer is now loading a large number at the Victoria docks, the intention being to supply each vessel of the fleet with at least two torpedo boats. Additional 18-ton guns are also shipping for the Mediterranean.

Warlike preparations of the Russians and Turks about Constantinople continue.

The ultimatum of Gortschakoff's circular is not accepting England's condition for going to Congress. Without some such concession no step can be taken towards peaceful settlement. The stubbornness with which the circular was telegraphed to London during the night, and the refusal to the Queen excites remark. The information in the circular unexpectedly confirmed the view of influencing public opinion here, and was hurried into the hands of members of Parliament in the hope of affecting the vote on the address.

Edinburgh, April 11.—A London special to the Scotsman says the secret determination of the Cabinet, which Derby meant as compelling the withdrawal from the seizure of Gallipoli and the landing of an army at Anatolia.

Constantinople, April 11.—The defensive works near Constantinople are being carried on with great energy. The Turkish authorities at the Island of Tenedos have received instructions from the Porte in view of the disembarkation of British marines to guard the depot of war material.

St. Petersburg, April 11.—Gortschakoff's circular to the ambassadors, accompanying his reply to Salisbury's circular, declares that the latter, besides criticising the treaty, did not say what the British Government desire. He believes if Salisbury will make known their wishes, a better understanding of the situation may be reached. As to the Congress, the circular says Russia can only reiterate her declaration that each Power, Russia included, would have free right of appreciation and of action.

London, April 11.—A San Stefano special says the Grand Duke Nicholas and Generals Gourko, Obrutcheff, Nepokoitchitsky, Shouvaloff and Levitzky, with a large staff, and an escort of a whole cavalry, yesterday visited the principal defensive works lately commenced by the Turks between San Stefano and Constantinople, and then embarked on the Imperial yacht for the city. The erection of these defences caused great indignation. The Grand Duke obtained an audience and a message sent to the Sultan, in view of the disembarkation of British marines.

London, April 11.—News from Cettinje says the Districts in Albania, on the sea coast and Boyana River, occupied by Montenegrins, have been so ravished by war that the inhabitants are starving. The Montenegrins are unable to help them, being scarcely able to feed their own people. An appeal has been made to Austria.

THE MURDERED EARL.

Savage Scenes at the Obsequies in Dublin.

The Hearse Violated by the Mob.

Hissing and Yelling—The Mourners Hustled.

London, April 11.—At Lord Leitrim's funeral in Dublin yesterday the mob endeavored to capture the hearse, with the intention to drag out the corpse. They vituperated the deceased as an old ruffian and heretic. They also climbed the church yard walls, hustled the mourners, and yelled and hissed during the service. Several mourners were roughly handled while endeavoring to make their way into the churchyard. All of them had to pass out by an unfrequented way in rear of the church. Fifty constables were present, but were wholly insufficient to cope with the mob, many of whom were drunk.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Progress of the Native Uprising.

London, April 11.—A despatch to Manchester says—It is rumored in military circles that the British have sustained a disastrous defeat in South Africa. The Colonial Office is ignorant of such defeat.

Detailed advices from Cape Town state that the outbreak of Secocoeine, a powerful chief, surprised the Transvaal Government, which was unprepared, and was only able to send one hundred native allies against 500 Kaffirs, who were surrounding the fort. The Burghers' forces of the Transvaal and Natal are concentrating to resist a suspected headed outbreak of Cetewayo, Zulu chief.

Sir Bartle Frere, Governor of Cape Colony, is still at King Williamstown.

Five thousand men attacked Sandilli, chief of the Gaikas, the day the steamer sailed. It was hoped, if they were successful, that Sandilli, and Kreli, chief of the Galekas, would surrender. The whole frontier, however, was very restless, and the war feeling was strongly abroad. All the Government's prudence and firmness were needed to prevent a general native war.

Wreck of a British Steamer off Portugal.

27 PERSONS SAVED.

London, April 11.—The steamer Childwall Hall, from Liverpool, for Bombay, was wrecked at Sesimbra, Portugal. Twenty-seven persons were saved so far as known.

GREAT BRITAIN.

LABOR TROUBLES—A GIGANTIC STRIKE THREATENED.

London, April 11.—The manufacturers of Blackburn, Preston and Burnley, meet to-morrow to consider the threatened resistance to the ten per cent. reduction of wages. There seems to be great danger of a gigantic strike and lock-out throughout Lancashire.

DISASTROUS SEWER-BURST.

London, April 11.—In consequence of the bursting of a sewer a considerable section of Tothill street, in Rochdale, is 20 feet deep with two of three feet. Much damage was done.

GERMANY

PROTECTION OF NATIVE INDUSTRY.

Berlin, April 10.—The semi-official Provincial Correspondence publishes an inspired article, declaring that Prince Bismarck is conscientiously opposed to the Liberal party, respectively, involving the moderate protection of native industry, and hopes to gain a firm majority in the Reichstag therefor.

The Chinese Famine.

TERRIBLE PROSPECT FOR THE MONTHS.

London, April 10.—A Shanghai dispatch reports the famine in the Northern Provinces of China as increasing.

Washington, April 11.—In the Senate today, Mr. Mitchell presented a cablegram from the consul at Chefoo, China, saying: "Famine spreading; cannibalism exists; no rain. Worse next year. Will Indemnity be paid?" The cablegram referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where the bill providing for the return of the Chinese indemnity fund is pending.

CHINA AND JAPAN

San Francisco, April 11.—Shanghai advices to March 13th, report the famine unabated. Gov. Hennessy gives ten thousand dollars from the public funds towards relief.

Yokohama advices to March 23rd have been received. A fire in Tokio, March 17, destroyed 4,000 houses. The estimated damage is $2,000,000. The life was lost.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

he had governed Canada, had made himself acquainted with every Province, and had personally identified himself with them. He understood the prejudices of them all, and to no part was he a stranger. When removed from here in his time of leisure, he would not forget the country which he had governed with so much wisdom. It might be even that as he had written a popular work entitled "Letters from High Latitudes" he might write also upon the subject of Canada, in which event the Dominion and the Empire would have a work which they would appreciate. Canadians could not forget Lady Dufferin, who had patronized their charities and their institutions with which her name, long after she had gone, would be associated. Canadians would never cease to pray for the happiness and prosperity of Lord and Lady Dufferin, and the hope would be that he might be established in other prominent positions, to utilize those brilliant talents of which he was possessed. He concurred entirely with the address.

Mr. Mackenzie moved the reading of the address to a Select Committee to prepare a draft, and report it forthwith.

The address, having been presented, was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and a message sent to the Senate asking them to unite with this House in that address.

The following is the text of the address moved by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie:—"We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, Senate and Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, beg leave to approach Your Excellency with expression of the deep feeling of regret which we experience at your approaching departure from Canada. We feel it to be a duty to assure Your Excellency that the zealous devotion of your great abilities on all occasions to the public interests is held in high appreciation, and that, especially the visit to each of the Provinces and Territories of the Dominion, by which Your Excellency has familiarized yourself with the character of the people and the resources of the country, and the eloquent speeches in which Your Excellency has enlarged on those topics, have been attended with the most beneficial results, in attracting attention to Canada. We are highly sensible of the great degree in which literature, art and the cause of useful pursuits have received encouragement from Your Excellency's efforts and liberality.

"We venture to convey the assurance that your Excellency and your distinguished consort will bear with you on leaving us our warmest wishes for your future welfare and happiness; that we rejoice in the conviction that, though Canada may no longer possess the advantage of your Excellency's experience and knowledge of public affairs in so exclusive a degree as she has enjoyed them in the past, this country will continue to have in your Excellency a friend and advocate, and that it is our heartfelt wish that for many years the Empire at large may have the benefit of your Excellency's ripe wisdom, experience and eminent abilities."

Mr. Blake asked if the debate on the Hansard would take place to-morrow.

Mr. Mackenzie said it would come up for discussion immediately after routine to-morrow.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on supply.

Sir John rose and moved that the Speaker do not now leave the chair. Resolved,—"That the recent dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec of his Ministry was under the circumstances unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concessions of the principle of responsible Government to the British North American Colonies." Sir John said, he could not think that in making this motion he hoped it would be considered that he was discussing the subject from other than a legal point of view, for it went far above and beyond any question of party that could possibly arise. He had had something to do with the confederation of the different Provinces which constituted this Dominion, in the formation of which, to their credit be it said, the promoters had forgotten all their old feelings of party, and had united to bring Canada out of the chaos in which she had fallen, and unite all the elements and nationalities of which our country was composed. All must agree to see that her structure had upon such a foundation as should not be prejudiced or endangered by any precedents. Bad precedents were eminently dangerous. To change the simile, a flaw in the young tree was a symptom of early decay. The national tree of Canada had been planted and had grown, having been sheltered in every possible way from disease and infirmity that might destroy its promising future. If there had been bad administrations, the policy could be changed. If there had been bad legislation, that could be repealed by amending acts. It had been extraordinary during the time in the manner in which the Constitutional question had arisen. Gentlemen interested had followed up the line of precedents in the time of George the Third, but they had not such force as they have in our day.

Mr. Mackenzie—That is good Tory doctrine.

Sir John Macdonald—The Tory doctrine says that there must be a conservation of the constitutional tree, and it is a good doctrine that the treatment it receives be what that growing tree requires. He continued that it was of the greatest consequence that on the first occasion the constitutional question was raised it should be dealt with worthily, in order that such a question might not arise again. Eternal vigilance had been truly said was the price of liberty. Canada having, at the point of time, passed responsible Government, that responsible Government had to be defended here. In his estimation that the Lieut.-Governors of the different Provinces stood in precisely the same relation to the Governor-General as the Governor-General did to the Queen and her Council. In this event it must be held that the Dominion Parliament had the supervision of the acts of each Governor. Before Confederation there were Lieutenant-Governors who reported to Her Majesty's Colonial Minister, who represented the Queen. Before Confederation these governors were liable to have their conduct discussed in the British Parliament upon a motion for their recall or censure. He had found in the motion which the late Joseph Hume had made against the Governor, Barclay of British Guiana, on which was to be found in the 107th volume of the Hansard. Then, again, within only a year or two there had been the case of Gov. Pope Hennessy who, though he had not been recalled, had been discussed. In the debate he could scarcely quote the numerous cases there had been of this but in modern times, however, there had been the case of Gov. Eyre, who had been discussed over and over again and had been dismissed. Then Sir Charles Darling's conduct had been discussed. His case had shown that his benevolent zeal had outrun his discretion. This was sufficient to establish the fact that her Majesty's Government were accustomed to deal with the acts and demeanor of Colonial Governors upon perfect authority, and for them the Imperial Government were responsible, as they were responsible for not following them up to punishment when the merits of the case required it. Lord Grey, in his book on "Responsible Government," urged that the colonies had the largest power over the mother country. Since that the sovereign could do no wrong, while the former could appeal to the Imperial authority in the event of the ministers failing to do justice to them. Lord Grey said there was this important difference, that the former was responsible to the distant authority, the Crown, which could recall him, and the Ministry was bound to answer for what he had done. The same power in the Dominion, he urged, was in the Dominion Parliament as regards the Lieutenant-Governors, who were appointed by a commission under the Governor-General. He assumed that the Lieutenant Governors represented the Crown within their own Province in the same degree as the Governor-General represented the Sovereign. He would not say that was legally the case. A strong argument had been made by Mr. Kerr, of Montreal, that according to law the Lieutenant-Governors had not the same ratio of powers as the Governor-General. There was much to be said in regard to this, and he would not be surprised, if the matter were strictly looked into as a legal question, that the point he had made would not obtain. He, however, merely took it up from the legal point of view. It was, however, well known that, with respect to their Speakers, the Colonial Assembly, had always contended that their Speakers enjoyed, in their limited spheres, the same powers and functions as the Speakers of the House of Commons. In one case it had been decided, in the case of Newfoundland, that the same rights did not obtain. However, the same rights had been granted to Canada. Sir John here instanced the case of Sir Allan McNab, for the sake of discussion; then he would assume that the Lieut.-Governor occupied the same position, relatively, as did the Governor-General. He had the same powers and responsibility, the same right of exercising the prerogatives within his limits, and must be bound by the same checks. In the present controversy there had been a great deal of confusion created by the intermingling of constitutional right and prerogative power. All the constitutional writers said that the Crown had the prerogative right here to a measure, but it was another thing to talk about a legal right unconstitutionally exercised. The Sovereign could give away the Isle of Wight, the Channel Islands, or the Duchy of Cornwall. The country would undoubtedly be gone; but still there would remain the right to impeach the Sovereign. He had seen it contended in the Liberal papers that the constitution gave to the Lieutenant-Governor the power to dismiss his Ministers. That was not correct. Lord Brougham, who, though he was a little erratic, but whose statements of general principles were generally received with effect, had contended that, though it might be perfectly lawful for a sovereign to make money on trade and commerce, or in a speculation, still it was not constitutional. But he would cite another authority—a man of the present day, whose opinions were always received with respect, as he was extremely liberal in the views he rendered—Thos. Erskine. He had said that there might be offences against the Constitution that were not offences against the law, with which no legal tribunal had to do in the way of pronouncing sentences, but had power to pass practical force. There now obtained a code of precepts that were not to be found in law; but which were more practicable than written law.

THE SINEWS.

The sinews of war are scarce with the Czar at the present time, and this may have had a good deal to do with modifying his bellicose attitude. Even an autocrat cannot place a million of men in the field and keep them there when his purse is empty. The one campaign waged against the sick man of the Bosphorus has been found sufficient to exhaust his exchequer and use up his credit at the same time. He is now passing through one of those stages so necessary in drilling and forming the character of children and despots, showing that there are laws that never appeared on the statute book of any nation, which are stronger than their will, and that the power of individual absolutism has to bow before the force of circumstances. The Czar has unlimited power over the movements of his subjects and can compel them to enter his armies at his pleasure, but he cannot keep them there without the necessary supplies, and those supplies cannot be obtained without money. He has tried to raise those needful, those indispensable motors in a campaign and has failed so far, and is likely to fail in the future. We may well assume that this failure has also been without its effects upon the Czar and his Cabinet in bringing about that more moderate tone of which we have lately heard so much.

The rebuff he has met with in this attempt to find the sinews among foreign capitalists may have induced reflection, and led to the conclusion that this shrewd race and these keenest observers of men and governments, the money leaders of Europe, have but little if any hope of the success should he enter upon another campaign, and this campaign with the wealthiest nation in the world. The Rothschilds, the Montefioris, and others of this peculiar sept, are not likely to invest their douals in doubtful speculations, and though they generally transact business with the leading governments of the world, they contrive to invest upon good security for repayment of principal and interest. Now, the refusal of the leading firms of the world to advance a stiver to Russia in the present emergency is a commentary fraught with significance to the Autocrat of all the Russias. It would seem to us to say that—"We hold in the first place that you are unable to cope with England, with or without allies, that is the end she is sure to come out the conqueror, and that you will be finally driven from Turkey, and forced to recoil at every point. In the second place, a defeat at this time, and under these circumstances, may result in a revolution, and in the overturning the present dynasty, and where then would be the prospect of our being repaid these millions you wish us to advance?"

These two probabilities, with a class who make the defeat of probabilities a study; or perhaps these, from their more intimate acquaintance with the actual condition of Russia, and with the explosive elements that are now pent up in the bosom of this vast country, wanting only a spark to cause an upheaval such as has rarely been witnessed, may with them be classified as certainties—are quite sufficient to deter them from helping the Czar in this emergency. There is no class of men in the world with whom it is a matter of deeper concern to be on the winning side than with that of the leviathan capitalists, and their giving the cold shoulder to the Czar and his application at this time, is a sure indication that they have but small hopes of the success of the Russian arms, should the Government determine upon a war in which England is to be the principal, he who will be the allies and seconds.

The Czar has now become convinced that Great Britain means business. He has learned that the shackles imposed upon the nation by the cotton masters of Manchester are as feeble and powerless to restrain, as one of their own threads, when the honor and safety of the Empire are at stake. Gladstone and his party, and even Derby and his influence, are all alike powerless and unavailing when the military spirit of the people has been stirred, and the integrity and stability of the Empire have been threatened. Gortschakoff has watched the development of this feeling with the greatest interest and intentness, and he seems to understand that this spirit has been sufficiently aroused to convince him that if he means his master shall attempt to make good his boast that—"he shall enter Constantinople and remain in it if"—he must whip England as a condition precedent to his quiet and peaceable possession of Stamboul. The indications of England's determination to fight, if Russia maintains the position she has deliberately assumed,are too plain to be mistaken, and the support which the policy of the Government has received in both Houses of Parliament and the enthusiasm with which a war with Russia has been received by the people, are warnings that have had quite as much to do with the altered tone of the St. Petersburg government, as has their inability to raise the wind by means of a loan. If Russia can retreat with honor she will rather make the required concession than fight.

SANITARY.

The public health of the city should be one of the first considerations with the authorities, and with the citizens as well. Many anticipate that the approaching season will be one fruitful of epidemics, and though our city is one of the most salubrious in the Dominion, this is no reason why every known preventive of disease should not be employed to free us from such a visit, or limit its ravages if it comes. The spring is the proper time to prepare for the effects of a hot season, and while the proper officers of the corporations are attending to the streets, there are sources of sickness and disease more dangerous to the public health than the open thoroughfares. Back yards are only pest-houses after the winter has passed, and if not properly cleaned out at this period, the broiling sun of our Canadian summer will soon occasion fermentation and decomposition to set in among the animal and vegetable matters there accumulated, and the gases and germs so generated will be wafted to all parts of the city, bearing along with them the messengers of disease and death. It should be the duty of the proper officer to visit every yard in the city, and see that the matter of necessary cleansing is attended to, and he will find that where, from the surroundings, these precautions are most required they are least regarded.

We are quite aware that our sewer system is sadly defective, we are also aware that to make it what it ought to be and what the health of the city requires, must be a work of time coupled with great expense. We have to admit too, that with the waterworks in progress there cannot be much done in this direction during the present year, but all this forms no excuse for neglecting to make the best use of the means at our disposal. The connection between the escape of sewer gas and the birth of certain epidemics has been established by such rigorous induction, that it would be culpable folly on our part, to shut our eyes to the fact, and though our sewers are not very extensive as compared with the area of the corporation, still we have a right to take all due precautions that these sewers be not found a source of disease rather than of salubrity and health.

The planting of trees, which goes on in so praiseworthy a manner in all parts of the city, cannot be too highly encouraged. In addition to the ornament they afford, and the cooling and refreshing shade they provide the pedestrian, they, too, furnish their quota towards the general health of the city. While they do something towards purifying the air, they conduce to the vigor and cheerfulness of the citizens, and these are both excellent antidotes against the effects of an impure atmosphere. We would like much to see a general cleanliness, enforced if necessary, in all parts of the city, a domiciliary visitation regularly kept up during the spring and summer by the proper health officer, the back premises of every house subjected to regular inspection, the sewers put in a proper state, and every other precaution-ary measure adopted which experience or science has proved to be useful in preserving the health of urban populations.

The Imperial Government has concluded an investigation into the alleged brutal treatment in prison of the Fenian, Charles McCarthy, who died of heart disease immediately after his release. Sir James T. Ingham finds that he was not compelled to carry heavy weights up long and steep inclines; that there was ample ventilation in his cell, which even had a window, the valve of which was under his control; that his diet was sufficient, as was instanced by his gaining weight during his confinement; that he received medical treatment whenever he asked it, being visited fifteen times in one year; and that his "punishments" consisted of a fine of 5d. to pay for a handkerchief, and two "reductions of class," each involving, for a term of three months, the substitution of gruel for tea. One does not thinks that the regular and frugal life of the deceased in prison was calculated to alleviate his disease, and that he might have lived some years longer if he had not been set at liberty. The statement of Mr. Orton, a surgeon whom the deceased consulted after his liberation, showed that he was warned of the extreme danger of attending a public meeting in his then state of health, and raises a strong presumption that his death was hastened by the excitement of his reception in Dublin.

The "Malta scandal" would seem to be a drawn battle, both sides claiming the victory. A statement has already been published to the effect that Mr. Monsell had received letters from Sir Charles Straubenzee and Sir Thomas Airey, declaring that his honor was unimpeached, and now a despatch has been received from H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge, in which he desires it to be made known to Mr. Monsell son and all his regiment (42nd Royal Highlanders) that after "careful perusal of the proceedings in the Court of Inquiry, he has come to the conclusion that Lieutenant Scott Stevenson has not acted in any way in a manner unbecoming a gentleman, and he commands that he be at once relieved from the remark made on him by the Governor, Sir C. Straubenzee; also, that the regiment H. R. H. (to be conveyed to Lieutenant Scott Stevenson for the most painful position in which he was placed, and that H. R. H. informs him that he will see that no injury will happen to him in his professional career."

A novel use of the telegraph has lately been adopted by the Norwegian Government. As is well known, the herring fishery forms one of the most important sources of income for the country, the captures being made as the great shoals come from last Friday's round offer, up the Lom and Valley road, and more persons are likely to die. And all this was caused either by the negligence of the station master, who, not having his signals correctly placed, or, as the station master claims, by neglect of duty on the part of the engineer of the coal train. The responsibility is now placed wherever it may lie, for death has seldom come in a form more terrible than to the victims of the Slatington oil fire.

A Narrow Escape for Russia.

According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, Russia narrowly escaped a tremendous disaster last autumn. "Baron Osten Sacken, who was sent by the Czar to Khiva, to command of a well organized expedition to the "Land of Midian" (Western Arabia), in search of gold, which is supposed to exist in that locality in large quantities. The captain will return within the ensuing three weeks; and it is said, by those who profess to know, that he has discovered a country of immense mineral wealth, and will bring with him many substantial evidences of the same.

A firm in Berlin has just entered into a contract with the Russian Government for the supply of 200,000 tents for the use of the Russian army. The delivery of the tents was to have begun on the 1st of April—5,000 being delivered every week. Negotiations are also being carried on with a view to conclude a contract for a second 200,000 tents, and also for the supply of a large quantity of woollen rugs; while another firm has received an order for a number of shovels and other intrenching tools.

THE ULTIMATUM.

The dispatch of an ultimatum to St. Petersburgh from the English Government is a step which, under ordinary circumstances, is but the prelude of war. The preparation of such a document is of itself a hostile demonstration which a high-spirited people never fail to resent. One need only imagine how an ultimatum addressed to the English Court from any other power would be received, to understand the feeling that has been evoked at St. Petersburg. It may be true that Col. Wellesley will not hand it over to Lord Loftus for presentation at once. He will merely allow the corner to be seen projecting from his pocket. Yet the fact of its existence is a cause of umbrage which can only be met by corresponding acts of defiance. Thus the days and hours of parley seem to be growing shorter, and those of actual hostilities approaching. The position is one of much gravity for Russia. If England draws the sword in defence of the integrity of the Turkish empire, it is but reasonable to suppose that she will gain Turkish assistance. The two powers united having command of the Black Sea, and able to operate against the communications of the invaders, would soon make the place too hot for them, and compel an evacuation. When the phrase "soon" is used, it must not be taken to mean a few days, or even weeks. Before the British forces can be brought up to the front in ample force, many weeks, even months, must elapse. But let the time be long or short, the fact will remain, as Lord Beaconsfield put it, that when England once draws the sword it will not be sheathed until right has been done.

SELF-CONVICTED.

Speaking of the recent vote at Ottawa, the N. Y. Herald says:—

"The absurd proposition to impose an import duty on American wheat received only twenty-eight votes in the Ottawa Parliament.

Without entering into the question of the absurdity of the proposition, it may be remarked that if it would be "absurd" on the part of Canadians to levy a duty on American wheat, is it not equally absurd for the United States to place a duty on the entry of Canadian grain? And yet it is done.

Some members of the International have been arrested in Paris. The chief prisoners are Costa, an Italian, and a Russian woman named Culichoff. The correspondence seized shows a great activity. Costa seems to play a great part in the international. He is a man of middle height, with thick black hair, a beard of the same color, sunken eyes, and a lean, energetic, intelligent face. Mme. Kulichoff has the marked Russian type—a broad, energetic face, brown hair, a resolute mouth, and an eye full of vivacity. Although of ordinary rank, she speaks five languages, belongs to the sect of Nihilists, and keeps up a very large correspondence with the members of the International. She has a share in all the Socialist Congresses held during the last three years, and before travelling with Costa she made journeys with the famous Nihilist Lavrulieff.

The Emperor of Germany, if one may believe divers gossiping newspapers concerning him, is a stout disciplinarian. It is said that at one of the recent State balls he observed that a young officer, in talking to his partner, had accidentally turned his back on an English lady. Walking up to the unconscious offender, he was warned by say that none of them him round, telling him at the same time that he should never turn his back to a lady. It is related also that His Majesty happened to see another officer dancing rather awkwardly and immediately told his Colonel to inform him that he was not to dance again until he had learned to do it better—an excellent injunction.

The appeal of the insurance companies to the Austrian Government to obtain a satisfactory disinfection of the fields of the late battles in Bulgaria and Roumelia on account of the unsightly complications of modern society. A number of dead bodies lie unburied in Turkey, and an epidemic is greatly and influenza of the Crown. The affect the calculations in the actuaries' tables. Apprehension is certainly not unfounded. The doctors are puzzled—he warned which is now raging in Armenia may well make the directors of insurance offices uneasy, to say nothing of the insurers themselves, who have probably hitherto given little thought to the matter.

Notes and Queries is hammering at the question, Why is a certain preparation of apples called a Charlotte? The answer is, that it is so named after Queen Charlotte, the wife of George III. It is really named after the heroine of Goethe's work to the consort of His Excellency—that illustrious lady, who had so filly and well seconded his efforts to maintain the dignity, honor and popularity of his position. While regretting the departure of their Excellencies, there was this consolation, that Canada had not lost their services forever. Lord Dufferin was still a young man, though ripe in the experience which he had obtained in many countries. He might, perhaps, after this, hold still higher positions in the councils of his country, and we all know, from the honors which had been conferred upon him by the illustrious lady who reigned over us, and the opinion of the press regarding him, that his good qualities were fully appreciated, and if Providence spared his life and health, he would hold still higher and more important offices than that he was about to relinquish; and wherever he went, and whatever positions he might fill, he would still have kindly remembrances of Canada. We will know the feeling of Canada towards him, and he would be less than a man if he did not appreciate them, and we knew well he did appreciate them. There was only one of our old Governors left, and from the position he occupied, he was deprived of the opportunity of advancing the interests of Canada, but he knew, and felt, that in his new theatre of usefulness, by his successful reign—and, indeed, it had been a reign—we had the assurance of his being a sincere and warm advocate of this country, and had the pledge of his honest exertions towards our development. For these, and for many reasons which would impress themselves, it was with the greatest pleasure that he had seconded the resolution proposed by the Hon. Premier. Mr. Laurier, after a few remarks expressive of his personal feeling towards Lord Dufferin, said that he was certain the sentiments of the address were exactly those of the French-Canadian people of the Province of Quebec. He remarked upon the special interest which his Excellency had shown in the French Canadian institutions of Lower Canada, with which he had shown great sympathy, and the name of Lord Dufferin would ever remain as dear to them as that of Lord Elgin, who was held in such esteem by reason of what he had done in troublous times. It was the good fortune of Lord Dufferin to live in times of peace, and his qualities in times of peace had been shown to be equal to those of Lord Elgin in times of difficulty. The expressions of the address would be shared in by the whole Province of Quebec, and he was sure that the same feeling existed towards Lady Dufferin, whose name would be eternally dear to the French inhabitants of his Province.

Mr. Langevin said that on the occasion o the approaching departure of Earl Dufferin, he deemed it his duty to say something. All the French Canadians, he was assured, heartily concurred in the sentiments which had just been spoken. By the French Canadians the name of Sir Chas. Metcalfe had been honored; Lord Elgin's name had also been received by them with applause; and he was convinced that the name of Lord Dufferin would not be less dear to them than either of them. Even in the most remote back settlements the French farmers felt that Lord Dufferin had the deepest sympathy for their race since his advent to Canada. Lord Dufferin, since

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 11.

After prayers and routine.

The Speaker presented the return of the election in New Westminster, B. C., announcing the return of Mr. Jas. McLeod.

Mr. Costigan rose to a question of privilege, he having been seriously attacked by several papers.

Mr. Holton ventured to say that it was no question of privilege to bring up here the strictures of the press, whose columns were open to them. The House had had too much of this kind of thing.

Sir John Macdonald differed toto cœlo from the member for Chateauguay. It was a member's privilege, nay, his undoubted duty, to defend himself in this House from attacks, which had been made upon gentlemen in their representative capacity.

The Speaker said it was a modern practice to allude to newspaper attacks in this House. It was indeed highly inconvenient that it should be done; but, in view of the practice which had obtained, he did not feel in a position to decline a hearing to the member for Victoria.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie supported the views of the member for Chateauguay.

Sir John Macdonald having cited an English precedent,

Mr. Costigan said it would have been much more proper had the member for Chateauguay, before making his remarks, waited until he had stated his case, when he was sure that the member for Chateauguay would justify him in bringing up the subject. The paper in question was the St. John Morning Freeman, of April 1st, in which appeared a charge of himself and Mr. Renaud having obtained a contract for the supply of tins to the Intercolonial under the name of Girouard and some one else. The article charged him with having in this transaction gobbled up $7,000, into which Mr. Dewber, one of the members for St. John, was about to move for a committee of inquiry. He expected that gentleman, in fair play, either to say that he did not authorize that article or move for a committee of inquiry, which he (Mr. Costigan) desired to have in order to justify himself.

Mr. Dewber never saw the communication, did not inspire it, and had nothing to do with it; and he did not know what might be done in the matter.

After some further discussion as to the right of members to bring up such questions of privilege, Mr. Young asked the Speaker for a ruling.

The Speaker said there was nothing before the chair, and any member had a right to put an end to the discussion by moving the rule.

The subject then dropped.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie rose to move an address to his Excellency on the subject of his departure. He said that he rose to perform a duty which was one of a somewhat painful character. The address he was about to move was one containing an expression of regret at his Excellency's departure, and of thanks for his great efforts on behalf of the country. He was sure that he expressed the opinion of every member of the House when he said that the departure of his Excellency was an event to be regretted by every one. The position of Governor-General of Canada was one above similar positions in other colonies. Here we had a new system of Government—a Confederation with Provinces in a state of semi-independence. His duties were onerous. He had to balance the labor, duties, anxieties and responsibilities of the executive, and his duties were correspondingly increased. His office stood weigh upon the most experienced statesman that could be sent from the Mother Country. Therefore, it was always the task and duty of the Executive to act with the sympathy the Governor-General. It might be said that the position of Governor-General was one of small importance. This was not the case, for he had much to do with the promotion of the good of the country. This country had had considerable experience in Governor-Generals. It had had some of England's greatest statesmen as Governors; he ventured to say that none of them would be remembered so well as Lord Dufferin. (Loud cheers.) Since his advent to power, he not only tried to do his duty with impartiality, but had endeavored to make the name of Canada well known all over the world.

Sir John Macdonald said that, like the honorable the first Minister, he rose on the present occasion with mingled feelings of regret and pleasure. Like the hon. gentleman who had just spoken, like the members of the House, and, indeed, the whole people of Canada, he felt the deepest regret at the approaching departure from among us of the illustrious representative of the Sovereign, and desired to expressthe appreciation which he felt of him individually, and of the services which he had rendered to the country. During six years he had fully and fully represented the power, dignity and influence of the Crown. The office of Governor-General was not merely a formal one, it was one of power, dignity and stability, far above shifting party politics. He was accustomed to guide—he warned and he counselled—and while others might forget it in party politics he had but one object—the common good of all. That was a duty which had been fully and ably performed by Lord Dufferin. Especially was it important upon this continent, where republican institutions prevailed, that the beneficence of monarchy should be shown, and if ever it had been vindicated it had been here; hence it was with a mingled feeling of regret that he cordially united, from the bottom of his heart, in this tribute to the Earl of Dufferin. As the Premier had said, the address would be imperfect without an allusion to the consort of His Excellency—that illustrious lady, who had so fully and well seconded his efforts to maintain the dignity, honor and popularity of his position. While regretting the departure of their Excellencies, there was this consolation, that Canada had not lost their services forever. Lord Dufferin was still a young man, though ripe in the experience which he had obtained in many countries. He might, perhaps, after this, hold still higher positions in the councils of his country, and we all know, from the honors which had been conferred upon him by the illustrious lady who reigned over us, and the opinion of the press regarding him, that his good qualities were fully appreciated, and if Providence spared his life and health, he would hold still higher and more important offices than that he was about to relinquish; and wherever he went, and whatever positions he might fill, he would still have kindly remembrances of Canada. THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Progress of Work on the Buildings.

Hotel and Restaurant Charges.

Paris Correspondence N. Y. Herald March 30.

As the works progress the beauty and harmony of the whole design fast develop themselves. The details of ornamentation which now constitute almost the only portion of the general plan remaining to be completed are being rapidly carried out, and the visitor is thus enabled to form a pretty correct idea of what the entire effect will be. The unequalled advantages of the site of course count for much in the impression made upon him, but the manner in which the general outlines are filled up offers another evidence of the astonishing results to which high artistic cultivation may attain in the elaboration of a colossal undertaking of this kind.

LANDSCAPE GARDENING.

The distribution and planting of the grounds are sufficiently advanced to give a clear notion of the part which these features are likely to play in the present work of decoration. Up to a comparatively recent period the French had made little progress in landscape gardening. To the Second Empire in this, as in many other branches of art, its unmistakable progress is due. The taste for rigid geometrical lines has entirely given place to the graceful undulatory forms and sudden surprises of the gardening of the English school. It is in this style that the grounds of the Exhibition are being laid out. The area at the disposal of the gardeners is unfortunately too small to produce all the effect that could be desired; but, limited as it is, advantage has been taken of every inch of space to render the framework of the industrial tableau worthy of it.

THE ALGERIAN PALACE.

The pavilions belonging to the different nationalities are also rapidly going forward. The Algerian palace, which is being constructed under the superintendance of the Algerian Commissioners, is completed, all except the decorative portions of the interior, which will be very elaborate. The general effect is very imposing.

The foundations of the Egyptian pavilion are only just being laid. It is situated close to the Persian building, and will, it is said, be one of the most interesting of these special national edifices. The Khedive will spare no expense upon it.

SLOW PROGRESS.

One of the slowest portions of the general work and one which causes the greatest inconvenience, inasmuch as it forms the only direct medium of communication between the Trocadero and the Champs de Mars, is the enlargement and recovering of the Pont de Jena. The iron joists and balustrades are all laid, but the wooden flooring is not as yet commenced, and only adventurous people attempt to cross on the single planks laid for the workmen.

"AMERICAN LIBERTY."

It is decided that the bust of the colossal statue of the Union Americaine by the sculptor Bartholdi, which is destined for New York harbor, and which is all of the figure that is completed, will be placed midway between the buildings on the Champs de Mars and the Seine, with the face turned toward the Trocadero. It is a pity that the entire figure is not to be exhibited. A correct idea could then be formed of its colossal proportions and importance.

THE AMERICAN COLONY.

The members of the American colony are making preparations for the reception of the large influx of our compatriots which is anticipated. A great many, I understand, will forego their usual summer trip in order to welcome their friends and acquaintances. Matinees and vins champetres will be, parforce, the general style of entertainment. Those who have subprime residences will of course be in a position to give popularity and éclat to them. I know one of our residents who has already given an order for the construction of a marquee for the accommodation of 800 persons. The reine de la crème of the American colony—that is to say, that small and exclusive portion of it which has married its daughters to the paper-cadets of the impoverished French noblesse—will of course quit the city, to avoid contact with the crowd of hardfisted but wealthy manufacturers from New York, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, who will count for the next seven or eight months among the most notable and important of our visitors.

GERMANY'S FAIRY FRIENDSHIP.

Nothing has occurred in connection with the Exhibition which has created a more general feeling of satisfaction than the announcement that the Emperor of Germany has consented to the participation of the German artists in the Exhibition. The manner in which all co-operation had been refused by the imperial government at the time had left upon the public mind here a very uneasy and unpleasant feeling. It seemed as if only a decent pretext were sought for to renew hostilities between the two countries. That was a bad omen for a fete which was intended to emulate the general friendly disposition of other nations, and to illustrate the desire of France to cultivate the most cordial relations with all. The prompt and gracious manner in which the Emperor met the advances of the Count de St. Vallie, and consented to allow the German artists to contribute to the Exhibition, has removed all cause for apprehension and proved to the world that the only motive for the previous interdiction was furnished by the clerical tendencies of the Duc de Broglie governmental.

LODGING AND PRICES.

There is another matter connected with the Exhibition respecting which, though of minor importance, I feel satisfied that many of your readers will be anxiously looking for information. I allude to the preparations for the lodging and feeding of the vast crowds which it will bring to Paris from all parts of the world. Although the hotel and lodging house keepers have been proclaiming that they will keep down their charges as low as possible, I am afraid that strangers will not only find great paucity of accommodation, but a disposition on the part of those people to make the most of the situation. The apartments in Paris are constructed with such a strict relation to the wants of families that unless in the houses of rich people such a thing as a "spare room" is unknown. This being the case, the number of postulants who on such occasion usually find hospitality in other cities in the houses of their friends, will be compelled to resort to hotels and lodging houses, thus diminishing by so many heads the accommodation that would be open to foreigners. It is anticipated that the difficulty of providing for the latter will be so great that they will be compelled to accept almost any kind of shelter. Speculators are accordingly hiring all the empty and furnished apartments they can find, and fitting them up with sleeping accommodation.

A GLOOMY OUTLOOK.

The degree of comfort which their inmates may find there, constitutes only the smallest part of their pre-occupations. It may calculate that endurance will stand so certain that may be put upon it. But this will not be the only vexation to which foreigners will have to submit. They must not imagine that the proverbial exorbitance and moderateness of the Paris restaurants will compensate them for the discomfort of their lodgings. All the indications go to show that the prices of these establishments will undergo a sudden revolution as soon as the exhibition opens. Already the prices of meats and vegetables are enormously high, and families of small means find it difficult to live. Those that can get away into the country can, of course, find a palliation for the evil, but the proportion of persons thus situated to the general population is so small that their absence will in no way affect the rates of living. I know it will be said, in answer to all this, that, as at Vienna, the hotel-keepers and restaurateurs will overshoot the mark, and that a reaction in favor of economical charges will speedily set in. But Paris is not like Vienna, or, in fact, like any other city. While it has few means of expansion, it has the largest floating population of any of the European capitals. How, then, is it to provide for such an enormous increase to its usual exigencies in the way of living accommodation and disconforting some and heavily taxing others.

One of the many workmen reduced to the verge of starvation by the masons' strike in London was found the other day by his wife lying with his throat cut from ear to ear, in the wretched room they and their five children occupied. His endurance was exhausted. Meanwhile, the Germans imported to take his place go cheerily and comfortably on with their work.

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

He gave it, with a bland apology for adding her, and then sat down with the utmost ease in the prie parlor.

"There's no objection to your sheltering," said Dorcas, looking rather favorably upon him when she returned, but still evidently resenting some injury which she felt rankling; "but I thought you said you wanted that man next door. Shame it is, too, that he should be next door."

"Oh, no, I do not want him," smiled Jeffrey, pleasantly; "I only needed shelter; and, as I happened to know his name, I thought it better to ask him instead of troubling you."

"Never mind the trouble," muttered Dorcas, gruffly. "I suppose," she continued with intense acrimony, "he could have given you shelter, but I don't suppose there's anything else he could have given you."

"Poor, I understand," put in Jeffrey, in a tone of encouragement.

"Poor! Ugh, I've seen poor folks often enough to know them by sight, but that's not his disease. And, I can tell you, a half-mad miser, forever singing and making noises with fiddles and things; and laughing and knocking about, is not just the right sort of neighbor for a quiet, elderly woman."

"Indeed he is not," assented Jeffrey, readily, suppressing the smile which Dorcas's description warranted. "He must indeed be, as you say, half mad. I'm sorry for his child."

"Sorry for him!" echoed Dorcas, shrilly, "he's sorry for no one, I'm sorry for. He's more natural to be sorry for those he worrits and torments to death."

"I almost wonder Sir Neil Athelston let Colonel Stuart have the cottage for them," said Jeffrey, with intense sympathy, "he might have thought how unpleasant it would be for you."

"He might have thought—yes," returned Dorcas, icily, "but he did not. People like him don't think much. Thinking for others doesn't generally go with money."

Jeffrey had a little. His smile was irrepressible, but he would not let her see it.

"But your neighbor, on the contrary, has no money, and he does not seem to think for others either."

"Thinking for others doesn't generally go with miserliness," retorted Dorcas, stiffly.

A thought of Marjorie Castillain flashed into Jeffrey's mind—of Marjorie and of some others who were kind to this isolated woman—and an ironical thought followed, classing the gratitude with this gratitude. But no words escaped him but words of interest and sympathy. As he had let on gradually to tell him all she could of the life which these two passed in the next cottage, promptly as he listened to all she said, but so easily that he only seemed to be enjoying her company, not what she told him. And Dorcas felt the charm of his presence, as others had felt it, and often during the years of his manhood.

"And I've known ladies come to the cottage, too," she concluded, with a relish, "and one came in the dark and listened outside his door."

"Perhaps too bashful to go in and get her portrait taken for a few shillings," said Jeffry, with a charitable smile, and a well-concealed eagerness in his voice.

Dorcas sniffed in cool disdain.

"I was trying to drop asleep," she said, resenting even the retrospect.

"Not as good a way, by-the-by, as that you just through these thin walls; more like beggars than anything else, only worse. So I got up to look out of my room window. Then I see her, because she's always standing herself hidden in the dark. There was a bit of light from his window, and I saw her."

"Young, I suppose," asked the tutor, pleasantly.

But Dorcas was lazy on this point, and did not choose to show that she could have passed the question by with lofty unconcern.

"I'd been down here," she resumed, "and if she'd gone into his house, which I don't think she had the honesty to do, I should have known what she wanted. The wall in that cupboard is thin enough for that, thin enough to give me the earache pretty often."

Under Jeffrey's white hand there lay a heap of periodicals on the little round table. His eyes seemed to be reading the letters on the thin paper covers; but no words printed there could have brought into them that sudden flash of satisfaction.

"I hope the thin walls do not belong to your usual sitting room?" he inquired, in serious sympathy.

"Usual sitting-room or unusual sitting-room," retorted Dorcas, "the walls are thin, and that's enough to have turned me out of this same room, if I hadn't been determined to bear it."

If Jeffrey's thoughts had not been too much engrossed by other things, he might have fancied Dorcas rather at a loss to explain her reason for not being in her room by the thin walls.

That is the closet, I fear," he said, pointing to a door opposite.

"Yes, that's it," replied Dorcas, with resignation; "and inside that closet I could hear, if I liked, every word of the nonsense those two talk."

"If you had not told me this yourself," said Jeffrey, with great tact, "I should never have been able to believe it. Have you really never spoken to Sir Neil about her?"

"It is not often that Sir Neil Athelston troubles me with opportunities of speaking to him about anything," she answered, violently.

"I should like to mention it to him, if you would allow me," said Jeffrey, rising. "I do not ask you to show me the place, but—"

"Oh, you can see it," said Mrs. Cheere, a little mollified by the evident sympathy. "There's nothing secret in any of my cupboards."

With the door shut the cupboard would have been in darkness, but should not of course offer to shut it upon her visitor. He stood within for a few minutes, his head against the wall; then stepped lightly into the room again, and the lips that had been pressed together for that little time with cunning or agony were smiling now.

"I think that no landlord should suffer such walls as those to stand," he said, shaking his head sympathetically; "and if you will excuse me, I will remind Sir Neil of it. But I would not be should think you have been complaining; so I will mention it casually, as if I had accidentally heard of or discovered it. You had better not speak of this visit at all—neither will I—to anyone. Miss Marjorie Castillain is fond of coming to see you, I know," he added, suavely. "Does she know how the sounds disturb you?"

"I've told her, but she's harum-scarum; and I don't believe she heeds it."

"She is young and giddy, true; and would have forgotten it, I dare say."

A generous excuse, truly, from his lips.

"And Miss Marjorie sometimes comes to see your next-door neighbor" he went on, with apparent indifference.

"Yes, sometimes; as if she don't want her portrait, I knew."

"Comes as a friend," murmured Jeffrey, with a hot rush of color to his face, though his cool and easy insolence did not forsake him. "You have a handsome book here," he went on turning over the leaves of the paper-covered books on the round-table. "History of England: I see, in monthly parts, and illustrated. How very nice."

"Yes, it's a handsome book," rejoined Dorcas, with stately pride, "and interesting. It's a handsome price, too—twelve shillings a month. I began to take it in when my little girl was a baby, and stopped when—she was lost; so I haven't got the end. I don't care about the end, unless she ever comes and wants it."

"Very nice—very nice," muttered Jeffrey, turning the pages over and over, and wondering how Dorcas had found its interest when none of the leaves had been cut; wondering whether anyone could be found who would wade through all that close print and dry matter; and wondering, too, whether the motive for issuing such an endless periodical must not have been to insure the author a life-annuity. "Of course, you never lend such a book as this?" he suggested, value—"

"Lend it! No, indeed!" cried Dorcas.

"But may I ask you," returned Jeffrey, going to the point at once, "to let me just drop in and look over a few pages? I will be very careful of the work—a handsome and valuable work, indeed—and be very much obliged to you for the privilege."

"Not to take it from this table," explained Dorcas.

"No, I will not, and it will never be but for a few minutes at a time."

"Oh, you're welcome to that," she said, relaxing a little of her normal rigidity; "but you'll take the chance of my being engaged in the kitchen."

Jeffrey's eyes brightened suddenly, and his words of acknowledgment were airy in their gladness.

TURNING NIGHT INTO DAY.

The Electric Light in Use in Paris

Edward King's Letter to the Boston Journal.

The latest wonder of the "gay capital" is the introduction of the electric light. Not a moment was lost by the Republican authorities, after they had seen the clever invention of M. Jablochkoff in adopting it for city purposes. Under the empire opinion was not so easily gained in favor of a revolution in anything. A method of lighting streets and shops, which was likely to drive gas out of the market, would have no chance in those days. But now telephones, phonographs, pneumatic dispatch, and electric light are freely welcomed. The result is that on Saturday evening last the Place de l'Opera was the most magnificent spot in the world at that moment. The intense white glow from the electric burners directly in front of the steps leading up to the opera's entrance, and scattered at intervals across the grand boulevard to the corner of the new avenue leading to the Comedie Francaise, made the spaces for hundreds of yards roundabout as light as day. One of the electric candles seems to give as much light as one hundred gas jets. Gas looks yellow, muddy, and petty beside this grand fire, which defies darkness. For a city lighted by the new process all the terrors of midnight would vanish. Burglars would find their occupation gone. The assassin would have to sell his stiletto. Vice of all kinds would either slink away, or, disgusted at the small rewards which it would obtain when it would no longer walk in darkness, would endeavor to reform. Observed, in vaster the masters entering the hall on Saturday night, that the unaccustomed glory seemed to bring with it a certain sense of shame to some of the revelers. There was, for instance, a tall and very lovely woman dressed in the costume of a gallant youth of Raleigh's time—sword, cloak, hose—crossing for the evening as a man. She seemed very ill at ease, glanced quickly around her to left at the long lines of people witnessing her progress, and I felt convinced that some sense of the humiliating absurdity of her position came over her. I thers had been only the semi-obscurity of the square lit by gas she would have made an entree gaily, and mayhap would have gamboled merrily as any of the mad sprites of carnival.

The illumination of the Place de l'Opera has now passed beyond experiment. It will be kept up steadily, and the authorities will introduce the electric light in all parts of the city as rapidly as they can.

The Turkish Forces Around Constantinople.

By the retreat of the Roumelian army into the evacuation of the fortresses of the Quadrilateral, all that remains of the Turkish field force has gradually been moved down to the capital and its neighborhood, where it is now united with the garrison of Constantinople. And most of the troops which had been collected to defend the lines of Tchataldja. According to the estimate of competent persons, this fighting force, garrisoned in and around the capital and in various places on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus and on the Sea of Marmora, amounts to rather over 60,000 men. At the lowest figure, besides which there are some 25,000 concentrated at Salonica, and from 10,000 to 12,000 men about Gallipoli and the lines of Bulair.

After their hasty and disorderly retreat and under the effects of defeat and humiliation, these troops, it is true, can scarcely be supposed to be in first-rate condition; but the material is good, and there has been time for them to recover, a process which goes on with Turkish soldiers far more rapidly than with others. Well clothed and fed, and with a few good officers to lead them, these troops still at the disposal of Turkey and for the most part concentrated around the capital, might, especially at first, exert a decisive influence on the course of events in a coalition between England and Russia; not to speak of the Turkish fleet, the cooperation of which, under able leaders on one or other side, would likewise not be despicable in a struggle primarily, of course, aiming at the possession of the Straits.—Constantinople and the Black Sea—Letter to Times's Vienna Correspondence, March 26.

Bryce's Canadian Base Ball Guide for 1878," is issued to-day, and from the advance sheets we have been favored with a sight of, it can be truthfully said it is the most comprehensive book of the kind ever issued in Canada. Indeed, the American Guides cannot begin to compare with it, either in the quantity or quality of the letter press or the completeness of the details relating to the game. In addition to the playing rules of the International and Canadian base ball associations, the "Guide" contains the proceedings of the International, Canadian, New England, New York State, and Pacific base ball associations, together with the schedule of International championship games, the full records of the International and Canadian champions, and much matter of absorbing interest to the lovers of the game, who should lose no time in procuring a copy. It is a book of 80 pages and retails at 25 cents.

Curious Electrical Phenomena.

On January 22, shortly after noon, the belfry of Toney (Yonne) was struck by lightning and set on fire. According to Le Roche (who describes the case), the wind was blowing from the northwest, and a dense, low cloud had begun to cover the ground with large hailstones. A few minutes after a single and prolonged thunder peal was heard, and the cross on the belfry was then seen to be surrounded by a luminous meteor. Persons in the houses near the church saw coming from the base of the belfry two fire-balls of from one foot to fifteen inches diameter, and about a foot and one-half apart. They rolled on the steps of the building about twenty yards and disappeared. A woman in a room about fifteen yards from the belfry was carried to the end of the room; a young man who was passing was thrown on the ground, and several other persons were more or less shaken. Immediately after the thunder peal the hail ceased and was replaced by a snow storm which lasted three quarters of an hour. It was afterward found that the belfry was fired at two points—one at the upper part of the northwest side, the other at the lower part of the southeast side, probably the points of entrance and exit of the electric fluid. Toucy stands in the middle of a narrow valley, running northwest, and is rarely visited by thunderstorms, which pass nearly always to the right or left.—Nature.

EXTRAORDINARY RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.

Colored Clergymen of Richmond, Va., Foretraying Future Torments.

Strange and Ludicrous Results of Sudden Conversions, and Miraculous Visions.

Richmond, Va., April 9.—An unprecedented revival of religion has commenced here among the colored people. Hundreds of colored men and women are to be seen proclaiming with the peculiar Ethiopian unction their conversion. All the colored churches are in full blast, and morning, noon and night the ministers are thundering into the ears of their listeners the torments of hell. Brother John Jasper has, for the while, given up preaching that the sun moves, and has gone back to hell." Nothing could exceed the vividness with which he pictured, this evening, the torments of eternal punishment, and he scathingly denounced Beecher and those other preachers who attempt to show that there is no hell. Some of his congregation grovelled upon the floor in very agony, when he told that "same as a head of cabbage in him pot will de sinner be for everlas in in hell." "The pot will keep de cabbage still, and de cabbage will burn, but no pot burn up. You all will be like dat cabbage if you don't repent." There were 600 mourners at Mount Zion to-night, 450 at Ebenezer, 500 at Brock's Church, 230 at Memorial Church, and about the same number in the other churches in Richmond and Manchester. Yesterday the revival spread to such an extent among the hands in some tobacco factories, that they deliberately gave up work and went to shouting and mourning, and members had to be discharged. This evening a boy of colored girls went on Franklin street, Richmond boulevard, stopped and shook hands with the gay throng of kid-gloved ladies and gentlemen promenading there, and told the gay throng of kid-gloved ladies and gentlemen promenading there, and told them that unless they repented of their sins and were converted as he was they would be damned to all eternity. Then he went on to say that he had been converted in a vision which he had seen last night, and that she saw the moon bathed in blood, and the Angel Gabriel came out of the clouds and told her that this meant that the world was coming to an end right away. This has caused a profound sensation. Such a revival has never been known here.

About a Brick.

To the Editor of the New York Evening Post.

One bright morning in the month of November, some years ago, I was preparing to go down town, when the servant informed me that a man was waiting at the front door to see me. "Tell him I'll be down in a moment," said I. On going to the door a man of tall stature and robust appearance, calling me by name, requested assistance, saying that he had a large family, a wife in delicate health, and no means to procure food for them. "You appear to be strong and healthy," said I, "why not work?" asked I. "Simply, sir, for the reason that I cannot procure work." "Well, what can I do for you?" I asked. I thought I would test the sincerity of his statement. "If I could get work, what do you want?" "Anything, sir, you choose to give me, so long as I can obtain bread for my suffering family." "Very well," said I. "I will give you 25 cents an hour if you will take off your arm around the block for five hours without stopping." "Thank you sir, I will do it." After three hours I found a brick, placed it on the man's arm, started him on his walk, and then went down-town to my business.

Not having the least faith in the man's statement, I thought but little more of it; yet, as I knew I should be back within five hours, I determined to see if he performed his work. My business kept me away rather later than I expected, so I had to forego my usual walk home, and took a Fourth avenue car to be back within the five hours.

As I approached the corner of the street where I reside, I found a great crowd of people gathered—two fire-engines, a hook-cart, and a hook-and-ladder truck. Upon inquiring where the fire was I was informed that it was a false alarm, and that what brought the people together and occasioned the agitation was the appearance of a tall man carrying a brick on his arm around the block for many hours. The neighbors were looking at him from the windows and doors as he passed along, some thought he was crazy, others spoken to his answer was:—"Don't stop me; it's all right," as he interfered. Even with me, he was allowed to walk on undisturbed. "Where is the man now?" I asked. "He was there at the other end of the block, walking with his head down," was the answer.

He was just about turning the corner, and I waited till he had performed the circuit, then, taking him quietly by the arm, I marched him to my house, followed by a lot of boys. In the meantime, the brick had been put in place on the roll as a curb-stone. I then opened the door, and ushered him in, and, as I expected, there was a head of cabbage in him pot will de sinner be for everlas in in hell." "The pot will keep de cabbage still, and de cabbage will burn, but no pot burn up. You all will be like dat cabbage if you don't repent." APPRECIATIVE STRATFORBITES.

To the Editor of the London FREE PRESS.

SIR,—The thanks of this community are certainly due, through you, to your able "Stratford notes," for the very correct and so far as I can remember, have his promotions proved true. This morning you chronicle our worthy mayor's call with inference, "as the test case referred to, was, as I am informed, decided in Mr. Rosser's favor, and his property released from tax sale some time ago." I am not engaged in conformity with the statute—and cannot be made and provided.

Will the Assessor—our Assessor, Clerk, or our Council as a body. It is certainly absolutely requisite that the property of Mr. has been invaded in the critical state of our municipal progression. May not other municipalities be placed in the same position, and on enquiry have cause to thank your Stratford correspondent.

Yours truly, ALIQUIS.

Stratford, April 9th, 1878.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

DEAR SIR,—I read with great pleasure an article in you issue of the 9th current, about the Town Council of Stratford, their doings, and the remarks about Councillor Hogg and Board, as being not qualified. The remarks of your correspondent were good and well deserved. I trust the people of Stratford, now that the ball is set rolling, will not stop till the Council is purged of all those who are not qualified. The town debt is heavy, taxes are heavy, many improvements are needed, and unless our Council is a good one, and economical, we will soon be in a poor condition. Reckless expenditure must be stopped, expenses brought within the income, and the only way to do it is for the citizens to keep working till they get the best representative of party, into the Council.

It would be well when a resolution is moved in the Council again, as one was at last meeting, asking the Town Solicitor's advice on qualification, to have it done. The Solicitor would not then be going it blind, and left in such a position that his report is useless.

I see the Collector's roll is imperfect also; that certain lots have been sold for back taxes yet; certain sales illegal. It might be well to see that assessment rolls also are correct. Perhaps the best way would be to consolidate offices, if at all possible, and pay the best men good salaries it might be cheapest in the end.

In conclusion, I hope your correspondent will keep at it till some change is made for the better. He has the eye, pluck, and will to get the support, of the best class of citizens.

Have We a Street Commissioner?

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

SIR,—Would the individual who is paid by the corporation to herd the inhabitants of the City and otherwise look after our streets, after he has properly interviewed each owner of a horse, be kind enough to take an observation on Colborne street, between Queen and Dufferin avenues, and tell us whether or not that same individual is attending to his duties.

The Synod then adjourned to meet on its second Tuesday of April, 1879, in London.

MUNICIPAL.

The question regarding taxes will probably lay over for instruction from the Council on account of the absence of the Solicitor. The strictures upon the assessment roll appear to be the new system that is now making assessments, whereby the law allows large increases of land to be added for speculative purposes, assessing it as farm property, and consequently at a low valuation. The law also allows parties assessing property but not residing on it, to vote for Aldermen and Councillors, and no organization exists to prevent their names being placed on the roll at a legitimate value. Of course, when the Court of Revision convenes the Assessor appears to be the assessor's responsibility only, and it is the want of such a system at the first start of ratepayers generally that leads to such difficulties as for the time being place unscrupulous men into office.

ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY.

Last Night's Quarterly Meeting—Lady Accession of New Members—Presentation to the President.

The quarterly meeting of the St. George's Society was held last night, in the Bonsecours street, last night. There was a large attendance, and Mr. Thomas Heasman presided.

Seventeen life and twenty-eight annual members were elected, after a very satisfactory quarterly report had been adopted.

Mr. Wm. Hall, who left the city under circumstances reflecting no great credit on himself, and who was a member of the Society, was expelled.

It having been resolved to hold the annual dinner of the Society on the 23rd inst., the following committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements:—Messrs. Heasman, John Hall, Pritchard, E. Lee, Thornton, Brown, Geo. Phillips, J. H. Barron, and T. B. Cox, Secretary.

It was unanimously resolved to attend divine worship in St. Paul's Church, on the Sunday previous to the 23rd.

The Society was empowered to capitalise 10 of the 20 shares of the London Loan Co., held by the Society.

Prior to adjournment, the President was requested to leave the chair, which was taken by Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Wm. Dyson said he had been called upon by the majority of the Society to present to the President with a mark of their esteem and esteem of his ability as head of their Society. Absent two years, he was dead and they were making a bad choice in adopting Mr. Heasman, but although he had since taken back that statement and he was glad of it, and had said they never could get a better one. They never had a President who had done more for the Society than Mr. Heasman, as had been evidenced by his securing such a large accession to their life membership, and by his handsome yearly donations. Mr. Dyson then, amidst applause, invested the President, with a handsome gold medal, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Thomas Heasman, Esq., President of the St. George's Society, 1878."

Mr. Heasman, in reply, said he believed all would give him credit that he had done all with the sole motive of securing the advancement of the Society, and not with a view of receiving such an expression of their appreciation as he now had. He felt the great value of the present did not lie in the medal, but in the free open-heartedness which had prompted it. He felt proud of the confidence of the Society, and was sure they attached more importance to his services than they should, for he had always been ably assisted in whatever had been undertaken by the officers and members. He would work in the future as in the past for the welfare of the Society, and, proud as he was of this handsome medal, he would endeavor to wear it with credit to himself and the Society, and in such a way as to retain that confidence which it was an expression of.

The meeting then adjourned.

A bomb in Westminster Abbey is described, on the personal prejudices of the Duke. Byron's body, and even a bust of him by Thorwaldsen, were denied admission, although an inscription is allowed to stand.

"WATERLOO."

Constable Klippert arrested a man named Anson Fortney in Waterloo on Wednesday morning on the charge of stealing a pair of kid gloves, from the store of Mr. William Spiers. It appears that they were taking stock at Mr. Spiers', and when they came to the box of gloves the proprietor thought that a pair was missing. On telling his fellows to his clerks, he was informed that a man had been in on Saturday night, giving a description of the man. Mr. Spiers at once informed the police, and the result is, Anson in the hands of his friends. He was brought before Mayor Kranz, pleaded guilty to the charge, and was sent up for trial to a higher court.

ST. MARY'S.

The Mayor of this town has received the following letter from Dublin, dated the 22nd ult., referred to last week, as having been found at Mrs. Hill's door:—

SIR,—I saw an account in the FREE PRESS of a child having been left at Mr. Mary's, so I thought I would write and let you know what I heard of the matter. I was in Dublin on March 5, and a woman came to the Thorndale on March 6, giving the name of Mrs. T. Brown. She said she was a widow, that her husband had been dead seven months. She was dressed in very deep mourning and asked for work, and for lodgings for a family baby. The child was born March 15. It was a very fine boy, weighing ten pounds and was seven days old. She left Thorndale March 20, and I saw her on the 21st at the Broadstone and returned to the place with her. I saw her on the 22nd at the Broadstone with her when she came to Dublin. She said she was a Catholic, and was going to call the child Arthur, after its father."

The annual meeting of the Curling Club was held in the National Hotel on Tuesday evening. The following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year:—K. Waring, President; Andrew Clark, 1st Vice; T. C. Robson, 2nd Vice; L. Harstone, 3rd Vice; John Clark, Secretary-Treasurer. Skip—Andrew Clark; Lieutenants—Geo. Wallace and Jeremiah Donovan.

Madame Adelina Patti has sung the "Somnambula" twice at the Scala, at Milan, and has diminished her prestige sadly, because she lowered the Rondo finale a whole tone. The theatre has been badly attended, and the managers have lost thousands of francs nightly, having to pay 10,000 francs for each performance to Madame Patti and Signor Nicolini.

NEW MANAGER WANTED.—It will be observed that the Directors of the Huron & Erie Savings Company advertise for a Manager, to take the place of Mr. L. Gibson.

SAD BEREAVEMENT.—Mr. Thomas Gammon, of Plympton, lost his wife and two children last week of diptheria—all inside of one week. Another child of the family is sick of said disease.

PASSED THROUGH.—There passed through Stratford yesterday a G. T. R. train with a party of 200 emigrants from Brockville to Manitoba. They had with them four carloads of horses and cattle.

LAND, ETC., SOLD.—Manville & Brown, of this city, sold in Lobo village yesterday 14 acres of land to Daniel Steeds, for $1,040; also, blacksmith shop and dwelling-house to Hugh McIntyre for $400.

INSOLVENT STOCK SOLD.—The insolvent stock of groceries belonging to T. W. Rolston, Dundas street, London East, has been purchased by the Messrs. Trebilcock for ten cents on the dollar—certainly a bargain.

MR. JOHN REID, tavern-keeper, Ridout street, denies that he refused to deliver up the effects of the deceased Harris to the proper parties. He refused to take the clothes to the Police station, which he certainly had a right to do.

WOOD FOR THE G.W.R.—The G. W. R. Co. have thousands of cords of wood piled at Bothwell, Appin and other stations. The price has been rather higher this year, on account of difficulty in getting the wood out.

NEW RESIDENCE.—We understand that Mr. James Owrey, J. P., having purchased a site on the northwest corner of Talbot and Maple streets, is about to erect a handsome residence, the plans for which have already been prepared.

HORSE RACE.—Mr. Wm. Hawkshaw, of the Commercial Hotel, Blyth, formerly of Exeter, has matched his horse "Protection" against "Big Warrior," belonging to Mr. S. Grigg, of this city, for $400, in a two-mile dash, to come off at Exeter about the middle of May.

HONORABLY DISCHARGED.—Peter Campbell, arrested in Dundas on Tuesday on a charge of stealing a quantity of shingles, was examined before Squire Peters, Magistrate and honorably discharged. The information was laid by Mr. McMillan, of Dutton, from whom it was alleged that the shingles were stolen.

CONTRACT AWARDED.—It is stated that Mr. A. W. Knox, of St. Mary's has received the contract for the erection of the reservoir for the London Water-works. There were twenty-two tenders received for the job, but Mr. KNOX's was the lowest and he got it. The work will involve an expenditure of $14,000 or $15,000.

THE POST OFFICE DELIVERY.—In reference to the letter of a merchant, which appeared in yesterday's paper, the Postmaster, Mr. Lawless, has called to explain that the delivery staff is short, owing to the absence of one of the clerks through an illness of several weeks, and that in future the matter will be remedied.

STOLEN FROM THE CARS.—Mr. Thos. Sinclair, of Garden and Grove, Iowa, was one of the passengers on No. 7 train, G. W. R., last night.* At Komoka he discovered that his overcoat had been stolen. It is supposed that the thief got into the cars during the stoppage of the train at London, and carried off the garment. No clue.

THE BOOT BURGLARY.—Yesterday afternoon, Detective Murphy applied to the Buffalo authorities for the delivery up of the prisoners charged with stealing the boots from Powell's shoe store, last week. His request was complied with, and the prisoners, whose names are John Burns and Wm. O'Brien, will be brought to this city for trial.

COUNTY MAGISTRATE'S COURT.—Before Squire Peters yesterday, four Petersville youths were charged with stealing a number of rabbits and pigeons from Mr. Robert Carruthers, of London Township. They were convicted and fined $2 each, or, in default, 21 days' imprisonment. The names of the youths were Robert and Jeremiah Quinn, Jeremiah Collins and John Friend. Collins' fine was paid.

A ROW.—A dispute took place between Constable Nicholls and Mr. Lewis Clark, East, on the corner of Hamilton Road and Adelaide street yesterday, when the latter allege, Nichols struck him with his handcuffs on the head, causing the blood to flow. A number of spectators separated the combatants. It is probable the matter will be the subject of a magisterial investigation.

OIL NOTES.—From Petrolea we learn that Messrs. J. & J. Kerr's new well, near the Sarnia Gladstone, Error Railway tract, will be completed this week. Mr. Seth Keith sunk a well at the East End, and his enterprise was rewarded Tuesday by a very good exhibit. Several dry holes are reported at the Northwest. Over 120 producers have signed the Mutual Oil Association's new bond up to date.

A WOMAN'S BATTLE.—Over in Petersville, two women, named Jane Moule and Mary Rose, quarrelled the other day, and it is said had a regular "set-up," in which both fought bravely. It is alleged, however, that the former pounded the latter with a gunbutt, and thus came out ahead. The result was that Mrs. Moule has been summoned before Squire Peters by Mrs. Ross, on a charge of assault, which will be heard in due time.

HORSE STEALERS ON THE ROAD.—Hiram DeCow, known also as Col. DeCow, has been committed at Chatham to stand his trial at the Assizes on a charge of stealing a couple of horses from this city about two years ago. Mr. E. DeCow, of London, from whom the horses were stolen, identifies the prisoner as the man in his employ at the time of the disappearance of the horses, and Mr. Gustin recognizes him as the party from whom he bought the team. On Monday last Geo. Paulmier, Dover and Chatham town line, near Chatham, had a fine horse stolen from his place.

SALE OF A BRICKYARD.—The attention of brickmakers is called to the mortgage sale of brickyard on the corner of Adelaide and Grosvenor streets, lately occupied by Samuel Rawell, to be sold at 3 o'clock p.m. to-morrow by W. Y. Brunton & Son, at their rooms, corner of Dundas street and Market Lane.

WINDSOR.

Disgraceful Outrage on a Woman—Burglary.

Writing yesterday afternoon, a correspondent says:—"Between 3 and 4 o'clock this morning, Constable Craig, while pacing his beat, heard cries of "Murder!" proceeding from the back of the Commercial. Running for help, he started in the direction of the sound, and, on the Chatham Road, several hundred yards from any house, he saw a group composed of six men and one woman fiercely contending in a large field. As he approached the men scattered, and he made chase after two of them, but they escaped easily in the darkness. When he returned to the woman he found her writhing in a fit on the ground. She had passed from one fit into another, and it was not until 2 o'clock that the doctors and the officers were able to get her to the police station. Medical attendance was called, and by 9 o'clock she was able to became rational and able to talk. She stated that her name was Mora Burns, she came from Detroit, and has a sister named Mrs. Brown, and a mother named Wymer. Last night, about 10 o'clock, she went over to Windsor, and met a man she did not know, but says he took her to a house on Goyeau street. She started with him, but the party met some friends, and five young men, none of whom she knew. They went to the field where she was found, when they commenced to abuse her. She called for help with the result mentioned.

Cornelia Scott, a sixteen-year-old colored girl, was arrested to-day and brought before Justice Bartlett on a charge of breaking into a house and stealing a lot of clothing. She was bound over for trial.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, April 13.—There has been no excitement at Portsmouth dockyards this week. Work is fast assuming the ordinary routine character. Very little remains to be done in the way of warlike preparation.

Workmen have recently begun to get ready for sea the flotilla of iron gunboats laid up in ordinary in the Hattie during the last Russian war, but orders were subsequently received to discontinue the work.

At St. Petersburg opinion regarding Gortschakoff's circular is much divided. Some consider it a complete political programme full of sound common sense and worthy of a great power; others regard it as empty, colorless, and but a fitting translation of Salisbury's accusations. Some think Gortschakoff's real work matters below it as an introduction to negotiations on new grounds. It has greatly displeased those who wish the Government to rally the colors to the rescue and risk all rather than let Russia dictate to Europe.

The opinion at Berlin continues skeptical concerning the progress of the negotiations. The Nord Deutsche of Monday says that the joint appeal of England and Russia for the good offices of Germany could have a meaning only if the parties willing to make such concessions as would put out of the question the possibility of either party attacking the other. This seems to indicate that no agreement has yet been reached, but that Germany is doubtful about the sincerity of the desire for an understanding on one part or the other.

Bratiano, the Roumanian Premier, returned to Vienna on Thursday, on the way to Bucharest. He had an interview with Andrassy and Herr Tisza. The tidings Bratiano brings from Berlin are not very encouraging. The conviction there is that the Czar is bent on having Bessarabia and that he will take it, and that the best thing the Roumanians can do is to make the best possible terms about their compensation. According to the news from Bucharest the popular mind is already somewhat prepared to accept such advice.

The situation at Constantinople is still regarded as dangerous to peace. Notwithstanding the protestations of the Porte there are intrigues among the Pashas.

The discretion of the Russian Commander, and of Lieutenant Mehemet Ali and Moukhtar, Osman, Reouf and Redi Pashas, and several other Turkish generals, dined with Layard yesterday.

The Greeks and Bulgarians in Roumania and Thrace are organizing about to possession of the Greek churches, appealing to the Russians and Turks for support.

The atmosphere of Constantinople is believed to be daily more inflammable.

Consul-General Holmes and Count Zichy, Austrian Ambassador, is negotiating to obtain the Porte's consent to a joint Austrian occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

St. Petersburg, April 13.—Subscriptions will open here on the 16th inst., for a new issue of Treasury bonds, amounting to fifty million roubles.

Belgrade, April 13.—A Council between the Minister of War and general staff has arranged for the disbanding of the greater part of the Servian forces. Only a sufficient force will be maintained to preserve order in old Servia. It is considered certain that Servia will not participate in any further hostilities.

Vienna, April 13.—A Russian Courier has arrived, bringing an autograph letter from the Czar to the Emperor Francis Joseph. The relations between the two Courts have assumed a more conciliatory tendency.

London, April 13.—Everything is very quiet; absolutely nothing new from the East. The indications are of a peaceful solution of this trouble. War preparations of both Russia and England have practically diminished within the last few days.

The Berlin correspondent of the Agence Russe says the statement that Germany's good offices and mediation have been well received in London, has produced a favorable impression in St. Petersburg, whereas the desire for an understanding is real. The pourparlers continue actively at Berlin.

London, April 13.—A St. Petersburg correspondent says the efforts of Germany may, perhaps, lead to a preliminary conference, as the British Government is now better able to move favorable to such a proposition. The excitement is especially intense in Moscow.

A Vienna correspondent says:—"The German Government thinks the chance of success as mediator are pretty evenly balanced. The correspondent thinks the principal difficulty is to make an arrangement to obviate a collision at Constantinople."

A Berlin correspondent says Bismarck as a mediator will be successful if England persists in her present attitude.

It is said Russia is looking out for a loan in America. It is understood negotiations have also been opened in Germany and Holland.

A Berlin special reports that the new loan will amount to fifty million roubles, independently of the fifty millions in treasury bonds, to be issued immediately.

A Vienna correspondent says the work on the Turkish defences is again stopped in consequence of the Russian remonstrance.

A correspondent hears that Russia will occupy Roumania and Asia Minor as soon as an Anglo-Russian war is inevitable. If Andrassy's views prevail Austria will resist such a step.

Bucharest, April 14.—The Roumanian Government, after having repeatedly and vainly asked Russia to explain the daily influx of troops, who block the streets of the public buildings and private dwellings, and treat Roumania as an enemy's country, has decided to protest to the great powers.

Rome, April 14.—A Berlin special says it is rumored that Count Andrassy before the Congress possible provided the Powers consent to the retrocession of Bessarabia, the extension of Russia in Asia as far as Erzeroum, and, pecuniary indemnity to Russia. If this basis is accepted Germany would undertake energetically to use her influence to persuade Russia to grant the Congress full power to modify the other territorial changes proposed by the treaty of San Stefano.

A Constantinople despatch asserts that the Russians invited the town of Bulgaria to send delegates to Philoppolis for the election of a prince.

A Belgrade special says that Prince Milan expected to proclaim the independence of Servia on April 21st.

Constantinople, April 14.—The Porte has been sending vaivodes, arms and munitions to Scutari, and is considering the transfer of the Government to Scutari, to avoid being forced into an alliance by one of the armies occupying Constantinople in the event of war. The Turkish commanders have been ordered to resist any attempt to force.

Achmet Pasha, Constantinople, has been appointed commander of the army of Hobart Pasha, who will take place of Hobart Pasha, who will take place of Hobart Pasha, who will take place

THE QUEBEC QUESTION.

This act of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, Sir John A. Macdonald has very properly brought before the House of Commons. From the very first echos of the matter, its grave nature, its vast importance to the future of the Dominion, and from his opinion of the relation which the Dominion Parliament and Government bear to the various local legislatures and governments, he must have felt it an imperative duty to take the course he has. He has taken the wise, the judicious, the statesmanlike view of the question, which, from his ability, experience and love of country, we had a right to expect from him, and expresses his desire that it should be approached and discussed in no narrow spirit of partyism, but simply on its merits as a constitutional question and in no way should the slightest interest to the present and future of Canada.

Sir John Macdonald may be said to have taken as the central principle in this calm, judicial review of the whole question, that one which has been repeatedly insisted on in this journal, that we are not to look for precedents of one or two centuries ago, drawn from the history of a period when responsible Government was only in its incipient stages, and when neither Sovereign, Cabinet nor Parliament was so sure of their ground, nor so critically acquainted with the limitations of their powers as in our days. Sir John Macdonald does not deny the existence of precedents, he admits that constitutional writers set up the claim that, in theory, the Sovereign in England and her representative in a Colony of the Empire may dismiss a Ministry, and he even quotes most of the cases in which this has been done since the introduction of the new Constitution. But he claims, and claims justly, that these are principles at any time developed its character, and became better known to those who had it in charge, and were themselves subject to its application, is every day diverging farther and farther from these precedents, and from this theory of the right of dismissal. On this point, the most important in the discussion of the subject under discussion, we will let the Right Hon. gentleman speak for himself. The position he takes up, whether conceded at this moment or not, will be the one generally accepted interpretation of this principle in the constitution before many years, it is already the one held by Lord Dufferin, from practice and from official comments on the subject, it seems the opinion of the reigning Monarch, Queen Victoria, who has never violated the rule in either letter or spirit, and it is certainly the one which every true Liberal ought to stand by and defend. It is not a little suggestive, and we hope the people of Canada will bear it in mind when next Mr. Mackenzie claims the exclusive right on the part of Reformers to all liberal acts and opinions, and the honor of all progress that has ever been made in the science of government—that these liberal views, these patriotic sentiments, this guarantee that the people will of the people's representatives shall control and dominate the will of the Governor as respects his right to dismiss his advisers, while these advisers still have the full confidence of the country as expressed through their representatives, should have found an advocate and exponent in the person of the Conservative leader while the self claimed Liberals oppose them. Sir John says:—

"Now, sir, what is the case of the "Lieutenant-Governor, and what were his "relations to his advisers constitutionally. "setting aside legal questions altogether, "which I have attempted to discuss? Set- "ting aside his legal right to dismiss every "officer holding office under him during "his pleasure, what is the position of the "Lieutenant-Governor and his advisers? "They hold precisely the same position, I "contend, with respect to the Lieutenant- "Governor, as Lord Beaconsfield and his "Government hold with respect to Her "Majesty, and the honorable member for "Lambton and his Ministry hold "with respect to the representative "of the Sovereign, the Governor-General. "Under the Constitution as it now stands, I "contend that the Ministry of the day, so long "as they have the confidence of Parliament, "so long as they are sustained in Parliament, "must and have the right to claim the confi- "dence of the Sovereign, or the representative "of the Sovereign. I contend that, although it was otherwise formerly, and although the doctrine has grown up by slow degrees, and although we read of dismissals of Ministries by the Crown in the earlier day, when the constitution of England was still undeveloped to the state of perfection in which, I think, it exists at this moment; yet in this day, so long as the advisers of the Crown have the confidence of Parliament, they have a right to claim the confidence of the Sovereign. That is the great principle. If we do not hold to that, then we are all "at sea and in great danger of being "wrecked."

There is not the slightest doubt that the above is a very brief but at the same time a very correct abstract of the opinions now held by the ablest and most liberal statesmen of Great Britain, and as respects the nature and extent by which the speaker differs from the written authorities on this question, these differences arise, as we have shown on former occasions, from the rapid development of these unwritten constitutional principles, and from the clearer views and maturer judgment of the people regarding them. Acts that would scarcely have called forth adverse criticism in the beginning of the present century, would not be tolerated to-day, and much as the present occupant of the British throne is loved and respected by her subjects of high and low degrees, she might find it a dangerous experiment were she to attempt the role of her grand-father, George III., or even imitate the arbitrary course of her representative in a remote degree—the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. It has been very properly remarked that such a coup d'état as that of M. Letellier De St. Just, exercised towards her Ministers by the Queen of England, would create a sensation among the British people that would surprise the Sovereign and the Legislature alike, and lead at once to the settlement of the question for ever. The high constitutional authority quoted by Sir John takes the correct view of this question, and no matter what may be the theory or may have been the practice, such an exercise of Sovereign power dare not be attempted in England at the present day. "Principles," says this authority, Mr. Bagehot, "show that the power of dismissing a Government, with which the Parliament is satisfied, is not a power which a common hereditary monarch will be able beneficially to exercise."

There is no use in multiplying these authorities. Enough has been given to prove that though in theory this power or right call it as we may, exists still as a part of the prerogative of the Sovereign, yet in practice it has ceased to be, has not been attempted during the long reign of the present Sovereign, and there is every reason to believe will never again be exercised by any British Monarch. This is a grand principle. It is well worth defending, and we are glad that the defense of the people's rights and those of their representatives in Parliament should have developed upon a statesman so highly gifted, so ripe in experience, and of such liberal views as those of Sir John Macdonald. The electors of the Dominion will now be able to understand the value of those claims put forward by the Reformers, to be considered the only friends of popular government, the only advocates of popular rights and the only defenders of the independence of Parliament.

A skilfully planned attempt was made to carry off the valuable jewels of Lady Rosebery at Petworth House, Sussex, the seat of Lord Leconfield, at which Lord and Lady Rosebery are spending their honeymoon. The dressing room is situated in the back part of the mansion, overlooking a retired courtyard. When the guests in the house were at dinner, one of the men servants of the house passing through the courtyard observed a flickering light in the window of the dressing room, the blinds of which were drawn. He stood for a moment looking at the window, when, observing the forms of two persons moving about, he at once, without entering the house, rang an alarm bell attached to the exterior of the mansion. Finding that the effect of disturbing the robbers, who escaped by a ladder placed perpendicularly against the wall. The dressing-room was locked on the inside, but the robbers had not succeeded in carrying away any booty. This was due to the fact that the jewel cases of Lady Rosebery were placed in a locked iron safe in which the money was furnished, instead of being left, as is generally the case, on the table.

The morning after the fall of Plevna the London Daily Telegraph issued an edition of 296,000 copies. The proprietors are literally coining money, their net income considerably exceeding 8,000,000 a year. All this has been done in fifteen years, and is due to the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage of $20,000 on the machinery and fixtures of the paper, when it was a penny, by a family of Jews, type brokers, named Levy. Two have since dropped their names, and have, "under royal sign manual," taken that of Lawson, and the names of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lawson appear in the list of guests at the Prince of Wales's festival. Mr. Edward Lawson is a familiar face in the lobby of the House of Commons, is editor-in-chief. He is about 47, and has a keen eye to a barometer.

Kao Ta-jen, the Chinese Ambassador to England, has kept a diary ever since he started on his voyage to Europe, which is said to be full of intelligent comments on European manners and customs, and is a very different thing from the somewhat childish record of his travels which the Grand Duke of Russia gave to the world. The Chinese Ambassador's diary was sent for publication to China, and at first the mandarins there endeavored to get it suppressed, on account of the very free manner in which it contrasted the institutions of the outer "barbarians" with those of the Celestial Empire. It has, however, since seen the light, and is now being translated into English, with a view to publication in London.

Bank robbers will be especially interested to hear that the French Exposition Commissioners are constructing a strong room for the state jewels, twelve feet deep and four feet square, thickly cemented, and with a double iron floor and pipes to flood it in case of fire. The jewels will be exhibited in a glazed case of exquisite design, which will be let down into the space below immediately the exhibition doors are closed, and covered with a heavy iron trap on which two special guardians will place their beds.

..Under the title of "The Gardener Bird," the London Gardeners' Chronicle gives a description, with an illustrative woodcut from an original sketch drawn on the spot by Signor Beccari, of a bird which is not only an expert architect, building a nest like the bower bird of Australia, but also a gardener, laying out a garden in front of it. The bird is a native of New Guinea, and makes a nest of the stems of an orchid. In front of the nest a dressed lawn of moss is formed, on which the attentive husband places day by day, for the delectation of his mate, flowers and fruits of bright colors and pleasing flavor.

"REFORM" AGAIN DISGRACED.

The motion on the part of Sir John Macdonald, calling in question the reconstruction of the Lieut.-Governor of Quebec, deserved to have received at the hands of the House the gravest consideration. The question at issue was one of great constitutional importance. The administration of Mr. DeBoucherville, in Quebec, had been rudely dismissed by Mr. Letellier, while in the full enjoyment of the confidence of both branches of the Legislature, and even while the Legislature was still in session. On the eve of an important election, Mr. Letellier had done this, with the apparent intent of throwing power into the hands of his friends during the approaching Parliamentary contest. Such an act, so subversive of that which is known as constitutional government, called for a well-merited rebuke at the hands of the representatives of the people. But the "Reform Government" of the day determined that that should not be. Though unable to defend Mr. Letellier, they determined that no censure should be passed upon him; that, at least, they could do by the means of their mechanical majority. The method they took has been characteristic. So soon as the debate at the hands of Sir John, Mr. Langevin, Mr. Masson, and others, became unconveniently hot for them, they put up Mr. Cheval to work with his tin whistle and his band of lacchanalian songsters, to interrupt the speakers, and by flapping of desks, hooting, shouting, snatches of songs, and other immoral proceedings, the endeavor was made to prevent the opinions of the members of the Opposition from reaching the country. The pandemonium thus set up arose in consequence of the amendment of Mr. McDougall, of Three Rivers, on Friday night, to adjourn the debate. This did not meet with the views of Mr. Mackenzie though no subject has ever been submitted to Parliament calling for a fuller discussion, a more lucid and wide exposition. All sections of the Dominion are interested in it, because the conduct of Mr. Letellier if justified by the "Reformers" to-day, may find a repetition in Ontario, Nova Scotia, or some other Province in the future. But McDougall's most reasonable proposition was not only met with objection on the part of the Administration itself, but at one inconsiderate mob at their backs supported them in their determination. Whenever any member of the Opposition attempted to speak to the merits of the matter in hand, he was assailed with noises the most discordant, with language the most indecorous and improper, and even with threats. It was not in human nature as exhibited in Parliamentary life to patiently submit to such outrages. The Opposition held its ground, declaring from hour to hour their right to be heard, and their intention of being listened to. Hence, the session continued on through the whole of Friday night and Saturday up to six o'clock on the evening of that day. At that hour Mr. Mackenzie began to realize the folly of his course, and agreed to an adjournment, and the proceedings that had lasted twenty-seven hours were suspended. Earl Mackenzie and his friends behaved with anything approaching to common decency, they would have consented to the adjournment of the debate on Friday night, and the country would have been spared scenes which are incompatable with a respect for parliamentary government. The determination to date a day's duration on so important a matter is another act disgraceful to the administration. Upon the introduction of the resolution by Sir John Macdonald, he pointed out Mr. Letellier's dereliction, but a constitutional question, and in one of those brilliant efforts for which he is so remarkable, and so superior, he dealt with it from that point of view. But Mr. Mackenzie determined to make a party question of it, and still further to besmear the Reform escutcheon, by refusing the very course which have neither precedent nor common sense to warrant them. Whether one looks at the procedure of Letellier himself, or regards the manner in which he acted, to obviate the passing of a censure upon them, in either case the tactics are found to have been disgraceful. Talk of "moral elevation!" why what a moral degradation dragged constitutional procedure in the dirt, and have procured a noisy band of half inebriated followers to foot down those who dared to be heard, or to disconcert a line of action which, if not strongly rebuked, may lay the foundation to a disruption of the tie of Confederation itself.

A Great Engineering Work.

A bridge of such proportions as the world has never yet seen is proposed by Sir Joseph Banalgette for the purpose of connecting the two banks of the Thames in the vicinity of the Tower, and the plan has received the approval of the Metropolitan Board.

The operation contemplated by the Board consists in building up a structure of steel crossing the Thames in one tremendous span, clearing the water at such an altitude that three-fourths of the masted ships which require to do so will be able to pass under the elevated roadway without any hindrance, while the remaining fourth will merely have to lower their topmasts, which they may very well afford to do, as topsails are not carried in the Thames above Gravesend. The case now before us affords a striking instance of how little practical results which are apt to follow from improved processes in the arts. Steel, when perfect in composition, is capable of bearing a much more severe strain than iron, but the difficulty has been to ensure uniformity of quality in the superior metal. Sir J. Bazalgette observes that until a recent date the ductileness of steel was a disadvantage, as to its quality have prevented its use in large structural works. But the improvements which have been effected by Dr. Siemens and others in the manufacture of this metal have rendered it more thoroughly trustworthy, and have enabled it to be produced, at a moderate cost, with nearly double the strength of iron. Hence it is now possible to construct such a bridge as would have been practically out of the question a few years ago.

One bold span of eight hundred and fifty feet will carry the proposed highway across the river from the irregular stairs to Horselydown. Of course the approaches extend farther inland. The bridge is designed in the form of an immense arch, and is composed of two parallel girders, the arch springing from the foot of that which appears to be a flanking tower on each side of the river. The roadway passes almost on a level line very near the top of these towers, and intersects the arch at a short distance from the shore, the greater part of the roadway being suspended from the parallel girders between which it passes. The design is, in fact, a simple one, and if it does not strike the eye at once as possessing any degree of elegance, it cannot be called altogether ugly.—London Standard.

WAR PREPARATIONS IN ENGLAND.

200-ton Guns—The Ordnance of the Future.

WORK AT THE DOCKYARDS.

From the London Times.

It has been known for a fortnight past that the Government was in treaty with Sir William Armstrong for the purchase of four 100-ton guns, which are near completion at Elswick, but it was considered prudent to keep the negotiation secret, as there were other bidders for the monster weapons in the European market. Arrangements are now completed by which these four guns have become the property of the British nation, and in the course of two or three months they will be ready for mounting on board any ship which is prepared to carry them. It is not likely, however, that they will be placed on shipboard for some time to come, for the Admiralty have made no provision for them, neither does it appear that the present condition of naval armaments shows any demand for such mighty ordnance. The chief argument for their acquirement was the apprehension that they might become the property of another Power, and so enable it to dominate the sea. At present, although Italy has 100-ton guns for the two latest war ships, and England has ready her 80-ton guns for Her Majesty's ship Inflexible, there is no armour afloat which can resist the 35-ton and 38-ton "Woolwich infants," which have during the last few years been produced at the Royal gun factories in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, and employed in the national defences by land and sea. The subject has fully engaged the attention of the Government, and the desirability of manufacturing something heavier than the 80-ton gun has been strongly advocated, but while foreign nations plate their ships with anything less than 19½ inches of iron they are regarded as at the mercy of the 80ton. Palliser projectile fired by the 38-ton gun, and the authorities have consequently hesitated about taking a step till further in advance. The reflection, however, that the Inflexible, with its 24 inches of armour plating, would be defenceless against the 100-ton guns which Italy possesses, and some other power might have possessed, has now induced the Government to conclude the present purchase, and furthermore, to consider whether they should stop at this point. It is pretty well authenticated that the Italians have provided themselves with a steel-plated target, which even their 100-ton guns penetrate, and that they are preparing a ship which shall be defended with this armour. In view of this circumstance, the authorities are deliberating upon the production of a much more heavy and powerful piece of ordnance, and it is anticipated that an order will be given before long to the Royal Gun Factories for a gun of over 100 tons. The drawings for such a weapon were prepared long since; the machinery is all prepared for constructing it, and all that is required is the order to proceed. Such a gun would throw a shot of three tons weight and pierce three feet of solid armor. It would, however, take two years to make, and perhaps another year for experiments. "Ask my other patients," said Dr. Royston. This seemed to be the straw that broke the camel's back, for Peter replied with a kick and tone of unutterable sadness—"This is hard saying gentleman of the jury, and one that requires me to die or to have powers as I've heard tell ceased to be exercised since the Apostles. Does he expect me to bring the angel of Gabriel down to look his hero before the time and cry aloud, 'Awake ye dead and tell this court and jury your opinion of Royston's practice. Am I to go to the tomb and say to him as is at last at rest from physicians' doctors' bills, 'Git up here, you, and state if you died a natural death, or was you hurried up some by doctors?' He says sait his pills acts, and, gentlemen of the jury, they are sich infarnal pills as ever. Gentlemen of the jury, he has eat chickens enough at my house to pay for his suives, and I furnished the rage, and I don't suppose he charges for making her worse, and even he don't pretend to charge for curing of her. I plain pointing, and the preservation of the furniture. The Osborne, which has made a satisfactory trial of her engines, has received more attention from the dockyard authorities. Not only has she been completely repainted and regilt, but the bed-room furniture, which was formerly mahogany, has been covered with maple veneer, and been made to harmonize with the doors and other maple fittings of the yacht.

A million cartridges has become the minimum issue when furnishing supplies to the home depôt, and at the present time there are three ships at Woolwich each ordered to take out a million rounds for the same destinations. The War Department steamship Earl de Grey is embarking a million for Portsmouth; the Edward Austin, a hired vessel, taking in 4,000 stands of Martini-Henry rifles and other stores for Edinburgh, will first go to the reserve magazine at Upnor for a million rounds for the same place; and the Charlotte, also hired for the voyage, will embark at Upnor a third million for Tynemouth. The Alma, a Government steamship, is embarking at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, a heterogeneous cargo for the forts in the Channel Islands, and several other vessels are employed conveying from Woolwich to Sheerness the heavy guns and 10-inch armour-plates used to complete the defences at the entrance to the Thames and Medway.

The new field-gun, which has by a course of experiments extending over more than two years undergone an evolution from a 9-pounder to a 12-pounder without enlarging its bore or materially increasing its weight, has undergone a further and final development, and may now be described as it appears as the model field-piece of the British Artillery in the shape and weight of a 13-pounder. Experience has proved that much of the value of a good field-gun lies in the length of the barrel, and accordingly the 13-pounder, although no thicker than a 9-pounder, will be considerably longer than even the 16-pounder, the heavy gun of the field batteries of artillery, the efficiency of which is now admitted to have been sacrificed to the prejudice which existed at its introduction against impairing its symmetry by elongating the muzzle. The 13-pounder has undergone a rigid course of experiments. It is a compound of all the recent inventions, and it has produced splendid results.

The four 100-ton guns purchased by the Government from Sir William Armstrong are intended to be used in the land defences until, at least, provision is made for them in the Royal Navy, and they will probably be mounted in the fortifications at Dover, and stations either at home or in the Mediterranean. It is not decided whether any of them are to come to Woolwich, but there is thought to be no necessity for the course of experiments usual to a new gun, as the Government have the advantage of the first trial at Spezzia made with the first gun of this kind sent to Italy. The Italians have five of those 100-ton guns, including the experimental one, and they paid Sir William Armstrong more than £16,000 each for them. The price at which the British Government has acquired the four now in hand is understood to be somewhat below that figure. The 80-ton guns made in the Royal Gun Factories in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich cost between £9,000 and £10,000 each, and a 100-ton gun, if manufactured at the Royal Arsenal on the Woolwich principle, has been estimated at £12,500, to which may be added the outlay on new machinery. In the trials which have been made the 80-ton has proved rather the better of the two relatively—that is, it has given a greater energy per ton than its heavier rivals; but as the 100-ton gun throws a 2,000 lb. projectile with a powder charge of 440 lb., and the 80-ton gun is limited to a shot of 1,700 lb. with 423 lb. of gunpowder, the actual striking power of the two guns is proportionately in favor of the larger weapon. The 80-ton gun is 27 ft. long, 6 ft. in diameter at the breech, 6 in. in the bore, and chambered for the powder charge to a calibre of 18 in. The 100-ton gun is 32 ft. long, 6 ft. 6 in. through the breech end, 17½ in. bore, and chambered 2 in. larger. They are similar in construction, and will both be polygrooved in the rifling.

During the past few weeks an immense quantity of cartridges for the Martini-Henry rifles and other small arms ammunition have been shipped from the landing-stage at the powder magazines at Upnor Castle, opposite Chatham Dockyard, and taken to the Royal Arsenal, where it has been placed on board other vessels for conveyance to Gibraltar, Malta, and other stations. The War Department lighter Thames is now at Upnor, shipping a cargo of 1,000,000 cartridges. Large quantities of cartridges are now stored up at Upnor, where they have been accumulating for some years, having been sent round from the Royal Arsenal.

One hundred soldiers, artillery and infantry, are receiving and stacking the compressed hay, of which some 500 tons have been delivered at the dockyard, Woolwich.

Homespun Eloquence.

Rochester (N. Y.) Express.

A doctor named Royston had sued Peter Bennett for his bill, long overdue, for attending the wife of the latter. Alexander H. Stephens was on the Bennett side, and Robert Toombs, then Senator of the United States, was for Dr. Royston. The doctor proved the number of visits, their value according to local custom, and his own authority to do medical practice. Mr. Stephens told his client that the physician had made out his case, and there was nothing wherewith to rebut or offset the claim; the only thing left to do was to pay it, "No," said Peter; "I hired you to speak in my case, and now speak."

Mr. Stephens told him there was nothing to say; he had looked on to see that it was made out, and it was.

Peter was obstinate, and at last Mr. Stephens told him to make a speech for himself, if he thought one could be made.

"I will," said Peter Bennett, "if Bobby Toombs will not be to hard on me."

Senator Toombs promised, and Peter began.

"Gentlemen of the jury—You and I is plain farmers, and if we don't stick together these ere lawyers and doctors will git the advantage of us. I ain't no objections to them in their proper place; but they ain't farmers, gentlemen of the jury. Now this ere Royston was a new doctor, and I want for him to come and doctor my wife's sore leg. And he come and put some salve truck onto it, and some rags, but never done it a bit of good, gentlemen of the jury. I don't believe he is no doctor, no way. There is doctors as is doctors sure enough, but this man don't earn his money; and if you send for him, as Mrs. Susan Atkinson did for a negro as was worth $1,000, he just kills him and wants pay for it."

"I don't," thundered the doctor.

"Did you cure him?" asked Peter, with the slow accent of a judge with a black cap on.

The doctor was silent and Peter proceeded.

"As I was sayin', gentlemen of the jury, us farmers when we sell our cotton has got to give valy for the money we ask, and a doctor ain't none too good to be put to his extry rate. And I don't believe this Sam Royston is no doctor, no how."

The physician again put in his ear, with, "Look at my diploma if you think I am no doctor."

"His diploma!" exclaimed the new fledged orator with great contempt. "His diploma! Gentlemen, this is a big word for printed sheep-skins, and it didn't make no doctor of the sheep as first worn it, nor does it of the man as now carries it, and I put out to ya that he ain't no doctor as all."

The man of medicine was now in a fury, and screamed out, "Ask my patients if I am no doctor!"

"I asked my wife," retorted Peter, as she said as how she thought you wasn't."

"Ask my other patients," said Dr. Royston.

This seemed to be the straw that broke the camel's back, for Peter replied with a kick and tone of unutterable sadness—"This is hard saying gentleman of the jury, and one that requires me to die or to have powers as I've heard tell ceased to be exercised since the Apostles. Large quantities of cartridges are now stored up at Upnor, where they have been accumulating for some years, having been sent round from the Royal Arsenal.

One hundred soldiers, artillery and infantry, are receiving and stacking the compressed hay, of which some 500 tons have been delivered at the dockyard, Woolwich.

Homespun Eloquence.

Rochester (N. Y.) Express.

A doctor named Royston had sued Peter Bennett for his bill, long overdue, for attending the wife of the latter. Alexander H. Stephens was on the Bennett side, and Robert Toombs, then Senator of the United States, was for Dr. Royston. The doctor proved the number of visits, their value according to local custom, and his own authority to do medical practice. Mr. Stephens told his client that the physician had made out his case, and there was nothing wherewith to rebut or offset the claim; the only thing left to do was to pay it, "No," said Peter; "I hired you to speak in my case, and now speak."

Mr. Stephens told him there was nothing to say; he had looked on to see that it was made out, and it was.

Peter was obstinate, and at last Mr. Stephens told him to make a speech for himself, if he thought one could be made.

"I will," said Peter Bennett, "if Bobby Toombs will not be to hard on me."

Senator Toombs promised, and Peter began.

"Gentlemen of the jury—You and I is plain farmers, and if we don't stick together these ere lawyers and doctors will git the advantage of us. I ain't no objections to them in their proper place; but they ain't farmers, gentlemen of the jury. Now this ere Royston was a new doctor, and I want for him to come and doctor my wife's sore leg. And he come and put some salve truck onto it, and some rags, but never done it a bit of good, gentlemen of the jury. I don't believe he is no doctor, no way. There is doctors as is doctors sure enough, but this man don't earn his money; and if you send for him, as Mrs. Susan Atkinson did for a negro as was worth $1,000, he just kills him and wants pay for it."

"I don't," thundered the doctor.

"Did you cure him?" asked Peter, with the slow accent of a judge with a black cap on.

The doctor was silent and Peter proceeded.

"As I was sayin', gentlemen of the jury, us farmers when we sell our cotton has got to give valy for the money we ask, and a doctor ain't none too good to be put to his extry rate. And I don't believe this Sam Royston is no doctor, no how."

The physician again put in his ear, with, "Look at my diploma if you think I am no doctor."

"His diploma!" exclaimed the new fledged orator with great contempt. "His diploma! Gentlemen, this is a big word for printed sheep-skins, and it didn't make no doctor of the sheep as first worn it, nor does it of the man as now carries it, and I put out to ya that he ain't no doctor as all."

The man of medicine was now in a fury, and screamed out, "Ask my patients if I am no doctor!"

"I asked my wife," retorted Peter, as she said as how she thought you wasn't."

"Ask my other patients," said Dr. Royston.

This seemed to be the straw that broke the camel's back, for Peter replied with a kick and tone of unutterable sadness—"This is hard saying gentleman of the jury, and one that requires me to die or to have powers as I've heard tell ceased to be exercised since the Apostles. Does he expect me to bring the angel of Gabriel down to look his hero before the time and cry aloud, 'Awake ye dead and tell this court and jury your opinion of Royston's practice. Am I to go to the tomb and say to him as is at last at rest from physicians' doctors' bills, 'Git up here, you, and state if you died a natural death, or was you hurried up some by doctors?' He says sait his pills acts, and, gentlemen of the jury, they are sich infarnal pills as ever. Gentlemen of the jury, he has eat chickens enough at my house to pay for his suives, and I furnished the rage, and I don't suppose he charges for making her worse, and even he don't pretend to charge for curing of her. I plain pointing, and the preservation of the furniture. The Osborne, which has made a satisfactory trial of her engines, has received more attention from the dockyard authorities. Not only has she been completely repainted and regilt, but the bed-room furniture, which was formerly mahogany, has been covered with maple veneer, and been made to harmonize with the doors and other maple fittings of the yacht.

A million cartridges has become the minimum issue when furnishing supplies to the home depôt, and at the present time there are three ships at Woolwich each ordered to take out a million rounds for the same destinations. The War Department steamship Earl de Grey is embarking a million for Portsmouth; the Edward Austin, a hired vessel, taking in 4,000 stands of Martini-Henry rifles and other stores for Edinburgh, will first go to the reserve magazine at Upnor for a million rounds for the same place; and the Charlotte, also hired for the voyage, will embark at Upnor a third million for Tynemouth. The Alma, a Government steamship, is embarking at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, a heterogeneous cargo for the forts in the Channel Islands, and several other vessels are employed conveying from Woolwich to Sheerness the heavy guns and 10-inch armour-plates used to complete the defences at the entrance to the Thames and Medway.

The new field-gun, which has by a course of experiments extending over more than two years undergone an evolution from a 9-pounder to a 12-pounder without enlarging its bore or materially increasing its weight, has undergone a further and final development, and may now be described as it appears as the model field-piece of the British Artillery in the shape and weight of a 13-pounder. Experience has proved that much of the value of a good field-gun lies in the length of the barrel, and accordingly the 13-pounder, although no thicker than a 9-pounder, will be considerably longer than even the 16-pounder, the heavy gun of the field batteries of artillery, the efficiency of which is now admitted to have been sacrificed to the prejudice which existed at its introduction against impairing its symmetry by elongating the muzzle. The 13-pounder has undergone a rigid course of experiments. It is a compound of all the recent inventions, and it has produced splendid results.

The four 100-ton guns purchased by the Government from Sir William Armstrong are intended to be used in the land defences until, at least, provision is made for them in the Royal Navy, and they will probably be mounted in the fortifications at Dover, and stations either at home or in the Mediterranean. It is not decided whether any of them are to come to Woolwich, but there is thought to be no necessity for the course of experiments usual to a new gun, as the Government have the advantage of the first trial at Spezzia made with the first gun of this kind sent to Italy. The Italians have five of those 100-ton guns, including the experimental one, and they paid Sir William Armstrong more than £16,000 each for them. The price at which the British Government has acquired the four now in hand is understood to be somewhat below that figure. The 80-ton guns made in the Royal Gun Factories in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich cost between £9,000 and £10,000 each, and a 100-ton gun, if manufactured at the Royal Arsenal on the Woolwich principle, has been estimated at £12,500, to which may be added the outlay on new machinery. In the trials which have been made the 80-ton has proved rather the better of the two relatively—that is, it has given a greater energy per ton than its heavier rivals; but as the 100-ton gun throws a 2,000 lb. projectile with a powder charge of 440 lb., and the 80-ton gun is limited to a shot of 1,700 lb. with 423 lb. of gunpowder, the actual striking power of the two guns is proportionately in favor of the larger weapon. The 80-ton gun is 27

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Myddleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

But Neil, irresistibly tickled by the serious manner in which he had been addressed, and by the solemn way in which Miss Chester had spoken, could not help laughing. "Nothing goes deep enough even to put him out of temper," muttered the gentleman who had spoken last, as he took his place at the table, "and nothing ever will."

So the world said what it chose, and Sir Neil, unmoved, went on his selfish way. There was another relief to which Lina could look forward after their return to Hill-Athelston, and this was Sir Neil's visit, in the grouse season, to his shooting-box in Scotland. This came and went; a few days of rest and quiet, and then he was back again, and the house was filled with the old gayety and cruelty and unrest.

To another rest Lina was looking forward now. This was the expectation of a houseful of visitors for September. They were most of them to arrive on the evening of the last day of August, to meet at an eight-o'clock dinner; and before the dinner, Sir Neil Athelston had determined to have a few hours' shooting—for himself, at any rate, the principal enjoyment. "Rustic felicity," as he called it, with his ironical, good-humored laugh. "All drinking in the valley you know, Miss Chester, like a Sunday-school; and a real bubble and fizz from the hillsides, like the Crummles's pump and tubs. What do you say to my highly original idea?"

Lina said nothing but this: that original ideas were always to be welcomed. But even Neil could see how little pleasure the thought gave her when he proposed it, and how her light words and fleeting smile only covered a thorough and entire indifference. When Lady Athelston had arranged, however, that with a reception only, "I think, my boy, we may be excused from a long visit to Chester to raise her friendship; on the contrary, she had taught her simply to dread and avoid all intercourse with her," but Lina lost sight of that in the pleasure of the actual anticipation.

The Colonel Stuart would come too; and, in fact, Mr. Jolly were invited with him. He probably would be, because Sir Neil and him; and because, as he was the principal neighborhood to be a guide, hirth, and a clever and attractive gently generally chanced that he did everywhere), it was proper that on to Lina to meet him when the was present.

ay all met, gayly and pleasantly, within the valley gate; and, descending from the carriages which had brought them, began to walk up to the water-fall, following the winding of the glistening little stream which curved and frolicked itself, thither on the soft, bright turf; all walking, at least, except Lady Athelston, and Lina, who drove the pony-carriage on through the valley.

Slowly they went along in the August sunshine, the walking party now and then keeping up with them, now and then falling behind, and then hastening hastily on. "As merry a party," Lina thought, looking on from her low cushioned seat, "as ever the boat, as sung of in ballads as she had been during that short sail which she had made with those who came a stranger among the Mr. Castillain, eccentric and narrow as he was, had always been patronizing to Lina, just as he had been from introduction.

Colonel Stuart, was he not always a kind, and helpful! From Miss Chester, was she not always the handsome face with a feeling of real fear.

"Pull up, Miss Chester," cried Sir Neil, standing nearer the water-fall, and motioning the groom to the ponies' heads as they came up to them at the place.

"This is the place, stand still, my steed," quoted Marjorie, sauntering round to Lina's side of the phaeton. "Did you ever see two of the gold-fish at High Athelston walking about the ground, Miss Chester, trying to arrange the hoops?"

"Not yet," laughed Lina.

"I feared not; but, at any rate, I can show you a very similar sight up above; namely, the twin canaries arranging tea et fumea, and overwhelmed by the responsibility of a disunited fire and an uncertain kettle. Neil is going to help them when he has landed his mother; and while they exercise their united skill, let us walk a little."

Neil came up to them eagerly.

"You are almost a stranger among the hills, Miss Chester," he said; "we come and let me show you the chief points of interest before tea."

"Then I must go and help Colonel Stuart and Mr. Jorden," said Marjorie, coolly.

"That's a lift, oh, Marjorie!" laughed Neil, laying his hand lightly on her shoulder. "I must take the hint conveyed in it. Well, go where you will, and I'll do what I've got to do here; but tell me where I shall find you presently?"

"We will go over the hills there beyond the fall," said Marjorie, "and come back by the pool."

"All right," rejoined Sir Neil; "don't join any other party."

BASE BALL BULLETIN.

Practice Game on Saturday—Items from Various Sources.

The Tecumsehs of 1878 opened the season on Saturday afternoon last in a game with the amateur champions of Canada, the Atlantics of this city, and there was a large crowd of people present to witness the opening game. The fact that the players of both nines had had but little practice this season was manifested itself. The Tecumsehs, however, worked in splendid unison, and during the entire performance of the match exhibited some fine play. The nigue, the tenth man of the Tecumsehs, They could have made a much better score if they had played to their proved himself an expert ball tosser. The first half of the game was of an exciting character, the amateurs exhibiting some excellent batting and correct fielding that they are expected to be before the season's end. At the close of the fifth innings, the score stood in favor of the Tecumsehs by 3 to 2. After that Goldsmith pitched for the Atlantics, the remainder of the nine assisted him in keeping down the score of the amateurs down to a total of two runs. Elmslie pitched and Thompson caught for the Atlantics, and for their first appearance together this year they filled their respective positions very creditably. Their respective positions very creditably. Their support at second made a couple of fatal errors but the value of fairly before the game was finished. Hall, the new comer, batted right fearlessly, being closely followed by Burke and Brierly. Steele and Thompson were also conspicuous in their batting rank as public and the Atlantic nine. On the whole, the amateurs batted considerably freely, scoring 9 base hits to their opponents 10. Mr. Bruce, H. Brunton managed the game satisfactorily. The following is the score:—

A SUSPICIOUS CHARACTER.—Many of the residents in the vicinity of Maple and Talbot streets were considerably alarmed late last Friday night, by the appearance of a person dressed as a woman, but believed to be a man, who was discovered loitering about in the back yard. Chase was given to "her," but she was too fleet of foot, and escaped. There can be no doubt that "she" was up to nothing good.

A SUCCESSFUL CONCERT.—The recent concert held in the Mechanics' Institute under the auspices of the Irish Benevolent Society, was the most successful, from a pecuniary point of view, ever held in that building. The proceeds, amounting to $176.50, exclusive of expenses, were handed over to the President and Catholic Orphans' Homes by Mr. John Smith, the Secretary, the other day, in equal shares.

A CLEAN RECORD.—After the storm a calm. So it was in Police Court circles Saturday. The blotter did not contain the name of a single drunk or vagrant. "The man on station duty slept in peaceful serenity during the entire night—something he has not done for several weeks past—and the patrolmen scoured the streets and alleyways the whole night without falling upon a rhyme or Rawhus or a turnpike sailor. If anything more is required to show that Londoners as a rule are peaceably disposed, order-loving, honest and upright members of society, let them peruse this notice.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—In this church, yesterday, two special sermons were preached by Rev. R. W. Wallace, Church. In the morning, an appropriate discourse relative to the death of the late Mrs. H. Maddowson, who had been for thirty-eight years a consistent member of the church. In the evening, a lecture was given on "Oliver Cromwell and the Puritans," there being a large attendance, not only of members of the congregation, but of other denominations. The lecturer gave a succinct history of the events which led to Oliver Cromwell becoming the Protector, and of the stirring times which followed. He adverted to the favorable lessons from the facts brought out, deprecating that, whilst there was a great deal in Cromwell's character and conduct to condemn, there was much to admire and praise, and that not a few of his actions could be traced to the necessities of the times.

The statement in our Richmond street column, that the G. W. R. Co., had purchased the Royal Hotel site, is said by G. W. R. people, who ought to know, to be devoid of truth, and in keeping with the majority of the paragraphs concerning G. W. affairs which appear in that sheet.

A man belonging to Mr. T. Lawson, of the Hamilton Road, fell upon a set of harrows on Friday evening, seven of the teeth of which punctured the animal's body, one of them to the depth of fully four inches. Dr. J. D. O'Neil, V. S., attended and did all his power for the poor beast.

The young lady was surprised, upon receipt of the ring a few days after, to read this inscription:—"When this you see, remember father."

The fishing season has at last opened out in earnest, and just as soon as you see a worn-out-looking chap plodding wearily into the city in the gloaming, looking for all the world as if he had counted every railroad tie between here and Halifax, and was expending the last vestige of his strength in carrying those half dozen minnows he has in his hand, you can make up your mind that he has been over fishing around Byron since 5 o'clock in the morning, and all you've got to do to make him mad enough to eat up the end of a sand pump is to ask him, "How is fishing over about Kilworth?"

FAREWELL TO HIS FLOCK.

Rev. John Gemley's Parting Address to St. Paul's Congregation.

At St. Paul's Church yesterday morning, Rev. J. Gemley preached a farewell sermon previous to his departure for England, where he and his wife and Miss Gemley here of this Board, out of respect to the memory of the late E. W. Hyman, Esq., attend his funeral on Monday afternoon in a body." Carried.

The Board then adjourned.

TRADE EXCURSION TO LONDON

Western Commercial Travellers to Arrange for One.

A largely-attended meeting of the Western Commercial Travellers' Association was held on Saturday evening—Mr. D. H. Lynd, President, in the chair—at which a excursion was brought up and discussed, the project being very favorably received by all present. It was the general opinion that, if suitable arrangements could be made with the railways, Western merchants would be happy to take advantage of them, and visit the wholesale houses of the city (over 30 in number). It was therefore resolved to have an excursion, under the auspices of the Association, and with a satisfactory arrangement of terms with the G. W. R., C. S. R. and C. P. R. companies, on Tuesday, 30th April—tickets to continue good till 4th May. The following committees was appointed to interview the respective agents of the roads, and secure a single fare for return tickets during the week named,—Messrs. Long, G. S. Burrell, J. H. Laing, J. Watson, J. C. Merritt and H. C. Macfie.

We are glad to hear that the above Association, which has only been in existence for a little over a year, is in a very flourishing condition, and promises not only to be a live institution, but to confer considerable benefit on its members. The membership now numbers 150, which demonstrates how heartily the travellers of Western Ontario have interested themselves in the success of the Association.

BAKER'S WHIPPING.—It seems that, notwithstanding that Baker's castigation with the cat-o'-nine tails was not laid on severely as in the hands of an adept it might have been, he has suffered a good deal from its results. The skin on his back, which for a day or two was of a blackish-blue color, has now nearly gained its natural appearance, and he is likely to be in good trim for his next whipping, which takes place on May 2nd. It is understood that a new flagellator will be got for the occasion —one who can handle the lash with more effect than the last man.

DISTURBING A CONGREGATION.—A good deal of commotion was caused in the Beth Emanuel Church, Grey street, last night, consequent on the arrest of an old offender, named Robert Huntley, on a charge of having been guilty of disturbing those engaged in public worship in that church, of using obscene and profane language, and of being guilty of rude and indecent behavior. Prisoner, who was attended by Constable Jenkins, was remanded to jail.

AN EXECUTORS' STATEMENT.—In a paragraph which appeared in the city papers the other day, it was stated that the stock of Mr. T. W. Hollston, an insolvent merchant of London East, had been sold by the Assignee at the rate of ten cents on the dollar. In justice to Mr. Churcher, we gladly publish a correction, as the stock was sold at seventy cents on the dollar on the Assignee's inventory.

The arrangements for the funeral obsequies of the late Ellis W. Hyman have been completed by Mr. John Ferguson, who has charge of the funeral. At the same hour the employes of deceased, about 75 in number, will also assemble at the City Hall, and immediately afterwards the two bodies will proceed to the residence of deceased, headed by the 7th Battalion Band. ALDERMANIC SYMPATHY FOR DECEASED.

A special meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held in the Council Chamber on Saturday last night, for the purpose of taking action in regard to attending the funeral of the late Ellis W. Hyman, a former member of the Corporation and a Water Commissioner. There were present Mayor Lewis, and Aldermen Campbell, Smyth, Pritchard, Murray, Powell, Thompson, Skinner, Stringer, Keenleyside, Elleston, Glass, Hapley, Christie, Williams, Vining, Egan, Browne, McNab, J. H. Beattie.

His Worship explained his reasons for summoning the meeting, namely, to move a special session, adding a few eulogistic remarks to the memory of deceased for his many qualities of head and heart. Subsequently

Ald. Campbell moved, seconded by Ald. Egan, "That this Council, having heard with feelings of extreme regret of the death of an old and much esteemed fellow-citizen, Ellis W. Hyman, Esq., which took place at his residence on Saturday last, do hereby resolved that we take this opportunity of expressing our high appreciation of the many excellent qualities of the deceased, having been a man of sterling worth and honor, and whose example has contributed largely towards the prosperity of this city, and whose loss by his removal as irreparable to the community, and do hereby tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and family in their affliction; and that this Council, as a tribute of respect to his memory, do now adjourn at the close of the call of the Mayor to attend the funeral in our corporate capacity; and that a copy of this resolution be engrossed and forwarded to the family of the deceased by the City Clerk."

The mover felt that every member of the Board would agree with him that when the late Mr. Hyman's death was made known it caused a deep gloom to pervade all classes. The banker and merchant at their desks, and the mechanic and laborer at their workshops, each entertained similar feelings towards deceased, who had, so far as he was aware, the good feeling of all with whom he came in contact. Personally he (the speaker) had lost a valued personal friend.

Ald. Egan said the resolution spoke for itself, and it required nothing further from him.

Ald. Rapley, Vining and Murray also added their tributes of respect to the memory of the deceased, speaking in feeling terms of the qualities of the deceased.

The resolution was carried by a standing vote.

The Council then adjourned.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION'S TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held in the City Clerk's office about the same time, with the object of arranging to attend the funeral of the late

LONDON EAST.

What Suburban Residents are Doing.

Saturday afternoon.

The Building Committee of the Board of School Trustees met in the Clerk's office, Town Hall, last night. Mr. Jones, architect, submitted the plans for the additions, &c. These were accepted to raise the Anderson School, which will cost between $1,000 and $1,200.

The School Management Committee met to consider the application of the teachers to get Easter Monday as a holiday. They decided to grant their request. The school will, therefore, be closed from Thursday evening next till Tuesday morning.

The new arrangement of opening the Town Hall as a public school for Mr. Stock's pupils is being carried on with great success. It will be continued till the midsummer holidays.

Chicken thieves have been operating in London township, near the village, lately. Householders would do well to keep their fowls under lock and key over night.

The City Gas Co.'s workmen have removed the ornamental gas lamp, erected on Dundas street, in front of the Post Office. It will be remembered that, a short time since, the Council passed a by-law refusing to pay for gas lamps erected elsewhere than at the corners of streets, if the village was not paying for such now. This lamp came under this category, and the proprietor of the block and the Postmaster declining to come down handsomely, the lamp was removed.

It is understood that the Ontario Car Works will resume operations on Monday next. The employes have been out of work for a considerable time.

There is no new phase in the market question. Both sides are in a forward state of preparation for business, but as yet there are no signs of it.

Mr. Lilley has his weigh scales in operation, and will doubtless soon be doing a good business.

It is expected that the Council Committee will meet in a short time, and resolve on the improvements to be executed during the summer. Something like $1,000 or $1,500 will be expended.

Thos. Fenton has been fined $1, and $4 costs, for assaulting Constable Thos. Nichols, under circumstances already detailed by us. A counter charge will be heard by Squire Anderson on Monday.

Water-Works Waifs.

The Inspector of Piping (Mr. Baynes) leaves for Hamilton to-day, to inspect 200 tons of 6 inch pipes—a portion of a contract of 500 tons recently awarded to Mr. A. Gartshore, of that city. Should the pipes be satisfactory, they will be shipped at once, and arrangements made for their being laid along Dundas and King streets.

Should any unforseen happen (so vigorously will the works be proceeded with), the water-works will be in practical operation by the 1st Nov. next.

A statement was published a few days ago to the effect that Mr. Knox, of that town, had received the contract for the construction of the reservoir. Messrs. Stevens, Turner & Burns, the contractors, request us to state that this is a mistake.

It will be observed from advertisement that the Commissioners call for tenders for the erection of the well at the springs.

Large numbers of workingmen arrive daily, anxious to get employment on the works, and it is needless to say, owing to the state of the home labor market, many of these strangers are doomed to disappointment. Not a few arrive in the most destitute condition, and are obliged to take refuge over night in the police cells. Between Friday night and Saturday morning, a man who had travelled all the way from Kingston with his wife and five of a family, slept in a Central cell. They were utterly destitute, and had to subsist by the way by what they begged.

DESPONDENCY IN LONDON.

(By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.)

London, April 16.—The Globe last evening says:—Our Cronstadt correspondent writes that the scheme of fitting out privateers in America is making rapid progress. A large number of seamen belonging to the Baltic fleet are in readiness to proceed to the United States. It is rumored the Grand Duke Alexis will be appointed admiral of the Privateer squadron, and that during his recent visit to New York progress was made in the matter.

Constantinople, April 16.—A despatch from Shefket Pasha, the Turkish Minister, goes to St. Petersburg. Gen. Tolleben takes command of the Russian army at San Stefano. Russia has refused to submit to arbitrary, and likely to have beneficial results.

London, April 16.—In official quarters and at the Russian Embassy here is equally despondent. Before the adjournment of Parliament for recess, Mr. Foster, member for Bradford, will privately ask Mr. Northcote for the latest information concerning the negotiations.

The news from St. Petersburg is not calculated to increase confidence. The fact that the Cabinets at London and St. Petersburg are reported to semi-officially interpret, seems to indicate that official expressions would have intended the full difference. The result of the interchange of views is not unofficial, Russia substantially regarding her former answer, and England reaffirming the principle originally laid down.

The report of an Austro-Russian agreement under pressure from Bismarck are denied by Andrassy's friends, who declare that Bismarck's attitude has been one of entire neutrality, he well understanding that Austria regards the minimum, not the maximum, of her objections against the treaty, and that the margin for mediation is exceedingly narrow.

All reports about Russia having sent a reply to Austria's ultimatum are contradicted. In other circles in Vienna it is stated that the Emperor and military party are stronger than Andrassy, and that they support his anti-Russian policy. Among lower classes of Austrians the belief is said to prevail that Austria has nothing to gain by either peace or war, because Hungary would resist the annexation of the Slav countries, but that action will be forced on the monarchy if the Russian attempt to disarm or occupy Roumania.

Pro-Russian advices from Constantinople says that the situation is hopeful and the outmost. The Grand Duke Nicholas is much depressed, and the impression prevails that affairs are surely drifting to war.

London, April 16.—In default of authentic news it was rumored yesterday that the Russians had made all preparations to occupy Constantinople and the Bosphorus on the first signal of hostilities; that the Roumanian army, except guards for Bucharest and Plojesta, had returned upon the Austrian frontier, and that the Czar had sent an autograph letter to Prince Milan instructing him as to what Servia should do on the outbreak of war. These probably are all false. Pro-Russian advices state that in the event of war, Russian action will be governed by Austria's attitude. If Austria is neutral, the Russians will undoubtedly secure Constantinople. If hostile, it is doubtful whether the Russians will try to hold the Bosphorus or anything south of Adrianople. They will probably even abandon Turkey entirely, except the Caucasus, and attack Austria from Galicia, Roumania and Bosnia.

Other Constantinople advices say that the Turks have 70,000 men around the city, and 17,000 at Gallipoli, and would resent an attempt to enter the capital; but the attitude of the Government is expectant, and the present disposition is to abide by the treaty of San Stefano, and observe neutrality, defending it if menaced.

Prince Miriski and General Skobeleff, and Gorko and other officers are at Adrianople. About 80 soldiers from the Guards and the 10th Division will visit Constantinople in uniform. Fever is prevalent in the camp and city. Sickness, inaction and disappointed expectation of going home, has created great fretfulness among the Russians, and dissatisfaction with the present situation.

Bucharest, April 16.—The Pall Mall Gazette says,—Whether Bismarck's proposals succeed or fail, we have no reason to disturb ourselves about the situation. We are strong in the justice of our diplomatic position, and can afford to wait until our material strength begins to tell in support of it by way of merely passive pressure.

St. Petersburg, April 16.—The Agence Russe says the situation to-day is unchanged.

Ragusa, April 16.—All Turkish regular troops in Bosnia and Herzegovina have been ordered to concentrate at Mitrovitza, whence they will march, via Salonica, and from thence to Constantinople.

Vienna, April 16.—The Political Correspondence says it is rumored that England is negotiating with Sweden for a naval port on the island of Faroe, in the Baltic Sea.

London, April 16.—The remark of Lord Derby which chiefly gave umbrage in Vienna was that, in consequence of the number of Sclavs in the Austrian army, it could not be trusted to fight against the Russians.

According to advices received in Paris from Bucharest, Prince Charles started to join his army.

Constant quarrels occur between Russian and Roumanian officers and soldiers. The Russians prevented a train laden with ammunition from leaving Bucharest for the Roumanian army. The entire Roumanian militia is called out.

The Russians stationed vessels laden with stones ready to again close the Sulina mouth of the Danube, if necessary.

Bucharest, April 16.—In the Senate today the Minister of Foreign Affairs stated that the Government had not yet received any proposal from Russia for an agreement relating to the passage of her troops. A motion urging the Government to protest against the presence of the Russian troops was withdrawn. The Minister declared that the Government would act with energy to restore the liberties of the country and save it from foreign occupation.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

Sir S. Northcote on the Situation.

The Cabinet Serene, and Without Cause of Anxiety.

Parliament Adjourned to May 6th.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, April 16.—In the Commons this afternoon, Sir Stafford Northcote said the situation was an anxious one, but nothing has occurred to aggravate it or diminish the hope of a satisfactory arrangement. Nothing justifies the assertion that England will be isolated. A circular is expected from Turkey to the Powers. There is a good prospect of an arrangement in Thessaly and Epirus through the good offices of England.

London, April 16.—In the House of Commons.

Sir Stafford Northcote, replying to a question by W. E. Forster (Liberal), said that nothing whatever has occurred to give occasion for increased anxiety regarding the affairs in the East, nor in anyway diminished the hopes entertained of satisfactory arrangements being agreed to. The situation of affairs at Constantinople does not warrant the Government any anxiety. The opinion expressed in some quarters that the Government is isolated regarding the Eastern question, is not justified by the facts.

London, April 16.—The question of adjourning Parliament to May 6th was discussed in the House of Lords yesterday.

During the debate Sir Stafford Northcote reiterated the statement that the policy of the Government regarding the Eastern question was unchanged. The Government, he said, was anxious for a peaceful settlement on such a basis as would give security for a lasting peace. There was no ground to despair, and the House could safely adjourn.

London, April 16.—In the House of Commons this afternoon.

Sir Stafford Northcote moved the adjournment of the two Houses until the 6th of May.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson (Radical) criticised this step in view of the serious crisis.

Henry Fawcett (Liberal) moved an amendment providing for an adjournment to the 29th inst.

Sir Stafford Northcote deprecated this proceeding, which, he said, would alarm the world.

Mr. Forster supported Sir Stafford Northcote's motion, and said if he and his colleagues thought the Government were pursuing a war policy they would have acted otherwise.

The amendment was rejected by 16 to 156, and Sir Stafford Northcote's motion adopted.

In the House of Lords,

Earl Salisbury stated that Count Von Buest, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, represented to-day that persons of authority in Austria were pained at Lord Derby's recent observations respecting that country. Earl Salisbury said that Lord Derby's observations were made on his own responsibility. There was nothing in the Foreign Office warranting them.

The House of Lords then adjourned until the 13th of May.

ENGLISH LABOR TROUBLES.

Both Masters and Men Firm in Their Demands.

Threatened Wholesale Stoppage of Work Done.

London, April 16.—The Preston Guardian says the reported strike of cotton operatives is confined to 5,750 spindles in one district, and a million and a half in another.

The Times says that the feeling of both masters and men is becoming stronger. The meeting of masters at Burnley last night resolved to continue in enforcing a reduction of wages. The card-room hands of Blackburn, yesterday, after hearing the report of a deputation which interviewed the masters, unanimously resolved to resist a reduction.

The Weavers' Association advise that the masters be requested to withdraw the notices of reduction, when the weavers would continue work.

London, April 16.—The Manchester cotton masters, to-day, received a deputation of operative spinners, who declared they were willing to accept a 5 per cent. reduction of wages, and if the masters could not agree to it they would refer the matter to arbitration. The masters replied, declining both proposals, and adhering to their original resolution, namely, that a strike occurred at any of the mills where notice had been given of a 10 per cent. reduction, by mid...der of the trade shall lock-out at the earliest possible moment, and the amount derived from the reduction at those mills which shall continue to work shall be applied to a fund for assisting those firms whose hands strike. The notices of reduction expire to-morrow. A strike which will affect 30,000 operatives is certain.

London, April 16.—Five thousand cotton operatives held an open meeting at Burnley to-day. The resolutions of the masters in regard to the lockout were discussed. The meeting enthusiastically reaffirmed the determination to strike unless the notices of reduction are withdrawn. An amendment in favor of accepting a five per cent. reduction only found five supporters.

A crowded meeting of Blackburn spinners also unanimously refused to accept the reduction.

Four thousand weavers, warpers and winders at Preston unanimously expressed a willingness to accept a 5 per cent. reduction. They also resolved that all hands would continue at work until all the employers had been interviewed.

London, April 17, 6 a. m.—The Blackburn hands have already begun to come out. The strike will probably assume a defiant determination to resist the masters, regardless of consequences, has never been evinced during any previous strike. Four mills withdraw the notice of reduction.

THE GERMO-NICARAGUAN DIFFICULTY.

Ample Satisfaction Given to the German Government.

Panama, April 16.—The German difficulty with Nicaragua has been settled by an agreement made by the latter, acknowledging regret for the assaults upon the Imperial Consular employes and the Imperial Consul at Leon; promising punishment of the offenders within fourteen days, with the alternative of paying a fine of $8,000; promising a payment of $30,000 as reparation, and a public salute to German ships as a manifestation of regret for the violation of the respect due the Imperial Consular employes.

THE TILTON SCANDAL.

Effect of Elizabeth's Letter of Confession.

It Meets with Incredulity and Disgust.

Beecher Unwavering and Cheered by Friends.

New York, April 16.—The Tilton letter is the sensation of the day. Wheeler, to whom the letter was given, says he is a distant relation of Mrs. Tilton, and that she authorizes him fully to publish the document. Four weeks ago, he said, she verbally confessed to Mrs. Anna M. Field and four other ladies of Plymouth Church. He said he held a private letter, not yet to be published, from Mrs. Tilton regarding the whole matter. He said Mr. Tilton knew nothing whatever of the confession, and has not made any overtures to his wife.

The Times gives an interview with Beecher at Waverly, in which Beecher seemed more sorry for Mrs. Tilton than troubled about himself.

He said he had not spoken with her for over two years. A few weeks ago a message came to him that she was in a morbid and self-condemnatory state. He then rehearsed her previous strong declarations of innocence. The Times says there seems little doubt that the letter is the production of Mrs. Tilton, unaided. The absence of Mr. Tilton from the city does away with any suspicion that Mrs. Tilton was acting under the immediate influence of her husband. The letter comes unexpectedly upon almost every one. In conversation with a lady friend, Mr. Tilton said she had written the confession, adding with firmness, that every word was true. She said her daughters were aware of the truth before they went to Europe. Mrs. Morse was present, and added that Tilton provided for her children everything that could contribute to their comfort, and that he had seen Mrs. Tilton recently further, that she had sent for Mr. Tilton herself. The ladies' theory is that Beecher's friends had discovered Mrs. Tilton's vacillation, and that the interest on the $10,000 which had been regularly paid by generous outsiders of Beecher's Church to Mrs. Tilton had been stopped; that Mrs. Morse had in this state of affairs prevailed on Mrs. Tilton to make the statement published, and that all were to be reunited in Europe.

Mrs. Morse, so the Times reporter was informed late last night, went to Beecher in December, and threatened there would be trouble if Elizabeth was not better supported. Mr. Carpenter said Tilton was very reticent about Mrs. Tilton, but the drift of his conversation was to the effect that a renewal of his relations with her is impracticable.

The Herald gives a report of an interview with Frank Moulton at Albany. He refused to say a word on the statement, but declared he was convinced the admission would be made, as Mrs. Tilton was a upright and sincere-minded that it was only a question of time when she would tell the truth. Tilton always believed in her abiding sense of truth. Moulton added that he would be the last to doubt Beecher.

The World says it is stated with the utmost positiveness that Mrs. Tilton called a number of her friends together few weeks ago, among whom were several of Beecher's intimate friends, including Rossiter, Raymond and H. B. Claflin, and made a full statement alleging the charge of adultery. She requested this to be communicated to Mr. Beecher, and it was so done. No response was returned. Then there were consultations with other of Mrs. Tilton's friends, and it is quite certain some communication will be made by himself, and the published card was resolved upon.

A gentleman who was prominently connected with the defense in the Beecher suit on being shown a proof slip of the letter, after reading it carefully, without evincing any surprise looked up and said, "well," on being asked his opinion of it he at first declined to express any, but subsequently remarked that Mr. Beecher's friends had expected something of the kind for some time. As to the statement of Mr. Wheeler, to whom the letter was addressed, that Theodore Tilton did not know of its existence, the gentleman remarked with a smile, "that would be the way he would go to work. Frequently during the trial," said he, "Mr. Beecher has been applied to for money to aid Mrs. Tilton, the request or demand not technically coming from her nor purporting to be made with her knowledge or consent, but as for her benefit. This demand was accompanied by threats and intimations that if it was not met something would turn up. Mr. Tilton's influence over his wife is very great," this gentleman continued, "and he cannot resist it."

A gentleman living near Mrs. Morse and Mrs. Tilton, and intimately acquainted with both, said:—"The events of the past few months have led me to believe that arrangements for a reconciliation between Theodore Tilton and his wife have been accomplished. He frequently sent a carriage to Mrs. Morse's house for his sons, meeting them on Yates avenue, two or three blocks away, and after a drive of several hours the boys would return alone. On one occasion Mr. Tilton drove back to the house but he did not alight. He has sent Mrs. Tilton money on several occasions. Mrs. Tilton went to Warwick, notwithstanding Mrs. Morse's denial, and her sons are my authority for the statement that she engaged rooms there for the summer, and that upon Mr. Tilton's return from Europe in August with his daughters the family would be reunited.

Rev. Samuel B. Holliday, assistant-pastor of Plymouth Church, said he was not the least surprised at this development of scandal. He said some months ago, when he heard that Mr. Tilton had gone to see his wife with her consent, that we might look for the beginning of the end. It is susceptible of only one explanation, one which naturally will be given to any act of such a procrasy person, who is putty in the hands of her husband whenever he is with her. Her course at the beginning is at least such as destroys her weight as a witness for either side. It proves that she is a weak, insane woman. Her statement on any subject is worthless, and that is all there is about it.

Elmira, N. Y., April 16.—Beecher's agent stated this morning:—The Slade Associated Press report, giving the New York Times' statement that the absence of Tilton showed he had nothing to do with preparing Mrs. Tilton's confession, is absurd. A rumor of this arrangement, to say personal knowledge, has been known widely in the west for a long time, and Beecher has been often reminded of it. The charges of the Chicago Tribune, April 2nd, in an editorial, foreshadowed the coming confession, and warned Tilton that any such attempt would not be welcomed by the public. At St. Louis and Ft. Wayne I was told that Tilton had threatened that he would crush Beecher yet, and I believe Beecher is convinced that Mrs. Tilton is now under the absolute control of her husband; that she loves him, and that this letter of confession is the price she pays for a reconciliation. You will see that they will be living together before three months. Beecher then stated that for more than four years Mrs. Tilton had been denying the truth of what was called her original confession. This would more than offset anything she might say now. Her latest statement was instigated by the desire for a reunion with her husband, and was the price she paid for obtaining the same. He said he would continue his course just the same as ever."

The New York Sun published evidence that in the middle of March Tilton was making arrangements for himself and wife to spend the summer at Warwick. It may be true that Tilton has not acted directly through his son Carrol, no one acquainted with the affair will deny.

New York, April 16.—The Brooklyn Eagle contains an account of an interview of a lady with Mrs. Tilton and Mrs. Morse. Mrs. Morse eulogized Theodore Tilton, and inveighed against religious people. Mrs. Tilton told the visitor she was going to tell her eldest son Carroll, aged 14, what she had done. She went into another room and did so. The boy uttered a piercing cry of agony, and the visitor hastily departed.

Mrs. Anna M. Field, to whom it was reported a letter had been sent by Mrs. Tilton, giving full details of the proposed confession, denied the truth of the report to-night.

A leading member of Plymouth Church who declined to permit the use of his name, said to-day that some three weeks ago his wife received a letter from Mrs. Tilton. It was on personal matters said he, but towards the close most unexpectedly dropped to the discussion of her guilt. Mrs. Tilton then set forth, it printed falsehood, that she had never disclosed her guilt before she left her home in Tilton's house. That was false, and when we called her attention to the various occasions upon which she had done so she hung her head and did not know what to say. The letter runs in a sort of confession of her guilt, about which she had written her daughter, so she wrote, but which she did not think she would disclose to Carroll until he was a man. "The tinder," it said, "when you have seen me lured into those paroxysms of fears—the were times when the burden on my conscience was unbearable—or something to that effect. Now my wife, in her life, never saw her burst into any paroxysms. The most she ever saw was a trembling of her lips when speaking of her children. The first impulse of my wife was to throw the letter into the fire; the second was to impose the caution we had learned during the days of the great trial and see that it was sent to Beecher's lawyers who have it now.

Bath, N. Y., April 16.—Beecher lectured here this evening to a large audience and was warmly received. He appears cheerful and refuses to read papers. He also refuses to make a statement and will go right on with his business, and will fill his lecture engagements as though nothing had happened. He said to-day if Mrs. Tilton had felt so conscience-stricken she would have made her statement to the church and not to the newspapers.

Mr. Beecher has received a large number of telegrams to-day assuring him the confession has fallen flat upon the country, and has produced no impression upon his friends.

Fire in Hamilton This Morning.

Hamilton, April 17.—At twenty minutes past twelve o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the Soho Machine Works, owned and occupied by Mr. E. Hinchliffe, on the corner of York and Inchbury sts., which were totally destroyed. The efforts of the fire brigade, which were early on the ground, prevented the fire from spreading. Loss on contents of the building, $6,000; insurance, in Waterloo Mutual, $3,000.

HAMILTON.

Mr. S. S. Curtis, fish-dealer, had a salmon trout yesterday, which weighed twenty-nine pounds. It was captured in the lake at Southampton.

In the township of Grimsby Monday morning, Mr. Bylett, aged about 70, was in his usual good health, and took his breakfast and went to a neighbor's after some hay. He sent the team ahead, telling his son he would cross the fields, but had not got over a quarter of a mile towards home when he fell dead in the road.

The Crystal Palace Grounds presented an unusual sight yesterday. Horse fanciers from all parts of the country were there in attendance on Grand's great sale of horses. Stands began at noon, and will be continued to-day and to-morrow. Up to eleven o'clock there were one hundred and thirty-nine entries, the majority of which were good stock. There were some three hundred horses on the ground and bids were lively and, in more instances, satisfactory. A fine team, with swinging action and a fine jumping propensity, brought $135. A handsome span of brown mares, kind in harness and trotting well together, brought $250.

OMINOUS SILENCE.

Silence is golden, but not in all cases. To be silent where the cause of defence rests is but a confession of inability to defend. Where the charge is grievous or the principle involved of great consequence, to be silent in the one case is tantamount to a confession of guilt, and in the other to confession of weakness. There will be no question before the Legislature during the present session which can be of more consequence to the people of Canada than that of the dismissal of the DeBoucherville Government by M. Letellier De St. Just, and none may perhaps be presented for years, that ought to have stirred up a Liberal Administration to greater activity, or that should have fired it with greater zeal in defence of this fundamental principle in responsible government.

Had a Conservative Government been in power at Ottawa and a Lieutenant-Governor of the same party in Quebec, and a similar outrage been perpetrated by this Tory Governor in respect to a Rouge Cabinet, it is difficult to conceive of the strength and vigor with which this act of Tory despotism would have been denounced, and the fiery appeals that would have been addressed to the people to arise in their might and defend their Constitution from this attack upon its most vital principle. But now that the attack comes from a nominal Liberal, that the Constitution has been wounded in the house of its professed friends, that a species of despotism that was thought defunct, has again raised its head in the person of a Grit Governor, "these pharisaical brawlers" have not a word to say in defence of these pillars of the Constitution, nor a syllable of condemnation for those who assail them.

Mr. Mackenzie would have better supported his claim to the name of a leader of a Liberal Government and the head of a Liberal party, had he assumed the position which he left to Sir John Macdonald, or had he even been manly enough and consistent enough to have seconded the resolution which the former proposed. We have no intention of paying him the compliment of saying, that he could either have defended the act or exposed the wrong of this transaction in the same masterly style in which these have been handled by the leader of the Opposition, for it would be cruel irony to say so, but he could have shown that he held correct views on this subject, that he possessed enough of political virtue, enough of independence of character, and enough of regard for those principles for which Baldwin and Lafontaine contended, to give a bold and manly expression to those opinions by which he professes to be governed.

Mr. Blake and Mr. Mackenzie are both guilty, though their guilt is not of the same heinous nature. The one was so far recreant and traitorous to his professed principles as to speak a few words against Sir John Macdonald's motion, to ridicule Sir John for his defence of the constitution, and finally to call upon his friends to vote his motion down. He forgot that Sir John Macdonald has a greater interest in the constitution of Canada than that of calling himself a Liberal, while he helps to destroy Liberalism. He has the proud satisfaction of knowing and feeling that this liberal constitution under which we live, and of which Canadians of all classes enjoy the blessings, is to a large extent the creation of his genius, the work of his experienced and cultured mind, and, therefore, we can well understand with what ardor he would rush to the defence of a constitution of which he has been the principal architect, while in the erection of the building Mr. Mackenzie had no higher duty assigned him than that of carrying a hod. The one talks flippantly of the glory of Liberal principles, and thinks his duty done to the cause and the country; the other is mainly instrumental in planting those liberal principles in the soil of Canada; he nourishes the delicate exotic; he watches over it with paternal care; he rejoices in its rapid growth, and rushes to the front when Vandals would lop off some of its fairest limbs. Well might we ask—Who is the Liberal leader?

But why did Mr. Blake remain silent when he saw the felon stroke aimed at the constitution of Canada? for what impairs the strength and beauty of the constitution is one of the Provinces will so far endanger the whole. No man aimed higher than Mr. Blake; no man was a more enthusiastic lover of liberty; no man professed a greater regard for the voice and will of the people as expressed through their representatives, and yet he sits as silent as an Egyptian Sphinx when he sees these great principles outraged by a gentleman who can only be called to account by the Dominion authorities. The warning voice of Sir John Macdonald should not be disregarded when he told Mr. Mackenzie that rumor was busy with his name, and that she hinted that M. Letellier was not without allies in the Ottawa Cabinet.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN CHICAGO.

It is a strange thing to read of a discussion in one of the leading cities of the United States, regarding the continuance or discontinuance of their public schools. It may be true that this great city of the West is placed in peculiar circumstances, and that her financial condition may not be quite so promising as could be desired, but from the sacrifices the people of the Republic have made, and made so cheerfully in the past, from the just pride they feel in the superiority, real or fancied, of their educational system, from the almost universal diffusion of the blessings of education among all classes, from the intelligence of the people in consequence, and from the confessed necessity of such an agency in connection with the political institutions of the country, it sounds strangely out of place to hear the giving up of any part of the machinery calmly discussed among the citizens of Chicago.

The high schools of the States are a very essential part of her educational organization, and to us it seems wofully like a reactionary movement to abandon any part of the ground that has been already occupied. Devolve upon private enterprise the furnishing of the means of middle class education, and preparing the youth for a college course, and you simply throw the work into the hands of sectarian institutions or cause it to be neglected altogether. With a good class of high schools free for all, there is an incentive to the youth of ability, to press forward in the race, and native talent, come from what class in society it may, will have an opportunity of development, of being disciplined at least to the point of public utility, and of repaying to the State, many fold, the debt it owes for its own culture.

But non-sectarian education has hitherto been one of the most distinctive features of the American system, and one of the most beautiful as respects the results contemplated. The object to be attained in addition to securing a general education, has been to alloy, if not eliminate, sectarian bitterness, to create a spirit of tolerance, good will, and christian fellowship, and gradually inspire the youth of the land with the opinion that religion is a thing too essentially personal, and too sacred to be made a subject of contention among unchariable sectaries. It was designed to instil the principle that a free citizen of a free State must be perfectly free to choose, without let or hindrance, his own creed, or, if he likes it better, a negation of all creeds, and all this without affecting in any way his rights of citizenship. To a large extent it has been successful and looking over the whole surface of American society, their churches, their pastors, their benevolent institutions, their press and general literature, there is no reason to say that either the Government or infidelity is more prevalent among them than in other countries, nor nearly so much so as in several States of Europe.

But should Chicago permit her High Schools to be closed, and the work now done by them either take up by sectarian institutions or neglected altogether—why may not the community fall back into that miserable state from which society by a great effort has happily emerged? The first step in the direction of closing the High Schools was incomplete or complete, or that should have fired it with greater zeal in defence of this fundamental principle in responsible government.

Had a Conservative Government been in power at Ottawa and a Lieutenant-Governor of the same party in Quebec, and a similar outrage been perpetrated by this Tory Governor in respect to a Rouge Cabinet, it is difficult to conceive of the strength and vigor with which this act of Tory despotism would have been denounced, and the fiery appeals that would have been addressed to the people to arise in their might and defend their Constitution from this attack upon its most vital principle. MONTREAL BANK DIVIDEND.

The announcement of a coming half yearly dividend on the part of the Bank of Montreal, equal in amount to something over the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, will be received with satisfaction. As a natural consequence the stock of that Bank has gone up no less than 5 per cent., while bank stock generally becomes more in favor. The class of securities referred to have suffered an undue depreciation of late, and now appear likely to regain something of their legitimate buoyancy.

A new paper carpeting, made to imitate parquet flooring, is described. The paper is printed from actual photographs of various woods, which it is said to perfectly resemble. The floor is prepared by being leveled, and the crevices filled with plaster of Paris; over the prepared surface lesstion is stretched, and on this, first, lining-paper, and then the patterned paper is pasted, the whole being finished with a coating of a peculiar varnish. This carpet wears well, can easily be kept clean, and its appearance is most satisfactory.

A new and valuable process has been devised for utilizing the smoke which rises from lead smelting furnaces. The smoke passes through an almost endless line of pipes of sheet iron and woolen bags, which condenses it into metalic lead in the same way that steam is condensed into water. The product is a blueish, impalpable powder, which makes a fine blue paint. This blue powder passes through still other furnaces, and subjected to a great heat, comes out pure white lead.

A comparison recently made between two Atlantic steamers, one made in 1840 and one of to-day's, shows that the modern steamship carries fifteen times as much freight as the old one did, at nearly twice the speed. The consumption of coal per ton of cargo was, in 1840, nearly eleven times as great as at present. The reduction in price of freight and passage has not been as great as the diminution of cost seems to justify.

The Globe gets off a sensational account of the doings at Ottawa on Friday night and Saturday, but forgets to say anything touching its editor (the member for North York) throwing books across the House at members' heads. A little explanation on such a point might be beneficial.

SHIFTING SANDS IN EUROPE.

The European condition still remains critical. The hopes of peace alternate with the expectation that war cannot long be averted. The fact seems to be that before Russia can be adequately compensated for the sacrifices which war has inflicted upon her, interests must be made subservient which refuse to become subordinate. Austrian interests, English interests, Roumanian and Servian interests, not to mention any lingering interests which the Porte may have in Europe. The pendulum of events sways to and fro in accordance with the intrigues of statesmen and the passions of peoples. None can predict the outcome with any approach to confidence. To-day the news is warlike, yesterday it was pacific, to-morrow it may put on some other aspect. Meanwhile, it seems to be likely that questions of such gravity have yet to be determined respecting the position which Russia shall hold in relation to Turkey, and Eastern Europe in general, as can only be solved by a renewal appeal to arms.

An extraordinary theory on the physical history of Central Africa was brought before the Paris Geographical Society on March 6 by M. F. D. Delonele, who maintains, from completely new documents in his possession, he is able to establish the following points:—1. That Lake Tanganyika did not exist at the time of the first journeys of the Portuguese missionaries to the centre of Africa in the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. 2. That Unyanwezi, Ugogo, Uganda, Usemba, Mount Gambonyara, and its white inhabitants have been known since the fourteenth century. 3. That Lakes Victoria and Albert Nyanza, Bangweolo and Moero were explored at the same epoch. 4. That the affluent of the Loalaba met with to the north of the equator by Mr. Stanley, two miles wide at its mouth, comes from Lake Albert Nyanza. 5. That this lake was at one time a much more considerable reservoir than now. 6. That a great city existed on what is now the situation of Lake Tanganyika. 7. That in the fifteenth century there was a movement of the Wa-Sing-hilo toward the Congo, a migration which was repelled by the natives of the coast, led by the Portuguese. This looks like conjectural geography gone mad, though before pronouncing any definite opinion on M. Delonele's themes, we shall wait, like the president of the society, for the production of the documents on which these extraordinary statements are based.

The Presbytery of Glasgow have concluded to serve Mr. Fergus Ferguson with a libel. Their decision does not seem to be founded upon any rejection of the Standards, nor do they question his right to appeal from the Standards to Scripture. Their complaints amounts substantially to this:—That Mr. Ferguson does not believe in any such salvation as the great mass of Christians have hitherto believed in. In effect the sentence of Presbytery amounts to denying the distinction between the covenant of works and the covenant of grace, and of teaching that the only covenant of God with man is that they that love God and do His will shall be blessed. In the fourth he is charged with denying that man by his fall "has lost all ability of will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation." To the fifth he is accused of holding that not every sin brings the sentence of death; but that, in view of Christ's death, the only ground of condemnation is unbelief in Christ, and that, therefore, those who in this world have had no opportunity to believe in Christ will have it in the world to come. The sixth charges him with holding that Hell is not a place of eternal punishment, but a "law of nature" by God and Judgment now seemed to insist, in calling Vice-Chancellor M'Neat to assume the Premiership of Ontario.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Ouimet moved an amendment to guard against the appointment to office or the Parliament of any member of the House of Commons or Senate, within six months of holding a seat in either House. He won d simply say that the strongest way of influencing members, was by the hope, promise or expectation of a situation, which the Government could easily provide. He thought the Liberals ought to avail themselves of the opportunity of maintaining while in power the principles they professed when in opposition ten years ago, under the leadership of Sir Antoine Aime Dorion.

Mr. Holton said the proposal was a good one. He had not learned the trick that her sworn testimony was a lie, and that Mr. Beecher was a sinful man as respects herself. She thus announces herself to be an adulteress as well as a perjured woman. It is best that she should be dismissed from the scene as unworthy of any credence. Since the time when the charges were first brought, Mr. Beecher has conducted himself in a manner to win increased respect. He has maintained his position as a fearless exponent of truth as he understands it, and has labored in this vocation amid a wonderful amount of approval. Mrs. Tilton's present statement confirms the suspicion that Mr. Beecher fell into the hands of scoundrels, who have now ended in compelling the principal witness in his favor to contradict her sworn statement. It is new more than ever certain that Mr. Beecher is a greatly injured man.

The Church Times, in speaking of the Bishop of London with respect to his ecclesiastical appointments, asks if it is "wonderful that people should regard him as a great deal more like a father-in-law than a father in God." The Bishop of London, it may be observed, is very much a father-in-law, seeing that he is the happy father of eleven daughters, all of whom he succeeded in marrying to expectant curates. It need hardly be stated that the curates aforesaid did not expect in vain, and that they are all suitably provided for. Bishop Jackson certainly ought to avoid the apostolic anathema pronounced on those prelates who do not look after their own household.

It is new a new idea that suicide leads to suicide. The imitative faculty is at all times largely developed among people at large, though it may exist for the most part unconsciously to its possessor. The telegraph notes the case of a young man who cut his throat from horror at the suicide of Madame Restell, and of another who was so affected at the shocking details of that tragedy that he rushed wildly into a Police Station in New York, while in a somnambulistic state, crying, "I have killed my girl."

Socialism appears to be taking giant strides in Germany. Its societies are ostensibly only 100,000 strong, but derive pecuniary and other support from many hundred thousand more. The money spent in the agitation is believed to amount annually to over $75,000. Their journals, six in number in 1869, are now about fifty, in addition to which almanacs, pamphlets and flying sheets are circulated by hundreds of thousands.

After all, Mr. Blake shirked the vote on Sir John Macdonald's resolution deprecating Mr. Letellier's action in Quebec. If he had had the manliness of a true Reformer he would have denounced the outrage from the beginning, but to allow it to be disowned without expressing any opinion on the matter, and then to shirk the vote, was to leave himself open to unfavorable remark. These critics, however, are unanimous in their condemnation of Cleopatra, whom they denounce in unmeasured terms.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 16, 1878.

After prayers and routine,

The speaker read the return from the Supreme Court, concerning the decision given yesterday in the Charlevoix and Jacques Cartier election case.

Mr. Macdonnell (Inverness) presented the report of the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. Archibald introduced a Bill to Amend the Adulteration Act, to provide against the fraud of oleomargarine butter made not out of cream, but beef suet. His object was to make the manufacturer brand this compound with what it really was, the clauses of the Bill being those of an Act which had been passed in New York State.

Mr. Blanchard thought it would be better for the member to hand this Bill to the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. Laurier said if the provisions of the bill were satisfactory he would take charge of it.

A message was received from his Excellency asking the attendance of the House of Commons in the Senate Chamber, whither they proceeded.

On their arrival, the Governor-General sanctioned a number of bills.

On the return of the Commons to their Chamber,

Mr. Laurier moved the third reading of the bill respecting the duty on malt.

Mr. Gibbs (South Ontario) opposed the mode of levying the duty, as well as the duty itself, which was enormous, and far more than that levied in the United States.

Mr. Rochester pointed out the difference to the disadvantage of Canadians between the English and the Canadian law with respect to malting. He held that there were no abuses any where in the Dominion worse than those which could be perpetrated in the excise department.

Hon. Mr. Laurier said the bill had been drawn in deference to the views of the brewers of the country, many of the larger ones of which he had consulted.

Mr. Mitchell condemned the policy of the Government, which had killed off all our distilleries, for where, as there been 70 odd, now there were only six.

Mr. Young advocated the bill as being fair to all parties, and not unduly heavy upon lager beer brewers.

The bill passed.

The following bills were read a third time and passed:—

To repeal section 28 of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1876, as to slops in Canadian waters.

To amend the law respecting dock loans.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright, the House went into committee on the bill to make provision for the winding up of Insolvent Incorporated Fire and Marine Insurance Companies, which he proposed to had a tendency to damp your personal devotion to the Crown, to discourage your attachment to the Empire, or be discredit the system of constitutional government under which you live. I found you a loyal people, and I leave you the truest hearted subjects in her Majesty's dominions. I found you proud of your descent, and anxious to maintain your connection with the mother country. I leave you more convinced than ever of the solicitude of Great Britain to reciprocate your affection, of her generous turns to the lower of the stock.

THE GOVERNOR - GENERAL.

PRESENTATION OF THE PARLIAMENTARY ADDRESS.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S REPLY.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press.

Ottawa, April 16th.

At two o'clock this afternoon the Senators and members of the House of Commons assembled in the Senate Chamber to witness the presentation to his Excellency the Governor-General of the joint address of both Houses recently published in the debates. His Excellency and staff arrived precisely at two o'clock, and were received and escorted to the throne by Hon. A. Mackenzie, Sir John Macdonald, Hon. E. Blake, Hon. Dr. Tupper, Hon. Peter Mitchell, Hon. H. Langevin, Hon. Mr. Robitaille, Hon. Mr. Cartwright, Hon. Mr. Smith, Hon. R.W. Scott, Hon. I. Burpee, and Hon. D. Mills, who formed a semi-circle in front of the throne, with her Excellency and Lady Helen Blackford in the centre, whilst the presentation was made by the Premier.

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN,—It is difficult for me to find befitting words in which to thank you for the signal and unprecedented honor which has been conferred upon me by this joint address from your two Houses. Regarding as I do the utterances of Parliament as the most august and authoritative expression of the popular sentiment, it affords me unmeasured satisfaction to be thus assured of the confidence and esteem of the inhabitants of the Dominion. To win the good will of a nation is the greatest achievement open to human ambition, and to learn from you that I hold a place in the affections of the people of Canada is alike the highest triumph and the greatest pleasure I am ever likely to enjoy. It would not become me to inquire how far this result is to be attributed rather to your own generosity than to any exertions upon my part. It is a happy principle rooted in the nature of Englishmen of all estates to contest themselves with the simple discharge of those duties which lie to their hand, without considering too curiously to what degree their conduct may influence the personal estimation in which they were held by others, and their reward, when it arrives is often as great a surprise as it is a satisfaction. All that I can say is that from the moment I came amongst you, I have had but one thought, the desire to render faithful service to our Queen, to the Empire, and to Canada. If there are no positive advantages to which I can point as having resulted from my Administration there is one fcast I can fairly make—no act or word of mine has ...ttachment to the Empire, or be discredit the system of constitutional government under which you live. I found you a loyal people, and I leave you the truest hearted subjects in her Majesty's dominions. I found you proud of your descent, and anxious to maintain your connection with the mother country. I leave you more convinced than ever of the solicitude of Great Britain to reciprocate your affection, of her generous turns to the lower of the stock.

GRATITUDE OF JOHN BULL FOR PROFFERS OF COLONIAL VOLUNTEERS—PROPOSED CANADIAN ARMY CORPS.

From the London Daily Telegraph.

Lord Dufferin, as true a patriot as ever breathed, whose transatlantic sojourn has only served to kindle his patriotism to a warmer glow than before, perhaps never performed a more agreeable task than that mentioned in a telegram from Ottawa, which was published yesterday. He will forward, it is stated, to the Home Government, the names of all the Canadian militia corps and officers who have volunteered for active service in the event of Great Britain becoming engaged in war, as a tangible proof of the devotion felt by the Canadians to the mother country. It has been before announced that a movement of this kind had been initiated on the first hint of coming danger; the colonial, like the home volunteers, going out of their way to claim a share in the glory and the peril of defending British interests wheresoever and by whomsoever assailed. This is a remarkable demonstration, and, what is more, it represents substantial aid. Canadian volunteers are neither so limited in number nor so imperfectly disciplined that their help could be declined as of little consequence. We have no doubt that if the occasion arose, and if the mere promise of war were succeeded by the terrible reality, a force of thirty thousand men—that is, an entire army corps—might be contributed by the Dominion, comprising some of the finest light infantry in the world. Now, as the most which our War Office could do at an early date would be the creation of two corps, the supplementary contingent from North America would be a really formidable addition to our fighting power. But the spirit shown is more important a matter than the mere counting of men, for Canada is always increasing in population as well as in loyalty, so that what is valuable to England now will be still more so year by year. There is no reason to think that the spirit of our other colonies is greatly inferior to that of the North American, and, therefore, it comes to this, that while degenerate Englishmen croak over the decadence of their country, and lament the want of soldiers to make the basis of a respectable military power, Great Britain has—in addition to her own population, whose patriotism and nerve must not be judged by the emasculated standard of peace and pro-Russian leagues—a great reserve of manhood and energy available on more than one continent from which to draw as she requires it. To those who may pass by a demonstration such as that from Ottawa as unimportant, it may be worth while to recall the fact that it is only about ten years since the last regiment of British troops was withdrawn from Canada, and the colony was left to defend itself. Many and grievous were the complaints of the abandoned colonists; but the policy which dictated that step, although probably inspired by no higher motive than economy, has been amply vindicated by the event. Not only can the Dominion undertake for itself, but it can claim a share in the defence abroad of the interests of the mighty realm with which it is eager to be identified, and whose glorious traditions it is proud to emulate.

The Song of the Camp.

A CRIMEAN INCIDENT.

"Give us a song!" the soldiers cried,
The camp-fires glowing round,
When the foiled guns of the camps allied
Grew weary of thundering.

The dark Russian, in silent scoff
Lay crop and shrouding under,
And the tawny mouths of the Malakoff
No longer hombed its blunder.

There was a pause. The gunner-man said:
"We storm the forts to-morrow;
Sing, while we may, another song,
Well bring enough of sorrow."

They lay along the battery's side,
Below the smoking cannon—
Brave hearts, from Severn and from Clyde,
And from the Inland of Shannon.

They sang of love and not of fame;
Forgot was Britain's glory;
Each heart recalled a different name,
But all sang "Annie Laurie."

Voice after voice caught up the song,
Until its tender passion
Rose like an anthem, rich and strong—
Their battle-eve confession.

Dear girl, her name he dared not speak,
Yet, as the song grew louder,
Something upon the soldier's cheek
Washed off the stains of powder.

Beyond the darkening ocean burned
The bloody sunset's embers,
While the Crimean valleys learned
How English love remembers.

And once again a fire of hell
Rained on the Russian quarters,
With scream of shot, and burst of shell,
And bellowing of the mortars.

And Irish Norah's eyes are dim
For a singer, dumb and gory;
And English Mary mourns for him
Who sang of "Annie Laurie."

Ah, soldiers! to your honored rest,
Your truncheons and valor bearing,
The living are the tenderest—
The singing are the dearest.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Myddleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

Sir Neil Athelston could be courteous enough when he chose, and he was courteous then. But the artist quickly refused. "I hey were all urging him when Eustace Jeffry and Miss Castillain came up to the pool inside them, standing near a log that had any of them.

"That's right," said Neil, waiting at Lina Chester's side; "Miss Jorden seemed to think there was something about the water which should make people avoid it."

"Haunted?" laughed Jeffry.

With a sudden movement—half of terror, half of disgust—Lina started back; for, just as his shadow touched the water, a heavier one spread from edge to edge; and for a moment the sun's rays were swallowed, and the pool was black and treacherous as night. Only a minute, and the sun shone out again beyond the shadow of wood but the old look never came again to Lina's face during all that evening.

There was much laughter during tea, for it takes but little to provoke laughter over such a meal among the hills; with a height fire burning up against the ardent August sky, and expecting constant reply-thinking, and half a dozen gentlemen waiting, with a gay attempt at professional skill, and making the task be considered a mere pos sible. Every joke passes muster then, and laughter is heighted. Quick not ready to wait even upon a trifling jest, which would be accordingly ignored as too poor to provoke a smile in the very same society at home. But when the noisy meal was over, and the two canaries—who had nothing to do—were preparing to enjoy a quiet tea together in the background, the party separated; and then more than one of them wished that they could have gone straight from the cheerful meal away from all him altogether.

"How beautiful it is!" Louisa Castillain said, looking up to where the sunshine lingered on the hill tops, while the valley lay in shadow. But she was left to sample with Lady Athelston only, and soon the beauty died out for her.

"Lovely!" murmured Emily Jorden, glancing coyly down at the chattering little stream which threaded its way through the moss, and touching with her parasol the glistening maidenhair ferns and leaves which lay below the rippling surface. Poor Colonel Stuart listened politely to her rhapsody, and on the narrow pathway above no fear away that the shady spot on it looked like boys! Eustace Jeffry and Marjorie Castillain were walking idly together. So very soon the loveliness died out for her.

Could it have died out more completely even if her ears had detected the passionate, jealous hopeless tone in Eustace Jeffry tried in vain to hide as he talked to this girl—a love that was cowardly in its despair, and threatening in its selfishness; a love which he strove to make her feel in very word and look of his, for well he knew it felt would be ruin to him to confess.

And Marjorie walked beside him with utter, cold indifference, too proud to attempt an escape, and too fond of him not to glean a drop of comfort from even this tête-a-tête.

They had stopped for a minute on the height, and were looking round before they began their descent, when Jeffry made a plunge over which he had dreamed for weeks. Inherent coward he must have been with all his daring, or he would not be able in the girl to repay this undeserved kindness with treachery."

"Not at all," said Marjorie, placidly.

"For this whole afternoon, and for many days before," continued Jeffry, his voice a little quicker and more eager, and his eyes turning from the distance with a keen, intent look at her as he spoke, "I have marked it with pain and regret. Lady Athelston's companion is using every art and every wile she possesses to win the love of Athelston's son. Is that just, is that honorable, for one who is living, as it were, on her bounty?"

"Not at all," returned Marjorie again.

"So perhaps the most harassing thought of all, to poor Lina Chester," continued Jeffry, making his desperate last throw, "is that Sir Neil encourages this—may, more, tempts her on. In fact, he seems to enjoy being entangled in the meshes of an attachment which has an extraordinary and incomprehensible attraction for him, such as"—he dis should be cast now; he would not draw back from his last throw—"to other affaires—from which he could have had. Is this a state of affairs which Lady Athelston can quietly sit down and calmly contemplate?"

"I don't know," said Marjorie, looking out into his face with her bright, honest eyes; "but Lady Athelston has a marvelous power of sitting down and calmly contemplating affairs."

"Not such as these," rejoined Jeffry, his face hot and scarlet now; "not the perfidy of the girl whom she has taken into her house as friendly, as the faithlessness of her own son; above all, not the treachery planned in the background—another."

"I see," said Marjorie, in her clear, slow voice. "I see what you are endeavoring to make me see; and more, perhaps. It is very gratifying to me, Mr. Jeffry, to be made aware of what you think," she went on, calmly, as she began the descent of the hill. "It will at least enlighten me as to your motives, if I am puzzled by your conduct in the future, as I have been a little puzzled by it now and then in the past. Of course you are kind to have confided in me; and you have been kind in your frequent warnings to Lady Athelston to beware of the girl—there has been no question of charity in the matter. And of course you are kind to Sir Neil in putting him on his guard against that solitary man who is working among the hills here for a scanty livelihood. Oh, pray guard Sir Neil against him, because you chose to hate him, and most of all, perhaps, because I choose to like him. We are surrounded by traitors," added the girl, changing her tone to one of easy sarcasm, "and if we steer safely among them we shall owe it all to you. Accept my thanks, at least, Mr. Jeffry; for if there is one thing in the world more despicable to me than all other bad things put together, it is—treachery."

Jeffry's cheeks turned livid. The tone was so very unmistakable (though the sarcasm was covered with lady-like quiescence), that he failed entirely in his answer. Yet when Emily Jorden met them—though she made room immediately for him at her side, and smiled her pleased welcome—he quelled Marjorie with real ferocity in his eyes; angry with himself though, as he always was, for being so enthralled by the only girl who had ever carelessly and openly despised his devotion.

There was no contempt of his devotion in Emily Jorden's manner as they walked together down the valley, and the devotion was quite genuine. But at the valley gate, where the horses were being put to the carriages again, and the scattered party gathering, Eustace left her and joined Sir Neil, who had dawdled a little apart, with a rather ominous gloom on his fair, hand-some face.

"How dismal Miss Chester looks!" began Jeffry, with his usual tact, and in a low, interested, yet idle tone. "She looks as if she had been vexing some one she is fond of. That would be Miss Marjorie Castillain, I fear, for I cannot be sure of Miss Chester loving any one else who is here to-day. Miss Castillain is so very hasty, that I can readily fancy her hurting the feelings of a timid, shy girl like Miss Chester."

"Miss Castillain has had nothing to do with it," returned Sir Neil, promptly, a light of sudden hope, of which he was unconscious, flashing in his long blue eyes; "it was I who bothered her. And why the demon don't you speak out, man?—why are you smiling?"

"At your word 'bothered,' I can pretty well see what has vexed Miss Chester; not your bothering, but the feeling of having parted from you in a pet—of course you did part in a pet, Sir Neil?" he added, with his questioning smile.

And Sir Neil, hot and angry, and glad to find a vent for his impatience, told of Lina's cold manner to himself, and then of a certain rebuke which had rankled with in him most of all.

At this Jeffry laughed, so lightly and so skeptically, that Sir Neil Athelston felt his spirits rise again; and he listened to the fat.e's specious arguments with an eager gladness shining again under the heavy lashes of his sleepy eyes.

But there was one thing Jeffry had yet to say, and it must be said now. He could not boat about the bush, as he had tried to do with Marjorie. He must just say what he had to say, and leave the words to take root as they would. So, acting upon the determination, Jeffry drew the bow at a venture, and let the arrow, poisoned and double-pointed, sped surely on its way, keen and direct.

"You are sure of these things?" questioned Sir Neil, in Jeffry's first pause; and his lips were tight and merciless. "You swear to them?"

"I would swear to them," rejoined the tutor, calmly, "if I were such a one as the fellow of whom I have been speaking. But, being allowed to be your friend, Sir Neil, and Miss Castillain's friend, I merely need to tell you of the fact."

"The scamp!" muttered the baronet. "And you overheard Miss Chester tell him she would go to his cottage the first evening she had liberty?"

DARING BURGLARY.

Shocking Treatment of a Woman, who is Nearly Strangled by the Thieves.

On Saturday night, between eleven and twelve o'clock, the house of Patrick Mellon, about four miles from Guelph, was entered by some persons, one his sister, Ann Mellon, half smothered, and a trunk containing $310 taken away. The story, as told by Miss Mellon to a Mercury reporter, is that she was in bed upstairs; her brother, the only other inmate of the house, is a cripple, and slept downstairs. About midnight she was awakened by some parties raising the window of her room from the top of the verandah, and three young men stepping inside her room. She immediately jumped up, but was seized by the throat, thrown on the bed and half-smothered with some of the bedclothes. While one of the three men who entered the room held her down and prevented her screaming, a small trunk, such as is used for packing books and papers, and containing $310, was drawn from underneath the bed and thrown out the window. After sufficient time had elapsed to carry the trunk off a short distance, the party who was below her let go and immediately jumped through the window and cleared off. Miss Mellon screamed for help as soon as she recovered from the effects of half struggle-tion, and the brother, who had heard the noise below while the trunk was being taken out, managed by this time to reach his sister's bedroom, by dint of great exertion in climbing the stairs. A number o' young men have been arrested for complicity to the outrage, and it is likely several will be found guilty. Their names are Chas. Duggan, Ed. Duggan, Thos. Brown, Jos. Jennings, Jas. Kennedy, and Jas. Race.

Terrible Accident.

AN OLD WOMAN'S NECK BROKEN, AND HER HUSBAND DANGEROUSLY INJURED.

On Sunday, while Mr. and Mrs. Gingrich, an aged couple living near Preston, were driving home from a funeral which they attended near Fisher's Mills, they met with an accident with cost her life, and may cost his. It appears that when they were about half way home the horse got frightened at something, and commenced to run away, the driver losing entire control of the animal. The old woman, seeing the great danger in which they were placed, jumped out of the buggy, and strange to say, fell in such a way as to have her neck broken, causing instant death. The old man remained in the buggy till it was upset, when he was very badly hurt, from the effects of which he may possibly lose his life.—News.

$500 for Refusing to Marry.

At the Peel Assizes, on Tuesday last, the first case called was that of Mary Buckhouse v. David Johnston. This was an action brought to recover damages for breach of promise to marry. Both parties to the action belong to Caledon. It came out in the evidence, which served to strengthen the case on behalf of the plaintiff, that the promise had been attended by seduction, a child having been born. The jury gave a verdict for $500.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

BLENHEIM.

I noticed in a recent issue of the FREE PRESS an account of a young lady who had a quilt with 8 thousand pieces in it, and you say, what next. I have a lady friend in Blenheim now with more than double that number of pieces in it. She lives near Bombolein village.—R. C.

BRANTFORD.

Brantford has three cricket clubs.

Father Stafford, of Lindsay, the celebrated temperance orator, will lecture in St. Basil's Church, on Tuesday evening, the 30th inst.

Thirty-six members were received into Zion Presbyterian Church, Brantford, on Sabbath last. Rev. Mr. Scrimgeour, who has been the Young Ladies' College, and also Sabbath-school and some were admitted by letters from other churches. Nearly all are young people.

BUCKHORN.

As many of your readers may be unaware of the location of the pretty little village of Buckhorn, permit me to define its position. Buckhorn is situated on what is known as the Lake Road, seven miles from Cobourg and one mile from Lake Ontario. It consists of three stores, all of them doing a good business, two hotels, church, school house, a great mill, cooper and other trades that go to make a first-class country village. Such is a brief description of Buckhorn, and from here your correspondent intends from time to time to keep your readers posted on such matters as are of general interest.

Every one is becoming excited over the approaching election, and both parties are quite confident of success, and Reformers wobble, are and despondin. Conservative clubs are being organized in various parts of the county, and in places where a few years ago you could hardly find a "Tory" the village boasts of a club numbering about thirty-five members. Blenheim has followed suit and bids fair to have the 4 clubs of the county. Old Reformers are disgusted with the present state of affairs, and owe of the most influential men in the southern part of the county declares he will support Mr. Sproat, and others should be by the Conservative candidate, as he doubtless will be.

Farming operations are being carried on vigorously, a great number having sown spring grain. Gardens are being made, and if the present beautiful weather continues about three weeks longer, farmers on the ridge, will be through with their spring work.

Land is not changing hands here so rapidly as it did a few years ago; still the prices that are being paid are good. Only last week Mr. Ellis, Esq., of Bookton, sold his farm for $60 per acre, and bought another from Mr. John W. Sidney for $65 per acre.

A sad accident occurred near Blenheim on Friday last. A man named Simpson, while driving a load of hay from Blenheim towards Charing Cross, had the misfortune to upset his load and break his leg in several places, the bones protruding through the skin in several places. I understand that there is no hope of saving the injured limb. He has the sympathy of the entire community.

The Anti-Dudelites are getting very much disgusted at the conduct of Mr. Dudley, who is speaking of the Dunkin Bill, and in Blenheim especially on Thursday afternoon, and in the face of the land's statement, says the Times, a man came into the store on the affair, and he got a petition with a pocket containing a powder, which, he said, was wrought in poison used in France for poisoning purposes, and asked Moore to take some. Mr. Moore did not take the man there for. On Mr. Sills, one of the partners, refusing, the man left the store afterwards he found that he had a pair of pistols in a stumper. Dr. Kirk happening to come into the shop at the time, and surprise was at once tendered, and by means of sensation, etc., the man was induced to leave the premises quietly. It was not until three o'clock the following morning that the supposed consciousness. There is no doubt but that the bad owes his life to the resence of mind of Dr. Kirk, who took charge of the man, who continued with him up to the time of his recovery. Though now out of danger, he is still very weak.

An efficient system of drainage is being proposed for this town.

Messrs. J. McLaughlin and Sheriff Moore have visited Brantford for the purpose of examining the various methods in use there for the heating of their respective buildings, with a view of having a suitable heating apparatus for Arma Hall Council Chamber. THE TIMES'S IMPOTENCY.

In yesterday's issue the gossip correspondent of the Times referred to my remarks on the G. T. Railway as untrue. It is very easy to make a statement, but statements should be supported by facts. I made the remarks at the end of the Times or any other man to disprove one word I have said. I am not afraid to meet the Grand Trunk Railway. It is not what we expected, but it is not what the G. T. R. officials said the ring that passed that vote, but it is a fact nevertheless. I am not non-committal or contrast between the G. T. R. and the carpenter's shop. I did not come up here to be interviewed by carpenters, but to make a legal report to the Company, and the Company has not yet had time to consider it. The Company has not agreed upon to improvements within the reasonable time called for in their contract.

SOME GOOD NEWS.

The excitement respecting municipal expenditure, has curtailed the aspirations of our City Fathers. At their meeting last night they reversed the order to expend $300 for a wind-mill for the cemetery.

The Solicitor to the town has, it appears, been on a trip to Sarnia with the Police officials about their taxes. Why such journeys should be made in a county. The property levied upon, assessed and placed on the collector's roll, must pay their costs of same under any circumstances, no matter whether the Solicitor goes or not. Such trips are simply useless expenditure and misappropriation to the duties of a longer majority of the Council. It did not come up to the Council meeting last night, nor was there a motion to sanction it. Of course it was the direction of duty in the preparation. Nothing, however, has been done to make it legal or just up to the present, and the Collector will probably proceed with his work, under an incomplete roll until another taxpayer puts a stop to the affair.

The crossings in town have been much improved this week, and we are looking them in the shape of a wood crush inconvenience to pedestrians.

The Stratford Lacrosse Club will play a match with the Paris Club on the 24th inst. with the Caledonian Club, on the Fair Ground.

At the last meeting of the Town Council Mr. Lamb's resignation was accepted, and a warrant ordered to be issued for a new election in Ward No. 4.

One day lately, the house of Mr. Thomas Bradshaw, in Downie, occupied by his son, Mr. James Bradshaw, was destroyed by fire. The furniture was all saved, except what was in one room. The cause of the fire is supposed to be from a spark from the kitchen chimney. The property was insured in the Perth Mutual for $600.

The meeting of the Thomson & Williams Manufacturing Company has been adjourned till Monday next.

Mr. Nicol's house and lot on William street have been purchased by Mr. John Ballantyne. The price was $740.

Mr. Sylvester, for knocking four teeth out of the mouth of Herbert Lattera, with a wrench, has been sentenced to 90 days in jail by the P. M. Nancy Hanna, 728, Wm. Somer fils, 12s; Joshua Hanna, 728; Wm. Somer, 12s; Mrs. Hanna, 12s; Mrs. Bayer, 50c; Mrs. Fox, 50c; Mrs. Fox—Mary Vickers, 1d; Hattie Bugg, 10c; Ellen Bugg, 10c; Mrs. Goodman 50c; Mrs. Hanna, 50c; Nancy Hanna, 72s; Wm. LUCAN.

I have this week to chronicle the death of Mr. Wm. Kitt, an old resident, whereby he was called to his account in a fearfully sudden manner. On Friday afternoon he met with one or two friends in the village, with whom he had some drinks, and in the evening, being somewhat overcome by its effects, he went to the stable at the rear of the Hotel and lay down. After some time he was discovered there by the hostler, and taken from the premises to his home some short distance, where he requested to be left for a little while. Shortly after he was found dead, he was alive, for though gross carelessness or neglect he was allowed to have died during the night and morning, and from the very meagre evidence adduced at the inquest held on the body of the deceased came to his death from intoxication and exposure, rather an accommodating verdict in a great many instances. He had not been properly cared for by those whose bounden duty it was to do so, in all human probability he would be alive and well to-day. Mr. Michael Gleeson, and sister, on their return from Mr. Kitt's funeral, the team, which is a very spirited one, took fright, upset the buggy and threw the occupants severely in the ditch. Miss Gleeson got somewhat injured, but no inherent injury done to her or her party.

The fruits of the late Donnelly conviction is to be seen in a marked manner in more ways than one in the village. Notably so in the circulation of a subscription sheet, begging funds for a testimonial to Mr. Everett to recompense him for his trouble and expense in the matter. Why not raise his salary, as I suggested in a former communication, and allow or compel all parties, high and low, rich and poor, to contribute equally alike towards his support. A procedure of this kind smacks of partiality, and we have heard enough of it. We have not been called upon to cast in our mite.

The annual Spring show of entire stock and farming implements takes place in the village on the 23rd and 24th inst., when quite a number of prizes will be awarded to the successful competitors.

There is a promise of considerable improvements about to be undertaken on the village during the spring and summer, of which more anon.

A very singular circumstance happened yesterday evening. A valuable Collie dog belonging to Charley McRoberts, whilst in the act of chasing a very small pig, and being somewhat closely confined, his jowlop turned upon his persecutor and bit him severely in the face, so much so that quick that it was impossible for the spectators to account for how it was accomplished. He was sick—the dog, I mean, not the pig.

ONEIDATOWN.

The Onedatown Lacrosse Club has been reorganized, and intend playing a practice game with the St. Thomas Lacrosse Club shortly.

A special meeting of the Oneida Council was held in Reconstruction lodge room on the 12th inst. Resolutions were passed, one admitting a Grand Lodge Delaware Station, Reserve, and to take charge, and the other granting J. the pulmonary on down line between Delaware and Southwold. Mr. McKay was appointed to remove his frances of the Indian lands.

SARNIA.

The Assizes opened Sydney at 4 p. m., Mr. Justice Armour on the Bench.

The first case called was Morrison, Hayle. The facts of the case are as follows: Plaintiff was a neighbor of defendant's wife, and while plaintiff worked on defendant's farm without a contract for any wages from his labor as it was understood between them that on defendant's death he would have the farm to the plaintiff, and in pursuance of this under standing defendant made a will, whereby the farm was devised to plaintiff. Some time ago, however, defendant destroyed his will, and informed the plaintiff that he should make some other disposition of the farm. Plaintiff therefore brought this suit for the recovery of wages for the period some three years; by his will on defendant's part. Verdict for defendant, with leave to plaintiff to move to have same set aside and a verdict entered for plaintiff for $175.

In the case of Fawcett vs. Cosse, judgment was reserved. Jas. F. Lister for plaintiff; J. A. Macfarlane for defendant.

ST. THOMAS.

At a meeting of the Design Young Britons held in their lodge room on Friday evening, Bro. Thomas McDonald were appointed delegates to attend the Montreal celebration on July 24th.

Mr. Thomas White, an old resident of St Thomas died at his residence, Stanley street, on Saturday afternoon, aged 65 years. The funeral will take place to-day.

A young boy named Charles Moore, in the employ of Messrs. M. E. Tripp & Co., contractors, of this town, met with what nearly proved a fatal accident on Thursday afternoon. It appears that in the lad's statement, says the Times, a man came into the store on the affair, and he got a petition with a pocket containing a powder, which, he said, was wrought in poison used in France for poisoning purposes, and asked Moore to take some. Mr. Moore did not take the man there for. On Mr. Sills, one of the partners, refusing, the man left the store afterwards he found that he had a pair of pistols in a stumper. Dr. Kirk happening to come into the shop at the time, and surprise was at once tendered, and by means of sensation, etc., the man was induced to leave the premises quietly. It was not until three o'clock the following morning that the supposed consciousness. There is no doubt but that the bad owes his life to the re-sence of mind of Dr. Kirk, who took charge of the man, who continued with him up to the time of his recovery. Though now out of danger, he is still very weak.

An efficient system of drainage is being proposed for this town.

AN OLD LONDONER.—From the San Francisco Pacific Evangel of the 5th we quote the following complimentary notice of a former Londoner, who is a brother of Mrs. Columbus, of this city, and Mr. A. C. Barnes, merchant, of Aylmer:—"Those of our citizens who have heard the intensely interesting Bible readings by Rev. H. W. Brown, the Evangelist, at the Metropolitan Temple, will be glad to learn that they will be renewed next week and held daily. Mr. Brown has been very ill, and his friends have watched anxiously by his bedside for ten days, but skillful treatment, good nursing and kindly ministrations have been blessed, and this servant of the Most High, so filled with the Word and so gifted in its elucidation, will resume the work he loves."

A BURGLAR CAUGHT.—Mr. H. C. Green received a letter yesterday from the police authorities at Clifton, in which it was stated that a young man had been arrested there on Monday having in his possession several articles of jewelry which are supposed to have been stolen from his house, and on some of which the initials "H. C. G." are engraved. The man's name is Collins, and he is said to hail from Toronto. He is reported to have stolen a lady's gold watch and chain at Ingersoll, and also a large quantity of jewelry from the residence of Bishop Fuller, of Hamilton, a portion of which was also found on his person. The prisoner was arrested by Chief McDougall, of the Suspension Bridge Force, who had, on his suspicions, little information that those robberies were committed, or that the third was expected in that direction.

RIFLE ASSOCIATION OF FERTA.—The annual meeting of the above association took place at Stratford the other day, when resolutions of regret were passed on the death of Col. J. C. W. P.; President, Major D. Scott; Vice-Presidents, Major Scott, Paymaster Rutherford, Major Stephenson; Sec.-Treas., J. Wilson; Council, R. Rutherford, Capt. Parkinson, H. Sewell, R. Clark, W. Lawrence, D. McGregor, Capt. McKnight; Executive, Major Stephenson, John Burch, W. B. Wilson; Range Officers, J. Wilson, W. J. Hyde; Auditors, D. McGregor, W. Lawrence. The first practice will be held on the 27th.

ASTRONOMICAL.—A correspondent writes:—More stars of the first magnitude are now visible than at any other time during the year. On a pleasant evening the sky fairly glitters with them. Sirius hangs over the southwest, and though shining through the space of eighty trillions of miles, almost dazzles the eye with his light. Looking northeast from Sirius one meets the steady gleam of Procyon, while in the northwest the gems of Orion, Betelgeuse and Rigil appear. Farther on the same course is seen the ruddy glow of Aldebaran, and just above this star, in the cluster of the Hyades, Mars sheds its sullen ray. The planet is near the tropic of Cancer and is moving in a northeasterly course. Northwest from the zenith of this position is that where the celestial goat is supposed to hide. The Twins, Castor and Pollux, appear very near the meridian, and far upwards towards the zenith, while Arcturus, the brightest of northern stars, glitters over the east. Thus nine stars of the first magnitude and one bright planet are above the horizon at the same moment.

AN old vagrant named William Johns was arrested by Constable Adams last evening for chronic vagrancy. He was sent down for two weeks to recuperate.

TIGHT lacing is not practised in this country one-half as much as ten years ago, but a No. 3 shoe has got to go on a No. 5 foot, if it shortens every toe an inch.

THE other day a teacher asked an unregenerate pupil what the gender of a certain noun was. The pupil quickly replied: "I think it is neuter, sir. At any rate it is neither one."

THE case on William street didn't go home the other night, and when he made his appearance about breakfast time his wife said that he must have slept in the cemetery, because he smelt of spirits.

WHEN the officials of a banking institution commence to use the funds for their own benefit, they say, "Let's speculate." Pretty soon this suggestion is slightly changed to "Let's peculate."

A MAN named John Sharp, was arrested last evening by Detectives Wigmore and Phair, for being concerned with a man named Shaw Fisher in taking a cow out of the southern pound on Sunday night.

ALD. Campbell's "collation" proved good food for the wags about town yesterday. But the difficulty was in deciding whether the mean "collation," "collusion" or "collusion," or what kind of hash he meant.

THE Mentor of the Council intends setting up a "collation" for the boys at next meeting. The word ain't spelled properly, but we have as good a right to say one thing and mean another as Ald. Campbell, probably. If not, why not?

JOHN Hudson charged W. H. Greenway with trespassing on his lot in London Township, and drawing away manure therefrom. Defendant agreed to return the manure and pay the costs of Court, on which condition the charge was withdrawn.

THE Board of Works, accompanied by the Street Commissioner and City Engineer, made their annual tour of the city yesterday, with the view of making themselves acquainted with the improvements to be made on the streets and culverts during the summer.

MR. and Mrs. A. T. Chapman will arrive home on the six o'clock express train from the East this morning, accompanied by Mr. C. P. Smith. Mr. Chapman's health, during the past few months, has required to be made on the streets and culverts during the summer.

Yesterday, by virtue of his office, Judge Elliot appointed Judge Davis as third arbitrator in the Coombs' property valuation. The other arbitrators are Mr. Thompson, Stratford, for the Coombs, and Mr. G. C. Magee, for the city. The arbitrators will proceed to investigation in the course of a few days, when the examination of witnesses will be proceeded with.

MR. Thomas Coffee, mechanical superintendent, has 28 teams at work on the reservoir, work at which is being pushed forward with great despatch. A considerable quantity of stones, with which to line the reservoir, have been laid down, and Mr. Cockrane appears to be the right man in the right place.

PIPE-laying on the streets will be commenced next week, the first instalment of piping being expected from Hamilton daily. There have been innumerable applications for positions on the works. Requests to be appointed to "some position not for other 'soft' occupations are very numerous; but there is no easy work to be had or appointed.

BELOW will be found a table of the quantity of gallons consumed in the principal English and American towns, showing the amount consumed per day for every one of population:—

Place.	Gals.	Place.	Gals.
Dublin	60	Cleveland	57
Glasgow	55	Philadelphia	53
Edinburgh	33	Philadelphia	53
London	30	Milwaukee	47
Liverpool	30	Columbus	47
Manchester	30	Detroit	45
Sheffield	30	Providence	37
Toronto	60

IT will be observed that the quantity used by Toronto is exceptionally large, and arises no doubt from a waste of the water. Forty gallons per head of population is considered an abundant daily supply. The new water-works for this city, it is estimated, will yield a supply far exceeding that, even though our population were increased to 40,000.

SEVERE ACCIDENTS.

Casualties at Stratford, Ingersoll, Chatham, &c.

At Stratford on Sunday last, a sad accident happened to a daughter of Mr. J. F. Woods, of Messrs. Woods, Fisher & McPherson. The little girl, who in about five years old, was running upstairs with a pitcher of water, when her foot slipped and she fell violently to the bottom. The pitcher was broken into fragments, one of which cut the child's eye and, it is feared, destroyed its sight. The poor little girl, a bright little girl, was taken to Dr. Reeve, Goodlet, Toronto, on Monday.

Mr. Ballantyne, of Ingersoll, received a bad gash in his face on Saturday by a piece of wood flying up and striking him while attending his duties in Brown's foundry.

Samuel O'Connor, of this place, had his foot nearly cut off Saturday afternoon while chopping timber. The wound is a very severe one.

On Saturday morning a young son of Mr. W. A. Grove, living on the line of Dover Township, met with a severe accident while engaged in chopping wood. By some unfortunate mismanagement of the axe in use, three toes were completely severed from the right foot.

Mr. Chas. Williams, the Chatham auctioneer, broke his leg below the knee on Saturday. He fell from a shaky box in the market. The break is a bad one.

On Friday evening last Mr. Lamont and Mr. Wm. Bray were engaged in a friendly test of muscle in the parlors of the Grand Trunk House, Clinton, when accident Mr. Lamont's arm sustained a compound fracture above the elbow.

The same afternoon a little six-year-old son of Mr. Thomas Sutherland, who lives at 74 West street, Chatham, was playing with an elder brother in the barn, and, sliding a door to and fro on rollers, when, pushing it too far, it came from its hangings, and the edge striking the little fellow on the leg, broke it at the thigh.

Robert Hunley, a colored youth, was charged, on the oath of Constable of Sexton Peters and Trustee Sanders, of Zion Methodist Church, Richmond street, with disturbing public worship on Thursday night last. Hunley was not moved on the occasion by any religious fervor, but cursed and swore and tore around generally because he could not understand the subject upon which the clergyman was dilating. A fine of $1 and $4.10 costs was imposed. He was sent down for a month in default.

The Fenton-Mitchell case stands for judgment until Friday.

Mr. Wm. McCord was summoned by Inspector Hughes for a breach of the fire-limits by-law. The case was dismissed.

At the close of the court "Tiny" Rogers entered the room bearing a boulder which he said weighed 56 pounds 13 ounces and 1 grain. After depositing the rock on the table and telling the P. M. that some white man had thrown it through his window, the Chief suggested that he carry it up to the P. M.'s office and keep it there until the occupant arrived. The P. M., on the other hand, thought it would be better to take the stone over to the Clerk's office and get him to issue a summons against it. The following were the "law dispensers" were "saying" him, and holding the rock on the table:—Inspector, his determination of visiting the Mayor, and ascertaining if respectable colored folks were to be disturbed and refused to death and no redress given. He left.

A HURON MAN IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INTERESTING LETTER TO A CITIZEN.

Mr. W. F. Bullen, manager of the Ontario Savings & Investment Society, has received an interesting letter from Mr. Henry Mathers, formerly of St. Helens village, near Lucknow, Huron County, who is now a resident of New Westminster, B. C. The letter is written about the middle of March, and to illustrate the extremely mild climate prevalent on the Pacific coast, Mr. Mathers states that the peach trees were then in full bloom. All other trees were just about to blossom forth, and the sprouts on climbing roses were between three and four inches long. "The country," says Mr. Mathers, "is all I anticipated. We have not had one shower of snow this winter, and no winter suit of clothes is required, because there is little frost or cold. Although a good deal of rain falls, it is generally warm. I believe there is a bright future for the Province, as its natural resources—minerals, timber, coal, fish, &c.—seem inexhaustible. We are living on the face of the hill overlooking the Fraser River, and last summer some of the men informed me they had to throw tons weight of salmon back into the river, which they could not get time to cure at the canneries. Along Front street the fishes were lying on the beach so thick and in such a state of decomposition that it was very offensive to come near the place. This year is delightfully situated. Its inhabitants are of a very varied character. You see the native Indian, who performs the menial work for the white man; the lowland Chinaman, the active Canadian, the shrewd American, the steady-going Englishman, the hard-headed bootchman, the phlegmatic German, the polite Frenchman and the carousing Irishman—all elbowing their way through each other in their race for wealth, yet all conforming to law and order. All things considered, I am glad I came here, although I did so at a considerable sacrifice."

The Guelph Herald believes the finest ball grounds in the world are to be found in Ireland. Woefully deceived.

There have been four million base-ball bats manufactured at Youngville, N. Y., during the past seven years.

The Vassar college girls have organized a base-ball club; they are yet undecided whether to call it the Vassar Nine or the Red Stockings.

The Eries will play at Buffalo on the 20th and 25th inst. They are managed by Alex. Ireland, Chief Engineer of the St. Louis of '77.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch says: "The appointment of the Indianapolis club for date has been set aside for the present, as the Allegheny club will not play with League teams under their present odious rules. Application has been made for the extension of the same privileges by the League as have been shown to Buffalo, Syracuse, Lowell and Tecumseh teams."

RED RIBBON SOCIETY FORMED.—An association of this kind was formed at Baker's Church, on the town-line between Delaware and Westminster, on Monday evening last by Mr. M. W. Manville, of London, who delivered a stirring address of an hour's duration. The chair was occupied by Mr. James Barrows, who opened the after part of the proceedings by a brief speech. Subsequently dialogues, vocalisms and music were given by residents of the neighborhood, which pleased the large audience present. The Society was then formed, the following being the officers:—Wm. Baker, President; Jas. Lee, 1st Vice do.; James Barrows, 3rd Vice do.; H. Jarvis, Sec.

PROSPECTS OF THE CONGRESS.

Bismarck's Conditions Modified Tone of Russia.

(By Cable Telegram to the Free Press.)

London, April 18.—A Constantinople dispatch says Hobart Pasha proceeds to Enghazi in a few days. He takes a message from the Sultan to Queen Victoria.

The Grand Duke Nicholas is reported ill. The Journal de St. Petersbourg to-day says the efforts of Germany at mediation encourage the strongest hopes of peace.

The London Echo says invitations to attend the Congress were issued to-night. A Berlin despatch says Russia has practically accepted Bismarck's proposal. The foreign Ambassadors at Berlin are arranging to leave that city, and will proceed to fix the time for the meeting of Congress.

London, April 18.—The despatch of troops from India is leading to political fears that the Government is not sufficiently earnest regard it as a natural accompaniment of the other precautionary measures. The opponents of the Government regard it as another step in the development of a warlike policy. They point to the fact that the news was announced the day after Parliament adjourned, thus preventing criticism for three weeks. The opinion is expressed that this is one of the determinations of the Cabinet Lord Derby referred to as indicating his resignation.

The royal yacht Osborne is ordered to the Mediterranean immediately, to bring home the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

Orders have been received at Portsmouth for the ships of the Channel squadron to be prepared with all despatch, for a cruise in the Mediterranean with the Channel squadron. The chief officers have been appointed to the Cyclops, Gorgon, Hecate and Hydra. It is also reported they will be shortly commissioned for coast defence purposes, while the Hecate is a charmed steamer left Plymouth yesterday with 2,000 tons of ammunition and stores, 31 steam launches and 4 pontoons for the Mediterranean fleet.

Accounts from Berlin and Vienna are still hopeful that the Congress will meet.

Bismarck left Berlin last evening for his estates, but it is not thought this will interfere with diplomatic negotiations. The coincidence with which England and Russia are maintaining their positions concerning the Congress is held to mean that the difference is radical. The belief deepens that a grab ground that the Congress will succeed advertising a war, even if it ever meets.

The Cabinet crisis at Constantinople continues, but no successor to Ahmed Veyki Pasha, the minister of the interior, has been appointed. Public information attributes the disturbances to the excitement growing out of the trial of Vera Sassanitch for her attempted assassination of the Chief of Police of St. Petersburg.

Vera Sassanitch admitted shooting M. Trepoff, and said she fired without caring whether she killed, wounded or missed him, but with the determination to bring his conduct before the public. She believed she had spent the best years of her life in a dungeon, because she was a friend of a relative of a conspirator. When she read in the newspapers that Trepoff had caused the political prisoner to be flogged, she determined to do vengeance on him. This was her whole defence. The speech of the defendant's counsel, and the verdict of acquittal, despite the Judge's charge, evoked such applause from the press and people that it is believed the Government will modify the present system of trials for political offences. The enthusiasm at St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Kieff which followed the news of the verdict, is regarded as ominous.—Ger. Tolleben leaves to-day for San Stefano with a special mission from the Czar.

The Journal de St. Petersburg says that Germany continues her mediatory efforts with discretion, zeal, and activity, which will be encouraging the strongest hopes.

The Golos of to-day says:—"We are able to state on authority that the invitations to the Congress will be issued to-night. The treaties of '56 and '71 will be laid upon the table and compared with the treaty of San Stefano."

London, April 18.—The Central News says:—We are enabled to state that the powers have agreed to Prince Bismarck's suggestion, that the ambassadors at Berlin should hold a preliminary meeting in the course of proceedings at the proposed conference, the time of meeting, &c. The respective Governments have been formally requested to instruct their ambassadors accordingly.

London, April 18.—The Gazette promulgates a proclamation by the Queen, which prohibits the export or carrying coastwise of torpedoes, torpedo boats, boats fitted with apparatus for torpedoes, and all apparatus for projecting inflammable materials or firing torpedoes.

It is reported that the British Government have chartered fifteen steamers to convey troops from India. The charters are made out with the option of Port Said, Alexandria or Malta.

In city circles it is rumored that the Government entertains the idea of landing troops at the two former places, and occupying Egypt until the Conference meets, or some satisfactory solution is arrived at.

Constantinople, April 18.—Ahmed Vefyk Effendi again tendered his resignation as President of the Council and Minister of the Interior, on Wednesday, and the Sultan refused to accept it; but on Wednesday night the Sultan dismissed Vefyk Effendi, and appointed Sadyk Pasha his successor, and Mollah Bey as Sheik ul Islam. The following appointments were also made:—

Minister of Foreign Affairs—Safvet Pasha.

Minister of War—Izzet Pasha.

Minister of Marine—Ibrahim Pasha.

Minister of Finance—Rissa Pasha.

The Sultan has issued a Hatt, advising Sadyk Pasha to observe the Constitution and carry out reforms.

The political character of the new Turkish Ministry is uncertain, but it is noteworthy that the Ministry does not include Reouf and Osman Pashas, reputed leaders of the pro-Russian party, and that the Turkish newspapers again assert that the Government will resist the occupation of Constantinople by any foreign power.

Brussels, April 18.—A Berlin special states that Bismarck, at the pressing request of Andrassy, consented to resume negotiations for a Congress on condition that he be simultaneously solicited to do so by England, Austria and Russia. The good will of Russia is indubitable, but it is feared that England may prolong the present uncertainty by abstaining from asking Germany's mediation, or by formulating reservations.

London, April 18.—Orders have been received at Chatham to raise all the infantry regiments to the full war strength by Monday. Three regiments are now waiting for orders to embark, fully equipped for the field.

An order was received at Sunderland today for 100,000 tons of coal for the Russian Government, to be shipped immediately in fast steamers for Baltic ports.

London, April 19.—A St. Petersburg correspondent says the situation is decidedly pacific. In official circles it is believed Germany's mediation is very likely to be successful, and the Congress soon assemble. It will probably be preceded by a preliminary Conference of Ambassadors at Berlin, which is expected to decide that the invitations to the Congress shall be issued to consider the modifications necessary in the treaties of 1856 and 1871. It is confidently anticipated that some such formula will be accepted in both London and St. Petersburg. A meeting of the Congress would dissipate many difficulties. Thus, there is reason to believe, as to Asia, that Russia only regards the possession of Batoum and Kars as of vital importance, and would probably consent to modify the proposed frontier, so as to cut a road from Persia to Trebizond. She might also permit a division of Bulgaria into two principalities, and allow an International Commission to define its southern frontier. It is said while Russia will not allow Turkey to be ignored, she will not permit any of its clauses to hinder a satisfactory solution.

London, April 19.—A Pera special says the Turks declare their readiness to evacuate Rhodia, Varna, and Batoum, if the Russians withdraw from the neighborhood of Constantinople. The Russians only offer to evacuate Erzeroum, and the question of the relations and politics of Sadyk Pasha, the new President of the Turkish Council, have not been destined. The Russians claim the overthrow of Vefyk Effendi as a triumph. The Palace, however, has telegraphed to Layard that the change is without any political significance. Layard is at Ismid. According to advices received in Paris, he has gone there to confer with Admiral Hornby relative to the defence of the Bosphorus.

England has bought a large quantity of grain in Trieste, and ordered it to be stored at Smyrna.

A Kalafat special reports a slight collision between Roumanians and Russians at Lom Palenka. Blows were exchanged.

London, April 18.—Though Parliament took the Easter holidays with the expressed hopes that the situation is more peaceful, private despatches received by the Government to-day indicate a disturbing character, and the Queen has called a special council of Ministers at Osborne Castle. Friday is the last day for the reserves to come in, but they are flocking to the standard daily in larger numbers than was expected.

Preparations for war continue with undemonstrative intensity. It is now known that the Duke of Edinburgh was relieved of his command of the Sultan because Russian officers to inspect his ship's plans for resisting torpedo attacks.

Nihilist Riots in Russia.

THE DANGER WHICH THREATENS THE DYNASTY.

Martyred Students—The Female Assassin.

London, April 18.—Nihilist riots are reported in Moscow, the extent of which it is impossible to determine from official reports. The alleged occasion was the arrival of fifteen students from the University of Kieff, going into exile, whom the crowds surround, crying, "Bless men suffer for the truth." The official accounts say that acts of violence caused as the students were conveyed to prison, pending their despatch to Siberia, and tranquility was restored. Private information attributes the disturbances to the excitement growing out of the trial of Vera Sassanitch for her attempted assassination of the Chief of Police of St. Petersburg.

Vera Sassanitch admitted shooting M. Trepoff, and said she fired without caring whether she killed, wounded or missed him, but with the determination to bring his conduct before the public. She believed she had spent the best years of her life in a dungeon, because she was a friend of a relative of a conspirator. When she read in the newspapers that Trepoff had caused the political prisoner to be flogged, she determined to do vengeance on him. This was her whole defence. The speech of the defendant's counsel, and the verdict of acquittal, despite the Judge's charge, evoked such applause from the press and people that it is believed the Government will modify the present system of trials for political offences. The enthusiasm at St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Kieff which followed the news of the verdict, is regarded as ominous.—Ger. Tolleben leaves to-day for San Stefano with a special mission from the Czar.

The Journal de St. Petersburg says that Germany continues her mediatory efforts with discretion, zeal, and activity, which will be encouraging the strongest hopes.

The Berlin Post says Russia is threatened with serious dangers. The lesson which the trial of Vera Sassanitch affords will be fatal if disregarded.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says the agitation in Russia is increasing. Hundreds of students charged with instigating riots have been placed under arrest. The number of persons killed in the recent riots was greater than the police admit.

Labor Troubles in England.

Progress of the Lancashire Operatives' Strike.

London, April 18.—A Manchester telegram says, that from statements received there to-day, it is confidently anticipated a great representative meeting of operatives will shortly be held, and a compromise emanating from them may be agreed upon.

At Preston the operatives of several mills, running altogether 500,000 spindles, have accepted the ten per cent. reduction. Six firms have not yet given notice of a reduction. It is not thought there will be a general strike in Preston.

All the operatives at Longridge have struck.

At Blackburn it is thought the strike will be a long one. Twenty-two thousand operatives are now affected there.

At Padiham only one mill is working.

THE McCOSKRRY SCANDAL.

Biographical Sketch of the Fallen Bishop.

Further Facts About the Great Transgression

Confirmatory Details and Gossip.

Leading Clerics and Laymen interviewed.

A Chicago paper gives the following account of Bishop McCoskry, whose shameful disgrace has fallen upon the religious world like a thunderbolt:—

McCoskrey was born in Pennsylvania, graduated at Carlisle College, and afterward at West Point with high rank. Shortly after leaving the latter institution he abandoned the military for the law, which he studied and practiced for a time, only to renounce it in turn for the Church. In 1856 he was elected Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, and came to Detroit, where he has ever since resided. He is 74 years of age, very tall, and very portly, weighing nearly, if not quite, three hundred pounds. He has always been a good liver and a man of the world, in the sense that he would rather tell or listen to a good story than to discuss saintly topics, and could bear a handed at emptying a bottle or cracking a joke. He was, although jovial and jocular, exceedingly strict in his observance of the various forms of ritual. He was proverbially particular about his wines, and was very confident that women were at the bottom of it. He was proverbially liberal, and although he is said to have ordered goods, such as pianos, carpets, books and clothing, &c., with the most reckless prodigality, for various women, to be charged to him, he has seldom been known to pay a bill. The city is literally alive with rumors of lascivious happenings between the bishop and divers women, and of the scenes being located in the bishop's study. A certain collector tells of having caught him with a woman in his lap, when he went to collect a bill for carpets. Some of these stories, equally as well authenticated as that on which the Committee based their demand for the deposition, date back more than a quarter of a century. A determined effort has been made in Detroit to keep the expose out of the papers, and it has been so far successful that not one of the leading papers dare touch it.

A PROPHETIC JEST.

My Lord Bishop of Michigan, says the Times, is a tall, stalwart, fine-looking man, and when in England some time ago he was shown much attention by a number of the bishops and well-known clergymen. Your English parson has not to bear the burden of so many canting, conventional claims as are common to preachers in America, the world being perfectly satisfied as long as he is a man of honor, piety and manliness, that he should live as well as the rest of mankind.

Mispronunciation of American proper names and titles is a very common thing among the English, and the ecclesiastical title of "My Lord Bishop of Michigan" was naturally rendered so as to sound "My Chicken." On one occasion when a feast of good things had loosed the tongues and ripened the wit of a number of clerical, one celebrated divine, alluding to the fine appearance and social and affable jovial qualities of the prelate from the "Wolverine" state, remarked to some other that he didn't see anything at all appropriate in calling him "My Chicken," as he thought from his appearance that he looked like "a gamey old cock."

Detroit, April 18.—During the afternoon and evening representatives of the Times interviewed a number of prominent Episcopalians, with a view to ascertaining what would be the probable effect of the notoriety which the case has occasioned. With very few exceptions, a general feeling of relief was expressed by those more familiar with the facts, and who knew of the endeavors which had been made to keep them secret.

MR. WM. J. WATERMAN,

a prominent members of Grace Church, said he was glad that the veil had fallen from this shocking picture of human depravity and ecclesiastical demoralization. He had felt all along that it ought not to be covered up in order that the criminal might escape from the exposure and disgrace which his deeds richly merited. If Bishop McCoskrey was guilty of the crime alleged his resignation should not be accepted by the House of Bishops, and any action which might be taken to cover the matter was wrong and ill-advised. It would have a worse effect upon public morals than the opposite course could possibly bring about, for the facts were certain to become public at no distant day and the scandal to the church could not be heightened by anything which looked like compounding of the Bishop's crime, promising him secrecy on condition of his withdrawal from the field.

MR. C. D. STEPHENS, another prominent light in Grace Episcopal Church, was not unwilling to be interviewed, for he also felt that the time had come when concealment was not only futile, but ill-advised. When asked whether Episcopalians generally believed the Bishop to have been insane upon the subject of improper intercourse, in fact, a sort of monomaniac, Mr. Stephens replied very promptly and emphatically that they did not. It was generally confessed that his conduct was the result of genuine immorality, and no attempt would be made to shield him by any theory that his mind was impaired. The Bishop, of course, denied the charges in toto, and to Mr. Stephens' personal knowledge had offered to take any oath, no matter of what description, that they were wholly and unqualifiedly false. He had, however, confessed to being the author of a few of the letters which bore his own signature, but claims that they contained no improper insinuations or proposal in what-ever light they might be scrutinized. In response to further questioning, Mr. Stephens said Bishop McCoskrey had long been a cause of grief to the Episcopalian Church for other reasons than the one at present on every tongue. The Bishop was a high liver, and Mr. Stephens confirmed the statement in to-day's Times that many of his bills were allowed to go to protest, and the church frequently had to step in and settle up his just personal debts. Marked lack of veracity during late years has also been a matter of grief to many who had no suspicion of the fact that he was a libertine at heart. The reason alleged for his resignation, however, ill-health and old age, was not wholly a blind. The old man, in fact, had for the past year or two been greatly troubled with a difficulty common to old men, which was liable to demoralize him completely in the midst of a sermon, while administering the sacrament, at a social gathering, or at any place where he might happen to be when the weakness came upon him. Knowing this to be the case, a large number of his people sent him urgent letters as soon as his resignation had been announced, urging him to withdraw the same immediately. An assistant could be appointed for him, the petitioners said, so that their beloved leader might die in the ecclesiastical robe which he had worn so long and faithfully. The Bishop was weak-minded enough, upon receiving this voluminous correspondence, to take counsel with certain members of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, and other prominent Episcopalians, as to whether he might not withdraw the resignation which he had sent in. The reply was a most positive and flat denial, and the Bishop said no more about it at the time, but it is quite certain that even yet he has not wholly abandoned the idea that he may even yet take such a step, and attempt to face out the charges against him on the ground that they were intended for blackmailing purposes, and all written proofs thereof were forgeries. In conclusion, Mr. Stephens said that there was now no doubt of the action which would be taken at the meeting of the House of Bishops on June 17. When Bishop McCoskrey's resignation is presented, some member of that body will rise and prefer charges against him. An investigation will follow, and if the charges are proved, the offender will be disgraced as far as possible by church authority. It is not altogether improbable, however, that the matter may get into the civil courts, although such action would, of course, be taken only by some party whom the bishop's misdeeds had personally injured.

HON. GEORGE N. SWIFT,

judge of the Recorder's Court, who is one of the wardens of St. John's Church, says that all of the published reports are very much exaggerated. As a lawyer, he is inclined to doubt whether any criminal charge could be maintained against the Bishop. He says, however, that the House of Bishops will meet on the 17th of June, and that the resignation will undoubtedly be presented there. It would be a very grave question whether the accusers of the Bishop could prove what they assert about him. When asked as to the circumstances of the reports about the Bishop's misdeeds, the judge replied that there was no doubt of the indiscreet-ness. "He has written letters," said the recorder, "that no sane man would write. All we hoped for was that the publication of the scandal would be deferred until Mrs. McCoskrey got out of town. As far as I am informed, the poor woman is at present wholly ignorant of the matter."

THE REV. C. M. S. STOCKING,

formerly of Chicago, now rector of Grace church here, stated at the outset that he had recently been informed of the scandal. To the reporter who interviewed him, he intimated that a report was in circulation to the effect that he was the person who recommended the Bishop's resignation. To this Dr. Stocking replied that the Bishop first came to him as a personal friend and informed him that certain scandalous stories were afloat that reflected on his (the Bishop's) character. The old gentleman wanted advice as to the best course to pursue, and, nothing else was said. The resignation would be the proper thing, provided he was guilty. The Bishop made no admissions at that time, and his subsequent action is the only intimation that Dr. Stocking has of his position in the matter. The doctor is not a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, and consequently knew nothing of the influences that were brought to bear upon the Bishop. He further stated that the Bishop denies the whole story, and coincides in the belief that the Bishop may yet return and demand a trial before the House of Bishops. It was suggested by the reporter that the Bishops might refuse to accept a resignation based on the ground of ill-health, when the well-known vigor of Bishop McCoskrey was taken into consideration. To this Dr. Stocking replied that a precedent had already been established when the Bishop of Montreal, the Metropolitan of Canada, resigned last year on the plea of age and sickness.

EX-GOV. HENRY P. BALDWIN,

who is a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, is very non-committal. He says he cannot, by possibility whether the case will come before the House of Bishops at the June meeting, because a majority of the members have decided to visit the Paris Exposition during that month, and have already secured an ocean passage. Regarding the necessity for the Bishop's resignation, Mr. Baldwin has nothing to say, except that he regrets the publication of the facts previous to the departure of Mrs. McCoskrey.

W. B. STANTON,

son-in-law of Bishop McCoskrey, arrived in the city this evening from New York, and has since been closeted with ex-Gov. Baldwin. It being understood that he went to New York for the purpose of accompanying the Bishop to Europe, his sudden and unexpected return is conjectured to be somehow connected with the report that the story was to be published here. Mrs. McCoskrey will leave for New York and Europe to-morrow.

THE BISHOP'S DEBTS.

It is told that the Bishop was not in the habit of paying his debts, and that the church, from time to time, raised money and paid them for him, in order to save a scandal. In this way it is stated that the church has paid tens of thousands of dollars for him during his incumbency. On one occasion alone it is said that it raised $47,000 to square his accounts, and it is now surmised in certain quarters that a large percentage of these obligations were incurred for women with whom he was unduly intimate. This is given as an instance:—About twenty years ago he went to the store of a man named Crouse, then doing business in Detroit, but now residing at Grosse Isle, and bought a $600 piano for a girl living in Fort street, objecting that the bill be sent to him. The bill was sent as directed, but the Bishop didn't respond with the money. Mr. Crouse, after numerous efforts at collection, all of which were fruitless, brought the matter before the church, and, in order to hush the matter up, the contribution raised the money and settled the bill.

A DRAMATIC SCENE.

From all reports, the scene between Bishop McCoskrey and the two vestrymen who summoned him into their presence and first broke the terrible news to him must have been dramatic, must have been one of the most dramatic character. Before these two men, overwhelmed with a sense of the self-imposed duty which they had to perform, yet nerved to the point of doing it unflinchingly, came this pompous, arrogant, self-confident vicegerent of heaven, rejoicing in his supposed strength. Heretofore his imperious will had swept down all obstacles. He was a law unto himself. In a few well-chosen words the awful revelation was made, and the proudest dignitary of the proudest church in the universe was an abject mendicant at their feet, piteously begging for mercy. At times he would attempt to rally and assume his usual dictatorial attitude, but the effort could not be sustained for any length of time, and only served to show, by way of contrast, how great had been his fall. The play of Richellieu is but a school-boy dialogue compared with

THE VERDICT.

If our senate is at all able to discharge the functions properly, it is the body par excellence that ought to deal with a great constitutional question, like that which the action of M. Letellier De St. Just has now raised in this country. It is true the judicial function which, from an early period of our history has belonged to the House of Peers in England, is not supposed to have its counterpart in the Canadian Senate, yet the original idea was that this chamber should consist mainly of men of ability, whom judgment was matured by experience in public life, men upon whom this dignity had been bestowed as a reward for their service to the State, and above all, men who have attained to something like freedom from the excitement of partyism, to an ability to reason upon a public question dispassionately, to pronounce upon such questions impartially, and to decide all such matters as come before them upon their merits alone. Judged in this light, the decision of the Senate on the great constitutional question that absorbs so much of the attention of all classes of the Canadian people, is of much more importance as an authoritative deliverance, than is the verdict of the lower House, in which, unfortunately for the future of Mr. Mackenzie and his followers, the Ministerialists voted almost as a man as their chief called upon them to do, and this vote was given right in the teeth of their own avowed principles.

The moral judgment will now have something more to consider. We find a resolution of precisely the same tenor as that of Sir John Macdonald in the House of Commons, debated and finally carried in the Senate by nearly two to one, and this must be held the verdict of a body but little, if at all, influenced by party considerations. It will be difficult to estimate the effect such a decision must have upon the thinking part of the community, upon all who look upon the Government of Canada as an institution designed entirely in the interest of the country, carried on for the benefit of the people, controlled and directed by their will, and not created for the behoof of needy politicians of any class whatever. The electors will surely see that the action of the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec must have been taken in contravention of a great constitutional principle, and in opposition to the true spirit of responsible government, otherwise the Senate would not have condemned this action with such remarkable unanimity, and supported their condemnation with such unanswerable arguments.

In fact, this is the strongest point which can be insisted upon by the defenders of the Constitution, whether these defenders are found in the Houses of Parliament or among the electors themselves. An action affecting the Constitution and the liberties of the people, an action bearing upon the central principle of Parliamentary government, which could not find a defender in either the House of Commons or the Senate, must, on prima facie grounds, deserve consideration. An action which Mr. Mackenzie could not, and Mr. Blake in the House of Commons and Mr. George Brown in the Senate dare not defend, cannot be held anything else than wrong in principle and injurious in operation. Let the electors bear in mind that Mr. Mackenzie's defence of his friend's action consisted in ordering his well-drilled majority to vote down Sir John Macdonald's motion, and Mr. Blake's part in the game was to sit grimly silent during the debate, listen to the powerful arguments that the opposition speakers, as far as the organized rowdyism of the Ministerial party would permit, brought against the action of Lieut.-Governor Letellier, and when the fatal moment came to slink out of the chamber to avoid the vote. But friends and foes alike expected Mr. Senator Brown to redeem the character of party and show that Grit poltroonery was not universal. But Mr. Brown's action in the Senate was just one degree more manly than that of Mr. Blake. He dare not stultify his life course by attempting a defence, but he plucked up courage enough to condemn by his vote the principles he boasts he has contended for during the last thirty years, and all this simply to keep his friends in office.

Mîdhat Pasha, now in London, was invited to dine at Lord Strathnairn's in Berkeley square, and, being proud of his knowledge of English, he insisted on going out unattended. Upon being ushered into the drawing-room, Midhat found himself received by a host and hostess whom he did not know from the Prophet, and of course mutual explanations in French ensued. It was then made evident that Midhat's cabman had deposited the Pasha in Belgrave, not in Berkeley square, and when he ultimately put in an appearance at Lord Strathnairn's he had a good story to tell them as an apology for his late arrival.

TALKING PEACE.

Notwithstanding the talk concerning Peace every active movement points to war. The preparations on the part of England continue with much earnestness. New ships are being put in commission, and warlike supplies are being forwarded to the Mediterranean to meet the troops on their way from India. On the other hand, Russia has sent Gen. Todleben to the front, where he will do "the most good," and his arrival at San Stefano will be announced in the course of a few days. Meanwhile, the Russians are pressing for the relinquishment of Varna, (on the Black Sea,) Shumla, and other important points. Though provided for in the recent so-called treaty of peace, the Turks seem to wish to avoid giving up points of so great strategical value. But General Nehlidoff will brook no denial. He urges compliance, which, if not assented to, may lead to another rupture between the recent belligerents. Meanwhile, Hobart Pasha is on his way to England, taking with him an autograph letter from the Sultan to the Queen. It is a noticeable fact that though Court intrigues at the Porte seems to favour Russian alliance, the soldiers and people are for the British. It is very likely that this fact has prevented an open declaration in favour of the Czar, whose emissaries have been working steadily for that end. When the news reaches Constantinople, as it has by this time, that aid in favor of Turkish independence and English interests is being sent from India, new hope will be engendered. Nor would it be surprising if the surrender of the fortified places mentioned would be indefinitely delayed pending the meeting of Conference, if it does meet. A plea in respect of that might be easily set up by Turkey, because if Russia consents to submit the Treaty to the revision of the Powers, it is evident that it is admitted that it is capable of improvement. Being so, the Ottoman Government may say that it would prefer to await the result of the Conference, and thus hold to Varna, Shumla and the other points. Of course, if war between England and Russia were to supervene, the fact that those points remained in possession of Turkey would be of great importance.

REFORMERS ON THE FEED.

The Paris Star, replying to attacks directed against it on the part of the so-called "Reform" press, hits back after the following fashion:—"But we are not bound to follow them when they have gone back on all these professions, neither will the honest men of the Reform party follow them, for the great majority, at least, of that party was, and is, composed of men who had an earnest belief in the principles they professed, and who are pained and shamed to see these principles trampled in the dirt. These men, we say, were willing to follow Alex. Mackenzie and any decent set of men with whom he might associate himself. But they are not willing to see the high places of the country filled, and its resources wasted on a set of characterless adventurers like Lafamme, Glen-Coochon, Dymond, Huntington, Adam Oliver, Walker, of London, Edgar, Gordon-Brown, and the rest, men whose public and private character is equally and notoriously bad. These vultures, with their horde of attendant jackals, have their fangs and teeth in the carcass of our country. And the Globe, with its less adventurous, but still stand by) not a word. These men you describe as vultures are the great Reform party feeding, forsooth, in Heaven, that they should be disturbed now after waiting so long."

SLANDERERS REBUKED.

The slanders of the Grit press have at length become the subject of remark in Parliament. During the debate in the House on Wednesday evening these falsehoods were emphatically denounced. This was especially the case with respect to the statements touching Sir John Macdonald. Member after member rose to denounce the falsehoods of the Globe and Times respecting him, giving expression at the same time to the opinion that men who would wilfully concoct such lies should not be permitted the privileges usually accorded to the press within the walls of Parliament. The fact is that the policy of slander having done good service in days gone by, is resorted to once more. This time it will fail. People have come to understand what reliance can be placed upon their statements. The "lie direct" given to these gentry on the floor of the House will, it may be hoped, lead them to have a greater regard for decency in the future.

Dissatisfaction with the results of the war is said to be increasing among the Russian people. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Dziennik Poznanski says, in a letter dated the 23rd of March, that not only is the Treaty of San Stefano far from gratifying to the national aspirations, which aimed above all things at the acquisition of Constantinople, but it is felt that even the stipulations of that treaty are not likely to come into force, because in order to give them effect it would be necessary to enter into a new war, and that war would be much more ruinous than the one that has just ended, while its results would be much more doubtful. There are, consequently, no rejoicings among the public except the official ones, and meanwhile energetic preparations are being made for a renewal of the war; new reserves are being called out, and about 3,000 cadets from the various military schools have been appointed as officers to the regiments which have suffered the most in the late campaign. "As to the Congress," proceeds the correspondent, "no one here believes that it will meet, or ever attached any importance to its meeting. The peace preliminaries in their present form are the least that Russia will accept, and she will certainly not consent to their being reduced by Austria or England."

Little progress has been made towards raising the wreck of the Eurydice. Divers have been engaged in clearing the deck, but their work has been much interfered with by the bad weather. On the Eurydice being raised she will be taken to Sandown Bay, where the water will be pumped out, and the ship will then be taken to Portsmouth. A message from the Queen has been forwarded by the Admiralty to the relatives of the officers who were lost in the Eurydice, together with a letter conveying an expression of their lordships' deep regret at the sad event. The Admiralty have given orders for the payment to each of the widows of the petty officers and seamen a sum equal to a year's pay of their husbands. The Lord Mayor, at the desire of the naval authorities at Portsmouth, has caused to be published an appeal intimating that he will most gladly receive at the Mansion House donations for the support of the dependent relatives of the crew. About £400, collected on the Stock Exchange, has been already promised towards the Lord Mayor's fund, and a box for the receipt of contributions from passers-by has been placed outside the Mansion House.

The Army and Navy Gazette states that the vacancy at the head of the Intelligent Department, created by the appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir P. L. MacDougall to Canada, is to be filled by Sir Archibald Alison, who succeeded Major-General Hamle at the Staff College at Sandhurst last January, and that Major-General E. Carey, now Deputy Judge-Advocate, is to be placed at the head of the Staff College.

TRADE COMBINATIONS.

The combination among working people in the leading countries of the world is a striking and impressive feature of society to-day. The objects had in view are varied. In Germany and France they are directed to the promotion of the Utopian ideas of the Communists; in England, more in reference to industrial interests; in the United States, to further legislation of a special kind, if not to become the controlling makeweight in political affairs. Our neighbors across the lines have just discovered a fact which has struck them with no little surprise, that already the combination referred to, working in secret, with oath-bound obligations, has developed important strength, and brought its influence triumphantly to bear in quarters where it was not suspected to have made any considerable progress. The style assumed by this new factor in the American social organization is the Knights of Labor, numbering several hundred thousand, united by signs, passwords, and ironclad oaths, and extending through every State in the Union. They are said to be under the control of the men who last year directed the railway strike, which was attended by the burning of the Pittsburg stations and cars, and which ended, as such outbreaks must always inevitably end, in the punishment of the ringleaders and untold suffering among the misguided men and their families. The main purpose of this organization is the election of men to Congress and the State Legislatures who will represent and advance their special views. The members acknowledge no party, and are ready to support any nominee who will pledge himself to their objects But it is not to be supposed that a band of men directed by Communists of a pronounced cedar, and strong enough to carry out its purposes in any one direction, will step in moderation; yet for whatever mischief may be in contemplation, whatever new experiments may be attempted for the revolutionizing and undoing of society, doubtless a prompt remedy will be found by the prevailing common sense, which is ever in the ascendant before it.

In England the great masons' strike has no sooner ended than a lockout of vastly greater proportions is threatened by over 130,000 of the cotton operatives, who refuse to submit to a proposed reduction of ten per cent. in wages. It is possible a strike may be averted by timely concessions on both sides, resulting in a midway course until times mend and trade improves. But the aspect at present is anything but hopeful, and should the operatives persist in their extreme course of resistance, with the alternative of leaving off work, a great derangement of industry and misery will result. While the capitalist can afford to stop his machines and wait for a return of better times, the workman must either earn wages for his family's support, or see them suffer for want of bread, which the labor organization may scantily supply for a time, but not very long. The illustration afforded by the masons' strike is one likely to be lost sight of in the heat and passion aroused. They held out for eight months, spent $150,000 of the Union funds, and all their private funds, lost eight months' wages, and finally had to go back to work at still lower wages than were paid when they went into the struggle. Such a failure emphasizes the lesson for mechanics the world over. Upon a rising market in prosperous times a strike may be successful. When prices are at a standstill combination may prevent a reduction; but to strike upon a falling market, as the masons did, or upon a full market, resulting from over-manufacture, as the cotton operatives are now doing, is a costly and ruinous blunder. No possible combination can advance wages when the state of the market does not tend to produce that result. When trade grows active, wages always sympathize with it and rise; when it grows dull and demand for products fall off, wages always fall, and all the strikes in the world cannot increase them.

The French artizans last month held their second convention, which was interlicked by the State Attorney at Lyons. One of the chief subjects of discussion was the means of widening the field of female labor, and it was resolved to form associations of working women in all the towns and rural communes. A system of non-clerical, gratuitous, and compulsory education was demanded, with a technical school in the chief town of each department, supplemented by a public workshop for practical training in the several trades. The Congress seemed satisfied for the present with the ten hours system, although as a matter of principle it insisted on a division of the day into three equal parts, namely, eight hours for manual labor, eight for intellectual occupation, and eight for sleep. With a view to self-protection and the exercise of a certain control over the rate of wages, the delegates voted for the immediate corporative association of artizans in each locality, and declared to their calling, all these groups to form a single coherent federation, covering the whole of France. Hitherto no community of interest had been recognized between the artizan and the peasant in France. Now, however, a strenuous and comprehensive effort will be made to form agricultural associations on the plan of the operatives' clubs in towns, whose officers may serve as arbitrators in matters now brought before Justices of the Peace, and which may gradually ascertain the peasants to corporative or class action. It is intended that each commune shall have a library, each canton a standing committee representing the agricultural laborers, while all of these boards and associations are to be admitted to the National Federation of Workingmen. Nor is this all; a new category of societies is to be founded among those salaried persons who have remained outside of the existing organizations, such as clerks, porters, janitors, shop men, shop women, &c. Finally the direct representation of the proletariat in the national parliament was the subject of careful and apparently sagacious discussion. It is one of England's boasts that, while her proletariat is the most compact and powerful in the world, it is also the most long-headed and sober-minded. There the rights of labor have constantly found advocates in the House of Commons, and there is reason to believe that, when they receive like support and sympathy in the French Chamber of Deputies, their propaganda will cease to be an element of social danger. From the proceedings above outlined, it is obvious that what the French workmen propose is substantially an imitation of the famous trades unions, and it may be that, with the organization perfected by the English artizan, they may also reproduce his general prudence and moderation.

An extraordinary case recently came under the notice of the physicians of Guy's Hospital in London. A man named James Moore was brought in, complaining of a pain in his stomach, and, although every effort was made in his behalf, nobody could diagnose the disease, and after being a month in hospital he died. A post mortem examination revealed in his stomach the remains of no less than eighty-seven pocket-knives, some of which were so far digested that, in one instance, only a single blade was found.

INDIAN TROOPS TO THE FRONT.

The despatch of a contingent of native troops for the Mediterranean, to be ready in case of war between England and Russia, has been already noted in our cable advices. In reference to the feeling among our fellow-subjects in India, we find the following in the Calcutta correspondence of the London Times, just received by mail:—

"All Indian topics, however important locally, have suddenly sunk into abeyance in face of the paramount question of war. The interest in the subject is largely due to the conviction that if war is declared it will, even though fought in Europe, be practically an Indian war as being undertaken for the sole purpose of protecting India from Russian aggression. For this reason it is suggested that India should be required to supply a very large contingent from her native army. Even as we retain our present number of English troops in India, we could well afford to spare a large portion of our native army to serve as a contingent in any military expedition which England might send against Russia, seeing that there would be little or no difficulty in speedily filling up their places with new levies."

No doubt can be entertained that the financial losses of Russia during the war must have been enormous. An account of them given in the Exchange Gazette of St. Petersburg, which may probably be considered as founded on official statements, proves this to be so. The war lasted from the 12th of April, 1877, to the 6th of March, 1878, or 322 days; but a considerable part of the army was mobilized upwards of five months before the war began. In order to cover the expenses three internal loans of 350,000,000 paper roubles, and one foreign loan of 80,750,000 silver roubles, were concluded in November, 1876, besides which about 250,000,000 roubles saved from the budget of the previous year were expended for war purposes. Altogether 800,000,000 roubles were spent in preparing for and conducting the war. Assuming that 50,000,000 roubles are required for taking the troops home, the total amount of the war expenses will be 850,000,000 roubles. The interest and sinking-fund on this sum amounts to 45,000,000 a year. As, according to the Budget of 1877, the expenditure for the State debt amounts to 108,250,000 roubles, the war has increased the Russian debt by nearly one-half. This increase would not be very palpable if Turkey were to pay 300,000,000 roubles, as stipulated by the preliminaries of peace, for the not inconsiderable sum of 1,500,000 roubles, and the greater part of the 50,000,000 roubles, which is the estimated interest and sinking fund to 30,000,000. But (adds the St. Petersburg paper) whether this contribution will be paid is as yet doubtful.

A Frenchman, M. Paul Soleillet, has broached the project of building a railroad across the so-called Desert of Sahara to Timbuctoo, and beyond. M. Paul has satisfied himself that it is perfectly feasible, and that it would be a paying investment. In a paper read before the Society of Civil Engineers at Paris he estimated the cost at about eight hundred millions of francs. The construction of the Sahara, he said, was wholly erroneous, the climate was healthful and the soil good, in the days of the Carthaginians it was peopled and cultivated. In short, his proposed road, besides opening new markets for French wares and carrying civilization on wheels into the very heart of Africa, would restore to Europe the commerce of that fertile region as large as the whole of Europe, with Russia left out. This alone would pay the interest on the eight hundred millions.

Iceland is in a ferment again. Mount Hecla is belching fourth its fountains of flame. The first eruption appeared like immense rockets of flame hurled into the air. These gradually increased in bulk until they appeared like gigantic columns, that was portable—plate, linen, furniture and all the clothing of the officers. The Circassians had free it is said in the hold, to keep themselves warm and to cook with and it is not surprising that the fire originated from "l accidental upsetting of one of their stov . The Sphinx is completely destroyed from bow to midships, and all that is expected to be saved are the engines.

...At a recent meeting of the North Wales branch of the British Medical Association there was a discussion which showed much divergence of medical opinion as to the use of stimulants in the treatment of pneumonia. Dr. Eyton Jones said he had used stimulants with success. Dr. Turnerwell remembered a case in which a complete cure had been effected in forty-eight hours without the use of stimulants. Mr. Roberts added that he never used stimulants, and in his varied and extensive practice he had rarely lost a case. Mr. Jones, of Dolgelly, on the other hand, said he always used stimulants, and had scarcely lost a case for twenty-one years.

Burning of the Sphinx.

SMOTHERING FIVE HUNDRED CIRCASSIANS TO SAVE THE SHIP

From the London Globe.

Lloyd's agent at Larnaca, Cyprus, in a letter dated March 19, furnishes full particulars of the burning of the Austrian steamer Sphinx, near Cape Elia, the early part of last month, by which 500 Circassian refugees lost their lives. It appears that the Sphinx was on her way to Lattacata, from Calvia, with about three thousand Circassians on board. On March 5, at ten minutes past seven a.m., she was doubling the Kuts Rock, off Cape St. Andrew, with a strong wind from southeast, with the intention of going to Famagusta to wait for better weather and to land a portion of the emigrants. At three p. m. there was a strong gale from the southeast, which shifted to the west, then to the north, returning at last to the w uthward. At that time the ship would no longer obey the rudder, and a heavy sea striking the vessel washed forty refugees from the forecastle. Could not put back to Alexandretta as the hatches were open, and being afraid that the sea would fill the hold, coupled with the fact that the Circassians would not allow them to be closed for fear of being suffocated. Toward sunset made on Cape Gregg, and was about six miles from the south of Famagusta. At a quarter to seven smoke was seen coming out of the forehatch, and the vessel ship ping heavy seas. A little later she grounded on a sand bank; one heavy sea drove her on the coast and she sprang a leak. There was no working of the engines.

DATAR AVENGED.

Meanwhile the fire increased, and the confusion and cries of the Circassians are said to have been something awful. Seeing that the fire could not be put down the hatches were closed with the consent of the Circassians, and so upward of five hundred lives were sacrificed to save the rest. During the night attempts were made to extinguish the fire, but without success. On the 6th the surviving emigrants were landed. The captain and crew fled from the wreck, as the Circassians threatened to murder them. Two days afterward the French gunboat Lewis received on board the captain and crew, who had taken refuge at Tricomo, and the following day Her Majesty's ship Coquette received on board the first lieutenant of the Sphinx, who was hiding at Tricomo. The Circassians robbed the ship before leaving her of everything that was portable—plate, linen, furniture and all the clothing of the officers. The Circassians had free it is said in the hold, to keep themselves warm and to cook with and it is not surprising that the fire originated from "l accidental upsetting of one of their stov . The Sphinx is completely destroyed from bow to midships, and all that is expected to be saved are the engines.

Hanging Matters in Scotland.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

When at the end of the last century a specimen of the sensitively-reckless paradox arrived in this country from the antipodes the apparition of the mortal remains of a four-footed animal possessed among other accomplishments that of a duck's bill is said to have very seriously affected Sir Joseph Banks and the rest of the Royal Society. Something of the mingled feeling of incredulity and dismay which that strange example of the Australasian fauna excited among our savants of an earlier generation will probably, and indeed ought to be, awakened among our humanitarians of the present day by the contemplation of certain of the peculiarities of the criminal code of Scotland. Perhaps many of them are unaware, perhaps some of them "would be surprised to hear," that, exclusive of treason and murder, there are on the other side of the Tweed about five-and-twenty different crimes for which the legal punishment is death. "Hamesucken," or burglary; "abouthird," or robbery; theft amounting to furtum grave—that is, accompanied by housebreaking, or committed by a thief by habit and repute; or child-stealing, or stealing a horse, an ox, or more than one sheep, at one time, and several other offences such as rape, are capital at common law. Among "hanging matters" by statute are "wilful fire-raising," or arson, in the case of houses, barns, stacks, coal-heughs, woods, wood to kill, or rob the house of, a clergyman; discharging firearms, cutting, stabbing, administering poison, suffocating, strangling, drowning, or throwing sulphuric acid with intent to murder or do grievous bodily harm; cursing or beating parents by any child over sixteen and not "distracted," importing poisons into Scotland, "theft-bote," or the taking of rewards by justices or sheriffs from thieves, or the harboring of thieves by private persons, "invading judges," or striking or injuring a judge sitting in judgment; stealing lines to the value of ten shillings from a bleaching-green; killing or "houghing" oxen, horses or other cattle; cutting growing trees or crops; incest and nefarious adultery, pulling down any church or place of religious worship where the Sovereign and the Prince of Wales are prayed for; hearing mass and concealing the same; saying mass by any Jesuits, priests or trafficking Papists, engaging in a duel within the royal license, or breaking into any shop or house, to cut or destroy woollen, linen or velvet goods on the loom, or the tools and machines used in the manufacture of them; to which miscellaneous category may be added piracy, or "scuttling, casting away, burning, or destroying any ship, or directing his name to be done, in order to prejudice the owners of vessels, owners of goods on board, or underwriters of insurances"—a provision suggesting a lively and instructive debate between Mr. Plimsoll and Mr. Pease. The capital penalty for some other crimes has been removed during the present reign, as well as during the Lay preceding reigns. By the 48th Geo. III., c. 14, too, the punishment of death for concealment of pregnancy where the child was dead or murdered, the offence for which, by the bye, Effie Deans was condemned . was abolished, the Act having passed, however, about ten years before the publication of "The Heart of Midlothian," and unfortunately from a literary point of view, being independent of Sir Walter Scott's far touching romance. Despite all these sanguinary laws, as a matter of fact no one is hanged in Scotland for any crime for which he would not be hanged in England; and that not owing to any exercise of the prerogative of mercy, but from the mode in which justice is ordinarily administered. The Lord Advocate is the public prosecutor general, and all capital crimes are in practice prosecuted at his instance, the prosecutions being conducted either by him in person or by his deputies, and he or they can, under the established rules of procedure, by a minute entered on the record before sentence, or a take, gives instruct ease, and can be ag- ain brought to a wider range of illness by every day life with greater success than all the Pharmacopœias which research, skill and professional talent has yet produced.

As a proof of its great power over Illness, any person no matter who it may be, Rich or Poor, Old or Young, who is suffering from any of the diseases named purified compliments, will call at the Office in Toronto, any day of the week, will get practical proof. "Free of Charge," of its wonderful power over pain in the shortest time.

NICHOLAS TALON DAVIN.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

BY MARY CECIL HAY,

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

In one of the distant recesses of the inner drawing-room, Louisa Castillain sat bending over a book while Eustace Jelipp, on a seat beside her, and leaning forward her as if he, too, were intent on the same book, spoke in a hovered tone. For a long time they had been sitting so, while the gaiety whose presence was passed within sight thought here deeply interested they were both be in the plates before them. There was a movement among the brilliant little crowd in the other drawing-rooms, and Louisa rose slowly, and let her companion take the book.

"Then you will manage that," he whispered, his eyes carelessly following his hands as he very deliberately and unnecessarily moved other things on the table to make room for the book he put down. "While we stay, you will make and take your own opportunity for persuading Lady Athelston to write to whatever address Miss Chester gave her; and I think she will find that all is not as it should be."

"Poor Lady Athelston!" sighed Louisa, with an unconscious smile of cruel pleasure; "she shall not be imposed upon. if I can prevent it."

"You can at least prevent its being continued," insinuated Jelfry, blandly; "and you are, I know, anxious to do so, as you are anxious to do all kind things. My help will only be of slight service to you, Miss Castillain, but surely you know how happy it always makes me to assist in anything you undertake."

"Then you leave it with me to get this letter written?" she asked, showing plainly the pride and pleasure that his words had given her; "and, of course, without Sir Neil's knowledge?"

"Of course, without Sir Neil's knowledge —yet," he answered, making an effort to speak as if it were of little importance, "and when the letter is ready, Miss Castillain, you will tell me. It will, at any rate, insure me another private interview with you," he added, meaningly; "and so you will give me the promise, to cheer me up until then."

Louisa gave it to him, smiling coyly; grateful herself for any excuse for another interview such as this had been, where they had one close interest in common, and where each whispered words were now and then exchanged. No regret for the treachery that had been whispered hovered in the thoughts of either as they separated that night; only a mean and small satisfaction that their plans were mutual, as far as they could safely see to form them.

Well ready smiles and gentle bows Louisa Castillain hovered about Lady Athelston in her room that night, whispering sympathetic words, which yet had power to stir up a strange, uncomfortable doubt and mistrust in Lady Athelston's bewildered mind, and took Louisa on with steady determination toward the realization of her wish.

"I will leave it now until another time," she thought to herself, smiling still.

Then she kissed "dear Lady Athelston again, and went with a gay step to the room which Marjorie shared with her, now that the house was so full.

"Asleep already?" she muttered, glancing sharply into her sister's face laid buried in the clothes. "She laughs and chatters all day long, then falls asleep like a baby. And I particularly wanted to speak to her before I rang. Marjorie!"

"Don't apostrophize over my prostrate form like a feminine Mark Antony," said Marjorie, opening for a moment the big brown eyes that looked sunken and sleepy-less. "You can preach to-morrow. Good-night!"

And Marjorie drew the clothes still higher over her ears, yet tried ineffectually to shut out her sister's running fire of reproof, then of advice, then—worst of all to Marjorie—of sarcastic comment on the solitary girl who, far away in another wing of the house, sat at her window, "thinking, thinking, thinking," while the moon rode slowly over the grand old gloomy hills.

CHAPTER XI.

LAYING THE TRAIN.

"But the other ladies have promised, Do come, Miss Chester. Why shouldn't you? The drag will be round at twelve, and we shall meet you in the birch copse for lunch. Don't be the only one to disappoint us, Miss Chester."

Sir Neil Athelston, in his velveteen shooting-coat, his felt hat in his hand, and his face growing angry in its eagerness, lingered in his mother's room, while the gentlemen gathered in the hall below, and wondered why he did not come.

"You will come, Miss Chester?" he persisted, heeding not an storm whether his mother heard his unbeauty or not. Promise me."

"Don't ask me any more, please, Sir Neil," answered Lina, turning to him, and speaking very firmly—decidedly. "Nothing you could say would persuade me."

"Why not? Why, in the name of Heaven, have I no power to move you? Do you hear others set my com—my wishes at defiance as you do?"

"No," she answered, gently; "therefore you may well afford, Sir Neil, to dispense with my obedience."

"I won't," cried Neil, carried beyond himself by wrath, as he watched the proud, still firmness of the girl's delicate lips; "I won't dispense with the only obedience I care one straw about. Every soul in the house may do what they please, if you will listen to my wishes. Say you will come."

"Neil," put in his mother from the window where she sat, speaking rather querulously because her son seemed to be angry with her companion, "the keepers are here, and have been waiting for a long time. You always do keep everybody waiting. Go, my dear. The ladies and the lunch will be at the coppice before you have bagged a solitary bird. I shall not be able to go with them to-day, but Mrs. Eccleslie will take my place."

"May Miss Chester come?" asked Sir Neil; so cruel now that neither of his listeners guessed with what anxiety he spoke.

"No, I shall want her. What does she care about such things?"

Mother," said Neil into the trumpet, his voice shaking a little with suppressed amusement, "Louisa Castillain is awfully anxious to stay at home with you, only she don't like to offer she says. She wants you to ask her. She knows you tremendously—in fact, she's never quite happy unless she is with you—never."

"Does Louisa really wish to stay with me?" asked Lady Athelston. "How do you know?"

"Marjorie told me—in confidence, Scotch," replied Neil, a falsehood now or less being of little consequence to him; "but you are to ask her yourself, and not to pretend that we've spoken of it. You understand?"

"Yes, I understand," was the pleased reply. "Louisa was very fond of me."

"Personal mere!" put in Neil, solemnly. "But you see now, mother, you must send away Miss Chester, because she and Louisa never agree."

"Yes," assented Lady Athelston, with an instinct of the necessity of this. "Miss Chester can go."

"There!" cried Neil, raising his head from the trumpet, with an air of great relief, "you are conquered, Miss Chester; but, to make assurance doubly sure, I shall leave it in Mary Ann's hands."

"No, please," argued Lina, earnestly; "because if she is to me, I must go."

"I know you will," laughed Neil, delighted. "How small I look for the carriage now, and not for the edge of the lunch—not quite! Good-bye for a few hours, Good-bye, my little friend."

Then Neil, his handsome face unclouded again, ran down-stairs, and left his commands in Marjorie Castillain's hand, drawing her a little apart from the other guests in the hall.

"Poor little thing, it will be a change for her," he concluded, finding doubly under Marjorie's calm gaze. "The mother keeps her so preciously close in a general way. And she is so fond of you, Marjorie, that she will be sure to enjoy this with you. No wonder she is fond of you, dear," he added, with a slight qualm, "you are so good to her, and so like one of us. I mean to say—"

"You don't quite know what you mean to say, Neil," returned Marjorie, carefully picking an end of his mother's wool from his brown sleeve; "but providentially I always understand as well what you leave unsaid as what you say; so—it's all right."

One or two of the gentlemen were envying him a little as he lingered with his betrothed for had they not seen her gentle touch upon his arm? But Neil turned away, feeling rather uncomfortable, wishing he had not seemed so much in earnest over this.

"Lina," he said, in a voice whose ease and coldness sounded refreshing even to himself after its late warmth and anxiety, "my mother is awfully anxious to have you at home with her this afternoon; you had better stay, I think. But she seems to have set her heart upon it. I don't think she's ever been so civil to you, Louisa. But I must tell you this, she is so fearful of you staying against your will, that she won't be happy unless you can be generous enough to consent very readily. I am vexed, because I hoped to see you in the coppice; but mother will be lost without you. You are a very amusing with her, and possess such a fund of narrative,"

Neil left off there, afraid of laughing, but Louisa Castillain guessed nothing of this. Her whole face brightened as she glanced across at Jelfry.

"I will stay gladly, Neil," she said; "I always like to give dear Lady Athelston a little pleasure."

And Neil thanked her so heartily that Colonel Stuart—small ingrate that examining his gun—guessed rather more of his reason than Sir Neil would have cared to acknowledge.

Water Commissionership.

London, Ont., 18th April, 1878.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

MR. EDITOR.—In regard to the appointment of a Water Commissioner in place of the late Mr. Hyman, I would like to suggest the name of Mr. G. S. Birrell.

Messrs. Carling and Hyman were selected as being good business men, and our largest ratepayers. The firm of which Mr. Birrell is the head is one of our largest ratepayers, and I believe a better business man, or one that would be more acceptable to our citizens, could not be named. Yours truly, RATEPAYER.

A "Dead" Man Speaketh.

To the Editor of the Free Press.

London, Ont., April 18.

SIR,—The impression having gone through Canada (and your columns having assisted in extending that impression) that I was the author of a scurrilous, mean and deadly draft, thread by one "Rocky Leonard," at your addresser, I ask you, in the spirit of fair play, to state that:—1st, I am alive; 2nd, I had no idea that obituary notice was written until four months after it was published in the FREE PRESS; 3rd, I cannot have the advantage of wielding a quill in my own behalf at every attack, therefore I request you to publish this letter from a fellow craftsman in the newspaper business. Respectfully,

JNO. J. JOHNSTON.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

BRANTFORD

THE COMING ELECTION.

Never has, in the history of the South Riding of Brant, been the Conservative party in such a healthy state of organization, and, therefore, so confident of winning the election as at the coming contest. Things have been toned in all the Wards in the city and even in each sub-division, where active committees have been appointed, and who are energetically at work. Meetings of their respective committees are held nightly, and committee rooms in each Ward Building, and committees have also been formed for each polling sub-division in the county. At each of these meetings addresses were delivered by J. Hawkins, Esq., President of the Conservative Association; Alfred Watts, Esq., and W. J. Imlach, Esq., showing up the present Mackenzie Administration as corrupt, extravagant, false to the principles they advocated while in opposition, and in fact, unworthy the confidence of the country. The opposite have formed many Reformers from the evil of their way—in their advocacy of the great national policy of Sir John. We understand that inside of two weeks a of the party will convene in their beautiful room, Alexandrian Hall for the purpose of choosing an athlete to contest the Riding in the interests of the Conservative party at the coming election. We hope that strong and energetic men will be selected and we feel confident that success is bound to follow.

On the other hand, the

has done nothing in the way of organization—only, of course, the meeting of the Executive, at which time young men, and as many Conservative young men as they can secure, might caucus and play billiards, &c. &c. No speeches whatever have been made, although returned from Toronto a week or so ago. Who but Mr. Mackenzie attends awaking the arrival of Mr. Patterson, and then golf two hander, or that he is confident the club room—to which, we are informed, he contributed the large sum (for the end) ninety he gets from the country of Simcoe will be certain to return him to the Legislature, and that he will be a member of the Cabinet. A procession, right lollopping down street, which, by the way, is so vividly that many of the Reformers in this neighborhood complain and allege it has not endeavored at all to move or prove to us reason that the present Government has been true to the principles they have advocated while in opposition, or that it has been an economical Government—for it is not. Mr. Mackenzie and his small team have been attacking Mr. J. J. Hawkins and other local lights in the Conservative party, daily, but no longer than it is reported.

Quite a number of

of mercantile men have recently taken place in this city. Messrs. Scarfe, Comerford, Johnson Bros. are among the number, the latter of which have again opened out to day and probably come to an agreement with their creditors.

Congratulations of the Tug

has caused quite a sensation, and gossip has it that others are to be cancelled, but we will not vouch for its truthfulness. Several Conservatives have been "sent off" without receiving their license, as Mr. Daniel Heffernan, who leases a first-class house, very near the Great Western Railway station, and which is very well conducted, and which is quite a distance from any other place licensed, or in the ward. The North Ward licenses were granted at all. It is thought that the matter will be reconsidered by the Commissioners, and additional—as the law will allow it—licenses will be granted.

Police matters are dull, there being only an additional liquor case for the week, which, however, was dismissed for want of evi'dence.

April 18. ROMAN.

WALKERTON

The assizes for the county of Bruce commenced on Tuesday before Mr. Justice Burton. Mr. Warren Rock, Q. C. of London being the Crown Attorney. The Grand Jury were then sworn, and after having been charged by the learned Judge, retired to their room. The first case on the list was that of Thomas Hall, charged with having on the 1st day of January, 1878, at the township of Kinloss, in the county of Bruce, unlawfully and wilfully set fire to a certain building, the property of Alexander Hall, with intent to injure or defraud the said Alexander Hall. The prisoner was defended by Mr. Barrett, of Owen Sound, and Mr. Rock conducted the case for the Crown. The following gentlemen were then sworn on the Grand Jury:—Thomas Manly, foreman; James Lockhard and Angus Smith, for having illicit distilleries; and John A. McMillan, assault with intent to commit rape.

The greater part of the day was occupied in criminal business.

The Queen vs. Stephen Cross, for assaulting a female in the township of Kinloss. Verdict, not guilty. Rock, Q.C., for Crown; O'Connor for prisoner.

The Queen vs. Stephen Cross, for escaping from a constable. Pleaded guilty.

The Queen vs. Thomas Manly, forgery of a cheque for $20, on Mr. Patrick Gilmorey. Verdict, guilty. Rock, Q.C., for Crown; Barrett for prisoner. Sentence deferred.

The Queen vs. William Langmaid, for breaking into and stealing from a shop. Pleaded guilty. Owing to the prisoner having been in jail for several months, the Judge sentenced prisoner to one week's further imprisonment.

Two more true bills were found against Thos. Hall, for arson.

Second Week's Proceedings.

This was an action brought against the defendants, the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Co., by Walkerton and Portsmouth by placing a wagon, containing goods, before the defendant's train. The plaintiff was driving along after dark, and the train coming up behind him, struck his wagon and broke it to pieces, throwing the side of the road by the engine. The plaintiff expressed an opinion that the engine whistle was not blown out nor had his bell been rung, and contained other very considerable injury. At the close of plaintiff's case a verdict was moved for on the ground of contributory negligence. The judge expressed an opinion that he thought he could not defend; r plaintiff was very slight, but let the case go to the jury.

Barrett, for plaintiff; Crasser, of Owen Sound, for defendant.

ELGIN COUNTY.

About nine o'clock on Wednesday night, four men, having their faces masked, entered the farm house of Mr. Duncan N. Campbell, on lot 24 in the 12th concession of Aldborough township, and while two of them held pistols to the heads of the inmates, for a number, their companions rifled the bureaus, trunks and every portion of the house in search of valuables, which they found in considerable quantity, and very rewarded with nearly $300, the most part of which was in gold coin. The house is about three miles from the centre of a mile from the village of Nairn. Suspicion, it is supposed, rests on a man from that direction, as a span of horses and a buggy were stolen from Mr. Adam McLean's place, near the village, the same night, and it is supposed that the thieves used the conveyance on the same night. Quite a number of suspicious characters have been seen in the village of late, and been in town several for several days past. Both places are about four miles southof Hodgeville, on the Canada Southern Railway, and it is believed the tramps got off either at that station or at Shedden, a short distance further east.

The Court of Revision of the town of St. Thomas, will be composed of Charles Roe, J. H. Still, C. O. Ermatinger, F. Ellison, and F. Moore. They meet on the 25th May next.

A serious accident occurring on George Hominger, who drives a butcher wagon, was turning on Talbot street, St. Thomas, to turned boy quickly, and was thrown off the wagon against the fence, breaking the left ankle and fracturing the small bone of the leg. Drs. Southwick and Mc-Lurty were speedily in attendance, and set the broken limb.

A woman, having her right hand maimed by a threshing machine, Mrs. Cosgrove, living from the Five Stakes, has been lately duping the farmers in the northern parts of the county. She insists that her cottage was destroyed by fire a few weeks previously. If she is living others here as well as she did in the township of South Dorchester she probably is. It will take a long while ere she can be found at home again. She is accompanied by a girl about 14 years old.

The Liberal conservatives of West Elgin have arranged a meeting for Saturday next, at Dunlop's Hotel, Aylmer, to nominate a candidate to contest the Riding at the approaching election, at Wallacetown, on Tuesday, April 30th. Ward meetings to appoint delegates to attend the Convention will be held in the various Wards on Thursday, April 25th.

EXETER

The Parkhill intercolonial who attempted to levy blackmail upon Mr. W. Reid, of that town, by threatening him with committing an indecent assault upon his wife over fourteen months ago, has been arrested for the other day, and this is how the Times speaks of his actions: "A few years ago a man named Fred Long went to this town and obtained work at painting signs on windows. He boarded with Mr. Reid, and as he had known at Fort Hope, and together they were, apparently, on the most friendly terms. Mrs. Reid, however, never seemed to like Long, and on one occasion somewhat under the influence of 'mingled cup' she told her husband that Long, during his absence at the residence of his friend, began to abuse her in the most indecent manner, and otherwise conducting himself in a scandalous way. One of the boarders in the house, being annoyed by the noise, put on his coat and started for Constable Reid's office, but on the way met Long coming out of the house in a hurried manner, and started in pursuit. Long, seeing the officer returning from Reid's, took to his heels, and the officer after him, but Long succeeded in getting away, and fearing that Long had made a complaint, he started up street on a run, but not often equalled on a race course. Long started at a break neck pace, and without any regard to the proprieties, naturally excited the curiosity of the populace, who hurried them up to see the finale. Mr. Gill soon arrived on the scene, and arrested Long. He took him to the Central Hotel, and endeavored to get him to bed, when he commenced abusing his wife. Such conduct terminated in his arrest, and lodgment in the lock-up one night. On the morning he was allowed to go, on condition that he would leave the town, and he at once left for, it is said, Hensall.

Mr. James Pickard has sold his fine yoke of steers which took a prize at the Provincial Exhibition held in London last Fall, to Mr John Wills, for over $120 each. Mr. Wills has shipped the animals to Toronto.

NEWBURY.

Business is good in this village. Live stock men are showing some activity. A number of horses were bought here on Monday last by English markets, and good prices were paid. We are pleased to learn that farmers in this locality are taking an interest in improving their breed of stock. Wm. Beattie has purchased from Robert Adair (Long Bonnarck) 8260 was the price paid. Mr. Adair has one horse of the same stock. Mr. J. Robinson has a very fine Annual, price $150. Dr. Rowse has a very fine Tamyed horse; we have no doubt but the doctor may realize as much for his animal as what he sold "General Lee" for.

Mr. Thomas Robinson, ex-Reeve of Newbury, who seriously cut with a sawy last by the explosion of the boiler in his saw mill, has resolved to rebuild, and has let the contract to Mr. Angus Mitchell. The mill will be in operation in about six weeks. Mr. Robinson built his saw mill on the present site about 25 years ago, and has been burned out once and blowed up twice. We hope his future will be of a more brilliant and prosperous character. He certainly deserves great credit for his untiring efforts to make Newbury what it is.

April 18.

GODERICH.

The County Clerk of Huron, Mr. Peter Adamson, of Goderich, furnishes the following statistics of the County of Huron for the year 1877:—There are 900,342 acres of land in the county, assessed to 15,400 persons, and valued by the respective assessors at $26,784,641. This valuation is, of course, on the usual two third basis. Personal property, $1,250,462; income, $72,850. Number of persons in the families of those rated as residents, 56,473. In this item the returns are not complete, as in some municipalities the matter of population was not attended to. Above items in this assessment, $6,106,395; shares, $3,258; income, $6,106; dogs, 6,638. The gross amount of taxes raised by the municipalities within the county was $397,866. Of this amount $130,115 was expended for public school purposes; $53,977 for improving roads and bridges, and $34,777 for interest on the debentures indebtedness of the respective municipalities, which amounts to $37,000.—Of this amount $262,000 belongs to the municipalities and $264,000 to the county.

BASE BALL NOTES.

Dicky Pearce, of the St. Louis Browns, is said to have been engaged in the novel-writing business.

The Atlantics and Tecumsehs play this afternoon, weather permitting. It would make the game more interesting if Goldie and Foley were to play with the amateurs.

It is intended to have tickets for Tecumseh ball matches for sale during the summer at Bryce's store, Dundas street.

The Milwaukee officials are "passing around the hat." Mr. Charles Hubbard, at a recent meeting, said he had no fears for the future if they could only raise enough for present needs. "Jess so!"

Capt. McVey announces the following batting order of the Cincinnatis:—Pike, McVey, Geer, J. White, Gerhardt, Jones, Sullivan, Kelly, W. White.

A New Bedford correspondent writes:—Gen. Bradley is working like a beaver every day, and will show his friends West that he has not gone to seed yet.

A proposition was made at the late Buffalo meeting to amend the rules so as to prohibit any one but the eighteen players and the umpire from occupying the field while a game is in progress, but the object of the movement was defeated by a very strong opposition developed, that the proposition was withdrawn.

The meeting announced to be held at Cincinnati last Thursday, for the purpose of establishing a Western Base Ball Association of non-League clubs, was a failure so far as the attendance, and another attempt will be made next week.

Cincinnati is proud of Geer because he is a cousin of Dan Rice, and the glory of the nine exceeds him in intelligence.

It is said that the Harvard College Club has in its membership no less than 180 base ballists, including many of the best college players.

The schedule of International games has been accepted by eight of the thirteen clubs, and as the majority rules, of course it is adopted.

The New Bedfords defeated the Harvard College nine on Tuesday, by 4 to 1.

As an indication of the great interest Cincinnati has in base ball matters, it is only sufficient to announce a contest to come off, even though the sides be picked nines, and crowds will flock to the grounds.

The Oak Leafs, of Paris, have been organized under the following officers:—W. J. Hinnes, Esq., President; J. A. Adams, Captain; W. Lang, Sec.-Treas.

The necessary papers for the incorporation of the Tecumseh Base Ball Association arrived from Toronto yesterday, and in a few days the annual meeting will be held. Mr. B. C. Marshall has been appointed permanent secretary. His duty will be the answering of correspondence, collecting moneys, and other business of a clerical nature.

The Economist says:—"The Markham club has secured the services of Mr. Thompson, who last season was catcher for the Atlantics, of London, and who has the reputation of being the best amateur catcher in Canada." What dy'er say?

Give it to him good.

Pope Leo XIII. has sanctioned a plan for the conversion of Central Africa, which was prepared by Cardinal Franchi while Prefect of the Propaganda. The missionary work has been intrusted to a congregation established some ten years ago by M Lavigerie at Algiers. Twelve missionaries have already left for Zanzibar, and it is expected that they will be able to move into the interior during the present month. The missionaries have been instructed in the use of scientific instruments.

INCREASE OF MOUNTED POLICE.—It is stated that the Government intend strengthening the Manitoba Mounted Police by the addition of 25 recruits, who will be sent to the Prairie Province in May.

INQUEST.—Coroner Hutton, of Forest, held an inquest on the body of the child found at Hickory Creek, near Forest, and a verdict was returned of "Found drowned." There was evidence that the infant had met with foul play, but there is no clue to the inhuman parent.

NARROW ESCAPE.—Mr. A. S. Cowan, of Ingersoll, had a "close call" on Wednesday afternoon. While driving a horse attached to a light waggon through the streets the neat suddenly broke, and he fell out. One of the wheels passed over his neck, bruising it considerably. He will recover.

THE OPENING DAY.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the School of Design, Wednesday, arrangements were completed for the opening of the School of Design on Thursday next, the 25th inst. It was intended to open the school on the 20th, but the necessary arrangements could not be concluded in time.

CALL SUSTAINED.—At the recent meeting of the Sangeen Presbytery, the congregation of Knox Church, Harriston, presented a call in favor of Rev. John Anderson, of Tiverton, in the Presbytery of Bruce. A salary of $800 and a free manse were offered by the applicants, and the call was unanimous. It was sustained by the Presbytery.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL.—At the Toronto Police Court on Wednesday, the Bramin president, T. V. Roy, was re-manded charged on remand with bigamy by Mary Elizabeth Roy. Tilt Rev. Samuel Dunborn, of Philadelphia, testified that he married Roy to Mary Elizabeth Whitson in Philadelphia on the 3rd of December 1875. The prisoner was committed for trial.

FORTHCOMING METHODIST MEETINGS.—The Board of Examiners of the London Conference meets in Paris on Wednesday next at 9 a.m.—The District Meeting for the Chatham District will be held in the King Street Church, Chatham, commencing on Wednesday, the 22nd of May, at 9 a.m. The annual meeting of the Hamilton District will be held in the Brant Avenue Church, Brantford, commencing at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, 21st May.

THE ROSTER.—There was very little business before the Police Court yesterday morning, and consequently the session was of short duration. The old man Gibson did not take the advice of the P. M. the day previous, and was again copped. A sentence of three months was placed on positive his name, and he gave poor old Christopher Daly, who forked over $1 for indulging too freely in the cheap lager for sale at second-hand places these times.

THE LISTOWEL RACE GROUND.—The arbitration difficulty between the Stratford & Lake Huron railway and Messrs. J. & J. Livingstone, about ground on which the station buildings stand, has been settled, the arbitrators, Messrs. D. Cleland, D. T. Bailey and Judge Lizars, having come to a decision on Wednesday. The Messrs. Livingstone receive $795 for the ground 2½ acres, just what the railway company offered in the first instance. As they have to pay heavy costs, the arbitration has been a losing speculation for Messrs. Livingstone.

THE PARK.—The Park Committee met last night, and appointed James Grant caretaker and gardener of Victoria Park, at a salary of $400 per annum. It was also decided to continue to employ Mr. E. Hanson for the present as assistant caretaker. The committee instructed the chairman to advertise for tenders for furnishing and planting the trees, shrubs, &c., required, according to the plan in the hands of the chairman, and also for making and grading the roads and walks required. The Committee are going energetically to work in this matter, and before the season is over, a great change will, we are assured, be noticeable.

GRAND ENCAMPMENT STATISTICS.—Mr. M. D. Dawson, of this city, the Grand Scribe of the Grand Encampment of I. O. O. F. of Ontario, has compiled his yearly report for the Supreme Encampment of the U. S. from which the following statistics of the Grand in Ontario are gleaned:—Number encampments at end of year, 39; members per last report, 1,791; initiated during the year, 219; admitted by card, 58; reinstated, 10. Total gain, 287. Number withdrawn by card, 62; suspended, 158; expelled, 2; died, 11. Total loss, 236. Net gain, 51. ROBBERY AT THE G. W. R. STATION.—A daring robbery took place at the Great Western Station last Saturday afternoon, while No. 6 Express east was waiting the usual time for proceeding on her journey. It appears from what we can learn that the Rev. E. G. Pelley, of Wallaceburg, who was on his way to Ingersoll to attend the meeting of the Conference there, laid his valise, containing money and valuables to the amount of $1,700, on a seat, while he went forward in the car to speak to a lady friend. He sat conversing with the lady until Ingersoll was reached, and when he went to take his satchel up, lo! and behold it was gone. The conductor was telegraphed to, and the train searched, but no trace of the valise nor tidings of the thief could be ascertained. The matter was placed in the hands of Detective Capron, who is in the city endeavoring to ferret out the perpetrator. The money and the papers belonged to the church.

A GHOST STORY.—An amusing incident in connection with a ghost story occurred a few days ago on the road between Elginfield and St. Mary's. It appears that four decent workingers of Cupid, who have been assiduously paying attentions to various fair dames in the vicinity, dreading the idea of being supplanted by a certain gentleman, resolved to terrify him against ever exerting their Delilahs in the following manner:—A particular part of the road bore the name of being haunted. Accordingly, one evening recently, dressed in their ghostly paraphernalia, as the observing individual was passing the deserted log house in which they secreted themselves, discordant ghostly cries and blasting torches greeted him. But the intended ruse signally failed. Meanwhile, the glare of the lights dissipated to the effect that the coat seemed to them a fine poodle dog in one of the corners of the house, and as each was anxious to secure it to present to their inamorates, a struggle ensued for the possession of the beautiful animal. But the fetid odor which soon filled the air, superseding the cologne with which they liberally besprinkled themselves, convinced them the animal belonged to a different species, and a hasty retreat followed. Beware of wilders, says Artemus Ward. Beware of skunks, say we.—Con.

"LALLA."—The operetta of "Lalla," to be given in Mechanics' Hall next Monday, is one of the most charming entertainments ever rendered in this city. The energetic and talented directress never spares pain or expense to place her concerts before the public in first-class style. The great musical festival was produced at a cost of $940, and the Fairy Grotto at $327. Lalla will be no exception, and as the operetta is announced for only one night, we predict a crowded house. This is the last of Mrs. White's concerts until the week of the Western Fair, when her five classes will take part in the annual festival.

Waterloo Chronicle:—The leading paper of the West on the Quarterly sale is the FREE PRESS. As a newspaper, it is equal to any of the morning city enterprises, and in political articles are generally fairer than the Mail's.

The youth named Jimmy Gooderham, aged ten years, was arrested by Sergt. Crawford last evening for being disorderly on the street. If a dozen or more of his class were raked in once or twice a week, the street corners would be cleared of all intolerable nuisance.

The members of the Rose Croix Lodge of Masons, Scottish Rite, held their annual dinner at the Tecumseh House last night, and spent a happy night. Every one present voted every other one "a jolly good fellow," and we see no reason why they shouldn't have done so.

Brown tried to quarrel with his mother-in-law the other evening. He married the eldest of seven girls. "I said she, "Brown, my boy, I'm not going to ruin my reputation by quarrelling with you. Wait till all the girls are married. At present, as a mother in-law, I'm only an amateur."

The Goderich Signal, alluding to the presence of two Londoners, who assisted at an M. E. Church concert there the other night, says:—"Mr. Lewis Clark, of London, gave a number of amusing readings, besides singing a number of songs in good style and being loudly applauded. The duets by Miss Odlamore and this gentleman were well received."

Chamberlain Brown, assisted by Mr. John M. Keary, held an auction sale for the disposal of the city lands held by the Treasurer for arrears of taxes, in the City Hall, yesterday morning. Lots to the number of 26 were sold, which, if not paid for by Tuesday next, will be again offered for sale. A large number of those advertised were redeemed prior to the sale, the owners having paid the taxes.

The amusements for the holiday are of a varied character. Services will be held in several churches, a base ball match will be played during the afternoon, if the weather is propitious, and—if you desire to know how to spend the evening in a pleasant and profitable manner, consult the advertisements under the head of "meetings" in the classified column. There you will find a variety from which to make an excellent choice.

ROBBED.—A man named W. H. Crossley, a shoemaker who lives on William street reported to the police on Wednesday night that while coming to the city from Mr. Gunn's farm he gave a seedy-looking individual a ride in his buggy, and the man, whom Crossley did not know, paid him for his kindness by picking his pocket of $25, the proceeds of the sale of lecture tickets at St. John's. Crossley says he did not miss the money until he entered a tavern on Queen's Avenue, and that the stranger, on hearing him remark that his money was gone, coolly fled out of the back door Crossley following him. In the race the latter fell, and the supposed thief got away. Mr. White, at whose hotel Crossley says this occurred, is not aware that Crossley was in his place that evening, and does not remember seeing him at all. The story sounds fishy, more especially as Crossley does not say that Crossley appeared to have been drinking when he reported the matter to him.

A HORSE-LESS DUFF-ER.—The Dundas Standard tells the following story:—"Charles Duff is an only son and lives (in spite of himself) in Ancaster. Charles is 19 and loved a maid by the name of House. He believed that he could not exist without that House, and not seeing his way clearly to get possession of the coveted treasure he rashly attempted to shoot himself one evening last week after returning from a concert where he considered himself slighted by his haughty inamorata. In pushing the trigger of the rifle with his toe, he spoiled the aim, and instead of blowing off his foolish head, he only tore the flesh off his breast and arm, and nearly frightened the lives out of the members of his family, who found him bleeding profusely and anxious to die. He will recover his health and probably get the House by and bye."

ENTERTAINMENT.—A musical and literary entertainment, under the auspices of the Mutual Improvement Class of Horton street B. C. church, took place in that church last evening. The proceedings were very pleasant, being of a versatile character, and embracing the singing of several selections by some of the best local talent. The readings were also very interesting, and were highly appreciated. The following took part:—Mrs. Clifton, and Misses Cobbledick, Wilkens, Wallacott, Rodgers, and Darch; Messrs. Bartlett, Howard Clifton, Scott, Allen, and Comrie. Rev. J. J. Rice, pastor of the church, presided.

G. T. R. CHANGE DESIRED.—The St. Mary's Journal says "a petition has been largely signed by our citizens, praying to have the time of the train that leaves London at five o'clock in the afternoon changed to a later hour. The change will allow those who have business to transact in London time to do so, and get home the same day; it will also be a great convenience to those who are interested in cricket, base ball, &c."

WATER COMMISSIONERS.—The Board of Water Commissioners held a meeting last night, and opened the tenders—seven or eight of which were sent in—for the construction of a fence around three sides of the reservoir grounds. The tender of Mr. Biggs was accepted, it being the lowest, providing the requisite and good sureties were furnished for the due performance of the work. The fence is to be a seven-foot picket one.

SCALDING ACCIDENT.—A child, about 18 months old, of Mr. Peter Banks, lot 22, 3rd con., Ekfrid, fell into a kettle of lye a few days since, causing the hair to leave the scalp. It is doubtful if the child will live.

Lambton Assizes.

JUDGE ARMOUR ON CRIME IN CANADA.

Idleness and Extravagance the Great Cause.

A Fanatical Motion as to Liquors Shown Up.

Sarnia, Thursday, April 18.

The following prisoners, found guilty of robbery on the previous day, were sentenced for the terms named:—Kerwin, three years and nine months in the Penitentiary; Abernethy, three years and three months; Boyle, three years and six months.

The Grand Jury came into Court with the following

PRESENTMENT:—

"That we have much pleasure in congratulating your Lordship upon your first visit in your judicial capacity to our county, and we trust that upon your future visits you will find the inhabitants as loyal as they are at present, and crime equally as light.

"We are happy to congratulate the county on the lightness of the criminal docket, only three prisoners being confined in the county jail charged with indictable offences, and also on account of the small number of cases presented by our commissioner to the Crown office.

"We have examined the jail, and find that it is well kept, clean and tidy, and that the prisoners confined therein have no complaints to bring before us, but, on the contrary, some of them are apparently well pleased with their present condition. Many of these, however, speedily attend, schooled they had been brought to their present state of degradation by the excessive use of intoxicating drinks.

"What is usually called the "treaty nuisance" is not assuming serious proportions in this county, there being no regular treaty up to this time, and we trust it may long remain so, as it generally leads into a criminal class, and we are of opinion that a more committal under the Vagrant Act for some days to a County Jail is the best to discourage such characters from pursuing their calling, and the public, troublesome form of living. We hope that the recent Act of the Dominion Parliament, which has come into force in this province, forbidding the sale thereof, will act not only as a deterrent to crime, in showing the difficulty of publicity of punishment, but also in a great extent abate the tramp nuisance to which your Lordship referred, and of which often we are sorry to find, four of the prisoners belonged.

"From the unusual mildness of the past winter, we fear that the number of tramps in search of work will be much increased, and that we will have our hands full this summer with an abundant harvest, and also with the consequent idleness and prevailing stagnation of trade in the country, and we can only endeavour to perform our duties in a conscientious manner, and trust to your Lordship for reforming prosperity. For self and fellows.

"J. D. MARTIN, Foreman."

His Lordship thanked the jury for their kind remarks regarding himself, and proceeded to say that it was difficult to the presentment where the Grand Jury had found several of the prisoners attributed their being in jail to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. He did not think, he remarked, that any great amount of crime had been committed through the agency of liquors. During the assizes as the public prosecutor, this had been his experience. Offences against the person, and crimes of that class, frequently resulted from the excessive use of liquor; but with the offences of burglary, shop-breaking, larceny, forgery, perjury, counterfeiting and such crimes as go to make up the bulk of the crime committed in the country, intoxicating drinks have nothing whatever to do. Statistics which could be compiled to prove this to be the case are wholly unreliable. A person goes to the jail and asks a criminal how he came to be there, and whether drink didn't have something to do with it. The person charged replies, "Yes," and the questioner is, of course, satisfied that, by so saying, he may get his punishment made easier. Then statistics are based on the answer obtained, which are of no value whatever. We don't find people bound up in industrious habits accused of crime. It is idleness, combined with extravagance—extravagance often being a part of that extravagance—which is at the root of crime. Men live above their means and they are unable to meet their engagements, and so resort to crime to keep up appearances. Clerks in the employment of persons in business, and bank clerks, living above their means, embezzle money to keep their style of life up, and forgery, too, arises from similar causes. Oftentimes persons, living extravagantly, forge notes to procure money to keep them going; and, being unable to meet their paper when it became due, either leave the country in disgrace or are convicted of the felony which their extravagance has caused them to commit. It therefore appeared that crime springs entirely from idleness, from a dislike to labor and from a love of pleasure. A man would often ask his employer to trust him with a gun over his shoulder, and call it pleasure; but if you told him he had to do it for a living, he would regard it as the hardest of labor. The great thing is to make people content with their lot in life, and to make them live within their means. It habits of extravagance are contracted in them, they are put in a good condition in life, they will be unhappy unless they live in excessive use of intoxicating drinks was a great social evil, which was much to be deplored, and he would endeavor to see shortly. But they are not the cause of crime being contributed. You might just as well say that living on oatmeal made a man a Caledonian, or that eating fish constituted a person a Romanist. (Laughter.) No such thing. He (the Judge) had been brought up on oatmeal and ate considerable of fish, and whilst there was a good deal of alcohol in his composition, he claimed to be a Scotchman. His Lordship concluded by referring to the long remanence, and remarked that, according to his opinion, the jails are altogether too comfortable for the people sent there for punishment.

Lucas vs. Township of Moore.

This suit, for $10,000 damages, as solatium for the loss of plaintiff's husband through defendants allowing a ditch on a road to remain in an unfenced and unfinished condition, was then taken up. The jury retired to the Court House at 6.25 p.m., with a verdict for plaintiff, $2,500. This sum is apportioned as follows:—$1,000 to the widow and $250 to the oldest child; $450 for the second, and $750 for the youngest. For plaintiff, Lister; for defendant, Mr. McPherson, Q. C., Toronto.

Wm. Yates vs. Geo. Fisher.

This was a suit brought by plaintiff, a farmer in Plympton, to recover $3,702 from defendant, who is also a farmer in that township, for the board and clothing of Rosalind Fisher, daughter of defendant, for six years to February last. This girl, it was alleged for the plaintiff, had been assigned to his care under an agreement which defendant had broken by taking the girl away. Defendant admitted the taking away of the girl, but alleged he had come to no agreement, and if he had, he alleged plaintiff and his wife had acted ill-treated the girl that he was justified in taking her from his custody. Evidence was heard, and the jury ordered to render their verdict at to-morrow's court. For plaintiff, Lister; for defence, J. A. Mackenzie.

The Sarnia Libel Suit.

Mr. A. Mackenzie, the Dominion Premier, has arrived in Sarnia, to give evidence in the criminal proceedings against Mr. S. A. McVicar, of the Canadian, for an alleged libel published in that journal. It is not likely that the case will be of long duration, nor is it probable that any extraordinary developments will be forthcoming, although Mr. McVicar may lead evidence in extenuation of the alleged offence. Mr. Boyd, Q. C., represents the Crown; Mr. Kerr, Q. C., will appear for Mr. McVicar.

THE METCALF ABDUCTION CASE.—Detective Jury yesterday went to Port Huron to tender evidence in the Metcalfe girl abduction case, in which a man named Goodwin, a farmer in Michigan, is charged with abducting a girl named Moore and with carrying her off to Thornton, Mich., under circumstances already set forth in the FREE PRESS. Prisoner will likely be tried there.

NEW SONG.—"Under the Snow" is the name of a new and beautiful ballad published by Northeimer. Words by A. W. Wingfield; music by R. S. Ambrose.

About twenty years ago the Bank of England purchased for £40,000, the splendid residence known as Uxbridge House, of the Marquis of Anglesey, and established a West End branch. The ball-room contained an exquisite alabaster mantle-piece, for which customers of the bank have offered as much as £1,000, but the directors have lately put it up in the parlor of "The Old Lady of Threadneedle street."

Mr. Alfred Tennyson received the sum of three hundred guineas for his poem of "The Revenge," published in the Nineteenth Century.

Dominion Parliament Last Night.

By Special Telegraph to the Free Press from our own Reporter.

Ottawa, April 18.

After prayers and routine.

Mr. Cartwright moved, that when the House adjourns this day it shall stand adjourned until three o'clock in the afternoon on Saturday, and that Government measures shall have precedence immediately after routine proceedings.

Mr. Speaker announced the seconder of the motion as Sir Albert J. Smith, which was greeted with loud applause.

The motion was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Laflamme, the Bill respecting persons imprisoned in default of giving sureties to keep the peace, was read a second and third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Laflamme, the Bill to amend the Act respecting the election of Members of the House of Commons, was read a second time. This Bill, as was previously explained, is to do away with the use of envelopes for the ballot paper, &c.

In reply to Dr. Tupper,

Mr. Laflamme said there was no idea of a provision to trace the ballot paper, as under the Ontario Act.

After some discussion,

Mr. Mitchell said he should like to move the Bill of the Member for Cardwell as a rider to this.

Mr. Laflamme said, one referred to the conduct of elections, the other to the trial of controverted elections.

Mr. Mitchell said that made no difference. The bill was mixed, any way. (Laughter.)

Some debate ensued as to the advisability of allowing deputy returning officers to put a mark for illiterate voters.

Mr. Blake, while not disposed to shut each voters out of the franchise, would not be sorry to see them excluded.

It being six o'clock, the House took recess.

After recess.

The House again went into Committee on the Bill to amend the election law.

Mr. Mitchell advocated more simplicity in the provisions and working of the Act.

Mr. Langevin complained of the inordinate expenses attendant on appeals to the Supreme Court, which amount he thought the Minister of Justice scarcely realized, reforming prosperity. For self and fellows.

Mr. Langevin urged that when a recount of a ballot was demanded it should take place, when the County Judge was absent, before a District Magistrate, because in some of the back counties it is difficult to reach the Judge.

The Bill having undergone a large number of amendments in many of its details,

Mr. Mitchell asked the altered sections to be reprinted, so that the House might know what it was about. In its present condition this was not such legislation as either the House or the country desired to see, and the Ministers, as they had previously done, would doubtless see others of their measures very much amended, indeed completely altered, owing to the hurried manner in which they had been prepared.

Mr. Langevin made a similar demand.

A warm controversy ensued between Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Mills, the former charging the latter with the ill-considered measures which he had submitted to the House, none of which, except in a most modified form, had found their way upon the statute book.

In reply to Mr. Mitchell,

Mr. Laflamme said it was not his business to enter into all Mr. Mitchell's motives, but he appeared to desire to have made.

The Bill having been amended in almost every clause.

Mr. Mitchell said he would like to have a photograph of it to enable the public to see what kind of Bills the Government were in the habit of submitting.

The Committee reported progress, and the House adjourned at 12.15 a. m.

London East Notes.

Tuesday afternoon.

A meeting of the Council will be held next Wednesday night, when the much-vexed question will be discussed. The Reeve will also likely introduce the question of a water supply for fire and other purposes for the village.

A young man named Ranahan hired a horse and buggy from Lillie's Livery stable on other day and got on a "high old drunk," during which the "rig" got out of the control. It was subsequently found in the city, and restored to its owner. Ranahan gave an assumed name when he ordered the "rig," and it is quite probable steps will be taken to prosecute him.

Thos. Nichol, a village constable, was before Squire Lawrason this afternoon charged by a man named Thomas Fenton with assault. The complainant accused Nichol of seducing his wife, which he asserted by striking Fenton over the head with his handcuffs. Fined $1 and $9.85 costs. It is Nichol's intention to appeal against the decision.

The Rev. Dr. M. Payuder, the noted Evangelist of the Tabernacle, Chicago, who has been labouring with marked success in the County of Huron lately, held special services in the Presbyterian church in the village last night. The church was filled, very many citizens being in attendance. The services were of an impressive character, Mr. Paynter's remarks being received with especial favor by the large congregation. He will hold a second service this evening.

The last of the Orange Young Britons' assemblies this season was held in the Town Hall this evening, and it was quite as well attended as any of its predecessors, and fully as successful. Dayton's String Band furnished the music, and dancing, the atmosphere was rather too close for comfort. The whole affair passed off well, and reflected credit upon the committee of management.

Boston Wool.

Boston, April 17.

WOOL.—The market is quiet and steady. Manufacturers are not disposed to purchase beyond their immediate wants, and dealers are not disposed to force sales. The supply is light, and wool values have not changed materially. Ohio and West Virginia fleece are quoted at 43@45c; Michigan, Indiana and Wisconsin do at 42@44c; New York, Wisconsin and Michigan fleeces range at 44@46c, and fine do at 43@44c. All that can be obtained for fleece in Michigan, up to 46c. Pulled wools are in fair demand, and prices firm. Extra is required for; quoted at 45c to 46c, and occasional lots have been sold at 46c to 48c.

New York Dry Goods Market.

New York, April 17.

The trade to-day continued remarkably dull, and the jobbing houses were almost entirely deserted. Commission houses were also very quiet. Cotton goods are unchanged, but very steady. Woollens and dress goods are in steady request. Linens and white goods are also in steady request.

New wash goods are quiet.

Silk is fairly active.

Ocean Freights.

New York, April 18.

OCEAN FREIGHTS were more active for grain to-day, but the rates ruled low. Engagements of 3 continental contracts for all which the sales were 30,000 quarters, and 1 to Cork for orders, 30,000 quarters, and provisions; offered were quite limited. Grain to Liverpool, by steam, 5½d; of which there were quite free offerings by sail, 5d. Cotton, 9-32d.

Decrease of English Crops.

Some facts are in course of preparation which point to a decrease in the fertility of England. The Mark Lane Express, in a late issue, has a table showing the wheat crops for the last two years. These report separately as to the extent, fertility and crop—whether fine or average, over average or under average. The table is based on returns from 267 correspondents, and the result is that the wheat crop of 1877 was 16.2 over average, 1,312 average, and 2,476 under average, while this year's crop is reported 2,350 over, 1,250 average, and 1,265 under average. The average returns were 32 per cent average, 1.16 average, and 1.30 under average. The total acreage of 1877 was 2,476,000 acres, or 30 per cent under the average, and for less than 309 bushels per acre. This year's acreage is reported 1,265,000 acres, or 15 per cent under the average, the crops for the last two years have been under average. Should the former have brought it to their interest to represent their crops somewhat smaller than they actually were.

Rates of Freights.

The London Shipping and Mercantile Gazette of April 16th says:—Wood freights appear a little firmer, and in some instances a slight advance has been obtained over last week's rates. This is no doubt owing to the improved shipping demand and a peaceful settlement of the Eastern question is generally felt, and shipowners are beginning to look back, and do not show much disposition to accept low rates. The latest rates are as follows:—Canada—Quebec, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Miramichi, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Saint John, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Halifax, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Pictou, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Arichat, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Gaspe, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Sydney, spruce, 3s 6d; pine, 4s; Miramichi or Shediac to Liverpool, 3s. West Coast ports, 20s. Richibucto or Shediac to West Coast, 22s. 6d.

Fishery Telegraph.

A novel use of the telegraph has lately been adopted by the Norwegian Government. As is well known, the herring fishery forms one of the most important sources of income for the country. The captains have made a good many returns from the depths of the sea to depart their spawning grounds, and the object of their visit is accomplished and their return to the ocean before news of the arrival reaches the distant parts of the coast. This difficulty is now obviated by the construction of a telegraphic line 300 kilometres in length, complete and chiefly submarine cables, by means of which the fishers along the whole coast are enabled to gather at once on the approach of a vessel to any particular fiord. The first result of the line is said to have been an enormous increase in telegraphic wire to have been a profitable speculation.

Montreal Horse Market.

The supply of horses during the past week has been inadequate to the demand, owing to the wet weather and bad roads, which prevented farmers and country dealers from bringing their animals to market. About 60 horses have been purchased this week already. Since last Tuesday 22 horses have been shipped across the River, at an aggregate cost of $17,251 07, averaging $747 84 each, and running $1

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, April 27.—A St. Petersburg dispatch says the Russians have published extensive draft orders for the land provisions from Batoum, on the Black Sea, and have levied an 8 per cent. import duty on the same.

London, April 27.—The English government is arranging for the formation of a second army corps, and raising the corps to a full war strength.

An Athens despatch reports that the insurrection in Thessaly is nearly crushed. Constantinople, April 27.—The foreign Ambassadors here have proposed to the Turkish government to open the ports, with increased import duty of 20 per cent., levied for the purpose of assisting the thousands of refugees now here to return to their homes.

Bulgrade despatch says disturbances have broken out at Nish and Pirrot, between the inhabitants and Mussulman authorities, in consequence of a Russian summons for recruits. A famine is raging at Vranja, caused by the insurrections.

A Rustchuk correspondent telegraphs under date of Thursday last, that fifty-six fifty die daily of typhus. At Adrianople, Philippopolis and Tirnova it is reported hundreds die daily.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Examiner says great enthusiasm was manifested in military circles here to-night on the announcement that the whole of the staff and commissioned officers stationed at Aldershot received stringent orders to hold themselves in complete readiness for immediate service. It is also ascertained that the Guards have received important secret instructions.

It is rumored that orders will be shortly issued for the immediate formation of a second army corps, and the raising of its numbers to the war standard.

London, April 27.—A Constantinople dispatch states that the Mussulman insurgents are approaching Philippopolis, driving the Bulgarians before them. Anarchy is greatly agitated over the outrages committed by insurgents. Numbers of officers have been assassinated in the streets. The public buildings are being carefully guarded. The garrison is preparing to march against the insurgents.

London, April 27.—The Times says it is the particular of Turkey that Russia does not now. It was a partition she desired at the time of the Crimean war. Against such a policy we contended then, and are contending now. Referring to the Italian proposition that England state her views, the Times states that it would be futile and inconsistent now laid up in Almeda Creek on the opposite side of the bay. The commissions of the officers are also here, and funds to carry out the project. Over 200 men have signed articles binding themselves to engage in the enterprise, the recruits being mostly drawn from the idle class, who are ready for anything. Capt. Waddell, late of the wrecked Pacific mail steamer City of San Francisco, formerly in command of the naval privateer Shenandoah, is mentioned as a probable commander, and Capt. Lapidge, late of the Pacific mail service, is named as one of the officers. An attempt will be made to procure a number of boys from the training ship Jamestown for service on midshipmen. The parties profess to mean business, and will be prepared to move on the instant that war is declared. From other sources it is learned that the Russian corvette Crasner, now lying in Nagasaki, is prepared for instant action, and the object of her long delay here is to obtain the earliest possible news of hostilities, and at once go to sea and lie in wait for British vessels bound to this port.

It is understood that with the exception of the corvette Opal and the small gunboat Rocket at Victoria, and the frigate ship, which is supposed to be somewhere in the neighborhood of Panama, there is not a single British war vessel in the North Pacific to interfere with the designs of the Russian cruiser, and it is probable that the vessels at Victoria would be retained there for defensive purposes.

GREAT BRITAIN.
THE COTTON STRIKE.

London, April 27.—The strike of cotton operatives at Preston appears ended only so far as operatives spinners are concerned. The weavers, winders and warpers are still standing out, and there seems no likelihood of any settlement at present.

London, April 29.—A special from Blackburn states that the Union Delegates from various districts met on Sunday to arrange for the raising of funds for the support of the strikers. They appear to be sanguine, and report that the small firms in the country are joining the strike, and nearly all the large employers of Blackburn seem inflexible. The determination of operatives to resist, seem to increase. The National Federation of employers publish a letter, repudiating all connection with the Lancashire masters.

Accrington, April 28.—The representatives of the East Lancashire Weavers Association have resolved to submit the question of a reduction of wages to the arbitrament of the commission composed of Manchester agents, shippers, bankers, operatives and masters, with the Bishop of Manchester as chairman.

The Paris Exhibition.

Paris, April 27.—One hundred thousand foreigners have already reached here, to witness the opening of the Exhibition on Wednesday. The prices of living have advanced, but not to the extent that was feared. The Exhibition will not be in full trim until the beginning of June. The English, American, Swiss and Dutch sections are most advanced.

British and Foreign Grain Trade

Latest Liverpool Review.

Liverpool, April 26. A leading grain circular says: Though country deliveries of wheat are somewhat larger, the imports into the Kingdom during the past two weeks are considerably smaller than we frequently have had lately. All the markets this week were firm on spot, and to neighboring districts the demand improved at the extreme quotations of Tuesday. At this market to-day millers were readily paying the advances of one penny on white and one penny to 1s-6pence per cental on red wheat. Flour is in improved request at extreme prices. New corn is held for threepence to sixpence per quarter advance, fair sales made at a firmer improvement.

EXPLOSION IN DUBLIN.

Fifteen Persons Killed; Twelve Injured.

Dublin, April 28.—A boiler in Strong's foundry, in Hammond lane, exploded yesterday. The adjoining house was destroyed. Fifteen persons were killed and twelve injured.

FRANCE
THE EXHIBITION.

Paris, April 27. - Nine thousand workmen are engaged in the Champ de Mars. The American Commission say the engine for driving the American machinery will probably be in position on Monday, but they fear the French administration will not be able to supply steam until the end of the week.

A locomotive sent out by the Reading R. R. Co. weighs two tons more than any other in the exhibition. It will be the best on the track in the American section. Robert Hart, Director of Imperial Chinese Customs and Chinese Commissioner to the Exhibition, has arrived. Most of the members of the Postal Congress also arrived.

Paris, April 28.—The municipality has resolved to illuminate this city on Wednesday night, in honor of the opening of the Exhibition.

The Morocco Famine.

Gibraltar, April 27.—There has been abundant rain in Morocco, and the fears of a famine are decreasing.

The Communists.

New York, April 27.—A reporter of the Sunday Mercury interviewed, to-day, a Communist agent, who came from Chicago. He pointed out that Chicago, said, instead of five thousand Communists being drilled in Chicago nightly, there were over 20,000. In San Francisco, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Indianapolis and Philadelphia, their organizations were complete. Their strength was hourly increasing, and their ranks contained members of almost every creed and nationality. It was their intention to destroy this city, as San Francisco and Chicago are, into drilling halls or armories. Their arming was purely for defensive purposes, and it was intended to place New York upon a war footing. A requisition has been served on all the number of Trades Unions and Societies in this State. The agent said they had nothing to do with the Paris Commune, except in sympathy with many of its views. A reinstitution of property and readjustment of labor rates and the like appear dimly in the distance; yet there is no knowing what time may bring about. San Francisco is the headquarters, but the agent refused to name the leader.

A Wall Street Victim.

Indianapolis, April 27.—James Baine, Cashier of the Salem National Bank, is missing. The following note to his father-in-law was found in the bank: "I am finally ruined and disgraced. Wall street did it. I know not, and no one cares whither I go. God save my wife and child." He had a fortune of his own. It remains to be ascertained if the bank's money had been used. On the opening of the safe $200,000 in money and bonds were found.

Absconded with $30,000.

Letters of Marque!

A Wild Story from the Pacific Coast.

Russian Privateers Said to be Ready to Prey on British Commerce.

San Francisco, Cal., April 28.—It is reported by parties who claim to be in the plot, that, in anticipation of hostilities between England and Russia, a movement is on foot to fit out privateers here to prey on British commerce. Letters of marque from the Russian Government are already here in dusk, waiting for the declaration of war. Parties in the plot have secured the Times states that it would be futile and inconsistent now laid up in Almeda Creek on the opposite side of the bay. The commissions of the officers are also here, and funds to carry out the project. Over 200 men have signed articles binding themselves to engage in the enterprise, the recruits being mostly drawn from the idle class, who are ready for anything. Capt. Waddell, late of the wrecked Pacific mail steamer City of San Francisco, formerly in command of the naval privateer Shenandoah, is mentioned as a probable commander, and Capt. Lapidge, late of the Pacific mail service, is named as one of the officers. An attempt will be made to procure a number of boys from the training ship Jamestown for service on midshipmen. The parties profess to mean business, and will be prepared to move on the instant that war is declared. From other sources it is learned that the Russian corvette Crasner, now lying in Nagasaki, is prepared for instant action, and the object of her long delay here is to obtain the earliest possible news of hostilities, and at once go to sea and lie in wait for British vessels bound to this port.

It is understood that with the exception of the corvette Opal and the small gunboat Rocket at Victoria, and the frigate ship, which is supposed to be somewhere in the neighborhood of Panama, there is not a single British war vessel in the North Pacific to interfere with the designs of the Russian cruiser, and it is probable that the vessels at Victoria would be retained there for defensive purposes.

Dominion Parliament

Mr. White (Hastings) said that many sessional clerks were this season mainly engaged in sending political literature for Ministerial supporters in the several constituencies of the country. He urged that this should be put an end to, as had been invaded on by the members for South Bruce. He would not say that the Speaker was aware of the reasons, on account of which Civil Service officials had obtained leave of absence, but he charged the Premier with having been a party to it. He asserted that numbers of sessional clerks never put their pen to paper except in the interest of the Government to poison the public mind in the country to the disadvantage of the members of this House. If there was nothing else for those clerks to do they should be sent about their business, and he called upon the Postmaster-General to see that an end was put to this practice in his own department There were far more idlers in the public departments under the present Government than under the previous, and the consequence was that there were continuous and increasing deficits. They employed sessional clerks to send away untruthful news, and under an honest reform Government like the present this should be stopped. These men would be far better with an axe in their hand or following the plough than poisoning the public mind as they were now doing.

Mr. Langevin denied that any public officers under his department had been compelled to vote. It was against his policy, and that of the party to which he belonged. He had allowed every officer to vote as he pleased, and never knew for what candidate they had voted. He believed it to be a fault that the majority of the officers of the Government were in those days "Reformers." It had never been with his knowledge, connivance, or order that trains Government trains—had been "prestidoted" to carry officials to vote. He had been much pleased to hear the member for North Bruce speak as he had done. He had conveyed the same ideas that he (Mr. Langevin) had. He had given to the Minister of Militia and the Postmaster General the best answer that could be given. He had said it was against the policy of the Parliament and the Government that they should interfere in politics; but if they chose to vote it was competent for them to do so. He was glad that the hon. gentleman had so spoken; for, with the influence which he exercised, it was within his great power to bring about a change. He was glad he had come out so boldly, and he congratulated him on having done so. Either the public service suffered by the absence of these officers or they were not required. Seven officers of the House were known to be away. How many more were also absent? The fault was that these men, instead of doing duty were electioneering, and some of them would not be back till after the election. They were regularly paid officials of this House, and it was his right and his duty to call upon them to explain what they had been doing. The system should be no longer followed. It was too bad that men should be permitted to go on canvassing, and therefore he deemed it his duty to bring up the subject.

Mr. Mackenzie said he had not been aware of the absence of these parties till last night, and he would not allow it to be continued. After charging the member for Charlevoix with having acted similarly, he said he did not think that the time of the country should have been wasted in this manner. The view of the Government was that ordinary civil servants would not mix up in elections, and last session had said that the Government would not allow it in the future. It had become intolerable.

Mr. Bowell referring to a return of Sessional Clerks which had been submitted, said he noticed that 41 of them were this session employed. He considered what had been said by the member for East Hastings, reviewing the figures of the return in question, showing that the clerks had been put on the pay list eleven days and fourteen days before even they had received their appointment. Taking this into consideration, he said he could not but conclude that the Government would not be excessively punctilious in deducting their pay while absent. The debate had considerably widened since it had commenced as to the principle involved, but the House was to be congratulated on the speech of the member for South Bruce, which had been a vigorous condemnation not only of the practice complained of, but of the course which had been pursued by the Government. He charged the present Government with having sought to influence the votes of their officials, quoting a dispatch to the Postmaster at Carrillion informing him that he was prejudicing his own interests by mixing up in elections. He also cited correspondence between a former Postmaster-General and Premier Mowatt asking that the Glengarry election be put off, assuring him that he would do his best to aid him. He could detain the House by the hour, showing how, in their connection with the Provincial Government, the present administration had violated their vaunted principle of non-connection between Federal and Local matters. He referred to a speech made the other day in Argenteuil, by the member for North Oxford, who had advocated the return of Mr. Joly's candidate, because it would secure the retention in office of his friend, the present Premier. He showed that Mr. Loucks, the Postmaster at Hull, though paid, as the Postmaster-General had said, by fees, was equally as well remunerated as many other officials, and hence should be subject to the same disqualification from voting. Mr. Bowell insinuated the manner in which the Government had stretched their authority to vent their spleen upon Dr. Strange, who had worked for his Rt Hon. friend from Kingston, and concluded by advocating an enquiry into the internal economy of the House, in view of the statement which had been made by the member for East Hastings, and the return to which he had referred and which showed there were ten more extra clerks this session than last. He thought it might be good employment for these men as well as exercise for the Minister of Militia, to parade these clerks every morning and put them through a course of military drill.

Mr. Mitchell vindicated the rights of civil officials, who were generally intelligent and educated men, to exercise the right of the franchise of which every Briton should be proud. He would allow every man to vote, and would exempt no one from taxation. He would lay down the principle, however, that the right of public officials should cease with their vote, and that they should not address meetings, and otherwise take an active part in elections.

Mr. McCallum contrasted the practices of the Government with their professions when in Opposition, detailing the circumstances attendant upon the Prohon Outrage on which the present Premier had been a prominent actor. Personally he would, under the ballot, be in favor of giving a vote for civil servants.

Mr. Carrier said since the Government had been removed to Ottawa he had had the felicity of running several elections. When he had asked the late Government what they could do for him they declined to interfere. He never had civil servants on his Committees, and the instructions he gave had been not to canvass them. But after the change of Government he had a Government clerk holding his P. C. horses, and doing all they could again to do the whole business. He must say that the majority of the officials had taken no part in the elections. At the last election the late Minister of Militia had personally came out against him, and one official who had, it was true, been appointed by the late Government, had rendered himself very conspicuous by the course he had pursued.

Sir John Macdonald rose to explain, that the reason he had to-day spoken on this subject had been, that the charges which had been made to-day were far different to those of which the speaker had spoken last night, and the number of charges which had since been made, certainly warranted him in what he said.

Mr. Macmillan condemned the course pursued by the Government in justifying themselves by the charges which they made against their predecessors.

After recess,

Mr. Macmillan resumed that every one who paid taxes, whether or not, he was a civil servant, and should have the right to exercise the franchise. He severely censured the Government for the manner in which the officials of the Toronto Central Prison had been driven down in a body to oppose against the Hon. John Beverly Robinson, and this was a proof of collusion between the two Governments, of the policy of the one Government being to support the other. He contended that two wrongs did not make a right, and expressed the hope that never again would members of the Government seek to justify themselves by appeals to the wrong doings of their predecessors.

Mr. Dalton McCarthy held that, with the Speaker, the office commissioners or the internal economy of the House were responsible for the absence of six or seven officers of the House. If the Speaker himself did not know the causes which had taken them, his associates in local commission certainly knew them. He condemned the practice of electioneering by civil servants, and urged that they should be prevented from doing more than acting on the occasion of elections. He stated that when he had presented himself to the County of Simcoe he had been materially injured by officials of the present Government.

Mr. Cook twitted the member for Cardwell upon getting up in the House to condemn the interference of civil servants, by whom Mr. McCarthy had been strongly aided, by county and other officials, when running in the county of Simcoe.

The motion was then withdrawn, and the House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Oliver in the chair.

AN EXCELLENT OFFICER.

The investigation into the actions official and transactions personal of our friend Mr. Nixon, of Froton notoriety, has come to a close, as far as the Committee are concerned. The chairman in this case appears less energetic and enterprising than he who conducted the Moylan enquiry, who was in the habit, as the work progressed, of writing out his report first, and then seeking evidence to substantiate his conclusions afterwards. In this case the chairman and the witness side, Nixon as Government official, has enjoyed thier unbounded confidence, served them on more than one occasion as they wished to be served, and as the exigencies of the case required, and therefore, he must be screened from censure, his transactions with Sutherland and Bannatyne kept in the background, his reputation patched up in the deftest way known to the Government, and our hero of Froton fame again sent out into the world with a clean sheet, so that he may aid in elevating the standard at the coming elections. It might have been dangerous to venture upon a whitewashing process by the Committee, as the report would have been compared with the evidence, but as the Committee have adopted the more prudent course of reporting the evidence taken, it is the easiest thing in life for some of the convenient tools of the Ministry to express confidence in Nixon, and that ought to be sufficient assure be introduced, Mr. Mackenzie will, according to the new Government patent, call upon his friends to vote it down, and there is an end to the matter.

One of the Organs says that Nixon has been jeered by this enquiry an excellent officer, capable, energetic, and economical. but in one or two things, being a little uxorious we suppose, he has permitted his wife to transact business on his account in a manner that is not altogether creditable and must not occur again! Even such an admission, coming from such a quarter, is more than the world had any right to expect. That Nixon should be wrong even in small details is something of a concession, and when so much is conceded it may well be taken as acknowledged, that the whole affair is just, all the people conceive it, totally corrupt and indefensible. The evidence of Sutherland's book-keeper is most conclusive. It is direct, circumstantial, minute, and what is of more importance in furnishing the material upon which to base a verdict, it is completely disinterested, and therefore reliable. All the elements of satisfactory evidence are here—intimate acquaintance with the facts, methodical habits on the part of him who offers it, frequent recurrence to the same facts in the management of his employer's business, frequent confidential talks over these remarkable transactions with his employer—Mr. Sutherland, and the additional knowledge that the witness has not the slightest interest in the decision of the Committee or the House, whether that points in the one direction or the other.

It is but a poor subterfuge adopted by one of the party organs to assume, that Mr. Scott had been mistaken in the character of the documents which he handled, and in the nature of which the firm had such deep interest. Of all the men connected with this transaction, Scott is the least likely to have called such documents and misrepresented the character of these papers, and the transactions of which they form the record. Now consider the importance of Scott's evidence, and there will be no longer any surprise at the efforts made to invalidate this evidence. He swears that tenders were received by Nixon for certain supplies, that the tender of their firm, when Nixon opened and compared them all, was found not the lowest, that Nixon then brought over the open tenders in his hand, advised Sutherland to alter his prices, a hint which was complied with, and that in consequence of this alteration the firm in which Scott was employed obtained this valuable contract.

We submit, in this connection, that the favors which Mr. Nixon received from Mr. Sutherland, one of the partners in the firm, and those which he permitted his wife to receive from the same quarter, put it out of his power to act in an independent manner towards Mr. Sutherland, or proceed fairly and impartially between tenderers for these public contracts, of which Sutherland was one. Of what avail, then, is Nixon's evidence when set in opposition to that of Scott, when we consider that the latter had no object whatever in even coloring any of those transactions, regarding which he testified, while, of the former, both the character for all time and his worldly prospects depended upon invalidating the evidence of Scott. Each of our readers will judge of these contradictory statements as they please, but they cannot judge of both or either correctly and decide justly, unless they will take the elements we have enumerated into the second when coming to a conclusion.

Mr. Nixon's transactions with Bannatyne are of an equally suspicious character, and plainly show that he brought extensively from Bannatyne on behalf of the Government, without being at all deterred by the terrors of the Independence of Parliament Act. His purchase of a house, and his letting this to the Government in another person's name, might generate a little suspicion. were not Mr. Nixon so good a man. He rises to the occasion here and shows the Committee that he rented his own house to the Government to prevent them from being fleeced by sharpers! Of course it don't matter that he bought the house for $1,500, and that he rented it to the Government, he himself fixing this rent, we believe, at $423 per annum; a modest sum, which only allows the owner, Mr. Nixon, the rate of 29 per cent. upon his investment! Mr. Nixon is a model elevator, and an exceedingly good man, at least he says so, and we are inclined to agree with him. On the whole, it will be acknowledged that the Committee acted wisely in throwing the whitewashing of Nixon into the skilled hands of Mr. Mackenzie.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

We have received a memorandum and supplement from the Education Department on the subject of religious teaching in the public schools of the Province. It would seem, from the Minister's supplement, issued on the 11th instant, that his memorandum, issued on the 31st ult., was either misunderstood or deemed liable to be misunderstood in some of its conclusions, and hence the memorandum has been promptly followed by an explanatory supplement. It seems that this exposition of the school laws and regulations has been called forth by two questions presented by a deputation from the Presbytery of Hamilton and London to the Minister of Education, of which we give a copy verbatim:—

1. "May the local trustees, without contravening the school law, require teachers to use the Bible, in whole or in part, as a text book, giving such instruction as is needed for the proper understanding of the text book?

2. "Is there anything in the Regulations and programme at present in force, to prevent the introduction of such reading of the Holy Scriptures as part of the regular course of instruction and work of the school, when the Trustees desire this to be done?"

The Minister quotes extensively from the Regulations and all that the School Act of 1874 says upon the subject. The provisions of the latter will be found in Section 142, and read as follows:—

"No person shall require any pupil in any public school to read or study in or from, any religious book, or to join in any exercise of devotion or religion, objected to by his or her parents or guardians.

(4). "Pupils shall be allowed to receive such religious instruction as their parents or guardians desire, according to any general regulations provided for the organization, government and discipline of public schools."

The first of these is merely of a negative kind, designed to protect the children of such parents as may not approve of the religious instruction provided for them; and the other invests the Council of Public Instruction, now the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, with the right to say what these provisions shall be! Such regulations have been made and are still in force, and these the Hon. the Minister of Education quotes in extenso in his memorandum. After quoting the regulations published in 1875, he says:—"It will be seen that these regulations are recommendatory not mandatory, and leave the authority and duty with the Trustees or School Board of requiring their teachers to use the Bible in whole or in part, as one of the subjects of the ordinary exercises of the school, with such explanations (not of a denominational kind) as may be requisite for the proper understanding of the language or matter." And again he says:—"This tendency to recognise the benefits of religious instruction would be more generally appreciated by parents, if it was fully understood, that school boards and trustees can adopt, as part of the school exercises, systematic religious teaching, so that all the children whose parents do not expressly object may, by the reading of Scripture and explanations of its meaning, acquire an intelligent knowledge of Christianity, its examples, precepts and principles."

The Minister then concludes in these words—" According to my interpretation, therefore, of the Law and Regulations applicable to Public Schools in Ontario, I beg to reply to your two questions in the affirmative, and to advise you first and lastly, School Boards and Trustees can lawfully require their teachers to use the Bible or portions thereof as parts of the ordinary exercises of the school, giving, however, such explanations only as are needed for a proper understanding of what is read; and secondly, there is nothing in the Regulations or programme respecting the Public Schools now in force which can prevent the introduction of such reading of the Holy Scriptures as part of the regular course of instruction and work of the school, when the Trustees or School Board require this to be done. But, on the contrary, the law in force, and the Regulations strongly recommend, the daily practice of such religious exercises."

Now, a question arises here, whether the devotional exercises recommended by the Council of Public Instruction, and extensively followed in the Public Schools of Ontario, can with propriety be called "ordinary exercises" of the school, or, as the Presbytery has put—" part of the regular course of instruction." The regular course of instruction is prescribed, but this is only recommendatory. The words of the Minister are the most impressive, and show conclusively that what they recommend is an act of devotion, and with such they advise that each school should be opened and closed each day. These words are :—

"With a view to secure the Divine blessing and to impress upon the pupils the importance of religious duties, and their entire dependence upon their Maker, the Council of Public Instruction recommends that the daily exercises of each Public School be opened and closed by reading a portion of Scripture and by prayer, &c., &c."

When religious instruction is provided for, Regulation No. 4 makes provision for giving this instruction through the medium of ministers of the Gospel attending at certain hours in the day for the purpose, not within the regular school time. But we fail to see in what part of these regulations the Bible is recommended to be introduced as an ordinary text-book, and what authority there is for interpreting an act of devotion as part of the ordinary course of instruction in the schools. The Minister, in his supplement, says:—"There seems to be a misunderstanding with reference to my interpretation of the law and regulations as to the reading of portions of the Holy Scriptures as part of the ordinary exercises of the school." And he further says:—"That, when properly considered with the text of the law and regulations, (this interpretation) will be found to go no further than the regulations themselves recommend, namely, that the daily exercises of each public school be opened and closed by the reading of portions of Scripture and prayer."

We are glad that the Minister thought proper to publish this supplement, for without it we believe that the misunderstanding of his interpretation would have been very general. However the words we have quoted will settle the difficulty, and leave the question just where it stood before, and prevent the rise of an agitation that might give much uneasiness and produce no benefit. The people generally are well satisfied with those regulations, they have received a pretty general assent from all, they prevent the introduction of irritating subjects and sectarian bitterness, and provide for that recognition of the Christian religion, of which we all approve. The Synod will have to interpret the Minister's answer to their questions in the light of the supplement, and if they imagine that the second is more circumscribed than the former, they must just accept their answer in this limited sense.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

After prayers and routine,

Mr. Holton moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Act constituting and regulating building societies in the Province of Quebec, in order to allow building societies, except in cities, another year to conform themselves to the law passed last session. He said the law, as at present, was likely to work injuriously.

Mr. Langevin said it was extremely singular if this Bill was going to work injuriously that there should have been no petitions against it. He therefore objected to the introduction of the Bill at this late period of the session.

Mr. Holton withdrew his motion.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. Langevin moved the adjournment of the House, in order, he said, to enable him to bring before the attention of the House the fact that certain officials of the House and country were employing their time in electioneering in Quebec instead of attending to their duties. It was well known that Commissioner Larocque had been so at work in the county of Lislet, and that certain translators of the House were so engaged, as had been mentioned in the House, within the last day or two. Mr. Pilon, another translator, had gone away on the day he was so sick as to be at Arthabaska and attempt to make a speech. One of the Postmasters in Quebec had been electioneering at Rimouski, while a light-house keeper at Argyle, instead of attending to his business, was employed in the manner he had described. Mr. Kierzkowski, a translator, had been electioneering in the county of Chicoutimi, he was in Pontiac on nomination day. He might add to what he had said that another officer, Augustus Leyvegne, a temporary clerk, had also been at work in Kamouraska. Evanel, another translator, had also gone, and a sessional messenger named Jobin, also Mr. Lesigne, of the Queen's printing department, had been earnestly exhorting himself in the county of Ottawa. Mr. Landry, Post Master at Hull, was Secretary of the Reform Association, and was also actively waring; and he might further say that Dr. Gordin, President of the Ottawa Reform Association, was also at work, and, moreover, was a sessional clerk. He had also a telegram with reference to a similar case, of which, however, he should not avail himself. He must say that it was highly improper that officers of the House and Government should be allowed to leave their offices for days and weeks to canvass the Province of Quebec. The question was, were they paid for that purpose, or for translating and performing other clerical duties? It was unfair, it was not right, it was contrary to every principle, that they should be allowed to canvass either for one party or the other. They were paid officers of the public, and as such should attend to their duty, and not be at the beck and call of any or the other. He had made this statement because it was time that a stop should be put to the practices of which he complained.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Cuthbert (Hastings).

Hon. Mr. Jones (Halifax) said that he was not aware what had been the practice in the days of the old Parliament of Canada. In 1867, during the time of the late Government, when the member for Charlevoix had been Minister of Customs, and the Minister of Customs of that day had worked against himself and his colleagues, and caused Government officials to do the same by telegrams and letters which had been sent round.

Mr. White (Hastings)—Such practices were wrong in those days. Were they wrong now?

Mr. Jones said it was wrong; exceedingly so. Owing to the instructions which the men received in those days, many of them did not know what to do. Every man belonging to the Railway Department had been marched up in a body by the gibs to vote against himself and his colleagues. Such actions as that had caused a change to be made in the franchise in that province, which, he thought, should be made all over the country, relieving Government officials of the power of voting and placing them in a position of not being dictated to. He held that a public official was a servant of the majority—was a servant of the country of either party. In that spirit they had been discharged in Nova Scotia, and he was certain they were grateful for being placed in the position of independent position.

Sir John Macdonald denied that Mr. Tilley had sent any such instructions as had been spoken of by the member for Halifax.

Mr. Jones—Mr. Tilley admitted it.

Sir John Macdonald—He did not look into that matter. With reference to the railway officials, the member for Charlevoix would be in a position to speak. The reply which had been made to the charge was, he did cry of all sides, that the then present Government were accused of unparalleled audacity in doing what their predecessors had offended against every principle whether of right or of law. They had said in the past that when they obtained power all this would have to be done away with. The golden age was going to be brought in, and the country was going to enter upon an era of purity. After their advent there would be no more civil service improprieties, no principle would be tampered with—indeed, the country would be restored to the condition which it occupied before Adam and Eve fell. He thought the Minister of Militia had not condemned the acts of which the member for Charlevoix had complained, but he had congratulated the officials who were not accurately described as advocated by the former Opposition. He had praised time-honored principles but when charges had been made of offending against them, his simple reply had been, "You've another." Government opposite had asserted that the late Government had crammed every department of the public service with its friends. Was it to be supposed that it would cram them with its foes? The fact was that every Government, except that of England where the system of patronage was being done away with, was accustomed to make its appointments among its friends. Should the Government select its foes as the objects of its patronage? The Premier had said more than once that those who did not carry out, in office, the principles which they had formerly professed were demagogues. Where was the present Government now? Mr. Dorion, in introducing the ballot, said that one of the benefits which it would confer would be to allow civil servants to vote as they pleased. The late Government had also contended that civil servants should not be political agents. The heads of the various Departments under it had given to all their subordinates every opportunity to vote, but had sternly put down allowing them to become political agents. This was a queer style of argument was of no use, and if it was to be resorted to, those who availed themselves of it must tell name by name and person by person. The Postmaster of Hull, as had been stated, had been among others gone away electioneering.

Hon. Mr. Huntington—He would not be Postmaster long if he did.

Sir John Macdonald continued that in the present instance Mr. Speaker, who is supposed to belong to neither one party nor the other, he whose duty was to act in a judicial capacity, had given leave to a number of officers of the House to go away. No one who knew the great ability and perspicacity of the Speaker would, he was assured, fail to recognize that he must have been aware of what those persons wanted leave of absence for, when so many of them went away together.

(Cries of order.)

Sir John Macdonald continued that he was not out of order, but he should not be doing his duty did he not bring this matter up, and hold the Speaker to strict account to see that such were not allowed to go away, as the House had been informed. It had appeared that one man had been so ill that he had had to go and make a political speech, and on one account and another other clerks and messengers had gone away from their duties. This was intolerable, and if members did not resent it the country would do so.

Mr. Huntington said that the Right Hon. member for Kingston had indulged in this free criticism of the Speaker with a view of reaching the country. Where were the parties to whom such extended references had been made? I the member for Charlevoix was to be believed, they were fighting the battles of their friends in the local elections, over which this House and this Government had no authority and no jurisdiction. The Postmaster at Hull was only paid by fees, and it was absurd to say that he had no right to take part in a provincial election. The only complaint which had been made which was of any force, were it proved, was that the public business was suffering on account of the absence of these men. But they were only sessional clerks, and were only paid for what they did.

A member—There is no doubt that they have been paid.

Mr. Huntington—They are only to be paid for the duties which they fulfil, and all this lamentation was only made because the power of the Dominion Government had not been exercised in restraint of its officials in the Province of Quebec. If members of the Civil Service had the right to vote, surely they had the right to disseminate their views and ask their friends to cooperate with them. His opinion was that Civil Service should be entirely dissociated from politics, and should be relieved from the insolus of temporary political bonds. If the present state of things were to continue he ventured to say that when the Tory party came into power again the man who led it would initiate the American system. When had the Tories ever stooped to carry out their party ideas. The complaint which had been made to-day might be well or ill founded, but it connection with it the great question was, whether the business of the country was suffering, and, secondly, whether the House had a right to interfere with the local elect'n. So far as he believed there had been no such inconvenience as those which had been represented. Even, however, if there had, after long party struggles, it would, undoubtedly be strange if no individual instances existed in which there should not be individuals who had taken an improper part in election. He, however, emphatically denied that it was the practice of the Government to use the civil service of the country for political purposes.

Dr. Tupper replied in a powerful address.

Mr. Blake charged the Government with having allowed, indeed instructed, their officials to engage in party politics. He denied the efficiency of the ballot as a protection to Civil Service officials, urging that the only thing to do was to relieve the Civil Service entirely from political influence and to do away with the system of patronage. He did not think that this would, in any way, result in the depreciation of the public service, but trusted the House would arrive at the conclusion that it was improper for civil servants to interfere in elections. He would not deprive them of their votes, because they had been given to them, but he would not allow them to meddle further, which should be punished with their instant dismissal. He concluded by expressing his regret that, after the explanations which had been given by him yesterday, such reflections upon the Speaker had been made as had emanated from the member for Kingston.

Science and Theology.

The International Review, of which we have the advance sheets for this month, contains a notable article on the subject of "Science and Theology Ancient and Modern," by James Anthony Froude, the historian. He gives the idea in beginning that each generation believes in itself to a special importance. "If," says he, "we add to our personal experience the accounts which we hear from our fathers of the state of things which they remember in their own childhood the individual recollections of each of us extend back over nearly a century, and every century brings with it alterations of opinion and sentiment, which are deprecated or exhilarating according to the constitution of our minds, but are always assumed to force upon us a sense of the instability of all opinions and institutions and of the complicated influences which control the fortunes of our race. The English of Shakspeare or Swift were not essentially different from the English of to-day. The accidents of life alter rapidly.

Speaking of the time at the close of the war with France, Froude says:

"Opinions we had few, and those valued by us but as markets for our ornamental manufactures. Ships crawled to and fro the Atlantic, spending six weeks upon the voyage. As many months were consumed on a voyage to India or China. The landed aristocracy ruled in St. Stephen's, and we went in the length and breadth of the island. Stage coaches rolled sleepily along the unmacadamized high roads. The impatient traveller who was not afraid of fatigue might reach Edinburgh from London in two days and nights. The magnate who preferred his own carriage and his own horses was a fortnight on the way.

"Each neighborhood supplied its own necessities and its own amusements. The weaver made cloth at his solitary loom for the tailor to cut into clothes in the adjacent village. The old wife in the cottage spun her own yarn, and knitted her own and her husband's and children's stockings. The gentry confined their visits within a circle of few miles. Their daughters depended for their larger acquaintance on the balls and races in the country town. Schools were few in number, except for the well-to-do. The village boys and girls learned their catechism at the parish church, and were bound apprentices for the rest of their education. All the country over, for the expense and difficulty of movement, each family was rooted to its own soil, and the summer migrations of the squires and parsons were confined like that of the Vicar of Wakefield, to a change from the blue green to the brown.

"Under these conditions we, who are now turned middle age, began our existence. our hopes modest, our ambition limited to one or other of the three black graces; our horizon bounded, at furthest, by the limits of our own island, and our knowledge of the rest of the globe extending but to names upon maps, large portions of which remained blank, or to books of travels, which were not accurately distinguished from the voyages of Gulliver or Robinson Crusoe or Sinbad the Sailor.

"Our spiritual state was the counterpart of our material state. We learned what our fathers had learned before us—Greek and Latin, and arithmetic and geometry, Greek and Roman history, and, in some favored instances, a little English history, conveyed from an insular point of view. Modern languages we despised, and of modern European literature we knew nothing. Physical science was regarded rather as an amusement or dilettanteism than as an occupation for serious men. Of astronomy we were taught the general results. We knew, in words, that the earth was round; that it travelled round the sun as one of its planets, and that the solar system was, perhaps, but one of an infinite number of such systems. But the knowledge had not penetrated beyond our memories. For practical purposes we still believe that our own earth was the most important part of the universe, and man the central object for which all else had been made. Electricity was a toy, geology a paradoxical novelty. Critical history had not communced its massacre of illusions. Schoolboys were taught to believe in the Seven King's Rome. British antiquarians could insist modestly that Brute of Troy need not be a fable. Chemists still talked of the four elements. The keen piercing process by which traditionary teachings on all subjects that have since been brought to the bar to answer for themselves was still unheard of in any single department of human study.

"A condition so stationary, so controlled outwardly and inwardly by habit, corresponded to the stable character of the English nation. Below the outward life and the intellectual cultivation lay a foundation of morality based upon authority."

Speaking of this condition, Mr. Froude, in his clear, electric style, remarks that "children must be taught that a certain conduct is required of them; that there is a rule of duty to which they must conform."

Hereupon Mr. Froude gives a boyhood instance of the effect of general and accepted belief upon the actions of men, and he shows that, industrious and dogged as he was in his profession, and deeply instinct that he is, he is not without at least the dramatic appreciation of warm sentiment. He says:—

"I remember that when I was a little boy there was a family in the corner of the parish supposed to entertain eccentric opinions on these subjects. They were harmless and respectable, but they did not go to church, and currently were called atheists. We looked at them with vague terror. If we passed their door we hurried by as if the place were haunted. At last the old mother died. The husband asked that the body might be buried without being taken into the church. It would, I believe, have been illegal. At any rate the request was refused, and I recollect, when the matter was talked over, hearing it said that people who did not believe in God often believed in the devil, and that inside the church the devil had special power to take hold of an atheist. Some months after, one summer evening, I saw the husband stealing down to the church yard to visit his wife's grave. His look was gentle, sad, abstracted, full of human sorrow and human sensibility. I recollect a sense of startled pity for the poor old man, mixed with double wonder it was not impious to entertain such a feeling.

But Mr. Froude, in his exquisite English, finds that an end has come to the old style of affairs. He is speaking of a time when, if we may interpolate an incident, Thomas Jefferson thought that a vegetable called tomatoes, which he had found in France, might be raised as food for hogs.

"The old conditions of ideas are gone, says Mr. Froude, and we fancy that the same will be said of our time, says Froude:—

"Theologians no longer speak with authority. They are content to suggest and to deprecate hasty contradiction. Those who doubted before now openly deny. Those who believed on trust have passed into uncertainty. Those who uphold orthodoxy cannot agree on what ground to defend it. Through out Europe, throughout the world, the gravest subjects are freely discussed and opposite sides may be taken without blame from society. Doctrines once fixed as a rock are now fluid as water. Truth is what men trow. Things are what men think. For three centuries all the Protestant communities assumed as a first principle the infallibility of the Bible. They regarded the writers of the various books as the automatic instruments of the Holy Spirit, and implicitly people held in their entire consistency that if the Bible was a rule of faith where each person, learned or unlearned, could find the truth, the translators must be inspired also. Those positions were safe so long and so long only, as it was held useful to challenge them. If the original language of the Bible was miraculously communicated there was a natural presumption that it would be miraculously preserved. It had not been more miraculously preserved, and the claims of doubt extended backward on the inspiration.

"The origin of the different books was next inquired into, with their authorship and authority. At each step in uncertainty became deeper. The gospel history itself was found to be a labyrinth of perplexities. The divine sanction for accuracy and authenticity once abscured, the popular sense which had cleared the modern world of superstition and had driven the supernatural rite of secular history, began to ask on what ground the Bible miracles were to be believed if all other miracles were to be rejected. Geology forced itself forward and declared that the history of the creation in the Book of Genesis was irreconcilable with ascertained facts. Along the whole line the defending forces are falling back, not knowing where to make a stand, and materialistic science in Europe stands frankly out and is respectfully listened to when it affirms that the war is over, that the claims of revelation can not be maintained and that the existence of God and of a future state, the origin of man, the nature of conscience and the meaning of the distinctions between good and evil are all open questions. We are a law abiding race; the mass of us are little given to unpractical speculation. We are too earnest to tolerate impiety, and the traditions of religion will retain their hold with the millions long after they have lost their influence over the intellect. Of this we know is not omniscient. Emotion has a voice in the matter which is always on the side of faith, and women in such subjects are governed almost wholly by their feelings."

Mr. Froude is by no means unwilling to be generous toward the stupidity of the past. In this regard he is as untrammeled by ordinary partisanship as Macaulay. He is elastic and broad. He sees how stern the laws were under the old superstitions, but he shows that the old superstitions were once alive. He goes back to the Roman and Greek times for the illustration of the law's impetuousness. Still he tells us, stern as the law was—He law based on mythology—the foundation was untrue. Faith, he seems to believe, was only the basis or block of tradition. The world—that is society—has always, in his view, been trying to be uniform, and so people have to break away from accepted uniformity.

"Organization was governed by laws from within, not by intention. Direct, if from without, and nature being imperfect, and only striving after perfection, being progressive and not yet complete, the former gave rise to monstrosities and infirmities, and were subject to decay and change. Such a conception of nature was an earlier form of Spinozism. And human life all the while was real as it is now, brief, struggling, painful, the plaything of accident, a fitful flashing out of the darkness, and again disappearing into it, even as none knew whence, going none knew whither; yet while it lasted, full of passions and its affections, its crimes and its virtues, its high aspirations, its brave degradations, its self-sacrifices and its horrors, the wild tumult of joy and agonies of sorrow, the same in the heart of the beggar in the corner of it, and speculations about plastic nature would not be likely to satisfy him when he demanded the meaning of it.

"The Romans take war and crime to cause. The spiritual misery of man has been self caused by fantastic imaginations, by grovelling fears, by dread of supernatural powers, whose caprice persecuted them in this world, and whose vindictive malice threatened to make them wretched in the next. Religion had been the curse of the world, and though fools might still torture themselves with a belief in its ill glory we pleased, Lucretius, speaking the very inmost conviction of the imperial Roman mind, informed them that religion was a pharaonic begotten of fear and ignorance. The universe, of which man was a part, was a system of things which had been generated by natural laws. Gods there might be, and where in space, created by nature also, but such gods who troubled themselves about men. All things proceeded from eternity in one unchangeable sequence of cause and effect, and man had but to understand nature and follow her directions, to create his own prosperity and his own happiness, undisturbed by fear of supernatural disturbance. If the sufferings and punishments of this world were distributed by a superintending providence, it was a providence which showed no regard for moral worth or worthlessness. The good were often miserable, the wicked flourished, and a power so careless of justice, even if it existed, did not deserve to be reverenced. But it existed only in the brain of man. Evils, or what were called evils, were a necessary part of an imperfect existence. As the legions struck down the nationalities of Asia and Europe, the intellect of Lucretius declared the overthrow of their superstitions and proclaimed the sovereignty of science.

"Unlike the Greek mythology, the system of Lucretius was not a thing of imagination. Splendidly as his genius illustrated the details of the Epicurean philosophy, the system itself was based on observation of facts astonishingly accurate, if we consider the age at which he lived; and his inferences were drawn in the strictest scientific method. Within the proper limits of physical science he anticipated many of the generalizations of the best modern scientific thinkers. His moral and spiritual conclusions are almost exactly the same as theirs. Spiritual philosophy grows out of general principles, and whether these principles be derived from a wide or limited induction, whether the facts appealed to be completely known, or only imperfectly, when once the principles are assumed the same deductions will follow.

"The readers of Darwin will miss the theory of the modification of species, which it was impossible for Lucretius to have guessed, but they will find nowhere the modern doctrine of the survival of the fittest stated more clearly and carefully. Those who deny more earnestly that any elemental power of spontaneous generation can be traced in operation at present are less confident that it may not have existed under earlier conditions of this planet, or may not exist at present in other planets. The theory of Lucretius is not in the least more extravagant than the suggestion of Sir Wm. Thompson that the first living germ was introduced by an aerolite."

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Middleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

"Thank you, but I have no special desire either for my property or services," I replied Miss Castillain, challengingly; "and what you may deem insulting or kindness I am not to be the judge of. I am too much of a lady—whatever you may think—in matters that do not concern me, to be prying into private matters of any Athelston."

"And of any Athelston's," said Marjorie, with a gentleman's manner, faltered Marjorie, afraid of injuring her cause by anger. "Forgive me, Cecilia," "If Eustace Jeffry doesn't think it interferes you need not, need you, Lonisa," I should think I need not," I retorted, "and I refuse you to do so. I am in her eager to be rid of the girl, forgetting in her eagerness to get rid of her that every sixty per guinea on any point. "And you could do it as well as I, Marjorie, why? I ask you a favor so seldom, and I want you this so urgently. Will you—if Eustace Jeffry has the letter—write it for me?"

"On the contrary," replied Lenisa, gazing with stony unconcern into her sister's face, "if you do I shall consider you interfere at all in this affair, I shall do it just so far as to take special care that Lady Athelston's letter is posted to-morrow, without fail," and pasted in a way which it will be matter hard to circumvent. But I think, she added, watching with a keen enjoyment the wry mortal sight of her sister's patient forbearance, "I think, my dear, that you have no real cause to excite or to distress yourself over such a trifle, as I am perfectly confident that the letter will be delivered promptly and safely, if it were left in Eustace Jeffry's care. Do you not think so, you?"

Marjorie, wondering vaguely, as she listened to this last speech, how her Lonisa's self-control could go, but hardly knowing even that she thought of it, pleading again with one last, brave struggle.

"Lonie, you may be glad afterward if you promise me. You never can be glad that you refused. Do promise me! I will do any thing for you, and I will never say a word of this."

"Thank you, that is indeed kind," retorted Miss Castillain, with vicious enavity. "I should rather very much prefer if I were accustomed to do things about which I could fear your 'saying a word.' No, I have not yet fallen quite so low as that, whatever my sister may have done. Are you going to bed at all to-night, or are you going to lean there leering at me till morning?"

"Good, if strike you," asked Marjorie, a great, cold change coming over all her face, "and Mrs. Athelston would hardly relish the fact of Mrs. Eslabler's tutor posting his mother's letters, when the post-bag go from here at that I may choose to tell him of it?"

"It is not very likely that you will," laughed Miss Castillain, in her thorough cruel confidence, "at least if you do not really care what becomes of that spoony girl. That would, of course, at once prove to Neil that she was so impudent, and he would soon turn her away then."

"Would he?" echoed Marjorie, ironically, but knowing, even better than her sister did, how little wisdom there would be in that plan she had hinted at. "I don't know whether he wouldn't turn you away first. Go to sleep, Lonisa, and consolatory dreams no doubt await you; they always wait on innocence and purity and love. I dare say there are several now at hand tending the couch of that reasonable angel, Eustace. Oh, what a beautiful respite you and he will make—in a photograph! In real life," added the girl, musingly, as she twisted up her long brown hair, "I don't know but what I should be all the happier at a good scene than at endless days such a pair. I think I should be the gainer in purity of atmosphere."

"Don't you think," put in Lonisa, with a calm enjoyment of the spite her speech contained, "that you are a little bit idiotic to make this fuss about one of Lady Athelston's dependents until you are mistress of Lady Athelston's house. And don't you think, too, that your chance of becoming Lady Athelston yourself is rather slight while that low-bred girl stays here? It is plain to me that she could have that foolish Neil to any thing. I advise you to have a grain or two of common sense in this matter, if you really have any to choose it, as your elder sister, advise you not to stand quite so thoroughly in your own light."

"And I advise you," cried Marjorie, in a voice of intense passion, while the big brown eyes flashed with anger under the hands which were still in her hair, "to remember that you are not speaking to such a one as your own contemptible, false-hearted self. And I advise you to remember that Neil Athelston is no fool; if he had been he would have been lured, as you might propose to you years ago, when you used every art you possess to tempt him. And I advise you to think, before you call Miss Chester low-bred, that she may rank miles above you presently—I hope she will. I am sure that her high birth has been as good as yours; and I know, and every body can see, that her words and acts are better than yours, even at your best. And as for her beauty, that is as far above yours as Monday—"

Poor Marjorie faltered and failed lamely over her simile, for the cruel sarcasm on some trifiable burst of passion had exhausted itself, and she felt the hot tears crowding to her eyes, as they always would after one of those rare, real outbreaks with her sister; real, because the very girl's heart was tempest-tossed with a fierce, shamed misery now, despite, as long as she had strength to curb the anger and hate that had lurked within her, Marjorie avoided any retaliation upon her sister beyond the honest, but rebuff, which was over in a few seconds, and left her comfortable and content.

So much stronger and higher in heart and mind was the younger sister, that—as was but seldom she felt crushed, as she did now, by the malicious words and spiteful hints. Besides this, she was baffled and disappointed, too, of her desire, and knew she should have no comfort to-night or to-morrow, where she felt that comfort was already needed; for it was not wonderful that her hot, vehement speech was in the end the sending tears would have about their way.

"Get into bed, Marjorie," she remarked, with admirable patronage, "and don't be so, in a rage, dear."

Marjorie did not retaliate then, though her eye, flashed proudly on Lonisa. She extinguished the lights, and drawing the heavy curtains, left them a narrow, open window which had no shutters, looked out across the park, where she could but dimly descry the outlines of the trees and be gigantic hills as, we said beyond. And, fanning her, she stood wild and wearied many things, though now for a moment, at her brave and simple confidence, did she doubt the truth and purity of the girl she was befriending.

"There is one of I can make," she said to herself at last. "If that does not succeed, I—I suppose I must appeal to him. What a horrible lowering of my pride that will be! Yet I don't know," she mused, with a gleam of real bright—almost the old merriment—in her eyes, "something tells me so but sin, so it nurses tell us, and sometimes—not by the truth, as Solomon did. I hope this true, for he loves a—a—a—that I may choose to tell him of it."

"Bluffield belongs to him."

The late Michael Faraday was one of the most genial of mankind, short in stature and rotund of waistband, and in his lectures on chemistry at the Royal Institution he was first rate and also as a manipulator in experiment—most dapper was he with his fingers. No gaseous explosion took place during the lectures. His touch clearly was able, and he was intended Jean ironmonger. He was a born electrogenus. Tyndall succeeded him.

The late Sir William Sterling Maxwell Bart., was one of the best Dad-sticklers England possessed. He walked with head erect, looked a thorough aristocrat, and was the owner of $30,000 a year. He always dressed fantastically, and that added a white ing hat all the year round. He was well known to smile after his wife and daughter married the Hon. Mrs. Norton. She died soon after, and he followed.

John Everett Millais won't paint a portrait under two thousand guineas, and then it's a favor. He likes paying for paint in an extraordinary way—you must gaze on his countenance a-far—half an inch on the tip of a city magazine's nose is the best point of aspect. He does not treat his landscapes in that queer fashion. He married Mr. Ruskin soon after the separation; she is now Lady Millais, and the mother of lovely Millais's cigars are noted. He is bald.

General the Earl of Lucan is both aged and handsome. He was formerly colonel of the Royal Horse Guards, and on gala occasions the Queen looks for him if he is not every minute to emerge from his private and mount his charger, a crowd congregates, and when he comes on every servant girl cries and butcher boy cry, "Ain't he lovely." "Oh, boy, what a swell!" Lord Lucan was once "Gold Stick" at court, but being a Catholic, Queen Victoria has him removed from that exalted position. He and his son, Lord Bingham, both did service in the Crimea. Lucan verges on the eighties.

Dr. Rimbault Dean of that venerable pile, Westminster Abbey, has a stipend of $20,000. Every bishopric in the United Kingdom has been offered him, but he has politely declined them all. He roams about his house in the night there may be something of the game, and he is overthrow from time to time, digging up a bone, or a dead body, with a view to sowing whether they will grow. He is a "new" man. Prelate of the Order of the Garter by virtue of his office, he has a right to wear spells well presumably, if you can read his writing, as Her Royal Church—If disengaged, it composes Latin epitaphs for future tombs which the future generation of country gentlemen will fail to decipher.

Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg some ten years landed in England a fervent Highness, armed with a carpet-bag, and in his pocket a shocking purse containing "direi hundert silver groschen." His highness when already he came with an object, and married the Princess Helena, Queen Victoria's third daughter, though many years previously he had been morganatically married. Christian was made a Royal Highness by patent, a Knight of the Garter, Ranger of Windsor Park, and Colonel of the Grenadier Guards, all of which mean pay. He loves the shores of Albion, and fails to visit Holstein. He is bald. Age doubtful.

The Free Press.

Monday, April 29, 1878.

The circulation of the DAILY FREE PRESS is larger than that of any other Ontario journal in the West, and more than that of the combined issues of its local contemporaries—any statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

FREE PRESS Office, Sept. 11, 1877.

CARONBROOK.—The name of the above village has been changed to Dublin. It is shortly to be incorporated.

RECOVERING.—The Ursuline ladies who were hurt in Chatham by the late runaway accident are fast recovering. Sister De Sales' shoulder, it turns out, was not dislocated, as at first reported.

LAGER BEER has been all the rage in the city for some days past, induced by that article now so excellently made in this city. Carling & Co. advertise the sale of it in bottles, for use in families and elsewhere.

"LAILA."—This pretty operetta was produced at the Mechanics' Hall, on Saturday evening, by Mrs. M. A. White and her class of 80 children. The representation was, as on former occasions, exceedingly well rendered.

PERSONAL.—Dr. Morden, the Homœopathic Examiner of the Medical Council, left for Toronto on Sunday morning to take part in the medical examinations. We learn there are over 200 students coming up.

FRACTURED HIS THIGH.—Geo. Patricks, aged 5 years, residing with his parents in London Township, fell from a stake on a pole, last Thursday, and broke his thigh bone. Dr. Macdonald, of Ilderton, set the limb, and the little sufferer is doing as well as could be expected.

POCKET PICKED.—While Mrs. H. C. Green was marketing Saturday forenoon, some sneak thief picked her pocket, and abstracted her purse, which contained $30, or thereabouts. The sneak thieves and burglars appear to have an idea that they can by such means as this impoverish the family, but they can't.

THEFT FROM THE G. W. R. CO.—At the Wentworth Assizes, in Hamilton, William Lee and Wm. Hamilton, were charged with having stolen two buffalo robes, two undershirts, two dozen table knives, the property of the Great Western Railway. Prisoners were found guilty, sentence being reserved.

FAREWELL SERMON.—Yesterday Rev. S. Card, of the M. E. Church, Strathroy, preached his farewell sermon to a large audience. He has been appointed to Ingersoll, for which place he leaves in a day or two. Rev. J. Van Wyck is the newly-appointed pastor at Strathroy, and Rev. D. Lumsbury, Presiding Elder of the London District, will also live in that town.

TALL FALL WHEAT.—Mr. Merry Smith, of lot 9, 3rd con. of Lobo, left at the FREE PRESS office Saturday forenoon a very fine sample of Michigan Amber Wheat. He has about eight acres, all of which has the appearance of a good crop. The sample left measures 25 inches in height, strong and of a fine dark green color. In fact, it appears to have all the qualities necessary to the production of an abundant crop.

SAD ACCIDENT.—A deplorable accident occurred to a young son of Mr. James Garland, Victoria street, the other day. He was playing near his father's residence, when a man ploughing on Mr. Furnie's 1st lear-lg asked him to drive away a horse belonging to the latter. The boy was doing so, when the animal kicked him over the left eye, causing a severe cash. Dr. Moore, jr., is attending the lad's injuries, and he is recovering although not yet out of danger.

DISORDERLY HOUSE BROKEN UP.—Between twelve and one o'clock, yesterday morning, Sergeant Crawford and a posse of police visited the house on South street between Wellington and Clarence, tenanted by Nellie Goldsmith, and reported to be conducted on anything but correct principles. Nellie was arrested, as were also an inmate named Annie Gordon, and a fourteen young man who gave the name of Henry Wilson. The trio will face the Magistrate this morning.

SHORT HORN PURCHASES.—Messrs. A. & A. Stewart, of Lobo, have recently purchased four females from the herds of Messrs. J. S. Armstrong, of Ernanosa; Hugh Thompson, St. Mary's; Purvis Thompson, Whitby; and Burrell & Johnstone, of Pickering; also bred directly from imported stock from the herds of Cruickshanks, Marr, Campbell and Corry, of Scotland. They also purchased two bulls—one a pure Bates, bred by Mr. H. Gibson, of London; got by the 22nd Duke of Ardrie and from a Darlington cow; the other an Orange Blossom bull, bred by Hugh Thompson, of Mary's, from imported stock. With those additions to their herd, Messrs. Stewart should be able to supply the community with first-class young stock.

THAT WANDERING ECCLESIASTIC.—The perambulating "priest," which the Bishop of the R. C. Diocese of London had occasion to reprobate the other day, has come to grief at Chatham, where he was brought before Mr. McCrae, Police Magistrate. His Honor (reports the Planet) said prisoner had been arrested on a charge of vagrancy, and asked him to give an account of himself. He gave his name as Steinlin, and he claimed to be a persecuted German priest, fleeing to the land of the free, and had applied to the authorities for an emigrant's pass to Detroit. He had been rambling about town since Wednesday, begging and annoying people with some trifles he wished to dispose of. When arrested he had $25 in gold coin in his pocket. The P. M. sent him up for three months.

OBITUARY.—The many friends of Mr. A. T. Chapman in this city and Western Ontario will hear with deep regret (although not altogether unexpected) of his death, which occurred at his residence, Dundas street east, between eight and nine o'clock last night. Mr. Chapman had been ill for over two years, and at times his condition created serious apprehension amongst his friends as to his ultimate recovery. A visit to the Pacific coast was made about a year ago for the benefit of his health, but soon after he returned a relapse occurred, and a few months since he resolved upon visiting the South, thinking that a more salubrious climate would assist in restoring his health. But he had not been many weeks there when he suffered another relapse, and had to be brought home, since which time he has lingered on the verge of dissolution, until death ensued last night. Deceased was for many years an active business man, and, as one of the partners in the hardware firm of Smith, Chapman & Co., was widely known and very highly respected. Socially, he was a general favorite. His geniality and kindly disposition towards all with whom he came in contact, endeared him to a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who will hear of his death with feelings of deep and unfeigned regret.

A DOMESTIC DIFFICULTY AND ITS SEQUEL.—On Saturday forenoon last, two young men named Patrick and Richard Stocks, who live near the Ivy Green Hotel, in Westminster, quarrelled with their mother, and during the squabble, as we are informed, Patrick struck his mother. The old woman went out to the road, and in the hearing of more than one person, accused her son of having Mrs. Scarrowhawk's gold watch and chain, which the same had been stolen for over a year. The mother was brought into the house, and again assaulted by one of the sons for saying what she had regarding the watch and chain, and once more the old woman got away from the house, and this time went over to Mr. Sparrowhawk's and informed him that Pat. had stolen his wife's watch and chain about a year previous, and that he had it in his possession. Mr. S came into the city shortly afterwards and reported the matter to the detectives, who, with a warrant, went in search of the young men. They found them in the evening, and brought them to the Central Station, where they were remanded to prison to await examination. Patrick says that he bought the watch and chain for $9 from his brother, who in turn says he found them about a year ago in Mr. Sparrowhawk's driving shed. Both, however, refused to divulge the whereabouts of the watch and chain, but offered to tell us how the affair was settled.

And now it is charged that postal cards are too flashy. We presume the misery will continue to grumble in the hope of getting prices reduced so they can procure two for a cent. For our part, we think postal cards are worth all they cost, but we do protest against their scandalous perversion by mercenary tailors and washerwomen.

When men spend their best efforts in mastering technicalities so that they may express the nice gradations of form and the delicate qualities of color, women are carried away by the beauty they perceive quite as fully, and unlike angels that they are, they rush into strong colors and brilliant effects, attacking difficulties that we fools of men would fear to attempt.

A FIRST-CLASS ENTERTAINMENT is promised the theatre goers of London this evening at the Halman Opera House, the occasion being the first appearance in this city of Miss Genevieve Rogers, one of the leading stars of the dramatic profession, in her creation of "Maud Muller," from the beautiful poem of that name. Londoners have been favored during the past winter with a visit from several first-class actors and actresses, and in every case the audiences have been large and appreciative. We feel certain that Miss Rogers, supported by Mr. Albon's fine stock company, will win the admiration of her audience, and trust a large crowd may be present to greet her initial representation. If any further guarantee is required of her excellence, the following from the Boston Journal of a recent date should prove conclusive:—"Eighty Boston's play of "Maud Muller" was presented in this city for the first time at the Museum last evening. Miss Genevieve Rogers appearing in the title rôle. There was a full house, and the piece and the lady, who made her first appearance here, were both received with unmistakable evidence of warm approbation. The principal figure in the young piece is of course the fair Maud. Miss Rogers has a bright young face, fine eyes, and when she smiles her countenance is fairly beautiful. She was repeatedly called before the curtain, and both the lady and the play are likely to become great favorites. There is seldom a more enjoyable piece presented. The support, as might be supposed, was excellent."

A LAMENTABLE SUICIDE.

Sad End of a London East Man.

Found in the Tasmes with His Throat Cut.

On the 19th inst. the mysterious disappearance of James Newton, shoemaker, London East, was chronicled by this journal, and the statement made that it was feared he had committed suicide. The surmise has turned out to be too true, as a body which was found in the Thames, at Delaware, on Saturday afternoon, has been identified as that of Newton. It is supposed deceased had committed suicide by cutting his throat, and then, to make the terrible deed doubly sure in its effects, had thrown himself in the river. In the pockets of deceased were found a silver hunting-cased watch, fifty cents in cash, and a store account, headed "Mrs. Newton, Dr. to R. M. Chester, London East," which articles led to the identification of the corpse, through Constable Fitzallen telegraphing to Chief of Police Williams, of this city. An inquest was held on the body on Saturday night, and yesterday (Sunday) morning, the daughter of deceased went out and identified it. As to the cause which led to the commission of the act, it arose from domestic disagreement. Six years ago Newton came to this country from England, and settled down in London East, near Stansfield's Hotel, where he bought a small property. Latterly his wife (whom he had left in the Old Country), joined him with his family. She never liked to stay here, was habituated to liquor, and, as a matter of course, the life of deceased was not a pleasant one. To crown his misfortunes, Mrs. Newton suddenly left her husband, about two weeks ago, carrying with her all the ready cash she could lay her hands on. This seems to have affected the injured husband mentally, resulting in his resolution to take his life. As he had expressed his intention to "do away with himself," and at his disappearance had carried off one of his shoemaker's knives, it was all along suspected he had committed suicide. Deceased was a quiet, inoffensive hard-working man, and had for a considerable time been in the employment of Mr. Connors, Market Square.

A Token of Esteem.

Miss Rye's Thanks to Chief of Police Williams.

It will be remembered that during the preliminary examination into the charge against J. H. Hargrave, the perpetrator of the diabolical outrage on the Human Hair Factory, in this city, Chief Constable Williams took a very active interest in prosecuting and conducting the case against the accused at the Police Court. The numbers of witnesses who attended the investigation from day to day, do not require to be informed of the able manner in which Mr. Williams handled the witnesses throughout in the absence of the Crown Prosecutor. His course was the subject of commendation from all classes, and it was quite natural, therefore, that Miss Rye, fearing of the Chief's kindness, and the deep interest he took in bringing the offender to punishment, has forwarded the following note, which came to hand in token of her gratification to Mr. Williams, to whom it was addressed.

Home for Little Waifs, Western Home, Niagara, April 25th, 1878.

"DEAR SIR,—I hope you have received from St. Catharines a small box containing a small box containing two minister (napkin rings) which I have sent to you as a token of my gratefulness for the manner in which you took up and, in the absence of the Crown Prosecutor, the prosecution in the case of the girl Annie Sparks. It is impossible for me to follow each child, especially as they merge into girlhood, and, as in the present case, the child is not one of my own, I am the more grateful to those who assist me in the way of getting their bread respected. You will indeed still oblige by letting me know, and gratefully to find kind hearts and will further relieve us on each occasion and protect my lonely children all over Canada. If I am correctly informed, you have seen service in London East, in which case few more in the Province can be better acquainted with the character of the people. I hope soon, by that knowledge you may consume my time in the interest for the young in this locality, for which you dealt with and broke up that cruel case, and remain, yours truly, Rye." I have accordingly for not having written you on this matter before, but I have been very busily engaged. I am, yours faithfully, dear sir, MARIA S. RYE.

The napkin rings are to be presented in a day or two for the handsome answer.

PETERSVILLE COUNCIL.

The meeting then adjourned until May 27th, 1878, at half past seven, when the Court of Revision will be held.

Police Court Pencillings.

Saturday—L. Lawrason, Esq., P. M., Presiding.

His Worship gave judgment in the case of non-payment of market fees, Magee vs. Grand, this morning, ordering the latter to pay a fine of $1 and $2.85 costs.

Thomas Ansley, said to be one of the notorious Melbourne gang, was up for using abusive and threatening language to Detective Phair on Friday afternoon. It appears Phair arrested him and his companion some years since for an offence, and that Ansley has held a grudge against him ever since. He was fined $10 and $3.10 costs, and gave bonds to keep the peace for one year. The money was paid.

James Oliver, from Komoka, was charged by Detective Phair with being drunk and with having a revolver in his possession. He was fined $5 or twenty-one days, and the revolver was impounded.

Wm. Fleming, from Petersville, was charged with being drunk at an early hour this morning. He was found by Constable Boyd walking around the streets as if he had lost his way. Fined $1.

Christopher Graham, of London Township, was fined $1 for being drunk.

LONDON EAST.

Saturday afternoon.

A correspondent writes:—After the adjournment of the School Board the members began to discuss the market question at a lively rate. Mr. Ridley moved, seconded by Mr. Dewow, that we are of an opinion the plot of land offered by Messrs. Bullock & Inkster would best serve the general public interest of the village. The motion was carried unanimously.

APPOINTMENT.—We are pleased to notice the appointment of Mr. Thos. Churcher to the Agency of the Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co., of New York, for the County of Middlesex, and congratulate the Co. on their selection. No doubt Mr. Churcher's energy and popularity will go far towards the Co.'s attaining the same enviable position here that it has in other parts of Canada. In another column will be seen Mr. Churcher's advertisement.

...Some unflattering remarks were made respecting Birmingham, England, by Lord Justice Brazewell when charging the Grand Jury at Warwick assizes the other day. "There was," he said, "one peculiarity about Birmingham he had never met with in other equally large and populous towns, even where there were numerous foreigners. This was that between 8 and 11 o'clock at night, not in solitary places, but in public streets of Birmingham, men were set upon, not merely by an assailant, but by gangs of three or four, and openly robbed and beaten. It appeared to be a Birmingham peculiarity, and was certainly remarkable."

...Leo XIII. has given orders to have the large quantities of tapestry which now lie had in drawers and cupboards in the Vatican rummaged out, and hung in chronological order along the galleries, where they can be seen. There will be many interesting pieces among them, including a quantity of Gobelins, as the French Court for a long time made a present of a piece every year to the reigning Pontiff; pieces of the Flemish schools of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and several of those designed by Raphael, which were saved in the sack of Rome. It would be a good thing if the Italian Government or Court would follow the Papal example, for hidden away in cellars and back rooms of the Pitti Palace, at Florence, there are known to be pieces of old damasks and brocades fallen to pieces for want of looking after and belonging to the light. They cannot be sold —though many artists and others would gladly buy them—without superior orders, and it is said that the only purpose they serve is to be torn up when dusters are required and nothing else is handy.

BUSINESS NOTICES

KING OF ALL.—The Singer Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of the Genuine New York Singer Sewing Machine, are about to bring out a machine to rule by its merit, as they have now over 2,500,000 machines in use, and sales increasing every year, as proved by sales of 1877, when there were sold 282,812 machines, being 20,496 more than in any previous year. None genuine without trade mark on arm of machine. This world-renowned machine can be seen at their office and sales-room, Oddfellows hall, 272 Dundas street, London East.

For any of the leading Canadian and American sewing machines, go to Stewart's, who is in the way of getting their bread respected. He will interest still longer to those who want to know, and gradeful to find kind hearts and will further relieve us on each occasion and protect my lonely children all over Canada. If I am correctly informed, you have seen service in London East, in which case few more in the Province can be better acquainted with the character of the people. I hope soon, by that knowledge you may consume my time in the interest for the young in this locality, for which you dealt with and broke up that cruel case, and remain, yours truly, Rye." I have accordingly for not having written you on this matter before, but I have been very busily engaged. I am, yours faithfully, dear sir, MARIA S. RYE.

The napkin rings are to be presented in a day or two for the handsome answer.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

Semi-Official Indices of Schouvaloff's Programme.

Russia Disposed to Meet England's Views.

Yet Declines to Wipe Out the San Stefano Treaty.

Assurances that Constantinople Shall not be Surprised.

The Communication to be Laid Before the Cabinet To-day.

GENERAL FACTS AND RUMORS.

By Cable Telegraph to the Free Press.

London, May 23.—A St. Petersburg correspondent says, as wars still far from the certainty of peace, though the general conviction in favor thereof is powerful, military preparations are being pushed forward energetically. Even if war is avoided it is thought these will be made useful as a make weight for Russian influence at the Congress.

A Vienna correspondent telegraphs that the result of Schouvaloff's efforts will probably turn out to be that he has secured a basis for further negotiations. Meantime the preparations before Constantinople by both Russians and Turks continue energetically. The Russians at Erzeroum have received a reinforcement of 10,000 men. Futrel fever is ravaging the garrison.

The insurrection in Lazistan against the Russians is spreading. It is estimated that between 10,000 and 15,000 Lazis are prosecuting a guerrilla warfare against the Russians about Artvin and Batoum.

London, May 23.—The supplementary army estimate for the expenses of the Indian expeditionary force is $1,750,000; navy estimate for transportation of Indian troops is $1,990,000.

London, May 23.—Schouvaloff had an interview with Lord Beaconsfield to-day.

London, May 23.—Gladstone was waited upon by a deputation of his constituents, to-day, requesting him to urge upon the European conference for settling the differences between Russia and England. Matters were now more peaceful.

Constantinople, May 23.—The Russians have again advanced the entire line slightly without, however, violating the neutral zone. Immense quantities of war material continue to reach the Russian camp.

A Pera correspondent says the Russians continue to levy recruits throughout Thrace. The Greeks, who are enrolled as Bulgarians, are desperate at the ignoring of their nationality.

Constantinople is tranquil. The monetary excitement caused by Count Ignatieff's insane proceeding of Monday has disappeared, and apprehensions of a Russian coup de main being soothed by the arrangements now under negotiation for the definite line of demarcation between the two camps.

A Vienna correspondent says Count Andrassy and his colleagues have gradually come round to England's views about the occupation with the Congress still unsettled as well as on many other points. Germany is distrusted. Bismarck's blunders in the past were once unsuspicion, now frequently tenders advice unheeded.

A Pera correspondent says the Embassies here are hopeful of peace. It is believed the party of conciliation is gaining the supreme control in the Divan. Russia already.

London, May 23.—The Times says it becomes every day a matter of more and more imperative necessity for Russia to obtain the recognition of other Powers of some modified arrangement, under which she will be relieved from what is practically a state of war. This can only be done by a full discussion of the San Stefano treaty in an European Congress. Russia already knows the simple condition on which alone England can enter such a Congress. They may be modified possibly in form, but in substance it must be cancelled.

Belgrade, May 23.—The Servian army is on a complete war footing. All the available troops have been sent to the Bosnian frontier and Old Servia.

Vienna, May 23.—The Political Correspondence says Russia has formally declared that a large pecuniary subsidy is on the road to Belgrade. The Servian Government has consequently given large orders to contractors for military supplies.

St. Petersburg, May 23.—The Shah of Persia arrived to-day, and drove by the side of the Czar in an open carriage to the winter palace. The Shah remains until Wednesday.

London, May 23.—Schouvaloff attended the state ball at Buckingham Palace last night. It is hinted that the prospect of peace and Congress is most sketchiest.

A dispatch from Constantinople says the Mohammedans in Lazistan are spreading in favor of a holy war. A committee is forming in Constantinople for the purpose of supplying the Turks with arms and for courage resistance to the surrender of Batoum.

It is authoritatively stated that Schouvaloff brings counter proposals from the Czar, founded in conciliatory terms, proposing that all questions pertaining to Europe shall be submitted to and treated by the proposed congress, and all questions relating to Turkey in Asia to be made the subject of a separate convention between England and Russia alone.

St. Petersburg, May 23.—Gortschakoff is somewhat better, but the swelling and weakness continue.

The Agence Russe advises caution in accepting news from foreign journals and telegrams concerning Schouvaloff's mission, and says the period of suspense is only a question of a few days.

London, May 23.—A Committee of the Trades Union Congress has unanimously resolved that the Lancashire operatives refuse to accept the sympathy and support of the working classes.

London, May 24, 6 a. m.—The Post says, semi-officially, that Count Schouvaloff brings assurance that the disposition in St. Petersburg for peace quite equals that in London. He is also the bearer of certain expressions of a willingness to meet our views, and of a general scheme of arrangement for reconciliation. Russia, however, declines to pass from over the Treaty of San Stefano, but is prepared to discuss in a congress its various stipulations. The Count brings assurances that Gen. Todleben has been forbidden to make any attempt to surprise Constantinople, and also that the Russian Government is not connected with the manifesto recently issued by the Committee for equipping cruisers.

The Post announces that the Duke of Cambridge will shortly go to Malta to review the Indian contingent.

The Post continues:—If Russia has authorized the expenditure of 4,000,000 roubles to equip cruisers on the other side of the Atlantic, that must be taken as an equivalent against our summons of the Indian troops. The next few days will probably witness the inception of pourparlers which may ultimately lead to a basis for more definite negotiations.

The Standard says the sanguine expectations entertained of late are, according to present appearances, fairly justified. Unless very untoward accidents intervene the Congress will meet, and it will be found that the elements of an agreement have been reached. The Czar has made many concessions. Schouvaloff's communications will be laid before the Cabinet on Friday.

Germany and China.

Bombay, May 23.—The Courier states that the suspension of diplomatic relations between Germany and China is imminent.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

Hartington's Motion Rejected by 121 Majority.

Government's Amendment Carried Without a Division.

London, May 23.—In the House of Commons to-night, the debate on the raising of troops was continued until a late hour.

Mr. Cross and Sir Stafford Northcote spoke on behalf of the Government. The former spoke in a hopeful tone, and dwelt upon the necessity of secrecy at the present important juncture.

Mr. Roebuck violently attached the Opposition's factious conduct.

Hartington's resolution was rejected by 347 to 226.

The amendment of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, stating that Hartington's resolution was inexpedient, was adopted without division.

THE GERMAN PARLIAMENT.

Debate on the Anti-Socialist Bill.

Berlin, May 23.—The Parliament to-day began a debate on the first reading of the Anti-Socialist Bill. The Conservatives and Imperialists spoke for, and the Ultramontanes, Progressists and Herr Bamigen, in behalf of the National Liberals, spoke against the bill.

Herr Bennigsen said that instead of introducing new legislation they should apply the existing laws more stringently. If found deficient, we will be willing next autumn to assist in remedying the evil.

Count Von Eulenburg, Minister of the Interior, declared that the Bill was urgently necessary for the welfare of the State. The Government finds it necessary to impose silence on the Socialists, and to pursue its labors in peace. After what Herr Bennigsen said, people must not complain if the utmost stringency is practiced in executing existing laws.

The debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

The determination of the National Liberals, Advanced Liberals and Ultramontanes to oppose the Anti-Socialists' Bill seals the fate of the measure.

SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY.

James Anthony Froude's Views on the Subject.

The Clergy Accused of Unbelief—The Religion Mr. Froud Sees in the Future.

London, May 21.—James Anthony Froud has transmitted his second paper on "Science and Theology" to the International Review, of New York, stating in substance that the modern nations of Europe, like the Greeks and Romans, founded their original policy on religion; but that the will of God has no longer a place, even by courtesy, in the statutes that respect the people fight against the unwelcome truths in regard to Christianity thrust upon them; the clergy pray for deliverance from evils which they know depend upon natural causes, and the Bishops themselves do not actually believe what they profess.

A NEW RELIGION COMING.

Mr. Froude asserts, however, that the message of science is not the last nor the highest, and that the time will come when the illusions which have served to build up religion shall have passed away; that a society without God in its heart cannot exist, and that when a new religion has established itself which men can act upon and fully believe in, it should never be stirred by the extravagant pretensions of its founders and propagators.

Mr. Bennett hopes the expedition will sail for the north in June, 1879. It will go by the route through Behring's Straits.

The Vatican, however, entertains little hopes that the proposal will be accepted.

Gilmore's Band in London.

Concert at Crystal Palace Attended by 50,000 People.

London, May 23.—The morning papers, in cordial notices, predict that Gilmore's orchestra will take a prominent and distinguished part in the musical programme of the Paris Exposition. Over 50,000 people assembled at the Crystal Palace yesterday, attracted by a grand military, choral and ballad concert that had been arranged in Mr. Gilmore's honor. There were 300 instrumentalists and 300 vocalists on the seats of the Handel orchestra, on the great transept. The chorus concert opened with a march, after which Oliver Wendell Holmes' "Hymn of Peace" was sung by 3,000 voices. Gilmore then mounted the rostrum to lead his band, and received an exceedingly warm greeting. The great glass structure rang with hurrahs and shouts of welcome. In response to the applause, the band played "God Save the Queen." All through the concert there was the same enthusiastic greeting. At the conclusion the band, after playing the national anthem and "God Bless the Prince of Wales," received quite an ovation. The concert as a whole developed a great expression of good feeling for America.

THE SHAKSPEARE MEMORIAL.

Extraordinary Performance in London.

London, May 23.—A performance was given this afternoon at the Gayety Theatre in aid of the Shakspeare Theatre, Library and Gallery, now nearly completed at Stratford-on-Avon. It was a great success. The entertainment began with the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," which was charmingly rendered by Miss Adelaide Neilson and Mr. Conway. During the entr'acte the music of a harp played at Shakspeare's birthplace was distinctly audible through a telephone which was placed upon the stage. This feature of the entertainment highly amused and interested the audience. Mr. Gower, of Providence, R. I., the inventor of the machine used on this occasion, explained the scientific principles upon which the instrument was made, and the sound waves transmitted. Miss Kate Field made a speech referring to the object of the performance. The finale, which was Queen Katharine's death scene in "Henry VIII," was an extraordinarily powerful conception of Miss Genevieve Ward, whose make-up was quite astonishing for its contrast to her appearance in the preceding part of the performance as the fair-haired, blooming Portia. The honors of the afternoon's performance belong to her. The English stage has rarely seen such an impressively realistic death scene.

TERRIBLE TORNADO.

Splendid Residences Demolished—Several People Killed.

Dubuque, Iowa, May 23.—A Mineral Point (Wisconsin) special announces that a terrible tornado struck that town this afternoon. A large stone brewery and several buildings surrounding were demolished, and it is feared several bodies will be found under the ruins. The fine residence of Jno. Spaudey, in which was a large family reunion, was completely wrecked, and Mrs. Waller, mother, and John Waller, were instantly killed. The rest of the inmates miraculously escaped. The residence of Judge Cothren was also struck, and his mother, an aged lady, killed.

The tornado passed through the heart of the town, and, it is feared, was far more disastrous than yet learned.

Quincy, Ill., May 23.—A tornado struck the western part of Brown County this afternoon a few miles south of Mounds. Some houses were blown down, and it is reported three persons were killed.

TERRIFIC RAIN STORM.

Deluge, Devastation and Death.

Denver, Col., May 23.—A terrific rainfall upon a large area in Douglas and and Elpaso counties occurred yesterday afternoon. Cherry Creek, which is ordinarily dry, was suddenly deluged at one o'clock this morning, and in less than an hour the entire western portion of the city was flooded. Seven bridges were swept away, and a large amount of other property was destroyed. It is believed no lives were lost beyond that of an unknown man found in a freight car. The Denver & Rio Grande railroad lost a bridge near Colorado Springs, and three bridges were swept away on the Kansas Pacific. A freigh train on the latter road, containing eighteen cars, went through the bridge across the Cheyenne, burying with it the engineer and two firemen, whose bodies have not been recovered.

A Horrible Occurrence.

Green Bay, Wis., May 23.—A horrible affair occurred in this county two or three days since. A woman was killing chickens by chopping their heads off, the proceeding being watched by two young children, who determined to follow her example. The little girl placed her neck on a block, while her young brother severed her head. The father saw the terrible occurrence from the top of a hay-mow, and in his haste to descend to avert the tragedy he fell, breaking his leg. The mother came to town to get a coffin for her child. The name of the family was not known.

The Vosburgh Poisoning Case.

New York, 23.—A sensation in the case of Rev. Mr. Vosburgh, on trial at Jersey City for alleged attempted wife poisoning, is caused by the sudden disappearance of Mrs. Vosburgh, probably to avoid testifying.

BISHOP McCOSKRY.

His Return to Detroit Yesterday.

Stands by the Withdrawal of his Resignation.

Resumes His Post as Bishop of Michigan.

Detroit, May 23.—Bishop McCoskry returned to this city this morning, having left New York on Tuesday evening. He put up at the Michigan Exchange, where he was waited upon by a reporter, who proposed to interview him. The following conversation took place:—

"I am glad to see you," said the Bishop, "but I have really nothing to tell. What is it you wish to know?"

"I wish to ask you in regard to your withdrawal of your resignation. Have you taken any other steps since?"

"None whatever. That is my last action, and I am here just to stay a little while."

"Do you propose living at your residence?"

"Oh, no. This (indicating the hotel by a wave of the hand, and smiling) is my old home, and I will stay here a little while."

"I presume you intend to stay here till the meeting of the diocesan convention next month?"

"I intend to do so."

"In short, you resume your position as Bishop of Michigan?"

"I do."

"It has been reported that you have been quite sick?"

"I have been very unwell," said the Bishop, indicating the lower part of his extensive body. "My complaint has been very troublesome, and my kidneys very much out of order."

"I learn that you have engaged counsel?"

"Oh, of course (smiling); if it comes to that I will have two or three."

"I understand that you have engaged Theodore Romeyn."

The Bishop smiled and nodded an acquiescence.

Some further conversation ensued, during which the Bishop unmistakably showed that, beyond the barest side allusions, he was naturally disinclined to talk on the subject of the scandal, but his manner was as full of hearty geniality and kindly expression as ever. A few months ago he was the unquestioned head of the Episcopal Church of Michigan.

Kate Southern's Crime.

The Provincial Exhibition.

Desperate Exertions to Retain the Show in Toronto.

Independent Action of the Board

Toronto, May 23.—The Exhibition Committee of the City Council met this afternoon, and, in answer to a communication from the Property Owners' Association, resolved that a Committee had been appointed to confer with them regarding arrangements for the Provincial Exhibition, passed a resolution, declining to meet the representatives, or to have anything further to do with the Association.

The Property Owners' Association also held a meeting this afternoon, which was attended by Mr. Stock, President of the Agricultural and Arts Association. Great pressure was brought to bear to induce that gentleman to consent to withhold the decision regarding the Exhibition until Wednesday next, but he firmly declined, stating that he would give till Saturday night at twelve o'clock to answer as to whether it would guarantee the necessary accommodation, and that if no arrangement was come to, would start on Monday morning for Ottawa, and the next Provincial Exhibition would be held there. Mr. Stock emphatically asserted that the Crystal Palace was not granted for the purpose of Provincial Exhibitions, and no expenditure of money could make it do.

At a special meeting of the City Council is to be held Saturday morning, when some definite understanding will be come to.

At present, the feeling is greatly in favor of letting the exhibition go, and the consequence be upon the heads of the members of the Property Owners' Association.

THE PICKERING MURDER CASE.

Smith, of Whitby, accompanied by Mrs. McPherson, mother of one of the convicts, arrived in the city this p. m., and had an interview with the Premier and Hon. Mr. Laflamme, in reference to the case of McPherson and Burke, now lying under sentence of death in Whitby jail for an alleged outrage, resulting in the death of a woman, in Pickering township. The deputation presented a petition from the people, and signed by a large number of residents of the county, praying for commutation of sentence.

Whitby, May 23.—A telegram has been received from Ottawa by W. H. Higgins, of the Chronicle, advising him that the sentence of death passed on Burke and McPherson has been commuted to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

To-day Her Most Gracious Majesty enters upon her sixtieth year, and most of her subjects will wish, with all sincerity and genuine feeling, that she may live and reign for many years to come. In a few weeks more she will enter upon the forty-second year of her reign, and but few sovereigns of England, or of any other country, have exceeded in length of reign the years during which Victoria has held the sceptre. Her rule, considered simply in her relation to her subjects, has been most satisfactory, as she has literally reigned in the hearts of the British people as well as over the British Empire. If discontent there has been, and no nation ever existed without an element of this kind, the discontent has not been with the Queen personally, nor yet with the manner in which she has discharged the high duties that devolve upon her by the constitution. In fact, she has ever been held up by our ablest statesmen, irrespective of their party predilections, as the very model of a constitutional sovereign, and she fully deserves all the commendation she receives. The Queen of England, while enjoying the love and loyalty of her own subjects, has won the respect and esteem of other sovereigns and other peoples, and at the present moment she is spoken of throughout the civilized world as exemplary in all the relations of life, and no less worthy of praise as daughter, wife and mother than as constitutional ruler. Our Canadians celebrate the anniversary with quite as much loyalty and devotion as do their fellow-countrymen in the fatherland, and their demonstrations contain quite as much of true loyalty and personal regard. The reign of Victoria will be dealt upon in afterimes by the historian with more pleasure, than any of those that have gone before her. This will not be so much on account of the glitter and tinsel of military glory as upon the progress the Kingdom has made in the arts of peace and the social elevation of the people. The appliances of science to mechanical contrivance and the various pursuits of life have slowly but effectually revolutionized industrial pursuits, and in many cases enabled one man to do the work of several. Changes of equally important kinds have taken place in the character of her people themselves. The education of the people as a national work, and as a national duty has had its birth in her reign, and already the machinery for the accomplishment of this work is fast approaching the point when the means will be adequate to the end proposed. The good Queen may live to see the day, when England will be able to boast, that almost every youth of fourteen, not incapacitated by nature or accident, that has grown up within her bounds, is able to read and write. Not less remarkable has been the progress of the English nation in wealth and power during the present reign. The accumulated capital of England since Victoria ascended the throne has increased many fold, and while the country has become to a large extent the workshop of the world, and the medium of conducting the commerce of the world, to at least an equal degree she has become the banker of the world. In her reign too the North American, the Australian, the New Zealand, the African colonies have developed into respectable states, some of them in respect to wealth, trade and population, superior to many of the European kingdoms, and destined in a short time to assume still prouder positions among the nations of the earth. Queen Victoria may see her kingdom, now surrounded by a galaxy of States, sprung from the same parent stock, speaking the same language, enjoying the same laws, living under the same institutions, and owing fealty to the same Sovereign that will give strength, influence and stability to the whole Empire, and shed a lustre upon the name of Britannia beyond anything enjoyed by any nation of either ancient or modern times. We, in common with the many millions of her loyal subjects, hail with real pleasure the return of another birthday of Queen Victoria, and in hearty accord and sympathy with these millions pray—Long may she live and reign!

An English archæologist explains the origin of the common expression "jingo," now used in the popular English war song. He finds that the word "jingo" is the modern form of "Janico," a god of the Basque mythology. To make the matter more striking, the chief legend about this god connects him with the "great Bear," which may, in the present situation of affairs, be considered as alluding to Russia, and the superstition is that the Great Bear means to swallow the constellation Leo.

A NEW use in warfare has been found for gun-cotton. A slab of this explosive detonated upon the muzzle of a gun, renders the piece unfit for further service. The operation is simpler than spiking.

Sad accounts are received at Quebec of the sufferings of the people at Labrador. The fisheries failed them last fall, and the traders, who give them provisions in barter for their fish and oil, abandoned the territory, not caring to let the wretched people have goods on credit. Thus before winter set in the whole population was left to starve or subsist until summer on fish offal, for crops are impossible on that sterile shore. Whole families have lived through the winter on rotten, half-frozen carcasses of seals driven ashore by the ice floes. Others have kept body and soul together by devouring the nauseous flesh of the black loup-marin, a species of seal which in prosperous times would be shunned even by the dogs. Many deaths have occurred from sheer starvation. Of five families, containing forty souls, in one settlement, only five survive. Scurvy is epidemic. The women haunt the shore like spectres picking up the dead seal, while the men and boys gather sea moss or shell fish.

The Hon. F. B. T. Carter, the Premier and Attorney-General of Newfoundland, has been raised to the bench as the successor of Sir Brian Robinson, who has retired on a pension. The appointment seems to give satisfaction to all parties, and to be only a fitting recognition of Mr. Carter's long and able services to the Island. His reputation as a lawyer is as well established as his claims to statesmanship. He has always been an advocate of Confederation, losing his position as Premier in 1869 on account of the defeat of his efforts to bring about an union with the Dominion; but since 1873 he has been at the head of the Local Government, his opinions in favor of Confederation remaining unaltered, though he has been pledged to take no steps towards its consummation till the people show an inclination for it. It is said that Mr. Carter is to be made Chief Justice on the retirement of Sir Hugh Hoyles. His successor in the Premiership is the Hon. W. V. Whiteway, whose stand is well assured, and whose services on the Fishery Commission displayed his abilities and energy in a marked way.

Free Press Correspondence.

The "Independent" Candidate.

THE WANING INFLUENCE OF ORITISM.

To the Editor of the FREE PRESS.

SIR,—If a man possessing a little money influence can only manage to "small to heaven" in his own particular line, he is in a fair way of becoming a Grit saint. If to these qualifications he is happy in the possession of a coat of many colors, his success in Egypt, like Joseph's, is certain. A seat in the Cabinet is his sure reward, added to glorification in the Globe, which journal is very tender, and very fond of forgiving and forgetting damaged reputations in a convert.

In London we have an aspirant to Parliamentary honors, whose record is well known, and who but a few years ago would not have dared to come forward as an Independent. The mighty name of Mackenzie was then in the ascendant, full of the most lofty pretensions, and the faithful would have scorned to support a man unless tied hand and foot to "Sandy." Now, the tremendous force of public opinion, deny it as he may, compels him to come out on his own record as a more savory and more satisfactory one than that of the Government! Opinions may differ on this point, but Mr. John Walker has no doubts, and it is impossible not to wonder at the cheek of the man who could thrust himself forward and ride the rigging over Globe, Grits and Government. What can they do but submit? The name of Mackenzie is no longer one to conjure with. The name of Mr. John Walker is much higher in the estimation of the faithful. So he thinks and so he ever shall think. Will they or will they not? We would separate what is meant by the term, Grit from that of true and honest Reformers, whose legitimate aspirations have been so cruelly beholed by the Government they put in power, and we shall find out by-and-bye whether they too are going to condone the actions of their representative and would-be representatives.

Yours, etc.

The naval position of Germany on the North Sea promises, when its fortifications are complete, to be one of the strongest in the world. At present (says the military contributor of the Cologne Gazette) it is still without a proper system of flank supports, which would be afforded by the construction of the proposed canal from the North Sea to the Baltic, with an outlet at the mouth of the Elbe at St. Margarethen or Brunsbuttel. If the canal were ready this naval station would be an important connecting link between the two seas, and at the same time the chief point in the North Sea from which a German naval expedition would start. The position of the North Sea, however, is already very strong. It is otherwise in the Baltic; the left flank was here to be covered by the naval fortifications of Sonderburg-Duppel (where, however, there is as yet no naval station), and the position is further protected by the naval harbor of Kiel, the fortified naval station of Swinemunde and on the whole length of the Baltic coast, which is everyeighty German miles, only by Dantzic. Therefore fortified places should be added to the minor defence works of Memel, Colberg and Stralsund. In order to make the naval position of Germany in the Baltic powerful it would be necessary besides constructing the canal above referred to, to make a harbor for the navy on the island of Rugen and another, which should also serve as a harbor of refuge, with a naval station where ships could put in for repairs at Sonderburg in the Horrip-Haff, on the island of Alsen.

The Cologne Gazette estimates the army which Russia can place in the field at present at 600,000 men. This strength may be maintained, but cannot be increased. The Russian forces now in European Turkey and Roumania amount to twelve and a half army corps—312,000 men. About 100,000 men must be employed for the occupation of Asiatic Turkey, so that only seven and a half army corps—187,500 now-creations still disposable. In case of war with England the Russian troops could not be withdrawn from Turkey and Roumania. The disposable seven and a half army corps would then be employed for the purpose of guarding the coasts of the Black Sea and Baltic. Poland and St. Petersburg and Moscow, where second evasive does where the presence of very dangerous elements, would also require strong garrisons. Russia could therefore, in case of war with England, maintain her present positions, but would have no forces—not to speak of an Indian campaign—for taking precautionary measures against Austria, at whose enmity she would be, if Austria resolved on warlike measures.

The wealthiest Irishman returned on what may be termed the Home Rule ticket is Mr. King-Harman, who owns probably not less than 100,000 acres, much of which is very fine land. His father succeeded to a portion of this vast property, including the magnificent seat of Rockingham, in Roscommon, under singular circumstances. His elder brother, the second Viscount Lorton, married and had a son; but old Lord Lorton, the father, did not believe that his son was father of this child, and consequently left his eldest son, the second Viscount, merely a life interest in the estates, with remainder to his second son (the second Viscount's brother), the Hon. E. K. Harman, father of the present M. P. for Sligo. So that, although the eldest son's son in due time became Viscount Lorton, and subsequently succeeded his cousin as Earl of Kingston, he did not inherit an acre of the vast property.

The Prince of Wales has really been performing valuable political service of late. His active attention to the affairs of the French Exposition, and the manner in which he has cooperated with the Parisians in their effort to give success to their show, have elicited from the French people feelings of gratitude and gratification which extend more or less to the whole English nation. As a result, the French press has continued, notwithstanding the complaints of the Russian Embassy to Mr. Wadington, to reflect these sentiments in a most decided manner, and the strong pro-English sympathies which come from this quarter may perhaps have an influence in moderating the pretensions of Russia, to whom France and England in combination have already proved a serious difficulty.

Mr. John Ruskin's restoration to health is so complete that he is again at work revising and adding to the notes by which he has illustrated the exhibition of his Turner drawings.

WHY SAVAGES ARE SOLEMN.

And Reason Enough They Have, as Explained Below.

London Saturday Review.

In serious circles it is still believed that all Germans think and say much the same thing, and people talk vaguely of dangerous German notions. Persons not quite so unsophisticated as the inhabitants of serious circles speak of the French writers of the last century with similar laxness. They talk of the philosophers and the encyclopedists as if all the philosophers and all the writers in encyclopedia were agreed on most topics. It may be admitted that Nicolas Antoine Boulanger (1722-1759) was one of the exceptions which prove this rule, if rule it is. Nicolas Antoine did not exclaim, like Rousseau, Mr. Squeers, and the other thoughtful men, "Oh, how blessed to be in a state of nature!" He was rather struck by the gloom than the mirth of the natural tribes whose customs he observed. Looking about for a cause of their solemnity—the solemnity of races living, as it were, in an age prior to humor or wit—he hit upon the Deluge. Savages retain traditions of the Deluge, he said; they are always on the lookout for a new cataclysm, and this damps their mirth and chills the genial current of their hilarity.

The flood certainly was a melancholy event, but to attribute the gravity of savages to the flood is surely to seek an explanation far afield. Whether they do or do not live, like unconscious disciples of Dr. Cumming, in daily expectation of the end of all things, savages have plenty to sadden them. Like the often quoted Weddahs of Central Ceylon, they do not see what there is to laugh at. Readers of Mr. Fenimore Cooper remember the "peculiar silent laugh" of the immortal Hawk Eye. As a civilized being, he did see a good deal to laugh at; as an adopted savage, he knew the danger of noisy chuckling. A loud roar might startle the deer or arouse the attention of the hostile Mingo. On the whole, a joke is scarcely worth taking one's life in one's hands for, and the Mohican who giggled on the war path might expect to leave his scalp in the hands of enemies who did not indulge in the sense of humor. To ascribe the gravity of "nature-folk" entirely to one cause, whether that cause be a lively memory of the flood or a lively dread of lurking enemies, would be unphilosophical, and unworthy of the age of Mr. Herbert Spencer. It is easy enough in all conscience to discover a host of reasons for the gloom of the Andaman Islander: the Iroquois, or the Hottentot. It would be odd if they did take a cheery view of existence, considering the sort of life they make for themselves, and all that, in the dark places of the earth, man has done with man.

The natural miseries of the barbarous life have often been dwelt upon. They are a combination of the seamy side of the gentleman's companion and of the gypsy's business, with a considerable dash of the discomforts of a pauper lunatic asylum without keepers. As to the exposure, cold, wet, hunger, and thirst, travelers and moralists have laid pleasing to say. They lay stress on the cruel tyranny of quaint customs worthy of the tyrannies of a little-form bully. The pains of a savage begin when he is a baby. His ear head is strapped tightly to a board, which is not till the child assumes the fashionable shape, now flat as a desk, now elegantly peaked.

A baby is rather lucky who has all this trouble taken with him, for he may be used as bate for sharks or for tigers, or, in a very religious family as Sea Dayaks, may be sacrificed to the local idol. Suppose the infant is not taken up, as the Romans significantly said, and allowed to live, he has a comparatively easy time till he reaches the age of 14 years. Then he begins to be counted a man, and the religious and social and political ceremonies, which answer respectively to confirmation, matriculation and joining a regiment, are of the most painful kind. Religion generally requires that the boy or girl shall steal away into the wilds, and there eat a lodge of forest boughs, and live in seclusion and starvation. When the lad is almost dead with hunger and thirst, he generally manages to see a vision of some sort, or, if he does not, invents an experience and returns to the tribe. He is welcomed with the enthusiasm due to a revived corpse, and is henceforth a member of the savage church. If he has seen seeing visions, encouraged by the success of his first attempt, he takes rank as a pow-wow, or medicine-man. No profession is more lucrative or more respected, as the seer has a share in all lands hunted out, as well as say on questions of peace and war, and a large percentage of property of persons who have been tortured to death as wizards and witches. It is not, however, given to every one to dream dreams, and the ordinary savage has to undergo the full initiation. The third and fourth prizes will be given to many only, and will be 1,200 francs and 600 francs respectively. The play in this new toy will begin on the 17th of June, at the Palais de l'Industrie, in the Champs Elysees.

The cause of the removal of the Grand Duke Nicholas is not quite clear, unless the considerable excuse of ill health is accepted as valid. The general opinion was that the Russian diplomatists feared that the Duke would become impatient and attempt to seize Constantinople by a coup de main. Now a correspondent of the London Times writes: "It is hinted that the Grand Duke's instructions warranted long ago an occupation of Constantinople, but that having pledged his word of honor to the Turks that his troops should not enter it, he held to his pledge, notwithstanding his instructions."

Dr. Lasbrech suggests the following rules to painters in oil who desire that their works may not deteriorate:—1. The oil in civilized society. Millions of our fellow-creatures share with us the use of it. The thoughtless suspendous one, providing, as introduced into a picture that is absolutely necessary. 2. All transparent colors which dry slowly should not be ground with oil at all, but with a resinous vehicle. 3. No colors should be put on any part of a picture which is not yet perfectly dry. 4. British and Foreign Items.

THE English High Court of Appeal has decided that although the University Tests Act abolished all religious tests applying to fellowships in existence when the Act was passed, it does not prevent the endowment of new fellowships limited by any tests the donors and the colleges may agree upon. This is an unexpected victory for sectarianism.

SPRING has been capricious everywhere this year. In Rome on March 25 there was rain and hail, and during the night a snowstorm followed. In the morning a walk on the Pincian Hill discovered snow in the midst of an almost tropical vegetation. The acanthus, the cactus and the aloe were touched with white, and the groves of olex, bay, cypress and stone-pine were in marked contrast with the white background.

THERE is a story in the London clubs that the Chinese Minister to England, who is himself a poet, and Robert Browning had an interview, through the medium of an interpreter. Mr. Browning asked what kind of poetry the Chinese magnate wrote. The Minister said that it could best be described as "enigmatic." "Hem!" said Mr. Browning, "that is curious. That is just what the critics say about my compositions."

THERE is a curious old custom at Hungerford, England, a borough which received its charter from "Old John of Gaunt, fifth-form bully. The pains of a savage begin when he is a baby. Good Night.

God keep you safe, my little love,
All through the night.
Rest close in His encircling arms
And with His light.

My heart is glad you as I kneel to pray,
Knowing that God your love in his care always.
Think kindest creeds to silent ghosts
About my bier.
I lose myself in tender dreams
While overhead
The moon comes stealing through the window
And shines
A white wide gleaming path the stars.
But I, though I see far away,
Feel safe and strong;
To trust you thus dear love and yet—
The night is long—
I say with sobbing breath the old fond prayer,
God night! sweet dreams! God keeps you everywhere.

BY MARY CECIL HAY.

Author of "Old Mydleton's Money," "The Squire's Legacy," &c.

I felt a strange, incomprehensible reliance on my own power, and I answered it at once; I could not bear the delay of an hour, though I knew I should keep the letter open to take it to Rachel. I did not write much—I almost think my heart was too full—but an answer came back to me, expressing satisfaction with all I had said, and asking for my reference.

Then I knew I had written to Lady Athelston, and my heart failed me. Could I go to her—go in my father's house?

All that day I kept the letter hidden in my breast, and had not courage enough to show it to Rachel. But it was all it did affect ward and then Rachel made her plan. I was to write to Lady Athelston, referring her to "Mrs. M'Mullen, No 18 Berkley Square." This shall you would signal well; the letter would reach Rachel straightforwardly and she would answer it.

She did—writing as pretty and lady-like a letter as any inhabitant of the Square could do—and for that answer to that letter I am waiting now. I can not work or eat, or sleep.

Is it right to have accepted a situation with Lady Athelston? She was Sir Gerard's widow, married to him for just one month; and her son now—not his son, though, in all but this is the harcost of High Athelston. I have never written the names before to-day, since that night, nearly five years ago, when Aunt Jessie told us our mother's story.

Suppose—but why think of these things now? It can not be wrong for me to go. No, it can not be wrong for me to go.

I felt that I would gratefully accept any thing that brought me money which I could save. Then how could I resist the temptation of that offer of one hundred pounds a year? Through all the very most hopeful time of my trying. I never faltered. I could earn that. Rightly.

—so saying that fragile cloth of Gerard's and mine. Four years are gone—half the time of his absence; and through those years I have been able to save so little.

How long they have seemed! Yet now that they are over, I am glad—waiting for my fate in Rachel's quiet room, just as I was waiting then.

And how have those four years passed with others? With Rachel, evenly, busily, and patiently; of that I am sure, though through all that time she has never, for one hour, ceased to miss her mother, and to hope—against hope—that she should see her adopted child again. She never has done so; nor has she seen Eustace Jelfry since Gerard's trial.

At the old farm grandfather lives on alone. When—only by chance—I heard of Aunt Jessie's death, I wrote to ask him if he would see me. Twice I wrote, for I fancied my first letter might not have reached him, but I never had an answer. I wish he had written to me, even if only to tell me that he would not see me.

I don't know what put it into my head this evening (we show Rachel that little note Gerard threw into my hands on the night he went away). I think I must have taken it to her just because I was tired of talking of that other letter which we are expecting; or perhaps only because my thoughts were so full of Gerard. Now I am very, very glad I took it; for between us we have managed to read most of the blotted words. It took hours to do it, but I think we have read them rightly now. This is what we make them out to be—

"A month ago he told me a specious lie. He told me that Mr. Radale was lending him a sum of money just for a few weeks, in which time he should inherit a sum of five thousand pounds. But he said he was so afraid of the fact of his having borrowed money reaching the ears of the dying old woman who had made a will in his favor that Mr. Radale had pledged himself to keep drawing the check for Jelfry in the name of a friend.

"I believed this lie, just as he said it. I know now that I was mad and blind; but he had a wonderful influence over me and I never suspected. I offered the check he gave me, firmly believing it to be Mr. Radale's own. From the time the knowledge dawned upon me I was miserable, only praying him to restore the money, or to free me from my oath of silence. He could do neither yet, he told me, entreating by forbearance just for a little while longer. But I have no written proof of this, and what is my word worth against the facts? Nothing will save me, but, before God, I am innocent.

"Oh, Rachel!" I cried, when it seemed plain to me, "why did he bid it? I could have told this all the trial. I could have told she story at the trial.

"Perhaps his own impulse was the wisest, my dear."

"But why?" I cried. "He would not have written it, if it had not been true."

He crossed the words out for some reason," Rachel said, very pityingly; "it must have been against your having any knowledge of the transaction, and so guard against your testimony being necessary."

"Then why did he write them at all?"

"He wrote them instinctively, dear, no doubt," she said, "in his desire for you to know the truth."

"Then, why did he not tear them off?" I moaned, holding the letter tight in my clasped hands.

"Don't you see that on the opposite side of the sheet is written what he really does wish you to read? Perhaps he had no more paper."

And then just hearing those few commonplace words [which told me of his helplessness—for then, at that are so seldom in our eyes now, rushed to them; and I sobbed in Rachel's arms until I had not strength left to speak, so she put me to sleep in her own bed, just as she might have put a little child.

To-morrow I leave here. Once more I am starting on a new path. Is it wrong and untruthful to wonder where it will lead? Oh! Gerard's. Gerard, Will, Alfred Shaw, Morley, Selby, Barnes, and Flowers, M. C. C. and ground played twenty-two cotts of England at Lords on the 6th and 7th; cotts, 89 and 125; M. C. C., 131 and 56 for eight wickets—game stopped by rain. For the latter Mr. W. G. Grace made 15 and 9, and Mr. Hornby 41 and 7. Grace destroyed 10 colts' wickets in the second innings.

Cambridge University v. All England began on the 9th, and was in progress when the mail left; Cambridge, 103 and 226; England, 193. For the latter the principal scores were Mr. W. G. Grace 45, Mr. G. F. Grace 61, and Midwinter, the Gloucestershire professional, 34. For the Canadas Hon. A. Lyttelton scored 23 and 17—Mr. A. G. Steel 2 and 66, and Hon. E. Lyttelton 13 and 66. In the first innings of the University Mr. W. G. Grace was instrumental in taking seven wickets, and in their second he took four.

Reformed Presbyterians.

New York, May 17.—At the session today of the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America, reports from Presbyteries were read.

The Committee on "Signs of the Times" made a report, in which municipal enactments permitting the opening of theatres to entice young people from the paths of rectitude and virtue, and from the house of the Lord on the Lord's Day, were severely animadverted upon. It was also specified upon the paper that the chief reform set a very bad example to the people by their neglect of religious duties, and that even the professors of religion were derelict in receiving company in their homes on the Sabbath Day, and engaging in conversation on secular matters. The Committee dwelt at some length on the elevation of Leo XIII. to the Papal chair, and the efforts now to be made to spread Roman Catholicism. Railway traffic was touched upon, and the managers of the roads censured for breaking the Lord's Day. The report was adopted.

PICKED UP IN MID-OCEAN.

An Escaped Convict Rescued by a Vessel's Crew.

Floating on a Frail Raft and Followed by a School of Sharks—Ten Days Afloat—Two Companions Lost and He Nearly to Perish.

Monday, the 11th of February, was a dark, rainy day in the South Atlantic Ocean. The schooner Carrie E. Long of Stockton, Me., on her voyage from Buenos Ayres to New York, had reached a point just south of the equator and about two hundred miles from the Brazilian coast. Nothing was to be seen in any direction, when all at once the lookout shouted out, "A sail!" At the same instant a husky cry was heard by the seamen on the deck. All looked in the direction whence the cry came, and laughed at the lookout for his announcement that a sail was in sight. All that was to be seen was an uneven mass of bamboo, not ten feet square, in the middle of which a half-naked black man was kneeling upon a box. The only sail visible was a shirt disordered with sea water, which was flying from a slender bamboo pole. Beside the man was a rusty kerosene can; in his hand was a rude paddle, which he used to support his feeble body as he raised himself to shout for help.

The raft was so narrow and so low in the water that every slight wave rolled over it from stem to stern. The man shouted incessantly, but now and then a wash would drive away in his throat and the bearers only knew that he had shouted by the convulsive action of his mouth and chin.

A boat was lowered from the Carrie E. Long, and made its way toward the raft. The man continued to shout, although rescue was so nigh. His cries were not intelligible, but it could be distinguished that he used no English. As the boat neared the raft one of the sailors pushed off again with an exclamation. The man on the raft uttered a scream of despair.

"What did you do that for?" the mate asked. The offending sailor made no reply, but pointed underneath the raft. Following his finger, the others saw three or four immense sharks swimming leisurely there. Now and then one would thrust its nose between the light bamboos, as if to pry them apart. More than once the open mouth of one could be seen raising itself over the top of the raft, within a yard of the occupant's feet. When this happened the man on the raft ceased to shout, and seemed to become dumb with terror.

Again approaching the raft, the rescuers this time secured it to the boat, and transferred its single passenger to their own craft. No sooner had he touched the ship's deck than his strength sprung from excitement and the instinct of self-preservation, abandoned him, and he fell unconscious. As he lay on the deck it could be seen that the sores on his body had been made by the continued wetting with salt water. Crystals of the salt were visible on the raw edges of the wounds. The body was emaciated, and the bones at the joints seemed as if about to burst themselves through the skin. The ordinary black hue of his skin was tarred a dirty drab. His fingers, swollen to unnatural size, hung half out of his hands, and the wonder was that he could have uttered a single sound. After he was resuscitated he could only gasp inarticulate moans and point to his mouth for water.

It was nearly a week before his appetite, and with it his sick memory, returned so that he could be questioned. There was not a Portuguese scholar on board save the Carrie E. Long, although one of the crew knew a little Spanish. This was more by gesture than by word of mouth at first, however. He said that his name was Manuel Fraudo, and that he had been at sea for days when rescued. Originally, there were three on the raft, but one had been washed overboard and devoured by sharks before his eyes before they were two days old. The second died from exhaustion on the fourth day. He threw his body to the sharks, thinking that that way he came them to quit following the raft, but after they had torn his body to pieces they only followed him the more intently. He dared not throw a living man overboard, for fear of walking off the raft into their open jaws. Water gave out on the sixth day, and thirst was added to the loss of sleep. His only food was bread, which had become rusty from long confinement in the forecastle cage, and the saltpeter which consequently only added to his thirst without satisfying his hunger. His suffering became so intense that he was about to cast himself to the sharks when the Carrie E. Long hove in sight.

Where did he come from and what was he doing on the raft? Fraudo failed to answer this question satisfactorily. He intimated that he had originally sailed from the Brazilian coast, but took advantage of the questioner's ignorance of the language to avoid explaining why he had put to sea on so frail a craft. The contents of a black bottle found on the raft in a measure answered the question, and accounted for his unwillingness to be more definite. In it was a magistrate's commission, in complete mockery of the eight years' penal servitude for some small theft. The date of the commitment showed that the prisoner had served three years. The Brazilian penal island of Fernando Noronha, situated three degrees below the equator, and about 400 miles from the main coast, was within a few hundred miles from where Francisco was picked up, and it was conjectured that he had escaped from there. This conjecture was confirmed when the Carrie E. Long arrived at Montevideo and the customs officer came on board. As soon as the accents of the Spanish tongue fell on his ear, Francisco threw down, and evinced great fear of recapture. On hearing his story, and reading the commitment, the Brazilian agent at that port wanted to hold Francisco until the Governor of Fernando Noronha had been communicated with; but Capt. Jack put his foot down at this, and declared that Francisco should not be removed from the vessel. The agent did not press his claim, and Francisco arrived in this city on the Carrie E. Long on Monday night. On the voyage he made himself useful serving as a seaman. The sailors called him Monday, because he was rescued on that day.

When the writer saw him yesterday, he saw a stout, healthy man, with nothing in his smiling face to indicate the horrors he had passed through. He is a thorough black, with the crisp, curling hair peculiar to the inhabitants of hot countries. He seems intelligent, and rather ashamed that he can speak no language but what he calls "Brazilian."—Sun.

Cricketing in England.

The season opens in England with big scores. At a freshmen's one innings match at Cambridge on the 9th, Mr. Lucas' side secured 432, and Hon. E. Lyttelton's 229.

Great preparations were being made at Nottingham to receive the Australian cricketers. They open their season in England on the Trent Bridge ground. None of will be represented by Mr. Caraham, R. out the evidence of an intellectual being. In the scientific explanation of physical phenomena we assume the existence of a principle having properties sufficient to produce the effects which we observe; and in this principle we assume the existence of logical deductions from it all the phenomena which, in a theory, thus we have the theory of light, the theory of electricity, etc. There is no proof, however, of the truth of these theories, except the explanation of the phenomena which they are intended to account for. This proof, however, is sufficient in any case in which every fact is fully explained, and can be predicted when the conditions are known.

"In accordance with this scientific view, on what evidence does the existence of a Creator rest? First, it is one of the truths best established by experience in my own mind that I have a thinking, willing principle within me, capable of intellectual activity and of moral feeling. Second, it is equally clear to me that you have a similar spiritual principle within yourself, since when I ask you an intelligent question you give me an intellectual answer. Third, when I examine operations of nature I find everywhere through them evidences of intelligent arrangements, of contrivances to reach definite ends precisely as I find in the operations of man, and hence I infer that those two classes of operations are results of similar intelligence. Again, in my own mind I find ideas of right and wrong, of good and evil. These ideas, then, exist in the universe, and therefore form a basis of our idea of a moral universe. Furthermore, the conceptions of good which are found among our ideas associated with evil can be attributed only to a being of infinite perfections like that which we denominate God. On the other hand, we are conscious of having such evil thoughts and tendencies that we cannot associate ourselves with a divine being, who is the directer and the governor of all, or even call upon him for mercy without the confession of one who may affiliate himself with us.
